Mr. Green: But the hon. member for Regina City punctured that balloon and punctured it very nicely. He pointed out that the men to whom the credit should be given for the enactment of the old age pension legislation in 1926 are the late Mr. Woodsworth, the late Mr. Heaps and Mr. A. W. Neill of Comox-Alberni, that grand old man of this house who is still alive and whom I had the opportunity to visit during the election campaign.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What about the Conservative opposition of that day?

Mr. Green: These were the men who forced old age pensions on an unwilling Liberal prime minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Green: Then the hon. member for Essex East—

An hon. Member: Careful.

Mr. Green: —jumped from 1926 to 1930. He gave the late Right Hon. R. B. Bennett no credit for having increased the dominion's share of old age pension from 50 per cent to 75 per cent.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He did not.

Mr. Green: Oh no, no indication of that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He did not do it.

Mr. Pickersgill: How did that help the old age pensioners?

Mr. Green: The hon. member's speech was just a plain political speech.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit me—

Mr. Green: I have got the floor. You had it this morning.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is my hon. friend—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Save it for your convention in January.

Mr. Green: I have been in the house since 1935.

Mr. Chevrier: So have I.

Mr. Green: Oh no, you went out to a nice easy job a few years ago. On every occasion when there have been improvements made in the old age pension legislation they have only been made after prodding, kicking and all kinds of pressure brought on a reluctant government over a long period of time.

Mr. Gardiner: That is what the C.C.F. are going to say about you. What are you going to do then?

Mr. Green: Pressure was brought on them not only by members of the official opposition, the C.C.F. and Social Credit groups but also by a very few backbench Liberal members, and more credit to them. The minister had the effrontery—

An hon. Member: The minister?

Mr. Green: —to intimate that every improvement in the old age pension situation must be attributed to the Liberal party. Nobody but the Liberal party cares for the senior citizens of Canada or the other Canadians who need assistance of one kind or another. This is the old theme song that has been sung in every part of this nation for many, many years. Down in Newfoundland we had the Liberals saying that if the people did not vote Liberal they would have their old age pensions taken away from them. What a farce!

Mr. Pickersgill: Never said any such thing.

Mr. Green: In other parts of the country it has been the same. Out in British Columbia the people were told that if they did not vote Liberal they would lose all these welfare benefits.

Mr. Lesage: Your story is twisted so far as Quebec is concerned.

Mr. Green: Just a lot of cheap hyprocrisy but, Mr. Chairman, fortunately those days are now at an end.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Green: The Liberal party in 1957 stands for a $6 increase for the senior citizens of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Didn't you vote for it?

Mr. Green: That is their announced policy. That is the policy on which they fought the election and that is one of the policies on which they received a very good licking. Times have now changed. We are now in 1957, and I suggest that it is not going to do these hon. members much good to run around the country when an election comes trying to tell about what happened or did not happen in 1926. They are going to be busy explaining what they stood for in 1957.

The hon. member for Essex East also said, "Why, there is nothing much to this reduction from 20 years to 10 years. We would have done that if we had been in power for another 22 years. We were just about to get around to that." I am quite sure that the people of Canada will realize what government it was that did take that step and made the change to cut the time from 20 years to 10.

The facts are these, Mr. Chairman. Hon. members of every party in the house have been interested in the welfare of the senior citizens of this country. This question should have been kept on that basis at all times, that we would all try to do the best we could for these Canadian pioneers. But the Liberal party has taken just the opposite tack. It is always trying to take all the credit for everything that has ever been done for our senior citizens.

The hon. member for Essex East questioned today whether or not the present Prime Minister would implement his promises. The hon. member repeated certain press reports and insinuated in effect that the present Prime Minister was trying to pull the wool over the eyes of the senior citizens of Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Green: The hon. member says that is right.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Green: I can only say to the hon. member that from the start the present Prime Minister of Canada has been on the side of those Canadians who are having the toughest time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Green: That is his whole history. He fought his way up from poverty to his present position and at no time has he ever forgotten those Canadians who have the hardest time.

Mr. Chevrier: That is the position—

Mr. Green: Every member in the house who knows the present Prime Minister knows that is the case.

Mr. Chevrier: That is the position of the hon. member for Essex East too.

Mr. Green: Oh, keep still for a few minutes. Make your own speech if you like.

Mr. Chevrier: You should not take it away from him.

Mr. Green: In the Prime Minister's speeches in the house in the last 17 years, in his speeches on the hustings, in the way he has conducted his law practice, in his speeches in caucus and in private conversation this great Canadian who is today Canada's Prime Minister has always stood for the little people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Green: No.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Green: He stands for the little people of Canada today and they know it. Canadians from coast to coast know it because they know the measure of Canada's Prime Minister. They believe in him and they trust him regardless of their party affiliation. All this talk, all this questioning of the bona fides of Canada's Prime Minister on this issue or on any other issue is completely and utterly phony, dragged in to cover up the record of the previous government.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great attention to the intervention of the hon. Minister of Public Works and I am afraid he has his facts twisted. As a matter of fact I have learned, as it was easy to learn in the campaign in which I participated in my own province of Quebec, that it was the candidates, speakers and organizers of the friends of the minister—the members of the Union Nationale—who were threatening to cut the old age pension and family allowance payments and that in spite of the fact they were not made by the provincial government. We of the Liberal party certainly never used such threats or suggestions as a means of getting elected anywhere. As far as we are concerned we have been the victims of that kind of electioneering in the province of Quebec. We have been the victims of the strange bedfellows of those who sit on the opposite side of the house today.

Now, the Minister of Public Works has challenged us to explain the $6 increase for old age security, old age assistance, disability pensions, and other pensions which were increased in the spring. Well at that time, if I remember well, the then minister of finance, Mr. Harris, seemed to feel that we could devote the sum of approximately $100 million for increases in the overall field of social security apart from the increases in pensions and allowances for veterans.

It would have been easy for the government of the day to propose that the whole of this increase of $100 million or thereabouts should go for old age security, old age assistance, blind pensions and disability pensions but we thought there was another class of little people which deserved recognition and I hope that the Prime Minister, who according to the Minister of Public Works is so concerned about little people, will during the present session think of these really little people, those who are in receipt of family allowances.

Mr. Balcer: That is the only election promise you fellows missed.

Mr. Lesage: I will mention the election promises of the Solicitor General in a few moments. We thought that the amount available, according to the minister of finance, of about $100 million should be divided between the various classes of recipients of social security payments. The minister of finance at that time, Mr. Harris, had no doubt in mind the fact that the government would be called upon to spend each year the sum of about $200 million as its share of hospital insurance. I hope the present government has also been thinking of that and it is going to go along with that proposal relating to hospital insurance. It seems very difficult to obtain any assurance from the present government that they do intend to proceed with that hospital insurance program.

Mr. Monteith: There never was any doubt.

Mr. Lesage: Well, thank you for the assurance just given by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and I hope they do not have any trouble finding the necessary money without putting the country into debt.

Now, as I have said, at that time the minister of finance thought he could devote $100 million, part of it to be allotted for old age pensions and part of it for family allowances. The total amount of increase which is proposed today is the same amount as was proposed in the spring by the last administration, approximately $100 million, but all of it goes to the one class of people and there is nothing for family allowances. Why is there nothing for family allowances? Is it that the Conservative party is still against family allowances as we have been led to believe for years and years in the past, and as we were told by a former leader of the opposition?

I was not surprised not to see in the speech from the throne any proposal for an increase in family allowances; I was not surprised that it was not mentioned by the Prime Minister who, according to the Minister of Public Works, is all for the little people; I was not surprised not to hear it mentioned by the Minister of National Health and Welfare; I was not surprised, in spite of the election promises of the Conservative candidates in Quebec and the speakers around them. I have listened to the Solicitor General, who is trying to interrupt me now, over the television promising that the moment the Conservative party was in power it would double family allowances.

Mr. Balcer: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. On television I accused the Liberals for having kept the family allowance payments at the same amount for at least 10 years. I also mentioned the fact that they gave such a small increase during the last session, and perhaps I should repeat what I said on television—

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Lesage: Of course the Solicitor General can enter this debate any time he wishes but what he is doing now is not raising a point of order.

Mr. Balcer: Get your facts straight.

Mr. Lesage: I have my facts straight; does the Solicitor General not remember that in 1956 he put on the order paper in this house notice of motion asking the government to consider the possibility of increasing the rate of family allowances in proportion to the increase in the cost of living since 1944?

Mr. Balcer: That is a fact.

Mr. Lesage: Well, I hope then the Solicitor General will convince his colleagues that it is necessary to do so in the interests of the people of Canada and I hope against hope he will so convince his colleagues promptly, so that early next week we will see in the name of the government and the Minister of National Health and Welfare a true copy of his notice of motion of 1956.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rea): I would just like to remind the hon. members that although I realize there are several resolutions on the order papers which are similar, we have been straying and straying. I hope all hon. members will help me and try to come back a little closer to the resolution we are discussing.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I am glad I have you drawing this matter to our attention, and I can assure you I will confine my remarks to the resolution before the committee.

I think it is obvious to the people of Canada that it is no longer necessary to have in office a government with an overwhelming majority. It is quite certain that if the previous administration had been returned with the sort of majority they had before, old age pensioners would still be compelled to look forward to receiving $46 a month; and I am sure hon. members opposite will not successfully appeal to the Canadian electors and be re-elected with an overwhelming majority such as the Liberals had.

In my opinion we are getting this sort of legislation because the government cannot forever overlook the needs of 800,000 of our citizens. I should say, Mr. Chairman, that Canada has a very interesting scale of pensions. Last year the minister of finance reported in answer to some of my questions that the highest pension available in Canada amounted to $1,041.66 a month. You had to be a retired judge to qualify for that. The highest paid in the Department of National Defence was $1,021 a month, and the highest by the R.C.M.P., $875. Superannuated civil servants can look forward to a maximum pension of $875. If one old Canadian needs $1,041.66 a month it is not easy for me to understand why the previous administration thought $46 a month was ample for another.

Before turning over the reins of office the previous administration did indicate that they were sorry for some of the people of Canada, and civil service salaries were increased in classifications of grade 6 from $5,460 to $6,300. That seems to be an increase of $75 a month. In grade 7 the increase was from $5,760 to $6,840, a difference of $90 a month. If you had the back luck to be getting a mere $7,000 a year, you received an increase of $1,300 or $100 a month plus a Christmas bonus of $100. I mention these things in passing, Mr. Chairman, to indicate that we did have money in Canada available for some projects. But in dealing with the old age pensioners the previous administration forfeited its right to govern because it stubbornly resisted meeting the responsibilities which they owed to this very large group.

Mr. Chairman, I received in the mail some time ago from an old age pensioner in Toronto, aged 74, a poem which calls attention somewhat graphically to the conditions in which some of these old people live. I spoke about this matter last session, but it was too late for anything further to be done. This is the poem—it is called "A Pensioner's Plea":

You may sing what a lovely day
I would like to join if I may
But first have mercy on poor me
Raise my pension, set me free
From the struggle, from the worry
So I may live. Oh please do hurry
Life that's shortened can't be sweet
When our needs are not complete
For, it's a pensioner I am
And I'm really in a jam
My rent nearly bleeds me dry
And no matter how I try
To live as God meant us to live
That forty dollars just won't give Don't leave enough a dog to feed
What sort of life must I then lead?
The rich get more, the poor get less
Something our maker cannot bless
So, gents of Queen's Park, have a heart
Remember the poor, do your part.

This poem, "A Pensioner's Plea" was originally addressed to Queen's Park, Ontario but it was sent on to the House of Commons.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure the fact that so many people felt an increase from $40 to $46 was insufficient proved a major factor in turning out the previous administration. When the hon. member for Essex East was minister in charge of national health and welfare I drew to his attention an article called "Fourteen Days as an Old Age Pensioner", and I suggested that the former minister might be the leader of an all-party delegation which would try to live on a pension of that amount for a couple of weeks.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Now that the hon. member for Essex East has fewer responsibilities than he had previously, and since he could take part without worrying about any reduction in his salary, I suggest he might find it possible now to join such a delegation. I suggest that the new Minister of National Health and Welfare might try to get one member from his party, and perhaps the former minister of national health and welfare could, as I have proposed, represent the Liberal party. I myself would be glad to volunteer as a representative of the C.C.F., and I am sure the Social Credit group would wish to send a volunteer to try living on $55 a month in any Canadian city which the minister cares to designate.

Now I would like to call the attention of hon. members to an interesting article which was written by Mr. William MacEachern, one of the reporters on the staff of the Toronto Star in which he tells about his two weeks' existence with a one burner hot plate, a frying pan, a teapot, $20 and his own resourcefulness. He advertised in the Star for living accommodation and he received a number of replies. However, when he explained that he wanted the room for his grandfather, people opened up with a barrage of questions: "How old is he? Is he in good health? Does he drink? Does he still possess all his faculties? Does he have any chronic ailments?" The author goes on to tell his story, and I quote:

Then I asked my all-important question: "How much?". They quoted a price, usually $10 or over, and I explained, "Well my grandfather is an old-age pensioner, he gets $40 a month, and he is looking for a somewhat cheaper place. He couldn't afford much more than $5 a week." I could almost hear the ice crackling on the wires. Then the inevitable "Oh!", a few hastily muttered apologies, and the click of the receiver.

After two weeks, this young reporter's experience was over. He wrote in his paper:

I walked down the street, turned around at the corner and took a last look at my home for the past few weeks—a home with friendly hearts and cold rooms—a home that symbolized thousands of drab, cold rooms where our country's elder citizens wait for death, death the great repriever, not death the great leveller.

I had three cents in my pocket—the last of a $20 fortune. I tucked two of them away in a little compartment in my wallet—a reminder of 14 long, lonely days. I dropped the third penny into a weighing machine and watched the blurry figures whirl by—it stopped close to 157. When I started my life as an old age pensioner two weeks ago today I weighed 168.

Apparently, the readers of the Star were so interested in these articles that a great many of them wrote letters to the paper giving the author some hints on how he might have tackled the problem. One recommended, for example, that he should eat porridge for breakfast because it was cheap and filling; that he might economize by buying day-old bread for 12 cents a loaf, and so on. Another chap suggested that he might get the young lads to catch sparrows for him; five sparrows could be bought for a cent, and if the authorities caught you you would not have to spend any of your pension for the next 30 days because during that time you would eat regularly in jail.

Well, the pension is to be increased to $55 and I am sure there is not a member in parliament who will vote against it. It is certain that $55 a month is a big improvement over $46 a month. I think we should not lose sight of the fact that while the Prime Minister was cautious he did give the impression that if he were Prime Minister he would not be satisfied with less than $60 a month.

While the hon. member for Regina City was speaking the Prime Minister suggested that he should quote the record which is exactly what I propose to do at this time. I have with me Hansard of March 28, 1957. When discussing the budget at that time the present Prime Minister, as reported at page 2774 of Hansard of that date, said:

> As far as old age pensions are concerned, we believe the increase is totally inadequate for the needy; it is niggardly and paltry.

He was soon interrupted in his remarks but he continued to speak at some length. He was critical of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Nanaimo who had suggested that the pension should be increased by an amount commensurate with the increase in the gross national product since 1949, which would call for a pension of approximately $75 a month. At page 2781 of Hansard of that date the present Prime Minister is reported as saying:

> I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks that the increase of $6 in old age pensions and the increases in blindness, disability and other pensions was simply a sop to political expediency . . . I would be remiss if I were to hold out promises which could not and will not be met.

He made it perfectly clear he was not prepared to support the request for $75 a month but he referred to what has been done in Saskatchewan and mentioned that the Saskatchewan government saw fit to pay up to $60 a month for those in the 65 to 69 age group and gave the impression that because $60 was the maximum in Saskatchewan it would be a fair amount.

Later in the session on April 11 when the house was discussing the proposed increase in pensions I found myself facing a barrage of questions from the Conservatives who at that time were sitting on my right. When participating in the debate I referred to the fact that the present Prime Minister, then the hon. member for Prince Albert, said he could not support our proposition. As reported at page 3444 of Hansard of that date I said:

> The Conservative party has not said anything. There is an election coming on and no member of the Conservative party has set out that their program calls for $48, $49, $50 or $60, or what have you. No one has said this is what our program calls for.

Then an interjection occurred which is not attributed to an identified member. The name of the hon. member does not appear but it is my recollection that it was the present Minister of Finance who interrupted me and said:

> Our leader said today $60—what are you talking about?

At any rate the interjection was contributed by a Conservative. I replied:

> No, he said something like Saskatchewan.

The hon. gentleman who interrupted me then said:

> An hon. Member: Well that is $60.

Certainly the people of Canada had reason to expect that if the present Prime Minister was the leader of the government the pension would be increased to at least $60 a month.

A brief carefully prepared by the president of the national old age pensions federation has been sent to the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and all members of parliament urging that action be taken to raise the pension to $60 a month payable without a means test to all citizens who have attained the age of 65 years.

I suggest that while the present administration can take a good deal of credit for the fact that the 800,000 people who are in receipt of this pension are going to be given an additional $9 a month I think it must not overlook its firm commitment that the elder citizens of Canada would be given a return that would provide them a fair share of the national income.

The wealth that is available in any country does not belong to the small group of people who happen to be in the prime of life at any particular time. We enjoy the many benefits available now as a result of the sacrifices and contributions made by our parents, grandparents and great grandparents who cleared the bush, opened up the country, built the railways, developed our resources and made possible the establishment of the modern services available to us. Many people find when they reach the age of 45, 50 or 60 they are no longer wanted in this modern age. It is not feasible that we should put our elder citizens on the shelf and deny them a fair share of the goods and services available. In view of the large surpluses of wheat in Canada, the stocks of butter in our stores and the abundant supply of apples and other fruits and vegetables I cannot think of any reason why every elder citizen in this country should be deprived of the maximum quantity of food he requires. Considering the high rents demanded, particularly in our larger centres, there is no doubt that even with a pension of $55 a month many pensioners will be deprived of a balanced and adequate diet.

While I am pleased to support this measure I must say we should not allow the present administration to forget the commitment that was made and accepted in good faith. I hope the government will never forget that one of the major reasons the Liberal government was defeated was because it broke faith with Canada's senior citizens.

(Translation):

Mr. Gour: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words with regard to the resolution now under discussion. To my mind these resolutions on social legislation are most unfair.

I must say that the Conservatives are very lucky, every time they come into power they find that the country is enjoying remarkable prosperity and that its financial situation is very stable. However, I hope that this time they will not do as they did between 1930 and 1935 and that they will not bring this country to the brink of bankruptcy and that, as was the case at that time, people will not be put in a position where they will be unable to provide themselves with the necessities of life.

Mr. Chairman, though I favour improvement of these social measures, I still believe that grave injustice is being done to the people, because no account whatever is being taken of one of the fairest of the social enactments at present on our statute books, family allowances. I believe that the rate of family allowances should have been increased, as was done in the case of the veterans' allowance and old age security benefits.

I therefore favour these resolutions but hope that the Conservatives will not stay long enough in power to ruin this country and thus make it impossible for us to pay out or to increase these benefits.

When we Liberals were administering the affairs of the country, we increased allowances payable under our social security legislation. Had we been re-elected, we would have gladly increased the veterans' allowance as well as old age benefits, not only by $9.00 but by $10 or even $15.00, as soon as the financial position of this country would permit. We would have done likewise with regard to family allowances.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

I therefore endorse the resolution on the understanding that the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) will, by next week, submit another resolution increasing family allowances by at least $1.50 a month for each child under 16 years. On this condition, I approve the resolution, and I hope that the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) will be generous enough to propose such an increase.

With all the millions we left in the treasury, it will be easy for the Conservatives to suggest such increases, but the fact remains that they can do so because of the sound administration of the Liberal party, which has given to this country a period of prosperity unequalled in this world.

However, I am afraid that, if my hon. friends opposite remain in control of this country for two or three years, the situation of 1930-1935 will recur, and nothing will remain in the treasury to pay out those benefits. I therefore urge the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare to submit another resolution with a view to increasing family allowances by at least $1.50 a month for each child under 16 years, and this is my only stipulation in approving this resolution.

(Text):

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): I feel quite sure that the people of my constituency will welcome the gains contained in this resolution, but I think they will feel that the amount proposed is not realistic in terms of the rising cost of living at the present time. I should like to tell the committee very briefly just what that rise in the cost of living means. In the last year alone rising prices, like a thief in the night, have stolen from pay envelopes and pay cheques $3.50 out of every $100. The year before the rise in prices was two per cent, which means that in those last two years $5.50 out of every $100 in a pay envelope, in a pension cheque, in a housewife's budget, has disappeared. And the rise in prices is continuing today, particularly in the last few months, in food prices. In view of that, and in view of the fact that I have not heard one word from the government benches as to how they are coping with this problem at the present time, $9 is simply not adequate. I plead with the government at least to consider the suggestion that has been made that whatever increase is finally arrived at in the bill be subject to periodic increases in accordance with rises in the cost of living.

I think the committee should know that too often increases in the old age pension go not to the pensioners but to landlords. Too often, as the increase comes out, that increase is literally absorbed by increases in the pensioner's rent. Again, I say, until you have, as you have not today, a low-cost housing program in this country, the proposed increase is inadequate.

I join with those who have asked that the length of permissible absence from Canada be increased, not to six months but increased so that there is not any restriction at all. I think the committee knows that in the United States the pension is payable regardless of residence. I think the same is true of Great Britain, and I think it should be so here, because so often the fact is that a pensioner wants to join his family perhaps living in the United States or in some other part of the world. Often it is a fact, as I know from some cases, that the pensioner is advised on doctor's order to go south to a dry climate, perhaps to Mexico. Today, of course, he cannot take his pension with him.

That pension is something that has been earned and paid for through the taxes that the pensioner has paid, particularly in his working years, and it is not a matter of something being paid by way of charity; it is a matter of a rightful return to the pensioner of part of the wealth that he himself has created in his working years. Therefore, I say, if the pensioners have to move, if they want to move, we should permit them to take their pensions with them.

Finally, I want to comment as favourably as I can upon what was said by the Minister of Public Works in this house. He reminded us that many of these social gains are made from—I think the words were—"prodding and kicking" and I suggest that is as true today as it ever was. I agree entirely with the hon. member for Mackenzie who said that the composition of this house at the present time had something to do with the increases the pensioners are getting now.

Sometimes it is said that a minority government is hard on the members of this house. We never know when we will be wearing out our shoe leather in another election campaign. Perhaps we will work harder for that. Perhaps it is harder for a minority government; but perhaps they will work harder because of that. A minority government may be hard on us in this quarter of the country but I suggest it is a break for the Canadian people. I suggest some of the gains we are getting now are the result of the composition of this house. I suggest it would be a black day for Canada if we had in this house a lopsided majority of Conservative members able to ignore the wishes of the Canadian people. I feel sure that, for future social gains, the people of Canada will very wisely realize that the composition of the parties in this house has a great deal to do with just how much progress is made.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Chairman, I believe it is my duty to deal with this matter, first because I represent a Montreal constituency in which there are two old people's homes: the Gamelin Home and the Sainte-Brigitte Home. The first is under the direction of the reverend sisters of Providence and the other under the Little Sisters of St. Francis. I therefore take this opportunity of expressing to the two religious orders which operate those homes our sincere thanks and our admiration for them.

In rising to take part in this debate, I must first say that I will gladly support the resolution we are discussing, a proposal which will mean a substantial addition to the amount of pension paid to old people. I do so with all the more conviction because in the past I have always stood for an increase in old age pensions. I am therefore consequent when I say that the government is now taking a step in favour of this class of people. It does so no doubt in order to implement campaign promises but that is nonetheless an achievement which we should appreciate at its value.

However, Mr. Chairman, I beware of the Greeks even when they are bearing gifts. I am not too sure how to translate this in Latin but—

An hon. Member: Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I have been speaking Latin in this house and—

An hon. Member: It is not Latin, it is Greek.

Mr. Dupuis: Forgive me; Latin is Greek to me.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, I beware of the Greeks even when they are bearing gifts, especially when we consider the stand taken in the past by the Conservative party with regard to various social measures which were proposed in this House.

I support this resolution for a further reason. It is because in my last speech in this house, during the first session of 1957, as you will see on page 507 of Hansard, I took the defence of this class of old people and urged the government to consider the advisability of paying old age pensions when people reached the age of sixty, because old people find it very difficult to obtain employment today.

In fact, it is admitted that today a man of forty does not easily find employment. It is of course all the harder for a man in the sixties. I therefore repeat my request that pensions be paid to old people when they reach sixty years of age unless consideration is given to the advisability of granting pensions to all people aged sixty-five or over without the means test.

However if I rose to take part in this debate, it was not only to approve the government's decision with respect to old people but particularly to blame it, as was done today by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Lesage), for failing to submit any plan to help out large families by increasing family allowances. Admittedly a great many old people are in need of assistance, as all hon. members have agreed. When old people are in need, sometimes their children come to their help, thus filling a duty they owe to their parents. However, in the case of large families, most of the time the breadwinner is alone in assuming the support and care of his family. He is the one who, with very limited resources, must face the numerous problems which beset a large family. It seems to me that while taking care of our older people, we should pay particular attention to the fathers of large families who have difficult problems to solve, problems which crop up from day to day, such as illness in the home.

Every day, or at least every week, people come to our offices to show us hospital bills running up into the hundreds of dollars, which they are in no position to pay because of their insufficient means. That is one of the problems facing the father of a large family who must see to it that his children are clothed and provided with certain necessities so that they may attend school, and on top of that is faced, in case of illness, with very heavy obligations.

Mr. Chairman, I believe we should take particular account of the fate of these large families by considerably increasing family allowances.

And as was stated a moment ago by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, I must say that I doubt we can achieve this result, even though we make the request. If by any chance we did so, I would be the first to rise to congratulate the government on having brought about a reasonable increase in family allowance benefits. Still once more, I must say that I am very doubtful that this can be brought about if we think of the stand taken by the Conservative party, —and I repeat that—regarding every social security measure introduced by the Liberal party. Let us remember that a few years ago the former leader of the opposition went up and down the province of Ontario saying that he saw no reason why bonuses should be paid to the children of the province of Quebec.

That attitude in itself hampered the efforts of the Liberal leaders who always tried to ensure national unity. Moreover, it was also, —and the word may sound unkind—a callow attitude with regard to the heads of families. It was a lack of understanding in respect of the social issues and the way to handle them.

Mr. Chairman, I was just saying that we have not had any legislation to increase family allowances submitted to us. If, however, our remarks made on this side of the house with regard to social measures had the happy result of bringing about an increase in family allowances, we would be the first to congratulate the government and, at the same time, to recognize the merit of those who would heed our representations.

As some hon. members have already mentioned, the step taken by the Conservative party appears to be very significant. In fact, the government is asking us to vote a sum of about $90 million; now, if I may once again use the words of the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, this sum is about equal to the one mentioned at the time of the last estimates, but for both classes, that is our senior citizens and the children. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in closing I repeat that I support the resolution now under consideration, and I would ask the government to consider kindly and seriously, the possibility of increasing the rate of family allowances, because heads of families have to face even more onerous problems than our senior citizens.

(Text):

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I have been listening with a great deal of interest to all of this discussion on the resolution and I must admit I am not quite certain whether the government and the official opposition are waging the recent campaign all over again or whether they believe they are now on the hustings ready for the next election.

Mr. Dupuis: What are you doing now?

Mr. Winch: I shall tell my hon. friend exactly what we are doing. We are the only ones who are repeating the same policy we have been putting forward here year after year.

Mr. Dupuis: The same with us.

Mr. Winch: My friend says, "The same with us." They seem to have forgotten the spring session already. Boy, wouldn't they like to forget it! We are just following today the policies that we have been continuously outlining, knowing that they are necessary, on behalf of the old people of this country and bit by bit steps are being taken so that perhaps eventually you will catch up with the correct policy which is the C.C.F. policy.

However, I did not rise to speak about that. It was the interjection that brought it up. Let me tell hon. members that unless you come to that policy rather quickly, after the next election there will not be as many of you here as there are now. The reason I have risen to speak is that, ever since the announcement of the introduction of this legislation was made all the mail I have received deals with one phase in particular, already mentioned but I feel it must be mentioned again, and that is the reason why our senior citizens have not received, and apparently are not yet going to receive, the right to spend their pensions wherever they want to spend them. Why, on a humanitarian and generous basis, can the senior citizens not spend the rest of their lives either with their children in the United States or their brothers and sisters in the United Kingdom or whereever they want to go?

This point has been emphasized, and I merely raise it again so I can ask the minister whether, before the motion is put, he will explain to this house, so the members can explain to their constituents, the reason he will not put this principle into effect. It is not going to cost the government any money, but it does make a few people a lot happier. If the minister is not going to do it, he could at least have the decency to get up and explain why.

Mr. Pickersgill: I want to make a very few observations on the proposed legislation and I say at once, sir, I am going to support it. I am going to support it, but it does present a real problem for all of us who are conscientious representatives of constituents on the Atlantic seaboard. The effect of the legislation the government is now proposing will be—perhaps not for anyone more than myself and the hon. members for Burin-Burgeo and Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador to give to the retired adults in many of our communities larger incomes than those of the working members of their families who have to contribute through the sales tax towards the payment of these pensions.

The Minister of Public Works, with his customary eloquence and his well-known admiration for the Prime Minister—for which we honour him—gets up and tells us how the Prime Minister has devoted his life to the service of the little man. I do not think any of us who represent a constituency in the Atlantic provinces has any doubt who is the real little man in this country. He is the producer in that part of the country by the Atlantic, particularly in my constituency and in the province I represent, where everything that is produced and sold outside of the province, almost without exception, has to be sold outside of Canada in world markets at world prices.

I do not think there are any of us who feel at all ungenerous about doing these things to help the people in other parts of Canada who need help, and we certainly do not begrudge anything to the older citizens. But we do feel that a government that pretends to be treating all parts of Canada equally has to take some account of those people in this country who really have the low incomes. That will not be done just by putting phrases in the speech from the throne, empty phrases at that sir, about national development programs which when you examine them consist merely of two projects that have been discussed for years, and nothing new at all.

An hon. Member: Nothing was done.

Mr. Pickersgill: Some of us represent, as I do, constituencies where the fishery has been poor, where the income is going to be a great deal less than it was a year ago. I am not blaming the government for that but it is a fact, a fact which the government, if it professes to be equally interested in all Canadians in all parts of the country, should be just as much concerned about as they are about the plight of the old age pensioner or the plight of the wheat grower, because a fisherman can starve just as effectively as can a farmer. There are going to be a great many people in the eastern part of this country, fishermen and woodsworkers, who are going to be much worse off this winter than many of the old age pensioners.

I agree quite heartily that this measure is necessary because I am convinced that by spring the old age pensioners are going to need this money badly because the government is making no effort whatsoever to control inflation and to keep down the cost of living. For that reason the pension of $55 is probably not going to be worth much more by next spring than Mr. Harris' $46 pension was last spring. That is my prediction, and we shall see what we see about it.

I rose for another reason. I did have the honour until June 21 to be the minister of citizenship and it was drawn to my attention on many occasions, when I was serving in that capacity, that there was a real sense of grievance in this country because of the fact that people came here from other countries, became citizens of this country and, having become citizens, having lived here five years or sometimes more than five years but not twenty years, they seemed to be second class citizens because, in respect to old age security, they were not eligible for the benefits. I know the historical reasons for that, and I am speaking only for myself when I say this.

I recognize that the minister probably cannot do so in the case of these other pieces of legislation where the costs are shared with the provinces and where, because there is a means test and for other reasons it perhaps is more difficult to do, but so far as old age security which is paid as a matter of right is concerned, it does seem to me, speaking for myself, that this country is big enough, rich enough and generous enough that the residence limit could be reduced to five years and that old age security could be paid as soon as a person becomes a citizen of Canada.

I recognize that over the next quarter of a century there may be a handful of people who might retire in some other country and come to Canada to take advantage of us but I do not believe this would be a matter of any importance. I do not think it should weigh in the balance in comparison with the feeling of equality that such a change would give to those people who have come here to live, who have become citizens, who have embraced what they regard as our equal citizenship.

I dare say that some hon. gentlemen opposite may say, why did you not persuade your colleagues to do that last year. Well at the risk of being accused of betraying cabinet secrets, I will say that I did try and I was not successful. I am now trying to convince the government opposite and if the minister will do this I can assure him that as far as I am concerned I will give him full credit for it because I think it is the right and proper thing to do. I think it will be done eventually and, because I believe very sincerely that it should be done, it seemed to me it was only right and proper that as a conscientious member of the house I should say so now.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Hardie: Mr. Chairman, we have heard a lot today from all sides of the house regarding the last election campaign and to whom credit for social legislation of this sort should be given. Today we heard the hon. member for Regina City say that back in 1926 two labour members were responsible for forcing the Liberal government at that time to introduce old age security. He also told the story that the gun was held to the Conservatives' heads but he would rather have had them blown off than do anything about it.

The basis of Liberalism has always been to help the poor people, the little people of the country. Throughout many years as the government of Canada we have introduced legislation for the people in our population who have not done so well. For instance, the budget we brought down last spring totalled approximately $5 billion and of that total budget of $5 billion $1,500 million went to social security. I have no argument today with the amount by which the present government is raising the pension.

Mr. Cardiff: One hundred million went to arts and culture.

Mr. Hardie: We and all members of the house feel that our senior citizens should be given assistance. I am not arguing about the amount. In the four years since I first entered the house every time we brought in a piece of social legislation or any type of legislation it was always, in the view of the three opposition parties including the present government, too little and too late. Out on the hustings during the last election campaign the C.C.F. party said that they wanted $75 a month. They are not objecting to the bill because it does not make provision for payment of $75. The Social Credit party was going to give pensions of $100 if they were elected and the present government was going to raise the pension to $76.50.

Mr. Montgomery: Not in New Brunswick.

Mr. Hardie: I have taken this information from the national party advertising that went to every province, including the Northwest Territories. The members of the C.C.F. group particularly have come here and are trying to tell us today that they have forced every government to bring in social legislation of this or any other kind.

The C.C.F. government of Saskatchewan, the only provincial government where these people have any majority, last year paid $575,000 to the old age pensioners of Saskatchewan while the federal government was paying $23 million. For every dollar we spent on old age security in the province of Saskatchewan the Saskatchewan government paid 2½ cents. These people are making a great deal of noise over half a nickel.

In my riding the old age pensioners will be a great deal better off this winter than a large portion of the people who are able to work. The price of fur as you know has gone down to rock bottom; our lumber industry is shot. These people over the past 10 years have averaged about $400 a year in earnings.

An hon. Member: The Liberal government's policy.

Mr. Hardie: The Liberal policy—well, I will tell you something. As far as I am concerned and as far as the people of my riding are concerned, we raised the pensions last year by $6 for all the pensioners of Canada, not only the old age pensioners. We raised pensions by that amount because we thought at that time it was all the taxpayers of Canada could afford.

Mr. Cardiff: You thought at that time they would put you back in office and they didn't —that's why you did it.

Mr. Hardie: We didn't do it for that reason at all.

An hon. Member: Oh yes, that is what you did it for.

Mr. Hardie: You have tried to fool people that is why we did it.

An hon. Member: They made a higher bid over there.

Mr. Hardie: You people made a bid after we left here last year. You made a bid of $76 for pensions, the C.C.F. $75 and the Social Credit as high as $100.

Mr. Cardiff: We are bringing our promise into effect.

Mr. Hardie: It was $76—if you want to read it in your national advertising—with the Prime Minister's picture right on the front. There are several things that should be done by this government to help the people, not only in my riding but the people of Canada generally. Unemployment is facing us every day; the storm signals are up. Yesterday we passed $150 million for the western farmers; today we are going to pass another $96 million for the old age pensioners. We are discussing it but it will pass.

Now I am giving a warning to my friends across the way. They said they were going to cut taxes and do all these things as well. I say this: the storm signals are up boys. Unemployment is increasing every day. Do not come back next year and ask the people of Canada to increase the taxes. If you do go to the country—

An hon. Member: Be careful.

Mr. Hardie: Yes I will be careful—

Mr. Cardiff: That's the only thing you are afraid of, going back to the country.

Mr. Hardie: Oh, no, we are not afraid of it; oh no.

An hon. Member: You have to fulfil your promises in the Conservative party. Where is the haste?

Mr. Hardie: I want to see some of these election promises fulfilled before you go to the country. We do not want to see a budget come down next spring and then have you go rushing to the people with no intention of fulfilling these promises. I am going to support this legislation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hardie: Yes, I am not going to say this lightly—but as I said a moment ago, I am not going to squawk that it is not enough, as you people have done in the past and some of my other friends over there in the C.C.F. and Social Credit groups have done. I am just warning you that I am going along with this because I feel or I think that you may have enough sense to see your way clear to doing this and all the other things—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hardie: —you promised to do, without increasing taxes. However, I really do not think the present government has given any thought to what is going to happen in this country next year, no thought at all. They are bringing in this legislation, $150 million yesterday and $96 million today. We will have a few more handouts and then they will bring in a budget, promising the people of this country a lot of things and will go to the people with all these promises in the budget, having no intention of doing all these things because of the utter impossibility of doing so.

Mr. Cardiff: Do you think this looks more foolish than giving $100 million to arts and culture?

Mr. Pickersgill: Didn't you vote for it?

Mr. Hardie: I am not saying that one was any different from the other. I am just saying that you are spending money and you promised a reduction in taxes. You have got a lot of other things to do. Now if you ask questions about cash advances and compare that subject to this one, I want to tell you that you had better do something about the fur industry and you had better do something about the lumber industry in this country. Yesterday we passed $150 million for one primary producer and forgot about all the rest of them. Today we are passing legislation for the old age pensioners and, as other members have said, we all agree that the people of this country deserve a portion of the national product.

But how about the other people? How about the widows' pensions, how about, as our other friend said, family allowances? Mr. Chairman, I didn't intend speaking today—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hardie: You laugh. When you go back to the people next time my boy, or my boys—

An hon. Member: There will be twice as many of us here.

Mr. Hardie: Oh no, the laugh is going to be on the other side of your faces because somebody has got to pay for all the things you people are going to do, or have promised to do. I do not think you can come through with one-fifteenth part of the promises you made to the people of this country. I do not think that this party lost the election over the $6 increase in the old age pensions.

Mr. Cardiff: What did they lose it over?

An hon. Member: You outpromised us.

Mr. Hardie: The phony promises you monkeys over there on the other side of the house have made, but while you can fool people some of the time, you cannot fool them all the time.

Mr. Cameron: Many years ago when I was a small child I was taught that courtesy, besides being the ethical thing to do also paid big dividends and I discovered the truth of that this afternoon when I made way for my hon. friend the member for Mackenzie River because if I had not done so I would not have had the privilege of listening to him before I made my own speech. I really must deal with some of his gems to start with.

I am rather astonished that the hon. member who said only six months ago that all the taxpayers of Canada could afford would be $46 per month—and that was the reason why he supported his government at that time—now, six months later, has decided that the taxpayers can afford $55 a month, because he tells us he is going to support this measure.

Mr. Hardie: I qualified that statement.

[Mr. Hardie.]

Mr. Cameron: In addition to that he has spared no pains to point out what is obvious to everyone I imagine, even to the government, that economic conditions have worsened since the time the previous government brought in the $46 measure, a strange concept, it would seem to me, of his responsibility as a representative of the people. One of his primary duties is to keep a careful watch on public expenditures; to see that they are wisely made and that they are not in excess of the capacity of the Canadian economy. Feeling as he does, I cannot understand why he is supporting this measure.

I, on the other hand, am quite confident that not only can the Canadian economy well afford the increase which the government is proposing, but that it can well afford a great deal more. I would point out that in 1949, when the $40 pension was established, our gross national product stood at $16.4 billion. Today, in 1957, it stands, according to the latest figures issued by the dominion bureau of statistics a few days ago, at $31.7 billion, a figure which is almost double the gross national product in 1949.

Mr. Marler: In what year is the hon. member beginning his calculations?

Mr. Cameron: In the year the $40 pension was established.

Mr. Marler: 1951?

Mr. Cameron: 1949.

Mr. Marler: It was established in 1951.

Mr. Studer: What percentage of the national wealth came from the socialists?

Mr. Cameron: I would suggest—though I can quite understand their reluctance to do so—that former ministers of the cabinet should make their own speeches rather than interrupt those of others.

Mr. Marler: I was not interrupting; I was asking a question.

Mr. Cameron: I am telling the hon. member that the gross national product in 1949, when the $40 pension was established, was $16.4 billion. Today it stands at $31.7 billion, which is an increase of nearly 84 per cent, if my calculations are correct. On that basis alone the figure we presented in this house earlier this year of $75 as a reasonable level for the old age pension would have been well justified, because on the basis of the proportion of the gross national product devoted to these social services the pension today should be $74.88.

There is, of course, another manner by which we might calculate the real value of the pension being paid. As I myself placed on record earlier this year, the $46 pension which was brought in last session was actually only $37.18 in terms of the 1949 dollar. Today it is rather less than that. Today, owing to the continual rise in the consumer price index, that pension amounts to $37.26 in terms of the 1949 dollar, and this new increase will, if my calculations are correct, bring it up to some $45 in terms of the 1949 dollar. So we are apparently going to give our old age pensioners some five real dollars more than they were getting when they were receiving a $40 pension.

It is suggested we cannot afford any more. So that we shall not be relying entirely on statistical evidence, I want to refer to a news item which appeared in the Ottawa Journal yesterday, datelined from Vancouver. This, I am sure, will be of great interest to the Conservative members of this house because it refers to a speech made by a Conservative member of the Ontario legislature in Vancouver, addressed to a number of fellow real estate operators. He advises the benighted inhabitants of British Columbia, to which province I belong, to focus their efforts on encouraging the immigration into British Columbia of the working classes because, as this gentleman said, there is no place there for a rich man to spend his money.

I am quoting that, Mr. Chairman, in order to prove that we apparently have in our midst a number of people who experience some difficulty in finding avenues of expenditure for their incomes. Speaking as a British Columbian, of course, I must confess to a certain sardonic and, perhaps, slightly snobbish amusement that a Toronto real estate operator should find the social and economic opportunities in British Columbia so limited. Admittedly there may be less opportunity in my province for the sort of vulgar ostentation which some people seem to regard as the outward mark of social fitness, although we do have a few millionaires ourselves. But I can assume that we have in this country now, by their own confession, people who may well feel that with their rather limited concept of the purpose of human life and in order to function properly in society they must find avenues for conspicuous spending. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, I think it is rather too early for us to suggest that the Canadian economy cannot afford the sort of pension which this group has been advocating over the past two years.

We are told, of course, that it is dangerous to increase it any further because of the danger of inflation. Unfortunately, the rug was pulled from under that argument by the man we hire to look after our money supply in Canada, the governor of the Bank of Canada, who earlier this year told us that the inflationary pressures, with which he was very much concerned, and about which I would remind the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration the previous government did nothing, were caused by the vast, booming capital expenditures. He was even more specific when he pointed out that consumer spending, even those types of consumer spending which are based on a vast, inflated consumer credit, did not add materially to the inflationary pressures. So I suggest that the argument that we cannot afford to give more to the old age pensioners because of the danger of inflation has been exploded by the one person in Canada who has the best right to explode it.

There are, of course, many other drains on our economy which may make it difficult for us to provide older citizens with a more generous income. We have the drain of a continuing high level of corporation profits. We have—and this was brought very forcibly to our attention earlier this year—the scandalous situation in which there is no taxation whatever on capital gains of any consequence, as a result of which people are able to acquire fortunes without contributing to the economy from which those fortunes were drawn. We have expenditures on rather dubious measures of defence in this age of the sputnik which consume some 40 per cent of the revenues of this government, and we have not heard any suggestion from this government yet that they propose to consider these expenditures in a realistic manner in the light of the disturbing developments which have become evident in the last few months.

These are the places, Mr. Chairman, to which I suggest, if we really are concerned about our responsibility for senior citizens, we should turn for funds to provide an amelioration of their condition. In my part of the world, history tells us that the original British Columbians had a very brusque and efficient way of dealing with the problems of old age: they used to take their old people out to sea, put them on a rock at low tide to wait until the tide came in and thus solve the economic problem.

Perhaps there was a justification for it in a period in which the life of the tribe depended on every member of it being able to pull his or her weight but that is not the case in Canada today. We have actually and potentially a rich economy which can well afford to pay to the old people of this country something that will at least enable them to subsist on a reasonable basis.

I know the arguments, of course, that the old age pension is not intended to provide all the income of elderly people, that throughout their lives people should save enough to have at least a partial income at retiring age. Unfortunately for that argument statistics again show that the possibility of doing that is very limited. In fact, one of the ways in which the insurance companies in Canada sell their wares is to publish tables as to the fate of those who reach certain ages in our society and by that means they persuade a certain number of people to invest some of their funds in insurance policies. However, if one examines the report of the superintendent of insurance one finds the rather shocking fact that over $1 billion of life insurance lapsed last year presumably because the policyholders were unable to keep up their payments.

After all, Mr. Chairman, one does not need statistics to know perfectly well that the vast majority of people who reach the age of 70 have no savings on which to live and that whether we like it or not and however much it may outrage the exponents of initiative and thrift the fact remains that our economy is of such a nature that the greater proportion of our citizens are unable to provide for their declining years and you and I who are benefiting from the economy are the ones who should be deciding to make those declining years at least measurably comfortable.

Like the hon. member for Mackenzie River I am going to support this measure but I have a more logical reason for doing so. I think we can well afford it and I believe it is disgraceful that we are not doing more. I am quite sure that by the time the old age pensioners realize just what is the actual size of the $55 they are going to be given in terms of what it will buy in the market today, this government is then going to be faced with exactly the same demands as were made of the previous administration and they will come not only from old age pensioners.

The first time I realized the Liberal government was in serious trouble during the last election campaign was when I spoke at a construction job in my constituency. I had a number of friends working on that job, men with whom I had worked myself, and before I got up to speak one of the men told me, "I advise you to bear down heavily on the subject of old age pensions. The boys are burnt up about it". In the main these were young single men and when I discovered that this was their great bone of contention with the Liberal government I then realized that the Liberal party was in serious trouble. I suggest the Conservative party will find itself in serious difficulty also particularly if it takes no steps—and I am not in a position to say what those steps should be—to curb and control the rapacity of landlords who rent accommodation to old age pensioners.

A day or so ago I received a letter from an old lady in Vancouver who told me that some of these landlords are certainly taking time by the forelock and the moment the word came out from Ottawa that the pension was going to be increased to $55 a month many of their tenants were informed that their rent would be increased as soon as their first cheque came in. These are the realities of this question of the old age pension.

I was glad to hear the minister say the other day that he was not pretending that this increase was anything in the nature of generosity on the part of the government. I have always maintained that no government is really generous whatever it does because it is not spending its own money and you can only be generous with your own funds. At that time he was basing the increase on the principle of justice but I suggest that in an economy such as ours virtually bursting with real and potential wealth, there is no justice in old men and women living in the rabbit warrens of brokendown houses in every large city of Canada existing on the old age pension as it is today or as it will be tomorrow when it reaches $55. There is no justice there and it constitutes a sore in the heart of our society from which we must all suffer.

I hope, therefore, that when or if our new government finally decides to bring down a budget in this house it will be one which in this connection will be based more firmly on the economic realities of Canada than is the present increase to $55 a month which, as I said, in terms of real dollars at the time when old age pensioners got $40 is only some $45.60.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, the debate thus far has demonstrated, I would say more than any other thing, that people in Canada have everything to gain from a minority government. At long last they are getting from the government the kind of legislation to which they have looked forward. The only thing that seems to have suffered, in my opinion, is parliament because we have been subjected to long harangues of political reasoning as to what somebody did in 1926, 1930, 1934 or 1944 or whatever the year might be.

It is not my intention to speak at too great length at this time but I would like to deal with a few points the minister mentioned when he introduced the resolution. As reported at page 385 of Hansard of October 24 the minister said:

> The proposed changes are:
> (1) an increase in the rate of benefit to $55 a month.

I am immediately caused to wonder just how the government arrived at the figure of $55 a month. The hon. member for Mackenzie River told us that Conservatives in his riding were advertising that the old age pension was going to be set at $76.50. I have no reason to disbelieve him but I would point out that in my own riding the Conservative candidate indicated it would be at least $60 a month. I cannot say how he arrived at that figure either. The hon. member for Mackenzie River also indicated that the C.C.F. party had advocated $75 a month and the fact is they brought in a resolution last year to that effect which I supported. He went on to say, however, that the Social Credit group had indicated in its brochure that it would pay $100 a month.

For the benefit of the committee and of Canadians generally I think we should keep some semblance of reasonableness with regard to this matter and with this in mind I propose to read from a Social Credit pamphlet entitled "It's Your Canada—The New National Policy With Social Credit". It contains a photograph of the Reverend A. B. Patterson and suggests that people might do well to vote for him which they did and we are extremely grateful to them for this. The fact is they did a fine job in supporting this party.

On page 8 of the pamphlet we read this:

> $100-a-month pension.
> Social Credit will make available an old age pension of $100 a month—

Mr. Marler: Just the way they do in Alberta.

Mr. Hahn: A little louder, please.

Mr. Marler: I said, just the way they do in Alberta.

Mr. Patterson: Just hold the phone, boy, and you'll get it.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): You would do well to pattern yourselves after them.

Mr. Hahn: The former minister of transport is his usual jovial self, I see. He will have an opportunity of taking part in this debate later, I am sure.

Mr. Patterson: Not too jovial.

Mr. Hahn: Well, I have always found him jovial. I continue reading from this pamphlet:

> This can be achieved at once by increasing the basic federal pension to $60, with an additional $40 for those in need.

I think that is somewhat different from suggesting that all old age pensioners will receive $100 a month. The pamphlet concludes by saying that this sum of $40 will be made up of equal contributions from Ottawa and the provinces.

The hon. member for Red Deer indicated earlier that his province of Alberta was paying $15 a month as a supplementary allowance to bring the pension in that province to $70. I am very happy to say that my own province is paying $20 a month in the form of a supplementary allowance, which will increase the pension to $75. I am quite satisfied that the government of my province will pass legislation which will ratify these changes and make any changes that may be necessary to bring the pension of those in need up to $75.

However, I come back to this same question. How did we arrive at those particular figures? Last session when we had our dear Liberal friends in the government seats on this side of the house they told us that all the country's economy could stand was a pension of $46 a month; that the total increase had to be $6. Despite all the increased unemployment that our friends cry about and that we know seems to be apparent we suddenly find ourselves in the position where this government is proposing to pay $55 a month. I am just wondering how these things can be done? I would not like to suggest for one moment, because I do not believe it, that we are not in a position to pay a higher pension than $55.

I notice the Minister of National Health and Welfare himself said at page 385 of Hansard:

> We do not say that it is the final or perfect solution, or that there is any magic rightness about this particular amount.

I would agree with him, but I would suggest that possibly after we pass this bill and give the benefit of it to those who are to be the recipients of the money to be provided by it we should set up a committee in this house to discover exactly how far we can go in this and in other fields of social legislation so that we do not go back to the people as political parties and pretend that we can pay a sum which is out of keeping with the prosperity and ability of the nation as a whole. Certainly it is high time that we took the lives of people out of politics and came back to an actuarial basis and tried to have some reasonableness, some commonsense basis for what we are paying.

I think we can do much better than $55 a month, but that is not going to stop me from voting for this resolution and the bill because I consider that $55 is better than $46.

The second point raised in the minister's speech was the reduction in the basic residence requirement from 20 years to 10 years. I would take no exception to that; I would agree that that part of the legislation is probably well advised.

Third, and equally important, is the extension from three months to six months in the length of time which the pensioners are free to spend outside of Canada in any calendar year without losing their pensions. The hon. member for Vancouver East told the committee that he had received considerable correspondence in respect of the possibility of people getting their pensions outside of Canada, not just for three months or six months but for the full year. They consider it is their right and they should have the right to collect what they have paid in, or more than that, because this is after all an insurance fund that they have paid into. Some of us may feel that we shall never collect it; others of us are more hopeful. There are some in the committee who receive it as of right. I take issue with the thought that we should make it available only to those who reside within Canada for a period of six months. In effect, all we are telling these people is that if you are wealthy enough to travel to Arizona or California from New Westminster or Vancouver in British Columbia, or from any other province, for that matter, you can stay there for six months and enjoy the benefits of this increased old age pension, but if you are not wealthy enough you will have to stay right where you are, stay put, because we cannot afford to give you that $55 in a foreign land for a full year.

I maintain, and I think the reasoning is sound, that since these people have contributed, since many of the members in this house, I am sure all, have contributed in one way or another, we would wish—certainly I would wish—that the minister could see fit to change the six months to the period of one year. It may be that when he answers later he can tell us how he arrived at the figure of six months. Our dear old Liberal government, the one which is past and gone and which seems doomed to unhappier days, if I interpret press reports correctly and would-be prognosticators of the fate of parties, thought that three months was the limit. It would appear that the minister might be well advised to tell the committee how he arrived at the figure of six months as compared with the three months that the former government had permitted.

I have only one other point which will take just one moment. The hon. member for Red Deer raised a question as to the figure of $960 being used as the ceiling on allowable earnings plus the pension. I, too, would ask the same question. How did the government arrive at $960? Certainly it would seem not at all unreasonable to me, though perhaps I do not understand these things as well as some hon. members, that the figure should be $1,000. Why is it not $1,000, which is the income tax exemption for a single person? It does seem to me that if we can make it $960 we should be able to make it $1,000.

Mr. Monteith: I should like to answer one or two questions. The last speaker asked some questions about the income, and that sort of thing. I think these questions could be more readily dealt with at the committee stage of the bill, when I shall have my figures available and be able to give them at that time. There have been several members, including the hon. member who has just spoken, as well as the hon. member for Vancouver East who, incidentally—

Mr. Chevrier: Will the hon. gentleman allow me; I take it he wants to deal with some questions that have been asked. I notice it is five o'clock.

Mr. Monteith: Yes, you cut me off very nicely. I did want to answer a couple of questions before five o'clock.

Mr. Chevrier: Honestly, I do not want to interrupt the minister. Perhaps the best thing to do would be to answer those questions when we are on the bills. I understand there are not many and there is a likelihood of their being completed in a short time, or so I am informed; I may be wrong. Then perhaps the minister could go on with his statement, because it is hardly fair to the minister and to the committee to be allowed only a few seconds to deal with the questions.

Mr. Monteith: Five o'clock.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rea): Since the standing orders provide for the consideration of private and public bills at five o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again later this day, or at the next sitting of this house, whichever will permit?

Progress reported.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT TO BRING FLAX AND RYE UNDER JURISDICTION OF BOARD

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain) moved the second reading of Bill No. 10, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act to provide for jurisdiction in the handling of flax and rye.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of satisfaction I have the pleasure of placing before this house Bill No. 10 for the consideration of hon. members. Those hon. members who were here last year will recall that I introduced a similar bill at that session. This bill is for the purpose of amending the Canadian Wheat Board Act and the explanatory note reads as follows:

The purpose of this bill is to bring flax and rye within the provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board Act and thus eliminate speculation with respect to these grains.

At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that this explanatory note in no way encompasses the full significance of this amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. I have purposely drafted this amendment in such form that it will in no way interfere with the present Canadian Wheat Board Act except to introduce a new part V, the effect of which is to give further effect to part III and IV. This will mean placing flax and rye along with oats, wheat and barley under the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board.

Hon. members who are not familiar with the conditions of grain marketing in Canada will perhaps ask why it is that the western farmers are demanding the inclusion of more of their grains under the Canadian wheat board. At the outset I may say the reason is, first, that farmers generally in the prairie provinces are very happy with their experience in marketing grain through the Canadian wheat board. This amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act will, of course, in no way be a precedent and in no way a major deviation from the work of the Canadian wheat board in the past. As a matter of fact, during the period 1943-44 to 1946-47, the Canadian wheat board did in fact have flax under its jurisdiction. I might say that I am happy to have the honour and privilege of bringing this bill before the house because it does, in effect, bring before the members a move in the direction of orderly marketing which has been long sought by farm organizations.

I should like to give credit to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and its president, Mr. Herb Hannam, for the support given the principle which is now before us. In the presentation of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to the cabinet in February, 1956, there is this:

As has been done in past years, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture would also request that flax and rye be marketed through the Canadian wheat board, so that these grains may benefit from the orderly marketing policies, and increase price stability that board marketing provides.

This amendment, therefore, to the Canadian Wheat Board Act is favoured by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I should like to give credit also to the Interprovincial Farm Union for favouring the principle that flax and rye should be included in the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board. I may say that this C.C.F. group is happy and proud now to have with us the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schulz), who was formerly the president of the Interprovincial Farm Union. This organization has gone on record year after year in favour of the inclusion of these two grains in the marketing policies of the Canadian wheat board.

There is a very good reason why farmers generally favour the larger pooling of their grain for marketing purposes. The farmers have had a long struggle in trying to get some price stability and some orderly type of marketing. They have been subjected to vicious fluctuations in price over the years. Questions may be asked as to why farmers are in favour of this proposal. If hon. members will give some attention to the problems of the farmer, they will readily see that it is necessary to market grain through the specialized agencies in order to gain stability and control prices. Farmers generally do not want a feast or a famine. They have to cope with all the elements of weather, such as drought and hail. However, there is something that can be done for the farmer, aside from stabilized prices.

The farmers' problem in regard to these two great commodities is complicated on the open market. A year ago the federal government put flax under the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board. Speaking directly to this government I can say that probably so far as western Canada is concerned the result of the June 10 election and the defeat of many members of the Liberal party in western Canada was probably due to the fact that the government failed to have any close liaison with the thinking of farm organizations generally. I recall that when it was announced a year ago by the former minister of trade and commerce—for whom I have a great deal of respect but who I think had far too much work to handle to cope with it properly—that flax would be put under the jurisdiction of the board, I asked him if this was a deviation from former policy. He said no, that had been the practice just the crop year prior to that.

Of course, the following day he had to get up and announce that he had been wrong.

From that time onward, when flax was put under a quota and it was made impossible for farmers to decide on their own initiative when they should market their grain, the farmers have been in the position that they are not able to market that grain except under a quota established by the Canadian wheat board. Of course, one other reason for the amendment being introduced at this time is the fact that over the past few years in western Canada congestion has made it impossible for the farmers to deliver flax and rye to the elevators at the time of their choice.

As I said earlier, the farmers want stability of prices and I should like to indicate to the house some of the price trends that have taken place. I have here a graph prepared by the Coarse Grains Quarterly, Sanford Evans grain trade year book, which indicates the average monthly prices of flax and rye for the crop year 1955-56. I should like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that while earlier the price of flax had been $3.40 a bushel it dropped to less than $3 by August; that it climbed to a high of about $4.15 in February and again dropped back in June to $3.40. Similar price fluctuations occurred in the case of rye. I would be very pleased, Mr. Speaker, if I could have the unanimous consent of the house to place this graph on the record because it does show in a much more graphic way than I can explain to the house the price trends for the crop year 1955-56.

Mr. Speaker: What is the document that the hon. member wishes to place on the record?

Mr. McCullough: This is a Sanford Evans grain trade graph and the source is the Coarse Grains Quarterly.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member the leave of the house to place this graph on the record?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCullough: The graph follows:

Various arguments were put forward by the former government as to why it did not see fit to include flax and rye under the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board. I see the former minister of agriculture is in the house. Perhaps he will recall some of the arguments we had in this chamber when he was the minister and we in this group and other members were trying to get the inclusion of oats and barley under the jurisdiction of the wheat board. In the period from 1945 to 1948 different spokesmen for the government put forth various arguments why they would not and could not see fit to do so.

Finally, in 1949 or 1950 the house did pass enabling legislation and when similar legislation was passed by the provinces the Canadian wheat board was able to deal with these grains. I think the chief argument against the proposal during the period when we were struggling to get these two grains included was that oats and barley went into interprovincial trade and therefore were not commodities which could be included under federal control.

Further to my argument, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that the two commodities which I now urge the house to include under the jurisdiction of the wheat board are important for other reasons. The first is that on a relative basis exports of flax and rye have indeed been greater than exports of oats and barley in some years. I have here a table taken again from the Sanford Evans grain trade year book which gives the exports for the crop years from 1949-50 to 1955-56 inclusive.

I find that in the crop year 1949-50 exports of rye were 131 per cent of production and exports of flax for the same period were 148 per cent of production. In other words, there was a draw on existing stocks within the country. For the year 1955-56 the export percentage of rye was 97 per cent and the export percentage of flax was 55 per cent. If we compare oats and barley for the same crop periods we find that in 1949-50 the export percentage of barley was 14 per cent and that of oats only 6 per cent. Taking the crop year 1955-56 we find that the export percentage of barley was 26 per cent and that of oats 1 per cent. This does indicate that on a relative basis exports of flax and rye hold a very high importance.

To deal with income from these two farm products, I have here a table which should be of great interest to those wishing to ascertain the importance of this matter to our prairie farmers. This table is prepared by the dominion bureau of statistics and shows the cash income from coarse grains for the years 1949 to 1955 inclusive. In 1955 prairie farm income from the sale of rye was $6,325,000 while in 1952 it was $23,380,000. In the year 1955 the income from flax was $40,021,000 and in 1952 it was $29,912,000.

These figures show the comparative importance with oats and barley. It is a very short table but again, if I may, I should like to have the unanimous consent of the house to place it on Hansard. It shows, as I said, the income from the four grains I have mentioned for the years 1949 to 1955 inclusive. May I have the permission of the house?

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise not for the purpose of opposing the request but because I believe it is customary in such cases for the hon. member wishing to place a table of figures on the record to state the sources from which the information is drawn.

Mr. McCullough: The source is the dominion bureau of statistics.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave?

Agreed.

Mr. McCullough: The table follows:

Marketing of flax in 1955-56, Mr. Speaker, totalled 15½ million bushels and it is significant that approximately 77 per cent of that amount was delivered between August and November, a four-month period. The price range during that four-month period was $3.02 to $3.25 a bushel. I should like to compare that with the price in March. All hon. members who are acquainted with conditions in western Canada will know that we often have very severe weather in that month and that it is impossible for the farmers to haul out their grain. With the price for flax at $4.16 a bushel which was the high during that period, only 400,000 bushels were delivered at that price.

I believe there perhaps should be more main reasons given in summarizing why the former government did not see fit to include flax and rye in the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board. I believe further that over the years the argument has been put forth in this house that it would overwork the officers of the Canadian wheat board and I have already indicated that the Canadian wheat board did in fact handle flax during the period 1942-1943 to 1946-1947. After that of course it was handled for a year by the Canadian wartime prices and trade board. Another reason why I think the former government did not see fit to bring these two products under the Canadian wheat board was that they wanted to leave the door open for speculation on these grains. In other words they wanted to leave the operation of the Winnipeg grain exchange in such a way that the type of speculating to which I have referred could continue.

I do not want to dwell for a long time on this argument but I would like to say that the western farmers over the years have fought to stop speculation in their products and I hope every hon. member in this house will see fit to support me and those in this group in this move to bring under the control of orderly marketing, at long last, these other two farm commodities. I say this because I feel in doing so it will have the effect of stopping the speculation in the farmers' crops on the Winnipeg grain exchange and, in essence, will stop the gambling on farm products.

I think the former minister of trade and commerce has argued that these two crops, flax and rye, are after all small crops and therefore are insignificant and do not require the attention of the government in order to put them under an orderly marketing system. Well, I think my arguments this afternoon would indicate that such is not the case. Flax in particular has become a very important crop in western Canada and when you consider that the acreage of flax in that part of the country has risen from 1,030,000 acres in 1941 to 3,970,000 acres in 1956 you will very readily see the importance of this crop in western Canada.

I should like in my argument to put forward one other point in regard to price fluctuation. In 1948, as an example, when flax was under the control of the Canadian wheat board and a fixed amount was paid to the farmer as an additional participation payment, the farmers of western Canada received $5.50 a bushel for their flax in that crop year. Rye, which was left on the open market, for that crop year averaged $3.74½ a bushel. However, by 1951 flax had remained at a relatively fair price contrasted with rye, which started to decline most disastrously and by 1954 was selling for 99 cents a bushel. Then last year, 1956, the average price of flax fell to $3.60 a bushel. Now I think it is only fair to the western farmer, who has gone along with the former government and to the two farm organizations which are attempting to get the ear of this new government, that we see some action in this important matter. While the former government seemed indifferent, not only to matters of this kind but to the cost-price squeeze facing farmers and so on, this new government we hope will see fit to meet the demands of organized agriculture. We hope they will also meet other demands coming from the representatives of the prairie farming area.

I may say that I wrote to every municipality in the province of Saskatchewan and the replies I received to the question whether or not they were in favour of the inclusion of flax and rye under the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board were practically unanimous. In summing up my arguments I might say this: the farmer wants, first, orderly marketing of these two grains along with his other commodities; secondly, he wants stability of price which can be achieved through orderly marketing by the Canadian wheat board; thirdly, that these grains should be recognized as forming an important part of the export trade; and lastly of course—and this is extremely important—the farmers do not want speculation in their products. What they produce of course is after all the food of the world. I hope with that due consideration will be given to this proposal for a change in the Canadian Wheat Board Act and that I shall receive widespread support in the house in this respect.

Mr. J. A. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): I wish to commend the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) for again introducing this bill before the house, namely the bill to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act to make it possible for flax and rye to be marketed through that board.

We in this group for many years have argued that the marketing of flax and rye should be placed under the control of the Canadian wheat board. We have for years recognized the fine work which has been done by that board, working in the interests of those farmers of western Canada who produce wheat, oats, and barley. It is our feeling that farmers producing the other two major grains of the west, namely flax and rye, should be given the same consideration as those producing wheat, oats and barley. We have, as I pointed out, supported the Canadian wheat board down through the years, even though at times we have criticized the marketing policies which the Canadian wheat board has been forced to follow as a consequence, I might say, of the trade policies laid down by the former administration.

We sincerely hope the new administration will see fit to embark upon an entirely new trade policy as far as the marketing of our grains is concerned. The wheat board did away with the vicious fluctuation of prices which occurred for many years in connection with the marketing of our wheat, oats and barley. I can remember as a young lad, coming home from school, immediately getting onto a grain tank and hauling a load of grain to the town so that my dad would be able to receive the high prices for his wheat which were prevalent in the month of September. We knew full well that unless he got that wheat on the market in September he would be forced to take a lower price in October or November. The Canadian wheat board ended that situation. Prices, as I have pointed out, have been stabilized as far as those three grains are concerned.

The hon. member for Moose Mountain has pointed out the terrific fluctuation of prices which occurred in the prices of flax and rye during the crop year 1955-56. He pointed out that the price of flax rose from a low of $2.97 to high of $4.16. The price received for rye varied from 87 cents to $1.30.

Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that it was not by accident that this low price for rye was reached in a period when it was impossible for the farmers of western Canada to deliver their grain. At the present time they often find it impossible to deliver their grain to the particular elevator they deal with, impossible because the elevator man is unable to accept flax and rye at that time. Farmers are not permitted daily freedom of decision in taking advantage of favourable market conditions.

Again, it has been suggested that farmers should stop growing wheat and grow other grain. If this suggestion is to be pursued it would mean that more and more farmers in western Canada would be turning their land over to flax and rye, and the need for a stabilized market would be further accentuated. As the hon. member for Moose Mountain has pointed out, farmers' organizations from western Canada have urged for years that the marketing of these two grain products, flax and rye, should be placed under the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board.

Representations were made to the previous administration on many occasions but seemed to fall on deaf ears. I know that representations were made to the new government on August 15 of this year, and I sincerely trust that our new government will see fit to support this particular bill which was so ably introduced by the hon. member for Moose Mountain.

Mr. G. R. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I know it is not usual for an hon. member who has made his maiden speech the day before to feel he should get up and make another speech the following day. However, as a farmer from the west, this problem vitally interests me as a person, and is certainly of great consequence to the people I represent.

Though I am only a new member of this house, I understand that this is a matter which has been debated in the course of a number of years during previous parliaments and that it has, in a way, become more or less a perennial affair. This particular bill has been sponsored by the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) on several previous occasions. At the time he last introduced it we had, of course, a different government and a different minister of trade and commerce. The position taken by the minister of trade and commerce and his colleagues at that time was that they would not have anything to do with putting rye and flax under the jurisdiction of the board, and since this attitude was not further discussed by other hon. members of his party I presume it could be taken as expressing the official position of the government of that day.

Now Mr. Speaker, in discussing this question with officials of the wheat board as I have done on several occasions, I found that during the period of congestion in the elevator system they have been reluctant to take on responsibility for handling any further grain, and it has apparently been their attitude that as long as this surplus position continues it would be wiser to leave the matter as it is today.

The Conservatives took the position three years ago at a conference in Saskatchewan of western members—this was an informal conference not involving party policy—that it would be better to leave flax on the open market as a barometer which would tell farmers whether the wheat board was doing a good job or not.

The farm organizations, though generally favourable to flax and rye being handled by the board were not completely in agreement. On the surface they were in agreement, but some of their officials were not completely in accord for the reason that in their opinion no further burden should be placed on the wheat board at this time of serious congestion. Such an attitude would be especially understandable now that the board is being asked to handle the cash advance. The farmers themselves are divided as to the feasibility of placing responsibility for flax and rye on the wheat board—but I believe the majority favour it.

My own opinion—and I am here to express my own opinion—and I think it is also the opinion of the people whom I represent, is that desirable as it may be to have these two grains under the control of the board it would be asking too much to instruct the board to undertake such a responsibility, having regard to the prodigious amount of detail which would be involved in this present crop year, especially, as I have previously pointed out, at a time when officials of the board would be reluctant under present circumstances to take on further obligations.

I do not bring up these points with any purpose of placing anything in the way of this bill. If it can be shown to this house that it is practical this year, in the circumstances I have indicated, then I think we should give the matter further consideration. But these are some of the questions to which hon. members in this house have not had answers up to the present time. We have listened to a large number of statistics, read by the hon. member for Moose Mountain in very great detail. I am sure that to the majority of hon. members they did not convey too much meaning, taking them as he was giving them orally.

It could be that one way to resolve this issue would be for the committee on agriculture to hold hearings on it. Everyone concerned could then make a submission and, in consequence, the committee would perhaps be in a position to assess intelligently the issues involved and come back to the house with the proper answers. In other words, Mr. Speaker, what I have said is, briefly, this: desirable as it may be to have these grains under the control of the board when the board is functioning in normal conditions, I do not think we should ask these people to take on this extra burden now, especially as during the next few days, when the bill providing for cash advances is passed, they will be asked to handle a tremendous amount of detailed work in connection with that proposal since a very large percentage of the flax has been sold this year. I think we should give the board an opportunity to get this load of other grains off its back before we pile another on top of it. However, if that answer does not appeal to all hon. members—and I am sure it is reasonable—then I suggest that a committee of this house investigate every possibility before we make any rash moves.

I would conclude by expressing the hope that the committee will be in agreement with me that we can resolve this question, but should not do so in haste and as a result do something to injure the operations of the wheat board which I am sure the majority of the hon. members of this house would not wish to do.

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, due to the fact that the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) has so adequately and comprehensively laid this matter before the house it will not be necessary for me to go into any great detail. I am sure it is a matter of satisfaction to him and to those he represents that he has already been commended by hon. members on the other side of the house for having brought this bill before it and given hon. members an opportunity to express in principle their opinion upon it.

Naturally we are most interested to hear the attitude of the government on this question and I assume that the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Muir) who was the first spokesman in his party to speak about it did so on behalf of his government. If that is so there is good room for hope that this bill is going to carry this day because the hon. member recommended—on behalf of the government no doubt—that the bill go to a committee.

Of course the only way this bill can go before a committee is to be adopted on second reading and then it can go to the committee for close study and be further considered as to detail and I believe that procedure is the one we should adopt. That would also meet the reservation expressed by the hon. member who preceded me in relation to the attitude of the wheat board itself because if this bill is now adopted in principle and sent to a committee the members of the wheat board or any other officials who are interested, including representatives of the farm organizations, could appear before that committee and state their opinions and offer suggestions as to the details of the bill.

I hope the vote on this bill will be favourable. I am sure that at least one member of the Progressive Conservative party must be thoroughly in support of this legislation. I refer to one of my colleagues from Manitoba, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson). I say this because I have followed his career in the Manitoba farmers' union and know that he is one of the former officials of this organization who as a district director was responsible with other district directors in framing the resolutions which were contained in briefs presented to the former government and which in the near future will perhaps be presented to this government by the Manitoba farmers' union demanding that this type of legislation be placed before parliament.

In these circumstances I hope we will have the united support, as has already been indicated, of the Social Credit group and for which we are duly grateful and we will also expect the full support of the members supporting the government.

Mr. Gordon Chown (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to represent a constituency which is largely urban. The constituency of Winnipeg South is situated rather close to the Winnipeg grain exchange and the wheat pool as my hon. friends in the far corner of the house realize. Notwithstanding the fact that it is largely urban and residential there is on the outer fringes the market gardener and farmer who have a small acreage. In certain instances these farmers may be producing flax and rye. Perhaps it is because of their close proximity to the wheat board and the grain exchange that I feel they could be delighted that they have one residual area of free enterprise in which they can operate.

In addition to that there is a sugar beet manufacturing industry in the Fort Garry portion of my constituency and in the area to the south of this municipality, a large number of farmers have prospered through this free enterprise.

It occurred to me—and it seems a reasonable and justifiable suggestion—that this sort of bill should be given full consideration by the committee on agriculture as was suggested by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Muir), particularly in view of the declared diversification of opinion I have brought to the attention of the house. In its sittings the committee could bring before it representatives of the farmers' unions which hon. members in the far corner of the house seem to represent more than they do the general populace of their constituencies.

Before coming to Ottawa I had the opportunity of sitting around the table with members of the Manitoba farm union and their primary concern was the cash position of the farmers which this government has already taken steps to improve. Throughout the course of the entire evening there was no suggestion on the part of those representatives that this sort of bill should be given consideration at an early date or at the initial sittings of this house.

I am reminded of a letter I received from one farmer which consisted of about 14 words in which he said, "While we were under the grain exchange for marketing purposes things were good and they ain't been since". I do not suggest for a moment to this house that I ally myself with the idea of recovering the operations of the Winnipeg grain exchange as they existed in years gone by but as yet I do not shut the door completely on the possibility of the grain exchange and the wheat board operating co-operatively side by side as a dual outlet for our grain.

This is something that I say with great sincerity because I do feel that under the free and open marketing of all grains there is a great possibility, indeed almost a probability, that we would not have the fantastic grain surplus that we have on our hands at the present time; but I wish to make it clear, and amply clear, that I would not subscribe to the operation of the Winnipeg grain exchange exclusively as far as grains are concerned.

The reasons already presented to this house are that the present wheat board is operating to full capacity in dealing with the tremendous surplus we have; that we are dealing indeed with legislation for cash advances, which we expect will shortly be passed in this house, and those reasons almost, I would suggest to the house, preclude the addition of the operation and control of these two crops of flax and rye. For that reason I think this bill is premature. It has not been considered by the government and cabinet; it has not been considered by the western members of the government in caucus; it has not been considered by the caucus of the government as a whole. The general feeling for the time being at least should be that these crops can be left on the free and open market as cash crops that are bringing reasonable returns to the farmer. Indeed, perhaps they are the only crops that are bringing such farmers any cash at all.

I know my hon. friends in the corner across the way would like to see everything brought under the control of government agencies and boards of one kind or another; but we who have seen the inspired and tremendously productive operation of free enterprise in the world of business recognize that the temporary crisis which have developed in the field of agriculture do require the intercession of government for the time being to endeavour as much as possible to put the farmer in a position where he has cash on hand to keep in line with his current expenses.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker that—I do not speak for the government any more than the hon. member for Lisgar does. We are speaking only for the reason that we have not considered this thing at all in cabinet or in caucus; we speak as individual members giving private opinions on such subjects. We favour government intercession only to the point where it rectifies a crisis such as exists at the present time among our farmers owing to the lack of cash. The government has taken steps along appropriate lines, favoured by all sides in this house, to correct that situation. I think that legislation will be introduced shortly and voted upon. If we take this one additional step at the present time to bring under the control of the wheat board flax and rye I do not think it will be long before the hon. gentleman in the far corner will be suggesting that turkeys, butter, eggs, sugar beets and sunflowers should all be brought under a similar type of board and controlled by the government.

Mr. Argue: I have been advocating that for years.

Mr. Chown: The point my hon. friend forgets—and he knows why his numbers are not larger than they are—is that they have been advocating this sort of thing for years and there are still Canadian citizens who do not want the government to run their lives from morning until night.

Mr. Argue: I wonder whether the hon. member for Winnipeg South will permit a question. Can the hon. member say whether or not he has noticed that the farm organizations, including the wheat pools and the farmers' union, have asked that a measure like this be adopted?

Mr. Chown: I would be very happy to answer the hon. member. I have not personally, as I told him, been consulted about this and I have been consulted by a great number of other organizations on similar problems and by quite a few farm organizations on other problems. If the hon. member suggests, and probably he is right, that this is a very pressing problem that has been urgently submitted to members of his group, I can assure him that it has not been brought with anything like the same vigour to the attention of the private members who are not in the agricultural business and, as the hon. member knows, require to be educated on the needs of farmers.

We are never too ashamed to admit that we do not have the specialty that those of you who are farmers have. Those of you who are farmers know a lot about farming. I happen to be a lawyer and I think probably I know a lot more about law than the average farmer does. But I think I can say with humility, as one private member of the house, I want to hear from those organizations through their representatives on the agricultural committee; I want to know how desperate the need is and I want to have substantial proof that these two crops have not been returning the farmer more cash than anything else that he is dealing with on his farm. If I can be convinced, in the normal course of events, just as any other member of the government, that this is a very desperate need, then I assure my hon. friends across the way that the government will give the proper consideration to it and announce a policy in this house in due course.

I emphasize again that I oppose the creeping into every facet of our democratic life in Canada the agencies of government that will swell the civil service and add more fixed costs to the taxpayers of this country. This is something that my hon. friends over there have advocated without success for years. I assure them that as long as I am in this house anything that smacks of that sort of thing will be responded to with a great deal of sincerity and honest opinion from my side of the house by more members than myself.

Mr. Chevrier: Six o'clock.

Mr. Chown: I feel that this piece of legislation has not had the consideration that it should have, particularly on this side of the house.

Mr. Chevrier: Six o'clock.

Mr. Chown: Therefore, I urge that we be permitted to give it further and more lengthy consideration.

May I ask that it be called six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

On motion of Mr. Chown the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the hon. gentleman what the order of business is for Monday?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, on Monday we shall commence with the second reading of the bill to provide for advance payment for prairie grain prior to the delivery thereof. When that bill is through second reading and the committee we shall return to the consideration of the resolution which was under debate earlier today, followed by the other three resolutions standing in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and then the two resolutions in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock and in view of the business announced, this house stands adjourned until Monday afternoon at 2.30 p.m. eastern standard time.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

DENTAL TREATMENT, WORLD WAR II VETERANS

Question No. 38—Mr. Zaplitny:

1. Did any of the service personnel who served in the armed forces during world war II, and who were discharged from the services since the war ended, receive dental treatment?
2. If so, how many received treatment and what has been the total cost to date?

Answer by: Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs):

1. Yes.
2. Figures show number of courses of dental treatment given to former members of the armed forces after discharge from service during world war II, and include a small percentage where an individual had more than one course:

Question

	Courses	Cost
Up to March 31, 1952	596,673	$23,434,813
From April 1, 1952 to March 31, 1957	35,000 (est.)	1,250,000

Note 1. Commencing with fiscal year 1952-53, statistical records of dental treatment do not segregate world war II veterans, and the answer is estimated.

Note 2. Statistical records of dental treatment do not show date of discharge, and the answer includes all cases of world war II veterans.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 28, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ST. LAURENT (QUEBEC EAST)—REFERENCE TO ASSURANCE REPORTED GIVEN TO GOVERNOR GENERAL

Right Hon. L. S. Laurent (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a question of privilege which I believe affects every member of this house as well as the relationship between the government and the crown under our constitutional system. The question arises because of the appearance in this morning's Montreal Gazette of a letter from Mr. Leslie Roberts, the opening passage of which reads as follows:

Sir,—The Right Hon. James Gardiner's statement in the House of Commons, to the effect that the opposition has refrained from bringing down a motion of "no confidence" in the Diefenbaker government, because the Governor General exacted a promise from the outgoing prime minister that a new administration must be given an opportunity to place its program before parliament, again raises the question of impropriety on the part of the representative of the crown. It was equally improper on the part of Mr. St. Laurent, as the leader of a government, to accept such a "deal".

As all hon. members will realize, Mr. Speaker, this is not a correct statement of what the right hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner) actually said in the house. The relevant statement will be found at the top of page 264 of Hansard of October 22, and reads as follows:

When the government of the day found it necessary to give assurance to the Governor General those assurances, of course, were given to the effect that we would carry on in such manner as to make it possible for the new government to have sufficient support in the house to be able to place their policies before the people of this country and carry on from there.

I should like to make it clear that no assurance whatever was asked of me by His Excellency and that no assurance was given to His Excellency by me apart, of course, from the assurance given in the public statement I made at the time I tendered the resignation of the government.

In order to avoid future misunderstanding perhaps I might be permitted to put the text of the statement on the record. It is as follows:

Although no party will have a clear majority in the new parliament the Progressive Conservative party appears to have the largest number of elected members. In the circumstances I have reached the conclusion that the proper course for me to take was to submit the resignation of the Liberal administration to His Excellency the Governor General, which I have done today. Before doing so I advised the leader of the Progressive Conservative party of my intention, adding that of course we would carry on if he was not prepared to accept the responsibility of forming a government, but that if he does, my colleagues and I will extend full co-operation to him and his party in their arrangements for taking office so that the Queen's government can go on without interruption. I have also told Mr. Diefenbaker that I feel the Liberal members of parliament will not attempt by obstruction to prevent the new government from carrying through parliament the program it has placed before the people, though we shall, of course, exercise our right to express our views freely on the measures introduced in parliament. We feel that the growth and prosperity of the country should not be endangered by instability of government which would come from irresponsible obstruction.

What assurance I gave was, as the statement shows, given directly to the present Prime Minister and announced to the public, and I am sure that is what the right hon. member for Melville had in mind.

I referred to the same matter in my own speech on October 16 when I said, as will be found on page 46 of Hansard:

Having the reasonable assurance that the fulfilment of its promises will not be obstructed at the present session of parliament, at least by the official opposition, the government will have no excuse for any failure to carry out that program.

What I want to make abundantly clear is that there never was any question of any bargain being made between the Governor General and the outgoing administration. It is true, of course, that His Excellency was aware, as were the public, of the attitude which the members of the outgoing administration proposed to take, but there was nothing more than that.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we welcome the explanation of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent), but it is not sufficient.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I hope I never arrive at the point where I begin to separate myself from the average member in this house and adopt the attitude of being something that I am not. I just want to say that the explanation is not sufficient to meet the situation. The Leader of the Opposition mentioned one quotation, but I would point out also that on page 264, in the first paragraph of the second column, it says:

> Before there was any thought of choosing a new Liberal leader in this country the Prime Minister of the day made the announcement, when he tendered his resignation, that he had given those assurances to the Governor General.

There should not have been any mention of the Governor General in this house; that is the first principle of parliamentary government. I refrained from saying anything at the time because—well, I was shocked by the statement that was made. There could be no misunderstanding; it was made so clearly and so definitely that the explanation of the Leader of the Opposition does not meet the situation.

However, I am pleased to have his assurances in this regard which are entirely accepted, because there was no representation made to me of any such thing either by him or anyone else. I formed the government, and we asked for no such assurances. But to use the Governor General's name as an explanation for a course of action difficult to explain will also be equally inexplicable.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO BRING FRENCH AND ENGLISH TEXTS INTO CONFORMITY

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 15, to amend the Criminal Code.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide a minor amendment in the text of the French version of the Criminal Code to bring the definition sections of the English and French versions into conformity.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the federal government and the government of the province of New Brunswick, since January 1, 1956, to date, in connection with the proposed construction of a bridge across the Restigouche river, from Campbellton, New Brunswick, to Cross Point, Quebec.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I have leave of the house, with permission of the minister concerned, to have the date changed to "since January 1, 1953, to date" instead of "since January 1, 1956"?

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member permission to change the date as stated?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): This is agreeable to the government, subject to the usual reservation that we obtain clearance from the provincial government.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to that explanation is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER-NEW YORK—REQUEST FOR DEEPENING OF WATERWAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest shown over the week end by several groups in an old but important project may I ask the following question. Will the minister give consideration to the appointment of a board of engineers to consider the possibility of deepening the route from the St. Lawrence to New York via the Richelieu and lake Champlain, or in the alternative will the government refer the matter to the international joint commission for study and consideration?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been given consideration by the previous government for a number of years past, and I am glad to assure the hon. member for Laurier that the present government will continue to give the matter consideration.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was the government represented at this meeting? If so, by whom? Was any statement of policy made by the representative of the government?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to check on that matter and give an answer tomorrow.

LIVESTOCK—SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS IN WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Macleod, as also have the hon. member for Moose Mountain and the hon. member for Medicine Hat, asked me a question regarding the shortage of cattle box cars in the Lethbridge and Calgary districts. As indicated to the hon. member for Macleod on Friday, I have spoken to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company about the matter and they advise me that the heavy movement of stock to the United States commenced in September but with the recent severe weather and increased loadings a shortage has developed. To meet this condition the Canadian Pacific has been urging United States lines to arrange for the prompt return of equipment and the company is also moving empty stock cars from eastern Canada to this area.

I might add that the C.P.R. tell me there is a reasonably good supply of cars available for this week and they assure me every effort will continue to be made to meet requirements.

PACIFIC GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY—CONSTRUCTION GRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. B. R. Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the failure of the Peace river bridge and the fact that the Pacific Great Eastern Railway bridge is to carry motor traffic, and in view of the increased importance of that railroad, can the Prime Minister give some indication to the house whether the government is giving consideration to providing construction grants for all the new construction from Vancouver to Squamish and from Prince George north to the end of construction?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has asked me to answer the hon. gentleman's question. Under the agreement by which the northwest highway system was handed over to Canada at the conclusion of the second world war, this country undertook to maintain that highway for military purposes. The commitment does not extend to the P.G.E., nor are the military requirements such as would justify this government making available grants for all the new construction on that railway from Vancouver to Squamish or from Prince George north to the end of construction.

Mr. Leboe: I have a supplementary question. In my question I indicated the added importance of the railroad. I meant that this importance was owing to the fact that we have such terrific development taking place in that area.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Is not the Alaska highway still a military highway, and therefore are we not responsible for the building of the bridge? Is it not still a military highway?

Mr. Pearkes: The military requirement of the Alaska highway is not as great as it has been, but it is still being maintained for military traffic.

TRADE

CHRISTMAS TREES—INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHING GRADES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce I wish to direct a question to his parliamentary assistant. In asking the question I do not want the house to assume that I think the minister is Santa Claus.

Is consideration being given to establishing standard grades for Christmas trees offered for sale in Canada and, if so, when is an announcement respecting specifications, etc. to be expected?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving notice of his intention to ask this question. In reply I would say that two-thirds of Canadian Christmas tree production is marketed in the United States, and a voluntary grading system is being brought into force in that market on a national basis on November 1, 1957. Establishment of this system has been announced in the department's fortnightly publication Foreign Trade and details have been passed on to provincial governments and producers' associations.

This has renewed interest among Canadian producers in the adoption of standards covering all Canadian production. Close contact is being maintained in this matter with the provinces and the trade. The province of Nova Scotia has a voluntary grading system in existence. The trade has various grading rules in use.

The operation of the grading system in the United States will be watched with close interest. It has been introduced at a late date in the current season. If it is successful, and if general support for such a grading system develops in Canada, consideration will be given to establishing a voluntary national standard for use in this market in future years.

REPORTED VISIT TO OTTAWA OF U.S. CONGRESSIONAL SUBCOMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I am sorry I was too busy to send notice of the question.

Since the minister has recently been to the United States discussing trade, could he make a statement on the reason for the forthcoming visit to Ottawa of members of the subcommittee on foreign trade policy of the House of Representatives of the United States congress, and tell us what might be expected from this visit?

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Well, Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister I will have to take notice of this question and see that an answer is given at an appropriate time.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might say something in reply to that question. The Boggs committee, so called from the name of the chairman, is a subcommittee of the committee of ways and means of the House of Representatives of the United States congress. It has gone abroad on a couple of occasions to consider in other countries questions pertaining to trade of such countries with the United States.

This committee is coming to Ottawa to be here on Wednesday and Thursday of this week to discuss such questions with the government departments concerned. After that discussion they propose, I believe, to go to Toronto on Friday. These will be informal discussions, I take it, for the purpose of exchanging information.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Is it not a fact that the government of Canada asked this committee to come to Ottawa at this time?

Mr. Fleming: No. I understand the committee, through the United States embassy here, expressed a desire to come to Ottawa for the purpose of these informal discussions.

Mr. Hansell: A supplementary question. May I ask the minister whether this is part of the subcommittee's work in the United States in respect of calling witnesses? Are we to understand that instead of calling witnesses before their committee, they are coming to Canada to interview witnesses?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what their intention is in regard to calling witnesses on their own soil. The purpose of their visit here, as we have been given to understand by the representatives of the United States administration here, is to come and have talks with a view to gathering information. That is all that has been indicated to us.

[Later:]

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance with regard to the investigating committee that will be arriving here next week from the United States. Will the minister try to draw their attention to the very great importance of removing the tariffs on base metals entering the United States, impress upon them the very critical condition of the base metal mining industry, and also point out to them how serious the situation will become if the United States imposes the proposed tariffs now being discussed?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, just as the Canadian ministers did in their meeting with members of the United States administration at Washington several weeks ago, we expect to put those facts before the Boggs committee when they are here this week.

PRESS REPORTS OF PURPOSE OF CANADIAN MISSION TO UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware of current reports in the Manchester Guardian and other British newspapers to the effect that the proposed Canadian trade mission of leading businessmen which will visit the United Kingdom next month will be primarily a selling mission rather than a purchasing mission? If this is so, then how will this correct our present imbalance of trade between Canada and the United Kingdom?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did see some press reports to that effect. The conclusions of the Manchester Guardian are ill-founded; therefore the rest of the question has no application.

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH PRIME MINISTER OF UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the question I put to the Prime Minister on Friday last could he now reply as to whether or not he had an opportunity of discussing matters of trade between the United Kingdom and Canada when he conferred with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom on Friday and Saturday.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the discussions had to do with what had occurred in Washington and the need for unity among the free nations of the world, and also the ascertainment of the position of this country in regard to those decisions. Further than that we did not go.

FREIGHT RATES

RAPE SEED—REQUEST FOR REDUCTION IN RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the necessity of growing alternative crops, due to wheat congestion, has consideration been given to reducing the freight rate on rape seed from the present extremely high rate of 70 cents a hundred pounds to a level more in line with other grains?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I appreciate very much the hon. member's courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question.

A complaint respecting certain maximum freight rates on rape seed was heard by the board of transport commissioners. By its judgment, dated June 14, 1957, the board concluded that the present rates were not unreasonable and dismissed the application. I am not unappreciative of the impact of these rates on the growers of rape seed, and this matter is under consideration with my colleagues to ascertain whether some means might be available to meet the situation.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARING RESPECTING FISHERMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the intense interest in British Columbia in the inquiry under the Combines Investigation Act involving the united fishermen and allied workers' union, and in view of the request of the union that the hearings be held in public, will the minister consider having the request complied with?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice, and in reply I can tell him that I understand from the director that the request to which he referred is before the chairman of the commission at the present time. My information is that the chairman will be arriving at a decision shortly, and at that time it will be stated whether the request can be accepted or not.

METAL CULVERTS—INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister taken any action to implement the recommendations of the restrictive trade practices commission as a result of the investigation into the activities of the manufacturers of metal culverts and related products?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for the notice of this question which he sent me. Inasmuch as this matter is before me at the present moment for a decision which would be required to be communicated to the parties, I hope he will understand why I am unable to make a statement at this time. I can say, however, that I expect to be able to make a statement in the very near future.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

INQUIRY AS TO PARTICIPATION OF CANADA IN ANGLO-AMERICAN GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in accordance with the pattern established during and after world war II, Canada was invited to participate in the Anglo-American group set up last week in Washington to make recommendations in the field of nuclear relationship and co-operation?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it the committee is just a temporary one and has no finality about it. All that was achieved in Washington was a general sense of direction. The horizons were viewed, a general course was taken, and when the permanent committees are set up in order to implement the agreements arrived at there, then there will be time for Canada to be represented on those committees.

HOUSING

RESOLUTION OF NATIONAL RETAIL LUMBERMEN'S ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Now that the minister has had ample time to consult his department to ascertain if he has received the resolution from the National Retail Lumbermen's Association, is he prepared to advise the house if Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation has accepted the recommendations of this association in order to stimulate the home building program, mainly in the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the brief submitted by that association is being given very careful study by Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation.

[Mr. Zaplitny.]

REPORTED INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, on October 24 the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Cameron) addressed a question to the Minister of Finance respecting the increase in interest rates on National Housing Act loans for low rental housing developments, effective October 11, 1957.

It must be emphasized, first of all, that the rate changes do not affect insured loans to home-owner applicants. They remain unchanged at 6 per cent.

Under sections 16 and 17 the governor in council may approve direct loans recommended by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for limited-dividend companies and for primary industries for the provision of low rental accommodation. These loans are made from funds advanced to the corporation from the consolidated revenue fund.

Hon. members are aware that in recent months the entire interest rate structure has moved upward. Everyone has had to pay more for credit accommodation. The federal government is no exception. This was evidenced very recently by the higher interest being paid on the new issue of government of Canada savings bonds. Consequently, on October 1, 1957, the government increased its borrowing rate to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to 4⅜ per cent from 4⅛ per cent. This rate is fixed for a period of six months. Since the rate of interest on limited-dividend loans was 4¼ per cent, this meant the corporation would incur a loss of ⅛ of 1 per cent interest on every such loan approved, approximately 7 cents per $1,000 per month over a period of 40 to 50 years.

By order in council P.C. 1957-1378 interest rates to be charged on loans under sections 16 and 17 are now established by the governor in council in approving the making of each loan. It is anticipated that the rate thus established on loans approved between October 1, 1957, and March 31, 1958, will be 4½ per cent per annum for loans under section 16 and 5½ per cent per annum for loans under section 17. This provides the corporation with a margin of ⅛ of 1 per cent toward its administrative costs on limited-dividend loans. The rate of interest for primary industry loans was increased concurrently to maintain the traditional spread between section 16 and section 17 loans.

FINANCE

PROVISION OF CREDIT FOR YOUNG FARMERS AND SMALL BUSINESSMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the government any immediate plans for bringing down legislation to provide credit for young men starting to farm, and for small businessmen?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure a question as broad as this and relating to policy is not one that is contemplated for this stage of the order paper.

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO IMPLEMENT EASY MONEY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Could the Minister of Finance advise of any steps being taken by the government to implement the easy money policy he advocated last session?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of having advocated any easy money policies.

HEALTH INSURANCE

ONTARIO—INQUIRY AS TO ASSURANCE BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the welcome announcement over the week end that hospital insurance will be put into effect in the province of Ontario not later than January 1, 1959, can the government say whether Ontario has been assured that there will be six provincial plans in operation by that date so that federal money can be made available to Ontario, or has the government given Ontario any other kind of undertaking to make sure that such federal money will be available when the plan comes into operation in Ontario?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer is actually no to both questions, but I am sure the hon. member will agree that undoubtedly the plan will be coming into force in due course.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. Is Ontario depending for the implementation of its plan on January 1, 1959, on getting federal money at that time?

Mr. Monteith: I would assume that they would appear to be, according to the newspaper stories I have seen. I have not had an opportunity of going into the whole situation. No agreements have been signed so far.

[Later:]

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since Ontario is now apparently committed to participate in a hospital insurance plan to commence January 1, 1959, is the federal government prepared to make payments to those provinces which have plans in operation now or on January 1, 1958—promptly?

Mr. Monteith: No, Mr. Speaker, no provinces have actually entered into agreement with the federal power as yet.

Mr. Argue: May I ask a supplementary question. Do I take it from the answer of the minister that the government is prepared now to enter into plans with the provinces so that payments may be made from the federal treasury towards those plans which are in operation January 1, 1958?

Mr. Speaker: The original question which the minister accepted seemed to me to ask for a pretty broad declaration of policy. I think I might exclude the supplementary question under these circumstances.

[Later:]

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the Ontario plan for hospital insurance includes treatment for tubercular and mental diseases in the premium rates as announced. Does this government intend to recommend any contributions in respect to the treatment of these diseases?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will recognize that his question is an invitation for a declaration of government policy.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The authorities in Ontario require to have this information before they can set these rates—

Mr. Speaker: What is the hon. member's question of privilege?

Mr. McMillan: If the province of Ontario has this information it should be given to this house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSIONS WITH U.K. PRIME MINISTER—DELEGATION TO NATO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Can the Prime Minister tell the house anything about his discussions with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom on Saturday and the announcement in the press that the Prime Minister himself will lead our delegation to the NATO conference in December?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of my hon. friend I wish to say this. The Prime Minister and the foreign secretary of the United Kingdom, accompanied by their officials, visited Ottawa on Friday evening and part of Saturday after their conversations in Washington and we—certain of my colleagues and myself—had the opportunity to discuss the questions that had arisen in Washington.

Since the meeting of the prime ministers in London in June I have been in close touch with Mr. Macmillan and naturally I welcomed the opportunity to discuss matters of common interest.

The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the foreign secretary described the conversations which they had had with President Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles. With the leave of the house I should like to table the communique issued in Washington on October 26 by the Prime Minister and the President of the United States.

Hon. members, I am sure, have been impressed by the obvious importance of this meeting and its significance in the world today. As we chatted with the Prime Minister we were greatly impressed by his appreciation of the interdependence of the free nations. That attitude is fully shared by this government. The discussions that took place in Washington were not intended to reach conclusions on matters of detail, and far less was it intended to arrive at formal and signed agreements. Just as I said a moment ago in answer to my friend the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson), the destination was indicated, the direction was determined, but the means to achieve either were not in any way finalized.

I believe this conference between the Prime Minister and the President in Washington has made possible great forward steps not only by the partnership of the United Kingdom and the United States, but also in the fact that it provides an assured opportunity for many countries to broaden and strengthen their peace and security within

[Mr. McMillan.]

NATO. I think the communique makes it clear—and our conversations certainly supported that impression—not only that the government of the United States and the government of the United Kingdom were in close agreement in their approach to the basic problem of the free world but, in addition, that they determined to open a clear road on which western countries could go forward in interdependence and co-operation.

The hon. gentleman would not expect me to comment in detail, but I would draw the attention of the house to many passages in which practical measures of co-operation are indicated. Stress is once more laid on the importance of disarmament and also, in the absence of effective disarmament, on the furtherance of collective defence arrangements. Thus to the agreed ideology of the free nations there can be added a greater sharing of scientific knowledge accompanied and reinforced by co-operation in the economic field.

As Canadians we welcome this further increase of common understanding and, I believe, imaginative thinking on the part of two great powers with whom we are so closely associated. The results achieved in Washington will have particular significance in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, which will be one of the principal means through which practical results can be achieved.

The hon. member mentioned the December meeting. No final determination has been made as yet regarding the attendance of heads of government, although I think we can look forward with certainty to such a meeting taking place. As he said, I propose to attend the meeting. I understand also that proposals may be sent out to the heads of NATO countries to be present at the important discussions which will inevitably take place at that time.

As far as the discussions are concerned which took place here on Friday and Saturday, they are of a confidential character and I am sure the hon. gentleman will understand that they could not properly be repeated in full detail in this house. However, I feel that a great step forward has been made, and that any of those separations that kept us apart at any time since 1945 have been closed as a result of the meetings that have taken place. The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the President of the United States met as friends who were in the war together. They met with the objective of bringing about that unity which assured peace in the days of war, and peace with victory.

Today, as a result of the meeting there, I am extremely hopeful that the essential character of what may prove to be a milestone on the pathway to security of the free world has been attained. The objective unites us. The dangers of the present give us a cohesion similar to that which existed in the days of war. With unity and firm determination I believe that the Washington meeting will in the years ahead represent a step worthy of the best in both the nations represented, and that it will in general, in its objective, be acceptable to all those nations which are joined together in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did not answer the question with regard to the announcement in the press that he had made the statement that he himself would lead the Canadian delegation to the NATO meeting in December. Is that report correct?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in my remarks I said I was going to attend that meeting.

Mr. Coldwell: I did not hear that statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman asked whether I will head the delegation, and that is so.

Mr. Coldwell: I did not hear the Prime Minister say he was going to attend the meeting. Otherwise I would not have risen.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to table the joint communique to which he referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

READING ROOM—INQUIRY AS TO AIR MAIL SERVICE FOR NEWSPAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Irvin Studer (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Postmaster General. Is the Postmaster General aware that a period of from four to six days elapses from the date of publication before western daily newspapers are available in the House of Commons reading room? Is the minister contemplating air mail service for daily papers for the House of Commons so all members will have contact with news events in their provinces equal to that of central Canadian members?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the Post Office Department would be delighted to provide air mail service for all newspapers which wish to pay for it. I might point out for the benefit of hon. members and perhaps the newspapers that there are certain newspapers in this country which do provide that service—

An hon. Member: The Vancouver Sun.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): —in order that members may receive their newspapers more expeditiously.

SOUND SYSTEM—DIRECTIONS TO NEW MEMBERS AS TO USE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will find on their desks a chart of the Tannoy system of sound reproduction for the House of Commons. I asked that the furnishing of this chart be repeated following the request of the member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) the other day. I believe if members locate themselves on the chart with respect to the nearest microphone, and also read the explanations as to the microphones which are activated when they rise to speak, this will enable hon. members to address themselves generally in the direction of the microphone which is active so we will be able to hear in all parts of the house.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

QUEBEC CITY—COMMEMORATIVE STAMP FOR 350TH ANNIVERSARY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I was asked by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Landry) a question with respect to the possibility of a stamp to commemorate the 350th anniversary of the founding of Quebec city. I am very glad to tell him that such a stamp is currently in the process of being designed and will be issued in 1958.

REQUEST FOR MINTING OF COMMEMORATIVE SILVER DOLLAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I am sorry I could not give him notice of my question. Is it the intention of the government to consider the minting of a silver dollar to honour the 350th anniversary of the founding of the city of Quebec?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the matter has been suggested. I think my hon. friend will appreciate the fact that I could not undertake to give an answer on the spot today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO ASSIST PRODUCTION AND MARKETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): I would like to address a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys or to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, whoever is in a position to answer it. What steps has the government taken to increase coal production and marketing in Canada so that our coal mining industry might have some relief from its present depressed condition? Especially am I interested in the coal mining industry in western Canada.

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I will take due notice of the question and will have the answer tomorrow or the day after.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEES FOR POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I address a question to the Minister of Transport. I have not sent him notice of this question as I did of the last one, but I am sure he will be able to answer quickly since it concerns a matter which probably has already been decided by him. Is it the policy of his department to dismiss employees in the Department of Transport merely because of charges of political partisanship?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, according to the rules and regulations of parliament as I understand them, if a member of parliament over his signature states that a civil servant or somebody working for the government has actively participated in political activity during a campaign, that person can be dismissed.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Are such dismissals made without a hearing or without an investigation even on the part of your department, or without giving an opportunity to the person dismissed to be heard by the employers in the department?

Mr. Hees: Anybody who would be charged would definitely be given an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. Winch: Where is the regulation?

Mr. Coldwell: Is this laid down in the regulations, that there is an appeal for the employees?

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Hees: I understand, Mr. Speaker, that has been the practice followed in the past, but I will check it up.

Mr. Chevrier: No, it is not. I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister tell the house if the holder of position No. 64—I do not desire to mention his name in the house—who was a labour foreman on the Ontario St. Lawrence canal, was dismissed on the complaint of a member of this house because of political partisanship?

Mr. Hees: I do not know the particular case, Mr. Speaker, but I will certainly look it up.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister report to the house?

Mr. Hees: Naturally.

[Later:]

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister supplementary to the one that was raised by the hon. member for Laurier. Will the Prime Minister inquire into, and table, how many civil servants, or those holding contracts with the government, were dismissed owing to their political activity? Will he outline the circumstances of the dismissal in each instance (a) prior to the election, after the writ was issued; and (b) after the election?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hahn: Will the Prime Minister table such a list?

Mr. Speaker: I think it has been suggested from the ministerial benches that this question is an appropriate one for the order paper, and I think that is the answer the hon. member has received to his question.

PATENT ACT

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has the minister yet received the report of the royal commission on patents, copyrights, trademarks and industrial design? If not, can the minister say when the report may be received and when it will be made public?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the commission has not yet signed its report. The report in English on copyright is ready, and a final draft in French is being prepared. Both will be presented in this house within a month, I hope within a couple of weeks.

With regard to the report on industrial design, the commission has been working on the final draft and we hope it also will be ready within a month, though that is not a definite promise; it is a little too early to tell.

With regard to patents, the commission has made tentative plans to resume sittings in March, 1958. The first draft of the discussions to date has already been prepared.

Finally, with regard to trademarks, the commission has purposely postponed both the hearings and sittings until an appropriate time has elapsed since the coming into force of the new Trade Marks Act so the results of that act can be studied.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

REQUEST FOR REPLY TO QUESTION ON ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN COAST GUARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport whether he would inquire into the reason for the delay in answering my question about the establishment of a Canadian coast guard, which has been on the order paper as No. 35 for some considerable time.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to do so. I know that the answer has been prepared for at least a week.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

STATEMENT ON RECENT MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been asked on a couple of occasions by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) to make a statement about the meeting of the commonwealth prime ministers which was held in London from June 26 to Friday, July 5, of this year.

For me it was a novel experience, and what particularly impressed me was the atmosphere of friendship and understanding which prevailed. The meetings were presided over by Mr. Macmillan, and I was conscious of the sense of unity and common purpose which lay behind our discussions. While there was disagreement in terms on occasion there was, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) said in this house in reporting on an earlier conference, a unity in the common dedication of all members of the commonwealth to the preservation of freedom.

Meetings of prime ministers are, of course, not the only means, though they are certainly one of the means, whereby consultation is maintained among members of the commonwealth. For the first time the representative from Ghana was present and, in addition, a welcome in anticipation was given to Malaya. What took place in this regard reflected the ability of the commonwealth to adjust itself to changing conditions.

I must say a word in regard to the Prime Minister of Ghana. He not only added to the value of the discussions, but by his presence he illustrated that wise and orderly process under which the statesmen of the United Kingdom bring about the evolution to sovereign status of the various nations which previously held colonial status. This is one of the things of which I think all of us in the commonwealth can be really proud, the bringing together of peoples without regard to race or colour, and the steps taken for them to have the opportunity to become independent nations and, by their own decisions, to remain within the family of nations.

The discussions were, naturally, held in camera. A communique was issued at the end of the meetings which gives a fair impression of the scope and extent of the discussions, and, by leave of the house, I should like to table the document so it might be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

The subjects discussed are set out in the communique: the United Nations; the tragic events, the noble events, in Hungary; disarmament; the problems of the Middle East, the Far East and southeast Asia; and, in addition, there was a review of economic conditions and means of furthering and expanding economic development within the commonwealth.

I mentioned the United Nations. I am going to refer specifically to the clause in that connection which summarizes fairly completely the attitude of the prime ministers and the representatives of these countries within the commonwealth to that body:

> The United Nations was designated to provide one of the main opportunities for the practical exercise of the principle of co-operation between nations. Experience has, however, revealed certain deficiencies and weaknesses in the functioning of the organization. The commonwealth ministers agreed that constructive action is needed to strengthen and improve the United Nations as an instrument for preserving peace, justice and co-operation throughout the world in accordance with the principles of the charter.

Because of the events in the Middle East and in Hungary in November of last year which demonstrated the strength and the weaknesses of the United Nations, there was a feeling in several of the commonwealth countries that our ideas about its functions and procedures deserved to be reviewed. There was an underlying belief in its importance in the world, and at the same time a realization that being of human origin it had its imperfections, and that while it might be difficult to remove some of those imperfections which had been found as a result of the trial and error of experience it had nonetheless performed effectively its work in general.

I expressed the view of Canada, as I saw it, that while the United Nations had made mistakes we demanded its continuance. I also suggested that unless the tendency toward bloc voting could be checked the authority of the assembly would be undermined. In my opinion governments should vote in the light of what they see as the best interests of the world rather than as members of a voting bloc.

You will see from the reading of the communique that all were agreed about the necessity for the maintenance of the organization, and all were equally agreed that it was the duty of all governments to seek means of increasing its effectiveness.

Another question raised was that of disarmament, and an appreciation of the terrible form which a third war would take. There was no disagreement that every effort should be made to bring about a comprehensive disarmament agreement which would afford security to all nations, and that even a limited agreement would be a most desirable first step.

Since our meeting was held the subcommittee on disarmament, of which Canada is a member, ended its latest series of meetings without reporting any substantial progress, and as you know the question is now being discussed at the United Nations. My colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs spoke in the assembly debate on Wednesday morning, and emphasized that the fundamental task before mankind is not merely to save the world from war but as well to save it from destruction.

We also discussed the question of commonwealth trade and economic relations. As my colleague the Minister of Finance mentioned in the house on Wednesday, I invited the commonwealth finance ministers to meet in Canada after the September meeting of the international monetary fund. It is my view that within the commonwealth framework a great deal more can be done than has in fact been accomplished to increase and diversify international trade and expand the means whereby commonwealth members can assist each other's economic development. Increased trade and co-operation in our economic relations will, I hope, be materially advanced as a result of the commonwealth trade and economic conference which is an outgrowth of the discussions which took place at the commonwealth prime ministers' conference. I believe this trade and economic conference will be a practical step of value to all members of the commonwealth.

There are other though less tangible factors which bind together the members of the commonwealth. If they are not easy to measure they are nevertheless of major significance. I have in mind the general summary of the Leader of the Opposition when reporting on the last conference, when he pointed out the degree in which unity was brought about in diversity among various races and peoples in an organization that has no binding rules and no actual formation in so far as a written agreement is concerned. We are bound together, and it was extremely apparent there, in the great objectives which we hold in common. They have been said before and they bear repeating at this time and at all times: to preserve the liberty of the individual, to increase the social and economic well-being of all peoples and, above all, the need of each of the component parts working ceaselessly toward peace.

While no actual resolutions or final determinations arose out of that conference—for that is the course that is always followed in these conferences—there were in effect decisions made whereby each of the members of the commonwealth agreed without exception that only in continued co-operation and also in the maintenance of full consultation can the commonwealth achieve that destiny which is the hope of its peoples everywhere.

Mr. Speaker: Is the proposal of the Prime Minister to have this communique printed acceptable to the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, arising out of the Prime Minister's statement, I wonder if he could inform the house as to what extent the problem of surplus agricultural production in various nations of the world was discussed, and also the even more critical problem of deficiency of production in certain other commonwealth countries, and generally whether any discussion took place of an expansion of agricultural production in the commonwealth as a whole?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the question of the need of preserving the agricultural machine in every part of the commonwealth was discussed, and the need of the needy nations was a matter of consideration.

All were in agreement—and I am sure hon. members of this house are in agreement—that food production is of major importance as a bulwark for the preservation of the free world against the advance of communism. I think Canada's action announced the other day in connection with the Colombo plan is but an indication of the fact that surpluses of agricultural products are indeed a trust to be maintained for the benefit of peoples less economically independent. Our action in providing for assistance to Pakistan and India under the Colombo plan in the form of agricultural products is an indication of the determination arrived at at the conference.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

INQUIRY AS TO MINTING OF CENTENNIAL SILVER DOLLAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In the closing session of the last parliament the previous minister of finance gave a commitment that there would be the minting of a silver dollar in honour of the centenary of British Columbia. Could the Minister of Finance tell us whether that commitment made previously is now being honoured, and if there will be a minting of a commemorative silver dollar?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the dollar has been minted. I think when my hon. friend sees it he will recognize it as entirely worthy not only of the centennial in the life of British Columbia but also of the high standards of the Royal Canadian Mint.

Mr. McIvor: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance this question. If we wish to purchase these dollars what will they cost?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, they will cost 100 cents.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

WINNIPEG—OPENING OF NEW POST OFFICE—DISPOSITION OF OLD POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can he say whether a date has been fixed for the official opening of the new post office building in Winnipeg?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): No, no date has yet been set, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether a decision has yet been made as to what will be done with the old post office building when the new one is opened?

Mr. Byrne: Conservative headquarters.

Mr. Green: The hon. member had better give us a little time on that question.

GRAIN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE CASH ADVANCES ON FARM-STORED GRAIN

Hon. D. S. Harkness (for the Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 14, to provide for advance payments for prairie grain prior to delivery thereof.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am substituting today for the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) who at the present time is heading our delegation at the GATT meeting at Geneva, for which he had to leave by air on Saturday. I regret and he regrets that he is not able to be here today to complete the piloting of this bill through the house.

The bill now before us appears to have the general approval of the house. On Thursday last, during the resolution stage, the Minister of Trade and Commerce outlined the main features of the bill, and hon. members who spoke had no serious criticism to offer. Some emphasized that it was a step in the right direction, but that it did not go far enough. Others considered that the 6-bushel quota was insufficient. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that no bill could be introduced in this house along this line, or along most other lines without having some people in the house ask for more.

When the vote was taken only three members of the house opposed the resolution. I hope second reading will receive the same almost unanimous consent. The House of Commons recognizes good legislation and this is good legislation; for it is designed to, and will, assist one of the most important segments of our economy. Canada's wheat industry has played a predominant part in the economic life of our country and through our export trade, has earned the income to pay for a large part of our imports.

At the resolution stage the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner), suggested that the Prairie Grain Producers' Interim Financing Act should not be repealed, that it could be helpful in the early part of any marketing season. Let me make three points on this suggestion. First, the bill now before the house does not repeal the Prairie Grain Producers' Interim Financing Act; second, some weeks ago, as the first step to meet the critical shortage of cash, the government proclaimed the interim financing act which provides loans to prairie producers through the chartered banks, and I am pleased to report to the house that these loans were made available by the banks at 5 per cent interest, notwithstanding the recent increase in the interest rate on other bank loans; third, while we are not proposing the repeal of this act, I do not expect it will be used extensively, if at all, when the system of cash advances comes into effect.

On many previous occasions I have expressed the view that producers should be able to obtain cash advances rather than have to seek bank loans when the elevator system is congested, and I am certain that the bank loan system will fall into disuse.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce has already paid a visit to our major markets in Europe, in company with members of the Canadian wheat board. He reported to me that it was a most stimulating and on the whole heartening experience. He found that Canadian wheat is held in high regard in the United Kingdom and western European countries. Our main difficulties have arisen from the continuing encouragement that is being given to domestic production in European countries by import restrictions as well as very high support prices, and from the effects of United States barter sales. On a straight commercial basis we are fully competitive and holding our own, and we intend to remain that way. Our sales to the United Kingdom and Europe this crop year should compare favourably with last crop year.

I have referred to the surplus disposal activities of the United States as one of the main obstacles in the way of selling more Canadian wheat. It has seemed to me for some time that these activities on the part of our good neighbour to the south called for plain public speaking on our part. The Prime Minister and other members of the government have done some of that kind of speaking, and I do not think that we offended anyone. On the other hand I believe the United States administration, more of the congress and more of the American people, now know that we have a legitimate grievance.

When the joint United States-Canada committee on trade and economic affairs met in Washington a few weeks ago the Canadian members made strong representations to the United States administration on this subject of surplus wheat disposal. In particular we protested against the effects of the barter program under which the United States exported about 90 million bushels of wheat during the past crop year. I should perhaps explain to the house that, in effect, this barter program has been only a concealed form of additional subsidy by the United States. The result has been to reduce normal United States commercial sales as well as hurt the Canadian competitive position.

We found that our United States colleagues agreed in the main with this point of view, and they affirmed to us their intention that before approving further barter transactions they would require proof that those transactions would result in additional sales. If this intention is adhered to, barter transactions are not likely to be important from now on. We also found the United States members in agreement that surplus disposal should not be permitted to interfere with normal commercial exports, and they provided evidence that their programs are being directed more and more to underdeveloped countries in acute balance of payment difficulties. We also talked with them about the tied sales provisions of surplus disposal agreements, and found that the administration had moved some way to our point of view.

I do not wish to create the impression, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian government were fully satisfied with these discussions. We know that congress and not the administration makes the laws of the United States. We know too that so long as a large surplus exists in the United States and there is pressure to get rid of it there will continue to be trouble. But at least I believe we are making progress.

When the resolution preceding this bill was before the house my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave a brief description of the proposal for cash advances on farm-stored grain. The bill is now in the hands of hon. members. As will be seen, this is a simple, straightforward plan. The establishment of an elaborate system of inspection of grain on the farm and the sealing of bins was considered and rejected. It would have involved an army of inspectors and a very large expenditure which in our view could not have been justified under existing circumstances. Instead, it was decided to proceed through the efficient and familiar machinery which has been in operation in western Canada for many years.

The bill proposes that the advances should be made in the same manner and through the same channels as initial payments are now made by the Canadian wheat board, namely through the local country elevators. These elevators now buy grain for the wheat board under a handling agreement. We propose that they should make advance payments on behalf of the wheat board in a similar way.

It will be apparent to hon. members, as it was to those of us in the government, of course, that there is a considerable difference between paying for grain that has been delivered into a country elevator and making an advance on grain still on the farm and that has not yet been delivered. The government, therefore, consulted with representatives of the wheat pools, the united grain growers and the northwest line elevator association, as well as representatives of the interprovincial farm union and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I am happy to be able to report to the house that these organizations have agreed to co-operate with the government and the wheat board in making advances available through their local elevator agents and to assume a share of any losses that may result.

I have here the telegrams in answer to the request which was made to the pools, the united grain growers and the line elevator companies after discussions had been held with them and what was required of them had been outlined to them. They then went back to consult their boards of directors, and in all cases they sent favourable replies. The first one is from Ben Plumer, chairman of the Alberta wheat pool.

Mr. Argue: What is the date?

Mr. Harkness: The date is October 17. The telegram reads as follows:

> Reurtel October 17 on question of financial responsibility to be assumed by agents of the board in making cash advances on farm-stored grain. We are pleased to inform you that the Alberta wheat pool is prepared to co-operate with the government and Canadian wheat board on your proposed bases of making advances on grain available to western producers.

The next one is from John H. Wesson, chairman of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, and it is also dated October 17. I may say that these telegrams are all addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. This telegram reads as follows:

> Have discussed your wire of even date with our directors now in session. As previously advised you Saskatchewan wheat pool is prepared to co-operate fully with wheat board in making cash advances to producers. We are also prepared to accept 10 per cent of ultimate loss experienced on advances made by Saskatchewan wheat pool subject to a maximum liability of one-quarter of one per cent of total advances made by us.

Almost exactly the same telegram was received from W. J. Parker, president of the Manitoba pool elevators. From J. E. Brownlee, president of the United Grain Growers, this wire was received:

> Thanks for wire. Maximum loss ceiling satisfactory. Have already written and wired that United Grain Growers will be glad to co-operate.

From the line elevator companies there is a long telegram which reads as follows:

> Reference our meeting with you in Ottawa October 5th, 1957, concerning advances on farm-stored grain. The line elevator companies are prepared to co-operate with the government of Canada and the Canadian wheat board in making the advances to farmers in the current crop year. The companies herein referred to are—

There is a whole list of them which I will not take the time to read. The telegram is signed by Cecil Lamont, president of the North-West Line Elevators Association.

I have purposely read these telegrams, Mr. Speaker, so there may be no question in anyone's mind that the wheat pools, the United Grain Growers and the line elevator companies are all co-operating completely with the government and the wheat board in putting this scheme of cash advances into operation. Briefly, the procedure will be as follows. The elevator companies will make the advances. The wheat board will reimburse them as quickly as possible for the advances they have made. The elevator companies will return the advances as they are collected from producers' current deliveries, and when the accounts are closed out and losses are determined the elevator companies have agreed to absorb 10 per cent of those losses in respect of each individual advance. Losses are not expected to be significant, but in any event individual companies will not be required to absorb, by way of losses, more than one-quarter of one per cent of the total advances they have made.

It is highly desirable that those who make the advances should exercise a reasonable degree of prudence, that they should scrutinize and check applications with care, and in particular that they should avoid competing with one another in the making of advances. The representatives of the elevator organizations, co-operative and private, agreed with this point of view, and I wish at this time to pay tribute to their public-spirited attitude. I believe parliament can be assured that cash advances will be made efficiently and without unnecessary expense through the machinery so familiar to the producers themselves, namely the country elevator operator.

I should like to say a word or two about the amount of the advance. The general intent of the legislation is to advance approximately half the initial payments for the undelivered portion of a 6-bushel quota, and to recover the advance by deducting half the initial payments when the grain is delivered. It will be apparent to hon. members familiar with western farming conditions that if the advance were to be fixed at exactly one-half of the initial payment at the local point it would be necessary for the elevator agent to make a thorough inspection of the grain on the farm and agree with the producer about the grade. Manifestly this would lead to interminable delays. Hence the advances were fixed at round figures approximately about one-half the initial payment at the local point for the typical grade of wheat, oats and barley, namely at 50 cents for wheat, 20 cents for oats and 35 cents for barley.

While advances are available to all producers, large and small, the plan is designed to be of most help to the smaller producer. On the one hand, there is an over-all limitation on the amount that can be advanced to an individual producer in any one year, namely $3,000. On the other hand, there is to be no deduction for repayment of advances from the unit quota of 300 bushels of wheat which is available at the beginning of the crop year to all producers, regardless of their cultivated acreage. Deliveries on this unit quota of 300 bushels, which is of most value, of course, to the small operator, will be available in cash early in the season, plus an advance of about half the value of subsequent deliveries on the general quota of 6 bushels per acre.

In return for this advance the producer will be required to undertake to deliver grain to the wheat board as soon as delivery opportunities are available, and to permit one-half of the proceeds of sale to be deducted in repayment of the advance. If he fails to deliver enough grain to repay the advance he will, of course, be required to repay the balance in cash. The amount of the advance will be endorsed in the permit book, and will be notice to all elevator companies that an advance has been made to the permit holder and that until the advance has been retired and the endorsement cancelled, one-half the proceeds of deliveries of wheat, oats and barley must be applied to repayment of the advance.

Advances will be available just as soon as the necessary forms can be distributed and they will be available up until June 1, 1958. In subsequent years advances will be available from the beginning of the crop year until June 1 of that year. These are advance payments of the initial price which will be paid by elevator agents on delivery of the grain. They are not loans. For that reason no interest will be charged to the recipient of the advance except if he goes into default when he will be charged interest on the unpaid amount of the advance.

I also wish, Mr. Speaker, to draw the attention of the house to the fact that since these are advance payments and not loans, they are to be regarded as part of the initial payment. They are subject, for example, to whatever arrangements would apply to the initial payments themselves as between tenant and landlord and producer and creditor. I mention this point because there may be some concern that the government is proposing by this plan to affect the status of such matters as tax liens filed with country elevator agents. This is not so. These advances are to be regarded as part of the initial payment for grain and will be treated in exactly the same way as the elevator agent has always treated initial payments for grain. Since the rights of those interested in the proceeds of sale are not to be interfered with at the time the advance is made—in other words the advance is to be considered as part payment—priority in repayment will be asserted by deducting one-half of the proceeds of subsequent deliveries of wheat, oats and barley before payment is made to the permit holder.

In the committee stage there will be an opportunity to discuss these points at greater length but in order to complete this general explanation I shall add a word or two about financing and administration. Hon. members will note from the bill that it is proposed to enlarge the borrowing powers of the wheat board to include borrowings from the chartered banks for the purpose of making advances, subject to guarantee of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). The chartered banks which finance the other operations of the board have indicated that they will be prepared to lend additional moneys to the board for this purpose under the same terms. The interest rate now applying to wheat board borrowings is 4¼ per cent. Interest charges, as they accrue to the wheat board, will be paid by the Minister of Finance out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Finally I come to the question of losses. These should not be important under the arrangement between the wheat board and the elevator companies. Such losses as there are will be shared between the elevator companies and the treasury; they will not fall upon the wheat board.

Mr. Speaker, the second reading stage of a bill is that on which we deal with the general principle of the legislation. The general principle of this bill is very simple. It is that cash advances be made to western farmers on grain which they hold on their farms and are not able to deliver because of the congested situation of our grain handling facilities. The bill provides for bona fide cash advances and not loans.

I trust there will be no confusion in anyone's mind on this score in spite of the attempt of the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker), when speaking on Thursday last, to establish that there is no real difference between the system of cash advances here proposed and the loans provided by the legislation of the previous government. This was a continuation of the line he followed last year, that the loans instituted by the Liberal government were what the farm organizations had asked for when they requested cash advances. The hon. member does not seem to realize even yet that the farmers of western Canada were overwhelmingly against his party's loan act. He just does not seem to be able to learn from experience. On Thursday last the hon. member for Rosthern, as reported at page 366 of Hansard, said this:

> Let the Minister of Agriculture say what difference there is, except in the manner of getting it, between getting $3,000 now and getting $3,000 under the proposal six months ago.

I shall be glad to point out the differences to the hon. member as he seems to be incapable of seeing them for himself. First, the advances are available to every farmer who has grain stored on his farm, and not only to those whom a banker, who in many cases did not know the farmers or anything about them, considered were good credit risks.

Second, the advances are available at the farmer's close-by delivery point and with a minimum of time lost in securing them and a minimum of red tape required.

Third, the farmer will not pay interest on the cash advance he receives. This was the feature of the loan act to which western grain producers took the most violent objection last year and in preceding years.

Fourth, the number of farmers who were able to secure loans, or who did in fact secure them under the Liberals' loan act was quite small. I should just like to give some figures to indicate how small the numbers were.

In the crop year period 1955-56 in which these loans were available, during the period from November 15, 1955 to May 31, 1956, 10,326 loans were made and the total amount of cash put out was $7,893,830.32. The average amount of these loans in that period was $764.46. People were complaining—the hon. member for Rosthern and others—and they criticized this legislation because the maximum that a farmer could get was $3,000 and they tried to point out that the loan legislation was better in this regard. In the next crop year period from November 1, 1956 to May 31, 1957, only 6,117 loans were made under the interim financing act for a total of $3,957,979.94 and the average amount of those loans was only $647.04.

In contrast to this record, Mr. Speaker, it is estimated that very wide use will be made of the cash advances. There are 230,854 permit holders in western Canada; the majority will probably take advances. We believe that about $100 million will be put out to farmers by this means, and that the figure may run up to $150 million. I should like to point out the extremely beneficial effect of this, not only to the farmers receiving the advances but to the whole economy of Canada. This large sum, which would not otherwise be circulating, will have great benefits for the small businessmen in the towns of the west to begin with, then for the wholesalers and their employees in the west and in the east and all over the country, for the workers in manufacturing plants of all kinds, and for the transportation industry. In other words, in addition to helping to pull the western farmer out of an impossible situation, it is one more step this government is taking to deal with the legacy of unemployment left us by the Liberals.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say something about certain newspaper reports and comments I have seen to the effect that this cash advance scheme will impose heavy burdens on the treasury and the general taxpayer. This is not the case. The cost of this scheme to the treasury will not be high, particularly in relation to the benefits which will accrue to the whole economy from it. If the amount put out is $100 million, the interest the government will pay on the money borrowed by the wheat board for the purpose we estimate will not be more than $2¼ million, because we believe that the average time an advance will be outstanding will not be more than six months. If it is less than six months, the interest cost will be reduced, of course. On the other hand, if advances reach the level of $150 million, the interest cost would be something about $3¼ million to $3½ million. As to the losses which have been spoken of, we believe that the great majority of western farmers are honest and thus we estimate that ultimate losses will be very small indeed.

The hon. member for Rosthern and, I believe, some others stated that this legislation provides less for the small farmer than did the loan act.

The very reverse is the case. Under the loan act most small farmers could not get loans at all. Contrary to general belief most western farmers are comparatively small farmers. I have here a compilation which shows the situation in this regard at a glance and I would just like to read a few figures from it and then, with the permission of the house, I should like to have the whole thing printed in Hansard because it will give hon. members a very good idea of the size of western Canadian farms, and of the distribution of acreage on those farms as between wheat, oats and barley.

In looking at this compilation I see the farms having a specified acreage of less than 100 acres, that is to say zero to 99 acres, and these total 31,299.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the minister? Does that figure refer to 100 acres of cultivated land?

Mr. Harkness: That is specified acreage. This is a list giving the breakdown of permit holders in western Canada, being the total of 230,854 and of this total there are 31,299 who have from zero to 99 specified acres or acres under cultivation.

There are 63,272 who have between 100 and 199 acres and there are 51,762 who have between 200 and 299 acres under cultivation. In other words, of the total of 230,000 odd permit holders there are about 145,000 with less than 300 specified acres or acres under cultivation and that of course constitutes nearly two-thirds of the total number of farmers in western Canada.

In other words, contrary to the general belief existing in eastern Canada that western farmers are all big farmers, rich farmers and in some cases are reputed to go to California for the winter and that sort of thing, there are in fact very few farmers in this category and most of them are small farmers in this area. As these figures indicate, in fact two-thirds of them or a little less have farms with 300 acres or less cultivated land. Now with the permission of the house I would like to have this whole table incorporated into the record of Hansard.

Mr. Argue: I winder if the minister could say how many farms are in excess of 1,000 acres; in other words, how many will not be covered by this legislation?

Mr. Harkness: All farms are covered by this legislation. But in answer to my hon. friend's question with respect to those farms having 1,000 acres and over of cultivated land, there are 3,603 farms having 1,000 to 1,999 specified acres and the figures come down in groups of 1,000 acres at a time. The figures are 213, 66, 24, 17, 5 and 2. In other words there are two farms having between 7,000 acres and 7,999 acres.

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. Speaker: The minister has suggested that the list to which he has referred should be printed in Hansard. Is it agreed that the list be part of the printed record in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harkness: This legislation was specifically designed to give the small farmer a break and this was accomplished by leaving the unit quota out of consideration as far as the amount of advance is concerned. How the thing will work out can best be illustrated by a few examples.

Let us take the case of the farmer who has only 50 cultivated acres. The total wheat he will be able to deliver on a six-bushel quota is 300 bushels plus of course his initial unit quota of 300 bushels. In other words, 600 bushels is all that there seems to be much prospect or expectation that he will be able to deliver during this crop year. If his wheat is No. 1 Northern and his elevator initial price is about $1.23½—which is about the average in the west—the cash he could receive for the crop year if he were able to deliver this total amount would be $740. Under this scheme he will receive his $370 for his unit quota and he can get a cash advance of $150. That is, the total cash which he will be able to receive right from the beginning of his crop year, or close to it, is $520, which is 70.27 per cent of the cash he can get in the whole crop year; in other words nearly three-quarters of what he can get in the whole crop year if he were able to deliver his full six-bushel quota. Another way of putting it is that he receives 86.78 cents on every bushel that he will be able to deliver during the crop year.

An hon. Member: Per cent.

Mr. Harkness: No, cents.

Mr. Gardiner: If it is all No. 1 wheat.

Mr. Harkness: Yes. Now when you work it out you find that the relative amount which a farmer is able to get decreases as the size of his farm increases. In other words, the smaller a man's farm the greater advantage he gets from the scheme, relatively speaking. Now in the case of a man with 100 specified acres, he would have the possibility of taking in a total during the year on a six-bushel quota, plus his unit quota of course, of $1,110. Under this scheme he will get his unit quota of $370 and of course the cash advance of $300, for a total of $670. The same figures for a man with 200 specified acres would be $1,852. Cash advance plus unit quota is $970. The percentages, of course, of what he receives in cash go down, so that the man with 50 acres or a percentage of 70.27 compares with the man with 1,000 acres or a percentage of 43.31.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that that effectively disposes of any idea anyone may have—particularly the contention of the member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker)—that this scheme is of no value to the small farmer. I believe it is of particular value to the small farmers and I am quite sure that in the thousands and thousands they will find it an absolute lifesaver this year. It will provide them in fact with cash with which to get through the winter. I fear I have perhaps gone into too much detail as these matters can be more properly dealt with in committee of the whole. I have spoken on the subject to some extent so that the picture may be clear to the hon. members. I will close at this point but would like to assure all hon. members that if they wish to secure further information on any of the details of this bill I will be delighted to go into those at the committee of the whole stage.

Mr. Argue: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if I could ask a question of the hon. minister with respect to his general comment on the wheat situation. Could he state at what time a payment might be made out of the 1956-1957 wheat pool? The reason I asked that question is that I have asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce for the information, and I took it from his remarks that he would perhaps be commenting on it in his general statement.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I have not the material figures available here which would enable me to answer that question now. I think the hon. member realized that might be the case. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) did give something in the nature of an undertaking to deal with the general wheat situation on the resolution stage. At page 352 of Hansard of October 24, he said:

> At the second reading stage of the bill I will discuss our sales program as well as other aspects of our wheat economy.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce will be very happy to do that at a future time, and there will be opportunity for him to place that information before the house.

Mr. Stefura: Mr. Speaker, did I understand the minister to say that a farmer farming 300 acres of land will get the amount of his initial quota plus $1,800?

Mr. Harkness: Nine hundred dollars.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): Mr. Speaker, there are a few things I would like to say before we go on to discuss the principles of the bill—the first is that while I am sorry the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) is not able to be here to introduce this measure or to move its second reading I am quite pleased that the task has been undertaken by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness). The question has been under discussion for a long time in this house as to where responsibility for matters having to do with the marketing of wheat ought to lie, and it is interesting to sit here this afternoon and hear the Minister of Agriculture dealing with questions that are concerned with this subject.

Then, again, I was interested in the statement he made to the effect that the legislation which I mentioned at the resolution stage—legislation which is already on the statute books—will not be repealed; in other words, the opportunity for farmers to obtain money under the farm loan legislation, as it is generally called, is still to remain. Then, too, I was pleased that at the end of his remarks he placed some figures on record in Hansard. As he stated to the house, the proper time to discuss those figures will be during the committee stage, but if we did not have them at this stage we should, of course, not have them available when we are in committee, and thus we would not be in a position to discuss them.

One part of the last submission of statistics placed before the house which interested me considerably was the set of figures which prove, apparently to the satisfaction of all members on the other side of the house, that the farms in western Canada are not as big as we sometimes hear people saying they are. We have been accustomed to hearing a great many arguments based on the idea that our farms are growing bigger and bigger, and that eventually the numbers of the farm population will be greatly decreased on that account. But the figures contained in the table which was submitted to the house a few moments ago must remove very satisfactorily as far as I am concerned any doubts that may have been in the minds of hon. members with regard to that matter, and I am sure it will be very helpful in making decisions as to what should be done to have that evidence fairly established in our minds when we are discussing farm problems in the house.

In the latter part of his remarks the minister took occasion to address some advice to the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) who is not in the house today and who probably will not be here during this discussion. I think, therefore, that I should make a few remarks with regard to what was said.

This legislation was discussed at some length at the resolution stage, but I think I am correct in saying that apart from the minister himself the only hon. member who attempted to analyse the meaning of the bill in so far as assistance to farmers is concerned, and to compare it with other legislation which we have passed, was the hon. member for Rosthern. I not only listened to his speech with a great deal of interest, but I have read it over very carefully since, and I must say that the facts as he stated them and as he supported them with statistics and with quotations are very close to the facts as they exist in connection with the farmers' position in the western part of Canada, that is in the prairie section of Canada.

Mr. Harkness: His whole effort was an attempt to show that the loan system of last year was the same as cash advances. It is completely different, and the number of loans made shows it.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, I shall try to show that the loan system of last year was as good as cash advances as provided under Bill No. 14.

What does Bill No. 14 propose to do? It proposes to make available cash payments to a limited number of farmers in the prairie provinces; not to the whole 231,000 of them, but only to a limited number. And, further, it proposes that those cash payments should be made in limited amounts. It proposes, too, that they be made on a limited part of the farmer's production in the 1957-58 crop year and succeeding current crop years. This, in principle, is the same as the provisions in the grain producers interim finance act of 1956. That act put on limits similar to those which are put on by this act now under discussion, and I hope to be able to show that they are not likely to be greater than those under this act.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

The limitations under the bank loans act of 1956 were: the loan could amount to one-half the value of the grain stored on the farm, less the return of any grain delivered in the current crop year; and the loan was limited to $3,000. In Bill No. 14 the limitations are: the amount is limited to fifty cents on wheat, 20 cents on oats and 35 cents on barley, multiplied by the quota of 6 bushels per acre, less the cash received on all but the unit quota in the current crop year. The advance is again limited to a maximum of $3,000.

Now there is one sole difference in the matter of limitation, and that was emphasized by the minister when he was speaking a few minutes ago. The first 300 bushels, that is the initial unit, is not affected by the limitation which is imposed with regard to what a farmer can obtain. But both plans limit the number of persons to be assisted, confining it to farmers having grain stored on their farms. But Bill No. 14 limits the number further to those with a current year's crop, and limits it by that quota. Then, secondly, they both limit the cash obtainable: in the case of bank loans to one-half of all grain stored on a farm with a maximum of $3,000, and in the case of Bill No. 14 to less than half the value of the grain under the 6-bushel quota in the current year with a maximum of $3,000.

I wish to say a few words concerning the statement made toward the end of the minister's address to the effect that certain payments could be made under this bill. In the first place he stated that he took No. 1 wheat as the basis upon which to do his computing of the amount. Just before I entered the chamber today I received a statement from the Department of Trade and Commerce with regard to the percentages of wheat delivered in western Canada according to grade. I am sorry I did not bring the information with me because it demonstrates that in recent years and particularly during the past year a very small percentage of the grain which has gone into elevators has been No. 1 or No. 2, that the greater proportion has been No. 3 or No. 4. It also indicates that the cash which actually does get into the hands of the farmer will be down by 11 cents, I think, if he happens to have No. 3 wheat instead of No. 1, and the amount of cash that gets into his hands will be considerably less than that if he has No. 4 wheat. As you go down the scale it becomes less and less.

When I first read the figures given—50 cents for wheat, 20 cents for oats, 35 cents for barley—I was inclined to jump to the conclusion that this was, after all, considerably below half the price if one considered the price of No. 1 wheat but I am not so sure that my hon. friend might not be correct or nearly so when he suggests that it might be more than half the value of the grain that is obtained under those prices.

Mr. Harkness: I did not suggest that.

Mr. Gardiner: It is the case in any event, or so I judge from the wording of the legislation.

Mr. Harkness: We think the 50-cent price is about an average.

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, an average from No. 6 up.

Mr. Harkness: Yes, applying to all grades.

Mr. Gardiner: For that reason it might not be correct for some years to say that the amount would be less than half. Of course in the other measure it was provided that it could be half. The effect of this is that the number of farmers to whom cash is available could be less and the amount of cash available to each farmer will most likely be less under Bill No. 14 than under the other bill.

The provisions for the disposal of cash received for grain delivered are much the same under the two plans; that is, half the cash paid for the grain that is delivered to the elevator goes to the farmer—that is while he is making his payments back on the advance—and the other half goes to the wheat board until the advance is accounted for. We are told that the farmer pays no interest and we were informed today that the interest charged to the wheat board will be 4¼ per cent. This means that the interest paid on the money advanced to farmers individually or collectively will be set at 4¼ per cent. This will be paid out of the treasury of Canada to the wheat board to make up for the fact that they are advancing the money without interest.

When a farmer makes a loan from the bank under the existing act he is protected under the law against other debts and I cannot find such protection in Bill No. 14. Something was said this afternoon that was not mentioned at the time the resolution was introduced. When I spoke on that occasion I called attention to the fact that a certain proposal had been made last spring to the outgoing government by one of the biggest handlers of wheat in western Canada, the Saskatchewan wheat pool. I searched this bill from beginning to end and could not find any provision in it for the grain companies including the pools being responsible for any part of the losses, but the minister said this afternoon they were taking responsibility for 10 per cent. That was the information I had when I was speaking the other day. The proposal made last spring to the outgoing government had been fully discussed in the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Agriculture and had the government that was in office at that time been in office now there is a possibility that the same proposal would have been repeated with not only the Saskatchewan wheat pool consenting to it but all other elements of the trade consenting as well. We were told this afternoon that this is the case and they are all agreed.

I would simply suggest to the minister who is piloting this bill through the house that I found it impossible to find a covering provision in the legislation before us. But as we all know amendments can be made in committee. Perhaps it is the intention to cover it by amendment but I do want to call attention to the fact that I could find no such provision in the bill as it is now printed.

There is another comment I wish to make in this same connection. In presenting this resolution on October 24 the minister stated the procedure to be followed under the plan proposed in the bill and mentioned the safeguards provided in it. On page 352 of Hansard for that date he is reported as saying:

> The safeguards of the scheme are clear and definite.

I presume these are the safeguards to the taxpayer for the funds which he provides in order to make it possible to proceed with the plan. The minister continued:

> The chief one is the permit book—

The minister then mentioned the second safeguard:

> Responsibility for making the advance will rest with the elevator agent, and the agent must be reasonably sure that the farmer seeking the advance has on his farm the grain that must subsequently be delivered.

The third is as follows:

> In the third place, the farmer will be required to sign an affidavit in respect of the quantity of grain available with respect to which he is seeking an advance.

I have no criticism to make of those safeguards being there but I do suggest they are not very definitely set out in the legislation. I am certain that members of the government when considering this matter had some doubts about what the effect of that might be.

It is said that the companies have given an undertaking that they will co-operate. I must say that in our experience over the years in which I was minister in the Department of Agriculture they always did co-operate. They might have had different opinions prior to the passing of the law but once it was passed we received their full co-operation in the carrying out of the plan involved.

It is indicated that there will not be any competition at the local points in making loans. I am sure my hon. friend understands human nature sufficiently well to realize that he cannot maintain that position.

The elevator operators who are buying grain at points in western Canada, particularly during times when space is available, —perhaps not so much when space is not readily available—are, of course, interested in getting grain.

It should be said at this time that an elevator owner has no other way to make money. He does not speculate in grain any more; he does not buy grain at so much a bushel and sell it at so much more and make money that way. What he does is store grain and handle it, and all he gets for it are the handling charges at so much a bushel. That is the only way he can make earnings for his shareholders, or for the farmers who belong to the pool, if it happens to be the pool because, make no mistake about it, the farmers of western Canada watch the operations of the wheat pools just as closely as shareholders watch the operations of the joint stock companies. They are proud of them only when they make a return that indicates that they have not lost money. Therefore, the wheat pools are just as anxious about the charges as anyone else when they meet in those gatherings, which are composed of all the people who own and operate elevators.

When they meet in those gatherings there is an agreement between the line trade and the wheat pools as to what the charges per bushel are to be. And it is those charges per bushel that make it possible for the companies, pools or otherwise, to pay their carrying charges and have something in addition to account for to their shareholders, or to the members of their co-operative, as the case may be, and therefore, of course, there is going to be competition.

In our towns and villages there are a number of elevators. Of course, an agent in one elevator will do the best he can, and I do not think that is a bad thing for the farmers. There will be competition and that competition on the part of each will be to get the man's wheat. The best way for him to get the man's wheat is to make those advances as easily available to him as possible. When he gets started in that way he will be able to carry on right through the season and get whatever grain the man has. I am using the term "wheat" here all the way through. I should be using the term "grain" really because it applies to oats and barley as well as to wheat. I just wanted to emphasize the fact that the grain dealer, the grain buyer, has certain responsibilities. He has a responsibility to his company to get the grain; he has a responsibility to himself and to his company not to lose money in getting it, and he is going to be a little careful about the loans that he makes.

I only recite that in order to show that there is going to be the same reason in connection with this bill for the advance to be held perhaps to a lower level, as there was in the other bill; for the banker to take care that not too much money is lost in connection with it. But what I really want to call attention to in connection with this part of the bill is that the farmers who are going to come for cash under these advances are going to be limited by something else.

This bill says that the man has his advance in the form of a cash ticket. Every farmer in western Canada knows what that means. There are very few elevators in western Canada that pay out money at any time. The elevator companies, even including the pools, are very careful about the responsibility they place on agents and they are very careful, too, about the manner in which the business is carried on. I venture to say that there is not a town or a village in western Canada where there is a bank where these cash tickets are not payable in the bank and in most places where there is not a bank there is a businessman, a merchant or some other person who has responsibilities to a bank who handles that money for the elevator company or the pool and passes it out to the farmer. One should consider that point.

Let me return to some of the criticisms that used to be made from this side of the house by those who are government members now and by our friends of the C.C.F. and of the Social Credit parties, that the banker was the last man the farmer wanted to go to. Partly because of the discussions that took place at that time but mostly because of the representations made to us by the farmers we made absolutely certain that no one had any claim on this money except the farmer. If the bank attempted to give anyone else any claim that bank did not have a guarantee at all from the government. Therefore all the money that was lent out under that plan was lent out with the absolute guarantee to the farmer that every dollar of the loan was to be handed to him. The bank could not apply it on any other indebtedness that there was to the bank with respect to the farmers' activities. That is not so in this instance.

We were told a few moments ago of one case in particular. Every farmer in western Canada knows that under provincial law, not under federal law, there is posted in every elevator the unpaid taxes of the farmers who deliver grain to that elevator. When a load of grain is hauled in to the elevator the first thing that is taken out of the proceeds of that grain is the man's taxes, and they are paid. That was the situation when the farm loan bill was put through this house in 1956.

It was stated the other day by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr. Bryson) when he addressed this house that all of these things, and a great many other things, were still in the bill. They have not been in the bill since the first week it was brought into existence back in 1956. In order to have these things taken out a meeting was called in the city of Winnipeg of those who were interested. All these provisions were taken out of the administration of the act, and they could not take the taxes out of the man's small amount. I venture to say that out of the number of small farmers who were listed in the report that has been put on Hansard today a great many of them are men who owe a considerable part of what the advances will amount to in municipal taxes. Under the old legislation we maintained that since the farmer was going to get back 50 per cent of the value of the wheat that he took to the elevators, or the value of the grain he took to the elevators, over the entire period the loan was outstanding, half of that money was to be paid to the farmer, believing that the farmers in western Canada are honest, as the minister says, and believing that as they got the money they would go and pay their taxes, and not have it taken out of the amount of money that was advanced by loan then or that which will be advanced now in the form of a ticket. But when you advance it in the form of a ticket the farmer must take that ticket over to the bank and have it cashed. So far as I can find out there is nothing in this bill that makes it impossible for the banker, in these circumstances, to apply that to any account he may have in the bank against the farmer. Some of my friends object. Let them try it and see where they will get.

Mr. Argue: There are credit unions.

Mr. Gardiner: The credit unions are not all over the place. I venture to say that the credit unions are a little careful about lending money to some people. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that there are places all the way through this legislation which do not encourage the making of more loans or greater sums of money available to the farmers—

Mr. Harkness: There are no loans in this scheme.

Mr. Gardiner: The minister does not call them loans but everybody else will think they are, in spite of what the minister says. When a man gets some money he has got to pay back, it is a loan.

An hon. Member: With no interest.

Mr. Gardiner: My friend says "with no interest". There is no interest on it until it becomes overdue but if it becomes overdue then it is 6 per cent, and no legislation that we ever put through had a rate of 6 per cent.

Mr. Cardiff: Who said anything about 6 per cent?

Mr. Gardiner: A lot of farmers in western Canada are not able to meet their accounts on the day that they are due. This legislation says that ten days after they are notified it is in default, if under other circumstances they are not notified it is in default on the 15th of the following September; that under other circumstances it is finally all in default on the 31st of December in that particular year. So after any one of those periods go by the farmer concerned pays 6 per cent.

Mr. Harkness: After you have read that far you should read the next section of the bill.

Mr. Gardiner: I read all the sections of the bill; I have read them several times.

Mr. Harkness: Then you did not understand the next section.

Mr. Gardiner: The fact is I do understand them or I would not be able to get up here and talk about them without reading them to you.

Mr. Harkness: You had better read this one again.

Mr. Gardiner: The matter is in that position, and again I repeat there is a possibility that there will not be as many people obtain loans under this measure as under the other one. There is a possibility that the amount of money obtained will not be as great, not because of anything that this government does, not because of anything that the elevator company does, not because of anything that the bank may necessarily do but because the farmers of western Canada are fairly careful businessmen, themselves. When a man knows he owes the bank $1,000 or $3,000 and can go and get an advance of a certain amount and then has to take the cheque to the bank in order to cash it, he knows he is going to be asked for some of that money and there will probably be considerable pressure put on him to pay what he owes the bank. Therefore when my hon. friend says that all 231,000 of these farmers who are eligible are going to come along and get money and that the total may be $100 million or $150 million—

Mr. Harkness: I did not say that.

Mr. Gardiner: Well, you pretty nearly said that. If what you did say meant anything it meant that and if it did not mean that it did not mean anything.

Mr. Harkness: I said a large proportion of them.

Mr. Gardiner: I am simply suggesting that the amount could be lower and in taking that position I am simply following an example that was set by my hon. friends when they were on this side of the house. It did not make any difference what we told them the farmers would do. They went on saying that we would find that the amount would not be that high. I am trying to tell you now that it will not be as high as you think it is going to be.

That is another reason why I am very pleased that you are leaving the other measure on the statute books because by the time we get through another year we will know which of us is right. If my hon. friends took the bank loan bill off the statute books and tried to prove that what they said while they were in opposition was correct, that it was no good to the farmer, then we would still be arguing about it a year hence. Since they are going to leave it on the statute books it is not going to be necessary for me to say very much more about it at this time. We will have it all before us when we come before the house next year.

An hon. Member: Where will you be then?

Mr. Gardiner: Some of my hon. friends probably think there will not be a next year before another election and that may be the chief reason why they are talking the way they are now. We could have an election before we can prove this one way or the other. But do not make any mistake about it. The farmers of western Canada will be able to size up the situation for everything that it is worth within the next two, three, four, five or six months if it becomes necessary for them to make a decision during that period of time.

An hon. Member: And they will vote for this program.

Mr. Gardiner: Of course I know my hon. friends will help them to reach a decision, and I can assure them that my friends of the C.C.F. back in the corner here and my Social Credit friends over there and those in this group will also help to do the same thing.

Mr. Harkness: You mean you will help to confuse the issue.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. Gardiner: No, we will not help to confuse the issue. We will try to prevent the government from confusing the issue to the extent that they have in recent years and recent months.

An hon. Member: Are you going to vote against it?

Mr. Gardiner: My friend says, "Are you going to vote against it"? I am going to say the same thing as was said on a previous occasion and I brought the passage with me so that I could be sure just what it was. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) spoke on the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing bill on February 15, 1956. After making a speech in which he was very strongly opposed to the measure and indicating what he called all its weaknesses—that is what I am doing now—someone asked him what he was going to do and I have brought along what he said because it expresses so well what I am going to do that I wish to read his words to you and not use my own.

Mr. Gardiner: As found at page 1213 of Hansard of February 15, 1956, he said:

> We of the official opposition desire to express our indignation at the utter inadequacy of this measure to meet the need.

I do not need to repeat that I think the same thing about the present measure.

> At the same time we have no wish, in the face of the patent inadequacy of the government's program, to deny to the necessitous wheat farmers of western Canada even the paltry crust which this measure offers to 8,000 of them.

I do not know of any better way of telling you that I am going to do the same thing. I am going to admit that the bill might bring some help to the farmers. I am going to go further than that and say that it will give us an opportunity to be able to argue the point with the facts behind us as to which of these measures will bring the most money to the farmers. In addition, Mr. Speaker, it lays before us the fact that this legislation, just like the legislation we were discussing a year ago and two years ago, is not intended to cure all the farmers' ills. But you would think to hear some members of the house speaking, particularly those in the corner on this side the C.C.F'ers and those across the way, the Social Crediters, that they brought so much pressure to bear upon the house through what they said last session that the measure now before us was going to cure most of the difficulties they had in their minds when they were discussing it.

An hon. Member: No.

An hon. Member: Nobody said that.

Mr. Gardiner: I am glad you say that it will not because the reason I am going to vote for this measure is the same reason that you are going to be voting for it. You are going to be voting for it and I say to you when you get out west, "Do not misrepresent that." The reason you are going to vote for it is exactly the same reason I am going to vote for it. The reason is that it does at least intend to pay something to the farmer and, that being the case, I of course am going to support the bill.

Mr. Harkness: Is not the main reason that you are afraid to vote against it?

Mr. Gardiner: I am not afraid to vote against anything and never have been, but I have been at this long enough to know that there are times when people are too anxious to have you vote against something. I listened the other night to a member from one of the Winnipeg constituencies talk out a certain bill in this house, and he did it just as well as we have done on some occasions. Apparently he had a reason. The bill had to do with putting flax and rye under the wheat board. Not only did he do a good job, but just as soon as he started to do it the minister walked out of the house, and he represents another seat in Winnipeg. I had thought that in discussing these matters we might discuss them without raising such issues as what are you going to do about it. After all, you are going to do what you think will move the people of certain sections of Canada to support you. We have done the same thing in the past and I have no doubt we will in the future, so there should be no excuses about it. But on this occasion I am voting for this particular measure.

In presenting the resolution the minister stated that responsibility for making the advance will rest with the elevator agent. As I said earlier, I could not find that provision in the act but now I am told that it is the intention of the policy. I have gone on to cover what I think will be the result of that kind of thing.

Some criticism has been made of what the hon. member for Rosthern said the other day, and I must confess that I am inclined to call attention to one thing that he said. This legislation which my hon. friends in the corner and on the other side of the house at the far end have been claiming credit for having placed before this house on quite a number of occasions is not the legislation which they placed before this house on quite a number of occasions. They discussed something which is quite different from this. The hon. member for Rosthern the other day called attention to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), when he was in opposition and was conducting an election campaign, had said. The hon. member for Rosthern on Thursday last, as reported at page 364 of Hansard, stated that the present Prime Minister, on March 14 last, said:

> We believe that under proper circumstances there should be provision for cash advances on farm-stored grain similar to the system in effect in the United States.

That is not this bill; that is the legislation which was promoted in this house by the members of the C.C.F. party and by the members of the Social Credit party over a long period of years; and up to a comparatively short time ago—I have forgotten whether it was last fall or the fall before—the C.C.F. sent a delegation of four of their membership in this house down to the United States to check on it. The leader of the C.C.F. shakes his head. If he turns around and looks at the members behind him, he will see the four who went.

Mr. Coldwell: They went on their own.

Mr. Gardiner: He says that they went on their own. When four men who belong to one political party go down to another country, they may go on their own—

Mr. Coldwell: They were not sent.

Mr. Gardiner: They certainly went and when they came back they did not know what to report. When they were down there in the United States they found that there was not the kind of support behind that program which they had expected to find. Hence they changed a little. But they did not change far enough to have this measure satisfy all the claims that they have been making to the farmers out in western Canada. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, and through you, the house, this question: What does Mr. Benson say about their price support program when discussing wheat in his book entitled "Farmers at the Crossroads"? Mr. Benson, Secretary of Agriculture in the United States, said this:

> Here are some interesting figures on major wheat loans on 1953 crops. In Kansas the largest wheat loan was $139,237. The second largest was $125,198. But what was the average loan? It was $1,525. In Minnesota the largest wheat loan was $49,450 and the second largest $47,768. The average was $1,194.

Then he goes on to say this:

> Is this a program to preserve the family sized farm?

These 235,000 farmers that are listed in Hansard this afternoon.

> Is this the kind of a program the champions of the family sized farm want? Do they want a program that channels most of the benefits to the large producers and works almost as a government subsidy to big operators to buy out small producers?

I ask that question of my friends over in the corner because I am sure they are not going to be satisfied with the $3,000 limit under this legislation any more than they were satisfied with it under the other legislation. I am sure they are going to be attacking the legislation on that basis. This is the place in which to attack it if they are going to attack it and attack it in much the same terms as in the other case. But Mr. Benson goes on to say this further when he is summing up his remarks with regard to wheat:

The people who grow wheat—

He addresses them in that way.

—was it price support or was it mechanization, better seed and improved farming practices which brought a new day to the great wheat producing areas?

Those who have been discussing this measure have been dwelling upon the lack of cash in the hands of the farmer prior to June 10. May I say that the situation has not improved since June 10 and that this measure does not promise to help very much. The fact is that had it not been for the long-time policies of the previous government the farmers would not have survived the mechanization of their farms. I want to say that unless that legislation is kept on the statute books and functions effectively in the future the farmers will be facing that kind of bankruptcy which the leader of the government was so anxious to forecast in previous years.

What did the outgoing government do? In the first place, in 1944 they put in a system of price support to stabilize prices and it has stabilized prices. My friends say they are going to stabilize them. Might I ask this question: Are they going to stabilize them at the same level? Stabilization means keeping them the same in relation to other costs in the country. Is that what they are going to do? If they are going to try to do something different, they had better have a good look at what is being done now before they try to figure out something different. If they do so they will probably come to the same conclusion as that to which they have come on quite a number of other matters since they came into office, namely that the Liberal policies were not so bad after all.

Then what was the other matter? We did not wait until the farmers fell into the position into which they would have fallen had they mechanized their farms without any consideration being given to them in advance. In 1945 we brought in the farm improvement act. What did that act provide? It provided that a farmer could go to a bank and under a government guarantee borrow money to change over from horse-drawn equipment to tractor-drawn equipment. How much did he borrow? The farmers across this country borrowed $653 million. From 1945 to 1956 that is the amount of money that was lent in order to help the farmers change over from one type of equipment to the other.

There have been arguments in this house from time to time as to what the farmers cash income has been; I refer not to his net income but his cash income. When we have said that it has been higher in the last five years than it had ever been in any other five-year period, people on the opposite side of the house have scoffed at the idea. But the fact is that it was higher. What proves it? This fact proves it. Of that $653 million borrowed in that time the farmers have actually paid back—that is the farmers who borrowed it—99.95 per cent of it. How could they have paid it back if they had not obtained more cash? How could they have paid it as they went along if they had not been able to take it in out of the cash income?

That is not by any means all of the money that was utilized for that changeover. The farmers who did not need to go to the bank and borrow the money paid for it as they went along under our stabilization plan. It was the support prices of the government which made this possible, along with the fact that they were working overtime, with a shortage of labour. With better methods and equipment they produced 40 per cent more than they had ever produced before in a similar period and sold their product at higher prices, particularly the wheat, than it had ever been sold since the end of the first war. Therefore they took in more cash than they ever took in before. Because they grew more than a 100 million bushels more on the average over the last five years than they had ever grown before.

They sold more in each of these years on an average than they ever sold before and so if they have now 500 or 600 million bushels of wheat in storage then it is made up of the extra 100 million bushels they have grown in each of these years over that period. Now my friends opposite are not giving them a better chance to get some money out of what they have to sell than they had before and this particularly applies to the fellow with less than enough grain to receive $3,000. More was available to the small farmer under the bank act.

I say this kind of legislation is not all the farmer needs in order to supply him with cash. In fact the regulations and legislation that we put on the statute books over the years, from the beginning of the war down to the time we went out, brought him cash, not loans; not advances but actual cash paid into his pockets totalling $1,120 millions. If our friends over there think that they can in six months put in 1/36th of that figure they will be doing about what we did. If in the year they can put in 1/18th part then they will have done about the same thing and if they are fortunate enough to be in office for 22 years—which they never have been in the past—then of course they will have to at least provide the same amount to match what we have done.

The previous government was not only assisting by allowing farmers to obtain money that they would be required to pay back. We did stabilize their prices; we did support their prices; and we put them in a position to sell on this continent, on this side of the line, everything but grain at higher prices than they could on the other side of the line. In so doing we put the farmers in a position to pay out cash for the mechanization of their farms such as had never been done before.

What is the real position? Well the implement dealers have a paper and in that paper they said a few months back—and this went back to 1933—that it cost the farmer the sum of $8.40 per year in order to maintain the tools, machines and implements on his farm. Now that does not mean that the farmers out in western Canada could do that. They were taking into consideration all farmers in Canada, the man who used a hoe and a rake right up to the man who used a combine, and they said back there, when they were all using horses, that that was the position. What does it say it costs now—$555 per farmer compared with $8.40 in 1933. Of course they have been out of cash.

Looking at the conditions ahead of us the government of the day anticipated the costs of this coming change and I would like to suggest to the present government that, if they are going to remain here long enough to do any of these things, they take a good look at that legislation before they make very many changes in it, instead of going out holding up a proposal of this kind as a solution to the problems of the farmers in the west. All these measures will be required in the future and this one if it adds little will be helpful. However, Mr. Speaker, it will be helpful only in a very small way and because of small mercies I am voting for it. Nevertheless I would warn our friends opposite not to go around the country saying the other government did not do anything; the other government did not help the farmer at all and so on. The farmer will be telling them before they are through that they are on the government side now and when you are on the government side you have a responsibility and when you have a responsibility you are likely to be the fellow who will be blamed. I would suggest that my friends on the government side get all the facts and put them before the house and if they have legislation to bring out which would be helpful, bring it out and let us have a look at it. This one is going to do a little, probably, but not very much but what it does do will be very similar to what was done by the previous Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act.

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise in support of Bill No. 14, an act to provide for advance payments for prairies grain prior to delivery thereof. I would like to commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) for his introductory remarks at the second reading stage of this bill. I think he did it very concisely and gave the house the information relating to the principle of the bill. I feel it is natural that I should be pleased to speak on behalf of this bill as it has been advocated since 1943 by the C.C.F. party both in the house and throughout the country. I am pleased to support this bill also because of the fact that in the constituency of Kindersley we have the most worrisome problem we have ever had so far as congestion is concerned. I believe that in my constituency and the constituency of my leader, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), plus some of those areas around Regina, we have the largest carry through of wheat in the western provinces.

I am very pleased that at the resolution stage there was almost uniform approval of the principle of the bill. It was rather significant to notice the about-face of the Liberal party which had so vigorously fought against a system of cash advances. This remark is subject to certain exceptions because I noted as the vote was called the hon. members for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart), for Roberval (Mr. Villeneuve) and Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. LaCroix) voted against it. Three members of the Liberal party have not been sufficiently informed of the problems of western Canada to appreciate the principle of the bill.

After listening to the hon. member for Melville for over an hour I am at a complete loss as to where he stands. He fortunately on two occasions mentioned he was going to vote for the bill but I suspect I will have to wait two or three days until the right hon. the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) clarifies his remarks for the house.

I think the approval which the legislation is receiving should pave the way for the future legislation which the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) in his opening remarks last Thursday indicated was in prospect for agriculture generally.

I think in order that the house might be fully familiar with the facts confronting western farmers it would be advisable to review the conditions which exist in that area and to which the principles of this bill apply. Now anyone in western Canada knows that the problems confronting the western agriculture did not happen overnight. The problem has been building up over the past 10 years, more particularly the last five years. We know that Nero fiddled while Rome burned and in this case the Liberal administration fiddled around while western agriculture got into the difficult position it is in today.

There was a failure of that administration to maintain markets; a failure of that administration to provide leadership for international agencies, through FAO or such organizations as the food bank which we in the C.C.F. have advocated; a failure of that administration to follow the recommendations of farm organizations and to provide for legislation to prevent inflation and the cost-price squeeze.

As the result of this utter neglect over the years we have the present situation which was summed up by Dean J. R. Weir of the Manitoba university, faculty of agriculture, when he said in a recent statement that "The farmer in western Canada is caught in a squeeze between higher costs of production and reduced prices, and the small farmer is being forced to give up".

We find proof of that statement in the submission of the interprovincial farm union council to the Prime Minister of Canada when it noted that according to the census there had been a decline of more than 47,000 farm units in Canada between the census years 1951 and 1956, and that since 1946 the number of farms in Manitoba had dropped by 9.6 per cent, while in Saskatchewan the decline was 17.7 per cent.

This affords us some indication of the difficult problem which faces farmers in western Canada as a result of the cost price squeeze. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) placed on record the other day information indicating that the cost of production has increased by the phenomenal amount of 46 per cent in the last 10 years. He also pointed out that the price of wheat had declined by 21 per cent. These are the factors that have contributed to the decline in the farm population and given rise to the statement which Dean Weir of the University of Manitoba made. One cause of cost increase has been the tremendous spiral in freight rates. In 1948 the index of freight rates stood at 100. On January 1, 1957, it stood at a colossal 219.8 and those who are from the west realize that the western farmer, the western resident, bears the brunt of this increase. Farm machinery prices have risen 94.2 per cent since 1945; the index of equipment and materials shows an increase of 72.8 per cent; and taxes and interest rates have gone up 55 per cent.

This problem is one which has been most worrisome to individual farmers because every piece of machinery they wish to buy has risen in price beyond their capacity to pay. They have been living on the depreciation of their equipment and have been unable to lay aside a fund of money adequate for the replacement of that equipment.

At the same time as costs have risen to this exorbitant level the price of wheat has fallen. I mentioned that there has been a decline in the last ten years of 21 per cent in wheat prices. Let us consider a more specific year, and compare the price figures on August 4, 1956 with those of August 3, 1957. Hon. members will find that in 1956 No. 1 Northern brought $1.733; by August 3, 1957 that had declined to $1.615, a decrease of 11.6 cents a bushel. The price of No. 2 wheat on August 4, 1956 was $1.703. On August 3, 1957 it stood at $1.575, a decline of 12.6 cents. Now let us look at the lower grades which are in such abundance in many areas; let us take No. 6. Back in August 4, 1956 the price was $1.372; on August 3, 1957 it stood at $1.185, a decrease of almost 19 cents. And these are selling prices at the lakehead, not the prices which the farmers receive for their commodity.

As a result of all this we find that there has been a reduction, between 1952 and 1956 in the net income of farmers in Canada as a whole of 18 per cent. As we enter the western areas we find that in that same period net farm income has declined in Alberta by 26 per cent and in Saskatchewan by 31 per cent. As far as can be discerned at this time net farm income in 1957 will be only one-half of the 1956 figure.

It is apparent, then, that there is great urgency that the principle of this bill should be adopted in order to afford some relief to the farmers in the western areas. We know that the predicament in which the farmers find themselves has resulted from the cost situation, plus very low delivery quotas. One matter which has been of concern to the house in recent weeks has been the phenomenal climb in unemployment figures, and I think hon. members should be aware that if farmers are forced out of business some of them may well be added to the labour pool. The 47,000 farmers who have been forced out of business as a result of government policies are among those who potentially are contributing to the unemployment picture through no fault of their own.

We know that under present circumstances it is impossible for a young farmer to become established. The only young farmers who can become established are those who are able to take over their fathers' farms, and then only because their fathers through the kindness of their hearts have not charged for the full price of the farms or indeed, in some cases, have not charged any price at all. But to buy a farm through a mortgage company, and pay to equip it adequately with the full scale of mechanization would be quite impossible today on an economic basis. If people were satisfied to use a team of horses, as the former minister of agriculture, the right hon. member for Melville apparently is, they might be able to carry on somewhat cheaper, but we know that mechanization is necessary in order to maximize the return.

Another effect of the present economic situation is the situation of the rural community as a result of the small farm income. Those who are resident in rural communities are dependent on agriculture, and they know it full well. They have risen or fallen with the financial position of the farmers within the community. We find now that the tax picture has become very bad in many areas where delivery quotas have been extremely low; farmers are simply unable to pay taxes because, of necessity, they must reserve whatever funds they have to feed and clothe their families. This, in turn, has been reflected in the very low sales of farm equipment and machinery. In the towns within those areas we have seen many small implement agencies fold up in recent years because they were unable to survive.

The situation has been further complicated by the inequality of the quota position. I recall statements made by the former minister of trade and commerce to the effect that no effort would be made to maintain a uniform quota. At the time that statement was made, members of the C.C.F. party objected most vigorously. We said that a farmer in one area had just as much right to receive some return for his grain as had a farmer in another area. We pleaded with the government to make every effort to maintain a uniform quota. But we find that at the end of 1956 there were 103 points which ended the crop year with a 5-bushel quota, 320 which had a 6-bushel quota, and 306 which had an 8-bushel quota, while three stations were closed.

Grain

In 1957 there was an effort to maintain a uniform quota and 431 delivery points ended up with a five-bushel quota and 666 with a six-bushel quota with five stations being closed. I hope it is understood by all hon. members that merely because a marketing point is given a quota this does not mean that all farmers in that area have marketed the full amount of their quota. It is conceivable that a quota would be given to a marketing point in the last two weeks of the crop year and farmers in outlying areas or those who did not have adequate transportation would not have the opportunity of delivering their grain before the space became congested.

These inequalities in the quotas have resulted to a large degree from the failure of the Liberal government to maintain a transport controller, someone who is charged with the responsibility of seeing that railway box cars were in position to meet the demand and that they were not sent to points that did not require them. It has also been as a result of the system of allowing milling companies to skim off all the high protein wheat. I have found that the practice in the past has been to allow mills to take their wheat from whichever elevator had wheat of the highest protein content. The net result of this, of course, has been to leave the wheat of low protein content to the export trade. This is a matter which deserves investigation.

Bill No. 14 will certainly help to resolve this problem of unequal quotas because if a farmer is in a position to receive some money for the grain he has grown but is unable to sell, it is not as vitally important that the delivery quotas be maintained at the same level. In the same breath, however, I would point out that every effort must be made to maintain a uniform quota. At the same time it is apparent that if through some slip or other the quotas are not maintained at exactly the same level the same degree of hardship will not accrue to the farmers.

The proposal indicated in Bill No. 14, as the Minister of Agriculture pointed out, will supply money to the farmer now rather than his having to wait until the quota becomes available. In the opinion of the western Canada farm organizations and in the opinion of farmers I have talked to this represents a tremendous improvement over the bank loans legislation which was devised by the previous administration. Hon. members who were here at that time will doubtless recall the battle which the farm organizations put up and which we in this group voiced in the house in opposition to the farmer paying interest on what were in fact his own wages. I believe it is immaterial whether the bank loan legislation is left on the statute books, which matter seemed to be the major plank in the address of the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner), because if it is left operative no one will use it in any case since they will now have the opportunity as a right to receive a cash advance on their grain.

Bill No. 14 will provide temporary relief for those who are unable to deliver their grain which will give them an opportunity to restore their credit. In all fairness to the legislation I think we cannot build up our hopes too high in terms of thinking of it as cure-all legislation. After all, it is a temporary palliative and it is like a person taking an aspirin tablet when he has influenza; it will make him feel a little better for the moment but will not cure the malady from which he is suffering. The system of cash advances will certainly not correct the cost-price squeeze in which the farmer finds himself but it is welcome as a temporary relief for those who cannot realize any money whatever from their grain.

I was pleased that the Minister of Agriculture made reference to the erroneous news reports which had been distributed through eastern Canada indicating that the cost of this proposal would be the outlandish figure of $100 million to $150 million. In fact on the C.B.C. television news on Thursday I personally heard the newscaster report that the total cost of the program would be between $100 million and $150 million. I think it is most unfortunate that this erroneous information was disseminated in that manner. As I calculate it the cost of interest charges will be approximately $2½ million and perhaps much less than that. There is a popular misconception which is all too generally held of conditions in western Canada and a similar misconception exists concerning what this government and previous governments have done to assist the farmer in western Canada.

I wonder what will be the position under this proposal of the farmer who has no grain, and indeed there are many in this position. At the end of the crop year there was an indication that 48 per cent of the farmers in western Canada would have no carryover at the end of July and of the 42 per cent that had a carryover 25 per cent had less than 300 bushels. It is apparent that it does not matter what type of cash advance proposal the government is able to introduce it will be of no assistance to the large number of farmers who have no grain and who are confronted with a serious problem.

There are some aspects of the bill on which I would like some information but I know this must wait until we reach the clause by clause discussion of it. However, I might just mention one or two points. I am interested in learning what will be the position at the end of the crop year of the farmer who has taken an advance and is unable to deliver grain to retire the advance. Another aspect that aroused my curiosity as I read the bill was the priority given in it to the bank loans legislation. If I understand it correctly it is apparent that it cannot do any particular good to the farmer. Another factor I will want to discuss is the responsibility of the elevator agent in making loans and what his responsibility will be in seeing that the loans are repaid. I am simply mentioning these questions now so the minister will be aware of a possible complaint in these general terms.

I do not wish to take up any more time of the house because I think it is important that this bill be enacted as soon as possible so the benefits under it can be extended to the people of western Canada. I think the bill is good and one that should become permanent legislation. In saying this, however, I should point out that the system of cash advances will not resolve the basic problem of the cost-price squeeze. It does not matter how many cash advance proposals are devised by the government, they will not solve the dilemma of the farmer whose net returns for his products are not great enough to equal the cost of production. This must be resolved through the adoption of an agricultural program that will give to agriculture its fair share of the national income.

It has been advocated that a deficiency payment of 20 cents a bushel could be made to all farmers and that would come close to solving the problem at the moment as far as the western farmer is concerned but we must eventually solve it by finding additional markets for our wheat.

I think the proposal has been well summed up in a statement made by Mr. J. H. Wesson, president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, and because it is stated so succinctly I wish to place it on the record. Mr. Wesson said:

> The proposal to make cash advances on farm-stored grain will provide some cash income immediately. If the legislation provides for advances through elevator agents, as suggested in newspaper reports, this money will be widely and readily available to farmers. However as the wheat pool has repeatedly emphasized in discussions with the government and members of parliament cash advances do not solve the basic problem of western grain growers.

I think all hon. members should give serious consideration immediately to passing this proposal and that we should then review agricultural conditions in all of Canada. I am not unmindful of the fact that the farmers in other areas are suffering hardships from this same price-cost squeeze. Perhaps the unique set of circumstances, the benevolent years we have had, have caused the tremendous buildup of grain in western Canada; but we do know when we have a situation which requires a fruit grower of British Columbia to spend three boxes of apples to buy one bushel of wheat and a wheat farmer in Saskatchewan to spend three bushels of wheat to buy one box of apples, something is drastically wrong and that governmental action must be taken at an early date to resolve this basic problem for the benefit of all Canada.

Mr. J. A. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to take part in this debate on second reading of Bill No. 14, to provide for advance payments for prairie grain prior to delivery thereof.

Before starting my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to compliment the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) on the very able way in which he presented this bill this afternoon. I could not help but feel that there had been quite a change in the way bills were presented to members of parliament sitting in opposition groups.

The arguments for cash advances on farm-stored grain have been presented to this house for many years and they have been presented already in the course of this debate and at the resolution stage. Two years ago, and again last year, extensive debate was carried on on a bill called the Prairie Grain Producers' Interim Financing Act. When that bill was up for discussion we in this group opposed it on the ground that we did not feel that that particular bill, or the farm loan wheat bill, as we called it, would give the farmers of western Canada the cash they would need to carry on their operations.

I was very much interested in the remarks of the former minister of agriculture this afternoon. In his remarks the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner) reminded me very much of his behaviour in previous sessions when he was minister of agriculture and presented the problems of agriculture to the house. It was definitely one of confusion with no information being given. In previous sessions we urged he former minister of trade and commerce to institute a system of cash advances on farm-stored grain which would assure the grain farmers of western Canada a temporary measure of relief from the critical financial position they found themselves in. We still feel that this measure, which is up for second reading today and which is being discussed this afternoon, is nothing more than a temporary measure and it will be only of some immediate assistance to the grain farmers of western Canada.

Regardless of how long we argued with the former minister of trade and commerce he did not see fit to institute a system of cash advances on farm-stored grain. This afternoon the former minister of agriculture did point out that they might have done it this year had they been on the government benches. That situation was very capably handled by the western farmers on June 10 of this year, because the province of Alberta returned only one Liberal member to this house. Therefore, the farmers of Alberta were very definite in their opinion of the agricultural policy, if you can call it a policy, of the former administration.

I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, to see that so many members of the official opposition at the present time see fit to support this legislation in a placid type of way. This change of heart forecasts a much better deal for all those engaged in agriculture, because it is now apparent that the vast majority of the members of this house are prepared to support progressive legislation which will place the farmers of Canada in a better financial position.

My colleague, the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), last week placed on record the position of the Social Credit group in the house, with respect to this piece of legislation; and since we feel that there is a degree of urgency associated with the passage of this bill it is not my intention to take up too much of the time of the house this afternoon. However, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that we view this legislation as being only a temporary solution, one which will bring a measure of immediate relief to the grain farmers of western Canada and not one which will provide a permanent solution.

Our farm population is steadily decreasing and the average age of those engaged in farming in western Canada is steadily rising. If this situation is permitted to continue we shall quite possibly find ourselves concerned, not with so-called man-made surpluses but with actual shortages of foodstuffs. Young people for very obvious reasons, are not staying on the farms, largely because of the fact that they are all too well acquainted with the uncertainty attached to that type of life. They are not prepared to work from dawn to dark, to gamble with weather and so forth for the meagre returns which their fathers have received in the last few years. Instead of following in their fathers' footsteps they have entered other occupations in which they are assured of a larger measure of security and greater financial returns.

Grain

For years farmers have been faced with ever increasing production costs and a continual decline in the selling price of the goods which they had to sell. Again, Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the remarks of the former minister of agriculture this afternoon. He pointed out that the previous administration had spent millions of dollars to aid agriculture. It is true that the previous administration passed the Agricultural Prices Support Act in 1944. However, Mr. Speaker, in the first ten years of its operation it cost the people of Canada 15c. per person per year to support the price of agricultural goods right across Canada, a huge amount of money in the eyes of the former minister of agriculture, but certainly a meagre sum to those who received the benefits of that act.

Farm organizations right across Canada have constantly brought this situation to the attention, not only of the previous administration but of the public at large, with little or no apparent effect until recently. I would say that the passage of this legislation should be looked upon as a major victory for the farm organizations and those so active in presenting their views during the last few years. It is to be hoped that the forecast long-range plan to stabilize the agricultural industry will soon be brought before us for consideration. The need for this particular legislation has been recognized by all parties and by practically every member in this house.

The interprovincial farm union council, in its brief which was presented to the government on August 15 of this year, advanced many strong arguments as to why something must be done to improve the position of those engaged in agriculture. They point out that in the last 18 months agricultural production costs have risen 16.7 per cent, that the retail price of bread has increased 2 cents per pound, that the price of wheat has decreased by 23 cents per bushel; that the interest rates on loans to the Canadian wheat board have increased; that the increase in the value of the Canadian dollar has had an adverse effect upon the farmers of Canada.

We of this group are not prepared to admit that there is an actual surplus of our agricultural products at the present time, including even wheat. I believe the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations pointed out last year that we had in the world at that time only a three months supply of wheat for our wheat consuming population. This amount should not be classed as a surplus. I am sure there is not one farmer in Canada today who would like to think in terms of having only a three months supply of food on hand for his stock. The fault lies partially in the fact that the marketing policies which the previous administration followed were definitely faulty, and instead of being able to get our grain to the hungry people throughout the world the farmers of western Canada were called upon to finance practically the whole burden of this unneeded surplus.

This legislation will provide a measure of relief but we do hope that the new government will adopt trading policies which will enable our producers to sell their goods at a reasonable price. We recognize that all cannot be changed overnight but we suggest to the government that it is not fair to expect the farmers of western Canada to finance any great portion of this surplus. It is for this reason that we of this group have constantly emphasized the need for the establishment of government-owned terminal elevators throughout the west.

The box car situation in the west remains one of confusion. The quota position throughout my area is worse today than it was a year ago. It is all very well for government spokesmen to point out that export sales are up, but to the average farmer that means very little. He still sees his granaries full of wheat. He is still forced to build new ones to accommodate this year's crop. He is still forced to accept his income in a bit now and a bit later process. I submit that there is no wage earning group in Canada today which would be pleased or happy to receive its salary on the instalment plan, and that is exactly what the farmer of western Canada has been forced to do for years. The farmers are constantly plagued with unpaid bills and are always short of cash. These are realities, and unless we want a complete collapse in our grain-growing industry immediate and definite steps must be taken.

I was very sorry to hear the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) state in reply to a question of mine the other day that the government had not seen fit to re-establish the position of transport controller. We have argued in the house for some years now that there was need of a transport controller, a person charged with the responsibility of seeing that there was an equitable distribution of box cars in the west at all times; and not only charged with the responsibility of seeing that this happened but given the authority to carry out his responsibility. I feel we can look forward to another crop year of confusion as far as the box car situation is concerned.

Many people across Canada are of the opinion that the farmer is getting something he is not entitled to, that the farmers of Canada are always demanding and giving very little. In the May 10 issue of the Alberta Wheat Pool Budget the editor of that paper put before the public a little article entitled "Fair Play". He pointed out in this issue that utterances and writings across Canada continue to condemn the farmer for his approach to his present economic difficulties. He pointed out that it is said that farmers must stop demanding help, that the price of wheat must come down, that the law of supply and demand must be recognized, that an industry cannot be bolstered by subsidies, that agriculture no longer is indicative of the prosperity of Canada and that other industries should not be penalized by subsidies to agriculture.

These and many other comments are frequently heard from coast to coast in Canada. It is obvious from such comments that many people still do not understand or appreciate the position of the western farmer. Traditionally the western farmer has spurned aid and has preferred to stand on his own feet. Free trade has been the slogan of the farmer of the west since the early days. That, however, is not the way the people of Canada want things. They have decided to protect pratically every other industry in Canada from foreign competition. If the law of supply and demand is going to be set aside for others, then the farmers too must play under the same rules.

His costs have skyrocketed because of the high prices others have been permitted to charge in a protected market. He cannot be adequately protected by tariffs because what the farmer produces, particularly wheat, are export commodities. It is neither illogical nor unfair that a small portion of the tax dollar collected from the profits of those who have benefited at his expense be used to support agricultural prices. Agriculture may no longer determine the degree of the nation's prosperity but it is still vital in maintaining it. Ours is not a free and competitive economy but rather a regulated one. The rules that assure the prosperity of some should guarantee at least the survival of others. The moment that all Canadians agree to absolutely free and unrestricted trade so that the farmer can buy his requirements from the cheapest source, price supports for agriculture will not be needed. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that that pretty well points up the position facing those engaged in agriculture not only in western Canada but from coast to coast.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to make my first remarks in this house as the new member for Qu'Appelle I cannot help but say in all seriousness that this legislation which has been introduced into this house and which carries my name along with that of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) represents to many of us a great moment in this country's history. I think I can say honestly that for seven years this has been one of the subjects on which I have spoken and expressed myself all through the western part of Canada. Hence it is not inappropriate that as the new member for Qu'Appelle I should be making my first remarks in this house on the subject of wheat. A predecessor of mine who came from there was a man by the name of Ernest Perley. He represented Qu'Appelle during the years 1930 to 1945. His very name stood for wheat. Every time he rose in his place in this House of Commons, both on this side of the house and on the other side, the members of the house knew what the subject was going to be when he rose to speak. I hope that tonight, Mr. Speaker, my remarks here will do justice to his memory.

The significance of the cash advance to the western farmers can be understood only through knowledge of some of the background of what has happened over the last 20 years. I do not intend to speak at any great length. I just wish to emphasize and to point out the highlights of this background so that hon. members from all parts of Canada may understand the deep feeling with which those of us from the west approach this matter.

The depression was not only a depression to us in western Canada; it was a double depression. All parts of the world had a decline of prices and unemployment, but in addition, we had drought and no crops and the situation hit us doubly hard. In addition, the depression was followed by war in which the people in western Canada were asked to make sacrifices along with the rest of Canada, something which has peculiar connotations today. This part of Canada was put under price control as well as the rest of Canada. Our wheat price was set for that wheat which was sold abroad and a special price of 77½ cents a bushel was set for that grain which was sold for consumption in Canada. During the war we were asked to join in that war effort. Not only were we asked to send our young men and our young women into uniforms and into factories in central Canada, we were asked to accept a price on our grain lower than a price which would have given us a chance to restore our economic fortunes after the depression.

After the war when the price controls were removed from goods affecting all the rest of the people of Canada, the western grain farmers were asked to subsidize every consumer of grain in this country at the price of 77½ cents a bushel long after the controls were taken off. That amount of 77½ cents a bushel can be understood only when you realize that across the line our neighbours in the United States at one time were receiving as high as $3.50 a bushel for wheat of inferior quality. That was the sacrifice the people in Canada asked western Canada to make. We made that sacrifice gladly during the war, with no questions asked, but there was an understanding given by the government of this country during the war that when the days of conflict were over we would be given a hand in our difficulties, both on the question of development and on the question of grain prices. So we have this question of cash advances tonight. It meets not all the problems of the farmers but it does answer one need, and one that we in western Canada have felt deeply about the last seven years.

Furthermore, following the war, the people of western Canada were asked to go into a gigantic gamble on their product: we in western Canada were asked to go into the British wheat agreement where we voluntarily accepted a lower price than the world price on the pledge made by members of parliament who now sit in this house on the opposite side that when that agreement was over we would then receive a higher price than the world price, whatever that might be. That gamble cost the western farmers $600 million. The good people of Canada supported the government of that day in providing us with a partial recompense to the tune of $65 million. We appreciate that 10 per cent return on the losses that we took. This gamble was taken with the support of the government of that day and one of the opposition parties, namely the C.C.F. and that gamble failed.

I well recall seven years ago the movement in western Canada to ask us to march on Ottawa to ask the government for 25 cents a bushel in addition to the $65 million we received. I refused on behalf of the party I led in the province of Saskatchewan to take part in that venture because I said we had gone into that gamble with our eyes open and even though the Conservatives were the only ones who had opposed that gamble, the people of western Canada had supported it by their votes in 1949 and we had to be prepared to accept that loss. So when they talked about the march on Ottawa I said, "No, let us look forward to seeing the losses that are coming."

I put on record in western Canada my feelings in a series of articles under the heading "The Dangers Ahead in marketing". One of these articles dealt with this question of the piling up of grain in storage and so on. I am not going to deal with this any longer but it turned out in this country of ours in 1950 that we in western Canada and in all parts of Canada were heading into difficulties in the agricultural industry. All across that western country protests began to be heard and no one paid any attention. When the election came along in 1953, so great was the division among the people of western Canada in support of the various parties that representatives of the government of that day were returned who should not have been returned if the majority of the people of western Canada had had their way.

Today we know in western Canada and all through Canada that there has been a great revolution going on in agriculture. We know that fundamental reforms are necessary. The fundamental purpose to which we must set our hands is to give to agriculture a fair share of the national income. Under this government we pledge ourselves to the fundamental reform. But in the meantime, it is necessary for us to see that the machinery of marketing which we have works a little bit better. That is the reason for this cash advance legislation which is before the house today. This thing dramatizes to western Canadians the need for this attitude in agriculture.

In this house over the last several days during the debates on this issue I have heard the statement that this cash advance bill does not meet all the fundamental needs of agriculture. I say this to you, Mr. Speaker: Who asserts that it does? What single person or organization in Canada asserts that this legislation meets all the fundamental needs of agriculture? Certainly not any member of this party on this side of the house. I hold in my hand a little pamphlet which was issued and distributed in western Canada; it is entitled "The Progressive Conservative Agricultural Policy". I presume it was distributed all across the country. I look at this policy and find 13 points. What we are dealing with here tonight is only one of them. There the members of this house will find the agricultural policy of this party which will be brought forward step by step by this government. The question has been chased around a little bit and I think this statement must be made clearly.

What then is the need for this legislation? Since it does not meet all the fundamental needs of agriculture, why is it brought into this house? The answer is this very simple fact. Not only do 200,000 farmers need cash at the usual time of year when they pay their bills but there are several thousand merchants in western Canada who cannot operate much longer on their credit until this system comes into effect. This also includes the working men and the implement factories of central Canada who benefit directly as the western farmers and all farmers benefit.

I am going to read to you tonight in statistical form just what the situation is. I am going to give to the house the amount of money received through wheat board payments, by groups of months in western Canada, so that members of this house who represent all Canada, not just western Canada, can see what the situation is with seven simple figures. I am taking the amounts of money for the months of August, September, October and November that usually go into the hands of western farmers to meet their needs for operations, taxes, buying of clothes and books for their children and so on; in other words, the ordinary needs of the farmer at the ordinary time of year when he meets his bills.

In the year 1951-1952—that is the crop year—in the months of August to November, the farmers of western Canada, which includes Peace river, received $305 million in wheat board payments, which include the initial payment and subsequent payments. In the year 1952-1953 they received $381 million in this four-month period. In the year 1953-54 they received $328 million. During these three years an average of $338 million went into circulation in western Canada and was passed on to eastern Canada to pay our bills in every fall in those years in that four-month period.

Now those were fairly good years for crop production in western Canada but this represents the type of thing that was going on. Listen to these figures: in the year 1954 to 1955 the figure had dropped to $159 million; in 1955 to 1956 it was $119 million; in 1956 to 1957, $183 million; and this year it was estimated at $147 million, or an average for the last four crop years in western Canada of $152 million. This amount of money was going into circulation in a four month period to meet bills that ordinarily amount to well over $338 million, the average in the three years 1951-54.

The difference between the average in the three years I first quoted and the four years I have just mentioned is $186 million a year. In other words there is $186 million short in these four months an amount usually used by the farmer to pay his bills. Now there is the sound economic need in a nutshell; there are the figures which tell you why the merchants urgently wish to see this bill come into effect; that explains why the business man is anxious to see it come into effect, and it certainly explains why the farmers are anxious to see it come into effect.

This is the cash advance suggestion we are putting before the house to meet this situation by putting into circulation a certain amount of money. I have heard this figure kicked back and forth in this debate today between the various parts of the house. The Minister of Trade and Commerce thought that between $100 million and $150 million would go into circulation as a result of this bill going through. That is in addition to the amount of the unit quota which usually runs around $69 or $70 million.

Now if you look at the figures there are 62 million acres in western Canada called specified acres. If you multiply that 62 million by the figure of six you get a figure of 372 million bushels which is the number of bushels that would be the highest level on which you could expect to advance cash; that is to say 372 million bushels at 50 cents which comes out to $186 million. So that the highest possible figure for the advance is $186 million which is almost identical with the difference between the amount of money that used to go into circulation in the first three years I quoted from 1951 to 1954, and the last four years. This is an effort to meet and fill the gap where there is a real economic need on the part of the farmer, the business man and the people of Canada. It is on that issue and for that reason that this bill has been put forward.

I am not going to go into the details of this bill. We all know that the unit quota of 500 bushels for barley and 800 for oats goes along with the 300 bushels for wheat. I can see that this whole matter illustrates the fundamental need in western Canada which has grown over the last seven years and which has not been met. All this government is trying to do in bringing in cash advances for western Canadian farmers is to meet this fundamental need. In this bill, if you look at it with your hearts as well as your minds, you will see that we have put our faith in the honesty of the western farmers.

If we had tried to evolve an advance system based on all the technicalities involved and to meet every loophole of which the dishonest person might try to take advantage, we would not have a cash advance bill brought in for another year. We have produced a simple bill, using the same system the farmer has always used and we have enough security there to protect any average creditor, because those of us who come from the west know the significance of the permit book. The only way you can beat this legislation—I am speaking now to those who come from areas outside western Canada—is to quit farming because then you will not have a permit book. We who are living under the western Canadian system know what that means.

Now this concludes that part of my remarks on this subject. I repeat that it is not the fault of the western farmer that his markets have been lost; it is not his fault that the grain storage is blocked in the elevator. He has cut his acreage down and has made every effort he can to get out of this mess. We have to meet the situation left on our doorstep by the previous administration.

There has been some discussion—I am simply amazed at this—as to whether the farm organizations and the farmers generally want cash advances. Let me assure my friends in this house, in all parties and from all parts of the country, that the great majority of the western farmers—I would say 95 per cent—want a system of cash advances. There is no argument about that in western Canada and this whole issue tht has been kicked around in the house today, makes me wonder. I did some reading between the closing of the house at six o'clock and the opening at eight o'clock and I picked up a copy of the Leader-Post dated November 12, 1955, where I found this heading "Farmers Mass Meeting ask for Cash Advances". There was another statement where the former minister of agriculture was speaking—but I will leave that for a moment and will come back to it later because I see the former minister is now in his place.

I have had some experience with this matter. I have seen resolutions go through by every political party in western Canada, including the Liberal party, in support of cash advances; I have seen these resolutions go through every board of trade in support of cash advances; I have seen the legislatures of western Canada pass resolutions in favour of cash advances. I do not know of a farm organization today in Saskatchewan which lets its body politic or rank and file get together and discuss these matters which is not in support of cash advances. That is the feeling on this matter in the west. I have heard in this debate some remarks to the effect that one party has been supporting this legislation since 1952 and I have just finished saying that I have heard resolutions put through by every party. I thought it might be appropriate at this time, in view of the fact that the leader of the Conservative party of a few years ago is not now in this house, to read the remarks of the Hon. George Drew who was then leader of the official opposition contained in his first speech in the new session of parliament in the fall of 1952. It is reported in Hansard of November 24, 1952.

> Farmers are finding it impossible in many cases to deliver their grain to the market, we are informed, no matter what steps are being taken. The whole system of handling and distribution has broken down. The government, no matter what its explanation may be, has failed to take effective steps to provide for the handling of grain, in spite of the knowledge many months ago, and the warnings many months ago, that this situation was going to arise. In western Canada today there are many farmers, with huge quantities of wheat and other grains worth considerable sums of money, who are unable to get money at this time to cover their harvesting and living expenses because of their inability to deliver that grain to market.
> This is a situation with which the government should deal immediately. It is urgent and calls for attention without delay.

Now this was November 24, 1952. If that situation was urgent in 1952 it is doubly urgent today and I am making no apologies for reading into the record the words of the then leader of the opposition.

If for no other reason than the passage through this house of this bill on cash advances, this government deserves the support of the people of Canada. There is a real need here, and we have met this real need and we have shown our determination to put into action what we have preached.

Mr. Speaker, I have indicated, I believe, that I wish to be fair in these matters. I have said that all parties in western Canada supported this proposal to make cash advances. It was only in the last election that people realized that by dividing their votes among the parties they would defeat this end, and they began to rally behind the party which is now led by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. Speaker, in this debate we have heard members of the official opposition declare their support for cash advances. That was after June 10. This conversion is remarkable, and I cannot but recall the days of the bank loan. I am going to pick up a copy of the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix dated November 9, 1955, and, again, I will read just the headlines:

> Gardiner Defends "Howe Plan" Giving Bank Loans to Farmers.

At that time I was suspicious that Mr. Howe was getting his throat cut from ear to ear, because according to the headline this was not the policy of the government. Back in 1955 this was described to western farmers as "The Howe Plan" and indeed Mr. Howe did get his throat cut from ear to ear on June 10. Now we have heard in this house today a declaration that this is now good legislation, and the former minister of agriculture is defending what two years ago was the Howe plan.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege: I do not think the hon. member, by reading the headline of that paper, indicates that I said it was the Howe plan. He is simply saying that the Star-Phoenix headline writer said it was. I supported the plan, but I do not think I called it the Howe plan.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to read more of this, if I may, in answer to the question of privilege raised by the former minister of agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: May I remind the hon. minister that if the ex-minister of agriculture, the right hon. member for Melville, makes a statement in his place it is not one that can be controverted; it must be accepted.

Mr. Gardiner: I have no objection to his reading. I simply wanted to say I supported the plan for bank loans, but I do not think I referred to it as the Howe plan. I was as much responsible for the drafting of it as he was.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am still speaking on the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner) was at that time very critical of the press and said: "I insist on giving you a written copy of my remarks because I am so often misinterpreted." And in the statement I have here, "The Howe Plan" is put in quotation marks because those are his own words to the press.

Mr. Gardiner: I favoured it no matter what they called it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): That was the point of my comments, Mr. Speaker. At that time, I confess, I was suspicious and now I find I had no reason for those suspicions. The devotion and the loyalty shown toward Mr. Howe at that time is now confirmed by the hon. member for Melville when he says that the bank loans are a good thing, and when I heard the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) point out in this house on Thursday that the $3,000 maximum under the bank loan arrangements was the same as the $3,000 maximum in this legislation, I thought his opposition in Saskatchewan must have been correct when they said that the Liberal party shot out their brains when they did a certain thing.

Mr. Speaker, when I heard that remark I thought the Liberal party was committing suicide, to come here and say that the $3,000 in connection with the bank loans was the same as the $3,000 in connection with cash advances. I am not going to remind hon. members of the figures I quoted earlier, but here is a scheme which, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has stated, could put into circulation between $100 million and $150 million, while at the other end of the scale is another which could put into circulation about $8 million. It would seem that according to the mathematics of the Liberal party, $8 million is equal to $150 million.

I thought I heard the Liberal party commit suicide on Thursday when I heard the hon. member for Melville—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is this the new dignity in parliament?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for having used that reference. But when I heard that hon. member tell the house that, in his opinion, not only was that earlier legislation just as good but it was better, I knew what we were going to be doing on this subject.

Now I am going to mention a few remarks made by the former minister of agriculture, and point out what I believe are some of the answers. One of the subjects dealt with by the hon. member for Melville today was the subject of grades of wheat. I am not altogether certain whether the inference was that in the case of a lower grade a farmer would get more money out of this bill, or less. So what I am going to do, with the permission of the house, is table a report which shows exactly what the various farmers will receive on both bases, the basis of No. 1 northern and the basis of No. 4 northern. Looking at this table I find that on the basis of No. 1 northern the farmer on 50 specified acres receives 70 per cent of the total initial price, and that, Mr. Speaker, works out at 86 cents a bushel. The farmer on 100 acres receives 60.3 per cent of the total initial price possible to him, which works out at 74 cents a bushel. And as one goes down the list, on 200 acres the percentage is still 52 per cent and the price is 65 cents. When one reaches the biggest classification of all, 1,000 acres, one finds that the percentage of the total initial price has declined to 43, and the average amount of cash per bushel available is 53 cents.

That is for No. 1 northern, and I hope I may be allowed to table these figures. The next set of figures relates to No. 4, and I find on looking at my table that a man on 50 acres receives 73 per cent of his initial price; the percentage is higher. Reading down the table further, one finds that on 1,000 acres the percentage is 48.

Grain

Thus, the whole effect of this legislation is this: we did not try to get a sliding scale based on grades. We took the simplest course open to us, and on the basis of No. 1 northern it gives 70 per cent to the small farmer and 43 per cent to the top quota allotted under this act. To the farmer producing grade 4 wheat it gives an even bigger percentage. In other words, we took a chance that the farmer delivering a lower grade of wheat, who would receive a little more in percentage, would be able to pay that off in the year of sale.

Have I permission to table these figures, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. minister the leave of the house to table these documents? May I ask the minister what is the source of the information? I take it the hon. minister is suggesting to the house that they should be tabled, or does he want them printed in today's Hansard report as part of his speech?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think we should have them printed with my remarks because many people across Canada will want to see these figures and learn what they are going to receive under this scheme.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to have the tables from which he is quoting printed with his speech in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The first table is as follows:

(6) This column shows the value of unit quota (col. 4) plus maximum advance (col. 5) in percent of value of unit quota (col. 4) plus value of six bushel quota (col. 2).

There was one other point raised during the course of this debate the other day which I think should not have been raised today. I am referring to the remarks made last Thursday by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) who expressed the wish that the quota had been a little larger, 8 bushels per specified acre. He knows as well as I do that this had been the request of the farm organizations over the last several years. I believe that is a fair statement.

Mr. Argue: Eight bushels?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes, 8 bushels per specified acre. I wish to point out to the hon. member that when he examines the figures I have placed on Hansard he will discover that the small farmer is better looked after as a result of the way we have done it because we have simultaneously given a quota of 6 bushels per specified acre plus the unit quota. For the information of the hon. member, and I hope for the information of all hon. members of this house, I am going to read a comparison in dollars of the two systems, if I may.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit a question. Is it not a fact that the farm organizations in requesting an 8-bushel quota excluded it from the unit quota?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes, that is exactly the point, Mr. Speaker. They had not considered the possibility that we would use both systems simultaneously.

Mr. Argue: I very much think they did.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): In any case, in answer to the hon. member's remarks I am going to point out what it means. First of all you must remember in taking their request for four dollars per specified acre, which is the equivalent of eight bushels times 50 cents, you would have to deduct the initial quota and so the way it works out is that on an acreage of 50 specified acres there would be no advance under the system as I understand it, but under our system there would be $150 advanced in addition to the unit quota. On 100 acres there would be $29 for the straight 8-bushel system in addition to the unit quota, but our system would give $300. On a farm with 200 specified acres there would be an advance of $429 for the straight 8-bushel quota system in addition to the unit quota, but under this system it would be $600. The table I have in my hand shows that the farmer with a specified acreage amounting to 300 acres or less does a little better under our system than he would under the straight 8-bushel quota system and for farms with specified acreages of more than 300 acres there is a slight advantage under the 8-bushel quota. Unless some hon. members wish to have this table printed in Hansard I shall confine my remarks to these few words.

Hon. members will find that the farm organizations in proposing the system did not propose the simultaneous use of the unit quota system. They were agreeable to what we were proposing because they recognized that it did give some preference to the small farmer whom we define as a farmer who is effectively farming 300 acres or less. This is a clear answer to the question implied in the criticism of the hon. member for Assiniboia on Thursday.

I wish now to deal with a few remarks made in the house this afternoon which cannot be let pass without some comment. As I understood the remarks of the hon. member for Melville, he said one of the arguments he had put forward in connection with the Liberal bank loan system was that it did not have the several disadvantages our system had. He mentioned the question of debts and creditors and as I listened carefully to him this afternoon I received the impression that under the Liberal bank loan system the creditor had no chance to collect from the farmer. This was merely the impression I received. Under our system as he described it I visualized the farmer sneaking around the banker by the back lane. I gathered the impression from the remarks of the hon. member that under the Liberal system the creditors could do nothing to this man.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, that was not the intention. What I stated and what I think is the fact that the banker could not utilize his position as a banker to make collections out of that money and that the cash had to be handed to the farmer.

An hon. Member: Or to someone else.

Mr. Gardiner: Well, someone else could collect from him after he walked out on the street, yes.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am very glad to have that correction.

Mr. Gardiner: It is not a correction; it is just what I said.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I was just giving the house the impression I received from your remarks and I am sure other hon. gentlemen got a similar impression.

I return now to the Leader-Post of November 12 to which I referred previously and the article bearing the headline, "Loans direct to borrowers" and the subheading, "Misinterpreted, says Gardiner". Here we have someone else who has been misinterpreted on another occasion. On this occasion the hon. member for Melville said what he says now. The article says in part:

> Federal agriculture minister James G. Gardiner Thursday night denied he had stated that proposed government guaranteed bank loans to farmers would be protected against seizure by creditors.

Therefore with regard to the question of seizure by creditors there is no essential difference. This is simply a way of putting money into circulation in a manner acceptable to the farmers.

I think we heard a challenge this afternoon from the former minister of agriculture to the effect that he would let the people of western Canada decide whether the Liberal bank loan legislation was superior to the present system of cash advances proposed by this government. I took from those remarks a direct challenge to this government in the west that the farmers would take more money out in the form of loans, which course is still available to them, than they would in the form of cash advances. If that is the challenge of the hon. member for Melville I want to say on behalf of the government—and I am sure on behalf of every western farmer—that we accept his challenge on that ground. There will be a good scrap over that question, Mr. Speaker, because on this issue I think I speak for every farmer and merchant in western Canada. I am glad the hon. member for Melville has not risen in his place to say he was misinterpreted in those remarks.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, I do not say I have been misinterpreted in that respect but I do say that my hon. friend is misquoting me. As a matter of fact what I said this afternoon was that we would not need to debate this question any further because in another six months we would know.

An hon. Member: And maybe before that.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think Mr. Western Farmer will understand that type of statement.

I have taken the time of the house allotted to me for my remarks and I wish now to thank hon. members for the courtesy with which they have listened to my first effort. I wish to conclude by expressing my firm conviction that this government recognizes that in every part of Canada many segments of our population have begun to receive less than their fair share of what the national income of Canada should provide for them. The government recognizes that justice should provide not only for those groups which have fallen behind but also for those areas that are lagging. Through its action in introducing cash advances and the other measures presented to the house this session—and in future sessions—I think the Canadian people will recognize that what we have promised to do we will do. I am sure this has given the Canadian people a great lift in spirit and has removed the scepticism of the thirties because now they see in power a party that will earnestly strive to live up to the promises it has made.

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, before I get to the burden of my remarks, which are going to be very brief this evening, I should like at the outset to commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness), who this afternoon for the very first time since I have been in this house at least placed on the record in unmistakable terms the position of the western farmer, in so far as the arguments put forward are concerned that he is a man who is engaged in an industry and has been asking the people of Canada to support him over the years. I think the minister and the government should be commended because never before has the government gone out of its way to place the true picture of western agriculture before this house and to give the members of eastern Canada some indication of just what is involved in farming in western Canada.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal for a moment with some of the arguments put forward this afternoon in defence of the former bank loan administration. The former minister of agriculture, the right hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner), tried to point out that this legislation was not better than the former bank loan legislation. Well, in so far as the merits of it are concerned and the money that is going to be put in the hands of the western farmer is concerned, I would wholeheartedly agree, but there is a considerable difference. First of all, the banks are not involved and that is very important. The elevator agents are going to be responsible for carrying out the mechanics of this proposition and, of course, the fact that there is no interest charge is of tremendous importance.

While I am not happy about the legislation as a method of doing something concrete for western agriculture, I am going to say that it is a lot better than what we have had before and it is a great deal better than any of the plans that are being put forward by certain other people in this country as a method of helping out the farmer in the dilemma in which he finds himself today. For the benefit of the Liberal party in this country I should like to put on record one of the plans which is being put forward by a certain individual who was very close to the Liberal party prior to the last election. Here it is. It is an offer to buy wheat provided that the farmer delivers it to a point specified in this advertisement for a cent a pound. This applies to No. 5 and No. 6 wheat which today are selling on the market for 97 cents a bushel. This certain individual is offering 60 cents a bushel, a cent a pound. Things are so bad that the farmers are taking advantage of these propositions which are being put forward by certain unscrupulous people in this country.

It is even worse when you follow it through to its logical conclusion. Here is an individual who in effect is saying to the farmers: if you will buy a refrigerator from me I will take half cash and the remainder in wheat at a cent a pound. First of all, he hikes up the price of his refrigerator by $80 and the upshot of the whole proposition is this, the refrigerator that he is selling for $448 brings him a net profit of $225 at the farmers' expense. Who is putting forward this plan? Nobody else, Mr. Speaker, but the former representative in this house from Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, Mr. Ross Thatcher, protege of the hon. member for Melville who went around the province of Saskatchewan saying, "You should elect this man because he is an important man in the Liberal party and he will do great things for western agriculture."

I was very concerned and not a little amused this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, when the right hon. member for Melville was concerned and shed a lot of tears about the impossible position the elevator agents were going to be put in because of this measure. He said, "You are placing them in a position where they are going to have to indulge in certain questionable practices; they are going to go out and they are going to have to bid for this grain in ways that possibly would not be too acceptable."

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I did not call any of the practices that I discussed questionable practices.

Mr. Bryson: I well remember last year, Mr. Speaker, and the year before, that the opposition today, when they were on the government side of the house, used every devious means—and I do not think it is too strong a word—to keep producers from delivering grain to the elevator of their choice. Whenever a piece of legislation was introduced in this house suggesting that the farmers should be able to deliver grain to the elevator of their choice the government of the day voted solidly against it. Now, apparently, they are worried about the elevator agents. I do not think the elevator agents or the people of Canada are going to appreciate the reflection which was cast on the elevator agents by the remarks of the former minister this afternoon.

I have said that I am going to have to agree with one thing the hon. member said. I agree wholeheartedly with him that the government is being dishonest when they say that the measure before this house is a cash advance measure. It is nothing of the kind; it is a loan. Before they are finished with this piece of legislation I should like the government to explain to me and to the party which I represent why they did not introduce an honest cash-advance piece of legislation. What is a cash advance? Well, any farmer in this house knows that any time he takes hogs or cattle to the market to sell he is invariably asked whether he would like an advance. It is a common practice. In many instances I have done it myself. I have said, "Yes, I will take $100." But when I get my returns they show the full amount less the advance that I received.

Why could the government not have done the same thing in this legislation? Why could they not say to the farmer, "We will give you 50 cents for the wheat you have and when you haul it in here we will give you the remainder?" That would be the end of the transaction. It seems rather foolish to me to say to the farmer, "You owe us money." The farmer does not owe the wheat board any money on a bushel of wheat when he has received only 50 cents. The wheat board owes him money. Does it not seem foolish that when he delivers his wheat, in spite of the fact that the wheat board owes him the difference between what he received, 50 cents, and the initial price, which may be $1.20, to say to the farmer, "Oh, yes, we owe you 61 cents or 62 cents, but until you pay us the 50 cents we will not pay you any more?" In other words, they are saying, "You pay us back the 50 cents and we will pay you the $1.20." This seems very strange to me.

What would happen under the wheat board system of marketing today if when you hauled your grain to the elevator you received the initial payment of $1.20 and some time during the winter you were to get an interim payment of, say, 10 cents a bushel?

Would it be reasonable to say to the farmer, "We will not pay you the 10 cent interim payment until you pay us the $1.20 that we paid you initially and then we will give you $1.30"? I should like the government to explain the kind of reasoning they used in arriving at this formula.

So, Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to say, as I said in the first instance, that the bill is going to put a little cash in the hands of farmers who are badly in need of it, but I think the important part of it is that it is going to equalize quotas. As long as we have a quota system we are going to be faced with the problem of inequality under that system. As I see it, it cannot be avoided. The measure we are dealing with will do something to equalize the quota system. While we are not satisfied with the legislation, we are going to approve of it because we see in it something a great deal better than anything that has been proposed in the house prior to now.

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) referred in his closing remarks to the imbalance of purchasing power in certain segments of our population. For that reason I should like to make some observations inasmuch as I come from a province other than those that are covered by the bill. I supported the resolution when it was introduced and made the request that the bill be altered so that primary producers in all the provinces rather than in a limited area might be included under its provisions.

Some members may feel that it would be impossible to have the legislation operate in the province of Ontario but in that province we have marketing agencies which could act as the liaison between the government and the primary producers. I am sure such agencies could meet the requirements of this legislation. Some representatives of these organizations came to Ottawa shortly after the election and met different members of the government for the purpose of placing the position of the primary producers before them. For example, representatives of the Ontario wheat producers association, accompanied by members of the federation of agriculture from several counties in southwestern Ontario and by supporters of the government from the area that they represented, requested the government to take action regarding the wheat problem in Ontario. The soybean marketing board and the horticultural council representing the fruit and vegetable growers sought assistance of a similar nature.

I am sure hon. members will agree that if the industry was in a healthy position these busy men would not have approached the government as many of the problems facing the industry have been resolved by action taken by their own associations. Recently the farm loan board made the statement that farm loans have increased 60 per cent compared with a similar period a year ago. I think that points out very definitely that agriculture as a whole certainly is not in as healthy a position as it might be.

On October 24 I asked the minister who is piloting the bill in the house tonight if he would before the conclusion of the speech from the throne debate consider the possibility of bringing in legislation to stabilize farm prices, and I was referring at that time to the commodities I mentioned a while ago. My reason for asking the question was simply that many of the commodities now being harvested are not bringing prices that are consistent with good farming practice. I also mentioned the very low price of corn. I learned about this particular instance from a person who knew the farmer who sold the corn, and the net to the producer was 46 cents a bushel.

I contend that if the provisions of the bill regarding cash advances were extended to the producers of corn in the area in which it is produced the producer might receive by way of a cash advance almost as much as he received for his whole crop and at the same time had to lose complete control of it. The corn could be placed in storage where it could dry naturally. It would improve in quality and we would be able to feed a supply of corn into the different channels that require it, mainly the starch companies and the breakfast food companies. Unfortunately there are men who need ready cash in Ontario and the six other provinces not covered by the bill which will only give assistance to the three western provinces.

The reason I asked a question on October 24 was that it did not seem to me that the provisions of this bill would cover the situation and I wanted to know whether the government would bring down soon a stabilization program that would meet conditions such as I have outlined.

This afternoon many hon. members spoke about the small farmer. I am sure everyone realizes that in the other seven provinces of the dominion there are many small farmers. I know that is so in our province. Consequently, I should like to appeal to the government again to assist small farmers in every part of Canada. This afternoon the bill was termed a lifesaver.

An hon. Member: With a hole in it.

Mr. Huffman: Someone says that there is a hole in it. This bill is really a lifesaver with a hole in it and seven provinces of the dominion are going to get only the hole. I have talked to farmers from western Canada who are in Ottawa at this time. I have discussed with them our problem and their problem. They agree that we have a justifiable claim for the same consideration as is provided for western producers by this bill.

I have every sympathy for those who need the provisions of this legislation. I am sure the producers of western Canada will honour their obligations. I was very glad to hear the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources say that because we also feel that in this industry there is honour and that our farmers will certainly meet their obligations, both those that will be incurred under this measure and those now in force under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act.

It has been estimated that between $100 million and $150 million will be advanced to growers without interest. Again I say that if the government would extend similar provisions to the seven other provinces there would be a good deal more purchasing power immediately available to the many who are in need of ready cash. Part at least of this year's production would be covered.

Having supported the resolution so that I might have a look at the bill in its final form, I must now register disappointment on behalf of those I represent and those who I feel are neglected. The bill has been called discriminatory by some but I must confess that it has all the earmarks of segregation by legislation.

Mr. Charles Yuill (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support this bill I derive a certain amount of pleasure because I think it is one of the most important bills that has been introduced in my short term here in so far as western farmers are concerned. I think the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) is to be complimented on the able way in which he presented this bill. It is refreshing indeed to find a minister who is not afraid to take the wraps off his bills and to present them in their true light. To the farmers who were obliged to indulge in that questionable luxury of borrowing their own wages at five per cent interest I am sure it will be refreshing to see that at long last they have access, in a limited way at least, to the fruits of their labour.

I think this bill goes a long way toward alleviating the stress on the farmer and his economic problems. Nevertheless, it is only a palliative and a means to an end. I hope this government will not fall into the state of complacency that seemed to be the mark of the previous government and feel that by bringing this worthwhile measure before the house, they have done all that is required of them. Basically I think this points up one important point, namely that the cure or solution of our problems does not lie in administering palliatives such as this but rather in coming to grips with the problem of marketing the produce of the biggest partner in Canadian business, namely agriculture.

While this measure, in a sense, helps the farmers, it does not—fortunately or unfortunately—help all of them. In the constituency which I have the honour to represent there are many small farmers who—whether because of taking the advice of members of the previous government and adhering to the technique of diversification or whether it was brought about by necessity—were forced to go out of wheat growing to a large degree. I note that this measure will not help them. For the sake of self-preservation they were obliged to indulge in diversification. Many of them diverted their activities into livestock and dairying and many of them resorted to the growing of seeds and other grain. In my constituency I find that many farmers, because of their desire to make an honest living, started growing rape seed as a means to an end. They found that by growing rape seed they would get some semblance of a just return for their efforts.

However, it was only a short time until they found that there was a roadblock in their way. I refer to the discriminatory freight rates that prevailed. It may be argued that this matter is not relevant to the bill before the house. However, I think it is relevant because that was a direct substitute for a livelihood in many instances in my constituency. I think no hon. gentleman here can suggest that it is desirable or necessary for a freight rate to be raised three times when it related to a new outlet whereby a farmer could have the right to live. I cannot see any moral or economic justice in demanding a freight rate of 70 cents per hundred, when it is obviously fair to charge only 22½ cents on flax or other grains. I fail to see why it is necessary to charge 70 cents in one instance and, as far as the rate to the British Columbia coast is concerned, 64 cents. I think it is the responsibility of this government to see to it that more justice prevails at that level. Are we going to deny to the small farmer the right to diversify and to grow crops that will not clash with the best interests of everyone concerned and, through that medium, to minimize his necessity to avail himself of cash advances?

I know the benefits accruing from cash advances. I know that when the farmer gets money the merchants, of which I was one for a number of years, certainly receive the benefit of it. The minute the farmer gets a dollar business picks up almost overnight. When his conditions are depressed, by the same token the merchant's business is depressed. I think it would be a happy situation and a desirable one if, in spite of this wonderful bill, the government would give some more consideration to these small farmers who are not privileged to cash in on these cash advances. I think it is their responsibility. I think they should place more emphasis on finding markets and on seeing to it that something is done by the board of transport commissioners or the railroads or whoever is responsible. In the final analysis it is the responsibility of this parliament. I think they should see to it that consideration is given to the little farmer who because of adhering to the advice and wishes of the government has tried to eke out an existence through some other means.

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I want to be brief in the few remarks I wish to make on this piece of legislation. I also should like to compliment the government on bringing in this measure of loans to farmers or, as they would rather have it put, cash advances. It is more needed this year than at any time previously for the simple reason that our grain is moving at a slower rate than it has ever moved before. A good three-quarters of the delivery points for grain in the west are not even in the position where they can accept the first one-bushel quota. This fact puts the farmers in those areas in a position where they are in receipt, in the first three months of the crop year, of something of the order of $300 or $350, depending on what kind of grain they have to deliver. This amount is not much more than will provide lubrication for the machinery for removing the crops from the field and further cash is definitely needed from some source or other to take care of the balance. This is a palliative which will help, in its way, those farmers who have grain. Of course for those farmers who have no grain—and they comprise a considerable number in the west this year because of drought and periods of continuous rain which have spoiled what in many cases was a fairly good crop—other remedies are necessary.

My friend from Saskatchewan, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) in his opening remarks said that this is a great moment in Canadian history. I am in entire agreement with that statement because I think this is the first time the Conservative party has made a gesture towards finding a solution of the problems of the farmers in the west. There was something previously which one might call a gesture when the last Conservative regime under Mr. Bennett gave five cents a bushel to those farmers who had wheat. At that time about one farmer in a hundred had any wheat so the other 99 went without.

These pieces of legislation are both based upon the cornerstone of Tory philosophy—to those who have shall more be added unto. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources said quite candidly this was not supposed to fix up all the western farmers' problems but I note that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) has in view more permanent relief for them and has a really basic solution for their problems when he tells them they should not raise wheat at all. That is certainly a way to get away from their trouble. It may also be a way to remove the troubles from the shoulders of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but I note that he did not say in his remarks made to a meeting of the dairy council in September that he had any suggestion as to what they should do to make a living when they quit growing wheat.

[Mr. Harrison.]

Well, if you are going to carry that kind of remedy to its logical conclusion you will tell the farmers of Prince Edward Island they should not grow potatoes and the fishermen of the maritimes they should not catch fish. We have to find a longer-ranged remedy than that implied by these suggestions because the prairies are suited to growing wheat and it would not be very practical to try growing coconuts there and raising wheat in the South Sea islands. We grow these things where they will grow. However, this piece of legislation will help in some areas where farmers have wheat and to that extent I am happy to support it.

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my remarks in connection with this bill under discussion will not be long. Previously I have given my view that this cash advance legislation is needed quickly as a stop-gap to assist the farmers of western Canada. The marketing of Canadian wheat is the problem which faces the government and we have heard on more than one occasion remarks from the government benches that the government is doing everything it can to sell Canadian wheat and to regain lost markets.

On October 18 in this house I questioned the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) on the possibility of selling wheat to Australia. A week ago the hon. minister apparently did not know there was a shortage of wheat in one of the Australian provinces, the state of New South Wales. Back home some of my erstwhile newspaper friends have been taking me to task for the statements I made at that time. I would like to quote an editorial appearing in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix on Wednesday, October 23 under the heading "Homework First":

> As a rule, not too much is demanded of freshman members of parliament attending their first session of the commons. Other members and the public generally expect little more from them than a maiden speech and a few timely questions of concern to their constituents.
> The new C.C.F. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, Mr. "Scoop" Lewry, evidently is not satisfied with such modest demands, at least he didn't appear to be up until the other day when he was effectively "scooped".

The editorial goes on to say:

> He wondered if Canada could not accept sterling instead of dollars from Australia in exchange for Canadian wheat shipped to that country.

Mr. Speaker: I might remind the hon. member that if he wishes to spare his own feelings he can well take refuge in the fact that it is out of order to read an editorial commenting on his previous speech in this session.

Mr. Lewry: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the editorial takes me to task for my previous remarks by suggesting that I might as profitably have proposed shipping coal to Drumheller or oil to Leduc, that Australia does not import wheat.

Now my own local newspaper likewise took me to task for the statements made on that occasion but two days later the press carried a dispatch from Reuters in Perth Australia, indicating that the situation was as I indicated a week or so before, namely that Australia is in the position where she now wishes to import wheat. There was a news story on October 25 in the Regina Leader-Post stating that once approval is given in Australia for the importation of wheat, preferably from Canada, negotiations will begin about meeting the costs. My question at the time was as to whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce had considered the possibility of selling wheat to Australia. The situation I suggest is known to experts in the grain business, including the Canadian wheat board and the grain division of the Department of Trade and Commerce, but apparently not to the minister nor to some of the newspapers in spite of news stories they themselves carried. It appears virtually certain that Australia will be importing wheat during this current crop year and my purpose in asking the question of the minister was to express the hope that our sister commonwealth would import that wheat from Canada.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I hope the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix and the Moose Jaw Times-Herald will all do their homework to ascertain the situation in regard to wheat market possibilities, especially within our commonwealth.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I do not intend to speak at length on this bill because I am in general agreement with it. There are however one or two details upon which I would like to comment and upon which I would like clarification. First of all with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to standing order 11 which says that no member is entitled to vote upon any question in which he has a direct pecuniary interest and the vote of any member so interested will be disallowed. I am a producer and I have grains; I am also a permit holder. I would like clarification as to whether or not I, along with several other members who would possibly be in the same position, would be within our rights to vote on this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the government for keeping this bill simple and for not tying it up with too much red tape. I think, too, that it is good to have the elevator agents do the work of advancing this money. Certainly all hon. members who come from western Canada and who have had dealings with the Canadian wheat board know that the elevator agents keep a close check on the amount of grain that each farmer is storing on his farm. They ask from time to time how much is left, partly I imagine in order that they may report to their companies. Certainly they are well acquainted with this information, so I think the present arrangement is a good one.

One other thing is, I believe, worthy of mention. The advancing of this money is going to place an extra load on elevator agents and I certainly hope that the grain companies will take this into consideration and adjust their pay in recognition of the extra work that is to be done.

Mention is made in the bill of the fact that all money which a farmer has borrowed under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act must be repaid before he can take home any of the money that is being advanced under the terms of this bill. I think that is a little harsh, because many of the farmers will not have a sufficiently large quota to enable them to repay their loans with the amount of money that is being advanced under this plan, namely 50 cents in the case of wheat, 35 cents in the case of barley and 20 cents in the case of oats. We must bear in mind that the amounts per bushel to be advanced will in fact constitute less than 50 per cent of the value of those grains, and I think that the balance of the value of those grains should be considered in demanding payment, that is, the last cent of the payment, due in respect of loans under the interim financing act.

One other thing seems unfair to me. Under the present provisions, if a tenant and a landlord hold a joint permit book, as is often the case, the tenant cannot take out an advance unless the landlord also applies. There will no doubt be cases where a landlord may not need an advance on grain that is being stored on the farm. There may also be cases where a landlord is away from the district and not available to make a joint application with his tenant. In such cases it would appear to me that if the tenant requires an advance and the landlord is either unable or unwilling to apply with him the tenant should be in a position to take advantage of this measure.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like in my own way to try to correct an erroneous impression. There have been suggestions that this is a handout or a subsidy. My impression is that this is no handout to the western grain producers, and no subsidy, except in regard to the amount of interest involved, which is small. The average cost, as, I believe, has been pointed out by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) would amount to between $40 and $45 per permit holder and it seems to me that this is not much of a handout. Though the hon. member for Rosthern made an attempt to decry the bill as being entirely inadequate because it is not going to cost the government a great deal of money, I do not share that view. I think this plan will be of great benefit to many producers, even though it is not going to be costly. There are things that a government can do to help depressed sections of our agriculture industry without great cost to the taxpayers and here, I think, is a typical example.

Mr. Wesley Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I can assure you my remarks will be very brief. I had not intended to say anything on second reading until my name was mentioned here by my good friend from Kindersley (Mr. Johnson), who is apparently disturbed by the fact that I voted against the resolution which preceded this bill. I want to make it quite clear that if there is a division on second reading I will vote against the bill on second reading.

When the hon. Minister for Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) spoke a short time ago he had this to say in conclusion: "I believe this legislation deserves the support of all the voters of Canada." Now, I wonder if, supposing the old age assistance and family allowances which are provided for Canadians had only applied to the province of, let us say, New Brunswick, the Liberal government would have taken the stand that all Canadians should support such a measure.

I believe that is a very good comparison. This bill provides assistance for one branch of agriculture, and one branch only in three provinces out of ten. If conditions were good in the other seven and if all primary producers were encountering no difficulties I could agree that this would be good legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot carry my remarks too far because I was called to order the other night while I was trying to describe the condition of primary producers in my own province. But I believe I have a full and complete realization of what primary producers have had to contend with in the past and of what they will have to contend with in the future. They are the first to take any reduction in prices; they are always the first to do that, and they are the last to get any increase that might be coming. That has always been the fate of primary producers. But when I see this bill I am forced to realize—even the name of the bill bears this out; it is called "The Prairie Grain Act", not the "The Canadian Grain Growers Act"—that it is only for one section of our farmers. How any government can make people believe that this is not discriminating against other primary producers is beyond my understanding.

As I said at the outset, I will vote against this bill on second reading because, as I said on the resolution stage, it does not take care of primary producers in this country who are, to my knowledge, in a much tougher position right now than the grain producers on the prairies. The government makes no mention at all of what it is going to do with regard to unemployment. In the area from which I come that is a great word, and why I should support legislation designed to assist just a few, not all, in agriculture—just this one group in three provinces—I do not know. I just cannot do it. I will vote against the bill, and in doing so I believe my action may bring more forcibly to the attention of the government that there are others in this country who deserve and must have some consideration. Thank you.

Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I am trying to decide on getting to my feet whether I should say that I had not intended originally to take part in this debate, or whether to say that I intend my remarks to be very brief. Both statements would be equally true. It was, in actual fact, Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the hon. member who has just spoken which prompted me to make these observations.

Some doubt was raised in the house as to the necessity or the urgency of this measure. Any suggestion, such as that made by the hon. member, that any single measure could be enacted which would remedy all the economic problems of Canadian economy or of Canadian primary producers is nonsense. This particular piece of legislation was introduced in specific recognition of a problem which the government decided was urgent, and which had to be remedied immediately. It was a recognition of a problem that has been with us for some time and which because of its effects on a rather large proportion of people in this country had to be given immediate attention. I suggest to the hon. member that unquestionably other problems of the primary producers will be dealt with on a comparable basis in the course of this session of parliament or at some time in the immediate future and that Canadians will look upon them as problems shared in common and not those of a separate group.

I have already illustrated many instances of the urgency of this matter, one of which is the position of the merchants who are an integral part of the farm community and are in dire straits because of the shortage of farm income. We have heard several instances of the difficult position in which the farmers find themselves.

I do not intend to say any more to this house than that this legislation is designed to aid a highly important sector of our population, one which is today suffering from an unbalanced economy. If any doubt remains as to the truth of that statement one has only to look at the number of farmers who have been forced—I feel, unfortunately—to migrate to our urban centres, which creates a problem for those areas. This legislation has been introduced by the government to help stabilize this important segment of our economy and I would urge every hon. member regardless of his political affiliation to give it his wholehearted support.

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I feel that much of the misunderstanding we have heard expressed by those who have spoken against Bill No. 14 arises from the fact that they misunderstand the bill itself and the purpose behind it. They do not seem to realize that an emergency situation exists in relation to our agricultural producers. The producers are not responsible for the condition which exists but they are forced under legislation to sell their grain to the wheat board. They asked for it and the government adopted the plan. Under the policies of the previous government the wheat board found it impossible to sell its grain. Restrictive trade practices adopted by the United States government in its give-away programs have taken from us many of our grain markets. The result is that our exports have decreased.

There has been a major increase in production due to efficient farming and good weather conditions and the situation has become aggravated until it has reached the point where the available storage in this country no longer holds our production. There has been plugging and congestion all along the line. Interior storage is also congested and this has worked back to the farms. Most farmers have hundreds and in some cases thousands of bushels of wheat on their farms and the land is producing more. Many millions of bushels of grain must lie in the open field which is a criminal situation.

It is not the job of the farmer to sell his grain. That responsibility rests with the Department of Trade and Commerce of the federal government. I want to congratulate this government for recognizing its responsibility.

In principle this bill says that if a farmer is unable to deliver his grain through no fault of his own then the government will allow him to receive an advance. I would like to point out to those who have spoken against the bill that this does not in any way add one dollar of income to the net return of any producer; we are giving him nothing. Through this measure the government is merely recognizing in some degree that this is one step it can take in making some money available to the farmer in advance for the grain he is expected to produce in the next six or eight months.

The government is calling upon the people of Canada to aid in bearing a portion of the cost which will amount to the interest on the money which they are going to have to advance to the farmer. What else should they do? Surely this is but little. In this bill the government is recognizing the responsibility the previous government refused to accept. The present government feels the farmer should not be compelled to bear the burden caused by the failures and errors of other people.

If the farmers of western Canada lived in the United States just 100 miles south, for instance, they would receive 90 per cent of the value of their wheat as soon as it was threshed. The government of that country is providing storage so spoilage will not occur. There is a price support program in that country protecting the farmers' produce which eases the worry of bankruptcy. Hundreds of Canadian farmers are facing bankruptcy. Family farms are being ruined in many areas.

As everyone who lives in that part of the country knows, if an individual farmer has to store his own grain and all storage facilities are filled the grain may spoil. It may get damp if the farmer has difficulty in turning it over and keeping it dry. This is good food, the result of man's labour and favourable weather conditions; surely it should be treated as a blessing to a hungry world.

I advocated in this house some four years ago that the government should undertake the building of proper storage facilities, both inland and seaboard. I said that if the conditions prevailing in 1954 continued they would result in deliveries being reduced to a mere trickle and asked the government to take action at that time to provide adequate facilities where the grain could be stored until it could be sold or until some means could be found for supplying it to hungry people and thus maintain the agricultural industry in a healthy condition.

The government of that day with its great majority did not seem to bother very much about this problem and conditions have gone from bad to worse. One reason why the last government was wiped out in the prairie region—in all that area from Port Arthur west—was due to its attitude toward the farmers who were doing their job efficiently and were not being properly treated. The present government recognizes that the farmer should not be penalized for the failure of the previous administration to meet the problem and therefore it is a great pleasure for me to support this bill.

I would say further that if this government continues to adopt the same attitude toward the fundamental problem of agricultural stability and gives real price supports it will receive the support and blessing of this group and of other hon. members from western constituencies who recognize that in legislation such as this we are adopting principles that are fundamentally right and sound.

Of course this bill is not a cure but rather a palliative. It asks the Canadian people to accept the cost of the interest involving approximately $2 million to assist an industry which has been brought to its knees by the ruinous policies of a government which smugly sat and did not care very much for the plight of the agricultural producer.

It is always true that the rank and file of people in this country, the workers, farmers and those engaged in producing the wealth of the land always receive the careful attention of a government which has a narrow majority.

Mr. Studer: You certainly need one in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Castleden: However, they seem to be forgotten by a government that has a big majority. If you people had provided the leadership when you had the chance you would not be where you are today. You failed the policies and the principles of your party as laid down by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the great Liberal of the country, the party of the people. This group has moved in to the left of you people, judging by the speeches we heard from you this afternoon.

Here we have a government out talking to the people. Food is surely a blessing to mankind, Mr. Speaker. The records of the United Nations and the records within our own empire show that two-thirds of the world population are hungry. We in Canada allow our food to spoil and those engaged in producing food to be ruined. We spend millions of dollars on armaments to try to win the good will of the world, to try to protect ourselves. We need the good will of the hungry and backward nations of the world. The provision of food is one way in which we can help those people and show them that we mean something when we talk about brotherhood.

Sputnik reminds us that we have to learn to live in brotherhood or be destroyed, or destroy ourselves. Surely it is the duty of every part of the world which can produce food—heavens knows Canada can—to use that commodity and help to bring about the brotherhood of man.

I urge this government to continue this policy. I assure them that it will be with great pleasure that I support this bill and I assure them that the same kind of support will be given to real policies that provide a sound economic base under agriculture, not only in the west but from coast to coast and which will take in all the provinces.

Mr. G. W. Montgomery (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to take part in this debate, as I am not familiar with matters that affect wheat, but since my hon. friend from New Brunswick recently spoke I thought I should say something. It seems to me he has misunderstood this whole legislation as outlined in this bill or else he has endeavoured to carry a message to my province that this legislation is put forward with the idea of being a cure-all for all agriculture and fisheries.

This legislation is carrying out only one point of the program which was laid down by the Conservative party before the election. We went into the election promising that if elected we would provide cash advances on farm-stored wheat in the west. My people who voted for me, and others who voted in New Brunswick, understood that, Mr. Speaker. This bill is not shoved on us members from the east as a surprise. This is only one point.

As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) said not long ago when he read the program, we are looking forward for more legislation, something that is going to put the farmers in general across this country in a position to get their fair share of the money that is distributed. I am looking forward to that and there is no reason not to believe it. I am not like the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) who thinks, or tries to make the people of my province, and no doubt the whole maritime provinces, feel that this is the final, the last and only bit of legislation that this government intends to introduce.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Montgomery: Yes.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): If the government had these plans, and since there was no budget to be brought down, why were they not forecast in the speech from the throne? Why was this one group singled out and all other primary producers ignored? If that is part of your program, where is it?

Mr. Montgomery: I would like to ask the hon. member to read the speech from the throne again. I would also remind him that we have been in power only a short time and this session is called more or less to wind up old business and put through emergency business. Why did he not get his government, which was in power for 22 years, to do that?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The hon. member has asked me a question, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The hon. member has asked me a question. Does he want it answered?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton has the floor.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): He asked me a question. I want to know whether he wants an answer. The hon. member asked me why the government I supported—

Mr. Montgomery: You can speak later.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Do you want my answer?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): It is all right if you do not want an answer. I can answer.

Mr. Speaker: Will both members please resume their seats. We can have only one member speaking at a time in this house. The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton has the floor and unless he wishes to concede it while the hon. member for Charlotte answers the question he must be allowed to continue.

Mr. Montgomery: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I did not notice you standing or I would have sat down. I think I answered the hon. member's question and there was no need for a second answer.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Excuse me; you asked me a question.

Mr. Sinclair: A purely rhetorical question.

Mr. Montgomery: I am going to support this legislation because it is part of the program. I am justified in doing it because my people voted for that type of program and I am very glad they did. I am very happy to be able to stand up here and say it is not a hand-out to the west; therefore, I am supporting it.

Mr. Peter Stefura (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I also rise to speak briefly in support of this bill having to do with cash advances on farm-stored grain. I must agree with the hon. member who just took his seat that this is not a cure-all for the entire agricultural situation as we find it today. The conditions that the farmers find themselves in, are such, that a bill of this type or something similar to it had to be introduced if the farm people were to pull through. This bill having to do with cash advances is perhaps the quickest and the best way to get much needed money into the hands of the farming people to enable them to carry on until such time as the grain is moved or until such time as the government is able to bring about further agricultural policies to solve the difficulties or to aid the agricultural industry.

I have listened to the Liberal members with a great deal of interest and although I have never been in this house before I am sure that under no conditions have I ever heard more words spoken nor have I read more words in Hansard against a bill; at the same time heard arguments that the bill did not go far enough, or that the measure was not good enough, and at the same time not committing themselves to any policy of their own, or taking any definite stand.

Every time some long-winded politician—and I cannot think of anything else to say—would rise to his feet and speak his piece in the allotted time that he had, he would qualify every statement that he made, and every statement had a double meaning. He would also leave enough loopholes to enable one to drive a bulldozer through them before he got down to anything definite. We saw the former minister of agriculture do that today. I suppose if somebody questioned him, the hon. member for Melville, whether black was white he would stand up and say no, that white was black. We have seen that happen a number of times today.

It was not until I listened to and later read the speech of the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Gour) that I was able to get a good idea of what the Liberals were trying to put across, what their ideas were and what their stand actually is on this question. It is not my intention to take the hon. member's speech apart. Instead, I should like to congratulate him because he was very brief and to the point and I believe very honest when he said what he did. As I have said, it is not the individual member whom I wish to attack. As found on page 377 of Hansard of October 24, these are his words:

> In my time in the house and prior the Liberal government provided large amounts of money to help the people of the west when they had no crops. At that time the federal government gave many millions of dollars to help the farmers who were in a bad position. In 1947, I think, we voted, and I was in favour of it, for a Liberal government measure that gave the western farmers $65 million and we did so because of the price of wheat at that time.

I should like briefly to bring out that it was not a matter of the price of wheat alone at that particular time. The $65 million and, indeed, a lot more than that, actually belonged to the farm people. Tonight a member stood up and said that he would not vote for this measure because it would only assist one particular group of people, the western farmers. I have one question I should like to ask him that he might answer when he has an opportunity to do so. When a bill was passed that took away about $500 million from the farm people under the British wheat agreement was that money taken away from all the people? Wheat was also sold in Canada at that time at the same price. Was that money taken away from all the people or only from the western producers?

An hon. Member: Let him answer.

Mr. Stefura: The bill to provide cash advances only involves a small amount of money. I should like to go back to the British wheat agreement which resulted in the farmers losing a lot of money and refresh the minds of some of the Liberal members, especially those who say that the measure now before us has the appearance of just being something for the western farmer. Under the British wheat agreement we sold wheat to Great Britain at less than the world market price. The net result was that the farmers of Western Canada lost $431 million. At the same time the farmers sold wheat to Canadian mills and Canadian consumers at the same price that they sold wheat under the British wheat agreement and they lost a further $136 million. That was a total loss of approximately $568 million to the farmers of western Canada.

The $65 million mentioned in the speech of the hon. member for Russell belonged to the farmers of western Canada whom we are trying to help today. A lot more belonged to them. I know the arguments that have been made. I heard some of them put forward by the former minister of agriculture today. He referred to the Agricultural Prices Support Act and the amount of help the former government gave the farming industry as a whole. I should like to put on record what that amount is and to do so I wish to refer to an article taken from the Wheat Pool Budget of September 21, 1956. It is in these words:

> The annual report of the agricultural prices support board brings the record up to March, 1956, and shows that in ten years since 1946 the cost of the board's program has been just over $89 million.
> Of this amount the greatest part—$70 million—was spent on the support operations that were put into effect for beef and pork to prevent the foot-and-mouth disease outbreak of 1952 from slashing returns to producers.

That money, I may say, should not have come from the agricultural prices support boards; there should have been an emergency fund of some sort from which it could have been taken.

> For the rest, the ten year record shows $8½ million of cost for butter supports since 1949; $6.7 million for apples, and $2 million for potatoes.

Then there are a few more items.

> Leaving aside the foot-and-mouth crisis, then, in ten years price supports have cost the treasury less than $2 million per year or about 15 cents per person per year.

That is the great amount that the former minister of agriculture provided for western agriculture. I should like to refer further to the speech of the hon. member for Russell because here we see the truth actually brought out by him. As found on page 377 of Hansard he went on to say:

> Last year we took steps to protect the banks so far as losses might be involved in lending money to the people of the west who needed it.

I most certainly agree with him and I must say that the hon. member was very honest when he says that is exactly what was done. It is interesting to hear Liberals stand up on the floor of the house and finally admit the truth. The hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner) took about an hour to defend the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act and the fact that the farmers had to pay the banks 5 per cent interest. We have a bill before us now that is different. It may not give any more help but at least it is such that it is on the side of the farm people and not on the side of the banks. It does appear that the Liberals are more concerned about protecting the banks and other such institutions that today have more protection than any other industry. They are much more worried about the banks not getting their 5 per cent interest than they are about the farmers who today find themselves in rather dire straits. That is a fact that we of the west have known all our lives. It is interesting to hear it on the floor of the House of Commons. It is interesting to hear those who have perpetrated that crime admit it on the floor of the House of Commons.

On motion of Mr. Stefura the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the government leader what the business of the house is for tomorrow.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall continue this debate and then go on with the resolutions standing in the names of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask—

Mr. Green: I should say we are going to go into committee on the bill we are discussing once it has had second reading.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask if there is any intention of going back to the speech from the throne debate during the course of this week?

Mr. Green: That will depend on how long it takes to get these measures through.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX "B"

Text of communique issued at close of conference of commonwealth prime ministers, held in London, June 26 to July 5, 1957.

FINAL STATEMENT

The meeting of commonwealth prime ministers was concluded to-day. This was the first commonwealth meeting at which Ghana was represented, following her attainment of independence in March, 1957. Other commonwealth ministers welcomed Ghana's participation in the meeting as a full member of the commonwealth, and took note of this occasion as further practical evidence of the progress made by the United Kingdom government in the pursuit of their policy of fostering constitutional development in their dependent territories.

In the course of their discussions the commonwealth ministers have reviewed all the major international questions of the day which are of common concern to their countries. In this association of free and independent nations it is inevitable that there should be some differences of viewpoint and opinion. But these meetings reveal a broad similarity of approach and purpose. It is not their function, nor is it the object of this communiqué, to record agreed decisions or formal resolutions. Their value lies in the opportunity which they afford for a full and candid exchange of views in the light of which each commonwealth government can formulate and pursue its separate policies with deeper knowledge and understanding of the views and interests of its fellow members.

The primary objective of all commonwealth governments is world peace and security. They believe that this objective can only be assured by increased co-operation between nations. They themselves accept the principle and practice of co-operation; it is the foundation of their own association. They will continue to work for its wider adoption.

The United Nations was designed to provide one of the main opportunities for the practical exercise of the principle of co-operation between nations. Experience has, however, revealed certain deficiencies and weaknesses in the functioning of the organization. The commonwealth ministers agreed that constructive action is needed to strengthen and improve the United Nations as an instrument for preserving peace, justice and co-operation throughout the world in accordance with the principles of the charter.

In discussion of developments since their last meeting, commonwealth ministers expressed their grave concern at the tragic events in Hungary. They took note that the forthcoming consideration by the general assembly of the report presented by its special committee will provide the occasion for the United Nations to record its views.

Commonwealth ministers reviewed the course of the developments in the current discussions on disarmament. They noted that proposals relating to a first stage of disarmament were put forward on 2nd July in the disarmament subcommittee on behalf of the governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, Canada and France. They recognized that even a limited agreement, by reducing the suspicions and tensions throughout the world, would help to create conditions in which a more comprehensive scheme of disarmament could be developed.

The commonwealth ministers discussed the international problems of the Middle East. They agreed that, in the long term, economic and social progress must be the foundation for stability in the Middle East. They agreed, however, that in the short term the need is to work toward a relaxation of the tension arising from the dispute between the Arab states and Israel, the plight of the Arab refugees and the unresolved problems in connection with the Suez canal. They considered that solutions of all these urgent questions should continue to be pursued by all practicable means.

Consideration was also given to the contribution which might be made by the commonwealth governments concerned toward the easing of tension and the maintenance of peace, stability and political freedom in the Far East and southeast Asia. Commonwealth ministers welcomed the important contribution already made by mutual assistance under the Colombo plan toward raising standards of living and promoting economic development in the underdeveloped countries of this area.

In their general review of economic questions the commonwealth ministers gave special attention to the impact of the major programs of development on which many of their countries are now engaged. These programs call for high levels of domestic saving which can only be secured by sound internal policies. But they also call for conditions favourable to investment from other countries. The United Kingdom will continue to play its leading role in furthering economic development in the countries of the commonwealth, and important contributions are also being made by other commonwealth members. But, in view of the continued need for capital investment, it is also important to encourage investment from other sources on suitable conditions.

The commonwealth ministers noted the progress made since their last meeting toward the freeing of trade and payments. In this context they discussed the proposals for the creation of an industrial free trade area in Europe as a complement to the European economic community to be set up under the treaty of Rome. They agreed that, as part of the continuous exchange of views between commonwealth governments on these matters, particular aspects of the proposals which might specially affect certain countries of the commonwealth should be examined in London next week by officials of all commonwealth countries in the light of the ministers' discussions.

The commonwealth ministers noted that the annual meeting of the international monetary fund and the international bank for reconstruction and development will be held in Washington in September. The normal practice is for this meeting to be followed by a meeting of commonwealth finance ministers. The Prime Minister of Canada extended an invitation that this meeting of finance ministers should be held this year in Ottawa.

The commonwealth ministers recognized the value of the work carried out over the past thirty years by the commonwealth economic committee. They agreed that the committee should be invited to examine and suggest to governments what expansion of its scope and functions might usefully be undertaken for the particular purpose of drawing attention to the economic resources of commonwealth countries.

The commonwealth ministers reviewed the progress of co-operation within the commonwealth in the use of nuclear energy for civil purposes. They recognized the growing importance of the contribution which nuclear energy can make to the peaceful development of their countries and of the rest of the world and the value of close collaboration between members of the commonwealth in this field. For this purpose nuclear scientists from commonwealth countries will be invited to an informal meeting in the United Kingdom in 1958.

The commonwealth ministers noted that the federation of Malaya was on the eve of attaining independence. They extended to the federation their warm good wishes for its future, and they looked forward to being able to welcome an independent Malaya as a member of the commonwealth on the completion of the necessary constitutional processes.

London,
5th July, 1957.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 29, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MARTIN (ESSEX EAST)—REFERENCE TO REMARKS OF PRIME MINISTER IN TELEVISION ADDRESS

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Last night the Prime Minister spoke to the nation over the television facilities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and in the course of that speech he made an announcement of government policy. He referred to the effective date when various amendments to social security measures would be applied in Canada.

I submit to you, sir, that it is within the traditions and practices of parliament that announcements of government policy, while the house is in session, should be made in parliament. I should have thought, Mr. Speaker, that such an announcement by one who in the past has so often regarded himself as one of the champions of parliament would not have been made by that particular right hon. gentleman. I think my question of privilege, sir, is well founded, particularly in view of the fact that on October 22 the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): At page 248.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —at page 248 of Hansard asked this question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare:

> Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that in the resolutions of which he has given notice calling for amendments to the Old Age Security Act and related statutes he has been good enough to give us all the other details, can he now tell us what is to be the effective date?

The reply of the Minister of National Health and Welfare was as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the effective date will appear in the legislation when the bill appears before the house.

Surely last night's statement by the Prime Minister is a violation of the right hon. gentleman's own counsel, and obviously a violation of the rights of parliament.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must say that my hon. friend is apparently hard pressed to find something to which to object—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —in order to bring his name before the Canadian public at a time when he is most anxious to have it brought before the public. Any statement I made last evening was a statement which, with the exception of one item, was covered by the resolution. I am one who does not follow a script too closely, and if in a momentary indiscretion I pointed out that it was the intention of the government to have this social security measure begin on November 1, I am sure nobody was harmed.

An hon. Member: What about this house you profess to love so much?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me say this. If at any time this side of the house or this government commits no more serious indiscretion, if it is such, than happened last night, the people of Canada will continue to be well satisfied with this government; and the opportunity will not be too long delayed to give them that chance to indicate whether or not they were shocked last evening by the revelation which disturbed the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, obviously, since I had the relevant page of Hansard open, it was my intention to raise the same question of privilege, believing as I do that the Prime Minister feels that the supremacy of parliament should be maintained.

However, now that the point has been raised and now that the Prime Minister has given over the television network information which his colleague in the cabinet would not give in the house, will he tell us what is meant by "an effective date of November 1"? In terms of what cheque will the increase be effective? Will the cheque at the first of November or the cheque at the end of November be in the full amount of $55?

Mr. Speaker: I think the question of privilege has been sufficiently stated and commented on, and questions should be deferred till later.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall be quite satisfied to have an answer on the orders of the day.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF ANNUAL VACATIONS WITH PAY FOR EMPLOYEES IN FEDERAL WORKS

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 16, to provide for annual vacations with pay for employees in public works, undertakings and businesses.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide annual vacations with pay for employees in federal works, undertakings or businesses as covered by the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, the fair employment practices act and the equal pay act. This bill provides for one week's vacation after the first year of employment and two weeks' vacation after the second year of employment.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR EFFECTIVE DATE OF AMENDMENTS TO ACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister would now answer my question arising out of the announcement he made last night as to which cheque, in the case of old age security for example, will be in the full amount of $55, the cheque to be received at the beginning of November or the cheque to be received at the end of November?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while I am not one of the recipients, I do not think the cheques are received at the first of the month. The cheques are received at the end of each month. The first payment, providing that this house goes ahead and passes the legislation, will be provided for at the end of November, thereby commencing the payment of the addition as of the 1st of November.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why not make it clear? It is the cheque at the end of November, not the cheque at the first of the month, which will include the increase.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): He was putting on a show; that was all he was doing.

[Mr. Speaker.]

NATURAL RESOURCES

INQUIRY AS TO NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is it his intention to outline to the house the national development policy which is mentioned in the speech from the throne during the current debate on the said speech?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, I think this will be shown in due course.

Mr. Lesage: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister intend to deal with the subject piecemeal as he has been doing outside of the house since his appointment to the cabinet?

An hon. Member: He has done better than his predecessor.

FRUIT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION TO APPLE GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture, and I do so in a spirit of continuing co-operation with one of his colleagues.

In view of the fact that one of the minister's cabinet colleagues, representing a British Columbia fruit growing district, last year urged the government to compensate the tree fruit growers of British Columbia for their loss of 48 cents per box on the 1955 crop by the granting of a subsidy of not less than 25 cents per box, is the government now giving favourable consideration to the hon. gentleman's representations?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of this question. The short answer to it is "no", but I think perhaps I should say a word of general explanation in connection with this matter.

Representations have been received from the British Columbia fruit growers' association and others requesting special grants to compensate British Columbia apple growers for losses alleged to have been suffered by reason of low prices for apples in 1955.

A review of the situation discloses the following facts. The average farm value of apples in British Columbia in 1954 was $1.24 per bushel. In 1955 the corresponding figure was 72 cents. In 1956 the farm value rose to $1.34 per bushel, the highest in the past 10 years. These figures are all substantially higher than the average farm value of apples for all Canada in the corresponding years.

In the light of these facts and the relative position of British Columbia apple growers compared with those in other parts of Canada, it does not seem possible or practicable to offer any special compensation to British Columbia growers.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF DELEGATE REPRESENTING MINE WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. This question has to do with the industrial committee of the international labour organization, which concerns itself with the social and economic problems of the hard rock mining industry, and which meets in Geneva on November 25 of this year.

Has the minister invited the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers of Canada, which represents about 90 per cent of the employees in the hard rock industry, to appoint a delegate to this conference?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker. The two delegates who have been appointed to the international labour organization conference are Mr. Pat Burke, of the united steel workers of America, from Noranda, and Mr. Henry Schellenburg, of the base metal workers, federal union No. 172, from Flin Flon, Manitoba. Both these men have been nominated by the Canadian Labour Congress.

Mr. Byrne: Will the minister agree to give further consideration to this matter, since I have already outlined its importance?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the delegates have already been nominated, and since the Canadian Labour Congress is the most representative labour body in Canada we asked them for the recommendations.

TELEVISION

YORKTON, SASK.—INQUIRY AS TO ERECTION OF TOWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has his department yet granted a permit for the erection of a television tower in the vicinity of the city of Yorkton?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the application referred to by the hon. member has been approved.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO REVENUES FOR NEXT 12 MONTHS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, of which I have given him notice.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance has indicated that no budget will be introduced this session, does he expect that the government tax revenues for the next 12 months will be equal to or in excess of those of the last 12 months?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member will recognize that this is a budgetary matter. It would be properly left to be dealt with when the Minister of Finance deals with budgetary matters, and is not properly asked on the orders of the day.

I take it that the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary feels he has a question of fact which the minister could answer. If he would rephrase his question, or consider rephrasing it, I will give him another opportunity.

Mr. Christian: A supplementary question. Is there going to be a budget? If so, when may we expect it?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows that whenever a minister of finance is ready to introduce a budget he usually gives the house a few days' advance notice of the fact.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER-NEW YORK—REQUEST FOR DEEPENING OF WATERWAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yesterday, the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Marler) asked me a supplementary question regarding the meeting which I understand was held in Sorel on Sunday. His question was:

> Was the government represented at this meeting? If so, by whom? Was any statement of policy made by the representative of the government?

The answer is, I have checked with my own department, the Department of Public Works and the Department of External Affairs, the three departments which I believed might have had representatives at such a meeting. I found that no government representative did attend the meeting and that no statement of policy was made.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether the reported presence of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys has escaped his attention?

Mr. Hees: No, it has not. The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys was attending the meeting simply as an interested member of parliament doing a good job for his constituency, visiting the meeting in the adjoining riding, and he assures me that he made no statement of policy on behalf of the government or on behalf of himself.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is it the case that employees in the commercial products division of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited are being laid off?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my information is that there may be some laid off in the near future, but this number will probably be only five to ten. The reason is that in recent months orders for cobalt beam therapy units and certain other miscellaneous items of equipment manufactured by the commercial products division of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited have not been as large as had been anticipated. In addition, the general state of the market suggests that it would be imprudent to anticipate an early substantial increase in the number of orders for these items.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): If I may I should like to ask a supplementary question. Have these workers been recently certified, and have they asked the company to meet them in order to open negotiations?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, the workers have been certified and they have asked for a meeting. I understand that it will be held within the next few days.

CORNWALL—REFERENCE TO STRIKE AT MILL OF CANADIAN COTTONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Lavigne (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware that a strike of 1,300 employees of Canadian Cottons Limited mill at Cornwall has taken place? Will the minister tell us whether he can do anything to bring about a quick settlement of this dispute?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question may I say that I am aware of this lay-off. However, I wish to remind the hon. member that this matter comes under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario, and that there is not much the federal government can do in such a dispute.

Mr. Lavigne: I wish to advise the minister that it is not a lay-off; it is a strike.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask the Minister of Labour a supplementary question arising out of the one which was just asked. In view of the fact that textile mills are to be found in several provinces, and in view also of the fact that the government seems to have taken an interest by virtue of the reference tabled in the house by the Minister of Finance, I now ask the Minister of Labour whether he does not think it advisable to co-operate with the province by sending one of his investigators to ascertain whether these parties cannot be brought together?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the federal Department of Labour is always willing to co-operate with the provinces in settling disputes. We should like to do that, provided the provinces request that such help be given them in the matter of disputes.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—REPORTED LAY-OFFS AT TRANSCONA AND FORT ROUGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Transport aware of the reports that are current in Winnipeg that 34 men are to be laid off from the Canadian National shops at Transcona each month between now and June, together with eight men to be laid off each month from the Fort Rouge shops? What steps is the government taking to prevent these lay-offs?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I do not believe the hon. member would expect me to know the exact number of lay-offs that might take place on the whole Canadian National system from time to time. I am very glad he has advised me of the situation, and I shall inquire into it.

MONTREAL—REPORTED PLAN FOR MARCH ON OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister inform the house if he has received from labour organizations in Montreal a telegram or communication stating that if immediate legislation is not adopted to curtail unemployment a march on Ottawa will be organized?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not received any communication of the nature to which the hon. member refers.

KITIMAT—REPORTED CLOSING OF CONSTRUCTION OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware that the Saguenay-Kitimat Company in Kitimat yesterday closed its entire construction operations, resulting in the lay-off of approximately 1,500 people, which situation will remain in effect for probably a year or a year and a half. If so, is he undertaking any steps through the national employment service or the unemployment insurance commission to assist these people in being absorbed into other industries and, if not, are steps being taken to provide them with immediate means as far as unemployment insurance benefits are concerned?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the lay-offs to which the hon. member refers, but I assure him I will look into the situation and put all of the resources of the Department of Labour to work in order to help those who may be in need of assistance at the moment.

Mr. Howard: If I could follow up that question, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the situation to which I have just referred concerning the lay-off and resulting unemployment in Kitimat and the extreme housing shortage that exists in Kitimat for production employees in the Alcan plant, will the minister undertake to release or make available through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation additional money and facilities to assist in absorbing these unemployed people who are construction workers, and also assist in correcting the housing shortage?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there is no provision under the National Housing Act for undertaking a program of that kind. The present plan of providing $150 million for lower cost homes is of course available and we will be very glad to consider any application coming under any other provision of the act. I know of no way in which we can move in, in the way the hon. member suggests.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us when it is the intention of the government to lay on the table the correspondence with the provincial governments concerning the forthcoming federal-provincial conference?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will see that that is done tomorrow.

PUBLIC WORKS

NOVA SCOTIA—BREAKWATER-CAUSEWAY BETWEEN MAINLAND AND PORT HOOD ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister tell the house what progress has taken place in reaching agreement with the province of Nova Scotia for the construction of the breakwater-causeway between the mainland and Port Hood island in Nova Scotia? If any progress has been made, when can we expect construction of this extremely important project to begin?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I received a copy of the hon. member's question just as I came into the house. I shall have to take it as notice.

NEW BRUNSWICK-PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION INTO CAUSEWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henry Murphy (Westmorland): Will the Minister of Public Works inform the house what progress is being made in the investigation of the proposed causeway from Westmorland county, New Brunswick, to Prince Edward Island, or has this investigation been dropped?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Studies are being made by officials of the department of this prospective project. I am not in a position as yet to make any definite announcement.

HEALTH INSURANCE

REPLY TO LETTER FROM PREMIER OF MANITOBA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has he yet been able to ascertain whether a reply has been made to the letter from the premier of Manitoba with respect to hospital insurance, about which I made inquiry on Friday?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a reply has been drafted. Whether or not it has been sent is something I cannot say without inquiry.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Is it true that the premier of Manitoba wrote a second letter asking for a reply?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the hon. member could find that out by asking the premier of Manitoba.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

DATE WHEN FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION MAY BE EXPECTED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since Premier Frost seems to be counting on federal money for the Ontario hospital plan by January 1, 1959, is it clear that the other provinces having plans in operation can count on federal money for their plans by at least the same date?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it would seem logical that all provinces would count on receiving money as soon as agreements are signed and we come to a decision as to when the plan goes into effect.

AIRPORTS

MEDICINE HAT, ALBERTA—INQUIRY AS TO ENLARGEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, of which I have sent him notice. Has the Department of Transport any plans under consideration for the enlargement of the Medicine Hat airport to accommodate larger aircraft?

[Mr. Murphy (Westmorland).]

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. member for his kindness in giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. Consideration is presently being given to the inclusion of an item in next year's estimates for the lengthening of runways at the Medicine Hat airport.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

INQUIRY AS TO PARTICIPATION OF CANADA IN ANGLO-AMERICAN GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, as to whether Canada is to be included in the agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States, as reported in the press today from Washington, to divide the responsibility for developing future atomic weapons, and to share the information obtained in their separate research and development?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I shall be pleased to take that question as notice.

TRADE

FISH—INQUIRY AS TO NEWFOUNDLAND EXPORTERS ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. T. Stick (Trinity-Conception): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or, in his absence, to his parliamentary assistant. What action, if any, is contemplated by the government regarding the Newfoundland Associated Fish Exporters Limited, otherwise known as Nafel?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): In the absence of the minister I shall have to take this question as notice.

THE SENATE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF NATIVE INDIAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct this question to the Prime Minister. What action or steps are to be taken to arrange for the naming of a native Indian to the Senate?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): While I do not think the question is strictly a proper one, Mr. Speaker, I do want to answer it. Over the years I have believed that the Indian population of Canada deserves representation in the parliament of Canada.

There are some 200,000 Indians; and while the time may come when one or more might be elected to the House of Commons, that time is still far distant. I want to see an appointment made at the earliest possible date of a native Indian so that representation in parliament may be provided for these, our very first citizens.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if the Prime Minister—I may not be asking this question in the right place—would consider so amending the British North America Act as to remove some of the present real estate qualifications for membership in the other house, inasmuch as many native Indians will not be able to qualify. This would broaden the field for selection.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member was fortunate in getting an answer to his first question. I hope he will not press for one to the second question.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I ask a supplementary question. Can we take this answer as an indication that the Prime Minister is going back on the speech he made in Prince Albert and Calgary during the campaign, that if he was elected as head of the government he would immediately name an Indian to the Senate? I have copies of his speech here.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member will appreciate that a similar question has been answered.

PARLIAMENT HILL

PARKING FACILITIES FOR MEMBERS AND EMPLOYEES OF HOUSE OF COMMONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I normally would have put what I have to say in the form of a question, but I do not know to whom I should address such a question. Consequently I am going to raise this as a matter of privilege. I refer to the parking situation around these grounds, which has become chaotic, to say the least, and something ought to be done about it. Members who are entitled to park their cars in and around the building very often find that they have been pushed out of their places by people who are working downtown but whose cars are parked in these grounds.

It would seem to me that whoever is in charge of the parking arrangements ought to be able to work out some method by which the members and the employees in the building could have a place to park their cars when they have to come to work. I am throwing this matter out, as I say, as one of privilege in the hope that whoever is in charge will do something to bring order out of the present chaos.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raises this question of privilege which seems to me to be an appropriate one. As one having to do with arrangements in the house I would ask him if he would mind taking up the matter with me and the Sergeant-at-Arms. Attention will be given to it immediately.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEES FOR POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) asked me if I knew if an employee of the Department of Transport holding position No. 64 had been dismissed because of political partisanship on the complaint of a member of this house. I said I would inquire, and after having done so I find that the individual who held this position was dismissed, effective October 25, on the written declaration of the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Casselman) that this employee had been guilty of political partisanship during the last federal election.

The hon. member is in the house at the present time and would be very glad to answer questions which might be asked of him with reference to his recommendation in this regard. The man was employed in position No. 64 on May 16, 1957, on an exempt temporary seasonal basis, following a recommendation in his favour from the Liberal candidate in Grenville-Dundas county.

I said in the course of answering the hon. member for Laurier that anyone charged with political partisanship would be given an opportunity to be heard. I should have qualified this statement so far as charges of political partisanship made by hon. members of this house are concerned. I find there has been an understanding over the years that if a member of parliament certifies that to his personal knowledge an employee has been guilty of political partisanship the employee in question can be dismissed without investigation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I presume since I raised this question I might be allowed a moment or two to discuss it on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I will certainly give the hon. member an opportunity to discuss this question, but I have already recognized the member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) who rose previously.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I might say that this comes to me as a complete surprise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Coldwell: I have been a member of the house for 22 years, and this is the first time I have heard that a member of parliament may lay a charge of this description and, without further investigation, a man may lose his job. I think this is undemocratic.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member who is speaking does not wish to transgress the rules of the house by entering into a debate on the matter at this time.

Mr. Coldwell: I was rising, Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege with reference to a matter which affects all members of parliament.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will state his question of privilege I will be glad to hear him.

Mr. Coldwell: My question of privilege is this. As a member of parliament who has been here for 22 years, this is the first time I have become aware of this undemocratic procedure on the part of this parliament, and as a member of parliament I want to protest against it and say that I think this practice should be discontinued immediately.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: Since I raised the question in the first place, Mr. Speaker, I think I too should rise on a question of privilege. I would like to say that I was very careful yesterday not to mention either the name of the employee or the name of the member of parliament upon whose recommendation this person was dismissed. However, I agree with what the leader of the C.C.F. party has said in this respect, that the policy, if it is government policy—although the minister said it was one of the rules and regulations of parliament—should be discontinued.

I have looked up Hansard for quite a number of years and can find nothing in the rules and regulations which permits this kind of conduct. I think perhaps it is a policy that has been followed, and one that was certainly discussed in the house as far back as 30 years ago. It is time this policy should be changed, and I would ask the minister if he is going to reinstate the occupant of position No. 64. I think what he should be doing, rather than dismissing people along the canals of the Ontario St. Lawrence, which incidentally are going to be flooded out because of the St. Lawrence seaway, and many hundreds of people are going to find themselves without jobs—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: —instead of dismissing people he should rather be finding jobs for those who will be flooded out. I ask him now, first, if he is going to reinstate the individual who was dismissed; second, will this person have an opportunity of being heard by the minister; and third, did the minister approve of this dismissal?

Mr. Speaker: The question previously was one of privilege, and the hon. member has seen fit to ask two more questions. If anyone wishes to address the house on this matter of privilege this would seem to me the appropriate time to do so.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would now like to rise on a question of privilege. Statements have been made here and questions have been asked of the Minister of Transport. I think the minister should now be allowed to answer these gratuitous observations which have been made.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: I will not sit down except at the request of Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There is one question of privilege before the house. The hon. member who is on his feet has spoken, and as I have just indicated I am prepared to hear others. I think the Minister of Transport is certainly entitled to speak to this question, but I recognized the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Casselman) on my right. He does not rise now; I recognize the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the remark of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, when he said he had been here for 22 years but had never heard this question discussed in the house. I looked back to the debates on this matter and found it had been very thoroughly discussed in this house when the hon. member was present, as I understand it, because I think he will find he took part in the debate. There seems to be some doubt in the minds of the members of the former government that this has been a practice which was not only accepted by their government but by many governments in the past. I call as my witness in this regard no less a personage than the former minister of agriculture—the right hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner)—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: —who made a very interesting speech in this house on March 8, 1938, when he was minister of agriculture. That speech is recorded in Hansard of that date at page 1112. I quote the former minister's words:

> The question was discussed in 1911, again in 1923, and again in 1928 on the floor of the house, and so far as I have been able to follow those discussions it was admitted from all sides of the house on each of those occasions that it had been the general practice to act upon the word of a member who has a seat in this house and who can, because of that fact, answer for his recommendations upon the floor of the house. When, two years ago, I became a member of the government and recommendations of this kind were brought to my attention, I took the trouble to check back and find what the practice was, and determined to follow the practice exactly as it had been followed previously in the Department of Agriculture and other departments, at least until some change was announced in connection with the policy having to do with dismissals of this kind. And when representations were made to the department, by a member of the house, to the effect that to his own personal knowledge an employee of the department had been politically active, action was taken automatically by the departmental officials to dismiss him. I did not change the practice in any particular; I gave no instructions to them to make any change, but simply informed them they were to follow the practice that had been followed and that they should do so until such time as they received instructions to do otherwise.

I also think, Mr. Speaker, the former minister may have forgotten what a good filing system his former department has, because I looked back in the files and found a letter written by a former minister of transport, Right Hon. C. D. Howe, dated Ottawa, January 9, 1936. It was addressed to Mr. Peter Sinclair, M.P., Charlottetown, P.E.I., and reads as follows:

> I am in receipt of your letter of the 23rd ultimo with further reference to the position of wharfinger at Victoria, P.E.I.
> On your statement that Mr. James Gil, the present wharfinger, is convener of the poll at Victoria for the Conservative party and worked and did all he could at the last election, I have directed that his appointment be cancelled and his services dispensed with on the ground of political partisanship.

The letter ends, Mr. Speaker, with this interesting statement:

> I am directing that your nominee, Mr. Fred Inman, be appointed.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear from what I have said that this has been the practice which has been accepted by succeeding governments over a great many years, and that in taking the course which I have taken I have simply followed that practice.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister answer the questions I asked and which the Prime Minister suggested he should answer?

Mr. Hees: I have no intention of reinstating the employee referred to because it is firmly in my mind, from what I have heard, that he actively participated in partisan politics during the last election.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister this question. Will the government revise the policy which has now been in existence for upwards of 40 years?

Mr. Hees: No dismissal is made by my department until thorough investigation has satisfied the minister that the facts as stated are correct.

Mr. Chevrier: You made no investigation in this case.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. A. C. Casselman (Grenville-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that I have heard my name mentioned in connection with the matter now before the house, and for that reason I should like to say a few words on a question of privilege, it being necessary that I put it on that basis.

The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), who asked this question yesterday, takes pride today in the fact that he did not name either the member who laid the charge or the individual against whom the charges were laid. I rise particularly to say that it was I who laid the charges. I made them after long and complete investigation, and I made them because I knew that they were correct. The minister was not responsible for the dismissal of this man; I am, myself, responsible; and if the house has any doubt as to the justice of the position I have taken I would refer hon. members to the issue of the Toronto Star which will come out this afternoon, to which paper this man gave an interview in which he said that he makes no bones of his political partisanship, that he did campaign against me, and in which he made some other comments about the situation.

Mr. Speaker, I think I am perfectly justified in having taken the action which I did take. I am not one who believes completely in the spoils system. I would say that in my riding there are 300 patronage jobs, and that outside of this position, which is partly under the civil service, I have not had any man dismissed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wish to speak on this matter of privilege?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in connection with this matter I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. How does the Prime Minister square this blatant practice of patronage in reverse with the announcement made this summer by two of his colleagues that this government was going to do away with patronage, and with the support given by some hon. members of his party in the last parliament to the stand which some of us took against patronage?

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no question of patronage here. Public servants who participate in politics certainly jeopardize their jobs. Now I think the minister—

Mr. Chevrier: May I interrupt?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the Minister of Transport, during the entire period of his service to date, has only had one person dismissed in his department and that is the person in question.

Mr. Chevrier: But this man is not a public servant; he is a casual employee.

Mr. Coldwell: I wonder whether the Minister of Transport will be good enough to refresh my memory with regard to the discussions to which he has referred. My memory generally seems to be very good, but I did not remember until I heard him read the document that that discussion had occurred. Could the minister confirm that the position I took today is precisely similar to the position I took in 1938? That is so, is it not?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of privilege because, as was stated by the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas in his case, my name has been brought into this matter, I think the record should be made complete, or as complete as my memory can make it when the documents are not before me.

I am sure the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar requires to do a little more checking, because this question was discussed on two occasions, both of which I remember well. On one occasion it was brought up by Mr. Stevens, who had been a minister in the previous Bennett government, and on the other occasion it was brought up by the late Mr. Bennett himself.

I was accused of being responsible for the dismissal of a number of employees of the department in Prince Edward Island. On the first occasion it was brought up I undertook to search the files and make some further investigations and so on. Upon searching the files I found there were I think 20 cases where men had been dismissed for similar reasons while Mr. Bennett was in office. I had the files on my desk, the second seat straight across the aisle from here. I asked him if he desired me to read them to the house, and my memory is that he said no and the question was dismissed. I have heard nothing of it since that time until now.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Will the policy expressed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) affecting government employees who take an active part in political activities also apply to rural mail carriers who have been appointed following the calling of public tenders?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I shall study very carefully the remarks of the Minister of Transport to see whether they apply.

Mr. Wesley Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister inform me of the source from which the recommendation came to discharge foremen on breakwaters in Charlotte county?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, if any foreman was fired on the breakwaters in Charlotte county that was done after a thorough investigation, and because he deserved to be fired.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It has been suggested that these recommendations must come from a member of parliament. If I may, I would like to know the source from which this recommendation came.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): No answer.

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER—DISCONTINUANCE OF REDUCED PRICE TO CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Why did the government decide to withdraw the privilege granted by the last government to charitable and religious institutions of buying butter at special or reduced prices?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this policy was put into effect by the previous government at a time when a very considerable surplus of butter existed, for the purpose of helping to reduce that surplus. We have now moved from that position and we no longer have a surplus of butter. Under those circumstances I could see no justification for the Department of Agriculture continuing to subsidize charitable and other institutions. It seemed to me that if there was any desire or need on the part of the federal government to subsidize hospitals and other institutions it should be done specifically by a grant or by some other means, and not indirectly through the Department of Agriculture.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

R.C.A.F.—STATEMENT ON EQUIPMENT WITH CF-105 PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on October 22 the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair) asked if the government is intending to proceed to equip the R.C.A.F. with the supersonic CF-105. I am now in a position to give the hon. member further information on this matter.

After full consideration of the possible threat and of alternative means of meeting that threat the government, upon the advice of the chiefs of staff, has decided now to continue the development of the CF-105 including its intended armament, the Sparrow II air to air guided missile, for a further period of one year, at which time the program will again be reviewed.

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask a supplementary question. Has the minister any idea what the extension of the program for one year will cost?

Mr. Pearkes: No, I am not in a position at the present time to say that.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG—MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister say whether he gave assurances to Premier Campbell of Manitoba that there would be no reduction in the maintenance and repair facilities maintained by Trans-Canada Air Lines at Winnipeg?

If so, can he assure the house that this means Winnipeg will continue to have its share of this work in any expanded program on the part of Trans-Canada Air Lines?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will answer that question because it comes within the realm of my department. The program for the repair and maintenance facilities at Winnipeg is that the repair and maintenance of all Viscount aircraft, present and future, will be done there. The repair and maintenance of the DC-8's and the Vanguards, most of which flights will be terminating in Montreal, will be done when they are received at Montreal. This is not expected to diminish in any way the repair and maintenance services now being carried on at Winnipeg, because the Viscounts, of which we will have a great number, will continue to be serviced at that depot.

POWER

NOVA SCOTIA-NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR COPY OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the minister received a report of the investigation by the Montreal Engineering Company into the requirements for new power capacity and the location of power plants and interconnection lines in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick? If so, will the minister make copies available to the house?

Mr. Robichaud: He does not know what it is all about.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the government has received a copy of this report, but as to the advisability of making it available to the house I will have to take notice of that question and reach a decision on it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Secrecy.

GRAIN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE CASH ADVANCES ON FARM-STORED GRAIN

The house resumed, from Monday, October 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Harkness (for Mr. Churchill) for the second reading of Bill No. 14, to provide for advance payments for prairie grain prior to delivery thereof.

Mr. Peter Stefura (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, last night I was talking about the unfair attitude of some of the members of the former government toward this bill. I should like to return to the quotation I was giving from the speech of the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Gour) as reported at page 377 of Hansard.

> This session we have another bill to pay cash to the farmers so that they will be able to get money without having to pay interest.
> I claim that this bill establishes a dangerous precedent because the government will now have many calls for money from people who would like to secure money without having to pay interest.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, just how dangerous is this bill? Why are the Liberals afraid of starting a precedent as far as any benefits to farm people are concerned? It appears that they were not afraid of starting other precedents. They were not afraid of starting a precedent when they sold wheat under the British wheat agreement, under which the farmers lost about $431 million. They were not afraid of a precedent when they sold wheat at the same time for the same price, which was less than the world market price, to the Canadian millers and the Canadian consumers, and the farmers lost an additional $136 million. They were not afraid of a precedent when they took about $500 million out of the farmers' pockets, out of my pocket and out of my neighbour's pocket and out of everybody else's pockets on the farms in western Canada who were selling grain at that time. They were not afraid of a precedent when they passed the Prairie Grain Producers' Interim Financing Act to protect the banks and see that the bankers got their 5 per cent interest. But when we get a little bill on the floor of this house, such as we have here today, they become worried and say it is a dangerous precedent.

I feel that perhaps we should have started a precedent of this kind a long time ago, a precedent to give the farmers a break for a change, and give them what is rightfully theirs instead of continually taking it away from them. There have been strong hints by some that this bill is subsidizing the agricultural industry and western farmers. There have also been strong hints that the agricultural industry must compete in world markets. So far as I have been able to follow them, these hints are coming mostly from members who have no agricultural industry, or very little, in their ridings.

Let me say to these hon. gentlemen that the agricultural industry has been subsidizing other industries through tariffs and other regulations almost ever since those other industries started. What is more, rumours are abroad that they want more protection and more subsidies from the farm people, who will eventually pay them. Rumours are that some of these other industries want increases in tariffs on steel. They also want increased tariffs on half a dozen other items.

They want it today when the farmer is caught in a price squeeze. Farm prices have dropped to such an extent that farm people, in many instances, have a hard time trying to hang on. On the other hand, the prices of everything the farmer has to buy have gone up, and they find it difficult to hang on in the other way.

Some people call it price squeeze. I call it a tug of war. They are pulling the farmer apart. Under these conditions we have some of our Liberal members defending the interim financing act. I say that policy is not in the best interests of the farm people. All it does is put an additional burden on the farm people, and it is just pulling them apart in three directions. The farmer must go to the bank and borrow at 5 per cent interest. Therefore I say the interim financing act was certainly some plan for western agriculture.

To those who say that the farmers should compete in world markets under present conditions, I say remove your tariffs for the farm people and the agricultural industry and then you may have a good argument. But under present conditions, when the farm people are contributing to the prices of many of these industries the argument does not hold. If you feel that the farm people must compete in world markets, then give the farmer the privilege of buying on the world market without those tariffs and customs duties and all the legal red tape. Let the farmer sell his products for gold or sterling, or barter for goods with any country that suits him. Give the farm people a free hand to do business in the way they see fit, and in a way that they have been asking to do business for years through their farm organizations and through whatever means they have at their disposal. I am sure there would then be no need for any emergency measures such as we have before us in the house today.

I trust the present government realizes that this is only an emergency measure and that legislation must be brought in to get at the root of the ills that we have in the agricultural industry today. I trust that this government will not use this bill as a cure-all for these ills, because the agricultural industry is going to require a lot of legislation to give it a parity of income.

I am confident that this bill having to do with cash advances, as proposed, will not do the job to the extent that the present Minister of Finance believes it will. It allows only 50 cents a bushel for wheat stored on the farm; it allows only a 6-bushel quota. The farmers will be able to get about $600, $800 or perhaps $900. That, I submit, is a long way from the actual need or requirement, when we consider that the farmer must pay taxes; he must pay his store bills, fuel bills ond so on. The $600 or $800 will not go very far. This government must give immediate and careful consideration to increasing storage space and to the idea of a food bank; it must give careful consideration to promoting sales by such means as accepting sterling, barter or extending credit to countries which may be short of hard currency at this time.

I asked the Minister of Finance a question on October 23 as follows, as recorded at page 313 of Hansard:

> Has the government given consideration to the acceptance of sterling in an effort to increase Canadian exports to Britain and other commonwealth nations? If so, has a decision been reached, and what was the nature of that decision?

I was very much surprised to receive the following answer:

> No such proposal was made to the Canadian government.

I repeated the question on page 314 of Hansard and received the following answer:

> I have already told my hon. friend that question has not even been raised by anyone.

We had about 12 joint meetings that were sponsored by the Alberta farmers union in our constituency, and all the candidates were present. When the question would come up as to how the Conservatives planned to increase foreign trade, the acceptance of sterling was at the top of the list. The Conservative candidate is a fine old gentleman. I have nothing at all against him personally. I do not for a moment want to believe, nor can I find that I can do so, that he would manufacture his own policy. If the minister denies that it was a campaign promise made by Conservative candidates, then perhaps he can explain why the candidates take a Social Credit policy, a policy which the Social Crediters have been presenting to this house for years and then wish to get elected as Conservative members of this house. To present policies and hope to get elected on policies that the ministers have never even heard presented to them as questions is definitely misleading the people. We can never hope to have good government or to give the people the kind of administration they so desire if we deliberately mislead those people in our country.

I urge the members of this house to get this bill through as a temporary measure to aid agriculture and give the government a chance to introduce legislation which will cure the basic ills of agriculture. The policies that brought agriculture to its present condition have been in effect for a long time, and it cannot be expected that they can be cured over night. However, the sooner you get down to the basic problems, the sooner you will be able to restore the agricultural industry to its rightful place in our economy.

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the speeches made in this house by the hon. members for Dorchester and Kent (Messrs. Landry and Huffman). Their speeches have made a strong impression upon me, and I thought that their arguments in support of their position should be among those favourably received by the government.

Now, the government is asking us to vote an amount of 150 million dollars to help western farmers dispose of their wheat. I do feel however that he might also have thought of eastern farmers, more particularly those of the province of Quebec. It is recognized in the province of Quebec that it is only right that western farmers should benefit from government assistance with regard to the moving of their grain to the east. Indeed, I think that the government should establish some permanent farm assistance policy with regard to the transport of grain from west to east.

In the matter of farming, the whole province of Quebec has the same difficulties as our western friends. Right now, the Quebec farmer is known to be going through a terrible depression and I wonder what has been and will be the assistance this government proposes to give to eastern farmers. I do not see any sign of it. Nevertheless, we in eastern Canada shall contribute to this amount of 150 million dollars.

I have been in this house for 22 years and, every year, I have heard about the problems of western farmers and the subsidies they were requesting. This year I went out west to gather information and to see conditions for myself. I have satisfied myself that it is a section of this country where there is scarcely any mixed farming, all the acreage being used for grain growing. It has often been suggested to our western fellow citizens that they should take up more livestock breeding and mixed farming. Had they done so, the government would have been spared much of the trouble of providing subsidies, and western farmers would have got more out of their operations, thus doing away with this problem which comes up each year in this house.

This sum of $150 million which we are going to give to the western farmers—with little likelihood of repayment, as has been the case in the past—removes all prospects of an increase in the rate of family allowances, as promised by the Conservative party in the last election. This $150 million which the government proposes to give to the western farmers will bar the province of Quebec from securing grants and subsidies to which she, together with the whole population of eastern Canada, is rightfully entitled.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner) said it would cost less than $10 million—

Mr. LaCroix: If the hon. minister spoke French, I could reply to him. I did not understand a word he said.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is our duty, especially for us in eastern Canada, to support the views so eloquently expressed by the hon. members for Kent (Ont.) and Dorchester. (Laughter). You may very well laugh, you people sitting on the government side; I can even see the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) grinning. I would ask him to make a trip out east instead, so that he may study on the spot the farming conditions in the province of Quebec and the difficulties facing our farmers; he could then, at that time, take other decisions liable to remedy the situation.

Mr. Arsenault: You knew of those conditions before this.

Mr. LaCroix: I have always known of them, and I have always made the same requests. I did not do as did the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) who, after being returned as an independent, on the very day after the election proclaimed himself a Conservative member.

Mr. Arsenault: He was your man.

Mr. LaCroix: I have never betrayed my mandate.

Mr. Arsenault: He was a Liberal, that one.

Mr. LaCroix: You ran as an independent candidate.

Mr. Arsenault: Not I, I was a Conservative candidate.

Mr. LaCroix: In any event, to come back to the point, Mr. Speaker, may I say that in fairness to the province of Quebec, the agricultural needs of our province should be taken into account.

I have here a resolution adopted by the Union Catholique des Cultivateurs (Catholic Farmers' Union) of Quebec North, a district within my own constituency. I would like to bring this resolution to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture:

Resolved that the government be requested: (a) to give permanency to the federal government,s present policy of price support for farm products; (b) to fix support prices for farm products according to a formula which would take into account the cost of living, production costs, and variations in demand as suggested in the formula put forward by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

The dairy industry is very important in our province. Here is a resolution adopted by the Union Catholique des Cultivateurs of the province with regard to that industry:

Whereas the dairy industry is the mainstay of agriculture in the province of Quebec and, as a consequence, Quebec agriculture tends to favour forage crops;

Whereas even though a large number of Quebec farms can produce considerable quantities of grain, their area is such as to provide a good permanent market for western grain;

Whereas the increase in freight rates on feed grain has already had an advance effect on the production costs of cattle raising and dairying . . .

I believe that the government should at least have provided a sum of money to allow eastern farmers to benefit from lower freight rates and thus get their seed grains at a lower price than they did under the former government. But no, the sole concern of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), the member for Prince Albert, is for his electoral riding in western Canada.

Well, Mr. Speaker, allow me to say that eastern Canada also needs some grants, and some subsidies. I mentioned one a moment ago when I asked the minister why the government had not continued to grant to our religious communities and our charitable institutions the subsidies from which they had benefited when they were allowed to buy their butter at a reduced price. The minister answered that this could not be done this year since there is no butter surplus. He also said to me that the former government had adopted the same policy.

I say to him that the former government always granted the religious orders and charitable institutions of my province the advantage of a reduced price on the butter it had to sell. If the government changes its policy, that is its concern.

May I say, in closing, that I will vote against this bill, that I will vote against it on second reading and that, in so doing, I support the stand taken by my colleagues from Kent, Ontario, (Mr. Huffman) and from Dorchester (Mr. Landry). I support their stand because I think that the west is being given a considerable amount of money which will eventually prevent the government from giving the people of eastern Canada what it promised them and what they are entitled to, in the form of an increase in family allowances, of subsidies to agriculture and of lower taxes. You will see when the budget comes before the house.

This amount of 150 million dollars handed out to the western farmers will have to be paid somehow. Indeed, we shall see the effects of those 150 million dollars when the new budget comes before the house.

(Text):

Mr. Jacob Schulz (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on this bill which is to provide advance payments to farmers who cannot sell their grain, I find myself in a rather awkward position. I do not like the measure in its present form, but I cannot possibly oppose it because I am one of those who have been advocating emergency assistance for years. I am thankful the government has acceded to the request, and I will support the measure. No matter how little benefit the farmers will receive from it, I will support it on the assumption that in this case something is better than nothing.

However, I feel I would be remiss in my duty if I were not to point out the shortcomings of this legislation. I only hope I can find the right words to do that and not be misunderstood, especially at a time when there is such an acute mortality prevailing amongst the members of this parliament. I am not against the principle of this measure, but I must indicate the inadequacies compared with the needs. Perhaps I should not do this, because everyone seems to be fairly well satisfied with the bill. I know the farmers are badly in need of this support.

In mentioning the weaknesses of this bill before us I find myself about in the same position as a lay observer watching a doctor perform an emergency operation on a dying person. He would think twice, at least, before he would tap the doctor's shoulder and offer advice in the moment when the doctor was performing that vital and delicate incision. I think he would rather be inclined to keep his mouth shut, for such an interruption might irritate the doctor and cause his hand to shake, thus endangering a life. I would not want to do that at this point. I shall therefore try to be careful in choosing my words to express my disappointment at the value of this government action.

Perhaps I can do this best by using the well known phrase coined during wartime; "too little and too late". In order to make a proper analysis I would divide the phrase into two parts. I would concentrate on the "late" part first by saying that what we are doing now should have been done years ago, and should have been done in much fuller measure than we are attempting to do now. The former government was confronted with this request year after year, but they refused to even consider it. It was branded a wild idea, an unreasonable demand, absolutely impossible to implement. Now that we have a new government the farmers' petition is granted in principle at least, and the former minister of agriculture wants to get in on the credit. He tried hard the other day to make out a case for himself, and in his desperation he went so far as to intimate that this step could have been taken before if it had not been for the backward farm organizations. They did not even ask for it.

At this point I should like to make it clear that if the right hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner) wants to use the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to shield himself from an embarrassing position it is quite all right with me. Perhaps he is even justified in doing so. This organization has provided a barricade behind which he and the former minister of trade and commerce have hidden for years, and perhaps that is one of the reasons we have not got advance payments yet.

However, when the right hon. member goes so far as to indicate that all farm organizations have been against the idea of cash advances, then he should know he cannot get away with such backstage manoeuvring in this parliament. I have with me the last three briefs presented by the interprovincial farm union council to the government. The first one was presented on February 16, 1956, and on page 15 it says:

> Therefore, the interprovincial farm union councils continuing to press for adoption of its original proposal (which has been endorsed at the three wheat pool delegate meetings) that the government arrange for interest-free cash advances by the Canadian wheat board on farm-stored grain to the value of 50 per cent of the initial payment on an estimated delivery of 8 bushels per cultivated acre.

This proves that the proposal was made and that it had been adopted by three wheat pool meetings. The next brief was presented on February 19, 1957. On page 8, it asks that a permanent system of cash advances be established on the basis recommended in previous submissions in order that farmers will have the means to meet their annual obligations. This should be enough to destroy the validity of the assertion made by the former minister of trade and commerce which was seized upon by the hon. member for Melville. The next brief was presented on August 15, 1957 in which the same request is repeated.

This I am sure will do away with any implications that our farm organizations were against advance payments. Where did the idea come from in the first place if it was not from the farm organizations? If the Liberal government had been as interested in the farmers as were some of the farm organizations then the farmers would not today be in a position of having to ask for emergency assistance.

The government could have prevented the situation by adopting a more aggressive attitude in selling our wheat; other people are selling their wheat. The United States exported 535 million bushels last year while Canada exported only 260 million bushels. Is there one natural reason why the United States should be able to sell one single bushel more than Canada, when our wheat has been recognized as the best in the world? Our wheat is hard wheat which some countries are forced to buy whereas the United States wheat is soft wheat which can be obtained anywhere.

Our final certificate covering export sales is accepted with the same confidence as a certified cheque. In contrast, the United States grading system, from No. 1 to the lowest, is inferior to ours in every respect. Nevertheless they almost doubled their sales last year when they exported 275 million bushels more than we did. In the same period our sales went down 49 million bushels. What is the reason for this difference? Could it be that those who were in charge of the development of policies for the United States wheat disposal program had enough imagination to conceive of strategies and approaches which have proved successful while those who were responsible for our program lacked incentive and vision to the point where they are relying on an orthodox trade policy and waiting for Santa Claus to bring them some customers?

United States policy makers have used four different ways in which to introduce a progressive sales policy: sales for American dollars, sales for local currency, barter trade and other relief assistance. Instead of adopting at least some of these various beneficial methods our government embarked on a course of criticism which to my mind is senseless to the highest degree, degrading those who do it, stifling business and resulting in a danger to this country.

When my neighbours sell faster and better than I do, do I criticize them? Of course not. I will find out how they do it and learn something.

[Mr. Schulz.]

In the 1955-56 crop year the United States exported 344 million bushels of wheat of which 97 million were sold for dollars, 93 million bushels for foreign currency, 67 million bushels were barter transactions, and 87 million bushels were exchanged under a mutual aid and relief program. If our government had adopted similar progressive sales policies during the years we would not have to find the cost of storage which now amounts to about $100 million a year and which includes some farm storage costs, but we could have sold a large portion of our wheat when the price was high. How much the farmers have lost in this respect alone can be seen from the fact that at the opening of the crop year 1953 the price of No. 1 Northern wheat was $2.03 a bushel and on July 21, 1957 the price was $1.61, a loss of 42 cents in four years. In last year alone wheat prices dropped by 12 cents a bushel.

Farmers have not only lost in sales and prices at the export level but also at the domestic level. From 1947 to 1953 the export price ranged from $2.00 to $3.40 a bushel but our domestic price was held down by the government and ranged from $1.55 to $2.55. When you know of these facts it is rather amusing to listen to those hon. members on the Liberal side who have voted against the resolution talk about discrimination and to those who with tears in their eyes talk about the United States give-away program and the terrible sums of money it costs the people of the United States. You never hear anybody talk about the Canadian give-away program for which these farmers alone had to pay; no one mentions the United Kingdom wheat agreement which cost the western farmers in the neighbourhood of a $300 to $400 million; no one talks about the millions and millions of dollars paid by the farmers in storage charges.

This is the way western farmers have been backed up against the wall to the point where they are now forced to ask for emergency assistance. I am happy this government seems to recognize that fact, at least to some extent, and has brought down a measure which is a step in the right direction, but it is still too late and too little. In dealing with the too little aspect I want to say that in speaking in the debate in reply to the speech from the throne the other day I made it clear that no half measures are good enough at this time.

Unfortunately this first legislation brought down by this government will no doubt be exactly that. Six bushels an acre is only half of the normal crop; what about the other half? Can farmers at this time afford to get only half their payment on merely half their crop? What about last year's crop?

What about the crop from the year before? It is most unfortunate that in this case this government is doing to the farmer something similar to what the former government did to our senior citizens. The advance payment on only 6 bushels an acre compares, I suggest, with the measly $6 increase in pensions which was granted last session. Will the farmers be more satisfied with this treatment than the old age pensioners were?

What is the material difference between this bill and the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act, aside from the interest, which in this case is paid by the government, and the fact that it is received by the farmer as a matter of right. Apart from that there is no difference. A farmer cannot obtain any more money under this act than he could under last year's act. As a matter of fact, he would get less. Under the provisions of the interim finance act a producer could borrow up to $3,000 if he had the grain to cover that sum, but under this proposal the amount of grain a farmer has in store does not matter; it is acreage which counts, not grain. A farmer has to have 1,000 acres before he can get $3,000. Furthermore, he can only get this amount if he grows only wheat. If he grows barley or oats he will get less. Is this the best this government can do?

Let us take, for example, an average farmer with a half section of land and 270 specified acres. If his production is all in wheat, he will receive $810; if in barley, $567; and if in oats, $324. This shows clearly how little benefit those hard-pressed farmers who have reached the end of their rope in financing their operations can hope to get out of this legislation if no changes are made.

Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson), speaking on the resolution last week, expressed the opinion that farmers are a reasonable group of people and that they will, therefore, be satisfied with this proposal. I have reached the opposite view. It will be the reasonable people who will recognize the fact that this is a feeble effort on the part of the government. They will see that this gesture is not only of little assistance to the average farmer but will create an incentive to grow more wheat, which is most dangerous. By allowing advances only on six bushels an acre regardless of the grain delivered, and then graduating the amount he receives from fifty cents for wheat to thirty-five for barley and twenty cents for oats, he may be inclined to grow the grain that brings the most money under this arrangement as it stands.

Mr. Speaker, it is hard to understand how hon. members of this house can stand up, speak on this bill and assert that everything is really quite all right, when some of its features are so obviously all wrong. There is plenty of evidence that this legislation in its present form is not only inadequate but is disturbing in some respects. For example, I point out sub-clause 4 of clause 3, which reads as follows:

> No person who has received an advance payment under this act in any crop year is, until his undertaking in respect thereof has been fully discharged, entitled to receive an advance payment in any subsequent crop year.

This means, in simple terms, that if a farmer is unable to deliver his six bushels allowed under the quota by the end of the crop year he cannot get any advance on his new crop until he delivers his old quota and discharges his obligations.

Mr. Harkness: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is now discussing the clauses of the bill, and I suggest it would be better and make for a more orderly discussion if he would postpone discussion of this particular clause until we come to deal with the bill in committee of the whole.

Mr. Schulz: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness), who has taken his place today can guarantee us that we can deliver six bushels this year I shall be not only satisfied but gratified by his assurance. But only a very cheerful optimist would dare to make such a prediction at this stage in the present circumstances. We could not do it last year, at least in my constituency, and I do not think it can be done this year either.

There is only one way in which it could be done: we must sell more grain than we are doing now. So far there is no evidence of such a trend. All signs point to the fact that up to now no all-out effort has been made to cope with this problem in a practical manner and, therefore, our present position can be described without fear of contradiction as a pitiful and deplorable stalemate. We are forced to accept it as such until the minister sees his way clear to tell this house what his plans are. We know that he is confronted with one of the most complicated problems, and we appreciate his position. We do not expect that he should sell all this wheat overnight, but I do feel that he and those who work with him should by now have been able to figure out some idea, some plan or some action that may be taken. So far he has said nothing that satisfies my curiosity or which does justice to the urgency of the situation.

From the minister's silence in this house and the address he made in Winnipeg to the national dairy council of Canada I have reached the conclusion that those who are in charge of our present grain marketing problem are tarred with the same brush of fear that has caused the indecision which has plagued that group for years. They seem to be, in a sense, prisoners of the past who have failed to respond to the challenges of the present.

Commenting on the minister's speech in Winnipeg, the Western Producer has this to say:

> After making due allowance for the handicaps under which he suffered it must, we fear, be admitted that Mr. Churchill was disappointing. His speech sounded dull and pedestrian, contained little that was new or inspiring and indeed would not have sounded much out of place coming from the mouth of a spokesman for the former regime.

How true this analysis is was proven by the minister when in the same speech he fell into the old rut of criticizing those who do something to dispose of their surpluses, and blaming them in the main for the reduction of our sales.

It is a sorry picture, when farmers are economically bankrupt while sitting on a pile of wheat to the magnitude of one billion bushels, to see those who are responsible for our sales program doing little more than criticize those who do something. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has joined from time to time the parade of critics.

Perhaps it is true that we should not follow exactly in the footsteps of the United States in disposing of our surplus, but we should, indeed we must, find means to distribute our surplus wheat to those who need it even if they cannot pay for it in dollars. Every fair-minded observer must admit that our present method of selling for dollars only has failed us miserably. At the same time the United States, by her easy selling terms, has disposed of considerable quantities of wheat to needy people who have not the money to pay in the ordinary way.

Unfortunately, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) made it clear the other day that this government has no intention of taking the initiative in investigating the possibility of selling wheat for sterling or other local currency. On October 23, 1957, as reported at page 315 of Hansard of that date, the Minister of Finance made this statement:

> —until some of the countries on a sterling basis regard this as a matter of sufficient importance to them to come and ask us to accept such an arrangement, I do not see any reason why we should go out proposing to take sterling.

We are still acting in an independent manner as if we were in a seller's market. It is difficult to follow this line of reasoning. The minister made this comment in spite of the fact that from November 15, 1954, to April 30, 1957, the United States has signed 92 agreements with 32 countries to the value of $1.8 billion which covered 446 million bushels of wheat. Twenty-three of these countries received wheat in exchange for local currencies. For some reason our authorities seem to be afraid to tackle this problem in a progressive manner. They have taken the passive course which has always proven to be most unsafe in the competitive business world. Those in charge do not seem to realize that this situation demands a high order of creativeness and instead of being afraid of doing something they should be afraid of doing nothing. If they would move we would not need to waste our time today talking about providing emergency assistance nor would we have had to waste millions upon millions of dollars in storage charges. We have paid enough unnecessary storage charges in the past few years to pay for at least half of that surplus wheat and give it away.

Our new Minister of Trade and Commerce made it clear in his speech that he has no intention of changing the policy of storing surplus wheat. On August 30, 1957, as reported in the Winnipeg Free Press of that date, he is reported as having said in that city:

> I hold the view that our higher grades of wheat might better be kept in store rather than given away or sold at cut rate prices.

And so we are sitting on our pile of surplus wheat and apparently the government intends to let the farmer and the nation pay storage until they are blue in the face. We will continue to sit on it even though it has become a crushing burden to western farmers and in spite of the fact that over half of the world's population is going to bed hungry every night. That we cannot dispose of our surpluses in a hungry world is a disgrace to our intelligence and those who brought us to this point should hang their heads in shame.

They are responsible for the creation of the situation in which we now find ourselves of being forced to pass emergency legislation to alleviate this deplorable condition. Measures designed and saturated with the same platitudes which are partly responsible for the plight of the western farmer will not come near the mark in terms of solving this problem. Apparently the government is still hoping that some day, somehow this problem will solve itself by some semi-miraculous means involving no effort on its part. It is hoping against hope that the problem will vanish of its own accord.

(Translation):

Mr. Raymond O'Hurley (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I had not planned to take part in the discussion on this bill which, I contend, is one of extreme urgency for a certain part of our population. However, I would not like either, by keeping silent, to give the population of this country the impression that members on the government side are opposed to an emergency measure designed to give western farmers some money until this year's crop is sold.

It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker—this is my maiden speech in this house but I am being forced by circumstances, to take part in this debate—that I feel it my duty, indeed a sacred duty, as a representative of an essentially agricultural constituency of the province of Quebec, to speak in the French language, the language of my electors.

Mr. Speaker, I know for having discussed this matter in caucus and in discussions with the Prime Minister that this is an urgent measure. This is no grant, no outright gift made by the country to western farmers but, for all practical purposes, a loan which will provide them with ready cash until such time as their crop is sold. That is why I would like to take a clear stand on this issue, as did other Quebec members who spoke before me.

I would not like this measure offered by the government to be considered as a gift. I know that this legislation does not apply to the other farm products, but I know also that it is a part of the policy announced by the Prime Minister in order to achieve balance in the field of agriculture. I support it, though, because I have as much feeling as those members who preceded me.

This plan is not perfect because perfection is not of this world but we shall try to reduce the margin existing at this time between prices obtained by the producers and what the consumers pay. Being a farmer's son and the owner of a farm, I know that the price obtained by the farmer for his products does not provide him with a salary comparable to that of other classes of society at the present time.

That is why we will shortly propose legislation with a view to filling this gap between the price paid to the producer and the price paid by the consumer.

Therein lies, I think, the difficulty facing the farmers of the province of Quebec. I had intended to deal with various aspects of agriculture in the province of Quebec during the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, but the examination of this measure prompted me to say a few words on the question of loans or grants to western farmers.

Just recently, I heard the hon. members from the opposition, my good friends from the constituencies next to mine, say that prices paid this year for maple syrup, pulp wood and various farm products were lower than last year's. If they remember well, in March and April 1956 maple syrup was selling at $7 a gallon in my riding. This year, the same syrup, of identical quality, sold at $3 a gallon. And yet, it was not the Conservative party which was in power. Therefore, it is not our fault, it is a legacy for which we cannot be held accountable, but, nonetheless a legacy that we have come into. In any case we shall try to be fair to everyone, while at the same time helping western farmers.

This bill, this loan we are suggesting is, in other words, an advance on their crops, which is going to be refunded to the federal treasury through their wheat pools. It is not an amount of $2.5 million which they are going to keep, but a cash advance.

Mr. LaCroix: An advance that will never be refunded.

Mr. O'Hurley: I had always understood that once a legislation is passed, it has to be complied with, and farmers, whether they live in the west or in the east, in Ontario, Quebec or New Brunswick, are accustomed to observing the law.

I say these grants are liable to help our rural population, because western farmers would then be able to reduce their production costs and, consequently, resale prices, which will open up new markets to them.

Mr. Speaker, like all members sitting with me on this side of the house, I put my trust in this government, and I shall vote in favour of this legislation, because I know that this government will be inclined to submit new bills to assist Quebec farmers. And I know for certain that those farmers will understand our position and, in their turn, be fair to us.

(Text):

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have risen to participate in a debate in the course of the present session. I want to assure you, however, that it is not my intention to delay to any appreciable degree the passage of this measure; but I do feel there is one principle that should be restated and kept in mind in considering the agricultural measure now before us.

The position of this group relative to the matter under consideration has been declared very clearly and concisely not only in the course of this debate but on other occasions as well. Recognizing as we do the serious financial difficulty in which the wheat producers of the prairie provinces find themselves owing to the inability to market their grain we have supported and do support the principle of cash advances on farm-stored grain as proposed in the measure. However, once again I would like to call attention to what I consider to be a very serious weakness or, shall I say, a danger in the legislation which we are now considering.

We are singling out a particular section of our country and a specific part of our agricultural industry for special attention. Let me again state, as I have already done, this proposal is receiving my support, but I do feel that in this parliament we must concern ourselves with policies and measures the benefits of which will, in comparable circumstances, be available to citizens right across our country. As an illustration, I should like to refer just briefly to our plea made on other occasions for the expansion of such measures as the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. I mention this at this time only to illustrate my point.

Our agricultural industry, or economy, in British Columbia is, as you know Mr. Speaker, more diversified but we have marketing problems as well. We feel that as regards at least some of our products we might be justified in claiming some such assistance as is contemplated in this measure. I am reminded as well of the maritime section, and the producers in that area who might feel justified in requesting consideration, and no doubt would benefit considerably were the benefits of such legislation made available to them.

Some months ago I had the opportunity to be in the province of New Brunswick and the problem of marketing their potato crop was brought to my attention. When the crop is harvested the markets are usually in a very depressed condition; but because of the desperate position in which the producers find themselves they dispose of their potato crop to buyers or speculators at a few cents a barrel. Those potatoes are stored on the farms by those producers and when the markets improve and a good price is commanded the buyers come along and take delivery and, of course, reap the benefits. I would suggest that if some such legislation was passed, or if a provision was included in such a measure as we have here, cash advances in that particular instance would be of inestimable value to the producers of that section. If those advances were available they could store their crop just as they do at the present time but they themselves would benefit from the improved market at the time of selling. I know it would be very hard on the speculators but it would be good for the producers.

I raise this point, Mr. Speaker, not because of any opposition to the principle involved in this measure but because I and many others are of the opinion that the benefits of measures designed for the good of our people should be available to all under comparable circumstances.

I listened with a great deal of interest to some of the members who participated in the debate last evening, for instance the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith). I was charmed by his quality of voice; I enjoyed his powers of oratory but I could not appreciate, as can be understood, his wholehearted confidence in the present administration to carry through a program that in its totality would take care of all the problems that face agriculture at the present time. I believe one of the other members suggested that this was only the first in a list of measures which would be introduced by this government and which would be in the interests of the agricultural industry of the nation. My own fear, Mr. Speaker, is that unless the fires are kept burning and a good head of steam is maintained this government may grind to a stop before the destination is reached, before the point is reached where legislation has been brought in which will bring to the agricultural industry of Canada the help it needs at the present time. Therefore, I raise this point once again, Mr. Speaker, in the hope that when measures are introduced in this house we shall keep in mind the fact that we are dealing with national issues, and the measures which are contemplated, considered and passed should be in the interest of all the people of Canada regardless of where they may reside.

(Translation):

Mr. C. N. Barbes (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the farmers of my constituency, I would like to say a few words at this stage on Bill 14, providing for cash advances on prairie grain prior to delivery thereof.

Through this legislation the government wishes to authorize cash advances to prairie farmers—and I repeat this—on threshed grain, before its delivery to the Canadian wheat board. The producer of wheat, barley or oats will therefore be enabled to receive cash advances up to a maximum of $3,000. In this way 100 to 150 million dollars will probably be advanced to western farmers on farm stored grain.

Mr. Speaker, the bill is possibly to the advantage of the western grain producer, but in the opinion of the farmers who, like myself, live in the eastern part of the country, this appears to be preferential treatment at the expense of the taxpayer, if the measure is adopted as such.

As for myself, before voting for such a measure, I would like our homesteaders and those farmers of ours who have woodlots to benefit from cash advances also, though not exclusively on pulpwood which has been cut and offered for sale but not yet delivered to the buyer. Advances such as are proposed by the bill, carrying no interest, should, to my mind, apply everywhere.

Those thousands of farmers who clear land, cut wood and farm in our districts will certainly not approve this legislation. It is not enough to promise an inquiry on the price spread between what is paid to the producer and what is paid by the consumer. Such an inquiry has nothing to do with a nation-wide agricultural policy.

Yesterday the member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Montgomery) told us that this measure was a part of the Conservative national policy, that it had been explained throughout the length and breadth of this country during the last general election. Well, as far as I am concerned, I would like to point out here that, during the last campaign in my constituency, my opponent was at pains to say that legislation in favour of those people who live on the prairies was preferential treatment costing millions of dollars, that these privileges were unacceptable if we remembered that our own farmers do not benefit from similar federal legislation concerning what they produce on their own land.

This particular point having been raised in our constituency, I am of the opinion that many Canadians who live on the land in Abitibi would not favour such a proposal. I have all the sympathy in the world for our western friends, but on the other hand I will not forget our own farmers who would like to keep on farming and, at the same time, receive their fair share of the national income.

On October 15 last, Mr. Speaker, an hon. member asked the government whether it intended to set up a commission to investigate price spreads. At that time, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) stated that the government had given immediate consideration to this most serious and difficult farming problem, one respecting which he himself had spoken on a number of occasions, stressing the need of something being done to investigate this spread in prices paid to the producers as compared to those required of consumers. The right hon. Prime Minister promised at that time that a statement would be made on this matter in the near future.

A few days later, that is on October 23, the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith), in submitting the government program, explained the details of government bills relating to the Old Age Pension Act, the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act.

On the following day, that is on October 24, the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness), speaking of farming problems and of a stabilizing price measure, merely stated that he had realized, when he took office as Minister of Agriculture, that the situation was extremely serious, adding that he had tried to improve the situation as far as some agricultural products are concerned and that he would continue to take every possible step with all possible speed to correct this unfortunate situation.

Well, Mr. Speaker, once the government has proposed an overall plan and submitted all the farming measures as a whole, taking into account the needs of eastern farmers, I shall be in a position to consider this bill. However, for my part, it is my duty to vote against this measure if a vote is recorded on second reading.

Mr. Georges Villeneuve (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, as a member representing a farm riding and not having had the opportunity to express my views on this legislation at the resolution stage, I would like to say today what the farm people in my riding are thinking of this bill No. 14 providing for advance payments up to a total of 150 million dollars with regard to the delivery of grain from the prairies.

I admit that these advance payments will probably allow western farmers to survive while waiting for wheat deliveries, but I think this is an expedient designed to conceal the government's inability to dispose of our wheat on the international market.

I would favour this bill if it were such as to lower the price of grain, and wheat in particular, to eastern farmers, for whom this government is apparently showing little concern.

I remember that the former government had passed legislation which was much more helpful to all farmers throughout Canada, by awarding subsidies on the transport of grain. This had helped eastern farmers to consume more of that commodity while giving western farmers a chance to sell their grain on the national market.

I voted against the resolution preceding the bill and I will vote against the bill itself, because I believe the farm industry of this country is not going to be saved by electioneering stop-gaps like this legislation. Our farming industry is not going to get better by the application of such poultices, but by some bill which will consider farm conditions throughout Canada, not forgetting those existing in the east, and more particularly in the province of Quebec.

(Text):

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to say a few words on this bill which provides for cash advances. It is not my purpose to oppose the measure. I think the measure is long overdue. The people of Canada, and particularly the farmers of western Canada, have been forced into a position where they are nearly bankrupt. It does not make any difference what government is in power; the result would be the same. Because of the great demands being made and the situation of the western farmer, any government which was in power would be obliged to put this legislation through.

We well recall that when the Conservatives, who now form the government, were in opposition they, along with the Social Crediters and C.C.F., on every occasion protested the dire situation in which farmers found themselves. We all pressed for some assistance in the form of cash advances to the farmers of western Canada. The fact that the present government is introducing this measure does not alter the fact that it would have been introduced by any party which formed the government.

I think it can be truly said, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of western Canada have found themselves in very poor financial circumstances. Because of a lack of a sales policy by the former government, and certainly because of the lack of a sales policy by the present government, this measure is a necessity. The farmers, not only in my constituency but in nearly all western constituencies, have found themselves in a position where they were forced to sell grain at cut-rate prices to any source that was available in order to secure cash to carry on from day to day. The farmers in my constituency, and in other constituencies, were forced to sell their grain at 50 cents to 60 cents a bushel. All hon. members who were in the opposition protested strenuously to the government and requested the inauguration of a system of cash advances so that farmers would not be forced by their creditors to sell grain at cut-rate prices and thereby lose hundreds of thousands of dollars.

I want to say a word, Mr. Speaker, about the attitude taken the other day by one of the members, the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart). I can appreciate his situation and his statement that under this measure no assistance is being given to the Atlantic provinces. I would suggest to him, however, that rather than take the attitude that he would vote against this measure he should support the measure and then make every effort to have this government and this house introduce legislation to give the people of the maritimes some relief. Conservative governments have been in power for some time in the maritimes, in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and they have done little, if anything, for those two provinces. In fact, the Liberal government did not do very much more, so I suggest to the hon. member for Charlotte that he insist upon some form of assistance being given by this government to the people of the Atlantic provinces. Those people received no assistance from the last government, of which the hon. member was a supporter, so I feel it would be good judgment on his part to support the Social Credit movement in the Atlantic provinces, kick out both the old line parties and put in a government that will do something.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I know where they lose their deposits.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): That is not true in progressive provinces, because in the west there were few of the old line party men returned. When the people in the Atlantic provinces get to the point where they are fed up with the old line parties, they will kick them out. It would seem that there is no difference between old line parties anyway, and I think the Atlantic provinces are beginning to realize that.

Let me come back to this Bill No. 14 which provides for cash advances to the farmers. It must not be thought for a moment, Mr. Speaker, as I feel the inference was left by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) when he was introducing this measure, that the farmers are going to receive a cash advance of $3,000. That is just not the case. There are some farmers, a very few, who may receive $3,000 in the form of cash advances but that will be limited to those who have the qualifying 1,000 acres. As the minister indicated the other day, about two-thirds of the farmers in western Canada will have a qualifying acreage of about 300 acres. This means that two-thirds of the farmers in western Canada, on the basis of 300 acres and $3 per acre, will receive about $900. This amount is not going to go very far in solving this emergency which faces our western farmers. There is now on the statute books an act known as the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act, which was passed in 1956. Under that act there were about 10,326 loans made and the average loan amounted to $647.04.

This measure points out most clearly that when an applicant for an advance is indebted to the bank in respect of a guaranteed loan obtained by him under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act, 1956, the unpaid balance of the guaranteed loan, together with any interest or other charges owing thereunder, owing to the bank shall be deducted from the advance payment and paid to the bank, and the bank shall cancel any endorsement in the permit book. This is set out in section 18 of the present Bill No. 14.

A moment ago I pointed out that over 10,000 farmers in western Canada owe on an average $647.04 under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act. If, as the Minister of Agriculture has pointed out, two-thirds of the farmers in western Canada have about 300 acres that will qualify under this bill, that means that those farmers will get about $900. When you subtract the amount of money they owe under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act you find they will have the magnificent sum of $253 coming to them. Certainly, the government cannot stick out its chest and say what a great boon this is going to be to the farmers of Canada. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that this section 18 should be withdrawn from Bill No. 14 so that those farmers who are in dire need would not be compelled to repay that money before they received any money under Bill No. 14.

Mr. Speaker: Order, it being five o'clock the house will proceed to the consideration of private and public bills.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF ANNUAL VACATIONS WITH PAY FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved the second reading of Bill No. 2, to provide for annual vacations with pay for employees.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the third occasion upon which I have had the privilege of presenting this bill. As hon. members are aware, it is a bill which would provide for annual vacations with pay for workers in Canada who come under federal labour jurisdiction. The main point of this Bill No. 2 is that the annual vacations with pay to be provided should be on a basis of two weeks after one year's service. There is also a provision for holidays on a pro-rata basis for service of less than one year, but the basic and fundamental fact about this bill is that the annual holidays with pay should be, as I say, on a basis of two weeks after one year's service. I mention this in my opening remarks to distinguish it from another bill which is now on the order paper, the first reading of which was given by the house this afternoon. I refer to the bill introduced by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) which in some respects seems to be similar to my bill. I congratulate him for following the lead given in these past three sessions, but in his explanatory words to the house today the Minister of Labour indicated that his bill provides for only one week's holiday with pay after one year's service and requires two years' service before two weeks' holidays with pay are guaranteed to an employee.

As a matter of fact I delayed proceeding with the second reading of my bill until the government's bill had been introduced, hoping that the government's bill might be a carbon copy of my own and that therefore it would not be necessary for me to proceed with Bill No. 2. However, now that the Minister of Labour has made it clear that, commendable as is his bill in that he has introduced it at all, it does not go far enough. I feel that I must ask the house to consider not merely the idea of legislation providing annual vacations with pay but the granting of those holidays on the basis of two weeks after one year's service. In this connection perhaps I might read a sentence from the brief presented to the government on October 21 by the Canadian Labour Congress. At page 18 of that brief I read these words:

> We welcome the announcement of a vacations with pay act and hope it will provide for two weeks after one year's service.

That hope, expressed so recently by the delegation representing the Canadian Labour Congress, has not been fulfilled in the bill introduced today by the Minister of Labour and, as I say, it is for that reason that I ask the house to proceed with this bill which is better than the one proposed by him.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will permit me, I think I should rise at this time on a point of order, in view of the extent to which my hon. friend has indicated the nature of the bill and has himself compared it with the bill introduced this afternoon by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr). My friend has I think conceded that the bills relate to the same matter. My friend has sought to distinguish his bill from the bill introduced this afternoon by the Minister of Labour on the grounds—the very narrow grounds—that whereas Bill No. 2 makes provision, according to its explanatory note, that all employees in Canada who come under federal labour legislation be granted at least two weeks' vacation with pay after one year of employment, the bill introduced this afternoon by the Minister of Labour makes provision for a statutory right in the case of all employees under federal labour jurisdiction to one week's vacation with pay after one year of work and two weeks' vacation with pay after a second year and thereafter. Now in my respectful submission this is not a difference sufficient to distinguish the two bills and to warrant my hon. friend proceeding with the bill he is now purporting to submit and of which he has moved second reading.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the hon. minister if it is his point that it is out of order for the house to proceed on this bill in view of the other bill being on the order paper?

Mr. Fleming: Exactly, Mr. Speaker. The bill on the order paper has been introduced.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am not surprised, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance on behalf of the government has raised the point of order but it seems to me that he should have something more to say. Where are his authorities for the assertion that, because the government has brought in such a bill, my bill cannot be proceeded with? There are citations in the books which make it clear that a bill takes precedence over a motion; indeed there is a descending order of values in what is known as the rule of anticipation, but I have not been able to find any rule which says a government bill takes precedence over a private member's bill. There is a rule which says—and this is a very clear rule—that the house having taken a decision on a matter, in the course of a session, that matter cannot be raised again. However it just so happens, to put it in chronological terms, that my bill was before the house first. My bill had first reading a few days ago and is now up for second reading. We are now under a new dispensation where the supremacy of parliament is supposed to count. I suggest that if this rule upon which the Minister of Finance seems to be relying has any merit what will actually happen is that my bill, having been introduced first, is the bill before the house and it is the government bill which will be out of order.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think the Minister of Finance had better think twice before he presses his point of order. I would be quite happy if it were that way and that we should have before the house the bill which offers a better provision rather than the bill which offers a lesser provision. At any rate unless some authorities are presented to you, Mr. Speaker, I do not see how you can rule that this bill which was on the order paper first is now blocked by a government bill which came in later.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the point of order raised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) is entirely without foundation, that it is equivalent to saying that if a private member introduces a piece of legislation which seems to be politically attractive to the government all the government has to do is to introduce a bill in similar terms and, on the thesis which has just been invoked by the Minister of Finance, the government would take over the parenthood and the credit for the measure from that point on. If there is any principle to support what the Minister of Finance has said, I think he should at least enunciate that principle so that it may be considered.

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out one or two things in connection with the scope of the bill. From the information we have received in the routine proceedings the bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is to include all that group which comes under federal labour legislation, whereas the wording on page 2 of the routine proceedings with reference to the government bill indicates that it is just for employees engaged in federal works, undertakings and businesses. In other words, as I would take it, it applies to all government employees.

Mr. Fleming: No, my hon. friend is quite mistaken in that respect. Employees affected by the bill introduced this afternoon by the Minister of Labour are co-extensive with those affected by the bill now under discussion. It applies to all employees who are subject to federal jurisdicition. The point is very simple and it is not a novel one. The house can hardly have current at the same session two proceedings and two debates on the same subject matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is right.

Mr. Fleming: In such cases my understanding of the rule and the practice of this house is that where there is a government measure which relates to the same matter and covers the same ground—it does not need to be precisely the same ground—the introduction of the government measure has the effect of staying further proceedings on measures introduced by private members.

An hon. Member: What is your rule?

Mr. Fleming: You cannot duplicate debate.

Mr. Speaker: I have conferred with the clerk on the point raised by the minister, and he has advised me that the point which has been made by those who have opposed the point of order raised is the correct view according to the authorities. I am referred to May, fifteenth edition, page 499:

> There is no rule or custom which restrains the presentation of two or more bills relating to the same subject, and containing similar provisions.

It is where a decision of the house has been taken on one bill that a problem arises, but apparently there is no difficulty about two bills, they being both of the same status or rank, as was suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I think I must respect the point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, just as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) was rising to speak to the point of order which has now been settled by Your Honour I was on the point of offering a basis for my hope that the house will accept this bill, with its better provisions, rather than the one introduced today by the Minister of Labour.

The basis on which I rest that hope is the fact that on the one occasion when this bill, or a bill identical with the one now before the house, came to a vote it received support from a number of hon. members who now sit on the government side of the house. Until the minister rose on his point of order I had not intended to read the names but in view of what has happened I will do so.

It was supported on a vote by no less a person than the present Minister of Finance. It was also supported, according to the recorded vote on pages 6576 and 6577 of Hansard of July 27, 1956, by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill), the Secretary of State (Mrs. Fairclough), the Minister of Justice and the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Fulton)—that is just one vote, of course—the Minister of Public Works and Acting Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Green), the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness), the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes).

It was also supported by a number of hon. gentlemen who are now parliamentary assistants on the government side and also by the gentleman who is now the chief government whip. It was, of course, supported by all those present in this party, in the Social Credit party, and by at least two hon. members of the Liberal party who were then on the government side of the house. I am hoping, too, that in view of the events of June 10 the Liberals will see the unwisdom of having, in the main, opposed legislation of this kind, and that today they will be on the side of those who are supporting this legislation.

It is a good thing in a democracy that we have elections once in a while and that people can be given an opportunity to express their views. I do hope that hon. gentlemen opposite who feel that they have been given support for some of the views they hold will realize that one of the views that they held in the last parliament was that there should be on the statute books of Canada legislation providing for annual vacations with pay on the basis of two weeks' holiday after one year's service.

There are some objections with which we have had to contend during the last parliament which will obviously not be raised today. The former minister of labour used to take the position that this was a matter that should be left to the processes of collective bargaining. Obviously, the Minister of Labour has departed from that position. Thus we can take it there is now general acceptance that this is an appropriate field for legislation. After all, surely the position has been established that in modern society those who toil, those who do this nation's work, should be entitled to holidays, not just when there is illness, not just when there is unemployment, but as a matter of right, and with sufficient pay to enable them to enjoy those holidays.

As hon. members are aware, this principle has been accepted to a considerable extent by the provinces. Six provinces have general legislation in this field—British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. In addition to those six, a seventh, namely New Brunswick, has enacted legislation covering some of its workers. The legislation in these provinces varies as to the extent of the holidays guaranteed; it varies also as to the point at which holidays come into effect, but there are at least two provinces whose legislation provides what this bill seeks, namely two weeks' holidays after one year's service. Those two provinces which are at the top of the list are the provinces of British Columbia and Saskatchewan.

It is our view in presenting this bill, and it was the view held in the last parliament by those who spoke to this legislation on the Conservative side of the house, that this is the kind of matter with regard to which the federal government should give a lead. We recognize that so far as labour questions are concerned we have a divided jurisdiction in this country; the greater portion of our industrial workers comes under provincial labour jurisdiction, leaving only some 9 or 10 per cent under federal labour jurisdiction.

It is to that group that this bill would specifically apply, but we feel that there would be more to it, when enacted, than simply its direct benefits. In addition to providing the type of benefit it does for this group of people, if the federal parliament would enact legislation of this kind it would give a lead to the provinces and hasten the day when it will be a universally accepted fact, recognized in law, that workers are fully entitled to the benefit of holidays with pay, and that it should be not less than the period set out in this bill, namely, two weeks after one year's service.

Mr. Speaker, as members of this house know—at least those who have sat in this house before—the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is quite capable of occupying the full 40 minutes allowed to a member, but I do not think it is necessary to do so in connection with this bill. The matter has been debated several times in the house before, and it is something to which all parties are committed. I therefore hope that now that the measure is before the house it will receive support from the same quarters which supported it previously, namely my own party, the Conservative party and the Social Credit party. I hope too, that the Liberals will also see the light and go along with this bill so that it may become law.

I join with the Canadian Labour Congress in welcoming the fact that the new government has seen fit to propose legislation of this kind. As hon. members may know, it just so happened that having introduced this bill on previous occasions I caused it to be introduced on the very first day of this new session so that it is on the order paper ahead of the government's bill. I think that is a fortunate circumstance, for it means that the house can now come to grips, not only with the issue of holidays with pay but also with the issue of the length of holiday after one year's service that should now be the case. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in presenting this bill and I hope that the evidence I have given will indicate that it should now be passed by this House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Before further debate takes place I think I should perhaps supplement what I said previously because of the problem which arises where two similar bills are on the order paper. I indicated that neither had precedence over the other but that if a decision had been taken on one it might affect the status of the other and I did not read the full citation from May to which I referred. This appears in the fifteenth edition of May at page 499 and I think I should continue with the reading of it as it may have some bearing on the views of the house concerning this rather unusual situation. May says:

> There is no rule or custom which restrains the presentation of two or more bills relating to the same subject, and containing similar provisions. But if a decision of the house has already been taken on one such bill, for example, if the bill has been given or refused a second reading, the other is not proceeded with if it contains substantially the same provisions, and such a bill could not have been introduced on a motion for leave. But if a bill is withdrawn, after having made progress, another bill with the same objects may be proceeded with.

The reference in Bourinot is to be found in the fourth edition at page 548. I will not trouble to read that but I thought perhaps I should amplify what I said previously.

Mr. Arthur Maloney (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this occasion with some diffidence but I would like to say a few words in respect to the bill which is being proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). As has already been clearly intimated it is the intention of the government to introduce legislation which, it seems clear, from what has been said, respects the same principles that apparently are the concern of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Annual paid vacations for workers are now generally recognized as desirable for the health, welfare and efficiency of employees. The major principle of any legislation directed to a subject matter of this sort is to ensure that a minimum period of paid vacations should be provided in law as one of the conditions of employment which an employer must be prepared to make effective in application to his employees.

In my opinion provisions for annual paid vacations for workers should not be left wholly in the discretion of employers or left entirely to collective bargaining. I feel that there should be federal vacations with pay legislation to complement the legislation enacted by the great majority of provinces in this field. Annual vacation plans more favourable than the minimum standard which the government legislation may contain in my opinion may be properly left to collective bargaining or to individual arrangements. I recognize that it is only by means of legislation that there can be an assurance that all workers whether organized or unorganized, and the welfare of everyone of whom must be our very real concern, will have an annual vacation with pay and that it will conform to a reasonable minimum standard.

It now remains to decide what constitutes a reasonable minimum standard in so far as legislation making provision for it is concerned. We have to bear in mind that vacations represent a cost to the employer and in my view a balance must be struck between the cost it is reasonable to impose on the employer by legislation, on the one hand, and the standards it is reasonable to require for workers, on the other. The effect on collective bargaining is a consideration that cannot escape us either.

The employer who makes an improvement in his vacation policy through collective bargaining or as required by legislation or otherwise will probably feel that this lessens his ability to grant wage increases or reduces the size of the wage increase he can afford to grant. On the other hand it may be assumed that a worker who enjoys an adequate annual vacation is a more productive worker. Thus it is very difficult to measure in cents per hour the exact cost to an employer of providing a vacation for his workers. These are matters that are threshed out around a bargaining table.

A union and an employer may decide to make improvements in vacation practices, in wages or in the pension plan but it will be mutually recognized that the employer may not be able to afford to do everything the union wants and they may both agree that improvements in the pension plan, for example, are more desirable than improvements in respect to the provisions of the plan in so far as vacations are concerned.

The essential point I think we should all bear in mind in considering legislation of this kind is that the legislative standard for vacations be not so high as to intrude unnecessarily upon the processes of collective bargaining but that it be high enough to establish a reasonable and adequate annual holiday standard and provide assurance of protection to those employees who are in need of it.

In considering what constitutes a proper standard it strikes me that we have to look at the practice prevailing in Canadian industry including those industries which come within federal jurisdiction and we must also look at the legislative provisions adopted by the provinces. Some type of plan with an annual vacation of at least one week's duration is almost universal in Canadian industry. Vacations of two and three weeks are also common and, here and there, even four-week vacations are making an appearance. The practice most commonly found in Canadian industry is to relate the length of the vacation to the length of service of the employee; thus plant workers in manufacturing customarily receive one week's vacation after their first year of employment, a two-week vacation after three to five years' service, and a three-week vacation after service of 15 years. There are variations in vacation policy but our research would indicate that these are the most widely adopted practices. Office workers on the other hand usually get two weeks' vacation after their first year of employment. These practices, an investigation indicates, are widely found in Canadian industry generally and they are also common in industries which fall within the federal jurisdiction.

I would like to say a word or two in reference to the standards set by legislation in effect in some of the provinces. The provinces of Ontario and Quebec set a minimum standard of one week with pay for each year of service. This, as I understand it, is also the standard adopted in New Brunswick in the case of the mining and construction industries. In the case of Alberta and Manitoba, they require one week after one year of employment and two weeks each year after a longer period of service, two years in Alberta and three years in Manitoba. Saskatchewan and British Columbia require two weeks after one year of employment.

Now in the light of the study we have given to this subject we would not agree that any legislation to be proposed to this house in respect to vacation practice should provide merely for a one-week vacation. On the other hand, three-week vacations are not legislated for in any jurisdiction and they hardly constitute a minimum standard.

It strikes me that we have to address ourselves to what constitutes a reasonable service requirement. To provide two weeks after only one year would not in my opinion be a reasonable minimum legislative standard since it is not commonly found in existing provincial legislation, nor in practice, other than in the case, as I have already mentioned, of office workers. To provide two weeks after two years service is somewhat ahead of prevailing practice for non-office workers, and it is a little ahead of the legislative standards provided in a majority of the provinces.

In the light of all the factors I have mentioned it strikes me that what appears to be embodied in the bill which will be presented later on by the government, if it should be afforded the opportunity, and the standard contemplated in its proposed legislation make it the sounder of the two plans that this house will have an opportunity to consider.

The impact of legislation of this kind on industries within federal jurisdiction will be appreciable, even if it is not in the precise form proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. About 5,000 such workers are now employed in establishments which do not now grant two-week vacations. In most of the remaining establishments the effect will be confined to new employees who will now receive benefits which they otherwise would not enjoy.

Under the legislation the government has in mind the employees will certainly be assured—and many of them are not at present—of receiving to a very satisfactory degree the same benefits and privileges that are envisaged or contemplated in the bill of the hon. member now before the house for consideration.

It is in the light of the remarks I have just made that I would ask the hon. members to consider the legislation that is now before us.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Stick: Don't talk it out.

Mr. Byrne: I can assure the hon. member who has just spoken that I have no intention of talking out this bill. I had made some preparation this afternoon to discuss the measure having to do with holidays with pay and had not expected that this bill would come before the house. However, there should be no difficulty in one making up one's mind as to the necessity for assuring every worker in this country at last a minimum of two weeks holiday with pay.

Legislation of this kind was introduced many years ago in the province of British Columbia by a former Liberal premier. Every workman has a holiday book and he, in one way or another, after working one month is provided with stamps which he inserts and which show that he has worked a month. I understand it transpires that after working 12 months he is entitled to two weeks holiday with pay. But, of course, the debate now resolves itself into whether we should support the measure brought forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) or the measure which is being introduced by the government.

The government had enough confidence in the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to offer him a very responsible position in this house. I wonder whether they should not just accept the legislation brought forward by the hon. member. It differs so little, the exception being that it assures everyone of two weeks pay.

The matter of procedure and order was raised and subsequently dealt with by the Speaker, which does leave me with some apprehension as to what might be the result if this measure introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre were defeated. If, as Mr. Speaker has indicated, a decision has been rendered and it should be an adverse one, then it follows that the bill could not be re-introduced. Whether the government bill has proceeded far enough so that it is not a question of it being re-introduced is perhaps a matter for decision, but before the vote is taken certainly the house should be made aware of the procedure that may be followed.

It is true that in industry and no doubt in government service there is some difference with respect to the length of service and as to the number of days or weeks holiday that one may expect to receive, but certainly a one-week holiday is not a holiday. In these days of enlightenment, when very often in industry we have a four-day weekend,—that is only considered a long weekend—five days is a normal work week in Canada. Hence one week cannot be considered as a holiday. Two weeks should be the minimum that anyone would be receiving.

In the particular industry in which I work, after a year's service the employee receives a two weeks' holiday with pay; after 15 years service he receives a three weeks' holiday with pay; and after having attained the 25-year mark, he is eligible for a four weeks' holiday with pay. Of course, he has been normally working a five-day week. That is something which we do not expect to be put into legislation but we should not be niggardly and expect anyone to have less than the actual two weeks.

There is another aspect of this matter. It has been reported that this winter unemployment may reach the 900,000 mark or even the 1 million mark. We have found, particularly in our industry, that the giving of holidays requires quite a large amount of extra labour. Some of it may be temporary labour, but in the main it requires a larger staff. In the face of this impending disaster, if it comes about —and certainly the situation is serious enough at this present moment—I think that the government should either incorporate in their legislation this bill which has been introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre or decide to move an amendment of their own which will give the same coverage. I do not remember whether or not I was here at the moment when the vote was taken.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, the hon. member did not vote against the bill. He apparently was not present at the time.

Mr. Byrne: I want to assure the hon. member that it was because I must have been absent from Ottawa at the time because it has been my practice to vote for labour measures which seem to have about them a measure of responsibility and reasonableness. For my part I am prepared—and I am speaking for myself only—to support the bill.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take very long in speaking on this measure. It is well known that this bill has previously been before this house and that to it the Social Credit party has given its full support. We favour giving to the working people of this country a holiday of at least two weeks out of the year with pay, particularly under the present conditions of unemployment prevailing in this country where we have such a large number of unemployed, as indicated by the hon. member who spoke previously. We believe that some of these people who are going to be unemployed would benefit by such a bill as this if it were passed in this house.

A moment ago it was stated that two bills were before the house, one introduced by the government and the present Bill No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Actually, though, we are concerned only with this one bill. Hence that is the one to which we must give our attention. In the past we have always supported any progressive legislation that was in the interests of the labouring people of this country. We see no reason why we should now change our stand. We therefore intend to give this bill our support.

Mr. F. C. Stinson (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity of participating in this debate having to do with a bill providing for statutory annual vacations with pay. Some years ago, before the legislation in this field was introduced in the province of Ontario, I can remember speaking with a man who, by misfortune, had moved around from job to job in the course of his working lifetime and had never in that period enjoyed one week of vacation with pay. At that time I decided that if the opportunity came to me to say anything on this matter in any legislature or in the parliament of Canada I would do what I could to help put on the statute books a measure which would make it obligatory for employers to provide vacations with pay for their employees. Since that time much legislation has been passed in this field. In six of the provinces of Canada there is general legislation covering all industries under provincial jurisdiction and in one province I understand there is limited legislation in this field.

When considering the potential effects of this legislation, however, I think hon. members should keep in mind the fact that about one-half of the employees under federal labour jurisdiction already obtain benefits which are contemplated in the bill proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and that some 90 per cent of the employees under federal labour jurisdiction qualify for two weeks' vacation with pay after a period of employment of three years.

When giving this bill consideration, Mr. Speaker, I think we must consider seriously the possible invasion of the rights of employers in the industries covered by this legislation, inasmuch as it may be that many employers and employees, through the collective bargaining process in these industries, may come up with other benefits which would be of greater significance and greater value than might be provided by the giving of two weeks' vacation with pay under the statutes. It therefore seems to me that we would do well to consider that fact carefully and to consider the advisability of limiting this proposal to the giving of one week's vacation with pay after the completion of one year's employment in the industries under federal labour jurisdiction.

To a newcomer here, Mr. Speaker, sitting on this side of the house it is interesting to look across the way today and to see how few supporters of the former government occupy those benches when they all had full notice that an important measure of this kind was to be under debate this afternoon.

Mr. Pickersgill: Look at the other side.

Mr. Ellis: Look around at your own side.

Mr. Stinson: It seems to me also of some real significance that for the first time in the history of this country a government is bringing forward legislation of this kind and it is legislation proposed by a Conservative government.

(Translation):

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to speak today, but since my constituency is half agricultural and half industrial I believe it is my duty to offer a few remarks on the question at present under discussion.

I would have liked to wait a little longer, but I am certainly happy to be able to speak on behalf of those who have sent me here.

Every member of this house will certainly agree that annual holidays with pay for workers are now necessary. This fact has been long recognized by the workers themselves. When they joined together in labour unions they put the matter of paid holidays to the forefront of their demands. We believe that parliament must act in order to ensure at least a minimum holiday for all workers. Should parliament fail to act, arbitrary measures could possibly be taken against workers.

If employees on the one hand and employers on the other should agree to paid holidays even more favourable than those provided by this legislation or by the proposal under discussion at this time, they are quite free to do so. Without in any way interfering in collective bargaining, I believe that the present proposal is certainly such as to grant the demands and wishes of workers. That is why I shall certainly be happy as representative of the constituency which is partly industrial, to give it my support.

The cost of holidays must therefore be proportioned to the salary of the employee because, if it is too high, it necessarily follows that workers will possibly have to give up other benefits such as pension plans, health insurance, or recreational facilities for employees themselves or their families.

The general rule prevailing within the industry falls short of the proposal put forward by the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I wonder, though, if we would not be acting against the best interests of employees if we were to go as far as the hon. member wishes us to go.

I therefore would like the house to give every possible consideration to the proposal now under discussion so that our working people may enjoy the privileges they are entitled to, which are their due and which they so richly deserve.

[Mr. Stinson.]

(Text):

Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be associated with those who have already stated with some enthusiasm their support for the intent of the bill which is before us. I think it speaks well for this house that there is such a substantial extent of general agreement, not only as to the principle of this bill but also as to the legislation which will unquestionably be placed before us.

Mr. Ellis: Is the hon. member in favour of the two weeks?

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): I liked, too, the references made by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) to the position which his party had taken, and indeed for which I must give them credit, in the provincial legislature, in co-operation with industry as a whole, in recognizing the change of pace in our economy. We must recognize the fact that industry has outgrown those days when they were endeavouring to limit the ordinary opportunities of the labouring force.

Mr. Byrne: Six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

GRAIN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE CASH ADVANCES ON FARM-STORED GRAIN

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Harkness (for Mr. Churchill) for the second reading of Bill No. 14, to provide for advance payments for prairie grain prior to delivery thereof.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, if this legislation means anything at all I think it should be that it is intended to give immediate relief to the farmers who are in dire need of cash. It is, I believe, well understood or it should be, by every member of this house that the only possible way the farmer has been able to keep going at all is by the local grocery man, the local butcher and machine agent supplying the farmers with goods, repairs and machinery on time; in other words, they have been financing these farmers.

It was hoped that this legislation would provide a means whereby the farmers would get a little cash to meet these obligations, because it goes without saying that these people who have been assisting the farmers cannot long continue to finance them. Therefore the cash which is to be given through cash advances should be intended for use in relieving these local financial obligations, but according to clause 18 of the bill something of a damper is put on that idea. In a great many cases, as I indicated before six o'clock, a great part of this money is not going to be forthcoming because this very bill has made provisions for the government to have the first claim on these cash advances.

As I also pointed out, about two-thirds of our farmers in western Canada will receive only the small amount of approximately $900 and if you take off the amount of money which would be owing under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act there is not going to be very much left. I would recommend to the government and to every member of this house that clause 18 be withdrawn because the government is certainly setting an example by including this clause and encouraging all other creditors to make pressing demands on the farmer in order to get as much of this cash advance as they can before the farmer has an opportunity to use it for the needs of his family and to pay up all the small obligations incurred throughout the community.

Now at best this legislation is of a very temporary nature. It cannot be considered in any sense as a solution of the farmers' problems. It is certainly time that the government brought down measures or at least indicated to this house their intention of making good their election promises, not only to regain our lost markets but to get some new ones. Now nothing very noticeable has been done so far in the way of fulfilling these promises. They turned down the only practicable offer and that was the one proposed by the United Kingdom government. We had been given to understand from the speech from the throne and throughout this debate that this government was going to bring down legislation which would increase our sales but when I read over the speech which the Minister of Agriculture made on October 28 I was somewhat confused, for on page 458, towards the latter part of the first column the minister had this to say about the prospects of increased sales of our agricultural products.

> Our sales to the United Kingdom and Europe this crop year should compare favourably with last crop year.

Now that certainly does not indicate any bright prospects for agriculture; it means in fact that this government does not intend to do anything different in the way of increasing our sales from what was done by the former government. In fact up to the present moment our sales have been less than for the corresponding period last year.

The minister himself does not indicate that it will be any better than it was last year. Now unless something is done to increase our sales abroad it is certainly not going to bring much relief to the agricultural industry in western Canada. The Minister of Agriculture when presenting this bill the other day on behalf of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) made reference to his trip to the United States and the discussions there with respect to the prospects of increased trade. He said hopes were quite good and that things were going along quite satisfactorily as far as discussions with the United States were concerned. He condemned the United States government for the methods they employed in getting rid of their surplus products and referred particularly to the give-away program and the barter deals. He said the impression was, as has also been indicated in the press, that these transactions would cease or at least be lessened. However when you read the minister's speech I do not think you can get that out of it at all because at page 458 of Hansard of October 28, the Minister of Agriculture had this to say:

> "I should perhaps explain to the house that, in effect, this barter program has been only a concealed form of additional subsidy by the United States. The result has been to reduce normal United States commercial sales as well as hurt the Canadian competitive position."

Here is the most important part:

> "We found that our United States colleagues agreed in the main with this point of view and they affirmed to us their intention that before approving further barter transactions they would require proof that those transactions would result in additional sales."

It surely cannot be true to say that this is any change in the United States policy or that any promises given to our government would have the effect of lessening the barter deals. This cabinet committee commission which was sent by the government to the United States came back and reported that prospects were better. What could be further from the truth? The United States told that committee and the minister has in his own words told the house that those transactions will result in additional sales. For whom? For the United States, certainly not for us.

Of course the United States in their disposal program has never adopted any other attitude and these give-away programs and barter deals have one purpose and one purpose only, to increase the sales of the United States surplus products. That is exactly what they told the Canadian delegation in Washington and anybody who thinks this government is making proposals which are going to increase our foreign markets had better take a closer look at the words of the Minister of Agriculture the other day.

Grain

During the recent election campaign in Alberta Conservative candidates made no bones about the fact that if the Conservative party was elected sterling would be accepted in exchange for sales, at least in sufficient amounts to balance our trade with Great Britain. However, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) said in the house the other day that such was not the case and that the government had no intention of accepting sterling. All right, how does this government propose to increase our trade? How does it propose to regain these lost markets and to find new markets?

An hon. Member: China.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): The government just has no policy whatsoever, as far as we in this house are concerned there has been no evidence of increases in our trade with British markets by the acceptance of sterling. That was one of the solemn promises given by the Conservative candidate in the Bow River federal constituency.

An hon. Member: He will be the member next time.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Oh no he will not. He will never be the member there as long as we decide to run a Social Credit candidate, do not make any mistake about that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What is the date for the next time?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): That is not something which concerns me. I have never taken a political stand on this question. All I am trying to do is put the facts before the house, but since the Conservative candidates make these statements on behalf of their party I would invite the member for Calgary North, the Minister of Agriculture, to get up and deny that the Conservative candidate made any such promise on behalf of his party.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to rise on this occasion. I have no knowledge as to what the Conservative candidate in Bow River said to the hon. member's constituents but I can say definitely that I have never made any such statements and the leader of this party has never made any such statements.

Mr. Byrne: You were elected on false pretences then.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): When I speak on the address in reply to the speech from the throne I intend to deal with that very thing, and I will have the evidence with me to show that the leader of that party, the Prime Minister in 1953 made that declaration in voting for the amendment which the Social Credit party introduced in this house at that time, and not only did the Prime Minister vote for that amendment, which asked for the acceptance of sterling, but one of his cabinet ministers, the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), and four hon. members who are now parliamentary assistants stood up beside him and voted also, while some of the others in the Conservative party would have liked to have voted that way but who did not have the gumption stood behind the curtain.

Now the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) says no such promise was made. I can tell him that the Conservative candidate in my riding did make that promise in my presence at several public meetings, and many hon. members could confirm this and say the same thing with regard to their constituencies. So do not let the government back out from this deal, too, as they are trying to back out from barter exchanges; as they are trying to back out from the acceptance of sterling; and as they backed out from accepting the United Kingdom proposals. What have they got to propose?

Mr. Harkness: We backed out from nothing—

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): You backed out from everything that has been worth while. This legislation on cash advances is brought down because it was the only thing that would save your political necks, and because every party in the house except the Liberals thought it should be done. It was public pressure that brought this bill about.

Mr. Harkness: I know you are worried. This is only the first instalment, too.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Make no mistake about it, we are not worried; we can handle these Conservatives any time they come along, and the bigger they are the better we like it.

Mr. Speaker, I think the government will be well advised in the interests of the farmers of western Canada to have clause 18 withdrawn from this bill. They will be well advised, too, to bring down legislation this session which will make it possible to give our farmers what they have asked for for so long, and what they deserve, that is their fair share of the national income.

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I want to rise at this time to let people know where I stand with regard to this bill. I want to support it, of course, as hon. members know, although I do not think it goes quite far enough. It seems there is nothing we can do about that. Someone said today that half a loaf is better than none, and I am looking on the measure now before us in that way.

I have risen in this house on many occasions to plead the cause of the farmer and never got anything. This time I am getting a little, and I am quite well pleased. When farmers get into difficulties they go into the towns, and when that happens they compete for employment on the labour market. Surely it is right that the government should try to keep the farmers on the land. As I stated, many of those who leave the farm go into the towns, see the bright lights, find that they can make a living there, and then decide they are not going back again. That is one of the reasons why we have fewer farmers today.

This bill will be of some help to agriculture, though I think everyone agrees it is not enough. But it is something. The position of the Canadian farmer today when he cannot sell his crop is a serious one. Hon. members must realize that he has no wages, no other source of revenue of any kind. When he gets his advance payment he will have to share it with the storekeeper, the oil man, the implement agent and, no doubt, the bank, because on the farmers' dollar, or business—call it what you like—the whole agricultural economy depends. The advance payment will be like a blood transfusion to a sick man, but it is going to take a lot of transfusions to bring the agricultural economy back into a healthy state again.

It has been suggested that the grain farmer should raise hogs and cattle. We have a surplus of wheat at the present time, and I am sure some of the hon. members who were here in 1943 and 1944 when we were producing hogs in a bigger way than any other country in the world know how many hogs we are capable of producing and realize that we would have a surplus of hogs and, no doubt, a surplus of cattle in three years' time if this policy was followed.

I think that by now almost everything has been said that could be said both for and against the bill, and I suggest that we should have a vote in order to enable the farmers to get the advance payment. However, there is one point I wish to draw to the minister's attention. In some districts, where we have five or six elevators in line, a farmer has the privilege of delivering to any one of them. But if we move further out into the country we arrive at points which have only one elevator. A man living in that area can go nowhere else; he is bound to sell to that one elevator, and take all the dirt that the elevator agent likes to dish up to him. Why cannot the government give him the right to go to one other elevator, the one either to the east or west?

Since I was appealing to my colleagues to let us have this vote and let the farmer get the money, I think it would be better if I raised this matter again later when the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) come up for consideration, and explain further what I have in mind. I think the minister knows already, because this is obviously something that should be corrected.

Mr. Irvin Studer (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly not my wish to delay the passage of this bill, but if you will permit me to say a few words that might have the effect of encouraging those who may not be inclined to support this bill, the effort might be worth while. Everyone knows that the operation of this bill will put money into circulation, as has been said time and time again in the course of this debate, and of course when money is in circulation that is good not only for the direct recipients but for all the people in Canada. I believe everyone can support this bill in the hope that if the present government implements its agricultural policy—the one I hold in my hand—great things are in store for the farmers of Canada. The farmers will be watching this government's agricultural policy with great expectation, and hoping for action at the earliest possible moment.

I would just like to mention that if the former government did not progress with the supplying of advances on approved farm-stored grain as rapidly as hon. members think it should, perhaps it was because it had an alternative policy which was the acceleration of the sale of wheat which in itself would eliminate the necessity of the proposal we have before us today. Unfortunately, however, the election of June 10 terminated that effort and at the moment we have from the present government an admission that irrespective of how they thought they were going to sell wheat prior to June 10 it could not be accomplished in that way and thus we have the alternative of paying advances on farm-stored grain.

I would like to deal briefly with some of the criticism that has been offered by our Social Credit friends, most of which has been directed this way, that is to say toward the former government. I should mention also the criticism raised by the socialist members in this house who have spent most of their time in what perhaps could be best described, according to their interpretation, as kicking a dead horse because in every one of their pronouncements they have said that the Liberal party is dead.

Mr. Argue: The dead horse is very noisy.

Mr. Ellis: The Liberal party is dead.

Mr. Studer: If a party is capable of commanding 41 per cent of the popular vote of this country as compared to the next party standing of 39 per cent of the popular vote I do not think that party can be accurately described as dead. I suggest to my hon. friends that when the next election takes place that 41 per cent of the people of this country may have something to say in regard to this.

Mr. Small: Well, bring them on.

Mr. Studer: I would suggest to my socialist friends that they take care of their own percentage of the popular vote and dwell on that because their standing has consistently deteriorated over the past year in terms of the percentage of the popular vote they are able to command in Canada. I would suggest also to them and to all hon. members in the opposition that we direct our criticism not at the former government but at the new one. Let us all try to improve its policies in order to accomplish something that will be of benefit to the farmers of western Canada.

To those hon. members who represent eastern constituencies I would suggest that they can support this legislation knowing that after the next election the Liberals will make all the benefits included in it available to all agricultural producers in Canada.

Mr. Fraser: You want to watch it, the alarm clock might go off.

Mr. Studer: There is something of benefit to the producers in this legislation because it supplies them with the purchasing power they badly need. Every one knows that we cannot spend money twice and the funds spent in the form of cash advances cannot be spent six or eight months from now. The national economy can easily absorb whatever the farmers can afford to spend. This will be of benefit to business because the money which is made available will be automatically spent by the farmers. They have never been known as hoarders; they have always spent their money as fast or sometimes a little faster than they receive it and they will do so again in this instance. We are the best people in the nation to keep the country's economy rolling.

Regardless of what some critics of the past Liberal bank loan legislation say, it will be of benefit to the banks. I think it is the greatest windfall the banks ever fell into. Under the previous policy the banks receive 5 per cent interest on outstanding loans of approximately $8 million. Under this legislation, without lifting a finger, taking applications or doing a single thing the banks will receive 4¼ per cent interest on a maximum of $150 million. If that is not a windfall, what is?

In any event everyone is going to benefit under this proposal and in view of this I think we can give it our support and vote for it.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): It is apparent, Mr. Speaker, that every hon. member of every party in this house who has taken part in this debate has indicated that he is wholeheartedly in support of this legislation, or at least the general principle behind it. I am sure that if as was suggested by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Studer) the benefits were to be extended to all other classes of agriculture it would be most desirable and would win unanimous support.

The Social Credit group, the C.C.F. group, and when it was in opposition the Conservative group, indicated that they wanted this legislation and now the Liberal group has indicated that it also wants it. In fact, a few moments ago the hon. member who was speaking suggested that if the Liberal party again formed the government of this country they would want to ensure that the benefits of this legislation are extended to all classes of agriculture.

As I listened to the hon. gentleman who just resumed his seat I wondered if this theme might not become the next election cry. I can hear the voices of Conservative candidates in my own riding clamouring, "Re-elect us and we will see to it that the principle of cash advances is extended to other fields of agriculture as well".

My reason for supporting this legislation differs from the reason of the western grain growers. For the past few years in this house I have drawn attention to the need for a change in the legislation with respect to the wheat board to make it possible for the livestock and poultry producer of British Columbia to receive grain at the fire-sale prices at which it is made available to the prairie poultry and livestock producer. I see that the former minister of agriculture is nodding his head in agreement. This has been my plea for some years.

Mr. Gardiner: If I am nodding my head I must have Saint Vitus' dance.

Mr. Fraser: You had better put your head in a brace.

Mr. Hahn: It is apparent to me that at least theoretically there is the possibility that the prairie farmer is going to have to have a lien or some other form of agreement attached to the sale of his wheat so it will not be offered for sale to his neighbouring poultry and livestock producer at the ridiculous price of $18 to $20 a ton. This being the case it will put the prairie livestock and poultry producer in the position where he will have to pay the wheat board price for grain. I hope that in turn this will assist those particular industries in my own province to get back on their feet again for they have lost many sales of their own products by reason of the fact that they could not compete with these fire-sale prices.

This legislation was described yesterday by the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden) as being legislation of an emergency nature. I must admit I have been in the house for only a few years but I fail to see how what has been a chronic condition which has existed in this country for a long time should suddenly become an emergency situation. For this reason I suggest that the legislation has been designed to meet a long-standing chronic condition in a stop-gap fashion. I would like very much to see the same kind of legislation extended to the fruit and vegetable growers of the province of British Columbia and eventually to all agriculturists in Canada.

I can appreciate that both the present and former ministers of agriculture say that such a measure would be impractical at this time and that it is necessary to get this legislation through the house in order that the prairie farmers might get funds which they badly need to buy the apples of British Columbia and other produce and for this reason I will be only too happy to see this legislation go into effect as quickly as possible.

However, it does not detract from the need for legislation to assist the fruit grower, the potato grower and other segments of the agricultural industry of Canada today.

The government of the day has indicated time and time again that it is concerned with the fact that the agricultural industry in this country is in a depressed state, and this condition applies not only to the grain growers of the prairies. For instance, we find in today's paper that the apple growers of Lebanon are going to sell their apples to Great Britain. That immediately causes me some concern because I begin to wonder what is to happen to the apples from the Okanagan valley of British Columbia which we have been accustomed to sell to Great Britain. Certainly if there is one thing that the government of the day has proven to us it is that while it may have a 13-point program for agriculture it has not set it to work very quickly.

An hon. Member: George!

Mr. Hahn: I hear some groans behind me. I have not seen the 13-point program. It may be that it was not desirable to show it in my particular riding. I am interested in knowing what it does say. How does it intend to stabilize the agricultural industry of this country?

This legislation is stop-gap legislation to assist the prairie grain grower and the wheat farmers of the prairies. It is not going to help us particularly on the Pacific coast other than possibly—and I say theoretically—helping the grower of livestock and poultry. Does the program say what my Conservative opponent said throughout the campaign? The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) drew attention to what his opponent said. It does seem strange to me that it does not matter what riding one represents, except the hon. gentlemen who are now occupying the Conservative benches in the house, every candidate who ran in this country for the Conservatives said that this government, if elected, was going to accept sterling. Here are the exact words of my opponent. He said:

> A vote for me is a vote for John Diefenbaker. We will see the farmer get—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I interrupt the hon. member. Some time ago I stopped the minister because it appeared that quite a number of other members wished to take part in the debate on this bill. It has been a pretty free ranging debate tonight, dealing with almost everything but the bill. If the hon. member would go back to the principle of the bill, which has to do with cash advances to the grain growers of the west, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to do that. I did note that a good number of other members were drawing attention to these matters and it was in that same frame of mind that I was drawing to your attention what the gentleman who opposed me had to say with respect to the matter.

I am sure you will appreciate that while the bill that is before us has to do with cash advances, the providing of advance payments for prairie grain, you will also appreciate that this whole question is interlocked with the need for getting rid of this particular grain and it is in that vein that I speak. We have those individuals who are claiming that this government is going to accept sterling. I for one am interested in knowing exactly what the point of view might be.

Mr. Harkness: Order.

Mr. Hahn: The minister says "order". It is not too pleasing to his ear to hear some of these things. I can appreciate that.

When we were discussing this same question of cash advances for grain stored on the farm in former years we suggested that we should sell our crop and accept sterling. The hon. member for Bow River indicated a while ago that two or three of the new parliamentary assistants voted for the amendment that we proposed on November 26, 1953. I think the house might like to know exactly those who were in favour of accepting sterling. On the list I see the names of the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Bell); the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Charlton); the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker); the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hodgson); the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) and four or five others, one or two of whom are not with us today. You will gather, sir, that there is a need for the government of this country to find a way or a means of disposing of the surplus products, the goods that we have, rather than resorting completely to this particular measure which is only a temporary measure.

You will recall reading, as I have done, that the one-time prime minister of Canada, Sir Robert Borden, brought in a measure on a temporary basis. That measure was so temporary that it is with us today. I refer to the income tax. How temporary is this going to be? Is it going to be the solution of the particular economic problems that face us today? This is a question that we must be prepared to answer and to take responsibility for.

This government has promised an over-all agricultural policy which will get rid of our products. It has brought in a measure having to do with cash advances on grain stored on the farm. No one is opposing this particular measure but we would be interested in hearing the minister's reflections on this particular question. What is going to be done with the grain after it has been delivered and the cash advances made? How is the government going to get rid of it? Are they going to receive it in one place and bury it in another?

Mr. A. M. Campbell (The Battlefords): Mr. Speaker, I fully intended to let this measure go through without saying anything about it; but representatives from the grain-growing areas and a good many others have taken part in the debate and perhaps my constituents would be disappointed if I did not have at least a few words to say on it and I can assure you they will not be long.

I have heard a good many optimistic speeches during last night and today about what this bill will do toward putting money in the hands of the farmers. When I listened to some of the new members sitting on the government benches I had the impression that they seemed to think that the government of the day has all the answers. I want to warn them at this point that this is a huge problem and it is going to take all the brains that they have and probably a few more before it is solved.

As far as putting money into the hands of the farmers is concerned—that is what I am mainly interested in—there is one clause in this bill that I am a little worried about. This clause says that if a farmer has borrowed money under the interim financing act of 1956 that money will have to be repaid out of those cash advances. In my district last year our quota was four bushels to the acre and a good many of the farmers in the district were not able to deliver even that amount of grain. When I left home this year very few of them had been able to deliver the initial quota although they were on a one-bushel quota. The people who were not able to deliver more than five bushels per acre last year were not in a position to repay those loans; it was impossible for them to do so. If, when they get an advance this year on this year's crop, they have to repay those loans there will not be very much money in their pockets.

That is the question that is bothering me. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) who is piloting the bill through the house may have the answer to it. However, I just want to warn the government that many of the farmers will not get much benefit from this legislation.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, because of the number of speeches that have been made on this bill it may be interpreted that hon. members coming from ridings that are not predominantly wheat-growing ones are not entirely sympathetic to the bill. It may also be miscontrued that hon. members on this side of the house are also hopeful that when this legislation is passed something further is going to be done to assist the diversified farmer or the small tree fruit grower.

In my riding we have tree fruit growers in certain areas who are in quite dire circumstances. These people market their product through a central selling agency, receiving perhaps a small down payment. Yet they have capital tied up for a year or maybe two years.

It is conceivable that they may wish to borrow money on the certificates which they have. There are other circumstances which are even more trying in that many of the small fruit growers, even this year, were obliged to allow the fruit either to rot on the trees or to pick it and take it to a suitable dump because they were unable to market their fruit. Only 80 miles away from where my home is cherries were selling at a price of $8 a crate. Yet they were rotting on the trees because there was no market. All of these difficulties will have to be ironed out.

I am going to support the bill. Since I have been in this house for the past nine years there have been more bills and more measures dealing with the wheat problem and the wheat farmers on the prairies and I have supported them all along the line. I realize that they are under grave difficulties at this time. But I do not want some of the new members on the government side or the members of the C.C.F. party to think that I swallow everything that they say about the conditions or about why these conditions have arisen. For instance, the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden) had this to say last evening about the reasons for the circumstances that prevail on the prairies at this time. I am reading from page 491 of Hansard:

> The producers are not responsible for the condition which exists but they are forced under legislation to sell their grain to the wheat board.

Of course he qualified that statement by saying this:

> They asked for it and the government adopted the plan.

He might as well say, "They asked for it and they got it." The farmers asked for the wheat board; they wanted it set up. It was not the miners in Kimberley or the fruit growers in Creston. The farmers asked for it, it was set up. Now, of course, they say that it was because the board was operating under a Liberal government that they did not sell grain. If a board is set up and is going to be directed entirely by any government, then it is not a board at all. I therefore do not think the blame is entirely on the administration. Of course, the hon. member for Yorkton started to say that it was the administration that was responsible for the situation and then he went on to say that it was the give-away policies of the United States. At least we have in this western hemisphere some countries that are prepared to do something for the underdeveloped countries. They are willing to give some wheat away. That should be the charitable attitude of many of the members of this house and they should not say that the circumstances under which they find themselves are brought about owing to the charity of some other government.

There was another member over here who dragged out that old story that we have heard for nine years. I hope that all the new members over there do not feel obligated to tell us about the circumstances in which they contributed $600 million to the economy of this country by having a fixed price during the war and immediately after it. We have heard all that before and, in my opinion, much of it is nonsense. We had price fixing during the war. We had wage regulations during the war. If they want the truth of the matter, I can recall working in the mines producing the lead and zinc for the war effort, and I can recall the time when up to 300 or 400 miners sold their automobiles out on the prairies where wheat was being sold. The miners just could not get the gasoline. They were being taxed to such an extent that they could not afford to operate their cars. The cars were being sold out on the prairies. I am not kicking about this matter. However, let us not have too much of this talk about hard luck. We are going along with it but some time we are just going to get tired.

There is another speech to which I take some exception. I think it is despicable that a member of this house, having sat with one of his hon. colleagues for many years, should stoop to attack that member as if that member were completely dishonest, and charge him with certain things when it was impossible for him to appear on the floor of the house and defend himself. I am referring to the speech made last evening by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr. Bryson). The hon. member seemed to imply that the former member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre was running a dishonest bootleg joint, not in rye but in wheat. He had this to say. While he had not mentioned the former member up to this point, as reported at page 484 of Hansard of October 28, he said this:

> It is an offer to buy wheat provided that the farmer delivers it to a point specified in this advertisement for a cent a pound. This applies to No. 5 and No. 6 wheat which today are selling on the market for 97 cents a bushel.

What market? We understand that there are on the western prairies a billion bushels of wheat for which there is no market. This former member apparently is offering to buy wheat at 60 cents a bushel. Of course the hon. member points out that the market price, if there was a market, is 97 cents a bushel. But he fails to point out that the freight charges on a bushel of wheat to the lakehead is 20 cents a bushel. Therefore, if his figures are correct,—and of course I have no reason to doubt them—that would make the price of that wheat delivered to the elevator 97 cents less 20 cents which is 77 cents.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member had better learn something about the wheat business.

Mr. Byrne: I know that in the Lethbridge marketing area the farmers are going to the feed lots and selling wheat at 60 cents a bushel. They were glad to get the cash. Now, this was an advertisement, and it was not forced upon anyone. A man is in business, and I presume he is feeding the wheat to feeder cattle. If that is a crime, there are a great number of people throughout this country committing that crime. At least he has gone out to find a market for wheat, found the wheat and disposed of it. I think it ill behooves a member to attack this gentleman because of his enterprise, and certainly I would not like to hear any more of that.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, when the resolution was before us I said I would support the principle of the legislation because I understood the payments were to be made available through elevator agents and that they were to be made available interest free. These two facts are correct, and I shall not change my position. I certainly feel that the elevator agents in western Canada are the people who best know the business of the local farmer. They are friends of the farmer, and they are held in high regard by their farmer customers. They are certainly the people who are best able to handle the cash advances.

I disagree with the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner) when he contends that the old bank loan scheme is superior to the legislation that is before us. I believe it will be only a matter of weeks until the amount of money taken up under this measure will show the hon. member was just as wrong in the statement he made as to the amount of money that would be taken under this legislation as compared with the amount of money paid out to farmers under the other legislation as he was in other statements that he has made in this house in recent days. Over the years I have noticed that the hon. member for Melville very often, not only gets himself into hot water with the statements he makes but causes great anxiety and a great disturbance in his own party. On so many occasions we have seen the hon. member taken to task in this house by the leader of his own party or another colleague in the cabinet.

Mr. Gardiner: I consider where it comes from.

Mr. Argue: I think you are speaking about your own statement when you make that interjection.

There is one part of this bill that I feel is far from adequate. I had hoped that when the government was considering the payment of cash advances that in setting forth the quota on which cash advances would be made they would have guaranteed that the farmer would have an opportunity of delivering grain against that quota so that at the end of that crop year, or at some later date if the quota should not be available, the farmer would have an opportunity of delivering, in this case six bushels of wheat, against an advance that was being made in the current crop year. I had hoped that the government would not do as they have done in this legislation, and that is give no guarantee at all as to the quota that the farmer may have at any given marketing point.

Moreover, there is a stipulation in precise terms that if the 6-bushel quota is not available at any marketing point and an individual farmer has taken advantage of this legislation, the balance he owes will be a first claim against grain he draws in the succeeding crop year. In other words, there is no guarantee in this legislation as to marketing opportunities that western wheat producers will have in this crop year or in any other crop year.

This legislation is going to be of advantage on a very temporary basis. It is going to do exactly what the minister has said. It is going to mean that out of the national treasury this crop year will come somewhere between $2 million and $3 million to pay the interest charged against the money advanced under this legislation, and that is the sum total of the real effect in economic terms. It will do the other things we have been saying it will do, should do, and which are of advantage, namely it will make a large sum of money available within a matter of weeks.

The benefit during this crop year is going to be small, particularly small because there is no guarantee that the 6-bushel quota will be available or that the farmer will have an opportunity to deliver six bushels. How could that be done? It could be done very simply. It may not be possible, it is true, to have a 6-bushel quota at every marketing point, although as other members have said the promises that were held out to the western electorate caused us to expect that a 6-bushel quota would be no trouble at all. If a 6-bushel quota is not available at a marketing point, a farmer has not an opportunity of discharging his obligation under this legislation. It would not be difficult to provide a supplementary quota at that marketing point equal to the amount of the quota that could not be delivered in the current crop year. In other words, if farmers at a marketing point had an opportunity of delivering five bushels on the quota this year, then a supplementary quota of one bushel could be made available in the following crop year. In this way all producers in the various marketing points would have the same opportunity of delivering grain.

Under this legislation, however, there is no guarantee as to what market will be available for grain. I feel that is a very serious omission. If we had turned the corner, if we had reached the bottom and were on the way up in regard to markets, we would not be as concerned as we are. From August 1 to date under the present administration there has been a very substantial drop in exports of Canadian grain as compared with a similar period the year before. There has been a very substantial drop in markets. In introducing this legislation the minister said it was expected the measure might cost the federal treasury something in the neighbourhood of $2.25 million, and that is true. This $2.25 million will accrue to the benefit of the producer. During the current crop year 1956 from August 1 to October 16—I am quoting now from the board of grain commissioners for Canada, statistics branch, Canadian grain position, Wednesday, October 16, 1957—farmers marketed a total of 118.9 million bushels of grain, this year, in the same period marketings had dropped to 93.3 million bushels.

In other words, from August 1 to October 16 of this year farm marketings of all grain were down 22 per cent as compared with last year. If I were to make a very conservative estimate I might say that farmers, because of the drop in marketings, have lost in revenue over $30 million.

So from August 1 of this year as compared with the same period last year, there is a drop in farm marketings to the farmers from the sale of grain of over $30 million.

With regard to exports, in the same period this year they are down as compared with last year. I am quoting now from the export figures for all grain. A year ago the total was 78.8 million bushels; for the same period this year the total was 60.6 million bushels, or a drop of 23 per cent.

Farmers by the thousands in the three western provinces are facing imminent bankruptcy. It is in my opinion only a matter of one or two years or perhaps even a few months—unless something is done to correct the basic situation, which is a falling off in markets and in agricultural prices together with an increase in the cost of production—before thousands of farmers will be driven off their land.

The legislation now before this house will help for a few months but it will not help materially for a longer period unless something is done to correct the situation in regard to our loss of markets and to improve our sales to the export markets of the world.

I do not know what the government will be able to accomplish in this field. We in this group have advanced policies from time to time which we believe will restore and increase our markets for agricultural products—the acceptance of sterling, sales on the basis of long-term contracts, the setting up of an export-import board and so on. We have a policy directed to increasing our sales and exports of agricultural products. One would have expected when the minister was introducing the bill to the house and there was a short review of our export prospects that there would have been some statement from the official opposition as to their present position and their policy. However, there has been no such statement and the official opposition has not advanced a single suggestion to restore our markets or to gain new markets. As a matter of fact in this house a few days ago one very prominent and outstanding member of the official opposition made a careful speech in which he gave the government a dressing down for not having done something in this field, for not having advanced a policy and for not having achieved great things. Then, when he was asked what was the policy of the official opposition, here are his words:

> Our policy over here is to get the government which is responsible to tell the people what their policy is.

I am quoting of course the words of the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson). I do not think any statement would have been more bare or weak than that. If that is the best the Liberal party can offer the people of this country as far as an export policy is concerned, merely to say "our policy is to find out what the Conservative policy is", the Liberal party will get even less support in the days ahead than it has had in recent months.

An hon. Member: That was a leadership speech.

Mr. Argue: Oh—what a leadership speech that was. As far as anything constructive is concerned it is empty and barren; just as empty and barren as the Liberal party was in its campaign during the recent election. Of course the Conservative party had a great objective; they have not spelled out just how they might reach this objective but their objective is a good one. It has been to reduce Canada's purchases from the United States by some 15 per cent and to transfer those purchases to European and soft currency countries, in other words to countries which might purchase greater quantities of goods from us.

We have seen little in the way of constructive accomplishments towards this end. As a matter of fact with respect to this agricultural problem the new Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) in his speech on September 9 to the national dairy council of Canada said:

> The long-range view with regard to our wheat entails a forward-looking policy with regard to general production, and it may well be that progressively over the years our acreage devoted solely to the growing of wheat should be appreciably reduced and greater emphasis should be placed on diversified crops and on the livestock industry.

Then, in a later interchange he was talking about 20 million acres of wheat. Of course the acreage is down to just about 20 million acres this year but if the government is suggesting, through the Minister of Trade and Commerce that wheat production should be reduced and that livestock production should be increased he is talking about something which affects the Minister of Agriculture. I now ask the Minister of Agriculture to say what agricultural products he would like to see reduced and what livestock products he wants to see increased. Does he want to see an increase in the production of beef; does he want to see an increase in the production of pork.

I have looked over the markets since the Minister of Trade and Commerce made this statement and from a quick review since that time I would say there has been a drop of anywhere from $1 to $1.50 a hundredweight for good steers; since he made this statement the price of hogs has dropped by something like $7, from $32 to $25 within a few weeks. Does the Minister of Agriculture agree with the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that wheat acreage should be reduced and livestock production increased.

As I see the situation, and from what I have heard from members from all parts of the country who have been taking part in this debate, the agricultural market and prices in other parts of Canada are in just as bad a mess as they are on the prairies. Is it going to help livestock markets and prices in eastern Canada for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to suggest that western farmers should reduce their wheat acreage and increase the production of livestock. Is the farmer going to take land out of wheat production. If so he will likely do what he has done in the past, namely increase the production of barley and oats. Well, there is a glut of oats and there is a glut of barley; there is a surplus of pork if you can judge by the market prices.

This government has not found an answer to the critical problem which faces agricultural producers across Canada, the increasing prices which have to be paid for agricultural products in relation to the farmer's income. I think the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce which I have read to the house was ill considered. It was a statement which was opposed by farm organizations right across the country, and if this is the best the Minister of Trade and Commerce can do as a suggestion for improving agricultural conditions in Canada it demonstates to me that worsening conditions as a result of falling markets are likely to continue.

Many members have made reference to western Canada in this debate and spoken of what they would like to have in other parts of this country. To all those hon. members who are saying that this measure is just for the prairies, or that it seems to represent special treatment for people on the prairies, I would say this: many years ago the grain producers in the prairie provinces came to the conclusion that they would do better if they marketed their grain through a central agency, in this case established under federal legislation, than they would if they relied upon the open market, or private trade, or free enterprise. I suggest to those from other parts of Canada who want and need improved prices for their products, or who need better legislation for their constituents, that they should first of all propose that the government in co-operation with the producers be prepared to establish marketing boards in line with the producers' wishes and that then, after having established marketing boards in which the federal government takes a direct interest if so requested by the producers, they should ask for initial prices at reasonable limits, cash advances, and all the other things that are a necessary part of an orderly system of marketing.

Mr. B. R. Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the wheat farmers could wait another three minutes for these cash advances? I do not think I shall take more than three minutes to say what little I have to say, not being an expert. The bill we have before us is, of course, a temporary measure and, as has been pointed out, it is a relief measure. In addition it has been pointed out by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Stefura) and others that this measure of relief has been well deserved because of the action of the farmers during the war years.

The measure also calls attention to the distress of the farmers due to the increased cost of farming operations. There is also no doubt in my mind that these conditions must, either directly or indirectly, be the responsibility of the federal financial policy adopted both by this government and by governments of the past, and also of the trade policy of the past government.

What I wish principally to deal with is the idea of a food bank, an indea which is related to this measure, in my opinion, because I think the setting up of a food bank would bring about a situation in which cash advances would scarcely be needed. I think it would be in the interest of the Canadian people as a whole that they should invest in the purchase of wheat to be stored, not only in this country but in the countries of other friendly nations, in order that the wheat might be readily available for marketing at those points. Orders for wheat would then not have to be placed many months in advance in order that an individual wishing to purchase could obtain delivery.

In addition, the food bank would be a guarantee to those people who are interested in the purchase of wheat that over a period of years there would always be a supply on hand. It may be said that the fact that wheat was readily available might lead to depressed prices. I do not agree with that view because it is a common practice in all manner of trade to have goods available for trade in places where they are to be sold.

An hon. Member: Three minutes.

Mr. Leboe: Well, you will have to wait another minute and a half, I am sorry. I have not got much more to say in connection with this. It would seem to me that the policy I am advocating would to a large extent remove the distress which this bill is designed to lessen. It has been pointed out by hon. members on all sides of the house that this is only a start on what could be a very complicated and involved program. I think we should be following a course, instead, which would lead us to a more effective and simple solution to this agricultural problem.

It was pointed out by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hahn) that this legislation would remove the undesirable effects of a fire sale of wheat such as so adversely affected the poultry and dairy industry in the province of British Columbia, and I would like to go on record as supporting this legislation, not only because it will aid the farmers in the area I represent but also because it will be of assistance to farmers in other agricultural areas in the southern part of my province.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few brief words to say, perhaps they will be the last spoken in the debate. I have got the impression from the speeches made by representatives of different parties in this house that the farmers in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are all hard up. I speak only from what I know —I like to give credit to hon. members who know more than I do—but my experience in Manitoba and Saskatchewan which I have visited in the last three or four years, and where I studied as a student over 40 years ago, is that farmers there are not hard up. Quite a number of them are able to go to a more sunny climate from time to time, and when I attended church there on Sundays I noticed the collection plates. Formerly, Mr. Speaker, they contained coppers and nickels. When I was last there I saw a number of plates going forward and you could not see a piece of silver, they were covered with dollar bills, two dollar bills and five dollar bills. I do not think it is fair to the farmers of the west to tell this house that they are on the verge of bankruptcy.

I have promised to support the government, to give them a chance to make good. I support this bill on another ground, too. The Progressive Conservative party also promised to reduce taxes. The increased taxes which will be necessary because of the cost of the bill are not going to amount to anything, because we are going to have decreased taxes just the same.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I assure you that I do not intend to take too much time to talk about the bill because I support the principle of the measure now before us. I do wish to commend the minister for bringing in this bill and for keeping the promise of his party that they would provide cash advances to farmers. I congratulate him because in the first place he did keep his promise and secondly because he has kept faith with those things he said to western farmers during the election campaign.

I look upon this method of helping the farmers in a temporary way—and of course that is all it is—as being quite superior to the method used by the previous government under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act, and I have said so right from the beginning. Over the next few months I think the farmers will indicate that they prefer it as well.

I followed what was said by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) a few minutes ago and in a general way I pretty well go along with it. He did make the complaint, however, that there was no guarantee to the farmer in the present legislation of a quota of any particular size during the crop year and that is quite true. I would say to him that if I understood his suggestion about a supplementary quota correctly the quota for the new crop year of course would be that much less and in the long run would not be of too great help. It may be that I did not understand exactly what he suggested but it did appear to me that the idea of a supplementary quota would merely deduct from the new quota for a new crop year and be that much less.

Mr. Argue: Not at that marketing point. Of course, if the grain was delivered you could not fill one space twice. But the purpose of my suggestion was to give each producer in western Canada the same opportunity to deliver grain as every other producer.

Mr. Low: Yes. I find myself in general agreement with that suggestion but I doubt very much that it would be possible to guarantee to the farmer a quota of any particular size during the crop year for the simple reason that storage is not available. Fundamental to the whole problem raised by the hon. member for Assiniboia is the question of adequate inland and terminal storage.

Mr. Argue: I agree.

Mr. Low: As a matter of fact, I think that has been one of the weaknesses of Canadian government policy over the past 20 years. It was about two decades ago that we began to increase our wheat production tremendously due to increased mechanization, better methods of farming and that sort of thing. At this time we began to consolidate small farms into larger ones and brought into use big strings of equipment and as a consequence there was a greater production of wheat. We should have been keeping pace with that increase in production by making available increased storage facilities.

As I have said on other occasions, providing increased storage facilities for grains or other farm products that could benefit the whole country is, in my opinion, the responsibility of the government of the country. I have constantly said that individuals in this nation should not be expected to do for themselves that which is prohibitively expensive or which they cannot do nearly so well as the government could and it is the role of government to accept responsibility in this regard.

I have pointed out in this house on many occasions that the government of the United States did not wait for the farmers to provide storage for themselves. Some years ago when it introduced its farm price support bill it decided it was necessary to provide approved storage so it would know that any of the products against which advances were made were maintained in proper storage and could be preserved properly in facilities for which the lock and key was in the hands of an inspector of the government.

The United States government increased storage facilities on a large scale. I pointed out the other day and I now repeat it for the benefit of those who may not have heard it at that time and because of its application to this legislation that between 1953 and 1957 the United States doubled its amount of approved inland and terminal storage for grains. This was done entirely at the expense of the government of that country and for the clear purpose of making it possible to receive grains from the farmer as soon as they were threshed so advances could be made against them. The government of that country did not make advances on a basis like this and their advances were far more generous, almost exactly the same as our initial payments. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, this act will never be completely successful until we have provided a great deal more internal and terminal storage for grain.

Perhaps it is a practical suggestion or perhaps it is not but I know one man who could build elevators. Regardless of how he looked upon parliament and no matter what he did in this house to raise the hackles on people's necks—particularly those in the opposition—the Right Hon. C. D. Howe could build elevators—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Low: —and I suggest that we put him to work and keep him busy building elevators and by so doing we would certainly make this act workable.

I seriously suggest to the minister that he will find tremendous difficulty on the very ground that was mentioned by the hon. member for Assiniboia, that if you do not have a guarantee to the farmers of a specific quota during any crop year then the benefits under this legislation are going to be pretty small in many sections of the country.

There is nothing in the act to indicate just what kind of storage the grain must be in before it qualifies for advances. Up in the Peace river country that I represent most of the grain is in cold storage. The fact is that this was a very wet year in most parts of the Peace river country. Grain growth was rank and heavy but it was late and then early this fall we had a heavy snowfall, as much as 24 inches in some parts of the country. The grain is all down under the snow and doubtless the farmers will not be able to get it out until next spring.

The question that now arises is this. Does the grain which is in cold storage qualify for advances? This does pose a problem. There is nothing in the bill that qualifies it; the bill simply refers to grain that is to be delivered and does not specify threshed grain.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Low: If you look at the bill you will find it does not; it simply says grain that is to be delivered. Now the grain I have referred to ostensibly is to be delivered and this is a matter that will be of great concern to the people in this area who will have to depend for their livelihood on getting advances against grain that may be on the ground as yet unthreshed and undelivered.

Some people in the Peace river country some years ago took the advice thrown to them by experts in Ottawa and began to convert their wheat farms into barley farms. They have attempted to get in the production of livestock and most of the grain produced is oats and barley. If you take your pencil —you do not have to have it sharpened at both ends at all—you can calculate what these people are going to receive at 20 cents a bushel out of their 150 or 200 acres of very excellent oats. You will soon see how little this act is going to mean to those people up there unless it is accompanied by other measures such as have been suggested, particularly measures that will result in proper marketing of their crops and sales at prices that will make it possible for them to continue in business.

These are some of the things which must be considered. I look upon the principle of this bill as being a principle of legislation which is to be applied in a temporary fashion until something much more important and more far-reaching is done to help the farmers. But I insist again that it will not give the full benefit envisioned for it until we get much better storage facilities in this country so that we can guarantee the farmer some sort of specific quota in the crop years.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: I have to inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying when I was interrupted an hour and a quarter ago, I do not think there is any need for me to say a great deal in closing this debate. Most of the hon. members who have spoken in the debate have been in favour of the bill. Those who have criticized it, with one or two exceptions, have stated that in spite of their criticism they were going to vote for it.

I should, however, like to make a few remarks and to reply to a few of the statements which have been made which I think have left an erroneous impression. To begin with, most of the debate has been of an extraneous nature and dealt mainly with general agricultural questions rather than with the legislation before the house. That, I suppose, has been endemic in this house for many years; it certainly has in the past 12 years that I have been here. I think perhaps instead of being endemic in this case it became epidemic; but, in any event, a very large number of the people who spoke really did not speak in connection with this bill at all; they spoke about various other things such as apples and the necessity of doing something for other segments of the agricultural economy and other segments of the economy, altogether and completely divorced from agriculture. We have never pretended, Mr. Speaker, at any time, that this was a solution of the wheat problem, in spite of what the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner) said at one stage in his remarks—right near the end, as a matter of fact—that we were holding up this bill as a solution of all the problems in the west but we never—

Mr. Gardiner: I did not say you were doing that; I said some of the members were.

Mr. Harkness: Well, you meant that the government was doing it.

Mr. Gardiner: Just what you are saying now.

Mr. Harkness: Nobody in this party has ever taken that position. We have said quite frankly from the start of this legislation, and before the legislation came before the house that the cash advances legislation which we thought was required was in the nature of what you might call emergency legislation. It was required at the present time in order to tide western farmers over the extremely difficult financial situation in which they find themselves. As a matter of fact, it has been required for several years past but the Liberal administration steadily refused to meet that requirement.

We have never pretented that this legislation really was anything more than a means of getting western farmers over the difficult situation in which they find themselves in the fall of the year because of inability to deliver their grain. But I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that in addition to doing that it has a lot of other widespread benefits, as I indicated in my speech here yesterday. In other words, the amount of money which is put out into the hands of the farmers, which we estimate will be between $100 million and $150 million, is going to have a very important effect on the general economy of this country. It is, as I said yesterday, just one more step in the various steps that this government is taking to meet what were difficult economic situations which we inherited from the previous administration.

Mr. Speaker, I have not any doubt whatever that the matter which was brought up by several members opposite during the course of this debate—and they have been bringing it up every day and trying to attribute it to the present government—the matter of unemployment, will be helped very considerably by the passage of this bill and by the putting into circulation of $100 million to $150 million, which we think this bill will put into the farmers' hands and start circulating right through this country. That money will have a very beneficial effect, not only so far as the farmer who receives it is concerned but so far as the country storekeeper, the wholesale merchant, the transportation worker, the manufacturer, the people working in financial institutions and in industries of all kind, right through this country from Vancouver island to Newfoundland.

Mr. Studer: And the banks.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Before he finishes making his reply I wonder whether he would sum up by explaining how this legislation is going to be of assistance to the market gardeners in my constituency who have lost hundreds of thousands of dollars by reason of floods?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, this legislation is not going to be of direct benefit to those market gardeners who have lost their year's earnings unfortunately because of floods but it is going to be of indirect help to them, as it is going to be to people all through this country.

There is one other general remark I should like to make. I was pleased, Mr. Speaker, to see so many Liberal members from the province of Quebec taking part in this debate. This was the first time in the 12 years that I have been here that I have ever heard one of those members take part in a debate with regard to a wheat matter and I am glad to see this change of heart on their part. I do not understand why it is that during all those past years they have never said a word in connection with a wheat measure, but today and yesterday they have been springing to their feet one after the other and saying something with regard to this measure.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Does the minister want an answer to that?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, I would like to know.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): I will give it to you. You are surprised because some members from Quebec are getting up in this debate and talking on the wheat bill. They learned this from your candidates in Quebec speaking and writing in the last election against any cent going to the west.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the hon. members to your left seem to enjoy applauding canards of various sorts more than they enjoy applauding anything else.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): It is not a canard; it is true. I will show you the manifesto if you would like to see it.

Mr. Harkness: These are not the sort of canards that help the situation.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): I will not sit down. It is just speaking the truth.

Mr. Harkness: In any event, Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to find this sudden interest on the part of those members in these wheat questions and I hope it will be continued.

I should like to say just a few words about some of the remarks that were made in this debate. The hon. member for Melville rather astounded me. He took the line and tried to establish the fact that the loan legislation which the Liberals had in effect last year was better than this legislation. All I can say to the hon. member is that I think he has not wakened up yet. He does not seem to realize that the reason he is sitting where he is and the reason he has hardly any members from western Canada sitting with him, or one of the reasons, is the very fact that they refused to put cash advances in and insisted in putting into effect the loans which were so highly unpopular in western Canada. Possibly it is that the hon. member for Melville has not yet recovered from shock, that he is still suffering from the shock of June 10 and it has affected his judgment. I have always looked upon the right hon. gentleman as being one of the most acute men politically in this House of Commons but he certainly did not show any acuteness in the line he took in regard to this bill.

My right hon. friend went on to make quite an argument to the effect that this bill was more limited than was the loan legislation. He said that it was limited with regard to the number of farmers who were eligible. There is no limitation on the number of farmers who are eligible. Every farmer who has grain in store on his farm is eligible under this legislation. Any idea that the hon. member for Melville tries to put out that this legislation is more limited in its application than was the loan legislation that his government introduced is completely contrary to the facts. He also tried to establish the point that it was limited as to advances to those with the current crop. In fact, his words in connection with that matter, which are to be found at page 464 of Hansard, are as follows:

> But Bill No. 14 limits the number further—
> That is the number of farmers who can take advantage of it.
> —to those with a current year's crop, and limits it by that quota.

It does nothing of the kind. As a matter of fact, the right hon. gentleman's speech indicated the fact that, as I pointed out to him while he was making it, either he had not read it very well or if he had read it he had not understood it. The bill does not do anything of the kind.

Mr. Gardiner: We shall discuss that matter when we get on the sections of the bill.

Mr. Harkness: That is right. The right hon. gentleman also tried to maintain that the cash that would be received by the western farmers under this legislation could and probably would be less than that which they received under the loan scheme. All I can tell him is that not one of the western farm organizations, and particularly the elevator companies, the pools, the United Grain Growers, the line elevator companies, the wheat board itself, the people who are going to administer this act and deal with it have that opinion. As a matter of fact, they think that the number of loans, according to the estimate, will be something along the line I have indicated in the house on several occasions.

Mr. Marler: Loans or advances?

Mr. Harkness: Advances. The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr. Bryson) seemed to be under a misapprehension with regard to the form of these advances and so on. I do not think I had better go into it at this stage. He can bring that question up again at the committee stage. However, he tried to maintain that this was not an advance at all. As a matter of fact, it is a true advance. It is exactly the same as the illustration about which he was talking, namely the way in which we used to buy cattle and horses and so on in western Canada. You bought them and you paid an advance on them; it might be $10 or it might be $100. This is exactly the same principle.

The hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Harrison) tried to maintain—the hon. member for Assiniboia came back to this matter—that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) said that the farmers should not grow wheat. Neither in his speech at Winnipeg nor at any other time, did the Minister of Trade and Commerce say any such thing. What he said was that there should be some shift from wheat to diversified crops and livestock. I will deal with that matter a little bit later on.

As to the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart), I think perhaps the less I say with regard to his speech with regard to this matter, the better. In other words, he raised a purely sectional cry, one which I was disappointed to hear the hon. member raise because we have been good friends for many years and I know that he has many good qualities. However, apparently good judgment with regard to this matter is not one of them. Of course the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. LaCroix) did the same thing. He raised this sectional cry as did a considerable number of other hon. members. I deplore the fact that that type of argument has been advanced here in the house.

I now come to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston). I must say that his speech was what you might call a great deal of sound signifying nothing.

Mr. Marler: The minister is giving a fairly good example himself.

Mr. Harkness: I can understand the hon. member for Bow River talking in the way he was talking. He is frightened. He knows that when another election comes along his chances are fairly small. As a result he is talking in a sort of wild way from fear.

Mr. Byrne: In other words, this is a political bill.

Mr. Harkness: I might just say that his interpretation of my remarks in connection with the trade conference held in Washington shows no understanding of the general situation or of what went on there. I would advise him to quit speculating along that line because it will only get him into trouble, not only here but out in our home town of Calgary and the surrounding countryside. As to his statements about barter transactions, I think he should read up on that matter also. The barter transactions which were carried on by the United States in recent years and their undertaking not to engage in those same kind of barter deals is a matter which is going to be of considerable benefit to us; that is the fact that they said they were not going to enter into those transactions except when there were additional commercial sales, which meant additional commercial sales not only for themselves but for us. In other words, that type of barter deal is something they are not going to enter into in countries such as Great Britain and those in western Europe where they entered into them last year, in markets which we formerly had and which we would have had if those barter deals had not been taking place.

Mr. Sinclair: What about Japan?

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) raised the matter of alternate elevator points and I will come back to that matter when we are at the committee stage.

I should like to say to the hon. member for Maple Creek-Swift Current (Mr. Studer) that I think he made quite a sound speech in regard to this matter.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Who are you to judge?

Mr. Harkness: I can understand why he was anxious not to have his name attached to the speech which was made yesterday and to which his name was attached.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Who are you to judge? I can express my opinion of your speech.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Assiniboia stated that the sum total of the economic effect of this legislation is only $2 million to $3 million in interest which will be put out or help that will be given in that way to farmers. When he made that statement he must surely have completely lost sight of the fact that I pointed out when I started this speech the great general benefit to the farmers and to the western economy of this $100 million to $150 million of cash which is going to go into their hands.

Mr. Argue: I might say to the minister that I was talking about the full crop year and not an immediate period.

Mr. Harkness: Very well. The hon. member for Assiniboia also said that there was no guarantee that the 6-bushel quota will be capable of being filled. Certainly there is no guarantee in this legislation. This legislation does not pretend to guarantee that result. But I can tell the hon. member this. We believe there is every expectation that this 6-bushel quota will be filled. The scheme is based on the expectation that it will be filled. That is why the 6-bushel quota is mentioned in the scheme. We have every confidence and every expectation that the 6-bushel quota will be filled. Nobody can guarantee that it will be filled. As somebody here said this afternoon, nobody can guarantee that it will be filled. Nobody can look into the future. However, there is very good expectation that it will be filled.

The hon. member also said that there had been a substantial drop in exports since August. This is just not so. I have here the list showing the exports right back to 1927. The substantial and big drop in exports took place back in the months of January, February, March, April, May and June and the situation has been improving since that time. As a matter of fact, back in April of this year approximately 15 million bushels were sold and in the previous April—that is 1956—33 million bushels were sold, well over twice as much, and nearly the same situation prevailed in May and so on, but when we get up to August we find that 29.7 million bushels were exported in 1956 and 27.1 million bushels this year.

In September there were 27.4 million bushels in 1956, and in this year—the estimated figure is not quite complete yet—there is between 24 million and 24.5 million bushels. In other words, the figures for the period August-September are quite close to last year's figures. The big drop was in the period back in the winter, spring, and early summer.

Mr. Harrison: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Harkness: No, I want to finish this right now. The hon. member for Assiniboia also asked what agricultural products did I wish to see increased, and do I agree that wheat acreage should be reduced? Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do agree that there should be some reduction in wheat acreage. During the last four years in this house, as the hon. member probably recalls, I have been saying we should take a long-range view in regard to the general agricultural situation, and particularly the wheat situation. I have said that it was foolish for us to continue planning for the same amount of wheat every year and constantly building up a surplus; that we should divert some of our land into other types of crops. As to the types of crops in which I think we could increase production, I would mention beef and sheep as two of them. I would be quite glad to go into this subject in more detail at a later date.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) said that we should call on the Right Hon. C. D. Howe to help us out at the present time by building some elevators. I doubt whether it would be wise for us to call on the Right Hon. C. D. Howe, no matter how good an elevator builder he may be, because during all the years he handled the wheat business he certainly made a mess of it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIvor: I rise on a point of order. I think that this expression is altogether uncalled for and untrue.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the proof of the pudding is in the eating and we have been eating a very rough pudding in the past few years.

Mr. McIlraith: And in the last few minutes.

Mr. Harkness: I should like to tell the hon. member for Peace River that unthreshed grain does not qualify under this measure. We have a very unfortunate situation in the Peace river country this year, but if he looks at clause 3 (1) he will see it is laid down quite definitely that it is only threshed grain in storage to which this measure applies.

I believe those are all the remarks I wish to make at this time.

Mr. Speaker, is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will you put the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Will those who are in favour of the motion please say yea?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those who are opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Harkness, for Mr. Churchill) which was agreed to on the following division:

It being fifteen minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER JOINT BOARD OF ENGINEERS

Question No. 19—Mr. Chevrier:

1. Who are the members of the St. Lawrence river joint board of engineers?
2. What are the duties of the board?
3. Has the board approved of the plans of the respective governments of Canada and the United States for the transfer of 14-foot navigation from the Canadian side to the American side?
4. Is the board satisfied that this plan will be effective and in operation by July 1, 1958? What effect will this plan have upon traffic over the south channel low level bridge at Cornwall?
5. Will traffic be interrupted over this bridge after April 1, 1958? If so, what alternative means of transportation is being provided to residents of Canada and the United States in this area?
6. Has the board approved of the plans of the respective power entities for channel enlargements from Chimney point to the control dam at Iroquois?
7. What do these plans contemplate so far as the requirements of navigation are concerned?
8. Are they on schedule?
9. Will they meet the requirements of navigation in all respects when (a) transfer of 14-foot navigation from Canada to United States on July 1, 1958, takes place; (b) 27-foot navigation opens in April, 1959?

Answer by: Mr. MacDonald, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport:

The St. Lawrence river joint board of engineers advise as follows:

1. Members for Canada: Hon. George Hees and Mr. Chas. Gavsie; alternates: Mr. H. W. Lea and Mr. Geo. H. Kohl. Members for United States: Hon. Wilber M. Brucker and Hon. Jerome Kuykendall; alternates: Maj. Gen. Chas. G. Holle and Mr. Francis L. Adams.

2. (a) To review, co-ordinate and approve, in behalf of the governments of Canada and United States, the plans and specifications of the works for the development of power in the international rapids section, submitted by the joint builders, namely the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario and the power authority of the state of New York; (b) to insure that the works are constructed in accordance therewith as approved.

3. The board has reviewed the most recent plans of both power and seaway entities for works to be constructed to permit the transfer of 14-foot navigation from the Canadian side to the American side and on the basis of these plans and the accompanying schedules, the board considers that the plans are satisfactory.

4. Yes, if the above schedules are met. As to the effect on traffic, the plans require restriction of public use of the bridge from February 3, 1958, through March 31, 1958, and cessation of public use on April 1, 1958.

5. Yes. Traffic will be diverted to a ferry.

6. Yes.

7. A minimum channel width of 600 feet, a minimum depth of 29.5 feet based on method of regulation 12-A-9 and a maximum velocity of 4 foot per second.

8. No, see answer to question No. 9.

9. (a) Yes; (b) yes, although in some limited reaches the permanent channels may not be completed to full width by April, 1959.

CANADIAN COAST GUARD

Question No. 35—Mr. Barnett:

What steps, if any, since assuming office has the government taken toward the establishment of a Canadian coast guard?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The functions that are normally considered to be the duty of a coast guard are performed in Canada by several agencies of government, in particular my department, the Department of National Defence and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. All these agencies continue to give attention to improvement of their ability to carry out their responsibilities but no decision has been taken to remove functions from these departments and place them under a new and separate agency.

2. What has been the total value of these loans in each of these communities?
3. What percentage of successful applications for loans assisted through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation offices come from Canadian communities with a population of more than 5,000?

Question No. 50—Mr. Fisher:

1. What alterations are planned for Canadian locks at the Sault to make them capable of carrying deep-sea draught vessels?
2. If alterations are planned, what is the target date for completion and the total estimated cost?
3. In terms of width, draught and length, of ships using it, how do the Canadian locks at the Sault compare with the Welland locks?

Answer by: Mr. MacDonald, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport:

1 and 2. At the present time there are no definite plans for alterations to the Canadian Sault Ste. Marie locks to make them capable of carrying deep-sea draught vessels.

3. The dimensions of the Sault Ste. Marie and Welland ship canal locks are as follows:

	Canadian Sault Ste. Marie locks	Welland ship canal locks
Length	900 ft.	859 ft.
Width	60 ft.	80 ft.
Depth of water on lock sills	Normal draught 18'-3" depending on the stage of the St. Marys river.	30 ft.

The Welland ship canal locks were constructed for a depth of 30 feet of water over the sills, but the connecting canal reaches were only excavated for 25 foot depth; these reaches are now being deepened for 27-foot navigation. The limiting length for vessels transiting the Welland ship canal is 715 feet.

NATIONAL LIBRARY

Question No. 51—Mr. Fisher:

1. What is the total staff of the national library?
2. How many employees are French-speaking?
3. Is there a target date for completion of the proposed national library building?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State):

1. Thirty-four.

2. Sixteen (mother tongue); six (bilingual).

3. No. It is expected that the building will be completed by 1962.

UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 61—Mr. MacEachen:

1. How many are registered as unemployed in the province of Nova Scotia at the present time?
2. What were the figures for the same one year ago?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

1. The number of persons registered for employment at offices of the national employment services in the province of Nova Scotia on October 10, 1957, was 11,064.

2. The figure at October 11, 1956, was 7,438.

HOUSING STARTS, BLIND RIVER, ELLIOTT LAKE, BANCROFT

Question No. 64—Mr. Peters:

1. How many new homes have been started in the last 12 months in Blind River, Elliott Lake and Bancroft?
2. How many of these were built under the National Housing Act?
3. What was the amount of the down payment necessary to purchase these units?
4. What was the rate of interest?
5. Has any consideration been given because of the temporary nature of these particular mining areas?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

1. The information is not available. The population of each of these centres is less than 5,000 and a physical count of housing starts is therefore not undertaken. The dominion bureau of statistics conducts a sample survey only.

2. The number of N.H.A. insured home-owner loans during the 12 months from August, 1956, to July, 1957, are as follows:

Blind River	3
Elliott Lake	678
Bancroft	Nil

The number of N.H.A. rental units in the same period are as follows:

Blind River	Nil
Elliott Lake	104
Bancroft (Paudash twp.)	200

3. Blind River—$3,050 (average); Elliott Lake—average down payment $1,160, average cash $606, the balance being provided through second mortgages by the mining companies.

Bancroft—answered by No. 2.

4. The rate of interest on loans currently being made under the National Housing Act, 1954 is 6 per cent. The rate was increased from 5½ per cent by governor in council in January, 1957.

5. Yes. As a condition to insuring loans under the National Housing Act, 1954, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has required each of the mining companies operating in Elliott Lake to provide, commencing December 31, 1959, an increasing cash security to protect the corporation against losses which might be incurred on mortgage loans made to employees of each company. The protection is afforded against any losses which might be incurred prior to 1976.

As Blind River is an established community, no additional security was considered necessary. In Bancroft, and in one instance in Elliott Lake, the mining company itself is the mortgagor, as the loans were made under section 17 of the National Housing Act.

4. What mines received emergency gold mining assistance, and what amount in each case?
5. What was the amount of declared dividends in each case?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys):

1. 51 lode gold mines as at September 30, 1957.

3. $9,070,532.66 during period October 1, 1956-September 30, 1957.

4. Answer is contained in Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act report for fiscal year ended March 31, 1957, which was tabled on October 25, 1957.

5. The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys does not collect and publish this information. It can be obtained from the companies concerned or from trade publications.

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in response to a question asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) I now wish to lay on the table of the house copies of the exchange of correspondence between the dominion government and the provinces with regard to the conference to be held on November 25.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, might I suggest that in conformity with past practice these might be printed as an appendix to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that these documents be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

STARRED QUESTIONS

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY HARBOURS

Question No. 4—Mr. Chevrier:

1. Has the government any plans for the development of ports and harbours along the route of the seaway?
2. What is being done at the port of Montreal? Are the plans as announced by the former administration being carried out? What plans are being evolved for the development of the south shore?
3. Is this area to be taken over by the national harbours board? Are port facilities to be erected here for the expected increase in volume of trade?
4. What is being done at the port of Trois-Rivières?
5. Is consideration being given to the construction of additional wharves and warehouses?
6. Will the national harbours board provide cargo handling equipment at the port for vertical hatch loading and unloading, extra space on existing wharves and new docks?
7. Is consideration being given to the construction of a grain elevator here?
8. What is being done at the port of Sorel?
9. Will the national harbours board provide cargo handling equipment at the port for vertical hatch loading and unloading, extra space on existing wharves and new docks?
10. Are port facilities in this area considered adequate for seaway traffic?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in regard to part 1 of the question, perhaps I might give a reply under three headings. First, the national harbours board is giving active consideration to necessary harbour developments at Quebec, Montreal and Three Rivers. I may say I have had the pleasure of visiting all three of these ports and was very much impressed with the facilities now provided and with the plans for improvements and additions. Second, the development and plans for harbours administered by local commissions, that is to say Toronto, Hamilton and Belleville, are the responsibility of those commissions. Here again I was very glad to have an opportunity to visit both Toronto and Hamilton harbours recently and review the program of work to be undertaken at both points. In Toronto both the federal Department of Public Works and the harbour commission are undertaking additional works. At Hamilton the commission has a substantial program of works and, as previously announced, I propose to introduce legislation to authorize a loan to assist these works. In addition funds will be provided to public works to build a new low-level bridge across the harbour entrance and for certain other terminal development.

3. The development of harbours other than those administered by the national harbours board or local commissions will be the responsibility of the Department of Public Works, which I understand has the matter under review.

In reply to part 2, the program of works at Montreal harbour, estimated to cost $57 million, is being carried out. The St. Lawrence seaway authority is constructing 4,000 linear feet of wharf above the Cote Ste. Catherine lock. Other developments will receive consideration as the need arises.

As to part 3, no action has been taken to extend the jurisdiction of the national harbours board, but this matter will remain under review. The policy of the government will be to provide facilities when the public interest so requires.

The reply to part 4 is that a contract has been awarded for the construction of an additional commodious transit shed.

In answer to part 5 I would say that in the normal course the government will give consideration to recommendations of the national harbours board for such new facilities as the growth of traffic warrants.

Part 6 is answered by the reply to part 5.

As to part 7, the grain elevator at Three Rivers is privately owned and its capacity has recently been increased.

In reply to part 8 I might say that the Department of Public Works recently awarded a contract for improvements to the east face of terminal wharf No. 1 at Sorel amounting to $47,204. Surveys and pre-engineering studies are continuing in order to have available the necessary information for recommendations concerning future expansion or improvements.

The answer to part 9 is that the provision of cargo handling equipment, additional space on existing wharves and new docks will be considered by the Department of Public Works should the need for such additional facilities be justified. At present the facilities at the port of Sorel appear to be adequate.

Part 10 is answered by the reply to part 8.

VICTORIA BRIDGE, MONTREAL-ST. LAMBERT

Question No. 5—Mr. Chevrier:

1. What was the cost of the Victoria bridge between Montreal and St. Lambert?
2. What are the operating costs, operating expenses and profit and loss position in the last 25 years?
3. What amount of tolls were collected on this bridge in the last 10 years?
4. Will tolls be abolished on this bridge?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): In dealing with question No. 5 I would like to answer parts 1, 2 and 3 together. As recorded in an answer by my predecessor, the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Marler), when he was minister of transport, to an order of the house tabled on July 13, 1955, it has never been and is not now the practice of the management of the Canadian National Railways to disclose financial details of the operation of the Victoria bridge. The management advise that this also is their position as far as the capital cost of the bridge is concerned.

This fact was well known to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) when, as minister of transport, he spoke on this subject in the house on February 23, 1951, as reported at pages 569 and 570 of Hansard of that date, when he said:—

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hees: —when he said:

As for Victoria bridge I cannot give you any idea of the amount collected since it is buried in the accounts of the Canadian National.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Marler: Mr. Speaker, I think it is perfectly clear from the rules that answers are concise and are not expected to be political.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What about questions?

Mr. Fraser: Why bring up political questions?

Mr. Speaker: It occurred to me as the minister was giving his answer that he was going beyond the scope of an ordinary answer in referring to the knowledge of the hon. member at a certain time. That struck me as being somewhat in the nature of debate rather than answer.

Mr. Hees: As I was convinced that the hon. member for Laurier was only seeking information I thought I would remind him of some of the things he said in the house on this and other matters on past occasions as minister of transport.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stick: Carry out the rules of the house.

Mr. Hees: As to part 4, the management advise me that this matter is not under consideration at the present time. I might suggest to the hon. member for Laurier that he look back at that same speech and he will see his own views expressed at that time.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McIlraith: The rules are supposed to apply equally to all.

JACQUES CARTIER BRIDGE, MONTREAL-LONGUEUIL

Question No. 6—Mr. Chevrier:

1. What was the cost of the Jacques Cartier bridge between Montreal and Longueuil?
2. What are the operating costs, operating expenses and profit and loss position in the last 10 years?
3. Did the city of Montreal pay its share of the deficit in accordance with its tripartite agreement?
4. Did the province of Quebec pay its share of the deficit in accordance with its tripartite agreement?
5. Does the government intend to do anything about this?
6. What amount of tolls has been collected on this bridge since the beginning?
7. Does the government propose to abolish tolls on the Jacques Cartier bridge?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): As to question 6, Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part is that the original cost was $18,571,308. With regard to the second part, the operating expenses between 1947 and 1956, inclusive, were $1,842,325. Profit and loss position shows a deficit as at December 31, 1946, of $11,439,297, and as at December 31, 1956, $9,338,148.

The answer to part 3 is yes, after litigation with respect to a portion.

As to part 4, the answer is that the province has paid in part and there remains unpaid $744,425, plus interest.

With regard to part 5, as the hon. member may be aware, the situation with respect to this matter has remained unchanged for several years. Directions were given in 1953, when he was minister of transport, that a petition of right be presented to the province of Quebec and a fiat sought. Accordingly the Department of Justice filed such petition, to which no response was received. The record does not indicate that any further action was taken to dispose of that matter.

The answer to part 6 is $22,670,794 to December 31, 1956.

With respect to part 7, as the hon. member knows there has been no change in the situation which existed while he was minister of transport, namely that the tripartite agreement, authorized by the statute of the province of Quebec, provided that the bridge shall be a toll bridge.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order, if I may at this stage. The point is this. You have ruled on one if not on two occasions that the questions put by members to ministers should be short and to the point, and I think you have also ruled that the answers should be in the same form. I am not complaining more about the answers by the minister than I am about those made by the Prime Minister the other day, when on at least three occasions he rose in the house and, taking advantage of a question, spoke for at least five to six minutes. I think that is entirely out of order, and I think it applies to the answers the minister has given.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Chevrier: I am speaking to a point of order. If I am out of order the Speaker will call me to order. I am speaking to a point of order now and I have the right to the floor. I was going to conclude by saying that the same latitude should be allowed to a member who asks a question as to a minister who answers it.

Mr. Speaker: It has been well settled that a point of order should be raised at the time it is relevant to the question. With respect to the point relating to yesterday's proceedings, I do not feel it would be my duty to deal with it now. The point of order as it may apply to the starred questions, I take it, is not pressed by the hon. member. The questions themselves were very lengthy and the answers necessarily were lengthy. There was a point of order taken in the course of the answer, which was dealt with, and it seems to me that leaves nothing outstanding in the hon. member's point of order.

PIPE LINE CONSTRUCTION, NORTHERN ONTARIO—LABOUR TURNOVER

Question No. 8—Mr. Fisher:

1. What has been the total labour turnover for each of the four contractors' spreads on the natural gas pipe line west of Port Arthur in the period to October 1, 1957?
2. What was the average number of men on each spread for each month from April to October, 1957?
3. What percentage of the labour force on each spread was American, for each of these months?
4. How many of the men who separated from the job on each spread were fired?
5. What percentage of the Americans working on this section of the pipe line were in this country under a six months' permit?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce: Mr. Speaker, this question requires several tables for an adequate answer, and as it would be difficult to read the tables to the house I would ask leave to place them on the record.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member prepared to have the question made an order for return?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The tables are not extensive. I would imagine that, with permission, they could be taken into the record.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to do as he has suggested?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

1.

Question No. 9—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did the president of Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., ever hold any position with Penryn Securities Company or with Penryn Holding Company?
2. Who are the present officers of this company?
3. If the president of Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., held any office in these companies, what were the dates of such tenure?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce: The answer is as follows:

1. The president of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited never held any position with the Penryn Securities Limited.

Mr. W. J. Bennett while chief executive assistant to the minister of reconstruction and supply was appointed secretary of Penryn Securities Limited, a private corporation, on December 5, 1945. This was a nominal position from which he received no remuneration. He held the position until April 25, 1952.

2. There is no official record in the Department of Trade and Commerce as to whom the present officers of this company are. I am advised by the officers of the Secretary of State, companies branch, however, that at the time of the last annual return the following were named as directors:

Mrs. Alice M. Howe
Clarence D. Howe
Miss Ruth A. Thomson

3. Answered by No. 1.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): May I direct a supplementary question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of the answer he gave to my question. He said there was no official record of the company referred to in the Department of Trade and Commerce. By statute or regulation should there have been a record in the department?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): It is a private corporation and such corporations have special privileges under the Companies Act. It is not an unusual situation.

COMMERCIAL FISHING LICENCES, B.C.—ROYAL COMMISSION

Question No. 14—Mr. Barnett:

1. Have requests been received for establishment of a royal commission to inquire into the question of licence limitations for commercial fishing in British Columbia?
2. If so, from whom have such requests been received?
3. Have representations been made against the establishment of such a royal commission and, if so, from whom?
4. What steps has the government taken toward establishing such a commission; or what other action has it taken to deal with this question?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): The answer is as follows:

1. Yes.

2. United fishermen and allied workers' union, Vancouver.

3. No.

4. The answer to the first part of the question is in the negative. As to the second part of the question, by regulation under the Fisheries Act and by administrative action the issue of fishing licences in British Columbia was restricted to Canadian citizens and ex-servicemen of the Canadian armed services, who also had to show on application for licence that they were bona fide commercial fishermen.

HUMANE SLAUGHTER OF FOOD ANIMALS

Question No. 16—Mr. Broome:

Is the government considering the adopting of regulations which will specifically require the use of humane methods in the slaughter of food animals?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): The Department of Agriculture is not, at this time, considering recommending to the government the adoption of regulations which will specifically require the use of humane methods in the slaughter of food animals. The question is under study by a joint committee of the Ontario society for the prevention of cruelty to animals and the meat packers' council of Canada. The services of a top ranking veterinary research officer of the Department of Agriculture have been put at the disposal of the committee to assist it in its study. Until this committee has reported we do not feel in the Department of Agriculture that we should make any recommendations.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—TRANSPORTATION ORDER 107

Motion No. 6—Mr. McIlraith:

For a copy of transportation order No. 107 of the district director of postal services, dated August 7, 1957, and sent by the Post Office Department to mail contractors throughout Canada.

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this motion with the hon. member, and in order that the document may be properly and completely described the motion should read "district director of postal services, Ottawa" and the last two words "throughout Canada" should be dropped. This is agreeable to the hon. member.

Mr. McIlraith: The suggested amendment is agreeable to me.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that permission to amend be granted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion as amended?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATION OF RECIPROCAL AGREEMENT WITH MAINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Would he tell the house what progress is being made in negotiations with the state of Maine toward reaching a reciprocal agreement with regard to unemployment insurance?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): As I understand it, in the past the state of Maine has not been agreeable to entering into any agreement in this regard. Some efforts have been made within recent months in the same field, but as yet they have not been acceptable. It is a matter in which I am vitally interested, and the efforts on our behalf will not be stopped.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO GUARANTEE PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries if it is his intention to introduce legislation, similar to that of which the Minister of Agriculture has given notice, to provide guaranteed prices for fisheries products?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a matter of government policy, and when a decision is made it will be announced to the house in due course.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a supplementary question. Does the minister not think the fishermen are just as deserving as the farmers?

CONTAMINATED OYSTERS AND CLAMS—PROTECTION AGAINST SALE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare arising out of a newspaper article in the Vancouver Sun of October 28, which indicates that clam and oyster sales have been stopped in the greater Vancouver area.

Mr. Monteith: Would the hon. member repeat the last part?

Mr. Hahn: Which indicates that clam and oyster sales have been stopped in the greater Vancouver area. What steps have been taken to guarantee that wholesalers have not sold any of these contaminated oysters and clams in the prairie provinces and other parts of British Columbia.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will have to take that question as notice.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

INDIAN AFFAIRS—INSPECTION OF FIRE HAZARDS ON RESERVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the statement of Mr. A. Beasley, chief of the View Royal fire brigade, appearing in the Victoria Daily Colonist of October 23 in connection with the recent fire on the Songhees reserve which cost the lives of two Indian children, in which Mr. Beasley stated that the Indian affairs branch carries out no inspection of chimneys and other fire hazards on the reserve and that the Indian agent at Duncan had failed to reply to four letters written by Mr. Beasley in regard to fire protection on the reserve?

If so, can the minister inform the house as to the correctness of Mr. Beasley's assertion that no inspection is carried out, and can he tell the house whether his department is considering entering into agreements with municipalities contiguous to Indian reserves to ensure fire protection on the reserves?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, since receiving from the hon. gentleman notice of his intention to ask this question, for which notice I thank him, I have had inquiries made of the director of the Indian affairs branch. Unfortunately I have to tell the hon. gentleman that neither I nor the director had noticed the news report to which he referred. Inquiries are being pursued immediately by the director in order to get the full facts. Until an answer is received I am not able to give the hon. gentleman any further information, although of course I cannot at the moment accept the statement which I understand was made to the effect that the department is not co-operating and does not carry out inspection. However, I will give a full report as soon as the information is received.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION—STATEMENT ON MONTREAL COURT DECISION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I inform the house of the position with regard to the immigration case in Montreal which was the case put by way of a question by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) on October 22.

As the house knows, this case has been proceeding for a good many years and involved charges of conspiracy against four individuals. The charges against the four individuals concerned were quashed and the individuals were acquitted by Judge Willie Proulx of the court of the sessions of the peace in Montreal on Monday, October 21.

In the province of Quebec 15 days are allowed within which to enter appeals in the case of indictable offences. After consideration of the legal questions involved the agent of the Minister of Justice, with the approval of the attorney general of the province of Quebec, was instructed to enter appeals to the court of appeal of Quebec. The agent of the Minister of Justice is proceeding accordingly.

HEALTH INSURANCE

REPORTED REQUEST THAT PROVISION BE REPEALED RESPECTING PROVINCES PARTICIPATING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I ask this question of the minister because of the statement made by Premier Frost in Toronto yesterday. Has the minister received from Premier Frost a letter asking for the repeal of the section of the hospital insurance act requiring that six provinces introduce plans before there is federal participation in costs? If the minister has received any such letter in this respect, would he be willing to table the correspondence, and is he willing to accept Premier Frost's suggestion?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any such letter. I would say that actually this is a matter of government policy. As a consequence I do not feel that I could announce at the moment whether or not the suggestion would be accepted if I had received such a request.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Was the premier of Ontario speaking for the federal government when he said that provision of the act was frustrating the Diefenbaker government?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An hon. Member: Will it be announced on television?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The questions asked in the house must, of course, relate to matters under the jurisdiction of the ministry in this house and not of some other government.

ONTARIO—ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING OUT-PATIENT DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare what is the attitude of his department with regard to the announcement by the Ontario hospital services commission that it does not intend to provide out-patient diagnostic services for the people of Ontario, as provided for by an act of this parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is similar in character to the question which has just been asked. As I understand it, it is really a question about the activities of a commission which is not subject to the jurisdiction of this parliament or government. It is an Ontario commission.

Mr. Haidasz: My question was with respect to the attitude of the department of health, that is to say the federal Department of National Health and Welfare.

An hon. Member: That is a matter of policy.

Mr. Speaker: My point is this. The federal department of health cannot be expected to have an attitude with respect to the responsibilities of another government. It is not their responsibility.

ONTARIO—TREATMENT OF MENTAL AND TUBERCULAR PATIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has this government had any discussions with the province of Ontario concerning proposed federal contributions toward the cost of treating mental and tubercular patients in that province?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice. I could not say at the moment whether we have or not.

REPORTED REQUEST FOR MEETING OF PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he has yet had an opportunity of considering the question which I put to him a week ago, with regard to the request of the minister of health of Manitoba for a conference of all the provinces and the federal government in the matter of the hospital insurance act?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I think, Mr. Speaker, my answer would be the same as I gave at that time, and that was to the effect that we are giving very intensive consideration to the whole matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, as this is an extremely important matter may I ask a supplementary question. Is my hon. friend in a position to say today or perhaps tomorrow whether such a conference would be held before the general conference with the provinces on November 25, or would it be held simultaneously with the larger conference?

Mr. Monteith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to answer that at the moment, because I do not know.

NATURAL RESOURCES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR R.C.M.P. REPORT ON FOREST MANAGEMENT LICENCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is about to ask the question of which he was good enough to send me a copy, may I say that I endeavoured to get in touch with him to advise him that the only part of the question which seemed to me to come within the practice of this house was that part which asked whether a certain report would be tabled. If the hon. member will limit his question to that request for information he may proceed.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): I think I can do that, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he will make available to this house and publish the report of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police dealing with the charges of bribery and conspiracy in the granting of forest management licences in the province of British Columbia.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice that he intended to raise this matter today, though he has not raised it in the rather extended form in which he originally intended. In reply I think I can only advise the hon. gentleman that my understanding is that this report was made at the request of and provided for the government of the province of British Columbia. That being the case, it rests with that province and with that authority as to whether or not the report will be made public.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): May I then ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister say whether or not the federal government paid for that report and investigation?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that as notice. It is my impression that the major portion of the cost of investigation was borne by the province but that some of the costs were borne by the federal government. I will have to check on that and let the hon. member know.

SHIPPING

M. V. "BURIN"—EXTENT OF DAMAGE AND INTERRUPTION OF SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would he inform the house as to the extent of the damage suffered by the C.N.R. coastal boat, the motor vessel Burin, and what steps are being taken to prevent any interruption in this coastal service?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I would like to thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. I have been in touch with the management of the Canadian National Railways and am advised that in the early morning of October 29 the motor vessel Burin grounded in the vicinity of North Harbour, the most northerly port of call in Placentia bay. All passengers have been taken ashore and S.S. Glencoe has been ordered to go to the assistance of the ship, which appears to be in no immediate danger. No information is available yet as to the extent of the damage incurred.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—IMPROVEMENT OF FACILITIES DURING WINTER SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Maltais (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport or to the Minister of Public Works. What steps are now being taken to improve navigation facilities on the St. Lawrence river north of Quebec during the coming winter season?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Every year, Mr. Speaker, the Department of Transport employs icebreakers to look after that problem, and it will be done again this season.

Mr. Maltais: May I address a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the Minister of Public Works received any representations regarding the increasing difficulties encountered by winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river north of Quebec, and what steps are to be taken to improve the dock facilities at Pointe-au-Pic, 90 miles below Quebec city?

Mr. Green: I do not think we have had such representation, but I will make inquiries for the hon. member.

FACILITIES TO BE USED AT SAULT STE. MARIE LOCKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Since there are no definite plans to prepare the Canadian Sault locks for deep sea draught vessels, can we assume that the United States locks at the Sault are to be the future passageway of such vessels going to and from lake Superior?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take that question as notice.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

KITIMAT—REPORTED CLOSING OF CONSTRUCTION OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour relating to the situation mentioned yesterday. I wonder if the minister would undertake to recommend to the government that it pay the transportation and other related costs of those employees at Kitimat, particularly those with families, who find it necessary to leave Kitimat as a result of the recent action of the Saguenay-Kitimat Company in completely closing down its operations?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): In answer to the hon. member's question I may say that the lay-off of approximately 1,500 persons came very suddenly and apparently as the result of a decision by the Aluminum Company of Canada to suspend the expansion program which they had originally scheduled for this time. I can promise the hon. member that my officials will study the situation with a view to ascertaining what action may be most effectively taken by the unemployment insurance commission in respect to declaring the area a labour surplus area.

I can say immediately, Mr. Speaker, that the officials of the unemployment insurance commission in Kitimat have already been given instructions to process as quickly as possible claims for people who have been laid off, and I can also assure the hon. member that every facility of the unemployment insurance commission will be placed at the disposal of these people.

Mr. Howard: May I then ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister could advise whether there is any provision in the Unemployment Insurance Act or some similar act to allow for the payment or the advancing of money for transportation costs.

Mr. Starr: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are investigating the possibility of declaring this area a labour surplus area, which automatically provides for the payment of transportation for people who wish to go to other places to get employment.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NATIONAL DEFENCE—APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. Does the minister differentiate between civil servants and casual labourers employed by his department with respect to regulations regarding their employment?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I am not certain as to the implications of that question, but there are of course different sets of regulations governing civil servants who are permanent employees and those who are casual. I could not spell out the differences now; perhaps if the hon. member wishes a more detailed answer he would be specific in his request and put a question on the order paper so that I could give him a complete answer.

Mr. Henderson: Perhaps I can be more specific, Mr. Speaker, if I ask the minister this question. Do the regulations outlined yesterday by the Minister of Transport with respect to the political partisanship of casual labourers employed by the Department of Transport also apply to casual labourers employed by the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Pearkes: I would like to take that question as notice, and I will look into the matter.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEES FOR POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. I presume he has had ample time to study the answer given yesterday by the Minister of Transport. Is he now prepared to answer my question?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I thought my answer yesterday covered the matter. As I remember it, I said I would study the remarks of the Minister of Transport and see whether they applied.

Mr. Robichaud: Do they apply?

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

STATEMENT AS TO PARTICIPATION OF CANADA IN ANGLO-AMERICAN GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): While I am on my feet might I give a reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson). The hon. member asked whether Canada is to be included in the agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States, as reported in the press of that day in Washington, to divide the responsibility for development of future atomic weapons and to share information obtained in their separate research and development. I would refer to the joint statement issued on October 26 by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, which states as follows:

> The President of the United States will request congress to amend the atomic energy act as may be necessary and desirable to permit the close and fruitful collaboration of scientists and engineers of Great Britain, the United States and other friendly countries.

I assume when the hon. member speaks of an agreement it is to this statement that he refers. It will be noted that the President is to request congress to make amendments to allow the collaboration of scientists and engineers from not only Great Britain and the United States but also other friendly countries. We are sure that both the United States and the United Kingdom regard Canada as a friendly country, and therefore we would be included in any arrangements which might be made under these amendments.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REFERENCE TO INCREASED INDEMNITY OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister assure the house and reassure the country that the government does not contemplate suggesting an increase in the indemnity of members of parliament?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I can answer this question in a way that would suit even the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). The answer is no.

[Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace).]

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Will it be announced on TV?

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, lest there be any misunderstanding about my brief answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North when I answered by a simple negative, let me say that there has been no consideration of the matter and there is no intention to increase the indemnities of members.

TELEVISION

INVERNESS-RICHMOND—REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF SATELLITE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister offer any indication to the residents of Inverness-Richmond, who are presently without satisfactory television service, that the application of station CJCB-TV, Sydney, to establish a satellite station in the Inverness area will be reconsidered and subsequently approved?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): As the hon. member has not given notice of his intention to ask this question I shall have to take this as notice and check up on that matter.

AGRICULTURE

STATEMENT ON RESEARCH RESPECTING INSECTS ATTACKING RAPE PLANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. What steps are being taken or what research is being done by the Department of Agriculture to check the insects that attack rape plants?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. Active research on the control of the insect pest species attacking rape is in progress at two science service laboratories in western Canada. Work formerly carried on at Brandon has now been transferred to the laboratory at Winnipeg. The Manitoba work has been confined to establishing the identity, distribution and abundance of the insect species involved leading up to a forecasting system. A more intensive program is being directed from the Saskatoon laboratory.

The bertha army worm is the most important pest of rape in Saskatchewan in recent years. Each year surveys are carried out to forecast the abundance of moths and the potential of outbreaks and damage in each district. The Saskatoon laboratory uses radio, newspapers and direct contact with district agricultural representatives to inform farmers of the hazard. In districts where the infestation is likely to be severe special attention is paid to extension work via the agricultural representatives.

A satisfactory chemical control of bertha army worm has been developed. This involves the application by aeroplane of D.D.T. in diesel fuel oil at 10 ounces per acre in two to three quarts per acre. This control method is used extensively and is well known by both farmer operators and custom aircraft spray applicators. It is common practice for the custom applicators to be in constant touch with the Saskatoon laboratory and to keep supplies of the necessary materials on hand. Investigations are being continued on the potential usefulness of newer insecticides for the control of this pest.

Other insects of importance in rape production are the red backed cutworm, beetwebworm and the red turnip beetle. In Alberta some fields were destroyed by red backed cutworms in 1957, and this insect can be of importance if it occurs in outbreak proportions in Saskatchewan. Work is still in progress on the chemical control of beetwebworm, and progress depends upon the availability of infestations suitable for field investigation. The red turnip beetle is of potential importance, particularly in the spring. No work is at present in progress at Saskatoon on the control of this insect on rape, but investigations carried on elsewhere have shown that effective control can be obtained with D.D.T.

COAL

STATEMENT ON STEPS TO ASSIST PRODUCTION AND MARKETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, on October 28 the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) asked the following question:

> I would like to address a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys or to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, whoever is in a position to answer it. What steps has the government taken to increase coal production and marketing in Canada so that our coal mining industry might have some relief from its present depressed condition? Especially am I interested in the coal mining industry in western Canada.

In reply I would say that the long-established policy of subvention assistance has been continued which provides for the movement of Canadian coal to markets in central Canada within economic limits. Under this policy a market has been provided for all the maritime coal produced at reasonable costs, and further assistance beyond this limit to maintain the Springhill collieries. In western Canada the Saskatchewan mines have enjoyed an increasing market, as shown by their output. The Alberta and British Columbia mines are faced with severe competition from Canadian oil and gas produced from wells in the area. Subvention assistance has recently been further extended to enable the mines to develop new markets in western Ontario and increased assistance provided on exports to countries other than the United States.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NEW BRUNSWICK—INQUIRY AS TO ABANDONMENT OF MONCTON-SHEDIAC LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister inform the house if it is a fact that the Moncton-Shediac railway now operated by the Canadian National Railways is to be abandoned?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I received no notice of this question. I will inquire of the Canadian National Railways and advise the hon. member tomorrow.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

SOREL, QUE.—REPORTED PATRONAGE IN EMPLOYMENT OF WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the fact that in the selection of workers for the construction of the post office building in Sorel the federal employment bureau has been completely by-passed, and that discriminatory political patronage is practised on a large scale? If so, what does the government intend to do about it?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to look into the situation.

WINNIPEG—STATEMENT AS TO DISPOSITION OF OLD POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked me a question concerning the old post office building in Winnipeg. He wanted to know what would be done with it when the new building was opened. The answer is that the old post office building and the annex will be declared surplus and turned over to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS ASSISTANCE

INQUIRY AS TO REACTIVATING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In the light of the reply given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) the other day to the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) as to the role of the municipalities at the forthcoming dominion-provincial conference, and in the light of the serious unemployment situation facing us this fall, especially out on the west coast, is the government giving any consideration to reactivating the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): That obviously would be a matter of government policy.

PUBLIC WORKS

MONTREAL—PROPOSED NUNS' ISLAND CAUSEWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Yves Leduc (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I have been informed that the government had already disagreed with the preliminary plans prepared by Quebec Home and Mortgage Corporation for the construction of a causeway from the rear of the Verdun auditorium to Nuns' island because such plans do not provide any passage for navigable pleasure boats.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Leduc (Verdun): Would the minister tell the house if the matter is still under study, and would he also comment on the possible dangers and inconveniences for the residents of the city of Verdun and the vicinity if the proposed causeway were to be built, namely the dangers of flooding and pollution of the waters?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: It would be more appropriate to put the question on the order paper.

[Mr. Green.]

NOVA SCOTIA—STATEMENT AS TO BREAKWATER-CAUSEWAY BETWEEN MAINLAND AND PORT HOOD ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond asked me whether any agreement had been reached with the province of Nova Scotia for the construction of a breakwater-causeway between the mainland and Port Hood island. The answer is that, while negotiations are under way, no agreement as been reached as yet.

POWER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) asked me about the presentation of the Montreal Engineering Company report in regard to the requirements for power and the location of power plants and interconnection lines in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and whether copies would be made available to the house.

The report, Mr. Speaker, by the Montreal Engineering Company, as my hon. friend knows, was commissioned by the Northern Canada Power Commission in order to investigate the best location of thermal power plants to serve the needs of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and the probable extent of plants that might be required in the immediate future having regard for interconnection lines that should be built. The report has been received and copies have been provided to the governments of the two provinces.

The hon. member asked if it would be made available. The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that it is not intended to make the report public at the present time. It is my view, as minister in charge, that it would not be in the public interest to divulge the professional advice tendered by the consulting engineers while a number of arrangements are still pending. This is also the view of the governments of the two provinces concerned. I am sure that if my hon. friend were in my position he would be of the same opinion.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister believe that these reports, which have been supplied by that company, should be made known to the governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia before they are made known to the members of this house?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I would certainly suggest that if we are going to arrange any proposition between the governments of those provinces and this government they certainly should have them to study them.

An hon. Member: Before this house?

Mr. Lesage: Since the report is being paid for out of moneys voted by this house, does the minister not believe that members of this house should be entitled to the reports before other governments?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet should know by this time that there are certain matters which in the public interest should not be divulged until all the matters in the report are dealt with.

Mr. Lesage: In the party's interest, you mean.

Mr. MacEachen: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I think two supplementary questions to the original question are sufficient.

Mr. Claude Richardson (St. Lawrence-St. George): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, if I may: I do not know what the rules are about supplementary questions, but the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond is the one who posed the original question and did not ask any supplementary questions at all. I wonder, in those circumstances, whether you would reconsider your observation and allow him to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I would be glad to. I did not realize the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond had initiated the question. Briefly, the rules with respect to supplementary questions are that supplementary questions are limited to clarification of the answer, and usually one supplementary question either indicates that there will be a clarification or that there will be a debate. In this case it seemed to me the matter was moving in that direction; therefore I took the liberty to stop the hon. member. I give him the floor now.

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): My supplementary question to the minister is this. In the light of the fact that similar studies on thermal power, made in 1954 by Professor Christie for the dominion coal board, were made public and were the subject of wide public discussion, would he not now reconsider his decision not to make these further reports available which, I am sure, will enable the citizens of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to reach some important judgments about thermal power in those provinces.

Mr. Speaker: If I may say so, that I think illustrates the difficulty of extending supplementary questions, because the only result of the hon. member's question is that he makes certain observations which are out of order, and asks the minister again if he will reconsider. The minister has already answered. However, I leave it to the minister if he wishes to answer again.

MARITIME PROVINCES—INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT OF NUCLEAR POWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister advise the house whether consideration has been given recently to the development of nuclear power in the maritime provinces?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Are you not interested in the east as well as in the west?

Mr. Robichaud: He does not want to give consideration to New Brunswick.

Mr. Brooks: What consideration did your government give in 22 years?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, which is this, sir. A question was asked by the hon. member who rose to speak just before I did, and no answer has been given to the question. Perhaps the minister did not hear the question; I do not know. But I think there should be an answer by the minister.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I might say a word, my hon. friend seems to be suffering from his embarrassing discomfiture of yesterday. The question was asked in such a way that it could not be heard. I know I tried to hear it and could not. Then, subsequently, another question was asked. My hon. friend should just hold himself a little.

Mr. Chevrier: Why didn't you answer the question?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Are you on the same question of privilege?

Mr. Robichaud: In the question I asked the minister I was seeking information concerning the maritime provinces. I feel that as a member of this house I have the right to ask such a question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Some hon. Members: Question.

An hon. Member: You did ask it.

Mr. Speaker: Undoubtedly the hon. member has the right to ask a question, but he has no right to insist upon an answer. It is entirely optional to the minister who is asked the question whether or not he answers. There is no doubt about that. If the hon. member's question was not heard perhaps he would like to repeat it.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Would the hon. member repeat his question? I am very sorry, but I did not hear the end of it.

Mr. Robichaud: Has the government in recent months given any consideration to the development of nuclear power in the maritime provinces?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Certainly we have. It is always under consideration.

Mr. Robichaud: May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister prepared to make a report on what has been done in recent months about this particular problem?

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Not interested in the east.

AIRPORTS

ABBOTSFORD, B.C.—INQUIRY AS TO EFFECT OF CHANGEOVER ON EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the report appearing in the Abbotsford, Matsqui and Sumas News to the effect that the Department of Transport would take over the operation of the Abbotsford airport from the Department of National Defence on April 1, 1958, will the minister make a statement to the house relative to the changeover and its effect upon those presently employed by the Department of National Defence?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. Negotiations are under way at the present time between the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence regarding the future operation of Abbotsford airport by the Department of Transport as an alternate to the Vancouver international airport. These negotiations have not been finally resolved, although it is hoped that the arrangements will be effective April 1, 1958.

Regarding the personnel to whom the hon. member refers, I have been advised by the Department of National Defence that Abbotsford is on a care and maintenance basis and has been used for summer training. There are no civilians employed by the R.C.A.F. at this station.

TRADE

FISH—STATEMENT AS TO NEWFOUNDLAND EXPORTERS ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Trinity-Conception (Mr. Stick) asked me, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

What action, if any, is contemplated by the government regarding Newfoundland Associated Fish Exporters Limited, otherwise known as Nafel?

The answer is that Newfoundland Associated Fish Exporters Limited is at present operating under the terms of P.C. 1954/957. If and when any change is made hon. members will be informed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF AMBASSADOR TO VATICAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): May I ask the Prime Minister a question. Following the statement made by the ambassador for Ireland to Canada last Sunday, October 27, as reproduced by the Ottawa journal, Le Droit, may I ask whether it is true that the government has decided on the appointment of an ambassador to the Vatican?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the report. After reading the report I will be in a position to give the same kind of answer the former prime minister used to give to that question.

Mr. Bourget: The Solicitor General made some comments on that.

(Translation):

PRIVILEGE

MR. ARSENAULT—CORRECTION REGARDING POLITICAL ALLEGIANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Neree Arsenault (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In Hansard of October 29, 1957, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. LaCroix) is reported as stating:

I did not do as did the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) who, after being returned as an independent, on the very day after the election proclaimed himself a Conservative member.

I would like to have this comment corrected, Mr. Speaker, as it is utterly untrue. In fact, on May 4, 1957, at New Carlisle, I was unanimously chosen as Progressive Conservative candidate at the official convention. On nomination day, I stated that I was a Progressive Conservative candidate and I was elected as such last June 10.

Mr. LaCroix: You ran your whole campaign as an independent candidate.

BRIDGES

THREE RIVERS-STE. ANGELE—INQUIRY AS TO REPORTS CONCERNING CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Have reports been made to the department regarding the construction of a bridge between Three Rivers and Ste. Angele in the province of Quebec?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I do not know of any such reports, but I will make inquiries.

LIVESTOCK

HOGS—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO STABILIZE PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Peter Stefura (Vegreville): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I have not given him notice but perhaps he may be able to answer it. Would the minister comment on the steady decrease in the price of hogs on the Canadian livestock markets, and does the government intend to introduce legislation this session which would tend to stabilize the price of hogs?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it was indicated in the speech from the throne and is further indicated by the resolution printed in today's Votes and Proceedings that we intend to bring in legislation to stabilize the prices of agricultural products. As far as the price of hogs is concerned, I think the hon. gentleman probably knows that the decline that has taken place in the price of hogs during the last month to six weeks is the sort of thing which has been going on for many, many years when the heavy fall run of hogs has come on the market.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO CONTRACTS TO RURAL MAIL CARRIERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Langlois (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Postmaster General. Is it the policy of the Post Office Department, in awarding contracts to rural mail carriers, to disregard the lowest bidder?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, our policy regarding such contracts is to award them to the lowest bidder in all cases where it is possible to do so in a regular way.

Mr. Robichaud: Even if they are involved in politics?

GRAIN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE CASH ADVANCES ON FARM-STORED GRAIN

The house resumed, from Tuesday, October 29, consideration in committee of Bill No. 14, to provide for advance payments for prairie grain prior to delivery thereof—Mr. Harkness (for Mr. Churchill)—Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, ordinarily the practice in connection with these bills referring to agricultural matters has been to send them to the agriculture committee for study and consideration. We, of course, did not make that suggestion in connection with this bill because we did not want to hold up the proceedings of the house or the bringing into effect of the measure itself. But in so far as the general field of cash advances and agricultural policy are concerned, I think it would be greatly to the advantage of the members of this house, and to the agricultural industry of this country, if we could have a meeting of the agricultural committee during this session to discuss some aspects of a general agricultural program.

I wonder if the government has considered whether the wheat board officials might not be brought before the agriculture committee during the current session to give a report of their stewardship, and to allow members to inquire into the grain situation at this time. It seems to me there has been a very serious drop in export markets and grain sales. Grain prices, if anything, have been weaker in recent months. Furthermore, there is the whole question of procedure in regard to interim and final payments. I think that when the agricultural industry is in such a bad way the minister and the government might give some consideration to having the agriculture committee meet to discuss the grain situation as well as the general agricultural situation in this country.

I wonder if the minister would care to say whether or not it is the intention of the government to have the agriculture committee meet during this session?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the agriculture committee will be set up in due course and the government will be glad to give consideration to the request of the hon. member for Assiniboia with regard to having the officials of the wheat board appear before the committee for some discussion and investigation into the present grain situation.

Mr. Hansell: I did not speak on the second reading of this bill because I spoke during the resolution stage. Now that we are in committee, I should like to ask the minister to clarify one point. I have received some letters from individual farmers who are not too fascinated with this measure, if one can judge by the content of their letters. It appears that they may be under a misapprehension as to what it is going to cost to administer this measure. Of course, they assume it is going to cost something, and that the wheat board will have to pay it which, of course, means that the farmers of Canada as a whole will have to pay the shot whether or not they take advantage of it. In the house we have been given to understand that the administration costs, so far as the farmers are concerned, will be almost infinitesimal.

I wonder if the minister would care to make that point very clear? Perhaps he would rather wait until we are farther along with the bill, but if I can I should like to answer my farmers with regard to the cost in terms of the percentage of the cost of a bushel of wheat. If they think it is going to cost several million dollars, psychologically that seems like a lot of money. But if it is going to cost one-hundredth of a cent per bushel, that is infinitesimal. I wonder if the minister could inform the wheat growers on that particular point?

Mr. Harkness: I would be glad to do so. I am sorry to learn there is any misapprehension in regard to these matters. I thought I had made it very clear when I spoke the day before yesterday in introducing this bill for second reading. The administration costs which will be incurred by the elevator companies in issuing cheques to farmers, and the necessity of having to take on extra staff in order to handle and process applications, are going to be assumed by the elevator companies. The three western wheat pools, the United Grain Growers and the line elevator companies agreed to assume these administration costs which they, themselves, would be incurring in carrying out the administration of this measure. The administration costs which the wheat board will be paying are those which are concerned really with the issuing of forms, the printing of those forms and the extra staff required to process the forms when they are returned.

The administration costs of the elevator companies on the one hand, and the wheat board on the other, would be extremely difficult to sort out from their general administration costs and therefore it was felt—and these people agreed—that the most practical way to handle this matter was for the elevator companies to assume the administration costs that they incurred as a result of operating this scheme and the wheat board to do the same. These administration costs are not going to be large. I think the estimate of the wheat board so far as their administration costs are concerned is somewhere between $100,000 and $125,000.

I should like to point out to the hon. member that any talk about millions of dollars of costs so far as the wheat board or the farmers are concerned is incorrect. The only costs that the farmers will have any part in at all in connection with this legislation will be this amount estimated at $100,000 or $125,000. The hon. member will find in a subsequent clause that one of the methods by which the wheat board might meet these administration costs is dealt with.

Mr. Hansell: Can we assume, then, Mr. Chairman, that the administration costs will amount to merely a fraction of a cent per bushel?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it would be an extremely small fraction. As I say, the only costs the farmer will have any part in at all will be this $100,000 or $125,000 assumed by the wheat board.

Mr. Gardiner: On that point, may I say that when my hon. friend suggests that these administration costs will not be very high, will that not depend a great deal on the responsibility which the policy of the government or the legislation itself places upon the elevator companies, whether they be pool or privately owned?

I would think that if the responsibility for losses is made to apply to those who are going to buy the grain, either they will have to go to considerable expense in order to make absolutely certain that they are not responsible for those losses or they will have to be extremely careful about the advances they make. I should like to know just how that is going to be avoided. I should like to know how the placing of so much responsibility on the agent or on the elevator company is going to affect the amount of the advance that goes out.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I dealt with this matter fairly fully the day before yesterday when I indicated that the elevator companies have indicated their willingness to assume 10 per cent of the loss on any particular advance or on every advance that they make up to an over-all total of one-quarter of one per cent of all the advance which result from loans that any particular company made. That was arrived at as an amount which would give them a sense of responsibility in making the advance. It was considered that it was sufficient for that purpose so that the agents or the elevator companies would not, we will say, enter into wild competition with one another to put out advances. At the same time it is not sufficient so that it is going to impose a heavy burden on the elevator companies.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I think it has been said that as a result of this bill providing for cash advances to the western farmer $100 million to $150 million a year would become available to the farmers of the west. I think this will strengthen our economy in the east as well. I think it was stated in the speech from the throne that all farmers will get a fair share of our national income. I hope this promise will be carried out in connection with the primary producers in the other seven provinces. I live in the Niagara district. We have much fruit there. Often the fruit rots on the ground and because of marketing conditions and because of the lack of storage the farmers there cannot dispose of their fruit. I hope they will get the same consideration as is being given to the western farmers. I may say that I support this bill in the hope that the farmers of Ontario, the fruit growers of the Niagara district and farmers everywhere, for that matter, will get similar consideration.

There was just one point in connection with this bill which I do not think was brought out. Government members and other members of the house said that this was emergency legislation. If this is emergency legislation, why does the government not treat it as such and put a time limit on the bill of, say, 12 months to 18 months? It seems to me that we cannot here assess the needs of the farmers of the west three or four years from now.

I recall that the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce criticized us severely because our government was not selling more wheat. I think it is fair to say now that they are selling considerably less wheat then we were selling last year. I refer to the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce went to England, presumably to sell wheat. At that time Britain placed an order with the United States for a considerable shipment of wheat. I certainly do not think the Minister of Trade and Commerce was very successful in selling wheat on that particular trip. I hope he is more successful in the future. I also sincerely hope that our government will make every effort to come to a better understanding with the United States with regard to their methods of wheat marketing so that they will not put us at any disadvantage in our wheat marketing. Certainly we have traditional markets and it seems to me that the United States are making inroads into those markets.

Mr. Harkness: I am glad to hear the hon. member for Welland say he thinks that this legislation will be of general benefit throughout Canada. I am sure that it will. I do not want any misapprehension, however, to be left in the mind of anyone that $100 million or $150 million is being given to the western farmers.

Mr. McMillan: I did not say that.

Mr. Harkness: I know that the hon. member for Welland did not say that but he mentioned $150 million. I want to make sure that there is no misapprehension along that line. This money is being put out in the form of an advance. We expect that the average length of time that it will be out before it is returned is about six months.

In view of the statements which were made in this house yesterday and the day before by some hon. members, particularly the member for Quebec-Montmorency, I think the impression may have been sent abroad that $100 million or $150 million was being given to the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. McMillan: I did not mean to imply that.

Mr. Harkness: I know that. I know that the hon. member for Welland did not say that. However, as I say, some other hon. members yesterday made statements which would leave that impression. I want to make it absolutely clear that no such thing is contemplated or is going to take place.

The hon. member for Welland asked why there was no time limit on the bill if it is emergency legislation. The reason there is no time limit on it is that we believe this legislation should remain on the statute books and be available whenever there arises a situation such as the one we have at the present time. A situation such as this has arisen before. In fact, we have had it for the past three or four years. I refer to the inability of the farmers to deliver their grain in the fall of the year and a consequent shortage of cash. With the amount of surplus wheat we have at the present time there is no question that we are going to have difficulty along that line for at least the next couple of years. That is why there is no time limit on the bill. It is needed not only this year but it will be needed next year, and it may be needed at various times in the future. We therefore think it should not have a time limit but should remain on the statute books.

There was one other thing I wished to mention. The hon. member made a statement which was made yesterday and which I refuted yesterday, namely that we are selling much less wheat than did the previous government. I put the figures on the record yesterday and I am not going to repeat them. However, the period in which there was a really big drop in the sales of wheat during the last two years was in January, February, March, April, May and June of this present year. The figures for each of those months are very much under what they were in the year before. In some cases they are approximately half. In the case of June and May they are just over half as much as they were the year before; in the case of April they are considerably less than half as much as they were the year before; in the case of March they are about three-quarters; in the case of February they are about two-thirds or a little bit more than two-thirds; and in the case of January they are about two-thirds also. That is where the big drop in our wheat sales took place, namely in the period from January to June. Since that period the sales, although they have not been quite as high as they were last year, have been up fairly close to that point and we are hoping that they will constantly improve.

Mr. McCullough: Mr. Chairman, I refrained from speaking to this bill both at the resolution stage and again on second reading. However, I do not want it to be taken that I have not an extremely great interest in this bill. I am one of those who over the years fought for this very thing. I intended to refrain from speaking at this time. However, I do not think I should miss the opportunity when the question was raised this afternoon with regard to this being a type of emergency program.

I want to point out to the government that I believe I already see some self satisfaction on the faces of its members and I detect a sort of feeling on the part of the government that there is cause for satisfaction because it is considered that this bill meets to a large extent the emergency in western Canada. I took the trouble to get from the dominion bureau of statistics the amount of the increased debt which has occurred in the three prairie provinces with which this bill might have to do and I found that in the period from 1945—

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. This is the sort of speech which I think perhaps might have been out of order even on the second reading but I believe there is no question at all that it is out of order in committee of the whole. I think if the hon. member has any questions to ask in connection with the clause of the bill with which we are dealing he should ask such questions but he should not go on with his speech on what we might call general agricultural conditions and the relative position of the farmers, cashwise, to what it was sometime in the past.

Mr. McCullough: Mr. Chairman, I might say that I am quite familiar with the rules of the house and that one of the previous speakers speaking on the second reading went quite wide of the rules of the house in my opinion. However I shall now refrain from continuing with my remarks in this regard. Sufficient to say that I welcome this legislation; it will of course meet the immediate needs of the western farmer who perhaps has not been able to sell any of his grain. However, if this $150 million is divided amongst farmers the effect will be that the average loan will be somewhat less than five or six hundred dollars.

Now I would point out to the minister and also to the government at this time that this amount of money provided in loans under this bill has already been used up in amounts owing to the various people from whom the farmer has either obtained his fuel, his groceries, et cetera and also in respect of taxes. I therefore hope that the government will still regard this as a matter of emergency and will bring in their other program of price support.

What I had intended to ask the minister was this: since the elevator agents are the means by which advances are going to be made to the farmers, will it be necessary when the farmer goes to a certain elevator and makes application for a loan that he should make delivery of his grain to that specific elevator? In other words, would he have a choice subsequent to making application for his loan of going to some other elevator if he so desired?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out firstly that these are not loans; they are advances. Secondly, the answer to the question is no. That is why the endorsement appears in the permit book. The man may make delivery at any elevator into which he can get his grain.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I have been home since this measure was before us in the resolution stage and I regret that my absence prevented me from being here last night to register my vote. Had I been here I would certainly have voted for the amendment.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nicholson: I should like to say to the hon. member who is now interrupting me that he should remember that there is no farm member from the province of Manitoba representing the Liberal party, which used to have such solid support. With six Liberal members voting against this measure last night my hon. friend is going to have trouble coming back next time because the people in his riding who are going to sell their produce to the people on the prairies will say they have to have something better than what they are getting.

I was asked by the farmers to say that they do appreciate the fact that this legislation is a big improvement over what we had before us last year but I was also asked to convey to the minister that the farm people do not expect this to be any solution of their problem. It is going to give them a little more cash than they had a year ago but I would point out that no public service is a reform and when the member for Quebec-Montmorency suggests that the taxpayers are voting $150 million, there is no such thing. It has been estimated that the interest is going to cost the taxpayers of Canada well under $10 million and I think it is pretty obvious, with all the major wheat producing countries having some sort of subsidy program and with the United States having 400 ships used to transport their wheat to India as part of a give-away program, something better than $10 million from the taxpayers of Canada to meet this crisis might be expected.

I think the minister, having in fact recognized it is a crisis, might well have included the cost to the wheat board of performing their necessary services and also the costs of the grain handling companies. I think, having admitted that this is a national problem, that it is not created by the Canadian people but is forced upon us by our competitors all over the world, the minister might have considered making his government more popular still by including the administrative costs as a charge. He mentioned that it was not a large sum but I am sure that whoever will be here in a couple of years' time will think that the minister's estimates were way too low. I wonder if the minister has a calculation to show how much it would have cost if he had included enough to cover the administrative costs and the costs which the elevator companies will have to incur in connection with their work. Has he those two figures available?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I should like to correct a mistaken impression which I think the member for Mackenzie has and which I do not want the general public to get; that is that this is going to cost the taxpayer $10 million. It is not going to cost the taxpayer, we estimate, more than between $2 and $3 million. That is the amount of interest. If there is $100 million put out, the average length of time we estimate it might be out is about six months, as I explained two days ago, and therefore the cost will be something just over $2 million. Now if there is $150 million put out the cost will be something just over $3 million so I do not want any mistaken impression to get about that this is going to cost the taxpayer $10 million.

Mr. Nicholson: I was using the figure which the minister used when he was speaking in the French language in reply to the member for Quebec-Montmorency. However, I am glad to have this correction made at this time.

Mr. Harkness: The interjection I made when I used this figure of $10 million was because the hon. member for Melville had said the amount of the loans would not be more than $10 million. I said that on the basis that he had remarked there would not be as much put in as had been put into the loan system before and, therefore, on that basis, he was contending that the amount of this advance would not be more than $10 million. That is why I used that term in speaking in French.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend did not really say that when he was speaking. He indicated that I had intimated that there was a possibility it might not be any more. Now my hon. friend is sort of leaving the impression that I definitely said it would not be any more but I am very pleased that at this time he is correcting my hon. friend from Mackenzie. Now if he has recently told the farmers out west that they were going to get $10 million in interest paid under this bill, I can quite understand why they were very enthusiastic about it. I would suggest if he made any such statements out there, such as he made in this house a few moments ago, he ought to go back and correct them.

Mr. Harkness: If I have made any statement which attributed something to the hon. member for Melville which he did not say I apologize for it and with regard to the statement or interjection which I made in French —since my French is not too good—I cannot guarantee exactly what I did say.

Mr. Habel: It was a good effort.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, my question is addressed to the minister as an easterner and he probably has good and sufficient answers to deal with questions of this nature. Clause 2 (1) (j) reads:

"producer" includes, as well as an actual producer, any person entitled as landlord, vendor or mortgagee,—

I am wondering if this should not be extended to include paper title so there could not be two claimants for these benefits?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, we are not yet dealing with that clause so I do not think we should refer to it at this time. I might point out to hon. members that in the committee of the whole we cannot deal with the bill on a clause by clause basis until the first clause has been carried. Until such time we are precluded from dealing with subsequent clauses.

Mr. Deniset: Mr. Chairman, the question on which I am rising is practically a question of privilege. Since I have been brought into this discussion I feel I must speak at this time. I thought there had been sufficient discussion in the last two days to render it unnecessary for me to get up and say I am in favour of this bill.

I come from St. Boniface which is a semi-rural semi-urban constituency. As the electors of St. Boniface know very well, I am keenly interested in agriculture. I did not think I would have to rise and say so but the hon. member for Mackenzie insinuated that perhaps there were no Liberals in Manitoba who were interested in agriculture and this is absolutely false as he well knows.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): They keep repeating it just the same.

Mr. Deniset: An impression has been created in this house by the C.C.F. party that the Liberal party is not interested in the farmers of western Canada and this also is completely untrue. The only thing that was correct in what the hon. gentleman said was that I was not a member of this house prior to June 10. Apart from that, however, his remarks had no basis in fact and I wish to state at this time that I am extremely interested in agriculture and so is the Liberal party.

I would like to point out to the government the problem created by tax sales. Hon. members are probably aware of the great number of tax sales occurring throughout the province of Manitoba. The danger exists that most of this money will go back to pay arrears of municipal taxes. The municipalities will give the money to the banks and this will mean that not very much money will flow back from the west to the east. I therefore agree with those hon. members who have said that this is purely and simply an emergency measure.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I have a brief comment to make at this time. On October 24 the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) asked the Minister of Agriculture if in view of the reference in the speech from the throne to the government's intention of introducing a measure dealing with the stabilization of farm prices would it not be desirable to bring in this measure at the earliest possible moment? His question also suggested that legislation providing for the stabilization of farm prices might also be dealt with before the debate on the speech from the throne was concluded as is the case with the bill we are now considering and the various amendments to social legislation introduced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I am rising at this time simply to ask the Minister of Agriculture if in view of the importance of this question and the obvious interest in the subject indicated in all quarters of the house the request of the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) should now be given some consideration, particularly in view of the fact that he described the situation in the district from which he comes which, as in the case of the district from which I come, works a hardship on the primary producer. In my own constituency the corn growers, soybean growers and soft wheat growers are experiencing difficulty, as is the case with the farm community in general at this time. In view of this situation and on behalf of primary producers all across Canada I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture could not give us some assurance as to the decision of the government to deal with this matter at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I am very much aware of the difficulty which the farmers in my hon. friend's area have been experiencing this summer due to floods and other natural hazards as well as the difficulties they encounter in disposing of their products at favourable prices. I would just remind the hon. member that in answer to a question raised this afternoon I said that this farm stabilization resolution appears in today's Votes and Proceedings and if he looks it up he will find it there.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I saw it there.

Mr. Harkness: It will appear on the order paper tomorrow.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you very much.

Mr. Argue: I think I can agree with the suggestion that this resolution should be brought down as quickly as possible. I know there is other important legislation before the house both in the resolution and bill stages and certainly we in this group would agree to postponing further discussion on the speech from the throne to assist in the speedy passage of some of this emergency legislation.

Earlier this afternoon the Minister of Agriculture said that generally speaking since August 1 our exports of wheat have not been too much below our exports for last year. I have in my hand the report of the board of grain commissioners as at the close of business on Wednesday, October 23 which arrived in my mail today and which contains what I believe are the most up to date figures.

Overseas clearances for wheat to date are 57.9 million bushels as compared with 67.7 million bushels for the same period a year ago. Other grains are also listed. Just a trickle of oats is being exported. Our exports of barley this year have been 5 million bushels as compared with 16 million bushels in the same period a year ago. The grand total of overseas clearances for all grains including wheat, oats, barley, rye and flaxseed from August 1 to October 23 this year is 66 million bushels as compared with 85.6 million bushels in the same period a year ago which indicates a drop of 19.4 million bushels from last year.

I am not disputing the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture because it is also correct. I think you can best compare a fall period to a previous fall period rather than to a winter or spring period and I think the situation as it exists is unsatisfactory. There has been a substantial worsening in our export picture, not as compared with the past spring but as compared with our exports of one year ago.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister what is the constitutional situation regarding this bill. Does the wheat board have a prior claim on the grain when it is delivered over a province in its collection of, we will say, hail insurance? At the present time in Alberta, as the minister knows, when a farmer takes out hail insurance and signs a note and delivers the grain the elevator companies have a claim against that grain and the payment is made on the first delivery of the grain after the initial quota has been delivered. Will that claim for hail insurance take precedence over advances?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, this matter is dealt with in a later clause and I think the proper time to discuss it would be when we have reached that clause. In answer to the hon. member's question, however, I would just point out that liens of that sort will be paid out of the advances as they are made in exactly the same way as they would be paid out of the initial payment on the initial quota. In other words, the advance is actually part of the money the farmer is going to receive for his initial payment and it will be dealt with in exactly the same way. I am sorry—I should have referred to his initial payment. I did not mean the unit quota to start with; that is out.

Mr. Quelch: I asked the question because I had read clauses 10 and 11 and it did not appear to me that that point was very clear.

Mr. Studer: It has been intimated that the cost to the public of Canada under this system of advances will be somewhere between $2 million and $3 million, mostly made up of interest to the banks, as I understand it. I would like to have from the minister an approximate figure of what interest has been paid by the farmers to the banks under the old interim financing act. It will be recalled that the former government was under severe criticism for providing legislation that was described as catering to the banks, in that the farmers were obligated to pay five per cent interest on their loans. I would ask the minister whether he thinks that the banks are not being catered to if they are to receive through this legislation $2 million or more in interest without accepting any obligations whatsoever in any way, shape or form? Will the minister give a definition as to what legislation he thinks might be catering to the banks?

The other point I should like to suggest is that in the discussions that have taken place at various times, mention has been made of the mess the former government made of things and the problem it left on this government's doorstep with respect to wheat. That is not what was said before June 10. However, I should like to refer back to around 1935 when about 300 million bushels of wheat were left on the government's doorstep at that time by the Conservative government and the new government in turn did a very fine job in handling it under difficult conditions.

Another point I wish to emphasize is that under the interim financing legislation the loans that the farmers received were unattachable. If this is not an extension or an improvement in regard to the amounts of the loans that the farmers received under the interim financing act I should like to know why these loans are not also unattachable?

Mr. Harkness: The answer to the last question is: these are advances, they are not loans. They are advances on the initial price which the man is going to receive during the crop year, and as such they have to be treated in exactly the same way as the money that he would normally receive if he were able to deliver his grain. That is the reason for it.

The hon. member seems to be very concerned about the position of the banks in regard to this matter. I noticed he interjected in the debate yesterday the word "banks" once or twice. Now, I do not know just what his general idea is on this but the banks are lending the money which will be used for these cash advances. The banks are lending the money to the wheat board at 4¼ per cent. The normal bank rate for ordinary borrowers going in to borrow money from the banks at the present time is 5½ per cent and 6 per cent. Therefore, the banks actually are doing very well by this scheme and by the wheat board in the rate at which they are lending this money.

Mr. Studer: I agree they are doing very well in a different way.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to enter into any discussion at the present time. I rise merely to point out that for a number of years the Social Credit members have contended that there should be advances on farm-stored grain. They have also contended that there should be approved farm storage facilities erected on the farms or in areas very nearly contiguous to farms.

While this measure is a step in the right direction, it is our opinion that as we go on applying it and seeing it work we shall find deficiencies in it which we at the present time cannot foresee or recognize. Some of the danger spots that we see as Social Crediters, we will develop as we go forward and come to the appropriate clauses. I would just point out that as far as I and my constituents are concerned we are all in favour of advances on farm-stored grain and we are also in favour of the construction of approved storage facilities on the farms.

As far back as November 17, 1953, I made a speech, which is to be found in Hansard, in which this matter is entered into in considerable detail. Again on June 10, 1955, I made a speech in which this matter is developed in considerable detail. We believe that if appropriate measures in respect of finding approved farm storage are taken they will enable us to deal with many problems similar to the one which was raised by the hon. member for Essex East. We see no reason why grains of all kinds, which are more or less indestructible, cannot be stored and kept for use in case of a serious emergency, if we only take precaution to build approved farm storage and pay the farmer what he ought to have for the grain as soon as it is put into that approved farm storage.

Mr. Richardson: I do not want to delay the work of the committee. I come from a constituency in Montreal which certainly has no wheat growers, but I voted in support of the bill last night and I can approve of it for at least two good reasons. One, it has been suggested that it is emergency or relief legislation. Second, whatever will help a large section or segment of the Canadian economy will help other people.

The only reason I rise is to again put it to the minister, in support of the view which was spoken to briefly by the hon. member for Welland, whether this is, as the minister said in his answer it would be, as I understand it, available or needed for two years. If this is emergency or relief legislation, even though there are two groups involved, one, the wheat growers of Canada who themselves are taxpayers and, two, those who are not wheat growers but who are taxpayers, speaking for the taxpayers generally, including the wheat growers, should we, as a matter of general policy, in enacting legislation, whether it is of this character or not, if it is emergency or relief legislation, put it on the statute books as a permanent piece of legislation or, instead, for the foreseeable future which the minister, with the guidance of the members of his own side or representing all other parties in the house who are essentially wheat growers, can foresee as the period during which this emergency or relief measure is required?

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, I would believe that the majority of the people in the constituency of St. Lawrence-St. George, if they studied the problem as it has been put before the house, would say, surely, it is not $100 million or $150 million lent or even advanced to the wheat growers of Canada; it is the cost to the taxpayer of $2 million or $3 million plus administration costs plus, I would suppose, in the natural circumstances of life, a few loans or advances which will not be met. If that is so then we, as taxpayers generally of the country, are going to have a cost of $2 million or $3 million in one year.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the government, in its initial stage in office after some 20 years, should consider very carefully whether emergency or relief legislation should be placed upon the statute books of Canada as a permanent piece of legislation.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Chairman, I have a question to ask the Minister of Agriculture. He told us yesterday that there had been telegrams exchanged with the pools and those who would be the agents of the wheat board in making these advances, and that the telegrams indicated they were quite prepared to co-operate with the government in carrying out the legislation and even to assume up to 10 per cent of individual losses as were not anticipated but as might be experienced up to a maximum of one-quarter of one per cent of the total amounts advanced by the respective organizations.

As I read the bill, there is no provision in it dealing with that matter, and I have considered the bill rather carefully. Is it the intention of the minister to have some provision in line with the statement he made in proposing second reading of the bill yesterday included in this legislation? The legislation will be the only document that will determine the respective rights of those who will be concerned in the matter. I understand there is provision whereby agreements can be made with banks or with others for the administration of the act but is it intended to rely upon the fact that before it becomes operative such matters can be covered by agreements with those who will be acting as agents for the wheat pools?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the Leader of the Opposition may I point out that section 9, subsection 2, provides that the board may make such arrangements and enter into such contracts or agreements as the board considers necessary or advisable for the administration of this act. It is under this section that the board will have the power to enter into agreements with the elevator companies with regard to what losses may be assumed or anything else along that line. This is in line with the wheat board act under which the wheat board enters into arrangements or agreements with elevator companies for them to act as agents of the board in purchasing grain. Of course, one of the reasons why the 10 per cent and the one-quarter of one per cent are not laid down definitely in the legislation and are covered under the right or power of the board to make arrangements or contracts is that experience might show that these were not proper figures. When the legislation is made use of next year a different agreement from the one which has been entered into tentatively already between the board and the elevator companies might be necessary or desirable.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Then it is not intended to have any obligation by virtue of the legislation binding on those who will be acting as agents for the wheat board?

Mr. Harkness: No, that is correct.

Mr. Marler: Does the minister not think that the section to which he has just referred rather suggests the carrying out of arrangements contemplated by this legislation rather than arrangements which seem to me from reading the bill to be entirely foreign to the purpose? The purpose of the legislation is to make advances. I fail to see how section 9, subsection 2, to which the minister referred a moment ago, could be given the rather broader meaning which he seems to be giving to it at this moment.

Mr. Harkness: As I indicated, Mr. Chairman, the agreement or contract which the board will make with the elevator companies is in line with the type of contract they have been making with them for years past to act as agents of the board in buying grain. Of course, the particular form of that contract might, as I said, vary from time to time and from year to year.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Board may make advance payments.

Mr. Harkness: I wish to present an amendment to this clause and it will be in these terms:

That clause 3 of the bill be amended and that the following be substituted for subclause 4 of clause 3:

"No person who has received an advance payment under this act in any crop year and who is in default in respect thereof is, until his undertaking in respect thereof has been fully discharged, entitled to receive another advance payment in the same or any subsequent crop year."

The purpose of this change is to make absolutely certain that disentitlement flows from default and not from the failure to deliver grain. The explanatory note prepared by the legal officers of the crown puts the matter this way. The purpose of the amendment is to allow a producer who is not in default and who, through no fault of his own, has been unable to deliver enough grain to fulfil his undertaking, to obtain a new advance in a subsequent crop year if he has sufficient unpledged and undelivered grain as security. The new section, of course, prevents a person whose undertaking is in default from getting a new advance until the default is remedied.

I think this matter was raised by one or two hon. members during the debate on second reading. They suggested that the possibility might exist that a man who had only been able to deliver 4 bushels of his quota or 5 bushels of his quota instead of 6 bushels and thus had been unable to repay his advance might be precluded from getting a loan in the subsequent year. The purpose of the amendment is to make certain that that situation does not arise.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): I was very pleased to hear this amendment—

Mr. Harkness: Excuse me. I should like to have one of my colleagues move the amendment.

Mr. Monteith: I so move.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, before the amendment carries I want to commend the government for introducing this amendment because if it had not been moved a very serious defect would have existed in this clause in that the farmer, through no fault of his own, would have been deprived of the benefit of receiving an advance in a subsequent year because of his failure to deliver grain.

I am rising more specifically to deal with this first mention of threshed grain in storage. I should like the minister to correct an erroneous opinion that existed, in the first place I believe, in the weekly Winnipeg Free Press. This newspaper stated that the advance would be made only on grain threshed from this year's crop. I think the implication is that a farmer who may have 300 specified acres and who has a considerable backlog of grain, and who decided he would go out of wheat production completely, would not have any grain threshed in this crop year. I should like the minister's assurance that the measure applies to any grain in storage on the farm and not specifically to grain that is threshed in the particular crop year in which the advance is given.

Mr. Harkness: If I might just answer that question now, I would say there is no question at all but that any grain which the farmer has in storage on his farm, whether it is grain from this crop year or three crop years ago, is eligible for the cash advance or can be considered as security for the cash advance. I think that clears up the matter definitely.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): I just wanted it cleared up because of the erroneous newspaper report.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): Before we pass on to the next clause, I wonder if the minister would consider qualifying that word "storage". I would suggest that some word should be included to ensure that the storage be reasonably weatherproof. I do not know whether or not it is intended that cash advances should be made on piles of grain lying in the open or in the type of bins which have no roof. Sometimes this type of storage is required temporarily on the prairies. I wonder if the minister would consider qualifying the storage with such words as "reasonably weatherproof".

Mr. Harkness: The matter of putting into effect a system something like that which exists in the United States under which grain is put into what they called approved storage, which is mostly steel bins and then having people come out and inspect this storage, seal the door, and so on, was considered. However, we came to the conclusion it was impractical so far as a scheme of this kind was concerned. It would be extremely costly and slow and would hold up the issuing of the advances. We did away with that, therefore, and as long as the man has grain on his farm, it is the farmer's responsibility to store it. He has undertaken to deliver it, and it is this undertaking to which we hold him.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): May I point out that there might be serious criticism of advances being made on wheat in open piles; that is all I was suggesting. I was not suggesting that the storage be approved, but that it be acceptable farm storage, not necessarily steel bins. The grain could be stored in wooden bins or any bin that would be weatherproof; it is just a suggestion.

Mr. Gardiner: On the question raised a few minutes ago with regard to the effect of the provision which is here and the relating of it to the fact that the 6-bushel quota is a limiting factor in the plan, am I not correct in saying that this does limit the amount upon which a man can get an advance to the six bushels per designated acre? There was no limitation of that kind before, that is a man could secure a loan equal to half the value of his grain; no matter what amount was handled he got up to $3,000.

I would think from reading the bill and from listening to the discussion that there is a further limitation. While no mention is made of the fact it must be this year's quota, even if it is grain from three years ago which the farmer still has on his farm, he is not able to deliver more than the amount which would be covered by the quota for the year, up to six bushels to the acre. I think that would be correct.

While I am on my feet, I should like to say a word with regard to the suggestion made a few moments ago from the other side of the house. If this were a long-term storage plan, I think what the hon. member said would be absolutely necessary. But those of us who do farm in western Canada know it is quite customary, particularly I think in the area from which the hon. member from Kindersley comes, for farmers to have insufficient storage to take care of all the grain they grow in bumper crop years. It would not be a proper carrying out of their activities if they attempted to do so.

They may have enough storage to take care of grain in an average year which would be the average between the years when they grow very little because of drought and the years when they grow considerable because of good crop conditions. These farmers may have a considerable amount of grain stored out in piles. It is customary now to put these piles in much better shape than they were a few years ago. A man can get ordinary plyboard today and make a wall around the wheat to keep everything away from it. This keeps the grain in much better shape. If the farmer had to put a roof on that he would be put to an expense which would not be reasonable in connection with a measure of this kind. I agree with the minister that that would not be warranted in connection with this legislation. It would limit the number of farmers who would draw assistance from it and I would be inclined to agree with him on that particular point.

Mr. Harkness: The question which the right hon. member has asked, as to whether the effect of this measure is not more limited than the effect of the loan legislation introduced by the previous administration, I think is answered in this way. Theoretically it may be more limited but practically it is just the reverse. Under the loan legislation which his government introduced, during the period for which I gave the exact figures on second reading some $700 was the amount of the average loan, and for the second period the amount was $600. Under this legislation the amount which the farmers will be able to secure, we think, will be considerably in excess of that average.

Mr. Argue: In so far as the question the hon. member for Middlesex West asked as to whether under this legislation there should not be a provision requiring storage of a certain type, I might say I agree with the minister and the hon. member for Melville that that is not at all necessary. This legislation provides for certain advances against deliverable grain. While there may be some grain out under the snow, and some farmers have grain under the snow, I think any farmer who has grain exposed has probably many thousands of bushels in adequate storage. He has some grain under the snow because he has filled all his granaries, filled his barn and probably part of his house. He has run out of money, so he has to dump the rest of the grain out in the open field.

In the United States, of course, they have a system of inspecting the grain on which a loan or an advance can be made. This system has worked out very well. It is entirely different from our system, for one reason because the United States loan or advance is $2 a bushel and the advance here is 50 cents. If you offered the farmers of western Canada the United States system or this system I am sure they would accept the United States system even though the United States system required storage of a certain kind.

The man with grain under the snow, if he could get $2 a bushel for it would be able to put it in very excellent storage. Of course, in the United States system there is provision for the payment of storage if the grain is not accepted by the federal agency within the year in which the loan is made. I think the storage is 16 cents a bushel a year. Hence the two systems are not comparable at all.

I want to express to the minister my pleasure that the amendment that was presented has been moved. As I understand it,—and this was the point I was complaining about last night—this amendment will overcome the complaint I had made, namely that if at a local marketing point at the end of July a quota is available of only four bushels, a farmer who wishes to deliver six bushels and retire his advance and who has not been able to do so through no fault of his own will now be able to go to the elevator agent and get an advance for the next crop year on an additional six-bushel quota. I believe that is the effect of the amendment. If that is true, then it means that this is the first indication by any government that the government is prepared to provide the farmer with some money on the basis of what over the years, I take it, will work out to be a guaranteed delivery of six bushels an acre. At least it is saying that as far as the advance is concerned the farmer each year under this legislation will be able to get 50 cents a bushel provided that he is not in default and so on. If that is the intent of the amendment, I think the amendment is extremely valuable and that it strengthens this legislation materially. It means—and this is not very much—that a wheat producer will be able to get an advance or an income of not less than $3 an acre per specified acre. It is very little but it is just a little bit more than he has had in recent years as far as a guarantee is concerned.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, the remarks that have just been made by the hon. member for Assiniboia go much further, in my opinion, than there was any necessity for going in discussing this particular section when he says that this legislation provides more than was ever provided before or makes some provision that was never given before. The government, of course, was not directly responsible in the same manner previously as it is now under this measure, to the extent that interest is now being paid by the government rather than by either the wheat board or by farmers in general. But the provision under the old bill was that it did not matter how much wheat the man had or what year he produced the wheat, he could go to the bank and, assuming that he was entitled to get $3,000, all he had to do in order to get that $3,000 was to prove that he had $6,000 worth of wheat on his farm. At that point he was not limited at all by any suggestion that this year's quota had anything to do with it. I can understand that there are some reasons for putting on the limitation that is now on, but nevertheless it is there. The farmer now is assumed to get one-half, as the argument went on second reading. Fifty cents a bushel is not half the price of No. 1 wheat. Fifty cents a bushel is considerably more than half the price of No. 6 wheat. Hence there is just a possibility—depending on what grades of wheat the man has—that 50 cents may be more than half. But let us assume that 50 cents a bushel is one-half, and I assume that what the government was attempting to do when they set this price was to advance approximately one-half.

Mr. Harkness: Yes; to strike an average.

Mr. Gardiner: To strike an average that would be approximately one-half. Our legislation simply said it was one-half of whatever grain a man had on the farm; that the amount of security he had to have was twice as much as the amount of money he could get. In effect it is the same intention. I still maintain that under that form they had then there is not as great a limitation as there is under this legislation because there is a further limitation beyond that based upon the quota which a man had for this year.

There are here in this house members from the west who know that there are many reasons why farmers have grain on their farm. Some kept grain on their farms because the marketing of it, even at the time when they could market it, perhaps brought them more cash than they needed to have for the time being. It had some effect on income tax and other matters. There are some who are in that position. We also know that a farmer who has had one or two crop failures may find himself in quite a different position, and that even although he has a few thousand bushels of wheat sitting on his farm, he is needing cash now perhaps as badly as is the man who went along, delivered during the time and spent the money and so on. He is in difficulties. I say that this limits that man when he comes along now and attempts to market his grain.

I do not need to go into all the different examples one might use. I simply say that the man who came along with any amount of grain in his bins which was valued at over $6,000 could borrow $3,000, regardless of his acreage and the amount that he could deliver under his quota for this year. But now he is going to be limited further to whatever he could have delivered under his quota this year and the prices that are set for that acreage, 50 cents for wheat, 20 cents for oats and 35 cents for barley. I merely state that again because of what has been said by the hon. member for Assiniboia to the effect that previously there really never was as much offered. I think that under certain circustances more was offered.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps I had better say that my right hon. friend still talks as though this were a loan on the same basis as the loan system which his government had in effect. Again I must reiterate that it is not a loan, it is an advance. It is part of the initial payment which the farmer would receive during that crop year as he delivered his grain and would be paid to him before he actually delivers his grain. That puts it in a very different position than if it were a loan.

As to the contention put forward by the hon. member for Melville, he himself said two days ago that only time will tell whether his contention is correct or whether mine is correct. I therefore do not think there is any use of our spending any more time on that particular matter. I would also point this out to him. If he thinks that this legislation is not as good as the previous legislation or that it does not provide as much opportunity, we will say, to the farmers to secure cash as did the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act, I can say to him that that act is still on the statute books and if any farmer wants to take advantage of that act he is still free to do so. He is not cut out of that act. He has therefore lost nothing as far as that act is concerned. However, he has gained the advantage of this act.

Mr. Gardiner: I am prepared to agree with the minister. As I say, I would not have carried on the argument any further as between the minister and myself. But when an hon. member from another constituency which is not too far away from my own rises in his place and says that the situation is such and such, and that there never was as much offered before, I think it is necessary for me to answer that statement. That is all that I was doing.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 as amended carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 3 as amended agreed to.

On clause 4—Contents of application.

Mr. Quelch: I should like a word of explanation from the minister. Does he anticipate that when a farmer goes to an elevator and signs an application he will then and there receive payment or does he anticipate that the application in some cases will have to be okayed by the head office before payment is made?

Mr. Harkness: I think that is a matter which is up to the elevator companies to some extent. The intention is that it should be paid at the time. I would presume that is the practice which most elevator companies will follow but it may be that some elevator companies would want to refer it to their head office before they paid out any money. I do not know.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Would there be any occasion in an instance like that where an elevator agent would have to go down and inspect the grain on the farm to see whether the application could go through?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, that again is I think up to the individual elevator company. If they think it is necessary for the grain to be inspected on the farm by their agents, of course that is done at their expense and that is their preference. The intention however is that the money will be in the farmers hands just as quickly as possible and we presume that in most cases it will be paid promptly by the elevator agents.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Just on that point, Mr. Chairman there may be individual cases where the farmer may be delayed for quite a considerable time in getting this payment and I would like to know if I am right in thinking that when he makes an application, which is in effect an affidavit he would be responsible for it and should therefore get his money unless, as the minister says, there is some unusual circumstance surrounding the transaction.

Mr. Harkness: I think that is right.

Mr. Gardiner: I just want to raise one point with respect to a remark made by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, on I believe two different occasions, to the effect that the farmer will get the cash from the elevator agent. This is not the method by which it is done in the bill. It says "cash purchase tickets". He does not get cash from the agent, he gets it from whomever is the paymaster.

Mr. Harkness: With respect to what the hon. member for Melville has said as to the meaning of the word "cash" in that form, what he would get is a negotiable instrument for which he could secure cash at any bank and most stores in his area.

Mr. Gardiner: That is the point; he must cash it at the bank.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, may I direct a question to the minister as to sub-paragraph (e) of clause 4 (1). It says:

> Whether he has received a previous advance payment, and, if so, particulars thereof and the amount of undelivered grain in respect of which the previous advance payment was made;

Does that mean in the particular crop year or does that apply also to advances made in previous crops years? I do not think it is quite clear.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, it might be either. This clause is intended to provide particularly for the case of a man who, we will say, was entitled to an advance of $2,000. He might think he would only need $1,000, so he goes and gets an advance of $1,000; then sometime later in the season he decides he needs the other $1,000, so he then applies for it. It is to make sure that he will be in a position to do so that this provision is made.

Mr. Lambert: With respect, Mr. Chairman, I think there should be some clarification there as to whether it is in a particular crop year or in a previous year.

Mr. Harkness: It could be either and it is also to take care of an instance such as I have mentioned where there is a carryover from one crop year to the next. In other words at the end of the crop year a man may only have been able to deliver four bushels of his quota and had therefore not been able to discharge all of his advance.

He will then be in a position to go ahead and get the advance during the next crop year in spite of the fact that this had not been discharged.

Mr. Lambert: In other words it is perfectly clear that he must not make any declaration as to any previous fully liquidated advances. This says:

Whether he has received a previous advance payment, and if so, particulars thereof and the amount of undelivered grain in respect of which the previous advance payment was made.

I say on the strength of the minister's explanation it is quite clear that he has to furnish no particulars as to previous liquidated advances.

Mr. Harkness: No, Mr. Chairman, the reverse is the case. He is entitled to $3,000 in the form of cash advances in any particular crop year and therefore we have to have the information in his permit book as to what cash advances he may have received in the crop year prior to the time when he makes his application, no matter whether it is liquidated or not.

Mr. Lambert: In that crop year?

Mr. Harkness: In that crop year, yes.

Mr. Lambert: Not previous years.

Mr. Studer: It is assumed that if an individual makes an application to an elevator agent and is refused, it does not preclude him from interviewing and shopping around until he finds an elevator agent who would be agreeable.

Mr. Harkness: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is absolutely correct. He can go to as many elevator agents as he likes.

Mr. Argue: On that point Mr. Chairman it has to be the same marketing point.

Mr. Harkness: It is the delivery point, yes.

Mr. Argue: Where he made his delivery.

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Undertaking by the producer.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Chairman, sub-paragraph (b) says:

(b) upon default, he will repay to the board the amount in default, without interest prior to default but with interest at 6 per cent per annum after default.

Now there may arise a case—I admit it is possibly a far-fetched idea—where a man would die or cease farming operations and the default might run along indefinitely. Has consideration been given to making provision whereby default long overdue can be charged against the title of the land in the form of a caveat.

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, consideration was given to that point, but in view of the differences between the provincial laws in the three prairie provinces and the different types of security which are already secured or are registered against the land and so forth, it was not considered that this would be a practical proposition.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer the minister to the subparagraph (a) which reads as follows:

(a) he will, after completing delivery under the unit quota and as soon as other quotas or other permission given by the board enable him to do so,—

I would like to ask the minister this question: What other permission given by the board enabling him to do so did he have in mind at the time he drafted that particular portion of the bill?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, as an example of the others that are mentioned, there would be the special quotas or permission in regard to malting barley and there may be other circumstances of the same kind.

Clause 5 agreed to.

On clause 6—Joint producers.

Mr. Harkness: On clause 6 Mr. Chairman, I have certain amendments which I would ask my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, to move. Clause 6 will be amended by making the present clause 6 "Clause 6, subsection (1)" and adding the following new subsections:

(2) An application by two or more producers may specify the shares of the advance payment to be paid to each.

(3) Where an application by two or more joint producers specifies the share of the advance payment to be paid to each such producer, and subsequently the undertaking is in default, a joint producer who pays to the board an amount that is in the same proportion to the amount in default as his share of the advance payment is to the total advance payment, together with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum after default, is, notwithstanding anything in this act, relieved of his obligation to make any further payment to the board in respect of the default.

I might say in explanation of that that the purpose of the amendment is to relieve a joint producer from his obligation on default to pay more than his proportionate share of the balance of the money due.

The landlord is entitled to one-third of the crop and therefore he is entitled to one-third of the advance. You may have the sort of situation where, we will say, an advance of $1,500 is given of which the landlord receives $500. The tenant might then by some dishonest means dispose of the 3,000 bushels of grain against which that advance has been made. It would be impossible for him to deliver and the tenant after dishonestly disposing of the grain might depart from the country.

Under the provision as it existed it could have been possible that the landlord in such a case would have become liable for the whole $1,500 advance which had been made which of course would not have been fair and equitable. Therefore this amendment has been introduced to ensure that in the case of a joint producer of that sort, whether he be a landlord or any one else, he will not be liable for the repayment of more than the amount he receives initially in the event default does take place. I might say further that if this amendment had not been put in it might well have been that a considerable number of landlords would not have been prepared to sign applications and tenants would thus have been precluded from securing these cash advances. To ensure to the extent that we can that all tenants would be able to secure these cash advances we are moving this amendment.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, I must say that from my first reading of this clause I thought it much broader than the minister explains is the case and in reading it carefully now I think probably I was interpreting it in a broader way.

Mr. Harkness: I did the same thing to begin with and that is why I had to introduce the amendment.

Mr. Gardiner: Clause 6 reads:

> Where two or more producers are entitled to deliver grain under one permit book—

I was interpreting it much more broadly than that. What would be the position of co-operatives where probably more than one farmer has a permit book but all the members have common interests? Then too, there is the question of how it would affect a partnership. Is each person in a co-operative in a position to receive an advance up to $3,000 or will there be just one advance of $3,000 to be distributed among a number of members? I would think that this clause does not go so far as to deal with co-operatives, partnerships or arrangements of that kind and if it does not is there any clause in the bill which does meet the situation? On the other hand, is there any necessity for it; is there legislation elsewhere that provides for these groups?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the person entitled to receive the advance of $3,000 is the producer or producers named in the permit book. The maximum advance is $3,000 as far as any one permit book is concerned.

Mr. Gardiner: I presume there is provision in the wheat board act for how co-operatives and partnerships are to be dealt with. We have quite a number of these arrangements in the west. I recall we had to make some special provision for them under some legislation and I was just wondering whether they are covered by this bill.

Mr. Harkness: The officials tell me that while there are co-operatives most of them are corporations and the question is handled from that point of view.

Mr. Gardiner: And are they entitled to more than one permit book?

Mr. Harkness: In most cases just one, I think.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Minister of Agriculture grasped the full significance of the question raised by the hon. member for Melville. The situation is that if there were ten families belonging to a co-operative they would be limited to $300 per family under the proposed legislation. Until this crisis developed that situation was not too serious because the co-operative farmer or the farmer who was a member of a partnership expected to be able to deliver all the grain eventually and they were entitled to just one permit book, but with the existing situation where we have a large volume of grain piled up in some areas to limit co-operative farmers—and there may be as many as ten families dependent on one book—to $300 each is simply forcing these people out of business.

The same thing applies to partnerships. There have been a number of cases where two, three, or four farm families have formed a partnership in order to survive the result of the situation caused by the high cost of machinery. They are now placed in an impossible position if there is to be just one permit book for a partnership. For example, I have in mind a three-family partnership that has a large volume of grain on hand and only one permit book. Could the minister state what consideration has been given to making the advances on a family basis rather than on the permit book basis?

Mr. Harkness: This whole scheme is tied in with the permit book system and we think it is only practical and workable because of this tie-in. In effect the permit book system constitutes the only security that exists for repayment of these advances and therefore any changes that might be made in order to take care of co-operatives and partnerships which hon. members have mentioned would have to be made as a result of a change in the general existing permit book system and whether this could be done or whether we would consider it practical to do so, I just do not know.

Mr. Nicholson: I wonder if the minister is able to say whether it will be possible under the regulations to review this problem. It is obvious that this was not a problem at the time the permit book system was first introduced but it is a problem right now. I would think that as long as the grain was there as security it should be possible for each of the ten families in a co-operative to receive the maximum amount. If they are limited to a total of $3,000 they will not be able to survive and will be forced off the farms.

Mr. Harkness: All I can say is that if the co-operative or partnership—or whatever the hon. member had in mind might be—is entitled to one permit book under the present wheat board act and the existing permit book system it will still be entitled to it and also to the $3,000 cash advance. In the same way, whether or not there are ten families involved they are entitled only to the unit quota of 300 bushels of wheat and so on. This is a matter to which we will be glad to give further consideration but I cannot say anything further on it than I have already said.

At the moment it is essential for this scheme to be tied to the permit book system. Any defects in the permit book system which create an inequity, we will say, so far as deliveries which the member involved can make are, of course, just as apparent in this advance legislation as they are under what you might call normal delivery regulations.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, let us get back to section 6; let us for a moment examine just exactly what a joint permit holder is and some of the practical reasons why permits have been taken out jointly. There are some good and simple reasons why permit books are applied for jointly. One is that the income tax department, I am told, uses Canadian wheat board records in the initial stages and also for subsequent payments in determining or assessing a farmer's tax. The other reason, of course, is that it facilitates distribution of subsequent wheat board payments. That is the reason why many permit books are taken out jointly. I can see that this clause would possibly be workable in the case of individuals, landlord and tenant, and so on. But we must remember that many joint permit books are taken out in the name of an individual farmer and a provincial government or a municipal government. In Alberta they are taken out jointly with special areas, and so on.

[Mr. Harkness.]

The clause reads:

> Where two or more producers are entitled to deliver grain under one permit book, no advance payment shall be made unless all such producers named in the permit book jointly make the application and execute the undertaking—

I know that some of these municipal governments are hard pressed for money but I do not think they would be willing to undertake a joint application with an individual farmer for these advances.

When the permit books are taken out the elevator agent usually asks you this question: "Is there anyone else interested in the grain or crop that is growing on the land that is specified in the permit book?" And when you tell him that there is someone else such as the department of lands and forests, special areas, or some other individual, then it becomes a joint permit book; but in practice, when you go to sell grain with this permit book there is no specific share designated and any one party can sell anywhere from one per cent to 100 per cent of the grain. Certainly, it would appear to me that if we leave this section in the bill then, unless those governments and other parties I have mentioned are willing to undertake to execute the application jointly the tenants are certainly going to be precluded.

In looking it over and being familiar with the practical application of what happens when there is a joint permit book, I would like to recommend to the minister that until and unless some changes are made in applying for a permit book so that in that permit book there are definite shares designated when you take it out he should delete this clause altogether.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, we cannot delete the clause altogether because this system would not work. In regard to the difficulties which are envisaged by the hon. member, I would say to him that anyone who has an interest in the delivery of the grain, or in the proceeds from the grain which has been grown on that farm, becomes a joint signer of the application and is classed with the producer and therefore his claims are protected in that way. If he does not want to take any advance all he has to do is sign the agreement with the tenant, we will say, on the farm getting the advance. He does not have to take any advance himself if he does not want to and then he would have no liability for repayment if a default took place.

The way the system will work is that the cheques will be made out jointly, if it is requested in the application that that be done; or it may be requested in the application and specified that the cheques will be made out individually, we will say, two-thirds to the tenant and one-third to the landlord if the landlord has a one-third interest in the grain grown and the tenant two-thirds. Therefore, I think the difficulties which were envisaged by the hon. member were all looked after either in the legislation itself or they will be in the regulations which will be drawn up as provided for in this legislation.

Mr. Olson: I can see that in the repayment the share is designated; but it seems to me that if we leave this in here and if there are some landlords who are either unwilling, or unavailable to the elevator agent, to sign the application the tenant will not be able to take advantage of this unless he can obtain his signature in the first instance when applying for the advance.

Mr. Harkness: It is quite true, Mr. Chairman, that if the landlord refuses to sign the application the tenant will not be able to secure cash advances; but it is essential that the landlord, or whoever else has an interest and right to secure a share of the grain produced on that land, sign the application otherwise the scheme would fall through.

Mr. Lambert: I should like to make one point on this because for some years past I have represented unpaid vendors, people who have retired off the land and sold their land on a crop-share basis. There have been far too many occasions where those people have been left completely at the mercy of the purchaser as to whether payment was made or not. The excuse was always that the grain was not marketed. I feel that here is an opportunity for those people. I can assure hon. members that the cases of hardship in that instance are almost as difficult as those who bought land or who are tenants on the land. Many of those people are old and sick and they now have an opportunity to get some of the money to which they are entitled. I feel that this is a method by which they can get protection—they have notice—when the advance payments are made; otherwise they might not, because hon. members will see in other sections of the bill provision is made for liens on the grain and one thing and another. The grain is completely dissipated and they must wait another year. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the wording of the clause remain as it is.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): May I say a word on that? From what the minister said a moment ago it seems to me that there may be considerable difficulty as a result of this clause. The minister indicated a moment ago that if there were a landlord and a tenant the landlord might be entitled to one-third and the tenant to two-thirds of the cash advances. But in the case where the landlord refused to sign the permit book, no matter how urgent the need was for the tenant to get his share of the cash advance, he would be prevented from getting it. It would seem to me it would be rather easy to have an amendment to this section as to permit the tenant to get at least his two-thirds of the cash advance whether or not the landlord wished to take advantage of his one-third; otherwise you could get a landlord who might say to his tenant, "Well I do not need this money; I am just not going to sign away my right."

I can understand quite well that this may happen. If the landlord happens to be ornery, let us say, the tenant is put in such a position that he would not get any relief under this legislation no matter how greatly he needed it. I would think that the minister should have another look at this. Possibly he could let the clause stand until tomorrow and see if it cannot be amended in such a way as to relieve this difficulty. If it has to go through this way then it will have to but if this situation can be relieved in any way I think that every effort should be made to amend the clause in order to avoid this predicament.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Bow River is labouring under fears which are not justified. There is no advantage to the landlord in refusing to sign the application and there are considerable advantages to him in signing it. By signing the application he loses absolutely nothing and cannot lose anything. On the other hand, he gets his share of the crop and really his only interest in the land is to get his share of the crop. He gets paid for part of his share of the crop immediately instead of having to wait several months for payment. That immediately reduces his risk and it gives him money in hand which he can use for other purposes. It is all to his advantage to sign the application. Now that this amendment has been introduced so that there is no chance of him having any liability for any money except the money he actually receives I do not see any reason why he would not sign. Why should he refuse to sign? Self-interest and everything else, particularly his interest in keeping on good terms with his tenant, would all lead him to sign. I do not think the hon. member needs to be afraid on this point at all.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): It might be that no trouble would arise but I think there would be instances where the landlord just would not sign and under those circumstances I cannot see why it would do any harm at all to include a clause that would protect the tenant. As the minister says, it would appear that everything would be in the interest of the landlord to sign but there are landlords who just do not want to sign these things no matter whether it seems to be to their advantage to do so. In that case the tenant would be penalized and I do not think that should be allowed.

Mr. Harkness: The simple answer as to why it cannot be done is that if you tried to do it in that way and give the tenant an advance on the two-thirds of the grain which he is entitled to deliver and to get the initial price for, you would have to segregate the grain. In other words, you would have to go back into the business of sending somebody out to the farm to see that the grain was segregated on the farm and take only security on the two-thirds share which belonged to the tenant and leave out the one-third share which belonged to the landlord. It would make the thing impractical and, as I pointed out before, I cannot see any reason in the world why the landlord would refuse to sign. The advantage is all to him if he does sign.

Mr. Jones: Could the minister tell us what would be the effect on an application under this section if a producer happened to die after the permit book was issued and before the advance was made?

Mr. Harkness: The legal adviser tells me that the executor of his estate would then sign the application.

Mr. Jones: I expect, of course, that that would be the case after the executor or administrator of the estate is appointed, but quite frequently there is an interregnum due to many causes. Could some provision be made either here or in the issuing of permits to cover that situation?

Mr. Harkness: Well, the length of the interregnum would probably not be long in most cases and if there was a real emergency to secure cash he could always act under the Bank Act.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the tenant has an interest in the grain and I certainly cannot go along with the idea, if we are going to make cash advances available to people who have an interest in grain stored on farms, that the tenant, in order to obtain an advance must be dependent on whether or not his landlord will permit him to do so or will sign his application with him. Inasmuch as the tenant has the grain he should be able to go individually and get his advance. If this clause is going to be left in the legislation, then I think the minister should give serious consideration to making some changes in the application for a permit book so that it will clearly designate the shares of the tenant and the landlord in the grain because then the amount of the advance could be determined in accordance with the shares so designated.

Clause 6 as amended agreed to.

On clause 7—Amount of advance payment.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment to clause 7 consequent upon the amendment made to clause 3. It is simply a matter of clarification. I would ask my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to move it for me.

Mr. Monteith: I move:

That subclause 1 of clause 7 be amended by deleting therefrom, in line 14, the words "in the same crop year", and adding thereto in line 12 after the word "applicant" the words "has in storage otherwise than in an elevator and".

Mr. Marler: May I ask what is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. Harkness: It is simply to bring this clause into conformity with clause 3 as amended.

Mr. Marler: In other words, to contemplate advances in more than one crop year.

Mr. Harkness: That is the first point in connection with it and that is why we are taking out "in the same crop year".

Mr. Marler: What are the words that are added? I am afraid I could not hear the chairman.

Mr. Harkness: The words are: "has in storage otherwise than in an elevator and". Those words come in immediately after the word "applicant". The subsection would then read:

Subject to this section, the amount of an advance payment to a producer in respect of the grain deliverable under the permit book specified in the application shall be the quantity of threshed grain (irrespective of its grade and excluding grain deliverable under a unit quota) that the applicant has in storage otherwise than in an elevator and undertakes to deliver to the board, less any undelivered grain in respect of which a previous advance payment was made, multiplied by . . .

Mr. Marler: I understand.

Clause 7 as amended agreed to.

Clauses 8 and 9 agreed to.

On clause 10—Lien on grain.

Mr. Stefura: This clause reads:

> Where the board has made an advance payment to a producer, the board has a lien for the amount thereof on the grain in respect of which the advance payment was made.

A question arises here as to whether the lien will be on all the grain the farmer has in storage or whether it will be just on the six bushels per acre quota. The minister has mentioned that the hail lien will take precedence over this lien and I was wondering whether or not some of these provincial liens, municipal tax liens and other provincial liens would take precedence over this lien for the advance. What will actually happen is that the farmer will get these cash advances and he will just pay off his liens. He will not have any more cash than he had when he started.

Not only will that be the case, but if the lien covers all the grain held on the farm he will not be able to sell grain or obtain a further loan from a bank. Let us say a farmer has a ten bushel to the acre crop. He will not be able to get a loan on the amount over the 6-bushel quota. I think that word "grain" should be qualified to mean the amount of grain this lien actually covers.

Mr. Harkness: It covers the grain on which the advance is made. In other words, if a man has secured an advance of $3,000 on a security of 6,000 bushels of grain, that is what is covered and that is the grain on which the lien exists.

Mr. Gardiner: Supposing a man has 10,000 bushels and he is able to get an advance on only 6,000 bushels. There has never been any separation made of the grain and perhaps he has the 10,000 bushels in one pile or in one bin. Unless there has been a separation of the grain, is the lien on the whole 10,000 bushels or is it only on some portion of it that is not designated?

Mr. Harkness: It is on the 6,000 bushels. From a practical point of view, this is the situation. If he had 10,000 bushels, he would be at liberty to take 4,000 bushels out and feed it or sell it or do anything else with it. But if he takes out some of the 6,000 bushels, in other words, if he gets down below the 6,000 bushels then he becomes liable for the penalties mentioned here because he has been selling some of the grain on which he has obtained an advance.

Mr. Gardiner: Assuming he needs an advance on the other 4,000 bushels, is the whole 10,000 bushels tied up in such a way that he cannot go to the bank and get an advance on the other 4,000?

Mr. Harkness: No, he would be at liberty to segregate the grain himself if he wanted to. So far as the wheat board is concerned, if he has taken an advance on 6,000 bushels of grain, in other words taken an advance of $3,000, the board has a lien on 6,000 bushels of grain. If he sells some of that 6,000 bushels or otherwise disposes of it he puts himself in default and is liable for the penalties provided. If he has 10,000 bushels, he can do anything he likes with the other 4,000 bushels over and above the 6,000 on which the advance has been made and which are security for that advance.

Mr. Gardiner: I am not worrying about either the wheat board or the banks, for that matter, or any other person, but here is a man who owns 130,000 bushels of grain which is in one pile on the prairie. I know many who may have 20,000 bushels in that way, and if a man is not able to deliver his wheat, if he is in difficulties, and he can be —it is all very well for some of my friends to say that he is not in much trouble if he has that much wheat; sometimes a man who is in that position is in more trouble than the person to whom he owes money—if he does get an advance, whether he has 12,000 bushels or 14,000 bushels, then he is not able to go to the bank and borrow against that amount which is over and above the amount covered by the lien. He is not able to borrow until he has cleared up the whole situation with the wheat board.

Mr. Harkness: No, Mr. Chairman, anyone who has 20,000 or 30,000 bushels of wheat will never get into any trouble under this measure. He will always have the 6,000 bushels which acts as security for the $3,000 he has had as an advance. What he does with the remainder of it is his own business.

Mr. Gardiner: But after he has cleared up his business with you? You go to the bank with that lien and see how much money you will get.

Mr. Harkness: We have made an advance on the 6,000 bushels, and what he does with the rest is his business. If he can get a loan from a bank or from anywhere else, it is all right; it is his business.

Mr. Stefura: Does this lien take priority over the liens for municipal taxes or some of the other liens we have in the province of Alberta?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, we believe that we have got around all the difficulties in connection with liens, such as thresher liens, hail insurance liens, municipal tax liens and so forth, by providing when the advance is issued that it will be dealt with in exactly the same way as if the farmer had delivered the grain and received his initial payment on it.

As hon. members know, out in our country each elevator agent has a list of the farmers' names, and under each name he has a notation of the liens which are against that man. If there is a municipal tax lien of $200 and the farmer comes in with a big load of wheat, for which he is to receive $400, the elevator agent gives him $200 in cash and the other $200 he pays to the municipal district to cover the taxes. Exactly the same thing will happen in so far as these advances are concerned. When a farmer comes in to obtain a cash advance, the elevator agent looks at his list just the same as he would if the farmer were delivering wheat. Then the agent pays him off accordingly and the persons who had liens are thereby looked after. When it comes to the actual delivery of the grain, these lien holders have no claim against that particular grain on which the advance was made because they have already been paid.

Mr. Stefura: I am not quite clear on this. For example, in the municipality from which I come a farmer must pay his taxes by the end of November. Suppose he has already obtained a cash advance and at the end of November he does not pay his taxes. The municipality sends out the sheriff to seize the grain. Now, which lien has priority, this lien or the municipal tax lien?

Mr. Harkness: If the wheat board lien were taken out first, which would be the case, it would have priority over the subsequent lien.

Mr. Stefura: I understand that in the province of Alberta the municipal tax liens come before any other liens.

Mr. Harkness: Actually, in the province of Alberta they do not, they come after threshers' and several others.

Mr. Gardiner: I am afraid the minister is treating this legislation in the way one would treat any piece of legislation that simply deals with selling something upon which there is a lien. However, that is not the purpose of this legislation. The purpose of this legislation is to make cash available to the farmer. These liens which are filed with the elevator agents, in most cases, represent more than the farmer would receive from these advances. A lot has been said about the average amount of the loans that were obtained under the interim financing act. They averaged around $600, $700 or $800, but the farmer will not obtain any more under this measure. The other day the minister put figures on Hansard to indicate that most of the farms are small farms, and the average farmer will not be able to get more than that amount under this legislation.

He goes to the elevator and the first thing that is taken out is an amount for his taxes. In many cases that can be $400 or $500. Then if there are some other liens in addition they are taken out and he is sent home without any money at all. That is not the objective of this legislation. The objective of it is not to pay the accounts that the man could pay if he had marketed his crop, the object of the legislation is to put some cash in his hands so that he can carry on until such time as he can deliver his grain and get cash, and that means going to the merchants in the village with whom he deals and paying cash for what he buys. He cannot pay cash if he has paid it all out in taxes which were overdue and so on. I suggest this provision limits the benefits far more than I had hoped it would.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): When I was speaking the other day I made reference to the unfair position in which the farmer was going to find himself. I had special reference to section 18 of the act. However, I see now that it also applies to this section 10, as has just been pointed out by the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Melville. I pointed out the same difficulty yesterday when I was speaking, namely that this legislation was primarily intended to give assistance to the farmer to pay those bills which are most urgent, such as a grocery bill or a doctor bill, to buy clothes for the kiddies and so on. This legislation is not going to give him that advantage. Not only are the liens or taxes to have priority but the government itself has priority if the farmer has borrowed under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act.

If you take out all these obligations that have been piling up on the farmer back over all these years,—if he has any arrears of taxes; if he has borrowed money under the Prairie Grain Producers' Interim Financing Act and if he owes other obligations which have liens attached to them—then the farmer is not going to get anything at all out of this advance.

As the minister pointed out to us the other day,—and I referred to the matter yesterday, —about two-thirds of the farmers of the western prairies have about 300 acres or less which will qualify for this advance. That means that they are not going to get more than about $900 at the most. When you take out the obligations where he has given security by liens, the farmer is just not going to have anything to take home with which to pay the groceryman or the butcher or to buy much needed clothes for his family for this winter.

Surely that was not the intention of the act. When the minister was speaking the other day on this bill he went on at some great length to point out how urgently this money was needed by the farmers at this time because they could not pay their bills, and he said this legislation is going to be of great help to them. Now the minister says that the farmer is just being placed in the same position as that in which he would be placed if he were getting his initial payment. That is not true at all. If he were getting his initial payment, he would be getting $1.40 and he would have some money to do something with. But here he is going to get only 50 cents. There is a great deal of difference between 50 cents and $1.40.

If the government really intended that this legislation was to be of some assistance to these farmers who now find themselves in need of some cash, surely they should give the farmers some consideration in this regard and these liens should not have priority over this cash advance. I am not suggesting for a moment that the farmer should get out from under his obligations. However, I am suggesting most emphatically that he should have an opportunity to provide for his family first. I want to make that point clear. This is an emergency. It is something that has arisen. The farmer is just desperate. Surely we are not going to allow this so-called emergent measure to deprive the farmer of the opportunity of buying those necessities for his family and of paying the proprietor of the small grocery store or the small butcher shop or those others who have been financing him over this period. If something is not done we are going to find that many of the farmers will be disappointed in this legislation.

Mr. Harkness: The logical end of the sort of argument we have just been hearing would be that there is no advantage at all to the farmer in being able to deliver his crop because he owes debts and as he delivers his crop in the normal course of events the debts that he owes are subtracted from his deliveries by the elevator agent. That is the logical end of this argument, namely that if he has debts there is no advantage to the farmer in delivering his crop, that he might just as well not deliver it. This argument really is that there is no advantage in his delivering half his crop, because essentially that is what he is doing, or at least he is getting paid, we will say, on the basis of delivering half or as though he had delivered half his crop. The advance payment, in the average case, will amount to approximately one-half of what he would have got if he had been able to deliver the whole six-bushel quota which we expect is the amount the farmers will be able to deliver this year.

The hon. member's argument simply amounts to a statement that if the farmer has debts there is no advantage to him in delivering grain. I just cannot see why anyone should carry on an argument of that kind. Inevitably where it leads you is to the conclusion that if the farmer has debts he should be given an advance whether he has debts or not and that his debtors should be just forgotten about. I do not think you can do that, particularly when the debtors are probably the people who threshed for him, the people who gave him hail insurance, the municipal district to which he pays taxes and so on.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—FIVE-DAY 40-HOUR WEEK

Question No. 68—Mr. Henderson:

Have steps been taken to award a five-day 40-hour week to cooks, kitchen helpers and food service attendants in defence establishments?

Answer by: Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence):

Approval has been given for the reduction of the standard work week from 48 hours to 44 hours, effective October 1, 1957, for cooks, kitchen helpers and food service attendants employed by the Department of National Defence.

Since the working conditions for these classifications now compare favourably with those for similar categories of employees in civilian establishments, no further reduction in working hours is contemplated at the present time.

APPENDIX

CORRESPONDENCE WITH PREMIERS OF PROVINCES

(Similar letter sent to the premiers of all the provinces. The letter to the Premier of Quebec was in the French language)

Office of the Prime Minister
Canada

Ottawa, September 16, 1957.

Honourable L. M. Frost,
Prime Minister of Ontario,
Parliament Buildings,
Toronto 2, Ontario.

My dear Prime Minister,

My colleagues and I believe that it would be useful and desirable to arrange a dominion-provincial conference to review the present pattern of tax sharing arrangements. As you know, there has been a good deal of public discussion of these questions in recent months, and during the recent election campaign I undertook to call such a conference at the earliest feasible date.

In reviewing our time-table commitments it appears to us that the earliest convenient date would be some time toward the end of November. I expect that parliament will still be in session at that time—and no doubt some of the provincial legislatures also, but I am confident that we can count on the necessary parliamentary co-operation in adapting the order of business to make such a meeting possible.

I therefore propose that a dominion-provincial conference on fiscal relations be held at Ottawa on Monday and Tuesday, November 25 and 26. I hope you will find these dates agreeable, and I shall be glad to hear from you in this connection at your early convenience.

I am sending a similar letter to each provincial premier, and as soon as I have the replies we shall proceed to confirm the dates and make the necessary arrangements.

I am,

Yours sincerely,
John G. Diefenbaker

ALBERTA

OFFICE OF THE PREMIER

Edmonton, September 18th, 1957.

Right Honourable J. Diefenbaker,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Parliament Buildings, Ottawa, Ontario.

My dear Prime Minister:

I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 16th regarding your decision to arrange a dominion-provincial conference to review the present pattern of tax sharing arrangements.

I was very pleased to receive your letter and I believe it is desirable that a meeting such as you propose be held as soon as possible. I have noted the proposed dates Monday and Tuesday, November 25 and 26, and wish to advise you that these dates will be quite agreeable to me. Thank you again for your advice in respect to the meeting and I shall look forward to further word confirming the dates.

Yours very truly,
Ernest C. Manning
Premier.

Nova Scotia

THE PREMIER
Halifax

September 19, 1957

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

In the absence of Premier Stanfield I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 16th suggesting the dates of November 25th and 26th for a dominion-provincial conference on fiscal relations.

I feel sure these dates will be agreeable to the premier, but I shall bring your letter to his attention upon his return to the office, and you will be receiving definite confirmation from him.

The Rt. Honourable John D. Diefenbaker, P.C., Q.C.,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Ontario.

My dear Prime Minister:

My colleagues and I have noted your letter dated September 16, which the mail carrier delivered to my office on the 18th of the same month, in the afternoon. It is about your invitation that I be present at a federal-provincial conference, "on fiscal relations", which would be held on November 25 and 26 next.

The Quebec parliament will be sitting on the dates mentioned, but the province will be represented at this conference and I myself shall be among the delegates.

I hope that this conference will be crowned with the greatest success, to which the government of the province will be pleased to co-operate, with all due regard to the rights, prerogatives and liberties of the provinces and of the federal government in general, and of the province of Quebec in particular.

Yours sincerely,
M. L. Duplessis

The Rt. Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker, Q.C.,

My dear Prime Minister:

Thank you for your letter of September 16th telling me that you and your colleagues think it would be useful and desirable to arrange a dominion-provincial conference to review the present pattern of tax sharing arrangements.

As I have indicated in previous correspondence, my colleagues and I have felt for some time that a federal-provincial conference should be held, and the dates which you have suggested—November 25th and 26th—are quite acceptable to us.

I note your suggestion that the proposed conference should concern itself with fiscal relations. My colleagues and I are hopeful that it will be possible to include on the agenda some of the unfinished business from previous federal-provincial meetings. We feel that in addition to tax-sharing arrangements there are three items of major importance which ought to be discussed:

1. Aid to municipalities. At the present time municipalities are finding it increasingly difficult to procure capital necessary to meet the growing demand for schools, hospitals, sewer and water installations and other municipal services.

2. Resource development. At previous federal-provincial meetings the matter of resource development has been under consideration. Subsequently the government of Canada advanced proposals for assisting the maritime provinces in the generation and transmission of electric power. We feel there is an urgent need for a general application of this principle to all the provinces who are concerned with resource development.

3. National hospital insurance and outpatient diagnostic services. The last time this matter was discussed at a federal-provincial gathering the federal government's stipulation that a majority of the provinces representing a majority of the people of Canada must indicate their willingness to proceed had not fully been complied with. Therefore, the detailed terms and conditions of hospital insurance agreements were not fully discussed. Now that sufficient provinces have indicated their intention of participating, the Saskatchewan government feels that a discussion of the provisions which should be included in the proposed hospital insurance agreement would serve a very useful purpose.

May I therefore urge that consideration be given to adding these three items to the agenda for the federal-provincial conference commencing November 25th.

Looking forward to the pleasure of seeing you at that time, I remain,

Yours sincerely,
T. C. Douglas.

Office of the Premier

The Rt. Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, Q.C.,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Diefenbaker:

I have received your letter of September 16, 1957, proposing that a dominion-provincial conference be held at Ottawa on November 25th and 26th to review the present pattern of tax-sharing arrangements. My colleagues and I are certainly desirous of participating in such a conference and will accommodate ourselves to whatever date is best suited to all concerned.

However, in our province, November 26th marks the opening of a most important municipal convention—the annual meeting of the union of Manitoba municipalities. Because of its importance, my colleagues and I would ordinarily be attending several of its sessions. On the other hand, we realize that your time and that of your colleagues is closely scheduled, and as mentioned earlier, we will accept your suggested dates if they are found to be most satisfactory to your government and the other provinces.

Your letter makes no mention of municipal government participation in or representation at the proposed conference. Manitoba, as you are probably aware, has in the past strongly urged that municipal governments be allowed to share in these inter-governmental discussions. At the conference held in Ottawa on April 26, 1955, I made the following statement:

"Mr. Prime Minister, I am sure that there can be no doubt of the value of federal-provincial conferences. Canada is one of the largest and most rapidly developing countries of the world. All of us rejoice in the magnificent contribution it has already made and is destined to make in world affairs. But to make that contribution the maximum possible we must attain complete understanding and co-operation within Canada itself. I firmly believe that gatherings such as this will do much toward the attainment of that objective. We think, however, that these meetings can be made more fully effective by including those engaged in another sphere of government. We therefore propose that municipal representatives be invited to the federal-provincial conference when it is held later this year.

"Like the provinces, the municipalities face tremendous problems in meeting the growing needs of education, public works, public investment, unemployment relief, housing, health, welfare and other services. Participation by their representatives will ensure that their viewpoints on these vital questions will be clearly presented to the conference by those engaged directly in local government."

The Manitoba government again urges that municipal representatives should attend our inter-governmental conferences as official members. It is obvious that municipalities, like the provinces, find it difficult to finance their constitutional and traditional responsibilities and at the same time provide for the measures of social and economic development so essential not only to the local areas directly concerned, but also to the nation as a whole. Since the task of governing Canada has been divided among three governmental groups, it is our opinion that representatives of each of these groups should be invited to sit as members of the proposed conference.

So aware are we of the financial problems facing our municipalities that this government has adopted the policy of assisting our municipal governments, either by way of direct contribution to their treasuries or by the assumption of responsibilities formerly borne by them, to an amount representing by far the major portion of our tax arrangement revenues from Canada. In line with this policy, we will continue to share with our municipalities on a generous basis any increases in provincial revenues that result from revisions in the present tax-sharing formula. In our opinion, this is another compelling reason why our municipalities should from time to time have direct representation at federal-provincial conferences.

I am sure that you and your colleagues are familiar with the traditional position which the province of Manitoba has taken with respect to the tax agreement system. Our province has consistently been a foremost advocate of the principle of equalization—a principle which was fundamental to the former tax rental agreements and which has continued to be recognized in the present arrangements. We will certainly not willingly accept any abandonment of this principle, or the adoption of any formula which failed to continue to provide to the less wealthy provinces a position relative to that of the other provinces at least as favourable as that which they hold under the present arrangements.

You will be aware, I am sure, that Manitoba at earlier conferences and in previous correspondence with the government of Canada, has expressed the opinion that while the 1957 tax-sharing arrangements equalize to a certain extent the extreme variations in the taxable capacity of the provinces, they may not go far enough towards providing to the provinces sufficient revenues to enable them to meet the rapidly growing demands on both provincial and local government treasuries. At the forthcoming conference, therefore, we will look forward to hearing proposals put forward respecting revisions in the present tax-sharing formula which will give greater recognition to this principle of equalization and result in the provinces obtaining a larger share of the tax resources available to government in Canada.

Notwithstanding the municipal convention that will be taking place in Manitoba towards the end of November, I would again like to assure you that my colleagues and I will be present at the proposed conference on November 25th and 26th, or on any alternative date that may prove to be more suitable to your government and the other provinces. In addition, if you agree with our view that municipal participation in the conference is desirable, we will be happy to arrange for it as well.

Yours very truly,
Douglas Campbell

The evidence has now been received, and I now lay it upon the table.

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT TO ESTABLISH MAXIMUM RATE

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 17, to amend the Interest Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to place a ceiling of 12 per cent per annum as a maximum on interest rates that may be charged except as specifically provided by other acts of parliament.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC WORKS

MAGDALEN ISLANDS—REPORTED PATRONAGE IN EMPLOYMENT OF WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. A. Cannon (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Public Works as reported in the Ottawa Journal of July 24, that political job patronage must be rooted out of his department and that the job applicant's politics will no longer be a factor in getting on a public works payroll, will the minister inform the house what steps are being taken to implement this policy in the Magdalen islands where at the present time all Liberals, and particularly Liberal veterans, are refused employment on public works?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, from what I hear I have no doubt whatever that in the riding to which my hon. friend has referred there is a long established custom of handling public works and I shall be very glad to make inquiries. From what I have already heard of that riding I have no doubt that what has been going on can be improved without very much effort.

Mr. Cannon: Does this mean that the minister's declared policy is not going to be applied to the veterans in the Magdalen islands?

An hon. Member: You are in a weak spot there.

Inquiries of the Ministry

MONTREAL—STATEMENT ON PROPOSED NUNS' ISLAND CAUSEWAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Verdun asked me a question concerning the proposed Nuns' island causeway. The answer is that the city of Verdun was advised on September 19, 1957, that the construction of the causeway as proposed could not be approved by the department because it would interfere with navigation. The applicant has not yet submitted a revised project.

With reference to the second part of the question, it does appear that there would be dangers of additional flooding and pollution of the water if the causeway were built as proposed. This matter has not been given full consideration, as the proposed structure could not be approved on account of its interference with navigation.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED REDUCTION IN EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the minister inform the house whether the newspaper reports to the effect that expenditures on fundamental research are being reduced are correct?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I have not had a chance to see the newspaper reports but I am informed that there is no foundation for any assumption that expenditures on research will be reduced, since treasury board has not considered the estimates for research expenditures. When they have been approved they will be presented to the house in the normal way.

NATURAL GAS

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POSITION REGARDING EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the report in the Toronto Globe and Mail of October 26 to the effect that Mr. N. W. Freeman, president, Mid-Western Gas Transmission Company, testified before the federal power commission on October 24 that he believes the new government in Canada will honour the undertaking of the former minister of trade and commerce, Mr. C. D. Howe, to authorize the export of gas by Trans-Canada to the Mid-Western Gas Transmission Company at Emerson, Manitoba, would the Minister of Trade and Commerce advise the house of the attitude of the present government to said export?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, because of our belief that all pertinent questions in connection with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines should be considered by the Borden royal commission no final answer can be given at this time, for the implications of the question bring it clearly within the terms of the study to be made by that royal commission. In order to arrive at a decision the commission will hear evidence and ascertain, as the result of reviewing that evidence, what recommendations it should make. On the basis of the decision then to be made by the government this matter can be finally answered.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a further question with regard to the pipe-line matter. The Prime Minister made a statement a few minutes ago to the effect that a royal commission is being appointed—

Mr. Fulton: Has been appointed.

Mr. Gardiner:—"has been appointed", I hear from the other side—and that this royal commission is now entrusted with gathering all information with regard to the pipe line.

Mr. Fleming: What is the question?

Mr. Gardiner: The question will be ready soon enough for the benefit of my hon. friends.

Mr. Fleming: Ask your question.

Mr. Gardiner: I should like to ask, Mr. Speaker, if this is a new form of gag that is being brought into this house—to appoint a royal commission, then when questions are asked they are not answered? Does the appointment of the royal commission tie up everyone so they cannot ask questions?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether or not, as the right hon. member left it, there was a question before this house.

Mr. Chevrier: There is a question.

Mr. Gardiner: Does the royal commission tie up discussion in this house of the pipeline question or anything else?

Mr. Speaker: As I understand it—

Mr. Diefenbaker: That all depends on whether or not discussion can take place on the basis of the rules, but I was not dealing with that phase. I was simply saying that this government, having regard to all the circumstances connected with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, wants to have the full evidence which was not available to the last government when decisions were made, before a final answer in this regard is made.

FINANCE

REPORTED LIMITATION OF BANK LOANS TO MUNICIPALITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the statement by Premier Frost that the chartered banks have clamped down on needed loans to municipalities for works projects and school construction? Is the government considering ways of alleviating the very high interest rates now crippling municipal financing?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in his first question my hon. friend asks if my attention has been drawn to the statement by Premier Frost that the chartered banks have clamped down on needed loans to municipalities for works projects and school construction. The answer to the question, apart from my hon. friend's question, is no.

Mr. Argue: And the attached newspaper clipping?

Mr. Fleming: Yes, my friend sent over an attached clipping. Since coming into the house I have not had the opportunity to read it through but, as I say, apart from my friend's question, the answer is no; that is to say, apart from what my hon. friend says in his question the answer to his question is no. In his second question he asks whether the government is considering ways of alleviating the very high interest rates now involved in municipal financing. Among the unhappy legacies inherited by this government from the former government—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fleming: —were the highest rates in a generation. As a government we do not like these very high interest rates and we are, of course, concerned about the burdens they place upon municipal and all other levels of government in this country. I think it will be a matter of interest, and certainly a matter of gratification on the part of those members who are not simply engaged in playing politics in this house, that the interest rates in this country—

An hon. Member: The pot calling the kettle black.

Mr. Fleming: —on dominion government securities have been easing of late.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): May I address a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance arising out of his answer to the hon. member for Assiniboia. To what actions of the previous government does he attribute the rise in interest rates, and what specific steps does his government propose to take to lower the level of the interest rates?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, there is no one in—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I say, before the minister attempts to answer that question, that I consider the first part of the question contravenes the rules of the house, it being a question relating to the conduct of the former ministry for which the present ministry is not responsible. The second part of the question, if the minister wishes to answer it, may involve a matter of policy.

Mr. Fleming: The second part of the question obviously relates to a matter of government policy.

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to raise a point of order on that question. The question arose directly out of the minister's answer to another question. If the question now put is out of order, then the minister's previous answer was out of order and should have been ruled out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I do not recall having ruled anything out of order. I simply stated that it appeared to me to be a matter involving policy and left it to the minister to answer it, which he did.

Mr. Jacob Schulz (Springfield): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question arising out of the answer he gave regarding high finance or high interest rates, which suggested that the present situation is a legacy inherited from the Liberals. Is it not a fact that interest rates have gone up since the government took office, and that this move was initiated by the Bank of Canada, which is a government institution?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, the fact is, as I said earlier this afternoon in reply to a question, that interest rates on government securities have eased slightly in recent weeks.

SUCCESSION DUTY ACT—INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It is based on the considerable representation which has been made over the past year for amendments to the Dominion Succession Duty Act and on the basis that the previous minister of finance said in the house that amendments were being prepared and would be brought down at the next session. My question is this. Can we expect this session any legislation which would amend the Dominion Succession Duty Act?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, to complete the information contained in the hon. member's question one should say that for the last three years of its life the former government promised to introduce new legislation to replace the existing succession duty act and did not do so. This matter is under active consideration.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED PAYMENT OF RETURN FARES TO UNITED KINGDOM FOR SURGICAL TREATMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the minister of immigration. Is the report from London correct, as given over the news broadcast, that a young British couple have had their fares paid to the United Kingdom in order that the wife, who is suffering from a cataract, may have the operation performed in England free of charge? If so, what kind of advertising for Canada is that?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I must confess to the hon. gentleman that I did not hear the radio report and therefore I am not able to assess its accuracy or otherwise. If it is not accurate I would ask the hon. gentleman, what kind of advertising for Canada is that? However, I can assure him I shall make immediate inquiries as to the accuracy of the report and bring him in an answer at an early date.

Mr. Coldwell: I have usually found reports emanating from London to be correct.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUGGESTED INSTRUCTIONS TO UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, of which I gave him notice yesterday. What consideration, if any, is the government giving to the suggestion to the unemployed that they would be well advised to remain in the community in which they now live unless directed to some other labour field in the Canadian market by the officers of the unemployment insurance commission?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I appreciate the hon. member's courtesy in giving me notice of this question. The question naturally divides itself into two parts. In the first place the government, or the unemployment insurance commission in this case, is hardly in a position to suggest to an individual who is interested in finding work that he should remain in a locality where he cannot get employment. People will insist on remaining free to look for work wherever it may be found. As long as they succeed in finding it, this is a good principle and one with which there should be no interference.

In the second place, Mr. Speaker, when it becomes evident that work is simply not to be had in a certain locality, that activity has dried up and there is little likelihood of work being found, or where the supply of workers is far in excess of the available jobs and will likely remain so, then the Department of Labour has recommended that such areas be declared labour surplus areas and transportation assistance has been supplied to workers who have promises of jobs in other regions. Windsor, Ontario; Springhill and New Glasgow, Nova Scotia; and St. Stephen, New Brunswick, have been declared such areas. In a few days Tilbury, Ontario, will be declared a labour surplus area.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MISSION TO COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to ask him whether, in view of the statement he made last week to the effect that the trade mission was leaving Hong Kong for communist China early in November, he would make the report he promised to the house before the departure of that mission.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker; I hope to make that report tomorrow. I would have made it today but I returned to Ottawa just at noon, and I have not had a chance to check some of the material in my office.

DISCUSSION OF FREE TRADE AREA AT LONDON CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Before doing so may I say we all welcome him back in the house today from his conversations at GATT in Geneva. Could the minister now tell us whether he intends to head the goodwill trade delegation to the United Kingdom shortly, and if he does go to London will he be empowered on behalf of the government to discuss the proposal made by Canada and particularly the proposal made by the United Kingdom in the matter of the establishment of a free trade area between Canada and the United Kingdom?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased and a bit surprised to be welcomed back to the house in such a charming manner by my hon. friend. I will be heading up the trade mission to England if the Prime Minister decides that I should go.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): He is the boss.

Mr. Pickersgill: One-man cabinet.

Mr. Churchill: It is intended to investigate the possibilities of importing British products for Canadian use, and that is the main and primary purpose of that mission. I have not yet received any instructions as to whether I am to consult with any members of the British government with regard to any other questions.

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the house if representation from the farm organizations will be included in that delegation and, if so, can he inform the house who the individuals are and what organizations they represent?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I think it was definitely indicated in the throne speech that all sections of Canada would be represented, and I believe agriculture was specifically named. The complete list of people who will be going on that mission is not ready yet but I hope it will soon be available and we will be able to announce it to the house in the course of the next few days.

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): A supplementary question. Are all these Canadian delegates going to purchase and not to sell?

Mr. Churchill: I am sorry I did not hear the question.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Are all the delegates in the mission going to Britain to buy and not to sell anything?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, some of the distinguished representatives of business who are going to the United Kingdom with this mission have in the past also sold materials to the United Kingdom, but in this particular instance the emphasis is on buying goods from the United Kingdom. The people in the United Kingdom are very happy indeed that this mission is going over. They are looking forward with interest to a visit of Canadian industrialists and farm and labour representation, and they are going to demonstrate to us that the United Kingdom is prepared to compete successfully with any other country in the world from which Canada is now obtaining goods of that kind.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Will the fishing industry be represented on the delegation?

Mr. Churchill: During my absence of the last several days the matter has been actively considered. I have not seen the complete list, but I would hope that the fishing industry would be adequately represented.

HEALTH INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO INCLUSION OF MENTAL AND TUBERCULAR PATIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether it is the intention of the government to carry out the promise made in Winnipeg by the Prime Minister to include mental and tubercular patients in the federal hospital insurance plan.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will find that it is the intention of the government to carry out all its campaign pledges.

ONTARIO—STATEMENT ON TREATMENT OF MENTAL AND TUBERCULAR PATIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Welland asked me whether this government has had any discussions with the province of Ontario concerning proposed federal contributions toward the cost of treating mental and tubercular patients in that province. The answer is yes.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare arising out of the answer he just gave. Has this government given any assurance that federal money might become available for the treatment of tubercular and mental diseases in Ontario; and will the minister table any correspondence he has had with the government of Ontario?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, there is a request on the order paper for the tabling of any correspondence since June 10. I presume that will cover the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is it going to be tabled?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NEW BRUNSWICK—STATEMENT AS TO ABANDONMENT OF MONCTON-SHEDIAC LINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Murphy) asked me whether it was the intention of the Canadian National Railways to abandon the line running between Moncton and Shediac. I have been in touch with the Canadian National Railways and they advise me that they have no application before the board of transport commissioners for the abandonment of that line, nor do they have any immediate intention of placing such an application before the board.

TELEVISION

INVERNESS-RICHMOND—REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF SATELLITE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I answer a question asked me yesterday by the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) with regard to the application of CJCB-TV at Sydney to establish a satellite station in the Inverness area.

The application of CJCB-Sydney for a satellite television station in the Inverness area was not recommended for approval by the C.B.C. board of governors because of their opinion that too high a power was involved. I understand that CJCB is presently planning to submit a fresh application based upon a lower power, a fact which may overcome the difficulties experienced in the previous application. Should such a fresh application be received it will, of course, be dealt with as promptly as possible.

MARITIME PROVINCES—INQUIRY AS TO COVERAGE IN FRENCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Michaud (Kent, N.B.): I would like to ask a question of the Minister of National Revenue. Could the minister tell us what progress is being made by the C.B.C. in providing television coverage in the French language in the maritimes?

Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has just sent over to me notice of his question, and the question he has now put differs from the question which is in writing. I will therefore take this as notice and answer him at a later time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NORTH BAY, ONT.—APPLICATION OF VAGRANCY SECTION OF CRIMINAL CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Does the minister care to comment on the report in the Toronto Daily Star of October 25, of which I have sent him a copy, to the effect that a 57-year-old man at North Bay, Ontario, has been jailed for six months under the vagrancy section of the Criminal Code of Canada for no apparent reason other than the refusal of the authorities to grant assistance and the magistrate's desire to save the accused from freezing to death?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman would agree with me that it would not be proper for me—nor am I called upon—to comment on a speculative report in a press dispatch as to the circumstances which may have surrounded a particular case coming before a court in one of our provinces. If the matter is raised as a matter of remission, which is under the responsibility of this government, then I can assure the hon. gentleman that as a remissions matter it will be taken under immediate consideration.

Mr. Ellis: May I then ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the intention of the vagrancy section of the criminal act to supplant social welfare aid?

Mr. Fulton: If the hon. gentleman will read the relevant section of the Criminal Code I think he will find the answer for himself.

NATURAL RESOURCES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR R.C.M.P. REPORT ON FOREST MANAGEMENT LICENCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I would like to refer, Mr. Speaker, to a question which was asked of me yesterday by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Macdonald). The question was whether I would make available a report of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police dealing with charges of bribery and conspiracy in the granting of forest management licences in the province of British Columbia. I made a partial answer yesterday, and I undertook to check up on the circumstances surrounding this situation.

I am now able to advise the house that this case was investigated by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police at the request of the attorney general of the province of British Columbia and as a function called for under the contract between the government of Canada and the government of the province of British Columbia for the services of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The investigation, as I tentatively indicated yesterday, was therefore an entirely provincial matter, and the report is not one which I am at liberty to disclose.

I may say in addition, Mr. Speaker, that the work carried out by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in British Columbia under the policing agreement is paid for at rates set down in the agreement and based upon a division of the per capita operating costs of the force. Charges to the provinces are therefore not apportioned in any way to individual cases such as this.

Mr. Speaker, I was particularly concerned to establish in my own mind, and because several hon. members are interested in this matter, whether I would have any authority to disclose the report. In the course of investigation I checked what I believed to be the relevant clause of the agreement then in force between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia under which the Royal Canadian Mounted Police carry on provincial policing. The relevant clause of the agreement then in force, clause 2, recites that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police shall perform the duties of the former British Columbia provincial police force:

> —in accordance with the wishes and under the direction of the attorney general of the province of British Columbia in the same manner and to the same extent as if the British Columbia provincial police were still in existence.

It therefore appears to be clear that the question of whether or not the report is to be made public is a matter entirely within the authority of the provincial attorney general.

Mr. A. B. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Then may I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister inform the house whether, if it appears that there is documentary and other evidence indicating criminal conspiracy, and if the attorney general of the province concerned fails to take any action thereon, the Minister of Justice of Canada is powerless under those circumstances to protect the public interest?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would point out to the hon. member that his question appears to me to infringe the practice of the house in two respects. First, it is hypothetical and is based on a supposed failure of a provincial attorney general to do his duty. Second, it relates to the duty of the minister of another government, which therefore is not the responsibility of the minister here.

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS ASSISTANCE

REQUEST FOR LIFTING OF 1940 SUSPENSION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. Irwin (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, notice of which I have given him. In view of the fact that section 8 of the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act has not been invoked, will this government now lift the 1940 suspension of the act and permit loans to municipalities under this act?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for sending me notice of this question. This is obviously a matter of government policy, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGES

LEWISTON, N.Y.-QUEENSTON, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Mr. Robert Moses, who happens to be the chairman of the New York State power authority, is continually making speeches and giving press interviews—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Houck: My question is about the bridge connecting the New York state throughway and the Queen Elizabeth highway. I wonder if the minister has had any correspondence or has entered into any negotiations with the proper authority in the United States in this respect. This bridge is to extend from Lewiston, New York to Queenston, Ontario, well below Niagara falls, the show place of the world.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I received no communication either from Mr. Moses or anybody else in authority in the state of New York, and I have received no word of an intention to build such a bridge.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR REPLY TO SUGGESTED MUNICIPAL REPRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Deniset (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister regarding the correspondence between the dominion government and the provinces with regard to the conference to be held on November 25. What answer, if any, has been made by this government to the suggestion made by the premier of the province of Manitoba that municipal participation in the conference is desirable?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should endeavour to answer my hon. friend's question. At least one other member of the house has sent notice of his intention to ask a question concerning this matter of municipal representation. For instance, I have received notice of a question from the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) as follows:

Will the municipalities be represented at the forthcoming dominion-provincial conference? If so, will they be given a chance to participate in the discussions or will they merely attend as observers?

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister dealt with this matter in answering a somewhat similar question. His answer is to be found at page 177 of Hansard of October 21. This particular conference has been called as a dominion-provincial conference. It really is not within the power of the federal government to decide that it shall be attended by municipal representatives sitting simply as representatives of municipalities in general.

As was made quite clear in the answer of the Prime Minister, the federal government has no objection whatsoever to the provincial governments associating with their ministers representatives of municipalities in their provinces if they choose to invite them to the conference. What particular part such municipal representatives appearing as members of a provincial delegation would play in the conference would be a matter, of course, for the provincial governments concerned and for the conference itself to decide.

Mr. Deniset: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I did not ask for a speech; I only asked for an answer. What answer has been given to the premier of the province of Manitoba? Has any answer been given, or is this the answer?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now making a speech himself.

Some hon. Members: No, he is not.

Mr. Speaker: As I understand him he is rising to say he did not ask the minister to make a speech. If it is a point of order the hon. member wishes to raise I shall be glad to consider it.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): No, he wants an answer to his question.

Mr. Chevrier: He is entitled to an answer.

Mr. Deniset: Does the Prime Minister intend to give me an answer to this question?

An hon. Member: He did.

Mr. Deniset: I do not think he has answered my question.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): No answer at all, as usual.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that is a point of order. As I understood the question and the answer it seemed to me they were complete, and I do not know what point of order arises out of that. If the hon. member has a further supplementary question I will permit it.

Mr. Deniset: I merely asked, Mr. Speaker, if an answer had been given to the premier of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): That is not a point of order; that is a question.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, an answer was given in a letter that will go out to all the premiers setting out the details. They will not be set out in the words the Minister of Finance used, but they will be of the same purport.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): It has not been sent out yet.

INQUIRY AS TO CALLING CONFERENCE ON AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

I know the Minister of Agriculture speaks French, and I shall ask him this question in French.

Does the government propose to call a federal-provincial conference on agricultural development?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I shall take this as notice and shall give the hon. member an answer as soon as possible.

INDUSTRY

ATLANTIC AREA—STEPS TO ENCOURAGE LOCATION OF PRIVATE INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. What special fiscal consideration is being given to private enterprises to encourage the location of industry in the Atlantic area?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I could not hear my hon. friend's entire question. If he will repeat it I will endeavour to answer.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): What special fiscal consideration is being given to private enterprises to encourage the location of industry in the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will be a little more specific I think I may be able to give him a more satisfactory answer.

An hon. Member: He has a quotation from the Prime Minister's speech over there.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): If I may, I will read the Atlantic resolution endorsed by 33 Progressive Conservative candidates.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): He asked for it.

Mr. Pickersgill: He wanted something specific.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the house would enjoy the reading of this document, but I must point out to the hon. member that he may ask a question but not give information.

Some hon. Members: He asked for it.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I will ask what action has been taken so that special fiscal consideration will be given to private enterprises which will encourage the location of industry in the Atlantic area. A photograph of the minister's colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks), appears alongside the newspaper article I hold in my hand; you could ask him.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will follow closely—

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Mr. Fleming:—the language of the speech from the throne he will see there some measures that will be of the greatest assistance to the maritime area in attracting industry there and buttressing the economy of that important part of Canada.

Mr. Sinclair: Like paying cash advances on farm-stored grain; that is a big help to the maritimes.

FISHERIES

CONTAMINATED OYSTERS AND CLAMS—STATEMENT ON PROTECTION AGAINST SALE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yesterday the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hahn) mentioned the fact that clam and oyster sales have been stopped in the greater Vancouver area, and asked what steps have been taken to guarantee that wholesalers had not sold any of these contaminated oysters and clams in the prairie provinces and other parts of British Columbia.

I would inform the hon. member that by arrangement with the Department of Fisheries and health authorities of British Columbia, the department's food and drug officials maintain a survey of the shellfish beds in that province. As soon as evidence of rising toxicity was obtained, these beds were closed and stocks of shellfish in the hands of wholesale dealers were placed under detention, pending the carrying out of tests to determine their safety. Stocks coming from these beds which were in the hands of retailers were withdrawn. I am assured that similar measures have been taken beyond the greater Vancouver area, including shipments to the prairie provinces.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF AMBASSADOR TO VATICAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I have just been reading an article in the Globe and Mail in which the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) stated—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. LaCroix: I have to read the article. The article reads:

> Asked how the Conservative party stood on the issue of maintaining permanent diplomatic representation at the Vatican, Mr. Balcer was quoted as replying:
> "Just place us in power and you'll see before long".

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. LaCroix: Is it the intention of the minister to quit the cabinet if he does not fulfil that promise?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the quotation the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency has just read is a misquotation, because I remember very well my words were that the Conservative party will be in power very soon. It was badly interpreted. What I said was, "You will see very soon".

Mr. Sinclair: What about the ambassador?

[Later:]

(Translation):

Mr. LaCroix: Mr. Speaker, I have been told that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) speaks French well. I am pleased to hear it and I want to ask him a question. I informed him yesterday of a statement made by the ambassador for Ireland, and I would now ask him whether he has any comments to make on the subject.

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can say in answer to my hon. friend that there is some doubt whether or not the ambassador for Ireland made the statement in question. However, my answer to the question that my hon. friend asked yesterday is no, and if he wants further information on the subject I would suggest that he look up Hansard of May 6, 1953, where he will find an answer given by the present member for Algoma East with regard to this matter. There is also a further answer on March 7, 1957, given by the then secretary of state for external affairs, now the hon. member for Algoma East.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO WHARF IMPROVEMENTS ON SAGUENAY RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Maltais (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Will the minister indicate to the house whether urgent wharf improvements on the Saguenay river are to be carried out to facilitate the proposed new ferry across the said river between Baie Ste. Catherine and Tadoussac? I have given the minister notice of this question.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I have to take the question as notice.

[Mr. Speaker.]

INCOME TAX

TRANSPORTATION AND LIVING ALLOWANCE DEDUCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Will the government give consideration to representations made by groups of organized labour that regulations under the Income Tax Act be changed in order that construction and other workers required to be absent from their normal place of residence be entitled to deduct for income tax purposes costs of food, lodging and other out of pocket expenses?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has given, is giving and will continue to give consideration and study to this problem which arises out of bungling on the part of the former government. I think my friend is in error in assuming that it is capable of being redressed by regulation.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works. I wonder whether he could use his persuasive powers on his colleagues with a little more effectiveness this year to bring about the change I have just outlined in the question?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I will do my best. I find my present colleagues much easier to work on than the former government.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NATIONAL DEFENCE—STATEMENT ON APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kingston asked this question:

> Do the regulations outlined yesterday by the Minister of Transport with respect to the political partisanship of casual labourers employed by the Department of Transport also apply to casual labourers employed by the Department of National Defence?

In reading the remarks of the Minister of Transport which he made yesterday I see that he referred to a practice which had been acceded to by succeeding governments over a great many years, not regulations. In answer to the direct question, I would say that if any complaints are received in writing against either a civil servant or a person employed at prevailing rates in my department, they will be investigated.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works a question. In the light of the answer supplied by the Minister of Finance only a few minutes ago to the effect that interest rates were easing, will the minister consider recommending that his recent announcement raising interest rates under sections 16 and 17 of the National Housing Act be cancelled or rescinded at this time?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the interest rates under these two particular sections of the National Housing Act had to be raised because it was necessary for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to pay a higher rate. That increase in turn was necessary because the government itself had to pay a higher rate.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thought they were supposed to be easing.

Mr. Regier: Then the Minister of Finance was wrong when he said interest rates are easing. They are actually rising.

Mr. Green: I understood the Minister of Finance to say that whatever steps are possible are being taken to bring down interest rates.

An hon. Member: That they were easing.

GRAIN

LICENSING OF OFF-SITE STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is he now in a position to add anything to the answer he gave me a week or so ago regarding off-site storage?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Not at this time, Mr. Speaker, but I will endeavour to get more information for the hon. member.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

HEARST AND COCHRANE, ONT.—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received a request from the northern Ontario district council of the lumber and sawmill workers' union for the establishment of an office of the national unemployment insurance commission in the towns of Hearst and Cochrane and the establishment of a court of referees in this area to facilitate the handling of unemployment insurance claims? If so, can the minister indicate if the request can be granted?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. No such request has been brought to my attention. However, I will make inquiries and if such a request has been received by the department I will give consideration to the matter and advise the hon. member for Timiskaming of the decision.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD

STATEMENT ON REPORTED DISCLOSURES OF INFORMATION RESPECTING LOAN APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I refer to a question put to me on October 23 by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort, which is to be found at page 317 of Hansard and is in these words:

> Is the minister aware that when a farmer makes application for a loan from the Canadian farm loan board the board, before acknowledging the request, informs implement companies in the area of the application and of the board's disposition of the request for the loan? If the minister finds this to be the case, would he assure the house that he will instruct the board to cease immediately this unethical, high-handed and deplorable practice?

I have made inquiries, and have made them in the spirit that I indicated in my reply in the house at that time. I am assured there is no practice on the part of the Canadian farm loan board such as the hon. member implied in his question. I am told that in many cases when an application is received it is necessary to check on the statement of liabilities submitted by the applicant, this being a natural procedure in testing the propriety of granting the loan.

Of course these inquiries concerning credit oftentimes require checking, and apart from information concerning the amount of large claims, it is sometimes necessary to seek other confidential information from other business concerns such as banks, implement companies and retail credit reporting organizations. To do this it is often necessary to furnish some information.

I am assured that the staff of the board are very conscious of the necessity of treating any information of this nature, whether given or received, in a strictly confidential manner, and am further assured that the board's general practices, ethics and attitude in this regard compare favourably with those of others in a similar position.

My hon. friend's question arose out of a particular case. He was good enough to send me a copy of a letter involved in that case. I do not think it is necessary that I go beyond the answer to my friend's general question and refer to the circumstances of that particular case. But at the worst what happened in that case evidently was a breach of confidence on the part of a certain person, I believe not connected with the board. However, if my hon. friend is interested I shall be glad to show him the correspondence in this matter, for I have made it my business to inquire into it thoroughly and I can assure my hon. friend and the house that no such practice as his question implied would be tolerated for a moment.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder if I could ask a supplementary question arising out of the minister's statement. I take it from the statement that the Canadian farm loan board, after it has turned down an application, does not relate that decision to the creditors of the applicant?

Mr. Fleming: That is the course that should be followed in all cases. It is one thing, where the applicant indicates to the board a list of creditors and certain indebtedness, for the board to check that information, but that would be a very different matter from disclosing to the creditors of an applicant, after the application has been refused, the fact of the refusal. That, I can assure my hon. friend, would not be tolerated by the government.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO COMMUNICATIONS FROM PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Yvon L'Heureux (Chambly-Rouville): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister received any communication from the premier of Quebec concerning the trans-Canada highway, and will this matter be raised at the federal-provincial conference?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): No.

POWER

NOVA SCOTIA-NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR ACCESS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Since the minister announced to the house yesterday that he does not see fit to make public the report of the Montreal Engineering Company, would he consider extending to the members interested the same courtesy that was extended by the late postmaster general to the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace some few years ago?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I think in the circumstances, I had better keep to my original answer that in the public interest I cannot divulge this report to anyone at the present time except those immediately concerned.

Mr. Robichaud: Are the members of this house not directly concerned in the matter?

An hon. Member: Answer.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ARSENAULT—CORRECTION OF STATEMENT REGARDING POLITICAL ALLEGIANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Neree Arsenault (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked for a correction in Hansard and today I have to ask for another one. Yesterday, as recorded at page 567 of Hansard, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency said that I ran my whole campaign as an independent candidate. This is not true. I ran as a Progressive Conservative.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I remind the hon. member that the corrections which are made at this period are corrections of fact in the text of Hansard, and any correction of a statement to which he takes objection would be more properly made immediately after the statement is made in the house.

GRAIN

MEASURE TO PROVIDE CASH ADVANCES ON FARM-STORED GRAIN

The house resumed, from Wednesday, October 30, consideration in committee of Bill No. 14, to provide for advance payments for prairie grain prior to delivery thereof—Mr. Harkness (for Mr. Churchill)—Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

On clause 10—Lien on grain.

Mr. Aiken: I should like to say a few words on this clause, Mr. Chairman. Since I am from a rural riding in Ontario, I was pleased to see the government notice of motion with regard to a measure concerning general agricultural products on today's order paper.

It seems to me that under this particular bill, when a producer applies for an advance on a certain number of bushels he is in fact selling a number of bushels of grain to the board. Since the board cannot accept the grain he is offering to sell he has to store it in his own storage place. He no longer owns the grain but is holding it for the board. I believe that somewhere in the bill it should be made clear that the producer is actually holding this grain in trust for the board. The minister may feel that the bill is sufficiently clear, but I do feel that the position of trust in which the producer is placed should be clearly stated.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, last night before we adjourned I listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion that was taking place on this particular clause. I listened to some of the objections which were made from this part of the chamber, and I listened with interest to the minister's replies. What I have to say now does not call for any particular elaboration of the minister's reply, but it does appear to me now that the bill is not quite as rosy as it first appeared to be.

When the resolution was first introduced and some publicity was given to the measure across the country, the impression was left that the wheat farmer was now going to receive some spending money. He thought he would be able to buy a few new things; that he would not be quite so hard up now as he might have been had the advance payment idea not been brought forward.

I believe it is obvious to all, Mr. Chairman, that there are two classes of farmers so far as this particular piece of legislation is concerned. There are those who are well enough off that they will not have to take advantage of this legislation. I do not know how many farmers of this type exist, perhaps not very many, but there are some who are sufficiently well off that they do not have to take advantage of it.

The other class of farmer is the farmer who has not any money, the small farmer, the farmer who is hard up and has been hard up. If this bill was intended to furnish some ready cash to the farmer who is hard up, it does not meet the situation. It does not meet the situation by reason of the fact that if there are any liens against the farmer's wheat, which certainly would apply to those farmers who are hard up because they are the ones who have had to go to the banks and borrow in the past or perhaps incur some other financial obligation, by reason of this clause the bill will aid the creditors and not the farmers who need the money.

I know, of course, the minister's argument. So long as these liens exist and this legislation does not by-pass those liens, the farmer who is hard up is better off in so far as he will be able to get 50 cents a bushel for his wheat to help pay off his debts.

That does not give him any ready cash just the same. I want to make that observation because I am afraid that now the bill is falling far short of what the farmers expected and of the impression that may have been left during the election campaign when the speakers on behalf of the Conservative party were so anxious to get into office and made the promise that they were going to take care of the poor farmer.

Mr. Harkness: In reply to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, I would just say that this bill does not fall short in any respect of what most of the farmers expected and what they were led to expect. This bill, of course, does not provide cash, as has been pointed out several times in this debate, for the man who has no grain, such as the man who was hailed out or flooded out or who for any other cause did not produce any grain. This bill does not help him because he has not any grain on which to make an advance.

But as to a farmer who has a considerable number of debts to the people to whom he owes them—whether it is the municipality, the men who threshed his grain or the hail insurance board which gave him hail insurance, any liens along that line—naturally the bill cannot be of such a nature that it will cut those people out of their right to secure part of that farmer's grain in order to discharge their claims. I hope that no hon. member in this house is trying to maintain that we should bring in legislation which would make null and void the ordinary civil rights which farmers and others have in their respective provinces and that their creditors have against them in those provinces.

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Chairman, I have listened carefully to what the minister has said just now and I also have in mind the fact that this legislation is supposed to meet an emergency. However, in emergencies you do not take the line which the minister has just taken. In my opinion, nobody is better qualified than is the farmer himself, to say just what he should do with the money. Individual cases vary. He himself is best informed as to where that money should go.

Here is the main difference between this piece of legislation and that which was put on the statute books the year before last by the previous administration and which was criticized by the present government as a loans act because it contained an interest clause. In that particular legislation interest was provided for; under this legislation the money is interest free. But in the previous legislation one thing was determined for sure, that was that the money would definitely go to the farmer, that it would get into his hands and that he himself would decide where it would go. This is not a loans to farmers act or an assistance to farmers act or an advance to farmers act whatever. It is a cash advances to farmers creditors act or a farmers creditors assistance act. The farmer is the last man who is considered here. Anybody can put in a lien against the farmer with the elevator company—and the municipalities will certainly do so—with the result that the farmer will get what is left after everybody else gets through with it. This is not the kind of legislation that is going to do any particular good in the west.

I have had experience in doing business in western Canada and have done business with farmers on a credit basis many times. Many of them still owe me money. If I wanted to take advantage of this act I could put liens against prospective borrowers under this scheme. This is not the answer to the problem of putting cash in farmers' hands. This piece of legislation has been built up with a great deal of ballyhoo and window dressing. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources tells us that this legislation may put $186 million in the hands of western farmers; it will do no such thing. In fact, it will be rather hard to decide just what money this legislation actually will put in the hands of the farmers by the time these creditors get through reckoning up what they want.

I think the government had perhaps better bring in an amendment to this part of the bill and change it to make sure that this money gets into the farmers' hands if they are concerned for the farmers in the west. In this debate they have said that they know the farmers are honest. I think the first concern of any farmer is not only just to pay his bills but to keep his family alive. With the type of crops that some of them have had this fall, where either through drought or through conditions which prevailed through the northern part of the province where they have had seven weeks' or eight weeks' of rain in a row, their crops are completely deteriorated and they are in difficulty. If they can get this money it should be put in their hands and they themselves should decide what they should do with it. There should not be built into this legislation the provision that everybody else gets his first and the farmer gets his last.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I think the statements that have just been made should be answered. The total amounts that were secured by the farmers in western Canada during the two years that the interim financing act was in effect were, in one year, $8 million and, in the other year, $4 million. That was the total amount in those two years. The smallness arose from the fact that the farmer was obliged to pay interest. My hon. friend now says that this act will not be effectual because of the fact that amounts which are owing to creditors would naturally be subject to payment. All I can say in that regard is that there is in the federal parliament no power in any way to disallow liens and their effectuality, for liens and other charges are matters under provincial jurisdiction. It is a strange attitude that my hon. friend takes. He votes for the legislation but he says it is not going to be effectual. He points out that last year and two years ago the loan legislation was effectual. To me the position which he takes is not understandable in view of the figures, $8 million in one year and $4 million in the other.

This legislation before the house today is the legislation in effect that is asked for by the farm organizations in western Canada. I am not going to read them but I have before me the recommendations made by the western farm organizations and in particular the one in Saskatoon in October, 1955 which asked for cash advances. The position taken by my hon. friend is a strange one. My friend the hon. member for Melville left the impression that if the former government had come into power this legislation providing for cash advances would in fact have been introduced. At least, that was my understanding of what he stated the other day. My friend the hon. member for Meadow Lake says that a claim such as he would have as an oil dealer would be another charge. That is not so. The only possibility of any creditor having a charge as against the credit of any farmer in western Canada would be either under a writ of execution or under a bill of sale or a chattel mortgage given at some time during the year. As to the bill of sale, it would only be effectual if it was actually entered into after the harvesting began and the cutting had been done.

From my interpretation of the attitude of the western farmer, as expressed since this legislation was brought in, there is general appreciation of the fact that this government acted, whereas in the past two or three years in the face of almost universal demand for action in this regard in western Canada the members of the previous government, for reasons known to themselves, did not act. As a matter of fact one of the excuses given for not acting was that given in 1955 by the hon. member for Rosthern. He made several speeches in this house in this regard in 1955.

His contention was that if cash advances were introduced they would destroy the wheat board and that this general demand for cash advances would interfere with the operation of the wheat board and would in fact constitute its destruction.

The other day he said we did not go far enough, we only went half as far as we should have gone. I do not understand that inconsistency. I believe this legislation, as far as it is practicable within our constitutional limitations, is the uttermost step that could be taken in order to provide the western farmer with an advance on wheat which is as yet unmarketed in consequence of and for reasons which I am not going to go into at this time. Suffice it to say that when my hon. friend states that because he has an oil agency he thereby would be able to interfere, or because somebody owed him for gasoline he would therefore be able to secure any portion of this advance, it is as unwarranted as it is incorrect.

Mr. Gardiner: Since I rose on this point yesterday I think I should say a few things in regard to the statements which have just been made, particularly the reference to what I said on an earlier occasion. I did state in the earlier stages of the discussion that representations had been made last spring by the farm organizations in western Canada to the outgoing government to the effect that they desired to have something done along this line and the decision was then reached that the matter would be further discussed in the autumn. It was stated at that time, I believe, that if the bill which was brought down was in the same form as we had reason to believe last spring it would be, it would naturally be a measure which we would be inclined to support. Even in its present form I would be inclined to say we would support it but I would like to point out to my hon. friend that the argument he has just used is the argument used with regard to the act which did provide for bank loans and if he has not had any complaints from the farm organizations I cannot understand it, because the system set up under the act which was brought in was not in effect for one week before all the farm organizations of western Canada raised a terrific row about the very point he is discussing.

I may say that there is pinned on the wall in every elevator in Saskatchewan, so that everybody who takes in a load of grain can see it, a file of liens against the grain so delivered and right at the top of that list will be the lien for unpaid taxes. This is in accordance with the provincial law. The same kind of argument with regard to provincial authorities and collections and so on was raised when the plan based on the bank loan legislation was being set up.

I happened to be out at my farm at that time and the solicitor for the wheat pool phoned me and asked me if we considered that kind of legislation was going to provide cash for the farmers, because with the possibility of liens being effective the farmers would get very little of it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who was that solicitor?

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Milligan. He asked for a meeting to be called for the purpose of discussing the whole issue and a meeting was called in the city of Winnipeg. The finance people also contacted me and the whole matter was reconsidered and ways and means found of doing away with having these taxes and other liens charged up against the loan. Under the bank loans arrangement, as stated by the member for Meadow Lake, when a man went to the bank to get a loan, if the banker attempted to take any money out of such loan to pay anyone he had no government guarantee at all. Therefore loans made under that arrangement meant that they could not charge anything against them. The banker could not take anything out; the municipality could not take anything out; no one could take anything out.

There would not be more than six or eight hundred dollars involved per person in most cases; some would run higher, but very few. Hon. members in this house who come from the west know that a half section or three-quarter section farmer often owes $450 in taxes or even more and if when he goes into the elevator to deliver his grain or to get his advance, or if when he goes to the bank to get cash the first thing that is done is to take that money out that farmer is not going to be in a position, of his own choice, to pay. The condition with respect to collection in this bill is the same as the other one was prior to change.

When a man drives to the elevator with a load, let us say of 150 bushels of grain, the proceeds from 75 bushels will be charged up to pay off the advance and the proceeds from 75 bushels will be handed to the farmer. No lien can be charged up against that in the sense that a lien was charged before while that transaction is being handled, but under this legislation it can be charged up. I do not think we should put through a bill in this house under a misunderstanding. If the government desires to put it through that way it only adds to the strength of the argument which I have made all the way through these discussions, that the limitations in this bill are greater than they were in the other one.

While my hon. friends are always saying that the amount of money available under this bill is so and so, that is the same argument as was used when we were dealing with the other bill; the money available is so and so but everyone in this house said "What is available is not going to be asked for". If the conditions put in the bill are such that the average farmer looks it over and sees the conditions under which he can get the advance are not satisfactory to him he is not going to go any further. I say there are already too many of those provisions in this bill.

Mr. Harrison: I am in complete agreement, Mr. Chairman, with what has been said by the hon. member for Melville.

Mr. Harkness: In response to what the member for Melville and the member for Meadow Lake have said, to the effect that this bill is not as good as the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act which the previous government put through, and that there are more limitations in this than there were in the previous loan legislation, all their arguments in this connection really amount to nothing for the simple reason that the previous legislation is still on the statute books and is going to remain there. This bill does not do away with it and it is still there for the farmer who wishes to make use of the interim financing act rather than this cash advance act. He is at perfect liberty to choose. Therefore I cannot understand what these two members are talking about when they attempt to maintain that the loan legislation of the previous government was better than this proposed legislation and therefore the farmers would have been better off if the old system had been continued. That legislation is still continuing and is there for the farmer to take advantage of if he wishes to do so.

Mr. Gardiner: But that legislation does not provide automatically for doing this. That legislation provides that the government has got to take certain action before it does it. The fact that the legislation is on the statute books does not settle all that.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the legislation is in effect at the present time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the point.

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, it is in effect up to a certain time. Further action is required to keep it there.

Mr. Harrison: The Minister of Agriculture has referred to the fact that both these pieces of legislation are in effect; there is no argument about that.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

That does not change the fact, and I say this with all due deference to the Prime Minister—because we have a lot of other things in common even though we do not share the same political faith—that in my opinion in giving his reply to what I said a few moments ago he walked all around the point I made and concluded by suggesting that, well, we will leave it up to the farmers. As I understood him, it is a matter of the jurisdiction of this parliament as to whether the suggestion I made that the money should go direct to the farmers could be made effective. He said we have no jurisdiction to do it and that is why it was not done.

I point out to him that, under the legislation just referred to by the Minister of Agriculture, this was done last year and the year before by this very legislation. It was made effective under that and that money did go into the hands of the farmer and no one could get their hands on any of it until the farmer got it in his hands and decided himself what he should do with it. That is the criticism I have of the present legislation. Irrespective of whether the bank loan legislation remains in effect, the present legislation has been built up before the public gaze as something that will do wonders in the west. That is the kind of window dressing it has been given. It is certainly not going to do wonders if it is not going to get cash into the hands of the farmer because he is the man we are concerned with in this legislation which was designed for the purpose of meeting the emergency situation that exists in the agricultural industry by putting money in the hands of the farmer.

If it is to go to other people, as was suggested by the hon. member for Melville, and if there are lists already on the walls of the local elevators outlining who has liens on the money—particularly municipalities—this legislation is not what it appears to be at all. This is not money for farmers but rather for farmers' creditors.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, I have been very interested in the last few days in hearing the arguments brought forward by our friends across the way in opposition to this legislation the government is seeking to implement at the earliest possible moment in order that the wheat board can get the money into the hands of the farmers. We have listened to a lot of speeches which would have been more properly made on the debate in reply to the speech from the throne and could very well have been left until after the legislation has been put through. I know that the farmers in my area are anxious that this legislation be put into effect at the earliest possible time and I would like to make some remarks with regard to a few of the comments made by hon. members across the way.

Several hon. gentlemen rose to say how much better the legislation brought in by the former government is as compared to the legislation before us. I would venture to say that the amount of money borrowed in the past under the bank loans legislation will show hon. members how ineffectual it was as compared to what will be accomplished by the present legislation. Under the bank loans legislation $7 million was spread over the prairie provinces.

Mr. Gardiner: $13 million.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): As a matter of fact the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act was supposed to make available to a farmer a loan of $3,000 but the experience was that when he went to borrow that sum he could not get it unless he was worth a great deal more than that sum. The result was that a great number of farmers did not take advantage of the act and they stayed away from it in droves. In effect it was a loan on the farmer's net worth.

It was suggested by the hon. member for Melville the other day that more money would be loaned under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act than will be the case under the existing legislation and in reply to the hon. member I would say to let us wait and see the result.

Mr. Gardiner: That is what I suggested.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): That is a good idea because I do not know of a farmer in Manitoba who would not take advantage of cash advances. Under this legislation the farmer is not given a loan but rather an advance on his grain just as if he had delivered it to the elevator.

As far as having the grain attached for arrears of municipal taxes is concerned, that is unheard of in Manitoba. I thought that under the governments you have in Saskatchewan and Alberta the municipalities would not be able to attach the farmer's grain. If he cannot pay his taxes it works a hardship on him but nothing should be done to take away his livelihood. We do not attach anyone's grain in Manitoba for arrears of taxes.

Mr. Gardiner: You do not grow very much wheat, either, in Manitoba.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I will tell you we grow quite a bit of wheat and it is of good quality.

Mr. Gardiner: About as much as they grow in Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): And furthermore our farmers are smart in that when they have a big pile of wheat they do not grow any more to make the surplus pile bigger.

In Manitoba if a farmer cannot pay his taxes one year then he waits until the next year to pay them and if he cannot pay the following year then he waits until the third year and then the land goes up for tax sale. The good part of this system is that it allows a farmer three years in which to redeem his outstanding taxes. I would suggest to hon. members from the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta that if they really want to help the farmer and make sure all the money that will go out in the form of advances on grain will find its way into the hands of the farmer they had better suggest to the provincial governments adoption of the system of collecting municipal taxes in existence in Manitoba.

The government has introduced cash advances so the farmer will be able to get the money he needs at harvest time or as shortly thereafter as possible. It is going to be late this year for two reasons. In the first place we were not sitting in the early fall and in the second place our friends across the way are doing so much talking about it. Under this legislation it is just a matter of advancing the money the farmer would ordinarily receive when he delivers his grain to the elevators. There is no question of interest on it nor should there be because it is money being paid to the farmer for his own produce.

I suggest to the hon. member for Melville and to my other hon. friends across the way that our farmers are going to be very happy about this legislation. I know no farmer in my area who would have any reason for not taking advantage of the cash advances being introduced in this legislation.

Mr. Stefura: I was glad to hear the Prime Minister's explanation concerning liens today because I was not able to receive one from the Minister of Agriculture yesterday and I am pleased to learn that provincial, threshers' and municipal liens will take precedence over federal liens. However, there is one question I would like to ask. If there are liens against a farmer's grain will the federal government advance cash to him if his grain is already covered by a lien from some other source?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, as I explained yesterday this is an advance and not a loan and therefore what applies to one does not apply to the other. When the advance is made it is just an advance payment for grain which is going to be delivered under the farmer's quota during the course of the crop year and every charge which would normally be collected against that grain under provincial law naturally has to be taken into account as far as the advance is concerned.

All of this argument which has been going on here this afternoon on the part of various opposition members, and which was going on before the house closed yesterday afternoon, really amounts to an argument that there is no use in a farmer delivering his grain at all if he has any debts. That is the logical end of that argument and it is really what the argument amounts to; that if a farmer has debts there is no use in his delivering his grain. If you are going to take that position, then I think you had better say that any farmer who has debts had better go out of business and forget the whole thing.

What does the farmer want to deliver his grain for? Why in many cases does he want the advance if not to discharge some of those debts which make it impossible for him to carry on in a reasonable manner? In most instances that is the very reason why he wants to get the advance. It is to pay the storekeeper, the threshing bill, his taxes, and so on. As far as the argument is concerned that he is not going to get enough cash to do this, which was put up by the hon. member for Melville, or the hon. member for Meadow Lake, one or the other as I pointed out on second reading of the bill, the farmer who has only 50 specified acres will still get as cash in hand under this scheme, if he had No. 1 northern we will say, about $370 from his unit quota, the initial amount that he could deliver, and then he is eligible for a further advance of $150. Now, that is the man who has only 50 specified acres and, of course, it goes up from there.

In other words, this is a scheme which is designed to put a reasonable amount of cash in a farmer's hands, even though he is not able to deliver any grain beyond the unit quota which, of course, he has done in most instances already. It is a scheme which is specifically designed to help the small farmer. In these circumstances, all these extraneous arguments which have been raised in regard to farmers who have debts I do not think really are applicable and certainly in that regard, I repeat, it is an argument that a farmer who has debts might just as well not deliver his grain at all.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 11 and 12 agreed to.

On clause 13—Default.

Mr. Argue: This is the clause which defines the various instances in which a producer, having taken a cash advance, may be in default. Subclause (a) says that he may be in default within 10 days after the date on which the board mails or delivers or causes to be mailed or delivered a notice stating that he should pay his advance.

A second instance in which a man may be in default is that of a producer who has not applied for a permit book before the 15th day of September. That, of course, means that on that evidence itself the farmer is no longer in business. That would be the reasoning and I have no objection to it. But subclause (c) says that a producer may be in default if:

> Before the 31st day of December in the new crop year immediately following the crop year in which the advance payment was made, or such later date as the board may authorize in special cases.

That is to say, if the producer has not paid his advance by December 31, apart from whatever special cases may be allowed, he is automatically in default. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the minister should move for the deletion of subparagraph (c). It seems to me that a man in default is adequately defined to meet every instance, apart from this. The only time in which a man would be in default under this subparagraph, or the most frequent time, is if he has not had an opportunity to deliver his grain against the advance which has been made. I am sure the minister will not say that this is not a situation that is likely to arise, because the conditions that would arise under this situation are likely to be quite prevalent on December 31, since today about three-quarters of the marketing points in western Canada are on a unit quota, which means they are not under a quota at all so far as this legislation is concerned.

Therefore, with the clause in the bill as it now stands, if a producer on December 31, for example, has had an opportunity to deliver only four bushels of grain, because the quota and space were not available, and if you get on into December when the unit quota is still in existence and there is no standard quota, unless there is a big change in the grain situation it is quite probable that thousands of producers will be automatically in default under this subclause on December 31, through no fault of their own.

It seems to me that with the other clauses as they stand the government, the treasury and the public are adequately and completely protected. Under subclause (a) all the board has to do is to mail the farmer notice saying he is in default because he has not delivered his grain against the quota that exists; but if there is no quota in existence I submit there should be no clause which says the producer is automatically in default.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I think the fears of the hon. member for Assiniboia in regard to this subclause are not justified. To begin with, if he will look at the last part of (b) he will see that it says:

—or such later date as the board may authorize in special cases.

What was in mind when this legislation was drawn was that if after 16 months—remember, this December date is 16 months probably after the man got his advance, so there would have been a double period of deliveries from the time he could start getting the advance up to this time—if during that period he had not been able to deliver the grain because sufficient quota was not opened up for him, then this "or such later date" would apply.

Mr. Marler: It might apply.

Mr. Harkness: Well, as a matter of fact, the general intent, as I say, of the legislation and the way in which it will be administered is that that will be the situation.

In addition to that you have also clause (2) which reads:

The board may for any cause it deems sufficient waive any default for a specified period, and where a default is waived it shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to have occurred at the expiration of such period.

In other words, this clause is added specifically so that if there are any situations such as were envisaged by the hon. member for Assiniboia the man would not be declared in default or the default would be waived. Therefore I do not really think that the fears he has expressed are applicable and justified.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it is not only a case of whether injustice may or may not in fact occur, there is much more involved in this clause being in here than just that, it is the whole concept of the rights of parliament, the delegation of those rights to the board, even though I have the greatest respect for the Canadian wheat board as my record amply shows. I respect the individuals on the board because of the job they have done. Even so, I am not satisfied with having such a loophole in this legislation which says that this board may determine whether thousands of farmers are in default under the act. The government is completely protected. The legislation says that if a farmer does not meet a quota he is in default 10 days after he has received notice from the board; if he has disposed of his grain in an illegal fashion he is in default; and if he has not applied for a permit book he is also in default.

I do not know why in heaven's name we should have a clause in the bill which says that when producers cannot market their grain because of the policy in effect at the time tens of thousands of them may be declared in default. It is not good enough to say you are going to give the board the discretionary power to decide whether or not people who, under the definition, are in default through no fault of their own shall have the default waived or the period extended. If this clause had been in a bill being considered by the house a few months ago I would have expected it. I thought it must be an oversight and I can see no reason whatsoever for having it in here. Particularly I see no reason when through an amendment moved yesterday provision was made whereby an advance can be obtained even though the farmer has not repaid the full advance obtained in the previous crop year.

I think the minister should give some consideration to this question. I believe there is a principle involved. If the clause were deleted I cannot see that the government would lose one penny more than with the clause in the legislation, and it does put producers in a very invidious position if it is retained.

Mr. Harkness: Perhaps I should explain to the hon. member that the chief reason why the clause is in the bill is a legal reason. In order that the board may be able to make a claim for losses or what are looked upon as losses which have been incurred some terminal date has to be set. After that date, if the money which the board has advanced has not been repaid, the board is entitled to collect from the treasury for these losses, not only from the treasury but also from the elevator companies to the extent of the losses owed by the elevator companies. The legal officers inform me that you must have a terminal date of this sort to enable the board to make a cut-off and to collect for these losses from the public treasury and from the elevator companies.

As I pointed out before, the next clause certainly looks after any case in which a man is in default through no fault of his own. The hon. member has said that he has confidence in the wheat board, in their fairness and so on. From what he and I know of the wheat board I do not think we will have a single case of a farmer who does not have an opportunity to deliver, and who as a result gets into default 16 months after obtaining his advance where the default will not be waived by the wheat board. I am certain the wheat board will waive the default in every single case.

Therefore, as I say, I do not see why the hon. member or anybody else needs to be disturbed because of this provision. On the other hand, if the clause is not in the legislation the wheat board is put in a more or less impossible situation with regard to being able to set some cut-off date in order to determine losses and to recover the money to cover those losses from the treasury.

Mr. Argue: If that is the intent of the minister and the government, and I have no reason to believe it is not, why should the minister's thoughts not be placed in the clause? If a farmer has had an opportunity to deliver the 6-bushel quota and the 31st day of December comes along and he has not delivered his grain, then I am quite prepared to say that he should be in default; but if the 31st day of December comes along and he has not had an opportunity to deliver his grain then no board, even a board as high in our esteem as the present Canadian wheat board, should have the power to say that that farmer is in default. That is a power that does not need to be in the hands of the Canadian wheat board and should not be placed in their hands. If the minister would amend the clause to say that the farmer will be in default on December 31 provided he has had an opportunity to deliver grain against his advance, then I would be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. Harkness: All I can say to that is that we had great difficulties as far as the drafting of the bill was concerned. A very considerable battery of legal talent worked on the matter and after trying all sorts of different drafts they came up with this clause as the best one possible in order to cover these various contingencies.

Mr. Lambert: In that connection I would respectfully point out to the hon. member for Assiniboia that if subclause (c) is not included as it now stands the board would not have the power to extend the period in order to provide for precisely the case that the hon. member mentions. This clause allows the board to extend the time, in my estimation, whereas if the hon. member's suggested amendment were inserted there would be automatic default.

Mr. Marler: Why would there be automatic default?

An hon. Member: If you are a lawyer you had better go back to school.

Mr. Lambert: I suggest that as the clause is drafted it will permit the board to grant these extensions. Otherwise the board has no discretion whatsoever.

Mr. Quelch: I wonder whether the minister would say what his objection would be to the inclusion of the clause suggested by the hon. member for Assiniboia, namely, provided the farmer has been permitted to deliver the specified quota. That would certainly clarify it and would remove any suspicion on the part of anybody that the board might declare a farmer in default due to the fact he had not been able to deliver grain.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, I think because of a previous provision in the bill we are missing the main point altogether in the discussion. The important fact in connection with this is that on each of these occasions a 6 per cent interest rate comes into effect when the farmer becomes in default. As I said earlier in the discussions, 6 per cent interest is a higher rate than any Canadian government in recent years ever imposed in connection with any money that has gone to the farmer.

When we were discussing the other measure before, hon. members in the two corners of the house at least said that the rate should not be any higher than the 3½ per cent in effect at that time on money borrowed by the wheat board. Now the rate is 4¼ per cent. We are boasting now about the fact that there is no interest under this bill. There are many farmers in western Canada who know that 6 per cent interest will mean that they will have to pay more than they have under any other measure, particularly when you take into consideration the administration costs, part of which they will have to pay eventually.

Mr. Christian: I should like to make a suggestion with regard to the matter of default, particularly under clause 13 (1) (a). This matter can be very important as far as the farmer who is the recipient of the money is concerned. It would seem to me that you could have a case where a written notice would be sent out and would not actually be received by the recipient. I would respectfully suggest that such notices should be sent by registered mail because in the ordinary course of mail delivery such notices can go out and in many cases not be received by the recipient at all. From the point of view of protection of the producer, I think the notice should be sent by registered mail.

Mr. Nicholson: To come back to subclause (c), while the minister apparently has had legal opinions from his department or some departments I am sure he has not had the very capable legal opinion of the Prime Minister. Several years ago when we were considering legislation in connection with defence production the Prime Minister argued successfully that powers of this sort should not be written into the laws of Canada when we do not intend to act on them. Let us consider the situation if this legislation had been in effect a year ago. There were many farmers who were not able to deliver a 6-bushel quota last year and judging by the movement of grain at the present time they would not be in a position by the end of December this year to retire their obligations under this sort of legislation.

I submit that the argument made by my colleague, the hon. member for Assiniboia, has not yet been answered. We should not write into a statute a provision such as has been outlined here unless it is clearly stated that the provision will become effective only when the man has been given a chance to deliver his 6-bushel quota. Now that the minister has had an opportunity of considering this further I hope he will agree to having one of his colleagues move an amendment along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Harkness: If I thought that there was any necessity for an amendment I would be glad to have one made. All the legal advice I have had by highly qualified people is that this provision covers the situation. As a matter of fact, it is not only the inability to deliver the full quota which is covered by this provision as written, it is the failure to deliver for any cause over which the farmer really has no control, such as a railway strike or a bridge being out between him and his delivery point, or the loss of the grain by a prairie fire, or something along that line. These things could be all covered by this clause and the board is able to waive the default which has occurred as a result of any of these reasons which were really not the fault of the farmer or which were not attributable, we will say, to the deliberate failure of the farmer to deliver grain.

Actually the legislation as drawn, as I say, is I think perhaps broader so far as covering legitimate reasons for non-delivery of grain than the hon. member for Assiniboia, and some others, had in mind when they were speaking on this matter because they were talking entirely about the quota.

In connection with the quota, I would also mention that half of the 6-bushel quota may not be enough to discharge the whole of the cash advance if it is low quality grain. On the other hand, if it is high quality grain the cash advance would be discharged before the 6-bushel quota was fully delivered. If a man had No. 1 wheat he would pay off the advance perhaps after he delivered a 5-bushel quota rather than having to wait until he delivered the 6-bushel quota.

Mr. Schulz: All we are asking is the removal of any doubt in this clause concerning the farmer's inability to deliver grain. Perhaps if I were to give an example, it would be helpful. When I was speaking on the address in reply to the speech from the throne I said that at least 65 per cent of the farmers in my constituency have not delivered one bushel of wheat in the new crop year. Now that three weeks have passed, perhaps the number has been reduced to 50 per cent. However, we have only two more months to go to the end of the year when this clause will come into effect.

Mr. Harkness: No, no, it would not come into effect until a year after that; that is the point of which some hon. members have lost sight. There are sixteen months provided for the man to deliver his grain.

Mr. Schulz: The clause says six months after the end of the crop year, so the time would run out on December 31. There is still 50 per cent of the people who have not delivered one bushel. The other 50 per cent of the people who have delivered the first part of their quota will need another three months to deliver the remainder of their quota. All we are asking is that the man be given a chance to deliver before he is declared guilty.

Mr. Harkness: I think I should point out that I feel the hon. member for Springfield is confused as to the time provided for making deliveries. If a man were to take out one of these cash advances as soon as this legislation is passed, we will say ten days from now, he has until a year from the coming December to make delivery before he is automatically declared in default. If the non-delivery results from something over which he had no control the waiver clause would come into effect. It is not a matter of the crop year beginning in July and running to the following December, it is the December a year from then.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I think further consideration should be given to this amendment suggested by the hon. member for Assiniboia. The hon. member for Acadia, too, expressed the hope that the government would give the amendment some consideration. It is quite clear from the bill that if a farmer is in default as at December 31 he is liable for the penalty. It does not make a bit of difference, and the Minister of Agriculture knows this as well as any member of the house because he has been here long enough to know, what the Minister of Agriculture says he thinks the bill means; it certainly would not make a bit of difference in a court of law what any of the lawyers in this house might think it means, the actual test comes when the court makes a decision based upon the wording of the act.

Certainly there can be no doubt that there is a great deal of ambiguity in the wording of the bill. The minister may say he does not believe the board would do this, but that is not good enough. There is a doubt here, and the least the government can do is to give the matter consideration so the farmer will not be placed in this precarious position when December 31 comes around. There is no purpose served by saying, "It is the opinion of my law officers"; that does not help a court to solve the problem at all. The court is not allowed to take what is reported in Hansard in deciding a case; the court must take the wording of the act as the court finds it. When the wording of a clause is in question, as without a doubt it is in question, then some steps should be taken to clarify it.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Bow River has been expressing legal opinions—

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): No, he has not.

Mr. Harkness: Yes, that is what they were; they were legal opinions, and I must say I have much more confidence in the legal opinions which have been expressed to us and to the wheat board on these matters by the law officers of the crown.

Mr. Marler: When the minister says he is relying on the law officers, of course that is merely another way of saying that the law officers have drawn this clause in this particular way to the best of their ability. I do not believe anybody will quarrel with the drafting of the clause, but what we are quarreling with the minister about is the effect of subparagraph (c). It seems to me, Mr. Chairman—hon. members know that I do not represent a farming constituency—that the cases provided for in subparagraphs (a) and (b) are quite clear. If the farmer does not deliver his grain when he is called upon to do so then he is in default; that is something that depends on him. If he does not apply for his permit book, as provided in subparagraph (b), he is also in default; that is something else that depends on him.

So far as subparagraph (c), is concerned, however, he may, as hon. members have pointed out, be unable to deliver his grain because he has not been asked to do so, yet what he received as an advance will become a loan which he is obliged to repay. As my colleague the hon. member for Melville pointed out, he becomes liable for interest also. It seems to me that the minister is trying to sidestep the issue by placing on the law officers the responsibility for the drafting of this clause. Surely the minister could change his thinking about the clause and ask the law officers to draw up something in the way of a subparagraph (c) that would meet the objection that has been raised and avoid changing these cash advances into loans which have to be repaid.

I would feel a certain sense of apprehension if I were receiving one of these cash advances not knowing whether I would be able to deliver wheat or barley or oats accordingly and that some day, on the 31st day of December of some year, if the wheat board so decided, I would be liable to repay the money I had obtained. It seems to me that as the government says this is a cash advance it should stand behind the representation it has made.

Mr. Bryson: The hon. member who has just taken his seat made the point that I wanted to make. However, I should just like to say this. Unless you are going to notify these people who have obtained cash advances that they can now deliver to an elevator, as is done in the United States where a man who has a lien from the C.C.C. is notified that on a certain day he is to deliver his grain, you put the farmer in an untenable position. On the other hand, I do not see how you can do it under the quota system and with the shortage of space. I do not think you can do it and be fair with other people. But unless you do it you are placing the farmer in an untenable position because of the fact that we are going to be faced with this quota system.

I think the minister will appreciate the fact that a great many people who will take advantage of this loan—I still call it a loan in spite of the arguments that have been put forward by the minister—are going to have terrific difficulty in getting their quota to the elevator. I do not need to tell the minister what happens. He is as well acquainted with what happens in western Canada as am I. On a one-bushel quota in my area, I have known instances where a line of trucks have stood in front of an elevator for literally weeks waiting to get in. As soon as those trucks are unloaded, the elevator space is full. Are you going to penalize a man who may be in default for the reason that he just has not physically been able to deliver? I therefore think you are placing the farmer in an impossible position when you are going to call him in default under such circumstances. I think some consideration should be given to implementing the sort of amendment that was suggested by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I should like to reiterate that nobody is going to be placed in any impossible position having regard to this clause concerning delivery. To begin with, the chances are that in the vast majority of cases, if not in all of them—and we think it will be true in all cases—the farmer in this 16-month period approximately will have had the opportunity to deliver. If he has not had the opportunity to deliver during that 16-month period the situation, I will admit, is going to be extremely difficult indeed. But if he has not had the opportunity to deliver and, going even further than that, if he has not been able to deliver, as I say, for some other reason over which he had no control, such as losing his grain by fire, then the provision exists that default will be waived and he will not suffer anything as a result of that inability to deliver. I do not see how you can go any further than that. In other words, I think the legislation goes just as far as it can possibly go in order to ensure that a farmer who is not trying to beat the thing will not suffer anything in the way of interest which the hon. member for Melville mentioned. The only reason for the six per cent interest provision being in there is to serve as a deterrent against people who, just through carelessness or some other reason, failed to deliver. But I really do not see how the legislation can go any further than it goes in looking after and protecting the interests of the farmer and ensuring that provisions are there under which, if he is not able to deliver, he is not going to suffer because of that fact.

Mr. Quelch: The bill says that the wheat board will be authorized, if it so desires, to take action. It does not definitely say that, in the instance such as that given by the minister, the default will be waived.

Mr. Harkness: Subsection 2 states as follows:

> The board may for any cause it deems sufficient waive any default for a specified period,—

Mr. Quelch: The word "may" is used.

Mr. Harkness: Yes. The words "may" and "shall" are taken to be more or less synonymous in most of this legislation. I have heard this argument many times previously in the House of Commons in regard to "may" and "shall".

Mr. Quelch: Is that a legal opinion we are getting now?

Mr. Harkness: No, it is not a legal opinion. I just say that I have heard this argument quite frequently in the past.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): And you put up the biggest argument against it.

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister was a little bit unfair in the assessment he made a few minutes ago of the remarks made by the hon. member for Bow River. I do not think he was expressing any legal opinion. I think most of the members from the west either are farmers or have the outlook of farmers and they could not care less about legal opinions. They are not too greatly concerned whether or not these legal niceties meet with the approval of the bar association. What they are interested in is that the farmer will have something by means of which he is protected and something that will work, and that no impasse will occur in the future that will put the farmer in an embarrassing position. If that requirement can be satisfied here, I think we can get along to the next clause.

Mr. McCullough: Mr. Chairman, I want to agree with and support the contention that has been made that this clause puts the farmer in an untenable position. I agree with the expression of opinion that subsection 2 of the clause is needed. But I want to point out to the minister that I think this is permissive. While he tries to point out that for the purposes of the board in the way of collection they need a cut-off date at December 31, the farmer who is in default because, as the minister has pointed out, he may not have been able to deliver his grain in that six-month period automatically becomes in default through no fault of his own or quite conceivably through no fault of his own.

In view of the fact that there has been widespread disagreement with this, many of us say that while the board needs some protection in the operation of this act we do not think it is fair to put the farmer in the untenable position in which, through no fault of his own, in circumstances such as the minister has pointed out—either through lack of box cars, lack of delivery, weather conditions or any other reason,—where he will face the threat of being declared in default of making delivery and settling his account.

I suggest that the minister take into consideration the idea that has already been put forward. If we had an additional amendment to this section of clause 13 to indicate that it was not at the discretion of the wheat board I think it would meet the situation.

I think the Prime Minister should take cognizance of this matter because he is one who, as the hon. member for Mackenzie has pointed out, over the years has said that parliament should not allow discretionary powers to be vague but that in an act we should have a definition of exactly what is the situation. I therefore suggest that if through no fault of the farmer or a recipient of this advance delivery has not been made, it shall be so stated in the legislation so that the farmer will not be labouring under some apprehension that he might be, at the discretion of the board, declared in default.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, I note that the Minister of Agriculture has left the chamber. However the minister said that the word "may" would be the same as the word "shall". The minister has his legal advisers in front of him. Will he ask his legal advisers now whether in their opinion the word "may" means the same as the word "shall" in this case?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Quelch: In other words, is it not merely discretionary?

Mr. Churchill: I did not catch the last word used by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Quelch: Is not the word "may" here discretionary rather than mandatory?

Mr. Churchill: I think it is normally considered to be discretionary. But, as the Minister of Agriculture pointed out, the question of the use "may" and "shall" and its interpretation has been raised in the House of Commons in the past. I think the hon. member's question should more properly be directed to the Department of Justice in order to get a final opinion on it.

Mr. Sinclair: Let us refer the bill to the Department of Justice.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, I think we are entitled to a clear definition on this point. The Minister of Agriculture has stated that the word "may" here means the same as the word "shall". Personally I do not believe that for one moment. Therefore I would like to ask the minister to consult with his legal advisers who are in front of him as to whether or not the word "may" in this case does in fact mean the same as the word "shall".

Mr. Churchill: I think I can satisfy my hon. friend when I say that in the drafting of this legislation the intention was that this should be discretionary.

Mr. Quelch: Well then, the Minister of Agriculture was absolutely wrong in his statement.

Mr. Churchill: Oh, I do not think I can agree with that at all.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might get from the minister, not a legal opinion—

An hon. Member: An illegal one.

Mr. Argue: Nor an illegal one, but rather an opinion as to what might happen in a specific instance. We know that yesterday the legislation was amended so that a farmer is not now automatically barred from getting a new advance in a new crop year solely because his previous advance has not been repaid. My question is this: assuming a farmer in a given crop year who has had an advance against a six-bushel quota has been able to market a four-bushel quota, will he be entitled to an advance against a six-bushel quota in the new crop year? He has had an advance in one crop year against his six-bushel quota; he has been able to repay only part of it because he has been able to deliver only a four-bushel quota; now will he be entitled under this legislation to a full advance against the six-bushel quota in the new crop year?

Mr. Harkness: The answer to that question is, yes. He is entitled to this advance but he has to have grain to cover it. In other words, the grain which was already used to cover the advance which he has not yet paid off cannot be used in order to secure a new advance.

Mr. Argue: That is quite understandable and quite acceptable. Now may I ask this: if a farmer has been able to deliver only a four-bushel quota and he has sufficient grain to cover a further six-bushel quota and has obtained a further advance under this legislation out of what money will he be able to repay the balance owing from the first crop year on which he has obtained an advance? In other words, how does he pay the balance between the four and six bushels which he was not able to deliver in the initial year?

Mr. Harkness: Out of new quotas which are provided. All I can say in regard to that question is that we are optimistic enough to think that farmers are going to be able to deliver a six-bushel quota in this coming crop year and in succeeding crop years.

Mr. Argue: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think this part of the minister's answer is not satisfactory and makes the proposition which we are proposing even more important. I say this because if a farmer has obtained cash advances against a six-bushel quota and he already owes against a quota which he has had in the previous year and against which he was unable to deliver, where in the world is he going to get his money before December 31, even on the assumption, and giving the minister the benefit of the doubt if there is any that he is able to deliver a substantial quota in the new year.

He has had an advance which takes up half his initial payment when he delivers grain in this crop year; he owes the other half of the initial payment because he has had the advance from the last crop year and was not able to deliver his full quota. The minister and I will, I expect, be here some months later dealing with this very matter and I can say to him that I think he is all wrong in saying that every producer would have an opportunity to deliver six bushels by next July 31. It was not so during this crop year and it was not so during the previous crop year. Our sales are down compared to the previous crop year and I think the Minister of Agriculture in this instance is making a statement that is not likely to be borne out by the facts.

The point which concerns me is this. This legislation, from the definition given by the minister this afternoon, does not guarantee to the producer something which I thought yesterday it guaranteed, that is to say even the minimum sum of 50 cents a bushel for wheat on a six-bushel quota. As this legislation is being defined this afternoon I can see more loopholes in it and less benefit from it than I originally believed were intended by the legislation, with the amendments that were advanced. There will be thousands of farmers who will have had no chance to deliver a six-bushel quota by July 31 next unless the government and the wheat board take some other extraordinary measures such as off-site storage or sales policies which would match other sales policies in effect today.

I think the explanation of the minister gives me ample justification for moving the following amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Mackenzie:

That clause 13 be amended by adding the words "provided the recipient has had adequate opportunity to discharge his undertaking" after the word "December" in line 19 thereof.

Now I am not a lawyer and I have not the benefit of legal opinion close at hand, but in putting forward this amendment I have used the precise language used in relation to other parts of clause 13. When I use the word recipient and the words "has had adequate opportunity to discharge his undertaking" I am using the words in lines 6 and 7 of subclause (a). I would suggest that if this amendment is accepted by the minister it would clear up the points which we are debating and would certainly not tie the hands of the wheat board in any way except to say to them in legal form that we do not want them to hold a producer in default on December 31 through no fault of his own. I do not think the Canadian wheat board would want authority to do things that should not be done. I am not saying they would misuse it, but I think the wheat board would be happier without that kind of authority in view of the fact that some people are going to say they might use it. In view of the attitude over many years of the members of the government, I think they should be quite pleased that parliament is not delegating discretionary responsibility to a board which that board should not have the power to exercise.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I am coming rather late into the debate on this bill and hon. members will of course understand that I was unavoidably absent on the second reading and when the committee stage was first reached. I would like to thank my colleague, the hon. Minister of Agriculture, for giving me so much assistance on this particular bill.

With regard to the matters raised by the hon. member for Assiniboia, I appreciate his experience with regard to agriculture and I fully appreciate the sincerity of his viewpoint. Everyone realizes, I am sure, the earnestness with which his point of view has been put forward; nevertheless I think the hon. member is attempting to deal with almost everything that could possibly arise within the next two years. There was not a question raised during the course of the debate this afternoon as I listened to it that has not been raised before and thoroughly discussed during the last several months.

I regret that the hon. member was not prepared to accept the very clear explanation of the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the phrasing of this particular clause. As he said, some cut-off date has to be set in order that a determination may be made as to whether or not there are losses which in the final analysis would have to be made good by the treasury. There is no intention to do harm to any farmer; in fact the legislation itself is a clear indication that it is designed to assist the farmer.

The hon. member for Assiniboia is suggesting there may be some difficulty in making a full six-bushel quota delivery during the course of the next 16 months. I hope he is wrong in that and he himself suggested there might be means of dealing with deliveries and the marketing of grain other than those which are now possible. We are not averse to considering other means and we may very well have suggestions to make. At the same time the sales program is being vigorously pursued.

I think the hon. member is a little pessimistic at the moment with regard to what will be the result of the sales of wheat during the course of this particular crop year. It is a little too early to determine that our sales will not exceed the sales for last year. Who is to say whether or not they will? There are many, many factors involved. There are some areas in which the crops are not as good as they were last year and it may well be that Canadian wheat sales will move more rapidly on the world market than was the case a year ago. The hon. member is not in a position any more than any one in this house to forecast what the results may be or, on the basis of his hypothetical suggestion that in some instances a full six-bushel quota may not be delivered in the course of the next 16 months, to say an amendment should be introduced along the lines he suggested. Let us wait a bit and see what happens.

I think the hon. member is in favour of this legislation and in general approves of the measures proposed. I believe he wants to get the legislation through the house quickly and he wants the farmers to benefit. He has raised several questions and I think with that active mind of his he could have raised many other questions that are not necessarily solved by the wording of this bill. What statute is there in Canada that has not had to be amended at some time or other? No one can foresee every possible factor that will be involved in the application of a statute. We have discussed the problems that were raised this afternoon and decided that this was the best and simplest method of dealing with the situation at the present time. If at the next session of parliament we discover that our sales are not moving ahead as they should or that marketings are not as good as they should be, it would be at that time that I would expect the hon. member to raise this particular problem. He could then say to us, "You are not going to get your full six-bushel quota delivered and there will be many farmers in default on December 31". Let me point out to the hon. member that he cannot forecast the situation now. Also, there are other methods open to increased marketings. Consequently, I think he should let this stand as it is.

The fears he has expressed are on the record and we fully appreciate that he has advanced a fair argument. It may be a good one; time alone will tell. In any event we are grateful for his assistance; but why delay the measure at the present time over something which is not really as consequential as the hon. member has tried to make it appear. I grant it is a good debating point but let us move on because there are other things in this legislation which are more important.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, if I might reply to the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce I would say I appreciate some of the very nice things he said about me and I will be glad to say some nice things about him in the days that lie ahead provided he proves to be right. However, I would prefer to attempt to close the barn door while the horse is still in the barn rather than try to close it after the horse has gone.

The minister said something which I could not understand at all. I do not know where he got the 16 months for the marketing of the six-bushel quota to which he referred. We are now three months into the present crop year and there are just nine months left in which to have a six-bushel quota. If he wants to add 16 months it is going to take us to the end of February, 1959 and I do not know what his reference to the 16 months has to do with this bill.

The Minister of Agriculture says that after discussing the matter with the Canadian wheat board and others he is quite confident there will not be any farmers who will not have had an opportunity to deliver a six-bushel quota by July 31. The Minister of Trade and Commerce was not nearly so optimistic because I understood him to say he did not expect there would be many points that would not have a six-bushel quota by the end of this crop year, and that is a very different thing.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce asks how I can suggest that all points will not have a six-bushel quota against which six bushels of grain can be delivered. I want to point out to both ministers something about which doubtless they are well aware, that a six-bushel quota being in existence does not necessarily mean the farmers have had an opportunity to deliver the grain. There have been far too many instances in which there have been five or six-bushel quotas which have been largely fictitious quotas because there has been no space in the elevator.

I am concerned over the fact that the ministers are being too optimistic about the present indications and I shall list some of those indications. One is that overseas clearances of barley to date this year are only 5 million bushels as compared with 16 million bushels last year; that overseas clearances for the crop year—

Mr. Churchill: Set out the United States price for barley while you are dealing with the figures. Let us have the picture clear.

Mr. Argue: I am not attempting to argue now, although I may do so later on, as to why this has happened; I am just saying it is a fact.

Mr. Churchill: Well, yes.

Mr. Argue: It is a fact that exports of barley are down and exports of wheat are down in this current crop year as compared with the same period in the last crop year.

Mr. Churchill: And exports of oats are up.

Mr. Argue: How much? Let us have the figures for oats. Come on; let us have them.

Mr. Churchill: Well, let us have them; you are dealing with the figures.

Mr. Argue: It is such an insignificant amount I did not think the Minister of Trade and Commerce should be talking about oats.

Mr. Churchill: Well, they are not down, anyway.

Mr. Argue: Of course the fact is that if you total our exports for all four grains I think you will find they are down by something over 20 per cent, so we do not have to separate them at all.

I believe it is going to be more difficult this year to market even as much grain as we marketed last year. I have two reasons for saying this. The first is that forty per cent of the Canadian points were on a five-bushel quota when we reached the end of July and the outlook this year is even worse than it was last year. The minister can produce the opposite figures if he has them, but I do not think the outlook is too bright. The second reason is that the whole grain system is more congested now and there is less space available than was the case at the beginning of the crop year one year ago.

In the light of the known statistics I do not think the Minister of Agriculture is fooling even himself when he says he does not expect that any marketing point will be short the six-bushel quota. But if the minister is right, as we all hope he is, then why on earth would he not accept the amendment I moved which would not provide any difficulty for anybody?

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment because I believe it should be spelled out clearly in the act that in the event of a farmer not being permitted to complete his undertaking the default shall be waived. The Minister of Agriculture said that that was covered by clause (2). I drew his attention to the fact that clause (2) merely says that the board may for any cause it deems sufficient waive any default and he said, "Oh, well, the word 'may' is interchangeable with the word 'shall' ". That does not satisfy me for one moment. I then asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce to consult his legal adviser as to whether in this case the word "may" will mean "shall", and he replied, "No, it does not mean shall; it is discretion." That being the case, clause (2) does not give any guarantee whatsoever that in the event of a farmer not being permitted to complete his undertaking default will be waived. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce is so certain that the farmer will be permitted to complete his undertaking I cannot understand why he should refuse to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make an observation on this problem in regard to the legal effect of it. It seems to me that the amendment proposed would be restrictive rather than otherwise, for this reason, it would place on the farmer the burden of proving that he could not make delivery for some reason which was beyond his control. The clause as it reads now is much wider than that and will permit the operation of the discretion without placing an unfair burden on the farmer.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask this question? When we are drafting legislation of this sort do we allow discretion? Is it not a fact that in legislation it does not matter what we may think of any discretionary powers implied in the legislation, the written word prevails. The decision must be made on the words in the act and it is the written word that must prevail. That is why my hon. friend is anxious to get the written word into the bill at this stage. The hon. member says it is restrictive. It restricts the wheat board, not the farmer, and we want to see written into this legislation safeguards for the agricultural producers, the men who market the wheat.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the amendment which the hon. member for Assiniboia has proposed does not carry out the ideas which he has just expressed, because the words in his amendment are placed after the word "December" in line 13. Unfortunately, that seems to me to have the effect of cutting down the period from 16 months to four months. I would suggest to him that he should look at his amendment again, because instead of the words "in the new crop year" relating to December 31 they relate to the discharge of the recipient's undertaking. So far as we are concerned, while we are sympathetic to the idea which he has expressed, the words of the amendment do not carry out his intention.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Argue) negatived: Yeas, 24; nays, 96.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Clause 13 agreed to.

Clauses 14 to 17, inclusive, agreed to.

Grain

On clause 18—Loans under Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act, 1956.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): When I spoke on this bill yesterday I indicated I thought the government should give consideration to the dropping of this clause. We have had quite a long talk from the Minister of Agriculture who was piloting this bill through for the Minister of Trade and Commerce regarding the fact that he thought the farmers were fairly honest. I am not disputing that. I also think the farmers are honest. Give them an opportunity and they will pay their obligations when they can do so.

This clause has nothing whatever to do with any loan that any other creditor may have, so far as this bill is concerned, except that which the federal government has as a guarantor for the loans made by the banks. I went to some length yesterday in arguing the case; I do not intend to go over that ground again but I do think it is possible that under this clause those farmers who have found themselves in great need and have had to borrow money under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act, 1956, will find themselves in the position where they are going to be required to pay off those liens before they can get any cash whatever from those cash advances. It may happen that they will not get one cent of the cash advance to use for the purpose, as we were told, for which this legislation was intended.

Certainly if this clause means anything at all it means that the farmers who are in great need of cash to pay those small bills which they have been running up over the last few months through no fault of their own will not be able to get it for that purpose. They must have some cash in order to pay their obligations to the local grocery man, or to the local man who has been supplying them with fuel oil for harvesting purposes, or to the butcher. These bills were all run up on the assurance that the farmer would pay them out of the first moneys he got from the disposal of his grain. This bill does not propose to allow the farmer to sell his grain and get the initial payment. It only proposes that he shall get as high as 50 cents a bushel in advance.

It seems to me that the government has not got the same argument under this clause as it had under clause 10 in connection with which the Minister of Agriculture said that the government should not be a party to any legislation which would cause creditors to be put in the position where they could not get the money which was owing to them. He went on to point out that if the farmer owed taxes he should pay those taxes and if there were other liens by the province he should pay those liens.

Surely that puts the farmer in the position of appearing to be dishonest. Irrespective of whether or not this clause stands, if the farmer sells his grain and gets the full 50 cents he is an honest man. I am sure that 99 per cent of the farmers of western Canada are honest, and the farmer does not need the federal government to tell him what to do with the money. If he has certain obligations he is going to take the money and pay his bills that of necessity he has been running up over the last few months. He will use the money to pay the bills of his creditors such as the grocery store or implement man or perhaps use part of it to buy some needed clothing for the children. He is not dishonest and he is not trying to avoid paying his just debts.

But in this clause the government says to the farmer that the very first claim is that of the government. They say to him that out of this 50 cents which was supposed to be so urgently needed he must pay any debt which is owing under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act. It does not seem to me that the government will suffer if it waives this clause because it will still have a claim on any other grain that will be produced. The government will have a claim on any grain that the farmer brings in before he gets his full initial payment.

There is no possible chance of the farmer getting out from under his obligation to pay the loan which he obtained under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act. The government is fully guaranteed and does not need this clause at all. If the government is going to be bullheaded—maybe that is not the right word but it expresses my feeling—and say, "No sir, we are going to demand our pound of flesh", then I say the government should be at least a little bit charitable and provide that the farmer will at least get 25 cents a bushel for his wheat.

It would be a very simple amendment but the government seems to be reluctant to accept any suggestion from those in the opposition with regard to making any changes in the legislation. Even the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture do not agree on the terms of the act or the wording of the act.

An hon. Member: The interpretation.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Well, the interpretation of the act; I will accept the suggestion. That is more than the government does. I am not arguing at all. The government seems determined to think that the wording of the bill is absolutely correct in every detail.

An hon. Member: Perfect.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I can remember not so long ago when the two ministers who are concerned with this legislation were very vocal in some of their protests with regard to legislation brought into the house. I think the government should take out this clause but if it is determined to leave it in I suggest that it might be amended in this way so that it would read:

> Where an applicant for an advance payment is indebted to a bank in respect of a guaranteed loan obtained by him under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act, 1956, 50 per cent of the unpaid balance of the guaranteed loan, together with any interest or other charges owing thereunder, owing to the bank shall be deducted from the advance payment and paid to the bank, and the bank shall cancel any endorsement in the permit book made under that act.

That would be a very simple amendment and it would guarantee that the farmer who is in need—he would never have obtained a loan under the interim financing act if he had not been—would be assured at least some money to pay the grocer and possibly have a little bit for Christmas.

I notice also that in this clause the government has been very careful to put in the words "shall be deducted". There is no "may". It is very explicit. There was no doubt in the minds of the lawyers who drew up the bill that the money would be paid. There is no "may" about it. It is "shall". I suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he should agree to what I have put forward. I hope he will be a little bit more receptive to some of the suggested changes which will benefit the farmer than the Minister of Agriculture has been. Even though the government is determined to keep this clause in the bill, I am sure that if they would see fit to make this change they will get the full support of the house. They certainly will get the support of this group.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is making certain insinuations and implications which I think are quite unjustified. As outlined and explained by the Minister of Trade and Commerce a short time ago, we do not pretend and have never pretended that the bill is perfect. In speaking on second reading I said that experience would probably show that we would have to make some changes in it.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Where a fault is pointed out to you why do you not change it now?

Mr. Harkness: Up to now I do not admit that fault has been pointed out. As a matter of fact, I think the situation is that in many respects the hon. member has not understood how the legislation is going to work and what the result will be. The whole argument he has just made really is an argument in favour of giving a double advantage to the man who has already taken out a loan under the interim financing act. If we carried out the suggestion of the hon. member it would mean that every farmer who has already taken out a loan of $3,000, we will say, under the interim financing act would be able to get another $3,000 under this legislation. He would be twice as well off as far as getting cash is concerned as the farmer who had not already taken out a loan.

In addition, if we did away with this clause one of the results would be that you would have a situation where a loan had been made on certain grain. If a farmer has taken out a loan on the grain he has threshed this year that grain is security for the loan and the bank has a lien against all of that grain. If you make him an advance on it at the same time you are making an advance without the same security you would have if you made an advance to a farmer who had not taken out a loan. In other words the result would be that you would put the fellow who had taken out a loan in a considerably more advantageous position than the man who had not taken out a loan. There would be another result which would flow from the deletion of this clause. When the farmer came to deliver his grain, he would not get any cash at all because—

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Could I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Harkness: Just let me finish. When the farmer came to deliver his grain under the interim financing act he would have to give half of that grain to pay off his loan under that act. He would have to give half of it to pay off the advance, so that would mean he would have no cash left for himself at all from his delivery of the grain. Therefore, there would be no incentive for him to deliver the grain.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): A while ago I understood the minister to say that if a farmer did not want to take advantage of this measure he could still borrow under the Prairie Grain Producers Interim Financing Act.

Mr. Harkness: That is right.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Then, why could he not borrow under that and when he got that money apply for his 6-bushel quota for his cash advance? Therefore, when you say one farmer would be getting an advantage over another, that would not necessarily be so.

Mr. Harkness: It is quite a different situation. If a particular farmer has taken out a cash advance, then he has given security of 6,000 bushels of his grain for that cash advance, if he then goes to the bank and wants to secure a loan under the interim financing act he could not use those 6,000 bushels as security to get the loan.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I did not say that. I said, why are you telling him, when he goes to the bank—

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I think we should have some order. One man at a time on his feet is enough. The point I am trying to make, and which the hon. member does not seem to have grasped, is that it is quite a different situation for a man to have obtained a loan under the interim financing act before this legislation comes into effect, and then come to obtain an advance, which is what the hon. member would like to see, and the situation where a man obtained an advance first, because you would have the same grain pledged twice. If, however, you have a case where a farmer takes an advance and then applies to the bank to get a loan; say he has taken an advance of $3,000 and there is 6,000 bushels of wheat there, he cannot use that as security to get his loan.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I agree with that, but that is not what I said.

Clauses 19 to 23 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 24—Coming into force.

Mr. McCullough: In connection with clause 24, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister if arrangements will be made so that this act may be proclaimed and put into immediate operation. I say that pointedly because perhaps the minister will recall that a year ago, when the interim financing act was put into force, there were many areas where banks did not have the necessary forms to enable the farmers to make their applications and take advantage of it. In this case could we be assured that the elevator agents will have proper instructions and proper forms, and that there shall be no delay in putting this measure into operation?

Mr. Harkness: We intend to get this measure into effect as rapidly as it can be done. As soon as it passes this house we will send it immediately to the other place. I understand that the other place will be adjourning, perhaps it has already adjourned, until next Monday so it cannot be dealt with until next Monday. But in any event, as soon as it is passed here and as soon as they finish with it in the other place we intend to get it proclaimed just as rapidly as possible. The officials tell me that they think the forms that will be required, and things of that sort, can be ready within a week or ten days.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this bill be read a third time?

Mr. Churchill: It would be helpful if third reading could be given now.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that this bill be read a third time now, by unanimous consent?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): By leave.

Mr. Harkness (for Mr. Churchill) moved the third reading of the bill.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCE AND RESIDENCE QUALIFICATIONS

The house resumed, from Friday, October 25, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Monteith—Mr. Courtemanche in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to increase the amount of monthly pension payable thereunder to fifty-five dollars per month, to reduce the basic residence requirements for pensioners from twenty years to ten years and to increase the length of permissible temporary absences of pensioners from Canada from three to six months.

Mr. Marler: When the minister introduced this resolution last Thursday, he explained that it had three objects. First of all, it would increase the amount of benefit to $55 per month; second, reduce the basic residence requirement from 20 years to 10; and, third extend the length of time which pensioners are free to spend outside of Canada in any year without loss of pension.

Then, he went on to make the following comment, as recorded at page 385 of Hansard for October 24, 1957:

In recommending these changes to the house the government is acting promptly to honour the pledges which our leader and our party made to the senior citizens of this country during the recent election.

As I do not share the opinion of the minister with regard to the honouring of the pledges which his leader and the party made during the recent election, I should like to take this occasion to review the promises that were made by the leader of the Conservative party and to examine the extent to which this resolution now before the committee implements those promises. The Prime Minister appears to have dealt with this subject of old age security when he opened the Conservative campaign in Toronto on April 25. According to the Toronto Star's report of the meeting, he promised:

> Old age pensions would be set at a figure high enough to meet the needs of our older citizens and would be adjusted from time to time in accordance with changes in living costs. Similar consideration would be given war veterans and retired civil servants.

According to a Canadian Press report of the same meeting, the present Prime Minister said that:

> A Conservative government would set payments high enough to meet the needs of the recipients, with subsequent adjustments to living costs and increases in national productivity.

Or in the words of the Globe and Mail which I do not think would be unsympathetic to the government in its account of the meeting:

> Social security benefits would be geared to keep pace with Canada's productivity.

I therefore want to emphasize, Mr. Chairman, the fact that there were three points in this promise. First, the payments would be high enough to meet the needs of the recipients. Second, the payments would be adjusted from time to time to keep pace with increases in the cost of living. Third, the payments would be geared to national productivity. I should like to deal with each of these three points a little bit more fully.

As it is the government which has now fixed the payment to be made at $55 a month, and as the minister himself has said that this measure honoured the pledges which his party made, I think we are entitled to infer that the government considers that a sum of $55 per month meets the needs of our senior citizens. I hope, however, that this determination by the present government will not serve as a pretext for provincial governments to adopt the attitude that the setting of old age security at this amount of $55 a month relieves them of their constitutional responsibility for the care of the recipients, that is to say persons over 70 years of age who are unable to live on old age security alone.

I feel that this point is overlooked by many provincial governments which seem to believe that the institution of old age security on a universal basis has relieved them of the responsibility of caring for citizens who have attained or passed the age of 70 years and who are in need.

The second point of the Prime Minister's promise was that the payments of old age security would be adjusted from time to time to meet increases in the cost of living. As I pointed out earlier, that was a part of the promise made in Toronto on April 25. It was repeated again at Espanola, Ontario and again in Victoria, B.C. on May 21. Let me quote the words of the Prime Minister as reported in the Vancouver Province of May 22. These are his words:

> I say to the old age pensioner, to the war veteran, to the retired civil service pensioner, we will provide fair and realistic pensions based on the cost of living and a fair comfort in living.

Though it is perfectly clear from the press accounts of the three meetings that I have just mentioned—Toronto, Espanola and Victoria—that this was an integral part of the Conservative pledge with respect to old age security, I want to add to the record the words the Prime Minister used in a broadcast on May 22, 1957. He said:

> We intend, this September, to call together parliament and there and then fix a fair and reasonable amount for the old age pensioner, indeed for the other pensioners, and also make provision for a formula whereby due allowance will be made in the future for the rising cost of living, providing that it continues.

My friend the hon. member for Essex East put those words on Hansard the other day. I have cited those remarks made in three different speeches during the campaign and again over the air in order to show that there was a formal and definite representation to the senior citizens of Canada and indeed to the electors generally that when old age security legislation was introduced in September, as the Prime Minister said, that legislation would embody a provision or a formula by which the amount of pension would be tied in with changes in the cost of living. But notwithstanding that pledge, nowhere in the resolution now before the committee do we see any words that suggest that this is going to be embodied in the legislation. Indeed, I am extremely doubtful, Mr. Chairman, whether, having regard to the language of the legislation, it would now be competent for the government, on the present resolution, to introduce into the bill the very thing that the Prime Minister promised during his campaign, that is to say a formula whereby due allowance would be made in the future for the rise in the cost of living.

Though the minister may think that the government is fully implementing the Conservative pledges given to the senior citizens of Canada during the campaign, I want to point out that the proposed resolution does not carry out what the Prime Minister promised in this respect. I do not address any personal reproach to him for that fact because, having had the opportunity of going over the newspaper accounts of the Prime Minister's speeches during the campaign, I do not believe the Minister of National Health and Welfare could be expected to have taken account of all the promises that were made because there have been so many of them, and he could not be expected to have a record of all of them. However, I want to emphasize the fact that this was a promise, not made casually but one that was made three times during the campaign at meetings and was repeated again over the radio.

Then there was the third point, namely that the pensions were to be geared to national productivity. I can readily understand how enthusiastic the audience in Toronto would be on hearing that the pension was going to be geared to national productivity which, I suppose, would mean the gross national product. But nowhere in the resolution do we find anything about that matter either. The point I want to emphasize is this. In reading what was said the other day during the course of the discussion of this resolution I noted that one of the government members suggested, "But give us time". Mr. Chairman, this is the sort of thing that should be done now.

The lawyers are perfectly capable of drafting a formula about which the Prime Minister spoke in Toronto. They are perfectly capable of drafting some kind of clause which would, as the Prime Minister suggested in Toronto, gear the amount of the pension to national productivity. But nowhere in the resolution do we find anything either about the cost of living or about national productivity. Consequently, I hope that in these circumstances I may be permitted to differ with the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his assessment of the extent to which the government is carrying out the promises that were made in such explicit terms during the election campaign.

I should also like to remind the minister of another pledge the Prime Minister made, namely that a Conservative government would establish a commission to investigate fully the United States social security program. Let me quote from the account published by the Globe and Mail on May 1 of the Prime Minister's meeting at Antigonish in Nova Scotia. Here is what the account says:

> Opening the Nova Scotia phase of his campaign in the agricultural community of Antigonish this afternoon, Mr. Diefenbaker promised that a Conservative government would establish a commission to investigate fully the U.S. social security program. For only slightly increased costs, Mr. Diefenbaker said, the U.S. is able to pay its elderly and retired citizens far greater benefits than the $46 a month received by Canada's old age pensioners.

Mr. Chairman, the minister will have a further opportunity of speaking and I hope that he will tell us then what steps are being taken to implement that pledge of the Prime Minister in connection with old age security.

There is another aspect of this whole question on which I would like to touch and that is the question of cost. The minister has told us that it is estimated that the additional cost resulting from the legislation to be based on this resolution would be about $96 million in the first full year. As I understood him the other day he said that the increase in the amount of the pension itself accounts for $92 million.

Mr. Monteith: Pardon me, I meant the 1958 to 1959 fiscal year.

Mr. Marler: I fully understood that, Mr. Chairman, and that is the reason why, in referring to the subject of costs, I have said what the cost would be in the first full year. Those were in fact the words used by the minister himself and I do not think there is any misunderstanding in regard to the figures he is using. It is on the basis of what might be described as the rate of annual increase in the cost of the pension, but not the portion that would be charged to the accounts for 1957-58.

Mr. Monteith: 1958-1959.

Mr. Marler: Well let us not go on repeating the same thing all over again. We know from listening to television that the additional pension is to be paid from November 1st. I do not find that in the resolutions but that is one of the advantages of listening to television. I was saying that in a full year the additional cost of the pension accounts for $92 million, the reduction in the residence period accounts for $3½ million, and the extension of permissible absences for possibly $½ million, if I may use the very words of the minister. In other words a grand total —estimated of course— of $96 million.

Now obviously we must consider this additional cost of $96 million in the light of all the other associated changes which are covered by other resolutions on the order paper and which I do not propose to discuss. I merely want to mention that so far as these other measures are concerned it seems clear that the additions to old age assistance allowances, to the blind allowances and to the disabled persons allowances will add— if I may make an approximately correct guess —about another $10 million or 10 per cent of the $96 million mentioned by the minister. So in round figures, and I prefer to use round figures rather than more close calculations, we can see that the changes in the matter of old age security, old age assistance allowances, blind allowances and disabled persons allowances will add an aggregate amount of approximately $106 million in a full year.

I would like to examine these figures in relation to total costs. We have not yet received exact figures for the fiscal year 1956-57 but from the graphs which were printed in the white paper at the time of the budget earlier this year we see that the estimated cost of health, welfare and social security for 1956-57 is very close to $1,050 million. I want to emphasize that that is merely for health, welfare and social security; it does not include payments to veterans. I think there would be good reason for including payments to veterans as part of our social security program, but the figures with which I am dealing at the moment are solely those included in the public accounts for health, welfare and social security under the classification appearing in the beginning of the public accounts each year.

As I say, we start off with this figure of $1,050 million and therefore to determine what are to be the costs of the national program with the proposed additions we must add the increase resulting from the larger number of persons who in this present year will be in receipt of benefits. My estimate of the amount of that increase, after looking at the available figures, is that it will come to probably $30 million. Then we also know that the increase with which we dealt in the earlier part of the current year, 1957, accounted for another addition on the full year basis of the sum of $108 million. We must then add the additional cost of these new measures on the order paper, excluding those in relation to veterans, which additional measures account for another $106 million for the full year.

Now, if these several increases had become effective on April 1 this year the total cost of health, welfare and social security would not be less than $1,294 million or, let us say, $1,300 million in round figures. Now, Mr. Chairman, I note it is six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, just before the committee rose at six o'clock I had pointed out that if one were to try to calculate the estimated cost of the program of health, welfare and social security on the basis of a full year the method of calculation would be to start with last year's total of $1,050 million, add to it the increase of $30 million resulting from there being a larger number of persons in receipt of benefits, the $108 million which was voted earlier in this year 1957 and the approximate additional cost of the new measures; that is to say, the additional payments under old age security and the accessory measures, another $106 million. I also pointed out that in round figures the total of those different elements came in round figures to some $1,300 million annually.

I would like to emphasize that of course this does not include amounts paid in allowances to veterans or other expenditures in connection with veterans that come under another classification in the government's expenditures. I want to point out that this total amount of approximately $1,300 million is a very substantial sum of money and to go on to add that it is in fact more than one-quarter of all the taxes paid into the consolidated revenue fund and into the old age security fund, and considerably more that a quarter of the tax revenues that remain available to the federal government after it has turned over to the provinces the amounts to which they are entitled under the tax-sharing agreements.

Of course, many of the hon. members who are now on the government benches and who have been in opposition will realize the difficulty for someone in opposition to make a precise calculation, but from the figures which are available it is possible to say that of every tax dollar retained by the federal treasury more than 27 cents are required to meet the cost of health, welfare and social security.

In considering the aggregate cost of $1,300 million which I mentioned a moment ago we must not overlook the commitments of the federal government in connection with the national scheme of hospitalization insurance which, when in force in all the provinces, will add a further amount of approximately $200 million annually to the cost of health, welfare and social security which are borne by the federal government. Of course, Mr. Chairman, as you will realize there are other costs which are borne by the provincial governments but I am considering at the moment only those which are payable out of the tax dollar which the federal government itself retains after it has handed back to the provinces the amounts to which they are entitled under the tax sharing agreements.

I wish to emphasize that we in the opposition, despite our familiarity with affairs that existed in the earlier part of this year, no longer have available to us information as to the expenditures which are to be incurred in the current year nor those to be undertaken next year; nor have we any information as to the probable revenues either for this year or for the fiscal year to begin on April 1 next. I mention that date, of course, because we all fully appreciate that the full burden of the increases which have already been made this year and those which are now under consideration will only be felt in the fiscal year 1958-59. In consequence of the situation I have just outlined it is not possible to come to a final judgment as to whether the additional expenditures which the present measure contemplates will fit into the general framework of a balanced budget.

I recall, as other hon. members do, some of the promises made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign. He said that a Progressive Conservative government would carry out its declared policy of increasing old age pensions and of reducing taxes. If I interpret correctly the words he used at Saskatoon he indicated that the costs of implementing these proposals—that of increasing old age pensions and reducing taxes—would be about $300 million. For old age security, old age assistance, allowances to the blind and to the disabled, we are at the moment, so to speak, using up $100 million, so it may be reasonable to expect that the government will make reductions in taxes amounting to some $200 million.

Our difficulties in the matter, Mr. Chairman, are not diminished by the fact that we do not know from the estimates which the Minister of Finance has tabled exactly what expenditures the government proposes to make and, therefore, though I have given much time to the task I have been unable to form any precise estimate of the over-all effect the government's measures are likely to have on the balance of the budget. In the circumstances it seems to me that the responsibility for establishing social security payments at these new levels must rest fairly and squarely on the shoulders of the government and I hope when the Minister of National Health and Welfare speaks later in this debate he will give us a clear statement as to the effect on the national budget of the higher level of the social security payments.

Like Canadians generally I welcome these further advances in the social security program. I think all Canadians welcome advances that can both be sustained and supported by the Canadian people but I hope the government is not proposing to maintain budget equilibrium by reducing expenditures for national defence because I believe that Canadians generally would be gravely disquieted if advances in social security were to be made at the expense of national security.

Before closing my remarks I would like to refer very briefly to the comments of the Minister of Public Works. I thought it was unfortunate that he seemed to feel it necessary to speak about the Prime Minister's personal qualities. So far as I know they have not been in dispute at any time before this committee. We have known him for a long time and during the course of this discussion I do not think the good qualities of the Prime Minister were in dispute at any time. However, the remarks of the Minister of Public Works have been made and I think therefore I should say that having enjoyed the friendship of the hon. member for Essex East for a great many years, both before he became minister of national health and welfare and while he occupied that important office, I know that his interest in the little people of Canada was not surpassed by that of any other hon. member of this house.

Mr. Jones: It did not show through, though.

Mr. Marler: I would add that his interest in the little people has not been demonstrated merely by interruptions or by talk of the kind I have listened to from the other side of the house, it has been supported by a most impressive record of achievement of which any hon. member of this house might justly be proud.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, before making the remarks I intend to make I should like to offer my congratulations to the new Minister of National Health and Welfare on the great honour that has been bestowed upon him. I must say that when I first heard of his appointment I thought, "What? Another Ontario member appointed to the cabinet?". However, upon further consideration I realized that we in this group have always felt that His Excellency's advisers ought to be the most able men in the government regardless of where in Canada they happen to live and therefore we have no difficulty in congratulating him on his appointment. I am sure that if the new minister will show the same feeling of devotion for the cause of public health and human welfare as was shown by his late colleague, Doctor Blair, he will be serving the people of Canada right well.

This resolution is a vindication of some remarks I made when I was asked to comment on the election results and when I expressed the opinion that almost regardless of what legislation would be forthcoming, the people of Canada would not fail to reap some of the benefits of the upset that had taken place.

I, along with my colleagues, welcome this resolution. We welcome the increase that is being proposed from $46 a month to $55 a month. We welcome most sincerely the reduction in residential requirements from 20 years to 10 years. This was a promise made by the Secretary of State in the election campaign and I am very pleased indeed to see that the lady member of the cabinet is exercising her influence and that at least her promise in the campaign is being fulfilled.

I regret that in the resolution the government has not seen fit to give notice that the age is to be lowered from 70 to 65 for purposes of the Old Age Security Act. In these days when it is becoming increasingly difficult for our older citizens to find employment I feel that it would have been in the national interest had the government seen fit to lower the age requirement. Incidentally, it would also have saved a lot of money for the provincial authorities across Canada.

I read with some interest the remarks made the other day by the hon. member for Mackenzie River, who referred to the government members as being monkeys, as reported at page 430 of Hansard. Well that may be so in his opinion. However, when I listen to Liberal participants in this debate I really wonder who the monkeys are because it seems rather illogical that only a few months ago they asked us to be responsible members of parliament. They claimed that the economy of our country was able to afford only $46 a month. Now they are chastising the new Prime Minister for not making the old age pension even higher. Even the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount felt that the Prime Minister was not adhering to his promises and this was not a sufficient amount to meet the rising cost of living and to provide an adequate standard of living for those people. I find the Liberal predicament most amusing indeed. They are already chastising this government for failure to keep its promises; yet the Canadian people will not easily forget that for 38 years the Liberals have promised a national health insurance plan and we have not it yet. Therefore I feel when we begin to compare election promises we at this time are a little hasty if we complain overly much about any failures which might exist in that respect.

I will agree also that within the present framework of monetary and fiscal policies the $55 may possibly be about as far as this government is able to go. This government is unwilling to adopt a new approach to the role and function of government in our economic life. They also, like the former government, prefer to let a few individuals not responsible to the people manage the economy of the nation and therefore within that framework maybe $55 a month is about what we ought to have expected of the government. As my colleague, the hon. member for Regina City, pointed out the other day, and as was emphasized by a number of other colleagues, we feel that our economy is well able to provide at least $75 a month to all of our people at age 65.

The hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount pointed out at some length the expenses involved at the present time on the part of the federal government on behalf of public welfare and social security measures. I accepted his figures and I did some rather rapid calculation. To him it was becoming a rather serious matter that we were spending four per cent of our gross national production in providing our Canadian people with social security and health measures. To me it does not seem to be a level that is anywhere near the danger point and we in this section feel that a much larger percentage might very well be provided to the most important causes of public health and social security.

When we look at this resolution, Mr. Chairman, we note that it deals only with the amount of the pension that is received by the old age pensioner at the end of his life. I feel that there are other matters that might have been included in this resolution and possibly in other resolutions which are of equal importance to our senior citizens. I look at some of the representations that have been made on this subject by organizations of our senior citizens and I notice that all of them without fail do not ask only for an increase in the old age pension, they all ask for a number of other considerations. I note that first and foremost they place heavy emphasis on health care.

To an old age pensioner an assurance that in his declining years his health, his medical and hospital needs will be met is, I submit, of far greater importance than adding a few dollars to his monthly income. I have spoken to various meetings of ald age pensioners and those meetings invariably agreed that if some measures were undertaken in the field of relieving them of this constant worry they would greatly appreciate it. They are very keenly aware of the fact that sooner or later —and for most of them sooner—they will be needing medical care, they will be needing hospital care and some consideration along those lines is of more importance to them than adding to the amount of the old age pension cheques at the end of the month.

Then I noticed another thing they feel very keenly on, namely that they be supplied with low-cost housing. The other day the hon. member for Nanaimo pointed out exactly what is happening. Since arriving in Ottawa I have had numerous letters to that effect. There is fear and trembling among many of those who live in rented quarters, and most old age pensioners do, as to how much of the $9 increase the landlord is going to grab from them when their incomes are increased by that amount. Therefore I feel that low cost housing for our senior citizens is another way in which they can be helped, a way that might be equally important as an increase in their monthly income.

When the former Liberal government raised their pensions by $6 a month many hundreds of these people in the lower mainland of British Columbia had their rents raised by $5 a month and all that the senior citizen received out of the $6 was $1. I say that the government is doing the exact opposite of what I am now advocating. Under the National Housing Act there are various schemes whereby low rent housing might be supplied for our old age pensioners, but rather than making it easier for more of such housing to be built the government has seen fit to raise the interest rate by another one-half of one per cent on houses built under section 16 of the National Housing Act.

I have always taken some measure of pride in what the government of British Columbia is doing in this respect, action begun by the former coalition government and now continued by the new regime. When low cost housing is built for senior citizens and others with similar low incomes the provincial government pays a grant of one-third of the cost of the building. All that the federal government does is to supply a mortgage on which they collect interest and the interest rate, as I indicated, is now 4½ per cent. In my opinion, if the federal government would match the outright grant made by the provincial government it would go a long way toward reducing the rents that the senior citizens have to pay and making more housing available for them.

I sometimes feel rather keenly when I see young married men, many of whom are earning $400, $500 or $600 a month, living in new $12,000, $15,000 or $18,000 homes which have been built under the National Housing Act with government guaranteed money while our senior citizens who need government assistance have to continue living in musty basements and hot attic rooms in our urban areas.

The argument of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate on the resolution failed to impress me at all. He seemed rather to regret that the government was now going to pay the sum of $55 a month to our senior citizens. In his opinion some of the fishermen in Bonavista-Twillingate were earning less than that. That argument fails to convince. Such an argument is based on the philosophy of tearing everyone down to the level of the lowest, a philosophy to which I have never subscribed. It is the same as saying that we will not allow another immigrant into this country until every Canadian has a home and employment. It is the same argument as saying that we will never pay anyone an income of $5,000 a year until everyone has an income of $5,000 a year. I feel that argument is a rather vicious appeal to the voters of Bonavista-Twillingate. After all, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was an executive member of a government for many years and if these fishermen had such a measly income as he indicated he has no one else to blame but himself and his former colleagues.

I close my remarks by saying that I feel that the people of Canada, as evidenced by this resolution, are obtaining some of the benefits of a new government. At this time I should like to express the opinion that if the government had not been elected as a minority government this resolution would not now be on the order paper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Why don't you applaud now?

Mr. Regier: It is also my opinion that while a minority government may be hard on the politicians it is very sweet for the people of Canada. My advice to the people of Canada would be that if we are faced with an election before the regular four year term has expired and they want to keep the Prime Minister on his toes they had better not give him a majority and they will get the benefit of much finer legislation.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to make extended remarks on the resolution now before us. I am sure that the proposal, to grant additional assistance to our senior citizens, as well as those in other categories covered by other resolutions, will meet with the approval of the people of Canada as a whole. While so many of us are enjoying a good measure of the material things of life we cannot afford to neglect those who have not only laid the foundations of this great nation but have brought it to the high degree of prosperity and greatness that it has achieved.

Many of these people find themselves in the position where they are unable to gain for themselves the necessities of life and are unable to engage in remunerative employment. They are looking to us to see to it that they have sufficient in order to enable them to live and to spend the rest of their days in at least some measure of comfort and security.

Some of those who have participated in the debate have gone to considerable lengths to try to prove who should receive the credit for the inauguration of our social welfare program, especially with respect to old age pensions. I do not think that this is of too great importance. In my opinion the main consideration before us is this: Are we doing our utmost as a nation to see to it that those who are looking to us for assistance receive that assistance in a way that will not only discharge our moral obligation to them but will also indicate in some measure our appreciation for all they have done.

Some question has been raised as to whether or not the amendments now before us encompass in their totality the promises that were made by the Conservative party during the past few months. Be that as it may, I am of the opinion that their response to the challenge of the pressing need of our senior citizens has been much more commendable than was the response of the previous administration. Someone used the term "too little and too late". I think possibly that was true, because it was too little and too late to stave off the retribution that the Liberal party saw in the offing, and of course that was indicated very clearly in the events of June 10.

My Liberal opponent in the Fraser valley, a splendid young man for whom I have a great deal of respect, found himself hard pressed to justify the stand of the Liberal government with respect to old age pensions, especially in relation to the $6 raise. On one occasion he made the observation that if the pension were raised too high it would rob the children of the privilege and responsibility of contributing to the support of their parents in their old age. He was never able to adequately answer the question that was asked, under a set-up like that what are the old maids and bachelors going to do?

In any event, we are faced today with these particular amendments. The first is to increase the amount of the monthly pension to those eligible under the terms of the Old Age Security Act to $55; second, to reduce the basic residence requirement from 20 to 10 years; third, to increase the length of permissible temporary absence of pensioners from Canada from three to six months. I believe that these proposed amendments cover, in part, three of the main objections which have been raised in the past relative to the old age security legislation. I say "in part" because although improving conditions to an appreciable degree additional amendments will be required to bring this legislation more closely into line with reality.

First of all, with respect to the increase in the monthly pension to $55, I may say that I do not believe there is any question in the minds of the members of this house or in the minds of the people across Canada relative to the need for an increase in this allowance. I believe ordinary common sense would indicate that it is absolutely impossible at the present time for senior citizens to live in any degree of comfort on $46 a month. I know the suggestion has been made that this pension was never intended to be their sole income; it was to supplement their savings, what they are allowed to have, or it was just to provide a little extra for them. I think we must remember that many of these people were so busy building this nation of ours, making the sacrifices that were necessary, they did not have any time to make provision for the closing years of their lives. Now they are faced with trying to live on $46 a month. I am sure that none of us would try to infer that that was adequate under the present circumstances.

I am not going to attempt to review the great mass of written material that has been placed on the records across this country presenting the needs of the senior citizens. I think that would be superfluous. I believe that each one of us has observed for himself the conditions in which many of our senior citizens are living or existing, and because of our personal observations we are convinced that an increase is absolutely essential. I do not think there is any question as to the urgency of the proposal. For too long our senior citizens have been forced to live below the borderline of poverty. We must act, and we should act quickly to bring them some assistance that will help them in time of need.

Regarding the amount that has been proposed by this resolution, I wonder if it is the best we can do in the light of our ability as a nation to pay? I was listening, as other members were, to the observations made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. He put on the record once again his own personal conviction, and the conviction of others of his group, that Canada is well able to pay $75 a month to our senior citizens at the age of 65.

Mr. Studer: You cannot outbid an auctioneer.

Mr. Patterson: You should know. I have in my hand an article that I clipped from the Toronto Globe and Mail this morning. The article refers to a speech made by the leader of the C.C.F. party before 200 students at a meeting sponsored by the University of Western Ontario C.C.F. club. One of the paragraphs reads as follows:

He—

Speaking of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar.

—admitted if his party had come to power it would not have increased pensions to the $75 a month it had advocated in the last campaign, but likely would have made them $60 or $65 a month because of the need to introduce other social legislation.

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that newspapers do not always get the facts absolutely straight. Hon. members have pointed out on different occasions that they have been misquoted. If this is a wrong statement then I would be very happy if the leader of the C.C.F. party would make the necessary correction right at the moment, but that is as I have read it from this article taken from this morning's newspaper.

The question is, as I say, is this amount of $55 in keeping with Canada's ability to pay? We think of the continuing rise in the cost of living and, as has been pointed out, the tendency on the part of some landlords to increase rents. This may be justifiable when we look at the situation squarely because it may be that some of these landlords had been providing rooms for pensioners at a very low rate and at some sacrifice to themselves. I do not know, but that may be so. Nevertheless, our pensioners are faced with continually increasing costs of living and an increase in rents as well.

The second part of this resolution proposes to make a reduction in the residence requirement from 20 to 10 years. I believe that this proposal is commendable. There are those who would propose that the residence qualification should be removed altogether. Personally I am of the opinion that there is some justification for the continuation of that principle. However, I do agree that the 10-year period is much more just than the 20-year period that is presently in effect.

The third clause in the resolution calls for the increasing of the allowable temporary absences from three to six months. On other occasions I have had an opportunity to make some requests along this line, and I would suggest if we are going to remove any clause in the requirements here is a good one to remove. This would enable our senior citizens, because of illness or family relations or other such circumstances, to live outside of Canada. I believe that this should not cause the government to maintain this particular clause as it is. I should like to make the suggestion that the few old age pensioners who would leave the country might be ambassadors of good will, and living in various sections of other countries speak of Canada and the wonderful privileges that we have here, thus convincing many other people that they ought to visit our country.

Considering the matter from the monetary viewpoint, the resulting effect on the tourist industry would possibly offset the fact that our senior citizens would be spending their meagre pensions in other nations of the world. Hence I should like to suggest that this clause, instead of being just amended should be removed entirely. I believe that procedure would fit in very well with the recommendations of the senior citizens organizations across the country. I have here the resolutions passed by the Senior Citizens' Association of British Columbia at their fourth annual convention in June of this present year. The first resolution reads as follows:

1. Resolved that this convention of the Senior Citizens' Association of British Columbia requests the federal government to amend the old age security and old age assistance acts to make it possible for the pensioner to receive his pension in any country in the world.

This is practically the same—in essence it is the same—as a resolution passed by the National Old Age Pensioners Federation which reads as follows:

That we request the federal and provincial governments to amend the Old Age Security Act and the Old Age Assistance Act to provide that those receiving the pensions be allowed to reside wherever they choose with no limit of time and still be eligible to receive such pension.

Mr. Chairman, these amendments proposed in the resolution now before the house, while inadequate, will receive my support is so far as they constitute an improvement in the old age legislation on the statute books of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Breton: Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed to speak in French on this resolution relating to the increase in old age pension. I am glad that you are able to understand me since, had this not been the case, I would have had cause to regret the fact that I was speaking in a language which was not that of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, during the few minutes at my disposal I would like to say that I am happy that our older citizens will benefit from the increase in the pension which will be granted to them. I am happy to share the pleasure of the 158,000 people aged 70 and over, in the province of Quebec, as well as the 32,391 people, aged from 66 to 70 years, who will eventually benefit from this increase in the pension, according to the statistics for 1955.

However, Mr. Chairman, you will also allow me to share the feelings of regret which will be experienced by the 1,624,055 children in receipt of family allowances, according to these same 1955 statistics. Those children will be unable to benefit from this increase though they share to an equal and even to a higher degree than old people the effects of the rise in the cost of living and of inflation.

I feel sorry, not only for the children of the province of Quebec but also, I think, for the Conservative group in our province. As it happens this particular demand was the main plank in the platform they put forward at their national convention last year.

It might be thought that in granting these higher pensions, which will cost an additional 96 million dollars, the Conservative party has really invented something, but I think it is fitting, because of that forgetfulness which is so prevalent among the people, to put on record what the Liberal party has done in the field of social security over the last few years.

We all know that in 1927 it initiated a social security movement by establishing an old age pension of $20 a month. We also know that the Liberal minister at that time had stated that the pension was not granted for the purpose of supporting our senior citizens but as assistance to them. He added that a contributory pension plan, such as exists in the United States, would eventually be required.

As we have a new government which intends to achieve something new in the field of social legislation, it seems to me that instead of continuing this tradition of increasing pensions every year, they should find a plan whereby our citizens would contribute to their old age pension.

May I recall that from 1947 to 1957 inclusively, the Liberal party accomplished a great deal in the field of social security, as evidenced by the following statistics.

As of March 31st, 1947, the budget of the Department of National Health and Welfare, including old age pensions, amounted to 334 million dollars on a total budget of 2,613 million, not counting the national defence budget which I consider exceptional and which is not to be taken into account in the ordinary budget of the government. Therefore, the ratio of the budget of the Department of National Health and Welfare to the government budget excluding, as I said, that of national defence, was at that time 12.7 per cent. That was at the end of March 1947.

Five years later, that is to say on March 31st, 1951, the budget of the Department of National Health and Welfare amounted to 449 million dollars, showing an increase of 112 millions. Its ratio to the general budget, always excluding that of national defence, was therefore 19.2 per cent.

On March 31st, 1955, the national health and welfare budget, including old age pensions, had reached 849 million dollars—of course, these are round figures and I spare you the dollars and cents. Consequently, by 1955, it had doubled that of 1951 and was reaching then 30 per cent of the total budget of the government, if we do not take into account the military spending. A year later, in 1956, the national health and welfare budget had reached 31.9 per cent of the total budget. As regards this year, as of March 1957, I cannot give the percentage of the total budget but I can say this: the Department of National Health and Welfare has swelled the social security budget by $108 million, not counting of course the increase of veterans' pensions which raise that figure to $133 million, nor health insurance legislation which opened the way to an additional expenditure of $200 million. Thus, there has been an increase of about one third within a year in the national health and welfare budget.

It can be estimated that the national health and welfare budget represents today from 38 to 39 percent of the total government budget, excluding expenditures for national defence. Of course, this is only an approximation, for the latest public accounts are not out yet.

This government has seen fit to increase this expenditure of $100,000,000, or $96,000,000 to be exact. Now I must blame them for making that expenditure with no justification whatsoever, unless it was meant to please the people without taking into account the economic capacity of our country, our budget, revenues and expenditures, nor the slowing down of business in Canada. Indeed, if we are to assess the worth of a government according to the number of promises they may make to the people, we should all vote for the C.C.F. party, since it offers $75.00 a month for our senior citizens. But I believe that we have to come back to some balance and I still prefer the Conservative party to the C.C.F. party, because I believe they are more responsible towards the public.

We have now reached the point where a comparison must be made between the record of the present government and the record achieved in the past by the Liberal administration.

When the Liberal government increased social security benefits and went on record as favouring health insurance, all this was introduced in a general budget which took into account the revenue and the expenditures of the country. Those plans also take into account the general increase in the national revenue, so that the government was in a position to say they were now able to set aside a higher proportion of the national revenue to help the underprivileged.

But what we see now is a government which shows itself completely irresponsible towards the public, the electors, and is furthering only its own immediate interest, that is, electoral interest.

These resolutions and amendments which are now before us, which have nothing to do with the year's budget, are possibly acceptable from a legal point of view, but they certainly are not acceptable from the point of view of sound economic common sense any more than they can be acceptable to serious men who are in control of the economic destiny of our country.

Mr. Chairman, at this time, in this year 1957, the government has introduced legislation entailing millions of dollars in expenditures in a very wide field.

Just think that we are now on the point of spending millions of dollars for the western farmer and for natural resources alone. In the province of Saskatchewan alone it will cost more than three hundred million dollars to build a dam. The development of the power resources of the Columbia river will cost tens of millions of dollars. The same will be done in the maritime provinces as well as in other fields. And all this without any budget.

Well, Mr. Chairman, this should show the utter irresponsibility of the present government. It is easy to understand why it wants elections as soon as possible, so as to be re-elected on promises and intentions while escaping the inevitable and extraordinary difficulties in which it will find itself within three or four years.

At the present time, as we know through the press, our economy is stopped at a red light. Business in various sectors is falling off. Already company profits are down 5 per cent. For the last few months, unemployment has steadily increased. The stock market is in difficulties and we may well wonder what the future has in store for us. And yet at the very moment where the national economy is slowing down, at the very moment when we are beginning to wonder what the year 1958 will be like, the present government is embarking on a policy involving expenditures of hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I am happy at the thought that our older citizens will have larger pensions, but I am extremely sorry indeed that the government has not seen fit to worry about the problem of inflation and the balance between revenue and expenditures. In wanting to call a general election, it wants to prevent the public from finding out what a government conscious of its responsibilities really is, whereas in the past the Liberal party achieved great things; it acted socially in redistributing wealth, while at the same time taking into account its financial possibilities. But what we have at this time is an irresponsible administration. At one time the Conservative party had a reputation for wise stewardship. But now it only looks to reelection and cares nothing for the interests of the country.

An hon. Member: Well, if you are so afraid, you can vote against it.

Mr. Breton: You speak when your turn comes.

At the moment, Mr. Chairman, the government is consolidating its position. Its policy is an auction block policy. Such an approach is utterly devoid of justification. The public, there in the gallery and all across the country, is sitting in judgment. My opinion is that the Canadian public is quite capable of making the distinction between an auctioneering government and a serious administration.

(Text):

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a few minutes of the time of the house, although I did not intend to speak on this matter tonight. I happened to come in just when the hon. member for Fraser Valley was, I think, quoting a newspaper report of something I said yesterday. I believe, as far as I could hear when I came in, the report was substantially correct but the hon. gentleman must remember that something which is reported in a newspaper, while it may be correct, if taken out of the context in which it is stated may have a somewhat different meaning.

I am not quarrelling with the report because, as I say, it is substantially correct but what I said yesterday I will repeat here this evening. I said that we believed that if the same proportion of the gross national product was allotted to the old age pensioners today as was allotted in 1949 when the pensions were raised to $40 a month we would be able to pay a pension of $75 a month. I went on to say that social service workers in the city of Montreal, as my hon. friend from Regina City said the other night, indicated that in reality an old age pensioner today requires $75 a month and that I had hoped during this session—and if we had been elected this is what we would have done—a very large increase in social service generally would have been provided.

Veterans pensions would have been substantially increased, as I hope they will be substantially increased; those who are disabled would have had a more generous interpretation of the term disability and would have received a higher pension; childrens' allowances would have been increased in conformity with the increased cost of living. We would have had in mind all these things. I said also I thought at the present time we should be supporting in this house something which we would have introduced immediately, an increase to at least $60 a month but I believed we should be increasing this figure to $65 a month and that we should progressively move towards the figure of $75 a month. That was the context of thought in which my remarks were made.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that in dealing with these matters I believe one should be honest with those with whom one is discussing these questions. I have never believed that one should promise to do something immediately which one knows very well it would be extremely difficult to do at a given time and place.

One other thing which I think we should bear in mind is this. Every time we increase old age pensions, disability pensions and other social welfare payments we place an obligation on the provinces. The provinces have to match what we do for the age group between 65 and 69. I am not certain that I remarked this yesterday but I am under the impression that I said there were some provinces in Canada, particularly the Atlantic provinces, which are in no position at this time to match a $75 a month pension. That is substantially what I said yesterday. I think the newspaper report is correct, as far as it goes, and I rise here to say that it is correct and to give something of the setting in which I said it.

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Chairman, in rising at this time I must begin my remarks by expressing my support of the three improvements to the old age security program which are proposed in this resolution, the 20 per cent increase from $46 to $55 a month, the reduction in the residence qualification from 20 years to 10 years in Canada, and the increase in the length of permissible absence of a Canadian pensioner from three to six months. These are all steps toward improvement of the old age pension system which have been welcomed by every hon. member of this house and which are welcomed by people in all age groups across Canada. The young people who, of course, always have sympathy for what they think of as the tragedy of old age, not realizing that for many people the later years are the richest years of life; young married couples who are worried about contributing to the support of elderly relatives and the people of middle age who are themselves approaching the age of retirement are as interested as are the senior citizens in this question.

The people who reside in my own province of British Columbia, of course, are especially interested in this measure because in that province we have a larger proportion of senior citizens than any province in Canada, not that British Columbians live much longer than other Canadians but because the salubrious climate, along the coast of British Columbia at least, has attracted a great many other Canadians from central Canada and from the prairie provinces who have retired there.

Mr. Patterson: In the Fraser valley.

Mr. Sinclair: My hon. friend mentions the Fraser valley, but I think it is more true of the coastal region. In my own riding of Coast-Capilano and in Nanaimo and Victoria I think we have the largest concentration. In the 50 miles between Port Mellon and Pender Harbor along the coast in my riding there are many retired people, not only old age pensioners and those on government pensions but people who have retired to live on their own savings.

Mr. Patterson: We have a more salubrious climate.

Mr. Sinclair: Earlier speakers have covered rather fully the history of the old age pension in Canada, but I want to touch on two main points, first of all the relationship of the government old age security measures to other pension measures in Canada, such as civil service pensions, company pensions and the savings of ordinary individual Canadians and, secondly, the matter touched on by my friend the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount, the financing of this very large expenditure.

I think we should recall that pensions were originally a field of provincial responsibility. In 1926 when the first old age pension system started it was made a matter of joint federal-provincial responsibility. The provinces did not turn over all authority to the federal government as they did when the amendment with respect to unemployment insurance came into effect. The first payments in 1926 were, of course, $20 on a means test, paid half by the federal government and half by the provinces which was an indication of their awareness of their responsibility. We British Columbians are proud that our province was the first province to pass the necessary supplemental legislation and the first province to actually pay an old age pension at Alberni in 1926. At that time, we remember, the means test was justified on the reasoning that this was a matter of giving to those in need money available from the treasury to assist them in meeting the cost of living. The total cost that first year was $12 million which was a large sum for the budget of Canada at that time.

Over the years the sum increased from $20 to $40. The federal government raised its share to three-quarters of the total cost and the three western provinces accepted further responsibility in this joint field by paying additional supplements on another means test ranging all the way up to the $20 now paid in British Columbia.

As time went on the feeling developed that the means test was unfair, that there was something mean about it. It came to be thought of as bearing a stigma of charity and we all know of many elderly people who needed this assistance but refused to apply for it because they were too proud. Their attitude was that they were not going to accept charity from the government. Above all, it was regarded as unfair because it denied assistance to those Canadians who had tried to plan for their own retirement by joining company pension schemes, by buying annuities or by their personal savings and investments.

It was because of that we had an exhaustive study made of the question by a parliamentary committee in 1950 and 1951 and as a consequence the new legislation came into being which paid $40 to every Canadian who had 20 years residence in Canada at age 70. That was paid entirely by the federal government, and $40 to those in need at age 65, paid on a means test, the cost shared jointly by the federal and provincial governments.

While the earlier pensions were paid entirely out of general revenue, for the first time in that year we gave to this pension scheme a contributory aspect by levying an extra tax of 2 per cent on personal income with a ceiling of $60, by levying 2 per cent extra by way of tax on corporation profits and by levying an extra 2 per cent in the form of a general sales tax.

[Mr. Sinclair.]

We remember how gladly these changes were received at the time. They removed the stigma of charity since every one received the pension at age 70. It was a real supplement to the savings of those people who had tried to provide for their own old age.

Over the years, of course, the government had urged people not to depend on the government in their old age and encouraged people to make provision for their retirement. I think the first action of this kind was the sale of government annuities, the government undertaking the cost of administration, and then followed the drives to sell government savings bonds. Encouragement was given to company pension schemes by making the contributions of both the employees and the employers tax deductible. Today the vast majority of company employees in Canada have this safeguard of contributing to company pension plans through which they and their employers are making provision for their own old age.

Last spring the former government extended this aid to the last great group not covered in the country, the self-employed, by allowing them to deduct before tax 10 per cent of income up to a maximum ceiling of $2,500 a year which they could invest in their own retirement plans.

All these things are admirable, of course, but we in this house are all aware of what has happened to the savings of individuals in recent years because of the continuous inflationary trends in the world. Pensions which were regarded as adequate when these people planned for their retirement are now proving pitifully inadequate because of the loss in purchasing power of the dollar.

It is for that reason, of course, we hear in this house pleas for increases in the pensions of retired civil servants, whose small salaries and pensions seemed adequate at the time but whose pensions are proving inadequate today. The government in the past resisted giving special treatment to the civil servants on the grounds that if it helped these civil servants in retirement then it should help every other Canadian in retirement, retired people other than civil servants whose savings were no longer adequate because of inflation.

It was in 1952 that the first real measure of assistance was given to this group by the introduction of the old age security at 70, free from the means test, because then those people with their own savings got the added government pension of $40 a month. It gave, of course, no help to people in this group between the age of 65 and 69 who, because of their own savings, were denied assistance under the means test.

The last government also in 1957 increased the basic pension from $40 to $46 a month, increasing the cost of the old age pension to taxpayers of Canada from $400 million a year to $460 million a year. I do not intend to fight the election over again but we all remember the Conservatives said this was inadequate, the 15 per cent increase was inadequate. They were not specific in the amount they promised. The Social Credit promised $100 a month and the C.C.F. $75 a month. Well, out west, and in British Columbia, too, we still remember the promises of the Social Credit away back in 1935 to pay $25 a month to every citizen. Therefore, the promise of $100 a month was just four times as phony as that promise. So far as the C.C.F. are concerned, their promise of $75 a month in this field of joint responsibility is in contrast with the actual record of performance of the C.C.F. government in Saskatchewan in this field of joint responsibility. Last year they paid to the senior citizens $550,000, a little more than half a million dollars, in contrast with the $23 million a year paid out by the federal treasury.

The $6 increase cost the taxpayers of Canada an extra $60 million a year but, of course, this was never mentioned by opposition speakers in the last campaign. They broke it down the other way, $6, 20 cents a day. The other day the hon. member for York West called it two cups of coffee a day. I am waiting until he stands up and describes this $9 increase of the Tories as three cups of coffee a day. I do not intend to get into an argument like that except to say that the old age pensioners in Canada were glad of the $6 and they are glad of the $9.

One of the questions, however, which arises out of this is the feeling of the Canadian people that this $6 was inadequate, despite the fact that it was a 15 per cent increase over the previous pension and despite the fact that the cost of living, since this pension was brought in in 1952, had not increased 15 per cent. I think the answer is quite clear. The $6 may have made up the loss in purchasing power since 1952 of the old age security pension of $40, but it did not make up the loss of purchasing power in the same period of the private savings of our senior citizens, the savings which most Canadians do intend to carry them through their own old age; that is, their total retirement income composed of the old age pension paid at 70 plus their company pension plan or their government annuities or their own personal savings.

We have heard the promise of the Prime Minister in this regard. As far as the cost of living bonus on the old age pension is concerned I suggest that to be effective it has got to be more than a cost of living bonus on the old age pension. I hope that when this bill comes forward after the resolution is adopted it will contain a provision for an automatic annual revision based on the year-end cost of living to maintain the purchasing power, not just of the old age pension but of a minimum basic retirement income. A very modest basic retirement income would be $200 a month for a couple on old age security, made up of $110 a month from the new $55 pension, plus $90 of their own savings or pensions.

Many Canadians of course have more than $90 a month for their own retirement; some have less. But this $200 a month retirement income would be a very modest start. An annual adjustment could be made each year on the cost of living at December. The present inflationary trend in North America is about three per cent a year. That would be an extra $6 on this basic retirement income of $200. That would be $6 a month, $3 on each of the old age pensions paid to this couple and that would maintain the purchasing power of their retirement income composed of the old age security pension paid by the federal government and their own savings. If, of course, the government is able to hold the line on inflation there would be no increase in the cost of living and no need for any increase.

I think such a provision would have immediate and very salutary effects. It would assure all Canadians now trying to provide for their own old age through personal savings, company pension plans or annuities, that they in the future would have at least $200 a month in constant purchasing power, provided that they had an income themselves of $90 a month on retirement. It would relieve them of a great deal of worry; it would also relieve young people today who are trying to plan for their own old age of worry and of their attempts now to hedge against inflation by dabbling in common stocks and real estate as well. Those who have been dabbling in common stocks, of course, have been shocked in the last year by the decline in the stock market, adding to their bewilderment when they try effectively to provide for their own old age. It would also remove the future problems of retired civil servants on low pension who are asking for increases in their pensions because of the decline in purchasing power. Above all, it would remove the old age pension from the political arena and save us all from the spectacle of political parties trying to bribe the electors with their own money with election promises of higher and higher pensions, the height of the promises being directly related to the unlikelihood of the party succeeding to office.

I think the other aspect of this pension which must command attention now is the matter of paying for them. I firmly believe that all these social security benefits, paid for out of the government treasury, should have a price tag on them so that the taxpayers whose money is being used will have some idea of the cost and the benefits. This is an extremely important thing because there are taxpayers, citizens as well, in this country who have the deluded belief that these social security benefits fall like manna from heaven, from this remote government at Ottawa.

I think a good start was made in the 1952 bill by the 2 per cent, 2 per cent, 2 per cent formula, increases in the personal income tax, the corporation tax and the sales tax. We have not, of course, the direct contribution that the United States social security plan has but this was a good step forward. In practice, however, I doubt whether many Canadian wage earners are very conscious of these extra taxes. They are not conscious of the two per cent extra sales tax because that is paid at the manufacturer's level.

The average Canadian is not conscious of the extra 2 per cent corporation tax, although he pays it in the end, because that is buried in the accounts of the big corporations when they are prepared by their accountants at the end of the year. He is aware of the 2 per cent on the income tax just once a year when he makes out his own income tax return. These three 2 per cent taxes did not quite pay the cost of the $40 a month pension. I notice the most recent figures—that is, on the $46 a month pension—indicate that the fund is running behind over $10 million a month. With the $96 million increase which the minister has announced for the new increase, the fund is going to be running behind something around $215 million a year. In other words, about two-thirds will be met by the taxes and one-third apparently is going to come out of the central treasury.

I think there are two reasons why this should not be done. One of the criticisms levied most often by the C.C.F. speakers against the present old age security pension is that millionaires get it, a reversal of the old argument that the previous pension was demeaned because it was given on a means test.

Mr. Nicholson: That was said by the former Liberal member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre.

Mr. Sinclair: Your former colleague from Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. I am glad my friend reminded me of that because these 2 per cent taxes made possible pensions without any means test, which removed the stigma of charity. I put figures on record here at the time I was parliamentary assistant showing that a millionaire actually pays about $700 more taxes a year because of these added social security taxes, and because his income tax bracket is at least 53 per cent when he does collect the pension he gets less than half of it. He would get less than $20 a month under the $40 pension and yet pay about $700 a year in increased taxes. The more the general treasury contributes to this fund, the less the impact of taxes will be on those who are in the higher income brackets.

I therefore urge that when the minister replies at this stage of the legislation he give the house some indication how this extra burden of about $215 million at least, on top of the $400 million which was the cost of the earlier pension, is going to be met. Is it going to be a matter of continuing the 2 per cent taxes and paying the balance out of the treasury, are we to have a revision of the 2 per cent taxes or are we to have some new tax formula?

In closing I say, therefore, that I am happy to support the present proposals. They are a good step forward. May I make one last point. The hon. member for Fraser Valley supported a reduction of the residence requirement from 20 years to 10 years but at the same time asked for abolition of the limits on absence from the country. If we are not careful, if we should abolish all limits on absence from Canada, we could well develop the same sort of unhappy movement that the British had when they brought in their health insurance when people from all over Europe flocked to England to get new false teeth, wigs and glasses. We could well have a crop of elderly immigrants come here at age 60, live here ten years until they were 70, pay their contributions for ten years which in their case would be small at the 2 per cent rates because they would be on low incomes, and then at age 70 return to their homelands with a pension of $110 paid for life by the Canadian taxpayer. That is why I say it is important, since we are reducing the residence qualification, to keep this limit on absence from Canada.

Mr. Low: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a very few minutes of the time of the committee to comment on the resolution now before us. I was very much interested in listening to the hon. member for Coast-Capilano review the history of old age pensions and other social security benefits in Canada, particularly his attempt to get the house to believe that every advance that has been made was due to the high spirit and the big heart of the Liberal party. Of course, there were some things in that history that he conveniently left out, and I hope in the course of the few minutes that I take to fill in certain details that he significantly left out.

It is all very well, of course, for the hon. member to indicate to us that the Liberal party was the great benefactor of the Canadian people all the way through the years since old age pensions were first paid, but I remind him and the members of his party that as late as 1936 and 1937 they were still holding the old age pension to a limit of $20 a month. Part of that was to be paid by the provincial governments and part by the municipal governments, with the federal government paying 75 per cent.

When the Social Credit government first came into office in Alberta in 1935 I recall that we began urging the Liberal government at Ottawa to increase the old age pension. In every session of the legislature that I attended beginning in 1935 until well after 1940 I recall that we passed resolutions calling upon the federal government to introduce a higher level of pension. These were sent regularly to the federal government and on one or two occasions I came to Ottawa with delegations to sit in with the minister of finance and other federal government ministers to see what could be done about improving administration in the old age pension field. I recall very definitely on each occasion putting a case to the federal government at Ottawa for higher pensions.

Nothing whatever was done until much later than 1937, but the province of Alberta, realizing that the federal Liberal government would do nothing, began in 1938 to pay a supplementary allowance of $5 a month over and above what the federal government was prepared to share, and we paid it without a means test. We continued to pay it to our aged citizens without a means test for some years. Shortly after 1940 the province of Alberta increased the supplementary payment to $10 a month without a means test and only then did the Liberal government at Ottawa, feeling much embarrassed and much ashamed of their attitude, decide to come in and try to do something a little better than the miserable $20 they had hung on to for so many years. They were actually shamed into doing it by the fact that the government of my province paid a supplementary allowance of $10 a month for some years with no assistance from the federal government or no sharing of the amount by that government.

Eventually the federal government did increase the old age pension to the $40 level, and from there on what the hon. member for Coast-Capilano has said is essentially correct, except that even after the federal government increased the basic pension level to $40 a month the province of Alberta continued to pay a $10 supplementary allowance until about 1952 when they increased it to $15 a month. Today they are paying a supplementary allowance of $15 a month with a means test, not only to the 70 and over class but to the 65-69 class as well.

When you consider, Mr. Chairman, that the government of Alberta also provides free medical and hospitalization benefits and free dental and optical benefits to the aged, as well as free transportation on the transportation lines in many of the centres in the province, the benefits that those citizens receive today, may I point out to the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, can be much more than $100 a month.

Mr. Blackmore: He cannot take it.

Mr. Low: He made light of the fact that in the course of the election campaign we put forward a specific idea with regard to old age pensions. I want to set the record straight because the hon. member for Coast-Capilano did not put it straight. What we did do was to propose a basic pension of $60 a month. That is essentially what we are getting today from the new government and that is one of the things that we are supporting today. But we did go further and say that in addition, where the provinces were agreeable to paying a supplementary allowance up to $20 a month, we would match it making a possible total of $100 a month. As I have already pointed out, that was on the basis of a $60 pension, almost the same as we are getting today in this new legislation.

Mr. Sinclair: Will the hon. member permit a question? You will recall that your political advertisements only carried one figure, $100 for old age pensions. There was no fine print. That was your promise.

Mr. Low: That is not true. I have the literature in my office that was used and I can easily show it to the hon. member. In every single case it was made abundantly clear that it was on the basis of a $60 pension with a supplementary allowance matched up to $20.

Mr. Sinclair: The only figure they used was $100, and it was used by speakers and in advertisements. Tell us about the $25 in 1935 too.

Mr. Low: I am quite prepared to talk about that, too. The hon. member, while he was parliamentary assistant to the minister of finance, had ample opportunity to debate that on several occasions. He backed down and did not dare; every single time he walked out of this house.

Mr. Sinclair: The people are still waiting for the $25.

Mr. Low: I challenge the hon. member any time he desires to come into this house and debate a resolution on the question of the $25 a month dividend and we will meet him and meet him head-on.

Mr. Sinclair: It was not the Liberals who promised to pay, it was the Social Credit that promised the $25 to the people of Alberta.

Mr. Low: I just want it known that every time this issue was raised in his presence, while he was responsible in the Department of Finance he walked out on it. I shall say something further. The hon. member makes light of the Social Credit financial proposals, and particularly our proposal to increase old age pensions. During the last election campaign he said that ours was a phony proposition. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am going to tell my hon. friend that on June 10 last the people of this country made a pretty good job of judging who was phony. I just point out to him that every Social Crediter who was in this house in the last parliament is back in his seat again this time, and we have some extra ones. We pretty nearly wiped out the Liberal party in the province of Alberta. About 250 votes more would have left them with no representatives whatever in parliament from our province. The next time we will get the last one.

Mr. Sinclair: While you are on the subject, will you put on the record the name of the party which received the largest popular vote in the country and the name of the party that received the smallest.

The Chairman: Order. I would ask the hon. member to deal with the resolution.

Mr. Low: I shall be happy to comply with your request. I should like for just a minute, now that I have replied to my hon. friend who is so glib in this house when he has no responsibility, but when he had was not so ready to come to grips with things, to say just a word about something that has not been mentioned as yet in connection with this resolution. I think we have stressed adequately, from our group at least, our feelings with regard to the necessity for taking care of our aged citizens. I believe that the status of a nation can be judged pretty well by the way they treat their senior citizens; that has been so for a great many years. I am very happy to see the basic pension raised to $55 per month. In Alberta we are going to continue to pay the supplementary allowance, which will bring the pension to $70 per month. This $70 comes somewhere near to an adequate pension under the circumstances; not too high by any means, but at least it is getting into that realm.

There is a point that I think ought to be stressed, and that is in connection with the economic effects. Over the years it has been contended by people that we might get ourselves into economic difficulties by increasing the old age pension to a point where there was a reasonable living allowance granted. I do not believe that. As long as this country can produce from $30 billion to $32 billion worth of goods and services a year there is no reason whatever why the aged citizens of this country should not have a standard of living that is comparable to that which is granted to other citizens or made available to other citizens.

I do not mean to say that the government should be prepared to give our aged citizens as much as other people can earn, but certainly there is no reason why there should not be an escalator clause attached to the qualifications for the old age pension, so that when the cost of living goes up the pension rises in proportion. These people are considered to be on a fixed income, but they are not. Really they are on a declining income because the purchasing power of the dollar is continuously declining. These people who are considered to be on a fixed income ought to have an escalator clause attached to the qualification for their pension.

It seems to me if we had something of that kind we would be doing nothing more than is right and fair. Did you ever consider, Mr. Chairman, what happens when we pay old age pensions to people? Old age pensions are the very best source, are the very best type, put it that way, of new purchasing power. The pension is spent almost immediately. Did you ever consider that whenever we pay a pension to our aged citizens they do not run off to Timbuctoo to spend their money. They spend it at the corner grocery in the community where they live. They are the best supporters of the small merchants, the little businessman. They spend their money immediately they receive it for the things which this country produces. As they do that they are helping to stabilize the economic affairs of this country; stabilizing business, stabilizing production and prices. Certainly, they are not contributing in any way to uncontrollable inflation.

If reasonable precaution is taken there is no reason why a $75 per month pension should be inflationary in a country that is increasing as this country is in its productive capacity year by year. I would say that where it is necessary to introduce new purchasing power for consumer goods in order to attempt to stabilize the economy, the old age pensioners are the very best source of spending power. To give them new purchasing power does help to stabilize our economy better than any other way of which I know. For that reason, if for no other reason, I support the proposed increase to $55 per month which this government has brought before us today.

I feel that enough has been said about the matter of residence qualifications. I do not intend to raise that again. I know that there are some in the country, particularly members of labour unions, who are just a bit concerned about reducing the residence qualifications from 20 to 10 years. I have not been convinced that their fears are well founded as yet. I do know quite well a number of aged citizens who came to this country and contributed the very best they had over a period of years, then found themselves about age 70 or over with nothing to take care of them in their declining years. I feel it is only right and just that something be granted to them, even though they have not been here for 20 years. Whether or not 10 years is the best place to cut off, I do not know, but I am prepared to support it until I am shown a better way.

So far as the other proposal is concerned, that is the period of allowable absence from the country, I am prepared to go along with that too until we have something better shown to us.

(Translation):

Mr. LaCroix: Mr. Chairman, I shall only take a few minutes. I support the proposed increase and will vote for the increase in old age pension.

I favour that increase. However, there is a particular section of that bill which, to my mind, will have the effect of increasing immigration at the very moment when we suffer from an unemployment crisis. The section I am referring to is the one reducing from 20 to 10 the number of years of residence required for eligibility to old age pension. Obviously that section has been inserted in the bill for the purpose of promoting immigration. I am wondering if it is justified. In my view, it is a mistake to reduce the number of years from 20 to 10, thus reducing the immigrants' contribution in comparison with that of native Canadians.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as the Catholic workers confederation indicated at its 36th annual congress, held in Quebec city, I do believe that old age pensions should be increased to $80 monthly, if we wish to take into account the increase in the cost of living.

A moment ago, I heard my hon. colleagues of the Social Credit party state—as I already knew,—that old age pensions in Alberta had been increased to $70, and C.C.F. party members have indicated in most of their speeches in the house that old age pensions should be increased to at least $60. Such a request is by no means exaggerated. In fact, one must not forget that in the state of New York, old age pensions are paid at the rate of $95 a month, and that in the various states of our southern neighbour, pensions average from $75 to $80 monthly. An increase along these lines, in future, would certainly be justified.

It is all very well to congratulate the government for increasing old age pensions.

I am not opposed to it because when sitting on the government side, I myself often asked for an additional increase. However, we must not forget one thing: if we have old age pensions, we owe it to the Liberal party. It is the Liberal party which passed the Old Age Pensions Act. I therefore think we ought to be sincerely grateful to the right hon. Mackenzie King and the right hon. Louis St. Laurent, and we also should commend the hon. Paul Martin, former minister of health and welfare, who worked in co-operation with his colleague, the hon. Jean Lesage, for a substantial improvement of the Old Age Security Act. We have to be fair and give credit where credit is due.

I trust that this increase will not prevent the Conservative government from keeping the promise made to the people of my province to grant an increase in family allowances. One must not overlook the fact that, as the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Breton) has pointed out 1,600,000 children receive family allowances in the province of Quebec.

Looking back on the speech from the throne and on everything that was said in this house by Conservative members since the beginning of the session, I wonder if the government has forgotten that undertaking. They have made no reference to it. Would it be because Quebec has the greatest number of large families? It is a question which may be asked. I hope that, if a budget is introduced, that solemn promise made to the population of the province of Quebec at the last general election will not be forgotten. I also expect that, if income tax rates are reduced, the government will not forget either that agriculture in the province of Quebec is organized on a family basis, and that, as a consequence of some measures which they have adopted, the agricultural organization which has made the strength of our province will not be unjustly taxed.

I hope that income tax basic exemptions will be raised from $1,000 to $1,500 for bachelors, and from $2,000 to $3,000 for married people, as was promised by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) during the last electoral campaign in the province of Quebec, and asked many times by myself in this house.

As far as I am concerned, I am wondering if there will be another session or if elections will be ordered immediately after this session, which would have precisely the effect of avoiding the presentation of a budget which would not include—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. LaCroix: —the fulfilment of the promises made.

The Chairman: I should call upon the hon. member—

Mr. LaCroix: That is all I had to say, Mr. Chairman, and I thank you.

(Text):

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Chairman, I may be guilty of a certain degree of naïveté because I have the feeling that the wording of this motion is that it is expedient to introduce a measure to do certain things. I have heard a great deal of discussion here tonight but very little of it has been on the basis of the necessity for introducing this particular bill. So far as I am concerned, I think the word "expedient" which means advantageous or suitable is an extremely pallid and totally inadequate word to express necessity for bringing in this particular bill.

For many years now it has been quite obvious that the senior citizens of this country have been in a serious position having regard to their ability to meet their needs. I think that in bringing in this legislation the word "imperative" would have been a much more expressive word to use than is the word "expedient" because it has been and is extremely imperative that this belated assistance to our senior citizens be brought forward. I note that, on the basis of the 1949 consumers price index, the cost of living stands today at 123.3. That is the latest figure for September.

That is 23 per cent higher than it was in 1950 when the pension was brought in and I would point out that since the cost of living has risen to that extent it is absolutely necessary that our older citizens be given a reasonable chance to meet the rising cost of living. So far no adequate attempt has been made to meet that necessity. Our friends on the other side of the house brought in what they choose to call a 15 per cent raise last year; that 15 per cent raise was to meet the rising cost of living which was at that time slightly over 20 per cent. How they proposed to meet a 20 per cent rise in the cost of living with a 15 per cent rise in the pension is entirely beyond my comprehension.

The unfortunate thing about the consumers' price index is that it deals merely with those things which are absolutely essential for the well-being of the senior citizens of this country and so far as I am concerned I believe it is necessary that these people be given a chance to enjoy a reasonable degree of happiness and pleasure such as is enjoyed by we who today have a higher standard of living. Unless their income is such that they are going to be able to enjoy life in this way we are not dealing with them in the way we should be and it is up to this government, since they have assumed responsibility for the welfare of these people, to provide them not only with the necessities of life but to make other adequate provision for these people.

When you look at the consumers' price index you find it includes such items as food, shelter, clothing and household operations. Under the heading of household operations are included fuel, electricity, home furnishings, supplies and services. What the index does not tell you is that household operations have risen 19 per cent since 1949, that food has risen 21.9 per cent and that shelter has risen 36.4 per cent. These things are all absolutely necessary to the well-being of our senior citizens and we are just barely meeting these costs under the provisions of this bill. Therefore I would not like it to be thought for one moment, although I am going to go along with the bill, that I regard it as adequate, I do not.

The consumers' price index does not include the things which go toward making life pleasant and happy. Surely if anybody in this world and particularly in this Canada of ours has earned the right to happiness and pleasure in life it is those people who have spent their days bringing this country from a state of wilderness to a wonderland. Yet we play around, as our government have done in the past, chiseling these people from their income. That is what we are doing when we allow the cost of living to rise in such a way that it cuts down the livelihood these people are getting to a point where they are on the verge of bare sustenance and no more.

This practice of cutting down and chiseling with respect to these inadequate incomes has been brought about simply because the governments of the past have not seen fit to introduce a monetary policy which would prevent fluctuations and make this kind of legislation entirely unnecessary.

I want to point out that for this reason I am in favour of bringing in this particular resolution and the proposed bill that will follow it, in addition to the bill to provide for advance payments for prairie grain which was passed this afternoon. I believe this particular government is slowly but surely beginning to see the light. I admit quite frankly that although it seems that vision is extremely dim at the present time, as time goes along that vision may grow.

They are beginning to recognize that the injection of purchasing power into the consumers' market is the soundest method of stabilizing our economy. It is the only method that will expand our economy without bringing about inflation. The time is coming when the government of this country must recognize the fact that there is only one reason for production, and that is consumption. We do not care where the consumers live; it does not make any difference whether they live in one of the small towns of our own country or in Timbuktu or Sumatra, it is the consumer that really matters and he holds the key to economic progress. As long as we can keep the consumer happy and see that he is able to consume the goods we produce we can be assured that our production capacity will more than keep pace with demand in any given period. I will close by saying that I would, like Thomas Jefferson, sooner dream of the future than pin my faith to the history of the past.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, in the course of this debate many very important questions have been put to the Minister of Health and Welfare. Some of those questions no doubt can be answered when we are dealing with the bill, but I suspect that most of them will not be covered by the bill. That is something of course about which the minister alone can speak with authority. But with respect, for instance, to the questions raised tonight by the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount, which would obviously not be included in the bill, and the many questions which were posed by myself and others, surely on a matter of this importance the Minister of National Health and Welfare should give replies before this resolution is passed.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I do not think there has been any question raised throughout the whole debate on the resolution that cannot be adequately dealt with at the second reading and in the committee stage. I am quite sure that at that time we can give a lot more detail and I feel that probably the members will be anxious to facilitate the passing of the resolution so they may receive the bill, examine it and have it ready for second reading.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

The Chairman: It being ten o'clock, shall I rise and report progress?

Mr. Argue: Does that mean the resolution is carried?

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the leader what the business is for tomorrow.

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall proceed with this resolution and with the three other resolutions standing in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare; we shall then proceed with the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs and then the speech from the throne.

Mr. Chevrier: The leader is optimistic.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39.

AUTOMATIC TRANSMISSIONS—FREE ENTRY

Question No. 63—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Was an order in council passed providing for the free entry of automatic transmissions under tariff item 438N?

2. If so, on what date, and were any conditions imposed on the automobile industry in Canada with respect to the manufacture of such transmissions in Canada?

3. Have representations been received from anyone urging that automatic transmissions be admitted duty free on condition that after a stated period such transmissions shall be manufactured in Canada?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1. Yes.

2. Tariff item 438n was established by order in council P.C. 3805 of August 14, 1952. This tariff item has been renewed by subsequent orders in council the most recent of which is P.C. 1957-1258 of September 19, 1957, which reads, in part, as follows:

Tariff Item		B.P. Tariff	M.F.N. Tariff	General Tariff
438n	Transmissions and controls therefor, having automatic and/or semi-automatic drive selecting devices, but not including overdrive type transmissions; torque convertors; oil coolers; combinations and parts of all the foregoing; all of the foregoing when of a class or kind not made in Canada for use in the manufacture or repair of motor vehicles	Free	Free	35 p.c.

(Applicable October 1, 1957 to October 31, 1959)

3. Joint representations were received from the automotive parts manufacturers' association and the Canadian Automobile Chamber of Commerce on July 15, 1957, requesting that this temporary tariff item be renewed until October 31, 1959. These representations stated that there would likely be no need to request a further extension beyond October 31, 1959, since it was anticipated that Canadian manufacturers would by that time be in a position to produce automatic transmissions.

If so, how much money was paid for the individual years of 1954, 1955, 1956 and 1957?

2. Has any money been paid as fees by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to approved lenders as determined under the authority of the National Housing Act, for the administration of loans made pursuant to such act? If so, how much money was paid for the individual years of 1954, 1955, 1956 and 1957?

3. Has any money been paid as fees by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to approved lenders as determined under the authority of the National Housing Act for any purposes other than those listed in questions 1 and 2 above? If so, (a) for what purposes were the payments made; (b) how much was paid for the individual years of 1954, 1955, 1956 and 1957?

2. Answered by No. 1.

FEDERAL BUILDING, PLESSISVILLE, QUE.—TENDERS

Question No. 88—Mr. Lafontaine:

1. Has the Department of Public Works called public tenders for the construction of a building at Plessisville, Quebec?

4. No.

5. Answered by No. 4.

6. Because the low tenderer's experience in building construction was limited, it was decided to ask him to increase the amount of his security deposit in order to protect the crown. Subsequently the low tenderer requested and was granted permission to withdraw his tender. As only one other tender was received originally, it was decided in the interests of competitive bidding to make a further call for public tenders. This second call will be made shortly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 1, 1957

The house met at eleven o'clock.

GRAIN

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN SHIPMENTS

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question. Is he aware that there is a disastrous slump in shipments of wheat from Montreal harbour, and can he do anything to increase the movement of grain from the port of Montreal?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I would like to thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of this question two minutes ago. I think he is quite incorrect in using the term "disastrous". There has been a slowing down in the movement of wheat from Montreal harbour, which has been offset by a record movement of grain from Vancouver and other Pacific coast ports—

Mr. Chevrier: That is very comforting to Montreal.

Mr. Churchill: —and from the port of Churchill in Manitoba. A great deal of that was occasioned by ocean freight rates which made it, in the opinion of importers of wheat in Europe, advantageous to place their orders at Vancouver.

The hon. member wants to know if anything can be done to increase the movement of grain in the port of Montreal. I notice in the article to which he refers that there is a promise of a moderate pick-up in grain shipments from Montreal indicated for the closing weeks of navigation, and it is expected that pick-up will become evident within just a very few days. The wheat board is fully aware of the situation, and is naturally interested in accelerating the movement of wheat through the St. Lawrence waterway.

THE SENATE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF FRENCH-SPEAKING REPRESENTATIVE FROM ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. Gour (Russell): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Since a new vacancy has occurred in the Senate in respect to the Catholic representation of the province of Ontario, will the right hon. Prime Minister appoint, this time, a senator who would represent the French element of the province?

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take notice of that question.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MONTREAL—REPORTED LAY-OFFS AT CANADIAN CAR COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I am sorry I have not been able to give him notice, but perhaps in any event he will wish to make inquiries. The Canadian Press reported last night that the Canadian Car company had started to lay off 1,000 workers in its Turcotte and Dominion plants, and this lay-off is ascribed to the fact that a decision was taken by the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways to cancel orders for new equipment. I wonder whether the minister would make inquiries to find out whether this was a cancellation of an order placed, or whether it is the fact that no order was placed as anticipated.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to make inquiries of both railways and give an answer on Monday.

IMMIGRATION

PER HOLTING—REPORTED DEPORTATION WITHOUT HEARING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Under what Canadian law was Per Holting, a Canadian citizen, landing from an S.A.S. flight in Winnipeg, forced back on to the aircraft and compelled to go to Los Angeles, and thus deported without trial?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I should say that I cannot accept all the implications in his question as he has phrased it, but the result of inquiries establishes that there was a Mr. Per Holting who was involved in such an incident at Winnipeg at 9 a.m. on Friday, October 25. In our citizenship files we have a record of a Mr. Per Beckmand Holting and it may well be, therefore, that the man involved in this incident is the same as the one on our files, in which case he would be a Canadian citizen.

It would appear that Mr. Holting, who had been in Greenland on an assignment for the C.B.C., purchased a ticket from Greenland to Los Angeles, and that when the aircraft landed at Winnipeg he attempted to get off. According to press reports Mr. Holting claimed that he was unaware that he could not debark but, as the house knows, the transport regulations do not permit Scandinavian Airlines to debark passengers at Winnipeg. When Mr. Holting persisted in his efforts the captain of the aircraft called the St. James municipal police, who put him back on board, and I understand that he continued on the flight to Los Angeles.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Do I understand, then, that the transport regulations override the basic rights of Canadian citizens?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there would be any profit in entering into a controversy here. I think the situation, while difficult, is clear. I understand it is a condition of the ticket sold that the passenger must continue through to Los Angeles and cannot debark in Winnipeg.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Justice. Can he tell us what regulations apply to the incident to which he has just referred? He has mentioned regulations of the air transport board. I should like to know what those regulations are.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think I referred to regulations of the air transport board. If I used the word "regulations" I did so in the general sense and perhaps should have used the phrase "conditions of the ticket" which are imposed, I believe, by the agreement under which this air service is allowed to operate into Canada.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I ask a supplementary question of the minister of immigration. Is it not a fact that the sale of a ticket to an individual merely precludes the possibility of a ticket sale to Winnipeg; but if the passenger takes a ticket to Los Angeles, and he is a Canadian citizen, could he not disembark even if his ticket read to Los Angeles?

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Fulton: I think that might be an issue that would have to be tried in the courts, and I would not care to express an opinion here and now. I think it should also be noted that, in my understanding, Scandinavian Airlines would be subject to a heavy penalty if they permitted a passenger to debark at Winnipeg. As to the propriety of the action which was taken, it not having been taken by any governmental authority—at least certainly not by an official of the dominion government but by the police of St. James at the request of the air line—it seems to me that it is not the sort of thing on which I should comment offhandedly. As to whether there was any right infringed, it seems to me that if there was the person concerned has an opportunity of asserting that right and having it settled in the courts.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have a further supplementary question of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member asks the question may I warn him that it appears that these questions relate to matters not under the jurisdiction of the minister, and also they ask for legal opinions.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I was going to ask the minister concerned this question. Of course I recognize that the minister should not give legal opinions himself in the house, but in view of the fundamental provision of the Immigration Act that a Canadian citizen has the right to enter Canada at all times it does seem to me—and I am not criticizing the government at all in saying this—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentlemen can possess their souls in patience just a little while. My question is this. Would the minister get from the law officers of the crown an opinion as to whether any Canadian citizen, a police officer or anyone else, has the right to take another Canadian citizen and put him on a vehicle sending him out of the country? It seems to me that this is an extraordinary thing to permit one citizen to do to another, even if he happens to be a police officer. I want to emphasize again—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member has taken considerable latitude in stating his question.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I think the terms of the question fairly well provide its own answer.

HUMAN RIGHTS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION PROVIDING BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): May I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: A further supplementary question?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is he yet in a position to inform us when he will be prepared to bring down legislation providing for a bill of rights for Canadians?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I answered that question earlier. The matter is still under advisement and consideration.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER—INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF SECONDARY AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, of which I have given him notice. In view of the fact that the former government had committed itself to establishing a secondary airport to the Vancouver international, and as this airport has for the second consecutive month had more landings of planes than any other in Canada, would the minister indicate what progress, if any, has been made in the establishment of a secondary airport in the lower mainland of British Columbia?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker; I wish to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. The Department of Transport is proceeding toward the development of two additional airports to serve the Vancouver area. I have already informed the house that my department is negotiating with the Department of National Defence regarding the transfer of Abbotsford airport which, if taken over by my department, will in due course be developed for use as an alternate for scheduled services presently using the Vancouver international airport. In addition a site at Pitt Meadows has been selected for the development of a small satellite field for use by light aircraft on wheels and floats, and action is presently under way to acquire the land for this purpose.

INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Maltais (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Transport. I am sorry I was unable to give him notice of my intention to do so but, as it bears on a very important matter, he might perhaps answer it right now.

Does the hon. minister intend to recommend to the house that the necessary steps be taken to modify the basis of subsidies granted to the different municipalities in this country which request the assistance of his department for the construction of airports?

May I ask him, as a supplementary question, whether his department has taken a decision concerning the contribution to be made to the airport of Charlevoix, in the province of Quebec?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the question as notice.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REPLY AS TO CALLING CONFERENCE ON AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Yesterday the member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger) asked me the following question:

Does the government propose to call a federal-provincial conference on agricultural development?

I answered that question a few days ago. The hon. member will find it in the official report of the debates of the house.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EXPLOITATION OF CANADIAN RESOURCES BY KRUPP AND WENNER-GREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister's attention been called to a news report from Bonn, West Germany, appearing in this morning's Montreal Gazette, which relates to the reconstruction of the heavy industry cartel in Germany which produced Hitler? In view of the fact that two of the individuals concerned, namely Alfred Krupp von Bohlen and Axel L. Wenner-Gren, are at the present time preparing to exploit Canadian resources, will the Prime Minister investigate the activities of these gentlemen to see whether there is some way in which the Canadian economy can be preserved from them?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the observations of my hon. friend are in keeping with what one might expect from an hon. member who does not believe in private enterprise.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Private enterprise does not carry with it the right of exploitation. As to foreign capital coming into Canada, it is not the purpose of this government to interfere with that investment. However, we want to ensure—and I think the house generally will agree with that stand—that investment in Canada shall be for Canadian purposes and under Canadian law. Where there is any deviation or diversion in that regard action can be taken under the combines act.

Mr. Cameron: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. The Prime Minister made use of the phrase "for Canadian purposes". Does that exclude the use of Canadian resources to rebuild the heavy industry cartel in West Germany?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless the Prime Minister wishes to answer the question, may I say that I consider it to be one that is not in accordance with the rules. As I understand it, it relates to cartels in Germany, and certainly that is a matter which is beyond the jurisdiction of this house at present.

[Later:]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a delayed supplementary question in view of his answer to my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Cameron). Does he consider the building of cartels by former leading nazis to be in the interests of Canadian private enterprise?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I want to answer that question. I certainly do not. But the question in the form in which it was asked deserved the answer which it received. As to my hon. friend's last question, may I say that I certainly do not hold that view even in the slightest degree.

Mr. Cameron: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, to protest that no matter what my question was it did not deserve the shoddy answer it got from the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Cameron.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, you have just indicated that you thought the question put to the Prime Minister was not in conformity with the rules of this house. If that is the case, with great respect, it is not open to a minister of the crown, including even the Prime Minister, to answer a question which in your judgment is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who has just spoken whether he refers to the question asked by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Cameron)?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I believe that question was not answered.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was in error, Mr. Speaker. I was referring to the question put by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). Your Honour said that question was out of order but the Prime Minister said, notwithstanding the rules of parliament, "I, the Prime Minister, want to answer."

Mr. Diefenbaker: You are wrong.

Mr. Speaker: I shall be glad to take under consideration the point of order which has been raised as to whether it is in order to reply to a question which is out of order and it may be the hon. member is correct.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you, sir.

Mr. Fulton: It is based on a misconception.

Mr. Speaker: Actually the question has been asked and is before the house, but I should like to reserve my ruling on that point.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—REQUEST FOR SEPARATE TRAFFIC LANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport the following question. Has the minister taken cognizance of the report in this morning's press of a statement by a member of the Canadian board of marine underwriters that because of the growing number of accidents on the St. Lawrence, separate channels should be provided in the river for both upbound and downbound traffic? Will the minister comment on this recommendation, which is of importance to ship operators, and will he say whether his department will provide separate lanes for shipping on the St. Lawrence as in the connecting channels of the great lakes?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I had not seen the report in this morning's press. I should like to thank my hon. friend for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question. However, as it arrived at my office just before the house opened I would ask that I be allowed to take it as notice and give an answer on Monday.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—STATEMENT ON IMPROVEMENT OF FACILITIES DURING WINTER SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): On Wednesday the hon. member for Charlevoix asked me this question, as reported at page 560 of Hansard:

Has the Minister of Public Works received any representations regarding the increasing difficulties encountered by winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river north of Quebec, and what steps are to be taken to improve the dock facilities at Pointe-au-Pic, 90 miles below Quebec city?

The answers are yes; representations were made to the Department of Public Works by the comite du Port d'Hiverà Pointe-au-Pic, on September 14, 1957. The necessity for improved wharf facilities there is being studied.

Mr. Auguste Maltais (Charlevoix): A supplementary question on the answer given by the minister. May I ask the minister whether this study period will be over before winter comes along?

Mr. Green: May I assure the hon. member that in the Department of Public Works we always reach the right answer, and reach it very quickly.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You never answer letters, though.

Mr. Lesage: You take some time to answer letters.

STATEMENT ON FACILITIES TO BE USED AT SAULT STE. MARIE LOCKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): On Wednesday the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) asked me the following question, as reported at page 561 of Hansard:

Since there are no definite plans to prepare the Canadian Sault locks for deep sea draught vessels, can we assume that the United States locks at the Sault are to be the future passageway of such vessels going to and from lake Superior?

The answer is that the Canadian Sault Ste. Marie lock was enlarged to its present dimensions of 60 feet in width, 900 feet in length and normal draught of 18 feet 3 inches between the years 1887 and 1895. The United States locks were built progressively and afford deeper draught than ours, and have been used as required by Canadian shipping drawing too much water or of greater size than could be accommodated through the Canadian lock.

There is nothing to prevent Canada from improving the facilities at Sault Ste. Marie to provide for the passage of deep sea draught vessels any time she chooses. In view of the adequacy of the United States locks it has not been felt necessary to duplicate, at a very substantial cost to the taxpayers, the facilities at the Sault. It might be pointed out in this connection that the United States use the Welland ship canal.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TIGHT MONEY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): I have a question, Mr. Speaker, which I would have addressed to the Minister of Finance but I notice he is absent this morning, so I will address the question to the Prime Minister or the parliamentary assistant to the minister. My question is based on the leading headline article in the Gazette this morning respecting the government's attempt to alleviate the tight money policy. The article also indicates that there is a rift between the Minister of Finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada. Is the minister prepared to make a statement now as to what the government is doing to remedy the tight money policy?

Mr. Richard A. Bell (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that all aspects of financial and monetary policies are receiving from the Minister of Finance his usual assiduous attention and consideration. When it is appropriate to make announcements, in accordance with the policy of this government, those announcements will be made in the house forthwith. With respect to any suggestion of a rift I would like to say that I am sure the policies of this government are of such merit that they will commend themselves to public servants as they will commend themselves to the public generally.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): May I ask a supplementary question of the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance. Could he tell the house what the government has done to improve the tight money situation about which his predecessors complained so bitterly?

Mr. Green: What did you do?

An hon. Member: We are asking you.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I doubt if orders of the day is an appropriate time to make the detailed presentation to the house which would be necessary to deal with the many things that have been done by this government. If the house will get ahead with its business so that an opportunity for financial discussions may arise, then these things will be outlined in full.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Speaker, I take note that the government is giving no information whatsoever.

BANK OF CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO INDEPENDENT STATUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have given notice of my question to the Minister of Finance, but I see he is not in the house this morning. I would respectfully ask that his assistant, or some other minister, answer the following question. Is the Bank of Canada a semi-autonomous banking institution, as stated in the Montreal Gazette of today's date.

Mr. Speaker: That question, if I may respectfully suggest this to the hon. member, is really asking for information which is public information in the statute setting up the Bank of Canada, and it does not appear to me to be a proper question to ask on the orders of the day.

NATIONAL PARKS

INQUIRY AS TO REVISION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Does the minister intend to revise the park act in order to rescind some of the impractical regulations in that act, and does he intend to review the unfair water and sewer rates levied by the department in Banff in order to give fairer treatment to the people of that town?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the minister to whom the question was put is absent at the moment on other business, but I will see that this question comes to his attention.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN COAST GUARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. What action has been taken by this government to establish a Canadian coast guard?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the hon. member's question indicates a desire on his part for action on every matter that deserves attention and which has deserved attention for a long while. When the emergency legislation before the house has received attention, then these matters which have been so long delayed will receive the proper consideration.

An hon. Member: No policy.

FISHERIES

BONAVISTA—CONSTRUCTION OF BAIT DEPOT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may put a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister expedite the construction of the bait depot at Bonavista to provide badly needed winter employment?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the matter.

POWER

LACHINE SECTION, ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—APPLICATION BY QUEBEC

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister tell the house whether the government of the province of Quebec has made an application to his department under the Navigable Waters Protection Act for the development of power in the Lachine section of the St. Lawrence river?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): May I take that question as notice.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CAMP GAGETOWN—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AS TO FUTURE USE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the confusion which now exists in New Brunswick and elsewhere in Canada with regard to the future use of Camp Gagetown, would the minister consider making a statement to the house in order to clarify this situation and say if it is the intention of his department to reduce the number of men who will be training at Gagetown next summer?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): As announced a couple of weeks ago, a training directive was issued which indicated that the regular army during the coming year would train in brigade groups rather than as a division.

Therefore there should not be as many trainees at Gagetown this coming year as there were last year.

Mr. Robichaud: Can the minister state approximately how many fewer men will be training this year than there were supposed to be according to the program which was laid out?

Mr. Pearkes: I cannot say exactly how many.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

SPRINGHILL—REFERENCE TO FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF DISASTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Is he aware that today is the first anniversary of the Springhill mine disaster in which 39 miners lost their lives?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Cumberland asked me a question a few minutes ago I did not understand what he had in mind. I can tell the people of Springhill that this house is in full sympathy with them on the first anniversary of the mine disaster. So far as federal assistance is concerned, that is a matter of government policy; but the people of that district may rest assured we will do everything in our power to help them.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

SOREL, QUE.—STATEMENT ON REPORTED PATRONAGE IN EMPLOYMENT OF WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): On October 30 the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres asked me a question as reported at page 563 of Hansard:

> Has the minister's attention been drawn to the fact that in the selection of workers for the construction of the post office building in Sorel the federal employment bureau has been completely by-passed, and that discriminatory political patronage is practised on a large scale? If so, what does the government intend to do about it?

The answer is that this work is being done by a general contractor and the Department of Public Works has no control over the people he hires, subject to the fact that in the contract there is a term which makes it necessary for him to hire local labour where such is available.

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Will the Minister of Labour not consider advising the contractor of the regulations directing him to utilize the services of the employment bureau in Sorel for the construction of the building?

Mr. Green: We have no authority to tell the contractor how he must get his employees. We can insist that he hire local labour, but it is entirely within the discretion of the general contractor as to how he gets those employees.

Mr. Chevrier: You can give him a hint.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt that the previous government gave those contractors a great many hints. We are trying to do a little better.

Mr. Pickersgill: You give them directives. Ask the Postmaster General.

BRIDGES

THREE RIVERS-STE. ANGELE—STATEMENT ON REPORTS CONCERNING CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): On October 30 the hon. member for Levis asked me a question in these words, as reported at page 567 of Hansard:

> Have reports been made to the department regarding the construction of a bridge between Three Rivers and Ste. Angele in the province of Quebec?

The answer to that is—

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): There must be a mistake. I did not ask for reports; I asked if a request had been made for the construction of a bridge, not reports.

Mr. Green: I wondered about that. Hansard reads "reports".

Mr. Bourget: I did not see Hansard.

Mr. Green: There has been a request from the municipal corporation of the parish of St. Antoine de la Baie du Febvre. This has also been drawn to my attention by the Solicitor General.

TRADE

STATEMENT ON MISSION TO COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have an answer now for the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and other hon.

members who asked questions concerning the proposed visit of our trade commissioner to China.

China is part of the trade promotion territory of our trade commissioner in Hong Kong, and in the course of his normal duties he is expected and required to visit all parts of his territory. In December, 1955, China was listed as falling within the responsibility of Canada's trade commissioner in Hong Kong. The proposed visit to China is, therefore, in no sense a trade mission but rather an exploratory trip by an officer through a part of his territory.

A year ago, following the successful visit to China of the Australian trade commissioner in Hong Kong, our trade commissioner reported fully to the Department of Trade and Commerce and at the same time suggested the desirability of a similar visit by himself. This was taken under advisement, and during the course of the year an exchange of correspondence took place between the head office in Ottawa and the trade commissioner in Hong Kong, in an attempt to determine whether the present would be an appropriate time to undertake a visit to China. In view of the increasing interest in China by Canadian and other businessmen the officials of the department decided to recommend an exploratory visit.

Mr. Forsyth-Smith will be accompanied by Mr. T. M. Pope as an assistant trade commissioner. The officials will carry no credentials beyond the customary diplomatic passports provided all trade commissioners. Mr. Forsyth-Smith and his assistant are planning to leave Hong Kong about November 5. On their return to Hong Kong the trade commissioner will report fully on trade possibilities and it is, of course, to be hoped that his visit will uncover opportunities for the sale of additional non-strategic products in China.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I ask a supplementary question. The minister said the officials would carry Canadian passports. What provision is made for obtaining visas from the government of the Chinese mainland; because I presume the government of the Chinese mainland will require visas, as other countries do? What provision is being made to secure them?

Mr. Churchill: The trade commissioner has made those arrangements. When I was answering this question earlier in the House of Commons and said that plans had not been completed, at that time he had not obtained his visa from the Chinese authorities. Subsequently he reported that he has obtained a visa and his papers are in order.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Bryson: May I ask a supplementary question. Would the minister give the house his definition of a non-strategic material?

Mr. Churchill: The question of strategic materials has been discussed in the House of Commons on many occasions in the last few years, but certainly non-strategic materials would be foodstuffs such as wheat, and that is the main interest at the present time. Hon. members may have noticed that a serious crop situation has developed in China recently, and there is grave danger of starvation of many of the Chinese people. If hon. members are interested there is an article in the current issue of Time which deals with that matter.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): May I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. In view of the fact that public funds are being spent to send a delegation to China, will the Prime Minister reconsider the question of recognizing the government on the mainland in the hope that we may extend our exports?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the experience of the United Kingdom, which recognized communist China prior to the Korean war, has added little to the extension or expansion of trade between that country and communist China. There is nothing inconsistent about endeavouring to trade and at the same time not recognizing the government of that country. The attitude of this government is unchanged in that direction, and until such time as the people's government, the communist government of China, expiates its wrongdoing under international law there certainly will be no justification for the granting of recognition, as we see it.

Recognition under international law in the past used to be a juridical act, but today the information we have indicates that recognition would be regarded by various countries in Asia which have withstood communism as an act of more than legal recognition and, indeed, would be interpreted as a recognition of communism as such and would afford to those who today resist communism the removal of a major incentive that has impelled them to take their stand firmly against the onrush of communism throughout portions of Asia.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask a supplementary question. The Prime Minister has said that if the so-called Chinese people's republic expiated its crimes, then his government would give consideration. Does he mean by expiation that if they undid their participation in the Korean war the government would do so, or does he wish to add to that the reasons which the government of the United States has given as well?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in no way accepting the interpretation of my remarks as placed thereon by the hon. member for Essex East, may I say that our stand is unchanged with regard to recognition. It might be epitomized in the words of a former prime minister of this country, paraphrasing those words to apply them to the present circumstances: not necessarily recognition but recognition when necessary.

An hon. Member: If necessary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In other words the matter is subject to constant revision, but there is no purpose, intentionally or otherwise, at this time or in the immediate foreseeable future, to bring about recognition.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of the importance of this question could the Prime Minister be more precise as to what he means exactly by "expiation"?

An hon. Member: Look it up in a dictionary.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have asked the Prime Minister a question and he has not replied. I take it he does not intend to answer a very important question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend can look up the dictionary definition of expiation, and I am sure under those circumstances he will have a full answer.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): I should like to ask a supplementary question. If the Prime Minister feels that recognition of the government of the Chinese mainland might imply approval, would he say that diplomatic recognition of the U.S.S.R. implies any measure of approval on the part of the Canadian government?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This seems to be developing into an argument or debate. In view of the rather important statement which the Prime Minister has made I am quite prepared to have comments, but I think the hon. member for Regina City will be willing to let that question stand.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I think it is a matter arising out of the answer given by the Prime Minister, and I believe it is a very important point. If the Prime Minister feels that diplomatic recognition involves some measure of approval, how does he justify the fact that Canada today recognizes quite a number of countries whose governments certainly by no stretch of the imagination could be considered acceptable to the Canadian people?

Mr. Speaker: My point, and I would ask the hon. member for Regina City to consider it, is that I do not feel we should now enter into a debate on foreign policy, and that is what we would do if we pursued this line of questions and answers. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister did make a lengthy and important statement I said I was prepared to hear briefly spokesmen for the official opposition and the other parties, but I do not think I should admit questions of an argumentative type.

Mr. Claude Richardson (St. Lawrence-St. George): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a supplementary question. Since the government has taken office has the minister or the government received any representations from or had any communications with any parties in Canada regarding the possible sale of wheat in China?

Mr. Churchill: I am not aware of any representations made to the government with respect to the question asked by the hon. member.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, some time ago I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce about the proposed visit to Japan, widely publicized in the press, of Mr. Ezra Benson, United States secretary of agriculture, and the acceptance of Japanese currency for United States wheat, such currency to be invested in Japan. Has the minister made any investigation of the matter, and what steps does he propose to take in order that we may safeguard the market which we have promoted in Japan?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite clear as to whether I should keep under surveillance the movements of Mr. Benson.

Mr. Coldwell: I am not suggesting that.

Mr. Churchill: I think he is entitled to go anywhere he wishes to promote trade between the United States and other countries. This is not the beginning of United States trade with Japan; far from it. The United States has encouraged the consumption of wheat in Japan and is doing so at the present time. Canada has benefited accordingly from that, because as wheat becomes more acceptable in countries where the people are normally rice eating, there is greater prospect of the sale of Canadian wheat.

We are taking no steps with regard to Mr. Benson's visit to Japan. We anticipate that our trade in wheat with Japan will be maintained at its present level. Japan is our third best customer for wheat and we think that trade will be improved, but I cannot quite see the connection between that situation and the visit of Mr. Benson.

Mr. Coldwell: May I just give the connection. Recently there was a conference between the Minister of Trade and Commerce and other representatives of the Canadian government and the United States government. I understood it was agreed that the United States would discontinue methods of marketing that interfere with Canadian trade. Does the minister consider that the taking of Japanese currency for investment by the United States in that country, in payment for wheat, is in any way carrying out what is believed to be the understanding reached at Washington?

Mr. Churchill: The meeting at Washington was certainly very profitable. We achieved complete understanding with the United States representatives concerning their surplus disposal program. The chief damage of the United States surplus disposal program as it affected Canadian sales of wheat was due to their method of bartering wheat for strategic materials, and we have had an assurance from them that this will be discontinued.

Now, there are other methods of disposing of wheat, through sales for local currency, as has been mentioned by the hon. member. This course has been followed where wheat has not, over the years, been accepted by the population. There may be no permanent damage done. The sale of wheat for local currencies has been made by the United States in a number of countries, but I do not see how we can raise any objection to that unless there is an interference with a traditional Canadian market. In this instance I do not think any harm is going to result at all.

Mr. Coldwell: It seems the United States did fix us, then.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce this question. Has the trade commissioner in Hong Kong been given specific instructions to explore the possibility of developing a market for Canadian forest products on the mainland of China?

Mr. Churchill: Our trade commissioner who is visiting Hong Kong will naturally look into all aspects of possible Canadian trade with China and will report to us.

I just caught an interjection, Mr. Speaker, by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, which if I caught it correctly was that the United States did fix us. There was no fixing of the Canadians by the United States representatives when we were at Washington. It was a first class and useful meeting. There was an exchange of views in a way in which I think they had not been exchanged in the past at all, and the United States government has a better understanding of Canadian problems than it ever had before.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is quite true.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Did you call them buccaneers this year?

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): May I ask a further supplementary question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, arising out of the reply he just gave to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. He stated that the trade commission to China would be interested in selling all sorts of non-strategic materials. In view of the fact that China was one of the important markets for Newfoundland squid, will the minister instruct his commission to see what the possibilities are for having that market reopened?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, to assure the hon. member perhaps I might give a little information on what has happened in the past. Pre-war Canadian exports to China were valued at $3.7 million annually and comprised timber and lumber products, pulp and paper, flour, fish, fertilizers, aluminum and other products. Last year China's purchases amounted to only $2.4 million, consisting of ammonium sulphate and phosphate fertilizers. The trade commissioner's purpose will be to determine whether possibilities exist for extending this trade in such products as wheat, paper, pulp, lumber, flour and fish.

HIGHWAYS

LAKE ATHABASCA AREA—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL PARTICIPATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister, if I may, arising out of the answer he gave the house of few minutes ago concerning emergency measures which in his consideration should be dealt with now, and then some other matters later. I wonder if he would indicate to the house, and particularly to the west which is most concerned about this, when some consideration might be given to participation by the federal government with the provinces in the construction of a highway to the lake Athabasca area.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, matters such as that, in connection with the national development policy, will receive consideration in due course. This is but one of several projects in respect of which there has been consideration given in the past to co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. When and if we are in a position in the next few weeks to arrive at a definite arrangement or conclusion, then of course the house will be made aware of the situation.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCE AND RESIDENCE QUALIFICATIONS

The house resumed, from Thursday, October 31, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Monteith—Mr. Courtemanche in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Security Act to increase the amount of monthly pensions payable thereunder to fifty-five dollars per month, to reduce the basic residence requirements for pensioners from 20 years to 10 years and to increase the length of permissible temporary absences of pensioners from Canada from three to six months.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I think we may have expected that this resolution would have passed before last night's adjournment. Since it did not, I take this opportunity of placing before the minister a question. I am doing so now because the answer may involve some statistical research over the next day or two. I am interested particularly in that part of the measure which deals with old age security recipients being able to go to another country and perhaps reside there if they choose to do so. I recognize that the measure is going to extend the period of time during which old age security recipients can be away from Canada from three months to six months. They can be away for six months one year, and if those are the last six months in the year they can be away six months in the following year. This would made an absence of a year. However, they cannot go away again then until the year following that.

We appreciate this extension of time, but I do believe it is not good enough. We have advocated on the floor of this house that if a person resides in Canada for the required length of time to become eligible for old age security and then finds it necessary to go away, he should still be able to leave the country and draw his old age pension.

To some that may not sound too reasonable, but to some of us it is most reasonable. I stated previously on the floor of the house that I had two specific cases which I think merit a good deal of consideration. One of those cases is that of a gentleman who, by reason of his health, apparently must live in England where he has relatives. This gentleman came to this country when he was a young man, farmed in this country and later set up business in a small community. He reached the age of 70 years and retired, but he retired on a very small amount of money after the sale of his small business and was obliged to go to England. He found that his health was much better there. However he returned again to Canada, desiring to settle once again, but his old malady came back again so he returned to England where he was free from it. The result, of course, was that his old age security pension was cut off.

The other case I have is similar. A gentleman came here in the early days, in the previous century, and homesteaded in Canada. He went through extremely difficult times. He went through the hungry thirties, and in those years he was forced to sell his farm. However, he managed to scrape through. He became 70 years of age, was in receipt of the pension and went back to his old home town in the United States. It so happened that he married there and that his wife did not see fit to come back to Canada. He therefore went to reside there. He has no income apart from the income he may have received from his old age security pension, but it was cut off.

It seems to me that in such cases that treatment is unjust. The man had lived here, had put in his life here, had done something for the country, and yet he finds that he cannot be in receipt of his old age security pension. The situation is accentuated now more than ever because the recipient of old age security pension has been paying into the old age security fund into which we all are obliged to pay. I therefore say that we should extend the provisions of the act to include all those who wish to reside in other countries.

There is another argument I have, and it is this. Under the British pension scheme old age pensioners, after they receive their pension, can come to Canada and live here and the British government still pays their old age pension while they are living here. I want the minister to consider making a further amendment to enable people to receive their pensions even though they live in some other country. The number of those who would leave the country is nominal, I am sure. Most aged people who have put in their lives here, have established their homes here and whose families are here would remain in Canada except in the case of some extenuating circumstances.

My question to the minister is this, and perhaps he would answer it at a later date. I do not expect him to have the figures at his finger tips. I should like to know how many recipients of old age security have been cut off from their pensions by reason of going to some other country to live. I think the figures would be almost infinitesimal compared to the over-all picture. For the life of me I do not see why they are cut off. I would ask the minister to consider that part of the act and bring down those figures for the enlightenment of the house.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Chairman, may I just say we have been asking for this same thing for a long time, as have many members on all sides of the house.

Mr. Hansell: As a matter of fact I think that some of the Conservative members recommended it when they sat over there on the other side.

Mr. Coldwell: That is right. I want to reinforce the argument with regard to the payment of the pension. It is true that the people who are receiving it today are not yet paying a very substantial premium. However, they are paying a premium, and it is therefore paid as of right. But the younger people who are paying sales tax and 2 per cent income tax will, by the time they reach 65 or 70, have paid a substantial premium indeed on an annuity, and they should have it as of right.

The other day, as a matter of fact, I was reading a debate that took place in this house in 1936. The hon. gentleman can look it up. It was on an unemployment measure. Right Hon. R. B. Bennett was speaking and he introduced this very matter in that speech. He said that recently he had been in the Antipodes—and I use his own word. He said that down there a feeling prevailed that there should be some reciprocity between the various members of the commonwealth such as, for example, New Zealand and Canada.

I am not asking for that reciprocity because I think this should be as of right, but at least in the commonwealth recognition should be given to residence outside. I would go beyond that, of course, and say that a senior citizen should be allowed to reside wherever he or she chooses to reside when the pension is payable. But in any event, even Mr. Bennett as long ago as 1936 spoke of his visit to the Antipodes and the necessity for some arrangement within the commonwealth countries. I thought I would bring that matter to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the government house leader last week cleared the air here to a considerable extent when he made the point that everyone in all parties seemed to agree with the principle of old age pensions, and that he felt we should be ready to leave the stage where each party is trying to muscle in for its share of the credit or in some cases for all the credit.

In addition, it seems to me that there is quite a large measure of agreement that the scheme threshed out by the 1950 committee and the subsequent legislation have been generally satisfactory. I refer to this idea of the universal scheme, semi-contributory and largely pay as you go. But the key point that bothers me, as the representative of a number of constituents, is the individual sum of money to be paid now or in the future.

I should like to preface my remarks on this matter with two qualifications. The first is a party one. We in this movement feel that there should be an over-all social security program in detail and well thought out, of which old age pensions is only one important facet. Second—and this is more immediate to me as the representative of a constituency—most of my correspondence since June 10, roughly about 75 per cent of it, has dealt with old age pensions, and the key to that correspondence is, "How much?".

People generally seemed to be enraged at the idea of $46 a month. They were thrilled but were not very hopeful at the idea of $100 a month. Most of them seem to feel that somewhere between $65 and $75 would be an ideal figure. Is it possible to get a just pension scheme and set it on some sliding scale that will remove this topic from political promise and counterpromise?

As politicians we should be aware of how fine a thing it would be if we could take this particular issue right out of political controversy.

For example, I imagine the Liberals felt that Mr. Harris with his $46 was being politically courageous, but now they are probably wondering whether he was politically astute. None of us should really want to continue this game of what I call the high-low split. On the face of it the electorate chose the group which had the mystery hole card but that hole card of course has now been revealed to be $55 per month.

The minister who introduced the $55 a month did not state clearly that that was the final figure of his party. He did tell us at page 385 of Hansard that by approving this increase the parliament of Canada will be setting the benefit for our senior citizens at the highest level, both in dollar terms and purchasing power, that it has ever been in the 30-year history of old age pensions in this country. I have looked at the chart which he was kind enough to show me and have compared it with some dominion bureau of statistics figures and that statement certainly seems to be true. But the minister went on to say:

> We make no extravagant claims as to the generosity of the amount we are now proposing. It is my view, rather, that we should try to measure what we are doing here not in terms of generosity but in terms of justice.
> This government does not believe that it should try to make a good fellow of itself with the taxpayers' money—

He is changing the tone a little here. The government is not going to be spendthrift with the taxpayers' money. Well, I do not think anyone in this house is going to disagree with these points. We do not want the government to be good fellows with the taxpayers' money and we do want just and fair treatment, but what is the equitable basis in terms of the actual sum these people should get?

The minister went on to make reference to other countries and made comparisons that showed, in relation to the United States and I believe Britain, that we are doing very well or are going to do very well. I noticed in reading back through the speeches of the former minister of health that this was one of his favourite methods, to make a comparison with other countries. I have always felt that there is very little point in such an argument to the old age pensioners themselves. It reminds me of a cook in our regiment who, every time we complained about his cooking, used to say "You think this is bad, but you should have seen what it was like in the last regiment I was in." That is no consolation.

I would like to see if we could get to the point of whether this 1949 figure of $40 was fair at that time. I would like to see the minister table that information in Hansard, and with it I would appreciate it if he would place in another column the figures of the gross national product in those particular years. I would like to know whether the $55 pension is really fair now and whether the government has any means of proving to us or arguing that it is fair. I would like to know whether we should have a flexible pension tied to the cost of living index.

If we could obtain this information exactly we would have a start, because that is the figure which is fundamental in any scale that is sliding. Would a flexible pension tend to freeze our fiscal policy? I think we should find out something about that. The argument of this particular party has been that the pension should be related to the gross national product.

Well, in summing up all these questions I really do not know what should be the exact figure in order to be fair, but I do feel that it should be higher than $55 per month in view of the pleas of my constituents, and I feel that consideration should be given to the gross national product aspect. I would be the last one to suggest the appointment of another commission, but I would like to see some sort of consideration given to how we can arrive at a just figure to take this whole question of the old age pension figure out of electioneering.

Maybe I am being naive and it should be left in so we could go around playing this kind of game and shouting out the highest or the lowest or the mystery number, but I do think we should try eventually to take this figure out of electioneering.

In conclusion I would like to say that I am most interested in the fact that a social development is taking place with respect to our old age pensioners very much the same as is taking place in the case of teenagers. They seem to be moving out of the family circle or the sort of vertical line within the family and congregating among themselves in various homes, clubs and associations. They are obviously becoming a very powerful pressure group. I think this is good. It seems to me that people with a common interest should form themselves into a pressure group, but we are becoming more and more aware of their power and the sooner we can give this pressure group which, is you might say, improving its pitch, a figure which is generally accepted as being just and fixed to some sort of scale, the better off we will be and the better off they will be.

One last remark in relation to the speech of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. In my particular constituency I would say over half the population has some kind of root in Europe, especially in Finland. I do not know what the general view would be of an ethnic group coming to Canada, making a tremendous contribution in terms of work and development of the backwoods, yet retaining its native language and its ties with the old country. Personally I cannot look down my nose at them for that. I think they have made perhaps the most solid contribution of any group in our area, but many of these people, because they have kept their ties and because they can speak perfect Finnish, do go back to Finland in their old age.

Under the present arrangements we cannot pay their pension, and that is therefore a factor against them. I would support all the other arguments which have been advanced urging that we should wipe out this classification, and I certainly agree that we should obtain figures on how many people have been affected by the movement of old age pensioners out of Canada in the past.

Mr. Christian: I rise at this time, Mr. Chairman, to speak to this resolution. I would first of all confine myself to the increase of the amount of the old age pension from $46 per month to $55 per month. I am particularly concerned with this problem because I come from the Okanagan Boundary area to which I referred the other day as the California of Canada. We have in that area a large number of old age pensioners who live there because of the beautiful nature of the country and because of its very mild climate.

As members of this house we have no information before us with respect to why the government specifically decided upon the amount of $55 per month. In this house on October 29 I asked a question of the Minister of Finance as to whether the tax revenue of the government in the next 12 months would be equal to or greater than the government's tax revenue in the past 12 months. I did not receive an answer, but the reason I asked that particular question was in order to gain information to help me decide what the specific amount of the old age security pension should be. There is to my knowledge no information at the present time as to how the government decided the amount should be $55 a month.

I think information should be given, particularly to the younger members of this house, as to why that particular amount was decided upon. Why should it not be $60 a month? Personally I would like to see that amount be $60 a month. I realize, of course, that this government has many other responsibilities and that many heavy burdens are cast upon it, but I would like to receive some reasonable answer from the minister as to why this particular amount was decided on. I presume the government takes in sufficient revenue to pay $60 a month? I presume the government's tax revenues are sufficient for this purpose. Let me put it as a question. Are the government's tax revenues sufficient to enable it to pay the old age pensioners the sum of $60 a month? That is the first point I wish to bring to the attention of the committee.

With regard to the second item in the resolution, relating to reducing the period of residence from 20 years to 10 years, I consider this to be a progressive step indeed. I was surprised personally that the government had been able to reduce the period of residence to this extent. I feel, as does the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that there should be some restriction as to residence, because after all the people of this country who worked hard to bring about this development, the people who have resided in this country for a number of years, are the ones who should participate in the benefits of old age security. I shall not deal with this point further because I think the government has taken the right course in this regard.

However, I would like to raise a third point which deals with the temporary absence of pensioners from Canada, absences of between three and six months. Under the Old Age Security Act provision is made in section 5, subsection 1, statutes of Canada, 1951 (2nd session) as follows:

> Where a pensioner absents himself from Canada, payment of his pension shall be suspended immediately following the payment for the month in which he so absents himself, but may be resumed when the pensioner returns; and where the pensioner returns to Canada within six months from the time he left Canada, the pension upon being resumed may also be paid for a period of such absence not exceeding three months in any calendar year.

That provision has the effect of penalizing the pensioner, and this government did at least see the wisdom of increasing the permitted period of temporary absence from Canada from three months to six months. In that respect, however, I do not feel the government has gone far enough, and I think the best way to explain my point would be by reading from correspondence which has come to my attention. I would like the facts of this matter to be on record in Hansard.

I received a letter, the original of which I have, from an old lady in Cascade, British Columbia. I shall not read it all, but I shall read the relevant part. It is from Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Bertois, dated September 5, 1957, and it reads as follows:

> We are old pioneers here, "old and sick people" now, so would like to ask your advice and your help. Mr. Bertois is 84, November 1—lived here 64 years at Cascade. I am 77 November 27 and have lived here 59 years last March. We have been in many businesses and have paid a lot of taxes. I got my back hurt in a car accident last fall, so I can't take care of my invalid husband alone any longer. He has had hardening of the arteries for 12 years—getting worse every year—and now can't take a step alone, and with my bad back I can't hold him up. So I want to ask you and the government if you could arrange some way to let us live with our daughter in Los Angeles permanently—

The word "permanently" is underlined.

> —and our pension cheques—

Those words, too, have been underlined.

> —mailed to us there. That would be heavenly for us.
> There were rumours that such arrangements would be made, or should be made, so very old pensioners could go and let the children take care of their old and sick parents.

Then later on I received a further letter from the same lady at Cascade, dated September 14, 1957, in which she said:

> Your very kind letter and copy was received, but now we have had real bad news. Mr. E. A. McGovern, our son in law at 1148 South Plymouth, Los Angeles, California, was in a car accident and the following day died in the veterans' hospital at Los Angeles and is now buried. Why this terrible thing should happen, God only knows.
> Now our dear daughter is alone and needs us, as much as we need her, so as soon as we can possibly get lined up we must go to her. Our daughter is a Vancouver General hospital graduate, R.N. also a United States R.N. So she is such a help and comfort to us in dear dad's sickness, and now she also needs us to comfort her.

Mr. Chairman, I was very much pleased when I read of the resolution which was passed by the senior citizens' association of British Columbia at its fourth annual convention held on June 3 and 4, 1957. This was the resolution:

> Resolved that this convention of the senior citizens' association of British Columbia requests the federal government to amend the Old Age Security and Old Age Assistance Acts to make it possible for the pensioner to receive his pension in any country in the world.

I appreciate that steps are being taken to improve the situation so far as temporary absences are concerned, but I feel it should be a matter of right that our older citizens should have that individual freedom to which they are entitled, and that in the latter days of their lives they should be able to reside wherever they please and wherever they can receive the greatest comfort and attention. I therefore bring this matter respectfully to the attention of the government and express the hope that they will consider what can be done.

All hon. members will agree, I am sure, that it is most important we should pay fair and realistic pensions to the senior citizens of this country.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I am sure it is a pleasure for me to speak on this resolution regarding old age pensions. There are a few points I would like to bring out in support of this bill. Surely none of us would deny the maximum amount of assistance to these old people, in keeping with the ability of this country to pay.

Let us examine a few of the facts. First, the savings of the great majority of these people have been severely deflated over the last several years, necessitating, the depletion of the purchasing power of these savings. The other observation I would make is that those savings were compiled when they had to work a 10-hour day six days a week to earn as much as is earned in an hour today. All of this we have to consider, and we should realize, too, that those people laid the foundation for what we are enjoying in this great country today.

That fact, I believe, was partially expressed or conceded by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano when he suggested that the government had perhaps not taken this fact fully into account when it provided a 15 per cent increase.

Now let us take a look at the housing and food factors. Since 1950 food has increased 22 per cent in price; housing has increased 36 per cent. Our proposed increase is 37½ per cent, which allows us a little leeway, and only a very little, I admit, to look after the loss through deflation of those senior citizens' savings. So I believe our legislation has been realistic. I am sure all of us on this side of the house feel it is not enough, but economic factors must also be taken into consideration.

Furthermore, I have this to add. More of us will be living to 70 which is the life expectancy now for children born in this era, and it necessarily follows that we will have an ageing population on our hands. It also follows that more of these people will necessarily be employed in the older age groups than ever before.

I must say a few words on the cutting down of the residence from 20 years to 10 years as applied to immigrants to this country. I think that is a very necessary move, and I believe anyone who opposes this has lost sight of a very basic factor in that the great majority of those people will be healthy, young people right at the start of their working careers. Some of them will be skilled, others will not be, but let us consider this fact. We have put no care or costs into these people. We have paid them no baby bonuses. We have paid no hospitalization, no medical fees, nor payments for education for their bread and butter from the time they were born. We did not even pay for the mother's hospitalization or prenatal care.

As a matter of fact we are being handed a large sum of money already invested in those people, and this sum is estimated at from $20,000 to $200,000, depending upon the skill and training of these people. For those very few who come in under other circumstances—and there will be a few—we would be just as far ahead to give them this pension as to look after them in form of relief.

In conclusion may I say we have approached this Old Age Assistance Act with sympathy, realistically looking at all the factors that have to do with this legislation under consideration at the present time.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, is the minister not going to answer the questions that were put to him with regard to this resolution before its carries? There were two that I should like to remind him of particularly. The first was the question of gearing the old age security to the cost of living, and the second was the more sordid question, let us say, of what measures the government is going to take so there will be some measure of equilibrium between the payments out of the old age security fund and the contributions made to it through the three taxes: sales tax, income tax and corporation tax.

Mr. Leboe: I have one or two very brief observations to make before the minister replies. There has been some discussion here this morning with respect to arriving at a particular figure for social assistance, which includes this resolution which we have before us. I would like to suggest that in arriving at a figure of social assistance in respect of any of these matters the total amount of consumer goods available in Canada, taking into account our productivity and our ability as individuals to consume goods and services, would give us a sound basis on which we could judge whether we can pay so much here or so much there, because in our opinion if it is going to be continually based on dollars and cents we shall not arrive at a basis of the amount of goods and services we actually have available to divide amongst our people in a way which will give our senior citizens the standard of living they require.

I have a question which I would like the minister to answer before he concludes. Does the government consider that the earmarking of tax revenue, so far as the sales tax is concerned, constitutes a contribution on the part of the individual? Frankly I do not think it does. If the tax is earmarked for any specific purpose that, to my mind, is the earmarking of the tax and is not necessarily a contribution. We pay taxes, and if the government sees fit to earmark those taxes then they are earmarked, and cannot be considered necessarily a contribution.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount inquired whether the minister was going to answer some questions, as I did last night. Is it his intention to answer the questions?

Mr. Monteith: I wanted to make sure there were no more.

I intimated last night, Mr. Chairman, that I thought this resolution should be carried so we would get the bill in our hands and give it close examination on second reading and at the committee stage. I still think that is correct. However, a couple of questions were asked this morning and I will answer them specifically.

Last night the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount referred to a report in the Toronto Daily Star of April 25 concerning a speech made by the Prime Minister in Toronto and said, as reported at page 625 of Hansard:

> I therefore want to emphasize, Mr. Chairman, the fact that there were three points in this promise. First, the payments would be high enough to meet the needs of the recipients. Second, the payments would be adjusted from time to time to keep pace with increases in the cost of living. Third, the payments would be geared to national productivity.

Well, if I might point out, Mr. Chairman, we are raising the pension to $55 monthly and that, in our judgment, constitutes a fair and reasonable level of benefit at the present time. It will be sufficient in our judgment, together with the other means that most pensioners have at their disposal, to provide a decent minimum level of living for most pensioners.

In raising the pension to $55 a month we are increasing it to a figure 37.5 per cent in excess of the $40 level which prevailed at the first of the year. The cost of living index, by comparison, has risen only 23 per cent since 1949, and only 5 per cent since 1952 when old age security payments commenced.

In raising the pension to $55 a month we are in fact increasing it to keep in step with national productivity. This was the third of the points referred to by the hon. member last night in his remarks concerning the Prime Minister's speech. Here are the facts and figures in support of my contention, Mr. Chairman. In 1952, when old age security began, the gross national product was $23¼ billion. In 1957 it had risen to an estimated $30.8 billion, according to latest figures. This increase amounts to 32.4 per cent, and during the same period the increase in pension level amounts to 37.5 per cent.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this shows clearly that on the three points referred to in the Prime Minister's speech we have met our commitment. One, we have raised pensions by this proposal to a fair and reasonable level. Two, we have adjusted it by these proposals for the cost of living increase since old age security began. Three, we have adjusted by these proposals for the increase in national productivity as reflected in the gross national product since old age security began in 1952.

I think this question was asked. What did I think of the fund raised by the 2-2-2 formula? I personally do not consider it a contributory scheme, certainly not in the full sense of the word. I know there are arguments for and against, but the amount required each year has never been met by that formula. The amount has varied. The last complete picture is, I think, that it did come fairly close to meeting it prior to the recent rise and the one proposed right now; but actually, because of the demand on the consolidated revenue fund, I have not considered this actually was a fully contributory scheme.

If there are any other specific questions at the moment I will answer them, but I still think it would be advisable to get the bill and proceed with second reading.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is it my hon. friend's intention to proceed with the bill today, or does he intend to proceed with the resolution respecting old age assistance?

Mr. Monteith: I have three other resolutions before we come back to second reading of this measure.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is what I understood. I do not want to press my hon. friend if he feels that all these questions will be dealt with on the bill and that we will be free to ask questions—

Mr. Monteith: Right.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —on all matters whether, or not they are included in the bill—

Mr. Monteith: Now, just a minute.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend has raised a very important question in his remarks. He said, for instance, that as far as he personally is concerned he does not believe in the formula that was recognized in 1951 by the parliamentary committee.—

Mr. Monteith: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —because it was not fully a contributory scheme. The committee and the government of the day never suggested for one moment that the scheme was fully contributory. It was contributory, as the present Minister of Finance has repeatedly indicated in previous discussions in the house, in the only way it could be if we were to have a universal scheme.

At least one of the schemes in the United States, the superannuation scheme, is a fully contributory plan and, as I said the other day, it has a lot to commend it. But the difficulty is that it only reaches a segment of the population. There is no way of having a universal scheme other than the partial feature of contribution that we have in our scheme, a scheme which the Minister of National Health and Welfare knows was supported by all groups in the house. But he has said today that he does not consider this scheme to be fully satisfactory.

Mr. Monteith: I said I did not consider it to be fully contributory.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Fully contributory; my hon. friend is quite correct in that, and I take back what I said. I think it is only fair to point out in this connection that the level of the pension provided in the amendment, and which has been accepted in all sections of the house, does not necessarily represent the suggestions made by hon. gentlemen opposite as to what the pension really should be. We have been told by the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska that he did not consider the level provided in the amendment satisfactory. The minister has said that after careful consideration of all the facts involved, including undoubtedly budgetary intentions, the likelihood of early acceptance of hospital insurance and considerations of that sort, the level proposed in the bill is satisfactory, and it was for that reason that the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount thought there ought to be some consideration given and a statement made by the government of its over-all intentions so we could ascertain whether or not this did represent, in the light of the government's obligations, the most satisfactory amount. However, maybe the minister will deal with this question later.

If the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska is not satisfied with the present level, I am sure there are several hon. gentlemen sitting behind the Minister of National Health and Welfare who likewise will not be satisfied with the measure. I have before me, for instance, an advertisement which appeared in the June 6 issue of the Antigonish Casket which suggests, among other things, that a vote for Angus D.D., present parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport, will see a satisfaction and a realization of benefits in the social welfare field not now provided.

Some hon. gentlemen opposite and to my immediate left have been talking about a higher amount, $60, $75, and some of them have suggested the desirability, instead of having this competition, of finding some standard by which this question could be removed from politics and would not be dealt with on the basis of engaging in the kind of carpentry, to use the Prime Minister's language, that has characterized activities in the past. But I am sure no hon. member of the house is on record as advocating a pension at the level proposed by the new, distinguished and amiable member for Antigonish-Guysborough.

I have before me this advertisement. On one side is a picture of the Prime Minister, and it is a good picture. I am glad to see that he is in a happy mood today. Then there is a very good picture of the member, too. Undoubtedly both these photographic representations, not entirely true to life, had their effect in making possible the election to parliament of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough. But here is one of the reasons urged by the hon. gentleman for his election. He says:

If you vote for Angus D. D.—

I compliment my hon. friend upon the ingenuity of his political perception in using the name "Angus". It obviously has a very catching, engaging and absorbing quality in the province from which he comes. My hon. friend says:

If you vote for Angus D. D. you will get his pledge of fairness and firmness in all matters—

I am sure that is true. I am sure my hon. friend is fair and I am sure he is firm.

—his pledge to voice the problems of his constituents and co-operate fully with the Progressive Conservative new deal for the provinces, a policy which will ensure Nova Scotia a share in Canada's development—

This is the significant part of this enticing advertisement.

—his pledge to support a program of living standard old age pensions and old age assistance upwards of $100 and corresponding increases in all other pensions and social security benefits.

That was the statement he made and, as the Prime Minister has said, a promise made by a political figure is something that must be respected. Indeed, Sir Robert Borden said that possibly there ought to be some sort of rule which precluded making promises that have the effect of winning electoral support when there really cannot be an intention to carry out those promises. In any event the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough cannot be fully satisfied with the proposals that are made. He may feel, of course, that this is a beginning.

The Chairman: May I remind the hon. member that he should deal with the resolution under discussion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am discussing the resolution. We are dealing with a proposal made by the government to amend an act introduced by the previous government, we are entitled to ask whether or not the proposal now before the house represents the assurances that were given to the people of Canada during the election campaign.

If we cannot discuss that during the resolution stage then I would be inclined to suggest, if your view were supported by the government, that it would be a serious abridgment of debate which I know Your Honour would not really, on reflection, want to encourage.

The Chairman: I agree with the hon. member, but I should like to refer him to standing order 59, subsection 2:

Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is precisely what I am doing. The clause under consideration is certain improvements in the Old Age Security Act.

The Chairman: I do not believe that articles in newspapers can be termed the clause under consideration.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is not an article in a newspaper. This is an advertisement used by one hon. member in this house in the course of the last election, addressed to his constituents, as a result of which undoubtedly he received much of the support which he did receive in that election.

The Chairman: The newspapers are not under discussion at the present time. The newspaper from which the hon. member is reading is not before the committee.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, you have just assumed the chair within the past few weeks, and I am not going to take advantage—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —I am not going to take a step that, in the situation, would be unfair to you. However, I submit to you with great confidence that the ruling you have now made is one that is certainly not within the rules of this house. The practice, and I am saying this to you with great respect, of this house is that at the stage in which we are now the widest measure of debate is permitted, and indeed in the past has taken place. Where else would one be given the opportunity of testing whether or not a particular program of the administration was consistent with the pledges it had made?

Last night we heard the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount, and we heard other hon. members in reply, as to whether or not the proposal now before us really did represent the kind of assurances that had been given by those who sit on your right. I am sure the Prime Minister, who has been in this house a long time, who is recognized as having deep appreciation of the rights of parliament, would strongly support what I have said.

So, Mr. Chairman, it may be that in talking about these pledges the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount was on pretty firm ground. He indicated that the promise had been not only to increase the basic amount but to provide a formula by which the needs of the citizens of this country could be adjusted from time to time. We have, for instance, the telecast speech of the Prime Minister on May 22 in which he said, amongst other things, that he would also make provision for a formula whereby due allowance would be made in the future for the rising cost of living. What is that formula? My hon. friend, for the time being, seems to have established a good case in terms of relating the proposed benefit to the cost of living, just as it could be argued that the 15 per cent increase represented the increase in the cost of living from 1951 until the time of that increase.

Likewise the Prime Minister, in his election pledges, told us that payments would be geared to the national productivity. He told us also that a commission would be appointed to examine the superannuation scheme in the United States which works alongside a means test old age pension system. The hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount was merely pointing out, and I do not believe my hon. friend has properly answered the argument, that what has been done is not all that was promised. The Minister of National Health and Welfare should tell us, in order that we can ascertain exactly what the government has in mind, whether or not the adoption of this particular program means the postponement of other programs, programs which in their totality were very much in the minds of the previous government. For instance, the hospital insurance measure will be the greatest supplement to the old age pension.

An hon. Member: You were 30 years at that one.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, it may have taken a long time, but the fact is that the previous government put the hospital insurance act on the statute books. Does it mean, now, that this particular figure is arrived at with the possibility or with the intention of not having to pay out any moneys until 1959 under hospital insurance? Under that measure a very considerable amount of benefit would come to old age pensioners. Over 20 per cent of those who are recipients under the universal system would benefit as old age pensioners under the hospital insurance act and the kind of agreement that was in contemplation between the federal and provincial governments.

Those are questions which have got to be considered. The minister is in charge of this bill, and I do not propose to press him unduly if it is clearly understood that when we come to the bill he will endeavour to deal with some of the questions I have mentioned and which other hon. members have brought to our attention. He will explain to us, perhaps, why the effective date is November 1 but these benefits will only be provided at the end of the month.

Mr. Monteith: How could it be otherwise?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not complaining.

Mr. Monteith: Be reasonable, now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend has undoubtedly used the effective date of the first of the month, as we did, to give a full month's benefit to the recipients, and by making the effective date November 1, even if the bill is not passed until after November 1, recipients will get the full benefit for a whole month. If that is the intention I commend my hon. friend. All we were trying to do was to—

Mr. Monteith: Let us have a look at the bill and the hon. member will find out.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My friend says let us look at the bill. That is the very thing we wanted to do, and the information was denied us in this house and given elsewhere by the Prime Minister.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Monteith thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 19, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the house go into committee on the next resolution before I call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are anxious to co-operate.

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCE, RESIDENCE AND ALLOWABLE INCOME

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Old Age Assistance Act to increase to fifty-five dollars per month the maximum amount of assistance in respect of which payments may be made to the provinces under the provisions of that act, to reduce the basic residence requirement for recipients from 20 years to 10 years and to increase the total amount of allowable income, inclusive of assistance, by one hundred and twenty dollars a year in the case of an unmarried person, and two hundred and forty dollars a year in the case of a married person.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, the resolution preceding the introduction of the amendments proposed to the Old Age Assistance Act includes three main points. They are as follows:

1. A proposal to share with the provinces, if they agree, a further increase of the maximum amount of old age assistance bringing the figure to $55 monthly, the same as for old age security.

2. A proposed reduction in the basic residence requirement from 20 to 10 years.

3. A proposed increase in the income ceilings covering both the assistance payable and the amount of outside income by $120 annually in the case of unmarried recipients and $240 annually in the case of recipients of married status.

The considerations which prompted the government to propose the first two of these three changes are almost exactly the same as those which were discussed in connection with the resolution on the Old Age Security Act amendments. I do not propose to repeat the arguments which I advanced in that debate. I might point out however that there are obvious advantages in terms of administrative efficiency and convenience to the recipients in having the pension payable under old age assistance before the age of 70 identical with that paid after 70. Certainly if it is desirable to raise the benefits under old age security to $55, and we all agree that it is, we can hardly do less for old age assistance recipients between the ages of 65 and 70, all of whom by definition are in need of assistance to a greater extent than many of those in receipt of old age security.

A comparison of the maximum amount of old age assistance now proposed with that paid in other countries shows that the Canadian level of benefits once these changes have been approved will be higher than those of every other country except the United States and will not lag far behind the rates payable in that country. United States legislation with respect to old age assistance provides for federal sharing of state administered old age assistance payments, paid on a means test basis, up to a maximum of $60 monthly. In fact, because of the means test the actual average payments amount to less than $60 a month. There were actually 15 state or territorial jurisdictions which in June 1957 were making average assistance payments of less than $50 monthly while eight were in the $50 to $55 range and 30 were in excess of $55.

I mention these figures as they apply to the United States in order that we may all have a clear understanding as to where we stand in comparison with our neighbour to the south. With the exceptions I have noted in respect to some of the individual states the new $55 maximum proposed for Canada compares favourably with anything to be found in other jurisdictions.

I should of course add that while the federal government is asking parliament to authorize these changes in our joint federal-provincial program of old age assistance, the provincial governments will in the final analysis be the ones to decide whether or not these changes are to be made in their respective jurisdictions. No changes in old age assistance can be made effective in any province except as and when the province itself may decide. We are however making it clear to the provinces by the proposed amended legislation that, so far as the federal government is concerned, we are prepared with parliament's approval to amend the existing federal-provincial agreements and to share henceforth in the cost of a maximum $55 assistance payment.

The second change proposed in the Old Age Assistance Act has to do with the reduction of the residence requirement from 20 to 10 years. There is nothing I need to add on this subject to what I said when we were considering an identical proposal for the Old Age Security Act. The arguments and the considerations are identical. I might just add that we have already received representations from at least one province, Ontario, urging this reduction to 10 years and we have every reason to believe that the change will be acceptable to the other provinces as well.

The third change proposed for old age assistance relates to the income ceilings provided under the act. Since this is a means test program certain limits must be placed on the amount of income and resources which an applicant can have without reduction of the amount of assistance payable to him. For every dollar of income in excess of the permitted amount a corresponding reduction is made in the amount of assistance paid.

The increase of $9 monthly, or $108 yearly, in the amount of assistance payable necessitates a corresponding adjustment in the overall income ceilings. If this were not done many of those in receipt of modest amounts of outside income would not receive the full benefit of the increase which is proposed. It is for this reason that the government has decided to propose an increase of $120 annually in the income ceiling for unmarried recipients and an increase of $240 annually in the ceiling for married recipients.

I come now to the financial implications of these three proposals. I must be frank in admitting that these are difficult to assess with accuracy for a number of reasons. The first of these is that despite the growing numbers of our population in the age brackets 65 to 70 the experience in the last few years has been that the old age assistance rolls have not risen in proportion. There has in fact been a decline from 94,625 in March, 1955 to 88,887 in June of this year.

Some slight increase has resulted from the changes made in the early part of this year but with other programs such as war veterans allowances, disability or blindness allowances and unemployment insurance, providing alternative benefits for many persons in the age group 65 to 70, it becomes increasingly difficult to estimate how many additional persons may qualify for old age assistance as a result of alterations in the rate of benefit or in the income ceilings. At the present time there are approximately 90,000 persons in receipt of old age assistance in the provinces and territories.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): How many is that?

Mr. Monteith: Approximately 90,000. All these will qualify for the full increase of $9 per month and the increased costs on this count alone will amount to about $9¾ million per annum. In addition, some increase in case-load is anticipated as a result of the higher rate of benefits, the increase in income ceilings and the reduction in the residence requirement. Possibly this will mean an additional 5,000 cases a month; if so, the cost of these would be an additional $3.3 million as a maximum.

Summing up, therefore, it may be anticipated that old age assistance costs will rise as a result of these amendments by approximately $13 million which is in a full fiscal year. Half of this sum or $6.5 million will be a federal responsibility; the rest will be a charge upon the provincial treasuries.

May I say a word in conclusion about the position of the provincial government in this matter. We have, of course, notified all the governments concerned of the proposals that we are laying before parliament as embodied in these resolutions. We shall send them copies of the bill for their consideration at the earliest possible moment, that is to say as soon as it has been introduced and given first reading in this house.

The federal government fully recognizes that in amending its own legislation, the federal Old Age Assistance Act, it cannot and does not legislate for the provinces. It can only indicate in this way to the provinces what it is prepared to do. The provinces must in their turn decide, each one in the light of its own position, the extent to which they can incorporate into their provincial legislation and program the changes and improvements in which the federal government, through these amendments, is announcing its readiness to share.

If all ten provinces decide to implement these changes, and there can be no certainty of that until they have had the time to consider the matter, the added burden on the provincial treasuries will amount to about $6 million a year. They will also have to bear their share of any increases under disability and blindness allowances. It may take a little time for all the provinces to consider their position and come to a decision with respect to these three acts. It may also be necessary in one or two jurisdictions to effect changes in provincial legislation before these improvements can be legally made effective. New agreements with all the provinces will be required; this alone can mean as many as 36 new agreements—three each with the 10 provinces and two territories.

The committee can be assured that the federal government will expedite by all the means at its disposal the conclusions of the necessary agreements. That is why we have provided in the bill for an effective date November 1, 1957. But the position of the provinces, and the problems, financial and other, which the federal legislation poses for them should not be minimized. They should be clearly understood, and it should be recognized that the provinces will require a reasonable amount of time to come to their decisions and to make the necessary policy and administrative decisions in the matter. I am sure the committee will recognize the fairness of this position.

I think that is about all I need to say at this stage, Mr. Chairman. I shall be glad to deal with any points that may arise as the debate proceeds, to the best of my ability.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question. In his opening words he said that the pensions would be increased if the provinces would agree. If the provinces do not agree it appears that there will be no increase in pensions. Is there any way of putting across this increase in pensions if the provincial governments do not agree?

Mr. Monteith: If the hon. member had listened to my remarks more carefully he would have understood that this legislation is brought forward by the government to make it permissible for the provinces to participate in this increase.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I would naturally, I think, be expected to make a few remarks based on the statement we have just heard from the Minister of National Health and Welfare in the introduction of this particular amendment which, in fact, is an amendment to Bill No. 395 introduced in this parliament on June 23, 1951.

Of course I agree at once with what the minister has just said about our responsibility in relation to that which can be exercised by the provinces, and I am sure that it was only because the hon. member for Fort William sometimes suffers from a particular disability of hearing that he did not appreciate the point which was properly made by the minister when he said that acceptance of this measure and its availability to the public generally depended on agreement between the provinces on one hand and the federal government on the other, and the practice to which he has resorted in passing enabling legislation is a practice which we, when we were on this side of the house, always followed notwithstanding the criticisms made when old age pensions were first introduced, and that is that before the federal government embarked on any legislative enactments having to do with participation by the provinces, the latter should first of all have given their consent and enacted the necessary legislation. I agree with the practice which the hon. gentleman is pursuing in this particular instance.

This particular measure is, as I say, by way of amendment to an act introduced by the government headed by the right hon. gentleman who is now the Leader of the Opposition. That was in 1951, and it was part of a plan which had first been proposed in 1945 and considered later by the parliamentary committee which recommended that there should be a lowering of the pensionable age, the federal government assuming responsibility basically, pursuant to a constitutional amendment, for those aged 70 and over.

Now I think it is significant that in the very terms of the constitutional amendment itself the provinces were not turning over to the federal government full responsibility for old age pensions but they were endowing the federal government with the necessary authority to impose contributions in respect of a particular program covering the group aged 70 and over, and I think that is very important because it has much to do with an argument that I am going to suggest to the minister, that is that it would be most unfortunate if as a result of those amendments any provinces now paying supplementary payments were to take the position that in view of these increased benefits they were thereby relieved of any responsibility. I suggest to the minister, not without some reason, that that is a possibility he should look into, as I am sure he will, with the greatest care.

Now as a result of the act of June 23, 1951 parliament took a very important step. Hitherto pensions had been paid on the basis of co-operative financial participation between the federal government and provincial governments and once the federal government assumed responsibility within certain limits for over 800,000 people in this country aged 70 years and over it decided to lower the age for a particular group, but that the provinces and the federal government should share on a fifty-fifty basis the benefits provided under the Old Age Assistance Act, which provided for these benefits to be paid at the age of 65 instead of at the age of 70.

It is significant I think that up until 1951 over 800,000 Canadians have benefited under the Old Age Pensions Act which was made possible as the result of the cost being shared by the two senior levels of government.

It is worth recording that up to 1951 the federal and provincial governments had spent together $1,136 millions by way of assistance to the senior citizens of our country. I have checked these contributions up to date with contributions made on a proportional basis—a per capita basis—in the United States, to which the hon. gentleman properly made allusion a few moments ago, and it will be found that we have provided more assistance on a per capita basis to our older citizens, certainly up to 1951, than they have in the United States, out of contributions made by the taxpayers pursuant to policies carried out by the government.

Of this sum of $1,136 million which had been spent in the period before the introduction of the Old Age Assistance Act, federal expenditure alone amounted to $836 million, while provincial expenditures were in the neighbourhood of $300 million. Therefore, this amendment is based upon an act which came into effect after a very considerable contribution had been made by the taxpayers, pursuant to government policy, to help the senior citizens of our country.

Now the Old Age Assistance Act, unlike the Old Age Security Act, apart altogether from supplementary payments, is now made possible, if accepted by the provinces, on a sharing basis with the latter. I think it is important at this stage that we should state that the operation and the administration of this act which presumably will, as in the past, be left to the provinces, require for proper administration regulations between the two senior levels of government, jointly entered into and jointly collaborated in.

I am going to suggest to my hon. friend that he will be confronted with the difficulty that I was confronted with so very frequently in this house when it was suggested that the regulations attending old age assistance were not mutually agreed upon but rather imposed on from the top. My hon. friend knows, of course, that that is not the case. The regulations in the past—and I am sure this will be true of the future—were the result of consideration by the two senior levels of government on equal terms, and at no conference that I ever participated in were any of these regulations at any time imposed from the top or from the provinces. They were the result of mutual argeement. Certainly the provinces which have to administer this act would naturally be expected to have a great deal to say and an important part to play in the administration, in the creation and in the formation of those particular regulations.

When the Old Age Assistance Act was introduced in 1951 for the 65 to 69 age group we intended to embrace almost one-third of the population in that age group. Our estimate at that time was that we were going to cover 145,000 persons but, as the minister has pointed out today by way of implication, we did not reach that figure. I think some 90,000 persons roughly were covered and as a result of these amendments undoubtedly further numbers will be added.

It is significant that prior to the introduction of the Old Age Assistance Act—and this has much to do with this act because of the increase in the permissible income ceiling—there were at least three different amendments made in the availability of permissible income. The basic amount had been increased. As a matter of fact, to indicate the scope of the contribution made by this measure one can note that the cost of old age pensions was doubled between 1947 and the date when the Old Age Assistance Act was first introduced.

It is also significant that under the act to which my hon. friend now presents an amendment not only had we previously increased the basic amount, not only had we liberalized the income ceilings but we had in the act of 1951, of which this is now an integral proposed part, taken some very important steps and made some very important changes. For instance, the residence requirements were liberalized; the requirement of citizenship was completely eliminated. That represented a very significant change. Hitherto it was based entirely upon citizenship and period of residence. In the act of 1951 that was removed and, as a matter of fact, all of our social measures now are not based upon national status but on the period of residence, and that had the effect of bringing in many thousands of people who came from other lands to participate in Canadian citizenship and all of the advantages which this country affords.

Now, the basic amount of $40, the qualifying law, the maintenance of an eligibility test are all embodied in the act of which the amendment offered by the hon. gentleman is a part and were all recommended by the parliamentary committee. It is significant that many hon. members who now sit on Mr. Chairman's right, complained bitterly when this act was introduced about the maintenance of the eligibility test. I use the phrase "eligibility test" to get away from the implications and the sinister quality of the old designation. But there are many hon. members sitting opposite who took a strong position in 1951 and who said that the act was made to appear very weak because it did not propose the abolition of the eligibility test. There were the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and the former leader of the opposition. All of these men will be found to be on record as strongly taking the position that there should not be in this measure any eligibility test.

I merely mention that to indicate that what was the view of hon. gentlemen opposite at one time is apparently not the view which they entertain today. In the light of the serious and severe criticism that was carried on for many, many days in this house, I think it is important that one should recall the position taken now as compared with the position taken then.

Mr. McCleave: Your view of the $6 has changed also.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend will find if he is in this house as long as I have been that one of the best ways to get along is to recognize that you have to change your views. I am sure that is one of the things my hon. friend will come to recognize and he will change his view as he looks at the legislation that has been passed in this field by the preceding government. He will find that it is a record worthy of commendation and worthy of praise rather than the kind of criticism sometimes given to it.

Then in the act of 1951 we took another step; we eliminated the requirement of the recovery from the estates of deceased persons in so far as the federal government is concerned. I am sure my hon. friend is going to maintain that. We cannot control what the provinces do in that particular, but it is significant that we did make that change in the act. Then we introduced a new feature in the act of 1951 of which this amendment is a part. We gave to the Indians, to the native population of our country, the right to benefit, something that had not been done before.

We estimated the total cost of old age assistance in 1951 at about $64 million, shared equally by the two senior levels of government and I understood my hon. friend to estimate that the proposed amendments would add roughly another $13 million, to be shared equally by the two senior levels of government, bringing the total cost of old age assistance to somewhere between $75 million and $80 million.

So we can support this particular proposal in the knowledge that this is an amendment to an act which we introduced. Undoubtedly it has been made possible as the result of the minister's careful concept of the over-all obligations having in mind, I sincerely hope—I know he will not mind my saying this—that this does not mean in any way any postponement or abridgment of the plan proposed by the previous government in the matter of hospital insurance.

Mr. Monteith: I should certainly like to set the record straight and assure the hon. member that that is the situation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank my hon. friend. I think that is a very important announcement for him to make because, as he knows, it would be a matter of the greatest regret all over the country if the situation—

Mr. Monteith: I have indicated that ever since I took office.

Mr. Marler: Rather obscurely.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, I think in fairness to the Minister of National Health and Welfare I should mention that I did say in the house that when he took office he was the one member of the administration who had given a clear indication of his personal intentions in that regard. He will recall the statement I made several weeks ago that my complaint was that he was the sole voice on behalf of the administration that gave any indication that the government intended to carry on vigorously the purposes and intentions embodied in the hospital insurance act. His statement now relieves us from any suspicion that what is now being done is in any way intended to be considered as postponing the day when Canadians generally will have the opportunity to participate in a nationwide hospital insurance scheme.

Of course the amendment now proposed does not deal, as the previous amendment did not deal, with certain assurances or certain promises, as the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount said last night, that were made in the election that not only would the basic amount be increased but there would be a formula provided to relate the pension to the cost of living. I want to say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that there has never been a refinement as to precisely what was meant by those assurances, and I think that if they are going to be realized there should be some guarantee given with respect to the great danger of a reduction in pension if there is a reduction in the cost of living.

An examination of social security measures in other countries based upon such a formula will show that in times of less need there have been reductions in social benefits away below the actual reduction in the cost of living itself. Therefore this formula which was dealt with on the basis of an assurance should be considered with great care. In any event, I take it that particular promise is not going to be recognized in this legislation. Likewise the assurance about relating payments or benefits to the gross national product is not being presented in this particular amendment.

We should keep in perspective what the over-all obligation of the government of Canada is in the whole matter of assistance to our senior citizens. Before the amendments introduced last spring in the budget of that time the federal government had committed the people of Canada to an expenditure of something like $400 million for old age security, including the contributions that the federal government was paying to the provinces under the Old Age Assistance Act. The increases provided at that time resulted in a total commitment of $460 million, and with the proposed amendments now our share of old age security will bring us to somewhere in the neighbourhood of $560 million. This is comparable with the amount of roughly $35 million now being spent by all ten of the provinces together apart from supplementary payments.

It is for this reason that I strongly suggest to the minister, having in mind the fact that the federal government bears a much greater share in this regard than all the provinces to the extent that I have indicated, $560 million as against $35 million, that it would be a matter for great regret in terms of the value of social measures if as a result of these amendments the provinces were now to seek to extricate themselves from some of the supplementary payment obligations into which some of them have projected themselves.

As I indicated the other day, there are five at least that do not make any supplementary payments. It would be unfortunate if this legislation meant that supplementary payments would not be continued or that discouragement would be given to provinces where there are no supplementary payments now because this amount will not take care of all cases of need. I am sure my hon. friend recognizes that is the case, and the only way in a country like ours by which individual cases of need can be met is by the provinces recognizing that they too have a responsibility in this matter. I am sure the hon. gentleman will find that we will give the bill the same sympathetic consideration as we have given its antecedent.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Regina City.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, in discussing the resolution providing for the amendment of the Old Age Security Act I placed my views before the committee with regard to the amount of the increase, and I think the remarks I made at that time have a general application to other groups of pensioners. I would, however, take issue with the statement made by the minister just prior to adjournment for lunch that the amount of the increase is in line with the increase in Canada's gross national product. He placed figures on record indicating that the increase in pension takes care of the increase in the cost of living. No one is disputing that fact, but I think if the minister will look into the matter he will find that while it may compensate for the increase in the cost of living it falls short of meeting the percentage increase in our gross national product.

Mr. Monteith: From 1952 on it does; maybe not from 1949.

Mr. Ellis: However, that is a matter that can be left to some future occasion. The C.C.F. party's approach to the question of old age assistance can be generally summed up by our belief that the age limit of those in receipt of old age security should be lowered to age 65. If that were done we would not now be faced with the situation described by the minister where he has no assurance or guarantee that certain provinces are going to enter into agreements with the federal government to provide for a pension of $55 to recipients of old age assistance.

The situation we are likely to find in the immediate future is that the amount of old age assistance will vary from one part of the country to the other. I feel that all our senior citizens, irrespective of the province of residence, should be given equal treatment. I realize that the minister can point the finger at a specific province and say the province did not fulfil its obligation and that is the reason why some of our senior citizens are not accorded the same treatment as their fellow Canadians are in some other part of the country.

At this point I might say I was quite surprised to hear the hon. member for Essex East express a great deal of concern over the question of supplementary allowances. I think it would be much more advisable for him to express a little more concern about those provinces that do not give any supplementary allowance. I suggest his great concern over the provinces who grant supplementary allowances is because of the fact that there is not a single Liberal province in the dominion which has given or is now giving any supplementary allowance to the recipients of old age pensions. I would suggest the hon. member for Essex East should go to work on the few remaining Liberal provinces, while there are still a few remaining, to convince them it may be well to play fair with the old age pensioners residing within those provinces.

I noted that in the remarks made in a previous debate one Liberal member suggested that the provinces were not making the same contribution as was the federal government. I think he overlooked the fact that the provincial governments are much closer to the problems of our senior citizens. They are charged with the responsibility of providing medical care; they are charged with the responsibility of providing suitable housing and satisfying other basic requirements. This is a field in which the province is concerned. I know that in my own province the amount which we spend as our share of the payments under the Old Age Assistance Act is only a part of the amount which the provincial government spends in the care of our senior citizens.

As a matter of fact on September 25 I had the great pleasure of attending the opening of our new geriatric and rehabilitation centre in the city of Regina. This is an indication of the sort of thing that is being done by some provincial governments and, of course, that is over and above any money they spend in providing assistance under the Old Age Assistance Act. This new geriatric centre was built at a total cost of over $2,133,000 and has provision for 293 guests. It has a staff of around 130, including the superintendent, 20 registered nurses, 56 nursing assistants and the other staff members required to operate a home of that kind.

The provincial government has undertaken this work because they feel it is necessary that the legitimate needs of our senior citizens be met. I am very sorry that we have not been able to go much farther in this field. I think perhaps the provincial government could devote its energy toward the provision of care of this kind because there are so many of our senior citizens who do not have homes, whose families are not living in this country or perhaps are unable to provide for them the sort of care that is necessary. I suggest, therefore, when the federal government is bringing in an amendment of this kind they should take into consideration the fact that the provincial governments—I am not saying all provincial governments to an equal degree or measure—have been doing a great deal in this direction. I feel that this work should be continued.

I feel that the amendment now before us, which carries on the old arrangement whereby the cost of old age assistance is to be borne jointly by the federal and provincial governments, does not take into account sufficiently what is being done by the provincial governments toward the care of our senior citizens. If the government insists on taking care of the 65 to 69 age group in this manner, then it ought to face up to some of its responsibilities in other fields.

Some reference has been made to the hospital plan. There is no doubt that the coming into force of that plan, which I presume is a step towards a comprehensive health insurance plan, will be of some assistance. But in the province of Saskatchewan we have been waiting year after year for the federal government to do something. We feel that as a province we are ready to go ahead with the hospital plan now. I should like very much to see this government take the necessary steps in order that Saskatchewan and any other province that is ready may enter into an agreement to bring the plan into effect as of January 1 next. That is one positive way in which the federal government could discharge, in part, some of its responsibilities towards those in the 65 to 69 age group, apart from the contribution they are making under this proposed amendment.

Again, there is the provision of housing for our senior citizens. While I realize there is a limited amount of assistance provided under federal legislation, the bulk of the cost of building homes for our senior citizens rests with the provincial governments, with the municipalities and the societies set up to build such accommodation. Here is another field in which the federal government, if it is going to boast about its accomplishments, if it is going to fully discharge its responsibilities towards the 65 to 69 age group, ought to do something.

Then, of course, there is the question of our geriatric centres, which I believe to be indispensable to any worthwhile program for our senior citizens in this country. What responsibility is the federal government going to take with respect to the provision of facilities of this kind? I draw this to the attention of the minister because I feel there is an attitude which has been evidenced by members on the Liberal side of the house when they were in office, and that is that because the federal government is paying a portion of the cost under the Old Age Assistance Act they have discharged their responsibility. I cannot agree with that. I feel that the best solution to the difficulty would be to lower the age group in which payments are made under the Old Age Security Act. I think that is an objective for which we must strive.

In the meantime, I think the federal government, if it is going to enable the provinces to carry on this work, ought to be prepared to provide some sort of assistance. Surely the minister cannot suggest that because the federal government is going to provide for a higher payment under the Old Age Assistance Act it is discharging its obligations to this very important age group. In so far as the amendment is concerned, I feel that the amount, while certainly not adequate to take care of the needs of our senior citizens, is an improvement over the type of amendment brought down by the former government. But I urge the minister to give consideration to the provision of greater assistance to the provincial governments with respect to those in the 65 to 69 age group who receive from the federal government a part of their pension, and beyond that stage it is left to the provincial government to take care of their needs.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, the Social Credit group will heartily support this proposal which the government is making for improving the lot of the old age pensioners. We believe that there ought to be an attempt, as the years go by, to take more cognizance of the production that the Dominion of Canada is able to bring into being. For example, reasoning the matter out in a calm and sensible sort of fashion, does it not appear to every hon. member that when the Dominion of Canada is producing enough butter to provide every person in Canada with all the butter that person can consume we ought to be able to help the old age pensioners obtain as much of that butter as they could use. So with milk and milk products, meat and meat products, clothing, fuel, transportation and shelter.

Last night we heard a good deal of reference to the fact that housing was costing the old age pensioners so much that they were left with very little on which to live. If in the Dominion of Canada there are enormous amounts of lumber lying in the yards waiting for a market and an indefinite number of builders all ready to build houses, does it not strike almost anyone as being rather astonishing or grotesque that we should have any shortage of housing for our senior citizens? Surely we can produce all the lumber and all the other materials that are necessary to make a fine house for every old age pensioner in Canada. Certainly we can provide all the fuel necessary to keep that house warm and well lighted. If we begin to approach the problem of providing for our senior citizens, from that angle, I believe that every citizen of Canada will recognize the fact that, for some strange reason not yet explained by men on either side of the house, we have not been able to make what is physically possible in Canada financially possible to anything like a satisfactory degree.

Mr. Habel: There he goes again.

Mr. Blackmore: Yes; and it is high time that a good many of us went again. People of the lowest standard of intelligence ought to be able to see that fact without any argument at all. I suppose we shall have to go on until the voters, in spite of the barrage of misrepresentation which they are obliged to go through every election and all the time in between, finally begin to see this important fact and let their disapproval of the inadequacies of the administration register at the polls; it seems utterly impossible to have elected in either the Liberal party or the Conservative party a man who is able to comprehend these facts and to recognize them.

Mr. Habel: Not the way you do.

Mr. Blackmore: While in our Social Credit election material we advocated a basic pension of $60 a month and an additional amount to match whatever supplementary allowance any province was making, so that in the case of a province like British Columbia or Alberta the total pension would rise to $100, let it not be interpreted as meaning that we believe that if we gave such a pension to the old age pensioners of Canada, and that only, we would be discharging our responsibility to the senior citizens of Canada.

Here and there and in the corridors occasionally the idea has been expressed that it would be quite out of order if we were to begin to supply our senior citizens with an income so great that it exceeded the income of many of the taxpayers, that if we were to do that, we would be becoming unsound. Personally I do not agree with that idea. When a person reaches the age of 65 in Canada, having fought his way up through life in this country, having helped to make this country and having been paid far less for his work all the way up than he was earning—with which statement I think everybody will agree—surely we are not doing anything irregular when we begin to try to compensate that person for the deficiencies of the income from which he has had to suffer all the way up through his life when we give him an old age pension which will give him a chance to have a little bit of comfort which he was not able to enjoy as he was struggling up, earning his way and raising his family. I think it is well for us to bear that consideration in mind when we try to compute the amount we ought to be giving to our old age pensioners. I would not wish to advocate that we penalize our taxpayers unreasonably; I am convinced that there is a way of financing old age pensions which does not involve a burden on the taxpayers.

Mr. Dupuis: Out of the $500 million of savings as promised by the Tories.

Mr. Blackmore: That is just a silly remark. If the constituents of the hon. member had realized his attitude in that respect I am sure he would not be here. I am sure we would have at least a Conservative in place of him. That remark indicates an indisposition to face the problem seriously and realistically.

We Social Crediters are prepared to go all the way along with the minister. We express satisfaction that he has gone as far as he has gone, and we shall be prepared to go even further whenever the spirit moves him to go a little bit further.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I want it particularly understood that I support this legislation. I heard the minister perfectly when he made his statement but he did not understand my question. My question was asked because of a promise that was made, "If you vote for me, this is what you will get", and there was not one word about conditions with the provinces. Mr. Chairman, I want to make it clear that I want every man or woman in Canada who needs this pension to get it whether the provinces agree or not. During the last session when our amendment was being discussed I said that we should raise the pension by $10. For anybody any place in Canada to say, "If I am elected, you will get this" is a mistake. No private member ought to say that and I was extremely careful this time not to say it. But I would say definitely that any man or woman with an income under $3,000 should have his pension increased far above $65. However, I have not any pity for a man who has $10,000 a year and is seeking a pension. He is a pitiable creature. Why should we help the poor fellow out by giving him an increased pension of $55. That is one thing I have always had against the pension. Notwithstanding my friendship for the former minister of national health and welfare I am of opinion that a man who is getting $10,000 a year or even $5,000 has no business to get a pension. However, I want to say to the minister that I congratulate him on his statement. He is protecting himself splendidly. But I want it to be known that I hope every citizen in Canada who needs this pension will get it, regardless of whether or not the provinces agree.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, in my few remarks today I am not going to rehash the stand of my party. I think that stand was put forward very well by my colleague the hon. member for Regina City. There is, however, one point I think ought to be given a little more attention at this time.

That is in regard to the permissible income for recipients of old age assistance and particularly the group between the ages of 65 to 70. As is well known, the C.C.F. party have for many years advocated the abolition of the means test. We have been accused that this would tend to take away the incentive of the people; that has been one of the biggest criticisms we have heard down through the years, but I would like to point out that the present legislation with its means test does more in my opinion to take away the incentive from some of our older citizens than anything else of which one could think.

With this new legislation it is proposed that the pension be increased by $9 per month with a permissible income increase of one dollar. In other words these citizens are permitted to earn $1 per month more than they could before or the sum of $12 per year. It seems very strange to me that the increase has been set at this amount. I think if our present income tax structure has any justification the $1,000 basic exemption for the men and women of our country must or should be based on what is considered to be the absolute minimum on which a person could sustain themselves. If that is the case for men and women up to the age of 65 why should it not also be the case when they are aged between 65 to 70?

Formerly the total of old age assistance and what these people were permitted to earn in addition came to an amount of $720 per year and if they earned or were in receipt of anything above that total it was deducted from their pension. This legislation proposed today is certainly a step in the right direction but it still does not come even near to the basic exemption of $1,000 which I think all members of this house will agree is not sufficient to meet the current cost of living.

I would draw attention to one case which illustrates the evils of this means test clause. I know of a woman in my constituency aged 68 who was in receipt of the old age assistance; she committed the crime of falling down in one of the stores and had the misfortune to break her thigh. She spent considerable time in hospital and the doctor bills and hospital bills continued to mount. She was plagued by them on the one side and on the other side by the representative of the insurance company who was urging her to settle whatever claim she might have under the insurance coverage of this particular store. Unfortunately without proper advice she finally made a settlement with the insurance company which was just sufficient to pay her doctor and hospital bills but this settlement was classified as income for that year and two years later "retribution" started to set in. She is now 71 years of age and has just recently been informed that she was in receipt of $300 in excess of what she was entitled to receive that year while drawing old age assistance. As a result her pension is now to be reduced by the sum of $10 monthly until the month of August 1960. As I say this woman is now 71 years of age, she has not yet completely recovered from the injuries she received at the age of 68 and she is faced with a $10 per month reduction in her pension. I am not sure what provisions are made in this proposed legislation for a case of this kind, whether they will take the whole $9 in addition to the $10 they are now deducting or whether she will be able to continue with a reduction of the $10 only per month.

The stand of my party has always been, as I said before, that this means test should be dispensed with. If the government does not see fit to accept our proposal in this matter then I think at least it should allow people in the 65 to 70 years of age bracket who are in receipt of old age assistance the same amount of income as the people who receive the $1,000 basic exemption.

Mr. Stick: Mr. Chairman, I have very little to say on this matter because I think we agree that our senior citizens should be helped and from the temper of the house it would appear that this legislation should get as fast a passage as possible.

The only question of doubt in my mind at the moment is with respect to the age group between 65 and 69. If I correctly understood the hon. minister the provinces will be offered an opportunity to participate in this increase from $46 to $55. I have no doubt that this offer will be accepted readily by many of the wealthy provinces of Canada and that it will be agreeably accepted by the other provinces if they have the ability to pay for it.

My province however may be placed in the position of not being able to afford to do without this offer and at the same time not being able to afford to accept it. That is the problem in my mind and upon which I would like if I could to have some elucidation. I would ask two questions of the hon. minister and I have no doubt he will at least be able to help me make up my mind on this matter. The first question is this: can the minister inform me of the cost to the provinces of administering the Old Age Assistance Act in the age group between 65 to 69 years? Secondly, can the minister inform me if the coming dominion-provincial conference will deal with the significance of the raising of the old age pensions for the same group. In other words, will the minister be able to tell me if this question will be taken up by the dominion-provincial conference?

This is a serious matter for those provinces which might be called the "have-nots" and it is going to mean an increasing burden with respect to the financial tasks before them at the present time. I may be out of order, Mr. Chairman, in referring to this matter, but we in Newfoundland have many projects which we would like to bring to completion. We have the trans-Canada highway which we are anxious to complete and which is a very costly project for our province; we wish to increase our educational facilities and there are many other public works which we badly need and which are an economic burden on our province.

Now this offer which I believe is made in all good faith by the government is, in my opinion, going to mean an added cost to our province the extent of which I do not yet know. I would like to have this information so that I may be satisfied in my mind about giving this legislation the support that I want to give it, and I say this in no narrow political sense. I should be very happy if the minister could give me this information and if he could see his way clear to supply me with the figures.

Mr. Monteith: If I may answer the hon. member for Trinity-Conception, I will certainly be happy to have prepared the figures he mentioned. I just do not happen to have them with me at the moment. As to what is going to be discussed at the time of the dominion-provincial conference, I will say that is still open, and if the premier of Newfoundland should wish to discuss it I have no doubt it would be open to him to do so.

Mr. Stick: Has the agenda of the conference been worked out, or will it not be decided until the conference meets?

Mr. Monteith: I do not think the agenda has been worked out as yet. I think it is still possible for the matter to be discussed.

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of extending the life of this debate for any length of time but I would like to put a question to the minister, and ask him if he would be good enough to take it into consideration and give me an answer when he feels he is in a position to do so. In the event all the provinces do not pass enabling legislation for several months but are agreeable to having that legislation made retroactive to November 1, 1957, will this government then agree to a retroactive agreement with the provinces? I put that question, Mr. Chairman, because as you know, if this proposal comes into force on November 1 the provinces, in view of the fact that they have first to agree on it, may not be able to pass enabling legislation for probably, two or three months. This would mean that most of the pensioners would not be in line to receive their pensions as from November 1, but only as from the date on which the legislation is passed by the provinces. If the provinces are agreeable to having this made retroactive to November 1, will the government agree?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member's question, the provinces have to enter into an agreement with the dominion government and we are passing legislation making it effective as from November 1. The hon. member's question is whether, if the provinces cannot get this new agreement signed with the dominion government by the end of November, we would participate and make it retroactive. I would say offhand that that is a matter of arrangement under the agreement. I will have the matter looked into and give the hon. member a definite answer on second reading.

Mr. Irwin: What I said was, in the event of the provinces being agreeable, would you be?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I too have some questions to ask. I wonder if the minister could tell us how many provinces have already taken full advantage of the increase which we brought in earlier this year, the increase to $46. How many provinces have entered into an agreement of that kind?

Mr. Maltais: Before the minister answers I would like to put a question to him arising out of the remarks he made earlier this afternoon. The minister indicated that the government of Ontario has intimated to the federal government its desire that the 20-year period be reduced to 10 years. Would this indicate that the Ontario government had been consulted before this legislation was proposed?

There is another question I would like to put to him. Were all the provincial governments consulted before this legislation was proposed and, in particular, was the government of my own province consulted before this resolution was laid before the house.

Mr. Monteith: As soon as the resolution appeared on the order paper all the provinces were informed immediately, and the moment this bill receives a first reading they will receive copies by air mail. That is the only thing we can do. The implication behind the hon. member's question was: did we have conversations with Ontario; did Ontario influence our thinking? It did not. I may say that our thinking is concerned with the whole of Canada, not with the province of Ontario except in so far as it is a province among the rest of the provinces of Canada.

With regard to the question asked by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, I cannot give him the number of provinces but I would be glad to give him that information when we reach the committee stage if that would be satisfactory.

Mr. Barnett: There is one other question I wish to ask, related partly to my first question and partly to that raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. It relates to whether the legislatures of the provinces have yet had an opportunity of taking advantage of the proposals that have already been put forward here. While the minister is looking into that question he might also consider the question raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond, as far as that increase of $6 is concerned, and tell us whether or not, if a province has not as yet had the opportunity of taking advantage of that legislation and wishes to do so, that $6 increase can become effective as from the date when parliament gave its approval to that increase.

I feel this whole matter should be clarified, and if the minister prefers to give us this information when we reach the committee stage, that would be agreeable to me.

Mr. Monteith: I should be happy to give the hon. member an answer to these questions when we reach the committee stage.

Mr. Maltais: In order to make my previous question clear, may I ask the minister how he became aware of the attitude of the Ontario government regarding the reduction of this basic requirement of residence?

Mr. Monteith: Because of a letter addressed to my department; in fact, it was addressed to the former minister.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): After some urging by the former minister.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, there are two phases I would like to discuss which touch on the question of the allowable income that those people between the ages of 65 and 70 can earn without their right to pension being impaired. One has already been touched on by the hon. member for Timmins, and I would like to enlarge upon that because in handling a great many of the cases which come under the act now under discussion I sometimes find it impossible to understand the attitude and the approach of those who lay down the regulations.

I am not discussing the civil servants who have to administer them, because they have to obey whatever is put before them, but as far as those who draft the regulations are concerned I think at times they must have ice water in their veins instead of blood; it is cold blood, definitely, not warm blood.

To follow up the case in point that was raised by the hon. member for Timmins: Only recently I was approached by one of my constituents who was hit by a car and very severely injured. He was laid up for months in hospital. He is out now. He will never be the same man again. As a result of the accident the insurance company made a settlement. Well, after he paid his doctor's bills and all his other medical bills only a few hundred dollars were left over. His house had been condemned because it had no new plumbing. He put in new plumbing. It needed painting and he painted it. He was behind in his taxes and he paid his taxes. He had borrowed a little bit of money and he paid it back. He was then left with the grand and noble sum of $87. They could not touch that worthy old gentleman under the regulations because he was over 70 and therefore income does not count; but his wife is between 65 and 70. Although the money was paid to her husband as damages on account of the injury, the full amount of the money was applied as income of the wife and no allowance was made for necessary expenditures, with the result that her allowance has been cut in half.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, that is not the spirit and the intent of the act and it is not the spirit and the intent of those sections of the act which state that a person can have only a certain amount of income outside his pension; and yet that is the sort of thing that is going on and that is why I agree with others that the amount of permissible income even with the change in the resolution should be increased. It is not high enough. If that is to be the basis at the present time, in the view of the minister, then most assuredly he should pay attention to the interpretations which are being made on what is income and see that a little more of a humanitarian spirit is shown in circumstances such as have been outlined this afternoon.

There is one other phase of this question of allowable income which I find rather intriguing and interesting. It has been brought to my attention upon a number of occasions by those on pension between 65 and 70 in my own constituency. If a person on that pension has invested his capital in a home which is assessed at $4,000, shall we say, then the regulations say that five per cent of that $4,000 shall be classified as income and taken into account. Others—and I have many in my riding—who do not own their own home but who have invested exactly the same amount of money—I am using the figure of $4,000—in dominion government bonds—exactly the same expenditure of capital—are in this position. Under the regulations the interpretation of income on the $4,000 invested in government bonds, and not in a home, is entirely different from the interpretation of the income on $4,000 invested in a home. Five per cent of the $4,000 invested in a home is classed as income in the first instance and it is over double that amount in the second.

Now, a person who does not own his own home has to pay rent, and in view of the fact that as far as capital is concerned both have exactly the same amount invested, why should the one who has invested capital in dominion government bonds have to pay over double? In other words, his pension right is cut to twice the extent of the one who owns his own home. These may seem only small issues.

Mr. Monteith: I do not think they are small at all.

Mr. Winch: No. I say to some they may appear small issues but when you are a member of parliament, and when there are those who are handling the regulations and have to deal with cases of this kind, I am quite sure that it is a heartbreaking task. It is something that could be changed very speedily, either by some slight alteration in the present regulations or by a direction from the government or from the authorities concerned to make a more humane interpretation of what constitutes income. I sincerely hope the minister will give some thought to the two points. One is the raising of the allowable income, as was pointed out by others, and the other is the changes along the lines that I have suggested.

Mr. Lesage: I should like to draw the attention of the minister to a situation of which I became aware only three weeks ago. It has to do with the regulation regarding the income to be charged against the recipients of old age assistance. Take the case of a man who owns his own home which is municipally assessed for $4,000. It is exactly the same case as that which was mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver East. A constituent of mine has a mortgage of $2,500 on his property. La Commission des Allocations Sociales de Québec, which administers old age assistance, charged against the income of my constituent five per cent of the full $4,000. I do not believe this is fair. I believe it should be a charge of five per cent on $1,500, which is the municipal assessment less the mortgage. I was not aware of such a situation until three weeks ago. If I had been aware of such a situation I am sure my ex-colleague in the cabinet would have heard about it. I am just asking the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he would, whenever he has the occasion, look into that regulation and the interpretation which is made by La Commission des Allocations Sociales de Québec and take the matter up with the provincial authorities.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to the hon. member who has just spoken that the implementation of this act is carried out at the provincial level. I have every sympathy with the cases mentioned and I shall certainly give the matter every attention but the act is actually operated by the provincial authorities. We simply contribute.

Mr. Winch: Are the regulations not agreed to?

Mr. Monteith: Oh, yes.

Mr. Winch: They are jointly agreed to as between the federal and provincial authorities?

Mr. Monteith: Yes. The province operates or implements the interpretation of the regulations.

Mr. Lesage: Yes, I realize that the interpretation of the various provincial administrations might be different, but I think that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is in a much better position than I am to convince the provincial authorities of Quebec.

Mr. Monteith: I am happy to say that if the hon. member had written me about the case when he found out about it I would have looked into it then.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Monteith thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 20, to amend the Old Age Assistance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BLIND PERSONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCE AND ALLOWABLE INCOME

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Blind Persons Act to increase to fifty-five dollars per month the maximum amount of allowance in respect of which payments may be made to the provinces under the provisions of that act, and to increase the total amount of allowable income, inclusive of allowance, by one hundred and twenty dollars a year in the case of an unmarried person and two hundred and forty dollars a year in the case of a married person.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Casselman in the chair.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, the changes proposed with respect to the Blind Persons Act are completely in line with the changes outlined in the preceding resolution. First, the maximum allowance is to be increased by $9 monthly to $55. The reasons for this have already been given. Second, the income ceilings are to be increased by $120 annually in the case of unmarried persons and $240 in the case of married couples. I will indicate now the present and the proposed income ceilings: Single blind, $1,080, increased to $1,200; unmarried blind with dependent child, $1,560 to $1,680; married with sighted spouse, $1,740 to $1,980; married, both blind, $1,860 to $2,100.

It will be noted that the income ceilings for unmarried blind are now and will continue to be $240 higher than in the case of single recipients under the Old Age Assistance Act and the Disabled Persons Act. In the case of a married couple, both blind, their joint income ceiling is $480 higher than for a sighted couple on old age assistance. These differentials in the income ceilings favouring the blind have been a feature of our legislation ever since 1937 and no change is contemplated in this respect.

Approximately 8,300 blind persons are at present in receipt of benefits and it is thought that with the increase in income ceilings this number may rise to 9,000. The additional costs attributable to the $9 monthly increase may, therefore, be set at slightly less than $1 million over a 12 months period. A rise of 500 in the case load would mean another $300,000 annually or a total of $1.3 million altogether. Seventy-five per cent of this amount or roughly $1 million annually represents the federal share. The provincial share of 25 per cent will amount to about one-third of a million dollars.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, may I first of all say to you, as this is the first time I have spoken in the house with you in the chair, that I should like at this very late date to congratulate one who has been for so many years in the house on his appointment as deputy chairman of the committees of the house.

I should like to make a few brief comments on this measure as I have with regard to the others because, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare well knows, this too, like its companion predecessors, is an amendment to an act of parliament introduced by the previous administration. It is interesting to note that the opposition to old age pensions which first emanated in the other place in 1926 was based in part upon the fact that the pension was given to old people just as a matter of right instead of being given to persons who were incapacitated. Indeed, that was the position taken by the then leader of the opposition in this house, Mr. Meighen, and others who spoke on that measure. So the blind were covered up to a point only in so far as they came within the definition of the phrase "old age" under the Old Age Pensions Act until 1937 when amendments to that act were provided to include the blind in a specific way.

It is a matter of history that between 1937 and 1951 the basic amount of pensions to the blind was increased and so were the cellings on permissible outside income. In my hon. friend's recital today of the income ceilings provided by this amendment he has adhered to the standard of previous amendments in that these income ceilings are higher than the income ceilings in the two preceding measures.

In 1951 the act of which this is an amendment provided for a separate measure to cover the blind. The Canadian National Institute for the Blind in particular and some hon. members had repeatedly urged that instead of covering the blind under the Old Age Pensions Act they should be provided for under an act especially designated for the blind themselves. So it was a historic step in 1951 when we enacted a separate measure covering the blind, a measure to which my hon. friend has now provided an acceptable amendment.

The act of 1951 brought the benefits to an additional 3,000 blind persons, a total altogether, if we include those who were provided for under the Old Age Security Act, of roughly 15,000 persons. I think it is noteworthy in considering this amendment that when we brought in the Blind Persons Act of 1951 we gave effect to the requests made by the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. They had put forward a six point program and every one of those points was given accession to by the act introduced by the government headed by the present Leader of the Opposition. These six points can be found for reference in Hansard of June 23, 1951, at page 4589 and following.

As the result of that act we liberalized the eligibility tests very considerably, bringing in numbers of blind persons who otherwise would not have been included because of the regulations, and it is significant that we reduced the qualifying age from 20 to 10 years in the act of which the amendment is now proposed to be a part.

In addition, I think it should be recognized that this is by no means all that the people of Canada through the government are doing for the blind people of Canada. Under departmental estimates, which I am sure my hon. friend would not disturb, the federal government has undertaken to pay 75 per cent of surgical operation expenses in eye operations. The result has been, as I am sure my hon. friend has now been able to ascertain from an examination of the departmental records, that we have provided for the complete rehabilitation of over 50 per cent of the blind persons to whom this financial assistance for eye surgery has been provided. That has not only given these people a restoration of eyesight but it has at the same time lessened the numbers who are on the pension rolls.

This is a program of rehabilitation in which, if I may say so, I have a special interest and it is one which I know the minister will want to carry on. The federal government pays 75 per cent of the cost of that scheme, the provinces paying only 25 per cent, and it would be most unfortunate if anything were to happen to the scheme. I am not suggesting that it will, although I have seen references made by one of the provincial premiers to the effect that this was a matter that should be left to the provinces; that the federal government was mixing too much into affairs that did not concern the federal government.

Then in the act of 1951, of which this amendment that is now proposed will be a part, we brought in the blind Indians for the first time. The incidence of blindness amongst the native population, of course, is very great. This gave to those unfortunate individuals the kind of assistance which I believe they certainly deserved and needed. Then, too, as in the companion measures, the provisions in so far as the federal government was concerned eliminated the reference to the recovery of estates of deceased blind persons. This was no longer required.

Hon. members will recall that when this amendment was introduced there was a very vigorous debate in this house on the desirability of eliminating the test of eligibility, or, as it is more inaccurately but more powerfully described, the means test. The hon. gentlemen who sit now on the treasury benches were very vigorous in their denunciation of the preservation of the means test in the case of blind persons. Our defence of that position was based upon the fact that the most effective way of dealing with blind persons was not through the acceptance of that proposal but through other forms of liberalization into which we had projected ourselves. Notwithstanding that, Hansard is there as a record of the very strong opposition conducted by certain gentlemen now sitting on the treasury benches. I am not referring to the present Minister of National Health and Welfare. These gentlemen suggested that the government was remiss; that it was unfair; that it was callous in not providing for the elimination of the means test.

Now this particular amendment does not remove the means test. I am not dealing with the merits of that proposal, except to remind some hon. gentlemen of their words and the position which they took in 1951. I find, for instance, in Hansard for May 9, 1953, these words of the present Minister of Public Works on page 5070:

> So far as I am concerned, I believe the proper course to follow would be for the dominion to pay the allowance in full rather than getting 25 per cent from the provinces, and I also believe that it should be paid without a means test.

Then the Prime Minister himself, in the same debate later on, supported this point of view, as did the Minister of Agriculture and the hon. member for Peterborough. In talking about the hon. member for Peterborough, I do so with some reservation because we all know he has a special reason for his interest in the blind. I know that if he were in this house today he would find it desirable to repeat what he said in Hansard, as recorded at page 2931 on April 18, 1955. Then we have, of course, the observations of the Minister of Agriculture on April 1, 1957, page 2919:

> I was particularly sorry, Mr. Speaker, to find that the special guidance allowance, without a means test, requested by the blind was not provided in this budget.

He is speaking of the last session.

> I would hope the Minister of Finance might still provide for it at this session.

There is no means test eliminated by this amendment. There is no special guidance provided for in this amendment. While this does not affect the character of the amendment, the fact is that the hon. gentlemen who took strong positions when sitting on this side have obviously not taken the same strong positions when sitting on the treasury benches. Likewise, one could observe that while this is a fulfilment of assurances given during the course of an election contest, notwithstanding the dissatisfaction of the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska and the hon. member for Antigonish and others, this does represent in so far as it goes, the fulfilment of what was indicated but it does not deal with the formula proposed and assured for relating the benefits to the cost of living or for relating it to the gross national product.

Nevertheless, I am sure the house generally will recognize that anything we do for this particular class of citizen is something that is done with great eagerness and satisfaction. The blind people of our country, who number somewhere around 20,000, have by their own conduct given an example of self-help. They have not sought charity, but in providing this kind of assistance for them I am sure all of us, in all sections of the house, will derive much satisfaction.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, like other hon. members in the house I listened with a great deal of interest to the various speeches which have been made by the hon. member for Essex East during the debate on this series of resolutions. I cannot help but suggest that it might be rather appropriate if he were to assemble the speeches he has been making in some sort of a booklet under the heading "A Short History of Social Legislation in Canada". There should be a foreword, of course, by the hon. gentleman to whom he referred a short time ago as the present leader of the official opposition. I am sure that if the hon. member were to do so we would all find a good deal of interest in examining the booklet. It has been quite obvious to me that the speeches he has been making have been more historical in nature than in suggesting any new forward-looking policy. When we had time to do a little historical research we would find such a booklet a very handy reference to have.

In introducing this resolution the minister used the words that it was exactly in line with the preceding resolution. This brought to my mind something that had already been in the back of it, that there is a certain monotonous sameness in the resolutions which the government is now introducing when compared with the resolutions that were introduced by the previous government not many months ago. In fact it seems to me, as one who sits here as a member of the present parliament, and having been here in the last parliament, it is almost as if we were playing a phonograph record and hearing the same thing played over and over again. I had hoped that, in some respects at least, the present government might have shown a little more of the spirit of adventure, more indication of a desire to do a little pioneering work, in the introduction of proposals for changes in social security legislation. However, it would appear that, for the present at least, they are content to remain stuck in that 22-year old rut that was ploughed so deeply and thoroughly by the former administration. I suggest that is particularly true with respect to the resolution which is now before us.

Reference was made by the hon. member for Essex East to the fact that in 1951 the bill which was then introduced in respect of blind persons pensions had met a six-point program which was brought forward at that time by the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. In the course of his remarks he also made some reference to a much more recent one-point program which has been jointly put forward by the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and the Canadian Council of the Blind. In his remarks he rather gently chided some of the gentlemen who now sit on the government benches for the fact that this proposal is not in line with some of the suggestions they were making at that time with regard to the one-point program.

I must say that I could not agree more with him in expressing my regret that this resolution does not take cognizance of that one-point program which has been put forward consistently over a period of years by the blind persons' organizations. However,

I would suggest that perhaps I am in a much better position to chide the gentlemen who now sit on the treasury benches about that particular matter than is the hon. member for Essex East. On several occasions in the house over the past two or three years I rose in my place when he was still minister of national health and welfare and urged upon him the value of and the necessity for bringing into blind persons legislation of Canada this one-point proposal for guiding allowance without a means test. Perhaps if he had been a little bit more willing to listen to some of us, both those who are still on the opposition side and those who were then on the opposition side, he might still have the pleasure of being the minister of national health and welfare. Those, of course, are some of the imponderables about which we cannot know. However, I feel that this is a serious omission as far as the present proposal is concerned.

I have had a number of discussions with some of the blind persons of Canada. As I think I mentioned in the house a year or so ago, I had the privilege of sitting in at a session of the annual convention of the Canadian Council of the Blind which was held in Victoria, British Columbia. At that convention I listened to what I considered to be sound and reasonable arguments for the adoption of that principle in legislation making provision for the blind.

The suggestion was made that those suffering from that sort of disability, with all the personal fears and misgivings that it brings about, would feel much greater freedom in attempting to make themselves self-supporting, active Canadian citizens if by law some provision were made for money security that will meet their special needs. As some of my colleagues have said in respect of some of the other resolutions, I certainly have no objection to the proposal for the increase that is being provided here on the means test basis; I have no objection as far as the increase in the amount is concerned. Nevertheless I feel that the government has shown a singular lack of imagination in the approach it has made, thus far at least, to this field of social security legislation and to this matter of blind persons allowances in particular.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I too am pleased that this legislation has been introduced increasing the amount of income that is permissible. I should just like to mention one instance that has come to my attention in recent months. A gentleman who worked in the mines in 1942 was injured in a blast. He lost some of his sight and subsequently it entirely disappeared. He now obtains a small pension from the Ontario compensation board but does not quite meet the limitations that we provide in this section. He has a small farm, a wife and a couple of children. On that farm, he does some of the menial tasks that he can do and hires somebody to do some of the others. I would say that it could make no profit on a yearly basis. Recently he was receiving $9 a month under this section of the act. The Ontario administration or the section of it administering this act sent an investigator around. During the month in which they sent the investigator around he had sold two cows and a calf and his income, accordingly, was about $250. This amount, with his pension, brought him over the amount that he was allowed.

What I should like to ask is this. Would the minister be prepared to make suggestions —I presume there is an opportunity to do that in conjunction with the provincial authorities in the administration of this act— to the effect that if people are in circumstances where they are living on a farm and deriving some income from it, no claim may be made against income earned until the period of time has elapsed in which that income would be earned. In other words, to take the price of two cows and a calf and call that income in a one-month period is not reasonable having regard to the length of time it took to raise those animals. I should like to suggest to the minister that he take this matter under consideration when he is discussing the matter with the provinces and that they work out a much more satisfactory system of paying this money or of allowing income on an annual basis.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, while I welcome the provision in the amendment for a higher basic allowance, I am rather disappointed that the government has not seen fit to accede to the representations and the wishes made known by members of our blind organizations in the country with respect to a special allowance to our blind people, free of a means test, in order to provide for the special costs of blindness.

I am sure that all hon. members have from time to time had the opportunity of discussing with officials of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and the Canadian Council of the Blind the peculiar problems faced by our fellow citizens who are blind. Many surveys have been made to determine the amount or percentage of income spent by a blind Canadian which can be attributed directly to his physical disability. It has been suggested that a blind person working on a job might require an amount of 10 per cent to 15 per cent of his income in getting to and from his place of employment. It is quite obvious that by virtue of being blind there is a need for guiding or other assistance which can be met only by the provision of a blind allowance made without a means test to all Canadians who are blind.

I am quite certain that the minister has received as has every member of this house, representations in previous years on behalf of these organizations and I wonder why at this time the government has not seen fit to proceed in this field towards the provision of such a special allowance. I say this because the special allowance to which I have referred, when combined with the allowance which we are now discussing and which is now under amendment, would acknowledge the basic human needs of our blind citizens on the one hand and on the other hand would of course take care of the special clause on blindness. I ask the minister if the government would not at this time therefore consider making such a provision. These representations have been made for several years; they were rejected by the previous government and I had rather hoped that perhaps with a change in the administration they would have received more favourable consideration.

Mr. Monteith: I would like to say one or two words with regard to the matter just raised by my hon. friend from Regina City. Actually the matter of the means test would have to be taken up with the provinces; since they share the cost they would have to be consulted. The Canadian National Institute for the Blind itself is not at the moment advocating the abolition of the means test; it has been advocating most recently an increased pension with the means test, which is what we are providing for. I am aware of the fact, however, that they have also been advocating what is called a guiding allowance free of means test. There has been no representation made in that respect since I took office. I am aware of the matter, however, and undoubtedly will be receiving representations as time goes on and in the months ahead I hope to at least give it consideration.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, just on this point, representations regarding the special allowances or guiding allowances were made this year. As a matter of fact I have received several communications this year although I will admit, of course, they were received prior to the change of administration. I just wish to point out that the suggestions I have outlined here were requested by both the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and the Canadian Council of the Blind.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Monteith thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 21, to amend the Blind Persons Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DISABLED PERSONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCE AND ALLOWABLE INCOME

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Disabled Persons Act to increase to fifty-five dollars per month the maximum amount of allowance in respect of which payments may be made to the provinces under the provisions of that act, to provide, subject to regulations, for payments in respect of certain additional persons who are patients in institutions, and to increase the total amount of allowable income, inclusive of allowance, by one hundred and twenty dollars a year in the case of an unmarried person and two hundred and forty dollars a year in the case of a married person.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Casselman in the chair.

Mr. Monteith: I do not propose to duplicate on this resolution the comments which I have made with respect to the proposed increase in the amount of benefits to $55 a month; nor do I propose to repeat the explanation I have already given in the debate on the old age assistance resolution with respect to the proposed increases in income ceilings. The amendments proposed to the Disabled Persons Act with respect to the amount of benefit and the income ceilings are precisely the same as those proposed for the Old Age Assistance Act and the reasons for them are identical.

The only further amendment proposed in respect of the Disabled Persons Act which requires a brief explanation has to do with the proposed changes affecting the eligibility of certain patients or residents in certain types of institutions. It will be agreed I think by everyone in the house that the Disabled Persons Act restricts to a very extreme degree the eligibility of persons who for one reason or another are confined to different types of institutions. In effect, in respect of certain types of institutions the ban is absolute.

Paragraph (e) of subsection 2 of section 3 of the present act provides in effect that no person can qualify for the disability allowance while he is a patient in a tuberculosis sanitorium, a mental institution, an infirmary, a home for the aged, or an institution for the care of incurables. Persons in types of institutions other than those which I have mentioned are in some cases eligible for consideration under restrictions set forth in the disabled persons regulations. It is possible in other words under certain circumstances for a person who is a patient or resident in a hospital, nursing home, or a private, charitable or public institution other than those to which I have referred as being absolutely barred, to qualify for disability allowance.

I do not propose at this stage to go into all the detailed considerations which are set forth in the regulations other than to say that, generally, the regulations require that the cost of the patient's stay in the institution in question be paid for by relatives or friends or some other non-governmental authority before the application of a patient in any of these institutions can be considered.

This government considers that the restrictions placed on eligibility of institutionalized patients with respect to the Disabled Persons Act are much too severe. There may perhaps be a case for arguing that patients in mental hospitals and tuberculosis sanatoria be excluded, not so much on grounds of principle but simply because their inclusion would mean that by and large the federal government, through the Disabled Persons Act, would be contributing towards the cost of practically every single patient in a provincial mental hospital or tuberculosis institution. There may be a case for doing this; I am not arguing the merits of it at the moment. If federal support for institutions of this kind to this extent is justified, it would seem that the medium through which such financial support should be provided should be a medium other than the Disabled Persons Act. In other words, the Disabled Persons Act should be kept for its original purpose, mainly assistance to individuals, rather than be used for the purpose of having the federal government share with provincial and local authorities the admittedly heavy costs of providing these kinds of institutional care. Because of these considerations, the government does not now propose to alter the provisions of the present act with respect to persons in mental hospitals and tuberculosis sanatoria.

With respect to the other institutions which are presently under an absolute ban, namely infirmaries, homes for the aged and institutions for the care of incurables, the government proposes to move these out of the category of institutions which are subject to an absolute ban and into the category of institutions referred to in paragraph (f) of subsection 2 of section 3 of the act which will permit certain patients in these institutions to qualify for disability allowance on the same terms and conditions as patients presently qualified in hospitals, nursing homes or other private, charitable or public institutions.

A further reason for proposing this amendment has to do with the administrative difficulty that has been experienced in dealing with the different kinds of institutions referred to in section 3(2) (e) and 3(2) (f) of the act as they stand at present. It is often difficult, for example, to distinguish between homes for the aged, or infirmaries or institutions for incurables on the one hand, and nursing homes on the other.

Henceforth there should be much less difficulty. It is a relatively simple matter for example to identify a mental institution or tuberculosis sanatorium; patients in these will continue to be ineligible for the reasons already mentioned. But patients in any other types of institution, regardless of name or type, will be eligible to apply and may qualify, subject to the regulations. I may as well state frankly to the committee that we have not yet had an opportunity to examine the regulations to determine whether they, too, need changes to bring them into line with our ideas of what is fair and equitable. I propose as soon as practicable to make an examination of these regulations and to obtain the view of the provinces with regard to them. In the meantime we propose the change in the act itself to which I have made this reference.

The cost of the changes here proposed in respect of the Disabled Persons Act is subject to some uncertainty because the entire disability allowance case-load has not yet been completely stabilized. As hon. members know the act came into effect less than three years ago. At the end of the first year almost 24,000 recipients were on the rolls; in 1956 another 7,000 were added; in the first nine months of 1957 another 5,000, bringing the present total to about 36,000. Assuming the annual rate of increase continues at approximately 7,000 yearly for at least the next 12 to 18 months, we may anticipate an average monthly case-load in the next full fiscal year of somewhere around 43,000. The additional cost of the $9 monthly increase for this group would therefore be in the neighbourhood of $4.6 million, with federal and provincial shares divided evenly at $2.3 million each. Possibly as many as 1,000 individuals might be favourably affected by the amendment proposed with reference to certain types of institutions.

Disabled Persons Act

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to the statement which the Minister of National Health and Welfare has just made, particularly to the amendment which he has proposed with regard to patients in institutions. I suspect it would be more desirable for us to deal with this particular amendment when we are confronted with its actual terms in the bill rather than deal with it now.

I agree that the problem of institutional care has caused great difficulty in the administration of this measure but I am sure the minister knows already that this act—an act which was almost pioneering in its character as far as this country was concerned—requires the gathering of experience in the application of its provisions. I think it would be only fair, even though I may incur, again, the understandable chiding of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, that I should briefly give a little history about this as I have done with regard to the other measures. I do this for the purpose of impressing firmly upon hon. gentlemen opposite—though I do not think they really need this kind of impressing—that once again all these measures are amendments to measures introduced by Liberal governments.

This particular measure owes its authorship to the right hon. gentleman who is now the Leader of the Opposition. A few months after the election of 1953 he suggested this to me—and there had been no real public discussion of this, as the Prime Minister, who now shakes his head, will agree, he being in an extraordinarily happy mood today—there had been no discussion of this during the election of 1953. It was never made as a promise. Nevertheless it came into being shortly after that election as a result of the suggestion made by the present Leader of the Opposition, a man who will shortly be retiring from the public life of this country. I would like Hansard to note that I have said that this measure is due entirely to his suggestions and to some of the arrangements he made with two provinces in particular.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You are laying up treasure, now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, I will say this to the Prime Minister: If he watches me carefully he will find a way to lay up treasure.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In January.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says "January". Is that the new election date?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Haven't you heard about it?

[Mr. Monteith.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister will remember his experience in these matters only a year ago. I was not here at the time but there was an event of some importance in the month of December and if there are any traces of that event in the house at this time he may look upon himself as an exemplar of this conduct.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare said there are some 35,000 beneficiaries under this legislation at the present time. That was the figure envisaged when the act was introduced and we also estimated at that time that the federal share would cost between $6 and $8 million. I should be very interested to know, when we get into the committee stage of this bill, whether or not the minister is able to give us some more precise indication of the cost of the proposed amendment, not that there is any exception taken to it but just as a matter of information; I would like to know what the present calculations of the department are.

Under the bill, the age of eligibility is set at 18 years. That age was set in accordance with the wish of the provinces, and I stated as much when the bill was introduced. Notwithstanding this, hon. gentlemen opposite, including the Prime Minister, took exception and thought the age ought to be lowered.

As a matter of fact, the Prime Minister went further in the statement he made when he said there were many things about the Disabled Persons Act which needed review and reconsideration, and he listed them; but I am not aware that any of the things he suggested should be reviewed are now incorporated in the amendment which the Minister of National Health and Welfare has just proposed.

Some hon. gentlemen opposite did take the position that the age of 18 was too high and that it should be reduced, and I know that the minister does not intend to make any changes in that particular. Likewise, there is no change being made in the residence requirement which was fixed at 10 years when the bill was introduced in 1953.

Now, there was a lot of complaint on the part of members when the act was introduced about the definition of disability and I am sure my hon. friend, with his access to departmental history, is in a position to confirm this statement. The original definition of disability was arrived at as a result of the experience, notably in the province of Ontario, the first province to have a disability act, and it was only as a result of the insistance of the province that the original definition was introduced.

I do not hide the fact that I always found that definition restrictive. I do not know that

I ever said so in this house. Possibly I was precluded from doing so, but I did feel that it was restrictive and as a result, as my hon. friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare now knows, there was a liberalization provided for in this definition last spring. I take it that since my hon. friend is not dealing with the definition of disability this modification, this change, made in the definition of disability is acceptable to him as it was to me last spring and as it was to all of the provinces.

I understand that the definition of disability as liberalized, as modified in the spring, has now been accepted by all of the provinces and possibly when we reach discussion of the bill the minister will give us further particulars on that score.

This brings to an end of the resolution stage the important and valuable amendments which have been introduced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. All of these amendments are parts of acts previously introduced by those of us who sat on the treasury benches a few months ago. They represent part of a very important program of social welfare in this country which began first of all with old age pensions, with all of the modifications that took place, with the introducton of family allowances, with unemployment insurance, with blindness allowances, with disability allowances, with the national health program and with the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. All of these various measures are indications that the previous administration did sponsor every one of them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Bennett sponsored unemployment insurance and you people had it thrown out.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Bennett introduced unemployment insurance but the Supreme Court of Canada declared it ultra vires.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At your request.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No manipulation of words by the Prime Minister will change this fact, that every bit of social legislation on the statute books of our country, with the exception of the increase of the federal share of old age pensions in 1932, was placed there by a government under Mackenzie King or Louis St. Laurent.

Mr. Green: Don't forget your $6 increase.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Be careful about this business of indirect closure. Don't prevent a man from speaking in this house. Remember the rights of parliament can be violated by thwarting discussion.

Mr. Hodgson: You are a past master at it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is exactly the kind of situation I like. The Prime Minister is a man for whom I have personally the highest regard, as he knows. We exchanged pleasantries at 2.30 p.m. in another room and he said that that did not preclude us from taking serious issue. I take issue with the Prime Minister now. Commendable as he is as a gentleman, I cannot help but admire but at the same time deplore the tactics which he so often employs—and employed particularly in recent months—of giving to the nation the impression that at long last we have a real sponsor of social legislation in this country, when the fact is, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Hees: The hon. member never spoke better.

Mr. Martin (Essex East):—that not one bit of legislation in the social welfare field, outside of these amendments, can be attributed to the party of which my hon. friend is the head at this time, and no matter how uncomfortable he may find these statements, they are facts.

Mr. Green: They are not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And with no amount of manipulation on his part will he ever be able to deny it.

Mr. Bryce: Mr. Chairman, the Disabled Persons Act is an act in which I have been interested for a long time. In fact, on different occasions during the last parliament I complained to the then minister of national health and welfare about the administration of the act in the different provinces of Canada. The minister at that time assured me that the regulations were the same in all provinces. I have visited the 10 provinces of Canada and from what I have seen I am not satisfied with his statement because I found great differences. Every province has its own idea on the administration of the Disabled Persons Act. In some provinces the only persons who can benefit from this act are the ones who are either confined to bed or those who are unable to put on their own clothes or feed themselves.

In my travels I have met people who are able to do these things but at the same time they are too disabled to earn a living. Of course, differences in administration of the act are to be expected because each province has its own panel of doctors who may interpret the clauses of the act in a different way. One of the drawbacks of this act is the fact that it is a federal statute but administered by the provinces. When speaking on this matter before in the house I have suggested that it might be a good idea to have a meeting of all the doctors who sit on the medical boards in each different province. The outcome of their discussion might help in enabling each province to administer this act in the same way.

Another matter I should like to draw to the minister's attention regarding the Disabled Persons Act is where—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Bryce: I will be only a couple of minutes. May I have the unanimous consent of the committee to continue.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Bryce: Thank you. Another matter I should like to draw to the minister's attention regarding the Disabled Persons Act is where the province attempts to find work for a disabled person or teach him a trade in which to earn his livelihood. In some cases, after a trial of about three months, it is found that they are not fitted for work of any kind. Sustained employment for three months is necessary to determine whether strain of full employment is too much for the disabled person. However, while employed for these three months or so the disabled person must disqualify himself from receiving his allowance under the Disabled Persons Act. The risk of losing the allowance as well as the lack of certainty of the handicapped person's ability to continue employment on a full-time basis deters any handicapped person from attempting to become self-supporting. Would it not be possible for the minister to amend the act so that a person could get his pension while he is trying to establish himself and make his own living? As it is at present, immediately he starts to work his pension stops, but if it proves that his work is too much for his state of disability he has to apply again to the board to be reinstated under the Disabled Persons Act.

This may take three or four months before he gets a hearing by the board and he loses his pension in the meantime.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Shaw: I have something I want to say but it is five o'clock.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of public bills and orders.

[Mr. Bryce.]

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PRINTING OF BALLOT PAPERS

Mr. Ray Thomas (Wetaskiwin) moved the second reading of Bill No. 12, to amend the Canada Elections Act (ballot papers).

He said: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated on first reading of the bill, I have introduced this measure on a number of occasions before. Therefore I will be very brief in what I have to say because those hon. members who were here during the last parliament will be quite familiar with it and I will just say a few words by way of explanation to those who may not be familiar with the history of the measure.

The bill has two provisions. The first is to put the political affiliation of the candidate on the ballot paper. The purpose of the second is to provide that the leader of any of the political groups in the country can, if there is any doubt, send or give a letter to the returning officer indicating which of the candidates in any constituency is the official representative of the particular political party.

During the course of the debates in the last few years when I have brought this measure before the house it has been pointed out that we are not elected to the House of Commons as members of political groups but as representatives of the people of Canada and therefore political affiliation should not be taken into consideration. I think that is a rather weak argument because if hon. members will look at the seating plan of the house they will find that each of the groups in the house is definitely designated according to political affiliation. They will find also if they look at the back pages of Hansard each Wednesday that the political affiliation of every member of the house is shown in the list of members.

Whether or not we want to admit it, Canada does have a party system. Each candidate as he goes into an election does so duly nominated by his political party. He goes into the campaign on the hustings as the representative of that political party regardless of the fact that no mention of his political affiliation is made on the ballot or nomination papers. In checking the Parliamentary Guide through the years I have found numerous instances—hon. members will find that the same thing was true on June 10 last—where in past elections some of the parties have felt they did not have a chance to win a particular constituency and have deliberately gone out and selected a candidate with a name either identical to or very similar to that of the candidate whom they hoped to defeat.

When I introduced the bill last session one argument put forward against the bill was that if a man were sent to the House of Commons as the representative of a political group it might stand in his way if he wanted to cross the floor or change from the government side to the opposition side or vice versa. I should like to point out that within recent times we have had a very good example of that and apparently the fact that this person was in the house as a member of a certain party did not make a bit of difference because when he made his statement about changing he said that he was changing from one party to another.

There is only one more point I wish to raise. There are provinces in Canada which have adopted the policy of accepting the fact that we do have party politics in this country and have placed the political affiliation of candidates on ballot papers. It has worked out very well. In order to save confusion in the future, I think the best thing that we in the House of Commons can do is to adopt a practice which has been accepted and found wholly adequate in some of the provinces and thus, where there might be confusion, give the people the opportunity to know which candidate represents the party for which they would like to vote.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I most certainly am strongly in favour of the bill which has now been introduced. The practice of putting the party affiliation of the candidate on ballot papers has been in effect in the province of British Columbia for a great many years.

Mr. Pickersgill: Look what it has resulted in.

Mr. Winch: My hon. friend says, "Look what it has resulted in." I say, Mr. Speaker, that if that is the will of the people then that is the result that should take place. There is another very good thing that has happened. It has kept my hon. friend's party out of office in that province. The people do not want them.

The important thing that we should keep in mind is, what is the meaning of a democratic election? Surely it is that when voters go to the polls they should be able to be certain that they are actually voting the way they desire to vote. In all honesty, I think we all have to admit that voters are divided into two categories.

There are those who vote for an individual, and there are hundreds of thousands of them, and on the other side there are those who vote because they believe in the principles of a certain party and want to support the candidate of that party. Those who are motivated in the casting of their ballots by the desire to vote for an individual know the name of that individual. I think we all go through the experience, and it happens on innumerable occasions, of finding that those who want to cast a ballot for a particular party cannot remember the name of the candidate of that party.

Mr. Pickersgill: Shame.

Mr. Winch: My hon. friend says, "Shame". It is not so much the shame of the parties themselves because they might not have the money or the opportunity to get the name of the candidate before the people. You cannot say it is too much to the shame of the individual, either, but if there is any shame it is on the individual.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you know humans are human—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winch: This may sound strange, but humans are human and they are subject to human nature. Very often people cannot recall the name of the candidate of a specific party. I might say that in British Columbia we found the Liberals and Conservatives really topnotch in trickery when they were hoping, by a little bit of subterfuge such as picking a candidate with the same name as a person already nominated, to create confusion. This has occurred in British Columbia on more than one occasion, and on more than one occasion the perpetrator of that trickery was the Liberal party. This may be poor strategy in the minds of some people, but it does create a situation in which a voter does not know which one of these John Does or Frank Smiths, whatever the name is, is the one for whom they want to vote. The only way in which these people can be sure they are voting for the right person is to have the political affiliation marked on the ballot. If the candidate has no political affiliation, then he is shown as an independent.

Surely, the major principle is to give every voter, even if as my hon. friend said a moment ago they might at times be stupid—he said it, not I—a full opportunity to cast his vote in a way that will express his wishes. Now what is wrong with that? Is it that there are some hon. members here who are afraid to have their political affiliations marked on the ballot? I would say, surely not. Therefore, what objection can be made to having that marked on the ballot?

For many years this principle has been followed in provincial elections in British Columbia. I feel absolutely safe in saying that not one of the four parties in British Columbia would want to remove this principle because it has proved to be most successful. When the hon. member introduced this bill last year, I recall one of the objections that was raised by one of the cabinet ministers at that time was the difficulty of being able to designate who was the official candidate. So far as my knowledge goes, this occurred only twice over the years in British Columbia. When this happened the political leader immediately notified the returning officer by telegram, and under the act the candidate so designated became the official candidate and the person who was trying to get the votes and the kudos of the party to which they did not belong was put down as an independent.

So, Mr. Speaker, no matter how you look at it, from the viewpoint of experience or from the viewpoint of the voter having the right to know he is voting the way he wants to vote, I can see no objection to this measure. Of course once a member is elected and appears on the floor of this house, he is representing all the constituents. But let us not kid ourselves. We are elected according to our party affiliation, so let us be honest enough to have that affiliation marked on the ballot paper.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the sponsor of the bill has said, this bill in the same form has been before this house on previous occasions. When I was occupying a seat on the other side of this house I opposed it, as did my colleagues. I have had no reason since to change my mind about that stand, not that I am averse to changing my mind if I am convinced but in this particular case I am not convinced that the arguments which held good in our opinion at that time are not equally valid today.

In 1955, when the committee on privileges and elections sat, this question was on the agenda. It was not discussed. It was brought up, if my memory serves me well, in a letter from a Social Credit member and also in a resolution from a union local. No one in the committee spoke to it, and the thing just died a natural death. Later the same year, I believe it was, the hon. member's bill first appeared on the order paper. It was subsequently debated and was defeated. Then, again, early this year it was once more on the order paper but no action was taken; there was a debate, but the debate was not concluded.

Since then, Mr. Speaker, we have gone through another election. One would expect that if anything might change a person's mind it might be the experience one encountered in an election campaign. Like everyone else, I had many such experiences, and found some amusing and some not. I recall one particular experience which, in my opinion, was not so much amusing as it was an indication of the type of situation which the hon. gentleman has described and to which the hon. member has referred. It was late in the afternoon of polling day and I had been visiting a poll in my riding. When coming out I discovered a gentleman and his wife carefully scanning a poster which was on the outside of the poll. As I came out, they accosted me and said, "Could you tell us who is the C.C.F. candidate?" I must say, Mr. Speaker, it did cross my mind to say, "Fairclough".

Mr. Pickersgill: They probably wanted to vote against him.

Mrs. Fairclough: However, I thought that was scarcely cricket, and I explained to them that the Canada Elections Act did not permit the inclusion of party affiliations on the ballot. I suspected that they knew who I was all along, so I just left it at that. I have wondered since what they would have said to me if I had said "Fairclough". I did not have the pleasure of observing that particular reaction. I can well believe there is a different situation in some of the remote areas from what there would be in the heavily populated parts of the country.

However, Mr. Speaker, between the announcement of the election and the actual polling day I think there is ample opportunity for the various candidates to make themselves known to their constituents. Even in remote areas I find it extremely hard to believe that a voter could be in the peculiar position of not having seen a single piece of literature or of not having heard a speech from a public platform, a street corner, on the radio or on television or of not having had someone call at his home. I think it is quite unlikely because it seems to me that, if he were in such a remote location that none of these things happened to him, he would probably be equally removed from the vicinity of the poll. Consequently it is quite likely he would not get to the poll, a thing which would be most deplorable. But if he is anywhere in the neighbourhood of a poll it seems to me that he is also available to the various types of communication which are daily becoming more and more efficient.

Someone made reference to possible trickery—I think that was the term used—which might be indulged in by a party or a candidate in having put into nomination the name of someone with precisely the same name as the official candidate of a recognized party. Whether or not this is done delibrately for that purpose, it has happened several times in the past and it happened consistently in at least one riding I can think of. Yet the member who represents that riding, and who has been a member of this house for many years, manages to have himself re-elected time and time again. Apparently the people in his constituency are quite aware of his name, who he is and where his name appears on the ballot.

The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) indicated that he would suggest that if a candidate was not a member of one of the recognized parties, he should be listed merely as an independent. I think it may be interesting to note that in the last election there were at least 16 different descriptions of candidates and no one party laid claim to all of the independents. In the list I find that there are Independent Progressive Conservatives, Independent Liberals and Independent Social Credit. A well known and highly respected member of this house consistently runs under the description of Liberal Labour and I wonder whether the hon. member for Vancouver East would have him classed as an independent simply because he did not use the name Liberal by itself. Among the descriptions which appear were such intriguing ones as Canadian Democrat; and one for which I am sure no leader of a political party in this house would vouch is one who ran under the description of Liberal Conservative Coalition. If he were elected, I would not know just where he might sit. Maybe he would take turns sitting with each of us.

In any event, all of these things, if they do nothing else, point up the rare degree of individuality which we find in election candidates. It seems to me it would be a sorry day if that state of affairs ceases to exist. I do not believe that any candidate should be circumscribed by such a description as "Independent" when he has an imagination which will produce such descriptions as those which have been placed on nomination papers and of which there are many examples other than those I have mentioned.

Mr. Winch: He is still an independent and would be so designated as an independent.

Mrs. Fairclough: Who?

Mr. Winch: Anyone who tries to run under any designation such as that. He should not get votes as a Liberal or coalition candidate; he is an independent and that is where he belongs.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am sure that the hon. member has had sufficient experience to know that when the election is all over and the house is formed a great many of these people who run under such designations find their way into one of the four parties which are represented in this house. However, this is a matter which is for this house to decide. The hon. member has debated this bill previously. Many hon. members of this house have spoken to it. It is not my intention to reiterate anything that has been said previously or to rehash the debates either in this house or in committee. Each of us has his own opinion and that is the basis for the vote which we give in this house. That opinion, in the case of an affiliation described on the ballot paper, is quite likely based on the personal experience of the individual member. Without saying anything further on this measure, Mr. Speaker, may I just conclude by saying that we find we cannot support it.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I believe I am now occupying the seat that was occupied in the last parliament by the hon. lady and I find it extremely difficult to disagree with anything that she has said on this occasion. I find—probably for the same reasons as the hon. lady has found—that there are few people of my name who try to get nominated in my constituency in order to confuse the electors. If my name were Smith, Jones or Winch, the situation might be different.

I really do not feel strongly about the bill. If there were only four political parties in this country and if everybody was agreed about who belonged to which, and if everyone was agreed—as they are about the four parties in this house—as to who their leaders are, it would seem to me—although I do not think it is very important at all—not very important if the bill were passed. I think the hon. lady put her finger on a real difficulty in connection with passing this kind of legislation.

Although the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), who of course believes in regimentation anyway as a matter of principle, thinks that all sorts and varieties of men who will not fall into one of the four parties in this house should be forced to describe themselves as independents, I as a Liberal would not like to circumscribe their freedom in that way. If a man wants to call himself an aggressive Conservative or even a reactionary Liberal or even a democratic Socialist, I think he should be perfectly free to do so if he can get the necessary $200 and the necessary number of electors to sign the nomination paper. As the hon. lady said she would be, I would be very sorry to see that change.

I think that returning officers would be presented with a good many serious problems if this legislation were passed, particularly in its present form. There is a political organization—

An hon. Member: What is it?

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman could just possess his soul in patience for a second, that is precisely what I was going to explain. There is in this country a so-called political party that describes itself as the Labour Progressive party. I should like to know who would be recognized as the leader of that party for the purpose of this legislation. It seems to me that it would be perfectly ridiculous to recognize that organization which has no representation in this house as a political party and yet what would one do if someone got himself nominated, describing himself as a Labour Progressive candidate? Half the name indeed might well be confused with the name of the hon. lady's party—

Mrs. Fairclough: There is that possibility.

Mr. Pickersgill: And I am sure no one would want to see that happen. It seems to me also that the case to which the hon. lady referred, the case of my hon. friend the member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) presents very great difficulties. No one has ever doubted that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is a member of the Liberal party but the political organization to which he belongs in his own constituency has been called the Liberal Labour organization for historical reasons. There is no reason why that should be changed and I do not favour regimentation in an effort to change things like that.

In the province where I spent 30 years of my life, for many years the Liberal party has described itself, long before the hon. members opposite took up the designation, and still describes itself, for provincial purposes as the Liberal progressive party. It is no less Liberal on that account.

An hon. Member: And no more progressive.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well perhaps as the hon. gentleman suggests it is no more progressive than it used to be, but it is a good deal more progressive than these latter day progressives immediately opposite.

Mr. Hees: That is not what the people thought on June 10.

Mr. Cardiff: It is like the old story "there goes Johnny coming back".

Mr. Pickersgill: If the electorate are as ill informed as the member for Vancouver East seems to think they are—although I do not agree with him—I can only say that my constituents had no difficulty in distinguishing between the Liberal candidate and the only other candidate there was. Perhaps I could just illustrate what the difficulty might have been in my own constituency the first time I was a candidate—this would not have been a difficulty for me but for the gentleman who for a temporary period associated himself with the Progressive Conservative party and who ran against me. He had been a provincial Liberal cabinet minister and then for a very short spell associated himself, as I say, with the Progressive Conservative party and contested the election against me—

An hon. Member: As a Progressive Conservative?

Mr. Pickersgill: As a Progressive Conservative, at least that is what we understood he was. Shortly after that he joined the C.C.F. in Newfoundland and I believe he has since left that party.

An hon. Member: And left the country?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is doubtful if he supports any party at the present time but it does seem to me, while I am a Liberal and something of a radical at that—

Some hon. Members: What?

An hon. Member: Radical Jack.

Mr. Pickersgill: There are some respects in which I do feel that a real case for a change should be made out before a change is in fact made.

An hon. Member: That was done on June 10.

Mr. Pickersgill: It does not seem to me that a sufficient case to make such a change worth while has been made out and that is why I will vote against the bill, if it should come to a vote.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I am thinking for myself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear, another radical.

Mr. McIvor: I remember very well when people of different types were afraid to make a public profession. I am in favour of this bill because I do not want to be tagged to anything except that in which I believe, but I do want that tag. It may be difficult for the returning officers but with all the respect and admiration I have for my friend who just sat down,—

An hon. Member: Give him a kiss.

Mr. McIvor: —it has nothing to do with the party. He is a declared candidate and while I may not ever be a candidate again and I do not expect I will be—

Mr. Pickersgill: Do not be too sure.

An hon. Member: The majority was very small last time.

Mr. McIvor: —I say that a person should be known by the profession he makes and if he makes no profession then he should say "none".

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I think Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) must at some time have paid a visit to the province of British Columbia and have associated with some of the Liberal and Conservatives of that province because in supporting this bill—and in speaking for myself as I am sure each one of us is doing—he made a suggestion which I think has now received quite general acceptance within the province of British Columbia by the people of all political interests. I have risen on at least two previous occasions to support a bill introduced by the member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Thomas), such as the one we now have before us and I think I am doing so from some experience of the situation which was outlined by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). We have been able to compare the situation between our provincial election act which makes this provision and the federal election act which does not. I imagine in the course of the last four or five years I have probably received hundreds, certainly dozens of complaints from people in my district with respect to the fact that the federal elections act does not have in it a provision such as this bill proposes.

Now it is all very well for the hon. Secretary of State (Mrs. Fairclough) to speak of her experience in a riding like Hamilton West and to speculate upon the situation in what she has described as remote areas; to suggest that there must be something wrong with the voters if they have not had an opportunity to know who are the candidates running for the various political interests.

Mrs. Fairclough: Something wrong with the candidates.

Mr. Barnett: I would suggest to her that she might consider changing her place of abode and perhaps run in Comox-Alberni during the next federal election, whenever that may be.

An hon. Member: You would be out.

Mr. Pickersgill: You had better take care.

An hon. Member: McQuillan will give you enough trouble.

Mr. Barnett: Oh, we will deal with McQuillan if he should be a candidate again.

She would probably have the experience that I have had over and over again, of having people, quite sincerely and honestly ask her who the candidate is in her riding for the Liberal party or the Conservative party.

It is a physical impossibility in the time allotted for any candidate in a constituency like Comox-Alberni to visit all the polling districts in that constituency. I know. I set out on May 1 and travelled continuously until May 20 in areas where one does not travel by car but by plane or boat. I slept in a different place every night but even so I was able to visit only the larger polling places, and I know the same applied to the other candidates who were contesting the election. There were many polling places out of the 150 or so in a riding such as Comox-Alberni which no candidate was able to visit. That, I think, is one of the very practical considerations involved in this proposal.

As I have listened to this proposal debated from year to year I have asked myself: why all this fuss and holding up of hands in horror at the suggestion of having the political interest indicated on the ballot paper? It seems to me that this is a much more significant thing to have mentioned on the ballot paper than the occupation of the candidate as is required at present because, after all, I do not think it makes very much difference, really, whether a man is a farmer or a lawyer or a merchant; what matters more is the kind of representation he is going to give the people of his area in the House of Commons. It certainly is a matter of more legitimate concern to every voter to know what particular political point of view a candidate will be presenting here on his behalf.

I am very happy once again to support the measure introduced by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin and I might perhaps add that I have another particular reason for supporting it on this occasion, a reason which was not in my mind when I supported the bill previously. This is something I discovered in the course of a trip I made through the province of British Columbia. The hon. member for Vancouver East indicated that one of the results of a provision in the British Columbia elections act makes it a little more difficult for people to attempt to trade upon the names of opposing political interests. In the course of my travels I discovered that apparently at least one of the colleagues of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin felt it necessary to attempt to ride a little bit on the name of one of the other political interests represented in his riding.

Mr. Thomas (Wetaskiwin): Not so.

Mr. Barnett: I have in my hand an election poster. No sponsor's name appears on it, but at the bottom it says "Leboe" with a big X, and down the side it has three rather large letters which read "C.C.F." If you put on your glasses and look at it closely you will find that alongside the top "C" it says "Carmichael" and opposite the next it says "Close" and against the bottom one it says "Ferry". So if you take out a microscope, you will realize that this is in effect a magnified sample ballot and the names of the four candidates running in the election, together with the riding, are all indicated on it.

I suppose those who sponsored this particular piece of literature may have thought it was an interesting way of securing the attention of voters, but it also indicates apparently, that the present member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe) and some of his supporters thought that if he was going to be returned to this house he would have to make use of the name of the C.C.F. party. That is quite a compliment to the political organization to which I happen to belong, and I am sure that when the next election comes the voters in Cariboo will probably take the advice and vote for the real C.C.F. candidate.

I think this does provide a very good illustration of the point that the hon. member for Wetaskiwin had in mind when he moved this bill, because it would prevent or discourage certain of his colleagues from resorting to this type of practice when they are conducting their election campaign, and that is perhaps one of the reasons why the people generally in British Columbia have agreed that this proposal is a good one.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I think this bill has just about the right amount of meat in it for me to try my rather fledgling wings. There has been no real reason advanced by any hon. member who has spoken as to why this bill should be approved.

An hon. Member: Not be.

Mr. Broome: As far as the problem of names is concerned, hon. members on this side of the house are the only ones who have to fear that in the next election, and I do not think we are very much afraid of that. With regard to limiting the number of parties, as the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) would wish to do, the effect of that would be that outside the Liberals, the Conservatives, the Social Credit Party and the C.C.F., everyone else would become Independent.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Broome: But think what a terrible thing that would be, because if there were ever a reform element within the Liberal party it might become "the Liberal Liberal Party". The proposal would stultify growth in the other parties and, I think the house would agree, that is not to be desired.

With regard to the other matter which has been mentioned, a candidate who has been so inactive that his constituents do not know his name or political affiliation. Considering the many means of disseminating information throughout the riding, even remote ridings such as those covered by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni—

Mr. Barnett: They were asking me who the Conservative candidate was in the last election.

Mr. Broome: There may have been one or two who did not know, but considering the means of disseminating information now available, I doubt whether there are many people in any riding, no matter how widely spread it is, who are not aware of the names of the candidates.

If this should happen it would be because the candidate has made no news. Our newspapers are fair during an election campaign, and if a candidate has worked, his name will be in the newspapers. One might as well say it is just as unfair to put the names on the ballot paper in alphabetical order. I expect some day to hear of a bill proposing that the names be placed in a hat and drawn out.

Mr. Speaker, there is no real merit in this bill whatsoever. It is something to take the place of thinking. It is something to promote a feeling, almost designed to assist certain sections of the population to vote without knowing what a candidate stands for or whether he would be a suitable person to represent a constituency. It is an alternative to thought, and I do not see how any one who has any real feeling for a democracy could fail to understand that a voter should vote for the person whom he thinks can best represent him, and all the people of the riding, in parliament.

There is no place for such a measure as this on the statute books and I shall be delighted to vote against it if the matter comes to a vote.

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the bill. I do so with a certain amount of reluctance because of the fact that at least two of my colleagues have spoken in favour of it, but this is the kind of question upon which I am sure each member speaks his own mind and for himself and not for his party.

I cannot object too much to the first provision of the bill; in other words, the candidate who takes out a nomination paper and wishes to put on that paper something to indicate his political affiliation or interest perhaps should be permitted to do so. I think, Mr. Speaker, that that can be done right now without any amendment to the Canada Elections Act whatsoever because under the act at the present time there is provision for the candidate to place his name, his address and his occupation on the paper. If a person wishes to name his occupation as Social Credit there is absolutely nothing to prevent his doing so at the present time.

It is the second part of the bill to which I have more serious objection, and I do say that in all sincerity because I think it would create a very dangerous, if not a chaotic situation. I think the sponsor of this bill, if he thinks the thing through carefully, will probably see what I mean. It provides that in case the returning officer has any doubt as to the proper political affiliation:

> The name of the political party or interest represented by a candidate shall be shown in the manner required by the written direction, if any, of the recognized leader of such party, which shall be filed with the returning officer before five o'clock in the afternoon of nomination day: Provided that where the recognized leader of the political party or interest represented by a candidate does not file a written direction the name of that party shall be shown in the manner in which it appears on the nomination paper of the candidate.

In other words, the recognized leader of the party shall provide the proper designation of what is considered to be the official candidate. One serious objection to that has already been raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) which I think is quite valid. That is, it would force the hand of the returning officer, and put him in the position of having to recognize a poltical party which perhaps today does not exist, or evists only in the minds of those who are interested in that particular movement. I think I can cite an example. The comumnist party of Canada no longer exists except in the minds of the communists. Their official designation now, as far as I can gather it, is Labour Progressive. They are not considered to be, or recognized to be, a major or even a minor political party in Canada. But every time someone attempted to run as a Labour Progressive candidate, or even as a communist candidate, he would have the right, under this legislation, to have the leader of his party recognized by the returning officer in his constituency. I think that is a sort of left-handed way of doing something which the sponsor of the bill himself would not want to do.

Not only that, but the bill provides that the recognized leader of the party concerned shall do the designating. Now who is the recognized leader? I wish to point out to my Social Credit friends that up until three weeks ago in the province of Manitoba the Social Credit movement had three leaders and none of them was recognized by the Social Credit party. Who is going to be the recognized leader? Who is going to do the designating in that province?

They would find themselves in an impossible situation, where the returning officer would first of all have to be the person to decide what is a recognized party; and, second, who is the recognized leader of that party.

With all due respect to the sponsor who has good intentions I wish to point out that the returning officer in a constituency has enough to do, within the very limited time provided under the elections act to do all the things he is called upon to do, without having to decide who are the recognized parties in the country and who are the recognized leaders of the recognized parties. I would also like to say there are a good many returning officers who would not be qualified, in my opinion, to do that. They would not have the knowledge, nor do I think it is their responsibility to do that kind of recognizing.

Just in case the sponsor of this bill might think I am opposing it because I personally have reluctance to make known on my ballot, or on my nomination paper, what my affiliation is, I wish to tell him that is not the case. I am a member of the Co-Operative Commonwealth Federation and have been for well over 20 years now, and I have been a candidate under the sponsorship of that party on seven different occasions, and I have no intention of changing that affiliation. Therefore it is not a personal matter with me; but I do want to point out the weaknesses of the bill. My advice to the sponsor would be this—his intention I respect—the only step which I think could be properly taken in these circumstances is for him to withdraw his bill, think the matter through carefully, and present a different type of bill with which he may have greater success.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

On motion of Mr. Herridge the debate was adjourned.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the leader of the house what is the business for Monday.

Mr. Green: On Monday we plan to carry on with the discussion on the resolution concerning pensions for the disabled, and then to take second reading and committee stage of the bills amending the Old Age Security Act and the Old Age Assistance Act and then the Blind Persons Act, followed by the resolutions standing in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and then the throne speech debate.

Mr. Chevrier: I wonder whether the leader in the future, when he announces the business, would consider referring to the items on the order paper. It has been brought to my attention by some of the new members that when there are several resolutions standing in the name of a minister sometimes it becomes confusing. I wonder whether the house leader would not just refer to item 3, as an example. I do not mean that he should do it now, but perhaps in the future.

Mr. Green: I would be glad to.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

1. Has land been acquired in the city of Sudbury for a new armoury?

3. No.

4. A decision as to the construction of an armoury has not yet been reached.

MIRAMICHI OYSTERS—ELIMINATION OF DISEASE

Question No. 96—Mr. McWilliam:

1. What steps have been taken towards eliminating the disease prevalent among Miramichi oysters on public and private beds?
2. What steps have been taken to re-stock disease-free oysters on public and private beds in the Miramichi estuary?
3. When is it expected that disease-free oyster fishing on the Miramichi will be returned to normal?

Answer by: Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries):

1. Immediately on the occurrence of oyster mortalities in the Miramichi area, the Department of Fisheries instituted a complete system of observation and checking. The data gathered and examination of dead and dying oysters indicated strongly that the disease was similar to that which decimated the Prince Edward Island stocks in the 1920's. On this basis transfers of Prince Edward Island oysters resistant to the previous disease were made to two experimental areas—500 barrels to the Wallace-Malagash area in Nova Scotia and 1,000 barrels to the Shippegan area in New Brunswick—to test their resistance to the new disease.

2. If mortalities from the 1957 experimental transfers are normal in the spring of 1958, it is proposed to carry out a similar test transplantation immediately in the Miramichi area. This will certainly include a portion of the public beds, and also the private leases if agreement is obtained from the government of New Brunswick which is responsible for oyster leasing in the particular district.

3. If the transfer of disease resistant oysters is successful, the oyster fishery in New Brunswick could return to normal in five to eight years. If the fishery must rebuild from local groups of resistant resident stocks, the recovery period could occupy from a minimum of twice the above time to much longer depending on the size and distribution of the stocks which survive the disease.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TABLING OF FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on October 30 I tabled the correspondence with the provinces concerning the forthcoming conference. With the leave of the house I should now like to table a copy of a letter I addressed on October 31 to all the premiers on this subject.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to table this document?

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): May I suggest that the same practice be followed as with the other letters, and that it be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, with the leave of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreeable that this document be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(For text of correspondence referred to above, see appendix, page 753.)

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 22, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSTRUCTION AND PURCHASE OF BRANCH LINES IN MANITOBA

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize and to provide for the construction by Canadian National Railway Company of a line of railway from Optic lake to Chisel lake in the province of Manitoba, being approximately 52 miles, at a total estimated expenditure of $8,840,000, not to be exceeded by more than 15 per cent; and also to authorize the purchase from the International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited, by the said railway company, of a line of railway from a point on the Hudson Bay Railway line at or near Sipiwesk to a point on the Burntwood river at or near Mystery lake in the province of Manitoba, a distance of 30 miles, more or less, at a price not exceeding $5,400,000; to authorize the issue by the said railway company of securities that may be guaranteed by Her Majesty in right of Canada to finance the construction and purchase of the said lines; and, in order that the said railway company may forthwith proceed with construction and the purchase of the said lines of railway, to authorize temporary loans to the said railway company out of the consolidated revenue fund upon terms and conditions prescribed by the governor in council and secured by securities of the said railway company.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

P.F.A.A. INSPECTORS, THE BATTLEFORDS, SASK.

Motion No. 11—Mr. Campbell (The Battlefords):

For a return showing the names of (a) all persons appointed as P.F.A.A. inspectors, since September 1, 1947; (b) all former P.F.A.A. inspectors re-employed since September 1, 1947, in the constituency of The Battlefords.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for The Battlefords is attending the United Nations and I feel confident there is a typographical error in the date. I should like this motion to stand until I can get in touch with him. I believe I am in a position now to amend the date. It should be 1957 where 1947 appears.

Mr. Speaker: It should be 1957 in both places? Is it the pleasure of the house to permit this amendment of the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion to stand?

Mr. Coldwell: If the house agrees to the amendment I think the motion can be moved.

Mr. Charlton: In view of the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I would ask the hon. member if he would allow this motion to stand.

Motion stands.

Motion No. 12—Mr. Stuart (Charlotte):

For a return showing the names and addresses of all persons residing in the Mackenzie federal constituency employed by the Prairie Farm Assistance Act division of the Department of Agriculture: (a) January 1 to June 10, 1957; (b) June 10, 1957, to date.

Mr. Coldwell: On behalf of the hon. member for Mackenzie, I would move this motion.

Mr. Charlton: For the same reason I suggested earlier, perhaps the hon. member would allow this matter to stand until the minister returns.

Motion stands.

TAYLOR, MARSHALL AND COMPANY

Motion No. 15—Mr. Pickersgill:

Mr. Pickersgill: I am quite agreeable.

Motion stands.

[Mr. Stuart (Charlotte).]

TRADE

U.K.-COMMUNIST CHINA—EXPANSION OF EXPORTS AND IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's statement last Thursday that British recognition of the Chinese government had added little to the expansion of United Kingdom trade with China, will he examine the trade returns between those countries since the Korean war, which show a steady and significant expansion from 1951 to the end of 1956? I may say I have the official figures which I obtained from the trade commissioner's office this morning, and they show quite a significant expansion from 1952. United Kingdom exports and imports in 1952 amounted to approximately $22 million and in 1956 to approximately $65 million.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR SEPARATE TRAFFIC LANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last, on the orders of the day, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) asked if I had taken cognizance of a press report of a statement made by a member of the Canadian board of marine underwriters to the effect that separate traffic lanes for upbound and downbound traffic should be provided on the St. Lawrence river. The hon. member also asked if I would comment on the suggestion.

The report was brought to my attention, and the opinions I received from my departmental officials led me to believe the incidence of accidents on the St. Lawrence is not excessive in relation to those occurring in comparable waters in other parts of the world. I was rather interested to note, too, that the press report in question stated a relatively small percentage of the accidents were directly attributable to the width of the channel. The department is at present carrying out a dredging program which is aimed at widening the existing channel to 800 feet, generally speaking, and this program involves an expenditure of more than $3 million each year. It is proposed to complete this program and determine the traffic potentialities of this widened channel before planning additional channels.

STATEMENT AS TO WHARF IMPROVEMENTS ON SAGUENAY RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): On October 31 the hon. member for Charlevoix asked me whether wharf improvements on the Saguenay river are to be carried out to facilitate the proposed new ferry service to cross that river between Baie Ste. Catherine and Tadoussac. The wharf construction at Baie Ste. Catherine is already under way, and tenders have been called for the wharf improvement at Tadoussac, although no contract has as yet been let.

HEALTH INSURANCE

MANITOBA—TREATMENT OF MENTAL AND TUBERCULAR PATIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government given a firm commitment to the province of Manitoba that tuberculosis and mental illness will be included in the federal government's share of the cost of the public hospitalization plan? If so, when was this commitment given and in what form?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no commitment, direct or indirect.

GRAIN

REGINA—LOADING INSTRUCTIONS TO C.N.R.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, of which I have given him notice. Is it a fact that instructions have been issued to freight officials of the Canadian National Railways in Regina to stop loading grain in 40-ton cars and that 60-ton cars only are to be used for loading grain for Vancouver?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. As soon as I received that notice I immediately got in touch with the Canadian National Railways and they contacted their western representatives. They have not had a report back and I am therefore not able to answer the hon. member right now.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO MONETARY INCENTIVE TO SHIP THROUGH EASTERN PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. What monetary incentive in cents per bushel is being offered to purchasers of Canadian wheat for taking delivery at eastern Canadian ports rather than at Fort Churchill and Vancouver?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will take this question as notice and give an answer later.

[Later:]

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SALE TO INDIA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I note an announcement made by the Prime Minister to the press on Saturday that some arrangement has been made between Canada and India with regard to the shipment of $7 million worth of Canadian wheat to India under the Colombo plan.

I have two questions to ask. First, would the Prime Minister be able to give us any further details with regard to that arrangement and what the adjustment is in connection with the Colombo plan? Second, is it now to be the policy of the Conservative party, which forms the government, to make its announcements outside the house rather than inside?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to answer the last question first, there was an announcement made at the meeting of the Colombo plan nations on Saturday, so there was a simultaneous announcement made here. There was no question whatever of announcing a matter of policy outside the house. Because of the announcement being made there on Saturday it was necessary to make a simultaneous one here.

As far as the general plan is concerned, I will secure for the hon. gentleman full details as to what the price will be, that is what actual value is being allowed to Canada on each bushel, and I will report in a day or so as soon as I have heard from the minister without portfolio who is the Canadian representative to the Colombo plan meeting.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR SETTING UP OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY FUTURE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of recent developments in intercontinental ballistic missiles and Sputnik No. 2, and a widespread belief that Canada's program is largely out-dated and obsolete, will the government consider referring the whole question of Canada's future defence program to a special committee of this house for study and recommendation?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the government will be pleased to give consideration to that proposal. However, that does not mean it will be accepted.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of National Defence. When the government is considering the suggestion made by my friend the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), will he look up the numerous resolutions moved by the Conservative party to set up a special committee of this house to inquire into defence matters?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the whole background will be gone into.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supernumerary supplementary question of the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister resolved the motion of the hidden fire that lies within his breast and decided to recommend the appointment of a committee on defence expenditure?

Mr. Pearkes: Have I decided what? Would the hon. member please repeat his question?

Mr. Herridge: I said, Mr. Speaker, has the minister resolved the motion of the hidden fire that lies within his breast and decided to recommend the appointment of a committee on defence expenditure?

Mr. Pearkes: The hidden fires in my breast—if that was the question—are only kindled by the desire to give the best kind of defence possible for Canada.

U.S.-CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO JOINT AIR DEFENCE COMMAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. I regret that I have not given him notice of it. It is with respect to the new continental air defence command of the United States and Canada of which Air Marshal Slemon has been appointed deputy commander. My question is this. Is there an agreement between the United States and Canada as to the role of the Royal Canadian Air Force units which will come under the command of the joint headquarters?

[Mr. Argue.]

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the point of setting up the joint headquarters was to work out the role not only of the Royal Canadian Air Force squadrons but also the squadrons of the United States air force in defence of the North American continent.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Was there an agreement?

Mr. Henderson: My point was this. Is there an agreement?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker, there is no formal or written agreement at the present time.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. I understood him to say in answering the member for Kingston (Mr. Henderson) that there is no agreement between Canada and the United States regarding the continental air defence command. May I ask him is there an order in council, or is there a minute of council, or is the only document that which he tabled the other day appointing Air Marshal Slemon?

Mr. Pearkes: I tabled the order in council appointing Air Marshal Slemon and the joint release which was made by the secretary of defence in the United States and myself regarding the setting up of this joint integrated command. It was considered desirable that the two commanders should get together and work out the exact details of their relations before any more formal agreement should be made defining exactly the role of the two commanders in relation to the civil power, and that note is now in the course of study.

BASE METALS

INQUIRY AS TO STOCKPILING TO ESTABLISH FLOOR PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Having regard to the latest Russian threat to western security and mounting unemployment in the mining industry, would the Prime Minister give further consideration to the proposal of the mine-mill union for establishment of a floor price by stockpiling the strategic base metals, copper, lead and zinc, thus preventing almost certain closure of one of British Columbia's oldest and largest copper producing mines?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question of stockpiling is a question for determination as between Canada and the other nations within NATO and in particular with the United States of America. At present there is no intention to stockpile, but in the light of events as they occur no doubt further consideration will be given when and if that is necessary.

HOUSING

RESOLUTION OF NATIONAL RETAIL LUMBERMEN'S ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the statement of the Minister of Labour on television last evening outlining the alarming unemployment situation now prevailing in this country, is the Minister of Public Works now prepared to advise this house if Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has reached any decision to implement the recommendations contained in the brief submitted by the national retail lumbermen's association almost two months ago?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I explained to the hon. member the other day that this brief is under consideration. At the moment we are very much interested in the plan we inaugurated a few weeks ago under which we set aside $150 million for the construction of low priced homes. That plan has been going extremely well. The last report I had, which was for the week before last, indicated that nearly $120 million had been either approved for lending, or applications for loans were under consideration. As yet there has been no decision with regard to the matter submitted in the brief to which the hon. member referred.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Does the minister realize that a very small proportion of that amount of $150 million is now going to the maritime provinces?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the blame for so small a portion of this money being taken up by the Atlantic provinces rests with the builders in those provinces, or other bodies. The money is there, available, and if applications for it are not made, responsibility for that rests with the people in those provinces.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works a supplementary question in that regard. The minister intimated that $150 million had been approved for the different provinces. Can he tell us how many actual starts have been made, since this $150 million was made available, in each of the provinces?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the figures for actual starts are not available. A person applying for a loan has 90 days after the loan has been approved within which to commence building, and for that reason it is very difficult to get up to date figures with regard to starts. But I can assure the hon. member that particularly in his own province of Alberta the plan is proving very successful.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Only 12 starts have been made in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): May I ask the Minister of Public Works a supplementary question with regard to the $150 million provided for housing. Can he inform the house as to the terms of the arrangement by which the chartered banks are, I believe, acting as agents in this matter?

Mr. Green: I think that question should go down on the order paper. I am not in a position to answer it without notice. The terms are contained in the agreements.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MONTREAL—STATEMENT ON REPORTED LAY-OFFS AT CANADIAN CAR COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Marler) referred to a press report to the effect that the Canadian Car company had started to lay off workers in its Turcotte and Dominion plants, and this lay-off was ascribed to the cancellation by the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways of orders for new equipment. The hon. member asked me if I would make inquiries as to whether there was a cancellation or whether no order was placed as anticipated.

I have spoken to both railway companies, and the Canadian Pacific advise me that no orders were placed with the Canadian Car company and then cancelled, but that they have now placed an order with that company for 300 gondolas, and in addition have ordered 200 stock cars. The Canadian National advise that they did not place an order for gondolas with the Canadian Car company.

Mr. Marler: May I ask a supplementary question. Am I to infer from the minister's reply that no order was placed by the Canadian National and afterwards cancelled?

Mr. Hees: That is correct. That is what I am advised by Canadian National.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—REPORTED LAY-OFFS IN LAURENTIDES DIVISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Villeneuve (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of the reports that are current in my riding in regard to the Laurentides division that 35 to 40 men are to be laid off from the Canadian National Railways on next January 1 in order to change its sections from seven miles for three employees as at present to 12 miles for four employees in the future, in spite of the numerous curves and other troubles of this railway crossing a hilly country?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. It was delivered to my office just as the house opened this afternoon, so naturally I have not had a chance to look into the specific details he has mentioned. However, I think I can answer his question in answering a question put to me by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and similar questions raised by other hon. members of this house during the past few days. I would have replied to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre several days ago but I have been waiting until he returned to the house.

The question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on October 29, as reported at page 504 of Hansard of that date, was in the following words:

> —is the Minister of Transport aware of the reports that are current in Winnipeg that 34 men are to be laid off from the Canadian National shops at Transcona each month between now and June, together with eight men to be laid off each month from the Fort Rouge shops? What steps is the government taking to prevent these lay-offs?

I brought the hon. member's question to the attention of the management of the Canadian National Railways, who advise that the principle must be recognized that the normal environment of the railway industry is such that the level of its working force must rise and fall under the influence of many factors. For example, in the early spring and through the period of good weather work is carried out on roadbeds, bridges, ballasting, tie renewals, re-lay of rail, construction of spurs, sidings, new branch lines, signalling facilities, buildings, and so on. In the winter months, of course, most of these activities practically come to a standstill, but there are then certain labour needs which arise out of winter operations in the form of snow and ice clearance, flooding, and the general hazards of difficult weather conditions.

The railway must adjust also the fluctuating demands for its services in the transport of goods and people, and it is obvious that as traffic declines there will be adjustments in railway needs for employees involved. The Canadian National traffic, in common with all other railroads on this continent, is suffering a sharp decline. Canadian National Railways traffic volume is currently running at a rate 15 per cent below that of last year. When traffic declines there is a lessened demand for output of repairs to locomotives and car equipment.

The impact of technological development has a very definite effect upon employee requirements. This will be apparent in the current dieselization program, but it should be realized that it spreads into other forms of mechanization which affect the categories of employees required by the railway. In this connection the Canadian National has done its utmost to deal with necessary adjustments in a considerate manner. It is not a question only of the actual numerical demand for employees but also the fact that a need for new types of skills and experience arises while other types are no longer required. Canadian National has taken very active steps to provide training and to give opportunities to employees to acquire the skills they need to meet these new requirements.

In the face of the present traffic situation, certain adjustments are necessary. While the present forecasts show a sharp decline and thus reduce immediate work requirements, the trends are being kept under close survey so that as soon as an improvement becomes apparent steps can be taken to keep work output to the needs of traffic.

I should say also that management, sensitive to hardships caused by reductions in staff, is not being guided solely by strict economic considerations, and is making every effort to program the work so that the impact of the serious traffic decline on employee levels may be cushioned as much as possible, and every effort is being made to find alternative employment for those who may be affected. The general level of employees in the first eight months of this year for the Canadian National Railway system is down by less than 1 per cent as compared with the same period last year.

INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT, EDMONTON—DISPUTE BETWEEN TRUCKERS' UNION AND CONTRACTOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. H. S. Thompson (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, notice of which was given just a short time ago. I believe it might be more properly directed to the Minister of Public Works, but due to the fact the Minister of Transport had the privilege of being the main attraction at the opening ceremonies with regard to the construction of the airport in Edmonton I felt I should like to direct my question to him. Has the minister received a submission from the truck owners' union in Edmonton charging unfair practices by the contracting firm engaged in construction of the international airport near Edmonton? If so, does the minister intend to take immediate steps to investigate and solve amicably any misunderstanding between the union and the contractor?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. He is quite correct that it was delivered to my office just as the house opened. The answer is that representations were received by my department, and the district director of air services at Edmonton was asked to get in touch with the union. I understand that the district director has been and still is in consultation with the union, and every endeavour will be made to do all the department can in the light of the conditions of the contract.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS EAST OF LAKEHEAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister any further information on the pipeline construction contracts east of the lakehead, especially in view of the week end public statement by the Canadian construction leader which complained about the ignoring of Canadian companies—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows he should be asking for information, not giving it. If he undertakes to add statements of that kind to his question he can expect it to be ruled out of order. If the hon. member would like to ask the first part of his question again he may do so.

Mr. Fisher: Thank you. I would like to ask the minister whether he has any more information on the pipeline construction contracts east of the lakehead.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite clear what the hon. member is asking for. If he would express himself more specifically perhaps I could help him.

Mr. Fisher: Have the contracts been awarded yet? Have any of them gone to Canadian companies?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of that question and give the answer in due course.

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO EXPLOSION IN SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister assure the house that the board of transport will make an immediate inspection and report on the latest huge explosion on the Trans-Canada pipe line in the vicinity of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan; and can he advise what steps are being taken to make sure that the number of such disastrous explosions will be kept to a minimum?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will draw this question to the attention of the chairman of the board of transport.

[Later:]

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON EXPLOSIONS IN MANITOBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister report on any results of investigations by the board of transport commissioners into Trans-Canada pipe line explosions in the province of Manitoba, as he said on October 21 would be made to the house?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I took up this matter with the board of transport commissioners with a view to ascertaining whether or not there was anything that could be done by investigation prior to the actual laying of the pipe, and as yet I have not had any information. However, I will make inquiries at once and let the hon. gentleman know, possibly the day after tomorrow.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I ask that at the same time the Prime Minister inquire into the reported explosion near Mortlach, Saskatchewan, which apparently was of a much more serious character than the ones in Manitoba?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, I shall do that. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the previous word we had was that no investigation in advance could possibly show latent defects which would permit of explosions such as took place at Mortlach and elsewhere.

NATIONAL PARKS

INQUIRY AS TO REVISION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I wonder if the minister is now in a position to answer the question I asked the other day. He said he would give an answer today.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I was absent from the house when the question was asked and my colleague and deskmate brought the matter to my attention. The question asked by the hon. member for Bow River, as reported at page 652 of Hansard of November 1, is as follows:

> Does the minister intend to revise the park act in order to rescind some of the impractical regulations in that act, and does he intend to review the unfair water and sewer rates levied by the department in Banff in order to give fairer treatment to the people of that town?

I wonder if the hon. member for Bow River could give me more details as to the regulations he has in mind, and tell me particularly what water and sewer rates are unfair so I will know what to inquire into?

POWER

NOVA SCOTIA-NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LOCATION AND COST-SHARING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is it true that the government has reached a decision on the location of new power plants in the maritime provinces and has worked out a cost-sharing arrangement with the provinces on this matter? Would the minister consider making a statement to the house on these two points?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like nothing better than to make a statement at this time, but as I said in answer to a previous question of this sort we are very busy working out some of the final arrangements in connection with this matter and I expect an announcement will be made very shortly in answer to the question of the hon. member.

NOVA SCOTIA-NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR COPY OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. As the premier of Nova Scotia saw fit to announce on Friday last that an extension to the Trenton plant had been approved and that a 50,000 kilowatt plant at Saint John, New Brunswick, had also been approved, and as this must be part of the recommendations of the Montreal Engineering report—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Robichaud: —is the minister now prepared to make this report available to the house?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that the premier of New Brunswick made no such statement.

Mr. Robichaud: I said the premier of Nova Scotia. The statement was made in Halifax on Friday last.

Mr. Nowlan: It was not. That is absolutely false.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Keep your temper. Nobody wants it.

Mr. Nowlan: All right; keep your own.

NEWFOUNDLAND—APPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question. Does the government's policy of assistance in the development of power apply to the province of Newfoundland and, if so, have there been any discussions of any kind with the government of that province?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the government's policy in connection with the maritimes, as far as we are dealing with the matter this session, was announced in the speech from the throne, and that is what we are carrying out at present. To my knowledge there has been no discussion with the premier or government of Newfoundland at this stage.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words Newfoundland is forgotten.

An hon. Member: It was when you were in the government.

UNEMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Villeneuve (Roberval): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. What provinces have signed agreements with the federal government relative to the Unemployment Assistance Act and has the government of the province of Quebec sounded out the federal government with a view to such an agreement?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. I would point out that British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland have signed agreements. There has been no correspondence or discussion with the province of Quebec since this government took office.

NATURAL RESOURCES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—IMPOSITION OF SPECIAL MINERAL TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I intended to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, but in his absence I wonder if the parliamentary assistant would take the question as notice? Will the minister seek the advice of his law officers and inform the house as to whether British Columbia has a right, under subsection 2 of section 91 of the British North America Act, to impose a special tax on mineral resources, the declared effect of which is to discourage the export of iron ore from that province?

AIRPORTS

STATEMENT AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer the following question which was put to me last Friday by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Maltais).

Does the hon. minister intend to recommend to the house that the necessary steps be taken to modify the basis of subsidies granted to the different municipalities in this country which request the assistance of his department for the construction of airports?

May I ask him, as a supplementary question, whether his department has taken a decision concerning the contribution to be made to the airport of Charlevoix, in the province of Quebec?

I may say that the general policy concerning subsidies granted for the construction of airports is now under study. In reply to the second part of the question, I should like to point out that it is proposed to seek approval for the inclusion, in next year's estimates, of an additional subsidy to help construction works at La Malbaie airport.

TELEVISION

MARITIME PROVINCES—STATEMENT AS TO COVERAGE IN FRENCH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): On Thursday last the hon. member for Kent (N.B.) asked me what progress was being made by the C.B.C. in providing television coverage in the French language in the maritimes. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation advises me that under present policies, if private stations wishing to carry French language programs to areas in the maritime provinces were licensed, the C.B.C. would provide French language national network service to them, but no such stations have yet been established.

INCOME TAX

QUEBEC—STATEMENT ON TAXATION OF CONSORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): On October 25, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George asked me a question with respect to a recent decision of the income tax appeal board involving community of property in the province of Quebec. I am advised that the law officers of the Department of National Revenue have been in consultation with the officers of the Department of Justice, and as a result of such consultation an appeal from that decision is now being taken.

Disabled Persons Act

DISABLED PERSONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCE AND ALLOWABLE INCOME

The house resumed, from Friday, November 1, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Monteith—Mr. Courtemanche in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Disabled Persons Act to increase to fifty-five dollars per month the maximum amount of allowance in respect of which payments may be made to the provinces under the provisions of that act, to provide, subject to regulations, for payments in respect of certain additional persons who are patients in institutions, and to increase the total amount of allowable income, inclusive of allowance, by one hundred and twenty dollars a year in the case of an unmarried person and two hundred and forty dollars a year in the case of a married person.

Mr. Shaw: When the hour of five o'clock arrived on Friday and Your Honour asked if the resolution carried, I suggested that I had one or two observations to make and therefore did not desire it to carry at that time. Let me emphasize that my action did not in any sense result from a desire to hold up action with respect to the resolution.

The resolution itself, Mr. Chairman, makes provision for three things. It goes without saying that since a good many of us in this house have pressed for these very things over the years, we do intend to support them. Ever since the Disabled Persons Act became law of course we tried to impress upon the previous government that the allowance provided was inadequate, particularly in the light of the constant increase in the cost of living. The provision of $55 a month now brings the allowance in line with the allowance under the Old Age Security Act, the Old Age Assistance Act and the proposed change in the Blind Persons Act. This is as it should be, even though I would once more emphasize that we feel that the sum of $55 could be increased still further.

We are pleased, Mr. Chairman, to find that certain disabled persons previously precluded from benefits under this act are now to enjoy certain of these benefits. I make specific reference, of course, to disabled persons who are inmates of infirmaries, homes for the aged, as well as inmates of institutions for the care of incurables. It could never be understood why those persons should have been more or less singled out and why they should have had a complete ban placed upon them so far as this act is concerned. We are therefore very pleased to find that the government has at least gone this far.

In making a statement to the house the other day the minister did refer to the inmates of two other types of institutions, those in tuberculosis sanatoria and in mental institutions. I do not intend to debate these two specific subjects at this time. The minister did say that if help is to be given to the provinces then probably it should be done in another way. All I am going to say at this time is that I hope the federal government is giving serious consideration to granting further assistance to the provinces to enable them to meet these great burdens which they have to meet, namely that of providing adequate care and treatment for the inmates of mental institutions and tuberculosis sanatoria.

This measure also provides that the ceiling on allowable income, including pensions, shall be raised as was the case with the other pieces of legislation to which we have given consideration up to this point. Those things I have mentioned as being the changes in this proposed legislation are good. I have no hesitation in saying that. However, I am still troubled about one or two other things. Before going directly to those things may I just refer for a moment to one or two things stated by the former minister of national health and welfare when speaking on Friday.

The hon. member for Essex East referred to the election of 1953 and he said something like this. He said there had been no real public discussion of disabled persons pensions during that election, and in fact he left the impression that actually, even after the election of 1953, little thought or consideration was being given by the public to this question of our disabled citizens. Of course, the former minister is sometimes given to, shall I say in all kindness, modest exaggeration. This was at least modest exaggeration, because both inside and outside of this house prior to 1953 this subject was being keenly and actively debated.

I think that fact arose in part from two things. The Ontario government was the first provincial government in Canada to introduce legislation according certain benefits to our disabled citizens. Alberta followed reasonably closely on the heels of Ontario. Until 1953 I believe those were the only two provinces in Canada with legislation that provided benefits to our disabled citizens. I do not know, of course, as to the fact but I rather fancy it would be quite fair to say that when the legislation came down here, it came down substantially as a consequence of public pressure and—this is point No. 2—the realization that Conservative Ontario and Social Credit Alberta were maybe getting too much credit from the citizens of this country and maybe it was necessary to do something about that matter. But regardless of the cause, we were happy to see that legislation brought into the House of Commons.

On Friday the former minister of national health and welfare said those restrictive regulations respecting eligibility for disabled pensions resulted from insistence on the part of at least one province that they be left as rigid as they turned out to be. He said "the province" and I can only take it, of course, that he meant Ontario. In my own province of Alberta this is what we discovered when the federal legislation became operative. It had the effect of excluding 50 per cent of those in the province of Alberta who had been qualifying for disabled persons pensions under our provincial legislation.

The consequence of that rigid test of eligibility is this. My province of Alberta has been forced to carry two disabled persons acts, let us say, on its shoulders. They are partners under the federal act and they pay their full share of the cost. In addition they are maintaining the act which they had prior to the passage in this house of the disabled persons legislation. Under it they are not only carrying those who qualified prior to the date of this legislation, but they are maintaining it as an instrument under which many of our citizens in Alberta who cannot qualify under the federal act will not be barred from pensions resulting from disability.

I think serious consideration should be given right now to modifying the regulations, or at the least the interpretation of the regulations, under which we ascertain whether or not a person is disabled. I have seen some rather tragic cases. One of the most tragic I have witnessed is this. Here is a person who, on the basis of the best possible medical advice, is totally disabled at the present moment and may be so disabled for three or four years. Under a strict interpretation of the regulations—and they are being interpreted in this way by many provinces—such persons are not permitted to qualify for disabled pensions because they cannot meet the requirements of the word "permanent". In the case to which I refer, which was nothing but illustrative, there was reason to believe that person might become fit again in a matter of three or four years. But during that period when persons could not qualify for benefits, because of their inability to work and because of the extremely heavy costs which were involved they found themselves completely crippled financially.

I proceed now to point No. 2. I ran into a case like this only within the last six weeks. Here is a case where I presume most doctors would say to themselves "hopeless". However, the patient may live for a matter of two or three years. The doctors do not like to admit that it is hopeless—and I do not blame them and I am not criticizing them for that—and they do not care to fill out a medical statement that the patient's condition is permanent because of the disastrous effect that might have upon the patient. I refer specifically to certain cancer cases. I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare might give some rather serious consideration to that particular aspect of this matter.

I looked through Hansard covering the sittings of last year, and I found that in answer to questions the former minister repeatedly asserted that a new definition, if we may put it that way, had been placed before the provinces. However, I could not find in Hansard any reference—at least by the time the House of Commons was dissolved last spring—which would lead me to believe that the ten provinces had signified agreement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I dealt with that matter in my comments on Friday.

Mr. Shaw: I shall come to that matter. What I say is that upon examination of Hansard for last session I could not find anything to indicate that the ten provinces had signified agreement. However, I noted that the former minister, the hon. member for Essex East, on Friday, as reported at page 685 of Hansard, stated as follows:

> I understand that the definition of disability as liberalized, as modified in the spring, has now been accepted by all of the provinces and possibly when we reach discussion of the bill the minister will give us further particulars on that score.

I hope that all the provinces have agreed upon a more liberalized definition. I also trust that when the bill is before the house for consideration the minister will indicate our current position with respect to that matter. I know, of course, that it would not be possible for the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare probably to hit upon an interpretation, let us say, of that eligibility section and impose it upon the provinces. I realize full well that they have a right to a say, inasmuch as they pay part of the cost, and that certainly agreement should be reached among them before it is done. However, I make this suggestion, and in saying this I am talking to the provinces as much as to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I hope they have finally reached the stage where they are prepared to eliminate, once and for all, the unfairness which exists under that particular section or aspect of our disability pensions act.

I listened on Friday while the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) was speaking. I have no criticism to offer with regard to what he said. In fact my eyes popped open and so did my ears when he referred to the fact that certain persons in his province who are presently in receipt of pensions had started to work or had tried to go to work and the pension was discontinued. Then, of course, when they found they could not carry on they tried to get the pension back. Well, there are some provinces in this country where if the applicant or pensioner shows any sign whatsoever of being able to work, then his pension is discontinued, even though he may never endeavour to go out to work. In Manitoba the interpretation of the eligibility section is probably much less severe than in certain other parts of the country because, as I say, I know full well that persons like that could not even qualify in certain sections of the country.

I do not desire to take up any more of the time of the house now, although I feel very keenly about the matters I have raised, and particularly as I emphasized previously about this definition of disablement. I trust we may have a correction there before too long.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, most of the comments which I intended to make were covered by the hon. member for Selkirk on Friday last, and I do not wish to delay this house by repeating what he said at that time. The cost of this legislation is borne partly by the federal government and partly by the provincial government and it is our duty, as members of this parliament, to do everything in our powers to see that every one, as far as we can manage it, is treated in the same way and with the same degree of fairness. I therefore wish to support the pleas of all hon. members of this house who have asked for a relaxing of the regulations and for more uniformity in the administration of this legislation.

The hon. member for Selkirk put his finger on one of the weak points of this legislation when he pointed out that although this law is enacted by the federal parliament it is administered by the provincial governments. The same thing applies, of course, to some of the other social welfare legislation. I do not think any law has raised hopes higher and dashed them lower than the bill relating to the resolution now under consideration. The main act is called the Disabled Persons Act. Its very title raises the hopes of thousands of disabled people who will never be able to benefit under this act as it is now administered.

What is a disabled person? I think the ordinary person regards himself as disabled when his physical condition prevents him from earning a living or having any earning power whatsoever. However, according to the regulations under this bill a person can hardly qualify if he is able to move. I have many constituents in my riding who in my opinion should be able to benefit from this legislation, but their applications have never been successful. I have seen patients with very serious heart conditions who have been given the very best medical advice that they are not able to work and should not try to work, but their applications have been unsuccessful. I know of persons who are suffering from paralytic strokes. Some of them cannot dress themselves or even feed themselves without assistance, yet these people are unable to qualify under this act as it is now administered in my province. The same applies to people suffering from hypertension, severe blood pressure and other ailments. The definition of disability seems to include a concept of totality and permanence. A person has to be totally disabled and he has to be permanently disabled before he can qualify.

Now, how can we tell whether a person is going to be permanently disabled? The fact that he is deprived of his earning power for a year is enough to put him in a very embarrassing situation even if he does manage to exist on charity for several more years.

The eligibility of an applicant, as I understand it, is decided by a board who have no personal knowledge whatsoever of the patient, yet in some cases the recommendation of the family doctor or the visiting doctor is disregarded. I think we must endeavour to overcome these difficulties to make sure that no matter in what part of Canada a person lives he should come under exactly the same regulations and definitions. The same machinery should be employed to ensure that the same interpretation of the regulations will be applied to each case.

I was interested in the figures which the minister quoted on Friday as to the increased number of people per year who might qualify under this act. I think he mentioned that the expected increase would be around 7,000 persons annually. I find it difficult to understand why the increase would be constant when the population is always expanding. I would expect that if the increase in the first year were 7,000, in the next year it might be 7,200 and in the following year 7,500 and so on in some form of arithmetical progression. I rather suspect that this constant figure arises from the fact that this bill is administered by the provinces and is therefore in some way related to the provincial budget. The province can only afford to budget a certain amount for the benefits of this act; consequently they tend every year to restrict the provincial beneficiaries to their budget allotment.

I would like the minister when he replies to give any information he may have on this matter. The minister stated on Friday that he has not yet had any time to examine the regulations in order to determine whether they need any modification to bring them in line with what is fair and equitable. I urge him now to try in every possible way to bring about as quickly as possible a conference on this matter between the provincial departments with a view to taking whatever steps are necessary to relax these regulations, which restrict the benefits of the bill to such a small number of people that it almost defeats the purpose and intention of the legislation itself.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I cannot add a great deal to what has already been said on certain aspects of the resolution before us, but I do want to add my word to the views which have been expressed in this debate. I can remember that when this matter was first introduced, and again when it was brought up last year, I told the then minister of national health and welfare that the regulations were such that it was very difficult to bring a disabled person within the scope of the act. That situation has not changed. Whether under the Liberals or under the Conservatives the act still remains in such a form that it is most difficult to find a complete definition and interpretation of a disabled person.

As far as I am concerned, in my own riding and in my own province I have found it impossible to bring a person under the provisions of this act unless he is completely immobile. It has been my experience that if a person has the power to dress himself or crawl to the toilet he is not considered as disabled under this act. That has been my experience in my own riding and in all cases which have been brought to my attention in British Columbia.

Before I came down to attend this house I learned of a man living two blocks from my own home who had suffered a back injury with the result that he could not stand. He had also lost a leg, and that I know as a fact because he was in hospital two years ago, at the same time I was. As I say, he cannot stand because of his back injury, and he has lost a leg. He can move—into a wheelchair—but under the act—and this I know because I took the matter up personally—he is not eligible to benefit from this pension scheme because he is able to move.

Every day he has to go out to try and sell artificial flowers and leather goods in order to live. I say again, as I said last year and the year before, that something is definitely wrong with the regulations at present laid down defining whether or not a man is eligible as a disabled person. I have heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare speaking in the last few weeks about the regulations being a matter for both the federal and provincial authorities. The administration is a provincial responsibility, it is true, but the regulations are decided upon jointly by both the provincial and the federal authorities. The federal government pays the greater part of the cost of these benefits, and I believe, therefore, the federal government has the right to say something about the interpretation which should be placed on the regulations and the spirit in which they should be applied. I know I am repeating myself, but I say, that the interpretation and the administration of the regulations regarding disabled persons pensions combine to form one of the most dirty and vicious things in the administration of Canada. That is according to my own knowledge of what occurs in British Columbia.

Unfortunately to a great extent this is because of the medical board, which has a great deal of authority in making recommendations and whose members are apparently more interested in drawing money than they are in discovering and investigating the situation of persons applying for relief under the act. That is my impression as far as I know the situation in British Columbia. Surely, Mr. Chairman, the spirit and intent of the Disabled Persons Act is not that a man has to be completely crippled and unable to move before he can receive any benefit? Surely the intention is that if a man can do something for himself—if he cannot earn a living but is going to try, nevertheless—he should be entitled to receive assistance? But that is not the attitude as I have known it so far.

Thus while supporting the increase being made in the allowance I should like to ask the minister, not that he pass the buck to the provincial authorities who have the responsibility of administration but that he should recognize that it is by a joint arrangement between the provincial and the federal authorities that these regulations and interpretations are decided upon. I ask him to consider that there may be a more humanitarian approach to this subject of disabled persons than the one prevailling now, and I ask also that he should authorize a review of the cases which have been raised during the past year. I am convinced, by reference to those cases that I know, that a great many applicants have been refused the benefit which it was intended by this parliament, one year and two years ago, that they should receive. They have been denied that right because of the present interpretation which decides whether or not a person is disabled. Surely there are other definitions of a disabled person than one based on his ability to move. A person who is crippled but who tries to help himself should also be capable of coming within this category.

I ask the minister to bear this in mind and, if he wishes, I will be glad to give him particulars of a number of cases.

(Translation):

Mr. Poulin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words in support of the resolution now being considered, which will mean a welcome improvement in the allowances paid to disabled persons. I sincerely congratulate the government for submitting a resolution such as this, just as I commended the former government and, especially the hon. minister of national health and welfare at that time for introducing such excellent legislation with regard to the disabled.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you.

Mr. Poulin: I have not, like the hon. members of the larger groups in this house, the advantage to have gone from one side to the other, following the last elections on June 10 of this year. On the other hand, it may therefore be easier for me to keep the position I took in the past on various projects submitted to this house including the Disabled Persons Act which the present resolution seeks to amend in a commendable way. I believe it is fair to raise the amount of the disabled persons allowance by $9 a month, and better still, perhaps to raise the income ceiling for eligibility, because this will increase the number of beneficiaries.

However, I deplore that the age limit has not been reduced from 18 to 16 years. I made a request to this effect on two or three occasions in the past, and I repeat it to-day, in order to point out more particularly the serious drawback which does not allow any indigent disabled person to receive an allowance between the ages of 16 when he ceases to receive the family allowance, and 18, when he begins to receive the assistance to the disabled.

This is a condition which should be corrected. Indeed, how are disabled persons deprived of income going to live between the ages of 16 and 18 if they are from poor families accustomed to receiving at least the small monthly amount of $8 for their upkeep and who suddenly will receive no assistance whatsoever, at a time when the cost of their care is substantially increasing?

I want also to point out, without taking up too much time—as I have done in preceding years—that in certain cases of serious illness or disability at birth or in the months or years just following birth, the disability pension should apply from that date. In a certain number of instances—and this is according to my humble medical experience—the financial assistance which such benefit would give might enable parents to have medical care for their children, who would become normal beings, or, at least be able to look after their own needs in later life.

What considerable advantage this would be from the purely humanitarian and social point of view, with which the financial angle can never compete.

Finally, in my humble opinion, this resolution should have announced a new rewording of the definition of disability. It is all very well and good to say that all the provinces were in agreement with the federal government in this connection. I know, however, and all the hon. members probably know also, that there are still, at least in the constituency of Beauce, which is of particular interest to me, many poor people who are unable to earn their living or that of their family, due to illness or disability and who cannot get such pension.

I can only repeat here what I have already explained more fully—and these will be my closing remarks—that the physical or mental possibility or impossibility of earning one's living, in the case of poor people, should be the yardstick for the granting of a pension.

(Text):

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, I have one or two comments I should like to make at this time. I note in the resolution that apart from the increase in the amount of money available the objections to the act which were expressed in previous years have not been met. I refer specifically to the matter brought to the attention of the minister by several hon. members who have spoken on the resolution, that is the restrictive regulations governing eligibility under the act. I would have hoped the government would have seen fit at this time to make the necessary changes. We had every right to expect changes would be made because when the minister and his colleagues were sitting in opposition they had some extremely uncomplimentary things to say about the act.

One of my good friends who sat very close to me on this side of the house during the last parliament summed it up very neatly on January 16, 1956 when he spoke on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. At that time the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska expressed his attitude toward the Disabled Persons Act, as reported at page 174 of Hansard of that date, in these words:

—entitlement is realized only to the totally and permanently disabled. In other words, you have to be unconscious to get it, unconscious to keep it, and unless you walk about toting a coffin under your arm, you cannot draw that pension.

That is what a prominent Conservative had to say about this legislation just a little over a year ago and equally caustic comments were made by other hon. members of that party when they sat in opposition. The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska went on to say:

If that pension plan is supposed to help the disabled, should not the government recognize that the pension should be paid to anyone unable through illness to earn a living at his ordinary trade or occupation? You may say that, to a certain extent, it comes under provincial jurisdiction but every government and every Canadian knows that the Liberal government has the upper hand when it comes to administration and regulations regarding disability pensions.

That was the point of view put forward in the 1956 session by this member of the Conservative party.

I am sure every hon. member of this house has received a number of letters from constituents complaining about the regulations under this act. The reason I rose to my feet this afternoon is because I received this morning a pathetic letter from a constituent of mine who has been the breadwinner in her family for a number of years due to the disability of her husband. She was anxiously looking forward to some change in the regulations which would at long last permit her husband to draw a pension under the terms of this act but, as has already been noted, the government has not seen fit to propose the necessary changes. There is still time for this to be done and I would simply like to join with my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East, in urging the minister to give very serious consideration at this session to bringing about changes in the regulations in order to enable many thousands of Canadians who are disabled and who, as the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska pointed out on a former occasion, have every right to receive some assistance under this act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That was done.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Monteith thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 23, to amend the Disabled Persons Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCE AND RESIDENCE QUALIFICATIONS

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the second reading of Bill No. 19, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Marler: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Monteith: Yes.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I understood we were going on with the veterans' affairs resolution before second reading of this bill; is that correct?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, this order of business was announced on Friday evening. We have had a lengthy and, on the whole, a very constructive discussion of the resolution preceding the introduction of this old age security bill. In that debate nearly everything was said that needs to be said in explanation of the purpose of the bill.

The amendments proposed are simple and clear-cut and require little explanation. It is proposed to raise the amount of the old age security benefit from $46 to $55 monthly and to reduce the residence requirement from 20 to 10 years.

I have already given in my earlier statement to the committee an estimate of the annual cost involved in putting these changes into effect—$92 million annually for the $9 increase from $46 to $55 and $3.5 million for the reduction in the residence requirement from 20 to 10 years. This last mentioned amendment is expected to result in the first twelve months in the admission of some 5,000 persons to our pension rolls who are not eligible at the present time.

In addition to these two important changes, we propose to amend the act so as to permit pensioners to absent themselves from Canada for as long as six months in any calendar year without loss of benefit. The purpose of this is to grant to pensioners a greater freedom of movement than is accorded to them under existing legislation. The estimated cost of this amendment cannot be established very accurately but will certainly not be very great. It may perhaps amount to as much as half a million dollars annually. It is proposed that the three amendments be effective as of November 1, 1957.

I might point out that beginning with the cheques which went out for the month of October we have adopted a new administrative procedure which will advance the monthly mailing date by two days and result in old age security beneficiaries receiving their cheques without fail before the end of the month.

I have listened attentively to all that has been said in the course of the debate on the resolution preceding the bill and, with one possible exception, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. LaCroix), who made it clear that he was opposed to the reduction from 20 to 10 years in the residence period, everyone else in the house seemed to be ready, in fact, eager to vote for the government's proposals.

So far as the remarks of the former minister are concerned I should like first of all to thank him for announcing that he and his party will support this legislation. I thank him also for his friendly reference to myself. I must confess that I was a little disappointed in the length of time he devoted to events of the distant past, events, I suppose, which everyone but the hon. member has pretty well forgotten after 30 years of more important happenings.

My hon. friend made reference to the proposed reduction in the residence requirement from 20 to 10 years. I believe he agrees with this proposal. It is true that the 1950 parliamentary committee recommended a 20-year residence period for old age security and consideration of 15 years for old age assistance. It is equally true that in 1950 some of the provinces expressed reluctance to accept a lower residence requirement for old age assistance than for old age security, but the government is not proposing a lower requirement for old age assistance than for old age security. It is proposing a uniform reduction for each from 20 to 10 years.

My hon. friend made reference to adjustments necessitated by the rising costs of living. The present adjustment in the old age benefit level is itself an adjustment to meet the rising cost of living. There is no doubt whatsoever in my mind that if the cost of living continues to spiral in the future as it has in the past further adjustments will be necessary. This has been the experience with benefit levels ever since 1927. That is precisely why I said in my opening statement that we did not consider that there was anything final or sacred about the amount of $55 that is now proposed.

I do not suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we have succeeded completely in pleasing everybody. Many members have suggested that in certain respects we have not gone far enough and others that we have gone too far. The official opposition seems to speak with divided voices on this question. For example, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, as I have already pointed out, is opposed to the reduction in the residence requirement from 20 to 10 years. His colleague, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), thinks it should be reduced to five, while the last-mentioned member's former cabinet colleague, the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair), considers that 10 years is just about right and that if we were to lower the residence requirement to five years, as suggested by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, we would encourage an influx of aged persons from other lands to Canada.

While I do not share entirely the fears expressed on this point by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, I agree with him that a 10 year residence provision seems to be a wise and sound requirement in all the present circumstances. This represents, I believe, a reasonable middle of the road position between two extremes. We have felt that a 20-year residence requirement was a reactionary and unfair provision. Equally, in my opinion, a residence period of only five years would be premature and unwise at this time, while it would be nothing else than rash and risky, even irresponsible, to suggest, as I understand the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) did the other night, that we should eventually dispense with a residence period altogether.

I have noted also, Mr. Speaker, a number of suggestions from different quarters of the house, chiefly from C.C.F. and Social Credit members, that we should abolish altogether the restrictions on the length of temporary absences from Canada. The member for Fraser Valley wants us to pay an old age security benefit to pensioners in any country of the world. In this way, he says, our senior citizens will become ambassadors of good will for Canada. The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) demanded that I have the decency to tell the house why we did not intend to abolish the provision limiting the length of absences from Canada.

Our thinking with respect to this question of absences from Canada is very much the same as on the score of residence. We seek a prudent, middle course. We consider the present provisions much too restrictive. On the other hand, we do not consider that we have a proven case for a complete abolition of the requirement that pensioners, to be eligible, must continue to live at least a portion of the time in Canada. This is tied up with a number of questions such as, for example, the extent to which our present system is, in fact, a contributory one or, instead, based on general or even earmarked taxation. In my opinion our system is neither completely contributory nor completely non-contributory, and for this reason I believe we should move carefully and slowly in this matter until we know exactly what the consequences will be.

In addition to this I should point out that the demands of those who argue that we should continue payments to pensioners living outside of Canada run counter to the demands that we further reduce the residence requirement. Is it seriously suggested that we should reduce the residence requirement to 10 and then perhaps to five and then why not to four, three, two or one years? There is no particular reason for stopping at five. Is it also suggested that we should at the present time agree that once a pension is awarded it carry a life entitlement, no matter where the pensioner goes to live? Surely these two proposals, when carried to their logical extremes, cancel each other out and become sheer irresponsibility. We could reach a ridiculous situation where a person could move to Canada at 69 and leave at 70 carrying with him a pension for life paid for by the Canadian taxpayers.

We cannot, in my opinion, go too far in either of these directions without jeopardizing the soundness of the scheme. That is why we propose to follow the prudent middle course, which is what the people of this nation would expect of our administration.

Last Friday, Mr. Speaker, in replying to some questions put by the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Marler), I stated that the increase in old age security benefit now proposed is in our judgment not only a fair and reasonable increase but it also keeps pace with the rise in the cost of living and in national productivity that has occurred since the commencement of old age security. The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) suggested that I might table statistical data bearing on this point. I am glad to do so at this time. With the permission of the house, I should like to place on Hansard two tables, as follows: One, a tabulation showing changes in the consumer price index since 1927, changes in the maximum amount of pension payable since 1927; and changes in the purchasing power value of the pension payable each year since 1927, all based on 1949 as equal to 100; two, a tabulation showing the total amount paid out in old age pensions each year since 1927 in relation to the gross national product each year. Have I permission, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Has my hon. friend some extra copies of these tables?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the minister permission to place these tables on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(a) For calendar year nearest to fiscal year, e.g. 1927 for 1927–28.

Mr. Monteith: I believe that these two tables will give to the hon. member the information he requested and will fully support the assertions I have made.

The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) also requested certain information relating to the number of pensioners leaving Canada to live elsewhere. We have obtained from our regional offices data indicating that since the beginning of our old age security program some 2,500 pensioners have left Canada to live elsewhere and have, consequently, given up their right to benefit.

I would point out, however, Mr. Speaker, that these figures do not provide a reliable indication as to the number of pensioners who would leave the country to live elsewhere if they were free to carry their pension with them outside Canada. Perhaps a more significant figure to consider in this connection is the number of suspensions of benefit on account of temporary absences from Canada. In the calendar year 1956 there were about 13,000 cases in which benefit was suspended because the pensioner was absenting himself from Canada for a temporary period. I do not suggest for a minute that all these individuals would remain permanently outside of Canada if they were free to do so. My point is, rather, that the probable figure in which we are interested lies somewhere between the two figures I have given.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I have now dealt with most of the specific questions that were raised in the course of the previous debate at the resolution stage. I have only one point to make in conclusion. We have heard suggestions during this debate from different quarters of the house that the pension should range all the way from $75 to $100 to $200. I do not profess to know very much about—

Mr. Winch: Who asked for $200?

Mr. Monteith: You may ask questions later. I do not profess to know very much about $75 or $100 or $200 pensions, but I do know one thing. When this government, a Progressive Conservative administration, says $55 a month it means exactly that—no ifs or buts or maybes, no hidden gimmick such as you will find in all the proposals of the three opposition parties. I believe the people of Canada will appreciate that kind of honesty.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to try to cover all the ground which has been covered by the minister's statement on second reading. I should like, however, to go back to some of the points that were raised in the discussion in committee during the resolution stage, and to preface my remarks by expressing regret that I was not able to remain in the committee on Friday to listen to the minister's answers to some of the questions which I had put to him. I do not want to spend an undue amount of time now in going back over this same ground, but I should like to emphasize two points which I made during discussion in committee. These points were with regard to the terms of the pledges given by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in connection with old age security.

When I read the minister's remarks on Friday with regard to this aspect of the question I thought he had made a very valiant effort to justify the position which he had taken, but that surely he did not consider the measure with which we are dealing met the two points I raised the other day and which were firmly promised to the Canadian electors during the campaign in May and June. I might express these two points briefly by saying, first of all, that the amount of the pension was to be adjusted to the rising cost of living, if it continued. I think I should reiterate the quotation which I gave to the committee earlier, because I think it is quite clear from the speech that was given that by no stretch of the imagination could it be said this bill implements that pledge to the Canadian electors. I should like to put the quotation on Hansard again, and it reads as follows:

> We intend, this September, to call together parliament and there and then fix a fair and reasonable amount for the old age pensioners, indeed for the other pensioners,—

It is this second part to which I should like to draw attention.

> —and also make provision for a formula whereby due allowance will be made in the future for the rising cost of living, provided that it continues.

It is quite obvious, Mr. Speaker, that regardless of what the minister has said, and regardless of the relation which the amount of $55 bears to the previous pension or bears to the national productivity or any other figure, there is nothing whatever in this bill that would satisfy the pledge of the Prime Minister that provision would be made for a formula whereby due allowance would be made in the future for the rising cost of living. Regardless of the efforts of the minister, which were very laudable and understandable, the plain fact does remain that the bill contains no such formula as was specifically promised in the federal election broadcast of May 22, 1957. Nor does it meet the other point which forms part of the pledge given by the Prime Minister in May at Toronto, that was that the amount of the pension would be geared to the national productivity.

Surely there can be no suggestion for a moment that the bill contains anything that gears the amount of the pension, $55, to the national productivity. Quite obviously the amount of the pension, the aggregate cost of the pension in any year, has a relationship to the gross national product or to the gross national product for 1956, but the word "gear" in the minds of Canadians would stand for some process embodied in the legislation by which changes in the gross national product would be reflected in a movement, preferably upward, of the amount of the pension.

I want merely to emphasize the fact that the bill which we are now discussing contains no provision whatever to link the present amount of the pension with future changes in the gross national product or with national productivity, if I might use the words of the Prime Minister when he spoke in Toronto.

The second point I want to make is that the minister, in dealing with the bill on second reading and indeed in his discussion of the measure in the committee stage when he closed the debate, carefully stayed away from dealing with what I consider to be one of the major problems arising in connection with this measure. I refer to the effect which it has upon the total cost of social security in Canada and the effect that cost may have on expenditures for national defence.

The other day I pointed out that so far as I could tell the total cost of social security has now reached the point where of the tax dollar that is retained by the federal government, after remitting to the provinces their share of the taxes which the federal government collects on their behalf and remits under the terms of the tax-sharing agreement, 27 cents is actually devoted to social security. In other words, the cost has reached a substantial amount. I pointed out that for the last fiscal year the estimated cost of social security—that is to say of health, welfare and social security—had reached the rather substantial total of $1,050 million. I pointed out that changes in the number of recipients, or growth in the number of those who are entitled to receive old age security, family allowances and the other social security measures which have been under consideration, would account for the addition of another $30 million expressed in round figures.

I pointed out also that in the earlier part of this year 1957 changes in the various social security measures had added $108 million to the annual cost. The minister has told us again this afternoon that the cost of this measure will add another $96 million to that total. During the discussion of some of these other measures he told us that there will be a further addition of approximately $13 million. We can therefore see that the total cost of social security is not far away from $1,300 million, if we think in terms of what the cost to the Canadian taxpaper would have been had all these measures taken effect on May 1, 1957.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want at this stage —and perhaps it is not appropriate that I should do so—to deal with the other questions which fit in with this question of the cost of social security and the additional costs that this measure involves. I think I should merely sum up the views I expressed the other day by repeating what I said then, namely that while I think Canadians all across the country welcome any advance in social security measures that can be supported and sustained by the Canadian economy, I am sure they would view with considerable disquiet advances in social security that were going to be made at the expense of national security. I had hoped that the minister would be able to deal with this point when he closed the debate at the committee stage. Perhaps he will have an opportunity of doing so later on in the present debate. I think it is a point of considerable importance and one with which he should deal specifically.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I think the minister should tell us what the government proposes to do in connection with the fuller investigation of old age security which the Prime Minister promised when he spoke at Antigonish, Nova Scotia early in the campaign. At that time he expressed quite clearly the opinion that we were dealing with a contributory system. His opinion does not seem to be entirely shared by the minister himself. If I might just quote one sentence from the report in the Globe and Mail of May 1, 1957, of the Antigonish meeting, I think it would show the views of the Prime Minister on the subject:

> The U.S. program, he said, is contributory but many Canadians forget that through two per cent each of their income tax, their sales tax and corporation tax they contribute to and pay for old age pensions.

Mr. Speaker, I shall spare the house the tedium of listening to the annual results of the old age security fund since the inceptioin of that fund at the beginning of 1952. However, I think I should again draw to the attention of the minister a point that we raised during the committee stage, namely the effect of these new proposals; and I include not only those which are now under discussion but also those that have already taken effect as the result of changes made earlier in this year. I should like him to explain much more fully than he has done how it is intended to finance the additional cost of old age security.

We all recall that when old age security was instituted late in 1951, simultaneously there was established an account known as the old age security fund to which were to be paid two per cent of the income tax, two per cent of the sales tax and two per cent of the corporation income tax. During the early years of the fund there were deficits in the fund because the amount paid out for old age security exceeded the receipts from those three taxes. But in the current year, the year 1957-58, we had reached the point in the beginning of the year when the estimated total of old age security pensions exceeded in the estimate by only about $6 million the receipts which it was expected would go into the fund during the fiscal year 1957-58. Since then two important additions to the outgo of that fund have been made. First of all the amount of approximately $60 million resulting from the changes made at the earlier session this year, and now this further addition which we are in process of discussing and which will add a further $96 million. Hence, in a word, Mr. Speaker, we are adding some $156 million to the outgo of this fund.

I realize—as, of course, does the minister—that the whole addition is not going to be effective in this fiscal year 1957-58 because the effective date of the increases—the one voted by the previous government and the one which we are now discussing—which will be November 1, 1957, will mean that the whole burden of those increases will not be felt in the current year. But nevertheless there is added an amount of $156 million to the obligations or the outgo of the fund, and I think this house is justified in asking the minister, either when he comes to reply at this stage of the bill or in committee, to tell us just how it is proposed to deal with what seems to be a much larger annual deficit in the old age security fund than we have known at any time in the past.

I know that in the past the deficits have represented not unsubstantial amounts which have been made good from time to time by votes of this house. But I think the minister should go further, having regard to the substantial addition or, perhaps I should say, the substantial additions made in this current year because so far as I can see the fund is going to be very much in the red unless a process of some kind is devised to make good these deficits. Is it the intention of the government to increase the amount of the taxes diverted to this fund? Is it the intention to levy a tax specially for old age security? I think the members of this house and the public of Canada generally are entitled to know how this very substantial expenditure is going to be financed.

I think it has been made perfectly clear by what has been said by my hon. friend the member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) and other members who have spoken on behalf of the official opposition that we intend to give this measure our full support and of course it is our intention to vote for the second reading of this bill.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. When the minister was making his introductory statement I believe he said I had recommended the abolition of the residence qualification with regard to the particular measure before us. I would just like to make a reference to page 632 of Hansard of October 31, 1957 where in the first column towards the bottom I said the following:

> The second part of this resolution proposes to make a reduction in the residence requirement from 20 to 10 years. I believe that this proposal is commendable. There are those who would propose that the residence qualification should be removed altogether. Personally I am of the opinion that there is some justification for the continuation of that principle. However, I do agree that the 10-year period is much more just than the 20-year period that is presently in effect.

Possibly the minister was just allowing his enthusiasm to run away with him.

Mr. Monteith: I certainly must apologize, Mr. Speaker, if I misquoted the hon. member.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, during my years of residence or presence—I do not know which you would call it—in this house I have spoken quite a number of times on the question of old age pensions but I have not spoken previously in this debate on the resolution. I certainly support the bill as an improvement on previous legislation and I am not going to deal with it at length. I think my colleagues expressed our point of view very well at the resolution stage. However, I do want to make two or three comments with respect to certain aspects of this social security legislation, after listening to the minister's opening remarks and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, I will do so with my usual economy of language and charity of purpose.

I was interested in what the minister had to say with respect to allowing a reduction in the period of residence, yet not permitting the old age pensioner to live fulltime in some other country and still enjoy the benefits of his pension. I have listened very carefully to his explanation. I am one who thinks that the 10 years residence is very fair indeed; I think it comes in between the two extremes, the extreme of 20 years and the extreme of no-residence requirement. I think it is very fair to the newcomers in this country and to the Canadian people as a whole.

However, I have never quite been able to see why persons receiving old age security, which is largely on a contributory basis, should not receive the same privileges accorded to persons receiving other federal government pensions; for instance such persons as judges and so on. I have always thought there was a measure of injustice in that situation. This bill does improve the situation by permitting an old age pensioner to be away for what would be in effect a total of one year, if necessary, by taking six months of one year and six months of the next but I do not think this improvement meets all cases. I would suggest, that while I am in favour of the stand taken by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) consideration be given to those people on old age security who would benefit by residence in another country. I have run into a number of cases and would like to suggest to the minister that as he does not see fit to amend the legislation so as to permit a pensioner to leave Canada and enjoy his pension in any country where he wishes to live consideration be given to permitting those persons who find it necessary for health reasons to leave Canada to do so. I do urge that this first step in the right direction be given some consideration.

I would like to deal for a moment or two with the question of the changing purchasing power of the dollar and, as expressed by some other members, the necessity for some formula to create, shall I say, a situation of stability with respect to our old age pension scheme. I understand that it was one of the promises of the members opposite, or the Prime Minister himself (Mr. Diefenbaker), that this legislation would include some such formula. I did not personally read that; I am just going by remarks made in the house during the debate which I judge would be correct because there has been no denial of that promise to date by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) and I am sure he would be only too ready to correct the statements if the hon. gentlemen to my right had made a mistake.

This is however something which has caused the economists a good deal of anxiety throughout the years. I have heard people say "Well, if you create a formula and commence automatic increases or adjustments in the old age pensions to meet the cost of living you must face the possibility of the cost of living going down or the purchasing power of the dollar going down, as well as going up." I think the history of the value of money certainly indicates that there is a very slight possibility of that and for the information of the house I want to put on record a table issued by the institute of life insurance in Canada in the year 1950. In the year 1939 a dollar was taken as worth 100 cents and in terms of the dollar being worth 100 cents in 1939, the purchasing value in other years would be as follows:

1830	261.8
1840	235.8
1850	258.4
1860	230.4
1870	147.3
1880	180.0
1890	184.2
1900	179.9
1910	149.7
1920	70.8
1930	86.9

Since 1949 we have had somewhat over a 23 per cent decline in the value of the dollar so on the basis of this table the purchasing power of the dollar to-day is something around 46 or 47 cents. Now there has been almost a steady decline in the purchasing power of money—any certain unit of money —and I think this applies to all western nations in the last 100 years. I do think that serious consideration should be given to providing a formula for the automatic adjustment of the basic old age security pension to compensate for any increase in the cost of living.

My third proposal has to do with the question of a national pension plan. As many members will remember, for some years I have been one of those associated with other members of this group who have urged the necessity for a national industrial pension plan. I have gone into that at some length on previous occasions.

I do not intend to do that now, but I would point out that thinking people in all the western countries are realizing that with the changing circumstances of modern life—increased productivity and changing standards of living—some other contributory pension schemes are required to supplement our basic old age security legislation. This matter has received a great deal of consideration in recent years in the Scandinavian countries, and it has also received a great deal of attention in Great Britain by both major parties in the House of Commons and particularly by the labour party. They have not come to a definite conclusion, but they are having a very thorough examination made of the possibilities of such a plan, and various proposals have been put forward.

I think I should mention this while we are discussing the present type of legislation because I think it is only a prelude to some more comprehensive, sounder and all-embracing legislation which the increased productivity of our economy demands. I, for one, think the government should give serious consideration to proposals for a national pension plan which will act as a supplement to old age security benefits and reflect the opportunities in this country for providing increasing security in old age, coupled with a measure of comfort as a result of our capacity to produce and as an expression of our Christian ideals.

Mr. S. H. S. Thompson (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I feel that the minister in replying to a question raised by an hon. member of this house did, in fact, emphasize a weakness in this legislation. I will support the bill with only one exception. I personally will vote against the decrease from 20 to 10 years in the residence qualification, if the bill is left in its present form. I believe that I will be able to show that this particular clause has the effect of creating serious discrimination in the position of pensioners and taxpayers.

In 1949 the cost of living index was 100 and the pension $40. In September 1957 the cost of living index was 123.3 which would require a pension of $49.32 per month to be proportionate. On the basis of the cost of living index the increase to $55 would suggest an improvement in the position of pensioners over 1949.

However, a comparison of the average weekly wages and salaries of industrial workers as shown in the August 1957 publication of the dominion bureau of statistics gives a rather different picture. The average wage at May 1, 1949 was $43.10; by August 1957 it was $68.38. Comparatively the old age pension would have had to be increased from $40 in 1949 to $63.46 in 1957. Thus it is clearly shown that $55 a month will not give pensioners their share of the rising standard of living which we have enjoyed in Canada since 1949. In fact, they will, proportionately to the general position of people in Canada, be worse off than they were in 1940. Until our old age pensions have been increased to a point where they reflect a proportionate standard of living, at least equal to that which we acknowledged in 1940, no further group should be given a pension which does not require a means test.

When the Old Age Security Act was created in 1952 it was stated that the measure would be financed by sales tax to the extent of 2 per cent on the cost of goods chargeable, 2 per cent of corporation income tax and 2 per cent of personal income tax to a maximum of $60. There is little doubt that these charges were defined to justify the removal of the means test. In turn the public feel that this particular pension is contributory, and therefore a right at the age of 70. It is probably on these grounds that the government suggests the reduction of the qualifying period. Herein lie the main injustices of the bill.

Under the provisions of this bill persons may come to Canada at the age of 60 and qualify for a pension at 70. In this short period, and at that age, they will not contribute materially through the taxes mentioned. On the other hand, a person who has lived in Canada all his life and paid taxes throughout that period can obtain a pension at 65 years of age only if he qualifies under a means test.

I note that the period of disqualification is to be increased from three to six months. This is admirable in itself, but ridiculous when related to the qualifying period. Persons may live and pay taxes for 70 years in Canada, yet lose their pensions if, even for health reasons, they find it necessary to live elsewhere for more than six months. The whole character of this reduction clause reflects adversely on the comparative position of those who have contributed so much throughout their lives, not only in taxes but in the development of the national wealth and culture of our country.

On the other hand the federal government does have a responsibility to senior citizens brought into Canada. A pension is the finest way to render assistance when there is need.

The Social Credit stand that basic pensions should be at least $60 based on their relative position as acknowledged in 1949, is fully justified. An escalator clause would be a good addition to the bill, but, if included, it should give consideration not only to the cost of living but also to the standard of living as reflected by the wage level or the level of national productivity.

In conclusion, I personally feel that the injustices which I have described can be easily avoided. Those who become entitled to pension by the reduction in the qualifying period should be subject to the same means test as required under the Old Age Assistance Act. Any savings thus made could be used to lessen the severity of the means test regulations for all pensioners or to improve further the position of our pensioners who find it necessary to live elsewhere than in Canada.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, the minister in his remarks referred to the number of different figures which have been presented by members of the opposition and I should like to point out that there should be some logical basis from which certain figures are derived. The question of what amount should be fixed ought not to be made a matter of political considerations, but rather, it should be set at a level sufficiently high to meet the needs of our senior citizens.

I was disappointed in the reply given by the minister because he did not satisfactorily set forth the reasons why the government did not use such a yardstick in arriving at the figures we have before us. When I spoke on the resolution I placed on record the evidence of the Montreal council of social welfare agencies which had set the sum required two years ago at over $70. In other words, as a result of their investigations it was determined on the basis of Montreal prices that an amount in excess of $70 was required in order to take care of the needs of the senior citizens. Therefore when we suggested the sum of $75 that figure bore a direct relationship to the economic needs of that group of Canadian citizens.

In his reply the minister did not refer to the commitment made by his party through the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) which can be expressed in one sentence taken from the booklet entitled "The New National Policy of the Conservative Party" issued just prior to the last election. I am going to read this sentence because I think it sets forth the government's commitment in this regard. It reads:

> The Conservative party proposes to set the amount at a figure high enough to meet the needs of our older citizens.

In making his statement the minister did not tell us whether he thinks $55 meets the needs of our senior citizens but if he does think so then I suggest that he talk to people who have tried to live on the present old age pension. My colleague, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) referred to the account written by a Toronto newspaperman some time ago who had set out to try to live on the old age pension of the day. I suggest that the figure of $55 is very unrealistic if it is designed to meet the needs of our senior citizens as outlined in the Conservative party program.

One thing I would like to have the minister clear up when he replies at the conclusion of this stage of the debate is how the government arrived at the figure of $55. If he does not feel it is sufficient to meet the needs of our senior citizens, then how did the government happen to pick the figure $55? I think the main argument revolves around that point.

The minister made some reference to the request of members of the opposition for the removal of the limitation on the period of residence of pensioners outside Canada. My colleague, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), made a most worth-while suggestion when he said that if the government is not prepared to give a blanket permission, one might say, to our senior citizens, those in receipt of old age security, to reside outside of Canada on a permanent basis then some consideration should be given at least to those who must live outside Canada for reasons of health or those who choose to do so by reason of the fact they have no relatives in this country and prefer to live with relatives abroad.

As far as the main provision in this bill is concerned, I think it should be made perfectly clear that the figure $75 which we suggest is necessary at this time is not a figure selected out of thin air nor one tied to any previous pension. It is the actual amount of cash which we believe to be the barest minimum amount upon which a recipient of old age security can possibly hope to live.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in this debate and go on record as saying that though I welcome the increase of $9 to old age pensioners, I feel it is my duty to plead the case of those among our senior citizens who are destitute and who have no source of income other than the old age pension. In my practice of medicine in my riding of Trinity in Toronto I have had the opportunity on several occasions of visiting as many as 700 old age pensioners who live under one roof in Lambert Lodge in that city. Also in my practice, which is mainly concerned with poor people and those on welfare, I have had many experiences which have led me to plead their case, which is what I want to do this afternoon.

May I make an ardent appeal to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) to use his influence with the Ontario government in an effort to obtain from that government a greater generosity in the old age assistance given to those people who are dependent solely on the $55 a month pension. Furthermore, I think the Ontario government should be asked by the minister to reduce the entitlement age for receipt of old age assistance to 60. There are many people who after the age of 60 are too sick to work or who cannot secure employment because no employer will hire them.

I am disappointed that there is no escalator clause in the bill before us providing protection to the purchasing value of the $9 increase which old age pensioners will receive. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) made his first speech in the election campaign at Massey Hall in Toronto he did promise the Canadian people that he would support any old age pension increase with an escalator clause and he also promised that the increase would be geared to the national productivity.

I agree with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) that the period of residence in Canada required for entitlement to the old age pension should be reduced to five years, the same period of residence required in the case of applications for Canadian citizenship. I also agree with the hon. member that the six months period of permissible absence from Canada is discriminatory. I have encountered cases in my practice where pensioners are required to live outside Canada for reasons of health or who would prefer to live abroad to be with relatives but because of the residence qualifications sometimes destitute widows and others are unable to leave Canada for fear of being denied receipt of the old age pension.

Mr. Speaker, although I will vote for the $9 increase in the old age pension I could do so with a greater feeling of satisfaction that justice is being done if these suggestions were carried out.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, we in this group recognize the value of this particular piece of legislation, recognizing that it contains the three fundamentals. The increase in the pension from $46 to $55 in itself makes this an important piece of legislation; however, we have always stressed that it does not meet the needs of senior citizens and from time to time we have suggested that at this time they should have a basic pension of at least $60 per month.

When the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair) participated in this debate on October 31 as reported at page 637 of

Hansard of that date I noted he took issue with us in respect to this particular matter. I would just like to point out one or two discrepancies in his argument. For instance, at page 637 he is reported as saying:

> I hope that when this bill comes forward after the resolution is adopted it will contain a provision for an automatic annual revision based on the year-end cost of living to maintain the purchasing power, not just of the old age pension but of a minimum basic retirement income. A very modest basic retirement income would be $200 a month for a couple on old age security, made up of $110 a month from the new $55 pension, plus $90 of their own savings or pensions.

We in this group feel, Mr. Speaker, that the former minister of fisheries is recognizing a fact that is fundamental, that there should be a basic minimum of $200 for those people in this country who are in need. For that reason we of the Social Credit group still stick by our guns and say that the legislation would be much better if it provided a basic pension of $60 plus an additional $40, $20 to be provided by the federal government and $20 by the province for the needy people of our country who are and should be in receipt of old age security. The former minister of fisheries went on to say:

> I think such a provision would have immediate and very salutary effects.

It is gratifying indeed to see that he feels that the effect of a monthly pension of $200 for two people would be beneficial. It is unfortunate, however, that when he was in a position to suggest to the former government that that amount should be the minimum he apparently carried so little influence with the government of the day that his government did not see to it that the legislation he now suggests might be desirable was made effective.

I say that we in this group will support a monthly basic pension of $55, not because we think it is the end in itself but because we trust it is the beginning of the means to an end whereby the present government will eventually realize that it is desirable to increase the pension to a basic $60. In my own province we have recognized that there is a necessity to assist those particularly in need and, as I have said before, we have given these people an additional $20 per month under a means test. If you add to that the additional cost of providing medical, dental and optical care you find that the people in my province will in all likelihood receive $75 a month plus the additional medical, dental and optical assistance.

There are those who may have a personal viewpoint with respect to the clause of the bill embodying a change in the period of qualification from 20 to 10 years. However, we feel it is a desirable change. There are those individuals who have lived in Canada for 10 years who we think should be eligible for old age security. Possibly they have not contributed in a dollars and cents way to make themselves eligible but they have brought with them families, sons and daughters, who possibly have contributed and are contributing much in excess of the amount required to extend social assistance to these people. As I indicated earlier, there may be some hon. members who will disagree with that policy but we say it is necessary, and rightfully so, that these people should be eligible for old age security and to deny them that privilege would be just as wrong basically as to deny it to the ordinary Canadian. I think the arguments that have been made with respect to those who have lived in this country for 10 years and have reached the age of 70 are not only logical but just.

There is one point that I wish the minister would reconsider. We in this group have emphasized it on more than one occasion. I refer to the proposed clause to provide for a period of six months absence from Canada. I say that we should permit these people to leave the country for at least one year. It is not the case that people who have reached 70 years of age wish to leave Canada. I think the minister indicated in introducing the bill that there were some 2,500 who had refused their pensions and had left Canada knowing full well that they would not get a pension. I am not too sure and I am sure the minister does not know the exact number of people who would become eligible if we permitted them to leave Canada for a full year and to stay out of the country for reasons of health or some other reason best known to themselves.

It has been suggested from time to time that ours is a contributory pension plan. If that were the prime consideration that in itself might be sufficient to justify our plea. However, I do not think it is the prime consideration. These people who leave Canada sincerely desire to do so not because they do not wish to be in Canada but because I dare say 90 per cent of them have to do so for reasons of health. The minister may not be acquainted with many of them but I am satisfied that we can find a good number of people who have left for that very reason and who, because they have not the money, find it impossible to return to Canada every three months or every six months as the legislation would provide. If they did so they would find it absolutely impossible to live the type of life that they are ordered to by their doctors or the type of life which would give them the ease and comfort they have a right to expect after having spent so many years building this country.

I think the minister should reconsider that particular question; tell us what he expects it might cost, and give us a basically sound reason for not doing so, and more particularly a moral reason why these people should be denied this privilege when for reasons of health or other reasons they desire to stay with their sons, daughters or friends in a foreign land where they can be happier.

Mr. A. D. McPhillips (Victoria, B.C.): Mr. Speaker, in the constituency I have the honour to represent, Victoria, British Columbia, we have a great many senior citizens. They have come there over the years because of the great natural beauty of the location and also because of the superb climate. Irrespective of some of the criticism I have heard in the house, these people are going to look upon this piece of legislation as one of the greatest boons they have received in many years.

It is odd to hear hon. gentlemen opposite quibbling about the increase. I should like to say that during their term of office they systematically ignored the plight of these elderly citizens and it was not until they were in an election year and found themselves in the throes of deathbed repentance that they finally came up with an increase of $6, which was an insult. It was not as if the previous government was a thrifty government, far from it. They were the greatest spenders in the history of the nation. We attacked them on that ground in 1953 but it took the people of Canada a little while for the message to soak in, so to speak.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it was the late Sir Robert Borden who said of the Canadian people that they are of a practical turn of mind rather than a political turn of mind. It is not until the need for a change becomes manifest that you get a change. Prior to 1953, and since that time, the outgoing government kept punching away at the national till so long and so loudly that it sounded like the anvil chorus, and the people of Canada heard it.

The hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Marler) says that there is no formula contained in this bill. My suggestion is that it is not the practice to put a formula into a statute.

Mr. Marler: Your leader might have thought of that before he made this pledge.

Mr. McPhillips: This is an essential piece of legislation. It is the fulfilment of a pledge, just as the pledge to review it in the light of the cost of living will be fulfilled. It is for this reason the legislation should be treated as an emergent measure. There is no doubt about the bill passing because the opposition is going to vote for it and, for the first time in many years, these very worthy senior citizens of Canada are going to receive some recognition.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McPhillips) has been in the house a relatively short time, and that is what leads him to say this is the greatest piece of legislation in our history. I think that is less than generous of him. It was only in 1952 that the former Liberal administration introduced the legislation that is now being improved upon, and that measure raised the cost of old age pensions to the federal treasury from less than $100 million to the present cost of approximately $500 million. This does not indicate a complete lack of discernment regarding the plight of the senior citizens of this country. The measure before us is simply an improvement of legislation which was introduced by the former administration on the recommendation of an all party committee which sat during the session of 1951.

The minister says he believes every one in the country, except the former minister of national health and welfare, has forgotten the history of the social legislation in this country. I do not wish to impute motives, but I am sure the present minister would be very unhappy if the voters forgot next spring that the present administration had increased the pension by some $9. We are not opposing this bill in any way. The fact that the former administration, acting on the advice of their advisers and the members supporting them, felt that a $6 increase was sufficient, having regard to all the other relative factors, is no reason for us opposing the amendment at this time which will provide for a greater increase. The present administration in their wisdom, and no doubt upon further advice from their advisers, feel it is a proper thing to do at this time and that it does bring our welfare measures more into line. We are happy to go along with that and support it.

The minister made a statement, I think quite a wise one, with reference to the residence qualification, that is the time a pensioner should be allowed to live outside of Canada and still draw old age security payments. One can see how ridiculous a situation it would be if it were possible for a person to come here at 69 years of age, reside for one year, and after having become entitled to the pension live in some other country. On the other hand, would it not be possible to allow a person to receive a pro rata portion of the pension based on the number of years he resided in Canada? Under pension plans whereby a person pays 6 per cent of his income into the plan a person would be able to build up a pension similar to that which is provided by the old age security payment. It seems to me, therefore, that if a person resided in Canada for 15 or 20 years, he should be allowed to leave the country and still receive the full amount of the old age security pension. If the period of residence were 10 years, then he should receive a pro rata reduction based on the 10 years.

Something must be done. As was pointed out by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hahn), in many instances where a middle-aged couple come to Canada they bring dependents who will continue to reside in Canada and assist in the gross national productivity of this country. In cases of sickness, or in cases where the relatives of the aged people are living in other countries, or the relatives are not in a position to look after them, it seems to me we must relax this residence requirement and adopt something along the lines I have suggested.

The minister said that some members of the house were advocating pensions of up to $200 per month. One member of the house interjected and said that the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair) had advocated pensions of $200 per month. This is not correct. In that part of his speech to which reference has already been made by the hon. member for New Westminster, the hon. member for Coast-Capilano was attempting to indicate what the basic retirement income for residents of Canada should be, that is for a man and his wife. He attempts to establish the need for, and the method by which an increase could be tied to the cost of living. He went on to point out that in many instances the breadwinner would have saved sufficient money to provide an income of approximately $90 a month and with the pension of $55 per month going to both persons they would have a basic income of about $200 per month. This is somewhat different, of course, from advocating a straight payment of $200 per month from the federal treasury.

As I say, I am certainly prepared to support this legislation. I think we should get on with it as rapidly as possible. This parliament should then come to grips with measures that are very important, such as the questions that were bandied about during the election campaign as to what the government was going to do about full employment and trade. I think this house should not rise until something concrete has been done about those subjects.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I was called out of the chamber just when this bill was brought down today. However, when I was speaking to the resolution the other day I asked the minister a definite question. I did so because I knew he would not have the information at his finger-tips. I asked him how many people in receipt of old age security had left Canada in the last little while. He can give it for a year or two years, or for whatever period his figures are. It does not matter how long it is. I should like to know how many actually had their social security pensions withdrawn from them by reason of their going to some other country. I wonder whether he has that information.

My point at the time was that I did not think six months' absence was enough to bring about that result. I have maintained right along that if this old age security is given to one of our citizens by right—and that is the terminology that has been used on both sides of the house in the past—of citizenship provided they have lived here for the required length of time, then they are entitled to it no matter where they may go.

I hold in my hand an article which appeared in the Financial Post of October 5, 1957 and written by one of their writers, namely J. B. McGeachy. In it he points out some interesting observations just along this very line. He says:

> Is it merely quibbling to complain because the Canadian system doesn't conform to these models?

Here he is referring to the British pension and the United States pension which are contributory schemes and payable no matter where a citizen may go to live subsequently. He says:

> Not as I see it. For one thing, if the Canadian pension is genuinely contributory, if it's therefore "a matter of right" as Mr. Martin used to argue, why isn't it payable to a Canadian over 70 wherever he may be?

Then further on down the page:

> The inescapable fact is that the present Canadian system establishes no clear right. What is the payment of $46 a month,—

I may say that this article was written before this bill came down.

> —or any other amount, in fact related to? It's related to nothing except the social views, political necessities, financial circumstances and possibly whims of a party trying either to stay in power or dislodge its rival.

There is a point there that is worth considering. Farther on Mr. McGeachy says this:

> Mr. Diefenbaker, during this summer's campaign, said that $46 a month wasn't "enough". Enough for what? Nobody knows. There's no answer, official or philosophical.

Then he goes on to attempt to point out that it might be related to the gross national product. But if it was so related, one objection that has been made to that suggestion is that if the gross national product should fall then the rate of old age security would have to fall. Of course that is something that is perhaps politically unwise. We all know that. We all know that when once you begin to give something in the form of a service, you cannot very well take it back. There may be some point to that consideration.

However, what I rose to point out especially was the situation where people go away because of their condition of health or something of that kind. Why is it not proper for a Canadian citizen who is in receipt of old age security, who has paid in on it over his lifetime,—this is not so today but eventually it will be so —to be allowed to live where he wants to live? What difference does it make? The money may not be spent here but it would not be such an enormous sum. I ask the minister if he would care to answer that question of which I gave him notice some days ago. I know we are not in committee on the bill. Perhaps I overlooked that point. If he wishes to wait until we are in committee, that is all right.

Mr. Monteith: By the way, I gave the answer in my opening remarks.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise only in order to give the house the few views that I have with respect to this matter. After listening to the various comments and proposals made by members in all quarters of this house, ranging from such things as a cost of living bonus or a bonus based on the gross national product to paying the pensions to people who live in other parts of the world than Canada after they are entitled to receive it, adequate hospital care, adequate housing and so on, to the question of social security legislation for our elderly citizens I think we must take an approach different from that which we have taken in the past.

Ever since the inception of old age pensions—and many hon. members of this house who have been here for some years know this far better than do I—the approach has been on this basis: What can we do which will assist these old age pensioners immediately and which also might be looked upon favourably in the country when it comes time for us to go back to the people and see whether or not they want to return us? I do not say that is done consciously nor do I say that it is the sole consideration which has been given to the old age pension structure. Nevertheless, that appears to be the attitude or the approach that we have used when these changes have been made, namely on a sort of expediency basis. I do not think it is good enough.

[Mr. Hansell.]

Before I progress any further I should like to make a comment about the suggestion as to a cost of living bonus. I know, as do other hon. members, that this suggestion was contained in the comments made during the election campaign by various members sitting on the government side of the house, but quite frankly I am pleased that they dropped it at this time and that it is not contained in the bill. To my way of thinking at the present time, if we were to adopt some sort of cost of living bonus we would be perpetrating a great crime against our old age pensioners. It is true that when the cost of living would go up, it would raise the pension itself, but by so establishing at this time a system of cost of living bonuses we would be in effect saying that the present standard of living of the old age pensioners is good enough and that it is not going to increase any more. It would be in effect saying: "You are not going to get anything better; all you are going to do is to keep up with what you are behind the present cost of living".

Quite frankly, I am of the opinion that the approach we must make to the social security legislation for old age pensioners—and we are dealing with them in this bill—must be changed. We must take some cognizance of the problems and make some effort to solve them. Whether it be done through having a study by departmental officers, a commission, or a committee, it is immaterial. We must take continual looks at these questions of health care, hospital care, adequate housing, changes in the actual amount of the pension, residence qualifications, whether you are out of Canada, and all of the many other good, sound proposals which have been made.

I hope the government will keep that thought in mind if they have not considered it already and that by doing so and establishing our approach on that basis we can generate a better feeling in society towards our elder citizens and can give them the fullest possible means for an adequate way of life in their later years.

Mr. Jacob Schulz (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say I am very much in favour of the bill under discussion. I support it mainly because it is an instrument designed to bring about a greater measure of recognition and justice for our senior citizens who have made this country great and will save many from privation and starvation.

The proposed amendments in the Old Age Security Act included in this legislation will give greater consideration to the needs of that group of Canadians which have long been neglected and which deserve better treatment from those who are the direct and indirect beneficiaries of their valuable work and effort. It will be of some benefit to those who have as the pioneers of Canada been performing their duties under most primitive and daring conditions, making this country what it is today. It will assist those who for one reason or another could not reap the benefit of their labour. It will be helpful to those who through no fault of their own have not been able to help themselves, and it will at least compensate to some extent those who have lost the greater part of their savings through inflation.

I have mentioned these different categories which will benefit from this increase in pension for the enlightenment of those who are still confused in their own minds in that they regard any social legislation or improvement thereof as a major disaster. I repeat, those who for some unknown reason prefer individualism to Social order, and those who for selfish reasons have through manoeuvring our entire economy into a chaotic condition created inflation to the point where the buying power of the Canadian dollar is now worth less than 50 cents. This is the reason why we are here today to pass laws for increasing old age pensions to make up for these losses.

What is inflation? I think at this time we should ask ourselves this question. According to the Oxford dictionary inflation, applied to commerce and economics means "increase beyond proper limits for instance of prices". In more simple terms, if anything could be more simple, it means that inflation is created by unreasonable rising of prices from which some sections of the community benefits at the expense of the rest. The section to which our old people belong is one of those which lost the most through inflation, for rising prices mean an automatic decline in the buying dollar of the dollar; it means that many of these people who have been indirectly robbed of more than half their savings, which in many cases represented the greater part of their life's work, will once again have to be provided for by emergency measures.

It was a similar situation the other day when we were dealing with the case of the farmers. The hon. members of this house are called upon to pass laws compensating these people for their losses—these people who work hardest, saved the most and have lost the most—these are the people who followed the practice dictated by the age-old wisdom of putting aside a few dollars for a rainy day and have been caught in the squeeze between rising costs and falling value of our currency. The unbalanced condition created by inflation has reduced the purchasing power of their accumulated savings to less than half its original value. Many of these people have been reduced because of the dwindling value of the dollar to the point where they have become permanent wards of the government.

Most of these people were solid and thrifty citizens and did not wish to pass their remaining years in such a condition. They purchased war bonds and life insurance, contributed to pension funds and accumulated savings accounts only to find that a dollar saved in 1939 has lost half its value. They find that because of the almost 4 per cent increase in consumer prices in the last 12 months their dollars invested in government savings bonds a year ago have not brought in sufficient interest to cover the depreciation of their money. They find their self denial in accumulating savings to provide a nestegg for their old age has been in vain. They find that their total reward for their efforts is ultimate bankruptcy plus old age pensions; they find the whole process is a shameful delusion.

Even those who through their power of collective bargaining were able to keep pace with the rising cost of living have become victims of the ever-rising price spiral at their retirement. Without any means of raising their income, they stand helplessly by, watching inflation taking bigger and bigger bites out of their fixed income. Their pension cheques which could buy goods for $100 in 1949 are worth today only $83, or a loss of 17 per cent in seven years. What they could buy for a dollar a year ago now costs $1.04. This is the result of the economic crime we call inflation.

We are now called upon to save some of its victims by increased social legislalation. There are to be three changes made in our old age security laws to ease the crippling effect of this inflation. First, to raise old age pensions from $46 to $55 monthly; second, to cut the period of Canadian residence required to qualify from 20 years to 10 years and, third, to lengthen from three to six months the permissible period of absence from the country in any year without loss of pension.

Adding these increased social measures to the $6 increase in old age security pensions provided for by the former administration will reimburse to a considerable extent those whose income has been largely wiped out even though it is not enough to provide very much for future losses, in which case the pension should be raised to $60 or more. One must admit that taking into account the fact that this increase is being granted by the two older parties it can be regarded as a somewhat remarkable achievement. They really deserve credit for this performance.

Thanks to what H. B. Mayo describes as the conscience of the country, that is the C.C.F. party, the old line parties have gradually been forced to accept the principle of social assistance to the needy. The party's founder, Mr. Woodsworth, was the man who laid the cornerstone of Canadian social thinking. Since the party was formed in 1932 it has created a social consciousness in this country that no one can escape, no matter how crusty he may be. Even the old party politicians are becoming bewildered by public opinion and confused in their own thinking to the point where they are now trying to outdo each other in helping socialism, as the Ottawa Journal puts it, to come in through the back door.

Of course, there is actually nothing wrong with socialism if you look at it the right way, and as long as it is democratic. Socialism comes from the word social, and most people want to be social. Webster's dictionary defines it as a "theoretical contract by which men obtain true freedom to substitute a state of law for a state of individualism."

This makes it quite understandable why the two old parties are so anxious to comply with one of its major principles. It was interesting and at the same time amusing to listen to the former minister of national health and welfare arguing with the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) the other day over the matter of who is bringing in the most social legislation. But what I cannot understand is this: if they want to do it, why do they not join the C.C.F. where they could do it through the front door instead of the back? The establishment of adequate social laws has always been one of our major policy planks. But how far will it go?

Unless the government is willing to do something formidable to stop this curse of inflation which has impoverished whole sections of our society, something of this sort will have to be done to tie them to the constantly increasing cost of living. In the Financial Post of August 3 it was clearly pointed out that not only pensioners, annuitants and retired industrial wage-earners are taking a sharp drop in real income, but more and more wage and salary recipients are feeling the pinch of rising prices, and feeling it despite pay increases. Especially in those industries where white-collar workers predominate, wages tend to lag behind prices.

It is often said that increasing wages create inflation. But on page 21 of the same issue of the Financial Post, appears this statement:

> Salaried workers and wage earners in service industries are either achieving small real gains or losing ground in real terms. Average weekly wages in some industries are lower in both dollar terms and real terms.

In a table contained in the September 21 issue it is clearly shown that increases in labour income are losing pace and have declined from 3.5 per cent in the first quarter of 1956 to 1.5 per cent in the first quarter of 1957, a drop of 2 per cent in one year. Who is responsible for this condition? Where is this prosperity so many people talk about? In the Financial Post of August 30 appears this statement:

> In industry, all major groups have chalked up impressive increases, not only in dollar terms but also in terms of what those dollars can buy.

This is the unbalanced condition existing in our country created by inflation. On one side, rising prosperity and, on the other, decreasing income. This discriminatory process of one group being allowed for years to exploit another group has now progressed to the point where emergency laws and social legislation must be employed to save the losers from poverty and starvation. If it had not been for this economic injustice that is allowed to go on without being checked year after year we would not need to use the Canadian taxpayer's money to compensate for the losses by increased pensions.

Unless the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has the patriotic courage to tackle inflation, which has become the core of our trouble, and resist the political pressure of selfish class interest, the increase in pension will not be of too much assistance to our senior citizens. This monster of inflation will eat it up from one end almost as fast as we can feed it with temporary stop-gap measures from the other end. If nothing more fundamental is done it will not take too long until those who depend solely on pensions will be behind again.

Those who enriched themselves in this manner will obviously resist any attempt to stop or even slow down inflation. They accuse any person or political party that attempts to stem the tide of rising prices of trying to create a recession or even a depression. They do not seem to know that any inflation, if not stopped, is automatically followed by a depression. Some of them are naive enough to suggest that a little inflation is quite all right.

When some years ago, former president Harry Truman was asked what he thought about having just a little inflation, he replied: "You cannot have just a little inflation. Having a little inflation is like being a little pregnant."

The United States authorities as a whole seem to be much more concerned about the dangers of inflation. Apparently they have learned from the past that while people are slow in losing their confidence in money, once it is lost it is equally difficult to restore it. They seem to remember much more vividly the episode of the thirties than those who are responsible for maintaining respect for the measure of value of our own currency. This is proven by the fact that since 1947 the purchasing power of the United States dollar has declined by 20 per cent while ours has lost 29 per cent in the same time.

At the beginning of the year President Eisenhower asked congress to appoint a citizens' commission to study the nation's economy to determine where their financial system is out of date and how it can be made equal to its task.

What have our governments done? The Liberal government instituted what is called a tight money policy, consisting of restricted credit accompanied by high interest. That can perhaps be compared with putting a block of ice on a thermometer. It will lower the temperature reading, but does not end the heat wave.

The present government apparently decided to reverse this policy. Shortly after its election, the Minister of Finance announced that the tight money policy must go. I thought there could be no doubt that high interest rates would go with it but instead since that time interest rates went up by one-quarter of one per cent, and this move, to my surprise, was initiated by the Bank of Canada which is a government institution.

Mr. Speaker, the basic truth of this whole matter is that our government must either squarely face the problem of inflation and accept the policies necessary to check and curtail it, or else it will produce what former president Hoover called a hair-raising depression. It should be obvious by now to every thinking person that this merry-go-round of rising prices and increasing wages must stop. Merry-go-rounds are for children and not for intelligent adults.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, representing as I do a Vancouver riding, the question of increased benefits under the Old Age Security Act and the Old Age Assistance Act, is of particular concern to me. It is an undisputed fact that British Columbia has the greatest percentage of senior citizens of any province in the dominion and most of these citizens live on the west coast and Vancouver island because of a mild and temperate climate more suited to their years. These senior citizens pioneered this country, built up its wealth, raised and educated their families and made Canada the great nation it is today. The pension they receive is theirs by right of hard work and by right of their contributions through the various taxes levied to help defray the cost of these pensions.

The ordinary wage earner with a family finds it almost impossible to put away any money to take care of his old age. Such savings as were made during his best working period are today paid off in depreciated dollars. The senior citizen who has given his children a good education, bought a house however small, and perhaps saved a few dollars as well, has done an exceptional job for himself and this country.

The first amendment to this bill is to increase the pension to $55 a month. I was most interested when the minister informed the house the other day that this represents a 37.5 per cent increase over the $40 level which prevailed at the first of this year while by comparison the cost of living index has risen only 23 per cent since 1949 and only 5 per cent since 1952 when old age security payments commenced. At the time of the commencement of old age security payments in 1952 the gross national product was $23¼ billion while in 1957 it is estimated at $30.8 billion or an increase of 32.4 per cent compared to the pension increase of 37.5 per cent.

However, in assessing the value of this increase it is necessary to consider the other welfare measures which are part and parcel of the whole welfare program we are considering at this time, namely increases in payments under the Old Age Security Act, at an estimated cost of $13 million per year divided equally between the federal treasury and the provinces; increases in pensions for the blind at an estimated cost of $1 million to the federal treasury; and increases in pensions for disabled persons at a cost of $4.6 million divided evenly between the federal and provincial governments.

I wish to quote from the statement of the minister when he introduced the resolution on October 24 as reported at page 385 of Hansard of that date. I think the minister put it in a nutshell when he said:

> May I add a further word, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the level of benefit that is now proposed, namely, $55 per month. We make no extravagant claims with respect to this benefit. We do not say that it is the final or perfect solution, or that there is any magic rightness about this particular amount. We make no extravagant claims as to the generosity of the amount we are now proposing. It is my view, rather, that we should try to measure what we are doing here not in terms of generosity but in terms of justice.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this bill does measure what we are doing here in terms of justice. Considering all of this, I believe the increase proposed is a fair and reasonable one as it takes into account the increase in the cost of living and adds an increase over and above this for good measure. The pension has not been tied to the cost of living which could conceivably result in cutting pensions if the cost of living went down, but I am confident the government will be reviewing the pension periodically if living costs continue to rise.

I am certain that nearly all hon. members are in agreement with the second amendment which reduces the basic residence requirement from 20 to 10 years.

I would now like to say a few words about our pension arrangement as compared to plans in operation in the United States. The United States plan is carried without government assistance by means of contributions from both employer and employee. The benefits given are greater than those supplied by the Canadian old age security plan. However, it has the weakness that it helps only those workers employed in factories or other places who can be reached by the principle of deduction from pay cheques. It might well be that in the future some national scheme on a fully contributory basis could be evolved which would reach these people and provide them with a supplementary pension.

The opposition has been pointing out the increased cost to the Canadian taxpayer of this and other measures. Actually, Mr. Speaker, these measures are not inflationary in the slightest degree. Every dollar received under the provisions of this act will be spent immediately on food, shelter and other living requirements.

Hon. members speaking previously during the resolution stage have pointed out that there are many instances of pensioners not receiving any benefit from increases in their pension due to automatic increases in rental or subsistence charges leaving the pensioner with not one cent more for himself. I believe that through the administrative staff handling pensions and by pensioners reporting back such happenings publicity could be given or other steps taken which might curtail this practice.

The third amendment increases from three to six months the length of permissible temporary absence of pensioners from Canada. I think all hon. members will agree this is a step in the right direction. It might be that later on the minister would consider setting up reciprocal regulations with other countries, particularly in respect to commonwealth countries, as the spending of pension cheques in these countries would be an aid in helping to correct the present imbalance in our foreign trade.

In conclusion, I believe that the government will have to give the lead to industry to see that first class workers are not retired both prematurely and arbitrarily. The effect of this premature retirement on the worker who continues to be fit in both mind and body and who wishes to carry on working at a job he is quite capable of doing is frequently the worst imaginable, but the social circumstances are serious too and likely to become more so. The average life span is progressively lengthening with each decade and, unless we revise our ideas, before long the rapidly growing numbers of older people who are compelled in one way or another to become dependents will constitute an enormous burden on the working population.

There is a real fear in the heart of all when they reach the middle forties or fifties that if they lose their jobs they may not be able to get another one because, and only because, of their age. We must take the leadership in educating all employers in Canada to the end that our older workers are as freely accepted as our younger workers.

The measure before us is a just one and is supported by Canadians in all age groups. The government is to be commended on the speed with which it is acting. It is doing more and in less time than any previous government has ever done.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. A. B. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) himself has said that our old age security legislation should provide an amount which, in his words, would meet the needs of our senior citizens. In listening to the debate in the house, both at the resolution stage and at this stage of the bill, I have not heard any member, even a member from the government benches, suggest that $55 a month will meet the needs of our senior citizens. I have not heard a member from the government benches suggest that that amount, even with the provincial bonus, will meet the needs of our senior citizens.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that those needs could be met, certainly more adequately, if our old age pension legislation rested upon a fair, even-handed and just financial basis. The present old age security legislation, as we have been told many times, draws its finances from three sources, the 2 per cent of the sales tax, the 2 per cent of corporate taxation and the 2 per cent applied against income tax. It is the last 2 per cent that I want to draw attention to for the moment.

This 2 per cent is a tax applied only to the first $3,000 of taxable income. As we all know, this has meant that in the last few years a most inequitable system of taxation in that regard has existed in this country. It has meant that a man with a taxable income of $3,000 a year pays $60 into the old age security fund and a man with a taxable income of $50,000 a year pays only $60 into the fund. Or, to take an extreme case, a man with a taxable income of $100,000 per year still only pays $60 into the fund.

It is axiomatic that fair taxation laws should bear most heavily on those best able to pay. Taxation should be based upon ability to pay and it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the problem of financing adequate old age security would not be nearly as great as it is if only, as I say, the government would base the pension fund upon adequate and equitable taxation principles.

There is another source from which this fund should be supplemented at the present time and that, of course, is the field of capital gains, the field from which the great unearned fortunes that are being made in Canada today spring. They do not spring for the most part from earned income or salary, they spring from capital gains in speculative ventures, often a gain which results far more from the general improvement of values in the community than from any effort made by the individual concerned. Yet this vast source of fortunes is utterly untaxed in Canada today.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that before too long the government will consider bringing down a budget. As a freshman member of parliament I am particularly concerned to try to see the total picture, to try to see how the $95 million or so that we are proposing to add to the pension fund liabilities fits into the total picture of the revenue of Canada and the picture of how that revenue could be supplemented. I hope that will be done, together with a review of the industrial and business picture across Canada today.

But I suggest that even without seeing that total picture, which can only be presented in a budget, there are rich fields of taxation which should be taxed to help to provide adequate security for our senior citizens and, as I said at the beginning, I do not think that anyone can pretend that we are doing that by this legislation. So I say that the iniquitous 2 per cent application against income tax which stops at $60 and which hits the relatively poor man just as hard as it hits the rich man must be done away with. I say we must tax capital gains. I say if you evolve a taxation system which is fair, just, equitable and even-handed you will have the funds to provide adequate old age security for our senior citizens, certainly at a basic level of $75 to which should be added the provincial bonuses.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief word to say. I think the provision to grant six months absence in a year is very generous. The pensioner will be able to spend half his remaining life outside of Canada. Let us take a man who has not been long married and has a young family. We will say that he has come to Canada from one of the best countries in the world, Ireland. He does not see any future for himself or his family in Ireland and he says to himself, "I think I will go to the best country in the world, Canada." Out to Canada he comes. What does he find in Canada? He finds all the work he can do and he is not only able to provide for himself and his family but is able to educate his children and save a little.

When he becomes 70 years of age he gets $46 or $55 or, as one hon. member would have it, $75. Some people like my hon. friend here would say that he should be allowed to go where he likes. I do not think he should be allowed to go where he likes. I think he should be grateful to Canada and it is a sin of ingratitude if he wants to go back to Ireland and live there. If he wanted to go back to Ireland so badly he should have stayed there in the first place.

I think the minister certainly has been very generous in extending the period of absence to six months. When I sat on the other side of the house, Mr. Speaker, I found that no matter how generous the government was there were always those who wanted twice as much. If the minister will open his eyes he will see that situation has not changed. Some hon. members are saying that he should not have made the period six months, that he should have made it for life. I do not think he should. If a man needs a particular climate he does not have to go outside of Canada. We have all kinds of climate in Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific. In Victoria you have a mild climate. In Calgary or the Rocky mountains around Banff there are the chinook winds which bring about a change in climate. If you go to Fort William you will find the climate always changing and you will get the best hockey in the world which enables you to forget yourself.

I think if a man is grateful he will want to live in the place that has treated him generously. Instead of making the period six months, I think the minister should have made it less but he can go to sleep and feel that even if he had made it twelve months there would be those who would want to make it twenty-four.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I realize that a great deal has been said about the Old Age Security Act and the amendments that are proposed. I think there has been far too much said about certain promises that were made prior to the election. In the Medicine Hat constituency the Conservative candidate, to my knowledge at least, never mentioned old age pension or old age security or old age assistance or anything of that kind. All he talked about was Diefenbaker, so much so that I wondered if there was still a Conservative party or whether they had changed their name to the Diefenbaker party.

Mr. Marler: They did in some parts of the country.

Mr. Olson: Be that as it may, the Liberal candidate did not make any specific promises either. He made several references to common sense being used in legislation. That was all well and good, except that when I went to visit some of the old age pensioners, some of those who had to live on what they received in the form of old age security payments, it did not make sense to me that in a country such as Canada which is able to produce so abundantly all those things that are necessary for a good life, they should have to try to get along on $46 per month.

I should like to add my support to the argument advanced by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) to the effect that an increase in old age security payments would put money into the hands of people who would buy consumer goods. In that regard I should like to say that in no part of Canada do we find any shortage of consumer goods. For that reason it would appear to me that any money put into the hands of these people would not increase inflationary pressures.

During the course of this debate several members have mentioned the fact that we should try to eliminate politics from old age security and old age assistance of any kind.

I think we may as well be realistic and face the facts. Politics and political manoeuvring are part and parcel of our democratic system and so long as there are candidates representing different parties going to the people and asking for a mandate, they are certainly going to bring up matters of such importance as old age pensions or any other kind of social security. As long as we have human nature with which to deal in political elections I am certain we are going to have old age security and all social security measures brought into election campaigns, no matter how hard we strive to keep them out.

There have been suggestions also that there should be an escalator clause attached to the scale of payments under old age security legislation. I certainly go along with this idea, although I am not quite satisfied in my own mind as to whether that should be tied to the cost of living or whether it should be tied to the gross national product or to what it should be tied. In looking at this picture we must realize that if we are to be a progressive nation, then the standard of living must rise. If we tied the payments to the cost of living that would not, in fact, take care of an increased standard of living as our country may be able to provide it. While I do not have the exact formula for doing this, my feeling is we should be able to study the matter and then set up some kind of plan whereby we can make increases as the nation is able to produce the goods and services necessary to increase the standard of living.

So, Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude by saying I support the amendment as an instalment, as a step in the right direction. I do not believe they are adequate. We in the Social Credit party advocated $60 per month basic pension. While that was considered the minimum and $55 of course falls even short of that, we cannot but support the measure because it is at least a recognition of the fact there is a need for an increase, and it is an instalment. Until such time as we can arrive at a formula that will adjust old age pensions without an act of parliament and maintain what we believe to be an acceptable standard of living for our old age pensioners, I think I will go along with the amendments as they have been stated.

Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my first remark would be that the more I listen to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) the more I am certain he is misplaced and ought to be sitting on this side of the house rather than on that. We can all, of course, agree with his sentiments and they were well expressed indeed. It will certainly come as no surprise to hon. members that I am going to support this measure. I have not been prompted to make these remarks because of the dinner recess, but rather because of the comments of one member of the C.C.F. party who suggested that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) and the former minister of that same department were gradually drifting towards a state of socialism, so much so that they might just as well become socialists. I do not think I would be remiss if I were to state to that gentleman, and to the gentleman who is doing his best to interject, that that is far from the fact although perhaps that hon. gentleman would wish that situation could occur immediately.

The hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Marler) interjected some comments with which he may be surprised to find I am in some measure of agreement. He suggested or inferred that we are today looking at some substantial costs resulting from what has become, in the last half decade, a very enlarged welfare state. Perhaps one conclusion we could draw from his comments is that in looking towards the future and the extent of the social benefits in any form that any administration, regardless of the political party that may be responsible for it, can provide, consideration must be given to just how far this state can go without social welfare legislation becoming a big drain on the general economy of the country.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, let me very quickly say that before we determine where we shall put a stop, if a stop is required, the stop should not be made at the expense of those who are least able to fend for themselves. The point that I make is that no one in this house has registered a protest, and I think rightly so, to this measure. Most hon. members have, if nothing else, indicated support to a degree based on the necessity or urgency of the measure. This is, of course, introduced as an urgent measure. I say, therefore, regardless of how we look in the future at the measures that come before this parliament, we must ask ourselves who, in regard to this legislation, can defend themselves or look after themselves best and who cannot. I believe those who have contributed to this country, be they senior citizens or veterans, have a prior claim; and that is exactly what this government is recognizing in this measure.

I think perhaps it is a regrettable commentary on our situation today that we accept the fact that we enjoy a fairly high level of prosperity and yet we see, in this and every other community, a situation in which many of our elderly citizens are being obliged to put up with the most distressed conditions. I think we all ask ourselves how this can occur when so many are enjoying the prosperity to which I have made reference.

I therefore say that legislators, regardless of who they may be in the future, should—as this government are doing today—give their consideration to the urgent demands of those who need it most. But certainly they must recognize the fact that other measures of social security must at some point be fully conditional on the ability of the economy in which we live to meet and be able to pay for them. I agree with the hon. member who said that we in effect must be able to recognize the fact that, unfortunately, we cannot lift off the tree all the funds that are necessary to meet these benefits that we think should be introduced in this house. But what I say—and I think this is where we differ—is that this is one of those measures which, judging by the hundreds, yes, literally thousands of letters which members have received, recognizes the seriousness of the plight of our elderly citizens who, as I say, are not enjoying anything of the benefits of our prosperity but who nevertheless suffer all the disadvantages of an inflated economy.

I believe this government should be congratulated for recognizing the urgent demand of these people who have contributed so much in the past; and because of this fact they have placed at the head of their legislative program perhaps not the most important bill that we should see but certainly one of the most urgent.

Mr. Arthur Maloney (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a brief word about the effect of this legislation on immigrants to this country. I have in mind, first of all, the principle of the bill which reduces to ten years the residence requirement that existed under the earlier legislation which is now being amended. I am thinking of the beneficial effect it will have on immigrants who have come here in recent years from the British isles and countries of continental Europe. I must confess that I always found it difficult—I know that my difficulties in that respect were shared by all of the hon. members on the government side of the house—to understand how it was that our predecessors in office were unable to accede to the recommendations of our party, then in opposition, made over long periods of time to do what this legislation now brings about.

From the figures that were mentioned by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) I understand that approximately 5,000 of the immigrant population will stand immediately to benefit. In other words, immigrants who are now 70 years of age and who came to this country during the years from 1938 to 1948 will enjoy a benefit of which they would have been deprived for another 10 years under the legislation in its unamended form. It is true that these people did not contribute to the production or the revenue of our nation except for a brief period of time, but on the other hand, neither were they the recipients of some of the costly benefits in the gift of our nation to bestow.

I have in mind one specific case in which the practical benefits which will flow from this legislation can easily be illustrated. I am thinking of a professional man from one of the countries of eastern Europe. I shall not identify him more specifically for fear of some embarrassment that he might be occasioned. He was a lawyer and in his own country he occupied a position of eminence and prestige in his profession. He enjoyed the high regard and respect of all the citizens of his country as a famed lawyer. However, because of his hostility to communism and inability to submit to its slave-like domination, he came to this country. Here he was required to live in simplicity and frugality, in circumstances far different to those to which he had been accustomed in the land of his birth. Presently he is engaged in employment which for him, because of his age, is physically exacting and indeed soon becoming impossible of performance. This citizen to whom I refer has just attained the 70th year of his life. He will be resident in this country ten years about the summertime of 1958. He is but one of many who will stand to enjoy the charitable and merciful benefits of the amendment.

In respect of one other aspect of the legislation, however, I should like to be permitted to advance merely a suggestion for the consideration of the minister and the government. It is in reference to the people referred to by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) a moment ago namely those who choose to leave the country and who still wish to enjoy the benefits of this legislation. There are many in that category who came to this country early in their lives and who, over a period of many years, have contributed heavily to the production and the revenue of our nation. The people of whom I am thinking at the moment when I make these remarks are largely people who come from the British isles, of whom there are many in my constituency.

They came here at an early age, have engaged in many and varied occupations in this country and, as I say, have contributed heavily to its advancement. Some of them have been here as long as 30 years and some as many as 40 years. However, their memories of the lands of St. Patrick and St. George or the lands of the shamrock and the heather are still green and they would like to go back in the declining years of their lives in order to pass the remainder of their days in those surroundings. It occurs to me that in the case of persons who fall within that particular category some exception to the present legislation might possibly be made. As I say, they have contributed heavily to the country's production and revenue. I realize that the proposal may have broader ramifications and must be considered in the light of those ramifications, but I respectfully hold out that suggestion for consideration by the minister and the government.

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my support to those in this house who have expressed themselves as being in favour of the increase in the old age pensions. However, I suggest the proposals fall far short of the promises made during the election campaign when those candidates now on the government side said that the Conservatives would, if elected, consider extending the present old age pension system by the addition of an insurance scheme similar to that in use in the United States. That is not the purpose of the bill introduced during this session.

While we do suggest that it is still not enough it is a step toward more security for the old age pensioner. Proven statements of welfare organization issued over a year ago showed that an income of $75 per month was the bare minimum for the existence of a single person. May I say that in Saskatchewan the C.C.F. government is taking up the slack of inadequate federal old age pensions by providing supplemental allowances, hospitalization and medical services. In addition, Saskatchewan provides nursing home care to the chronically ill in provincially operated nursing homes. Over 40 old age pension home projects are now in operation in Saskatchewan for the senior citizens of our province.

Prior to the 1957 federal election campaign the senior citizens of Canada were a forgotten people. They had no means to increase their meagre pensions in the twilight of their lives despite their hard work and contributions over a period of many years. I heard one speaker in this chamber a few days ago suggest that the provincial governments are not paying their share toward the care of needy old age pensioners. Until there is a change in the fiscal policy which now exists whereby the federal government takes 75 cents out of every tax dollar I suggest no provincial administration can do all they would like to do on behalf of their elderly people. With the remaining 25 cents out of every tax dollar paid in taxes having to be distributed between 4,600 municipal governments and 10 provincial governments it leaves much to be desired, but I suggest tonight that we get on with this legislation so that our old age pensioners will at least have the feel of a few extra dollars before the cost of living catches up with them. We have already heard that landlords have increased the rents of the old age pensioners to be effective when this increase is paid. Until our economy is planned for the benefit of the people of Canada we will continue to have this unequal condition. Let us pass this legislation immediately and with it extend our best wishes to the old age pensioners for another larger increase after the next election. We could say now that it is not much but it is the spirit that counts.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favour of this legislation which permits the government to make increased payments to our senior citizens and I want to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) for bringing in this bill. I regret, however, that he has not included an escalator clause.

There is one other matter I would like to raise in connection with this bill. In my area and several other areas in Canada I understand it is the practice to reduce the industrial pension payments by the amount of the old age pension when the pensioner reaches 70 years of age. Up to a few months ago this amount was $40, it is now $46 and I presume it will be $55. Where this practice is in vogue these increased payments will help industry in full where the plans are not contributory and in part where the plans are contributory. Most of such increased payments will help industry; this means that the old age pensioners will not receive one cent more than they did before, in cases where these deductions are made. I repeat, they will receive no more than when the old age pension was $40 a month. I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he has taken any steps to provide that these increased payments should be passed on to the pensioners.

Mr. J. A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, as a member from Newfoundland I feel I would indeed be remiss if I did not speak to this bill. Social security and particularly old age pensions played a very important role in bringing Newfoundland into confederation. As a matter of fact one should almost say that this was the bait that caught the fish. Social security and the benefits accruing therefrom were held over the people of Newfoundland and they were told "If you come into confederation this is what you will get."

I am of a new generation and I believe there is more in Canadian citizenship than social security. There are however many people in Newfoundland today who believe that the only benefit to be derived from being called Canadian is the receipt of family allowances and old age pensions. This is certainly a horrible situation. I feel that anything I would say in favour of this legislation would be superfluous as obviously it is not going to be opposed but I feel secure in the knowledge that the government I support is indeed keeping faith with the people.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to a great many remarks coming from your left and far right giving qualified support to this amending legislation. I do not think that simply because we sit to your right we should regard this solely as an achievement; I would much prefer tonight to think that this is a challenge and that starting from here we can go on to the point where we feel we have attended to all the needs of our senior citizens. I remember the remarks of the hon. member from Calgary South (Mr. Smith) who very forcibly pointed out that at any particular stage in the development of a country there is just so much which can go into this type of legislation. We have a serious problem if a great part of the gross national product is used in certain respects and in such a manner that it will will not produce and create further employment; then of course it is possible that the well of taxation will dry up.

I cannot help but recall being challenged on occasion at public meetings during the last eight or 10 months and being asked whether this party would approve pensions anywhere from $75 to $100 I think the most sane answer to this question is simply to say "If you were in a position where you might some day have the responsibility for fixing the amount then such estimates as are given and thrown across the floor at public meetings are the type which would have to be regarded in a very light manner."

I think that as matters now stand this legislation is doing as much in a cash way as this country can handle. I think, however that there are other things which are being done for senior citizens and other things which can be done in the future which will to a great extent alleviate some of their problems, particularly in these times of comparative inflation. I am thinking that perhaps as we look to the future we might give more serious thought to the problems of housing accommodation.

What can be done in this matter has been brought very forcibly before me as I have seen the efforts in this direction in my own constituency. There I saw the co-operation of three levels of government—municipal, provincial and federal—providing class A1 accommodation for senior citizens at prices they can afford to pay. I think that in future we might direct our efforts along these lines to a greater extent.

In metropolitan Toronto, as a matter of fact, I think we have to pay great credit to the present hon. member for York South (Mr. Beech) who while he was reeve of York township led the way in the construction of the Beech Hall apartments in Weston; it was at municipal level that the leadership came from. We have an example of the same type of construction in York West. There we have the West Acres apartment project. This unit was constructed by the municipality of metropolitan Toronto at an approximate cost of $800,000. It consists of eight buildings of 16 suites each, making a total of 128 suites of which 64 are bachelor suites, a total capacity of 192 elderly people.

The important part about this is the rents that are charged for this type of accommodation. The bachelor suites are $33.50 plus hydro, $1.50, and water, 75 cents, making a total of $35.75 per month, and I would like to point out that equivalent accommodation in apartments in other areas immediately adjacent to this cost between $115 and $120 a month. The double suites are $40 plus hydro, $1.50, and water 75 cents, a total of $42.50 a month.

This indicates, in this case at least, that two can live as cheaply as one. The first unit in this building project was opened on February 1 this year, and the last unit was occupied in May. There is room on this site for the possible expansion of this project by another eight buildings. A similar unit is, I understand, under construction in North York and it is expected it will be ready for occupancy, in part at least, in 1958. This building will cost in excess of $900,000 and will be identical with the unit in my own constituency except that the rents are to be $40 for bachelor suites and $50 for double apartments, including hydro and water. At present in metropolitan Toronto we have a waiting list of approximately 1200 people for these apartments.

I should like to illustrate the method of financing the West Acres project. The province of Ontario contributed $64,000 on the basis of $500 per suite under the Elderly Persons' Housing Aid Act. Metropolitan Toronto contributed $170,000 as a long-term loan with interest only payable; Central Mortgage and Housing contributed $618,350 on a 50-year mortgage arrangement. It should be pointed out here with regard to this type of assistance for elderly persons that not one cent is chargeable to the federal administration. This money is totally repayable with interest. The province makes an outright gift towards the construction; the municipality lends the money and retains at the end of the period title to the property.

In times when there are terrific demands on the government here is a method by which we can improve the lot of elderly persons and at the same time improve prospects in the building trades. I do not think the kind of co-operation I have described could be devoted to any better purpose than this. As a matter of fact I believe that with the new attitude which is being exhibited to the provinces by the government we can expect that this is a type of co-operation which, in the net result, will produce a great deal more actual comfort for our senior citizens than probably any long arguments about this legislation tonight.

I would like to say in closing that no matter whether we sit on this side of the house or the other, let us take tonight as a starting point, let us not look to the past. Let us take credit for this as an achievement but at the same time let us regard it as a challenge.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): If the remarks we have heard, Mr. Speaker, were an indication that the hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton) and his party are going to recommend that something further be done for the old age pensioners in the form of housing developments which will take their income into consideration, then we will indeed be looking to the future rather than to the past. But as I have listened to the various comments which have been made about the government's proposal and the various rates of pension which have been discussed I believe that the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) was probably quite correct when he said we were running a bingo in this regard.

Before the last election took place many years had gone by during which the old age pensioner had not been well taken care of. If the rate was not a fair one, we should have been doing something about it in those years before the $6 increase was finally granted at election time. Since that was done the cost of living has again risen. It has continued to rise, and now we are offering the old age pensioner $55. I suggest that $55 is not sufficient to bring the pension up to the standard of living which he had in 1949 when the $40 pension was in force, and I think the amount of $75 which we regard as a suitable rate should be justified.

In recommending any increase to the old age pension I think we must develop a means by which the rate can be tied in with the cost which the pensioner has to bear, and one of the ways in which he could do that could be found in the method of financing the pensions.

We have a limitation of 2 per cent with a maximum rate of $60 making this a contributory type of pension, to an extent, and I can see no justification, and I do not think the Canadian people can see any justification, when we reach that stage of $60 why the people who have the money to pay income tax no longer have to contribute any more than the $60. So I think we have been amiss when we have not made the suggestion that we take that little bit off and make it truly contributory. Those who are more able to pay should be allowed to do so.

If we have a pension plan which we have agreed is at least partially contributory it is obvious that the contributions have been made by our senior citizens who have produced the wealth of the nation and they should have some say about what they do with the small percentage of that wealth which we give them in the form of old age pensions and old age assistance. This being the case, I say that we cannot limit these people in terms of telling them where to live and what to do with their pension.

If an aged parent wishes to take up residence with his child in another country because he has no other close connection in Canada then he should be free to do so because of the right he has established by contributing to his pension. I think we should eliminate the requirement under which people must periodically return to Canada, to check in as it were, and re-establish residence here in order to continue receiving the old age pension. I believe they establish their residence in Canada during the years they live here and build up their pensions.

There are three points in this legislation, as I see it, and I am in complete agreement with the third which reduces the residence qualification for participation in the old age pension plan.

I would think the Canadian people are going to have to and will take a look at the financing of the pension plan. There is no reason at all to believe that the cost of living is not going to continue to climb. We have heard no solutions from the government with regard to inflation and monetary problems in general and, as was mentioned by the previous speaker, we have heard very little from the government as to what is being done to meet the housing problem. I am glad to have heard what was said this evening because I know in my own community in Ontario the minute this pension is increased every dime of it and in some cases more is taken off for rent, food, drugs and the other commodities the pensioner has to buy.

In my constituency we have a home for aged people run on a cost basis by a church as a non-profit organization. The pension is so low that the municipality must pay $15 in addition to the pension for the inmates of the home who cannot receive financial assistance from their children, relatives or friends. In the light of the constant increase in the cost of living the increase we are now providing will be eaten up in the way the increases granted in the past have been.

It is my opinion that we have an obligation to our senior citizens to closely scrutinize the financing of our old age pension plan with a view to bringing it into line with the cost of living and through the insertion of an escalator clause or by some other means providing for increases proportionate to the increase in the cost of living so that we will not have to wait until an election is held before the old age pensioner is given a pension adequate to meet his needs.

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a word or two with regard to Bill No. 19. Unlike hon. members in the official opposition I can express my happiness about this legislation with considerable consistency because ever since coming into this house in 1953 I have advocated increases in old age pensions. On the other hand, my hon. friends in the opposition are being most inconsistent in expressing their views. I gather from their comments that they are going to support this bill but when they formed the government and were in a position to bring in these increases all they did was bring in an increase equivalent to 20 cents a day for old age pensioners. They seem to be full of criticism now which is of course their right and duty in the opposition but it is not exactly constructive criticism. However, as long as they vote for the bill and we get the increases through this month and into the hands of the pensioners, all will be well.

The hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton) spoke of the Beech Hall project which happens to be in my constituency. We are very proud of it because it answers the need of our senior citizens for an independent and happy existence.

I am extremely pleased that the qualifying length of residence has been reduced from 20 to 10 years. There has been some criticism voiced both in the house and in the form of editorial comment across Canada about reducing the period of qualifying residence but I think we forget that the young adult immigrants who are coming to Canada bring with them their skills, trades and education. They represent no cost to Canada and we are inclined to lose sight of that fact. I have seen the figure $10,000 cited as representing what it costs Canadian taxpayers to educate one Canadian child, involving education, the baby bonus, health benefits and all these things. I believe the young immigrants who are coming to Canada will be a tremendous asset to this country. The older people who could not qualify for the 20-year residence period in large part are the parents of these young immigrants. I believe we owe it to these new Canadians that we consider them as Canadians.

There have been many injustices under the 20-year qualification period. One example in my own constituency is that of a woman who came here from Britain as a bride. She lived here for 30 years and raised and educated four children. Just before the last war she and her husband went to England for a holiday. The war came along and all four of her children who were grown up at that time entered and fought in the Canadian forces for Canada. The woman and her husband were forced to remain in England and eventually the husband died. The woman was unable to return until 1947 and because of the hiatus of seven or eight years in her residence in this country she could not qualify for the old age pension. The present legislation will remove the possibility of that sort of injustice occurring. I feel that this is a good bill that rights many existing wrongs and I give it my wholehearted support.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the house that if the minister speaks at this time he will close the debate.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that I should have reserved my opening remarks on second reading for this stage of the debate. I think I answered at that time practically all the questions and arguments that had been raised in the discussion on second reading. However, I will attempt to answer one or two new angles that have been brought up.

[Miss Aitken.]

I would like to mention that while everybody seems definitely in favour of this bill the degree of variance ranges from one extreme to another. I would simply like to mention again the point I brought out in my opening remarks at this stage of the bill to the effect that if you carry these various conditions, such as the residence rule and permissible period of absence, to the ultimate extreme as has been suggested upon occasion you could readily create a situation wherein you would have a person coming to Canada at 69 years of age, staying one year and taking out of Canada a pension totally paid for except for one year by the Canadian taxpayers.

We believe we have reached a reasonable, sound, middle of the road course in these two provisions whereby we reduce the residence requirement from 20 to 10 years and increase the absence permissible from three to six months. We also, of course, believe that the $55 rate which we have set is the correct rate; after due consideration we believe that is the correct figure. We do not say it will meet every requirement—no. I do not think anybody could ever claim that and we do not pretend to, but what we do say is that in most cases, together with any private funds the senior citizen may have, this amount will meet the situation.

I should like to assure the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan) that any increase in pensions are always passed on directly to the beneficiary involved. There may be private retirement plans which hinge on the amount of the old age security cheque. I am not saying there are not because I do not know particularly. All I can say is that the cheque issued by the government of Canada to the pensioners is in its full amount. If there are these other situations I would say that they should be looked at and brought to the attention of the public, as the hon. member has done tonight.

The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hahn) and the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Maloney)—possibly there were others and if I have missed them I am sorry—have mentioned that if some pioneer Canadian citizen who has lived here all his life and has paid taxes in one form or another for years and years should at the age of 70 have to go south for his health he should be allowed to do so. I am inclined to think there is a great deal of merit in that suggestion. I certainly will be very happy to give it consideration as time goes on, but at the moment I do not see that we can do much about the matter without giving it considerable study.

Incidentally, the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) mentioned a pro rata pension. I think that probably falls into the same category. The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) claimed during the debate that these pensions should be made payable any place and he wondered how many had been cancelled during the period of the scheme. I may say that the total is roughly 2,500. I mentioned that earlier in my remarks.

The hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Marler) seemed very concerned about where the money was going to come from for this measure. I would be happy to tell him, of course, that if the formula were being changed it would seem reasonable that an amendment should be included in the amendments at this time as the two-two-two formula is actually mentioned in the bill. But I would also refer him to section 11, subsection 3, of the Old Age Security Act, which is in these words:

> If the Minister of Finance is of opinion that the amount to the credit of the old age security fund is or will be less than the amount required to pay the pensions payable under this act, he may from time to time direct that amounts be credited to the fund by way of temporary loans and the amount of such loans shall be charged to the fund by way of repayment at such time as the Minister of Finance may direct.

Subsection 4 reads:

> The Minister of Finance shall annually report to parliament the temporary loans, if any, made to the fund pursuant to this section, and whether, in his opinion, the revenues of the fund are or will be sufficient in the ensuing year to meet the charges on the fund without further loans and, if it appears that the revenues will not be sufficient, he shall state what measures he recommends for the purpose of increasing the revenues of the fund.

I would suggest that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) will announce his procedure at the appropriate time. I might also point out, however, that there was a considerable surplus at the end of the last fiscal period, and when the former minister of transport suggests that we may endanger our defence effort I am positive that will not be the case and he may rest assured that indeed that will not be done.

It is a strange coincidence that the amount involved in the amendments contained in the bill approaches $110 million which is not very much more than the amount used out of last year's revenues, namely $100 million, to set up the Canada Council.

Mr. Marler: Which the hon. member supported.

Mr. Monteith: In this instance the $110 million is not going to the Canada Council, it is going to the senior citizens of the Dominion of Canada.

An hon. Member: That was a capital fund.

Mr. Monteith: It came out of surplus.

Mr. Marler: Nonsense, it did not come out of surplus at all.

Mr. Monteith: Your surplus would have been much larger if you had not charged up that amount. There was one question raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). He wondered how the matter of the six months absence from Canada would work. Actually in the past the act has been interpreted to mean that there could be three months clear absence from Canada. In other words, a person could leave Canada in January and could be away for February, March and April and would then have three months absence. He actually receives his cheque for the month he leaves Canada and does not receive a cheque thereafter until he returns. But if he returns within the appropriate time he is then paid all the cheques for the period in which he was absent from Canada. That position is going to continue except that the period is to be extended to six months.

I think there was a question in the mind of the hon. member for Vancouver East concerning a person who might leave Canada this month, we will say. According to the amendment, he has until the 31st or last day of the sixth month succeeding this month to return to Canada. He would start out this year and use up December. The first month in which he leaves does not count but he would have to count December of this year and could continue to stay away for the first five months of next year. Provided he was home on the 31st day of May there would be no penalty. His cheques would be paid to him which had been held back during his absence. Then he has one month still to go. He could still absent himself during November, 1958 and be away in December of that year.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether I have answered all the questions but I feel that I have. After all, as I said before, I think I actually answered them in my opening remarks.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—Suspension of pension.

Mr. Marler: I should like to draw to the attention of the minister two points in connection with the drafting of the revised subsection 1 of section 5. I should point out that in the first part of this subsection provision is made for the case of a pensioner who absents himself from Canada for a period in excess of one month, and provision is made that payment of his pension will be suspended immediately following the payment for the month in which he so absents himself, but may be resumed when the pensioner returns.

The second part says:

—where the pensioner returns to Canada within six months from the last day of the first month in which he so absented himself from Canada, the pension upon being resumed may also be paid for the period during which he so absented himself,—

These are the words I want to draw to the attention of the minister.

—but not exceeding a total of six months in any calendar year.

Now, it seems to me to be very clear, Mr. Chairman, that what is intended by this language is that the period of absence must not for the purpose of pension exceed six months. From the language here one would almost believe that regardless of what happened the total amount of instalments that might be paid to the pensioner was not to exceed six months in any calendar year. Perhaps I have not made myself quite clear. If a pensioner absents himself for just less than six months, I take it that it is the intention that he should have his pension not only for the six months he remains in Canada but also the six months during which he is absent. However, the language almost suggests that in the event of his being away for these six months the total payments will be —I draw attention to the last line—"not exceeding a total of six months in any calendar year".

It seems to me, in reading the section that that might almost limit all of the payments the pensioner was to receive to six months, whereas I conceive it to be the intention that if his absences do not exceed six months he receives payment for the six months he was in Canada and likewise for the six months he was absent, provided he meets the other conditions of the subsection. I should like to draw the minister's attention to the wording. It seems to me that if the wording were to refer more clearly to the period it would leave room for no doubt as to what the pensioner was to receive.

Mr. Monteith: I think if the hon. member would examine the clause he will see that it refers to the pension being resumed; it may also be paid for the period during which he so absented himself, but not exceeding a total of six months in any calendar year. Obviously that is meant to apply to the period of absence.

Mr. Marler: I agree with the minister as to what the intention is, but I am wondering whether the language expresses that intention as clearly as it ought to be expressed.

Mr. Monteith: Well, Mr. Chairman, in some of these things I have to admit we go by what the law officers of the crown say. They are responsible for drafting this bill to meet the intentions of the government. The clause reads in part:

—six months from the last day of the first month in which he so absented himself from Canada, the pension upon being resumed may also be paid for the period during which he so absented himself, but not exceeding a total of six months in any calendar year.

The wording is somewhat changed from the previous subsection which it replaces, but at the same time I am led to believe it meets the requirements of and the intent behind the legislation. In my opinion, it seems reasonable.

Mr. Marler: It seems to me that if one looks at the wording of the present subsection, it concludes with these words:

—the pension upon being resumed may also be paid for a period of such absence not exceeding three months in any calendar year.

It seems to me that the language of that section does not admit of any possible doubt, whereas by changing the language, as has been done in this subsection, it does seem to give rise to doubt as to what is in mind.

Mr. Winch: I must admit that I, too, find myself a little confused. I have not got it completely clear yet, from a reading of this section, especially the latter part of it, where it says:

—the pension upon being resumed may also be paid for the period during which he so absented himself, but not exceeding a total of six months in any calendar year.

Now, would that stop a person being away October, November and December of this year, that is three months, and then being away three months in the first part of the next year because those three months would not be in the same calendar year?

Mr. Monteith: He would have to return by March 31 next year, then he could subsequently go away again but he cannot be out of Canada for more than six consecutive months, except that the month in which he so absents himself does not count.

Mr. Winch: If a person were away October, November and December of this year, January, February and March of next year, and then came back for one day, he could then go away for another three months because that is in the next calendar year?

Mr. Monteith: That is right.

Mr. Marler: The curious part of this section is that it does not seem to coincide with what the minister has, I suggest in good faith, been telling us during the discussion on second reading. As I understood him, he explained that one of the purposes of the bill was to permit a pensioner to be absent from Canada provided his absence did not exceed six months in a calendar year, but the situation that we are now finding embodied in this bill is not that he may be away for six months in a calendar year, but that he may not be away for more than six consecutive months in any twelve-month period?

Mr. Monteith: No.

Mr. Marler: I think that is quite clear. Let us look at the hypothetical case mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver East. He says, supposing a pensioner leaves Canada on the 1st of October and is absent in that particular calendar year—assuming he was not absent before October—for three months. In the next succeeding calendar year the minister says he must be back by March 31. Why is that? His absence in that calendar year may only be five months, if he returns at the end of May, but he certainly qualifies for not being absent for more than six months in that calendar year. Yet, as I understand this section, and the minister's interpretation is quite correct, it does not conform with his explanation and the person must come back so that the period of absence does not exceed six months in a twelve-month period. I want to point out that what we have been talking about during the debate has been a six months' absence in a calendar year.

Mr. Monteith: He still does get a six months-absence in a calendar year. He may not be able to use it consecutively because, for argument's sake, being away the last three months of 1957, and not being able to be absent for a period of from four to six months, he must return by March 31. But he still has three more months; in fact, he has four; he has three plus the number of days he leaves in the preceeding month. He still has that period to go in 1958, although I admit he must return on March 31 because he has presumably been away a succeeding total of six months.

Mr. Ellis: I wonder whether I might ask the minister this question. In view of the objection he raised to permitting unlimited absence from the country, what is the significance of that one day? Does he feel that because a pensioner is in a position where he might be able to travel back to Canadian soil for a period of 24 hours, by virtue of that fact he becomes eligible to draw pension?

Mr. Monteith: I think the whole thought behind the act is lost when that matter is brought into consideration. In the amendment we are saying—this is exactly the same as it was before except it is extended beyond six months—that a person cannot be absent any more than six months without having to return to Canada. All right, you say, for argument's sake, he can come back on January 31, having been away five months in the previous year. He can come back on January 31 and spend one day, leave again on February 1 and stay another five months. That is quite so. But at the same time we must have some limitation; and we choose to believe that the six-month period is actually the figure that should be used at this time.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The minister mentioned returning for one day. It would seem to me to be most unreasonable to say to a pensioner who was in Florida that he must pay his fare and all the expenses connected with such a trip in order to come back to Canada for one day. I ask that as a question. Would it seem reasonable to go to all of the expense to come here to Canada for one day which would qualify him for another three or four months in the south?

Mr. Monteith: I think I understand what are the hon. member's thoughts, but in the present legislation there is provision that he could be away for three months—for argument's sake, say the last three months in 1957—and have to come back for one day before he can go away for another three months. This is simply extending the period. He can be away the last six months in 1957, come back for January 1 and be away for the first six months in 1958.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I do not question this provision being in the other bill but I still think it is unreasonable to expect an old age pensioner receiving $55 a month to return to Canada when the cost to come to Canada and return might be $200. To me it would seem to be unreasonable.

Mr. Monteith: It would appear to me that a person who has been in Florida, can afford it. I am not saying that everybody who goes south is one who can afford it but I believe that quite a few people who go down there, shall I say, for six months and return for a day and go back for six months can probably afford to do it for the one day.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): In line with the point raised by the hon. member over to my right,—I am not too sure which riding he represents—

An hon. Member: Charlotte.

Mr. Martin (Timmins):—I think the wording of that particular section is a bit confusing. According to the explanation we have had from the minister, it means in essence that he cannot be away for more than six consecutive months.

Mr. Monteith: That is right; that is the intent of it.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): But it is a total of six months in one calendar year. Those are two entirely different meanings.

Mr. Monteith: Will the hon. member repeat that question, please?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): The last line reads as follows:

—but not exceed a total of six months in any calendar year.

To take the wording literally it could mean that, in the hypothetical case that was raised, you could be away the last six months of this year, that is the last six months of 1957, and the first six months of 1958.

Mr. Monteith: Provided that you returned for one day.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): You would not be over six months in either of the two calendar years. But according to the explanation given by the minister, it means that you cannot be away for more than six consecutive months, regardless of which year it is.

Mr. Monteith: That is not quite correct. The intent behind the amendment is that he cannot be away for more than six months. Mind you, he can be away for six months plus 29 days but that is the limit.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): It seems clear from the legislation that if a pensioner decides to leave the country he cannot receive any moneys at all until he has returned. Then if there is any back pay owing, he gets it. It seems to me that if a person who is in receipt of old age pension, and who for that reason would not have any surplus supply of money, is going away say to a warmer climate, as for instance down to Florida, to live, and who needs this money from his pension, he should get it. How in the world is he ever going to be able to stay there if he receives none of his pension in the period between the time he leaves and the time he comes back? Surely it would not do him much good otherwise. He would never have an opportunity to save enough money to pay his expenses down there for six months. If he could do so, he would not need the pension. The very fact that he needs the pension, and needs it every month, seems to me to be sufficient reason to pay him on a monthly basis.

Mr. Monteith: I do not think we could do much about paying a pensioner when he was absent. If you continued to pay his cheque during his absence he certainly would stay his full six months and there is no reason why he should not do so. By the amendment he is quite entitled to do that. But if he then did not come back to Canada we would be "out" the five months' cheques. We pay him his first month, the month in which he absents himself. From an administrative angle, it usually takes a few weeks to find out actually that the person is absent. Then the cheques are no longer mailed to him until he returns. It is true that maybe he has reason to have that money while he is still south in Florida or wherever it may be. If so, maybe he can save those cheques and use them to go south next year. But from an administrative angle I do not see how we could very well do otherwise. After all, we must protect our own situation.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): The minister just pointed out a few moments ago that in all the time that pension has been in operation there were only something like 2,500 persons who had left and not returned.

Mr. Monteith: That is one of the reasons; because this clause was in force.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): In all of the time that this pension has been operative there have been only 2,500 who have not returned. But you are going to penalize the other pensioners because a few decided not to return. I really cannot think that is a good reason for penalizing all these other pensioners who are desirous of leaving the country, probably for health purposes, just because one or two may decide not to return. I think the government should give the matter further consideration and should make it possible for our old age pensioners to go away, enjoy their pension, then come back at the end of six months, and the next year they can go ahead and do the same thing. The pensioner will have a mighty hard time in saving up his pension cheques, even though he is living here, so as to have enough money put aside to go on a trip for six months.

Mr. Cameron: I cannot see what argument the minister has for withholding the pension cheque merely because of fear that the man may decide not to some back. What difference does it make? If he does not come back at the end of six months, all right, he is cut off according to your amendment. But what possible reason is there for not paying him for that six months during which you say he is entitled to be out of the country? What administrative difficulty is there? Is it so difficult to put a stamp on a letter to the United States? I do not see how the minister can present any argument at all.

Mr. Winch: What I have to say is along the same line. In the first month that the old age pensioner goes outside of Canada he gets his cheque. According to the minister, he gets his cheque for the month that he goes out and he gets it as a right because it is his pension. But it is also his pension for six months. He only loses it as a right if he does not come back in six months but the first six months of his pension is a right. The five months is just as much a right as the first month so why cannot the pensioner get it? I am afraid the hon. minister is not making sense.

Mr. Monteith: Well could I point out the following instance: if this person left the country ostensibly with the thought of returning in three to six months, as long as he is within the legal limit he is paid his cheque each month. However, if he decides to stay eight months then how could we recover the six months he had recevied?

Mr. Winch: Why should you want to recover the six months? That is his by right.

Mr. Monteith: Because he owes us six months.

Mr. Cameron: Why do you say he owes it to you; that is not your money it is his.

Mr. Monteith: Not if he stays over the six months. That is not his right. He is not entitled to any one of those eight months he stays away over the six months.

Mr. Cameron: What makes you say that, I do not see why?

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, on this point; if a pensioner leaves Canada and goes to Arizona for reasons of health, spends six months down there and is unable to return because of his ill health, then that pensioner is being robbed of his right. He is being robbed of five months' pension. On the other hand if his health permits him to return to the country for one day then he can recover the amount of the cheques. This does not seem to me to be a very fair provision; it discriminates against persons who by virtue of their ill health are unable to return to Canada at the end of the six months period. If they have earned that pension by right and have decided for their own reasons to stay down there permanently, of course they are cut out and the treasury of Canada is no longer required to pay them any pensions for the balance of the time after the six months. In other words it seems to me that this provision is designed for one purpose only and that is to make sure those people who do not return are denied their pension cheques for five months. I can see no other reason for the wording of the provision as it now stands in the bill.

An hon. Member: If you do not like it vote against it.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): In reply, Mr. Chairman, the minister insinuated that any person who was able to go to Florida for six months could afford to go back and forth any time he wished.

Mr. Monteith: No I did not.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Well I got that impression.

Mr. Monteith: Do not put words into my mouth.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I have in mind a case of a gentleman and his wife whom I know very very well. He is a retired banker with a very small pension and has a very serious heart condition. His doctor advises him that he must not stay in a cold climate in winter time. This is the case I had in mind when I was speaking previously. Now for his wife and himself to go to Florida and for the matter of one day to be compelled to come back to Canada in order to qualify seems to me unreasonable. I do not question this was in the old act; I do not say it was not for one moment. However, even if it was in the old act I say that it is still wrong to compel a couple to come back to Canada, and put them to the expense of travelling back and forth simply to be here for one day in order to qualify for another three months down there. It does not seem reasonable to me at all.

Mr. Monteith: If I might point this out, my hon. friend's friend will at least have twice as long out of the country now as he did before without it being necessary for him to come back. As I mentioned earlier when I was closing the debate on second reading, there are probably certain things to be done, such as the possibility of giving consideration to pioneer Canadians who have lived all their lives in Canada and have given years of service, paid taxes and so on.

There may be other sections of the act which require consideration but at the moment we are simply changing these three fundamental clauses, these three fundamental points. We are raising the pension from $46 to $55; reducing the residence period requirement from 20 to 10 years, and increasing the period of permissible absence from three to six months. Now there may be other things to be considered and I am not saying there are not. There are the regulations with the province which I think should be examined but which I have not had an opportunity or quite frankly the time to examine. I have not been in office long enough but I am quite willing to consider these things as time goes on. However, as I say, at the moment we just have to accept the fact that these are the three fundamental changes which are required.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The particular change I have in mind is with respect to a person who would normally go away in say October or November. I am not thinking of the person who would go in January and stay away for six months or the next year—I think that is most reasonable—but I am thinking of the person who must be away during cold weather for reasons of health and leaves Canada for instance on the first of October; they are in Florida or some other country during October, November and December and they do not return to Canada until April 30.

Mr. Monteith: They do not have to.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): You said a few moments ago they could not have over six months.

Mr. Monteith: If he returns on April 30 he is quite within his rights.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): That is right, I do not question that.

Mr. Monteith: If he leaves October 30 and returns April 30.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Well he has to come back on the first of April and be in Canada for one day and then go back for two more months. I still think it is unreasonable.

Mr. Aiken: I think the hon. member has overlooked the fact that the spirit and intention of the act is that a person shall be allowed to stay out of Canada for six months. If he is going to come back to Canada for a day we would have to assume that he was merely coming back in a technical sense only.

An hon. Member: To get his cheque.

Mr. Aiken: To get around the provisions of the statute and in that case he would be coming back for a technical purpose but not to carry out the intention of the act. I would think in those circumstances if he felt like coming back he would be within his rights to do so, but it would be at his own expense.

Mr. Herridge: This is a departure from the principle established in the present section of the Old Age Security Act which reads as follows:

> Where a pensioner absents himself from Canada, payment of his pension shall be suspended immediately following the payment for the month in which he so absents himself, but may be resumed when the pensioner returns; and, where a pensioner returns to Canada within six months from the time he left Canada the pension upon being resumed may be also paid for a period of such absence not exceeding three months in any calendar year.

I understood that it was the practice that a pensioner could be away three months in one year or three months in the next or a total of six months and obtain his full pension upon return. I am of the opinion that this clause is more restrictive and departs from the principle which has been in effect since the act was first passed in this house.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I think under the old legislation there were cases where people were out of the country for a period of six months. I quite clearly recall an asthmatic case who went to Arizona in the last three months of the year and he stayed there until the end of March. I think upon his return he got his pension for the whole six months period. Now probably that was against the law so I should not reveal his name, but I still think that under the old act he could obtain his old age pension for three months in any calendar year.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the minister if a person goes out of the country and stays away for eight months and then returns to Canada—assuming for medical reasons or something of that kind he had overstayed the six months period, coming back at the end of eight or nine months or even after a year—how long would he have to be in residence in Canada again before being entitled to further payments of the old age pension?

Mr. Monteith: They are reinstated the month in which they return.

Mr. Irwin: Can we assume that the calendar year is from January 1 to December 31 in any year?

Mr. Monteith: A calendar year, yes.

Mr. Irwin: So a person, according to the minister, can actually be away for seven months? In view of the fact that a person gets his pension at the end of September—the 28th or 30th—he can be away in October, November, December, January, February, returning here in March; there would be nothing to stop him doing that and leaving shortly afterwards. Is that correct?

Mr. Monteith: That is correct.

Mr. Irwin: Why does the minister want to keep these people from getting a pension? So far as I am concerned we are giving these people aged 70 and over a pension because they are 70 years of age. If they are getting that pension because they are 70 years of age what the dickens difference does it make where they live?

Mr. Marler: I just want to say, before we close the discussion, that I think our difficulty over this clause arises from the fact that throughout the discussion we had been led to understand that the bill would permit absences of six months in any calendar year, whereas we find it does not have exactly that effect. Unfortunately it has the effect of limiting the absence of a pensioner to not more than six months in any 12-month period.

Mr. Monteith: No.

Mr. Marler: Well, let us say it puts a practical difficulty in the way of somebody staying out of the country for more than six months plus the additional month of departure, and it seems to me the minister ought to look at the clause and see whether it would not be possible to make the language clear so that somebody who perhaps has legitimate grounds for leaving the country during the winter months is not forced to go through what one hon. member referred to a moment ago as a technical return. It seems to me that the main provision is that the limitation should not exceed six months in any calendar year. I cannot see any difficulty whether he has his absences all together over a 12-month period or not, provided they do not exceed six months in any calendar year, but the procedure of going back every six or seven months to be able to establish his return to Canada and complete six months residence in that calendar year seems unjustified and farcical.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I rather agree with the hon. member who has just spoken, but for another reason. There seems to be an unfairness about this one-day return. For instance, let us take a person who lives in Toronto, who goes over to Buffalo and has to return for one day to establish his residence. It is no trouble for such a person to come back to Canada. But let us consider another person who lives here in Ottawa and who goes to Florida. That is a different matter; he has to return a long way just for the sake of one day to establish his residence. Some hon. members may say that it is a very small thing, but there is a distinction here, an unfairness as between one citizen and another.

Mr. Monteith: They are all the same.

Mr. Hansell: No, a man who has to come back from Florida or from England is in a different position. Supposing a man goes to England. Does he have to come back for the sake of one day? He does. So he is placed at very much of a disadvantage compared with another person who has to make a much shorter journey. As I say, there is unfairness between citizens, depending on how far they go away. It is all right to go across the line from Vancouver to Seattle and come back for a day, but a person who leaves Vancouver to go to England cannot come back for a day so easily.

Mr. Herridge: Will the minister tell the house what is the value of causing an old age pensioner this extra expense in order to make a technical return of one day in order to qualify for another six month's eligibility for pension?

Mr. Monteith: If you made it one year—if you made it two years, you would still need to have a return period, be it only one day. There was a return period prescribed under the three months legislation which had been in existence for some time. Now we are doubling that period of absence, but we still retain the one day requirement and I would venture to say that there are very few, if any, who contemplate returning for the one day. I venture to say that under this legislation a person leaving on October 1 can stay away till April 30, and I cannot imagine anything more reasonable than that.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am informed that they were not required to return in the three months, because under the terms of the act I can recall several people who were away for six months and who did not return, because they used three months at the end of one year and three months at the beginning of the next.

Mr. Monteith: Under the previous legislation I understand they could not go away for two years, if they had done this.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, the explanatory note in the bill to this subsection reads as follows:

> Where a pensioner absents himself from Canada, payment of his pension shall be suspended immediately following the payment for the month in which he so absents himself, but may be resumed when the pensioner returns; and where the pensioner returns to Canada within six months from the time he left Canada, the pension upon being resumed may also be paid for a period of such absence not exceeding three months in any calendar year.

As I read that it means that if a pensioner goes out of the country on October 1 and returns before the end of March he may receive his full six months pension with respect to the three months of the calendar year, October, November and December, and for the three months of January, February and March. So it was possible under the old legislation for a pensioner to be absent from the country for the full six months without having to return to Canada during that period.

Mr. Monteith: He did, however, use up two years of rights; he could not go away the succeeding October and remain away without losing his benefits.

Mr. Quelch: I gather that the minister's main objection to paying an old age pensioner by the month while he is still away is the possibility that that pensioner may have no intention of returning. In other words, the pensioner might possibly have sold his house and decided to take up residence in another country to which the pension would be sent. I agree with the minister that in a case like that, that if a person had ended his domicile in this country, sold his house and made up his mind to live in another country, then the pension should not be paid.

On the other hand there might be cases of old age pensioners who own houses in this country and who fully intend to return. It seems to me there is a difference between the two situations. It seems to me it would be a comparatively easy thing for the minister to be assured that a pensioner intended to return. If he had property in this country he could give some form of guarantee that he intended to come back, otherwise the cost of that pension could be taken from the value of the house.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What guarantee could he give if he had no property?

Mr. Quelch: I am thinking of the man who has some property.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): We are thinking of the people who have no property.

Mr. Quelch: At least the department could get security from a pensioner who does own property in this country; it could go that far.

Mr. Monteith: I did say earlier, and it is quite true, that we do not pay a pensioner beyond the month in which he absents himself, because if he did happen to stay two or three months longer we would have the job of collecting. I am sure every hon. member of this house has had lots of letters from constituents from whom certain amounts have had to be collected, and they know how they are received. After all, collecting these sums is a very unpopular course. This particular course, however, does not seem to be unpopular among the beneficiaries. Experience has shown that, and it is a lot worse to try to collect afterwards. We are protecting the beneficiary from having to pay that backlog.

[Mr. Ellis.]

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, in order to overcome what seems to be the most serious objection to this clause, I wonder if the minister would consider amending it so that in the event a person was required to stay away for more than six months because of illness and then returned within a 12-month period intending to establish residence again he would be paid the full six months during which he was away. The cut-off date would be a full year and if he returned within a year he would be paid for the six months' absence.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I mentioned earlier that there were certain things to which I would be happy to give consideration and this is one of them but I do not feel this is the time to give that consideration. I think it has to be thought out very clearly and well.

Mr. Low: Mr. Chairman, I think I can appreciate something of the problem the minister faces from an administrative point of view, if for no other reason, which perhaps makes him hesitate at this time to consider making the pension payable as of right no matter where the pensioner may be. I think there are quite a number of administrative difficulties involved. I know some of them because I have had experience in administering pensions in the province and these problems would be ten times as great in the federal field.

I suppose we should be asking the former minister of national health and welfare concerning the philosophy behind the provision that exists requiring a return to Canada and withholding of the pension in the absence of the pensioner during the three or six month period during which he may be away because that was established by the Liberal administration and I am not in a position now to ask the former minister about that background.

I would certainly suggest to the new minister that in the next year or two he give consideration to the suggestion that has been made and see if the administrative difficulties can be overcome so the pension will be payable as of right no matter where the pensioner lives. I believe the minister said that approximately 2,500 pensioners had been cut off over the years in the past. It may be necessary to conduct some sort of survey to determine what has happened to them and what kind of problems were involved in their moving around.

If the minister would give an undertaking that he will give this matter consideration perhaps with a view to changing the act again at some not too distant future date I would be quite content to have the bill put through in its present form. As I understand it, what we are doing here is simply extending the practice of the past but we are giving a six-month leave of absence rather than a three-month leave of absence. Under the old clause, as I understand it, a person could be away for six months without disqualifying himself but upon his return to the country all he could claim was a payment of pension for three months. Under the present scheme if he leaves for six months and then returns he can claim the whole of the six months under the regulations. It is an improvement, believe me.

If the minister cannot see his way clear to making the change that is requested now, if he will give me an undertaking that he will study the matter with a view to changing the system in the future I will, as I said, be prepared to let the bill pass in this form.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Peace River is not quite correct—

The Chairman: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Timmins.

Mr. Herridge: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I misunderstood you.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I wonder if the minister could explain to me why it is more difficult to administer this plan by cutting off at the end of six months rather than at the end of one month. I cannot see how there would be any greater difficulty in the administration of the act.

Mr. Monteith: Because, Mr. Chairman, if a pensioner stays away the extra month or two he is not entitled to the six months during which he was absent. He has to return in order to be entitled to the months in which he was absent. Then, too, you might have the job of collecting and he might not be in this country.

Mr. Cameron: It does not apply to the first month.

Mr. Monteith: No, because the first month is free.

Mr. Cameron: Oh no, it is not; it is a total of six months.

Mr. Monteith: He is entitled to the month in which he absents himself.

Mr. Cameron: But you only pay for a total of six months, not seven months.

Mr. Monteith: But he is entitled to the month in which he absents himself.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I just rise to suggest that the hon. member for Peace River was not quite correct in saying this is the same as the old practice. This is a departure in principle from the administration of the previous government.

Mr. Low: In what way?

Mr. Herridge: Because the pensioner could stay away for three months and then for an additional three-month period providing it fell at the beginning and end of a year and could collect his whole pension when he returned.

Mr. Low: No, he could only claim for three months in each calendar year.

Mr. Monteith: He could go away that autumn.

Mr. Herridge: The hon. member for Peace River suggested that the minister give consideration to this matter in the next year or two with a view to bringing in an amendment. I would suggest he give it consideration in the next month or two.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister has already made it clear that the consideration involved in this matter of not carrying on the pension payment during the period the pensioner is absent is not one of administrative difficulty. Apparently he has made it clear that he is prepared to deny the rights of pensioners to be absent from Canada for more than the month in which they go away as a matter of right. I wonder if the minister could give us an idea of what he estimates would be the drain on the treasury of Canada if that period of absence were granted as a right and the pension payments were continued up to the period which he proposes of six months.

I think it has become obvious during this discussion that the whole impact of these restrictions is going to rest upon the people who depend primarily upon the old age pension. The problem of coming back for a day for a week or longer is not a serious matter to the person who has other means but this is not the case with the person who because of health or family connections wants to reside outside of Canada and is dependent almost entirely upon the pension. Such people are really caught in the bite with regard to this matter.

It seems to me it is all very well for the minister to say this is a matter to which he will give consideration in the future. We all recognize that the minister has not been in office very long as yet and there may be a great many matters to which he has not had an opportunity of giving adequate study, but at the same time I would point out that this particular matter is not a new one for this house. It has been the subject of pretty thorough discussion, certainly in every session during the time I have been here, and the minister should not be unfamiliar with it.

It seems to me that having gone as far as he has the minister might have gone one little step further, unless he can convince us it is going to make such a great drain upon the treasury that the matter of extending this right would bankrupt the government of Canada.

Mr. Monteith: May I simply say, Mr. Chairman, there could be an amount of roughly $4 million which might have to be collected.

1. How many class 4 air carrier licences are held in Port Arthur?
2. Are any such licences held by organizations or persons which do not have aircraft?
3. How many applications have been received for such licences in the last five years?
4. Is it the practice to award more than one licence in one area?
5. How many licences, covering what bases, are held in northern Ontario by O. Wieben and/or Superior Airways?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Three.

2. No.

3. One hundred and seventy-nine. None at Port Arthur.

4. The number of licences granted in an area is based upon the extent to which the public interest requires the services applied for and each case is decided on its merits.

5. Four—as follows: Licence No. ATB 79/46(C)—base at Fort William, Ontario; licence No. ATB 284/47(C)—base at Armstrong, Ontario; licence No. ATB 814/57(C)—base at Atikokan, Ontario; licence No. ATB 816/57(C)—base at Manitouwadge, Ontario.

LAKE ONTARIO WATER LEVEL

Question No. 67—Mr. Henderson:

1. What is being done by the federal government departments and/or the government of the province of Ontario to establish and control a permanent water level for lake Ontario?
2. When will the water level for lake Ontario be established?
3. What will the water level for lake Ontario be?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. Following recommendations of the international joint commission, the governments of Canada and the United States approved for the regulation of lake Ontario on December 3rd, 1956, a range of monthly mean water levels during the navigation season from 244.0 feet to 248.0 feet as nearly as may be and a set of criteria for operation of the regulating works. Regulation plans are being developed now by the international St. Lawrence river board of control under the aegis of the international joint commission to maintain levels of lake Ontario within this range under the same hydrological and meteorological conditions that have occurred during the past century.

2. On completion of construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and power projects the international St. Lawrence river board of control is to assume control of the water levels of lake Ontario in accordance with the range of levels and the set of criteria approved by the governments of Canada and the United States.

3. Compared with the actually experienced range of stage which has varied from a minimum monthly mean elevation of 242.68 (November 1934) to a maximum monthly mean elevation of 249.29 (June 1952) the approval requires that the lake be regulated within a range of stage from elevation 244.0 feet (navigation season) to elevation 248.0 feet, as nearly as may be. During the winter periods the water levels may be as low as 243.0 feet. Under regulation the frequency of occurrence of monthly mean water levels of approximately 247.0 feet and higher will be less than has occurred in the past. It should be noted that the regulation limits described herein are for monthly mean water levels, and natural phenomena such as seiches and storms may cause these limits to be exceeded for short periods of time. Should lake Ontario receive supplies of water in excess of those of past record, the regulating works will be operated to provide all possible relief to riparian owners upstream and downstream. Should the lake receive supplies of water less than those of past record, the regulating works will be operated to provide all possible relief to navigation and power interests.

NARCOTIC DRUGS—ARRESTS AND CONVICTIONS

1. Have any arrests been made since March 31, 1957, for infractions of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Yes.

2. To September 30, 1957: (a) 294; (b) for trafficking:

convictions	23
still before the courts	33
for possession:
convictions	154
still before the courts	47

EDUCATION—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPALITIES

Question No. 103—Mr. Kirk:

What steps has the government taken to make federal financial assistance available to municipal governments for education?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

None except that the federal government pays grants in lieu of taxes, including school taxes, to municipalities under the Municipal Grants Act in respect of all federal properties.

TAX-FREE CIGARETTES FOR FISHERMEN

Question No. 104—Mr. Kirk:

1. Are any fishermen allowed tax-free cigarettes?
2. If so, what group and on what basis?
3. Is consideration being given to extending the privilege to all fishermen?

Answer by: Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue):

1. Yes.

2. Fishing vessels engaged in deep-sea or seal fisheries, when clearing from an ocean port direct to such fisheries, are entitled to obtain as ships' stores tax-free cigarettes manufactured in Canada when the duration of the voyage is not less than 15 days.

3. No.

APPENDIX

LETTER FROM PRIME MINISTER TO PREMIERS OF PROVINCES

(Similar letter sent to the premiers of all the provinces. The letter to the Premier of Quebec was in the French language)

OFFICE OF PRIME MINISTER
CANADA

Ottawa, October 31, 1957.

Honourable L. M. Frost,
Prime Minister of Ontario,
Parliament Buildings,
Toronto 2, Ontario.

My dear Prime Minister:

I have now had replies from all provinces to my letter of September 16th and I wish to confirm that the dominion-provincial conference on fiscal relations will be held at Ottawa on the dates proposed, Monday and Tuesday, November 25th and 26th.

The question of the participation or representation of municipalities at the conference has been raised from several quarters. I should, therefore, like to make clear that my colleagues and I feel that the question of whether or not municipal representatives attend this conference as part of the provincial delegations is one for each provincial government to decide in view of its responsibility for municipal affairs. Future policy in regard to this question might be considered at the conference itself if provincial governments agree.

In regard to the scope of the conference, the federal government believes that it should center on dominion-provincial fiscal relations but should afford an opportunity to discuss other current issues which have an important bearing on our fiscal relations. On the other hand it should not extend to detailed consideration of particular subjects that would be better taken up in a group with more specialized responsibilities.

I would suggest that we might have in mind two days of discussion at this November meeting, first in public and then in committee, after which we would adjourn to a later date when we would plan to be ready to consider specific proposals arising out of our first meeting.

The conference will open at 10:00 a.m., in the railway committee room of the parliament buildings and I shall be looking forward to seeing you there at that time.

I have designated Mr. Jean Fournier to serve as secretary of the dominion-provincial meeting, and any message of inquiry about the arrangements can be addressed to him at the privy council office here.

Yours sincerely,
John G. Diefenbaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INDIAN ACT

AMENDMENT TO ELIMINATE WAIVER FORM IN FEDERAL ELECTIONS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 24, to amend the Indian Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to eliminate the necessity of an Indian having to sign a waiver form before he has the right to vote in federal elections. This bill should be taken in conjunction with another bill standing in my name on the order paper.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO GIVE INDIANS THE RIGHT TO VOTE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 25, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Howard: As I said before, this bill and the one to amend the Indian Act go together. Presently native Indians are not allowed to vote in federal elections. The purpose of this bill is to remove that disqualification and put them on the same basis as anyone else.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED CLOSING DOWN OF HOWE SOUND COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Prime Minister, or, in his absence, to the house leader, the Minister of Public Works. I gave notice of the question to the Prime Minister this morning.

Has the attention of the Prime Minister been drawn to a telegram from Mr. K. A. Smith, board member of the mine, mill and smelter workers, to the effect that the Howe Sound Company in British Columbia declare that their operations at Britannia Beach will have to be closed, throwing 800 persons out of employment, unless immediate assistance can be forthcoming to the base metals industry? Is the Prime Minister or, in his absence, the house leader in a position to inform the house as to any possible government action to prevent the calamity of the closing of a major industry in British Columbia with 800 persons being thrown out of work, in about two weeks?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for Vancouver East for letting us have notice of his question. I also received this wire, and no doubt it has come to other members from British Columbia.

As the hon. member knows, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has been doing his best for some time to prevent the closing down of this mine, and he will continue to do so. In addition, steps were taken to persuade the United States government that action should not be taken to raise the duty on copper.

The wire in question mentions the fact of prices having dropped. Of course the price of copper is set on the world market, and I am afraid the government cannot do much about that matter.

Mr. T. J. Irwin (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I wish to direct it to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I may say that I have given him notice of it. In view of the fact that it is indicated by the board of directors of Howe Sound Company that at a meeting to be held by such board on November 19, 1957, the Britannia property will close down in the face of price deterioration, what action has the government taken in regard to the brief submitted by the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers dated August 19, 1957?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond for his courtesy in giving me notice of his question. As the matter referred to is of interest to the Prime Minister (Mr.

Diefenbaker) and to my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) I will take the question as notice and will answer it on the earliest possible occasion.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct to the house leader a question supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Vancouver East. Will the government give consideration to getting in touch with the government of British Columbia in order to see what co-operative action between the two governments may be taken to prevent that calamity which has been referred to?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to take that suggestion into consideration. The Minister of Labour is not here. I am not sure whether he may not have already done that. Of course the primary responsibility in this case rests with the provincial government.

[Later:]

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I almost shudder because I want to ask a supplementary question to the first question asked on the order paper. You will admit, Mr. Speaker, that I have been getting up and down like a jack in the box.

I would like to ask a supplementary question on the first question asked of the Minister of Public Works as leader of the house, relative to the threatened closing of the Britannia mine. Would the house leader give an explanation as to exactly what he meant by his statement here today that the responsibility lies with the provincial government, in view of the fact that exports, tariffs and subsidies are of a federal nature? Secondly, would the minister please tell us if the federal government is going to take any action to try to stop the closing of this major industry in British Columbia?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I told the hon. member that the Minister of Labour had been doing his best to prevent this situation from arising and that he would continue to do so. I did not say that the federal government had no jurisdiction. I said the primary jurisdiction was with the province because this is an industry which does not come directly under federal government jurisdiction.

Mr. Winch: Explain that. All base metals are under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour. I wonder if he could give us an idea as to what type of action the Minister of Labour has taken in order to prevent the closing of the Britannia mine.

Mr. Arthur Maloney (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will take the hon. member's question as notice and it will be answered tomorrow.

[Later]

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works, arising out of his answer to the hon. member for Vancouver East concerning the jurisdiction over mines.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not want to prejudge the hon. member's question, and I shall allow him to ask it, but I do believe we have had enough supplementary questions on that one subject today. However, the hon. member may try us out and see if the house considers it in order.

Mr. Hahn: My question is this. Has the minister or the government informed Britannia mine that these mines come under the jurisdiction of the province and they should take their problems there?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member will agree that this is not a question which is calculated to throw further light on the answers that have been given. We had better consider that question closed for today.

TRADE

COMMUNIST CHINA—REPORTED STATEMENT AS TO CURRENCY ACCEPTABLE TO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister prepared to confirm a statement attributed to our trade commissioner at Hong Kong that Canada is prepared to accept Canadian dollars, Swiss francs or convertible sterling in payment for wheat, lumber, fish, etc., which he hopes to sell to the Chinese communist government when he reaches Peking? I might say that I heard the news item on the one o'clock broadcast of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation today.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the news broadcast. I think I would have to examine the question in Hansard and give a reply tomorrow.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister tell us whether this is a change of policy, and the government is now prepared to accept sterling?

When I say "sterling" I refer to convertible sterling, not blocked sterling which some countries possess.

Mr. Churchill: When there is a change of policy it will be announced in the House of Commons.

[Later:]

REFERENCE TO MAGAZINE REPORT RESPECTING WASHINGTON CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the statement made by Mr. Blair Fraser correct when he says in Maclean's magazine of November 9 that the United States government was told at Washington that Prime Minister Diefenbaker's reference to a 15 per cent switch was a mere offhand remark and that Canada plans no drastic measures to promote such an aim? Is it true that the United States government was pleased with Canadian assurance that no further preferences were to be extended to commonwealth countries?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I think the first statement the hon. member read out is incorrect. I recall no such references being made at that conference. In so far as the second question is concerned, again it was not a subject of discussion.

U.S. DISPOSAL PROGRAM—REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): My question should be directed to the Minister of Finance, but in his absence I shall direct it to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would the minister inform the house as to the reason for making the statement in New York over the week end that Canada is far from satisfied with the assurances recently given by the United States government regarding its surplus disposal policy? What further steps does the government consider taking in the face of this dissatisfaction?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am very thankful that I am responsible only for my own statements. Perhaps, on behalf of the Minister of Finance, I could take this question as notice.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

RALSTON, ALTA.—REPORTED DISBANDMENT OF UNIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence arising out of a report in the Medicine Hat News that the R.C.A.F. unit attached to the defence research board at Ralston (Suffield) will be disbanded as of December 31, 1957. Will the Minister of National Defence assure the house that sufficient personnel will be retained at this base to accommodate incoming aircraft, as it is the only airport in the area at the present time with adequate runways to allow larger aircraft to land in case of emergency, or as an alternative landing port?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. The small R.C.A.F. detachment at the defence research board's Suffield experimental station at Ralston is to be withdrawn at the end of this year, although the air force will continue to meet aircraft requirements for the board's research and testing purposes from other sources. Since service aircraft will be needed to continue experiments conducted at Suffield experimental station, the defence research board intends to maintain the runways existing at the present time.

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO GROUNDING OF COASTAL BOATS AND TRAIN DERAILMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. T. Stick (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I notice the Minister of Transport is not in his place. Perhaps his parliamentary assistant can take this question as notice. Will the minister inquire into the grounding of two C.N.R. coastal boats lately, namely the Burin and the Henry W. Stone, also the derailment of a freight train near Stephenville, and report to the house?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Transport I will take notice of the question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

U.S.-CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO JOINT AIR DEFENCE COMMAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. My question results from my overnight meditation on the answers given by him yesterday to the hon. member for Kingston. First, was the constitutional commander in chief of Her Majesty's armed forces in Canada consulted before a portion of those forces was committed to the command of a United States general? Second, by what constitutional or legal process were the present Canadian-United States command arrangements consummated?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first part of the question, I presume the hon. member is referring to the NORAD command integrated between the R.C.A.F. and the United States air force at Colorado Springs. Naturally the Governor General was informed of these arrangements, and he approved of the appointment of Air Marshal Slemon to that command.

As far as the second part of the question is concerned, I would say that the arrangements for setting up this command followed a similar pattern to those governing our forces serving with the supreme allied command in Europe and the naval forces in the Atlantic under the supreme allied commander, Atlantic.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): I have a supplementary question. Were there any orders in council on the subject?

Mr. Pearkes: As I explained yesterday, there was an order in council appointing Air Marshal Slemon to the command, and at the time I tabled that order in council I also tabled the joint statement which was made by myself and the secretary of defence of the United States.

Mr. Lesage: Was the transfer of authority to United States authorities approved by order in council?

Mr. Pearkes: The transfer of authority conformed to the practice which has existed with respect to the other Canadian forces in Europe and in the Atlantic, and followed closely the procedure which had been set up during the Mackenzie King-President Roosevelt conversations before the last war in which Canada and the United States agreed to co-operate for the mutual defence of this continent.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. Is it not a fact that the participation of Canadian troops overseas was as a result of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization convention, which was first of all approved by this parliament?

Mr. Pearkes: The joint defence of the North American continent is equally part of the object of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and just as much a part of the plan for the deterrent to war as that of having troops stationed in Europe.

Mr. Lesage: Is General Partridge acting as the commander of NATO?

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Pearkes: General Partridge is the commander of North American air defence.

Mr. Lesage: Not under the authority of NATO?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence further to my inquiry yesterday as to the joint air defence command. I would like to ask the minister whether the command of Lieutenant General Earle Partridge and Air Marshal Slemon of the new continental air defence command is operative at the present time.

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker, I think I have already answered that question or questions similar to it. Yes, it is operative on an interim basis until the formal agreement has been drawn up as I explained to the house.

Mr. Henderson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If it is operative at the present time, to what extent can General Partridge commit Canadian forces?

Mr. Pearkes: In the event of a national emergency occurring General Partridge, after consultation with the Canadian government and with the government of the United States, would be able to commit either American or Canadian forces in the defence of this country.

Mr. Henderson: With no limitation?

Mr. Pearkes: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Henderson: With no limitation?

MOOSE JAW—REPORTED CLOSING OF NATO TRAINING SCHOOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, notice of which has been given. Would the minister care to comment on reports that the NATO training school at Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, may be closed down in 1958? Can the minister assure the people of Moose Jaw that such reports are unfounded?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there are no present plans to close down the airport at Moose Jaw during the calendar year 1958.

[Later:]

PUBLIC RELATIONS OFFICERS AT U.S. BASES IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. I apologize for not giving him notice, but I am confident he has the answer at his fingertips. In view of the fact that the minister, when in opposition, urged that all public relations officers at United States army bases in Canada be Canadians, can the minister inform the house if he has given effect to his own wishes?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Would the hon. member repeat the first part of his question?

Mr. Herridge: In view of the fact that the minister, when in opposition, urged that all public relations officers at United States army bases in Canada be Canadians, can the minister now inform the house if he has given effect to his own wishes?

Mr. Pearkes: I am quite certain that my own wishes are being carried out, but whether or not they have been completed at the present time I am not in a position to say.

LIVESTOCK

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL VETERINARY SERVICES IN SOUTHERN B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture or to his parliamentary assistant, notice of which has been given.

In view of the fact that Canadian livestock are required to have medical clearance before being permitted to cross the border into the United States, and further that at the present time additional veterinary service in southern British Columbia is required relative to the matter of obtaining such medical clearance, would the Minister of Agriculture consider investigating the matter immediately, and the provision of additional veterinary service at this time?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I regret to inform the hon. member that I did not receive his question before coming to the house. I will take it as notice and have a reply ready tomorrow.

HIGHWAYS

STEWART-CASSIAR, B.C.—INQUIRY AS TO DOMINION-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister advise the house whether an agreement has been signed between the federal government and the government of the province of British Columbia with respect to the Cassiar-Stewart road? If so, is there any indication in that agreement as to where the southern terminus of that road will be?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think this question is covered by a question on the order sheet, if my memory serves me correctly, but I have no objection to answering at this stage.

In answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Skeena: yes, there is an agreement which has been signed, but some points still remain to be clarified between the two governments. As to the question about the final location of the southern terminus, the answer is that no definite decision has been made.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): On the same subject, since I asked the question on the order paper, and the minister seems to be in a good mood for answering questions, has a survey been made by the Department of Public Works, and if so has a report of the survey been made to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a survey has been made by the Department of Public Works and a report has been submitted by that department to the minister of northern affairs.

Mr. Lesage: Is the minister of northern affairs satisfied with the route this road should follow?

BRIDGES

ALASKA HIGHWAY—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PEACE RIVER BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. B. R. Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question, of which I have given notice, to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister make a report to the house outlining the situation which obtains at present regarding the Peace river bridge at Taylor flats?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the progress which has been made in repairing communications along the Alaska highway is as follows. The ferry operating just upstream from the collapsed bridge is making 60 trips a day each way. There is now no ice condition in the river, and the level of the river has dropped 10 inches since November 2. The southern approach to the P.G.E. bridge is now 95 per cent complete, and it is hoped that this road will be completed by today.

The bridge over the Pine river is 28 per cent completed, and it is estimated that that bridge will be in operation by November 13. The decking on the P.G.E. bridge is 30 per cent completed. Prefabrication of decking is well in hand, and the contractor expects that to be completed by November 16. The northern approach is well under way, and 35 per cent of the work having been completed it is estimated that the road on the north side of the river will be completed by November 13.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of National Defence. Is he in a position to inform the house today whether the federal government feels a moral obligation to maintain a bridge crossing on the Alaska highway at Taylor flats?

Mr. Pearkes: The federal government is under the obligation to maintain the Alaska highway suitable for military transport. As that bridge and the southern part of the route have been used by commercial traffic for a number of years, I am sure the federal government will consider giving assistance to the restoration of the bridge. I cannot report on the steps yet to be taken to restore the bridge. We have had experts out on the site, and they have advised that there should be a complete soil analysis made before any restoration is undertaken.

TELEVISION

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF RELAY STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. A. M. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. What steps are being taken by the C.B.C. to build a television relay station in western Nova Scotia so the people of western Nova Scotia may receive T.V. programs?

Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to send me notice of his question a few moments ago, and it could be answered in various ways. In the first place, I am not sure of his definition of western Nova Scotia. I had the impression that I represent a substantial part of western Nova Scotia and at least in Digby county, which the hon. member well remembers, having represented it himself at one time, there is very adequate television reception now from the station in Saint John and I think substantially to the west of the county as well, running down pretty well through Clare.

A short answer to the question, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, might be "none", because at the moment there are no immediate plans for the erection of satellite stations in western Nova Scotia. But the hon. member will appreciate the fact that up to now there has been no microwave connection with the national hook-up across Canada. That is being completed. Temporary connections were effected for the world series a while ago which gave baseball coverage to western Nova Scotia; temporary connections were effected for the visit of Her Majesty, and now I am advised that a permanent microwave connection will be installed at the end of the year. After that, of course, consideration will be given to the installation of satellite stations to supplement the transcontinental national microwave system.

Mr. Kirk: May I ask the Minister of National Revenue if he would permit me to define for him western Nova Scotia?

Mr. Nowlan: Don't monopolize it. I have an interest there too.

Mr. Kirk: It includes Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare, which is the portion of western Nova Scotia which does not now receive the programming.

[Later:]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue. Do I understand from his remarks that a microwave set-up through a region is a technical prerequisite for any C.B.C.-T.V. satellite transmission?

Mr. Nowlan: I am not an expert in that field, Mr. Speaker, and I would not want to say it is a technical prerequisite, but certainly in the terms of the question which was asked by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare the establishment of a microwave was, I think, a prerequisite.

NEW BRUNSWICK—INQUIRY AS TO COVERAGE FOR NORTHERN AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, which he may take as notice. Can the minister advise the house what action is being taken to provide the 250,000 people of northern New Brunswick and the Gaspe coast with television facilities?

Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I shall take that question as notice.

POWER

LACHINE SECTION, ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—STATEMENT ON APPLICATION BY QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask the Minister of Public Works if he is now in a position to answer the question which I directed to him on Friday concerning power development in the Lachine section of the river?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have that answer now. The question was:

Can the minister tell the house whether the government of the province of Quebec has made an application to his department under the Navigable Waters Protection Act for the development of power in the Lachine section of the St. Lawrence river?

The answer is no.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question as to whether, falling short of a formal application, representations have been made in that direction to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Green: I would have to take that supplementary question as notice.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

IMPOSITION OF TOLLS—COST PER BUSHEL OF WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport or, in his absence, the minister acting for him. He may take this question as notice and answer it at a later time if that suits his purpose. What will the government's decision to impose tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway cost the western farmer in cents per bushel on wheat?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I will take note of that question but I would suggest that when the minister gets back it may change into an order for return.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF LEGISLATION TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture or his parliamentary assistant. Notice has been given. In view of the fact that a number of irrigation districts in British Columbia are experiencing the utmost difficulty in obtaining badly needed renewable capital projects, what action has been taken by the government to extend the P.F.R.A. to British Columbia?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should like to take that question as notice, and perhaps have an answer ready tomorrow.

HARBOURS

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO IMPROVEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Does the government expect to make an early start on the badly needed harbour improvements in St. John's, Newfoundland, which were planned by the minister's predecessor and which are being advocated urgently by the Newfoundland board of trade?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has said there was a study made and the report has been referred to different bodies in Newfoundland for their opinions as to what course should be followed. I did have a letter from the president of the board of trade a few days ago which was strongly in favour of following the plan, but we have not heard from the other interested bodies as yet. The department will move ahead with this development just as rapidly as possible.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TRADE AND ECONOMIC MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if, in view of the fact that more than five weeks have elapsed since the Mont Tremblant conference, any commonwealth government has yet acted on the recommendation of any one of the finance ministers that a commonwealth trade and economic conference should be held? At the same time, could the minister indicate whether or not any decision has yet been reached as to when and where this conference will take place?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I am unable to give an answer to the hon. member's question. This information would likely be in the possession of my colleague the Minister of Finance.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

INQUIRY AS TO STEP-UP IN ALLOY RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Would the minister care to comment on the public statement made by the director general of scientific services of his department that Canadian alloy research is being stepped up to meet the Russian challenge in the field of rockets? Is a geological survey now being conducted to discover rare earths required in the development of alloys in this field?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me advance notice of his question. The statement to which the hon. member refers results from my recent request for an active study of our departmental activities with a view to determining where, if possible, an acceleration of research could be achieved to meet the challenge offered the western world by the recent launching of earth satellites by the U.S.S.R. Any proposals such as those referred to will be considered and subsequently discussed with my colleagues, as more than one department or agency of government would be involved in such an accelerated program of research. I know the hon. member will not expect me on this occasion to comment upon the scientific aspects of this news announcement.

IMMIGRATION

STATEMENT ON REPORTED PAYMENT OF RETURN FARES TO UNITED KINGDOM FOR SURGICAL TREATMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): On October 31 the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar asked me whether a report from London was correct that a young British couple had their fares paid to the United Kingdom in order that the wife, who was suffering from cataracts, could have an operation performed in England free of charge. He went on to ask, "If so, what kind of advertising for Canada is that?".

I gave a partial reply to the question that day, and said I would make an investigation and bring in a further reply. The further reply is that this couple were returned to the United Kingdom at their own request on compassionate grounds, included amongst which was the medical condition of the wife with respect to her eyes. Their return passage was paid by the Canadian government under the provisions of section 70 of the Immigration Act.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO REMOVAL OF EXCISE TAX ON AUTOMOBILES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. When does the government intend introducing legislation to remove the excise tax on automobiles?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I am surprised that the hon. member is in such a hurry to get this tax off, after his government put it on.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): That is not the question; you said you would do better.

Mr. Green: When the legislation is to be brought down an announcement will be made in the ordinary way.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is my hon. friend not aware of the fact that the previous administration reduced that tax from 25 per cent to 15 per cent and from 15 per cent to 10 per cent?

Mr. Green: If I remember correctly, Mr. Speaker, they put it up first. They may have reduced it a little bit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS—CONGRATULATIONS ON BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to find an excuse for questioning the Minister of Public Works because, as one of the old timers in the house to another, I desire to wish him many happy returns of the day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I thank my old friend the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar for his kind reference, though I have reached the stage where I do not entirely appreciate being reminded of my age. I should also like to thank the other members of the house for the kindly way in which they have received this reference.

PUBLIC WORKS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED REVISION OF POLICY ON DIKING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. I might say he would give all of us in British Columbia a great deal of joy if he will clarify the statement to the effect that the policies on diking have been revised by this government as compared with those of the former government. I have a newspaper clipping which indicates that such is the case.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thought I was through with questions for the day. I may say that we have made some change in policy in this regard. The former government would not assist with maintenance work on the dikes. They would pay 33⅓ per cent on any new diking work done, the province would pay 33⅓ per cent, and the municipality was expected to pay the other 33⅓ per cent. We have adopted a new policy of sharing in the cost of the maintenance of these dikes on a basis of 37½ per cent, provided the province will pay 37½ per cent. That means, of course, that the municipality need only pay 25 per cent.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is the money needed for this new policy taken off the estimates for protection works in the province of Quebec, and especially in my riding?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX

TORONTO—REPORTED EVASION BY FINANCIAL HOUSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Would the minister care to comment on a press report to the effect that in a recent Royal Canadian Mounted Police raid in Toronto the books of 18 financial houses were seized in what is suggested might be a $50 million evasion of income tax?

Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, my attention has not been drawn to this report. I am therefore not in a position to comment on it at this time.

BASE METALS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour or, in his absence, of his parliamentary assistant. I have not given him notice of this question and perhaps, if it is required, he will take this as notice. Would the minister advise the house what consideration is being given to the telegram received by the government in September and referred to the Department of Labour, signed by members of all parties in British Columbia, asking for action on the protection of the base metal industry in British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that question might well go on the order paper, in view of the fact that the telegram was sent in September and that I have already requested hon. members not to ask further supplementary questions on this matter.

Mr. Winch: No answer has yet been received.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REFERENCE TO REPORT IN "GLOBE AND MAIL" OF NOVEMBER 5

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I intended to ask a question of the Prime Minister but, in his absence, possibly the house leader would answer it. A picture in this morning's Toronto Globe and Mail of a Conservative convention shows a banner reading "Diefenbaker and Frost, a winning team". Does this indicate a continuing Conservative homage to Ontario and endorsation of the concept of a vassal role for all other provinces?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member does not expect an answer to his question.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

MOOSE JAW—PROPOSED NEW FEDERAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Minister of Public Works a question of which notice was given. Can the minister give any indication when a start may be made on construction of the new federal building in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan? Can he say whether any plans have been made as to the disposal of the present post office building there?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. It is hoped that a start can be made by May 1 of next year. As yet no plans have been made for the disposition of the present post office building.

INDUSTRY

BONAVENTURE, QUE.—REPORTED PROMISE TO BUILD PULP MILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the fact that most of the pulp mills in the province of Quebec have cut down employment since the last federal election, is it true that the government has decided to build a pulp mill at Bonaventure in the province of Quebec, as promised by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) during the last election campaign?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to take this question as notice.

GRAIN

LICENSING OF OFF-SITE STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It arises out of his statement that he would make inquiries, as reported in this house on October 27. Has the minister given further consideration to the question of licensing off-site storage for grain? Is he able to report on his inquiries into the mobility and quality of grain in off-site storage?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker; I have given further consideration to the question of licensing off-site storage for grain, but I have not yet reached a decision. I am investigating all problems in connection with the storage of grain.

The second part of the question deals with matters that are or might well be the subject of debate, as to whether or not off-site grain is as mobile as grain in storage in trucks. The same thing applies with regard to the quality of grain in both places. There are instances, I am informed, where off-site storage has been just as adequate as in annexes of the elevators, both with regard to mobility and keeping qualities.

WHEAT—STATEMENT ON MONETARY INCENTIVE TO SHIP THROUGH EASTERN PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have an answer to a question asked me yesterday by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Harrison), which was as follows:

What monetary incentive in cents per bushel is being offered to purchasers of Canadian wheat for taking delivery at eastern Canadian ports rather than at Fort Churchill and Vancouver?

The answer, which I regret is fairly long, is as follows. The Canadian wheat board endeavours to provide wheat generally competitive in overseas markets irrespective of the port of shipment. The board takes into account not only internal costs of moving wheat to seaboard positions but also the various ocean rates involved and such variations in the foregoing costs as may occur from time to time.

To give effect to this policy the Canadian wheat board commenced on February 16, 1954, to quote separate selling prices for wheat as follows: For wheat in store Pacific coast; for wheat in store Fort William-Port Arthur; for wheat in store Fort Churchill. Today's Canadian wheat board prices for wheat are as follows:

Grade	(Per bushel in store) Vancouver	Fort William-Port Arthur	Churchill
No. 1 Manitoba Northern	$1.71⅛	$1.60⅛	$1.70⅛
No. 2 " "	1.67⅛	1.56⅛	1.66⅛
No. 3 " "	1.61⅛	1.49⅛	1.59⅛
No. 4 " "	1.50⅛	1.36⅛	1.46⅛

Prices for wheat at St. Lawrence ports are based on the Fort William-Port Arthur prices plus the cost of forwarding wheat from this position to St. Lawrence ports, which is approximately 22½ cents per bushel currently.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): May I ask the minister a supplementary question. Is this same general policy also followed in prices for barley; and can the minister say whether in recent weeks the price of barley at eastern ports has been substantially reduced on account of this policy?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the figures in answer to the first part of the question. With regard to the second part of the question, a reduction was made in the price of barley in recent weeks by 6 cents, effective with regard to barley for shipment overseas.

In part the answer would be as follows. The wheat board proposes, for the remaining days of open navigation in the St. Lawrence river, to increase barley movement to markets in the United Kingdom and in western Europe. The means being applied by the wheat board for a limited time this fall is to adjust the selling price in respect of barley which is purchased from the board and subsequently exported to western Europe. The adjustment rate at the present time is 6 cents a bushel.

HEALTH INSURANCE

MANITOBA—TREATMENT OF MENTAL AND TUBERCULAR PATIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Deniset (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He has already given me an answer, but I believe he would agree that a public statement would help to clarify the matter. It is with regard to the national health insurance scheme. Has a reply actually been sent to the government of the province of Manitoba with regard to the inclusion of mental and tubercular patients in the scheme?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, a reply has been sent to Premier Campbell indicating that this matter may be discussed at the federal-provincial conference on November 25 and 26.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO CHEESE FACTORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Lavigne (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture or, in his absence, to his parliamentary assistant. Has financial assistance previously given to cheese factories upon amalgamation been discontinued by the present government?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, and because I did not get notice of this question, I shall have to take notice of it now.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—STATEMENT ON CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS EAST OF LAKEHEAD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet, if I may have the floor I should like to answer a question addressed to me yesterday by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), who asked whether the contracts have yet been awarded for construction of the natural gas pipe line east of the lakehead and, if so, whether any of them have gone to Canadian companies.

The answer to the first part of the hon. member's question is no. The second part is therefore not applicable.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DISCREPANCIES IN PENALTIES IMPOSED UNDER CRIMINAL CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister advise the house as to what is the responsibility of his department with respect to discrepancies in penalties imposed under the Criminal Code? In British Columbia last week a 17-year-old boy charged with attempted rape—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Winch: —received three years and four paddles. In Ontario four weeks ago an 18-year-old boy charged with attempted rape received three months and eight paddles. Can the minister tell me what is the position—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister may answer if he sees fit, but I consider this a question which relates to something which is not within his jurisdiction or his administrative responsibility. The sentences given by judges are not subject to the jurisdiction of the ministry or of this house, except by way of legislation.

Mr. Winch: It is also a question that I cannot put on the order paper. How else can I ask the question?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can possibly answer the question even with the best of will in the world under the rules or within the time available on the orders of the day. Under these circumstances I would be glad to try to deal with it, in so far as it lies within my responsibility, as a question on the order paper; or I would suggest to the hon. member that a more appropriate time to discuss the matter, if he wishes, is when the estimates of the department are before the house.

Mr. Winch: Will the minister go into this case if I meet him personally; because the lashes are already ordered. The paddle has already been ordered and one has been fulfilled. There is that difference in sentences, and could I meet with the minister and discuss it with him?

Mr. Fulton: I would think that in so far as there is anything that requires immediate investigation it will be brought before the remission service of the department and immediately investigated.

Old Age Assistance Act

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCE, RESIDENCE AND ALLOWABLE INCOME

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the second reading of Bill No. 20, to amend the Old Age Assistance Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps a brief statement is required of me at the opening of this debate on second reading of the Old Age Assistance Act. Most of what I could usefully say has already been given in my statement on the resolution. Hon. members will see that the bill itself requires little explanation. We are simply re-enacting section 3(1) of the Old Age Assistance Act, changing the references to the maximum amount of assistance payable so that in future it will be set at $55 monthly; and, at the same time, we are changing section 3(2) of the act to read 10 years instead of 20 years as every point where reference is made to residence requirements.

Finally, section 3(2) is being further changed to provide an increase in the allowable income ceilings by $120 yearly in the case of single recipients and $240 yearly in the case of married couples. For example, where an unmarried recipient was formerly allowed to have $840 a year, including assistance, he will now be allowed a total of $960 a year, made up as follows: $660 by way of asistance and $300 by way of outside income, after which his assistance is reduced by the amount of excess income.

Where a married couple was formerly allowed to have $1,380 a year, including assistance, they will now be allowed a total of $1,620 a year. This can be made up in one of two ways. If both man and wife are eligible for assistance they can receive as much as $1,320 a year by way of assistance and $300 by way of outside income. If only one member of the couple is eligible for assistance they can receive only $660 by way of assistance but they can have as much as $960 a year in outside income before there is any reduction in the amount of assistance payable.

In the case of a married couple one of whom is blind the income ceiling is even higher. Such a couple may receive as much as $1,980 a year in total income, including assistance. Where one member of the couple is on old age assistance and the other is on blindness allowance they can receive as much as $1,320 a year by way of benefit and have, in addition, as much as $660 a year in outside income.

If only one member of the couple is on old age assistance and the blind spouse is, for some reason, not in receipt of benefit, the total amount of assistance payable is only $660 a year; but in such circumstances the outside allowable income can be as much as $1,320 a year without reduction of benefit.

The second section of the amending bill provides that the effective date shall be November 1, 1957, as far as the federal government is concerned. But each province will, of course, have to come to a decision to implement these changes in its own jurisdiction before they can actually become effective. Copies of the amending legislation were sent to the provinces on Friday, and new draft agreements are ready to go forward for their consideration as soon as approval is given to the bill itself. The provinces will, naturally, be the ones to determine the dates on which these payments will commence within their jurisdictions.

I am assuming in all my calculations that all the provinces and territories will wish to enter into new agreements and to make them effective from November 1, but, of course, at the moment I have not had time to receive official word from the provinces on this point. There will be no difficulty about giving effect to the agreements retroactively to November 1, even though they may not actually be signed before the end of the year or a little later.

As far as I know, there is only one province where an actual amendment to the provincial law itself is necessary: and even in such case it has been the practice in the past, if a province so desires, to enter into a new agreement subject to an undertaking by the province that it will, at the next session of its legislature, present the necessary amendments for retroactive application and approval.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What province?

Mr. Monteith: Prince Edward Island.

I think, therefore, we can rest assured that any provinces which wish to make these increased payments effective from November will be enabled to do so. At the same time, we must recognize the right of any province, having regard to its own circumstances, to delay its initiation of these changes to a date later than November 1 if it so desires.

In this connection, I would point out in reply to a question put to me last Friday by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) that as of this moment nine of the ten provinces are operating under new agreements, made effective earlier this year, providing for a maximum $46 monthly rate of benefit. One province—the province of Newfoundland—had raised its old age assistance rate from $30 to $40 as recently as September, 1956, and did not apparently feel that it was in a position, less than one year later, in the early part of this year, to revise its level of benefit upwards to $46. The old age assistance rate continues, therefore, in the province of Newfoundland at the $40 level at the present time.

This brings me to a question raised by the hon. member for Trinity-Conception (Mr. Stick) who wished to know the distribution of costs between the provinces so far as this increased old age assistance is concerned. I have a table here giving this information. It is brief, and I might just as well read it:

	Estimated Additional Cost of Old Age Assistance Changes to Provinces (1958-9)
Newfoundland	$ 360,000
Prince Edward Island	45,000
Nova Scotia	360,000
New Brunswick	405,000
Quebec	2,220,000
Ontario	1,480,000
Manitoba	320,000
Saskatchewan	360,000
Alberta	395,000
British Columbia	500,000
Yukon Territory	2,500
Northwest Territories	7,500
	$6,455,000

The hon. member for Trinity-Conception will be interested to note from this table that the extra cost to the province of Newfoundland of implementing these present changes would be roughly $360,000 in a full year. It should, of course, be added that this does not include the added cost to Newfoundland of the additional $6, approved earlier this year, which has not yet been put into effect in that province. That would amount to perhaps an additional $200,000 in a full year.

Mr. Speaker, a number of members have referred to individual cases of which they have knowledge where they consider some injustice has been done because of the operation of certain ill-advised regulations or for other reasons. I hope I will be forgiven if I do not endeavour to deal with these individual cases in the course of this debate. The details of individual cases are not in the hands of the federal authorities; they can be obtained only from the provinces.

So far as the regulations are concerned, I have frankly, not yet had the time to examine them in detail as I should like to do before debating their merits or otherwise. I realize that there are numerous grounds for complaint about the regulations when viewed from the point of view of the individual applicant or the member who speaks on his behalf. I can only promise that I will undertake, as soon as feasible, a study of these regulations; that I will consult fully and freely with the provinces in regard to them; and that when we and the provinces are agreed on the changes to be made, I will be glad to report and explain those changes in the house.

I will conclude these comments, Mr. Speaker, by referring to a point of some importance to which no member of the house has, as yet, drawn attention. The question may arise in some minds as to why we are not proposing an amendment to the Old Age Assistance Act similar to the Old Age Security Act amendment, in respect of temporary absences. The answer is, of course, that in the case of old age assistance, this provision with respect to temporary absences is dealt with, not in the act itself, but in the regulations. We are ready, after consultation with the provinces, to change the old age assistance regulation on temporary absences in whatever way the provinces may consider reasonable.

Mr. Stick: Will the minister table the figures he read out?

Mr. Speaker: I understand the minister read the table in full. It will be reported in Hansard.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I just want to comment briefly on this particular bill. We have made our submission in chief on the resolution stage and there is no need to traverse the whole field now, because we did it the other day. However, I should like to make one or two observations based on what the minister has just said.

He has told us he does not yet know how many provinces will take advantage of this enabling legislation, although last Friday I understood him to say, and, indeed, he repeated it today, that he had properly forwarded to the provinces copies of the bill which is now before the house. Do I understand the minister to say that notwithstanding this he has not yet heard by telegram from any of the provinces as to its intention in this regard?

The minister also observed that he had not yet had the opportunity to examine the regulations which provide for the administration of this particular measure, this being in the hands of the provincial authorities. In this connection he might, it seems to me, indicate in the course of this discussion whether or not it is the intention of the federal government to suggest to the provinces that the dominion-provincial pensions board which meets for the discussion of these regulations is likely to sit before the end of this year, not only to consider those regulations which are not acceptable to the minister, if that should eventuate, but likewise to provide for whatever modifications in the existing regulations are thought to be desirable and necessary pursuant to the amendments which are now put forward, and which we on this side of the house have already indicated we accept.

There is no formula established, notwithstanding my hon. friend's obiter dictum yesterday, on any particular mechanism by which pensions hereafter can be geared either to the cost of living or to the gross national product. In that connection I would point out there has been some slight reduction, if my information is correct, in the gross national product. My hon. friend can see at once the implications of that situation as a result of the assurances which have been given in this particular context.

And then, of course, one is obliged to point out that this bill does not present what was urged upon the government in office before June 10 by the hon. gentlemen who now sit in the treasury benches. The government of that day was urged by the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green), the Acting Prime Minister today, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) himself, by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness), by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and by many other hon. members sitting on that side of the house, that the means test in the Old Age Assistance Act should be eliminated. Many days were spent in urging the government of the day to take that step and I simply point out at this time that as nothing was indicated in the resolution likewise nothing is now indicated in the bill to carry out the requests and the suggestions in that particular made so vigorously over a period of days by many of the hon. gentlemen who now sit on Mr. Speaker's right. When we get into a clause by clause discussion of the bill, Mr. Speaker, I will have one or two other observations to make.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, there is one question of detail which I do not think is generally known and I think it should be made known by the minister. If a person cannot prove his age by any other means he can have a tribunal of people who have known him over a number of years. I feel it should be made generally known that it is possible for a person who cannot prove his age by ordinary means to have this tribunal and be successful in qualifying for assistance under the act.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, our views regarding the amount of the pension have been expressed on former occasions and it is not necessary to deal with the amount provided for in the bill.

Once again I want to stress that it is our belief that the group 65 to 69 years of age ought to be included under the terms of the Old Age Security Act. I say this for the reason that provincial governments are called upon to meet ever-growing responsibilities in the provision of medical health care, nursing home care, the provision of housing and so forth for our senior citizens. The inclusion of this group which is presently taken care of to some extent in the legislation before us within the terms of the Old Age Security Act would enable the provinces to do more in this particular field and I do suggest that it is a constantly increasing responsibility as far as the provinces are concerned.

Some reference was made a moment ago to the means test. Once again the inclusion of the age 65 to 69 group under the Old Age Security Act with the federal government undertaking the responsibility for the payment of the pension cheques would have the effect of removing the means test to the abolition of which a great many hon. members in this house subscribe.

I will conclude these brief observations by saying we are in full support of the bill and want to see it passed as quickly as possible. I suggest that the minister and the government give serious consideration to the lowering of the age under the terms of the Old Age Security Act in order that all people in Canada 65 years of age and over will receive equal treatment irrespective of the province of residence free of the means test.

Mr. T. J. Irwin (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words regarding this act. I do not think there will be too much discussion about the amount of assistance to be granted under the act because we have already had a great deal of discussion during the debate on the resolution. As far as this group is concerned we are going to go along with those who vote for this bill despite the fact, as has already been expressed, we do not believe the amount of assistance under the act is sufficient to meet the needs of those who require it.

My sojourn in the provincial legislature of British Columbia brought me into close contact with the operation of this statute and many of the people who are subservient to the regulations passed under this act. Although the minister disclaimed any intention of saying anything at the present time about the regulations I think some comment should be made upon them because although no question exists as to the desirability of having such an act and while the regulations have not stultified the intention of the act they have nevertheless definitely curtailed its real effect.

So far as I am concerned I am in agreement with the purpose of this amendment despite the obvious inadequacy of the proposal to raise the assistance from $46 to $55. Why do I say it is inadequate? The hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair) in speaking the other day sought to justify the increase of $6 granted by the Liberal government earlier this year by pointing out that the sum of $6 represented a 15 per cent increase. I agree with the hon. member, Mr. Speaker. Figures do not lie but the trouble is that since the act was passed in 1951 the cost of living has risen by approximately 10 per cent. In light of the fact that the $6 represented a 15 per cent increase it appears on the face of it to have been a fairly generous increase but let us examine it a little more closely.

Under the legislation it is assumed that old age assistance was adequate in 1951; that is the only basis for assuming that the 15 per cent increase was generous. It must also be assumed that the $40 payment based on the 1949 consumer's price index was sufficient. I point out to you that that is not correct. The assistance was inadequate long before that. The purchasing power of the dollar in 1949 had been pared to the point here its purchasing power in terms of the 1935-39 cost of living index was approximately 52 cents and by September 1957 that had dropped to approximately 46 cents. In the light of these figures which can be verified by consulting the publication of the dominion bureau of statistics the $40 pension granted under the original act was entirely and hopelessly inadequate.

The factor that has helped the pensioners of British Columbia is that the supplementary allowance granted by the province amounts to $20 a month under a means test. The average payment is $19.12 to each pensioner over all classes of old age assistance recipients. I have every reason to believe that British Columbia will maintain the present supplementary payment thus bringing old age assistance in that province to $75 per month. It may be pointed out that in addition to this those in receipt of supplementary payments are also entitled to medical, dental, optical and hospital treatment. Thus it is evident that the goal of providing $100 per month to those who require old age assistance has already been reached as far as that province is concerned.

The objective of better treatment has not been lost sight of. Because of all the foregoing conditions, many of our elderly citizens cannot enjoy the comforts and pleasures to which their services to this country entitle them.

The present regulations under which the act is administered produce many hardships. For instance, take the case of a couple living say, in Manitoba; when the lady of that couple has reached the age of 64 we will assume that her husband passes away and the couple have children living in British Columbia. These children say to their mother "Look mother, there is no object in your staying alone in Manitoba, you might just as well come to British Columbia." So the lady goes. Now when she reaches the age of 65 she applies for old age assistance in British Columbia; she cannot get it because she has not been resident in British Columbia for three years. She then returns to Manitoba and applies there; she cannot get it in Manitoba either because she left that province before she was 65 years of age. The tragedy of this situation is that this lady will never get old age assistance under the present regulations because her initial application is held against her for the rest of her natural life. She could live to the age of Methuselah and she will never get this assistance under the present regulation.

Again take the case of an applicant who owns his or her own property. Five per cent of the assessed value of such property is deducted as income. The idea is that such people are not paying rent and the country does not intend to contribute to the establishment of an estate. That is the reason given for the regulations. The net result of course is that the 5 per cent simply raises the municipal taxes on that property. That is all that happens. It is all very well to say these people are not paying rent but the fact remains that they are paying taxes and those taxes, insurance and so forth are the basis of rent. Why add to that amount by adding 5 per cent of the assessed value?

Again if a person has beyond a certain amount in the bank or if they have an insurance policy that insurance policy must be surrendered and the income therefrom, plus any surplus in the bank, must be invested in a government of Canada annuity, the proceeds of which are regarded as income. It is entirely overlooked that these people who have such surplus in the bank and particularly such an insurance policy realize that without this protection, where there is a couple, one of them being left after the other has passed away, the one who is left has no insurance and will be without the wherewithal to give a decent burial to the deceased partner. Again there is no reason to believe that the people who have accumulated an amount during their lifetime did not intend to spend it on the necessary comforts they hoped to have in their old age.

May I suggest to the government that they give our elderly citizens some consideration with respect to the matter of housing because that is an extremely important factor to the old age pensioner. I listened to my hon. friend from, I believe, somewhere in Toronto who spoke yesterday referring to the fact that they have a housing scheme in that city which provides bachelor quarters for old age pensioners at $35 per month. In view of the fact that Ontario does not pay any supplement may I point out that these people are getting only $55 per month and if they pay from this income the $35 a month for the shelter which they require, that will leave them a margin of only $20 per month upon which to live for the rest of that period. I submit that it is not a practical proposition to expect these people to live on $20 per month.

The suggestion has been made in my province that the federal government under the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation could make special provisions for these elderly people who wish to get together and establish a community of their own, more or less on the lines carried out in Rotterdam during the reconstruction of that city. They would then be in a position of having their own village—if you wish to call it that—or it could easily be done in the form of another type of community which they would themselves administer and look after. They would then have an interest in life and would be able to provide the housing they require. It could easily be arranged that the income of anyone participating in such a scheme would not be such that they would be occupying premises needed for those living on lower incomes.

Another suggestion I would like the government to consider is this. My friends over there have been advocating that the means test be removed from the recipients of old age assistance in the age group from 65-69. I am inclined to go along with that up to a point but I would like to see the Old Age Assistance Act and the Old Age Security Act combined into one act with a means test, but that means test to apply solely to the eligibility of the person concerned to pay income tax. That is to say if a person or a couple were required to pay income tax since their relative tax would be more than their exemptions of $2,500 in the case of persons over 65, then when they become eligible for old age security at 65, they would be subject to that means test only. This would do away with all these other inflictions upon the elderly citizens of our country and give them a reasonable chance to enjoy the amenities which our productive system can provide.

We have been niggling and chiseling with respect to this question and the time has come to look at this problem—and it is a problem—from the point of view of our Christian civilization and our Christian approach to life. Let us look at this matter as a Christian community trying to do its best to look after the needs of those who have reached the point where they cannot meet their requirements themselves.

Governments and legislatures must change their policy and we must change this economic system of ours immediately. These things have got to be done as quickly as possible to strike the bonds of economic slavery from our people and give them freedom to live their lives in their own way wherever they wish to live them. We should give the hungry bread and the fruits of the earth will be theirs. I appeal to this government and this legislature in the name of the God to whom we here offer prayers every day to free the poor from slavery and want and feed the peoples of this earth lest they perish as a result of our neglect.

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, the words I have to say on this matter are very few. I was very interested in the constructive remarks of the gentleman who has just resumed his seat. I think his comments bearing on the regulations with regard to old age pensions and old age assistance are worthy of note and they just point up the fact that these matters require our constant attention. Much of the administration of these acts are left in the hands of the provinces and we know that the applying of the means test and all the rest of it can be a very expensive operation. I think this house is to be congratulated on the fact that it is bringing down with such rapidity this social legislation. It may not be all that we had hoped for, but at any rate, the house has got down to work in a very short time. The debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne has been interrupted to get the legislation through with commendable rapidity. We have had legislation concerning cash advances, old age security, old age assistance, assistance to the blind and pension increases for those who are totally disabled.

In looking at this legislation, I wonder if we do not find in it something that is the real cause of a great deal of difficulty across the whole of Canada today, and that is the matter of inflation. The reason that we have to increase these pensions and allowances is that people find they are unable to make ends meet on these allowances. They are in a condition of dire necessity and some of the cases are very tragic. A person cannot possibly live in most of the communities in this dominion of ours on the $40 per month or even the $46 per month. Fundamentally there is a big problem facing the Canadian people and this legislation points it out. It is the matter of inflation. When and where are those people who are in control of things in this country going to meet the problem of inflation. We drew the attention of the government to these facts during the speech from the throne, but apparently they neglected to do anything about them.

What is troubling the people who are trying to produce? I know that so far as the prairies are concerned, and I believe it is true in the rest of Canada, the big problem people are meeting today is one of the rising cost of production. Each day the costs go up. Involved in this problem of social legislation is the problem of people trying to make ends meet, to keep their business going. The matter of inflation is too serious to be neglected for very long. The idea of putting a little patch here or there is not going to remedy the situation. A few years ago we were told in this house that the cause of inflation was too much money chasing too few goods. This was the story the minister of finance gave us; it was the story the critics gave us and it was accepted by the Canadian people. But today, we have a different situation. We have a supply of goods. There is no scarcity.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I know the hon. member does not wish to turn this debate into a debate on the question of inflation, but it seems to me he is moving in that direction. I just remind him of that.

Mr. Castleden: Thank you very much. I think even you, Mr. Speaker, would admit that inflation is the basic cause behind the need for these amendments. If we could do something about reducing the cost of living by 30 per cent, then we would be bringing this kind of social legislation to all the people of Canada. We are pleased to support the increases in pension for these people who find that because of the increased cost of living the money which they are receiving does not meet their needs. I hope the government, if it does not do anything about inflation, will be prepared to introduce a further amendment next year and then, if the cost of living continues to rise, will introduce another one in 1959.

It has been suggested that it might be a good idea to link the pensions with the cost of living index. We will support this measure, and we will be glad to see it go through. It will help a number of people, but it will not help them for very long if we do not prevent inflation. I would suggest to the government that in the forthcoming dominion-provincial conference they look into this problem of having uniform regulations to cover all the people in these social assistance brackets. Something should be done towards providing equal treatment to all the people in all provinces. It is an unfortunate thing when, as the previous speaker mentioned, a person moves from one province to another and forfeits his right to this assistance. This is wrong. Surely while the provincial ministers are here at the conference, they could take a look at this social legislation.

People come under the Old Age Assistance Act because their income is too low or because, in many cases, their ability to earn has been curtailed by illness. These people do not voluntarily put themselves in this position. If one studies and works with these people for any length of time one finds that their greatest need is not necessarily money. They do not want a handout. They would like to make their contributions to society. If you can find some work for those who are partially crippled, find something for them to justify their existence so that they feel they are of some use in the world, then you will be doing a great deal more than merely providing them with the money upon which to live. I feel that, with that attitude, we can solve these problems. I feel our efforts should be directed towards enabling these people to help themselves and take part in the life of the community in which they live.

Modern industry all too soon casts on the ash heap the people who cannot keep up with the machinery as it is turning around. It is a sad thing that a man, while still in the vigour of life, finds himself out of work. Society will not have completed its task or its duty to these citizens who have given so much to this country until that part of the lives of our citizens is looked after as well as their physical needs.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself with the others who have spoken in favour of the bill that is before us. We do not feel that $55 is sufficient to give to the people who come under this legislation their fair share, their rightful share, of the great resources of this country. We certainly do feel that such a move is necessary at this time because of the very drastic rise in the cost of living.

I want to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schulz) yesterday when he pointed out, very ably I thought, the very serious impact that inflation and the rising cost of living have had and are still having on all of the government's welfare legislation, including the present measure. I feel that the increases from time to time in the cost of living make it necessary for us to look at our welfare legislation, and they have made the current amendments absolutely necessary.

However, I do feel that there should be some method by which there could be more frequent adjustments of the amounts paid out under this legislation as a result of the changes in the cost of living. In the past the delays in making changes have been far too lengthy to catch up with the very rapid increase in the cost of living. I am afraid that as the days go by right now, and as they will after this legislation becomes law, we will probably see a repetition of what has taken place in the past.

Mr. Monteith: We have a new minister.

Mr. Argue: We have a new minister. I am not arguing about that, but the reports that come out in the newspapers would not indicate there had been a new minister or any number of new ministers or even a change in the government. On this very question, I see in today's Toronto Globe and Mail a headline to the effect that we now, for the seventh month, have a rise in the cost of living index. It has reached a new peak.

While we have a new Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) who is apparently trying to do something for the people affected under this legislation to help compensate them in some way for this rise in cost of living, I think he might have some discussion with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and other members of the cabinet in order to see what can be done to protect the legislation that we are today passing.

Legislation has been brought forward to deal with increases in the old age security pension, blind pension, war veterans allowance, old age assistance and so on. However, it seems to me that in the field of welfare legislation there is one act which has obviously been by-passed by the present administration. In the days ahead I hope this omission may be rectified. I refer to the fact that there has been no announcement that there is to be a comparable and substantial increase in family allowances so that the purchasing power of the family allowance might be restored at least to the degree that it is being restored under the present legislation. I would suggest to the minister that there should be an increase in the family allowance by 60 per cent, as compared with the value of family allowances when they were first enacted in this country in 1944. If that minimum thing were done, it would restore the purchasing power of 1944 and 1945 to today's family allowances.

There is one other suggestion I want to make with reference to the provisions of this bill. In this act we have, as we have in many other acts, something of cost-sharing with the provinces. While this provision is made contributory in many ways, I feel that the federal government contribution should always be the larger amount or should always be a substantial amount, so that all the provinces may be able to share in this type of legislation.

I was pleased to hear the minister say this afternoon, as I believe he did, that he felt it was likely that all of the provinces would be able to share in the increase provided for in this legislation and make it available to persons within their provinces. We have a new minister as the minister suggests. We have a great many new ministers. We have many new faces in this house. Speaking for myself, I can say quite honestly that it is a refreshing thing when I speak now to have what appear to be so many interested members. I think part of the reason for that situation is that the government at this time has not a great preponderance of members in the house such as we experienced for so many years. It seems to me that members on both sides of the house are today much more in tune with public opinion than they were in many years gone by. We in this group felt that we were advancing the things that the people of the country wanted but when we faced the government on the opposite side with such an overwhelming majority we found that in many instances, our pleas fell on deaf ears.

As to the progress being made in this session so far,—and I include the progress which is being made in this legislation now before us—it would seem to me that we are making more and better progress with the house divided as it now is than we have made in any other year since I first came here in 1945. I think the government is much more likely to listen to public opinion and to listen to members of the house when it is a minority government than it is when it has a preponderant majority. While certain people may feel most uncomfortable about the present balance of power amongst the various parties in the House of Commons, I would suggest that the balance prevailing in the house today works and that it is getting results for the Canadian people in reference to the legislation that is now being discussed. It seems to me that there are persons who are extremely uncomfortable in this present situation and it seems to me that most, if not all, of them are supporters and members of the government.

I have in my hand here today's Globe and Mail. It contains a statement attributed to the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell), the national president—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member proposes to read from the newspaper in support of the observations he has just been making I would remind him that they are not strictly in order on the second reading of this bill. He therefore may be taking up the time of the house unnecessarily by that digression, however interesting it may be.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, your observations may be correct within the rules of this house but it would seem to me that it is something of a reflection on the work we are now doing in this house when a member of the house—the member to whom I have just referred—makes a speech in which he says that an early election is not probable or possible, but that it is a certainty. I am wondering whether this government really intends to come to grips with the great problems that face this nation or whether it is going to be content with placing a few small patches on the garment represented by the difficult problems or the difficult condition in many respects, of the Canadian economy today and hope to escape by going to the country at an early date. As I understand public opinion in this country today, the people want members of parliament to stay in parliament and to do the business of the country as we are now doing it, and they will not give their general support to those members who go around the country and, instead of discussing legislation that is necessary, start threatening us and others with the possibility of an early election.

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the house that if the minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in rising in my place I do not intend by any means to announce the date of a future election in answer to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). However, I would point out that we are amending this act to increase the amount of benefit payable to the recipient from $46 a month to $55 a month. We are also reducing the period of residence required from 20 years to 10 years. Those are the two fundamental points in the bill.

I pointed out that the period of absence will be adjusted in the regulations. In my opening remarks I also pointed out that I would examine the regulations at my first opportunity. All I can do is repeat that assurance and leave the matter at that.

The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) said he recalls that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness), the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) have all advocated abolition of the means test. I have looked through Hansard for some of those quotations. I do not recall them. Probably the hon. member could give them to me some time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I can give them to you now. Does my hon. friend want them right now?

Mr. Monteith: No; not right at the moment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have them here. I have the page references and everything.

Mr. Monteith: Good.

An hon. Member: Why didn't you mention it in your speech?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Why didn't you read it?

Mr. Monteith: We feel that we are fulfilling our immediate election undertaking in respect of old age security and of all of these related acts by the amendments we are bringing in at this time. I do not think I need say any more. Others have accused us of not living up to our election pledges. All I can say is I believe that the Canadian people will believe we are doing so.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

On clause 1—Agreements with provinces.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Can the minister tell us how many additional pensioners it is thought will be brought under the amended legislation, assuming the participation of 10 provinces?

Mr. Monteith: It will probably mean an additional increase of 5,000 in the case load.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think it is clearly understood that there are two basic amendments in the bill. Since this is enabling legislation, a province would not be obliged to accept both provisions. It might agree to the reduction of the age and not to the increase in the basic allowance. Is that my hon. friend's understanding?

Mr. Monteith: I am sorry.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am assuming that since this is enabling legislation, a province, in the agreement which it signs with the federal government, is not obliged to accept the benefits of the two amendments which are now proposed. It might agree to accept the provision having to do with the reduction in the period of residence but do nothing about the increase in the basic amount. While my hon. friend is dealing with that question will he indicate whether or not in fact two provinces have already said that that is exactly how far they will proceed?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, no province to our knowledge has indicated, officially at any rate, that it does not intend to follow both amendments. Unless they amend their own legislation, revise their own regulations, to go along with us on this bill they will not coincide in both cases.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would it not be more correct to say that no province has indicated its intention at all in the matter?

Mr. Monteith: I did not say at any stage, Mr. Chairman, that any province had indicated its intention. All I said was that we have been co-operating with the provinces in discussing the future regulations which have to be signed so that we can put this into force as quickly as possible.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend and I are not really at cross purposes. I am simply indicating the implication in what he has said thus far is that no province has yet acknowledged receipt of a copy of the bill which was sent out on Friday last, and the minister is therefore not in a position to say whether any province will or will not accept.

When I spoke at the resolution stage of this matter I indicated and suggested that the minister should bear in mind the lurking danger in this particular instance as far as the provinces are concerned. He will find in the departmental files, as he has probably already found, some reasons and some justification for the suggestion I am now going to make. All of the provinces do not have supplementary payments and there are cases of need that cannot be met by the action of one of the senior levels of government. In those provinces where supplementary payments are provided a greater opportunity to meet special cases of need is afforded. That is true of the province of British Columbia, where the most generous supplementary allowance scheme exists and to a lesser extent in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and, to a much lesser extent, in the very limited supplementary arrangements provided for in the province of Ontario. In the other provinces no supplementary allowance is provided.

I hope my hon. friend will be aware of the possibility of a weakening in existing supplementary allowances on the part of provinces which have them, and a discouragement on the part of those provinces that do not have them, of embarking upon what I believe is the only mechanism possible for properly dealing with those very special cases of need which do exist. I hope that in the formulation of his policy my hon. friend has borne this very important factor in mind.

Mr. Monteith: From what I can gather, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is intimating that it would appear to me that it is a matter for the provincial and municipal authorities to decide and I do not feel like dictating to them.

Mr. Ellis: Will the minister tell us the date upon which the provinces were first made aware of the details of these amendments.

Mr. Monteith: When the resolution passed the house the provinces were immediately informed by wire. Once the bill had been given second reading a copy of it was immediately sent to them by air mail. I presume they probably received it yesterday.

Mr. Ellis: Can the minister state what replies, if any, have been received from the provinces?

Mr. Monteith: No reply has been received.

Mr. Argue: Is the question of sharing the cost of this act and of similar acts between the provinces and the federal government on the agenda as a matter to be discussed at the coming federal-provincial conference? I merely express the hope it will be discussed and considered somewhere in the scope of fiscal policy or fiscal arrangements. Certainly, in actual practice and in actual fact this is a very important part of the financial responsibility of the provinces, as well as an important part of the financial responsibility of the federal government. Will facilities be available for discussing the sharing of the allocation of costs of this legislation and other similar legislation?

Mr. Monteith: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think the Prime Minister's letter to the various provincial premiers has been tabled, and it is intimated in that letter that the fiscal policy arrangements are going to be discussed. It has also been intimated that hospital insurance might be discussed. I do not think that any closure has been put on what might be—

Mr. Argue: May I ask a question? Since the door is not closed on this type of discussion, can the minister say whether he knows that such a discussion will be provided.

Mr. Monteith: No, Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not. No formal agenda has been drawn up.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would think this is rather an important matter. The minister has just said that when the dominion-provincial conference meets, on the 25th I think it is, for a two-day conference, hospital insurance, for instance, could be one of the items discussed. That was the statement the minister made two days ago in answer to a question from this side of the house, but if the minister will look at the correspondence between the Prime Minister of Canada and the premier of Saskatchewan he will find that is not the case. The Prime Minister of Canada has said that will not be a subject for discussion, so the hon. member for Assiniboia—

Mr. Monteith: I suggest the hon. member should look at the letter sent to the premier of Manitoba.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will do that in a moment, but I was calling attention to the letter to the premier of Saskatchewan. This is an important matter, having in mind the point made by the hon. member for Assiniboia that there should be an opportunity for discussion—

Mr. Monteith: I think this is all out of order. We are not discussing the clause in the bill which raises the amount payable from $46 to $55.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I point out with respect, Mr. Chairman, that it is not out of order, because this measure will not become operative unless the provinces accept this legislation; the payments approved under it will not be available to any citizen in any one of the provinces. That is a fact.

Mr. Monteith: We are providing an opportunity for the provinces to come in under this act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is why I believe the observation made by the hon. member for Assiniboia and the comments made by myself have a very great bearing on the question at the present time. I can see where a province which is worrying about the cost of hospital insurance—

Mr. Monteith: I appreciate that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And I know that point was troubling some of the provinces. Having in mind what their contribution under that scheme is going to be, and also having in mind what their contribution under this scheme is going to be, they will want to review not the one question but the whole question in these talks. I think the minister will agree that throughout our present discussions I have sought to be co-operative, and I hope I will continue to be co-operative, but I think he has put himself in a rather difficult position—or he has been put in a rather difficult position—by the letter of the Prime Minister to the premier of Saskatchewan and particularly by the Prime Minister's statement the other day that there was no commitment whatsoever, notwithstanding what the Minister of National Health and Welfare said, by the government of Canada, with regard to one item in the health and welfare program of Canada, the cost of which has got to be considered not only by this government but by other provincial governments as well.

Mr. McLeod: Mr. Chairman, in connection with this bill and one of the clauses thereof I should like to make a few remarks and offer a suggestion to the minister.

We notice that this legislation, like all similar welfare measures which have been brought before the house, places the onus on all the provinces to accept certain terms offered by the federal government. We know that some of the far western provinces of this country pay bonuses in addition to what is authorized by federal statute, and I do think the time has come for the federal government to give consideration to the legislation which exists in those provinces.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask the minister if he will give consideration to the deletion of certain words which he will find in line 13 of clause 1, namely "Fifty per cent of fifty-five dollars monthly or" and then the deletion of the words in line 15 "whichever is the lesser".

The clause would then read, in part:

> The minister, with the approval of the governor in council, may, on behalf of the government of Canada, make an agreement with the province to provide for the payment to the province, in accordance with this act and the regulations, of amounts in respect of assistance paid by the province pursuant to provincial law, not exceeding, in respect of any recipient, fifty per cent of the amount of assistance paid by the province monthly to the recipient.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the time has come for the federal government to take another look at the whole question of this legislation and offer to co-operate with those provinces who are trying to alleviate the position of those persons for whom they are providing assistance.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I understand the effect of such a suggestion as this would actually be the lowering of allowances in some provinces below the $55 figure. The suggestion would also mean going back to the governor general to get a new resolution to bring before the house.

As I said earlier, we are simply making it possible for the provinces to participate in increasing these allowances from $46 to $55 a month, and to reduce the residence period from 20 years to 10.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I should like to have a word to say with respect to the responsibility for fixing the regulations concerning the means test. I notice that under this legislation the allowable income for a single person is $960. For a married person and his spouse it is $1,620, and for a married person with a spouse who is blind, $1,980 a year. This means, of course, that these people are on a means test.

I should like to know who makes the regulations governing the means test. Is it done by agreement between this government and the provincial governments? If it is, then I think some of us have a small grievance in respect of the rigidity of these regulations, these restrictions under which the means test operates. For example, I noticed some time ago that on one of these forms a question was asked of some old people: how much have you had given to you in the form of vegetables? Now that is a tiny little thing. I know of a case where people did answer the question by saying: yes, we received a few sacks of potatoes. And yet that was considered as part of their income.

I took the matter up with the officials concerned and said I thought this was drawing the line pretty thinly, because these people had relatives who were farmers, and these farmers gave these people some vegetables. Farmers usually raise a lot of vegetables. They feed turnips to their hogs, and potatoes to their cows, and it is a very little thing for farmers to give vegetables to old people. And yet under this means test the question to which I have referred was asked.

I had another case brought to my attention where a young couple had a home in a village. They had that home for the purpose of returning to it after spending a busy day in town. They had a spare room in their house which they offered to their mother and when it came to analysing the income of that woman who was a widow it was considered that the room was worth a certain amount of money and was taken into account as part of the over-all means test.

I recall another case where a widow in receipt of old age assistance decided that two could live cheaper than one and so when the opportunity presented itself she took in a lady school teacher as a boarder. She thought perhaps she could make a little bit of money that way although it was not her intention to overdo the matter, but when it came to the means test the modest amount she received was considered as part of her income. These instances are almost too infinitesimal to even bother about, yet this unfair practice exists.

I know of another case involving an elderly lady who was in receipt of old age assistance. It was her custom to visit her daughter on a farm during the busy season of the year in order to help out by baby sitting, washing dishes and that sort of thing. She was on the farm for several weeks each year and the officials wanted to consider that as part of something she received in the nature of free room and board which affected her over-all circumstances.

I think that sort of thing is drawing the line too thin. When I have taken these cases up with the officials my answer has been, "Well, these are the regulations. We do not like to think we are picayune about these things but, you see, when the officials of the department come along and examine these cases and draw out the files and look them over they get after us if we do not administer the regulations properly." That is the story they tell me.

May I ask the minister who it is that makes these regulations and why do the regulations include such small things as those I have described? Surely a son can provide a room in which his mother can live without it affecting her pension under the means test. Surely vegetables and perhaps occasionally some groceries can be given to these people without it having this effect. What difference does it make? It is such a small matter it should surely make no difference at all. Who makes these regulations? Does the minister not think that at least in some instances the regulations governing the means test are pretty restrictive?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I would be very happy to point out to the hon. member for Macleod that the information which he has just requested is set out very distinctly under section 11, subsection 2 of the Old Age Assistance Act dealing with the alteration of regulations. Section 11, subsection 2 reads as follows:

No regulation by reference to which an agreement with a province has been made shall be altered, except with the consent of the province or in accordance with the regulations to which it has agreed.

Subsection 3 of the same section dealing with the advisory board reads:

There shall be an advisory board consisting of two representatives of the government of Canada, appointed by the governor in council, and two representatives of each of the provinces with which agreements have been made, appointed by the governor in council on the recommendation of such provinces, to recommend such alterations to the regulations as may from time to time appear to be necessary or advisable.

Now, at the present moment there are some changes in the regulations and these have gone out to the provinces. As I mentioned earlier I can appreciate the fact that there are a lot of individual cases which undoubtedly come to the attention of hon. members and which may appear to be very much cases of hardship. If the hon. member for Macleod would give me the details of any cases with which he is familiar I would certainly have them looked into when, as I said earlier, I make a close examination and study of the regulations which I hope to do in the very near future.

Mr. Hansell: Thank you very much, Mr. Minister; and now may I ask this. Are these regulations standard throughout the country in all provinces or do they differ from province to province?

Mr. Monteith: They are standard, yes.

Mr. Hansell: Agreed to by the provinces.

Mr. Houck: Mr. Chairman, I think I understood the minister correctly but if I did not perhaps he could correct me. I understood the minister to make a statement a few moments ago to the effect that some of the provinces would have to pass legislation corresponding to this legislation. If that is a fact, Mr. Minister, would not the people in those provinces have to wait until that legislation is passed? If it is passed eventually, will those payments be made retroactive to the first of the month?

Mr. Monteith: That will be a matter for the provinces to decide but actually in the past, as I understand it, we have gone ahead. It has been the practice, I might say, to actually implement the increase and make it retroactive on the understanding that the legislation which does have to be changed will be changed at the forthcoming session.

BLIND PERSONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCE AND ALLOWABLE INCOME

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the second reading of Bill No. 21, an act to amend the Blind Persons Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I suppose I might make a few remarks. I do not think much can be said at this time on second reading of the bill in addition to what I said in my opening statement when the resolution was introduced. I answered the questions raised by hon. members opposite as the debate proceeded. I think I might only remind the house at this stage that the purpose of the amending bill is twofold: first, to raise the maximum allowance to $55 monthly if the provinces agree and, second, to raise correspondingly the income ceilings by $120 a year in the case of unmarried recipients and $240 a year in the case of married recipients.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, we have already agreed with this amendment but I would simply point out in this connection that this bill likewise makes no provision for those things which hon. gentlemen opposite have urged including the elimination of the means test particularly in the case of the blind.

My hon. friend questioned awhile ago my assertion about the position taken by the hon. members opposite. I would like to draw his attention to the references to this particular measure and to others which could be found for his perusal at page 5070 in volume V of Hansard in the words attributed to the present Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green).

An hon. Member: What year?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1952 and 1953 and then in volume I for 1952-1953 at page 90 the words attributed to the hon. member for Middlesex East and at page 476 of Hansard of January 21, 1957, the statement made in the speech on the address in the words attributed to the Minister of Agriculture and to the Prime Minister when he spoke in the house on April 11, 1957.

I have not taken the time of the house to read these various statements which will however show that these hon. gentlemen now sitting in the treasury benches urged very vigorously the elimination of the means test with regard to the measure now before us, and this was done in a very exceptional way, not only with regard to the elimination of the means test but also to the establishment of special guiding allowances. Therefore I am sure my hon. friend will want to look at what I have said in the light of his statement a few moments ago.

I apologize to him that I have not been able to find the letter from the Prime Minister to the premier of Ontario which will confirm, unless my recollection is very wrong, what I said a moment ago regarding the inclusion of certain items in the agenda of the dominion-provincial conference on November 25. If I am in error on that point of course I would quickly apologize to my hon. friend but I do not believe I am. I saw the letter this morning—

Mr. Monteith: Did you say Ontario?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was a letter from the Prime Minister of Canada to the premier of Saskatchewan specifically denying what my hon. friend himself said a few moments ago that it would be included as an item in the agenda of the dominion-provincial conference.

Mr. Monteith: I did not say it would be included; I said it could be included.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I apologize; my hon. friend is correct, he said it could be included. What I was pointing out was that the Prime Minister himself said in the letter to the premier of Saskatchewan that it could not be, which is in direct contradiction of what my hon. friend has now said. I am sure when he comes to examine that he will want to give further consideration to the reply he has made. I am sure that the house generally will accept this amendment because there is no class of people outside of those who are permanently disabled for whom this parliament and I believe other legislative bodies would be happier to provide material assistance by way of the amendment.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, while we welcome the amendment providing for increased allowances I was rather disappointed that the minister in his short statement did not refer specifically to the remarks made the other night regarding special guiding allowances. There have been representations, of which the minister denies knowledge, made to members of parliament for a number of years specifically requesting special allowances, free from a means test by the government of Canada for all blind adults to cover the cost of guiding and other essential expenses peculiar to blindness. All members are aware that blindness imposes economic and vocational limitations; it makes necessary additional expenses for guiding, and vocational maintenance, to approximate the general proficiency achieved by sighted people by virtue of their possessing good vision. Under the circumstances I think the minister should see the merit of these representations that our blind pensioners while they incur ordinary expenses, which we of course maintain are not adequately provided for in the amount of the pension of $55, nevertheless have expenses over and above those incurred by people with good vision.

I would therefore suggest to the minister that he take a second look at these recommendations and make some provisions for a specific allowance to our sightless citizens, free of a means test to enable them to live on a standard comparable with other pensioners in this country who, by virtue of their sight, do not have the extra expenses attendant upon our blind citizens.

With this observation I am sure the arguments which have been raised on the other resolutions and other bills dealing with the amount of $55 apply here with equal force. I would like the minister when he closes this debate to indicate to us whether the government is prepared to give consideration to the recommendations of our blind organizations that the allowances I have just described be provided for.

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): I would just like to say a word or two in connection with this bill. I certainly would have hoped to see the means test abolished with respect to all pensioners in our country. However, I do find a little comfort in the fact that the members of this house are in agreement as to the objectivity of the abolition of the means test at the earliest possible date.

Mr. LaCroix: Mr. Speaker, it is now five o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will proceed to a consideration of private and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

BRITISH COLUMBIA TELEPHONE COMPANY

Mr. Douglas Jung (Vancouver Centre) moved the second reading of Bill No. 18, respecting British Columbia Telephone Company.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Jung: The sole purpose of this bill is to permit the British Columbia Telephone Company to increase its authorized capital stock from $75 million to $250 million. For the benefit of some hon. members who may not be acquainted with this company may I give a very brief summary of its activity.

The British Columbia Telephone Company was incorporated in 1916 with an authorized capital stock of $5 million and it was at the same time declared to be a work for the general benefit of Canada. As a result of that declaration it came under federal jurisdiction and that federal jurisdiction is today exercised through the board of transport commissioners. The board has control over the service rates which the company may charge and also the issuance of any new stock. Since the date of incorporation of this company the company has found it necessary to ask permission to increase its authorized capital three times.

The first application was made in 1940 when the capital was increased to $11 million. A second application was made in 1947, increasing the capital again to $25 million. Finally, a third application was made in 1951 increasing the capital to $75 million. Now, the company finds this amount insufficient to carry out its program of expansion and is asking for permission to increase that sum to $250 million.

The British Columbia Telephone Company, Mr. Speaker, serves the southern half of British Columbia in which reside 93.6 per cent of the population of that province. The company also operates 91 per cent of all the telephones in the province, together with the major portion of the long distance telephone lines. The population of British Columbia has increased from 1,138,000 in 1950 to 1,399,000 as of June, 1956, an increase of 261,000 or 22.9 per cent in six years. This percentage increase is significant when it is compared with the percentage increase of 14.8 per cent for the whole of Canada. But even then, this percentage increase is not an accurate indication because between 1955 and 1956 the population of British Columbia increased by 94,000, which is twice the yearly provincial average.

The number of telephones, Mr. Speaker, increased from 246,486 in 1950 to 412,135 in 1956, an increase of 67 per cent. It is estimated that by the end of this year there will be a further increase of 42,196, making a total percentage increase in seven years of 84 per cent. In the urban areas unfilled applications are almost nil, but in some of the rural areas, because of the rapid expansion program and the tremendous distances involved, some applications have been delayed. As at December, 1956, the number of unfilled applications stood at 3,938. I understand that this number has been considerably reduced. The rate of expansion far surpassed the calculations of the company, because in a forecast prepared in December, 1952 for a five-year period ending December 31 of this year, the company prepared for 373,767 telephones. The figure will now be closer to 454,331.

In 1950 the company completed 5,479,000 long distance telephone calls. In 1956 the company completed 10,588,000, a gain of 93 per cent. The indications are that the demand will continue to increase considerably each year. From the foregoing hon. members will appreciate that there has been a tremendous program of expansion in British Columbia. This expansion has proceeded at a rate unforeseen by the company and has now exhausted the facilities in many manually controlled offices. The company has, therefore, embarked on a conversion program to dial operations. This, of course, has necessitated new buildings and new plants. In the event hon. members are concerned with the possibility of layoffs of staff because of this conversion, may I say that the number of employees of this company has increased from 4,490 in 1951 to 6,969 in 1957.

In order to meet the demands for service this company now has a project which will involve the expenditure of approximately $150 million over the next three years. In 1957, which was a record year for the company, there was an expenditure of $40,580,000. In 1958, the company will spend $51,644,000. At the present time the company has issued capital to the amount of $61,500,000. There is remaining, therefore, $13,500,000. I am informed that permission will be requested from the board of transport commissioners to issue a further $10 million, which will leave $3,500,000 in the treasury. It would obviously be impossible for the company to finance its expansion program with that limited amount. The present ratio between equity and debt is 46.3 to 53.7. Unless the request for an increase in capital is met, the company may find itself hard pressed to borrow further.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that some hon. members may wish to acquaint themselves further with the operations of the company. I am, therefore, giving my undertaking that when this bill is referred to the proper committee I shall have the responsible officials of the company here so that members may determine the facts for themselves. I hope I have established that this company is a vigorous and expanding company. It has embarked on an extremely ambitious, but nevertheless much needed program of expansion to keep pace with the growth of British Columbia. In addition, this will provide employment at a time when employment is most needed. For all these reasons, I am happy to move second reading of this bill.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this private bill to grant the British Columbia Telephone Company permission to increase capital from $75 million to $250 million is a very important one to the people of British Columbia. I realize that the company has made a great expansion in services since the last increase in capital was authorized by an amendment moved in this house. I listened with a great deal of interest to the history of the company's record and its intentions given by the sponsor. However, I do want to take this opportunity of bringing to the attention of the house a situation that I feel requires correcting.

We all know that the board of transport commissioners exercises, to some extent, jurisdiction over this company. The board has control of rates, but has no control over services. In order to illustrate my point, Mr. Speaker, I want to mention a small community in my constituency about seven miles south of the very productive city of Trail. In this community there are approximately 30 potential telephone users. The road between Trail and this small community known as Casino—although there are no casinos there—is along the bank of the Columbia river and provides very easy country for road construction and the building of public utilities. These people have been served by power by the West Kootenay Power and Light Company, but for many years they have repeatedly made application for service by the British Columbia Telephone Company and those applications have been turned down.

The people of this community then took up the matter with the public utilities commission of British Columbia and found out, because this company came under the jurisdiction of the board of transport commissioners, the public utilities commission had no authority to issue any orders with respect to services to be provided or rates.

As the board of transport commissioners had no authority to order this company to extend their services in any direction or to provide any services, I am sure it is obvious to everyone that there is a gap in the necessary controls that either the federal or the provincial government should have over a public utility which has a monopoly in the area concerned. In my opinion there should be some amendment to the powers of the board of transport commissioners in this case, in view of the fact that the company is incorporated under federal legislation, in order to provide them with the power to issue instructions with respect to services.

I admit that the company have made great improvements in the interior of British Columbia; they have improved the services; they have installed automatic telephones in many communities and have extended the services. But, in my opinion, when a small community such as that within seven miles of the city of Trail requires telephone service, and has required it for years, it should be granted to them, according to the controls that should be exercised by the board of transport commissioners. I cannot see why these companies should have the opportunity to skim the cream off the business, as it were, and to deny services to communities such as this one.

In this case the expense involved is a very small amount indeed. I mention this matter at this time because I promised the residents of the community of Casino to bring this matter to the attention of the house and to suggest that the house give it some consideration. I think I will get some support from other members from British Columbia. There must be other instances of similar denial of service by this company.

I am glad that the bill will be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I trust that we will have an opportunity to examine the officials of the company and to ask questions and that, before this bill returns to this house, I shall have some assurance that the community of Casino will be provided with telephone service by the British Columbia Telephone Company.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Jung) for the lucid explanation he gave us in introducing this bill. I was much interested in the observations he had to make because the British Columbia Telephone Company as such plays an extremely important part in the economy of our province, as he explained only too well. I know that in the period of the past few years the system has undergone a considerable change, particularly in my own area where we have developed the automatic dialing system. I also realize, from personal experience, the difficulty the company has had in its expansion program, although I understand that part of the problem resulted from lack of ability to get supplies where they wanted them rather than lack of financial capital. However, whatever the case might be, I am sure that all these factors might come to light.

The problem mentioned by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) is one that is probably peculiar to his area. I am sure that it and any others that might be in need of an answer will be brought to light when the bill is referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. After we have had the proper authorities before us to discuss the question at that time, we shall probably have something to say on the matter at a future date.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the explanation of this bill given by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Jung) and in his recital of the history of this company. I recall going into the history of this company myself 20 years ago in the provincial legislature in British Columbia when the public utilities commission was first set up. I discovered that this utility, the second largest or perhaps it is the largest one—I am subject to correction—in the province was put outside the scope of the public utilities commission because of its federal charter, and I investigated the history which was extremely interesting at the time. I am not going to go into the details of it now, but I should like to support my colleague the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) in his contention that either the board of transport commissioners should be given power to order extensions of service where necessary and economically feasible or else some steps should be taken to return this company to the control of the provincial public utilities commission.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre paid some tribute to the way in which this company has been extending its services. I am not quite sure what some of my neighbours would think if they had heard him. Seven unfortunate neighbours of mine are obliged to share a telephone with a member of parliament and can get hardly any use from the phone at all because neither they nor I are able to get a single direct line. None are available and none have been available, and the company can give me no assurance that at any time in the foreseeable future am I going to get it. Perhaps the $250 million capitalization will enable them to save my neighbours from that embarrassment.

Mention was made by the hon. member for Kootenay West of the board of transport commissioners' authority over this company. It may be of interest to the house to know that in March, 1953, the board of transport commissioners held a hearing on an application for rate increases by this company. That application was opposed by the provincial government of British Columbia and, I believe, some 60 municipal councils. In the course of presenting their case in opposition they cited certain practices of this company with regard to the purchase of equipment, and the contention was made that grossly inflated prices were paid by the British Columbia Telephone Company to affiliated companies in the United States for the equipment which was used in the services of the British Columbia Telephone Company.

They listed at that time the enormously complicated family tree of which the British Columbia Telephone Company is one small member. I am not going to attempt to trace it for you, Mr. Speaker, as it is far too complex. However, in consulting Moody's Annual I notice some rather astonishing figures with regard to some of the values of the present capitalization of this company. I am not sufficient of a financier to know exactly what type of shares are listed in Moody's Annual, but it shows some 10,000 preferential six per cent cumulative shares, on which in 1956 there was earned $480.25 a share of a par value of $100. In Moody's Annual I also found reference to the recent merger by which the British Columbia Telephone Company had now been joined to an even larger conglomeration of United States utility, finance and manufacturing companies.

After the board of transport commissioners, in March, 1953, held their hearing and cut down, in some respects, the application of the company for an increase in rates, an application was made by six citizens of British Columbia to the combines investigation branch on the basis of evidence that had been adduced before the board of transport commissioners. I understand that the hearing which was started by the combines investigation branch was not completed. Consequently there is no definite documentary evidence with regard to the investigations made. However, in the report of the director of investigation and research for the Combines Investigation Act for the fiscal year ended March, 1955, there is reference to the application which was received in July, 1953, from six citizens formally applying for investigation into the operations of the local telephone company and affiliated companies. While this report, in conformity with the regulations when an inquiry is not concluded, is extremely careful and there is no mention of the name of the company, it is purely an assumption on my part, Mr. Speaker, that it must be the same company referred to.

I make that assumption because apparently the complaint was precisely on the grounds of the case presented by the government of British Columbia. At that time it was discovered that preliminary inquiry indicated that the purchasing procedures and company interrelationships described by the applicants were, as of the date of the application, or shortly prior thereto, substantially correct. That is to say, the telephone company purchased its supplies by private contracts through and from companies which were related to it by various intercompany stock holdings. The telephone company had a supply contract with a related company whereby the related company served the telephone company in the purchase of telephone equipment, the repair and rehabilitation of equipment, the assembly and installation of switchboard and central office equipment and the storage and warehousing of telephone equipment.

It also states in this preliminary report that while there was no specific evidence discovered of a combination to set prices in contravention of the Combines Investigation Act, it was nevertheless true that there was an agreement by these interrelated companies to supply equipment to their related company or child in British Columbia under non-competitive rates; that is to say, they were going to make an agreement on their prices.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may be that this company requires the extra capitalization that is called for, and certainly I would not wish to stand in the way of the British Columbia Telephone Company supplying a much more efficient and effective service than it has ever done in the past, supplying the communities which for 15 years have been demanding some care from this company, communities which were told at the end of the war that now that the war was over their requirements would be serviced. I would not want to stand in the way of this company doing that, but I would want to make sure that they are going to do it. I hope that when responsible officials of the company appear before the committee they will be prepared to answer some questions with regard to the interlocking relationship with United States corporations of whom the British Columbia Telephone Company is now a wholly owned subsidiary; that they will be prepared to answer some searching questions as to the prices the telephone company pays for equipment compared with prices paid by other telephone companies to other manufacturing companies. If it does appear before the committee that the telephone company has been wasteful in the way of distributing its present returns, then some steps will be taken to see that in the future the people of British Columbia get the telephone service they are entitled to at the minimum cost without being obliged to pay tribute to companies which are outside the control of this parliament, the board of transport commissioners or any body set up by this parliament.

Mr. A. B. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): I would like to supplement in a few words what was said by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). I think the past has certainly demonstrated that this company in the province of British Columbia has not displayed that social conscience which should be part of a public service operation. I had the experience in the 1930's —I think it was 1936—of working for a crown company, the Dominion Telegraph Company, which was engaged at that time—although I was just carrying a pick and shovel—in resetting the telephone pole lines in the interior of British Columbia through centres such as Lytton, Lillooet, Bridge River, and 100 Miles. All I can remember about it now is that it was a very hard job; it was a 10-hour job in the hot, broiling sun of the British Columbia interior but I want to tell the house what happened. These lines were being operated by the Dominion Telegraph, at the expense of the country as a whole, as a loss operation, performing a useful public function. But as the population increased along those lines and businesses came in, as it got to the point where it was a profitable operation, of course, the British Columbia Telephone Company took it over. I do not think the parliament of Canada has any ownership or equity in those lines any longer.

I can see the point made by the hon. member for Kootenay West, that when there is really a public service operated under the dictates of private profit the public service is sacrificed to the needs of private profit and I can see the necessity, when you have something which is a public utility, of seeing that if they make profits in the rich areas such as the lower mainland of British Columbia, then they have a duty to operate, if necessary at a loss, to carry that service, when it is badly needed, in the rural areas.

I welcome the statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Jung) that this matter is to be referred to a standing committee of this house. I hope this point that has been brought out will be one of the things that will be dealt with by the committee. I hope the committee will investigate as to whether or not the increased capitalization that is asked for can in some way be put on the market in such a fashion that Canadian people, and particularly British Columbia investors, can have, yes, control of that undertaking.

I agree with the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Cameron) that it is a pity that one of our essential services in the province of British Columbia should be under remote control of a giant United States company, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, which, of course, has very little interest in service in the province of British Columbia.

I should like to know whether in the past, in the stock issues that have taken place, there has been any share-splitting or any stock dividend. I should like to know what assurance we shall have that in the future, if this increased capitalization is granted, it will not be bartered away in whole or in part in the form of stock dividends. Therefore, I appreciate the introductory remarks which have been made, Mr. Speaker, and hope that when the committee has investigated this matter further we shall be in a better position to judge the merits of this bill.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few words to supplement the remarks which have already been made by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacDonald), and the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Cameron). I must say I feel that the citizens of British Columbia have been and still are placed in a rather embarrassing and humiliating position with respect to the question of the extension of needed telephone service in various areas and communities in the province.

I think the suggestion that was put forward that there should be some form of public jurisdiction over the extension of services is one which should receive the proper attention of this house or, as was suggested, should be handed over to a proper jurisdiction within the province of British Columbia.

I have had the experience myself on more than one occasion since I have been in this house of making representations to the telephone company on behalf of my constituents in the province of British Columbia, and while I have received a very courteous and attentive hearing to the representations I have made, I must say that when it comes to a basic public utility and a public service of this kind it is not right that one should have to go with a cap in hand attitude to make representations in respect to the extension or improvement of telephone services.

I am glad that the opportunity has been afforded by the introduction of this bill by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Jung) to raise some of these matters, and I am sure that when this bill comes before the committee a great many questions will be raised, as has already been indicated, which hon. members will look forward to hearing answered to their satisfaction.

I do not want to repeat at any great length the comments which were made by the hon. member for Nanaimo, (Mr. Cameron) but certainly there are questions which, I feel, the officials of the company should be prepared to answer to the satisfaction of the committee.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I rise not to oppose the bill, because I am sure it has merit, but to put a point of order. A motion has been made that the bill be referred to the—

An hon. Member: We are on second reading now.

Mr. Chevrier: Then I withdraw the remarks I have made. I intend to make them when the motion on second reading is before the house.

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the hon. member that the motion before the house now is on the second reading of this bill.

Mr. Chevrier: Will Your Honour hear me in that case? What I should like to say is that the bill cannot be referred to a committee in accordance with the rule of the house—it is rule 105—because the committees have not been established. It is the practice to refer these bills to certain standing committees, in the case of this particular bill to the committee of railways, canals and telegraph lines or, if that is not the responsible committee to which it should be referred, then to the private bills committee. But since the striking committee has not been established, as the leader of the house will surely confirm, then I am afraid this bill cannot be sent at this time to either the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines or to the private bills committee in accordance with rule 105.

Mr. Green: The striking committee will be set up either tomorrow or Thursday. We are just waiting for the Prime Minister to return.

Mr. Barnett: Would the leader of the house mind speaking more loudly so we can hear him in this corner of the house?

Mr. Green: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, we hope to be able to move to set up the striking committee either tomorrow or on Thursday. As I said a moment ago I am just waiting for the Prime Minister to return.

But I do not think the interpretation which the hon. member for Laurier placed on rule 105 is accurate because these standing committees are listed in the rules of the house, and I do not think that the fact that this committee has not acually been set up, and is not in a position to function at once, would abrogate rule 105 which makes it mandatory to refer every private bill, once it has received second reading, to one or other of the committees of the house.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may speak again, the rule is quite clear, and perhaps I might read it:

> Every private bill, when read a second time, is referred to one of the standing committees as follows: bills relating to banks, insurance, trade and commerce and to trust and loan companies, to the committee on banking and commerce; bills relating to railways, canals, telegraphs, canal and railway bridges, to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines; the bills not coming under these classes, to the committee on miscellaneous private bills, and all petitions for or against the bills are considered as referred to such committee.

If this bill gets a second reading it should in that case go to the committee on miscellaneous private bills which is not in existence. I raise the point of order because I think it is my duty to do so. I do not do it to hold up the bill. I think perhaps, that if the bill were left standing, then when the committee has been established or set up it could at that time be referred to the committee mentioned in the rules.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I think the error in the argument made by the hon. member for Laurier would be disclosed if this fact is considered: suppose the striking committee is set up tomorrow. It may take some days to agree on the personnel of the different standing committees, and then it might be some days after that before the personnel are called together, a chairman appointed and the committee is really in a position to function.

I do suggest that the rule should not be construed to mean that no private bill can get second reading until all these steps have been taken. That just does not make sense. The rule merely says that on second reading every private bill must go to one or the other of the standing committees. In this case it happens to be the practice to refer telephone company bills to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. Other bills might go to the banking and commerce committee or to the miscellaneous private bills committee.

But I do suggest, Mr. Speaker, that were you to rule as requested by the hon. member for Laurier it would only mean throwing a monkey wrench into the machinery of the house, which is far from the real intent of this rule 105.

There is another aspect of this matter, which is that there is a limited time available for the consideration of these bills, depending on what other private bills are brought in. This bill might not come up again for consideration for weeks, and I think it would be unfair to bring about that result by a ruling in favour of the submission made by the hon. member for Laurier, certainly if the house is willing to give second reading to the bill this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank hon. members for the assistance they have given me in this matter. This is a problem which I have considered already because of the difficulty which the hon. member for Laurier saw. Actually, what we have before us is the second reading of the bill, and until the second reading has been given, no problem arises.

The hon. member for Laurier has posed the problem of what happens then, and he refers to standing order No. 105 which does automatically refer this bill to the appropriate committee when the second reading has been given. There is precedent for that in the rulings of Speakers in the past. On April 17, 1950, the Speaker, considering the point whether or not a motion was necessary after second reading had been given to a private bill to refer the bill to the appropriate committee, decided that no motion was necessary because standing order 105 automatically transferred the bill to the appropriate committee when second reading was given by the house. I follow the hon. member to that point.

Then the hon. member raised a further question, whether the fact that the committee has no members has any effect at that time. I think perhaps I should not deal with the point in advance but I have considered it and I would like to tell the house that my view now, right or wrong, is that these are standing committees and although you may say there is no committee if there are no members the rules of the house do provide for the existence of a standing committee on railways canals and telegraph lines to which this bill would automatically be referred under standing order 105, and so I do not think there is any difficulty at the present time. I feel, as presently advised, that there will be no difficulty if second reading is given that the bill will be referred automatically but it cannot be considered by that committee until it is constituted by having members, but it is a committee in being under the orders of the house.

Mr. T. J. Irwin (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, would it be permissible to move the suspension of standing order No. 105 subsequent to second reading to permit this bill to be submitted directly to the committee of the whole house?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member would have to govern himself as he sees fit. I am not here to give him advice on matters of that kind.

Mr. Irwin: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will make the motion for the consideration of the house.

An hon. Member: You can make the motion but the answer is no.

Mr. Irwin: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Christian):

That by leave of the house standing order No. 105 be suspended and that Bill B from the Senate be considered in committee of the whole house after second reading.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I submit that that motion is out of order. A motion of that type cannot be made until a bill has received second reading and even then it would be out of order.

Mr. Chevrier: And until 48 hours' notice has been given.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member will appreciate that he cannot make that motion except by the unanimous consent of the house which he does not have.

Mr. A. D. McPhillips (Victoria, B.C.): Mr. Speaker, when speaking on the debate on second reading my friend the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Jung) was perhaps just a little bit sketchy in dealing with this company because I think the house got the impression that this company was incorporated in 1916. Well now, a company was incorporated in 1916 by private act of the parliament of Canada, it is quite true, but it was not the British Columbia Telephone Company; rather, it was the Western Canada Telephone Company. In that statute there was provision for that company to change its name with the consent of the secretary of state for Canada to the British Columbia Telephone Company and there was also power given to that company to take over the undertakings of a provincial company known as the British Columbia Telephone Company Limited.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, this company has a very long history when the length of civilization, you might say, in the Pacific province is considered because it starts with the incorporation in 1880 of a telephone company known as the Victoria and Esquimalt Telephone Company. Then there was a further telephone company established in 1884, the New Westminster and Port Moody Telephone Company which afterwards changed its name to the New Westminster and Burrard Inlet Telephone Company. There was also the Nanaimo Telephone Company established in 1892 and an incorporated company known as the Vernon and Nelson Telephone Company came into being in 1890. The latter company caused a little amusement in British Columbia because at that time the people on the coast wondered why the tea-drinking Englishmen who paid tribute to the time honoured custom of playing cricket and growing apples in Vernon wanted to talk to the hard-working, hard-drinking miners in Nelson; but anyway a company bearing that name was incorporated.

That company had extensive amendments made to its act of incorporation and by a process of absorption, after first changing its name to British Columbia Telephone Company, Limited, it drew in these various other smaller companies and at a long time prior to the passage of the Western Canada Telephone Company Act in 1916. I might say that this telephone operation, in 1916, was not a penny ante operation, it was a big one in the province of British Columbia. It had seen the ordinary development of the province. It had been through the boom we had in that province in its development prior to world war I, the development during the war years and the development in the roaring twenties, as they were called. It existed through the further development prior to the last war, during the years of the war and the development which occurred following world war II.

What puzzles me, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that in the whole period from 1880 on until now this very large operation got by with a capital of only $75 million. A long time has elapsed since then and there were several real boom periods which occurred in that period. As a matter of fact there are $13,500,000 of shares still in the treasury not issued.

I join with my friend the hon. member for Vancouver Centre in expressing the hope that in committee there will be responsible officials of this company present prepared to answer questions. I hope they will be extremely well briefed. It seems strange to me that with this long and extensive operation extending over so many years during which the company operated with an overall capital of $75 million, not all of which is issued, we should now be asked to give this company power to boost its capital to $250 million.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT TO BRING FLAX AND RYE UNDER JURISDICTION OF BOARD

The house resumed, from Friday, October 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. McCullough for the second reading of Bill No. 10, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise in support of this bill. I have always been against speculation concerning the food of the nation which is one reason I wish to support it. I do not think there should be speculation at any time concerning the food of a nation.

When the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) spoke a few days ago he referred to the fluctuation that had taken place on the market in rye and also in flax. If these commodities were under the wheat board such speculation would not be possible and fluctuation would be curbed.

It has always been the practice on the prairies for a farmer to pay his debts in October. In my 40 years in this country grain has always been cheaper in October than at any other time of the year. After it passes out of the hands of the farmer and into the grain trade the price begins to rise.

After the farmers got the wheat board we were able to get an average price for the things we had to sell, that is, in the way of grain. I think the wheat board has a lot to offer the farmer; it is not perfect by any means but it is better than anything we have ever had as far as giving the farmer a fair deal is concerned.

Now I notice that when we are talking about anything in connection with the wheat board or the grain exchange the hon. gentlemen in this house who in private life are lawyers get up. How ridiculous would it be for me to get up in a bar association meeting and tell them what I thought. I would never get near their organization to tell them what I thought about their business but they get up in this House of Commons and tell the farmers what to do. They belong to the strongest union in the world, the lawyers' union; they can crucify a man, they can take away his bread and butter and still they have the audacity to get up and tell the farmer what he should do.

The farmer knows what he wants and if it were not for these lawyer fellows preaching about the grain exchange we would have got the things we wanted long ago. We have had two wars and what happened whenever we were at war? They took the grain away from the grain exchange and sat down and did things in a businesslike way; they could not afford to speculate then.

The troubles we have had in selling our crops have taken place since the Liverpool corn exchange was opened; while it was closed we had no trouble selling our grain, nation to nation, but now it is quite different. I do not want to hinder progress in this matter; I believe in the principle and I support the bill. I hope furthermore that the farmers in this country will also support it and let the lawyers go their own way.

Mr. H. E. Smith (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I make no apologies whatsoever to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) in rising to speak on this bill. I am a lawyer but I also represent a substantially agricultural riding and I am sure that any lawyer who practices in a small Ontario town knows the problems of agriculture. I am also sure that all members who represent rural ridings would in principle support this bill. It is a step forward in the orderly system of marketing another agricultural product. It is in the interests of all of us who are concerned with the farming industry to bring more stability to that industry.

We in Ontario are not familiar with the marketing of flax although the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Muir) who is an experienced farmer tells me that he is supporting this bill in principle and that by far the majority of the farmers of western Canada are interested in this matter. However, I think the timing of the bill is unfortunate. There are other farmers in Canada besides those in western Canada. They too have their problems and it is unfortunate—or perhaps I should say it is fortunate—that our friends in the corner of the house who have presented this bill do not have any members representing rural ridings in eastern Canada. Therefore they no doubt are not so sympathetic with the problems of the Ontario farmer.

I think we members from Ontario assisted in expediting the bill to provide cash advances for farm-stored grain because we realized it was a matter of vital importance to the economy of Canada, but now we would like some priority to be given to legislation which will help the Ontario farmers and if you will read the order paper—

Mr. Pickersgill: Where is the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): —there is a motion on the order paper to support prices for other farm products. That is a matter of vital interest to my constituents in rural Ontario.

Mr. Pickersgill: Where is the Prime Minister?

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): Surely it would be only fair if the Minister of Agriculture and his department were allowed to present that legislation rather than be forced—

Mr. Pickersgill: Where is the government? Out electioneering?

An hon. Member: Read your newspapers.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): —to have to deal with this bill, which we think is not as emergent as the legislation needed for eastern farmers. May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

BLIND PERSONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCE AND ALLOWABLE INCOME

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Monteith for the second reading of Bill No. 21, to amend the Blind Persons Act.

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Before the recess I expressed the hope that we would all work in unison for the complete abolition of the means test, wherever and however it applies. In my humble opinion the means test is not only unfair, it is downright unjust. The insistence upon a person being poor to get a pension and remaining poor to keep it is a subtle means to punish our good people who have worked and saved a few dollars or who have acquired property or who wish to supplement their meagre and insufficient pensions by continuing to earn a few dollars.

I have long felt that, age-wise at least, the most unfortunately placed people are those between 65 and 70 years of age. One of the main reasons for this is the iniquitous means test as it applies to them. They are forced to retire at 65, and more often than not on a pension that is not only inadequate but which is just enough to prevent them from obtaining a government pension. They are unable to obtain work but are obliged to maintain the heavy expenses of keeping up a home. These good people are caught between the uncharitable, near-sighted and in some cases almost inhuman policies of industry on the one hand and the foolish and unnecessarily penalizing laws of government on the other. Sir, the pendulum has swung hard against our senior citizens. Wherever the means test reaches it wreaks havoc upon those who come under its yoke. I sincerely hope that this government will not fall into the same unfortunate attitude in regard to the means test as afflicted the late and unlamented government.

This afternoon I heard the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) speak about the means test. Why did he not, and why did not his late and happily deceased government recognize this problem? Why did they refuse to correct this unfortunate situation during the long, dreary and unproductive years they were in office? In so far as the blind people are concerned, the means test constitutes a particularly unjustifiable cross to be borne by people whose cross in life is already well nigh unsupportable. What strikes me as puerile and unjust in this measure, as in the previous similar measures with which I have dealt during the past two years, is the stark fact that here again we are insisting that a blind person be poor to receive the pension and stay poor to keep it.

Why do we not say to these people, here is an increase; good luck to you. If you can go out and, in spite of your handicap, supplement this pension by earning more, then so much the better. Let us give him our best wishes instead of this means test. Of course, coming from the maritimes as I do, I have long ago learned that half a loaf is better than none. In this case, the slice is so thin I can hardly see it. It is in this light that I approve of this measure as another faint step forward. In this case, let me assure you that I sincerely feel that this act, instead of reading as it does, should read that the means test has been abolished.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): There were one of two things mentioned during this debate on second reading—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I inform the house, as I should have done when the minister rose, that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Monteith: There were one or two things to which I should like to refer at this time. The hon. member for Regina City (Mr.

Ellis) spoke concerning the means test. I should like to say that it is true, as I took occasion to remark last Friday, that we are not by this bill acceding to the request made by the Canadian National Institute for the Blind to the former government only a year ago for an added means test free guiding allowance for every blind person in Canada. This will not result from the measure before us, but we will achieve by this legislation, and its companion old age security measure, an actual increase since the beginning of the year of at least $15 per month in the case of the 9,000 people who will henceforth be eligible for blindness allowance and the 8,000 people on the old age security rolls. This will, I am sure, be recognized by the blind themselves, and by their friends and admirers, the people of Canada, as a major step forward in the provision of adequate social security for a most worthy and deserving section of our Canadian people.

I might point out also that the hon. member for Regina City claimed that there was not sufficient variance between the allowable income for a sighted person and a blind person. Actually the variance is quite definite. At the moment, for instance, the allowable income as we are proposing it for a sighted single person will be $960, and for the blind person it will be $1,200. In the case of a sighted married person the allowable income will be $1,620, and for blind persons the allowable income is $1,980. In my opinion there is quite a leeway there.

During the debate on second reading, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) referred to certain pages of the Hansard record containing speeches by members of our party. I should like to mention only the quotations which he did actually put on the record. Reference was made to a speech by the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) reported on page 5070 of Hansard for May 9, 1953, in which he advocated federal assumption of 100 per cent of the cost of blind allowances and the abolition of the means test for blind persons. However, may I point out that the quotation used by the hon. member for Essex East was put on the record during the debate on the Old Age Assistance Act. No mention was made by the Minister of Public Works of any abolition of the means test under the Old Age Assistance Act. The reference is purely and simply to the Blind Persons Act. I certainly believe the hon. member did indicate and intended to indicate that this applied to the Old Age Assistance Act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit me to ask a question? Is he suggesting the Minister of Public Works did not advocate the abolition of the means test for old age assistance?

Mr. Monteith: Yes, certainly not in these references; this reference is to the blind. However, the quotation was referred to at the time of the debate on the Old Age Assistance Act. While the Minister of Public Works did make that speech in 1953, at the same time the Canadian National Institute for the Blind were advocating abolition of the means test for the blind, today the institute is not advocating that. They are advocating now, and I will admit have so advocated for the last year or so, a means test free guiding allowance.

The hon. member for Essex East indicated that on page 476 of Hansard for January 21, 1957, the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) had urged the abolition of the means test. The hon. member again indicated that this had something to do with the Old Age Assistance Act. Actually, in this speech the Minister of Agriculture is urging a means test free guiding allowance, but there is not one word about the abolition of the means test from old age assistance or blindness allowances; not one word. May I only say in respect to that, Mr. Speaker, that this representation by the institute for the blind was made to the previous government. We expect to receive this representation.

We have not received it yet but as I have explained before this legislation is purely and simply to keep the whole body of social security legislation in line as of the moment, to give an increase to $55 a month to recipients of old age security, old age assistance, blind pensioners and disabled persons. That is our prime motive, and also to reduce the residence requirement and to extend the absence from Canada rule.

The hon. member for Middlesex East (Mr. White) was referred to by the hon. member for Essex East as having advocated the abolition of the means test for old age assistance. I should like to read what the hon. member for Middlesex East said in his speech on November 25, 1952, as found at page 90 of Hansard. At that time he said:

> Another thing noticeable by its absence is the removal of the means test in connection with pensions to blind persons.

He was simply referring to the speech from the throne. All he said was:

> Another thing noticeable by its absence is the removal of the means test in connection with pensions to blind persons.

I cannot see how under any consideration one can take that to mean that he advocated the abolition of the means test for old age assistance.

There is another thing to which I should like to refer. Reference was made to a speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) on April 11, 1957 in which he was supposed to have given some indication that he was in favour of the abolition of the means test for old age assistance. May I simply state that in his speech of April 11, 1957 there is no reference of any kind to abolition of the means test with regard to either old age assistance or blind pensions.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

On clause 1—Agreements with provinces.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Can the minister tell us how many additional blind persons will be covered by the proposed amendment which is an amendment to an act introduced by the previous government?

Mr. Monteith: I have that figure some place, Mr. Chairman; it is somewhere in the neighbourhood of 750 persons.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are, as I recollect, about 20,000 blind persons in Canada. Of that number there is quite a group who are included for benefit under the Old Age Security Act and others who are now covered by this amendment and the law as it exists now. Can my hon. friend tell us how many blind persons out of the 20,000 group will not in any way be affected either by this measure or by the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Monteith: Possibly some of these figures might be explanatory, Mr. Chairman. I will just put them on the record. As of March 31, 1957, the Canadian National Institute for the Blind registration records showed that there were 22,279 blind persons of all ages in Canada. Of these some 8,275 were on the allowance rolls in September. All of these have benefited or will benefit from the $6 monthly increase provided earlier this year and the $9 monthly increase in benefit now being provided.

It should further be noted that of the 14,000 blind persons in Canada not on blindness allowance, well over half, some 8,000, are over 70 and in receipt of old age security. They too will benefit in all cases by the additional $9 monthly benefit to be provided under the amended Old Age Security Act as well as by the extra $6 a month provided earlier.

This leaves approximately 6,000 blind persons not on old age security and not on blindness allowance at the present time. Numbers of these are on other forms of benefit—war disability pensions, war veterans allowances, provincial workmen's compensation and so on. Others are dependent children in their parents' home. These, of course, are in receipt of family allowances. Still others are persons of independent means, wives, daughters or relatives of persons in a position to provide them with a reasonable measure of economic security.

An additional number, perhaps 500 to 1,000 of these remaining 6,000 persons, will benefit by the increased income ceilings now proposed in this amending bill and will come partially or wholly under the benefits of this legislation for the first time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I want to understand my hon. friend correctly. I think the 6,000 figure he mentions is deceptive in the context in which I understood it. What my hon. friend indicated was that there were about 700 individuals—

Mr. Monteith: Between 500 and 1,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Between 500 and 1,000 who may possibly benefit from this particular amendment. Am I right in that?

Mr. Monteith: That is right.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Can my hon. friend tell us how many blind persons in the 22,000 total he gave us will not benefit from this legislation or from any other measure to which my hon. friend has made reference?

Mr. Monteith: No, I cannot because there are certain numbers who at the moment are in receipt of disability pensions, war veterans allowances, provincial workmen's compensation and so on, and I do not actually have that figure. It would be something less than 5,000.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Am I wrong in suggesting that it is considerably less than 5,000 and closer to 2,500?

Mr. Monteith: Who would not benefit?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Who would not benefit from one of these measures in one way or another.

Mr. Monteith: I think it might even be more than 2,500.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend has mentioned that the Canadian National Institute for the Blind is not now asking for the elimination of the means test but is asking for an increased guiding allowance. Am I correct in that?

Mr. Monteith: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister entered into a little disputation involving the correctness of some quotations that I had suggested. We are now, of course, dealing with the Blind Persons Act. I wish my hon. friend had taken exception to my observation when we were dealing with the Old Age Assistance Act but there will be another opportunity when I will indicate, just as I have done under this measure, that certain hon. gentlemen opposite did argue, not only for the elimination of the means test in the case of the blind but also in the case of old age assistance.

Mr. Monteith: Not in the quotations you mentioned this afternoon.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No. We are now discussing the blindness allowance. My hon. friend has confirmed what I said, about the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Public Works. He referred to the mere sentence that the member for Middlesex West uttered.

Mr. Monteith: Not announced in the speech.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend reads that sentence again he will find that it can be construed as only one thing in the context and that he meant, as in fact he did in other speeches—

Mr. Monteith: That is not what he said.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —which I do not have readily before me and which can be obtained quite readily by my hon. friend from the distinguished gentleman who sits close by him, that he was one of those in this house who did advocate not once but many times in this house the elimination of the means test.

Mr. Monteith: The quotation on Hansard does not illustrate that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend is going to have on another occasion a flood of those speeches which will support what I am saying. I went through this and I know it did not last for only a few minutes; it lasted for several days.

Mr. Cardiff: There is no use in looking for something that does not exist.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The whip keeps interrupting. That is the measure of his contribution in these important debates.

There were many other hon. members who advocated it sincerely. The distinguished lady member for York-Humber, for whom I have the highest regard, was one of those who advocated the elimination of the means test for the blind. I have her statement here. I am not quarrelling about that suggestion, but what I am indicating now is that when we sat over on those benches it was alleged by the opposition, now sitting on the treasury benches, that we were remiss in not doing the very thing which the government, through the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has just now indicated it does not think it should do.

Mr. Monteith: I did not indicate that. I said I would take it under consideration in further consideration of the bill.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I say to my hon. friend one of the most convenient things I learned in 12 years was for a minister to take things under consideration.

Mr. Hodgson: Confession is good for the soul.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The difference between the government of which I was a member and my hon. friend is that when we took things under consideration they were followed quickly by action.

Mr. Monteith: How do you like this bill?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But tonight we have the distinguished member for Middlesex West—

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; the hon. member has mentioned the member for Middlesex East and the member for Middlesex West; he has mentioned both Middlesex East and Middlesex West in his remarks. I would be very glad if he would make clear which one he means. I would also like to point out that there was a change in Middlesex West in the last election.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I think the point is well taken; but the opportunity will soon be present, I take it from what the Prime Minister said, to deal with that situation.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare I am sure will not disagree with what I have just indicated. I do not say I disagree with the stand he has taken. Once again I say this legislation, which is an amendment to an act which was introduced in 1938 by the previous administration, is something which I am sure receives the strong support of all sections of the house, because, as the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska has said, this is undoubtedly a proposition that appeals to all of us notwithstanding the fact that he is not satisfied with the measure on two counts, namely, that it does not go far enough and it does not eliminate the means test.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DISABLED PERSONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCE AND ALLOWABLE INCOME

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the second reading of Bill No. 23, to amend the Disabled Persons Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amending bill is a threefold one, as I indicated in my statement on the resolution. It raises the maximum monthly allowance to $55 if the provinces agree. It increases the over-all income ceiling by $120 in the case of single persons and $240 in the case of married persons. Both of these changes are the same as those we have debated and approved earlier today in connection with old age assistance. They have already been fully explained. There is, therefore, no need for me to discuss them more fully at this time.

The third change is designed to open the way for certain patients in infirmaries, homes for the aged and institutions for the care of incurables, to benefit for the first time from disability allowances. I gave a detailed explanation of the reasons for this proposed change in my statement on the resolution and hon. members will find that statement on page 683 of Hansard for November 1 last. I do not think there is any necessity for me to repeat those arguments at this time.

Reference was made in the course of the debate on the resolution to the need for a less restrictive definition of total and permanent disability than that which was in the regulations originally. Actually, as many hon. members who were in the former parliament will know, there was a change in the definition agreed upon with the provinces and made effective from July 1 of this year. This is a much simpler definition, the text of which is as follows:

> For the purpose of the act and these regulations, a person shall be deemed to be totally and permanently disabled when suffering from a major physiological, anatomical or psychological impairment verified by objective medical findings which is likely to continue indefinitely without substantial improvement and, as a result thereof, such person is severely limited in activities pertaining to normal living.

Two meetings of the federal and provincial medical reviewing officers—all of them outstanding medical men in their own communities—have been held since disability allowances began on January 1, 1955. The purpose of these meetings has been to establish so far as may be possible common and uniform interpretations of various types and degrees of disability across this country. The most recent of these meetings was held on June 25 of this year, to consider the application of the new definition which I have just quoted. It is my impression, Mr. Speaker, that we still have some distance to go before we can really say that we have established a satisfactory degree of uniformity in the application of this definition in the various provinces. But I can assure the house that we shall do our utmost in future to ensure that there is a fair, a reasonable and a uniform application and interpretation of this definition of total and permanent disability in all the provinces of Canada.

Meanwhile, I believe that I can give the house some tentative indications that the new and more generous definition of disability is having its effect. The net increase in the disability allowance case load in September was 1,272, the largest increase for any month since September, 1955. Only in five months since the disability program began, namely May to September, 1955, when the program was just getting under way, have there been greater increases than in September of this year. Furthermore, the increase of 2,461 for the last quarter, July 1 to September 30, covering the period when the new definition has been in effect, was greater than that for the two preceding quarters put together, and greater than for any three month period since the end of December, 1955.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this provides pretty convincing evidence that the new definition adopted on July 1 of this year is having a beneficial effect. I suggest we should give it a try before deciding, perhaps prematurely, that it needs a further change.

A final word on costs. I will content myself here with repeating what I said in this connection at the resolution stage of the debate. We had at the end of September a case load of 35,490. With the effects of the new definition and the further changes now proposed we can estimate that this case load will rise and that it will average perhaps 43,000 or even more through the fiscal year 1958-59. The additional cost of the $9 monthly increase for this larger case load would therefore be in the neighbourhood of $4.5 to $5 million for a full year, with costs divided equally between the two levels of government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think, Mr. Speaker, that whatever observations I have to make I can make on the bill.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the provisions of this bill and the new definition of permanent and total disability. I am also pleased to note that the number of persons who will be able to benefit from this act is to be increased, but even after hearing the explanation given by the minister it would seem to me on the evidence I have that the definition has not yet been sufficiently broadened.

I referred earlier, speaking in another debate, to the question of whether at the coming dominion-provincial conference such welfare acts and the provisions for the application thereof might not be discussed. The minister may have one interpretation of the effect of the letter written to the premiers by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), but my understanding, in the light of the letter written by the premier of Saskatchewan on September 10, was that this may in fact be a polite way of saying no, because the premier of Saskatchewan listed quite a large number of items which he hoped would be discussed at the conference and they referred specifically to the financial arrangements for various welfare measures and their application.

I think most hon. members of this house have found that the definition of total and partial disability has been far too rigid. Instances have been brought to my attention of persons who are so disabled that they are completely unable to earn a livelihood for themselves and have become a burden to their relatives, but because of the very rigid definition of permanent and total disability they have not been able to receive benefit from the act.

I want to refer to the stand which the Saskatchewan government took on this particular matter on September 10 and to point out to the minister that this was during the month in which he said the largest number of additional persons could obtain benefit from the act, and to emphasize that even in this month when more people were coming under the provisions of this act, the feeling of the Saskatchewan government was that the definition should be further broadened. The premier has said that the Saskatchewan government has always felt that the old age assistance provisions were much too rigid and that they should be relaxed so as to provide an income under this act to persons who are unemployable, and that is the type of relaxation which the Saskatchewan government has in mind.

The minister has said that the door is not closed upon a further widening of this type of definition. I hope that in the near future there will be a further relaxation of these regulations. It seems to me that it is incongruous that a province which is short of revenue and which has always had difficulty in providing the revenues needed to carry out the undertakings in which it was engaged should have to go to the federal government and ask that regulations be relaxed in order to bring more people under the act and, consequently, to increase in this instance the financial burden resting on that province. I think that is a very definite indication that even though we have gone some distance in relaxing the regulation there is some distance yet to go.

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I feel this is a progressive step but I am not altogether happy about the amount being increased to only $55 a month. I would have been much happier had it been $60 a month. With regard to this particular act, I would say that, strictly speaking, it is not a disabled persons act. In order to qualify under this act a person has to be 18 years of age and have resided in Canada for a period of 10 years and, moreover, I understand that such a person must be totally and permanently disabled. I say, therefore, that this act is limited in its application because it excludes a large number of people.

Sitting here and hearing about this amended definition which was given as of July 1, 1957, I wondered why there were not some other definitions in this particular act; for example, definitions covering partial permanent disability and also temporary total disability. I note that it is intended that there should be a proper interpretation of total and permanent disability, but the application of this act at the present time is limited to a certain type of individual who is totally and permanently disabled. It would seem that it may probably be expected that some time in the future this measure will be broadened so that it will provide greater coverage and include all those persons who suffer partial permanent disability and also temporary total disability. I trust that these matters will be considered by the government.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

On clause 1—Agreements with provinces.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, the other night when we were on the resolution stage dealing with this particular measure I took occasion to mention the fact that there were many hon. members in this house who from time to time had recommended to governments of the day the adoption of a measure of this character but tonight I think I would like to repeat what I said in that particular in so far as it concerns the man who more than any other was responsible for the idea which led to the enactment of the Disabled Persons Act. The suggestion was made to me as minister of national health and welfare shortly after the election of 1953, an election in which this particular matter was not the subject of public comment from any quarter. To the right hon. gentleman who now leads the opposition in this house must go credit for the suggestion and the possible formulation of this measure and because of his distinguished public service in many outstanding ways, as one who was minister of national health and welfare, I would like to pay him this very inadequate but very deserving tribute tonight.

The minister referred to the definition of disability which has been liberalized. He said that the new definition made under the regulations became effective, if I understood him correctly, on the 1st of July last. Am I correct in that?

Mr. Monteith: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the minister did not wish to convey the impression that the refinements or modifications in the definition of disability in the regulations were made by the administration of which he is so distinguished a member.

Mr. Monteith: No, I had no idea of doing that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes. I mentioned this because, as my hon. friend knows, consideration was given to that long before there was a change of government. As I said the other evening, the original definition was restrictive. I had expressed the view that it was not fully satisfactory. It had been arrived at as a result of careful consideration and consultation with medical authorities and the provincial governments and followed an extremely close scrutiny of the practice in this particular in the United States and more particularly in those states where they had disabled persons' legislation.

I believe that the definition that has now been accepted by most of the provinces—although I am not clear on that subject and I will ask my hon. friend to be more precise—is one that I am sure is more in keeping with the spirit of this particular legislation than the older definition.

The figure of 43,000 which my hon. friend has quoted tonight as the estimated case load for the ensuing fiscal year is a pretty good indication of the effectiveness of the new definition but what disturbed me a little bit in what the minister said was that he hopes to be able to establish a wide measure of uniformity of interpretation among the provinces. Perhaps he might give us some indication as to exactly what he means. How many provinces have accepted the definition? Have all accepted the definition or are one or two reluctant to do so? Does he mean that in the case of those provinces that have accepted the definition there is not yet a standard acceptance of interpretation that leads to the same result?

I think the house should understand, however, that some measure of tolerance must be provided to the minister in the making of his reply because quite obviously as much depends on medical advice in determining whether or not a person is permanently and totally disabled it is not possible to have a mathematical or exact interpretation in each case and in every province. All that we could hope for is the use of the widest discretion having in mind the general direction of the definition on the part of the medical profession in the various provinces.

I would also like to know how many provinces are now in on the scheme, how many have indicated that they are prepared to accept this amendment. Perhaps the provinces have not yet had an opportunity of replying although I understood the minister sent this bill on to the provinces as he did in the case of the other measures. As a result of these changes is it the intention to call the provinces together once again particularly for the purpose of considering another clause of the bill which we can discuss when we come to it, that clause dealing with institutional care?

My hon. friend has said that the cost of the amendment is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $4.5 million and as the cost will be shared equally this means that the federal government will have a permanent charge of at least an additional $2 million.

There is one other point which I think should be mentioned under this clause. It was the practice of the previous administration to provide for an examination of each application by both the federal and provincial governments and some exception was taken, particularly by the province of Ontario, to the role played in these examinations by the federal medical representative. I always felt that the attitude taken by the province of Ontario was regrettable. I was sure it was not in the interests of the act and this seemed to be confirmed by the acceptance of this practice by all the other provinces. I do not know what the situation is now but perhaps the minister would be good enough, when he replies to these questions, to indicate what the situation in that particular happens to be at the moment.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, all the provinces have accepted this new definition. First of all, sir, may I say that it is far from my intention to leave any impression that the present government is responsible for the implementation of that definition. While it only became effective on July 1 it certainly was decided upon considerably before then. As my hon. friend will probably remember, we passed the resolution stage of this particular bill only yesterday and as a consequence copies of the bill were mailed out as late as yesterday.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry; you are quite right.

Mr. Monteith: Of course we have received no indication whatever as yet.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are quite right.

Mr. Monteith: I understand there have been some differences of opinion as to the medical review board which considers these applications. The board is composed of a doctor representing this department, a second doctor representing the provincial authority and in disputed cases a third doctor decided upon between them. I do not think my hon. friend asked any more direct questions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said that I did not quite understand what my hon. friend meant when he said he was going to endeavour to obtain the widest measure of uniformity of interpretation with regard to the definition of disability.

Mr. Monteith: With respect to the medical review board, the last time the board met was on the 25th June this year. Now I presume that is the second meeting they have had since the implementation of this act in 1955. Such a meeting would I believe iron out a lot of the different thinking across Canada and possibly another meeting could be held some time in the comparatively near future, but certainly it would in my estimation be desirable to come to an overall interpretation of this definition so that a case would be treated in Alberta just as it would in Quebec, and the same in Ontario as in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Argue: I would like to ask the minister if there have been any conferences with any officials or ministers of the Saskatchewan government in reference to the application of this act or the regulations under the act? On the other hand are there any conferences now scheduled for the near future?

Mr. Monteith: We have not had any representations with regard to this matter from the government of Saskatchewan but it could very well be that a discussion of some kind could be held, even informally, at the time of dominion-provincial conference.

[Mr. Monteith.]

Mr. Argue: I am surprised at the minister's answer, Mr. Chairman. Is the minister not aware that the premier of Saskatchewan in the letter addressed to the Prime Minister to which I referred some time ago discussed the application of this act and the need for broadening the definition of disability? Is the minister also not aware that in that very letter the premier of Saskatchewan asked for such a conference or meeting with the minister to whom I am now speaking and who is dealing with this legislation?

Mr. Monteith: The hon. gentleman had already referred to that letter and I felt he had his mind on some other correspondence.

Mr. Argue: Well then, may I ask what was the reply of the minister to this request or what was the reply of the government to the letter addressed to the Prime Minister by the premier of Saskatchewan asking for a conference with the Minister of National Health and Welfare or other representatives of the federal government in order to deal with the very question we are now discussing, namely the application of the regulation defining disability under this act.

Mr. Monteith: Not having either the letter or the reply before me at the moment I am not in a position to give an exact answer but I would certainly be very glad to find out what it was and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. Argue: Well I think that is a rather strange answer from the minister. I have in my hand a reference to such a communication and I feel I can state that such a letter went to the Prime Minister and such a request was made.

Mr. Monteith: I am not saying it was not.

Mr. Argue: It would seem to me that when such a request has been made on such an important provision of such an important act suggesting there should be a conference with the provincial officers or the members of the provincial government the minister in question should know what his own reply was to that request. I do not expect him to carry around every request that is made to his department or every answer to every letter received, but it would seem to me that a request from a premier of a province addressed to the Prime Minister relating to the administration of an important act such as this and to such a controversial regulation should have been brought to the attention of the minister and, if it had been, I am quite certain the minister would now recollect whether he agreed such a conference would take place or whether he decided there was no need for such a conference.

Mr. Monteith: All I can answer in reply to the hon. member's suggestion is that I can say I would be very happy indeed to meet with the minister of health or the minister concerned in the province of Saskatchewan to discuss the whole thing.

Mr. Argue: I want to welcome that statement by the minister. I may be wrong in my assumption but I assume that this is the first indication by any member of the government that such a conference could be held and I am sure the premier of Saskatchewan and the minister of social welfare will be very pleased to have such a conference with the minister or the officials of his department in regard to this regulation.

Mr. Monteith: I think it is only fair to say that while I may not have suggested a conference on this particular subject I would be very happy to meet at any time with any minister or any premier on any matter pertaining to any part of my department.

Mr. Argue: I think that is an excellent answer but since a specific request was made for a specific meeting the only question in my mind is why a reply in the affirmative was not given some months ago.

Mr. Zaplitny: Before we carry this clause which amends section 3 of the act I would like to draw attention particularly to subsection 2, paragraphs (e) and (f) because the effect of the change proposed in this amendment may be rather obscured unless the minister is in a position to place before the committee what the actual result will be. What is being done in this amendment is to take from paragraph (e), as it was in the old act, three categories of persons who are disqualified under the act from receiving the allowance and placing them in paragraph (f) where there is a permissible clause which states "except as prescribed under the regulation".

Now the categories being moved from one paragraph to the other are those patients in a home for the aged, an infirmary or institution for the care of the incurables. Under the section as it stood those persons were not eligible for the disabled persons allowance. However, by moving them into paragraph (f) they may become eligible provided they are made so eligible by the regulations. That is my understanding of the change.

I would like the minister to give us if he can this evening the pertinent part of the regulations which can create an exception under paragraph (f); in other words by what ruling in the regulations can persons who are in an infirmary, a home for the aged, an institution for the care of incurables or private, charitable or public institutions be made eligible when they are otherwise ineligible.

Mr. Monteith: Section 22 - 2 of the regulations as amended earlier this year reads as follows:

> A recipient who is a patient or resident in a nursing home or a private, charitable or public institution may be paid the allowance if he is paying or there is being paid on his behalf by a member or members of his family or by any other relative or relatives or by any other private individual or individuals the whole or the greater part of the cost of his accommodation therein.

If I may mention it at this time, Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member for Dauphin pointed out, section 2 (f) included the institution in which an exception might be made. Section 2 (e) actually was the prohibitive section and under the interpretation of the old designation in the act there was great difficulty, for instance, in exactly determining the difference between an infirmary and a nursing home. It was felt that it was not too difficult to interpret the exact meaning of tuberculosis sanatorium and mental institution. As a consequence, all the other types of institutions were moved down to section 2 (f), which permitted the possibility of paying these allowances.

WAR VETERANS' ALLOWANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCES, INCOME, COVERAGE, ETC.

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the War Veterans' Allowance Act, 1952, to increase the monthly rates of certain allowances and permissible income; to extend the provisions of the act to additional classes of veterans, widows and orphans; and to increase the salaries of the members of the war veterans allowance board.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister make a statement?

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, in moving this resolution it again becomes very evident that veterans' legislation is never completed. Changes are always becoming necessary as times, situations and conditions change. I recall very well in 1946-47, as I am sure many other members who were here at that time will remember, that when we passed what was known as the veterans' charter we thought we had pretty well completed veterans' legislation. Amendments have been made almost every year to the different acts that were considered and passed at that time. I feel it is only right and proper, at a time when the house is considering social legislation, that the War Veterans' Allowance Act should be given consideration.

This resolution forecasts legislation which is intended to, and which will help a most deserving group of our citizens. On different occasions I have said, and I repeat now, that I consider the War Veterans' Allowance Act one of the finest pieces of legislation ever passed by a Canadian parliament. I realize, Mr. Chairman, that at this stage it would not be proper for me to give full details of the proposed legislation. However, I am sure hon. members will wish me to indicate the main provisions in general terms.

The resolution now before the committee is consequent upon the announcement made in the speech from the throne that the War Veterans' Allowance Act, 1952, would be amended during the course of the present session. Hon. members will recall that this act was completely revised in 1952, and was amended in 1955. Furthermore, by means of a vote in the supplementary estimates for the current fiscal year, approved by the Appropriation Act No. 4, 1957, certain increases were made in the married rate of allowance and in the married and single rates of permissible income. Had the present government been satisfied with these increases, it would have been desirable anyway to have opened the War Veterans' Allowance Act at this session in order to incorporate the amendment in the act itself. However, as hon. members will see when the bill is in their hands, the government desires to go somewhat farther toward ameliorating the lot of those war veterans and widows who were trying to make ends meet on a small income.

The bill also reduces the period of qualifying residence in Canada of former members of the forces other than Canadian who were not domiciled in Canada prior to enlisting. It extends the eligibility under certain conditions to widows who are at present ineligible for the sole reason the husband died before completing his qualifying residence. Another amendment has to do with exempt income in respect of the recipient's home. The exempt value of such premises is raised.

Provision is made to remove from the act a clause which does not allow the award of supplementary allowances to an orphan in receipt of a pension under the Pensions Act.

[Mr. Brooks.]

The bill proposes to extend the period of absence from Canada which is permitted in any calendar year without loss of allowance. The bill also would extend eligibility for an allowance to a veteran of the Canadian forces who, during word war I, did not reach France but served in the United Kingdom for a specific minimum period.

Finally, the bill proposes an increase in the salary of the chairman and other members of the war veterans allowance board.

These salaries are set out in the statute itself and are felt by the government to be overdue for revision. I have tried, Mr. Chairman, to give hon. members a concise sketch of the amendments that the government has included in the bill to amend the War Veterans' Allowance Act, 1952. I shall, of course, be prepared to go into greater detail on the motion for second reading of the bill itself.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, my first words in the debate on this resolution, introduced by my old friend the present Minister for Veterans Affairs, would be to congratulate him upon attaining his present position. He has spent a great deal of time working for veterans ever since he was first elected to the house in 1935. I am sure the veterans of the country were quite pleased when there was to be a new veterans affairs minister from the party opposing that the appointment should have fallen to my hon. friend. I want to congratulate him upon attaining that position and to wish him success in serving the veterans of this country as his predecessors have done over the years since we have had such a ministry.

I should like, also, to commend the minister for the statement which he gave to The Legionary on attaining office. I thought it was in keeping with the attitude taken by ministers of veterans affairs of all parties ever since we have had a department of this nature. I should like to read to the house part of the statement the minister gave to The Legionary, which appears in the issue for August, 1957. He said:

> Over the past 40 years Canada has evolved a veterans' charter which is broad in its scope and comprehensive in its provisions. It is our intention to administer the charter in the spirit in which it was conceived by parliament, and to keep in step, so far as possible, with the changing conditions of Canada's veterans and their dependants.
> In carrying out our responsibilities to veterans and to Canada, we in the Department of Veterans Affairs will welcome the advice and assistance of all levels of the Canadian Legion. We hope that, in striving for our common goal, the welfare of our veterans, you will continue to co-operate with us wholeheartedly in the future as you have in the past.

The minister's comments in introducing the resolution were along the same line when he referred, as he has done, to the working out of the veterans charter and the fact there was a real departure in procedure in that the government of the day referred the whole problem to a committee of veterans from all parties who worked out various bills which were then put before the government and, receiving their approval, were then brought into the house for second reading.

That veterans charter, as the minister has said, was regarded at the time as a great achievement, and as the new government enters on its task it would seem to me that it would be fair to take a look at the situation at the present time with regard to veterans problems as they are seen by the Canadian Legion. I have here what I think is a very good and very fair editorial which appeared in the August issue of The Legionary. I believe it reviews the situation as the veterans find it at the present time and, of course, the present government, as the minister has said, will feel that it is their duty to go on, probably in a less partisan way in this department than would be the case in any other, in consultation with the various veterans bodies to try to do a good job for veterans and their dependents. But before we go forward it seems to me it is quite fitting to examine the situation as we find it today. In many ways this editorial seems to me to be a very inspiring one to all of us who are faced with carrying on the work so well carried on in the past by those who dealt with this problem. The editorial is headed, "A Grand Tradition", and reads as follows:

While certain improvements are still being sought by the Canadian Legion and the new government will be urged to implement a number of Legion recommendations during the next session of parliament, it is a well established fact that Canada's veteran legislation is just about the best in the world. In some respects it is actually more generous than that of the United States, the wealthiest nation in existence, and in all aspects it is away ahead of the United Kingdom and every other nation. Not to bear this fact in mind would be both foolish and churlish.

Support of All Parties.

The principal reason for this singularly happy state of affairs is that, ever since the first world war, veteran legislation has been as close to being a non-party matter as any legislation can be which in the final analysis is the responsibility of the party and government in power. The various parliamentary committees on veterans affairs which over the years have dealt with proposed ex-service legislation have invariably been composed of war veteran members of all four parties in the House of Commons, and while the government has always had a majority in the committee in accordance with democratic practice it has only been on rare occasions that it has considered it necessary to use its majority vote. Practically all the committee recommendations, certainly all the major ones, have been unanimous.

D.V.A. Heads Through the Years.

By the same token the various cabinet ministers who have held the veterans affairs portfolio have been exceptionally free of political or party bias in their handling of veteran legislation both in parliamentary committees and in the house as well as in their direction of the administration of the veterans charter by departmental officials. Like their M.P. comrade-in-arms in all parties, they have really had the welfare of their fellow veterans at heart and, within the limitations imposed by cabinet responsibility and solidarity, have done their utmost for those with whom they shared the dangers and hardships of war. Being in the pilot's seat, as it were, they have had a major share in guiding Canada's veteran legislation to its present position.

Canada's ex-servicemen and women will remember Sir James Lougheed, Dr. "Bob" Manion, Dr. H. Beland, Dr. J. H. King, Dr. Murray MacLaren, Donald Sutherland, C.G., "Chubby" Power, Ian Mackenzie, Milton Gregg, V.C. and "Bob" Lapointe primarily because they were their ministers of veterans affairs or of pensions and national health or of soldiers' civil reestablishment, to use the old titles by which some of the earlier ministers were known, not because they were members of this or that Conservative or Liberal government.

Defeated Ministers.

Only three of this distinguished company are still living—"Chubby" Power, who became Canada's dynamic air minister in the second world war and is now a member of the Senate; and Milton Gregg and Bob Lapointe who with seven of their cabinet colleagues went down to defeat in the recent general election. In so far as ex-service legislation is concerned, these two will be missed in the new House of Commons. Under their respective regimes substantial benefits were granted disabled ex-servicemen and dependents, and both showed in their administration of D.V.A. and in their numerous dealings with the Canadian Legion that the wellbeing of their old comrades were uppermost in their hearts. Now that the turn of the political tide has removed them from participation in veterans affairs at the legislative level, it is only right and fair to say that they deserve the grateful thanks of Canada's ex-servicemen and women, and the best wishes for their future endeavours.

It is a grand thing that the tradition of veteran legislation on a non-party basis has grown up in this country. May it be jealously guarded and safely maintained by whatever party in in power!

As we have ended 22 years of Liberal administration in which this attitude was taken by the Liberal administration of the day towards working out and dealing with veterans problems whereby the co-operation and suggestions of members of all the other parties and of the people representing the various veterans organizations were sought and heeded to such an extent, I felt it would only be fair for me, inasmuch as I have watched this going on ever since 1935 and have been a member of committees for most of that period and worked with the present Minister of Veterans Affairs, to call this to mind and express my confidence, as he is so much in agreement with the course followed over the years when he took part in this work, that what is described in this fine editorial as a grand tradition will be carried on while he is the minister.

Nothing was said in the editorial about previous administrations, as a whole, but I felt that at this stage I should say a word or two about such past administrations. Having had as much to do with veterans affairs as I did, in co-operation with the late Right Hon. Ian Mackenzie and other veteran members of the House of Commons in working out the veterans' charter, I felt I should say a word about the attitude of the government of the day and the ministers who had a great deal to do with the working out of the charter and the work that has been done since.

I think those who worked on that charter will agree with me that the attitude of the then prime minister, Mr. King, and the then minister of finance, Mr. Ilsley, was one of very great sympathy towards working out the best charter for ex-servicemen that any country in the world could have.

At this stage I should like to pay tribute to the administration as a whole at that time and particularly to the minister of finance and the prime minister at that time for the way in which they were ready to accept advice from the veterans organizations and from the members of all parties in working out that charter. But, as the minister said, since that time there has been a period of 12 or 13 years in which great changes have come about in the country, and it was necessary to make great changes in the charter if it was to carry out the ideals and hopes of those who drew it. And so, carrying out in that grand tradition, members of all parties have been permitted, under the policy of the administration, led for over the past 10 years by the present Leader of the Opposition and with the co-operation of his administration, to carry on in that way and, as the Legion has said, accepting almost invariably unanimous recommendations of the committees on veterans affairs.

I was very interested in an editorial which appeared in the Torch, the voice of the Canadian corps. I will not take time to read all of it, but it has reference to this matter and it does pay a tribute to the present Leader of the Opposition who carried on this policy, it seems to me, in a way fully worthy of the great work that had been done before he took charge of the administration.

I do not think anyone would accuse the Canadian Corps Association of being biased in favour of our party. I was quite interested to see what they actually said and I really appreciate the generous and well deserved tribute that they paid. The editorial reads in part:

> The Canadian Corps Association welcomes, sincerely, the new government elected in June of this year to guide the destiny of this great country of Canada. The new regime has taken over from the old which held power for many, many years—some Canadians, apparently, thought for too many years! Be that as it may, Canadians in all sincerity can join together and say,—

And I do appreciate this from the Torch.

> —"Well done, our good and faithful servants". For when we look back over the past 22 years we can see that Canada has steadily marched forward and, in no uncertain manner, has reached the front row of the nations of the world.

Farther on, the editorial goes on to say:

> Certainly the Canadian corps join with the millions of Canadians in wishing the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent many years of peace and happiness. He served us well.

I feel that veterans throughout all Canada would have that same attitude toward the present right hon. Leader of the Opposition, and I think it would be only fair at this particular stage in our affairs to voice what I am sure are their sentiments in this matter.

I am sure the Minister of Veterans Affairs will agree with me when I say that he did not disclose very much in his opening remarks in introducing this resolution. I hope he will forgive me if I say I do not think I am any wiser, and I doubt whether the committee is any wiser since he spoke as to what he intends to bring before us in his bill than we were from a mere reading of the resolution.

He mentioned that it is intended to reduce the period of qualifying residence. He was very modest about what he intended to do in that regard. I really feel that he should take us into his confidence a little bit so as to prepare us in some way for what he has in mind. He said that it extends the eligibility where the husband dies before the period of residence has been fully established, which is necessary before the widow can get eligibility. This is something which has been advocated by various groups, that when the husband died before the required 20 years residence, if the wife continued to live in Canada, some consideration should be given to lifting that limited qualification. I think it was felt that that was a meritorious claim. Then, there is to be some change in regard to the amount of exemption in respect of a residence owned by the veteran. I think everybody would agree that with the fall in the value of money and the rise in the value of a residence, expressed in terms of money, this change was necessary to keep the position of veterans from retrograding. However unless it is fairly substantial it will not meet the needs of the situation at all.

Then there is the extension of the period in which the veteran might be absent without losing the war veterans allowance. I know it was the attitude of most of the members of the present government party for some time that where a veteran had to go out of Canada to preserve his health he still should be able to continue to draw his war veterans allowance. I must say that always sounded so reasonable to me that I felt if many changes were being made at the request of the various veterans organizations it would not be long until something would be done along that line, and I hope that something like this is in the bill to provide that if a person must leave Canada for his health there will be no question of his losing his war veterans allowance. Of course, the other provision of extending the time of permissible absence from Canada is again obviously in line with the other legislation already passed and it is felt by everyone, I think, that certainly in veterans legislation the position of the veteran should not suffer in comparison with those in other groups.

Then there is the provision for extending the eligibility where a certain period has been served overseas. The minister I hope will tell us about it so that we can be prepared to some extent. I presume it is intended to deal with the position of the world war I veteran who did not get beyond the shores of the United Kingdom which was not specified as a theatre of actual war in world war I, and so was not, unless he was a pensioner, able to get the benefit of the War Veterans' Allowance Act.

From time to time many veterans pressed the view that when the United Kingdom was a theatre of actual war so far as world war II was concerned, world war I veterans should receive the same consideration as world war II veterans receive under the act. I think many people felt that since so many who had reached England during the first war were kept there in the course of duty and were not permitted to proceed further that the time was certainly coming if not here, especially when it was recognized that Great Britain was a theatre of actual war so far as world war II was concerned, when something should be done to deal with the position of those who did not get to France during the first great war. I presume this legislation will deal with that situation. I would have wished that the minister might have given us some better idea of how far he proposes to go in that regard.

One of the things the minister did not say was whether he intends to send this bill to the committee on veterans affairs. In view of the number of times I have heard him and his colleagues, now on the front benches, who served on this committee talk about the desirability of referring any amendment such as this to the veterans affairs committee, and the very severe criticism voiced once when this was not done by the minister himself, by the Minister of Public Works and by the Minister of Agriculture, I should be very surprised if this were not now the intention. I say this because in the hurry of the short session which ended last spring when changes in the War Veterans' Allowance Act and Pension Act were actually put through as part of the estimates, the attitude taken by these ministers was that these matters should be referred to the veterans affairs committee. So I suppose this is the intention of the government. In fact I hesitate even to doubt as to whether there can be any question about this, because if there was one thing I understood to be the firm intention of the Conservative party if they ever got into office it was that there would be a permanent veterans affairs committee and that all matters having to do with the veterans affairs would be referred to that committee. So I would be astonished, and I am sure the country would be astonished, as well as all the veterans, if it is not proposed to refer this bill to the veterans affairs committee.

I do not need to quote very much in this regard concerning the number of occasions on which it has been pointed out by gentlemen opposite that these matters should be dealt with by the veterans affairs committee. I recall, for example, that the Minister of Agriculture in dealing with the importance of these matters being referred to that committee—he was speaking of the introduction of the changes made this spring in regard to the War Veterans' Allowance Act—stated at page 3416 of Hansard of April 11, 1957:

> We have already had some considerable mention of the general method of bringing in the increases in regard to old age pensions, veterans increases, and so forth. I think the manner of doing this is extremely unsatisfactory, and that is particularly so in the case of increases in veterans pensions and war veterans allowances. In every previous case in which there has been an increase in those veterans benefits the veterans affairs committee has been called together. The government has proposed its increase, generally has given a bill second reading and then referred it to the veterans affairs committee, where a full discussion of the proposals and a full investigation into all of the needs of the situation took place. I think that type of procedure is particularly necessary as far as dealing fairly with our veterans is concerned.

And then he went on.

> When you have a committee of that kind the veterans organizations are able to make representations and put the case of the veterans before the members of the committee, and thus before the House of Commons and the government. At every one of those committee meetings where proposed increases were brought forward, the Legion, the army, navy and air force veterans, the blind veterans association and numerous other veterans associations appeared to make representations and, as a result of the representations made, as a result of the discussions in that committee, on various occasions the legislation was considerably improved.

I read that because I know it is sometimes suggested that the former administration decided on what should be done without listening enough to hon. members of the house or to representations in the country, and all that sort of thing. But actually, on the testimony in this regard of the present Minister of Agriculture, the government of that day invariably referred these matters to the veterans affairs committee and, as he pointed out in the speech I have referred to, the original idea that the government had in mind in 1947 was to raise pensions by 10 per cent, yet as a result of representations made by veterans organizations and the work of the veterans affairs committee, and consideration of the whole problem, the government finally agreed to raise the pension by 25 per cent.

After all, as everybody knows, the government at that time had a good majority in the house, yet here it was showing its attitude toward dealing with veterans affairs by not in any way taking advantage of its majority or insisting on having its own way. It listened to representations from the veterans affairs committee to the extent that it finally increased the pensions, not by 10 per cent as originally suggested but by 25 per cent.

Now I hope that this attitude taken by the former Liberal administration in not adhering in any stubborn way to any idea that it had in the face of representations made on behalf of veterans organizations and by people in parliament and in the country generally, will be borne in mind by the present occupants of the treasury benches for whatever time they remain where they are, and I hope it will also be borne in mind by the present minister with regard to the legislation which he is now bringing forward.

I am not in a position to speak at length about the proposed legislation because, as I have said, the minister has not given us much idea as to how far it is intended to go, but it seems to me that with the present fall in the value of money and the rise in the cost of living that this is, particularly, a time when the administration should be ready to call in the members of the other parties and deal with this matter in a committee where it will be possible to call in the representatives of the veterans organizations to discuss the government's recommendations and their adequacy in present circumstances. They have taken the attitude in the past that this is the right way to deal with this question. It seems to me it would be a very astonishing thing if they did not follow that course themselves.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to take this first opportunity to congratulate the minister on his appointment as Minister of Veterans Affairs. I must say that this is no mere formality on my part. I have had the opportunity and the pleasure of being a colleague of the minister on the committee of veterans affairs during the past 12 years whenever that committee was sitting, and one does not spend 12 years on a committee with a member in opposition without getting to know something about him and to appreciate him. I recognize the fact that the minister has good intentions and that he has always worked in the best interests of the veterans he has represented. I do hope that he brooks no interference from anyone when he is trying to give effect to the ideas which he has expressed during the last 12 years.

We in this group welcome this resolution and the proposals contained in it as outlined in the minister's opening remarks. I did not hear him any too clearly and I am not quite sure of some of the things he mentioned but in any event we in this group welcome the amendments as another step forward in improving the War Veterans' Allowance Act.

Although I listened very attentively while the minister spoke I thought there were some things omitted that the Canadian Legion and the National Council of Veterans have been advocating in recent years and I must deal with what the minister termed on July 16, 1956 as "some unfinished business". I can well remember his speech in this house on that occasion. Before proceeding further I must assure the minister that we in this group desire to co-operate. We will quote him and we will quote his colleagues but all we are doing is trying to co-operate in the effort he is putting forward to give effect to the ideas he has expressed during the last 12 years.

There is one serious proposal which has been made by the Canadian Legion this session which to date has not received a favourable response from the government and, of course, I refer to the suggestion that there should be a standing committee on veterans affairs. I am not suggesting we should expect everything to happen overnight and I realize that this session is carried on under somewhat unusual circumstances; possibly there is an atmosphere of the temporary surrounding the cabinet, but I do think, like the hon. member who preceded me, that even if a standing committee is not appointed this session this legislation should be referred to a special committee on veterans affairs, in compliance with the minister's proposals and wishes in years past, so the members of that committee will have the opportunity of hearing representations from veterans organizations.

I want to deal with a few matters of unfinished business so far as the veterans organizations are concerned. I understand that the Canadian Legion proposes that the ceilings on total permissible incomes under the War Veterans' Allowance Act be increased to $1,200 per year for the single recipient and $2,000 per year for the married recipient. If I understood him correctly I did not hear any mention of that in the minister's opening remarks.

The Legion is also anxious that the Canadian veterans of world war I whose overseas service was restricted to the United Kingdom be eligible for war veterans allowance provided that such service be at least one year in duration. If I heard the minister correctly I think something is being done to comply with that request of the Canadian Legion and the veterans organizations and, if so, I must say we in this group are very glad because these proposals have been brought before the veterans affairs committee and this house for a good number of years.

A third proposal of the Canadian Legion is that the widows of allied ex-servicemen be granted war veterans allowance in cases where the husband died before completing 20 years residence in Canada, provided: (a) that the effective date of her eligibility be 20 years after the husband's arrival to take up permanent residence in Canada; (b) that the widow herself has completed 20 years' residence in Canada, and (c) that the husband and wife were both otherwise eligible. Again if I heard the minister correctly I understand there is some move being made in that direction to implement this proposal and we are very pleased indeed.

The fourth proposal of the Canadian Legion is that section 8 of the War Veterans' Allowance Act be repealed. Section 8 of this act reads:

> No allowance shall be paid in respect of any orphan who is in receipt of a pension under the Pension Act.

I understand that this section is unfair to the children of pensioners and in this case, too, I think I heard the minister suggest some amendment and we are pleased to hear that.

In addition to those proposals I want to suggest that there should be provision for the payment of the allowance outside Canada to veterans who have to leave this country for reasons of health. I know I raised this matter in the house on a number of occasions and I think other hon. members who were then in opposition supported it.

One particularly tragic case in my constituency comes to mind. A war veteran in receipt of the war veterans allowance was advised by his physician that because of an extremely unusual lung condition he would have to live in a very dry climate and suggested that he go to Mexico City. The veteran sold his little ranch, went to Mexico City and lived on a few hundred dollars for over a year. The people in my constituency sent him a little money to help him out because he was not permitted under the act to continue to receive his allowance outside Canada. This poor chap lived in Mexico City and after having spent his last dollar was found dead on the streets on December 31 last year.

My first intimation of this was a letter from a Mexican peasant who wrote and told me in very broken English what had happened. He explained that the chap had no money and his Mexican neighbours had taken up a collection amounting to 700 pesos and had provided for his funeral. This man wrote to ask if there could be some repayment of this money because they were extremely poor people. I hope the minister will introduce some amendment to prevent that sort of thing happening in the future. This was a veteran who had served overseas in the first war, lost his eldest son in the second war and suffered severe pains for years because of this lung condition which was not pensionable. He left the country and was denied the right of receiving his war veterans allowance.

In addition to that I want to make another suggestion with respect to an amendment I think should be made to the War Veterans' Allowance Act. Again it is a situation that has been brought to my attention in my own constituency and the person who suffers in this case is the widow of a man who served overseas in the first war. I am bringing it to the minister's attention particularly tonight because it would take such a small amendment to correct this situation. I urge an amendment to section 30 (11) (b) of the War Veterans' Allowance Act. This section of the act reads as follows:

> A veteran who
> (i) is residing with a woman with whom he is prohibited from celebrating a marriage by reason of a previous marriage either of such woman or of himself with another person, and
> (ii) shows to the satisfaction of the district authority that he has, for seven years or more, continuously maintained and publicly represented such woman as his wife, shall be deemed to be married to that woman.

To illustrate the need for this small amendment to correct what I suppose are these very occasional injustices I want to relate this story. In October of 1914 a lady was married in England but separated after six months and never saw her husband again. She learned, however, that he had ultimately enlisted in the British army but she never knew in what unit. In 1916 she heard that her husband had been killed but as she was not reported on his military service record as his wife and never, of course, received any separation allowance, she received no official notification of his death.

In 1918 the lady married a Canadian veteran in good faith and in the honest belief that she was a widow. They lived together from 1918 to May, 1956 a period of 38 years, until the death of this veteran. Long after her marriage this lady learned that her first husband had not been killed in France. I have known both these persons for many years and can say they are highly respected citizens of the community in which they live and are well known throughout the district. However, the war veterans allowance board cannot give the widow in question an allowance under the act because of the terms of section 30 (11) (b) because the veteran himself is dead and according to clause (ii) he must show to the satisfaction of the district authority that he has for seven years or more continuously maintained and publicly represented this woman as his wife.

I bring this to the minister's attention in the hope that he will give serious consideration to an amendment to the act to correct such a situation which I am sure would represent an extremely slight burden on the treasury because situations of this kind must be somewhat rare.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I see that my time is rapidly expiring owing to the verbosity of the colleague who preceded me. I must say that in view of the opinions expressed by the minister through the years and those of his colleagues, we certainly expect amendments in line with representations made by the Canadian Legion and the National Council of Veterans. I support the minister and his colleagues and, to inform his other colleagues in the cabinet what they stand for and what they believe in, I am just going to quote briefly from Hansard.

First of all I will quote the minister himself on July 6, 1956 at page 5751 of Hansard. He had this to say with respect to the ceiling on war veterans allowances:

> I should like first to mention the ceiling on the war veterans' allowance. This is not new, Mr. Chairman; it is something which has been discussed at every veterans' meeting we have had in the past five or six years. As the minister pointed out, the ceiling on income for single veterans is $840; the ceiling on income for the married veteran is $1,440. The minister and other members, particularly the members of the veterans' committee will recall that the recommendation which was made in 1952, I think it was, and repeated again in 1955, was that the ceiling should be $1,200 for single veterans and $2,000 for married veterans.
> This was recommended to the committee after very serious study by Legion committees all across Canada. It was a great disappointment to veterans all across Canada when the government did not see fit at that time to raise the ceiling. It has worked a great hardship on the many individuals who are recipients of war veterans' allowances.

I do hope the minister will not continue to work a "great hardship" on the many veterans who are in receipt of war veterans allowances by failing to raise the ceiling.

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, may I just interrupt the hon. member for a moment. I have the section here and as he has read it it is correct—it was a great disappointment to the veterans all across Canada that the government did not see fit at that time to raise the ceiling. I did mention that the Canadian Legion had recommended a certain ceiling but I did not say that was the ceiling I was recommending. I said "raise the ceiling".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Brooks: I think if the hon. member will read it again he will see that is the meaning.

Mr. Herridge: At least the minister will admit that he suggested the government should give careful consideration to the proposals of the Legion.

Mr. Brooks: That is correct.

Mr. Herridge: And I would say the implication of the hon. gentleman's remarks is certainly that his attitude was favourable to the matter under discussion.

Now we have my old friend the Minister of Public Works. What does he have to say? On July 11, 1956 at page 5867 this is what the minister had to say and I will not quote at length:

> The reason why he will not get it is because of the low ceiling placed on the annual income he is allowed. If that ceiling were raised from $840 per year to $1,200 per year for the single veteran, and from $1,440 per year to $2,000 per year for the married veteran, as requested year in and year out by the great veterans' organizations of this country, then that situation to which I have referred would be met. This veteran would be able to get his full old-age security payment when he reaches 70, and the small pensioner who is under 70 would be able to retain his small pension and get the full war veterans' allowance.

I support the minister in his proposal. Then we come to the Minister of Agriculture. Now he is on our side—he always has been—on page 5890 of Hansard on July 12, 1956 he says:

> However, I would say I have never been able to understand why the government was not willing at least to raise the amount of the permissive income. For many years past I have urged, as have others, that the limit on the permissive income should be increased to at least the amount of the income tax exemptions.

That would be $1,500 for a single man and $2,000 for a married man.

Now to conclude my quotations, which I am keeping very brief indeed, I want to quote the Prime Minister because he was really grandiloquent on this occasion. On July 12, 1956, I quote the present Prime Minister; at page 5897 of Hansard:

I should now like to say a word or two with reference to a matter that has been discussed on previous occasions, namely, war veterans allowances. As the situation is at the present time, the ceiling on income for the single veterans is $840 and for married veterans $1,440. I find it hard to understand why the amount should not be increased to the level of that amount which, under the Income Tax Act, becomes exempt from income taxation. This question has been asked the minister before: where is the sense of fairness in this situation? Everyone is entitled to the old age pension, whether it is the prime minister who receives it or somebody else. Every citizen in our country is entitled to it at 70 years of age. Why should those in receipt of war veterans allowance find the amount of their old age pensions in effect reduced on the achievement of the age of 70 years? That is something that one hears universally complained about. It is something that is unjust for, by reason of the present ceilings, it places those who served and their dependents in a second-class position with respect to others who did not serve. It brings about a state of affairs that is unfair and unjust and it constitutes a discrimination that cannot be justified. I ask the minister once more—as he has been asked on previous occasions—this question: Why should such a state of affairs be permitted to continue?

Then he goes on to say quite definitely:

Why has not the War Veterans' Allowance Act been amended so as to provide for payment of war veterans allowance to those who served in England during the first war?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have made these quotations purely in a spirit of co-operation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: —in an endeavour to support the minister and his colleagues in their representations on behalf of the cabinet and in order to inform the new members of their party on the back benches of the situation and the extent of the co-operation which does exist in these matters of veterans affairs. I could give other quotations but I have had to limit myself because I wanted to conclude my remarks this evening.

I do hope however the minister will give consideration to the representations of the Canadian Legion, the National Council of Veterans, and the members on this side of the house and will not fail to remember representations made by the present government members while they were in the opposition and were members of the veterans affairs committee during the past 12 years on behalf of the colleagues and comrades in which we are all so interested.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the leader what is to be the business for tomorrow.

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall continue with this resolution which is No. 8 on today's order paper; then we shall take the resolution concerning proposed amendments to the Pension Act which is No. 9 on today's order paper; then resolution No. 12 having to do with a Canadian National Railway Company branch line and after that the throne speech debate and we may move on motions to set up a striking committee.

Mr. Chevrier: May I thank the leader for acceding to the request I made the other evening. I think it makes it much easier to follow the business of the house each day in this manner.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

UNEMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE ACT

Question No. 15—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government carried on any negotiations with any province since June 10 in respect of participation by additional provinces in the Unemployment Assistance Act of 1956?

2. Has the government received any representations from any body in the province of Ontario in respect of possible participation by Ontario in the Unemployment Assistance Act of 1956?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1 and 2. Correspondence has been exchanged with the minister of public welfare of the province of Ontario with respect to the Unemployment Assistance Act of 1956. There have also been discussions with the Ontario authorities with reference to this same legislation.

FEDERAL BUILDING, BATHURST, N.B.—TENDERS

Question No. 87—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Have tenders been called for the construction of the federal public building at Bathurst, New Brunswick? If so, what was the total number of bids received?

2. Did specifications attached to invitations for tenders require all bidders to offer alternate prices for the supply and installation of eight inches of brick in lieu of granite?

3. What was the amount of the tender accepted and to whom was it awarded?

4. Did the general contractor to whom tender was awarded comply with instructions by offering an alternate price for brick?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

1. Yes, on July 17, 1957. Ten tenders were received.

2. Yes.

3. $353,900.00. Contract awarded to the Ellis Don Limited, London, Ontario.

1954-5	$11,340,044.42
1955-6	$10,566,873.21

2. The present subvention policy under existing orders in council provides subvention assistance on Canadian coal in the amount necessary to meet the competition of imported coal. There is no such competition in the Atlantic region interpreting that expression to mean the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island and there is, consequently, no additional cost.

3. The additional cost of subvention on coal used for generating electricity in the province of Nova Scotia would depend upon the rate of assistance set out in any order in council or other regulations. There are, at present, no such orders or regulations setting up a specific rate although the hon. member will find the general policy of this government in the matter set out by the right hon. Prime Minister on page 52 of Hansard for Wednesday, October 16, 1957.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 6, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

STARRED QUESTIONS

SOVIET EARTH SATELLITE

Question No. 10—Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North):

1. Has the earth satellite been fired in accordance with any agreement arrived at during the international geophysical year?
2. Is the Soviet earth satellite infringing on the air space above Canada?
3. How far vertically does the sovereignty of Canada extend?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of that question is that there was no formal agreement in connection with the international geophysical year pertaining to the launching of an earth satellite, and in any event the U.S.S.R. has stated that it did not launch the satellite in pursuance of any arrangement in that regard.

With respect to parts 2 and 3 of this question I might answer them together. Under the present generally accepted rules of international law the space above the territory of each nation extends to the upper limits of the atmosphere. Although the Soviet union did not join in the international civil aviation organization convention of 1944 it was decided that every state has complete and universal sovereignty over air space above its territory.

Until recently air space for the purpose of state sovereignty and control had been thought to vary between the heights of 60 and 80 miles. There has been some discussion in regard to this matter recently by those versed in international law. Professor John Cooper of the school of international air law at McGill University recently reported favouring a limit of 300 miles for the air space; however, there has been no determination in this regard. Recent events in science do suggest an early review of the present principles of international law applicable to the question of sovereignty over the air space.

UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES, BRITISH COLUMBIA AND CANADA

Question No. 13—Mr. Sinclair:

1. How many unemployed were registered in (a) British Columbia; (b) Canada, for each of the months of July, August and September, 1957?
2. How many unemployed were registered in (a) British Columbia; (b) Canada, for each of the corresponding months in 1956?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is that the information available from reports of local offices of the unemployment insurance commission pertains to the Pacific region which comprises the Yukon Territory and all but the northeastern part of the province of British Columbia. The number of persons registered for employment at local offices in the Pacific region and in Canada on the dates indicated in July, August and September of 1957 were as follows:

	Pacific region	Canada
July 18, 1957	31,377	257,186
August 22, 1957	29,506	248,836
September 19, 1957 ..	29,837	255,896

The answer to the second part of the question is that the figures for comparable dates in 1956 are as follows:

	Pacific region	Canada
July 19, 1956	19,447	179,251
August 23, 1956	17,259	168,064
September 20, 1956 ..	15,619	158,804

UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES, QUEBEC PROVINCE

Question No. 15—Mr. St. Laurent (Temiscouata):

2. How many unemployed were registered in (a) the province of Quebec; (b) Temiscouata, on August 1, September 1 and October 1, 1956?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): In reply to the first part of the question asked by the member for Temiscouata, the answer is that information is not available for the dates in question. However, the number of persons registered for employment at local offices of the unemployment insurance commission in the province of Quebec on August 1, 1957 was 76,195. On August 29, 1957, the figure was 68,975 and on September 19, 1957, it was 69,227. The answer to part (b) is that information is not available on the number of persons resident in Temiscouata who were registered for employment on these dates. The answer to the second part of the question is that (a) the number of persons registered for employment at local offices of the unemployment insurance commission in the province of Quebec on August 2, 1956, was 53,822. On August 30, 1956, the figure was 46,366 and on September 20, 1956, it was 43,653. (b) Information is not available on the number of persons resident in Temiscouata who were registered for employment on these dates.

Question No. 17—Mr. Lesage:

1. Under what statute was Post Office Department directive 9/4 MS dated August 8, 1957, issued?
2. Does the said directive apply to mail contractors strictly during the time they are on duty? In other words, are the mail contractors free to participate in political activity outside the actual performance of their duties?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the question asked first of all under what statute the Post Office Department directive 9/4 MS dated August 8, 1957, was issued, to which the answer is the Post Office Act, chapter 212, section 6.

The answer to the second part is that it was the intent of such directive that mail contractors refrain from political activity during the performance of their official duties.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member permission to amend the motion as stated?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion as amended agreed to.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, before this motion is put I should perhaps say that there is no objection on the part of the government to producing any such directives which have in any way become public knowledge or come to the attention of the public; but I shall have to say for the information of the house and of the hon. gentleman that such directives to the staff are regarded as intradepartmental correspondence and are therefore privileged, and I would not be able to produce any such directives except those first mentioned.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman's explanation is quite satisfactory, sir, and I am quite willing to have the motion amended accordingly, but that is not the attitude the hon. gentleman took when he sat here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: I do not remember ever putting such a motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion subject to the limitation expressed by the minister?

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion subject to the limitation expressed by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

PEACE RIVER BRIDGE

Motion No. 22—Mr. Christian:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the federal government and the governments of the United States of America and the province of British Columbia, or any departments thereof, relative to the maintenance, repair and/or reconstruction or building of the Peace river bridge on the northwest highway system, dates of such documents to be about the time of the construction of such bridge in the first instance.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before this motion is called I would like to explain that there is no correspondence available. There was no exchange of correspondence between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia or the government of the United States of America dealing specifically with the construction, maintenance, repair and reconstruction of the Peace river bridge. This bridge forms part of the Alaska highway system. The construction was undertaken by the United States, and there has been no correspondence whatsoever since January 28, 1944, when documents were tabled in the house pursuant to an order taken at that time. There have been no further communications relevant to the question raised.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the explanation given by the Prime Minister, does the hon. member wish to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Christian: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this motion be dropped?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion dropped.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR DECLARATION OF NATIONAL EMERGENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a press report from Vancouver, appearing in the Vancouver Sun, that a conference of the British Columbia federation of labour, which 400 delegates attended, had asked that a national emergency be declared to deal with the unemployment situation?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, no such notice has been drawn to my attention.

KITIMAT—INQUIRY AS TO UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I wonder whether he has received a telegram from the Kitimat-Kemano labour council within the last few days requesting some federal government public works action to overcome the unemployment situation there. If so, what did he reply?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if I might reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Skeena, three telegrams were received in regard to the Kitimat lay-off including one from the Kitimat-Kemano trades and labour council and one from the minister of labour for the province of British Columbia. We have replied to these telegrams pointing out that we are carefully studying the matter with a view to ascertaining what effective action could be taken. We are fully aware of the serious nature of this situation, and will endeavour to deal with it as promptly as possible.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STATEMENT ON REPORTED CLOSING DOWN OF HOWE SOUND COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in my absence from the house yesterday a number of questions were asked concerning the reported closing down of operations by the Howe Sound Company at Britannia Beach. In so far as these questions were directed specifically to myself I think they can be answered in one statement, as follows. Both questions, Mr. Speaker, dealt with matters of government policy in so far as they concern support or protection for the base metals industry. The present situation of the mine derives from the present condition of the market in base metals, which in turn derives from a number of factors, many of them international in nature and outside the control of this government.

I may say that the whole situation is being actively examined in line with representations received, and when a decision has been reached it will be communicated to this house in the usual way. Meanwhile the mine is still operating, and should the officials in charge of its operations decide that it is no longer economical to continue in production on account of the low world prices presently prevailing in zinc and copper, then the full resources of the Department of Labour will be at the disposal of the workers involved.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO DIRECTIVE TO MAIL CONTRACTORS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Is it his intention to issue a new directive to mail contractors which will be in accordance with the reply he gave to starred question No. 17?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to issue a new directive to the mail carriers. It is our intention, since some people seem to be unable to understand the meaning of the directive, to issue a clarification emphasizing the point which was emphasized today in answer to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Lesage: Will the minister be good enough to table the clarification when it is issued?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, the actual document which issues from the department to the districts is a departmental document and should not be subject to tabling. I will, however, be delighted to table the document corresponding to the one which was tabled for the hon. member earlier this session.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER REPRESENTATION FROM QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister in a television broadcast on Monday in the following declaration lauded the wise counsel of the nine Conservatives elected in Quebec at the last election, as follows:

I am sure, he added, that at the next election—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member state his question.

Mr. LaCroix: I continue:

—we shall find a good number of other persons of the same calibre among the candidates of our party.

My question is, is it true that he has decided at last to appoint three more of those nine high-calibre members to the cabinet? If not, does the Prime Minister not believe that he should give the same proportional representation to Quebec in the cabinet that he has given to Saskatchewan?

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether the hon. member is a little hard of hearing, but I attempted to stop him earlier in this question. It has all been asked now, but I must say it is not a proper question to be asked on the orders of the day.

Mr. Hodgson: There are none so deaf as those who do not want to hear.

An hon. Member: Embarrassing to the Prime Minister, though.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, somebody who will remain anonymous for the moment said that the question would be embarrassing. I would be very happy to answer it were it not for your ruling, but the hon. gentleman should not be allowed to make a statement such as that in regard to a ruling by Your Honour.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) raised a question the other day about the effect of a ruling by the Speaker that a question was out of order, and I have given my best consideration to it. I see some problem in declaring a question out of order, particularly a question which makes some imputation or bears some inference if it is left on Hansard and is not answered; but I do believe that the proper consequence of the Speaker's ruling is that the question should not be answered and that no one should comment on it either, as has just been done. I hope, if the house agrees with my ruling on the matter, that hon. members will observe the practice that when a question has been declared out of order it will be dropped at that point and neither commented upon nor answered.

Mr. Claude Richardson (St. Lawrence-St. George): May I rise on a question of privilege or a point of order. As I understood it, sir, the comment I heard was not in respect of your ruling but in respect of the question raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Brooks: Explain that to him again.

Mr. Speaker: That was what I was endeavouring to suggest to the house, that if a question is declared out of order it should neither be answered nor commented upon, and I hope hon. members will observe that practice.

PUBLIC SERVICE

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF DISMISSED EMPLOYEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Will the minister take steps, as requested by the Brantford labour council, to reinstate Charles Kratzmeir with all lost pay since his dismissal from employment in the Brantford post office?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. I shall have steps taken at once to check this case.

SHIPPING

ST.LAWRENCE RIVER—REPORTED DECISION TO KEEP SHIPPING LANES OPEN IN WINTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lomer Brisson (Saguenay): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport or in his absence to his parliamentary assistant. Is it true that the Department of Transport is prepared to act to keep the St.Lawrence shipping lanes below Quebec city open through the winter, as reported in the Gazette this morning?

Mr. A. R. MacDonald (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I take the question as notice? It will be answered as soon as possible.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONCTON—REPORTED DISMANTLING AND SCRAPPING OF MACHINERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport or in his absence to his parliamentary assistant. Has the minister received representations from the Canadian National war veterans association of Moncton or other organizations protesting the dismantling and scrapping of thousands of dollars of very valuable machinery in the Canadian National shops in Moncton? If so, what action does he propose to take?

Mr. A. R. MacDonald (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice also and will provide the information.

HIGHWAYS

STEWART-CASSIAR, B.C.—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a question to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In view of the fact that he advised the house yesterday that an agreement has been signed between the federal government and the government of the province of British Columbia with respect to the Stewart-Cassiar road, would the minister be disposed to table that agreement?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I was going to rise on the orders of the day and make a correction in what I said yesterday. An agreement has been reached but I was in error yesterday in stating that the formal agreement has been signed. If the hon. member will look at my answer carefully he will see that I said there were certain details still to be worked out. I would imagine that as soon as the formal agreement is signed we would be glad to table it, with the permission of the province of British Columbia.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister implying that an agreement reached between a province and the dominion must be subject to the permission of the province before it can be tabled in this house? I am not talking about correspondence. I am talking about an agreement which has been consummated between a province and the dominion. If that is so it is a departure from the usual practice.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I may be in error in having used the word "permission". What I meant to say was that in dealing with these matters we like to make the announcement simultaneously so there will be no embarrassment one way or the other.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

SUDBURY, ONT.—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FEDERAL BUILDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. R. Mitchell (Sudbury): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I have already given him notice. First, when does he expect the federal building in Sudbury will be ready for occupation? Second, has he received representations from the city of Sudbury to purchase the old federal building, and will preferred consideration be given the city when tenders are called by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation to dispose of the building or is the highest tender to be accepted?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we expect that the new building will be ready for occupation about the end of January, 1958. Representations have been received from the city of Sudbury requesting that they be allowed to purchase the old building. The ordinary practice in such cases is that Crown Assets Disposal Corporation calls for tenders for the sale of the building, and then gives the municipality the opportunity to meet the highest tender. There may be special circumstances which make that rule inapplicable, but that is the course that is ordinarily followed.

(Translation):

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

MONTREAL, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Monette (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Postmaster General. Has the minister received from the municipalities of Montreal North, Ville St. Michel, Ville Montreal East and Pointe-aux-Trembles a request for the construction of a post office in each of those municipalities?

If so, what does the government intend to do in this regard?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I thank the hon. member for his courtesy in giving me notice of his question. We have received no representations from the municipal authorities of the said towns with regard to the construction of a post office.

However, on January 23, 1957, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) received from the authorities of Ville St. Michel a request emphasizing the need of a new post office in that town. The then postmaster general replied, by letter dated February 7, 1957, that any decision as to the need of a postal station would be postponed until that district had further developed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

U.S.-CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO JOINT AIR DEFENCE COMMAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, might I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. It is further to a question I asked and an answer I received yesterday with respect to the United States-Canada joint air defence command and further to the committing of Canadian forces by General Partridge. My question is this. If there was an immediate attack by air across the D.E.W. line by an aggressor, how could there be consultation with the government of Canada prior to Canadian fighters being put in the air?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, by telephone or other means.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of National Defence aware of the fact that on September 6 the continental air defence commander, General Partridge, in answer to a question said that he was not now obliged first to obtain the permission of the President of the United States under present circumstances, that he would not have to wire Washington, that it would be too late?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that and I question very much whether that is the arrangement existing between General Partridge and the President of the United States.

[Mr. Monette.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sending over the question put to the continental air defence commander and the answer given, and I should like to ask a supplementary question. Can my hon. friend say whether or not Her Majesty's government in the United Kingdom was advised of this proposed step? Can my hon. friend also say whether this matter was discussed in the defence committee of the cabinet?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister says "oh, oh". This is an extremely important matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It certainly is.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Was it discussed in the defence committee and was it discussed in cabinet? Was it a decision of cabinet or was it a decision merely based upon ministerial discretion?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the minister answers the question, may I say that I consider inquiry into what took place in cabinet as being irregular, though other parts of the question seem to be in order.

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker, may I say that I am surprised that an ex-member of the cabinet should put such a question to me. I am bound by the same oath of secrecy he was.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that in this particular instance Your Honour is suffering under a misunderstanding as to the nature of my question. I did not ask the minister what was discussed by the defence committee or what was discussed by the cabinet. I merely asked a question which I think is open to any member of parliament to ask in this house, and that is to ask of the government whether a decision so vital as this was discussed, first of all, by the defence committee and by the cabinet itself. I am not asking what was discussed in cabinet. I am merely asking whether this decision was made by this agency of the executive or by the executive arm of government itself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, however much my hon. friend wishes to turn or twist the words he used, the question constitutes a direct interference with constitutional rights.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Never before in my experience in the house have I heard a question asked as to whether a decision was made by the cabinet.

An hon. Member: What about your speeches?

Mr. Diefenbaker: How many are acting as Speaker here?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend knows that he has carried the type of questioning that has been going on lately far beyond fair limitations. This is one question that contravenes our rights.

Mr. Speaker: I was hearing the Prime Minister on the point of order, and I called him to order because I thought he was going beyond that point. I have already given my decision on the question, and I think it is hardly proper for the house to continue the discussion on the point of order except to clarify a possible misunderstanding. I understood the hon. member's question and my view of it, as I stated, is that an inquiry into the method by which the government arrives at its decision in cabinet is entirely out of order. Even to ask whether it was on the agenda is out of order in itself, and that is what the hon. member asked. What can be asked, of course, is what decision the government came to. As I understand the situation, the decision of the government is one and indivisible. Inquiry into how it is arrived at and particularly inquiry into the cabinet process is not permitted in the house.

Mr. Coldwell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask this question. Is it not permissible for an hon. member to ask whether it is a government decision or a decision of a minister?

Mr. Speaker: My hon. friend is asking a hypothetical question. I shall be glad to deal with that matter when it arises, but no one has asked such a question today. I could give my view, if the house wants it. I think hon. members have the right to know whether a minister has declared his policy or whether it has been declared as the policy of the government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask this question of the Prime Minister. Was this decision taken by the Minister of National Defence or was it a decision of the government of Canada as a whole?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the decision was the decision of this government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Then, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister this question. In view of the fact that the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) asked for the tabling of all documents and the only document tabled was an order in council setting out the salary of the vice air commander, will the Prime Minister indicate to the house whether or not there is a minute of cabinet or an order in council that can be tabled in this house?

Mr. Speaker: I should like to comment on the question that has just been asked by the hon. member for Essex East. If the inquiry is as to whether there is an order in council I think that is a question which may be answered, although as I understand it all orders in council are public information and are equally open to inspection by any hon. member. However, as a matter of convenience I think that question might be asked as a short-cut to getting the information but not, as I am advised, with regard to a minute of council.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think your correction about the minute is well taken. May I ask the Prime Minister if there was an order in council, and whether it will be tabled?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, all orders in council in connection with that matter have been tabled.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Then there was no order in council.

TRADE

PORK—INQUIRY AS TO ALLEGED REPACKING OF U.S. IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the Acting Minister of Agriculture or the parliamentary assistant to the minister. Certain news reports were circulating this morning to the effect that United States pork products have been brought into Canada during recent weeks, repackaged or relabelled and sold as Canadian pork products. I wanted to ask the acting minister or his parliamentary assistant if he would make inquiries to ascertain whether these reports are true, and if so what the government proposes to do to stop such a practice.

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as no notice was given of this question I will have to take it as notice and give the answer later.

U.S. DISPOSAL PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Further to the optimistic report given to the house by the minister with regard to the recent conference in Washington on economic and trading relations with the United States, would the minister clarify his statement of last Friday that he is far from satisfied with recent assurances given by the United States government with respect to its surplus disposal programs?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I observe that in my absence yesterday a similar question was asked by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr. Bryson), as recorded at page 757 of Hansard in the following terms:

> Would the minister inform the house as to the reason for making the statement in New York over the week end that Canada is far from satisfied with the assurances recently given by the United States government regarding its surplus disposal policy. What further steps does the government consider taking in the face of this dissatisfaction?

Both those questions I take it have reference to an address I delivered last Friday in New York to the annual Maple Leaf dinner of the Canadian Society of New York. The statement I made there outlined the objections which the Canadian government has taken to the agricultural surplus disposal program of the United States administration and are quite in keeping, in fact identical, with those objections which the four Canadian ministers put before their four opposite numbers of the United States cabinet at the meeting in Washington a month ago to which my hon. friend refers.

As the house may recall from the report I made here a fortnight ago with respect to that meeting, the United States ministers in the joint statement which was issued at the conclusion of the two-day conference gave us an assurance in regard to the barter feature of the methods followed in the disposal of agricultural surpluses in the United States. That assurance, or at least the particular undertaking given by the United States secretaries, was confined to the barter feature of the program, as I pointed out in my report to the house; but the Canadian government has made no attempt to disguise the fact that, with regard to all features of the surplus disposal program of the United States administration, it regards that program as being very damaging to Canada's interests in reference to the marketing of wheat; and on any occasion we propose to put forward that strong point of view of the Canadian government.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Has the minister taken any exception to the manner in which the present secretary for agriculture in the United States proposes to endeavour to sell more United States wheat in Japan, when he suggests that they would be prepared to take local currency and invest that currency in that country? I think many people believe this is a serious interference with Canada's trade in wheat with Japan. Did the minister get any assurance that that kind of practice will be stopped? I imagine that is one of the practices he had in mind when he said there were some other practices outside of barter which he felt were not in keeping with the understanding.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked a similar question last week of my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Coldwell: Not quite the same.

Mr. Fleming: It was on the same point. The secretary for agriculture in the United States cabinet well understands the position of the Canadian government in regard to that and other methods employed by the United States administration in its agricultural surplus disposal program.

BROADCASTING

FOWLER COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Since the Fowler commission report and recommendations on radio and television were presented some considerable time ago, can we expect that any changes will be made this year in the legislation governing radio and television in Canada?

Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the reference to this year I presume means this calendar year. The matter of the Fowler commission report is receiving the attention of the government. It will involve substantial legislative changes, and those changes are of such a nature that they would, I think, require some substantial and prolonged consideration in parliament. Therefore I would not think it advisable or possible to deal with them in this session of parliament during this year.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

CONSTITUTION OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON ENERGY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Has the royal commission on energy, the establishment of which was announced by him on October 15, 1957, been constituted as yet? If it has not, why not; and also if it has not, when is it expected that it will be so constituted?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was kind enough to let me know he was going to ask this question. The commission was constituted on October 15 last. Preparatory work is now being done; no determination has yet been reached pending the completion of that preparatory work, as to the date of the commencement of the sittings.

Mr. McIlraith: Then may I ask a supplementary question. In view of his answer would the Prime Minister elucidate the answer he gave on October 16, 1957, as it appears on page 32 of Hansard, where he said "If when the commission is constituted it is deemed advisable—" and so on. He used the term "if when the commission is constituted", and that was in answer to a question put on October 16 this year.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, as a matter of fact, the use of the word "constituted" there was the word upon which my hon. friend based his question.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At that time I was discussing in general the commencement of the sittings and the decisions to be arrived at. The actual constitution was under order in council.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST THAT PRECEDENCE BE GIVEN LEGISLATION ESTABLISHING GUARANTEED AGRICULTURAL PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works, the house leader, if he would arrange the business of the house so that the resolution to establish guaranteed prices for certain agricultural commodities will come before parliament before the resumption of the debate on the speech from the throne.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): It is not the intention of the government to bring on that debate before the conclusion of the debate on the speech from the throne.

THE SENATE

STATEMENT AS TO APPOINTMENT OF FRENCH-SPEAKING REPRESENTATIVE FROM ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Gour) asked whether a French-speaking representative from Ontario would soon be appointed to the Senate. My answer is yes.

Mr. Gour: Mr. Speaker, I sincerely thank the right hon. Prime Minister.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

BREWING INDUSTRY—ACTION TAKEN ON REPORT OF INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Stinson (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Has any decision yet been made as a result of the report of the restrictive trade practices commission on the brewing industry?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his courtesy in sending me notice of this question, and I am able to advise him and the house that this matter has been reviewed and has now been referred to counsel with instructions for prosecution.

HOUSING

N.H.A.—LOWERING OF DOWN PAYMENTS ON HOMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister inform the house if it is the intention of the government to lower down payments on N.H.A. homes, and if his answer is in the affirmative, when may we expect an official announcement from the government?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I can make no announcement on that question. If and when such a policy is decided upon it will be announced in the house.

Mr. Bourget: So there is no immediate intention of the government to lower down payments—

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, to answer that would be going too far. All I can say is that if and when a policy is adopted it will be announced in the house.

STATEMENT ON NUMBER OF STARTS IN ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, on November 4 the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) asked me for information concerning the number of starts under the $150 million plan for low price homes. At that time the hon. member intimated that he had been informed there had been only 12 such starts in Alberta. I now have the figures for Alberta to the end of October, and I find there have been 118 starts in Calgary and 635 in Edmonton, a total of 753, and the number of loans which have been approved under this scheme in those two offices are 246 in Calgary and 732 in Edmonton, a total of 978. That involves total loans of over $9,400,000, and in addition there are many applications which have not yet been dealt with finally.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works arising out of his answer to the hon. member for Bow River. Is the minister in a position to advise the house how much of the $150 million is now left in the fund?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, as of the end of last week there had been loans approved amounting to $80,500,000 for a total of 8,264 units, which indicates, of course, that the average amount per unit is now considerably lower than $10,000.

In addition there still seems to be a potential of about $41 million which comprises requests for loans and requests for approval in the offices of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or applications still in the hands of approved lenders. This would indicate a total of something over $121 million as being committed, which would leave a balance of about $28 million.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the minister did give the number of starts for housing in Alberta, I wonder if he could bring us up to date on the subject and give us the number of starts for all the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give the starts for the other provinces. I was so startled by the figure given by the hon. member for Bow River two days ago when he intimated that there had been only 12 starts in Alberta that I put on a special burst of speed in order to prove how far off the mark he was.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I was only using the figures that the minister himself gave previously.

[Mr. Green.]

OIL

REPORTED DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PREMIER OF ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister care to comment on the result of recent talks between Premier Manning and himself, reported to have taken place in the Toronto Daily Star of November 5, in respect to oil production?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the Toronto Daily Star of November 5. After I have perused it I will give the hon. gentleman an answer.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—STATEMENT ON EXPLOSIONS IN SASKATCHEWAN AND MANITOBA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre and also, I think, by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar in connection with the results of investigations on the part of the board of transport commissioners into Trans-Canada Pipe Lines explosions in the province of Manitoba, and also one at Mortlach in the province of Saskatchewan.

The board of transport commissioners reports that an investigation has taken place not only in these cases but also in all cases where there have been explosions on pipe lines under the board of transport commission's jurisdiction. They have not been able to determine exactly the reason for the explosions. They find that the breaks which have occurred appear to have been in the longitudinal seam welds, but the reason for the breaks has not been determined. Testing was carried out under a pressure of 110 per cent of the maximum allowable working pressure. In addition, the piping is inspected visually at the factory and on the job. What has happened must have been the result of latent and as yet undiscoverable defects. The company has also instituted an investigation and is doing everything it can to ascertain the reason for the explosions, but as yet no determination of the cause has been arrived at.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

REPORTED INCREASE IN GRANTS FOR SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he would make an early statement to the house on the increased federal grants for scientific education which he forecast yesterday at Toronto. I believe there is a great deal of interest in this matter.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was no forecast; there was a consideration of the need for an expansion of scientific education, and also of providing for a larger number of science graduates in our country and throughout the free world. This is a matter which has been brought before the free people of the world in the last few weeks as a result of the launching of Sputnik I and its successor, as well as by the appearance of the intercontinental ballistic missile.

One of the matters to be discussed when the North Atlantic Treaty Organization council meets in Paris will be the means whereby we can achieve something of unity in this regard in scientific and technological education, to the end that the free world may be able to maintain its advances in keeping with the type of developments which have taken place in the Soviet union under state control, and do so without in any way sacrificing our democratic way of life.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question, whether the government has considered making any increase in federal grants?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That question is a matter of government policy.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I did not quite get the question. Maybe it was the same as the one I was going to ask. I intended to ask the Prime Minister if I may infer from what he said that this means the government will give some consideration to making further aid for education available, and also federal scholarships in the scientific field.

Some hon. Members: No answer.

AGRICULTURE

POULTRY AND EGGS—PRICE SUPPORTS AND IMPORT CONTROLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture or, in his absence, of his parliamentary assistant. Will the minister inform the house as to any recent changes in price supports on poultry and eggs, and of any change in import controls on turkeys?

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Yorkton has just sent me what purports to be a copy of the question he has asked, but it does not seem to be in the same words.

This is a matter of policy, and any change in policy will be announced by the Minister of Agriculture.

STATEMENT AS TO FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO CHEESE FACTORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lavigne), I may say that financial assistance for the amalgamation and improvement of cheese factories has not been discontinued.

BUTTER—PORTION OF INCREASE IN PRICE TO BE RETURNED TO PRODUCER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture or, in his absence, to his able parliamentary assistant. I did not send him notice of this question because, knowing his ability, I knew he would be able to answer it without my doing so.

How much, if any, of the 5 cents per pound increase that the government has allowed dealers holding butter to charge consumers will be returned to the farmers who produced the butter?

An hon. Member: Your premise is wrong.

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the compliment he has paid me, but I think that is a question which should more properly be given a little more consideration before it is answered.

PUBLIC WORKS

STE. ANNE DE SOREL—RECONSTRUCTION OF PROTECTION WALL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is it the intention of the government to proceed with the three-year project for reconstruction of the protection wall at Ste. Anne de Sorel, which I understand was approved by the previous government? If so, would it not be advisable to begin the reconstruction of the wall immediately, so as to relieve the unemployment situation in that area?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): The hon. member was good enough to give me notice of his question, and in reply may I say that the officials of the Department of Public Works advise me that it is necessary to reach an agreement with the municipality concerned before this work can be commenced. Evidently negotiations are under way, but they have not yet been completed.

Mr. Bourget: May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister not aware that it was always the policy of the government in the past to pay 100 per cent of the cost of the construction of such walls?

Mr. Green: That may have been the case with regard to a certain type of wall, but with regard to another type of wall with which the hon. member is well acquainted, the practice of the preceding government was to put a wall in front of Liberal farmers and none in front of anybody else.

An hon. Member: Not true.

Mr. Bourget: I would not have thought the minister could get away with this. It has been the policy of the government in the past to pay 100 per cent of the cost.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is rising on a point of order I will be glad to hear him.

Mr. Stick: It is the Conservative wall.

Mr. Studer: A stone wall.

NEW BRUNSWICK-PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION INTO CAUSEWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is the minister in a position as yet to report on the progress of the investigation into the possibility of a causeway from Westmorland county, New Brunswick, to Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, about two weeks ago I told the hon. member that investigations were being made by the department, and no final conclusion has as yet been reached.

[Mr. Cardin.]

INDUSTRY

BONAVENTURE, QUEBEC—STATEMENT ON REPORTED PROMISE TO BUILD PULP MILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Public Works if he is ready to give me an answer in connection with the question I asked him yesterday?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a very good answer ready for that question. As reported at page 763 of Hansard of yesterday the hon. member asked the following question:

> In view of the fact that most of the pulp mills in the province of Quebec have cut down employment since the last federal election, is it true that the government has decided to build a pulp mill at Bonaventure in the province of Quebec, as promised by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) during the last election campaign?

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): That is right.

Mr. Green: The answer is this, that in the first place the unemployment in the pulp mills had commenced long before the last federal election.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): No.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Green: The second point is that the hon. member for Bonaventure has been most insistent and very effective in making demands upon the government that some action be taken along this line.

Mr. Lesage: Is he getting anywhere?

PRICE SPREADS

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister anything to add to his reply given in this house to a question of mine on October 15, in which he said that within a few days an announcement would be made regarding the establishment of a royal commission to inquire into price spreads affecting agricultural products? Can the Prime Minister say what progress has been made in establishing this commission?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would say to the hon. gentleman that the matter is receiving consideration at this time. The government is not yet in a position to make a final announcement as to the setting up of the commission, but I am hoping a decision in this regard will be made shortly. As I told the hon. gentleman when he asked the question originally, as soon as a decision is made it will be announced in the house and the full particulars as to the members of the commission and the field of its activity will also be announced.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

AUDIBILITY OF REMARKS OF MR. SPEAKER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. Irwin (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Will his department consider having the microphone adjacent to Mr. Speaker made live at all times in order to overcome any hardness of hearing on the part of members and also to make Mr. Speaker audible at this end of the chamber at all times?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the fault is in the microphone or in the Speaker, but we will do our best to get this problem settled.

Mr. Speaker: We may have either to lower the microphone or elevate the Speaker.

GRAIN

WHEAT—PRICE OF SALES TO MILLERS IN PRAIRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or, in his absence, to his parliamentary assistant. Yesterday the minister gave the selling price of wheat in store at Fort William and Vancouver. Would the minister or his parliamentary assistant give the prices at which wheat is sold to millers for milling at some central point on the prairies such as Saskatoon?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will take note of this question and present it to the minister for answering.

AIR TRANSPORT

PORT ARTHUR, ONT.—AIR CARRIER LICENCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I would like to direct a question to his parliamentary assistant. Would the minister check the accuracy of part 2 of question No. 49 answered on page 750 of Hansard, because I have reason to doubt the accuracy of the answer.

Mr. A. R. MacDonald (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): I should like to take the hon. member's question as notice and get the information as soon as possible.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

STATEMENT ON TRADE AND ECONOMIC MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Yesterday the hon. member for Essex East, noting that five weeks had elapsed since the Mont Tremblant conference, asked two questions. The first was as follows:

> Has any commonwealth government yet acted on the recommendation on any one of the finance ministers that a commonwealth trade and economic conference should be held?

The answer is yes.

The second question reads:

> At the same time, could the minister indicate whether or not any decision has yet been reached as to when and where this conference will take place?

I had indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, that the decision taken at Mont Tremblant concerned a conference to be held in 1958. No decision as to the precise time and place is expected to be taken until the first of the meetings of the officials in preparation for the conference.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In January?

Mr. Fleming: Again, no precise date has been set for the meeting of the officials but it is expected that it will be held early in the new year.

LIVESTOCK

STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL VETERINARY SERVICES IN SOUTHERN B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): In answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Christian) yesterday as to inspection of cattle being exported from southern British Columbia, I am informed that this trade has increased to unusually high levels in recent weeks. When it became evident that available veterinarians in the area could not make the required inspections promptly, steps were taken to provide additional staff. Two additional federal veterinarians have been moved into the area and assistance is being given by provincial government veterinarians. It is now expected that the backlog of work should be cleaned up in a short time.

In this connection I quote from a telegram just received by the veterinary director general from Mr. J. E. Fry, secretary of the British Columbia beef cattle growers' association:

Re veterinary service on export cattle shipments B.C. Glad inform you have had excellent co-operation your Vancouver office also have been able arrange good and freely-given assistance from B.C. department agriculture believe situation now under control in Penticton, Kamloops, Williams Lake from which districts principal exports in this province.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF LEGISLATION TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): On Tuesday, November 5, at page 761 of Hansard, the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary asked a question having to do with the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. I just wish to say to him that this is a matter of government policy, and any changes will be announced in due course.

WAR VETERANS' ALLOWANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ALLOWANCES, INCOME, COVERAGE, ETC.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, November 5, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Brooks—Mr. Casselman in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the War Veterans' Allowance Act, 1952, to increase the monthly rates of certain allowances and permissible income; to extend the provisions of the act to additional classes of veterans, widows and orphans; and to increase the salaries of the members of the war veterans allowance board.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, I have always had a very high regard for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I have been associated with him on veterans committees for the past 22 years, and during that time I have come to know him as a persistent fighter in the interests of the veterans. We in the Social Credit group and the C.C.F. group along with other members of his party have always joined with him in trying to improve the conditions of the veterans. But of course it will continue to be our duty in this group and in the C.C.F. to continue that fight if for no other reason than that of strengthening his hand. He himself, of course, will no longer need to fight for these things in the house, but he will have to fight with the cabinet and the treasury board in order to obtain the funds to reach the objective that he himself has striven for in the past.

I think the minister is to be commended for this measure. It is in line with the proposals that have been made by him in the past, and I trust that this measure will be referred to a special committee on veterans affairs or, better still, that he will carry out one of the things he has advocated in the past, namely the setting up of a standing committee on veterans affairs and then refer this measure to that standing committee.

I have always felt that the War Veterans' Allowance Act was one of the most important acts coming under the Department of Veterans Affairs. I say that because the War Veterans' Allowance Act may be regarded as the veteran's last resort in case of need. For example a disabled veteran, unable to get a pension owing to the fact perhaps that his disability has been classed as being of pre-enlistment origin or not attributed to the war, has to depend upon the War Veterans' Allowance Act in order to get any form of compensation.

Then we have the aged veteran farmer who may be a small farmer with a family, who finds that his farm can no longer support himself, his wife and grown-up children. He turns the farm over to the son and seeks the war veterans allowances. The same thing applies to the aged veteran worker who can no longer continue at his trade and who has not been able to build up a reserve for old age, and also applies for the war veterans allowance.

In the past we have been very fortunate in the type of men who have administered the War Veterans' Allowance Act. However, there are a number of limitations in the act which make it impossible for many of our aged veterans in need to obtain an allowance. First of all there is the ceiling on permissible income being too low. For the single veteran it is $960 and for the married veteran, $1,620. Very often we find that wives of the recipients of the war veterans allowance try to improve their condition by getting jobs and after a while they receive a notice from the war veterans allowance board to the effect that as a result of the wife's wages the joint income has exceeded the permissible income, with the result that the war veterans allowance is cut off and then later reinstated at a lower figure to make it possible for the war veterans allowance board to recover the overpayment.

On a number of occasions the Legion has asked that the allowance be raised to $1,200 for a single veteran and $2,000 for a married veteran. I have always regarded the Minister of Veterans Affairs as one of those members who have fought to achieve that objective. I was therefore somewhat surprised yesterday when he interjected while the hon. member for Kootenay West was speaking. I quote from Hansard at page 802:

> It was a great disappointment to the veterans all across Canada that the government did not see fit at that time to raise the ceiling. I did mention that the Canadian Legion had recommended a certain ceiling but I did not say that was the ceiling I was recommending. I said "raise the ceiling".

It may be true that in the instance the minister was referring to he was not advocating that the ceiling be $1,200 for single veterans and $2,000 for married veterans.

But the minister must recall that on a number of occasions in the house or in the veterans affairs committee he has advocated not only that the ceilings on permissive income be raised to $1,200 for single veterans and $2,000 for married veterans but that he actually voted in favour of those ceilings. For fear the Minister of Veterans Affairs has forgotten just what he has done in the past let me refer him to the report of the committee on veterans affairs dated Thursday, March 24, 1955, page 139. A motion was moved by Mr. White of Hastings-Frontenac, seconded by Mr. Green, as follows:

> That the committee recommend that the government give consideration to introducing legislation during the present session of parliament which will have the effect of providing for amendments to this bill that will substitute $1,200 for $840 in section 1, column 3 of schedule A, and $120 for $108 in sections 2 and 3 of column 2 in schedule A, and $2,000 for $1,440 in sections 2 and 3, column 3 of schedule A.

It is interesting to note that when the vote was taken those who suported that amendment were Messrs. Brooks, Dinsdale, Gillis, Hahn, Harkness, Herridge, Pearkes, Quelch and White. I notice that the name "Green" is not there. I presume the Minister of Public Works was not present in the committee that day because I am sure if he had been not only would he have voted for the amendment but he would have filled two or three extra pages of the report of the proceedings speaking in support of it.

Therefore, while the minister may be right that at the time referred to by the hon. member for Kootenay West he was not supporting the idea of permissive income ceilings being raised to $1,200 and $2,000, nevertheless he is on record as having fought and fought persistently to achieve that objective in the past and, as I say, has not merely supported it vocally but has voted in favour of it.

It is interesting to note that in the United States the ceiling under the comparable legislation is even higher than that advocated by the Legion. In the United States the legislation comparable with the war veterans allowance is known as the disability pension, and I quote from a world war I fact sheet put out by the veterans administration of the United States. They make this comment:

> Disability compensation and disability pension should not be confused. Compensation is payable to eligible veterans, whose disabilities are due to service. Pension is payable to veterans whose total and permanent disabilities are not due to service.

At the age of 65 these pensions can be paid even though the veteran is not disabled. With regard to the ceilings on their income, I quote again:

> The pension is payable only if the veteran's income does not exceed $1,400 a year without dependents, or $2,700 if he is married or has a minor child.

In addition to these amounts the veteran is allowed his social security which in some cases would amount to several thousands of dollars. In so far as permissive income is concerned, the United States legislation is far more generous than ours. It is true that in some respects the legislation is not as good —for instance, the amount of the allowance. I quote again from the report.

> The monthly rate is $66.15 which is increased to $78.75 after ten years or when the veteran reaches age 65.

You will note that a single veteran is very much better off than a single veteran in this country but they do not differentiate between single and married veterans. On the other hand, if the veteran is totally disabled the amount of the pension can be increased to $135.45 a month. So I think it is only fair to say that the United States legislation comparable with the war veterans allowance is very much more generous.

Our legislation is not too bad for the veteran who is able to work because he can take advantage of section 4 or he may obtain casual earnings of $50 a month or $600 a year. Unfortunately, however, the disabled veteran who is not able to work is not in that position. The present Minister of Veterans Affairs has argued the case of the disabled veteran eloquently in the house and committee on a number of occasions. Let me refer to what the minister said, as found on page 1734 of Hansard of March 4, 1955. At that time the minister stated:

> The employable veteran can take advantage of casual earnings, and I commend the minister and the department upon their definition of casual earnings and extending casual earnings so that a man will be able to earn an average of $50 a month. Also the single employable veteran can take advantage of section 4 of the act. The same applies to the married veteran who is employable; he can take advantage of section 4 and also of the casual earnings.
> The veteran who loses out is the man with a small pension. His pension and his war veterans allowance now have a ceiling beyond which he cannot go, and he may not be employable.

I would say that at the present time we discriminate quite severely against the recipient of war veterans allowance who is disabled and unable to work compared with the veteran who is able to work. Surely the main purpose of the act should be to take care adequately of the man who has been disabled as the result of his war service and is not able to supplement his allowance by earnings.

I want to refer to a table to show the effect that this legislation has upon these two classes. For instance, take a single veteran who is able to work. He can have casual earnings of $50 a month, making a total of $600 a year. He can have war veterans allowance of $60 a month, making a total of $720 a year. He is allowed other income of $20 a month, making a total of $240, which means that the single veteran who is able to do odd jobs can earn and receive as much as $1,560.

Compare the case of the single veteran who is able to work with that of a single veteran who is disabled and unable to work and receives a small disability pension equivalent to the amount of the casual earnings. The disability pension of $50 a month makes a total of $600. In that case the maximum amount of war veterans allowance that man is allowed to have is $30 a month instead of $60, making a total of $360 a year or an overall total of $960.

On the one hand you have a situation where the recipient of war veterans allowance who is able to do odd jobs can receive as much as $1,560 while on the other hand the recipient of war veterans allowance who suffered disabilities as the result of his war service is only able to receive a total of $960 because we do not classify his disability pension in the same way as we classify casual earnings. In other words, we classify the disability pension as income and we do not classify the casual earnings of $600 as income.

The minister has spoken strongly on that point many times and I know he feels quite sincerely about it. I gather from the way he introduced the resolution that it is not intended to deal with that matter at this time. I am not going to criticize him on that point because I realize that he is bringing in a number of changes that are to the advantage of the veteran and it takes time to accomplish all these things, but I do hope he will give very sincere consideration to this matter so that at least at the next session of parliament the necessary changes can be made to remove what appears to be discrimination against the veteran receiving a disability pension.

The minister has referred to a number of limitations—I will call them limitations—that he intends either to remove or modify by this measure. Apparently he is going to allow the veteran to leave the country for a certain length of time without being penalized by losing his war veterans allowance. We trust that he will be able to leave for at least as long a period as a recipient of old age security can leave the country, namely six months.

Then I understand that veterans who saw service in England only, under certain conditions will be allowed to receive the war veterans allowance. I have always argued that where a veteran volunteered for service in any theatre of war he was entitled to the war veterans allowance even though he did not get beyond England because that was not his fault. He had volunteered for service anywhere. If the army found that they could use him to better advantage in England than elsewhere, the veteran should not be penalized as a consequence. I am hoping that the legislation will provide that all these veterans who volunteered for service overseas and were left in England will be eligible for the war veterans allowance.

Then the minister referred to the widows of allied ex-servicemen whose husbands died before completing 20 years residence in Canada. Those widows at the present time are not eligible. I hope the length of residence will be reduced in line with the Old Age Security Act from 20 years to 10. I think such a reduction would take care of most of the cases we have raised in the past. But even so, I feel that just as soon as the widow has completed residence in this country for the time necessary to comply with the residential requirements she should be eligible for the widows pension.

Then I am glad that the minister stated that the allowable equity in the home will be raised. He did not say by how much. The Legion have asked that it be raised from $6,000 to $9,000 which, when you consider the great increase in the cost of living and in the value of property today, does not appear to be out of line.

I again congratulate the minister on bringing down this measure. However, on the face of it, it does not appear to me to go anywhere nearly as far as is necessary to reach the objective which he himself has striven to attain time and again. I am hoping he will continue in the cabinet to fight for these things.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, like those who have already spoken, I welcome the amendments implied in this resolution and which will have the effect of increasing the rates of war veterans allowance and permissible income and also of extending the provisions of the act to additional classes of veterans, veterans' widows and orphans. I am particularly happy to learn that the scope of the War Veterans' Allowance Act will be extended to include the veterans of world war I who served in the United Kingdom. I am sure this provision will be greatly appreciated by all the veterans in my province who have found the present regulations somewhat distasteful because its result has tended to give the appearance of a classification downwards in the status of their war service.

Prior to confederation all Newfoundland veterans who left the shores of Newfoundland were considered to have overseas service. They were particularly disappointed to learn that they could not be eligible for benefits under this act unless they had served in France. This arbitrary definition of a theatre of war seems to me to be somewhat illogical because since the Atlantic ocean itself was a theatre of war it was impossible for soldiers to be transported across that ocean in ships without serving in a theatre of war. This fact was vividly impressed upon me personally when the convoy in which I was being transported was chased by submarines.

Furthermore, navy veterans who served in the Atlantic retained their eligibility. It has always seemed to me to be a bit absurd to maintain that a naval man while crossing the Atlantic served in a theatre of war but that a soldier who crossed the Atlantic did not. This regulation which limited the theatre of war to continental Europe is also extremely unfair and unjust for the simple reason that no soldier has any control over his movements. He has no choice as to his sphere of service; he must obey orders. He must go where he is told to go and must stay where he is put. As the hon. member for Acadia has just pointed out, many veterans were kept in Britain by the order of their superior officers because, in their judgment, that was where their particular services were most needed. It seems to be extremely unfair to penalize a veteran for obeying orders which are designed to enable him to serve his country with maximum efficiency and effectiveness.

This arbitrary definition which says that the east side of the English channel, is a theatre of war but the west side is not has resulted in some paradoxical rulings. For example, a veteran who crossed the English channel to play on a football team would acquire eligibility merely by crossing the channel and landing on the coast of France while his comrades in Britain who were not so fortunate would not do so. Also it was possible for a veteran to cross the channel, land on the coast of France, go out and get drunk, break his leg, get shipped back to England the next day but he would have acquired eligibility for war veterans allowances. It should be remembered that in the last phase of the war the front line was some distance from the coast of France and that the only difference between the veteran who crossed the channel and the one who stayed in England was that the former was about 20 miles nearer to the front line.

I note that the minister's statement yesterday indicated that a minimum period of service in the United Kingdom will still be required before world war I veterans can attain eligibility. For the reasons that I have just outlined, I urge him to remove this restriction completely and to extend eligibility to all veterans who left the shores of Canada. The ranks of world war I veterans are thinning fast. Every year more and more answer the final roll call. The number is rapidly diminishing. Consequently the recurring charge on the federal treasury for this group of veterans is one that will get smaller year by year.

I also urge the minister to extend eligibility to members of the merchant navy and to members of the rescue tug service. The role of the merchant navy I think was notably dramatized by the glorious exploits of the Jervis Bay. In my own particular riding the casualties in the merchant navy outnumbered those in other services and in some cases were greater than those in all other services combined. In one little community in my riding, with less than 1,000 population, 14 men made the supreme sacrifice in the merchant marine. Many of those men in the merchant navy were torpedoed more than once and spent hours and hours floating around in the water and drifting around the ocean in very small boats.

I know that the argument has been used in the past that the merchant navy received extra pay which was somewhat greater than the scale of pay granted to the armed services. In this respect I would like to point out that the members of the armed forces received war service gratuities and rehabilitation credits which the merchant navy did not get. These benefits in a very great measure compensate for the extra pay of the merchant navy; it puts them on a more equal footing and in my opinion strengthens the case of the merchant navy for their entitlement to war veterans allowances.

For the reasons which I have just mentioned and in recognition of the vital service performed by the merchant navy I urge the minister to broaden the scope of this legislation so that its benefits may be extended to those persons who served in the merchant marine.

There are one or two other points about the veterans allowance which I would like to bring to the attention of the minister. The present War Veterans' Allowance Act regulations compel automatic suspension of war veterans allowance whenever a veteran is released from a T.B. sanatorium or from a mental institution. This works a very definite hardship because it means that in many cases the veteran is forced to return home with no adequate provision for food or fuel. I urge the minister to change this regulation so that the war veterans allowance can be continued for at least 30 days after discharge from these institutions.

This would provide sufficient time to allow the district authority to review the case and decide whether or not the allowance should be continued indefinitely.

I have a considerable number of veterans in my riding who need the benefits under the War Veteran's Allowance Act but they are not eligible because they are under 60. They do not receive a disability pension and their present ailments are ruled not attributable to war service. I think veterans all over Canada feel that awards of this nature should be based mainly on the two factors of need and service.

I do not think any veteran feels it is right that any veteran should have to depend on charity. In a good many cases veterans have come before the allowance board and their applications have not been successful because the veteran has been ruled to be not permanently unemployable. Well, in a province like mine and particularly in a riding like my own that term "permanently unemployable" is a relative one because the veteran in most cases is a fisherman. If his physical condition prevents him from fishing or working in the woods and mines then there is nothing else he can do. It is true that should he live in a city or move to a city, he might be able to get a job as a night watchman or run an elevator but there seems to be very little opportunity for assistance of this nature. Therefore I would like to see some relaxation in that particular regulation so that the district authority would have discretion to consider each case on its merits and make an award without being restricted by this requirement of having to be permanently unemployable.

In conclusion I would like to join with all those who have suggested that this legislation be referred to a committee on veterans affairs. As the hon. member for Rosthern pointed out last night, that is the grand old tradition that has been established throughout the years in this parliament. We have always endeavoured to deal with veterans legislation on a non-party basis and I am sure the veterans throughout Canada would wish to have this tradition continued.

Mr. Nicholson: I was disappointed that the minister was not able to give us more detail last night. He mentioned that it would not be appropriate at this stage to give us full details but that indicates he has some bad news for us when he presents the bill. His colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare did give us a great deal of detail in connection with the resolutions of which we have disposed.

Like all the others who have spoken I am very glad this resolution is before the house. I have the honour to represent in parliament a great many veterans of world war I and world war II. Some of the names of communities in my riding will indicate this: for example, Blighty, Somme, Veterans, Souchey which were communities that existed because world war I veterans went to northern Saskatchewan where it was possible to get some free land and to receive some assistance and encouragement from the veterans department of that day.

Some hon. members who were here in the forties will recall a delegation of those old veterans who came to Ottawa to present some of their problems. They were able to point out that if they were to travel across Canada to tell the true story of their hardships they would not be a very effective recruiting committee. I think the minister is going to need the fullest co-operation of every member of this house to get from the cabinet the sort of support which he must have if we are to discharge our responsibility to the veterans of the two world wars. I mentioned that a great many of these veterans went to the frontier.

I should like hon. members to contrast the position of those veterans who are looking toward this legislation with some hope, with the treatment which this government provides for others. I find the Minister of National Defence considers he should have one dentist for every 750 men in the armed services; one dentist per 1,000 is usually considered to be a fairly reasonable proportion in the country. In fact, one dentist per 2,000 of the population can provide quite adequate service. But veterans in my riding are now living where there is not a single dentist in an area in which 45,000 people reside. A great many of these veterans on the frontier find it difficult to get away to the city, make an appointment, receive dental treatment and pay the bill.

When one considers that the Minister of National Defence finds no trouble in getting $200 million to develop a new type of aircraft it is hard to understand why we are so niggardly with regard to the Minister of Veterans Affairs when he tries to meet his obligations. If a young man decides to join the air force in 1957 the Minister of National Defence is quite prepared to find $60,000 for the training necessary to enable him to fly a jet plane, and a nation which can spend $60,000 on training a man for military service can do something better than it has in the direction I have suggested.

The minister pays some pensions which are quite attractive. I notice the highest pension he pays amounts to $1,021 per month. Of course, one would have to be a general to qualify for that, and, unfortunately, everyone who joins the army cannot become a general. The pension paid to generals is of course not quite as generous as the highest the Minister of Justice provides in his department, $1,041 per month, but it would seem to me that the Minister of Veterans Affairs should be able to convince other members of the cabinet that a rich country such as ours can provide the wherewithal to do something more generous than it is doing now. I think one of the reasons why the previous government was defeated was its failure to recognize its responsibility for those who joined the armed services in the two world wars. Those who came back found that people did not honour the commitments which were given to them on enlistment.

Immediately after the election, the former minister of finance felt that before leaving office he should do something for the civil servants of Canada in order to enable them to meet the problem of inflation. That is a very real problem, but unfortunately many of the veterans are unable to cope with it in any way. I noted three of the civil service classifications mentioned in the newspapers at that time. Similar increases were provided all along the line in the civil service. In class 6, salaries were increased from $5,460 to $6,300, that is, an increase of $75 a month. In class 7 there was an increase from $5,700 to $6,870, an increase of $90 a month. In class 8 there was an increase from $7,000 to $8,300, or over $100 a month. The Minister of Finance authorized these increases because of a very real and disturbing Canadian problem, the problem of inflation, and I think the Minister of Veterans Affairs should be taking this fact into consideration and, if this bill is not yet in its final form, or if it is not disposed of today, I hope he will be able to convince his colleagues that something better should be done, something, perhaps, which he had in mind but which he did not care to put down in the resolution or state last night. I think no one in this house is better informed than he is with regard to the representations made by Legion organizations across Canada. Ever since I came to parliament in 1940 the minister has been one of the most dependable members of parliament in coming to the defence of veterans.

I noticed in the February copy of The Legionary that there is a good article headed: "Write to your M.P. now". I presume the suggestion was that people should write before the election in order that candidates seeking office would be made aware of the fact that a great many who offered their lives in the service of their country in world war I and world war II did not enjoy the security promised to them. This article, written by Robert Macnicol, British Columbia member of the executive council, deserves careful reading. The author refers to an article which was carried in a well known Liberal publication, the Toronto Star Weekly, which says:

> The answer is that not all Canadians share our national abundance. A sad contradiction in our prosperity is the fact that good times mean, not a higher, but a lower standard of living for many. Surely, in a land of plenty, in a country teeming with prosperity, our senior citizens, our recipients of mothers' allowances and others dependent on government pensions, should get more consideration. In the new year, let us resolve to find new ways of sharing our country's bounty by attending to these and similar problems. In this way we can transform "prosperity" from a national slogan to a real and meaningful way of life for all Canadians.

Then Mr. Macnicol has a very interesting section on war veterans allowances. He mentions that war veterans allowances present a complex problem, and goes on to say:

> This is not a pension by right, but an allowance paid on a "means test" basis. Needless to say, and with some reason, many decent, thrifty veterans abhor this means test, although in all fairness it ought to be stated that the vast majority of departmental investigators carry out their duties with sympathy and discretion.

I am sure there are a great many people alive in Canada who have seen service in the first world war, and it is my belief that a rich country such as ours could afford to do something better for them than it is doing at present. I have been in touch with the minister in connection with two of my veterans, Bob Morden and Bob McKeith and the minister has been giving sympathetic consideration to my correspondence. These are men whose injuries date back, in one case to 1916 and in the other to 1917. In one case it was possible to find the doctor who examined the veteran 40 years ago and that doctor is of the opinion that the condition which is now affecting this veteran could have resulted from his war service.

Unfortunately there is nothing in the records to indicate that the condition is the result of war service.

In the other case the injury was not considered serious at the time but I am convinced that if either or both these veterans decided 40 years ago they were going to be a drag on society and never do another day's work they could have qualified for pensions. Both of them have been outstanding citizens in their respective communities. In good times and ill times they have been as successful as any people in the community and after 40 years they would not be considering appealing for consideration if it were not for the fact that extremely difficult conditions have arisen making what appeared to be a secure old age a life of uncertainty. After the lapse of 40 years between their service it is not easy for these proud Canadians to get down on their knees and beg for a little larger crust of bread.

I urge the minister to have another look at the speech he made in this house on July 6, 1956. I am sorry that time does not permit me to quote from it at length. At that time the hon. member for Royal, now the Minister of Veterans Affairs, made an excellent speech and outlined an exceptionally good case for the veterans.

The present Minister of Public Works made a moving speech reported at page 5866 of Hansard of July 11, 1956 in which he said:

> Actually there is a great need today for an attack on the problems of the veteran and his dependents with renewed vigour. Yet that has not been done.

I am sure that after listening to his colleague last night the Minister of Public Works, if he were speaking freely, would again repeat that there is a great need today for an attack on the problems of the veteran and his dependents.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs did not tell us what is going to be done about permissive income but on July 11, 1956, as reported at page 5867 of Hansard, the Minister of Public Works said:

> If that ceiling were raised from $840 per year to $1,200 per year for the single veteran, and from $1,440 per year to $2,000 per year for the married veteran, as requested year in and year out by the great veterans organizations of this country, then that situation to which I have referred would be met.

Perhaps the Minister of Veterans Affairs is going to tell us that these are the ceilings that will be established when the bill is brought down but I fear the fact he did not mention it last night indicates that he has bad news for the veterans. I suggest that he read the speech delivered on July 11, 1956 by his colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce as reported at page 5872 of Hansard and he should also make sure he reads the speech delivered by the Prime Minister as found at page 5897 of Hansard of July 12. At that time the Prime Minister said:

> I should now like to say a word or two with reference to a matter that has been discussed on previous occasions, namely, war veterans allowances. As the situation is at the present time, the ceiling on income for single veterans is $840 and for married veterans $1,440. I find it hard to understand why the amount should not be increased to the level of that amount which, under the Income Tax Act, becomes exempt from income taxation. This question has been asked the minister before: where is the sense of fairness in this situation? Everyone is entitled to the old age pension, whether it is the Prime Minister who receives it or somebody else. Every citizen in our country is entitled to it at 70 years of age. Why should those in receipt of war veterans allowance find the amount of their old age pensions in effect reduced on the achievement of the age of 70 years? That is something that one hears universally complained about. It is something that is unjust for, by reason of the present ceilings, it places those who served and their dependents in a second class position with respect to others who did not serve. It brings about a state of affairs that is unfair and unjust and it constitutes a discrimination that cannot be justified. I ask the minister once more—as he has been asked on previous occasions—this question: Why should such a state of affairs be permitted to continue?

Now that the minister has had these words of the Prime Minister brought to his attention I am sure he will make an effort to ensure that nothing less than what was suggested by his colleagues in July of 1956 will be provided in this legislation.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs on his appointment to the post he now holds. I might say that his amiable and co-operative conduct in the past will probably make it much easier for him to obtain the support of his colleagues in this house in his effort to do a good job for the veterans of Canada. I would also like to say to him that he has been most fortunate and in these words I would like to congratulate him on the staff which he has inherited. I am sure it is the opinion of all Canadians that in his staff he has inherited a great wealth of experience and a high degree of industry and integrity.

It is perhaps fitting that the minister should bring this resolution before the house so close to Remembrance Day which falls on November 11. It cannot go unnoticed today that many of our colleagues in this house are wearing poppies in remembrance of those who paid the supreme sacrifice and in remembrance of the many military engagements in which the veterans of Canada took part in the past.

I am sure the minister in bringing this legislation before us at this time had in mind the season of the year and the fact that our thoughts turn to those who served knowing that this might also be conducive to his encouraging his colleagues to loosen the purse strings in order to benefit our veterans.

While I welcome and support this legislation as a veteran, a Canadian citizen and a member of this house I would urge upon the minister, as previous speakers have done, that if he cannot go so far at this time as to establish a standing committee on veterans affairs he should at least refer the legislation to a special committee on veterans affairs. I know I am supported in this sugestion by the minister himself in his previous speeches inside and outside this house. We cannot forget that a committee on veterans affairs is the proper forum to which the various veterans organizations can go to present to the members of that committee their suggestions as to improvements in veterans legislation on behalf of those whom they represent.

If this legislation were referred to a committee we might be then able to determine if the minister has made adequate allowance in the legislation for the veteran who has a small pension but who might be incapacitated to such a degree that he is rendered unemployable. We could also learn if he has made provision for the veteran over 70 years of age who may find himself receiving war veterans allowance but who is associated with men in his own neighbourhood who are over 70 and who, although they may have an income of thousands of dollars per year, are still receiving the $55 per month old age pension.

I know that the minister is in favour of the establishment of a special committee on veterans affairs because when the extension of the war veterans allowance was being discussed in this house in 1955 the minister expressed himself as being most anxious to have a special committee on veterans affairs established. As a matter of fact the minister praised the veterans as reported at page 1735 of Hansard, 1955, volume II. He said:

> I have confidence that when Bill No. 164 comes from the committee it will not be in the same state.

I would suggest to him that the same confidence should exist today, and possibly the bill which he has forecast by this resolution might not come back from the committee in the same state. I notice that on the resolution the minister stated that this resolution forecasts legislation which is intended to and which will help a most deserving group of citizens. I might say that possibly if we have a special committee on veterans affairs now the minister might also find from representations made before that committee—if there is a public hearing—that he might be inclined to increase the pensions to the disabled, who are also a most deserving group of citizens. I just leave this thought with the minister and I know he will take it under very serious advisement.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I have just one question to bring before the minister, but before I do so may I say I am just happy to look at him in his new position. He looks capable and he looks willing and I expect he will prove both by results. He is now in the position where he can get things done according to what he thinks is right, and if he does what he suggested ought to be done when he was on this side of the house he will be the best minister of veterans affairs who has ever sat on that side, but I doubt it. Any man who has been overseas knows what the veterans went through, knows how they risked their lives and wondered sometimes whether they would ever be spared to come out of the trenches.

For the past four years, usually twice a year, Mr. Chairman, I have advocated one thing for the veterans because I think if you want to get something done you should not have too many things on your list. You should have one thing and try to do it well. I have advocated that a veteran who spent two, three or four years in active warfare has a right to have his old age pension at 60 without a means test. On many occasions I have given examples. One especially I will give again.

A man had four Christmas dinners in the trenches in the first war. The minister will know that when he was eating his dinner in the trenches there were lots of flies and those flies were just as hungry as he was. Just imagine a person having wet feet and wet clothing eating his Christmas dinner. Any doctor will tell you that that takes years off a person's life.

Another man was asked to go out into the trenches and it was known that this trench had a considerable amount of water in it. There was no dry place in it. He was supposed to go for two days; he was there for 31 days. When he came back he had to go into hospital. You cannot tell me that that does not take years off a person's life.

Look at the number of aged veterans who have gone to their great reward. How many of them attained the age of 70? I know one man in Fort William who is a little over 60 and he could not sprint with me 100 yards, much less carry out some other tests, because of what he left behind in the trenches in France. I would appeal with all the might that I have to the minister to consider this question and grant this man a pension at 60 without a means test. He might make it 65 but I like 60 far better.

I said that these veterans are growing fewer all the time. As I said, how many of them ever attain the age of 70? They have left in France something that they could not bring back with them and we are proud of them. I again appeal to the minister, as I have appealed to the former ministers, to grant this request and I shall thank him in advance.

Mr. Macdonald (Kings): Mr. Chairman, in rising for the first time in this house to speak on this resolution I am conscious of two things in particular. Firstly, that I enter on my duties here with a deep sense of humility, with the highest respect for this house and an earnest desire to do the best possible job as the representative of my constituency of Kings of the province of Prince Edward Island, and of this great country of Canada. I think, too, of my late father who at one time sat just two seats in front of this one as a privy councillor and of the high example of public service he set for me here and in the other house.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, I am most pleased that my first effort on the floor should be in the field of veterans affairs. In my two years of hospitalization after Normandy there was plenty of time to think, to mingle with the "old sweats" of the first war, to discuss the problems of veterans, their widows and their dependents. Long before being discharged I had decided that my prime interest would be to work in the cause of the ex-servicemen, the ex-servicewomen and their dependents. Since returning to civilan life I have pursued that purpose zealously at the sacrifice of very considerable time and expense. For this I have received tremendous personal satisfaction in being able to do many things for veterans, not as much as I would have hoped sometimes, and I have been amply rewarded with their confidence by being unanimously selected for the key position in their organization in my province, to the highest one of being representative on their dominion council, which position I have held for a number of years.

May I now congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs on his being selected for that important office. We all know the hon. member's exceptional interest and experience in the problems of the ex-servicemen, his splendid record of service in two wars and the high regard in which he is held in this house. In his department he is fortunate in being most capably assisted by the young member for Brandon-Souris.

It was a matter of great interest to veterans generally, Mr. Chairman, when our present Prime Minister became the first from the ranks of the veterans. It may be noted in passing that two of our leaders, the late Hon. Dr. Manion and the Hon. George Drew were in that category and had done very good work on behalf of the ex-servicemen.

When the Prime Minister first announced his cabinet the fact that no fewer than 12 of the 16 appointed were veterans was noted. There is no doubt that the affairs of the veterans will receive very earnest consideration from this government. I might add that I think this government has an unusually large quota of war veterans among its members and I feel that we shall all, regardless of party, have a very great interest in the problems of the ex-servicemen. As long as there are veterans there will always be problems to solve and I know that we shall all always give special regard to this important section of the Canadian people.

In this regard I should like to pay tribute here to the wonderful work done by the organization set up by the veterans themselves, the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League. This great society, dedicated to the welfare of veterans, has done an outstanding job in rendering assistance in framing veterans legislation and in looking after their problems generally. The work done in this regard by the officers of the Legion and their members all across Canada—and throughout the United States has been tremendous. The gratuitous effort by so many is worthy of the highest commendation of the Canadian people and I believe it is receiving the recognition it deserves.

With regard to the proposed changes in the war veterans allowance regulations, earlier this year a change was made to increase the married rate bringing it up to double that provided for a single recipient. While I feel, speaking from practical experience, that two cannot live as cheaply as one, I have had a number of complaints from single veterans that their amount should have been raised as their costs are understandably higher in proportion than those of the married veteran. I do hope that consideration will be given to the request of this class of recipients under the War Veterans' Allowance Act.

As far as permissible earnings ceilings are concerned, I believe they too should be raised. This would allow some recipients to earn a limited amount of extra money on their own and also allow more to qualify under the act. If these ceilings could be raised even somewhat from what they are it would be helpful to a goodly number of our veterans.

Another class of veterans deserving consideration are those who had service in England only in Word War I. We all know that for the purpose of war veterans allowance veterans of World War II who served in England are considered as having served in a theatre of war. To go into the history of this legislation briefly, it was established for the purpose of looking after those who were "pre-aged" due to the hardships and dangers of the trenches in Word War I. This legislation in general was broadened to include World War II veterans after that war who, in accordance with a means test, could be declared "permanently unemployable" due to health reasons, even if they had served only in England unless, of course, they were in receipt of a disability pension.

This seemed to place the World War I veteran in an unfair position and I may say in that regard that in my experience the veterans of World War II have been more sympathetic than those of world war I in discussions of the matter among veterans groups. The reason for this was that the first war veterans felt that a large number of men came to England near the end of the first conflict, some of them not of their own accord, and that they should not expect assistance as they were in the army a relatively short time and did not undergo the hardships of trench warfare which I have mentioned previously.

The recommendation that this class of veterans be looked after under the War Veterans' Allowance Act has been made by the Legion for the past number of years. Last year their recommendation included the qualification that there should have been at least one year of service in England. This should overcome the resistance by some veterans and allow a fairly large and deserving group to qualify under the War Veterans' Allowance Act.

I note that these resolutions contain many other recommendations, the details of which are not yet available. We all realize that the legislation now being proposed, as in the case of other types of legislation which has been receiving the consideration of this 23rd Parliament, is of an emergency nature and not expected to cover all the problems. At the next session it will be possible to consider the requirements in greater detail and in the committee on veterans affairs. I hope that more and more progress will be made in solving the ever-pressing problem of the veteran and his dependents. I hope, Mr. Chairman, this resolution will receive the unanimous support of the house.

Mr. Cameron: Mr. Chairman, as a relic of the first world war I must confess that when I hear hon. members speaking in the vein that the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo and the hon. member for Fort William spoke this afternoon I rather feel that the man with the scythe is creeping up behind me. But, of course, they are perfectly right. We are dropping off at a very quick rate each year and will be doing so at an accelerated rate in the future.

I think that is really one of the major arguments against any opposition, if there is opposition, to increasing the permissible earnings ceilings of war veterans. In my constituency we have a great many war veterans and quite a number on the war veterans allowance. Because of climatic reasons these people go there to live and the problem is brought very forcibly to our attention. There are a number of great hardships at work due to the present rather low levels of permissible income. Many of these men are unable to hold even comparatively ill-paid jobs if they are going to hold them all year round. I have known of instances of men who had to arrange to be laid off for a certain length of time in order not to exceed the permissible income.

Another factor that I think we should consider is that the money incomes that people are getting today are in purchasing power very much lower than that same number of dollars was ten or fifteen years ago. Therefore we should at least try to be as generous as we have been in the past, which we will not be unless we are prepared to take into account the depreciation of the dollar. Of course, as I say, I do not know if there is going to be any opposition to this one point, and like the hon. member for Fort William I think one should concentrate on one point. To my mind the most important of the demands of the Canadian Legion and the one that affects most veterans is the raising of the level of permissible income.

I had hoped that there would be no question, since the events of last June, that when the act was amended it would be amended in line with the demands of the Canadian Legion. Last night I was a bit disturbed, in the same way that the hon. member for Acadia was, by the interjection of the minister which suggested that he and his colleagues were not accepting the levels suggested by the Canadian Legion as the proper levels. If that is so, I would hope that the members of the present government would perhaps do what my colleague, the hon. member for Kootenay West, apparently has been doing and consult the records of Hansard for previous years. For instance, I hope that the present Minister of Trade and Commerce will consult Hansard of March 7, 1955 in which he will find these words included in a very moving speech he made on that occasion with regard to the position of veterans. He makes reference to the then minister's remarks and says, as found at page 1769 of Hansard:

> The minister's remarks the other day I thought were cold, unsympathetic, confusing and unconvincing. He attempted to equate the ceilings of war veterans allowance with the rates for disability pensions. What purpose this procedure served I am at a loss to know. He then went on to estimate the additional cost to the treasury if the ceilings were placed at $1,200 and $2,000. He estimated that these would open the way to placing 14,750 new applicants on the rolls and would increase the cost by $13 million over and above the present proposed increase.

Here is a place, Mr. Chairman, where I think the present ministers should give their attention because the present Minister of Trade and Commerce on that occasion went on in this vein:

> This is a familiar dodge practised by some cabinet ministers. We are supposed to accept these statements as gospel truth. No detailed analysis was given by the minister. All that was given was just a bland assurance that this would be the result and that consequently there was no further argument. I hope that the committee will pursue this matter and get a detailed breakdown of these figures.

In connection with that, Mr. Chairman, I want to support the suggestion made by a speaker earlier this afternoon that a standing committee on veterans affairs should be appointed because I notice that among other eminent members of the present cabinet the Minister of Public Works very flatly and plainly came out and stated that when his party became the government they would immediately establish a standing committee on veterans affairs. I hope that is going to be done.

Then perhaps we could get away from these rather vague estimates of what the increased cost would be if we raised the permissible allowance to $1,200 and $2,000. I am not going on the assumption that there may be some opposition to the Legion's position in this regard. We have not yet been told definitely whether that is so, although I would think that the present government would hardly throw aside the Legion's representations when the present Prime Minister had this to say in 1955, as set out at page 2592 of Hansard of March 31, 1955:

> Mr. Chairman, the veterans of this country would be interested if they were here this evening in hearing the applause by Liberal members when it was indicated that the government does not intend to act upon the recommendations and suggestions of the Canadian Legion and the national council of veterans. If they were here tonight they would be interested in hearing the applause that greeted the words of the hon. gentleman as he spoke rather disparagingly of the fight which we in the opposition have put up on behalf, not of something ephemeral and fantastic but of something that is asked for, and reasonably asked for, by the Canadian Legion and the National Council of Veterans Organizations.

I would suggest that the members of the Canadian Legion will be equally interested to know what the position of the new government is going to be with regard to these requests. I share their interest. I trust that the action of the government will not lead us who are still in opposition after the events of last June to remember the old proverb, "Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose".

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the discussion which has gone on concerning the proposals which the present minister is making. As the hon. member for Acadia has pointed out, we in our group are glad to welcome those suggestions but we are extremely conscious of the deficiencies which are still to be found in considerable number in the whole scheme of things under which we seek to take care of our veterans.

I can well remember when world war II began to develop hearing ministers representing the Liberal party say on the floor of the house, "We shall so manage the affairs of this war that no one shall be any worse off because he went overseas and no one shall be any better off because he remained at home". In the light of the almost ghastly picture which has been painted, even here this afternoon, that statement was almost full of sound and fury, signifying nothing. Although many things were done by the Liberal administration for the soldiers of world war II, nevertheless many things were left undone.

I remember, and will always do so, one experience I had with a friend in my constituency whose home I occasionally visit. This man loved to keep chickens. He was a chicken fancier. He was able to produce eggs successfully. He was a successful gardener. I went to his home one time and he said to me, "You know, Mr. Blackmore, I have got to sell all my chickens and plow up my garden because they have been around to see me and they are going to cut off my pension because of my chickens and my garden". He was a man who had risked his life and lost his health in the struggle for his country. Yet his country was so mean and niggardly that it could not even let him raise chickens and have a garden without penalizing him by a deduction or a threatened deduction from his war veteran allowance. Probably no more needs to be said.

I am told by the hon. member for Acadia of one experience he had while he was overseas. Hon. members no doubt know that the hon. member for Acadia had a distinguished career in the army as he has had in this parliament. He told me that one time after a hard day they were visited behind the lines by Mr. Arthur Meighen, about whom we all know. Mr. Meighen warmed up to the occasion and said, "Now, men, when you get home your country will assure you that you will never lack for anything". Nothing more needs to be said.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that before very long we shall have removed many of the painful and rankling inequities or injustices which now fill our whole scheme of things in taking care of our veterans.

Mr. Bryce: Mr. Chairman, I want to take only a couple of minutes in order to say that I am in support of this legislation. My colleagues have said most of the things that I would have liked to say. I am glad that we have the present Minister of Veterans Affairs. He was the one man in the new cabinet who I thought fitted into the position better than did anyone else. I have been able to cooperate with the minister for a great number of years. He has supported some of the things I wanted to do for the veterans, and I had the opportunity to support him. I now support him in connection with this bill.

I do not think we should waste any time on this matter. I think it is something of which everybody is in favour. I think we should be careful not to delay it. If we do so, we may find that some minister is going to get mad at somebody one of these days, we are going to be out on the hustings and the veterans are going to have no legislation passed. Do not let us make that mistake. Let us get this legislation passed when we have the opportunity to pass it.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to repeat a great deal of what has been said before in support of this bill because I believe we are all in favour of improvements. However, there is one matter upon which I desire to speak. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister if he will introduce an amendment to his own bill. I have never been able to understand why a government should set a definite date as to when love ends. To my own knowledge, I have in Vancouver in my own constituency one person who joined up in 1914, went all through the war, was made a commissioned officer on the field of battle and came out of the war. He joined as a bachelor and he came out as a bachelor. He was not entitled to any pension because of wounds of battle but, because of the rigours of war, he reaches a point where, under the present act, at age 60 he is entitled to a pension. He joins up in 1914, goes through the war and does not until a year ago meet the woman with whom he wants to spend the rest of his life. I imagine that is not for biological reasons but affection and companionship and they then find because they did not marry before a certain month in the spring of 1953 the wife is not entitled to any allowance. Now would the minister tell me how he establishes a date in 1953 as the date when love ends for a veteran of the war of 1914-1918?

Mr. Brooks: I did not do it.

Mr. Winch: Why can a person who is a veteran of the 1914-1918 war if he married before this month in the spring of 1953 draw an allowance for his wife, but, not if he married after that date? I am not being humorous at all; to me this is an extraordinary arrangement. On investigation I find it is not by any regulation. A change is required in this act to say that a veteran could be married after 1953.

Mr. Brooks: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I think he is discussing a section of the Pension Act and so I am sure he will be very pleased with a section which it is proposed to put into the new Pension Act.

Mr. Winch: In the War Veterans' Allowance Act?

Mr. Brooks: No, in the Pension Act.

Mr. Winch: No no, it is the veterans allowance act that we are discussing now. The burned out pension, that is in the veterans allowance act.

Mr. Brooks: That is right, that is the veterans allowance act. Perhaps I have not quite followed the hon. member too closely but I believe the matter he is discussing does come under the Pension Act and I think I can tell the hon. gentleman that an amendment will be introduced which will meet the point he has raised.

Mr. Winch: But it is the same in the veterans allowance act and that is what I am discussing. I have two cases in my own riding where they got married in August, three months too late, and so the wife is not entitled to any pension. Both acts come under the minister, do they not?

Mr. Brooks: Yes.

Mr. Winch: Well then will the minister make the necessary change so that love does not have to end at a certain date in 1953.

Mr. Brooks: As I am very anxious that love should never end I will look into the matter.

(Translation):

Mr. Deniset: Mr. Chairman, may I add a few words in connection with this discussion? I shall do so in French, because I want to stress the fact that, of course, the large family of veterans comprises Canadians speaking one or both of our official languages. If I had a gift for the tongues, I would also add a few words in several other languages, out of regard for those of other origins who are nevertheless Canadian veterans.

I want to greet the veterans and I really think there is no better opportunity to do so than now, when Armistice day or rather Remembrance day is near and when we shall be called upon to lay wreaths of flowers on cenotaphs and memorials to our dead brothers.

I am happy to say, Mr. Chairman, that the resolution before us augurs well for the future.

I am also pleased about the non-partisan position of hon. members with regard to our veterans. This attitude confirms our national unity which was welded on the battlefields, and which, I hope, will endure forever.

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, I have the honour to represent here the beautiful constituency of Gaspe which, considering its population, is among those that gave the greatest number of soldiers to the country. Gaspesians are not slow to answer the call of duty. Those brave people were not afraid to leave their homes, relatives and even their children to defend our country, our democracy.

Many of those valiant men died on the battlefields and we shall have a thought for them next Monday.

Many of those veterans came back, and they had every reason to expect special consideration on the part of the government. However, Mr. Chairman, such consideration was not always commensurate to the courage they displayed on the battlefields. I wish to congratulate and thank the hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks), as well as the government for the special consideration they are now giving these veterans in the course of this first session.

However, in my constituency there is a rather peculiar situation, one which indeed appears really strange to me. A large number of ex-servicemen who were classed A-1 on enlistment have returned in no condition to do any further military service. However, when they apply for a pension they are told simply that the disability they have is a pre-enlistment condition. That seems to me to be an extraordinary situation. If these people were classed A-1, it would seem that after enlistment they should draw a pension worthy of the gallantry with which they served on the battlefield.

I have seen even more than that in my constituency. I must say that I have always paid particular attention to Gaspe ex-servicemen. There is one case which I would like to refer to especially. The man in question is aged 64, served during the last war and was captured in Hong Kong. As he is now ailing, he asked to be treated at the Veterans' Hospital in Quebec. He had to travel a distance of 500 miles and then pay for the treatment which he thought he was entitled to receive free of charge. Had he thought for one moment that he would have to pay for his hospital care, I am sure he would have gone to a Gaspe hospital.

What happened? At the time he was receiving a monthly pension of $22.90. His hospitalization bill amounted to $182, and each month the authorities deduct $20 from his pension and send him the balance of $2.90.

Well, Mr. Chairman, this is a situation which the government should correct. So I say that if the government wants to give special consideration to Gaspe veterans, it must first of all appoint officials who will look after them. It should also appoint a pensions advocate for the veterans of the Gaspe constituency, so that they will not have to travel 500 miles to interview the department's advocate at headquarters.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to bring this situation to the attention of the house and I am confident that, with the good intentions of the government and the beneficial legislation it now proposes, it should find it possible to open an office in the Gaspe constituency where an advocate will be responsible for looking after the veterans of that area.

(Text):

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up the time of the committee for very long by speaking about the legislation which is now before us, but I do wish to go on record and thank the Minister of Veterans Affairs for the manner in which questions relating to veterans have been dealt with during the present session. The many letters which I have received from veterans in my constituency justify my standing up and saying a grateful thank-you for what the Minister of Veterans Affairs has done, and also to the government for the manner in which these questions have been dealt with. This is but one of the many items which the Conservative party desires to put forward in the present session, and again I offer my very best thanks to the government and to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Tucker: Is it the intention of the minister to make any statement?

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, I intend to make a statement on second reading but there are a few remarks I should like to make at the present time. I have taken note of the many points which have been raised by hon. members, and there will be full opportunity given, of course, to debate and to discuss these points later on on second reading.

I would like to take this opportunity, though, of thanking the hon. member for Rosthern, the hon. member for Kootenay West, the hon. member for Acadia and many others who have spoken for the very kind remarks they have made concerning myself. I do not think they are altogether deserved, but I must say that in the many years I have been in this house and discussed veterans affairs in committee and in the chamber it has been a great pleasure for me to have been associated with the hon. members I have mentioned and the others who have spoken. We are all interested in one thing, that is, the benefit of the veterans, and I think it is our intention to do the very best we can for them under the rules and regulations, and under the circumstances as we find them.

The one matter I wish to discuss today has to do with the setting up of a veterans committee. I have been interested in listening to the remarks made by different members on past history. One of the greatest sports in this house over the years has, I find, been the discussion of what hon. members said years ago. I may say I am not in the least embarrassed by anything I have said in the past regarding veterans affairs or regarding the setting up of a committee. I have always been in favour of a permanent committee on veterans affairs being set up in the House of Commons and I am still of the same opinion.

However, Mr. Chairman, I may say that I feel that this is rather a special session, if I may call it such. This session, as has been pointed out by various hon. members at different times, has been more or less a session devoted to dealing with unfinished business, the unfinished business of the last session when the estimates of the house were not dealt with except, I believe, the post office estimates. As a matter of fact these two bills which I am introducing, and other bills which were introduced, indicate that the business of the house was not finished at the last session of parliament. The War Veterans' Allowance Act would have had to be amended this session under any circumstances. Hon. members opposite will recall that a bill was passed called an omnibus bill which provided for increases in old age security, provided for certain changes in the War Veterans' Allowance Act and also for certain changes in the Pension Act. As I said a moment ago, this unfinished business has to be dealt with by us this session.

The two acts which the Department of Veterans Affairs is bringing before the house are not controversial. The subject matter of these bills have been discussed in this house and in the veterans affairs committee on many occasions. There is the question under the War Veterans' Allowance Act of making Great Britain a theatre of war; there is the matter of the imperial veterans; there is the matter of deleting section 8 of the War Veterans' Allowance Act. All these matters have been discussed time and time again in this house and in committee. As far as the proposed pension amendments are concerned, the same applies, as hon. members will see. I would ask them to wait until they get the bill, and I am sure they will agree with me that there is no great reason why the veterans affairs committee should be set up during this session.

I may say, and both the hon. member for Kootenay West and the hon. member for Selkirk have pointed this out, that we are faced with an unusual situation, and it is our feeling that it is most desirable in present conditions to ensure that the additional benefits given to veterans by this bill are made available to them without delay. The social security acts have been passed providing for pensions and allowances for older citizens. It is, I think, quite right that without delay the same benefits should be provided for our war veterans. We all know that to set up a committee takes time; we all know that it is necessary to bring in different organizations from different parts of the country, and this, to my mind, would only delay the passing of this measure and only delay the opportunity for veterans to receive the benefits which we wish them to have as early as the recipients of benefits under the other acts I have mentioned.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing controversial in these two bills. I have spoken to the head of the Canadian Legion and without divulging to the Legion what is in our bills I learned that the Legion is of the opinion that it would be more satisfactory if a permanent committee on veterans affairs were to be set up at the beginning of the next session at which time veterans legislation which might be submitted to it including the Veterans' Land Act, the War Veterans' Allowance Act, the Pension Act and others could be reviewed. The Legion indicated it would much prefer to have a permanent committee established at the beginning of next session and I believe the various veterans organizations across this country are of the same opinion. If this were done there would be no loss of time and, as I said a moment ago, we would not withhold from the veterans for some time the benefits accruing to them under the proposed amendments.

I wish to make it clear that I have not changed my opinion as far as the setting up of a permanent committee on veterans affairs is concerned. I am of the same opinion today as I was when I sat on the other side of the house. However, I do not think any good purpose would be served by setting up a committee at this time and, as a matter of fact, I think it would be to the detriment of the veteran.

I am satisfied that when hon. members opposite see the bills which are to be presented containing the amendments to the War Veterans' Allowance Act and the Pension Act they will agree with me in this respect. I hope every effort will be made by all hon. members of the house to expedite this legislation as quickly as possible.

I do not say this in a critical manner but it does seem rather strange to me that some of my hon. friends on the government side of the house should say that we should set up a committee to study this legislation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. member not mean the opposition?

Mr. Brooks: Yes, I am sorry. I fall into that mistake when I look at some hon. members opposite.

Mr. Marler: It is a habit of long standing.

Mr. Brooks: Yes, that is very true. However, when I think of the fact that the Liberal administration last year put through veterans benefits without amending the acts their criticism of our action appears strange. They did not amend the War Veterans' Allowance Act or the Pension Act. They simply brought in what is known as an omnibus bill and provided for the payment of benefits to veterans on July 1, not by amendments or the introduction of schedules to the acts but by the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Marler: Do you think it made any difference to the recipients?

Mr. Brooks: When I reflect on this it does not seem very becoming on the part of hon. members opposite to suggest something which they did not choose to do. As a matter of fact they did not go anywhere near as far as we are going at the present time. I am not going to labour this point further. As I say, I know it will be greatly to the benefit of veterans for us to put through this legislation as quickly as we can.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, the minister has referred to the position taken by the present members of the opposition when they formed the government in regard to matters such as this being referred to a committee and because he has done so I think I should say a word in regard to that.

The attitude taken by the Liberal government last spring was that while there was not time to amend the veterans legislation it was desirable to make some improvement in the position of war veterans and the increases were introduced as part of the estimates. The attitude taken at that time by the official opposition and particularly by the present Prime Minister, who was then in opposition, was a very strong one. He emphasized what he claimed was upholding the rights of parliament. During the subsequent campaign he said he was going to adhere to the stand he had taken without deviation from it and without flinching. One of the reasons for the position he took in attacking the government for not referring these matters to a committee was that by refusing to do this the government was flouting the rights of parliament. The reason I am speaking at this stage, Mr. Chairman, is to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs to consider what his own leader said in regard to this very matter.

What the present government has to answer for is not what the Liberal government did which was so severely criticized by the present government when in opposition and particularly by the Prime Minister. They went to the people on this ground more than any other and won support and I think they are now honour bound to pay some attention to the basis on which they achieved their support. They should not turn around and say, "We are not going to do it because you did not do it." Surely to goodness this is not going to be the attitude adopted by the present government toward the promises it made and upon which they presumably got a great deal of support.

Before the minister absolutely closes the door on this question, as already stated, I would like to draw to his attention for consideration what his leader said on April 11 of this year in regard to this very subject. I would ask the minister to bear in mind that his party requested an election as early as possible and if we were to make improvements in veterans legislation such matters had to be disposed of as early as possible—practically at once—or else we could not have had an election on June 10. In spite of the attitude of the opposition of that day that these things should be done for the veteran and an election held without delay, what did the present Prime Minister say at that time? Reading from page 3405 of Hansard of April 11, 1957, such a short time ago, we find the present Prime Minister saying:

> There is no adequate opportunity for discussion here. These pension increases deserve an opportunity for full discussion. They should have been placed before committees of the house in order to enable representatives of the people to attend here, give evidence and express their views with regard to the inadequacy of the increases. I say that the attitude taken by the government is a cynical disregard of the parliamentary function of careful and meticulous examination.

I ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs that if the failure of the Liberal administration to refer these matters to a parliamentary committee was in the opinion of his leader, the present Prime Minister of this country, a "cynical disregard of the parliamentary function of careful and meticulous examination", is it any less so on the part of the Conservative government which appealed to the country on that basis and won the support it has and which now adopts the attitude that his leader has so characterized?

I am astonished that within a matter of such a few months following the taking of so strong a stand on this question by the present Prime Minister, the Minister of Veterans Affairs should now get up and adopt the attitude that it is not the government's intention to refer this legislation to a committee and, in the words of the Prime Minister, deny parliament the right of properly examining it because it might mean some delay, for which attitude the previous government was severely criticized. I submit that the referring of this legislation to a committee would not at all delay the time when the veterans would come into receipt of these increased benefits and payments.

As the minister very well knows, if he would move a motion to set up a committee on veterans affairs the setting up of that committee would be facilitated by all parties in the house, and I am sure that the representatives of the veterans and of the various veterans groups would be very glad—they have the situation at their fingertips—to appear on short notice to give their opinion of this legislation and wherein it should be improved.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, it would not delay at all the time that the veterans would get in possession of the benefits they may be getting under this bill. I do submit that if the minister believes what he said in the past, namely that a veterans committee could and did improve measures brought down by the last administration, he should be the first one to see that we have the benefit of the opinion of the veterans in regard to this legislation and to see wherein we could put them in possession of an improved measure to what is proposed here.

I ask the minister at this stage to consider what his own leader said in appealing to the people of Canada, to uphold the sacred rights of parliament and on the basis of which he sought and got support, and that he stand behind his leader at this time and abide by the promises held out to the people of Canada.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): You have not enough veterans over there to form a committee.

Mr. Brooks: I have nothing further to say except to repeat what I said a moment ago. The hon. member is asking us to set up a committee to consider legislation and I might say that these bills have to do in part with the legislation which was passed this year by the omnibus bill. I suppose if we had had no further legislation at all my hon. friend would have stood up in this house and said we should set up a committee in order to discuss the legislation which is now law and has been passed. As I say, these bills have to do mostly with that, except proposals which have been discussed time and time again in this house. I repeat, I see no good purpose that would be served. I believed it would be to the disadvantage of the veterans.

There is another point, Mr. Chairman. The increases which are being granted under the Old Age Security Act are straight increases from $46 to $55 a month, which means that it is just a matter of changing the amount of money on the cheques. As far as the war veterans allowance is concerned my hon. friend knows as well as I do that all these cheques are for individual amounts. There is a means test and every case has to be decided on an individual basis. There is a tremendous lot of administrative work. My department is anxious, and we are all anxious, to see that these cheques get to the veterans as soon as possible. I might say that as far as my department is concerned the employees will have to do a tremendous lot of extra work. I also wish to say that they are very anxious and willing to work the extra time, but our particular anxiety today is to see that these benefits are obtained by the veterans as soon as possible.

At the next session we intend to carry out what the Prime Minister and other members of the government said when we were in opposition; we intend to set up a veterans affairs committee to study all phases of veterans legislation which may be submitted to it. I know that the veterans organizations across this country are very anxious that this be done at the next session of parliament. That is the situation, Mr. Chairman. I think it is logical and I think it will appeal to the logical sense of the members of this House of Commons.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, may I through you ask the minister a question. He said that he conferred with the officers of the Canadian Legion. Did he also confer with the officials of the army and navy? While I am on my feet may I ask this question? Because this is a non-controversial matter will the minister introduce the required amendment to remove the marriage bar on the pension?

Mr. Brooks: I might say, Mr. Chairman, it was not a case of conferring with the head of the Legion. I happened to meet the head of the Legion and some of the higher officials of that organization and I had a discussion with them. They asked me about setting up a permanent committee and I said it was our intention to do it at the next session.

Mr. Winch: Did the minister also confer with the army and navy?

Mr. Brooks: I did not see the army and navy. I have heard indirectly that the army and navy and some other organizations feel exactly the same way about this matter as the Legion does.

Mr. Winch: The minister did not answer my second question. Because of the non-controversial nature of this matter is the minister prepared to introduce an amendment to the bill to wipe out the marriage bar?

Mr. Brooks: I would suggest to the hon. member that he wait for the bill and see what is in it and whether it needs an amendment before we make a decision in that regard.

Mr. Tucker: There is one thing I should like to draw to the minister's attention, namely the various statements by members of his government such as that they are now in an election campaign so that there is a great possibility that there will be no real legislation brought in before they go to the country again, and consequently there would not be a chance for this extended examination of veterans problems that he is now talking about. Either what he has already put out as a hope now that there will be such an investigation may on the one hand be correct —and I am not questioning the minister—or if his colleagues are right it may not be; but I think the people in general will question whether he is speaking with any authority that there is a hope before another election of improving this legislation as it should be improved or whether, judging by what is said by some of his colleagues, we are now in an election campaign. If that is so, what chance will there be of improving this legislation in accordance with the hope held out by the minister?

Mr. Brooks: I might say in answer to my hon. friend that I have never heard any of my colleagues say that they were in an election campaign.

Mr. Tucker: The Solicitor General said it at Toronto last night.

Mr. Brooks: As far as I am concerned I do not know of our being in any election campaign.

Mr. Chevrier: You had better consult your colleagues.

Mr. Lesage: May I ask a question? Last night the Minister of Veterans Affairs said that the bill which would follow this resolution would extend eligibility for an allowance to a veteran of the Canadian forces who during world war I did not reach France but for various reasons stayed in Britain. This would apply for a specific minimum period. What will the period be?

Mr. Brooks: As I said, we are discussing the resolution at the present time. If this resolution passes a bill will be submitted to the house and I shall give the particulars on second reading.

Mr. Lesage: Can we be sure that it will not be announced over the radio before the bill is introduced?

Mr. Brooks: You can be quite sure of that.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Brooks thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 28, to amend the War Veterans' Allowance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEPENDANTS, ETC.

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Pension Act to place dependants of persons who served in world war II in a position comparable to that of dependants of persons who served in world war I in cases of disability or death due to improper conduct; to ensure that pensions may be paid to the dependants of deceased members of the forces resident and domiciled in Newfoundland; to provide for the continuation of disability pensions and widows' pensions to the end of the month in which death occurred except in cases where no additional pension for dependants is payable; to provide for the payment of pension to the daughter of a pensioned widower where the domestic establishment is maintained after his death; to provide for an increase in the clothing allowance on account of amputation or use of appliances; to provide for an increase in the allowances for funeral and burial expenses; to remove the limitation on the amount of pension payable to a dependent parent of a deceased pensioner after discontinuance of pension to other dependants; to authorize payment of widows' pensions at current rates upon reinstatement of discontinued pensions; and to remove the limitation on payment of pensions to or in respect of children born after a specified date, or to wives whose marriage to a member of the forces or a pensioner took place after a specified date; such measure to include, in addition, certain consequential and clarifying amendments.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

Mr. Chevrier: Six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business of the house is for tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we shall commence with second reading of the bill to amend the War Veterans' Allowance Act. Then we shall take the resolution concerning the Pension Act which has just been put into committee. Then the resolution in the name of the Minister of Transport having to do with a proposed branch line for the Canadian National Railway Company. We may then also ask to go on with the bill standing in the name of the Minister of Justice to amend the Criminal Code and the resolution standing in his name respecting the Judges Act. Then we shall proceed with the bill in the name of the Minister of Labour. I am not sure that the ones I have just mentioned will be called, but if we run out of other business we shall go on with the debate on the speech from the throne.

Mr. Barnett: Could the minister indicate whether all the items he has mentioned will be dealt with in the order he has mentioned them? Am I correct in understanding that?

Mr. Green: This bill and the resolution in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs will be first, and then the resolution in the name of the Minister of Transport. At the moment I cannot give the order for the other measures to which I have referred. I am not even sure that they will be ready tomorrow.

Mr. Chevrier: Could the house get some indication of what is likely to take place on Friday?

Mr. Green: We will have to take the bill to amend the Pension Act in any event. We are going to complete dealing with the two measures standing in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Once they have been completed we will go back to the throne speech debate, but I am trying to make provision in the event of these veterans affairs measures being completed before the end of a day so that we can then fill in the rest of that day with government business and start the throne speech debate at the beginning of the sitting the next day.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

BROADCASTING COMMISSION REPORT—SATELLITE STATIONS

Question No. 33—Mr. Fisher:

1. Have any plans been formulated to carry out the royal commission on broadcasting's recommendation that C.B.C. satellite T.V. stations be established for nodal points with a population of 5,000 or more that are beyond the practical bounds of reception for presently-licensed stations?

2. What is the estimated cost of such establishments?

3. Has the government received any requests from any communities for partial help in establishing such transmitters?

4. Has the government offered any technical advice on a gratuitous basis to communities wishing to undertake either their own transmitting station or community antenna?

Answer by: Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue):

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation advises as follows in answer to 1 and 2:

1. The corporation has made general studies but has not formulated definite plans.

2. Estimated capital costs run from about $50,000 to $250,000 depending upon the type, power, and location. Annual operating costs are estimated at about $22,000 to $100,000 also depending upon the type, power and location.

3. No.

4. Officers of the Department of Transport and of the C.B.C. have from time to time answered questions raised by parties interested in such matters.

ALL-YEAR SHIPPING POINT, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 81—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Has the government given consideration to making the port of Miramichi, New Brunswick, an all-year shipping point for the shipping of base metals, concentrates, iron ore and other consignments from northeast New Brunswick?

2. If so, what is the present status?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

1. Yes.

2. The department has found that while the Miramichi is an important waterway for the movement of goods in the smaller ocean boats drawing 20 feet, a very significant part of the potential new shipments would call for boats of 27-foot draft. The cost of dredging and maintaining a channel of the necessary depth on the Miramichi would make it an uneconomic proposition at the present time.

HARBOUR PROJECT, CARON POINT, N.B.

Question No. 86—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Has the Minister of Public Works received any indications from the Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation to the effect that the company is prepared to proceed with its share of the development for the harbour project at Caron point, near Bathurst, New Brunswick?

2. If so, are steps being taken to proceed with this project?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

1. Yes.

2. Further discussions will be held in the near future.

1. The total number of coal mines in operation in Alberta?

2. The total tonnage of coal produced in Alberta?

3. The number of Alberta coal mines which ceased operation?

4. The total tonnage of coal imported into Canada?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

	1952	1953	1954	1955	1956
1.	157	146	136	116	104
2.	7,194,472	5,917,423	4,859,136	4,456,578	4,329,639

4.	24,932,853	23,265,541	18,579,989	19,742,531	22,613,374

COAL PRODUCTION AND MARKETING, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 101—Mr. MacEachen:

1. What was the annual production of coal in the province of Nova Scotia, for each year 1950-1956, inclusive?

2. What portion, in percentage terms, of each year's production was marketed in (a) Nova Scotia; (b) Atlantic provinces; (c) Quebec; (d) Ontario; (e) abroad?

3. Of the amount marketed in the province of Nova Scotia, how many tons each year were for (a) domestic consumption; (b) industrial consumption; (c) generation of electrical energy?

4. Of the amount marketed for industrial purposes, how many tons were used in the production of steel in Nova Scotia?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 7, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, November 7, 1957

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 7th November, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
Lionel Massey,
Secretary to the Governor General

THE MINISTRY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY ASSISTANT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, by leave of the house I should like to table two copies of order in council P.C. 1957-1456, dated November 6, 1957, appointing John B. Hamilton, M.P., parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. Prime Minister leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

STANDING COMMITTEES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That a special committee be appointed to prepare and report, with all convenient speed, lists of members to compose the standing committees of this house under standing order 65, the said committee to be composed of Messrs. Cardiff, Chevrier, Gauthier (Portneuf), Green and Hahn.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

DEVELOPMENTS IN MAIL HANDLING—ANNOUNCEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement which I think might be of some interest to the house.

In recent years it has become increasingly apparent that the development of modern methods of handling of mail by most of the world's post office departments has lagged behind similar developments in other fields. A number of countries are now studying this problem and attempting to develop machinery and equipment, particularly in the electronic field, which would be applicable to the peculiarly difficult and complicated problems involved.

The Canadian post office has done considerable work in this respect, as have the two other nations with which we are most closely associated, Great Britain and the United States. While there have been discussions from time to time among our three countries on specific problems of mail handling, there has not been, to date, a comprehensive joint review of all the work being done in each country, nor a concentrated attempt to develop the close co-operation in research and development which could bring the greatest benefits to all concerned.

When the Postmaster General of the United States, Hon. A. E. Summerfield, was in Ottawa this summer I discussed this question with him and suggested that a joint conference among the three nations referred to would be a good idea. He agreed, and informed me that preliminary discussion had already taken place regarding a visit of some representatives of the British post office to Washington this fall to discuss certain United States' developments in mail handling.

Arising from these discussions between Postmaster General Summerfield and myself, I can now inform the house that a team of five senior officials from our Canadian post office, led by the deputy minister, Mr. G. A. Boyle, will begin at Washington on November 12 a series of meetings over a two-week period with similar representations from the United States and British post offices. I shall also be present for the initial stages of the meeting. Following these meetings the group will proceed to Canada where they will study our Canadian methods and the research on equipment we have in process. Early in the new year Canadian officials will visit Great Britain for a personal study of new equipment there, and at that time may spend a brief period on the continent for the same purpose.

It is anticipated that, arising from these discussions and visits, closer co-operation will arise in the development programs of postal machinery for our three countries, and that the interchange of ideas will enable each nation to concentrate on those areas in which it is farthest advanced and simultaneously benefit from similar progress in other fields by the other nations concerned.

It is also expected that these discussions will ultimately prove of some help to the technical committee of the universal postal union. However, since this committee of 20 nations was set up only in August 1957, it is not expected to have its first meeting for about a year, and there would seem to be substantial advantage to be gained from these immediate discussions of our common problems.

The net result will be a substantial forward move over the next few years in more effective and modern handling of mail in Canada and the other nations concerned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

BILL NO. 26, FROM THE SENATE—STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday a message was received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate had passed the following bill to which the concurrence of this house is desired: Bill No. 26 (Letter J of the Senate) "An act respecting the boundary between the province of Alberta and the Northwest Territories", Votes and Proceedings No. 18. This bill should have appeared this morning on the order paper under the heading "First reading of Senate public bills" in accordance with standing order 152.

As you know, private bills receive an automatic first reading under the terms of standing order 103, subsection 2. I am afraid this bill was taken to be a private bill and consequently was not put on the order paper. However, this stage of the bill is not debatable, and I trust that the house will be prepared to proceed with it today by consent. This bill stands in the name of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois).

I suggest that after motions have been disposed of the minister give a brief explanation of the circumstances and ask for consent to proceed with first reading. Is it agreeable to the house that this course be followed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I will then call first reading of Senate public bills, Bill No. 26, letter J of the Senate, entitled "An act respecting the boundary between the province of Alberta and the Northwest Territories".

[Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace).]

ALBERTA-NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

APPROVAL OF BOUNDARY AS SURVEYED AND MARKED

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys) moved the first reading of Bill No. 26 (from the Senate), respecting the boundary between the province of Alberta and the Northwest Territories.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO RUSSIAN PROPOSAL FOR MEETING OF WORLD LEADERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister notice of which I have sent him. In view of the anxieties and threats which overshadow the world, will the Prime Minister take the lead in announcing at once Canada's acceptance of the Russian proposal for a meeting of world leaders to agree to the outlawing of war, the ending of the arms race and the establishment of peaceful coexistence between east and west?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all of us share the anxieties expressed by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, and I think all would agree that nothing should be done at this time in any way to increase tension, and that all of us should devote ourselves earnestly toward a peaceful solution of outstanding problems. This Canada has endeavoured to do, both through the United Nations and in other international forums. Above anything else, no nation today should shut the door in any matter that might offer the prospect of any solution or diminution of tensions internationally.

The Soviet leader, while not making a specific suggestion, did state that he believed there should be a meeting of world leaders. All of us would agree that if there was any possibility that such a meeting would be successful we would not hesitate in declaring immediately that Canada would accept such suggestion. But we must not lose sight of the fact that the proposal must be read in the light of the recent refusal of the U.S.S.R. to participate further in the deliberations of the disarmament commission of the United Nations. That is a circumstance that must be considered everywhere in the world by those who are in authority. We must also bear in mind that summit meetings do not necessarily lower international tension, for all will recall that sense of security, which turned out to be false security, which was engendered by the Geneva summit meeting.

The Russian proposal must be carefully weighed to ascertain whether it is merely another propaganda move designed to afford the U.S.S.R. a temporary advantage in the forum of public opinion. On the other hand, we must not lose sight of the fact that everything that can be done should be done, and if it is believed that such a proposal possesses sincerity, then the preparation for and the conduct of the meeting should be such as to ensure beneficial results.

You will recall that, following the visit of Prime Minister Macmillan to Washington and after consultation with the various NATO partners, a decision was taken to hold a meeting of heads of state and prime ministers from the various NATO countries. And, as has already been said, believing in the possibilities inherent in this meeting, I have decided to head the Canadian delegation. At the time of that meeting, jointly with our NATO allies, and bearing in mind the interests of other friendly powers, I think all should be prepared to consider the problem of another summit meeting. But it would be premature, in my view, and unrealistic at this stage for the Canadian government to announce its acceptance of the proposal in the form in which it was made.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Prime Minister this question. Was there a proposal made directly by the Soviet union to the government of Canada?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the only proposal—and that is why I referred to its nebulous nature—was that contained in the speech of Khrushchev yesterday.

Mr. Coldwell: I noticed a comment has been made on that in London by foreign office officials.

[Later:]

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister growing out of his announcement today that he would lead the Canadian delegation to NATO. May I just say I am glad to hear that announcement, and I think it is very proper; but will the Prime Minister upon his return from Paris make a report to the Canadian people over radio and television upon the proposals and the facts of the world situation? Lacking those facts now, and beset on all sides by sensational headlines, I am quite certain there is widespread anxiety that could easily develop into hysteria, and I believe that such a report as I have suggested would help to allay those fears.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly give consideration to that suggestion. I realize more and more that the Canadian people and people generally in the free world should be kept as fully advised as possible as to the true situation, within the limits of security and national well-being, and I certainly thank my hon. friend for his observation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. My friend the hon. member for Peace River asked if the Prime Minister would make his report over television or radio. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he decides to make a report, and parliament is in session, would he make his report to parliament?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I think I will do both. The suggestion of the hon. member for Essex East appeals to me very much, and I thank my hon. friend for realizing today how important parliament is.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You should follow his example.

TRADE

CODFISH—REPORTED ACTION BY JAMAICA TO SHUT OUT IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. T. Stick (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the minister state what action the government is taking in connection with the threatened action by the government of Jamaica to shut out the imports of salt codfish from the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice, because I have not received a full report on the alleged action.

COMMUNIST CHINA—REPORTED STATEMENT AS TO CURRENCY ACCEPTABLE TO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. On Tuesday last I asked the minister if he was prepared to confirm a statement attributed to our trade commissioner at Hong Kong that Canada is prepared to accept Canadian dollars, Swiss francs or convertible sterling in payment for certain Canadian commodities which he hopes to sell to the Chinese communist government. He promised he would give me an answer, and perhaps he is now able to do so.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was unfortunately detained yesterday or I would have given the answer to the hon. gentleman then. This question is based on a radio report to which the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar was listening. There is no change in policy envisaged here at all. The Canadian government does not prevent private exporters from accepting payment in any currency for their Canadian products. That is a matter for the private exporter and the trade commissioner dealing with any Canadian businessman who wishes to engage in such business.

As a matter of practice Canadian exporters normally wish to receive payment in Canadian dollars or currencies which are readily exchangeable into Canadian dollars for obvious reasons, since such exporters must make their payments in Canadian dollars. This is doubtless the point which the Canadian trade commissioner had in mind, and I think it is perhaps what the hon. member is asking about. I have, however, no information as to the exact words used by the Canadian trade commissioner.

Mr. Coldwell: Then may I ask with respect to the Canadian wheat board, which is in a different category from the people who arrange trade with communist China. The wheat board will not accept sterling but apparently some traders who deal with the government in China will accept sterling.

Mr. Churchill: Well, the practice of the wheat board has been the normal practice of accepting payment in dollars.

Mr. Coldwell: Why not accept sterling?

Mr. Churchill: If sterling is readily and immediately convertible, that is the same thing.

Mr. Coldwell: All sterling is convertible except blocked sterling.

PORK—STATEMENT AS TO ALLEGED REPACKING OF U.S. IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Peace River asked the following question:

Certain news reports were circulating this morning to the effect that United States pork products have been brought into Canada during recent weeks, repackaged or relabelled and sold as Canadian pork products. I want to ask the acting minister or his parliamentary assistant if he would make inquiries to ascertain whether these reports are true, and if so what the government proposes to do to stop such a practice.

I have the information here. Imports of United States pork and pork products into Canada in the first six months of 1957 totalled 160,548 pounds. In the same period 16,377,978 pounds of Canadian pork and pork products were exported to the United States.

In both Canada and the United States it is required that imported meats and meats moving in interprovincial or interstate trade must bear an appropriate legend to show that the meat has been inspected and passed for health. Any United States meat entering Canada must bear the health inspection legend of the United States, and any Canadian meat entering the United States must bear the Canadian health inspection legend. When United States meat enters Canada fully processed in consumer packages it is not permitted to be repacked under the Canadian inspection legend.

When United States meats are processed in Canada the Canadian inspection legend is applied to the finished product, and when Canadian meats are processed in the United States the United States inspection legend is applied to the finished product. An example of this would be sides of bacon, going either from Canada to the United States or coming from the United States into Canada, and sliced and packaged into consumer packages in the country of destination. The domestic inspection legend is applied in such instances because the original inspection legend is destroyed in the processing, and because the processing necessitates the reinspection of the product by the veterinary inspection service of the country of destination.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONCTON—STATEMENT ON REPORTED DISMANTLING AND SCRAPPING OF MACHINERY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to answer several questions which have been taken as notice for me in the last few days.

The hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Murphy) asked the following question yesterday:

Has the minister received representations from the Canadian national war veterans association of Moncton or other organizations, protesting the dismantling and scrapping of thousands of dollars of very valuable machinery in the Canadian National shops in Moncton? If so, what action does he propose to take?

The reply to the first part is that I have received a letter on this matter from the Canadian National Railways war veterans association of Moncton. The answer to the second part is that I shall draw the association's representations to the attention of the management of the Canadian National Railways.

AIR TRANSPORT

PORT ARTHUR, ONT.—STATEMENT ON AIR CARRIER LICENCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yesterday the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) asked if I would check the accuracy of part 2 of question No. 49, answered on page 750 of Hansard.

I am advised by the air transport board that at Port Arthur three class 4 air carrier licences are held, as stated in reply to the first part of the hon. member's question. One of the licencees reported ownership of two aircraft up to May 1, 1957. At that time one of these two aircraft was lost through the ice and has not operated since. Its operating certificate lapsed at the end of August. The licencee advised the board by letter dated August 31, 1957, that it had been salvaged and was being overhauled but that it would be some time before it would fly again. The said aircraft is still registered under the name of the licencee. It was on that basis that a negative reply was given to part 2 of the hon. member's question.

GRAIN

REGINA—STATEMENT ON LOADING INSTRUCTIONS TO C.N.R.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount asked me the following question:

> Is it a fact that instructions have been issued to freight officials of the Canadian National Railways in Regina to stop loading grain in 40-ton cars and that 60-ton cars only are to be used for loading grain for Vancouver?

The management of the Canadian National Railways advise that the general practice is that 40-foot cars, which are usually 60 tons, are being used for grain shipments to Vancouver as these cars are needed on the Pacific coast for return loading of lumber, pulp and paper. If no 40-foot cars are available then 36-foot cars, which are 40 tons, are used, and if shippers specifically request 36-foot cars these will be supplied although very few such requests have been received.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WHEAT—STATEMENT ON PRICE OF SALES TO MILLERS IN PRAIRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has his attention been directed to the question I asked his parliamentary assistant yesterday and which his parliamentary assistant said he would bring to the minister's attention?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to give the reply. The question referred to the price at which wheat is sold to millers for milling at some central point on the prairies such as Saskatoon. The answer is that the board sells wheat to domestic millers in the prairie area at the board's asking prices basis in store Fort William/Port Arthur, in other words at the lakehead price minus cost of freight from the point at which delivery is taken.

Mr. Tucker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the same formula used in regard to wheat sold to the millers for domestic consumption as when it is sold to them for milling for export?

Mr. Churchill: I think I would have to get an answer to that from the wheat board.

[Later:]

Mr. Tucker: Might I ask a further supplementary question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, which he might answer when he is answering the other. In view of the fact that wheat is being sold at Vancouver for $1.71 and a fraction and at Fort William for $1.60 and a fraction, the effect being that the Fort William price is 11 cents below the Vancouver price, and that the price to millers is based upon the Fort William price, will he look into the question of whether the basing of that price on Fort William does not in effect import an element of subsidization by the western farmers to the consumers or the millers?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, a lengthy and complicated question such as this might better be placed on the order paper, but I will take it as notice.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to ask a supplementary question arising out of the minister's answer to the hon. member for Rosthern. Why is the price to millers based on the lower Fort William price instead of the higher Vancouver price?

Mr. Churchill: I shall direct the question to the wheat board, who are responsible for dealing with all these problems, and the answer will be forthcoming in due course.

Mr. Tucker: May I say that I brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce hoping that he would deal with the whole question when he took it up with the wheat board, and I did not expect an immediate answer.

[Later:]

Mr. Argue: I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. When the minister is discussing with the wheat board the very important matter raised by the hon. member for Rosthern, will he consider discussing with the wheat board the possibility of establishing a domestic parity price for wheat as requested by the farm organizations of this country?

Mr. Churchill: Well, I thank the hon. member for his suggestion.

WHEAT—STATEMENT ON SALE TO INDIA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Monday the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner) asked for details of the arrangements made under the Colombo plan for the provision of $7 million worth of Canadian wheat to India. This wheat in effect is being provided free alongside ship and, as in the past, the costs of shipping the wheat are to be borne by India. Depending upon decisions which are yet to be made by the Indian government as to how much No. 3 wheat they wish to take and how much No. 4, the $7 million made available will provide between 4,200,000 bushels and 4,400,000 bushels. The Canadian wheat board, of course, is receiving the going price for such wheat out of existing Colombo plan funds.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister say whether a discussion was held with India as to whether that country might not accept a much larger quantity of wheat, in view of reports that India this year will be short of food to the extent of 2,000,000 tons, equivalent to 74 million bushels of wheat?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I might say that during the course of discussions between our representative there and the Indian government it was revealed that there is a very great shortage and a need of food grains. Demands for food are rising due to the progress of economic development, and at the same time some producing areas in India are expected to harvest less grain in the near future than was anticipated. I believe consideration will be given to conducting further transactions with India to meet the present situation. At the moment, however, they are merely in a state of consideration, and I am unable to say any more than that.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister agree to make this an additional contribution in excess of the Colombo plan payments that we are obliged to make?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend will realize, until the present discussions have achieved a higher degree of fruition than is the case at present I would sooner not say anything more in that connection.

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I think it is obvious that we are all in favour of helping India in whatever way we can, but how on earth did you get the sale of the wheat mixed up with the Colombo plan? I thought they were two entirely different things. I understood the Colombo plan was for capital assistance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not know who is mixed up, but I can say this. India is very willing to accept the grain in question as part of Canada's Colombo plan contribution, having regard to her economic position today.

ALLOCATION OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the resolution passed at the annual meeting of the Manitoba pool elevators asking that the method of allocating box cars be changed to allow a farmer to deliver his grain to the elevator of his choice? If so, what action, if any, does the government contemplate taking?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was always under the impression that questions of immediate urgency might be asked during the question period in the house, but we are getting many others. This is not a matter that has not been before the House of Commons in the past. It has been brought to my attention on several occasions during the last few months, and I realize the importance of the problem to the farmers concerned. This is a matter that has aroused a great deal of interest among farmers who wish to deliver their grain to the elevator of their choice. I have studied letters and documents with regard to the problem. It is under consideration, and I hope some solution that will be satisfactory to all concerned will be arrived at before too long.

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND—STATEMENT AS TO GROUNDING OF COASTAL BOATS AND TRAIN DERAILMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last the hon. member for Trinity-Conception asked this question:

Will the minister inquire into the grounding of two C.N.R. coastal boats lately, namely the Burin and the Henry W. Stone, also the derailment of a freight train near Stephenville, and report to the house?

The management of the Canadian National Railways advise that as operators of the Newfoundland coastal service they will, as a normal administrative course, conduct an investigation to determine if there was any negligence in connection with the grounding of these two vessels. As the hon. member already knows, there was no loss of life, and I am advised that the Henry W. Stone is back in service and that the Burin will be dry-docked for examination and repairs if necessary.

With regard to the freight train derailment near Stephenville, here again the management will carry out any necessary investigation and make whatever report is necessary in the circumstances to the board of transport commissioners.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

STATEMENT ON IMPOSITION OF TOLLS—COST PER BUSHEL OF WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last the hon. member for Meadow Lake asked the following question:

What will the government's decision to impose tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway cost the western farmer in cents per bushel on wheat?

The decision to impose tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway, Mr. Speaker, was made by parliament by legislation passed in 1951. The amount of the tolls is still under study, and we anticipate that tolls will be low enough to allow a net saving in the transportation costs of a bushel of wheat from the head of the lakes to Montreal. Precisely what the net saving on a bushel of wheat might be is not determinable at this time because the seaway is still under construction and the costs cannot be finalized.

With respect to the hon. member's reference to a decision to impose tolls, I should perhaps remind the house how this matter came about. It is well known that for many years the executive branch of the United States government was unsuccessful in obtaining approval from congress for an agreement with Canada for the construction of navigation works in the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence river.

In October, 1945, joint resolution 104 covering construction of the seaway was introduced in the United States Senate. This resolution contained a requirement that tolls would be imposed to make the seaway project self-liquidating. On April 24, 1947, the then secretary of state for external affairs, the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent), announced in the House of Commons Canadian concurrence in principle to the seaway being made self-liquidating through the charging of tolls.

In July of the same year joint resolution 192 was introduced into the United States House of Representatives providing for approval of the executive agreement of 1941, but requiring the President to obtain satisfactory assurance of Canadian agreement to the self-liquidating principle by charging tolls.

The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act was passed by parliament, and received royal assent on December 21, 1951. On May 13, 1954, the President of the United States signed the Wiley-Dondero Act which established the St. Lawrence seaway development corporation as the agency to construct the United States portion of the seaway. Both of these acts provide for the establishment of tolls to make the project self-liquidating.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—STATEMENT ON REPORTED DECISION TO KEEP SHIPPING LANES OPEN IN WINTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): May I draw the attention of the Minister of Transport to a question which was asked yesterday, when the minister was busy at other functions, by the hon. member for Saguenay about winter navigation in the lower St. Lawrence.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have an answer to that question and a similar question from the hon. member for Laurier, notice of which was very kindly sent to me. As the questions are similar I can answer the two at the same time.

In answer to the hon. member's question I may say that the press dispatches are correct in essence, if not strictly accurate in detail. The department, which in past winters has lent assistance to commercial shipping bound for the lower St. Lawrence and gulf points, hopes to be in a position to provide a greater degree of icebreaker support, in that one and possibly two additional vessels will be available. They will assist shipping to the limit of their capabilities. In the matter of ice aerial reconnaissance, it is expected that the service of past years will be continued, and plans are now under consideration for an extension of the service to provide improved coverage.

Mr. C. A. Cannon (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): May I ask a supplementary question. Would the minister consider extending that work to the Magdalen islands, to keep navigation open?

Mr. Hees: Plans for icebreaking in the lower St. Lawrence are now under consideration, but have not been put in final form as yet.

Mr. Lesage: Are the new icebreakers the minister just mentioned for service in the lower St. Lawrence under construction now, or are they in service?

Mr. Hees: I am not familiar with the exact icebreakers to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. Lesage: The ones the minister mentioned.

Mr. Hees: I believe they are ready to operate at the present time.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet asked me a supplementary question regarding the one or possibly two icebreakers we expect to be using this year in the lower St. Lawrence river. One is the Montcalm, which it is expected will operate in the lower St. Lawrence river. The other is the Labrador, which is at present in drydock. It is hoped to have it in operation by the end of January at the latest.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—REQUEST FOR EARLY CONSTRUCTION OF YARD AT MONCTON, N.B.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of today's announcement by Canadian National Railways of the construction of a $17 million railway yard at Moncton, will the minister urge the management, because of the high labour content of this type of work, that the work be commenced this fall to ease unemployment in the Westmorland county area?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I have not heard of the particular project, but if one is contemplated by the Canadian National Railways I shall urge them to bring it forward as soon as possible.

QUEBEC—WINTER NAVIGATION AS AID TO UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wonder if I could ask a supplementary question, not of the Minister of Transport but of the Minister of Labour, arising out of the second to last question. I noticed that the minister was present at a meeting in Quebec to deal with a solution of the unemployment problem and one suggestion made was that winter navigation would assist in the solution of the unemployment problem in Quebec. May I ask the Minister of Labour whether he or his officials have studied this method of assisting unemployment, and what conclusion has been arrived at?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I spoke at Quebec to launch the winter employment program which is undertaken by the people of that city through service clubs, the municipality and others who are vitally interested in providing employment during the winter months. I do not recall that I said anything about winter navigation in this regard at all, so consequently I cannot answer the question.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may ask a supplementary question, I did not suggest the minister had said anything. What I suggested was that, at the meeting he attended, the suggestion was made that unemployment could be solved in the Quebec area by winter navigation. My question was whether he or his officials had given consideration to that problem.

Mr. Starr: The meeting I attended was a luncheon meeting, and I was the only speaker. No one made any suggestions about navigation. I might say our department has not given the problem consideration.

Mr. Chevrier: I will send the minister a copy of the report.

[Later:]

Mr. Starr: The hon. member for Laurier was good enough to send me the press clipping to which he referred earlier this afternoon, in which it is stated that Dean J. M.

Martin, of the faculty of social sciences of Laval University, made the suggestion that winter navigation in the St. Lawrence might eventually help to bring about a permanent solution of unemployment. I think the suggestion has merit and, therefore, should and will receive careful consideration and study.

STRIKE OF RIVER PILOTS, KINGSTON MARINE DISTRICT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may ask the Minister of Transport a question. I wonder if he himself or his officials have been giving consideration to means of conciliating the strike between the pilots in the Montreal-Ottawa-Kingston district and the shipping federation of Canada?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not as yet have full information regarding the strike which has taken place in the Kingston marine pilotage district. This district covers the St. Lawrence area from Montreal to Kingston, and is a pilotage district under the supervision of my department, set up in accordance with the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act.

Apparently a large number, if not all, of the pilots are at present on strike. No advance warning of the strike was given to my department, nor were there any advance consultations with my department regarding problems which may have given rise to the strike. First indications received from individual pilots were to the effect that the cause was a heavy load of work, which is normal toward the end of the season; but subsequent information appeared to indicate that the reason was a desire on the part of the pilots to compel the government to introduce what is known as compulsory payment of pilotage dues.

A formal submission from the representative of the pilots had just reached my department at the time the strike took place, and there has not yet been any opportunity to consider its contents in detail, although I understand that the pilots' demands relate to, and indeed go farther than, demands submitted to and rejected by the previous administration over a year ago. They would involve compelling all ships which pass through this area of the river, Canadian and foreign, to pay dues to the pilots regardless of whether or not a pilot is required.

The action of the pilots would appear to be a violation of the officially authorized by-laws of the pilotage district, and the pilots have accordingly been warned that they have rendered themselves liable to the penalties provided in the by-laws. The official pilots' committee is being requested to come to Ottawa to explain its position forthwith, and immediate consultations are also planned with representatives of the deep sea and great lakes shipping companies whose vessels may be involved.

In so far as the effects of the strike are concerned, it would appear that these would be more serious with regard to deep sea tramp shipping which hoped to leave the great lakes at the end of this season, rather than on deep sea ships which have regular routes or on Canadian and great lakes shipping which is fully familiar with the area.

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you.

EFFECT OF DIRECTIVE TO NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Will the minister report to the house at an early date the effect of his directive to the national employment service in increasing placements of workers seeking jobs?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this is an effort on the part of those carrying out the directive the results of which are fairly hard to judge. However, if a survey can be made to ascertain the result of the directive and the efforts that are being made to carry out that directive I will be glad to report to the house, if such a report is available at the time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

U.S.-CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO JOINT AIR DEFENCE COMMAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): As we still see through a glass darkly, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the growing disquietude due to the present inscrutable and intangible arrangements with respect to the command of Canadian armed forces by General Partridge, would the minister make a statement to inform the house as to General Partridge's present powers, with respect to the disposition of Canadian forces in Canada and his authority with respect to logistics and other matters requiring decision in the operation of such forces?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I thank the hon. member for sending me notice of his question a few minutes ago, and if I can in any way clear up the situation by a brief statement, I shall be only too happy to do so.

First of all I must emphasize the fact that General Partridge does not in any sense command any Canadian armed force. The command of the Canadian R.C.A.F. units assigned to the defence of North America is vested in the officer commanding the air defence command at St. Hubert, Quebec. An integrated United States-Canadian headquarters was established last August; this integrated headquarters is known as NORAD.

General Partridge's authority does not extend in any way to the disposition of Canadian forces in Canada, nor has he authority over the logistics of our forces. In peacetime this integrated headquarters, NORAD, will be responsible for the development of plans and procedures to be used in war. These plans and procedures are to be agreed to in peacetime and to be ready for immediate use in an emergency. They will be reviewed, amended if necessary and approved by the chiefs of staff of the two countries, Canada and the United States, and government approval will be sought before any plans are implemented.

NORAD will be responsible for the general pattern of training and the general supervision of practice exercises designed to ensure the readiness of the forces and facilities in time of emergency. In time of war NORAD will be responsible for the direction of air operations in accordance with the plans which have been agreed to in peacetime. These plans will include the rules for identification of aircraft, for action to be taken if aircraft do not comply with those rules, and for the various methods designed to prevent surprise, thus providing time for consultation between service commanders and government leaders. One of the methods I have referred to regarding the gaining of time was the establishment of our warning lines in northern Canada which are now in operation. I emphasize the fact that the decision to go to war must rest with the government of this country and not with any general, of Canadian or any other nationality.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if, arising out of his statement, I might ask the Minister of National Defence if his attention has been drawn to a report in this morning's Globe and Mail in which the honourable and gallant gentleman is reported as having stated at a press conference on October 15 that NORAD commanders would have the power by simply pressing a button to send both United States and Canadian fighters, and eventually ground to air missiles, into action.

[Mr. Pearkes.]

Mr. Pearkes: After consultation with the governments concerned.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He did not say that.

PRINCE ALBERT—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF RADAR INSTALLATION

On the orders of the day:
