In that poor country of Mexico, in the two and a half years from the beginning of 1982 to the middle of 1984, United States corporate investment was $1.2 billion. In that same period of time, some $4.78 billion was sent back to the parent companies. That is nothing more than the bleeding of a poor nation. It is bad enough when they bleed a country like ours that is relatively well off, but they even do it to a poor country like Mexico.

I spoke about ground rules on foreign investment. Those ground rules must cover such things as how much profit is to be reinvested. They have to say that if you are a resource-based foreign-owned corporation with an operation in a one industry town, you shall pay a royalty into a fund to protect that town at a time when the resource has been depleted or the operation is not profitable. If the company wants to leave, there will be enough money there to ensure that the community will have funds available to be invested in some other industry and thus save the community from dying. That also needs to be applied to domestic corporations which think they can move into communities and pull out 20 years later, leaving them high and dry.

There need to be limits on how much the company can send back to the parent company by way of interest and dividend payments. There needs to be a requirement that a certain percentage of the total parent companies' spending on research and development must occur in the country in which they have branch plants. It cannot all be done in the home country. Without those kinds of ground rules, Mr. Speaker, we become nothing more than a territorial extension of the United States or of any other major foreign investor. Just as we have become a territorial extension of the United States militarily, we will also become a territorial extension economically. When you allow too much foreign ownership and control of your economy, you lose some of your economic sovereignty and national independence. It has happened before and it is bound to happen again if the Government insists on going ahead with this mindless pleading for foreign investment without there being sufficient ground rules.

There must be significant benefit to Canada Mr. Speaker. That is a key phrase. It was in place under FIRA. But the Government of those days did not make sure that it laid out the ground rules for FIRA to enforce. Unless and until we get those kinds of ground rules, we have to be more than once bitten and twice shy about foreign investment. We cannot just leave it to come and go for the sole benefit of an international corporation and to the detriment of our own nation.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that most Canadians are more concerned about our independence and sovereignty, our ability to exercise control, not only over our national policies as they relate to defence but over our economy as well. The minute we allow inordinate amounts of foreign ownership in one or more sectors of our economy, we have lost some of our sovereignty, our independence. No self-respecting parliamentarian can sit back and allow that to happen. We all believe in having good international relations. We are internationalists, but not at the expense of our own nationalism and our nationhood. We are not internationalists at the expense of our sovereignty.

You cannot blame the foreign investor or the foreign corporation for acting as it sees fit in the best interests of that corporation, when it is allowed to operate freely, or when there are no real ground rules for it to live up to. We cannot blame them; we have to blame ourselves. Successive free enterprise governments have, since before Confederation, gone on their hands and knees, begging and pleading foreign capital to control a major part of our economy. As a result, successive national Governments were immobilized in their ability to deal with booms, busts or anything in between as they ran the risk of incurring the anger of the Government of the nation where those foreign corporations were located. The United States has a long history, as did the British, French and German colonial powers, of exercising its power over countries like Canada at any time it thought its corporations and their investments in Canada might in any way be inhibited or reduced. The United States Government has always, as a matter of policy, be it Democratic or Republican, gone to bat for the major corporations which have controlled anywhere up to 90 per cent of any one sector of our economy.

I hope the Government will reconsider and present to the committee, if, as and when this Bill reaches it, a set of ground rules that we can all support. Then this so-called Investment Canada will be an even stronger agency than FIRA and it will be able to deal impartially with foreign investment for the benefit of our own country.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I am not here in the Chamber just because I wanted to see you again, although it is always a pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. de Jong: You guys can hold hands somewhere else.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When I see the experience, diligence and good judgment represented in the Chair, it gives me the confidence I need in knowing that I am going to get a fair hearing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Now they have changed.

• (1650)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I was just saying some generous things about your deputy, which you can read in Hansard. I have respect for the Chair, and particular respect for an old friend. However, that is not the reason I am here.

I am here because I am concerned, as are the members of my Party, with the unecessary haste with which the Government is treating this Bill, which is a very important piece of legislation. I am concerned about the methods it is using to curtail free debate and unduly accelerate its passage through the House of Commons.

At the outset I would like to congratulate those in our quarter of the House who have said a great deal in response on the merits of the Bill. I speak particularly of my old friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy); my seat-mate, the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), and the Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), who have had a good deal to do with the mobilization of debate from our quarter of the House.

Mr. Benjamin: Don't forget the Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien). He did a good job too.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He did a good job this afternoon, as did the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

This legislation was not really introduced in the House of Commons. It was introduced one night in New York City before the American investment banking community.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): At that time the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that this country is open for business again. I had never felt that the country had ever been closed to business. I do not stand in the shadow of the Prime Minister in wanting to enhance and improve our trading relationship and friendhip with our great neighbour, the United States. On other occasions I have said to him that I do not envisage our relationship with the United States on the continent of North America to be one of proprietor and tenant, but, rather, one of two equal co-tenants sharing the resources, future and environment of the continent. Any enhancement of our relationship with our neighbour should not be made at the expense of an independent foreign policy for Canada, our political sovereignty, or our economic and cultural integrity. Those are the issues at stake in this particular Bill.

I said that I did not object to the Prime Minister saying that this country is open for business. However, I say once again, as I have said in the House and across the country, that Canada is not up for sale.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am concerned, as are my colleagues, that the Government is not seriously considering its relationship with the United States in matters of defence. It is accepting, almost blindly, what the U.S. Secretary of Defence may say or the Pentagon may dictate. We have already spoken about the extension and destabilization of our weapons systems into star wars research.

Last week we in the House of Commons experienced the extraordinary phenomenon of my having to put a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) following a committee session on Thursday during which the Conservative Members of the standing committee refused to allow the text of a treaty to be signed with the United States to be revealed to other Members of Parliament on that standing committee. I met the U.S. delegation which came to Ottawa on Monday to sign that treaty. I said that I was not in a position to make a comment because I had not had an opportunity to read the treaty. I said that at the appropriate time we would want to know what concessions had been made to Alaskan fishermen that changed that treaty from the text which was defeated by the United States Senate two years ago.

I bring that to your attention as a relevant example, Mr. Speaker. This disregard for Parliament is without precedent. A treaty involving the fishermen on the West Coast was signed in Ottawa without any Member of Parliament or standing committee of the House of Commons having an opportunity to review it. I concede the argument of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans that constitutionally the executive of Cabinet has the power to sign a treaty unless it has legislative consequences upon which Parliament or the provinces must act. However, a treaty is an important document. It has more validity and strength than a mere agreement, an exchange of notes or a contract. It binds two countries.

I have had some experience in negotiating treaties. I had the honour of being on the negotiating team for the Columbia River Treaty. The Hon. Paul Martin was the Secretary of State for External Affairs at that time and I was parliamentary secretary to the late Arthur Laing, whose riding of Vancouver South is now represented by the Minister of Fisheries. We took the position that the Columbia River Treaty need not be before Parliament for ratification as it had to go before the United States Senate under our constitutional precedents. Yet the treaty was of such importance that we sent it before the Standing Committee on External Affairs. The committee examined the treaty and heard witnesses on it for six weeks in order to convince the Canadian public that it was in the best interests of Canada.

This present treaty involved very sensitive issues. It involves the livelihood of the fisherpeople on the West Coast of the country as well as the sports fishermen. This treaty, involving a very important industry in British Columbia, has not even reached the floor of the House of Commons or a standing committee. That attitude is infectious in the Government. Moving that the previous question be put at this stage in the debate reflects the same disregard for the House of Commons.

This is the first major original piece of legislation brought to the House by the Government. It raises more questions than it answers with respect to foreign investment. It raises serious questions which need to be debated by the House. These questions have been brought to your attention and amply outlined by my colleagues. Are the levels of the review procedures too high? What is the impact on small Canadian independent business? What are the implications of the change in the benefit test from a "significant" benefit to Canada to a "net" benefit to Canada? These words may have a great consequence on the way in which this legislation will operate.

When we look at the assessment factors we see the same five factors as in the earlier legislation plus the inclusion of the words, "compatibility with cultural policy and effect on international competitiveness". What do those words mean? We have had insufficient review and explanation from the Government on that. Yet they are absolutely crucial to the operation of this legislation because they are the factors upon which the agency bases its assessment.

What about the review process itself? What about the words "culturally sensitive factor"? The reserve power to review any investment, regardless of size, in culturally sensitive factors, is subject to that review process. What does "culturally sensitive" means? Once again there has been insufficient explanation given.

The issue of job creation was handled very eloquently by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry. The Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) says that this legislation will bring investment flowing into the country, and thereby jobs. That is merely an assumption which has not been proven. As my colleague said, when the New York investment banking community was asked by members of the media from this country whether that would be the fact, they said no. This Bill will not change market factors or the unused industrial capacity in this country which militates against the investment we like to see. This piece of legislation will not change the debt-equity ratio of some of our major concerns for our smaller businesses, several hundreds of thousands of which were ravaged by the recession in this country. There is nothing in this Bill to encourage Canadian investment, yet the title of the Bill is "Investment Canada". That point was made very succinctly by my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides.

• (1700)

[Translation]

The power to review foreign investment now belongs to a single minister, namely, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), a minister who does not really believe in regional expansion or in such a policy. Should we allow a single minister to hold a monopoly over the approval of foreign investment in Canada? That is a risk I do not care to run.

Several Hon. Members have indicated that the Minister is absent.

Mr. Speaker, this House is now debating a major piece of legislation. But the Minister responsible for it is not here. He was absent from the House on several occasions. He is never here! The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) has indicated that, as Minister of Finance, he used to pilot from his seat any piece of legislation from his department. I, too, as a former Minister of Justice and later as Minister of Finance, sat here days on end, attending debates on legislation I was responsible for, because I held Parliament in high respect, because I had respect for this forum of the nation, and because I had consideration for the elected representatives of all parties, each Hon. Member representing his or her many constituents. But the Minister responsible is not here. Ministers of the Crown are not there, except for a lone one.

Mr. La Salle: But he is a good one.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He has been here for a long time. He is having problems in his riding with hog producers, but that is a different story. Only one minister . . . but not the Minister responsible, not the Prime Minister.

Decisions in this area used to be taken by the Cabinet as a whole. I am aware of the Minister's approach concerning our Crown corporations. He favours the clearance sale approach. He has not even determined under what terms Canadair, de Havilland, Eldorado Nuclear and Teleglobe Canada would be sold. Who would be the eligible buyers? At what price? What protection would there be for Canadian technology and, more importantly for Canadian workers, men and women? He does not say. Are we going to let that same minister control all by himself all foreign investment coming into Canada? What a risk. Well, the House would not have the time to hold a debate. Why is there not at least a committee of ministers? Why has the Minister of Finance no input in this regard?

Contrary to what the Minister had promised, there was no public consultation. We hear constantly in the House about this new government of consultation. It is eternal consultation to try and reach a consensus, but consultation without leadership. But in this area, there is no consultation. With the Americans maybe, but certainly not with Hon. Members of this House.

[English]

There has been no public consultation. The Government seems to be more concerned about pleasing the bankers on Wall Street, New York than the baker on Main Street, Canada.

I come now to the motion. Why is the Government so afraid of the Opposition that it has had to impose this heavy-handed measure to end the debate? The back-bench Conservative Members were elected from all parts of Canada with a huge majority and a massive mandate from the people of Canada. Why do we not hear from them? All that we hear is the flipping of the fins. Whenever the House Leader gives them the word, there is a standing ovation and applause for the Prime Minister.

There have been only 23 hours of debate on an issue of vital importance to Canadians. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) was here, but he has left the Chamber.

Mr. Lewis: He is right there.

Mr. de Jong: We are working.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister and the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) who just spoke will recall that there were over 400 hours of debate on the Crow legislation. The people of Canada focused on an issue that was of great importance, particularly to the western provinces. There were 400 hours of debate on that legislation, but only hours of debate on this legislation which is of very great significance to this country. Of those 23 hours, according to the rules, there were 11 hours used by Liberal speakers prior to this afternoon, 9.2 hours taken up by the New Democratic Party, and 3.2 hours used by the Conservative Party. Divide

3.2 hours by 211 Members and it shows a great individual contribution, doesn't it?

Mr. Axworthy: About 48 cents a day.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Where is the respect for Parliament?

The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has the responsibility for the committee on the reform of Parliament. No one on this side doubts his sincerity. We can recall the Conservative Members, when in opposition, calling for an enhanced role of the Member of Parliament. I believe in that enhanced role because each one of us is elected individually by people in this country, in ridings composed of 80,000, 100,000 or 120,000 people. I respect every Member in this House and while I do not think there is a single Member I dislike, I have not had an opportunity to meet this new faceless mass, these new Conservatives. I cannot judge them because no one gets up to speak. No one says anything. Perhaps they are still in awe of this Chamber or in awe of you, Mr. Speaker. I know that you gave these new Members indoctrination lessons to the House of Commons. It is a privilege to be elected here, and the greatest honour for any citizen is to receive the tribute of being elected by one's peers to the House of Commons of Canada.

We are proud of that and we have exercised our rights. I call on Conservative Members to retrieve their dignity and their independence as Members. Show your constituents that you are not nameless, faceless and anonymous cyphers sitting in the House of Commons. Their constituents elected them, yet there have only been 3.2 hours of debate in 14 speeches.

Mr. Jepson: The people have spoken. Why don't you listen?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The people have spoken but they expect you to speak. The people of London wanted you to speak. You ought to get up.

We do not have a government by referendum or a government by plebiscite whereby the citizens of this country would be expected to vote on every piece of legislation. They elect each one of us to cast our best judgment, use our best experience and contribute our best eloquence to the consideration of legislation in the House of Commons. Those Conservative Members across the way have been derelict in their duties with respect to this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Dick: Let us vote.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Where is that great respect for Parliament? This is the Government's first major Bill, and yet it is using closure. The Conservatives still have an opportunity to contribute to this debate because it does not have to close until all those who wish to speak have risen.

I recall, as you will, Mr. Speaker, what the Conservatives said when, after hours and hours and weeks of debate, closure occasionally had to be applied. The Conservatives said that the use of any measures to limit debate was the end of democracy and threatened the survival of the House. Now the shoe is on the other foot. Now, suddenly, closure after 23 hours of debate is a good thing. Now the great leaders in the fight for the rights of Parliament have become the great followers of a Government showing utter disdain for the rights of Members of this House where even the Minister responsible for piloting the legislation does not do you, Mr. Speaker, nor us the courtesy of appearing to hear what we have to say.

• (1710)

The Tories have abandoned the principles they said they would uphold. Why closure, Mr. Speaker? I do not think they have any other legislation available.

Mr. Dick: It is not closure. Do you not know the difference? Read the rule book.

An Hon. Member: It is the rattle of the chains over there.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They know this fellow well in the Ottawa Valley. The trouble is that they do not know him well enough yet.

Mr. Dick: But they re-elect me.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): May I, through you, Mr. Speaker—and I hope you will use your indulgence here, because none of the government Ministers except the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) are present—ask you to tell them that we are not going to be pushed around? Would you tell them that we are going to examine this Bill in committee, carefully. We are going to call witnesses. We are going to alert the public of Canada as to what this Bill is all about.

Mr. Young: We will not be silenced.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Will you tell them, Sir, that this type of guillotine is not the end of this issue. Will you tell them that this is a very bad indicator and sign of how the Tories want to treat future legislation but before your Honour by putting the guillotine on this very important first major piece of legislation introduced by the new Government. We are not going to let the Government hide the legislation behind draconian motions to end debate. We are not going to be silent on this issue. We are not going to roll over and play dead, like the Tory back-benchers are doing. The Minister of Transport smiles. He is lucky he is on the front bench. He is very lucky he is on the front bench.

Mr. Johnston: He is also on the front burner.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He may be putting rail transportation on the back burner—

Mr. Mazankowski: We have so much talent in the back, I cannot leave my seat.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister has so much talent in the back that he cannot even see it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let me tell the Minister of Transport that he does not have to feel any threat from his back-benchers. They are not saying anything. He has only one guy to worry about.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: The lord high executioner.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): At any rate it has been a privilege to be before you and to see these empty benches across the way. It is a great experience to hear those fins flap every Question Period. But, by God, let us hope that the Tory back-benchers wake up to their responsibilities as Members, or else the people will be asking questions. And then there is the sitting behind the curtains. Remember the time when one used to be able to smoke behind the curtains? One cannot do that anymore. Let me tell them over there to come out here in half an hour. We will have the vote. Remember that the vote is not the full exercise of a Member's responsibility here in the House of Commons. We hope we are going to hear something more from the Tories. I will sit down so as to let that happen. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for coming back to your chair.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the motion of Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg), seconded by Mr. Fontaine:

That the question be now put.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour, please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed, please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mrs. Tardif) which was agreed to on the following division:

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications) moved, seconded by Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth), that Bill C-20, An Act to amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may point out that the motion requires two Ministers, not one Minister and one Parliamentary Secretary.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: It is normal, when there are two Ministers in the House, that a Minister moves and a Minister seconds. There is no other requirement that I know of in the Standing Orders. When a Bill is being moved, a Minister must move it, that is true; but there is no limitation I know of on who can be the seconder. I can seek another seconder. If the Hon. Member is worried about the Parliamentary Secretary being the seconder, then some other Hon. Member may second it, if that is the issue.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have only been here for 12 years but I have seen an occasion when it takes at least two Ministers to propose and second a Bill which entails expenditures. I believe they can do it with unanimous consent and we would not withhold consent as long as there was unanimous consent to do it. In other words, I would not want to create a precedent.

Mr. Speaker: My problem is that I know of no rule which prevents it, so I do not see a need to do it by unanimous consent. However, if it suits the House to do it that way, we will do it that way.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, by providing a veritable framework for this country's economic, intellectual and cultural pursuits, our national telecommunications and broadcasting system is undoubtedly one of the strongest ties that bind Canadians together.

This system, which is unequalled in the whole world, is one of our most brilliant achievements and embodies the prophetic vision of men like Sir John A. Macdonald and R. B. Bennett. It is also the result of active co-operation between the private and public sectors, which together have taken advantage of new technologies and have harmonized their efforts with those of our regulatory agencies.

The Bill to amend the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission Act, Bill C-20, marks an important phase in the development of telecommunications in Canada. The purpose of this Bill is, basically, to clarify and regulate the sharing of powers and to seek a proper balance between the Government's objectives and those of the regulatory agency and our telecommunications system.

Before going into the details of this Bill, I would like to touch briefly on the history and present situation of telecommunications, legislation and regulatory measures in this country.

Canada's broadcasting policy has been evolving ever since the first radio broadcast in 1919. In the twenties, radio broadcasting was developing so fast that there was utter confusion on the airwaves, and it became clear that a set of regulations would be needed. In 1928, the first Canadian Royal Commission on Radio Broadcasting was formed.

The Royal Commission, chaired by Sir John Aird, recommended setting up a national broadcasting system. A report was submitted in 1929 under the Liberal Prime Minister Mackenzie King, who was unable to act on the recommendations before the end of his term. It was therefore up to the Progressive Conservative Government under Prime Minister Bennett to act, which it did by tabling the first Canadian legislation on radio broadcasting in the House of Commons.

Here is what the Prime Minister said when he tabled the broadcasting Bill:

This country must have absolute control over Canadian broadcasting, without interference or influence from foreigners. Without such control, broadcasting cannot be the vehicle to convey national aspirations and unity. Only state ownership of the system will guarantee the people of this country, without reference to class or locality, equal benefits from broadacsting.

He went on to say:

It may be that in the future, when science is even further adanced, it will be desirable to make other arrangements.

It was therefore the Progressive Conservative Government of R.B. Bennett which established the predecessor of the CBC, then the Canadian Broadcasting Commission.

When the Conservatives took office in 1957, they came to the conclusion that the Broadcasting Act, dating back to the former Bennett Conservative administration, was already 22 years old and no longer met current needs. The private sector had expanded considerably and was anxious to play a larger role in the growing broadcasting system. The public sector, acting as both regulatory agency and broadcaster, was in a position to regulate its own competitors. Such blatant conflicts of interests could not be perpetuated.

The Diefenbaker Government therefore took steps to steer a new course in the broadcasting field. It introduced a piece a legislation which, for the first time, made a clear-cut distinction between regulatory and broadcasting operations. It established the Board of Broadcast Governors, which was eventually replaced by today's Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission, the CRTC.

As to the CRTC, it was set up in two stages: First, the Canadian Radio-television Commission was created by Parliament in 1968 under the Broadcasting Act, replacing the Board of Broadcast Governors. Second, the responsibility for regulating telecommunications was transferred from the Canadian Transport Commission to the Canadian Radio-television Commission in 1976, under the Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act.

The Commission's major responsibility is to regulate and supervise all aspects of the Canadian broadcasting system for the purpose of implementing the broadcasting policy stated in Section 3 of the Act. Section 3 states, among other things, and I quote:

—the objectives of the broadcasting policy for Canada . . . can best be achieved by providing for the regulation and supervision of the Canadian broadcasting system by a single independent public authority.

Following the Second World War, the technology of telecommunication has undergone constant and important changes in all aspects. By reason more especially of recent achievements in computer technology, digitalization and interconnection have brought far-reaching changes in our telephone networks, at a time when the telephone, telegraph and computer industries were opening up to competition. Technological progress has been such that the traditional differences between those services have been virtually overshadowed. In the meantime, Canadians, foreseeing the new prospects of novel technologies have been requesting increased services, at affordable prices, of course.

If the array of new computer technologies can on the one hand help us reach our goals with respect to telecommunications, whether for the assertion of our Canadian identity and cultural traits, for this country's unification, for a greater opening to the world, or for achieving closer links with our remote communities, it does on the other hand present legislators and regulating agencies, among others, with a major challenge, because this is actually the responsibility of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission.

Our legislative and regulatory mechanism, the essential part of which was implemented more than 17 years ago, could not foresee the current technological upheavals. Clearly it is outdated as to the cultural, economic and social potential of high technologies. If it is not to become a barrier against economic growth, technological innovation, and cultural development, we must at all costs bring it in line with today's realities, whether it is deregulation in the United States and its impact on Canada, or the spectacular developments in satellite services. In the area of telecommunications and broadcasting, the time for a change has come.

● (1115)

As my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), stated in his economic statement last November 8, and I quote:

There is a clear need for a national telecommunications policy to take advantage of the opportunities presented by rapidly advancing technology and the growing demand by Canadians for new telecommunications services.

Why is this? Because, as the Minister of Finance explained, the telecommunications sector, perhaps more than any other in Canada at the present time, offers opportunities for important market-driven innovation, if governments' regulatory interventions are kept to an essential minimum. Through regulatory reform, government can spur innovation and provide a major stimulus to the Canadian economy.

Indeed, for us deregulation will not mean unfair competition, because we firmly intend to proceed gradually and responsibly. Is telephony not in fact a field where competition is now proving its usefulness? Since the 50's, Canadians have enjoyed the benefits of competitive development by CN-CP Telecommunications and telephone companies of ultrahigh frequency facilities.

As far as terminals are concerned, consumers and businesses have had the option since 1980 to choose to purchase their equipment from a great number of suppliers or to rent it from their local telephone company. For subscribers, this competition means a much greater choice of sets, lower prices and a multitude of new ideas in phone design. As for switched services, CNCP Telecommunications obtained the right in 1979 to set up an interconnection with Bell telephone system, thus allowing them to provide this type of service as well for data transmission for instance. In 1981, this interconnection right was extended to British Columbia Telephone. The CRTC has just concluded a series of public hearings and is considering a request of CNCP for an interconnection with Bell and BC Telephone to provide long distance telephone services to the public. Faced with these increasing pressures and to allow more competition in a sector which has traditionally been very strictly regulated, the government has undertaken to review its telecommunications policy in 1985 and is now looking at the state of competition in this field.

Another example of a regulated sector is that of satellite signals. Since 1983, individuals no longer require a radio permit to use a dish antenna to receive programs which are not retransmitted. Provided they do not redistribute the signals, taverns and hotel bars can also use a dish antenna without applying for a radio or television broadcasting permit.

On December 20, 1984, I announced a revamping of the regulatory policy for satellite signals to benefit small television broadcasting systems and help badly served communities to gain access to a greater variety of programs. In addition to helping the television broadcasting industry and interested consumers, this initiative will make the Canadian television broadcasting system more flexible and stronger.

As for our commitment to continue to regulate where necessary, a good example of this can be found in the measures I will introduce to provide the CRTC with the necessary power to control abusive programming. I shall speak further on this question in a few moments.

There will be two underlying guidelines to our telecommunications policy:

First, everyone involved will automatically be consulted. In doing so, we shall certainly be breaking ground with regard to the development of our country's telecommunications policy. These consultations are necessary because, to paraphrase Montesquieu, "the intent of laws depends on whether you live before or beyond the mountains".

Secondly, in all cases where deregulation will not be prejudicial to the interests of Canadian consumers, we will deregulate.

The bill which we have submitted for your consideration is therefore the first stage of a basic review of the legislative and regulatory framework of our telecommunications system. Its passage is of the highest importance if the government is to have the powers it needs to make our regulations more flexible or even repeal them in the case of services that can be left open to free competition although some form of regulated competition could also be considered. The bill is in effect a general framework which will allow us to implement the necessary reforms and carry out the reshaping of our telecommunication policy.

Let us consider now the main provisions of the bill.

Part I of the bill amends the CRTC Act to enable the Governor in Council to give binding policy directions. Those directions would be laid before Parliament and it would have the opportunity to take them under advisement before they are formally put into effect.

Although the 1968 legislation setting up the CRTC did not generally grant that power to the government, I think it is necessary today to specify that the government and not the CRTC should develop the broadcasting and telecommunication policies. That position is supported by the provinces, the industry and the Commission itself. Moreover, it was ratified by the Lambert Commission and one of its specific recommendations was as follows:

> The constituent acts of Independent Deciding and Advisory Bodies contain provisions allowing for policy directives from the Governor in Council.

This principle was also supported in 1980 by a special parliamentary committee of the House of Commons on Regulatory Reform as follows:

> —that Cabinet can issue binding policy directives . . . to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission.

The relation between the government and the Commission has been under review for many years. If there is an aspect that the review and public debate have brought out, it is that the government should be responsible for the drawing up of policy and that the CRTC should be in charge of its implementation within the legislative framework set up by Parliament. The division of powers between the government and the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission reflects the democratic principle that the government alone is entitled to develop the main policies of the country because of its accountability to the electorate through Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Masse: The government having the power to give formal directions to the CRTC, will implement its policy in the telecommunication and broadcasting areas. If it did not have that power, it could have no influence on the development of policy and consequently could not be called to account. As in the present legislation, it could only react after the fact and ask for reconsideration of specific decisions made by the CRTC.

But, as Cardinal de Richelieu so aptly said, and I quote:

> Thus, Ministers of State must often remind themselves that it is more important to consider the future than the present, and that it is easier to anticipate problems than after one is faced with them.

I strongly believe that by making the government accountable for the policy to Parliament, we will eliminate a number of ambiguities such as the parabolic antennas, ambiguities which create major obstacles to the dynamic development of this industry.

In my opinion, the government must implement measures designed to encourage and help Canadians to take risks and compete in making telecommunications equipment, producing television programs and developing the many products that will be required by the new communication environment. The responsibility of the government to provide such a favourable framework goes hand in hand with its accountability to Parliament.

Part I of this bill also adds to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act Subsection 14.6, which enables the Governor in Council to direct the Commission to deregulate the telecommunication services which can be provided on a competitive basis. Invested with this authority, the government will be able to decide whether it is in the public interest not to regulate a number of telecommunications services within a monopolistic structure because of the competitive character of the market. I have in mind for instance the cellular mobile radio telephones. The nature of this technology is such that these services could be provided by competitive organizations. It would be therefore illogical to regulate, under monopolistic principles, services such as these which allow for a more competitive system.

Part I provides also that the Governor in Council may order a deregulation if he is of the opinion that a service is subject to a degree of competition sufficient to ensure just and reasonable tolls, rates or charges.

Mr. Speaker, I could not overemphasize the fact that, in our mind, the deregulation powers should always be used with a good measure of judgment. The government would have first to convince itself that such a measure is justified before ordering the CRTC to implement it.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate to all Hon. Members that while introducing a power to give instructions and a power to order deregulation, the government remains aware of the need to prevent any abuse. I should like to remind them that this bill contains four safeguards in this end: First, under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Government will not be able to issue directions limiting freedom of speech; second, the Bill specifically prohibits the Government from issuing directions in respect of the issuance of a broadcasting licence to a particular person or the amendment or renewal of a licence; third, the Minister of Communications shall consult with the CRTC before directions are issued by the Government to the Commission; fourth, to allow for parliamentary and public consideration of the directions, it is provided that such directions must be laid before Parliament and referred to the appropriate committee, and that they will not become effective until thirty days after Parliament was notified thereof. This measure will enable Parliament and the Canadian public to consider carefully all directions before they are implemented.

Parliament has a major role to play in ensuring that the Government accounts for its policies and facilitates the public's participating in the debate. I think parliamentary committees are the key to the Government's accountability. Committees can summon witnesses, including Ministers of the Crown, and ask for any clarification, explanations and guarantees deemed necessary. They provide an excellent forum for Canadians who wish to make their views on official policy known to their representatives. I am convinced that the guarantees provided by the Bill and applying to the power to issue directions and the power to order deregulation ensure the Government will remain accountable and promote healthy and active involvement by all Canadians.

Part II of the Bill provides for a new policy objective that will become part of Section 3 of the Broadcasting Act. This objective concerns programming of an abusive nature, and its purpose is to define the CRTC's responsibility in this respect. It will be an incentive to broadcasters to be increasingly aware of the problem, and here is the wording:

"(c.1) the programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system should respect and promote the equality and dignity of all individuals, groups or classes of individuals regardless of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability;"

I should think it is imperative to pass legislation to make absolutely sure that there is no room for abusive programs within the Canadian broadcasting system. The Speech from the Throne reaffirmed the Government's commitment to ensure that social justice in Canada would progress at the same pace as the needs of Canadians. It did contain an announcement concerning this measure which is aimed at eliminating those abusive programs.

In its June 1984 report, the parliamentary sub-committee on sexually abusive broadcasting recommended that we add to Broadcasting Act Section 3 a provision stating that programs must advocate the right of women to equality. I might point out that, besides guaranteeing the equality and dignity of women, this legislation is aimed at preventing all forms of vexations with respect to racial, national or ethnic origin, or else colour, religion, age or mental or physical disability.

Parts II and III of the Bill contain other amendments to the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act whose purpose is to clarify and simplify the regulatory process. Since in some cases the legislative provisions of those two Acts are definitely outdated, they must be amended to take recent progress into account.

For instance, in the Lount case involving Winnipeg's Holiday Inn, the Federal Court ruled that the current wording of the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act was deficient and must be amended so as to define the status of those systems which redistribute satellite signals, particularly in the case of hotels and high-rise buildings. Clauses 2 and 7 of this Bill are intended to alleviate that anomaly. They are very technical precisely because they will eliminate that kind of discrepancy in the legislation.

Clause 2, for instance, which amends the Broadcasting Act, provides that any person who transmits or distributes by means of telecommunication, otherwise than solely as a telecommunication common carrier or whether or not for any consideration, any programming received by radiocommunication is deemed to be carrying on a broadcasting undertaking. This means that individuals who redistribute satellite signals will be subjected to the Broadcasting Act. Similarly, Clause 7 brings consequential changes to the Radio Act in compliance with this amendment to the Broadcasting Act. Under such provisions, the Government and the CRTC would be empowered to implement the satellite signals policy which I announced on December 20, 1984.

Part II of this Bill also provides amendments to the Broadcasting Act to eliminate factors preventing the regulatory system from being more effective and cost-efficient. To that end, it is proposed in Clause 5, and I quote:

> First, to extend from five to seven years the maximum term of a broadcasting licence. This will give broadcasters an incentive to improve on their performance, in return for longer licence terms, and this will help reduce the regulatory burden.
> Second, to increase the CRTC's power to exempt people from the requirement that they hold broadcasting licences. This will reduce the regulatory burden imposed by the Commission in cases where it is neither useful nor necessary to issue licences.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to recall the major challenge put forth by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his economic statement. He more or less invited us to redefine the Goverment's role which should be first and foremost to bring about a climate favourable to our growth which alone will enable us to create jobs, promote innovation and get ready to face the changes to come.

The legislation now being considered moves us in that direction by giving the Government the power to instruct the CRTC to order the deregulation of certain services if necessary. This Bill will stimulate and energize the telecommunications and broadcasting sector for the benefit of Canadians everywhere. No doubt also that broadcasters and telecommunicators will take this opportunity to use imagination and innovation in the provision of services that would benefit from deregulation. Clearly, the new directions we are proposing will help us reach our main goals for tomorrow in the areas of telecommunications and broadcasting.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be taking part in a debate that will undoubtedly be the first of many on telecommunications, an area for which the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) is responsible. I know he has quite a number of plans, and it will be very interesting to hear about these new developments concerning deregulation and the Government's new powers to issue directions.

I was listening carefully to the Minister, and I would like to start my comments by wishing him the very best in his new capacity as Minister over a vital sector of this country's economy. I think Canadians are not sufficiently aware of the importance of culture in Canada and of what we refer to as our cultural industries. The Minister himself is a man of considerable distinction and culture, and today again, he impressed the House with his wide-ranging historical knowledge, his quotes from Montesquieu and Cardinal Richelieu, and quite frankly, I think I would rather not try to follow him over the same terrain, because of the obvious political risk involved.

I must say the Minister was both reassuring and a little unsettling. What we see here . . . I am not going to provide a history of the CRTC, I think the Minister of Communications has already done so quite admirably. I am trying to be as politically objective as possible, so since I agree with what the Minister said, I do not see why I should repeat it. It was a more or less straightforward history of radio and television broadcasting in Canada and the power of the governors. It is only normal that the Minister should give his Party a front seat, since he told us in committee that he was a worthy son of the Progressive Conservative Party. I am indeed aware of his affiliation with this great Party which has done a great deal for Canada, but I also know that the Minister is a product of another political party we have known, and that is the Union Nationale. I will therefore try to steer a middle course between the two and maintain a federalist and prudent stance in my comments to the Minister of Communications.

Mr. Speaker, what struck me is that no mention was made of one of his predecessors, the Hon. Francis Fox to whom I can now refer by name because if we examine carefully the present text of Bill C-20 and compare it to the Bill tabled by Mr. Fox on February 8, 1984, we see that the work done by Mr. Fox is being continued by this Government today. In fact, the original Bill, tabled on February 8, 1984, was far broader in scope.

• (1140)

Again I say that I have no particular objection to the fact that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has asked that this very complex Bill be split. Indeed, Mr. Francis Fox had in fact introduced an omnibus Bill since it had to do with telecommunications, TV broadcasting, the Canadian Film Development Corporation Act and the Radio Act. I expect the Minister will eventually introduce other Bills concerning those Acts. In the same measure, Communications Minister Fox had also introduced on February 8, 1984—as it happened, it was also Bill C-20—another part concerning the reorganization of Bell Canada. I think the Minister is quite justified in including that subject matter under a separate piece of legislation, Bill C-19.

We will not argue about that except to say that, as I am expected, and it is not always easy, I have made a comparative study of both measures, what I would call the Masse project and the Fox project, to find out where they differ. I will therefore make a few remarks on the differences I found after scrutinizing both Bills.

As I said, Part I of this Bill is roughly the same as Part II of Bill C-20 introduced by Mr. Francis Fox and which relates to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act. In his press release dated February 8, 1984, he explained that this part of Bill C-20—let us call it the Fox project—would amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act. For Hon. Members who might be interested, I have here this piece of legislation which was given Royal Assent on June 19, 1975. Since the Minister saw fit to refer to the good deeds of the Conservative Government, I might say that it was given Royal Assent on June 19, 1975, under a Liberal Government. I simply had to point that out to the Minister.

That Act amends, and I quote: "So as to enable the Governor in Council to issue general directions to the Commission, subject to certain limitations and considerations by Parliament. It also enables the Governor in Council to give executory directions to the CRTC concerning any question within its jurisdiction, except the issuance of a broadcasting licence to a particular person, or the amendment or renewal of a particular broadcasting licence".

I was going to say that the more things change, the more they remain the same. The bill would also require that the guidelines be tabled in Parliament and referred to a parliamentary committee for consideration. These guidelines would come into effect only 30 days after being tabled.

In this regard, I must tell the Minister that when the bill goes to the committee, and I have always said that I prefer the in-depth work done by parliamentary commissions, I shall have very specific questions to ask to find out what this means, because, as those who know parliamentary commissions in Ottawa will be aware—I prefer the term "parliamentary commission" used in Quebec to "parliamentary committee"—this bill will be examined thoroughly, and I shall insist on knowing exactly what the authors of the bill mean when they say that these guidelines will not come into effect until 30 days after they have been laid before Parliament.

What will happen if, when this bill is passed, as it will certainly be, the Minister takes advantage of an emergency, acting in good faith of course, to table guidelines in Parliament at a time when Parliament is not sitting, which can very often be the case? We have to know how this period of 30 days will apply. Will it be 30 days after the tabling of the guidelines or 30 days after parliamentarians have begun their examination? We shall look at this in detail in committee.

On the other hand, Bill C-20 as introduced by the Hon. Minister of Communications creates a new authority, which is described as follows in the press release of the Department of Communications dated December 20, 1984: " . . . authorizing the Governor in Council to order the CRTC to deregulate competitively provided telecommunication services, and even to direct the Commission to refrain from exercizing its powers and performing its duties and functions."

All this will be accomplished under Section 14.6 to which the Minister has referred and which was not included in the legislation introduced by the Hon. Mr. Fox. Until we obtain some explanation in committee, we can only wonder whether the new Minister of Communications and his government want greater power than their predecessors had planned, because those who remember Mr. Fox, and I shall say something positive about him, which does not necessarily mean that I want to be critical of the new Minister, will know that Mr. Fox had the reputation of consulting and of taking action only after a genuine consensus had been reached.

I listened to the debate today. The Minister said that he would have extensive consultations which would be taken into account. I certainly hope so because many people have written to my leader, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and to the Hon. Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) with copies to myself, and I have to reply to all of them. It is not easy. I have to write to Mr. Bureau, to Mr. Juneau and to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, without mentioning all the letters which came to me directly in my capacity as critic for my party. These people wonder why there were cutbacks without prior consultation. I have to take the word of the Minister. Politically, it is dangerous to pay compliments because you have to live with them later. I can see my whip over there, but I shall pay the Minister a compliment anyway. I trust that the Minister believes in consultations. I am confident of this. Until I am proven wrong, I always give people the benefit of the doubt.

However, we have to look at what happened since November 8. I was in Halifax last Sunday, and I must say that, addressing more than a 1,000 people there, was not an easy task for the Hon. Member for Halifax. I congratulate him. I think that he might appreciate it. The Hon. Member for Halifax (Mr. McInnes) did very well under very difficult circumstances. He was obviously embarrassed—because his audience was not really warm nor very sympathetic to the cause he had to defend—to tell them. Yes, we have to make cutbacks and we shall have to make more.

But all those people from the Nova Scotia Coalition on Federal Policy also told me . . . I will spare you the list of names. I have them all, and the program is in English because when things get somewhat involved, sometimes everything is in English. There are authors, writers, performers, visual arts crafts, art educators, Museum Galleries Heritage Societies, film makers, musicians, National Film Board, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and that extraordinary, that remarkable man, that author from D'Escousse, Cape Breton, Silver Donald Cameron, and Mr. Curtis Barlow, the President of the Canadian Conference of the Arts, who, by the way, is most anxious to have an elaborate meeting with the Minister. He told me how difficult it was, but he is an important man in Canada. He represents a whole group of Canadians who are interested in our great cultural industry. And I must tell you, Mr. Minister, that he is still waiting for an interview and that he would very much appreciate being consulted. I hope such consultation promised by the Minister will actually take place.

As I said earlier, the Hon. Francis Fox was very successful in getting closer to those "milieus" which are not easy ones. The Minister knows it now, because the creativity milieu is a very sensitive one. It is a milieu that creates so many things but often it is under the impression that it is getting little in return, because it is ignored in many Canadian environments. I would like to be their spokesman, their advocate, and I know the Minister will do it. I know it is also the case with my hon. friends, my hon. friend who was also in Halifax. The NDP critic, he was in Halifax also. Those people feel they are giving much to Canadian society, and they also feel, rightly I assume, that they receive much less in return.

Therefore, considering this ever-increasing control exercised by this Government over the CRTC by way of its new powers to regulate, we have a right to be somewhat doubtful. So I will stick to that for the moment.

● (1150)

No doubt this is why I noticed the Hon. Mr. Crombie, who had given very good support, along with the Speaker and Mr. Geoff Scott, and I mention their names because I remember what they said and then their names were used. Yes, this came from the Progressive Conservative Party, with respect to the independance of federal-cultural agencies, as stated in the Canadian Arts Conference Bulletin, September-October 1984 edition. This is not from me, it is from the Hon. Crombie, the Hon. Bosley, our distinguished Speaker, and Mr. Geoff Scott. They said, and I quote:

> We are convinced that the agencies and councils must be protected from changes in political outlooks, bureaucratic theories and expenditure priorities. We are now ready to translate into facts the efforts we made while we were in the Opposition—

—at the time. That is a statement which was made by my hon. friend opposite or at least signed by him.

> —by implementing five year plans and formal mechanisms of consultation—

I repeat that we have indeed been promised this consultation process. I am going to tell in a non partisan way to all those hundreds of people who have written to me that I have received their testimony and that I now speak on their behalf in the House.

Well, we are told on page 6 that there will be consultations. I will follow up on this. The Minister has made this commitment today and, knowing me, he knows that I am not the type to cause useless trouble, but I submit most respectfully that we have every right to remind the House that we have been promised consultations, as we intend to do in all civility, and I will be here to do so.

I should like to say that Part II of Bill C-20 corresponds to Part III of Bill C-20 which had been introduced by Hon. Mr. Fox and which dealt with the Broadcasting Act. I always return to Hon. Mr. Fox who, in his press release dated February 8, 1984, explained his proposed amendments to the Broadcasting Act. Because I know that some Hon. Members are interested, having asked me for it, I have brought to the House the Broadcasting Act which was adopted in 1967. For the information of the Minister who stated that three good things came out under a Conservative administration, I think that was under that great Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Lester Person, who I had the honour to know, having been elected twice to the House of Commons during his term, and to whom I am most grateful for having given to us this extraordinary Canadian flag which will be twenty years old on February 15, I hope that we will then unanimously pay tribute to our flag, for believe me, we were hardly unanimous in supporting this initiative in 1965!

The explanation given by Mr. Fox was as follows:

> (A) Redefine broadcasting and take into account recent technological developments to allow the CRTC to regulate the distribution of satellite signals;
> (B) Allow the CRTC to issue licenses for the operation of broadcasting companies; and

I note that section 3 of the Broadcasting Act has been considerably altered. We need to know why, but that question will be asked on some later occasion.

The question dealt with in section 17 of Bill C-20 introduced by the Hon. Mr. Fox is similar to sections 3 and 4 in the bill tabled by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse). Moreover, section of Bill C-20 reflects the comments made by the Hon. Mr. Fox on May 24, 1984 when he gave this very important explanation:

> The responsibility, as far as the contents of programming is concerned, rests with the broadcaster in accordance with the regulations of the CRTC . . . This amendment will indeed make explicit the Government's commitment to the principle that all Canadians have the right to programming which respects the dignity and equality of individuals and groups.
> This is how I understand programming which, in a given context, does not discriminate against the individual on the basis of race, national or ethnic origin, religion, sex, age, physical or mental disability

So, there is nothing new under the sun. I was under the impression a while ago . . . a colleague who just arrived told me: "But it is a new dynamic legislation." I had to reply: "Well, no, the minister has divided the bill. It is almost the same provisions and the same wording". We are not offended but it should be acknowledged that our bill was excellent since the new government which was democratically elected with a large majority—and I accept this decision—has decided to reintroduce it. But the minister has announced nothing new.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that those are exactly the same words used in paragraph C1.1 of the text now introduced by the Minister of Communications. Moreover, that amendment had been supported by the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, the Hon. Judy Erola. And, still according to Mr. Fox, the amendment, and I quote: "would provide a more clearly defined basis for the regulatory measures to be taken by the CRTC, to ensure that the broadcasting system contributes toward providing women and other groups with positive representation . . ." I realize my New Democratic Party colleague will want to elaborate on this issue and I will let her do so, because I know how boring it is for Hon. Members to listen to the debate and then have to repeat what was said. To continue my quote: "without however impinging on the freedom of speech provided under the Broadcasting Act or the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms introduced by the previous Liberal Government."

The Hon. Francis Fox . . . I feel he is still with us here in the House, and when I see his distinguished successor here today, I still have the impression that Mr. Fox is there because I am hearing more or less what he said when I read at the end of the Minister's press release: The Government hereby intends to respond to the concerns formulated by Canadians with respect to the impact of pornography and content with abusive tendencies, by giving the regulatory agency the power to act if necessary. I see that I wrote "careful" in my text at this point. Which means: do not exaggerate, but the fact is, there are people in Canada who tend to exaggerate. I would not want anyone to conclude that the Merchant of Venice is pornography. There is always the matter of balance, and I am sure that when the Minister issues his directions—when the Act will allow him to do certain things it does not allow him to do right now—he will keep that in mind.

Mr. Fox's comments, of course, preceded the press release by the Minister of Communications, who explains his legislation as follows:

> In the recent Throne Speech, the Government of Canada reiterated that dealing with the problem of sexually abusive broadcasting remained one of its priorities. The purpose of the proposed amendment to the Broadcasting Act which concerns this kind of programming is to allay public concern and follow up the recommendations in the report of the Parliamentary Sub-committee on Sexually Abusive Broadcasting, published in June 1984.

I have the distinct impression that the Minister and I . . . have been consulting each other. He said as much, so we agree.

We shall therefore be able to discuss in committee the extent of our agreement on the proposal in Clause 5 which is aimed at easing some of the regulatory burden and the provisions imposed by Clause 6. The Minister will therefore know my position when we get to the committee stage.

I think that at this point I will forego some of the further comments I was going to make, but I would like to add that Mr. Fox's plan also included changes in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. However, I suppose the Minister will get back to us on that in another Bill, and we will be ready to tackle that aspect when he does. The House will also recall that the Minister said there would be consultations and new regulations. So for the benefit of us senior Parliamentarians and for the benefit of the Minister of Communications who is listening attentively and—I want to thank him for staying in the House—I would advise him to be careful, because in the press release it says that the Department of Communications, under the co-ordination—that is what it says—of three consultants will probably, that is what I say, be working in close co-operation with the task force chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister, the Hon. Eric Nielsen, to determine any other regulatory changes that are to be submitted.

Well, you can imagine that we senior Parliamentarians are going to be very careful, now we know that the Deputy Prime Minister as well can start issuing directions on the matter of regulations and have them adopted by his Minister of Communications. I want to point out that this was said at the meeting of the Committee chaired by Mr. Gabriel Fontaine on December 4, 1984. We shall therefore be very cautious in examining these new regulations, especially if the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister has anything to say about them.

Part III of Bill C-20 corresponds to Part V of the Bill introduced by the Hon. Mr. Fox and concerns the Radio Act. This is therefore a repetition of the legislation introduced by the predecessor of the Minister, the Hon. Mr. Fox. For those who want to take notes, I have the Radio Act before me. This new legislation could, and I say this to the Parliamentary Secretary as the Minister is temporarily absent—but I can see that he is trying to tell me something.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, many of us have introduced Private Members' Bills. I would like to mention a few of them in the hope that the Minister might want to examine these bills introduced by individual Members who then sat on the side of the opposition and who are now Government Members, and some introduced by the then critic for cultural affairs. The Minister might decide eventually to examine these bills introduced by his own colleagues to determine what should be done with them. Here are a few of them: Bill C-301, in the name of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), Bill C-461, in the name of the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), the new chairman of the International Parliamentary Union who, on this very day, is receiving the visit of the General Secretary of the Parliamentary Union to sign the contract which will allow us to host the world convention next September. This has happened before under a liberal administration and I was the chairman of that conference. I was the one to send the invitation, but it is my friend the new chairman, the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta, who will open the world conference of parliamentarians in September 1985. I will attend as an observer rather than a participant, with some regret. But such is life in politics.

I also want to point out to the Minister that these bills reflect the need to protect young people against overly agressive publicity during childrens' programming. Since 1980, Members of Parliament have also made representations provincially to the CRTC. I refer to Bill C-595 introduced by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). If Hon. Members want to look at these bills, I have found all of those introduced from 1980 to 1984.

There is also Bill C-413, introduced by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (M. Orlikow), who is the NDP critic for communications, I believe, which deals with equal broadcasting time for opposition political parties. Believe it or not, there is also legislation on the educational use of programming, which was introduced by your distinguished colleague from Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), namely Bills C-236 and C-224. Of course, there is also Bill C-675 introduced by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), to forbid any discriminatory comment based on sex, which the Hon. Mr. Fox had already approved in a second statement made on May 24, 1984, amending his statement of February 8, 1984. If anyone wants to examine all these bills, I have them and I have also found the debates held about them.

I could go on. I do not want to waste the time of the House, but I believe I have a few minutes left. Bill C-20 will therefore be referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture which the Minister said was his intention when he appeared before the Committee on December 4, 1984. Mr. Speaker, at that time, the Standing Committee will have the opportunity to examine this issue. As a matter of fact, I believe that the Chairman of the Committee is here now.

So I am giving advance notice. I do not see why I should not give him a week's notice. I am not anxious to take my witness by surprise, something lawyers like to do. So the kind of witnesses we might . . . of course the Government will have its own witnesses, and the New Democratic Party, but I would like to mention their names, and I think the Minister may be surprised. These are not surprise witnesses, but they are very well known, and probably the best known of the ones on my first list is Prof. John Meisel of Queen's University, who might be invited to appear before the committee. I have a lengthy biography here, but I will spare the House the details. We may be able to get the committee to agree to invite Mr. Alan Borovoy of the General Council of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association of Toronto, whose reputation is certainly well-established, as the Toronto Star of November 8, 1983 said in a full-page article on Mr. Borovoy, the wellknown champion and defender of civil rights. So if anyone wants to know who the witness is . . . Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could also invite Mr. Fox, since today's Bill is so similar to the one he tabled in the House. There is a possibility. I am not saying we must, but he will certainly be on my list. Of course, there will be CRTC representatives. And I think it would be very unfortunate if we were deprived of the presence of the Minister himself. I am not going to put him on my list since it is obvious he will be the principal witness. We could also agree to invite representatives of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the Communications Workers of Canada, the FTQ, the Canadian Cable Television Association and experts in various fields, and listen to their representations. I have received submissions from people who would like to appear, but that will have to keep for some other time, because the submissions do not directly relate to this Bill. However, perhaps we will have the Alliance of Canadian Cinema, Television and Radio Artists, the Association of Canadian Film Craftspeople, the Association of Canadian Film and Television Producers—I will spare you the rest of the list.

The Minister tells us there will be new directions. We will have to ensure that these directions do not stifle the powers of the CRTC. I know the Minister of Justice has decided to listen to those people who advised him not to prosecute in cases that had been taken up by the CRTC. The House may remember a statement published in The Globe and Mail on November 24, 1984, in which the Minister of Justice actually boasted he was prosecuting some of the people who were finally being prosecuted by the CRTC. However, I understand that since then, the Minister has been conducting exhaustive inquiries across the country, and considering this fact, I admit that the arguments I intended to put forward today will therefore have to be toned down somewhat. I also want to congratulate the Minister for having a staff that is able to provide objective information. Thanks to the Minister's staff, I do not have to be as fierce as I intended on this particular issue. In fact, I think the Minister ought to know I found out about these consultations through his staff. However, the fact remains that these cases are not being prosecuted and that they should be. My colleague, the Justice critic and Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) referred to this matter, and for those who are interested, I may refer them to page 681 of Hansard, November 28, 1984, when there was a fairly lively exchange of views.

I have been informed that at the last federal-provincial conference, the provincial ministers wanted the Government of Canada to have more authority over the CRTC, and that is probably why Bill C-20 and its predecessor deal with this problem. The Minister is aware that it is a problem, because we want the CRTC to operate without undue political interference, the provincial authorities want to express their views at the political level and we must also respect the rights guaranteed under our Constitution.

I realize that the Minister has to perform a balancing act, probably because his Department is among those that are directly involved in this issue. He is expected to remain at arm's length, yet he is being asked to intervene. We will see in the next few years just how the Minister will manage to keep his balance. In any event, I can tell him as kindly as I can that we will be there to help him.

As you may understand, Mr. Speaker, people are deeply concerned. There were so many cut backs without prior consultation, but here they are today telling us that consultations there will be. As official critic responsible for doing that job honourably and honestly, I am in a dilemma which I might make even worse if I were to insist by pouring salt on wounds which the Minister finds very difficult to dress these days. He is under attack from every quarter because of those cut backs about which he probably did not have much to say.

I have no idea whether the Minister made the necessary representations to the Minister of Finance and told him: No, you can cut . . . but you cannot cut people who give so much and receive so little. Those people give much to our country, they make us proud and they give us our Canadian identity. That is what we must understand. There are two major survival movements in Canada. God knows that francophones are aware of the word "survival" and of the French fact. Yet the Minister must also realize that English Canada has a morbid fear of americanization. That is why the Minister should not and will not be surprised to find such a reaction in English Canada.

I know, and we are going to do our best to make people understand why it is that English-speaking Canadians are deeply concerned about americanization. That is why deregulation is a good thing, but it must not be carried to extremes either. We do need some protection. If we want our own Canadian culture—English or French—we must have safeguards, Mr. Speaker, for our neighbours can be intrusive indeed.

I want to assure the Minister that he can count on my cooperation in committee where this Bill will soon be under consideration. I cannot tell him for sure how many speakers we will have today, but when the distinguished chairman of the parliamentary committee—I know his name, Mr. Fontaine, but perhaps the whip might tell me his riding—

An Hon. Member: Lévis.

M. Prud'homme: —the Hon. Member for Lévis. I know that we will all get along in the parliamentary committee, first concerning the number of witnesses we will want to hear, then the number of sittings we will need to make an in-depth study of the Bill and make sure that we get what we want, namely safeguards for Canadians. We want to be sure that the CRTC has a watchdog so that people who might not be overly concerned about Canada's culture will be called to order—in an altogether civilized manner, of course.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have said enough this morning and I will let my colleagues have their say. Again I say to the Minister that he can count on our cooperation during committee consideration of this Bill and other pieces of legislation he might want to introduce in the House.

[English]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to address the Bill before us, Bill C-20. It is a very modest Bill in its size but that is not to say the matters it deals with are not important. There are principles at stake in this Bill, a small number of them, which for the most part are not going to be partisan or controversial. Most of the measures before us today we have seen before in the legislation which appeared last year but was not passed.

While they have their importance, given the recent cutbacks of and interference in the operations of the CBC, I must express some concern and frustration that we are not dealing with the more important matters facing us in the area of broadcasting. It is perhaps not fiddling while Rome burns, but I am a bit concerned that we are fiddling while Rome is closing down its stations and firing creative staff.

Those of us who are committed to a strong and vital broadcasting system in Canada know that it can be achieved only with a very strong public component in the CBC. Of course, that public component has to be adequately funded so it can do its job in both languages in television, and AM and FM radio. These are matters which we will have to address, so I look forward to the next discussion the Minister will bring forward perhaps even more so than discussing the matters before us in this Bill. We have to get into broadcasting policy and adequate funding if the system we are now amending is going to function in the way we want it to.

As to the specific provisions of Bill C-20, Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin with Clause 14.1. We certainly support these proposals. This will allow the Minister to issue policy directives to the CRTC. It is important that the Minister not have the power to intervene regarding particular applications before the CRTC, and there are safeguards in the Bill to ensure that.

I have had some concerns raised with me that these safeguards are not strong enough and perhaps the wording will have to be looked at in committee, but as to the principle, it is a sound one. The Minister is responsible to Parliament for broadcasting policy and he then responds to Parliament, comes before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture and answers for those policy directives. That is all part of our parliamentary system.

I now want to get on to the deregulation provisions proposed in Clause 14(6). These are provisions which we do not approve of in the Bill. We oppose those measures. Incidentally, they were not part of the old Bill which was before the House last year. This provision would give very broad powers to the Minister, expand them in an unacceptable way, to say that there would be no regulation in a certain area. This supposedly on the grounds that competition is adequate to look after the matter.

I just do not have enough confidence that the public interest will be well served with this very broad power of deregulation, which has been the trend in the United States. We have certainly already seen some very bad repercussions from that. We have a rather difficult situation here and it is quite different from the U.S. We have to be very careful of the public interest. Certainly the economics go against the Canadian broadcasting system, but we are already overwhelmingly foreign influenced in this area where monopolies operate and competition is severely limited. That means all the more power must be retained by the CRTC to ensure that the public interest is kept at the forefront.

To get on to some of the other measures, Clause 2 in Part II and Clause 7 in Part III are measures which would clarify the definition of a broadcasting undertaking in television and radio respectively. Clearly these will assert regulatory control for master antenna satellite dishes in areas such as hotels, condominiums and large apartments. We are concerned that individual households and small apartments be able to operate without regulation, but we certainly approve of the changes in order to bring regulatory control to this area and close a loophole in the law. This would simply serve to clarify a situation which should have been dealt with earlier, so we support these measures.

Another part of Part II refers to a matter being dealt with by a CRTC task force, which will be reporting early in February on the difficulties experienced by small and isolated communities in receiving broadcasting signals. This is a matter dealt with in the legislation. If the recommendations from this task force are adequate and suitable, perhaps they could be introduced at committee stage and incorporated in the legislation. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) will be addressing this matter in more detail later.

I have some reservations about another measure contained in Part II, Clause 5(1). This is a new measure to increase the period of licence from five years to seven years. This is somewhat in the spirit of deregulation. It makes regulation less effective by giving stations and networks licences for a longer period. They are, in effect, less accountable to the regulatory authority. This is not just an idle or academic matter. I think of the time when the CRTC licensed pornographic programming in pay television. It said that it did it by mistake. It had certainly been warned about the problem, but in effect it did give licences and discovered later what was involved in that. When it was criticized for this and the problem was brought to its attention, its response was that there was nothing it could do about it for five years because that was the period of licence and the time to address the problem was when the licence expired. Five years is a very long period of time for a licence. I would have reservations about increasing that period of time to seven years.

Let us be clear on the process of intervention at the CRTC. Intervention at the CRTC is one of the more popular sports in Canada. There is a very enjoyable atmosphere and an opportunity for individuals and groups to appear. In short, the democratic process is alive. The CRTC, in its ivory tower and all its distance, majesty and wealth, actually comes before the public and asks what it has to say about policy and what it wants to see in broadcasting. The public—individuals, specialists and groups—come with their concerns. This is a very healthy part of our regulatory process. Women's groups have used this process to protest sex stereotyping in the media and the pornography issue. The hearings have been very important in regard to religious broadcasting, children's broadcasting, and other areas in which the public has a vital interest and a great deal of knowledge. This very healthy process would be weakened by extending the length of time of licences. Rather than treating the public cynically and avoiding talking and listening to it for seven years, this intervention should be welcomed. The Canadian public, for which the broadcasting system exists, does have a positive contribution to make. It does this very effectively through interventions to the CRTC.

I would like to move on to the issue of the amedments in clause 3 of the Bill. These amendments were brought in as result of my Private Member's Bill C-675. That Bill was debated last year and referred to committee. There was unanimous agreement from the sub-committee which studied the Bill to making an amendment, which unfortunately could not be legislated before the House finished its work in June of last year. It is before us today in wording which is not exactly to my liking, but which is acceptable and will accomplish what is necessary. This is to add to Section 3, the purpose section of the Broadcasting Act, a new Section 3. (c.1). It reads:

> The programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system should respect and promote the equality and dignity of all individuals, groups or classes of individuals regardless of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability;

This is a very general proviso. It is stated in very general terms. It says "should" not "must". It gives a purpose which is consistent with the purpose section of the Broadcasting Act. It refers only to programming in general. It does not stipulate every program. It is not a very specific measure, but it does set out a purpose of some importance to us.

For this purpose to have effect there must be more detailed regulation on the matter. The CRTC has in fact introduced a regulation to that effect. The CRTC was very slow in responding to the problem of violent and severely degrading pornography. However, it did finally act and bring in a regulation. Once the CRTC was convinced we discovered that it was the Department of Justice that was holding back and causing problems. The CRTC was prepared to move faster. Therefore, it can be convinced. This regulation is in place which obviously must be if the purpose section of the Act is to have any effect.

I would like to bring the attention of the House to the omission of something which I think should be included. In my Private Member's Bill there was a clause which said that notwithstanding the provisions of Section 3, being the freedom of expression provisions, this more specific prohibition of abusive broadcasting would hold. The existence of a similar "notwithstanding" clause in the legislation would make it clear that we as legislators are perfectly well aware of the freedom of expression objective, and that we are qualifying it to ensure that another fundamental principle, that is, the dignity and equality of all people, is also respected. It would be clear that this is a qualification. It is not that we are disregarding freedom of expression, but that we admit that another principle is of considerable importance.

This section will undoubtedly be a matter of appeal to the courts. There will be people who will go to the courts and use the freedom of expression provisions of the Charter of Rights as their defence. I think it is important to give the courts guidance on this. I have a very specific reason for recommending that. Canadian courts have been notoriously bad on equality issues. They have been even worse when the equality was claimed by women rather than by any other group. There has been a long history from the Persons case to Laval and Bedard and Murdoch. These cases have shown that the courts have been insensitive to equality rights for women. It would be prudent to give very clear guidance to the courts that the equality and dignity of all people must be respected. There is a good reason for including this in the Bill.

The Réseau d'action et d'information sur les femmes had this to say before the sub-committee on sexually abusive broadcasting, which studied the subject matter of my bill, and I quote:

> Since our organization now has a charter that not only clearly asserts equality between the sexes but also provides for means to correct the harm done to women, it follows logically that broadcasting must conform to that new justice and that all abuse against sexual equality must be eliminated.

Therefore, this amendment to the Act contained in the legislation now before the House is a logical consequence of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I would like to thank all the Canadian men and women who supported me in requesting such an amendment to the Act. A very large number of Canadian men and women from all parts of Canada and from all parties in Canada have fought for better protection against violent and degrading pornography. They have fought as individuals and as groups, as feminists and as mothers and fathers. I would like especially to mention the participation of the Quebec Federation of Women, Media Watch, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the Réseau d'action et d'information sur la femme, the Front commun contre la pornographie, the Churches, the Catholic Women's League, specialists from the universities and the professions of Canada who helped us during the sub-committee meetings.

We have realized that the attacks against women and children by means of violent and degrading pornography are attacks against the equality and dignity of all human beings. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees equality for all Canadian men and women. Any kind of programming that infringes upon the dignity and equality of any part of humanity is an aggression against the value and dignity of all of humanity.

[English]

I am pleased to support this Bill in principle. Although we do want to see some changes in committee, we agree with the majority of its contents. The changes we would like can be made in committee. We will offer our support for this Bill as well as our co-operation during its study in committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to bring to the attention of the House that the length of speeches will now be 20 minutes with a ten-minute question and answer period, according to Standing Order 35(2).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, there is one particular aspect of this Bill to which I want to refer. It is the amendments to the Radio Act and the Broadcasting Act relating to regulating broadcasting in this country. The change to extend licences from five to seven years is quite interesting. The Minister explained that change in his opening statement.

The Bill gives the Government and thereby the people of Canada additional power to regulate or control the CRTC and the operations of radio broadcasting in this country. I wonder what powers the Minister or the CRTC have under the present legislation to prevent the closure of radio stations.

In the decisions which were made solely by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, it closed one radio station in all of its cuts across the country. My concern is that there appears to be no recourse unless the Minister were to include in his recommendations to the House for regulatory control that the CBC or any radio network must appear before the CRTC for a public hearing. I have two reasons for that opinion. When licences are granted by the CRTC to establish radio stations in small communities, that licence is granted upon the intent of the operator to provide full service. Occasionally, for obvious economic reasons, the operator finds it more reasonable to reduce that station to just a transmitter. Throughout the country we have seen the CBC do this and consolidate in certain areas and simply carry a signal on what is called low-power relay transmitters.

In other words, if the CBC or other private broadcasters are permitted, there will eventually be a network of stations operating from one central area while claiming that they are providing the same service as if there were local news and communications people in the community. In other words, what you would hear on the CBC is: "You are listening to a network of CBC stations".

That certainly is not acceptable today and will not be acceptable in the future.

In order to illustrate exactly what I am talking about in reference to the Radio Act and the Broadcasting Act, let me point out that there is a delegation in Ottawa who came all the way from Gander, Newfoundland. They are here to meet with the CBC. As well, I believe the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) was good enough to meet with them as well. They are protesting the closure of the CBC radio station in their community. Since its personnel are being moved to another location, the saving to the corporation in real dollars is a measly $75,000 a year in operational costs for that particular building.

When one ask the CBC why it made that decision, it has some interesting explanations. I had a three-hour meeting with the President of the CBC and the director of radio for the country. They gave me this second option which I referred to earlier. That option is consolidation, which appears to be acceptable to private broadcasters and the CBC. They tried to prove to me that there would be a better service in a community if the radio station was 100 miles away.

During that briefing they produced the ratings. Those ratings show that the particular station the CBC was closing had the best ratings from 6 a.m. until 9 a.m. of the three regional stations. It had the best listening audience from noon until 2 p.m. and the best listening audience from 4 p.m. to 6.30 p.m. In other words, the CBC, which does not sell commercials on radio, was beating the two private networks in that area.

I suggested to the CBC representatives during the meetings that they should look at those ratings to determine if location was not the reason why the ratings are so high, and to suggest that if it followed the same course of action that it has taken in Vancouver and other parts of the country, perhaps the ratings would drop. The fact is that this CBC station which is to be closed has higher ratings than other networks. Where else in Canada does such a rating structure exist? I repeat that the CBC is doing this to save a mingy $75,000, with the excuse that the federal Government has cut back its budget. It says that it has a cut-back of $75 million and that it must close a station to save $75,000. What kind of logic is that?

The point of the matter is that this particular station covers an enormous geographic area; not only Gander but all of the northeast coast of Newfoundland and the central portion. If that station and its personnel is moved to another location, say 60 miles or 100 miles away, there will not be that community identification or the identification that the corporation had with the arts community, music community or with local events. Right now that station is able to report the last town council meeting at Badger's Quay or Joe Batt's Arm. Obviously if they were located in a centralized area, they could not do it. That is why the ratings are so high.

There is another consideration which I brought up in the House. I am sure each Member remembers CBG Gander. I brought up on one occasion that the terms of union with Canada were being violated by the decision to close down CBG. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation took over the radio stations that were in existence at the time of union in Newfoundland. It just so happens that CBG was in existence at Confederation. After looking at all of that, we still have no recourse. The people in that community have no recourse right now for a hearing before the CRTC. They have no recourse because the Minister says that he really does not want to interfere. I respect the Minister for that statement, Mr. Speaker. The Corporation obviously has to settle its own problems. I have difficulty—and you can go back over the records, Mr. Speaker—when I read what the Minister himself said in the House. As reported on page 1007 of Hansard for December 7, 1984, he said:

> Since there was a risk that this administrative obligation would affect the CBC's general strategy and its long-term operations, I decided, in agreement with the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, that a consultation process was necessary.

Then he quoted a letter from Mr. Juneau which said that he agreed with this consultation process and that it was necessary. Then the Minister appointed three very able people and said that the senior officials worked together with "my special consultants". That is found on page 1007. Certainly that consultative committee had to examine the options for the cuts obviously. They had to in order to get the agreement with the corporation and the agreement of the Minister.

Then I must tell you what else bothers me, Mr. Speaker. I do not object to this in normal circumstances, but the Minister of Communications has announced unilaterally that he is going to expand French radio broadcasting in the Province of Quebec. The CBC did not announce it, nor the President of the CBC. I heard the Minister of Communications, I read his statements saying that is what he was going to do, using the same logic I am talking about now as it relates to CBC Gander. He says this is necessary. Why is it necessary, asks the Minister? The Minister said it is because not enough people are listening to the French CBC. He says: "We need more coverage in the Province of Quebec; therefore there will be some expansion in Quebec".

Getting back to the original question, what power do they have, what power do the people have whom I represent? What power does the Gander Town Council have in Ottawa today? What are they seeking? What can they do? They came all the way from Gander, Newfoundland, to Ottawa at the taxpayers' expense to do something about the closure of CBG which will save the CBC, I repeat, $75,000 a year. What recourse do they have? It is very fitting today that the Minister would say in the introduction of this Bill that the Bill gives the Government and himself the power to give instructions—to use his exact words, "power over broadcasting by the people through their elected representatives, power to govern, to give instructions to the CRTC".

I believe there should be power somewhere for the Minister of Communications to order the CRTC, in cases of station closures, in cases where it is private networks, or if it is the CBC where it closes down the station but still maintains a transmitter over the location, to hold an open hearing. It should be mandatory that there be an open hearing by the CRTC to allow interest groups in this country to communicate their case. If that were done in the case of CBG Gander and in several other cases across this country with the private broadcasters as well, the decision would be made by the CRTC that you cannot just stick up a transmitter under the licence that you have. In the case of CBG Gander we would be open the next day. It would not take a morning and an afternoon at all. It would take a morning, and the CRTC would order the CBC to maintain the service for which it is responsible in that particular community.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that I have not criticized the Minister of Communications today. I have in the past in the House but I have not today.

Mr. Prud'homme: Why?

Mr. Baker: My hon. friend asks me why. I am hoping that the Minister of Communications and his Parliamentary Secretary will intervene with Mr. Juneau with a request from the Gander Town Council, who brought petitions from all over the north east coast of Newfoundland, and tell the CBC not to close CBG Gander. Seventy-five thousand dollars saving is not an excuse to cancel an operation that serves the people of Newfoundland and serves them in a better manner, as the ratings show, than even the private broadcasters do. I am hoping from this intervention and my relatively mild tones today that the Minister of Communications and his Parliamentary Secretary are listening. If they take action to intervene, I will be the first one in this Chamber to stand up the next day and congratulate them.

Mr. Hopkins: That is the Liberal way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? As there are no questions or comments, I shall recognize the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards).

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, after having spent 29 years in the broadcasting industry, both in the private and the public sector, it is a privilege for me to speak to Bill C-20. I share with the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) his concern about the lack of logic and the attendant confusion which seems to attend every move or lack thereof of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Having visited New World Island and various other parts of that wonderful riding of Gander-Twillingate, I am well aware of the service that CBG has provided. I can assure the Hon. Member that his plea did not fall on deaf ears.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edwards: The broadcasting industry is one of words, thoughts, aspirations and of Canadian definition. I think it is passing strange that the very delegation which travelled to Ottawa on Monday to plead about the public sector cultural cuts happens to do very handsomely indeed in the private sector. I think it fitting to remark that Mr. Berton, one of the leaders of that delegation, will be launching on February 1, tomorrow, a magnificent new private radio series called The Canadian Achievers. As an Albertan, I hesitate to say that the series is sponsored by Petro-Canada. It will focus on Canadian heroes and achievers from all walks of life. This is private radio, Mr. Speaker, and it is an industry in which Mr. Berton and many of his allies do very well indeed. In a sense I think they are setting up un faux spectre, a straw man, a bogeyman, in trying to cry wolf in advance that there will be more cuts in the cultural and public communications sector.

It is time for a review of the entire Canadian broadcasting system. There have been many such reviews. I think it most fitting that the current review be taking place where it belongs and that is in the Parliament of Canada. I say that because we are the proper conduit of the will of the Canadian people toward the Canadian broadcasting system. The review is overdue because of the developments of technology and the rampant growth of the regulatory system in a legislative vacuum.

I should like to trace briefly the history of broadcast regulation in the country. Initially, regulation was deemed necessary in order to control frequency allocation in communication with ships and fishing boats at sea. Therefore, initially the regulation came under the ambit of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Later it passed to the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission, the precursor of the CBC, which took the regulation of private broadcasting under its wing. The same principle obtained when the CBC came forward as a creation of the Bennett Government of the 1930s.

In 1958, in response to the demands of equitable treatment on the part of the private broadcasting industry which up to that point had been regulated by its commercial competitor, the CBC, the government of the day, under the leadership of the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, formed the Board of Broadcast Governors. It was the first independent regulatory authority to govern both the CBC and private industry. In turn, it was succeeded in 1968 by the current regulatory body which was then called the Canadian Radio-Television Commission and now embraces telecommunications as well.

A few moments ago I mentioned the vacuum which has existed for a number of years in the whole area of giving direction to the growth of the Canadian broadcasting system. This vacuum in which the CRTC has ben operating has resulted in some grotesque rulings and some questionable decisions. I cite just one or two of them. The decision to license various pay television enterprises, which was taken less than two years ago, is well known to Hon. Members of the House and to the Canadian public. It was a decision which had no basis in economics or in actual reality. We have seen the shepherded shrinking of that system to the point where we now have in essence in the English language just one system across the country.

In addition, there has been a rather disturbing trend toward the wholesale licensing of frequencies in various communities across Canada. I say that is unfortunate. I may be challenged by my NDP friends opposite in that I may be accused of not speaking for free enterprise and looking for a cushy environment. That is not the case at all. The fact of the matter is that in the United States, which is a terribly over-licensed country, many stations do not have the resources to offer the kind and quality of public service for which the Canadian broadcasting system, both public and private, is justly famous.

As well, we have had a proliferation of questionable regulations in this legislative vacuum. That proliferation of regulations has led to quixotic and rather disturbing regulations being imposed and statements of policy being made by regulatory fiat, to the extent that third level interpreters of those regulations are dictating to Canadians what they will hear or see. In fact, they are determining in some cases what individual pieces of music are properly played by individual stations. That verges on an impingement on freedom of speech.

I should like to spend a moment outlining the provisions of Clause 1 of this Bill. The directive power which is proposed here would be used to ensure that the Government rather than the CRTC is responsible for setting telecommunications and broadcasting policy in the country. It could be used to establish general criteria by which the Commission could decide individual matters coming before it. In other cases it could be used to ensure that broad national policies on matters such as the economy are applied in broadcasting and telecommunications. Perhaps the pay television situation to which I referred earlier could be embraced within that.

One might ask what safeguards exist to prevent the Government from abusing the power of direction and from interfering with the rights of broadcasters to freedom of speech. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms would prohibit directions from impinging upon freedom of speech. As well, the Bill contains a clear limitation in that no policy directions may be issued in respect of the issue, amendment or renewal of a particular broadcasting licence. Further, the Bill provides for parliamentary scrutiny of directions before they take effect.

Mindful of the clock, I should like to make one or two further comments about Clause 5(1) and Clause 5(2) which deal with the extension of maximum licence terms. We have heard an Hon. Member opposite question the extension of the maximum term of licence from five years to seven years. The hon. lady suggested that perhaps five years was too long a term of licence. We are talking about a pretty sizeable industry. Just as our nation is looking forward to having some consistency and predictability of policy, which the Government is now providing, so are the broadcasting industry and the cable industry looking for some kind of predictability whereby they can plan their affairs over a longer period of time.

We are talking about an industry which in the radio and television sector generates something over $1 billion of revenue per year, with $492 million in radio and $833 million in television. Of course, much of that is advertising revenue, virtually all of it. We are talking about a large number of employees—in the private radio sector of the industry alone, 9,666 and in the television sector, 6,905. We are talking about salaries well up into the hundreds of millions of dollars. We are talking about fixed assets in the broadcasting sector alone of $637 million. In the cable sector, gross revenues in the most recent year of reporting were $535 million. The net profit after tax was $34.2 million, which represented a 5.9 per cent return on fixed assets of $579 million. The payroll of the cable industry is about $149 million, which represents 6,484 full-time employees.

Predictability is absolutely essential. To add two years to the maximum licence term of five years is a measure which I am sure the industry and indeed the public will welcome. With predictability comes the potential of profitability. It is only from profitability in the private broadcasting industry that creative programming can come about, that jobs can be created, that the Canadian identity can be reinforced and that indeed public service can be enhanced.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member should be aware that he still has seven minutes after three o'clock remaining as far as his speech is concerned. He may also have the 10-minute question and comment period, if he wishes.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

SPACE WEAPONRY

SUPER POWERS ASKED TO PREVENT ARMS RACE IN SPACE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on Monday in New Delhi, the leaders of six middle powers from five continents called once again for the United States and the Soviet Union to prevent an arms race in space and to halt the testing, production, and deployment of all nuclear weapons.

This initiative of the Parliamentarians for World Order was led by the Prime Ministers and Presidents of India, Sweden, Greece, Mexico, Argentina, and Tanzania. It is a follow-up on a declaration they made May 22 last calling on the world's five nuclear powers to freeze production and deployment of nuclear weapons, and to use the money saved to help ailing Third World countries.

This action by six prominent middle powers is evidence that mankind is not willing to stand by silently while the United States and the Soviet Union, locked in a power struggle, alone decide the fate of this planet. I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to reconsider their recent decision to support the United States star wars escalation, and to join this important initiative by their middle power friends and allies. In Canada this initiative is supported by the Canadian Council for International Co-Operation, the Canadian Union of Public Employees, the National Union of Provincial Government Employees, the World Federalists of Canada, Operation Dismantle, Project Plowshares, and Physicians for Social Responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

PAN-AMERICAN GAMES

LONDON, ONT., ADVOCATED AS HOST CITY

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement about an historic decision made last week, a decision which I believe has the potential to bring great economic and social benefit to Canada. The Canadian Olympic Association has chosen London, Ontario, to be the Canadian city to host the Pan-American Games six years from now. It only remains for Canada to be chosen instead of the one other Pan-American country applying.

The economic benefit to London, to southwestern Ontario, and in a broader sense to Canada, of hosting these games has been conservatively estimated at $500 million. The Games will provide at least 150,000 days of work for construction workers, and an estimated 400 jobs for the period before, during, and after the games. I ask, therefore, that this House and the Government of Canada work to ensure that Canada is chosen to host these games so that this great tourist opportunity and all the other prodigious economic and social benefits will in fact flow to our country.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

UNITED STATES PLANS FOR CHANGE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, we should have sensed something was wrong when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) flew to Washington right after taking office. One result of this trip was that a team of Pentagon officials came to explain the benefits of dealing in death, while the Minister of National Defence looked on and joked about throwing peaceloving Canadians in jail.

Next the Government showed it lacked the guts to take a moral stand on Cruise missile testing. Members opposite could not afford to offend Mr. Reagan when his Government was offering Canadian business all those defence contracts. Neither could the Government afford to speak for its people and vote for the nuclear feeeze at the United Nations, like the NATO Governments of Greece and Denmark. Then we found out the U.S. had not bothered to tell us they would be sending us a few nuclear death bombs or depth bombs during a crisis. The Tory Government's only reply was that we should trust our good friends to tell us when we needed to know their plans for our country.

Canada could not even oppose arms in space because our allies might lose their heads at Geneva and sell the farm to the Soviets. However, the real reason leaked out from—guess where—Washington, a few days later. Pentagon officials tell us they want NORAD to handle both star wars and the anti-satellite program. The Minister of National Defence reads us his reply from cue cards he borrowed from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). He insists that we are only discussing radar systems with the Americans. I am sure the Americans will tell us about the rest of their plans when they are sure we need to know.

FORESTRY

UPPER-GATINEAU REGION

Mr. Barry Moore (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement of great importance for my constituency of Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle and more especially for the Upper-Gatineau region.

Recently, a spokesman for Maniwaki said to the medias that the road construction project between Maniwaki and Témiscamingue had been dropped by the governments involved. He also said that research centre project would never be implemented in the Upper-Gatineau.

On September 4, 1984, Mr. Speaker, my constituents elected a representative who would protect their interests better than they were in the past. On Monday, January 28 last, I therefore met with the Minister of State (Forestry), the Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew and with his officials to to tell him about the demands of my fellow citizens. The meeting was positive and while there are no funds available under the forestry agreement now being negotiated, there are other possibilities which I will explore with some of my colleagues.

I am also hopeful as to the possibility of setting up a forestry centre in the Upper-Gatineau. The Hon. Mr. Merrithew has promised to include such a project in the negotiations under way with the Quebec government. For my part, I will announce any new development.

TRADE

UNITED STATES TARIFF ON CANADIAN SALTFISH

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and I have one thing in common. Both of our constituencies export saltfish to the United States. The United States Department of Commerce has imposed a tariff of 26.6 per cent on saltfish exported to the United States by the Canadian Saltfish Corporation in the riding of the Prime Minister and in my riding. The other tariffs range from 13 to 34 per cent for private companies exporting into the United States.

Our Government has an open door policy. We are presently debating the Bill whereby we will receive United States business people with open arms. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) is now making an agreement to export Canadian oil to the United States cheaper than it is being sold to Canadian refiners. I am sure that the Prime Minister is as outraged as I am at this action of the United States Government. It takes two to tango, and this Government is clearly out of step.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT CONSULTATION PAPER WELCOMED

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, it is particularly gratifying to see the initial reaction to the Consultation Paper on Child and Elderly Benefits released this week by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp).

In sharp contrast to the ill-informed and negative comments of the opposition Parties, representatives of labour, business, and social policy organizations have all applauded the options contained in the paper. They are responding in the spirit of co-operation and constructive dialogue that the Government hoped would result from the consultation process.

Members opposite should be aware that the Social Policy Reform Group is very concerned that the scare tactics being used by the Opposition will destroy much needed social reform. As Chaviva Hosek, President of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, said yesterday:

> We don't agree that the proposed changes are just tinkering, and we don't agree that the reforms proposed are an attack on the middle class. On the contrary, with minor changes the first option presented by the Government would achieve a very important reform that we and many other social policy groups have been advocating for a long time. The opposition is throwing out the baby with the bathwater.

The two opposition Parties are so intent on upstaging each other in their fight to the death that they cannot recognize thoughtful social policy options and honest consultation.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

YOUTH NETWORK LICENCE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the attention of the House the high levels of public concern about the state of Canadian broadcasting. Increasingly the public wants to know if there will be effective Canadian programming in the face of ever increasing amounts of U.S. television into Canada.

Today we should be especially concerned about the likelihood that U.S. programming will dominate, or take over exclusively, a children's channel that will be licensed by the CRTC. The only alternative that has guaranteed 70 per cent Canadian content is the National Film Board application that the CRTC disqualified. They now have the opportunity to reconsider the Film Board application, with the delay which they have ordered in the hearings. The Minister has the power to direct the CRTC to consider this issue again, under the provisions of Bill C-20. We say that he should be prepared to act now. Many concerned Canadians want the CRTC to live up to its responsibilities under the Broadcast Act, to ensure a Canadian presence in this vital area of broadcasting.

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO AID FARMERS

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, agriculture can and does play a vital role in the rebuilding of our economy, but the Government wants to do it through consultation. Today, 160 farmers from Ontario are meeting with their MPs as part of this consultation process. This Government welcomes their advice, but it has already shown that it cares about agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has already taken several initiatives to help alleviate the financial problems facing many farmers.

Thousands of FCC loans have been, or will be, re-written down to 12.75 per cent. Niagara grape growers have been made a part of a buy-up scheme. The 4.8 cent tax on gasoline and diesel fuel has been removed. The offshore labour program is in effect for 1985. Capital gain rollovers are now eligible for contributions to RRSPs.

While these programs indicate that agriculture has received top priority from the Government in only a few months, it does not intend to stop or sit still. The Government is working with the provinces to establish a tripartite stabilization program for red meat. Section 31 of the Income Tax Act is being examined, and agri-bonds will receive further study. The Government is prepared to move on these items.

No longer can the Government pay lip-service to agriculture, or let it take a back seat to other sectors of our economy. This Government is not prepared to sit by and let farmers suffer for another decade or two of neglect and despair. Agriculture is the backbone of our economy, and it is this Government's intention to stengthen that backbone even further, within its financial resources.

EFFECT OF CHANGES ON PERSONNEL RETIRING FROM ARMED FORCES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, over the past few weeks I have received scores of telephone calls from Armed Forces personnel who are concerned about the effect that the UI changes to earnings will have on them when they retire. Members of the Armed Forces are required to retire by the age of 55, or after 25 years of service.

One of the recognized and very much deserved benefits of serving with the Armed Forces is the accumulation of severance benefits. The Conservative Government has announced that, as of March 31, 1985, those payments will be considered as income for unemployment insurance purposes. I understand from the Minister's office that the rollover provisions that allow severance benefits to be placed into an RRSP, so that they will not be considered as income for income tax purposes, will not apply for UI purposes. This essentially wipes out the value of those severance payments that were formerly considered a working benefit.

Many of those who retire from the Armed Forces continue to work until the usual retirement age of 65, and continue to make UI contributions during those working years. The Government has announced that pension income will be considered income for UI purposes, essentially making those retirees ineligible for UI benefits. Due to the early retirement age of Armed Forces personnel, they have been placed in the very unique situation of being required to pay into an insurance program, the Unemployment Insurance Program, without being eligible to collect benefits from that program. I suggest to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) that these discriminatory aspects of UI changes should be reconsidered.

REMOVAL OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX FROM FARM LAND SALES URGED

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, for many years the farming community suffered under the heavy-handed regime of the former Liberal administration, supported by its NDP allies.

The issue of capital gains has hung over the farming community and has created economic chaos and disunity among regions of Canada.

I commend our Government for a reduction in interest rates, which have declined 19 times in the past 19 weeks; a fuel tax rebate; a moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures, and more recently a reduction to 12.75 per cent interest rates on over 5,600 FCC loans. As well, the Government has returned choice in the use of the metric system. I urge my Government to go one step further and remove the capital gains tax from farm land sales in order to remove this dark cloud of uncertainty from the farm community.

Since this is a tax on the savings of a retiring farmer, a tax on the production of food, and adds greatly to the cost of land for a beginning farmer, I urge all Members of the House to support its immediate removal.

TRIAL OF PREMIER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is a basic and fundamental principle of our criminal justice system that all persons be treated equally before the law and that one is presumed innocent until proven guilty. Tuesday's acquittal of Premier Richard Hatfield on a charge of possession of marijuana leads me to conclude that these basic principles have been breached.

The investigation leading to the charge and the subsequent prosecution raises a number of very disturbing questions. Why did the RCMP wait a month before charging Premier Hatfield? Was there political interference? When were the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) consulted? What instruction, if any, did they give to the RCMP? Is there any substance to the allegations that there was a cover-up attempt by the RCMP? Was it fair for the presiding judge unjustly and improperly to accuse a reporte of illegally planting the marijuana? Was Premier Hatfield given preferential treatment? Is there one law for the rich and powerful and another for the average citizen? More important, would a similar case involving a teenager from the other side of the tracks be dealt with in a similar fashion? I suspect not.

I call on the Solicitor General to conduct a complete and independent investigation into the investigation and prosecution of the matter, to clear the air, to ensure that the public continues to have confidence in the fairness of our criminal justice system, and to ensure that innocent persons are not harmed by a judge's irresponsible statements.

In my view, the case of the Queen versus Richard Hatfield was a grave miscarriage of justice.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was told that the Minister of National Defence would be in his place today. However, in his absence I will direct my question to the Prime Minister.

On January 25 the Minister said in the House:

> Mr. Speaker, there is no current or projected Canadian plan regarding replacement of the DEW Line or any other matter involving Canada in any aspect of United States strategic defence initiatives.

The Minister has just arrived, Mr. Speaker. May I repeat the first part of my question?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): On January 25 the Minister of National Defence said in the House:

> Mr. Speaker, there is no current or projected Canadian plan regarding replacement of the DEW Line or any other matter involving Canada in any aspect of United States strategic defence initiatives.

Later on, he added:

> It has nothing to do with weapons.

Yesterday the Washington Post reported on its front page that the U.S. army will be testing a land-based missile defence system in Alaska. Last night, Craig Oliver on CTC, out of Washington, said:

> To most defence analysts here in Washington, it's taken for granted that Canada and star wars are inseparable, and they say if Canadian officials are unaware of that they are not asking the right questions to the right people.

Will the Minister comment on these unnerving reports from Washington? Will he tell us whether or not he is negotiating a defence treaty, or an amendment to it, with the United States, which the Prime Minister will be prepared to sign with the President of the United States in Quebec City?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Leader of the Opposition for that question. First, he is talking about press speculation. I have indicated to the House that what we are negotiating is a warning system and not a weapons system. That continues to be the fact.

What is in the Washington Post, or any other U.S. publication, is not something for which this Government can take responsibility. What we can take responsibility for is to say to the Hon. Member that it is not part of SDI. It is a warning system. It is not a weapons system, and that will continue to be the case.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I say to the House that it is an insult that Canadians have to go to Washington to find out what is happening with respect to North American defence negotiations. Either there are discussions about anti-missile systems in Canda going on between the United States and Canada, and Canadians are being kept in the dark, or the Minister is not on top of his dossier and what the United States is doing. I ask the Minister—which is it? Does he know what is going on but is not telling us, or does he not know what is going on? Are the Americans developing a North American defence system, anticipating our co-operation and involvement?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I get a little offended by the Leader of the Opposition. After all, he was Prime Minister for a very short period of time, and he should know what we are talking about when we are negotiating with the United States. I have told him what we are negotiating. He should accept that, because that is the fact. Instead of that, he is trying to mix up and frighten Canadian people. Well, I say to the Hon. Member that we are negotiating a warning system, not a weapons system, and I stand by that.

• (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUBJECT OF NEGOTIATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the Canadian people are going to say, but I am not frightened by that answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I spoke of this yesterday. We had a fishing treaty signed between the United States and Canada on Monday, before any member of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry ever saw the treaty. We are concerned that we are going to have an amendment to the NORAD treaty without ever having an opportunity to examine it in this House. That is the reason for the question. Is the Minister really telling us that if we are ever going to find out what is going on in these negotiations, we have to go to Washington to do so?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, what I would like to say to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is that he was wrong the first time, he was wrong the second time, and the last time he just struck out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PINE TREE LINE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence.

An Hon. Member: Here is a heavy hitter.

Mr. Hopkins: Because the Minister gets very upset when asked any questions about defence systems, I will just go a little easier on him. I don't want him to get upset. Would the Minister answer one simple question about the Cadin-Pine Tree Radar Line? If, as reported, the Government is ready to make an announcement on the North Warning System negotiations, would the Minister of National Defence indicate whether the future of the Cadin-Pine Tree Line will be part of that announcement? And if not, why not?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member realizes that the Cadin-Pine Tree Line is one of the radar systems in Canada which is outdated and outmoded because the Party he happens to be associated with, which was the Government of Canada for a long time, paid no attention to the sovereignty of Canada and the fact that we should have been upgrading our radar systems. Naturally, if we are negotiating the North Warning System, the Cadin-Pine Tree Line has to be worked into that system, and we will deal with that situation as we deal with the negotiations associated with the North Warning System.

Mr. Hopkins: That is another doughy answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Doughy?

Mr. Hopkins: No clear cut reply on the Cadin-Pine Tree Line.

CANADIAN CONTENT IN WARNING SYSTEM

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): What effort has the Minister made—and we don't want to hear about American tours across Canada—to ensure a maximum Canadian content in the North Warning System line of surveillance? Can he absolutely and unequivocally assure this House, and Canadians, that he is not hastening an announcement simply to accommodate President Reagan's timetable and, hence, excluding, or even neglecting, better Canadian industrial benefits for Canadian industry?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the Hon. Member really is pushing his luck when he starts talking—on behalf of that Party—about anything "doughy" associated with national defence. What we are trying to do as a Government is catch up with the 16 years of neglect of the Hon. Member's Party with respect to national defence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: It is not very easy, Mr. Speaker, when we know of the economic mess divulged by the Minister of Finance to the Canadian people last November. What we will do is our utmost to get the very best for Canadians in Canada's participation in anything new that happens in this country associated with defence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF NORAD AGREEMENT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Defence. Since we are reliably informed that northern Canada and Alaska are included in the plans for the Pentagon's star wars, and for the components of star wars, such as our becoming the first line of an ABM defence—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Reliable information by Craig Oliver.

Ms. Jewett: —and since the Minister will not agree that this has taken place, will he not only confirm that we are included in these plans and preparations, but will he pledge right now that he will send to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence a reference on the NORAD agreement—since it was in 1981 that the Trudeau Government secretly took out the ABM reference—and allow the Standing Committee of the House—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Ms. Jewett: —to review the NORAD agreement now? Will the Minister not wait until May when he will be obliged to send it to the committee?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Member that it pleases me very much to see where she and her Party are going. It is nice to know at this late date that that Party now believes that maybe Canada should be a partner in NATO.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: I believe what the Hon. Member should understand is that if Canada should be a partner in NATO, the United States will be one of our partners in NATO and, therefore, when we do our negotiating with our partners, we have to do it together, treating them all the same. From the point of view of the NORAD agreement, let me say to the Hon. Member that early in March we will be presenting a green paper to a committee of Parliament.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Can we depend on that?

Mr. Coates: As a result of that there will be a white paper discussion, and all of the concerns which the Hon. Member and her Party have in relation to defence matters can be placed before that committee on the white paper.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister once again is entirely avoiding the question I asked him explicitly. Since the Trudeau Government in 1981 secretly took out the ABM reference from the NORAD agreement, will the Minister commit himself now to give a reference to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on NORAD, and not wait until May when he will be obliged to give that reference to the committee?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): What I have said, Mr. Speaker, to the Hon. Member, if she can hear, is that we are going to submit a green paper to either the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Fait accompli by any colour.

Mr. Coates: —or a special committee of Parliament where that subject, and all other subjects associated with defence, could be discussed.

Ms. Jewett: No, we are talking about the NORAD agreement.

HOUSING

GOVERNMENT CONSULTATION PAPER

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour responsible for housing. The Minister has issued his consultation paper on housing in which he acknowledges that half a million tenant households cannot afford physically adequate and uncrowded housing, but he declares that the Government has no more money for housing and must redirect funds allocated to existing expenditure. Why does the Minister's report choose explicitly to ignore the billions of dollars paid out in tax expenditures to the large builders of rental accommodation when he calls for money to help those still in need?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the contribution I hope will be made by the Hon. Member to the consultation process which will go forward within the next two months. His specific question as to expenditures through rental accommodation for housing-providers is addressed by us. This Government, the previous administration, and Governments represented by the Hon. Member's Party—and I speak in particular of the Province of Manitoba—have the same process, the same assistance applied to provide rental accommodation for Canadian citizens. I know the Hon. Member is aware that in some of those accommodations there is a mixing of income groups, and a rent subsidy is offered to those who are in need.

SHELTER ALLOWANCE STUDIES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister did not answer my question about tax expenditures at all, I would like to ask him whether he has done studies on the shelter allowance proposals such as were put forward by the Canadian Homebuilders' Association? If so, will he make those studies available to Members of Parliament and the public?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not made studies of the shelter allowance concept. I am aware that studies have been done and are available through CMHC. I have studied parts of the shelter allowance concept. I have addressed the question in other areas, as has the Hon. Member, in looking at social benefits available to Canadians. I agree that shelter allowance should be considered one of those social benefits. Hopefully we will be discussing the issue further in the next two months during the consultation process.

RENT CONTROLS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister consulted with his counterparts in the provincial Governments on the proposal by the Canadian Homebuilders' Association that rent controls should be removed in three years?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, it is the autonomous provincial Governments which impose rent controls. I draw to his attention that rent controls have been removed in some provinces, but they continue in some eight jurisdictions. I suggest to the Hon. Member that such controls would be the prerogative of the provincial Governments, and that any impact they may have on the provision of housing to Canadians would have to be taken into consideration when the federal Government consults with its provincial colleagues.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR DECISION CONCERNING NEGOTIATIONS IN WASHINGTON

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given that major long term commitments are currently being discussed in Washington which could infringe upon our territorial sovereignty and, moreover, which could eventually demonstrate that Canada can no longer set its own policy in the area of foreign affairs, is it true that External Affairs officials are altogether excluded from the current negotiations being held in Washington, and that only National Defence officials are involved in these negotiations?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations referred to by members of the Official Opposition have not been participated in by officials of the Departments of External Affairs or National Defence because those negotiations do not exist. They are entirely a figment of the imagination of Craig Oliver and the members of the Opposition.

Mr. Deans: You mean of the other members of the Opposition.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Excuse me, I do not want to associate the New Democratic Party with trouble they have not got into themselves.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): In so far as the negotiations to renew the radar warning systems in the North are concerned, as the Hon. Member should know, those have been in progress since the mid-1970s, and representatives of both Departments have been involved in those negotiations, including the time when the Hon. Member was Minister.

REQUEST FOR DECISION CONCERNING NORAD

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to ask the Minister whether he can assure the House that no change will be made either to NORAD or NATO with the U.S. government, for there are apparently discussions being held at the present time to amend NORAD, as the previous questions have indicated, whereby the U.S. government could take a new initiative and present us, within a very short time, with a fait accompli which would deprive the Canadian people of their sovereignty in the North?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are no such negotiations. Those which are now being held had started under the previous government. The difference is that there is now a possibility to bring the negotiations to a conclusion with a view to protect the Canadian sovereignty.

UNITED STATES PLANS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to address my questions to the Minister of National Defence and follow up on the somewhat curious logic of his argument when he says we are only negotiating a warning system, as confirmed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The logic there is that once the warning system is in place and we see an incoming Cruise missile or bomber, we will wave at it as it goes by, because they are not talking about the other component, which is how to respond.

Obviously the Americans are planning a new North American defence system and we want to know what the Government is doing to respond to that major change in U.S. strategy relating to North America? According to their official spokesman, they are planning a new defence program in the northern part of North America, including Canada. What in God's name are you doing about it? Are you thinking about it? Are you discussing it with them, or are you going to do something about it so that Canadians will know what the implications are?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, what my hon. friend is suggesting is that his Party, and the Government with which he was associated, allowed Canada to be placed in a situation where we did not even have a warning system to tell us if weapons were going to be coming into Canada from the U.S.S.R. At least we are going to put North America in a position where we will have a warning system to know that those weapons are coming in, if that should happen. The guarantee for Canadians is that if we have the warning system there is less likelihood that any weapons will be sent into our air space.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Defence said it all. He just does not know what is going on.

WARNING SYSTEM AGREEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important that we get a commitment from the Government that the Prime Minister will not be signing any agreement with the President on a new warning system until the implications are clearly spelled out for our country in terms of major new expenditures on some form of defence program in North America. As well, we would need to know what the commitment would be regarding the placement of interceptor aircraft, or ground to air missiles, or any form of surveillance. We would also like a commitment that the Minister of Defence try to find out what is going on in North America so that we can properly defend ourselves.

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, certainly when they were in the Government there was no way we could properly defend ourselves. The one thing they did do was to enter into an agreement to buy CF-18 aircraft. But what is the value of having CF-18 aircraft if we do not have a warning system which tells us when things are moving into our air space?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TITLE TO MEARES ISLAND, B.C.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs who, I know, is aware of the dangerous and growing conflict on Meares Island in British Columbia. Would the Minister take this opportunity to assure the Clayoquot and Ahousaht bands that they, in fact, hold title on Meares Island and he will immediately initiate negotiations with the Government of B.C. to resolve this conflict?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is, I am sure, aware, the federal Government has accepted the land claim for negotiation. That is a fact. The Government of British Columbia and the two Indian bands concerned are aware of that, and I do not have to assert that. Let me also say that I am very aware of the difficulty on Meares Island and the possible explosiveness of the situation. I want to assure him that I will take whatever steps I can to be of assistance.

APPOINTMENT OF NEGOTIATOR

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, Louis Riel was hanged 100 years ago for standing up for the rights of Indian people, particularly in relation to land title. Will the Minister take this opportunity to assure the Nuu-chah-nulth tribal Council that he will immediately appoint a negotiator so that there is at least a process in place to resolve this conflict which may bring about bloodshed and the return of a Duck Lake tragedy?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): As I indicated to the Hon. Member on a previous occasion, Mr. Speaker, since the matter has been accepted for negotiation the bands know where the federal Government stands on the matter. We will be proceeding to negotiation through a negotiator, at the appropriate time, in the normal way.

With respect to the problem on Meares Island, that is a matter which has to be dealt with, not only by the courts but, as I indicated to the Hon. Member, I am going to try to be of assistance in an informal way over the weekend.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

AUXILIARY AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC REGARDING MINES—DATE OF SIGNING

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

As a result of the framework agreement concluded last December with the Quebec government in the area of regional economic development, the Minister signed with that government subsidiary agreements in the area of tourism on January 16 and industrial development on January 23.

My riding of Témiscamingue being an area where mining plays a major role in our economy, could the Minister indicate when he expects to sign a subsidiary agreement with Quebec in the area of mining?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to tell the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue that I understand that my colleague, the Minister of State for Mines, has been having discussions with the appropriate people in Quebec with a view to signing such a mining agreement. We have already signed an industrial development agreement and a tourism sub-agreement with the Province of Quebec. This Friday we will be signing a communications agreement. I trust that in due course we will be signing the mining agreement to which the Member has referred.

MATERNITY BENEFITS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Government has launched another attack on the family through its proposals on family allowance and the child tax exemption. The Minister is now suggesting that maternity benefits be removed from the unemployment insurance program. Does the Minister think it is fair to women, who have paid in for these benefits, for him even to think of tampering with this earned benefit?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear again to the Hon. Member that there is no intention of removing that benefit. We are talking about how that benefit should be financed. As she knows, the benefit is now financed through the unemployment insurance scheme. We are suggesting that we should consider whether that financing should be done through the general tax system in order to allow for a lower payroll tax on small businesses to allow them to create more jobs.

MATERNITY LEAVE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Again, financial security is of paramount importance for Canadians who want to raise a family. How can the minister justify modifying the unemployment insurance program by abolishing maternity benefits without any consultation? Why has he not tabled a White Paper on the issue instead of spreading fear among women? Is that equality, Mr. Minister?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it perfectly clear that what I have suggested is something which was put forward in the agenda paper last November. There has been lots of opportunity for people to discuss this. There will be opportunity in the future as we proceed with the consultations.

THE CONSTITUTION

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Last year the former Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, was justifiably criticized for not releasing his position on aboriginal rights in the Constitution until one day prior to the actual commencement of that conference. Can the Minister of Justice tell us when the new Conservative Government will make public its position on aboriginal rights in the Constitution?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman could not have been noticing that before Christmas we had a conference of Ministers of Justice. My colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, was at the conference with the provinces and representatives of the aboriginal peoples. I think we made our position on the issues pretty clear to them. They were satisfied with the progress that was made.

When the constitutional conference takes place on April 2 and 3 the Prime Minister will have a well articulated well thought out position which we think will please the aboriginal peoples, Members of the House, and the people of Canada. There is much work being done. Just because we are not out in public every day discussing it or yelling about it, does not mean it is not being done. In addition—I don't want to be long. Mr. Speaker. In addition—

Mr. Speaker: Good. The Hon. Member for Churchill on a supplementary question.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I am not worried about the length of the answer. I am worried about the fact that he will not give us that information before the conference.

REQUEST FOR EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Can the Minister assure us that we are not going to have a repeat of last year's conference when the provincial Governments could quite rightfully say that they did not have the information early enough? Is the information going to be made public well in advance of the commencement of the conference?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to reassure the hon. gentleman on that point. Last year the then Government tried a game of one-upmanship and was not telling anyone what it was doing. Neither the provinces nor the aboriginal peoples knew what it would place on the table at any moment. We have committed ourselves to keep the provinces and the aboriginal peoples well informed ahead of time of what our proposals will be. They have promised to do the same with us. They are well satisfied with the way they are now being treated. There is no complaint that I am aware of, except in the enfeebled mind of the hon. gentleman.

MARINE TRANSPORTATION

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FERRY SERVICE

Mr. Pat Binns (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Prince Edward Island is dependent on ferry service in order to move people, goods, and services. The Island and Nova Scotia are served well by Northumberland Ferries Ltd., although growing concern exists due to long waits, current hours of service, and high rates. Will the Minister assure the House that his Department will negotiate with the provincial Government and Northumberland Ferries in order to provide adequate numbers of crossings, reasonable rates, and a replacement program for existing vessels?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the matter of adequate ferry service is described by the Hon. Member. The acquisition of new vessels is the subject of a study that has been commissioned by Transport Canada. The study will undertake to look at the various options and the vessel and service requirements that would be necessary to meet needs until the year 2000. I am expecting the report of those recommendations sometime in February. I certainly invite the Hon. Member to provide me with his advice and suggestions on how we might better improve the service.

ADVISORY COUNCIL ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for Canada, who is responsible for the Status of Women. Since July last, the Advisory Council on the Status of Women has been without a President. It is run by a Vice-President who sits in Ottawa only part-time and whose term expires March 1st, 1985. Can the Minister tell the House when his Government intends to appoint a President to that agency, which has now been leaderless for the past six months?

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure my colleague, the former chairman, that the matter is within a matter of weeks of being resolved. Before too long the Government will make public the appointment of a chairman, as well as additional appointments for the vacancies which have occurred. As I indicated in the House previously, we have been reviewing the operation and seeking provincial and other input and observations on how the Advisory Council on the Status of Women can be the most effective instrument representing the concerns of women across the country.

PRESENT PRESIDING HEAD OF COUNCIL

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Since the vice-president is living in Vancouver, since the director of research is on maternity leave, and since the executive director has left the Council last December, could the Hon. Minister tell us who is making routine decisions involving the staff? Who runs the Council? Is it the Hon. Minister?

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the honourable former chair-person of the Council that, as she knows, the acting president, the former vice-president, has had full authority during this interim period. I have been in regular consultation with her. We have had an acting executive director within the Council. There is no question of either Government interference or lack of direction within the Council.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

POLICY DISCUSSIONS—CANADIAN CONTENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. Why is it, in the ongoing discussions of trade policy, that the Government has rejected the option of Canadian content requirements which, if properly negotiated, would require the creation of employment and the development of new technology in Canada, and the reinvestment in Canada of profits generated in Canada for the benefit of Canada?

• (1450)

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the Hon. Member that to my knowledge Canada has not, at this point, rejected any options with respect to our trade, either import or export. As he well knows, what we are presently doing in the discussion paper is examining all options and asking for all points of view. Following that, we will consider whether or not that suggestion would be viable for our trade.

GOVERNMENT DISCUSSION PAPER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, recognizing that other countries in the world have in fact adopted such programs, Japan being the best example, why did the Government not include such an option in its option paper? Why was it specifically excluded from the discussion paper tabled by the Minister two days ago?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member that in the discussion paper itself we said that the paper was not inclusive or exclusive, that all options were open, and because that one was not specifically included does not mean that it was excluded.

MATERNITY LEAVE BENEFITS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Canada's five million working women are alarmed by the Finance Minister's proposal that paid maternity leave be removed from the Unemployment Insurance Program. Will the Minister say exactly how he propose to do this? Will expectant mothers have to apply for provincial welfare, even if they are working? What happens to the contributions they have made to the Unemployment Insurance Program?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no reason for Canada's five million working women to be alarmed, as the Hon. Member would suggest. All that we are talking about here is the possibility of some shifting in the financing.

I would caution her, before she embarks too strenuously on the politics of fear that she is working on—

Mr. Axworthy: Here we go again. You are the one who said it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me say that, by removing this obstacle that will inhibit small business from creating more jobs, we will be able to create jobs for many, many more working women.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): I regret that the Minister dismisses this matter because there is a very important symbolic question about how maternity benefits are to be paid.

Oral Questions

WORKPLACE EQUALITY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister to try to understand, if he does not understand already, the implications of making the statement and not developing it. There are serious implications about equality in the workplace, and I trust that he will address himself to them.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if there was a question in that last statement by the Member. I can only refer to what I said in my first response, that there is no reason for there to be any concern on the part of working women.

TOURISM

FEDERAL-ONTARIO AGREEMENT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Tourism. I am sorry that the Attorney General of the Province of Ontario, the Hon. Roy McMurtry, is not here to hear this. In a recent visit to my riding he expressed concern over the fanfare which surrounded an agreement signed by the Province and the federal Government to provide $44 million of subsidy for the tourist industry over five years. He referred to that as "peanuts" and a "leaky roof" approach. Does the five-year agreement signed between the federal Government and the provinces represent the sum total of the Government's commitment to tourism?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear the Hon. Member refer to the amount of the agreement as peanuts because it was, in fact, a $44 million agreement. It was the most generous of all the agreements signed with any of the provinces, save one. On a per capita basis I think it was, by any standard, a lot of largess from the federal treasury.

Indeed, in the 16 or 17 weeks during which I have been Minister of Tourism, I have signed more agreements with more provinces, worth more money, than the previous Government did in the entire term it was in office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I am sorry I stunned the Hon. Minister, but the word I used was borrowed from one of his provincial colleagues in the Conservative Party.

In view of the importance of tourism and of the hospitality industry for our overall economy, why would the Government not put forward a discussion paper on tourist policy?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the truth is that a paper will be released, I hope in a few weeks. It will be a consultative document and a tool for collaboration with the provinces, the industry, and other parts of the federal Government. I think that even the Hon. Member will be pleased with the contents of that paper. It does not reflect consultation so much as it initiates a long process of consultation which we expect to embark upon by mid February, and which will lead to a major national conference involving the provinces, labour, business, and the industry, sometime next fall.

HOUSING

GOVERNMENT CONSULTATION PAPER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for housing. We have heard the kind of "Trust me, dear," attitude that comes from the Minister of Finance. I hope we don't get the same kind of response from the Minister responsible for housing.

The Minister will be aware of the document that he released yesterday which outlined a half million Canadians in housing difficulties. He is suggesting a funding cut-back instead of legislation to meet this pressing need. Can the Minister tell us what specific action he is prepared to take to address the half million Canadians who are desperately in need of housing but are not being addressed in this particular consultation document?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would tremble in fear at the words that the Hon. Member suggested I might use in replying to her question. Her point is well taken. It is not the intention, through the consultation papers or the discussions I will be having with those in the non governmental areas, to seek ways of reducing the present cost. It is intended to seek ways of delivering housing more effectively to Canadians, and particularly to those Canadians who are most in need.

Ms. Copps: I must say that the Government's musings on housing policy are as frightening as your musings on pregnancy leave.

RENT CONTROLS—PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the report suggests that rent controls are to be blamed for rental market problems across Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Wherever you got her, send her back.

Ms. Copps: I realize that the tone may be high, but the intent is very sincere.

Does the Minister believe the statement in his own document that "If the problems arise from matters under provincial jurisdiction such as rent controls, then the appropriateness of federal assistance must be questioned"? This is a clear threat to the eight provincial Governments across the country that have rent control. Does the Minister believe that this kind of threat will assist the housing market across Canada, especially those half million Canadians, primarily women, who are living in rental accommodation and who need assistance from the Government?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me the time, I will be pleased to answer the several questions the Hon. Member put forth. If I could direct her mind to the exact quote contained in the document, it is in the form of an observation; it is certainly not in the form of a threat.

In reply to the Hon. Member for Spadina, I suggested that part of the consultation process would involve discussion with those eight out of the twelve jurisdictions in Canada that have rent controls to see if there is a way of providing housing without having what is considered by some people to be a disincentive. Also in the same vein, I would advise the Hon. Member that such measures are within the prerogative of the provinces, not of the federal Government.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, could we allow the House to revert to Question Period, at least to the extent that I can ask the Government House Leader what he proposes for the business of the House for the coming week?

Mr. Speaker: I take the point seriously. I take it the Hon. Member is rising on the business question at this point?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to report to the House Leader for the Official Opposition, and to Members of the House generally, that the business for tomorrow will be Bill C-20, which we are considering today, if we have not concluded our deliberations today. That will be followed by Bill C-23, a Bill relating to the Small Businesses Loans Act amendments. If both of these Bills are passed at second reading, the back-up Bill will be Bill C-22, an Act to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development and to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation thereto.

On Monday, the first order of business—

Mr. Speaker: I do not mean to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I am sure there are Members in the House who are really trying to follow this answer. I suspect other Members of the House might allow us to do that, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think the whole nation is listening in rapt attention to what I have to say concerning my answer to the Hon. Opposition House Leader.

In any event, if debate on Bill C-26 is completed I propose to call—

Mr. Deans: Sorry, I did not hear that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —the Bill relating to an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, the far-sighted and wonderful legislation we are bringing forward to help the seniors of this country which will be well known to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Deans: You don't have to be snarky. I did not hear you say it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Then listen. Put your ear plug in.

Mr. Deans: The microphone was turned off.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: After this Bill I propose to call—

Mr. Beatty: Ian, stick it in your ear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —the Bill amending certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) proposes to introduce later this day.

Tuesday will be the third allotted day in the current period of supply. On Wednesday and Thursday the order of business will be the same as I have just announced for Monday.

We will monitor, of course, the progress that has been made with respect to this legislation. If circumstances change, there may be changes in the order of business and I will try to reserve the right to stand at some future time to change that. I hope we will make progress and be able to carry on with the legislative package that I have proposed for next week.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I just want to suggest to the Government House Leader, lest others should misinterpret our exchange which was more acrimonious than usual, that the reason I asked the question is that his microphone had been turned off when you rose, Sir. Though I did have my ear-piece in place and though I was listening attentively, I did not happen to pick up his reference to Bill C-26.

Mr. Gauthier: Speak to the nation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Since God gave us all the same number of hormones and the Hon. Member decided to blow his on facial hair, obviously it has affected his hearing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Does the Government House Leader want to try his other foot?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATUTE LAW (CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS) AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-27, an Act to amend certain Acts having regard to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the second report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented to the House on Tuesday, January 29, 1985, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 59 and 158.

[Text]

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

Question No. 59—Mr. Howie:

What are the (a) names (b) positions of the persons who occupy positions on the Executive and Board of Directors of the Medical Research Council and, in each case, what amount was he/she paid in respect of that position in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1984?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Medical Research Council is a federal agency consisting of a President and not more than 21 other members all appointed by Governor in Council. The Executive Committee consists of the President and seven other members of the Council.

(a) and (b)

Dr. Pierre Bois, President*
Dr. H. B. Dinsdale, Vice President*
Dr. J. H. Dirks*
Dr. G. J. Mogenson*
Dr. M. W. Spence*
Dr. R. L. Cruess*

* Executive Committee Members

With the exception of the President, all other members of the Council and Executive Committee serve without remuneration but are entitled to receive reasonable travelling and other expenses incurred while absent from their residence in the course of their duties.

The President, Dr. Pierre Bois, is remunerated at the DM-1 level ($79,120 to $93,040). His salary is paid by the University of Montreal and reimbursement is made to the University for salary and benefits paid in accordance with a contract between the Medical Research Council and the University of Montreal.

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL PROJECTS

Question No. 158—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the Medical Research Council cut any projects in its science and technology programs in order to absorb the reduction in its expenditures required by the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance in the House on November 8, 1984 and, if so, what are they and what are the projected costs?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In so far as the Medical Research Council is concerned: No.

[English]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Question No. 88 is a very simple one. It concerns proposed regulations for camping permits on Parliament Hill. It could be answered by the Government by a simple yes or no. When can we expect an answer? The question has been on the Order Paper since November 15.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, soon.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South that question No. 88 could be answered very easily with a yes or no. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will take that into consideration and give us an answer forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will take note that there is a non-partisan agreement on getting an answer to that question.

The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Masse that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, before one o'clock I was addressing the objectives of Bill C-20 which relate to offering a power of policy direction over the CRTC in broadcasting and in telecommunications matters, to be exercised by Governor in Council, as well as a power to allow Cabinet explicitly to order the CRTC to deregulate telecommunications services that can be provided on a competitive basis.

This power of policy direction in Section 14.1 was recommended by the Lambert Royal Commission as well as by the Special Parliamentary Committee on Regulatory Reform. As part of the March, 1983 broadcasting strategy, the previous Government announced that it would introduce the power in legislation. The power in necessary if the Government is to ensure that its policies are carried out by the CRTC in the areas of telecommunications and broadcasting. Without this power, the Government cannot control the direction of policy development, placing it in an essentially reactive position vis-à-vis the Commission. Interested parties, including the provinces, are generally supportive of the power of policy direction. It allows parties to lobby the Government to establish certain policies as part of the regulatory framework.

I draw to the attention of the House a recent example of the CRTC reacting to public opinion. In fact, it was its first reaction to public opinion in many years. It is noteworthy that that reaction took place in the shadow of this pending Bill. The example relates to the refusal of the CRTC to renew the licence provisions of cable operators vis-à-vis the carriage of a certain FM station, KMBI-FM from Spokane, on cable systems in Calgary and Edmonton, Alberta. Apparently this station was offensive in some way to the CRTC because it purported to carry a Christian message. There was such a flood of public opinion against the heavy-handedness of the CRTC that in fact a reversal of the decision took place and happily the station was restored to those particular cable systems.

The power of policy direction is also a necessary instrument to implement federal-provincial agreements on policy matters. The second power, which is referred to as the power to deregulate, is complementary to the power of direction. Generally speaking, this power is intended to increase competition and decrease regulation in telecommunications services. This power is necessary because under present law the CRTC has no option but to regulate the activities of companies which fall within the Railway Act definition of a telephone company, even though the companies are planning to offer telecommunications services on a competitive basis, thereby removing any need for CRTC regulation of rates.

The second power would allow the Government to order the CRTC to deregulate telecommunications services which the Government felt should not be regulated because they are offered on a competitive basis. For example, the previous Government announced that it intended to license cellular mobile telephone services under the Radio Act on a competitive basis with two companies competing in each market. However, the Commission felt itself legally bound to regulate the companies, albeit in a relatively light fashion. The power to deregulate would allow the Government to order the CRTC to deregulate these services altogether.

As an alternative to the power to forbear, the CRTC argues that questions of deregulation should be decided by the Commission in the first instance using a new power under the Railway Act. If the Government was not satisfied with the CRTC's decision, it could either vary the decision under Section 64 of the National Transportation Act or repeal the decision, issue a policy direction and require the Commission to hold a second hearing. This approach involves considerable delays. Moreover, it undermines the principle that the Government should be responsible for establishing basic aspects of telecommunications policy.

In summary, it is clear that Clause 1 provides some vitally needed direction for the whole broadcasting industry which has many cultural and technological ramifications today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) a question relating to his comments about the cellular mobile telephone decision. I do not question the idea that the Minister and therefore the Government should lay down policy. However, would the Hon. Member agree that there was one advantage to the system under which the CRTC dealt with the question, that CRTC procedures required and made possible open hearings at which interested parties could ask questions, obtain information and challenge recommendations?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. In fact, he can be reassured that where matters of contentious public policy are involved, the hearing process will undoubtedly continue.

Mr. Orlikow: I hope the Hon. Member is right, that hearings will be held. If the Minister and his Department can lay down policy, it could very well be that the decision would be made only after discussions within the very narrow circle of the Department, the Minister and his senior officials.

I should like to return to some of the comments of the Hon. Member before the luncheon break. He talked about the vitality and success of private radio and television stations. A good part of the success of television stations and the new pay television systems is due to the commitments they made when they applied for licences. They made commitments to have Canadian content, to produce Canadian plays and to broadcast music, ballet and such. Most of those promises were ignored and forgotten. Except for the CBC, we virtually have no Canadian production with the use of Canadian writers, artists, actors, musicians, dancers and so on. Would the Hon. Member agree with those comments?

Mr. Edwards: I believe the Hon. Member has a little research to do. I would be pleased to assist him in that regard. I do not have all the facts and figures at my command today.

However, I stress that the figures I cited related to the significance of the private industry, both transmitting undertakings and broadcast receiving undertakings. I would challenge the Hon. Member's contention, though, that private broadcasters have not lived up to their promises of performance. In fact, to my knowledge there is not one private broadcaster in this country nor one private broadcasting network which has not lived up to its promise of performance and its commitments made during the licensing process.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, when the CRTC was considering its policy with regard to pay-TV, there were a large number of applications. The CRTC agreed to a number of regional systems. They all made commitments that they would produce and show Canadian programs. The assumption of the CRTC that a number of regional systems could operate viably financially has proven wrong. As the Hon. Member said earlier, in English Canada today we really only have one system. Is the Hon. Member aware that that system is doing very little in the way of producing Canadian programming?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the Hon. Member has narrowed the focus of his question to the matter of pay-TV. In that regard, he is quite correct, with reference to the CRTC having somehow been misled, in believing that the number of pay-TV licences granted could survive in this country. In that they were sadly mistaken. I believe that is one good reason why we should have the powers under Clause 1 to give some economic direction to the commission since they do not seem to have any economic sense. I would stress that because of those accidents of licensing and also because of the economic recession, the commission in the relicensing and the adjustment of licensing of pay-TV services has given considerable concessions. I concede that to the Hon. Member with regard to the present and remaining licensees.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I invite the Hon. Member to look at the records of some 20 or more years ago, not the applications of the pay-TV system but of the commercial TV stations and networks. He will see the promises they made when making applications, that there would be a great deal of Canadian programming, music, dance and variety. Compare those promises with the realities. I recognize the difficulties. I recognize that the revenue to do those kinds of things is not there because the advertising dollars are not there. That is the only way they operate. I urge the Member to look at that so that he will realize that what we have said is actually fact.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I am just delighted to be taken back 20 years. I remember the regime of the Board of Broadcast Governors which, to be kind, was a gentle regime. More recently we have had the CRTC, which has some teeth. Further to that we have had a rebirth in a sense of Canadian identity which was not the product of regulation but rather was a spontaneous outpouring dating back to 1967, the year of our glorious Centenary. I should point out the great contributions made to this country by the Canadian broadcasting system. The private sector since that time, at no cost to the Canadian taxpayer, has contributed to the building of the finest broadcasting system in the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Is there unanimous consent to revert to the Tabling of Documents so that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) might table a document?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-20 to amend legislation governing the CRTC, broadcasting and radio was introduced on December 20, 1984, and it is the outcome of the major reform announced nearly a year ago by Communications Minister Francis Fox.

Two major aspects of this Bill must be mentioned. First, the power of the Governor in Council to issue executory directions to the CRTC on any matter within its jurisdiction. Second, it explains clearly the Canadian Government commitment towards the principle whereby all Canadian men and women are entitled to programs which fully respect the dignity and equality of all individuals. That is in keeping with Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

That last statement deserves every consideration, but it is so closely linked with the new powers given to the Minister that we will have to remain ever vigilant, and we must warn against any attempt at such manipulation as might detract from the primary objective and lead to failure to give priority to important issues related to human respect and dignity. The best way to explain this is to refer to my previous experience as president of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women.

The issues of dignity, respect and equality which we were talking about concern women particularly, and they are too often related to the problem of violence.

During my term with the Council, that outlook did mobilize our efforts over a number of years. Since 1975, the Council has voiced specific recommendations for major reforms to our statutes and to the administration of justice. Our assumption had been that our statutes should be one of the mirrors of our society. But it has been our experience that such a mirror too often has distorted to a very high degree the actual facts, and it had become urgent to change the glass.

The Council was therefore pleased to see the new direction taken by legislators in amending that part of the Criminal Code which deals with sexual offences, first by deleting and second by reviewing obsolete offences, and stressing the values and mentalities that more truly reflect present day perception of sexual offences.

I would ask you to become aware of and to be heedful of violence against women, and also of violence in general, especially violence against children. Acts of violence against children also point out a frightening reality. All this leads us to ponder over the roots of that evil.

In that respect, the broadcasting of any violence, by whatever means but especially by means of television, which comes under the jurisdiction of the CRTC, disseminates and legitimizes in some way those forms of violence, and their repetition generates senseless and brutish acts of pointless violence.

It is essential that this House should pay attention to and monitor that area, and hopefully the new power given to the Minister in this area will be used with judgment, responsibility and respect for the individuals and groups concerned with those parameters, and not used to other less honourable purposes, but true to our expectancies. These new provisions and attitudes have become absolutely essential because of the growing pattern of violence. It is also because of women's new open approach to their sexuality that the absolute need for such amendments has been identified. That approach is in turn conditioned by the over-all feminist process. Women's reaction in the face of the kind of violence they are too often still subjected to is not a phenomenon separate from the over-all status of women.

In that context, the Criminal Code's new philosophy with respect to sexual offences answered the legitimate expectations that were based on the concept of violence and put the emphasis on the effects rather than on the nature of the act.

Notwithstanding the principles of equality and respect, the mere fact that in our society thousands upon thousands of women are abused justifies such an intrusion into the privacy of families by means of a better monitoring of the media, those privileged intruders into the life of the private individual and family. Their exemption was no longer justified. In that respect, the Minister is to be commended for recognizing the importance of such reform undertaken by the Liberal Government under the leadership of the then Minister of Communications, Mr. Francis Fox.

A word of caution is needed however. That lofty intention which fulfills specific needs in certain areas as I illustrated earlier, should not open the door to high-handed attempts at promoting specific values that would prejudice the effects of a positive representation of women and other groups. This without infringing upon the freedom of expression provided for in the Broadcasting Act, but always keeping in mind the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, especially as far as Section 15 is concerned.

Furthermore, the new powers given to the Minister must be implemented with a true political will to safeguard dignity and justice, and not remain pious wishes without direct effective action.

This Government, Mr. Speaker, too often has delighted in utopic promises, aimed only at appeasing certain interests, but where safeguards and action are still forthcoming.

My party, Mr. Speaker, is very much concerned with this reform. We intend to give it constant attention during consideration in committee.

This Government must show its political will but within the spirit of the legislation, which is to prevent and not to serve as a springboard for directed action that would bypass the actual problems with which we are confronted, and important features of which have been described in my speech.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In view of the fact that there are no questions or comments, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on debate.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-20 is a modified version of a Bill which was introduced in the last Parliament by the then Minister of Communications. The major difference is that the part of that Bill which dealt with the reorganization of Bell Canada has been separated and the House will deal with that part when Bill C-19 is debated.

Bill C-20 deals with the power of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to give broad policy directions to the CRTC on matters of important public concern. This Bill also gives the Governor in Council the power to exclude a service or activity from regulation by the CRTC. We support the idea that the Minister should have the power to lay down broad principles. However, we are somewhat concerned about the greater power which the Minister wants. The Minister of Communications has long been able to pass the buck on contentious issues by arguing that they were being considered by the CRTC. At the same time, the Minister has said that he will bring forward a policy on the broad question of telecommunications. We agree that the Minister and the Government should have the power to lay down broad policy guidelines. But, because the Minister has not yet enunciated his policy on telecommunications, and because the CRTC—as it is legally entitled—is still dealing with the question, we have the very strange situation in which the CRTC is now looking into the question of the deregulation of the telephone system. The CRTC is now considering the application of the CNCP Telecommunications system to enter the long-distance telephone service.

It has been argued by Bell Canada—a company for which I have no great love—by consumer organizations, and by the telephone companies of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba—all of which are publicly-owned systems—that to permit CNCP Telecommunications to enter the long-distance telephone business in competition with the existing system, would have a tremendously adverse effect on their systems. It would have a disastrous effect on local subscribers. We have a great telephone system in Canada. It has been estimated that 97 per cent of the people in Canada have telephones. The telephones are modern and efficient, and the rates which Canadians pay for the service are relatively low. Certainly they are low in comparison to the rates which are paid in other countries. A large part of the reason for the telephone rates being so low is that the systems have charged rates for long-distance telephoning which have provided substantial profits. Those profits have been used to subsidize the rates which are paid by home owners, farmers and small business people.

The United States deregulated their telephone system some years ago, and there is evidence that deregulation and the permitting of competition for long-distance rates has driven them down, but has meant very substantial increases, sometimes in the neighbourhood of 100 per cent to 200 per cent, for local telephone subscribers. That will happen in Canada if the CNCP application or any other application is permitted. That view has been expressed by telephone systems, provincial Governments and consumers groups.

The Minister has said that he will bring forward a policy paper on telecommunications. If that is not done, before we know it the CRTC may indeed make a very fateful decision and give CNCP the right to compete with the existing telephone systems. The losers will be home owners, farmers and small business people. The winners, the people who will get the benefits of competition, will be the large corporations, which have a tremendous volume of long-distance business. So we say to the Minister that if he wants the power to lay down broad policy guidelines, we will support him, but we want him to exercise that power now not later.

There is a section of the Bill which we oppose, and that is Part I, Section 14.6, which gives the Minister the power to exclude services or activities from regulatory control on the basis of competition that is sufficient to ensure just and reasonable rates. This constitutes a broad and unnecessary expansion of the powers of the Minister to deregulate broadcast or telecommunication activities. I understand that the Ontario Government opposed the deregulation of telephone systems before the Government had established the policy.

Part II of the Bill deals with revisions to the Broadcasting Act. First, it clarifies the definition of a broadcasting undertaking to include any person who distributes or transmits a signal other than a telecommunication common carrier whether or not for remuneration. This clarification arises out of the failure of the federal Government in prosecuting unlicensed broadcasters. In 1978 the Government prosecuted the Holiday Inn in Winnipeg and it lost the case. In Part II, clause 3, a new provision, is added to broadcasting policy to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex. Other changes are consequential to the changes in Part II and Part III.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), has already indicated the position of our Party with regard to the section dealing with sex. We believe that the addition of this provision is to provide for the promotion of equality and dignity under the Broadcasting Act which arises out of the findings of the special subcommittee on sexually abusive broadcasting. This provision will bring the Act into conformity with the Charter. Therefore, we support the amendment.

We have some concerns, Mr. Speaker, about Part III. We believe it is consistent with Part II which revises the Broadcasting Act and clarifies what constitutes a broadcasting undertaking in the Radio Act. The effect of this, however, will be to require rooftop master antennae on hotels, condominiums and apartment blocks to be considered as TV receiving businesses. Individual households, taverns and small apartment blocks will continue to be exempt. We do not oppose the extension of regulatory control to satellite receiving and rebroadcasting operations, but we advocate that special consideration be given to small community-based, non-profit satellite rebroadcasting operations by the CRTC. This is a very contentious problem.

I believe Hon. Members on both sides of the House who represent the isolated communities in most of northern Canada know how difficult it has been for those communities to receive adequate television broadcasting. Some of them have been able to get improvement to their service with the extension of the CANCOM system to their areas. But, Mr. Speaker, CANCOM is not everywhere, and in any case in a number of communities small groups acting on their own have already established non-profit systems with the use of a satellite dish. If the Government proceeds under the law as it has been doing—and I understand it will continue to do so—and implements the law in a very narrow and legalistic way, it is going to create real difficulties for many of these small communities.

We understand that a special CRTC task force has been set up to look into these questions and is to report sometime in the next month. We hope that the Minister and the Government will pay careful attention to the recommendations of the task force and, if possible, will integrate into the Bill, while it is in committee, any of the recommendations which might be made by that special task force.

Some Hon. Members who represent areas which are much more involved in these kinds of problems than in my own will undoubtedly expand on these problems. I hope that the Minister and the Government will pay attention to their concerns.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great care to the wide-ranging remarks made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). First of all, by way of comment and without pre-empting any remarks I might like to make later in this debate, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) and the CRTC were indeed looking at the question of rural and isolated communities and the problems involved there. The Hon. Member will find that outlined in the press release dated December 20, 1984.

I will elaborate at somewhat greater length when it is my turn to speak in this debate on Bill C-20, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member. We understand the urgency and need for the Minister to be able to exercise certain powers under Bill C-20 right now, but would the Hon. Member not agree that the very reason this Bill is now before the House is to receive second reading so that we can get it into the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture as quickly as possible in order to receive the widest possible consultation from all Members of Parliament? We can then get it back here for third reading, so that it can become law. Then we will have that power of direction over the CRTC. That is why we want to deal with this Bill as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, nothing that I have said, and nothing said by members of my Party, is intended to hinder the rapid passage of this Bill. Certainly, we agree that the passage of this Bill will clear up the log-jams which seem to happen, and I am now thinking back to what has happened with former Governments. Whenever any public organizations or individuals would raise questions or objections to decisions which were made, they would be told, "We understand what you are asking and the point you are making, but we don't have the authority because the authority is vested with the CRTC".

As an illustration of what I mean, Mr. Speaker, I will come back to what I said a little earlier. The Minister wants the right to lay down policy, and we think he should have that right. At least, that can be discussed and debated. But right now the Minister says he has not the right and he has not even wanted to indicate to the CRTC that it should not reach a decision before he has this right and before he has adopted a policy on the principles of telecommunications. Right now the CRTC is dealing with the application of the CNCP, and it could make a decision to give the CNCP the right to enter into competition with existing telephone systems for long-distance telephone business. Much more important than the fact that I have said it is the fact that the telephone companies, the consumers' association, and a number of provincial Governments have said, "We don't want CNCP to be in the business because that is going to affect our citizens very adversely and it is going to affect the telephone rates very adversely". So what we are saying, Mr. Speaker, is that, yes, we want the Minister to have the authority, and we want the Minister to exercise that authority, but if he does not have the authority, he can certainly suggest to the CRTC that if it really has to have its hearings, it should not make a decision before the Minister has had the authority to lay down a policy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there no further questions or comments? I would like to recognize now the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley).

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the Hon. Member rising on a question?

Mrs. Finestone: I stood up before him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish the Hon. Member were present in the House instead of being behind the curtain. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) for a question.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if, in the delaying of the consultation to accord the children's channel, he perceives a sense of real concern for Canadian content if the supposed need for, let us say, a Disney-world channel from a financial perspective remains the only reality because of the fiscal constraints which would otherwise be found in producing Canadian content TV? How would he react then, with respect to according permission to Disneyland, Disneyworld or whatever, to enabling us to have Canadian content in our own channels that would be indigenous to the Canadian people?

I would also like to know how the Hon. Member feels about The Friendly Giant being cancelled?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, of course I agree with all other Members who have expressed their regret that The Friendly Giant program was cancelled.

With respect to the children's pay TV channel, we have had representations, as I am sure the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) and the Conservative Members have, from a large number of organizations involved in working to improve the lot of children. They are very concerned about the distinct possibility that if permission is given to some private company for children's pay TV, we will get, as we see on other pay TV channels, almost entirely American programming such as Disney or someone else. The only proposal which the CRTC had, which would have guaranteed a substantial Canadian content in its programming, was the proposal made by the National Film Board which proposed to work together with other organizations to set up a non-profit organization. We are happy that, although the CRTC rejected that preliminary application, it has now put back any final decision and is prepared to hold hearings across the country. I hope it will take another serious look at the proposal made by the National Film Board.

Mrs. Finestone: A supplementary?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, I will allow the Hon. Member a very short supplementary because there is only about half a minute left.

Mrs. Finestone: My supplementary deals with the Hon. Member's knowledge of the original proposals put forward by TV Ontario which were extraordinarily creative. Is there a chance that that particular project might come back?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not qualified to answer that question. However, having seen some of the things that TV Ontario does, I would be very happy if organizations like the Film Board and TV Ontario, or any other non-profit organization, would co-operate in setting up a real Canadian pay TV children's channel.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak today in favour of Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act. There are two significant factors to which I would like to address my comments, the first being the amendment to allow Government direction in matters of policy concerning the CRTC, and the second being the Broadcasting Act as it pertains to abusive programming.

First of all, dealing with Section 14.1, in the minds of many Canadians, and I speak both as a former broadcaster and as one who has an interest in communications, this provision is long overdue. As we watch the work of the CRTC, we must distinguish in a more clear and forthright fashion the difference between the establishment of policy and the parameters of regulation. Historically, the CRTC, through its regulatory powers under the present Act and through convention, has established what amounts to policy. This particular clause empowers the Governor in Council to issue directions to the commission concerning areas of general policy, for example, the matter of telephone deregulation which has been debated by others today. As one who believes that the policy-maker, the Government of Canada, should be the one to establish the general policy regarding telephone competition—and I think I echo the views of many people—I would like to see the matter of telephone competition under the direction of the Governor in Council. This would include the matter of committee study and the process of consultation.

As a Member of Parliament from Saskatchewan I have risen in this Parliament before to voice my concerns about the proposed deregulation as it would affect Saskatchewan. This is why I prefer the process of consultation with the Minister in the political process to determine what exact policy we as the Government should take in this particular area. It has been well documented in a Saskatchewan study, both by the provincial Government, consumers' organizations and many other people, that the impact of opening up long-distance telephone communications in Saskatchewan would be very debilitating. This is particularly true in rural Saskatchewan where the high cost of installing even basic phone service is offset by SaskTel, the government-owned telephone company, which does so by charging the rates it does for long distance. It is in the interests of the people of Saskatchewan, as it is of people everywhere, for all people to be able to afford a telephone service. I have spoken in this House before on this matter and I welcome the opportunity to be part of that consultative process, so that when the Government gives direction to the CRTC it is done with the national interest in mind. It should acknowledge our differences in the many diverse areas of our province.

Concerning the power of direction, I think it should be stated strongly for the record to those who are concerned about the Government getting directly involved in regulation, or perhaps being seen to be too politically involved, that the amendments clearly spell out under Section 14.1(2) that:

> No direction shall be issued . . . in respect of the issuance of a broadcasting licence . . . the amendment or renewal of a licence . . .

The regulatory aspect of broadcast licencing, which should be a matter of the closest regulatory scrutiny, remains under the purview of the CRTC. Further, there is the specific caveat, as we have mentioned, respecting the reference of this matter to committee and opening it to consultation, so it is not and does not appear to be the case of the Government issuing a policy recommendation and thereby being seen to be arbitrary, unilateral or heavy-handed. The approach here is open, conciliatory and consultative.

In looking at the ability of the Government to advise the CRTC on policy, I do have concerns even about the day to day workings of the CRTC. I acknowledge that this particular proposal deals with national interest and policy. I would like to recount for Members a story of a difficulty that some people in my constituency are having with the day to day functioning of the CRTC. I hope that in the interest of Canadian unity the CRTC will see fit to tighten up its day to day operations. A small cable television company, Battlefords Community Cablevision, is assessed an increase on line rental by the telephone company from time to time. To use the different telephone company lines to carry the cable service, increases are levied as rates go up. Under the regulatory aspects of the CRTC, this company must go to the CRTC and ask permission to pass that increase a long to consumers. It is not a rate increase but merely what is known as a pass through.

The cable company experienced a difficulty some time ago. This year it knew six months in advance when the increase would be effected. It made the appropriate petition to the CRTC to be allowed to pass the increase on to the consumer. The appeal was made in August of 1984. After months of assuring this small cable company that the matter was being addressed, it was only last week that the CRTC got around to putting it into the Canada Gazette. Following the gazetting it will take another month before this proposal can be implemented. For six full months a small cable company has been asking for a very routine procedure.

It is points of day to day operation such as this that concern many Canadians about the CRTC's method of operating. Its bureaucratic method of operating makes small operators and individuals in Canada feel that they cannot deal with this regulatory agency. I hope the CRTC will take upon itself the responsibility to deal in a more understanding and directly responsive way with small cable television operators and small broadcasters in the country.

I would like to discuss the area of abusive broadcasting and the effect of Bill C-20 on Clause 3 of the Broadcasting Act. The provisions in the Bill with respect to abusive broadcasting are welcomed by many Canadians. As one of the members of the Opposition said earlier, this conforms with Section 15 of the Charter of Rights. It is not only a feminine issue per se. The particular amendment reads:

> The programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system should respect and promote the equality and dignity of all individuals, groups or classes of individuals regardless of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability;

That provision goes beyond the issues of feminism and deals with the common decency of all Canadians who watch or listen to established broadcasting systems. These people have been demanding a clear-cut standard of what is considered public decency. This is not to undermine in any way the important measures being undertaken by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) regarding pornography in the Criminal Code. This is a matter of taste for many people. Over the years they have seen the standards degenerate to the point of gratuitous violence, sexist stereotyping and very unhealthy role models in terms of derogation of the family on popular television broadcasting. We will now have specifically outlined provisions with regards to abusive programming within the Broadcasting Act.

I found the remarks made in the House this afternoon, particularly by members of the Opposition, to be very interesting. It has been said that this is an old Bill which is simply bringing in something that the past Government brought in. It is significant that in the first six months of the Government's mandate it is acting to effect policy within broadcasting. We are dealing with abusive programming. The last Government took considerably more than six months to listen finally to what Canadians have been saying about the CRTC and to deal with what we have been asking for for a long time with regard to broadcasting in Canada.

It has been said that we should be elucidating a clear-cut policy on telecommunications and deregulation before going ahead with this particular amendment. It is noteworthy that this amendment will go much further than affecting the very important issue of telecommunications and telephone deregulation. It will deal with many other issues related to the wide purview of CRTC in radio, television, telecommunications and other areas. For the sake of the public interest we should move as expeditiously as possible to implement this provision. As we debate specific issues before committee we will have an opportunity to examine further the individual policy initiatives which the Government plans to take.

In conclusion I would like to say that the steps taken in Bill C-20 are only a beginning. Bill C-20 deals with matters other than the specific ones we have addressed such as abusive broadcasting. It deals with matters such as satellite dish rebroadcasting. It lifts a burden off many private broadcasters by extending the maximum license length to seven years from five years. What this Bill endeavours to do could almost be called housekeeping. As we undertake broader policy initiatives and examine further the operation of the CRTC as well as the Broadcasting Act and related Acts and statutes, the Government will be able to embark on a system which more clearly represents the legitimate interests of private broadcasters, cable television operators, small locally owned co-operatives, and distant areas that rely to a greater extent on satellite television. These matters will open up further as we examine the Broadcasting Act and the laws that govern the CRTC.

I would like to indicate my support for this Bill and ask other Members of the House to give it their support. We can study this Bill further in committee. We can now move to the very important job of representing the legitimate interests of Canadians who want a clear-cut policy in the hands of the Government and leave the CRTC to regulate rather than to be the policy-setting agency which in fact it has been.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Masse that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, this is my first opportunity to rise in the House. If I may be permitted to bootleg a little, I would like to thank the people of Essex-Kent for sending me here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caldwell: Essex-Kent is the most southerly riding in Canada. It is the home of Point Pelee Park and Jack Miner's Bird Sanctuary. Wheatley, my town, has the biggest inland freshwater fishery in the world. Furthermore, my riding also includes one of the major communications areas in North America. Those who are familiar with our geography will know that Detroit, Michigan, is located half a mile from the City of Windsor and has been a leading communications centre for many years. However, like many other areas of Canada, it has been affected by CRTC rulings. Station CKLW Windsor, which is a 50,000 watt station, was once the leading radio station in North America. However, as a result of CRTC regulations, it has now dropped to a much lower level. It is an example of how the CRTC does not bend the rules to suit Canadian businessmen.

In our area it is possible to receive 32 AM stations and 40 FM stations. We can use only rabbit ears to receive 10 to 15 stations. Windsor is one of the last cities in Canada to be cabled. This is being done at the present time.

I spent some 18 months in the broadcasting business, like some of my colleagues. I have seen great changes take place in those 18 years in both private and public broadcasting. I remember when there were only one or two stations available in my rural area of eastern Ontario. Today, television basically runs our lives. It has become the principal disseminator of news, and the principal vehicle for entertainment in the country. It has become the national performance stage and the national forum of information and debate.

It is time for us to decide how we will use these new communications and how they will affect our lives in the future. Canadians now spend half of their leisure time watching television, an average of 23 hours of television per person per week. That is 3.5 hours per day for every man, woman and child in Canada. The combined time that Canadians spend reading books, newspapers and magazines, going to movies, watching VCRs, going to the ballet or symphony, attending a sporting event, playing with the home computer or even doing nothing, does not total the time spent watching television.

I believe it is very appropriate that our Government is introducing new legislation concerning our future and future generations. Our children are spending more and more time watching television and being influenced by television. It is also appropriate that our Conservative Government is changing the Broadcasting Act, because it was during the depression year, in 1932 that the Conservative Party, under the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, established the principle of the national sovereignty of the airwaves and created a national network.

The Canadian Radio Broadcasting Act passed the House with only one dissenting vote. There were only a few radio stations at that time that were low in power and were being overpowered by the United States.

Just 50 years later, communications have changed, but in many ways we still face the same old problem of being inundated by U.S. programming. The numbers of hours of television watched by our children will certainly have an effect on our future generations. What R. B. Bennett said in 1932 still holds true today, that this country must be assured of complete Canadian control of broadcasting from Canadian sources, free from foreign interference or influence.

This is the purpose of Bill C-20. It will set out some overdue rules and regulations. I would not say they are long overdue because the communications industry is moving so rapidly that I do not believe even the Government can make changes fast enough to keep up with the industry. This Bill is an attempt to make changes as quickly as possible. It is important to act now before the industry is completely out of control.

We live in an era when consumers can, by the flick of a switch, receive as many as 100 channels to get as varied information as they desire. While I am sure that everyone would like to have a satellite dish on their roof, I have a personal belief about their effects on the communications industry. I support the fact that this Bill will establish rules and regulations with respect to the distribution of those dishes. I am pleased that it recognizes that programs from pay-TV channels cannot be distributed through dishes on the roofs of hotels and other establishments.

If consumers believe that everything is free, I suggest that no more programs will be produced because those programs that are now on pay-TV channels are paid for by the cable operators. They buy those films from the producers who, in turn, pay the artists. Consumers must realize that programs that are transmitted through the air are not necessarily free. If these programs are pirated, there will simply be no more programs. Who will pay the artists if no one pays to watch the programs?

I also support the provisions that prevent the owners of apartment buildings from distributing programs to their tenants. If they were allowed to do so it would cause further hardship to cable companies that are already experiencing financial difficulty.

With respect to the control of our broadcasting system, I would be the first to object to the Government dictating what goes on the air. I am sure that if the Government had found it possible, it would have changed some of its policies with respect to cut-backs to the CBC. Some Hon. Members are aware that I had worked for the CBC for 18 years, and some people may also say that I took a roundabout way to avoid being laid off. However, it should be noted that the Government does have an arm's length agreement with the CBC not to interfere with its daily programming. The Government can no more interfere with the CBC's decisions about lay-offs than it can with what Mike Duffy says on the air each evening.

I am pleased to have taken part in this debate. In closing I will say that, I have had experience working in private radio for some time and I believe that a licence period of five years is too short. I support the extension of that period to seven years because it will give radio programmers an opportunity to put their programs into effect.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I wish to compliment the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Caldwell) on his speech. As a former broadcaster, I also support the Bill. One concern with respect to Canadian television is with the reason why Canadians do not watch as much Canadian content as we would like. Is it possible for this Bill to address that problem?

I am reminded of an editorial cartoon that I saw some years ago. General Motors was having difficulty selling its product because too many cars were being bought from Japanese manufacturers. The planners were studying their vehicles, trying to find why they could not sell enough cars. The sign, in block letters behind them, read, "Build a Better Product". How can we build a better product so that more Canadians will watch more Canadian programs? Could the Hon. Member comment on that?

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. He has addressed a difficult question. Yogi Berra once said, "If they won't come out to the ballpark, we can't stop them". I think that the same thinking applies here. We can put the programs on television, but we cannot make people watch them.

I feel we cannot simply sell out to the Americans completely. I have a great fear—if I might diverge from this matter a little—regarding the way the telecommunications industry is going. Again, one cannot legislate morality, in my opinion. But when a person can go to the corner store, buy a movie, go home and watch the movie, and do this continually every night, it bothers me. Are we going to have a generation of people who watch only western movies, if that happens to be their favourite, and what about those who watch a Playboy cassette, or whatever? It bothers me. Is this what we intend to do for our entertainment each night? I feel that as long as we have the commercial networks and the public networks, at least on some occasions some people might tune in to The Journal, an opera on CTV or CBC, or watch The Nature of Things and those types of programs. What happens if we simply throw up our hands and say, "It is wide open, folks. Do whatever you like". I realize that we cannot stop somebody from going home and watching a VCR, if that is his choice. If everybody is watching VCRs, who is going to produce the programs for the CTV, the CBC, Global or other channels? That is a problem and I do not know how we should address it. It certainly will be a problem.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, may I, first of all, on behalf of all our Members here congratulate the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Caldwell) on his maiden address, and a very fine one at that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): He is not going to get off that easily. I want to ask him, as a 17-year veteran with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, one who knows well the operations of the Canadian broadcasting system and who comes from an area as inundated with American signals as is the Windsor market, does he have sufficient faith in the Canadian broadcasting system to believe that it can withstand such a heavy inundation of American signals?

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Communications (Mr. Scott) for that question. As I said, I did work there for 17 years. The situation has always been difficult. We are not going to be able to compete fully and have the ratings of a "Dallas" or shows of that type on opposite channels in the area. The CBC in Windsor was continually rated fourth in all its broadcast market as far as the area around Windsor is concerned and in my particular riding, other than for news and information. I wonder whether some of the programs we were doing within the CBC should have been done. I still think we heed to have a heavy concentration of news and information in that area. I am very happy to see that during the past that was one area left alone by CBC management, and so the 90 minutes of news and information are on each night. I believe it is the only station in Canada doing that. It has been doing it for about a year or a year and half.

To answer the Hon. Member's question about whether we can compete, I do not think we will ever be on an equal basis. We will be on an equal basis on certain shows, those that are very popular and comparable to some of the American-type programs. On the other hand, the CBC has a complex, and we have all heard it, that people think the CBC is "arty", or it is this or that. People do not tend to watch art all the time or want to be convinced that they are watching art. CBC does some very fine programming, but it is a matter of how one sandwiches that in between shows to get the ratings and to get the people to start watching it.

It is a very difficult situation. I always felt that the CBC in Windsor could be a showcase for the United States. There are four million viewers within the area served by CBET, and the station could very well have become a show window. I was very disappointed that the CBC chose to make cuts as heavy as it did in that area. There were 65 cuts out of about 211. It was very unfortunate that some programs were cut. I do feel, however, that the CBC has to pull up its socks and get on with the job of programming and what it is supposed to be doing. It bothers me somewhat that there are still too many management people left within the CBC and that the programming people are the ones who are getting cut.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is over.

[English]

Mr. Prud'homme: Are there ten minutes for questions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If there is still time, I will allow the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) a question.

Mr. Prud'homme: I do count the minutes, Mr. Speaker. I made my maiden speech 21 years ago. I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on the excellent delivery of his speech. If he can deliver a speech so easily today, I wonder what he will do if he stays here for 20 years.

Would he comment on one of the great concerns in English Canada? I am speaking of the fear of Americanization. This is a fear, as the Hon. Member knows, which francophones share much less because they have other problems of survival. Having been a witness to a thousand of the best of what the Maritimes can produce, I can assure the Hon. Member that among the coalition of the people of Nova Scotia where I was last Sunday there was immense concern about Americanization. Would the Hon. Member care to comment briefly about the danger of deregulation concerning the cultural survival, especially of English Canada?

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member was in the House when someone asked me a question very similar to his. I have great respect for the Hon. Member sitting across from me. I thank him for his comments. I know he is very well respected in the arts and communications community.

We do have a problem in trying to get Canadians to watch Canadian programming. It is also very difficult to compete against the Americans. We all know very well that the "King of Kensington", for example, cost $60,000 an episode, whereas "Dallas" costs a couple of million. How does one compete against that, even if the artists are as good? You are going to fall down somewhere. You are not going to be able to produce those programs. Rather than the CBC trying to be all things to all people, let us do some things really well and sell them on the North American and international markets.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caldwell: This is what I think we should be doing. I think it makes very little sense for each region in Canada to be doing its own variety and jazz shows and so on. Why not do one bang-up jazz show, sell it, co-sponsor it, whatever one has to do in order to have a good production, so that we can stand up and say "this was produced in Canada" and it is a darn good production".

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to take part today in the debate on this Bill, especially since the offices of the CBC are located right in my constituency of Saint-Jacques and many of my constituents will probably expect me to speak on this legislation today.

I wish to take this opportunity to join those who have congratulated the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Caldwell) on his maiden speech in this House. Listening to him, one could tell that he had a lot of experience in the field of communications, and I was not surprised to hear him say at one point that he had worked in this field for nearly 17 years.

Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House, we are sincerely happy that Bill C-20 has been introduced. Basically, it is similar to the Bill introduced by the previous Government.

The former Member for Blainville-Deux Montagnes, the Hon. Francis Fox, who still has many friends in this place, had been the first to introduce this legislation. However, upon consideration of this Bill which has now been introduced by the new Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), we realize that it will have less impact than the previous Bill which included many sections which have been omitted in this one. Any mention of control over telecommunication, of Bell Canada, and so on, has been removed. However, I realize that the Government has decided to include these matters in another piece of legislation, namely Bill C-19. I am therefore not concerned about the omission of telecommunications in this Bill. My major concern, and what I consider to be an important omission is the fact that this Bill says nothing about the CBC and virtually nothing about the development of the movie industry in Canada, two issues which were amply covered by the previous bill sponsored in this House by the Hon. Francis Fox.

I shall come back to these omissions later, but as I begin my comments, I want to say that this is a matter of some concern for me. One thing that I like however about this bill is the fact that, in what remains of the previous legislation, at least part of the philosophy of the previous Liberal Government has remained. The Government wants to have more power over the CRTC in areas which I believe to be compatible with the arm's length relationship that the government must have with the whole broadcasting system in Canada. What we find objectionable is the interference of the Government in the granting of licences to broadcasters. At the time, the Liberal members of Parliament did not want the Liberal Government to get into this for fear of control over the granting of broadcasting permits. Indeed, this was not one of the changes contained in the previous legislation. In this regard, we note that the Conservative Government is quite right, in not wanting to interfere in the granting of permits, even though I would have no objection if the new powers which the Minister will have and which will allow him to have some influence over certain of the policies of the CRTC, went as far as to enable him to examine the criteria governing the granting of permits, without, however, the Minister or the Governor in Council being able to decide which broadcasting company will obtain a permit. On the other hand, as for the Government having its say in the matter of the criteria impartial selection, it seems to me that it might be a field in which the Government could intervene, on the condition that it will do so with good judgment.

By agreeing to Bill C-20, we shall be giving additional powers to the Governor in Council, and therefore to the Minister of Communications and the Government. I must admit that it is not without some concern that I shall finally give my agreement to this bill. We trusted the former Minister who had always, as did his predecessors, maintained a very clear boundary between the Government and the Broadcasting system in Canada. However, the new Minister of Communications seems to have a tendency to intervene a bit more than his predecessors.

First of all, CBC is completely removed from the jurisdiction of the CRTC. However, it seems that the Minister wants to become himself more involved in the affairs of the CBC. Before introducing Bill C-20, he approved cuts of $75 million in the operating budget of the CBC and of $10 million in the capital budget of that corporation. We are also concerned when we see the Minister requesting new powers on the broadcasting system in Canada. The Minister has made cuts in the budgets of the NFB and of the National Arts Centre. And today, he is asking for more power to influence the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission. But before he made that request, he slashed $1.5 million in the budget of the CRTC. In addition, the Minister will in some way penalize the broadcasters when the rates set for the applicants of broadcasting licenses will be drastically increased. Indeed, a review of the estimates tabled in the House shows that as a result of those new rates, the CRTC will increase its revenues by a hefty $22 million. The Minister did all that before he even began to consider how he could exert some influence on the CRTC.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) on a point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I understand that relevance is one of the criteria for an address. I see nothing in the Bill that deals with cuts to the CBC. I am just wondering where we are going, whether or not this is the wrong forum or something inappropriate is happening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is debate. I think the Hon. Member will become very relevant in a very short time.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, if the Hon. Member had been listening to what I was saying instead of reading his newspaper, he would have found that I was relating my remarks to the Bill. What worries me in terms of the cuts, in particular the cuts to the CRTC, is that before bringing enabling legislation into the House like Bill C-20, which would afford the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) extra power to deal with the CRTC, he is starting first by chopping off money. If that is not relevant to what we are talking about, I am at a loss to determine what is relevant in this debate.

In order to control and supervise the cuts made in the budget of the most important Canadian broadcaster—$75 million in the operating budget and $10 million in the capital budget as I mentioned earlier, the Minister has lost no time in appointing a troika of communications experts who will scrutinize every move by the officials of the Corporation . . .

Evidently, my friends opposite are obviously not pleased to hear me remind to Canadians and to the House that the troika controlling the expenditures made by the most important broadcaster in Canada is led by a communications expert who was the main adviser of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during his last election campaign.

There is also something else that concerns me. When the cuts were made and some Canadians were anxious about the effect of those cuts on the quality of programming at the CBC, he eagerly rose and indulged in heroics as he suggested that CBC was not cutting its programming but rather its administration costs. He tried to act as the saviour of programming. The fact was flatly denied by the president of the CBC, Mr. Juneau.

I submit that the arm's length relationship between the government and the broadcasting system in Canada should be maintained. That is why we will keep an eye on the use the government is about to make of the new powers that are being granted by Bill C-20 over the CRTC.

I think that whoever reads Bill C-20 cannot help but notice that there is no mention at all of the first and foremost Canadian broadcaster, namely, the CBC.

We are left to wonder who now is the real boss of the CBC? If the CRTC can no longer issue directions to the CBC, it is therefore the Minister who does! And given the unfortunate way in which the Minister has dealt up to now with the CBC, we have every right to worry and ask questions of this government.

Let us return to the objectives which should determine the government when it gives instructions from now on to the CRTC, since this is what this bill is all about.

In this connection, I submit that the Department of Communications and the Government should aim first and foremost at quality programming.

One of the most deplorable aspects which one can observe in the whole area of broadcasting in Canada is that the goal of quality programming is unfortunately not always compatible with the financial concerns of the producers and broadcasters.

While channel-hopping every night in the quietness of our homes, we realize the wide chasm which exists in the quality of the various broadcasts. There is no mistake that the CBC or Société Radio-Canada, as it is called in French, is the leader in the area of quality programming in Canada. It is also the leader as far as protecting the Canadian identity. The problem, however, is that the CBC is very expensive and is funded with taxpayers' money. That is something which several Hon. Members have already mentioned and which has resulted in the budgetary cuts which I have indicated earlier. We must realize just the same that quality programming often results in decreased revenues for broadcasters. It brings about lower benefits for shareholders. That is why I suggest that it was wrong to divert the CBC from the influence of the CRTC. And I am anxious to see what sort of relationship the CBC and the Minister of Communications will entertain.

Quality programming must be the first consideration, something which is eagerly sought after throughout our broadcasting system, and the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) who is a newcomer in this House, was absolutely right when he compared the quality of American cars to the quality of Japanese cars. We have the same problem with respect to the quality of programming. And that is, for the most part, at the root of our problem of Canadian content.

This is the problem that threatens English-speaking Canada which has the feeling that it is continuously being invaded by American programming. There is first of all the sheer quantity of programs from south of the border. There is also another phenomenon, namely the quality of programs. In larger cities like Toronto and Winnipeg, when looking at the reports compiled by the BBM, the agency that gathers statistics on TV audiences, it is a pitiable sight to see that fairly often the seven or eight favorite programs watched by the local people are American-made. We too have this problem in French Canada, but to a much lesser degree. First of all, French Canada is protected by the language barrier. Yet it is striking to look at the BBM reports and see what the most popular programs are in Montreal, for example. We are also sadly surprised to see that among the four or five most popular programs there are two or three that are American.

So, probably the most important problem facing the CRTC, if they really want to protect Canadian culture and particularly the Canadian culture in English Canada, unprotected by the language barrier, will be that of dealing with the Canadian contents problem and, in the end, the problem of quality. And this is the point where some of the deregulation objectives proposed by the Minister of Communications are beginning to worry us. I think the danger that threatens us with respect to deregulation is most of all one of anarchy in the broadcasting system. Usually coming next is the problem of low revenue, the problem of ensuring a fair sharing of revenue between the broadcasters, which eventually always end up affecting quality.

Mr. Speaker, my remarks will simply make you aware that on this side of the House, while we agree over the broad objective of Bill C-20, we will have to think it over for some time before giving it our approval. I would even go so far as to ask the Minister to rise in the House during the debate on Bill C-20, and make a statement on the way he intends or expects to meet some of the objectives I have mentioned, particularly with regard to the quality of programming and the protection of Canadian culture against the invasion of American programs. I am officially extending that invitation on behalf of my party. We would greatly appreciate it if the Minister, before being granted the nonetheless significant powers he is requesting through Bill C-20, powers enabling him to interfere in the policies of the agency monitoring radio and television in Canada, could make a statement in the House on these objectives and answer questions asked by Opposition members and even by members of his own party anxious to know more about the objectives the Minister will want to pursue when in the future he will have the possibility to influence the CRTC.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Very well, Mr. Speaker.

• (1640)

[English]

Mr. Speaker, naturally I would not want to put the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) or any member of the Liberal Party on the spot. However, he spent most of his speech saying that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) should keep his hands off the CBC. Just about every second day Liberal Member after Liberal Member asks the Minister of Communications to order the CBC not to cut a certain program. I realize that we have a philosophical dilemma here. This is a matter on which I would like the views of the Hon. Member. He cannot have it both ways. Where would he draw the line as to where the Government should tell the CBC what to do in terms of its programming, what cuts to make, when and how?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, does the Member have difficulty in understanding what this Party stands for with regard to the CBC? We have never said "hands off the CBC". We said, leave the knife or the axe aside. We are not happy with the way the CBC has been treated. Its budget has been chopped by $75 million. That does not mean we do not want the Government to look at what the CBC is doing. We have never suggested the Government should get involved in the programming of the CBC. That is the arm's length relationship. We never asked the Government to do that with any broadcaster.

I said earlier in French that the CBC has a very special role. It is funded by the public. Its first goal should be quality, not making a buck, as it is that of the private broadcaster. It is certainly no help to the CBC to have its budget chopped to the tune of $85 million.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, is the Member for Saint-Jacques telling this House that there are no savings to be made in the CBC, that no cuts can and should be made in such a huge corporation as the CBC when in the interest of bringing down this massive deficit cuts are being made across the board? Is he saying the CBC should be left alone? I understand his sympathy is with the CBC, but is he saying that no savings can be made and no cuts should be made?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member heard me say that, my memory must be awfully short. I did not refer to that. That is not what I said. If money can be saved in the administration and transferred to improve programming, I would be in favour of that, but that is not what we have seen. We have seen chopping by degree, $75 million on November 8 and then $10 million. What burns me even more is that the Minister is playing the hero who is saving programming. The rumor went across the country, and we saw the Minister say over television, that he is coming to the rescue of programming. That was contradicted the next day by Mr. Juneau. What is the joke? You do not chop off $75 million and then play the hero coming to the rescue of the CBC.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I agree with some of the comments of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) concerning the quality and content of Canadiana in the CBC. I think the CBC has a national responsibility to maintain that. We are inundated with propaganda from the United States in the printed form and in the visual form.

The Hon. Member may recall that I spoke last week about an indigenous Canadian children's program that was cut by the CBC. That program was The Friendly Giant. Many Canadians have written and telephoned me to express their tremendous concern that this indigenous piece of Canadian culture has been removed from the CBC. What would the Hon. Member and his Party do to maintain that kind of integrity and Canadian content in CBC programming?

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member cannot ask me what my Party and I will do tomorrow and the day after. We are no longer at the helm. Let him examine the record of the last ten or fifteen years when my party was in power to realize to what extent CBC programs have increased in number and in quality. Indeed, it is obvious. All I ask the Government now in office is to have the courage to tackle the problem of Canadian programming, to take the bull by the horns, as the previous government did. Surely it is not by cutting the CBC budget that the wishes expressed by the Hon. Member will be answered. Yet, I heard his bleatings in support of such cutbacks. Here he is now complaining about the way the programming is cut.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Further questions and comments? The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

[English]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short comment in reply to the interjection of the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). Indeed, she has a very good question. She asked, "Where would you cut?"

We believe that in society a choice must be made. Some believe that we should cut across the board and make everybody equally unhappy. However, in our opinion—and I do not expect everyone to share it, as the Hon. Minister I am sure does not expect everyone to share her opinion—the choice should be considered. We look at where survival is more important than cost.

If I were an English Canadian, I would not touch the CBC. Why? Because in English Canada, CBC is an important institution as it relates to the cultural survival of Canada. I am not talking about the Francophones; I am talking about the survival of English-Canadian culture. It is in great danger because of the Americanization which faces it. Recently that view was expressed by authors and artists in Halifax. It will continue to be expressed across Canada. That is one of my worries, and it should be of some concern to the Government.

Where do we cut? In my evaluation, we should not cut across the board and penalize everyone equally, but we should choose where those cuts will be made. We would not have chosen the same cuts, but I think it is a fair point to debate. The Government has chosen to cut across the board. I will not challenge that. That is my reply to the Hon. Minister's question put to the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault). In light of the comments which were made by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), does the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques concur with the idea that in a corporation such as the CBC, which costs taxpayers close to $1 billion a year, there is no room and scope for expenditure cuts, particularly at the overhead and management level? Is he suggesting that taxpayers should commit a certain amount of money to any institution with absolutely no overview of the way in which the money is spent by the institution? Does he feel that $75 million cannot be cut out of a corporation which was established by a Conservative Government and which has goals which are supported by the Conservative Government? Is he saying that in an operation of nearly $1 billion, $75 million cannot be saved in day to day overhead and management operations?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question. It was posed a moment ago by the Parliamentary Secretary. I expressed very clearly that I was against the way in which the cuts were made. First, they were made without warning—

Miss Carney: Do you agree?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I am answering her question. She does not have to provide the answer.

Without notice, overnight, on November 8, the cuts were made. We on this side disliked it when the Minister of Communications posed as a hero and said that he was saving programming. The next day the President of the CBC denied that completely. I am not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, but the Hon. Member's time has expired. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) on debate.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the considerable—

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) rises on a point of order.

Louis David Riel

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) was seeking the eye of the Chair. We have just heard from an Hon. Member on the opposition benches. I wonder if the Speaker might have missed the Hon. Member for Calgary West?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have recognized speakers in the order in which I feel they should be recognized. Therefore, I recognize the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) on debate.

Mr. Parry: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the obvious anxiety of the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), I would be more than happy to defer to my hon. colleague who, I am sure, has remarks of great substance to make.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the House is going to be so reasonable, on the Hon. Member's behalf I will recognize the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) for debate.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. colleague—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think that your judgment was very good and that we can deal with this matter by asking for unanimous consent. Therefore, I would request that you put the question to the House to ensure that it is unanimously agreed that the Hon. Member you recognized first will be superseded by the gentleman on the government side, so that his position to speak will be protected.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I recognized the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River, however, he gave his position to the Hon. Member for Calgary West. I have then recognized the Hon. Member for Calgary West. He has the floor. Now I will call it five o'clock.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall order No. 2 stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Louis David Riel

LOUIS DAVID RIEL

MEASURE TO REVOKE CONVICTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved that Bill C-217, an Act to revoke the conviction of Louis David Riel, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss this Bill in order that a wrong of long ago can be righted. I will be brief in order to give my colleagues in the other two Parties time either to confirm their election promises that they support this measure, or to deny yet another promise to the Métis people by not allowing this Bill to pass.

I do not seek a pardon for Louis Riel which would, of course, be the purview of Her Majesty and the right of the Crown and, as such, would require a motion seeking permission to receive royal consent as opposed to assent. Instead, Sir, I seek a revocation of the conviction of Louis David Riel. I seek the expression of Parliament's will that this conviction was wrong, that Louis Riel was never guilty of the offence of high treason, and that Parliament now wishes to take the action it should have taken at the time, 100 years ago, to recognize the Métis and other native people's right to self-determination and the right to negotiate the terms of their entry into the Canadian confederation.

Louis David Riel, his role in Canadian history, and the long-standing controversy over his execution for treason, have long aroused in many Canadians a profound sense that errors of both commission and omission remain to be addressed and rectified. There is a great sympathy in the public mind for action in the reclamation of Riel's stature as the father of the Confederation we now enjoy and as the founder of the Province of Manitoba, in recognition of the cause Riel fought and died for, a cause with which the people of Canada are only now grappling through the aegis of constitutional discussions on aboriginal rights.

Parliament has a special interest in the Riel legacy because of the dual, often Janus-like, role that this House has played in the events leading up to the execution of Riel and the destiny of Diaspora left to the Métis people in 1870 and again in 1885. This destiny has been further reinforced by federal action again and again ever since. Riel served as the first duly elected Member of this House for the constituency of Provencher. Yet, for reasons intimately tied to his subsequent persecution, he was denied the right to take a seat here and instead was forced into exile. Later, 100 years ago this November, Riel was hanged, not the least of the motives being the unseemly revenge against his actions in 1870. This was the error of commission undertaken by the Government of the day and, until rectified in this House, it is an error shared by every Member of this House.

The fundamental terms of the union, struck by Riel's provisional Government with the Dominion of Canada, as it was then known, despite their legitimate constitutional stature, have yet to be met. This is a continuing error of omission. Parliament, therefore, has a privileged interest in ensuring that the errors of commission committed against one of its former members, who was so shabbily treated in the early 1870s, so unjustly tried, convicted and hanged in 1885, be redressed.

We cannot revive Riel or compensate for the damage done to his family and to his people, but we can take action to ensure that Canada and Canadians accept that an error was made and that justice, however delayed, is nevertheless done. Parliament has a special obligation to respect the earnestness of the Métis people in their opposition to any measure, such as a pardon, which would merely legitimize the errors of commission and perpetuate the errors of omission.

Today's climate of federal and provincial reticence seriously to respect the need for entrenchment of aboriginal and Métis rights in the Constitution means that we must act to remove barriers to change. We can start by having Parliament say that Louis Riel was innocent of the charges brought against him. This small action in the centennial year of Riel's death is not intended to close the book on this issue but is only the first chapter of our fundamental, and ultimately more pressing, obligation to the Métis people as a whole. That obligation to settle the grievances of land claims and constitutional rights has been waiting 100 years to be settled. If Parliament acts now, we can start down the road to justice, knowing that we have removed some of the unjust actions of our predecessors.

Just as Japanese Canadians seek redress for actions taken by this Parliament in wartime, so too do I seek redress for wrongs done in the aftermath of another war in which Canada extended its sovereignty into another nation's territory, the Métis and Indian lands to the west, and then prosecuted their leaders as being treasonable to the country, a country of which they had never actually agreed to be part. Until all of the treaty rights which were negotiated for and never received and the rights which were taken away without treaty are returned, this issue and the good name of Louis Riel will not be resolved.

I ask this House at a most appropriate time, 100 years since Louis Riel's death, to do something about which we will all be happy, that is, to correct the wrong which was committed 100 years ago.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to the House today on the motion of the Hon. Member for a number of reasons. First, I want to applaud the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) for bringing this motion before the House. In doing so, he is perhaps making more Canadians aware that this is in fact the one hundred-year anniversary of the rebellion to which he refers. I hope that the results of his motion and the anniversary celebrations which are occurring this year will be more than just a reawakening in the public's mind of the fact that 100 years ago there was a rebellion—in fact, a second rebellion. I hope that Canadians will take the opportunity during the course of this summer to learn more than they now know about the role of the Métis in Canadian history.

I am pleased to participate in this debate for personal reasons. I was born and raised in the Province of Saskatchewan in a place not far from Batoche, which will be the scene this summer of the one hundredth anniversary of that final struggle. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I now live in the Province of Manitoba, and Louis Riel was very much the father of Manitoba. There is no debate in history about that particular point. As you may also know, Mr. Speaker, in my previous endeavours I was an historian of western Canada, so that the subject of Louis Riel has been, and continues to be, a subject of great interest to me. In addition to that, I have had the privilege over the years of teaching a number of Métis students at university. I know the importance to them of the subject which is before us.

This is a very timely debate, Mr. Speaker, for two or three reasons. It is timely because this year in fact is the one hundredth anniversary of that rebellion of 1885. The Province of Saskatchewan, from which the Hon. Member comes, has named this Heritage Year in part as an opportunity to commemorate the role of the Métis in the history of that particular province. I might note in passing that I understand that a number of the events which are related to the International Year of Youth will also be directed toward Métis youth in particular.

I believe it is exceedingly important to understand, in my opinion, at least, as an historian and as a politician, that Louis Riel should be remembered for his life rather than his death. The part I regret most about the Hon. Member's motion is that it directs attention primarily to his death and the way in which that event was subsequently handled by historians. Louis Riel should be commemorated for his contribution to Canadian history. He was a distinguished western Canadian in that he was the father of Manitoba. Unfortunately, even as I listened to the Hon. Member, it seemed to me there was some confusion of events between the rebellion of 1869-70, which led my province into Confederation, and the rebellion of 1885, which was an unsuccessful military event and the people whom Riel led were the principal losers in many senses of the word.

The young Riel, the Riel of 1869-70, was a remarkable young man. He had recently returned from his studies for the priesthood in Quebec, studies which he unfortunately never completed because of the untimely death of his father. That had a tremendous impact on him personally. He returned to the Prairies an unemployed person, not unlike many of the young people today who have talent and no opportunity to utilize their talent. He came back to a very agitated society. By 1869 the Red River was undergoing a dramatic socio-economic change. Those of you who are familiar with the history of the West may well remember that Fort Garry in the early part of the 19th century was a fur trading post. It also became a retirement home, if you will, for fur traders who were unemployed after the union of the two principal fur trading companies in 1821. Many people, some from the Orkney Islands and others from eastern Canada, particularly those who were the byproducts of marriages which had taken place according to the country style between fur traders—both of French and Scottish descent—

Mr. Benjamin: Order! What has that got to do with the Bill?

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): It has a great deal to do with the Bill.

Mr. Benjamin: It has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): The purpose of the Bill is to recognize the role of Louis Riel in history.

Mr. Benjamin: No, the purpose is to revoke his conviction, you idiot? Read the Bill!

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): I am suggesting to the Hon. Member, and I think he was not listening, that it is important to recognize and commemorate the life of Louis Riel rather than the death of Louis Riel. There was a very unique culture developing in the Red River area to which Louis Riel came back at age 23 in 1868. He then became a very distinguished leader of the new and growing Red River society.

As a result of the troubles, Mr. Speaker, the people of the River River, not just the Métis but the collective community, united together for the most part in opposition to what they perceived to be the encroachment of central Canada. They were of course acting very much in the tradition of western Canadian history.

As a result of deliberations which took place over several months, the very small postage stamp Province of Manitoba entered into Confederation in 1870. It was very clear that one person more than any other was responsible for that, and that individual was Louis Riel.

As a result of his success he was elected to the House of Commons twice. Regretfully, because of the conflict which existed in Canada in the 1870s—

Mr. Benjamin: Called bigotry.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): He was barred from taking his seat. The tragedy of Riel in 1870 was that he and many others in that community became a part of a struggle with which they were not in any way involved. This struggle was between the English and the French, the Catholics and the Prostestants. I have talked about this on other occasions at regional meetings of the Métis Federation, and what matters to them is that Louis Riel and his role in Canadian history should be and must be recognized to a much greater degree than it has been up to this point in time. I would hope that our intention during the course of this year will be to commemorate the accomplishments of the entire Métis nation—

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, by passing this Bill.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): —not to focus simply on one individual. Riel was only a small part of a group of people whose accomplishments in Canadian history were very substantial.

As I said before, the Métis people were unique in that they were a byproduct of two particular cultures, and they themselves, perhaps more than any other group of people, were responsible for the peaceful settlement of the West. Contrasting Canadian history with American history, we note that our history was much more peaceful, and thankfully so. One of the reasons for that is that the Métis people were a liaison, a vital and continuing link. We have not had in the history of the Canadian West a clash between two cultures which had had no previous contact with or understanding of each other. Riel and the Métis were an integral part of that relationship.

It is extremely important, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians attempt to understand in this centennial year how the history of the Métis is divided into two separate areas, that is, the Métis in Manitoba and the Métis in Saskatchewan. In my mind, the Métis were the victims of technological change.

Mr. Benjamin: Like the CPR and the Gatling gun.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Certainly the problems which developed in Manitoba in 1869 were, to a very large degree, a byproduct of the coming of the railway. Unfortunately, after 1870 and the arrival of settlers from southeastern Ontario, many of the Métis left the Red River and went into the North Saskatchewan-South Saskatchewan River area where Batoche is located. Many went into what is now Alberta, your home province, Mr. Speaker. Here they remained, while Riel was out of the country, for 10 or 12 years until the arrival again of the CPR. In the meantime, a tremendous tragedy took place in the Indian community because of the failure of the policies of the Canadian Government to negotiate with respect to reserves. This, the coming of the railways and the coming of the settlers, leads us directly to the crisis of 1884 and the return from Montana of this now not-quite-so-young Louis Riel.

When I look at the events of 1884-85 in the Northwest Territories, I think it is a mistake to think only in terms of one individual. In doing that we are probably doing a disservice to the individual because we are placing too much stress upon the events of 1885 and the results of that particular trial.

Mr. Benjamin: It is a service to the Métis people.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): In addition to that, we place too much stress on the role of one individual in the history of an entire culture.

Mr. Benjamin: Nonsense!

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is entitled to his opinion. He has had his few moments, and I think I am entitled to mine.

Mr. Benjamin: You have had your few moments.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): In 1884-85, the Canadian Government was guilty, as it has been so often throughout our history, of neglect. There was a breakdown in communications. Every western Canadian knows the story of letters being sent to Ottawa and answers coming back weeks and months later. Unfortunately, that is a problem which does not always seem to be restricted to the 19th century. There was a recession on the Prairies and cut-backs in the Department of Indian Affairs. By 1884, the climate on the Prairies was explosive. The Canadian Government must accept responsibility for that, at least in the sense that this lack of communication had led to its creation.

When Louis Riel returned to Batoche, then deemed to be the headquarters of the Métis community, he returned to a situation to which in part the Canadian Government had contributed. What happened thereafter is a tragedy in that it was a clash between two totally unequal technological forces. On the one hand, you had the so-called modern army from eastern Canada armed with the Gatling gun which had been sent here by the Americans as an experiment. On the other hand, there was an aging and weaker society in the Métis culture trying to defend itself against new methods of warfare. In my opinion, the Métis people would have been better off had the second rebellion not occurred. The rebellion occurred, and I think that in many ways the Métis people were the victims of that for the reason that their history had been tied almost exclusively to one individual, the figure of Louis Riel.

In this particular case it is important to look back and recognize that the history of a people is more than the history of one individual. It is also important to realize that one can be heroic and still have controversial characteristics. As an example I think of John A. MacDonald, the first Prime Minister of Canada. Teachers of Canadian history were embarrassed for many decades to admit that the man had certain problems with alcohol consumption. Later on we became mature enough to realize that the man was heroic despite his weaknesses.

I am saying that the Métis people can and should be proud of their accomplishments regardless of the controversial question of how Louis Riel was treated in the judicial courts in 1885. The Métis people should honour Louis Riel for his accomplishments, as should all Canadians, regardless of how the courts dealt with him in 1885.

I read the transcripts of 1885. I dare say there are not many people among the 282 Members who can say that. I do not pretend to be a lawyer; I am only a historian. Having read virtually all of the material that has been published, I can say that the debate on the validity of the trial of 1885 will go on for time immemorial. The fact remains that Louis Riel was an exceptional politician. He was a man of substantial stature who led the people of Manitoba into Confederation. He was very sincere in his attempts in 1885 to get a better deal for the people of the Northwest Territories. It is also evident, and must not be forgotten, that he was part of a people who have every right to be proud of their history and their accomplishments.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be taking part in the debate this afternoon. It is a rather emotional subject, because to us, Louis Riel is a hero. I therefore wish to start by congratulating the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) for proposing Bill C-217, an Act to revoke the conviction of Louis David Riel.

The explanatory note, Mr. Speaker, reads as follows:

The purpose of this Bill is to revoke the conviction of Louis David Riel for high treason, as opposed to merely granting him a posthumous pardon.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) spoke as a historian. He made the point that the history of Canada, at least where it concerns the development of this country, is a controversial one and always will be, I imagine, according to the historian himself, a subject of debate. I agree that when we read all the documents on the historic trial and hanging of Louis Riel, there are diverging views on both sides. The fact remains that to many of us, this controversial figure in the history of our country is a hero, a man who managed to unite his people in a common cause and who left his mark on our history, not only as far as his own people were concerned but also, and I think the historian who spoke before me, the Member for Brandon-Souris, will agree, as the founder of the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up too much of the House's time, and I just want to make a few brief comments and invite my Quebec colleagues, as French-speaking Canadians, to take part in this debate and express their views. In every new session, over the last twelve years, we have had occasion to discuss this matter.

The same Bill has been proposed many times before by Members of the New Democratic Party. I heard Mr. Yurko, the former Member for Edmonton East, make the same proposal. There have been many statements under S.O. 43. However, I must admit I have rarely heard any statements or views on the subject by Members from Quebec. I speak today as an Ontarian by birth, with a solid Irish, Scotch and French background, and I would ask those Members in this House who are from Quebec to take part in the debate so that we will finally know where they stand and what their position is on an issue that has been a very important one in this country. The House will remember that Ontario was the bad guy and that Quebec was "deeply offended" by what happened, which gave rise to some serious problems with respect to Canadian unity.

I think this will be an opportunity for our Quebec Members . . . I see the Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) who often speaks during the hour for private Members, and I wonder whether she would be willing to state her views on this important matter. I am sure she is well up on the subject and would be able to give us some clarification regarding the views of those Quebec Members who all too often remain silent on such important issues.

Mr. Speaker, to avoid prolonging the debate, to give these Members a chance to express their views, and to show that this House is interested in making some progress in clearing up controversial matters, I would like to make a proposal I consider important. I want to suggest to the Hon. Member who presented the Bill that he withdraw it so it can be referred to committee for consideration. Perhaps the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) will agree that the proposed legislation deserves more thorough consideration than can be given in one hour here in the House. I therefore move, seconded by the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) that the motion be amended by deleting all the words following the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-217, an Act to revoke the conviction of Louis David Riel, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter there referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, that is my proposal!

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I have looked at the amendment and I accept it as proposed by the Hon. Member. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) on debate.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, is there no vote?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, there is no vote. Debate continues until six o'clock. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills.

• (1730)

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Private Members' Bill C-217. First I want to express some regret about the speech made by the Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who, as did the Liberal Party even before 1900, attempted to frame the issue on the basis of whether one is French or English. He tried to put it into a French-English ratio basis. That was incorrect then and it is incorrect today. It is typical of the Liberal Party that it is prepared to play on the deepest emotions that people have had historically in this and other countries for the benefit of his Party.

Having said that, I believe that he does have the correct approach in that this subject matter should be put before a committee. The Bill, as reflected in the scholarship of the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), shows the typical simplistic approach taken by the NDP which is lacking in any true appreciation of what the reality was then or what it is now. If there is anybody who is in left field, it is clearly the NDP, ideologically and in reality.

This topic needs time. With every passing year and with the excellent scholarship by our historians, more is being revealed about the true reality of the situation in Canada at the time. Therefore, I submit that it would be quite improper for the House to act precipitously on this issue by passing this Bill. The amendment by the Member for Ottawa-Vanier is closer to addressing the issue. That may be the proper approach once proper discussions are held and the background set up. Indeed, there are many of us who would be prepared to see that happen in the future.

There is enough scholarship today to allow a committee to get to the bottom of the whole question. In fact, the real issue was a religious issue, which we find very hard to believe today. However, in those days to be a Roman Catholic or Protestant was similar to the situation in Northern Ireland today.

Members of Parliament hold the great privilege of having immunity in this place. I suggest that Members do a disservice to the people of their riding and of the country by trying to take advantage of those deep emotions of people.

The historic truths are jsut now coming to light. The most recent book entitled Prairie Fires written by Professors Bob Beal and Rod MacLeod sets out the context as best as has been done. I do not believe there are any more documents coming to light. Therefore, I believe this would be an appropriate time for the topic to be considered. I hope all Members will read that book because it will give a sense of the background and the reality from which western Members come. When we stand to present our western grievances in the House, as our colleagues from other provinces present their grievances, we must learn more about our historical development.

Members who study this issue will have a deep sense of outrage about what occurred to the Métis people and to Louis Riel. It is true that the actual legal events that occurred were very likely correct and clearly appreciated by Louis Riel himself. He was defended by the leading defence counsel of the nation. There is no doubt that he understood the legal position he was in and the stand taken by the defence counsel on his behalf. They knew in terms of the law that there was only one defence that would prevail for him, but he rejected that defence, quite properly.

The life of Louis Riel shows and the book reveals that by 1869 the Métis people were a totally self-contained racial group in this country. They were not Indians, even though they could live like the Indians in many respects. They were not like Anglophone Canadians, even though they could operate in that world. Indeed there were many English-speaking Métis, although their definition correctly applies only to a French-Indian combination. They were not French Canadians in the tradition of the French habitants and the people who spent their lives in Quebec.

It is not possible to become a separate nation overnight. The Métis had 200 years' experience of being their own people on their own land with their own culture. They lived along the rivers in Manitoba on lots that were surveyed in long lines, as was done in Quebec. Naturally, they objected when surveyors came in 1869 and rejected those property rights in favour of the square toroid system in which the western country was surveyed. In fact, that is why Louis Riel is a hero to anyone who knows his western Canadian history. Louis Riel was the first man to stand up to the oppressive, unilateral and dictatorial actions of the central Government, and others have subsequently and paid a bitter price for it.

That is what the National Energy Program involved. It reflected an insensitive, uncaring central Government foisting its view upon a region of this country. The National Energy Program was a western Canadian issue, but there could be other measures affecting other provinces. Indeed, Parliament responded in many ways to the pressures that came from Quebec to allow Quebecers who wanted to participate in this country with their language as Canadians. That is what the official language is about. That is why I can defend the Official languages Act in my riding with no problem at all. Its purpose is to allow people who live in a region of our country to feel that they are a part of Canada and can contribute to the greatness of this country.

By the same token, Quebec Members—especially Progressive Conservative Members from Quebec—went to Quebec and argued against the National Energy Program that was so vicious and wrong for western Canadians.

The Provisional Government of Louis Riel was legal. In 1869 and 1870 there was a gap between the time when the central Government got Rupert's Land and the time when the Northwest Territories and its government was legally installed. Therefore, the Provincial Government of Louis Riel was quite correct in terms of law. However, it made a political mistake when it executed Thomas Scott. That inflamed the religious passions, which we find hard to appreciate today but which were very real at that time. That enraged Ontario, just as Quebec was enraged after the execution of Louis Riel. These events were framed in terms of race and religion and they set off an uncontrollable reaction. It inevitably led to the events of 1885.

Again, the Hon. Member for Regina West has made no distinction in terms of his scholarship and understanding of the problem that it is necessary to isolate the events of 1885, which led to the treason charge, conviction and hanging, from the events of 1869. In 1885, Mr. Speaker, it was much the same. Again, the Métis had resettled along the south branch of the Saskatchewan River. They had been there for many years; their children had been born and raised there. They had grandparents and parents who were on the land. That gave them a validity that only farm people perhaps can appreciate, having ancestors who have worked the land and are part of the land. Again, the surveyors came. You would have thought that the central Government by then would have appreciated that one should give respect to some of the rights of the Métis, but the surveyors did not. They simply came and started to trample over their land once more. The Métis did not know what to do. They did not have any natural-born leaders in terms of politics. Gabriel Dumont, the greatest buffalo hunter and organizer they had sent to Montana for Louis Riel. A delegation was sent. Riel came back reluctantly. By that time he was an American citizen and was proud to be an American. He said he really wanted to remain an American and planned to go back, but the Métis needed his advice. Riel came. They had all sorts of meetings all over the Métis territory. They sent petitions. They wrote out their grievances very carefully, sent them to Ottawa, but Ottawa did not respond. It so happens that the Government was a Progressive Conservative Government. We all express regret that the Government in Ottawa at that time was no better than subsequent Governments have been, the last example being the Liberal Government and the National Energy Program.

The Métis became desperate. At the same time the research shows that in two areas Louis Riel was unable to keep his common sense, as we would say today. One was in politics. He was incensed about what had happened in 1869. He created Manitoba. He got no reward nor acknowledgement. In 1885, he came back. After weeks and weeks they sent petitions and letters, but got no response. Suddenly, troops were sent out. In the area of politics Riel was so frustrated that, again, he took politics into his own hands and declared a separate Government. That was all right in 1869 because in terms of the law there was a gap, and so it was quite acceptable. In 1885, there was a properly, duly constituted law in the Northwest Territories. What Riel did was simply illegal. It was treason to declare it. Then things got out of control, Mr. Speaker. If I recall, 29 or 30 people were killed. These were proper, law-abiding residents who were living in the Northwest Territories and who were killed by the Métis and the Indians. It was out of that that the charge of treason arose.

When it came time for the trial, there was no doubt in terms of the law, with 30 people having been killed, that there was going to be a conviction. Riel's lawyers raised a defence of insanity. Louis Riel himself would not accept that defence of insanity, even though subsequent scholarly studies show that in the area of politics and in the area of religion Louis Riel lost his common sense. In terms of religion, Louis Riel by that time had come to see himself as a prophet. In fact, the leadership of the church at that time was very upset with the position he was taking and developing. Riel wanted to make one of the bishops Pope of the new world and he was going to be the prophet. That is the historic reality of it. The leaders of the church were not happy with him then.

Mr. Prud'homme: He was hanged.

Mr. Thacker: I say read the letters of Father André. Get in and actually do the research. If you want to look at it, it is there in black and white. Therefore, the church leaders, we have to accept, were not all that unhappy. They did not want him to be killed. The irony, I suppose, is that once he was killed and no longer a threat to the leadership, they took Riel to their hearts.

Mr. Prud'homme: What an explanation!

Mr. Thacker: That is the reality, my friend, and I say to you to take a look at it.

This is why this Bill has to go to a committee at some point. If the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier had done his research, he may have come up with that.

Mr. Gauthier: With what?

Mr. Thacker: I would be interested in what the Hon. Member has to say. He scoffs. Has he read the book?

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I spoke in this debate. I moved a motion. I do not think I ever implied that the Member speaking was ignorant. He was present when I spoke. I think he should withdraw his comments with regard to my remarks. He did not understand—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I regret that the Hon. Member does not have a point of order. He has a point of debate. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) has the floor.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) rose. I was praising him for his strategy. I was wishing that we had had time to think about it before. I was directing my comments to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) who has not read his history and was not even here for most of the speech. He would not appreciate the background at all.

Mr. Prud'homme: But we have a good television system. It is much better that I was not here.

Ms. Copps: He could not believe his ears. That is why he came in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

Mr. Benjamin: Hey guys, what are you doing to my Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) has the floor.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, we have the Liberal-NDP coalition working again. They are trying to set us up so we cannot discuss the facts and the reality. The Liberals and the NDP have to start the catcalls.

Mr. Prud'homme: Don't talk about the National Energy Program then.

Mr. Thacker: The Hon. Member for Regina West stands alone in the House again. There is no one in his Party to support him. There are three or four Liberals in the House trying to raise a ruckus so that the House will be misled and the issues not dealt with properly.

That is my view, Mr. Speaker. I wish we had more time because I would have liked to lend support to the Hon.

Member for Ottawa-Vanier. It is a subject that could be looked at, although I believe it will be found that the conviction of Louis Riel was correct in terms of the common law at that time. In terms of the politics, it was wrong and insensitive. But that has been the history of this government in Ottawa.

Mr. Prud'homme: But he was hanged.

Mr. Thacker: We should take it as a lesson that we as Members of Parliament should be very sensitive in the use of power. We should not be standing using our immunity, as the Member for Ottawa-Vanier did, trying to frame it in terms of ethnic and racial differences, because that was not the true basis of Louis Riel and his conviction.

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased as a Quebecer to rise today and speak on such an important and interesting chapter of our Canadian history. I would like to join my colleagues from Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) and Lethbridge (Mr. Thacker) in paying tribute to a hero of our Canadian history. I consider it important that in this House, occasionally, we should have an opportunity to pay our respects to those men who paid so dearly to have their mark left on our history. I hope that my colleague from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) will take part in the debate today. I want to point out to the House that we have among us a Métis, and I hope he will contribute to this debate.

Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that such a subject should have been introduced in this House because in this year 1985 the Métis resistance will be commemorated in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. I think it is with much pride that the Canadian Government is now discussing with representatives of the National Council of Métis this matter of grants for the celebration of the 100th anniversary of Batoche, which will take place in Saskatchewan in July of 1985. I must also stress the active participation of the Saskatchewan Government in those activities. The many events that will take place next summer, that is in July 1985, will have the scope of a truly national celebration, with many social and cultural activities, and we are proud as the federal Government to be associated with that event. This goes to prove, Mr. Speaker, that this Government wants to encourage cultural Métis activities in Canada.

We all know here, in this House, that Louis Riel has played a very important role in our Canadian history. We may even think that Louis Riel is one of the founders of Manitoba, even though there has been a lengthy controversy on that subject. We recognize today the important contribution of all the Métis of the area in the building of our Canadian society. The Government of Canada is negotiating with the representatives of the National Council of Métis and other native groups to better define their constitutional role. Besides, I would like to point out to the House that there will be an important conference of First Ministers on April 2 and 3, 1985 on the subject of natives.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in order not to take up too much of the time of the House, I would like to conclude by expressing my feeling of fraternity with those people who want to be identified in Canada's great mosaic.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief, because I know that everyone would welcome the opportunity to vote on the subject. If the Hon. Member who has just spoken truly believes in and wants to make all Canadians aware of the history of the Métis people, I think a first step would be to revoke the verdict of guilty as his Government is empowered to do. I would therefore urge all other members to support us in the Liberal Party with our amendment, to support our friend from the New Democratic Party on his Bill, and stop talking nonsense if you are not ready to vote.

[English]

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to speak on this Bill with great emotion because I stand here with a heritage which goes back to the Métis in the Province of Manitoba. In my grandfather's living-room there was a picture of Riel, but it was not the Riel who is being projected here today through this Private Member's Bill. It was the Riel who accomplished something for his people, my relatives.

As I stand here today I look at the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I have seen them before speaking on issues, presenting Private Members' Bills and trying to create divisiveness within the House.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. This is not the first time the Hon. Member has tried to do that to me. I ask him to tell me when I have ever tried to do such a thing. I have been a Member of this House for 21 years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Prud'homme: I have worked all my life for the creation of friendship among all of us. Unless he does so, he should put up or shut up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that that is a point of debate. He will have an opportunity at another time—

Mr. Prud'homme: I know what I am dealing with. That is the only question that will make me lose my temper.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It is a point of debate.

Mr. Prud'homme: No, Sir.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, obviously I have hit a sensitive nerve in the Opposition.

Mr. Prud'homme: Put up or shut up. When have I done that?

Mr. St. Germain: Obviously, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Prud'homme: It is a negation of what I came here for, what you are trying to do.

Mr. St. Germain: —if the shoe fits, wear it. I think the intent of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is honourable. I do not question that. However, I think it is slightly misguided, and I hope that it is not for political reasons that he has brought this Bill forward.

Mr. Benjamin: Tell that to the Métis people.

Mr. St. Germain: You are talking to one of them.

Mr. Benjamin: This is on their advice, not yours.

Mr. St. Germain: Let us look at the Métis accomplishments rather than the eventual problems and outcome which Riel had to face. Let us speak of the accomplishments and contributions they made to the Canadian culture and to the Canadian mosaic. The Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) said: "Let's not talk of the death of Riel, but let's talk of his accomplishments, accomplishments which shaped and moulded the lives of many of us Manitobans as we grew up".

From 1869 to 1870, as history proves, Manitoba went through considerable turmoil. There were problems. I say in retrospect that if we had to face those problems today, we would not necessarily have handled them as they were handled then. However, it is part of our history and it is something from which we should learn rather than cause division on.

Riel, in 1869 and 1870, was working and trying to establish a better life for the people he represented. Those people supported him to the point where Mr. Riel had to leave the Province of Manitoba. The Métis did not leave; there are still an awful lot of them there. Some of us have moved on to different areas of this great country, but we contributed and Riel contributed.

I want to tell the House something about growing up in the Province of Manitoba in the era in which I grew up. There were still injustices being done to us. However, we do not look back on them with anger. We have learned. We have learned to be tolerant and to understand. Hopefully, we can pass this on to future generations so that as Canadians we can live and develop a country with understanding for all cultures; not only native Indians and Métis but all cultures which came from all parts of the world to this great country. They knew that there was understanding and that possibly life had to be given to create this great country of ours. Let us look at it positively. Let us not try to divide.

Mr. Prud'homme: Let's vote now, then.

Ms. Copps: Let's vote on it.

Mr. St. Germain: Let us work toward the future of Canada instead of looking backward.

There is no way in this world that we can make up for the mistakes and wrongdoings of the past. We must seek and continually work toward doing justice within our own time. I have no time for those who would promote divisiveness by the use of this House or by the use of any means or methods within the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I should have cut off debate two minutes ago as we started two minutes early. I have given the House an extra two minutes because I know how important it is to Private Members to extend their debate in this House. It being six o'clock, the hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—AMOUNT OF FARM DEBT. (B) UNITED STATES PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on the adjournment motion this afternoon because in the gallery today are representatives of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. Over 150 visited Parliament Hill today and presented a brief to many Members of Parliament, I believe to almost every Member from the Province of Ontario. I welcome them to the Hill today.

Yesterday I directed a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) concerning the farm debt crisis, the most important problem presented to us today by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. They pointed out that almost 39,000 out of 228,000 farmers in Canada face very serious debt problems. This is due to the fact that commodity prices have been very low, interests rates for the past three or four years have been very high and in many cases land values have dropped by at least 50 per cent in the last three or four years. This has resulted in excellent farmers suddenly having no equity in their farm property.

An OFA representative who visited my office today described how he had purchased a farm for $320,000 about 10 years ago. He took out a $240,000 mortgage with the Farm Credit Corporation. When he had the farm appraised last summer, the value of his hog farm had dropped to $165,000. He has totally lost his equity in the property due to falling land values.

I asked the Minister what he was going to do about the serious financial difficulties of the thousands of farmers on the verge of bankcruptcy or default. The Farm Credit Corporation estimates that defaults on farm properties in the next couple of years will amount to $2 billion, the largest default since the 1930s. It will be in the realm of Dome Petroleum and other massive defaults in this country. Instead of involving a big oil corporation, it will affect hundreds of thousands of small farmers. What is sad is that these are our youngest and most productive farmers. They are technologically advanced farmers who produce half of all the food produced in this country.

The Minister stated that they had reduced interest rates to 12¾ per cent. The Farmers Union and the Canadian Cattlemen's Association are asking that the interest rate be reduced to 8 per cent. The Minister said they can appeal to the Farm Credit Corporation in the event of a foreclosure. He said they are running a pilot project to consider ways to assist these farmers.

That policy of the Mulroney Tory Government is a policy of abandonment. They are saying to the 39,000 farmers in serious financial trouble, and the Farm Credit Corporation estimates that the number has grown to 45,000 in the last two months, that they are abandoning them.

Compare that with the policy in the United States. Approximately four weeks ago a number of parliamentarians went to the United States and met the Secretary of Agriculture John Block. He told us that theirs is a policy of continuing to spread the loans over a longer period of time. Two of us had the opportunity to meet and talk with the Farmers Home Administration. We were told that their policy was a policy of continuation and that they wanted to continue to have young, productive and technologically-advanced farmers on the land. They told us that if those farmers were put off the land, the land values would fall on surrounding farms and the situation would be exacerbated.

Let us consider the abandonment policy of the Minister of Agriculture and compare it with the policy of the United States Government. The U.S. is prepared to write down interest rates of from 11 per cent or 12 per cent to 5 per cent or 7 per cent. The U.S. Government is willing to set aside 25 per cent of Farmer's Home Administration loans for a five-year period and is willing to pay the interest on the loans during that period of time. If a private-sector loan is involved, and the bank is willing to forgive more than 10 per cent of that loan, then the Farmer's Home Administration in Washington will provide a loan guarantee for 90 per cent of the balance.

To this date, that administration has had 109 applications. It has processed 3,000 set-aside applications. It has written down 8,000 loans to 5 per cent or 7 per cent. That is the policy which keeps young people on the farms. That is the policy of continuation which strengthens, encourages and supports the rural area.

That is exactly what the Ontario Federation of Agriculture wants this Government to do. However, instead we have the Tory policy of abandonment. The Government has said to the 45,000 young farmers across Canada, "We are abandoning you and the devil take the hindmost. We are not going to support you. We are not going to assist you in any way". It is a callous, uncaring, short-sighted and inhuman way to treat the young farmers who are the life-blood of the rural area and the agricultural economy for the years ahead.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am always somewhat surprised that the Hon. Member for Algoma should constantly raise these questions, which makes us wonder what was the former Government doing when the interest rates were around 16 and 17 per cent. It was this Government which authorized such loans to farmers by the Federation, Mr. Speaker. What we are doing now is to try to minimize the effects of a policy which caused serious problems and was hardly acceptable to Canadian farm producers.

Mr. Speaker, the Member opposite would like to know what action the Government intends to take to prevent farm bankruptcies in Canada. This is what he asked in his question yesterday and today and this is what he spoke about in his comments. I would like to point out that, since it came into power, the Progressive Conservative Government has done a lot to prevent these bankruptcies.

During the last few weeks, we have taken several initiatives which will be of great assistance to Canadian farmers. Something over two weeks ago, on January 15, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced that 5,600 farmers would be eligible for a reduction in the interest rate on their loan. Many farmers on the verge to bankruptcy now have better hope to overcome their difficulties. Thanks to the action taken by our Government, eligible farmers will be able to save about $16 million a year during the next five years.

To help those who find themselves in a dire straits or against whom legal proceedings have been or will soon be taken, the Government has extended the terms of reference of the appeals commissions of the Farm Credit Corporation. This means that, when a farmer who has borrowed from the Corporation finds himself in dire straits, he will be able to go before these appeals commissions and ask for a review of his case.

He can appear alone or accompanied by his other creditors so that those concerned can look for valid solutions. It is not always easy, Mr. Speaker, but I believe that, as parliamentarians, we must try to find solutions with farm producers instead of simply saying that our policy, is to give up which is certainly not the case. The facts are very clear and I think that the action taken by the Canadian Government since September 4 show a real desire to help farm producers.

Hon. Members have also asked about a debt forgiveness program. We are now considering many options which could help to prevent farm bankruptcies, and I must say that these include such a program.

We have the duty to examine carefully all possible options. A program of debt forgiveness may seem interesting and simple, but we have to consider all its consequences. Subsidizing interest rates could have about the same net effect for the farmer, but it might be simpler to apply. The Government can no longer afford to spend or to reduce its revenue without the assurance that the results will be worthwhile. You can be certain, Mr. Speaker, that the Government will discharge its responsibilities.

EDUCATION—FUNDING OF STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM. (B) TUITION FEES QUERY

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, in December I asked the Hon. Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) a very important question regarding his Government's approach to the young people of this country and the availability, access and opportunity for them to have a college or university education, a post-secondary education. I asked this question because of the cuts made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his economic statement in the fall, and because of my grave concern for the future of the young people of this country. I am sorry to say that I did not receive a clear answer, or even an understandable one, from the Minister.

The future of Canada and the future of our young people are inextricably tied. If our youth are properly trained and educated to face the future, Canada will be the beneficiary. If our young people gain the required education, if they are given the opportunity to get an education, they will then, through their imagination and intelligence, be stimulated to think, invent, research, produce and to make Canada's economy much healthier. Not only will our economy be healthier, Mr. Speaker, but also our entire civilization. Its culture, values and quality of life will be enhanced by exposing our youth to a post-secondary education. Therefore, much of our future is in the hands of our youth. If we are to be competitive in the future, we must have a well educated population. We must give access to a post-secondary education to as many young people as possible.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, at this time of high youth unemployment, many of our young people who cannot get jobs are staying in school because they know that statistics prove that the higher the education, the better the chance to get a job. For example, approximately 96 per cent of the people with university degrees obtained jobs last year while nearly 14 per cent of high school drop-outs were not able to obtain employment.

Professor David Foot, professor of economics at the University of Toronto, who is an expert renowned in his field, has made extensive labour-market studies and has given us ample evidence that education is fundamental to providing a worthwhile future, a future with decent and relevant employment for our young people, and is also vital to the future of our great country and its economy.

With all of the evidence of the importance of post-secondary education to our young people, to our economy and to our healthy future, what does the Tory Government do? It puts a freeze on student loans, holding them to present levels. It takes away the indexed adjustment for the cost of living which was earmarked for students by the former Liberal Government. This it does while hypocritically talking about its concern for those in greatest need. The Tory Government socks it to the student who can no longer afford to stay in school because of the freeze it has put on the level of student loans. The Tories say one thing and do another.

Even in the January, 1985 consultation paper just released this week, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), said, "Social responsibility dictates that wherever possible, and to a greater extent than is the case today, scarce resources should be diverted to those in the greatest need". Is this how the Government diverts resources to those in need? The Tories are quite willing to hurt the poorest kids in our society by removing their ability to borrow important dollars which could make the difference as to whether or not they can attend school. Actions speak louder than words.

It is the student from a family living in poverty, with its limited income, where every dollar counts, who is the one who needs to borrow this money. Not every student needs to borrow the entire limited amount available under the Student Loans Program. They can manage with a partial loan and, fortunately, many can get on without any loan at all. But a ceiling on student loans does hurt the poorest students, those with the greatest need. How could the Conservative Government so cruelly remove the $5 million cost of living increase and hit the students who are weakest and least able to cope, all the while crying crocodile tears about its concern for the poor?

The present Conservative Secretary of State has been given by Parliament the authority to enlarge student loans. He could have increased the loan limits. As a matter of fact, he did not even have to do that. The former Liberal Government had already taken steps to include the increase in its Budget. So why did the Secretary of State freeze them? Why did he sock it to the poor kids in this way?

Maybe the Minister of Finance kept the Secretary of State from doing what I am sure his own conscience told him he should have done. Or did he really want to disenfranchise a whole segment of the student population, the poorest, from their right to a post-secondary education. The students of Canada and the people of Canada are entitled to a clear answer to this question. Is this Government going to help the poor or just talk about it? How can he possibly justify a freeze on student loans?

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in light of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence concerning the Government's decision not to raise the weekly loan limit under the Student Loan Program in 1985-86, perhaps I should begin by explaining how this program works.

From the outset, may I point out to the Hon. Member that we are talking about the Canadian Student Loans Program which is administered by the provinces under the appropriate legislation. Student assistance offices in the various provinces analyse the financial needs of applicants, and any loan made under the program take into account expenses incurred by the student for personal needs, his resources and real tuition fees. Therefore, should a province decide to raise tuition fees, as Ontario is about to do, according to the Hon. Member, that factor will be included in figuring out loans. The Hon. Member must know that real tuition fees have always been and will always be taken into account in figuring out loans under the Canadian Student Loans Program. The Hon. Member probably knows as well that in most provinces this program is only one aspect of student assistance; they can also apply for grants or special assistance, or resort to loan programs for additional financial assistance. Taken as a whole, those programs offer generous help.

As to the loan limit at current levels and the reduced outlays for 1985-86, I should tell the Hon. Member that, contrary to what he seems to imply, next year's budget for the Canada Student Loans Program will be increased, from $229 to $270 million. I am sorry to say that we had to cut expenses under this program by some $5 million in 1985-86, but the fact remains that the increase for next year amounts to 17.9 per cent. I am sure the Hon. Member will agree with me that nobody gets any less than what he or she can rightfully expect.

Most students will not be unduly alarmed if the loan limit is frozen at current levels, that is $105 a week. Mr. Speaker, I must point out that a student entitled to the maximum amount can receive $3,360 over a 32-week school year, not to mention any help he might get from the province. The average loan under the program is $2,300, so that the current $105 limit does appear reasonable, but the freeze on the weekly limit might adversely affect the odd student who is otherwise eligible for the full loan. Still, that is $160 a year at most and, keeping in mind the low inflation rate, we do not expect dire consequences.

As to graduate students without jobs, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that, in June 1983, Parliament increased financial assistance to post-secondary students and set up a program under which jobless borrowers do not pay interest. This has been a very successful program, and that is just another way for the—

VIA RAIL—AGE OF LOCOMOTIVES—GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, on November 19, 1984, which seems like a long time ago now, I addressed a two-part question on VIA Rail to the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard). The first part had to do with whether VIA Rail had any plans for improving and expanding its service. The second part had to do with what plans VIA Rail had for getting its horrendous deficit under control.

The first part of my question came about as a result of the fact that just prior to the date of my question the Canadian Transport Commission had released a report indicating that of all of the passenger railroads in the industrialized world, VIA Rail had the most obsolete, oldest and worst equipment. That report also indicated that VIA Rail had lost something like one million potential passengers between 1982 and 1983.

The second part of my question dealing with the deficit of VIA Rail was prompted by the fact that in spite of the $93 million reduction in the budget of VIA Rail that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) called for at the beginning of November, VIA was left with a $600 million deficit for the current year. This of course will have to be subsidized by the taxpayers and will be part of that over-all $37 billion deficit which the country is facing right now. If the figures are correct, in 1983 the Government and the taxpayers of the country were forced to subsidize every single passenger on VIA Rail to the extent of $70.

Since November 19 the Government made two announcements; the first was actually made that same evening. On November 19 the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), speaking in Edmonton, appointed a three-member rail passenger action force. He indicated that the Government had plans to improve and renew the locomotives and equipment of VIA Rail and that the Government was also considering expanding and bringing back some of the passenger lines that had been discontinued by the previous Government. On January 15 of this year the Government announced that it was bringing back six of those discontinued passenger rail lines and reinstating them.

Those are excellent moves, Mr. Speaker, which I think that we all applaud, as far as they go. Unfortunately, I do not think they really address the key question of the $600 million deficit of VIA Rail which is hanging over the heads of the taxpayers of the country. Something must be done about that. One answer is to reduce costs. I am sure we would all applaud that solution. However, that alone is not going to solve a $600 million deficit. The only thing which will overcome that will be to increase the revenue of VIA Rail, and the only way to increase the revenue is to increase the number of passengers who are using the VIA Rail system.

How are we going to increase the ridership on VIA Rail? First, we are going to have to provide faster and more comfortable trains. We must also ensure that those trains leave and arrive on time. The speed and comfort of the trains should be addressed through the new equipment. The question of punctuality is an entirely different matter.

I recently went to meet my daughter at the Union Station in Toronto. She was travelling on a VIA Rail Rapido train coming from Montreal, supposedly arriving at 10.20 p.m. In fact, it did not arrive until 11:15 p.m., almost an hour later than scheduled and after four different announcements of time delays and postponements. One can imagine the feeling of my daughter and the other passengers on the train, and the feelings of myself and those waiting to greet the passengers on that train.

How do we overcome this problem? In my opinion it can be solved in the same way the Americans solved their problem; with an agreement similar to the Amtrac agreement. It is an exclusive right-of-way agreement that provides penalties for the railways over which Amtrac trains travel. We need something similar to that in this country. We must ensure that VIA can provide on-time service.

I would ask the Minister's representatives what plans the Government has to either reach an agreement with CN and CP or to legislate an agreement which will compel an exclusive right-of-way for VIA and ensure that penalties are imposed for interferences and delays with VIA Rail on-time service.

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, I am pleased to answer the question of my colleague from York East.

[English]

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) had made renewal of VIAs fleet one of his top priorities. The majority of VIAs fleet is 30 years old. The equipment is expensive to operate and maintain, prone to breakdowns in severe weather conditions, and it does not offer a level of comfort and reliability which the travelling public demands from rail passenger transportation.

The Minister of Transport has asked the rail passenger action force, headed by Dr. Hugh Horner of Alberta, to make recommendations on equipment renewal as part of the mandate of the action force. The task force is to look at ways and means of bringing rail passenger services up to modern, cost-efficient standards. Specifically in terms of equipment renewal, the main option being considered is the replacement of existing rolling stock with modern, state of the art, high capacity, proven technology cars and locomotives manufactured to the highest degree possible with labour, components and engineering obtained from across Canada.

The Minister of Transport considers that new equipment is essential to the future viability of rail passenger services in Canada and, as he has previously stated, a substantial capital program of approximately $200 million exists within VIAs budget for this purpose.

Steps have already been taken to improve VIAs performance vis-à-vis service to the public, as is evidenced by a more successful Christmas season this year. Of course the essence of the Minister's objective is to strive for continued improvement in VIA Rail's performance, both financially and in the provision of rail service to the Canadian people.

TRADE

STEEL EXPORTS—EFFECT OF UNITED STATES LEGISLATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the people of Hamilton and all those concerned with the Canadian steel industry, to express my regret over the Government's inaction with respect to the United States Trade and Tariff Act (1984). If this law goes into effect, steel products entering the United States will be required to have their country of origin stamped on them. This new, non-tariff barrier will cost the Canadian industry millions of dollars to comply with, and risk those markets where unmarked steel is required. This will end up costing Canadians steel jobs.

There was a presentation made last week at the Canadian Embassy to U.S. Customs officials about the implications of these new regulations. The Minister of International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) was visibly absent from this presentation. If the Government is at all concerned about this issue, then the very least it could do is to have the Minister personally lead the lobby to protect Canadian jobs. I might add that in the document presented this week discussing international trade, the whole steel question was left completely untouched, another indication of the Government's disinterest and lack of commitment on this issue.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) claims the Government is approaching the issue with vigour, but its actions fall far short. I believe the Canadian Government should start to take a tougher stand with the U.S. Government on this issue and stop the smoke and mirrors approach which has been taken to date, before thousands of steel jobs in Hamilton, Sault Ste. Marie, Nova Scotia, and across the country are lost.

GOVERNMENT DECISION—POSITION OF SMALL RETAILERS

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to congratulate the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on his decision regarding metric conversion.

As a defender of consumer interests and as someone who, as former President of the Association des services de l'automobile du Québec, has been involved for many years in these issues, I think this is a real victory for the small retailer. It is the first time any Minister has shown so much consideration for the interests of small retail businesses. I therefore wish to thank the Minister on behalf of all small retailers in Quebec and across Canada.

The Minister, in his wisdom, has been careful to consider the interests and wishes of the majority of intervenors in this controversial issue. This will be an opportunity for small retailers to better identify with consumer needs without having to ask the permission of the multinationals first. From now on, they will be free of this obligation.

THE LATE FRANK SCOTT

TRIBUTE TO LIFE'S WORK

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, yesterday our country lost a truly magnificent human being. Frank Scott, poet, professor of constitutional law, champion of civil rights, and a social democrat, died at his home in Westmount.

This "rebel without a pause" took on and defeated Maurice Duplessis in a historic civil rights battle that we now know as the Padlock case.

In the words of Tommy Douglas, he was the Canadian intellectual stimulus of the 1930s and 1940s.

His friend and associate, Charles Taylor, describes Frank Scott in these words: "He was this very strange and wonderful mixture of very high social and political aspiration with this streak of clear eyed perception of human failings, all with a sense of humour."

He was the two-time winner of the Governor General's award for literature, and by his actions and deeds he influenced the course of history. As fellow poet Louis Dudek said: "I feel he is going to rise to mythical greatness."

In Frank Scott's own words:

From those condemned to labour
For profit of another
We take our new endeavour.

For sect and class and pattern
Through whom the strata harden
We sharpen now the weapon.

Till power is brought to pooling
And outcasts share in ruling
There will not be an ending
Nor any peace for spending.

On behalf of my colleagues, and I hope on behalf of the House of Commons and the people of Canada, we express to his wife Marian, and his son Peter, our condolences, and a grateful thanks for the inspiration that he was.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

NEED TO RECEIVE TELEVISED NEWSCASTS FROM ALL REGIONS

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues I would like to express our appreciation for the excellent television facilities available to each Member of Parliament on the Hill. However, I think the service should be expanded. As it is now, we can view the news on television stations from Ottawa, Hull, Kingston, Toronto, and Montreal. This kind of coverage is adequate when you want to know what is happening in central Canada, but what are the news and views in the West, the Maritimes or on the Prairies?

I am sure the technology is available to make the information available, at minimal cost to the Canadian taxpayer. In fact it is a simple and practical way for Canadians to keep their Members of Parliament informed on local opinion.

Canada stretches from sea to sea.

ENERGY

FEDERAL-NEWFOUNDLAND AGREEMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, very soon the Government of Canada will reach an agreement with Newfoundland on the offshore. We expect the agreement will be signed this month. We know that the companies will require a deal which stands up for the long term and cannot be changed, before they will be prepared to invest. But still we have many unanswered questions.

Will there be, as we hear, a fund of $500 million in new money for Newfoundland from the Government of Canada, which will be used for infrastructure, for example, to build highways such as the TransLabrador Highway? Will that fund be there, and how much will it cover? Who will set the royalties, and what will they be? Will there be a special component for the training of young people in Newfoundland so they can take jobs in the offshore?

The Minister should now instruct Mobil Oil to release its environmental impact study, which she has received, so we can begin that debate with full knowledge of what the future holds for us in my province, because this will affect our lives so greatly.

• (1110)

The Minister should give assurance that when this deal is concluded, and before it is signed, we will have an opportunity to judge, on the contents of that deal, whether or not it is good for us. At this point in time, Mr. Speaker, never have so many known so little about a matter that affects them so greatly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF YALTA AGREEMENT

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, Monday, February 4 will begin the fortieth anniversary of the Yalta Conference. In 1945, at that Crimean centre, President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill, and Marshal Stalin met for eight days to plan what would follow victory. Yalta was one of the most significant summit meetings in the 20th century. It led to the bifurcation of Europe by that iron curtain which still shuts eastern Europe off from the West.

I speak of it in the House of Commons because of all the Canadians who trace their heritage back to those countries still dominated by the Red Army. Many of these Canadians are to be found in Scarborough, as they are in most of our communities. In the past 17 years many people have wondered where the Canadian Government stood on the Soviet threat to their homelands. In 1985, the fortieth anniversary of Yalta, let there be no doubt that Canada still looks for that time when the Red Star will not fill the sky over eastern Europe.

FINANCE

CORPORATE TAX BREAKS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, one of the main themes of last summer's election was the issue of fair taxation. Specifically at issue was the level of tax loopholes and opportunities for tax deferrals which were allowed for large corporations in the mistaken belief that they would trickle down to provide jobs for ordinary Canadians. In response to this agenda, which was set by the New Democratic Party, the then Minister of Finance was quoted as saying that a thorough review of tax breaks for private industry was needed "to determine where the system is being abused". To my knowledge this report has yet to be released.

An example I could draw to the Minister's attention would be that of the iron ore mine in the community of Ear Falls, owned by Stelco, which recently announced large lay-offs, to be followed by a complete closure of the mine in April, 1986. The statements of this company show $390 million in accumulated deferred taxes. The Minister of Finance should send a clear message to the corporate taxpayers of the country that the Government of Canada will no longer allow tax breaks for corporations that cut back significantly on the number of workers they employ. This message must be reflected in the Budget this spring.

PUBLICATION OF NAMES OF PERSONS CHARGED WITH SEXUAL OFFENCES

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I rise on an issue of importance to the people of my riding of Niagara Falls, and to the people of this country, that is, the practice of publishing the names of individuals who are charged with Criminal Code offences. We are all aware of the devastating effects this can have, not only on the individual, but on the friends and relatives of the accused as well. In the public's eye the presumption of innocence may be lost. It is little comfort that the accused may establish his innocence at some point in the future. The damage has been done.

Recently in the city of St. Catharines, 32 individuals were charged with the commission of sexual offences. Their names were immediately made public. The loss of reputation and the anguish are a high price to pay. I would suggest it is too high a price without a conviction.

It is pointed out that there may be a restriction of the public's right to know, or of the freedom of the press. Those are important rights that should never be treated lightly. However, there is the right of the individual, and his protection should be paramount. Therefore, I would urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), my colleagues on the Justice Committee, and other Members of the House to consider amendments to the Criminal Code that would prohibit the publication of an accused's name unless there is a conviction.

METRIC CONVERSION

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government continues to keep Canadians confused by allowing a return to the old system of imperial measures. Quite obviously, the Government will always have double standards, yet most Canadians had already accepted the metric system, which happens to be the most widely used worldwide. This return to the past is one of the few election promises honoured by the Progressive Conservative Party. Mr. Speaker, one might wonder whether this change has been made to bail out the gas station operated by 37 Conservative Members who seemed to have trouble competing against metric service stations.

[English]

It is becoming increasingly obvious, Mr. Speaker, that returning to the imperial system is a pretty "Domm" idea.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION

PLIGHT OF BAHA'I BELIEVERS IN IRAN

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my concern with respect to the future of the Baha'i faith in Iran. The 300,000 members of the Baha'i faith have been denied recognition under the Iranian constitution, and are now being persecuted as an entire community.

Unless their problem receives recognition, the Baha'is could eventually cease to exist as a distinct entity and face the same fate which the Falasha Jews almost encountered in Ethiopia.

• (1115)

The Toronto Star reported on January 30 that Iran has become the first country to denounce the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, effectively shutting off current United Nations investigations into any claims.

The Baha'is are expressly forbidden by their religion to take part in politics, and are commanded to obey civilian authorities, thus posing no threat to Iran.

On behalf of the Baha'i community in Toronto, Canada, and the rest of the world, I urge the Government of Canada to take initiatives in the international community to ensure that the Baha'is are not discriminated against in Iran.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

ELIMINATION OF ABUSES IN LEGISLATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Yesterday was a sad day. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms was enacted to protect all Canadians, however humble, weak, and unpopular, from abusive legislation and from oppressive, unfair Government policies.

Yesterday, with a phony consultation proposal, the Government dealt a blow to fairness and justice in Canada. A normally courageous Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie)—I say that kindly—is guilty of a cynical and cowardly act, using consultation to avoid the responsibility of Government. He has championed the cause—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have finished the period for statements. I must ask the Hon. Member to come to a question.

Mr. Kaplan: Will he reconsider the decision he made yesterday to champion popular causes but to abandon the weak to consultation? Will he reconsider that, and bring forward legislation required by the Charter to eliminate the abuses in existing legislation and policies of this Parliament and of the Government?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, one can hardly take the hon. gentleman seriously. His Government had two years and a number of months to do something on this issue. Since the time the Charter of Rights was adopted and when they left office last September, where were they? What had been done? What was the state of preparation? The Hon. Member should be on his knees thanking me for having made so much progress in five months, compared to the wasted two years.

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): The Minister knows that the former Government had directed officials to prepare legislation to review and correct all of the statutes that needed correction. There was no suggestion that in dealing with the unpopular, the weak, and oppressed, there would be a consultation paper. Will the Minister look at these causes, take the legal advice which he has been given and bring the legislation forward?

What is the point of having consultation when the Charter is already established as the law of the land? What is achieved by forcing the weak and the oppressed to come forward to Parliament once again, and also to go to court, to plead for a justice that the Minister is denying them?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman reminds one of the weak and the oppressed by the mean spirited way that he is approaching this whole situation. The legislation was introduced to the House yesterday in order to amend over 50 statutes. A discussion paper has been tabled in the House so that the public will have a chance to express their views on how certain very important issues that are not clear can be determined.

Public policy choices must be made. We want the Canadian people to be involved in this process, not just some little secret coterie of Liberals, scuttling around in a dark basement somewhere, deciding our destiny. We want the Canadian people, through a committee of the House, and we want Members of the House, to help us in this process, rather than a secret group in some subterranean basement, such as the hon. gentleman would prefer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: The Minister knows that he is violating the spirit of the Charter. He is subjecting these groups to the very fate from which the Charter was meant to protect them, from the whims of public opinion, and the possible tyranny of the majority.

LEGAL OPINIONS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has legal opinions telling him what he is required to do and what changes are required to be made. Will he table those legal opinions so that the Canadian people can see the very things he is refusing to take the courage to do?

• (1120)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is hard to answer a question that does not have any specificity.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, Oh;

Mr. Crosbie: I do not know to which legal opinions the hon. gentleman is referring. I have tabled in this House an interesting document entitled Equality Issues in Federal Law that raises serious questions. On our side of the House there are 211 Members who want to discuss them and want to consult with the public, and involve the public in the process. On that side of the House there are 70 scared people who do not want to discuss this with the public and make recommendations. The Hon. Member ought to put himself on the line, if he is on the committee, and let us know what he thinks of these issues. Do not be afraid of the job. Get on with it, and report as soon as possible to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINORITY LANGUAGE RIGHTS IN QUEBEC

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Earlier this week Pierre Marc Johnson, the Quebec Minister for Intergovernmental Affairs, stated that Article 23 of the Charter of Rights would be part of the negotiations between Quebec and Ottawa. As the Prime Minister knows, Article 23 deals with minority language rights, and last July the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that the Canada Clause in Article 23 would take precedence over the Quebec Clause in Bill 101.

Will the Prime Minister tell the House whether in fact minority language rights, the Canada Clause, will be part of those negotiations between Quebec and Ottawa? If so, will he assure this House that nothing will be done to weaken the application of the Canada Clause in Quebec?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have received no request from the Government of Quebec and certainly not the specific kind of request mentioned today by the Hon. Member. I assume he spoke in good faith, and while I am prepared to listen to his claims and views, I think I should refrain from commenting on speculation by the media. However, I think I can inform the Hon. Member that my personal position and that of my colleagues has always been clearly in favour of protecting our language minorities, wherever they may be.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has stated that he is in favour of minority language rights but he has failed to give the House the assurance that nothing will be done to weaken the application of the full Canada Clause in Quebec. I want that assurance.

May I ask, if language rights are part of negotiations between Quebec and Ottawa, will the Prime Minister raise two other matters in those discussions? First, will he try to have Quebec apply the full rights under Article 23 in accordance with Article 59 of the Charter, all those minority language rights in education which apply in the other provinces, so that they will also apply in Quebec? Will the Prime Minister do that?

Second, will the Prime Minister request the Quebec Government to stop its appeal against the McKenna judgment, the judgment of Judge Boudreault in the Superior Court of Quebec ruled that bilingual signs should be legal in Quebec? Will the Prime Minister try to get the Quebec Government to agree to the good sense in the Boudreault judgment as well as the full application of Article 23?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that my hon. friend would seriously want me to try to insinuate myself in the process involving provincial Governments and their rights to go to court, and our right either to oppose or approve such issues.

I want to tell my hon. friend that as Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party I campaigned across the country, and in particular in the Province of Quebec, as someone who stood at all times for a united Canada where all minorities would be treated fairly. This Government will do nothing to diminish the rights of any Canadian with regard to his or her citizenship, and his or her right to be heard, to express himself or herself at all times.

FUNDING OF LITIGATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I found it passing strange to hear the Liberal spokesperson talking about the weak, the unpopular, and the oppressed, given the failure of his Government to take any action whatsoever on that important question.

• (1125)

Mr. Robinson: My question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Yesterday, Canadian women and minorities—

Ms. Copps: Did you get that from the CIA, Svend?

Mr. Chrétien: You voted against it; you voted no.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Penner: This man is against the Charter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Burnaby on a question.

Mr. Robinson: Yesterday, Canadian women and minorities, including the elderly, homosexuals, lesbians, and the disabled, were told that they must keep waiting for full equality before the law, equality they thought was guaranteed to them by the Charter of Rights. Since the Government's failure to amend federal legislation will force these groups into the courts to fight for full equality, is the Government prepared to establish a significant fund to assist these litigants in establishing their rights to full equality, or will these rights only be available to those who can afford a lawyer to advocate on their behalf?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we just had an example of the obnoxious shouting down of the weak and the oppressed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: With rspect to the hon. gentleman's question, no one is going to be forced into the courts, as he puts it. On April 17 the equality provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms will come into effect. At that time, whatever rights that establishes will be in full force and effect in Canada. The question will be: what is the meaning of the equality provisions of the Charter?

For the next 100 years Canadians will be discovering the full meaning of the Charter, just as in the United States of America they are still exploring what the Bill of Rights means. In the meantime we have a discussion paper which deals with very serious policy questions, where there are arguments on both sides. It is not clear that some of these particular matters at issue are contrary to the Charter. We will not know that, perhaps until the courts deal with the matters.

In the meantime, Members of the House, through the committee, will be able to take representations from the public, from women's groups and from the handicapped, as to their views on how these issues should be dealt with. The public of Canada will become involved and educated on these issues. The committee will report back to the House, and the Government will bring in further legislation later this year. What better, more democratic, fairer process could we properly use?

DEPARTMENTAL STUDIES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister might answer the question with respect to a fund to assist litigants to establish their rights.

Given the fact that the Minister has indicated that his Department has conducted extensive studies into the implications of the Charter for a whole range of federal statutes, will he undertake that the special committee, which will be established to review the issues raised in the discussion paper, will have available to it all studies and background information prepared by his Department on the important question of the implications of Section 15 for Canadians?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question of funding, as the hon. gentleman knows, the only funding Government has provided to litigants has concerned the question of bilingualism, language questions. Whether or not there should be any extension of that beyond that particular issue will have to be decided. The Secretary of State, a man of broad, humanitarian principles, is also responsible for the status of women. He is a mighty volcano in Cabinet on that question, ready to explode at any moment. He is considering that issue together with the Department of Justice. When a decision is made it will be announced.

As to back-up material and assistance from the Department of Justice, there is a nine-person unit which has dealt with the issue of the Charter. They will certainly be available. Other Ministers and Departments involved will be available as well. We will assist the committee all we can. I hope the hon. gentleman will be on it because, with his indefatigable energy, I am sure he will make a very valuable contribution.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

OVERRIDE PROVISION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. The previous Prime Minister undertook that his Government, under no circumstances, would resort to the override provision of the Charter of Rights, the provision which effectively allows Governments to override fundamental rights and freedoms and equality rights. Will the Prime Minister give the same assurance to Canadians that his Government will not, under any circumstances, use the override provision of the Charter of Rights to subvert decisions made by the judiciary of the country?

• (1130)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has given me the nod to answer. The position is that this Government has not and does not contemplate using the override Clause with respect to the Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms. I believe it would be most unwise to say that under no circumstances and no conditions would it ever be used. Certainly there is none in contemplation at the moment. We are intervening in matters that are before the courts to argue that the present use of that override Clause by the Province of Quebec is a misuse of that Clause. As the Hon. Member knows, they include it in all their legislation. I can give a commitment that it is not in contemplation, but no one can look into the future and say under no possible circumstance might it be used. Certainly they would have to be extraordinary beyond belief.

EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUTS ON ONTARIO

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. Last fall the Minister of Finance tabled a financial statement in the House making cuts in federal government expenditures across Canada. The study we have just completed shows that, even after backtracking on some of these cuts, they will take $877 million out of the Ontario economy in 1985-86 alone, adversely affecting at least 26,000 jobs. Will the Prime Minister, or his Minister of Finance, meet immediately with Premier-designate Miller of Ontario to discuss these cuts and what the Government will do to compensate Ontario for the damage these cuts are now doing, and will be doing, to the Ontario economy and some tens of thousands, at least 26,000 jobs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was quite alarmed at the numbers until I found out that they had been prepared by the Hon. Member. In point of fact, any objective observer would acknowledge that the document put out by my hon. friend is misleading and self serving.

The economic indicators for Ontario and elsewhere are moving ahead very substantially since this Government came in. Interest rates have gone down, in the neighbourhood of 100,000 jobs have been created, inflation is down to its lowest rate since 1971, and investment intentions have increased dramatically. I acknowledge that the situation is far from perfect, but there are major improvements thus far in the economy. I hope my hon. friend will look upon these with favour and say to the Government and the people of Ontario: "Improvement has been made. We will work with the Government to improve the lot of Canadians," rather than indulge in this criticism that constantly comes from the Liberals.

I will be meeting on Monday with the new Premier of the Province of Ontario. I can assure the Hon. Member that I will co-operate as closely with him as I did with his predecessor, with equally successful results.

REQUEST FOR COMPARISON OF STUDIES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House and the Canadian people will be pleased to see the endorsement that the Prime Minister has given to the benevolent effects of the policies of the previous Liberal Government on the Canadian and Ontario economies. What will the Prime Minister do to offset the adverse effects of his Government's policies on the Ontario economy? If he disagrees with the study that we have made, then I challenge him to present his studies and those of his Department of Finance so that they can be compared by the people of Canada. I challenge him to do that. So far, he and his Minister of Finance have not had the courage to do that.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be unduly argumentative, but I hope my hon. friend will look at the results for the last quarter of 1984. There were 100,000 new full-time jobs created. Interest rates have declined almost 3 per cent. This has a tremendously positive effect on small business, farmers, fishermen, and others across the country. Investment intentions are up very dramatically. I suppose my hon. friend could quite properly say that the results have not been overwhelming, but I believe he will acknowledge they have been very impressive in three short months. We plan to continue to work based on re-igniting the entrepreneurial spirit, freeing up the private sector, living within our means, and getting Canadians back to work. That is what we are going to do.

WOMEN'S EQUALITY—ABELLA REPORT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister of Justice on the question of equality. The Minister does not seem to realize that for the most part women cannot afford, nor should they have to, to take complaint cases on a case by case basis. How much longer do Canadian have to wait for full equality? The Minister knows they fought very hard to have that included in the Charter of Rights. Specifically, why will the Minister not act on the Abella report recommendations to legislate mandatory affirmative action and contract compliance, when his Government has had these recommendations for close to three months?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, Canadian women do not have to wait to achieve equality. The Charter of Rights has been adopted. We all have to wait until April 17 of this year for it to come into full force and effect.

The women of Canada, and organized associations of women across Canada, received considerable assistance from the Department of Justice in their activities, and they will continue to do so in the future. They also received it from the Department of the Secretary of State, and will in the future. Because of some of the difficult issues involved, it cannot be decided overnight. It should allow involving the Canadian people. They will be able to come before a House of Commons committee and make their views known on how they believe these difficult policy issues should be decided. They will not have to go to court. This year further legislation will be introduced. You cannot change overnight these difficult problems that we are now grappling with for the first time in Canada.

With respect to the question of affirmative action and Judge Abella's report, I was talking to the Judge last night. Her report is now under active consideration by Cabinet. The matter is being moved forward by one of the great women of Canada, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and in the next couple of weeks an announcement will be made.

Mr. Speaker: With respect, the subjects are very interesting, but the answers are long.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister respond to the appeal of the Abella commission and the Canadian Human Rights Commission, and legislate mandatory affirmative action before April 17, 1985? Will he do this?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, before April 17, 1985, the Prime Minister or other members of the Government will make clear the Government's position on the Abella report. I think it will be a position that will recommend itself to men and women, to everyone who lives in Canada.

UNITED STATES IMPORT QUOTAS ON SUGAR PRODUCTS

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. As the Minister undoubtedly knows, the Government of the United States has recently imposed import quotas on certain sugar containing products. I have in my riding of Mississauga North a new firm which will be put out of business if these quota restrictions stand. There are many firms across the country which will also be affected. What can the Canadian Government do to assist our Canadian sugar-based retail packagers in countering the non tariff protectionist barrier put up by the United States on January 28?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in the subject and I share his concern. I believe it was last Monday the President of the United States signed a proclamation that put these restrictive measures into effect. They will have some serious consequences on the industry. Although I do not have the exact figure, I believe the quota does provide for a significant decrease in the amount of product that can be shipped from Canadian sources to U.S. markets. I would hope that our officials would be able to work out some solution that would help ease this problem.

I have been in conversation with my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, and I can assure the Hon. Member that my Department's officials and the departmental officials of my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, will do everything possible to provide assistance and information to the Canadian industry.

IMPACT OF BUDGETARY CUTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is addressed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns the projected loss of over 26,000 jobs in Ontario in the years 1985-86, as a result of cuts announced in the November economic statement. We now have 1,300,000 Canadians out of work, and 56 per cent of Canadians say that unemployment is the most important problem facing Canada today. Under those circumstances, how can the Prime Minister justify going ahead with those cuts and threatening the economic stability of Canadian families?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I assume that the Hon. Member, in mentioning that figure, was perhaps invoking it from the document that was released by the Hon. Member from Windsor. If that is the case, I simply want to state for the record that, of course, any reasonable analysis would cause that figure to be dismissed.

Because my hon. friend raises a very important matter, may I just say that unemployment is indeed our number one problem and concern. We inherited a very dismal record in this regard. I hope that my hon. friend takes pride and pleasure in the fact that of the 100,000 new full-time jobs created since the swearing in of this government, a very substantial proportion have been in the Province of Ontario. What we are trying to do is create these kinds of jobs across the country.

CONFIDENCE LEVEL

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, people are becoming increasingly worried, and the more recent surveys have shown that 66 per cent of Canadians fear that they, or their family breadwinners will lose their jobs in the foreseeable future. The Government talks of increasing confidence and of a consumer led recovery. How can that exist when people are so frightened that they are going to lose their jobs, and when the Government is constantly cutting jobs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to confidence, it is a very fragile commodity. It was badly damaged over the last number of years by a succession of events, and I point to two such events—the Budget introduced in the House in 1981 by the previous government, and the very damaging implications of the National Energy Program which inflicted so much harm on our national economy, and which inflicted so much damage to our reliability as a nation in which to invest.

According to the Conference Board survey, according to the analysis in this week's edition of The Financial Post, and according to all objective surveys, confidence is coming back to Canada, and that is vital to job creation, to lower interest rates, and to the creation, as my hon. friend quite properly points out, of new jobs, a matter which I share with her as our number one priority. We remain fully committed to that, and we will work closely with her to create those jobs for all Canadians.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ALBERTA CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Our action group on jobs has heard some fairly frightening stories this past week. I would like to ask the Prime Minister specifically about the problems of construction workers in the Province of Alberta who report a 70 per cent unemployment rate for themselves in that province. Did the Prime Minister meet, as these people have suggested to us, with representatives of the Alberta Building and Construction Trades Council in the period of time before the last election? Did he promise to them, as they say he did, that federally-funded building projects in Alberta would use union labour under his Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know about that to which the Hon. Member refers. Perhaps I can tell him this. I come from a unionized family. My father was not only unionized but was a union officer. I can tell the Hon. Member that, as far as we are concerned, trade unionism is a vital and indispensable part of our national economic development. We will do nothing inconsistent with that statement.

CANADA PLACE PROJECT IN EDMONTON

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Council involved indicated very specifically that it met with the Prime Minister before he was Prime Minister, and was given a specific promise that union labour would be used. Specifically with reference to Canada Place, the $200-million project planned for Edmonton, will the Prime Minister make a commitment that union labour will indeed be used on that project?

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I greatly appreciate the interest shown by the Hon. Member for the problems besetting the construction industry. I am also very happy to inform the Hon. Member from Ontario that three weeks ago, in response to representations by Edmonton city authorities, I had the pleasure of signing the recommendation for the Canada Place project in Edmonton, which, I think, answers the Hon. Member's questions.

DISASTERS

GLACE BAY, N.S.—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING OF CANADA WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and I ask this question very sincerely. In view of the disastrous situation in Glace Bay-Cape Breton, would the Prime Minister not think it only fair and reasonable, notwithstanding the discussions and consultations that are going on with the Premier of that province, to direct the Minister of Employment and Immigration to provide additional moneys under the Canada Works Program, a program for which there are many unapproved applications, and also to lift the moratorium that he has placed on Special Initiatives Programs such as the Glace Bay recreation centre?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I, like my hon. friend, am deeply troubled by events that have occurred in Cape Breton, and most recently in Glace Bay. My hon. friend, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, spoke with the mayor and other officers there. I think all Canadians would recognize that among the areas of our country that have not necessarily had a fair opportunity or a fair shake is, of course, industrial Cape Breton. I am very sensitive to and concerned about that. We hope to be making a statement within a few days that we believe and hope will be helpful to the longer-term economic development and renewal in Cape Breton Island.

COAL INDUSTRY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I appreciate his concern, but I would tell him that there is a great urgency within that part of Canada. I would ask the Prime Minister to expedite the Cabinet process by directing the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to make good decisions with regard to coal development and a pre-retirement plan for older miners in Glace Bay. Would the Prime Minister undertake to do that forthwith, because of the urgency of the situation within that area?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that that degree of action has already been initiated by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, as well as by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I give the Hon. Member the assurance that it will not be paperwork, red tape, or administrative obstacles that will stand in the way of bringing forward what we hope will be helpful and constructive plans for Cape Breton.

QUOTA SYSTEM INQUIRY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister as well, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I believe the Prime Minister recalls that, way back in 1976, the Liberal Government brought in a very Draconian move to impose a quota system designed to cut off unemployment insurance claimants. Can the Prime Minister say whether or not any officers at Canada Employment Centres are currently working under a quota system? The purpose of the quota system would be to cut off unemployment insurance claimants, a very similar system to that which was imposed by the former Trudeau Government back in 1976.

• (1150)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in 1976 I was very young, so I am not acquainted with the problem that was there at the time—

Ms. Copps: You were concentrating on Clark in 1976.

Mr. Mulroney: There is that melodious voice again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Had I not heard it, I would have been sad all weekend. I want to thank my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. It makes our day, it really does.

My hon. friend raises a very important matter. I regret to tell him that I do not have a specific answer but I will communicate immediately with the Minister of Employment and Immigration and make sure that the answer is provided to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps the Prime Minister was very young in 1976. I just hope he doesn't become a very old Tory and become too conservative on this issue.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Can the Prime Minister, as the leader of the Government, categorically assure us that he has no intention of imposing a quota system on unemployment claimants as a way and means of saving money in the UI fund, at the expense of poor people? Can he give us his categorical assurance this morning that that will not be done?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of any such program or intention. I would be happy to meet with the Minister of Employment and Immigration, which I shall at the earliest possible moment, and I will be in touch with my hon. friend.

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—REPORTED TREATMENT OF DANISH RELIEF VESSEL

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for External Relations. Has the Minister, or the Government, protested to the Ethiopian Government that, according to a report in the Boston Globe yesterday, a Danish ship carrying Canadian and Australian food relief to Ethiopia has been forced to wait for unloading facilities since January 18 while a Soviet ship carrying military equipment has been unloaded?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I want to reassure the House and inform Hon. Members that our main collaborators are non-governmental organizations, and they have given us the assurance that food aid is being distributed. Nevertheless, our ambassador is trying to arrange a meeting with members of the food aid relief committee who are responsible for distribution, and as soon as we receive a reply which, I hope, will reassure Canadians and urge them to continue their assistance to this program, we shall certainly keep you informed.

ENERGY

NEGOTIATION OF AGREEMENT WITH NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. She is presently negotiating an offshore agreement with Newfoundland. She knows how important that agreement is to the province and the fact that, once it is concluded, it will not be changed for a long, long time. Can the Minister tell us when she expects that agreement to be reached?

Can she tell us as well if, after it has been agreed to, but before the agreement is signed, she will lay out the elements of that deal so that we can know that indeed it is a good deal for Newfoundland?

Specifically, will the Minister now say to Mobil that it should release the environmental impact study which it has presented, so that we can begin to examine what our future might be?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have been asked so many questions in that one question from the Hon. Member that I hardly know where to start. I can assure him that negotiations are going very well on the agreement with Newfoundland. The negotiating teams met again this week. I expect to meet with the Minister responsible for energy in Newfoundland, Mr. Marshall, next week, and we hope to have an early conclusion to the agreement.

With respect to the Mobil agreement to which the Hon. Member has referred, I have consistently told this House that until such time as we agree on the mode of development—and those studies are taking place—it would not be appropriate to ask Newfoundland to change its position.

HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I am told that part of the agreement with Newfoundland will be a fund in the order of possibly half a billion dollars. Some of that fund may be used for infrastructure, such as highway construction, for example, the highway across Labrador from Goose Bay to Baie Comeau. Would the Prime Minister give an undertaking that, if that idea comes up, he will support it? And would he now agree to join me in the first vehicle which leaves Baie Comeau on its way to Goose Bay?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Or vice versa.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that we can accept that invitation at this time, but we can say that we are negotiating an agreement which escaped the former administration for 15 years, and that the underlying thrust of the whole agreement is that Newfoundland and Labrador have to be the principal beneficiaries of the agreement, consistent with a strong and united Canada. That is what we are working towards.

WEST COAST EXPLORATION REVIEW

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it is in regard to the West Coast exploration review. I am sure the Minister is fully aware that, of the eight existing leaseholders off the British Columbia coast, there is not a single one any longer which is co-operating or participating in the panel review. Only Chevron Canada Limited, which is farmed in on some of Shell Canada Limited's acreage, is actually co-operating with the panel. How does the Minister determine what the impact of a development is going to be if we don't know what the companies plan to do?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe this question should be more properly addressed to the Minister of the Environment under whose Ministry this review process falls. I can only assure the Hon. Member that the reason the companies are not participating is because they plan to do nothing at this time. Part of the area is under a moratorium for oil and gas exploration, and there is no point in trying to review nothing.

REVIEW COSTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on what the Minister has just said, that there is no point in reviewing something when nothing is going on and nothing is planned. Perhaps the Minister would explain to the people of Canada why her Government is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars in going on with a panel review of projects which are not planned?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have already pointed out that this review process is not within my Ministry, so I cannot address that issue. I can also point out that it is being carried out in conjunction with the provinces. Perhaps the provinces know something we don't. Thank you.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

APPROVAL OF PROJECT APPLICATIONS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I will have to give him a moment to return to his place.

Mr. Beatty: He knows his place.

Mr. Penner: On Monday of this week the Minister issued a press release announcing a $75,000 contribution to the Canadian Council for Native Business. Attached to the press release was a list of 20 other projects under the Native Economic Development Program, totalling $11.5 million drawn from that $345 million program. The Minister, I am sure, knows he was being a bit foxy, because all of the projects in this document were approved by the previous Liberal administration—every one of them.

There are 34 applications now under the Native Economic Development Program which are sitting on the Minister's desk, or perhaps on the desk of his junior Minister, and I would like to know when these applications are going to be approved? While the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is on his feet, would he tell the House what the future of the Native Economic Development Program is? Or does it have any future at all under this Government?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister responsible for the Native Economic Development Program, I am very happy to answer the Hon. Member's question. This morning, I read and signed about thirty projects that were submitted by the committee. Many have been accepted, while a few others are still being considered because a number of details are missing.

About the project's future and the $345 million in funding, as far as I am concerned there is no problem, and the Advisory Committee will continue its work in all regions in this country and continue submitting projects which will be considered and approved as they are now.

[English]

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT BANK PROPOSAL

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Minister who answered may be responsible for the Native Economic Development Program, but it is the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who issued the press release. I want to come back to him again and ask him if he is aware that the Special Committee on Indian Self-government recommended that a native economic development bank be established? The advisory committee of the Native Economic Development Program was asked to look into that recommendation. It has done so, and it has prepared a report. Has the Minister read the report? What are his views on it? And will he undertake to refer that report to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development so that we can do an in-depth analysis of it?

• (1200)

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with the report mentioned by the Hon. Member. I will have to discuss the matter with other Ministers, because this development project would involve several million dollars, and at this stage, I am not ready to sign a commitment. However, within the next few weeks, after consultation with the other Ministers involved, the group will be receiving a reply.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRACTICE RESPECTING COMMENT ON ABSENCE OF MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker: May I take this opportunity to remind Members of the citation in Beauchesne which requires us not to comment on the presence or absence of any other Member. We are creeping into a new tradition of commenting regularly on the presence or absence of another Member or Minister. It is clear from our practices and traditions that we should not do that. I thought it was appropriate now, since during today's Question Period several references were made to the presence or otherwise of Members, to bring that to the attention of Hon. Members because it is contrary to our practice. That is the only reason I raise it.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, just to clarify your ruling, are you suggesting that it is not appropriate when asking questions to say: "In the absence of the Minister of . . ."?

Mr. Speaker: It has been raised several times in several Parliaments by several Speakers. The practice has been that when it starts to happen Members perhaps need to be reminded that questions are in fact to the Ministry. The Ministry responds as the Ministry sees fit. Therefore it is not entirely within one's control whether a particular Minister responds or not.

There is a citation in Beauchesne which is very clear, for a very good reason, that one should not mention in the House the presence or absence of a particular Member. I raise that now only because I can see our moving towards a new practice. The same point was made in the last Parliament by the previous Speaker on this same issue.

With great respect, I am fully prepared to implement whatever rules the House wants implemented. If the Members want that rule changed, as has been said before, they have a way to deal with that.

Mr. Prud'homme: Can I ask a question?

Mr. Speaker: On a separate point of order?

Mr. Prud'homme: On the same question. Would it be better to say: "In the absence of the Ministry . . ."?

Mr. Dingwall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am just trying to get it clear from you that you do not wish us to say—

Mr. Speaker: What I have tried to bring to the attention of Members is what Beauchesne says. That is all I have tried to do today. I am not sure what the Member is rising on. Is it a point of order? With respect, I am perfectly prepared to hear a point of order. Does the Hon. Member want to discuss with me what I think Beauchesne means?

Mr. Dingwall: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I think Beauchesne means what Beauchesne says.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: The tradition of asking questions beginning "In the absence of" has been in effect since I have been in the House of Commons. It was used by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) when he was in opposition. Questions were phrased in that way. If the Speaker does not wish us to phrase our questions in that way, I will abide by the wishes of the Speaker. But the tradition of phrasing questions in that way was established by the Government when they were in opposition.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect to the Hon. Member, I sat roughly in the seat he is sitting in and was called to order on precisely this point by Mr. Speaker Francis. I appreciate the position the Hon. Member is in and I understand why it is done, but I am required to apply the rules as they exist. I am confronted with a Beauchesne citation and a tradition of this House to the effect that it is improper to comment on the presence or non-presence of an Hon. Member. I brought this up today because I see that we are moving closer to creating a tradition or right to say those things. If the House wishes to do that, the House has the right to do that; but the House must make that decision. It should not be a change by happenstance, in my view.

I do not think it is appropriate at this time for the Hon. Member and I to have a conversation which he may wish to have with me in chambers. I will be perfectly happy to discuss it with him. As well, I have not made a ruling; I have simply reminded Hon. Members of what Beauchesne says.

Mr. Dingwall: I would like to remind the Speaker that, notwithstanding the fact he was taken to task by the former Speaker on this issue, the practice was continued by the Government when they were in opposition.

Mr. Dick: That is wrong.

Ms. Copps: That is what the Government did yesterday in the House of Commons.

Mr. Dick: You had a bad Speaker, then.

Mr. Speaker: Oh, that is hardly helpful. The point I am trying to make to Members is that I find myself in some difficulty—

Mr. Rossi: He should apologize to the previous Speaker. No respect for the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I mentioned the citation from Beauchesne because six or seven Members today, whom I did not want to call to order during Question Period for obvious reasons, made reference to the presence or non-presence of another Member or Minister. Therefore I felt it was my obligation to remind Members of what Beauchesne says. I made no ruling, I simply reminded Members of what Beauchesne says. However, I am put in a difficult position because of what Beauchesne says and what the Members have been doing. Therefore I must advise Members that at some point I am going to have to reconcile those two facts. I am simply alerting Members to a problem that I see, given what has been happening. Does that answer the question of the Hon. Member?

Mr. de Corneille: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if there is a possible elucidation of the following point. I thought that Beauchesne might be referring to the possibility that you do not point out that someone else is not in the House for pejorative or other reasons but that as a courtesy, when you are trying to direct a question to a Minister, you have to give an explanation—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the Member may wish information on this point and I suggest he may want to seek it either from Journals, the Clerks, his House Leader or procedural experts. If I allow further discussion on a matter which I simply introduced by way of trying to be helpful, then I create a precedent in one of two ways: That the Speaker's suggestions or points of order are debatable, and I cannot allow that; or secondly, if Members are going to use something that I say in trying to be helpful as an opportunity to create debate on that point, then the Hon. Member is suggesting that I should never say anything that may be helpful.

I suggest that if the Hon. Member has any questions he wishes to raise regarding procedural matters, he has other routes to pursue.

PETITIONS

EXPORTATION OF ARMS

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, world peace is a matter of concern to many of our fellow citizens. Not so long ago, young people in my constituency organized a week of activities designed to make their community aware of this problem which concerns everyone of us. At the time, they asked to sign a petition asking the Canadian Government to publicly announce arms export licences as soon as they are issued. They are also asking the Canadian Government to take the initiative in setting up an international arms register at the United Nations.

Mr. Speaker, it is this petition I have the honour of presenting on their behalf to this Honourable House.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-221, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to introduce my first Bill in the House today.

Under this Bill, people enrolling in a course or training program of their choice, at their own expense, will be eligible to receive benefits as provided under the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, subject to approval by the Commission. Unlike those people who take a course at the Commission's expense, this group, under the present legislation, is denied the privilege of receiving unemployment insurance benefits because they are considered not available for employment.

Furthermore, the Bill provides that a person whose appeal to the board of referees is maintained may receive unemployment insurance benefits from the date of his initial application to the Commission. This means we will be able to eliminate the discrimination created by the previous Government against people who want to improve their situation.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUTS ON ONTARIO

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I seek leave of the House to table, on behalf of my colleague the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), the study to which he referred during Question Period, namely, the effect of the economy statement in Ontario. Would Your Honour ask the House whether there is unanimous consent to table the document?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, as a result of rulings handed down by previous Speakers, we are not allowed to table fiction.

Mr. Speaker: I take it unanimous consent has not been granted. I should point out to the Hon. Member that there have been a number of occasions when tablings by Private Members have been sought. The ruling has been consistent that there is no such provision available to the House. Other provisions are available to the Hon. Member for Windsor West for distributing the document.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. House Leader introduced what I think is a new concept in the House of Commons rules. I wonder if you, Sir, would care to take this under advisement. If it be true that it is not proper to table fiction in the House of Commons, how then would the Government get its Throne Speech before the House?

[1] Bankruptcy statistics are maintained on the bases of "consumer" and "business" bankruptcies. A "consumer" bankruptcy is identified as one where an individual has not incurred liabilities as a result of a business venture, or where liabilities attributable to a business venture constitute less than 50 per cent of the total liabilities.

[2] In order to identify consumer bankruptcies filed in Scarborough, the first three characters of the bankrupts' postal code have been used, i.e., M1B to M1X.

SALES OF SEAL SKINS

Question No. 196—Mr. Stackhouse:

In (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 (d) 1982 (e) 1983, what was the total sales of seal skin and its by-products to the European Community?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

Figures for exports of undressed seal skins for the years 1979 to 1983 are shown on the tables below. Data covering by-products (e.g. dressed seal skins, apparel and appareil accessories) are not captured separately in the export statistics program of Statistics Canada.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, January 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Masse that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak in the House today on this Bill which deals with the Broadcasting Act and the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission.

Thanks to the electors in my riding, I represent the constituency of Calgary West in the House. That riding disappeared for many years through the process of redistribution and came back into being in 1979. I have had the pleasure of representing it since that time. A previous incumbent of that riding was the Hon. Prime Minister R. B. Bennett. It was a Conservative Government and that particular Prime Minister who in 1932 brought forward the concept that the Canadian air waves should be regulated. That was an important feature of the Canadian identity. Through the regulation of those air waves we had an opportunity to develop something distinctly Canadian. It is certainly important to those of us who are fortunate enough to live in this country.

I want to pay tribute to that event of 52 years ago. In 1984 the riding of Calgary West is as concerned about the development of a Canadian identity and culture as it was in 1932 when R. B. Bennett had the honour of representing the people of that region.

As I sat here yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I become more and more distraught about the consistency with which Members of both opposition Parties used the debate on this Bill to discuss the issue of budgetary cuts and specifically those applying to the CBC. Anyone who has taken the trouble to read the Bill knows that it has nothing to do with those cuts. Yet the House was abused by those who chose to drag that red herring into this debate.

The piece of legislation before us is important and should be moved forward with dispatch. Unfortunately, Members of the Opposition left this Chamber, and perhaps some people in the country, with a false impression about the cuts.

I would like to take a minute or two to remind Members of the Opposition and Canadians that the Government was changed on September 4, 1984 partly because the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party refused to deal with the financial reality of this country. They refused to recognize that if you take in $400 every couple of weeks and spend $600, you are running a deficit. The Canadian deficit is in that ratio. We are taking in two-thirds of what we spend. We are spending one-third more than we take in. If a family took in $400 a week and spent $600 a week, in four weeks' time it would be $800 in debt. Every four weeks it would be $800 more in debt and would have to pay the interest on that debt.

When I was elected in 1979, Mr. Speaker, 83 cents of every tax dollar collected could be spent for good purpose and 17 cents was spent on interest. After five and one-half years of bad economic management only 65 cents of every tax dollar collected can be spent for useful purposes. The difference is the interest payments.

Who suffers because of that massive deficit which no one seems to have the political will to control? The unemployed who have no income are prejudiced by the deficit. The senior citizens and others on fixed incomes are prejudiced by the deficit. When a government borrows to the extent that the Liberals were borrowing, interest rates go up, the cost of living goes up, inflation runs away and people on fixed income are hurt. Furthermore, our children are the ones who will have to pay for that borrowing. Our children are having their future income cut because this debt is passed on to them.

I hope the opposition Parties have heard the message that the Canadian voters have given to them. Canadians understand that there is no free lunch and that all of the activities of the Government must be reviewed in order to determine what services are essential and where cuts could be applied. I will stand in the Chamber as often as necessary to urge the Government to make those cuts where necessary, but to do so with sensitivity and compassion in order to bring the fiscal affairs of this country back to a reasonable state. We can no longer spend more than we receive.

The CBC is a specific example of such overspending. It is wrong to believe that that corporation is not wasteful in its operations. While I do not believe anyone knows how much waste there is, a reasonable government would require the corporation to find that waste and eliminate it. That is what this Government is doing.

I also suggest that the CBC cuts have been in the Government subsidy. The Government cuts the subsidy, not the CBC's budget. I suggest that the CBC has additional income opportunities which it can find if it is aggressive. It can maintain its budget by increasing its current income. If the corporation can produce its own quality English or French programming it can penetrate other markets around the world and thereby generate its own revenue. Moreover, the programming will meet our cultural goals. Furthermore, the CBC should be aggressively looking for increased sponsorship. It cannot always depend on the will of the taxpayers of this country to meet all of its requests.

In effect, I am saying that I believe the cuts to the CBC are necessary and have been managed sensitively. I believe the corporation has alternative ways to meet its mandate and I want the record to be clear that I support the direction taken by the Government in regard to the cuts.

Let me move now to the legislation.

Mr. Boudria: I was going to ask about that.

[Translation]

An Hon. Member: In French!

Mr. Hawkes: French or English, it is the same thing.

[English]

This piece of legislation is a classical example that shows the difference between how the opposition parties operated and the way the Conservative Government said it would operate. Bill C-20 deals with the CRTC and broadcasting generally. It does not mention the Film Development Corporation, the CBC or Bell Canada. While new Members may not notice that difference, it is apparent to me because the former Liberal Government continually introduced legislation in the form of omnibus Bills. It brought forward a package of measures similar to what we are dealing with today which not only dealt with broadcasting but with the CBC, Bell Telephone and the Canadian Film Development Corporation. The Liberal Government would then ask Members of the House to cast a single vote on the principle of such a Bill.

I suggest that those are four separate topics for which there indeed may be four separate principles. It is not possible to cast a single vote for such omnibus legislation, and one of the reasons the Liberals are in opposition today is that they continually attempted to deny Parliament the basic principles of democracy. They introduced omnibus legislation that did not address a specific principle. The bells rang for 17 days and they were defeated in an election on the basic principle of whether or not democracy was being served.

When the debate on second reading of this Bill is finished, we will be able to vote on the principle of its benefit to broadcasting generally while not dealing with Bell Telephone, CBC or the Film Development Corporation. I congratulate the Government for fulfilling that commitment.

How does this legislation differ from the previous Act? I believe its most fundamental principle would provide Parliament with the ultimate authority to direct the policy of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission. Without such a principle the CRTC consists of a group of appointed people who can set national policy. Once they are appointed they are accountable to no one and cannot be recalled. I believe it was a mistake to establish such a principle originally and I want to commend the Government for so carefully enshrining in these changes the basic principle that those who are accountable to the voters of the country will be responsible for determining the policy. We, as the elected representatives of the people, will be able to advise that appointed body about how to proceed.

I believe this basic principle is even more important today, given the explosion of technology. It may be necessary in the next four years of this Parliament to use that principle as we move through the VCR revolution, the satellite dish revolution and so on. There may be continued need to update and amend the policy so that Canadian culture is enhanced and the Canadian identity is strengthened through proper utilization of new technology as it comes on stream. That is the first principle and the most important one.

There is a second principle which I commend to the Opposition. The Opposition may have a knee-jerk reaction to it, but I ask opposition Members to pause. The second important principle of this Bill is that it changes the legislation in a manner that will ensure the Commission does not have to regulate new situations where a competitive market exists. The CRTC can get out of the business of regulating.

Think for a moment, Mr. Speaker, about the costs that are always inherent in the regulatory process. For instance, appearing before hearings and the costs that are always inherent in meeting the conditions that come about through regulation. If there is a saving of 1 per cent, 2 per cent, 10 per cent or whatever that currently goes into paperwork, that can be eliminated, and the money saved used for programming, then this nation will be the better for it. I am really pleased to see that principle in this legislation. I anticipate seeing a similar principle in many pieces of legislation that will be brought before this Parliament.

We have been too long governed by a political philosophy and a political party that believed it knew best, that put in place increased numbers of regulatory bodies and increased numbers of regulations that have become a drain on the national economy and national will. They are too expensive in economic terms and too expensive in psychological terms because of the impact they have on the spirit of people. I am pleased to be able to stand in this place today and support that portion of the Bill that allows us not to regulate. It is a sad commentary that we have to have wording like that. It really speaks to the underlying philosophical persuasion which has governed our affairs in previous times, and it will be changed.

I am also pleased to see that those who become licensees will be granted a seven-year period rather than a five-year period. If I am critical at all, maybe it should be 10 years. Maybe it should be forever with a mechanism that allows it to be revoked when it is abused. Certainly seven years is better than five years. People can plan with confidence, they can be more efficient and more effective. They will only have to use money to make application every seven years instead of five years. Even that saving can be put into programming. I hope the Government with the passage of time will consider going further.

There is another principle which is in accord with the Charter of Rights and the will of the people of this House. I think as a group we might have unanimity here. None of us wants to see the air waves used for abusive purposes, for purposes which degrade women, children, men, different racial groups, different religions and different ethnic groups. The air waves should not be used for abusive purposes and I am pleased to see that the Government is providing a mechanism to control the situation. I encourage the committee to study the wording of the Bill carefully. We want no denial of the freedom of speech; we simply want to be sure that the wording provides the mechanism necessary to stop that abuse.

Mr. Benjamin: That includes the commercials?

Mr. Hawkes: In short, I urge Members to support this Bill, to get it through the House, into committee and into law as quickly as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I was intrigued by the comment of my good friend from Calgary when he said that a major difference between his Party in government and when we were in government is that his Party did not believe in omnibus Bills and we did. I found that rather strange. I wonder whether he read the Bill yesterday that was tabled by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) which amends 50 statutes. Bill C-27 amends 50 Acts of Parliament.

Is the Hon. Member also not aware of the Bill that is now before the Justice Committee which deals with about 30 different issues? I could reel off a whole string of other Bills. I do not criticize the Government for that but when the Hon. Member stands up and says that the clear difference between my Party and the opposition Parties is that they do not believe in omnibus Bills he is just not correct.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, we are running into what I was disturbed about. Hon. Members over there do not understand what an omnibus Bill is.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hawkes: The basic principle of this House is that a second reading debate shall take place on the principle of the Bill. If the House approves the principle it goes to committee for detailed study. In the Bill brought forward by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) there is one principle and one principle only. Do we want legislation in this country changed to accord with the Charter of Rights? That is the principle exactly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: If we do, the Bill goes forward for detailed study. With one principle, it is not an omnibus Bill. When you try to deal with Bell Telephone on the one hand and the Film Development Corporation on the other, the use of the air waves and the CBC as a Crown corporation all in one piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, you have no single principle. That is how you determine whether a Bill is an omnibus Bill.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's definition of what is an omnibus Bill suits his own purpose. In fact, if you look at the Bill tabled yesterday by the Minister of Justice, while it deals with infringements in the Charter of Rights, it deals with very many different issues which may apply with respect to one statute and not to another. As I said, I support the approach taken yesterday by the Minister of Justice, but I reject the false dichotomy that he raises between his Party and other Parties on Bills.

Will the Hon. Member tell me what the common principle is in Bill C-24 which at the same time amends the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act, which is one thing, but also the home insulation program? They both deal with energy and saving it but the points in both of those programs are very different.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would send over the pages that he has in his hands and which he feels are in dispute, I will take a look at them and it would not take me more than 30 seconds to find a common principle. I find myself in a bit of an awkward position in not having the words before me to see exactly what that principle is. Maybe the Hon. Member would like to stand up and read the clauses to us and we might all decide what the common principle is.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether, like several of his colleagues, he is in favour of deregulating the CRTC in particular and adopting a similar approach in many other fields. Is there not a danger?

[English]

Is there not a danger in his evaluation of pushing too far, especially in the matter of culture and regulation, concerning the availability of air waves in Canada? As I said yesterday, and I repeat again, there are two minds in Canada concerning culture. There are those of us of French background who are in much less danger of Americanization. Not that I have anything against the Americans; they produce extraordinarily good culture, but it is not our own.

The Hon. Member will realize that those of us who happen to be Francophone fear less of the Americanization of our cultural activities. When I was in Halifax last week, I listened very attentively to over 40 representatives who appeared before a thousand people. They fear a great deal for the survival of what they call the Canadian culture. When they said "Canadian culture", I understood it to mean English or Anglophone culture, if I may put it that way without shocking any Member of the House.

• (1240)

The Hon. Member seems to agree with pushing the deregulation process too far. Therefore, does he not see a danger for the Canadian culture, as I described it earlier?

[Translation]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I think the French CBC network can have an impact on the French culture because of its high quality programs. In my opinion, the French CBC network is now better than anything TV viewers can watch in France.

[English]

It can work both ways. Canadian programmers, authors, actors and writers are of sufficient quality that it is time we began to look outwards and to be less afraid of others influencing us. It is time to begin to look at the opportunities for us to influence them. If we make that shift in our mind-set, say that we are a strong nation with talented people and realize that we have something to offer the world, then we can begin to look at whether or not a piece of legislation advances or retards that aim.

In terms of regulation, this piece of legislation does not remove the power to regulate. It removes the necessity to regulate so that each situation can be looked at as to whether or not regulation might enhance or retard the situation. It is that principle which I support not only here but everywhere. If there is one certitude which flows from regulation, it is the certitude that it uses up resources and costs money to go through the process and meet the conditions. If it is unnecessary in the first place, surely it frees up money for the creative process. I think we will find agreement in the Chamber that in this field we should do whatever we can to enhance and produce money for the creative process. If that is the case, we are moving in the right direction. If we can take money away from the administrative or paperwork side of it and put it into the creative side, we will have done something for the country. I believe this Bill moves in that direction. That is one of the reasons we should support it.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I have just one last comment to make. Since we can ask questions or make comments, I must say that I enjoyed very much listening to the Hon. Member's speech, especially since he seems to support this Bill so strongly. I have conducted some research for my colleagues since I am responsible for communications, for the time being anyway.

However, the Hon. Member—and it is good politics—did not mention that the Bill is similar to the one of the previous Government. This is why it is unlikely that we will have four or five days of debate on it before it goes to committee. The new Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has brought back before the House the Bill which was introduced by the Hon. Francis Fox. I am very happy that he supports good legislation introduced in the last Parliament. By the way, when the Hon. Francis Fox introduced the Bill in February, 1984 he saw fit in May, 1984, even though the Bill had not been put before the House for second reading, to amend it to conform with what the Hon. Member mentioned so well—that we should not use air waves for propagation against racism. In any event, I am pleased that he supports it and that he has put forward good ideas.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry, but the question and comment period has expired.

[English]

I see the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) rising to speak on this Bill. I am informed that the Hon. Member rose yesterday for the same purpose and yielded his right to the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). Technically this puts the Speaker in a dilemma, since the Hon. Member has already spoken on the Bill because of this situation. However, if he still wishes to address the House, it will require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I also want to thank my colleagues for their courtesy in letting me take the floor again in the House. I am pleased to have this opportunity to say a few words and express a few ideas on Bill C-20 concerning the—

[English]

In examining any legislation which is put before the Chamber, we should not only look at what is laid down or projected in the legislation. We should also consider what is not specified in it and, therefore, what is assumed—that which might be changed but is not being changed.

The most significant characteristic of this legislation is that it envisages the continuation of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission. That is a decision about which I personally have a few minor reservations but not one with which I fundamentally disagree.

The CRTC is an example of what my friends in England would call a quango, a quasi-autonomous non-governmental organization.

[Translation]

I do not know whether there is a French translation for this word. It is quite popular over there.

[English]

Essentially quangos are established to accomplish for the Government what it deems to be too controversial, burdensome or inexpedient for it to tackle individually as a matter of the policy process. In the opinion of those who have observed and analysed them, they are a mechanism which is very much open to misuse and excessive use in terms of allowing them to undertake responsibilities which might properly be left with the Government.

Nevertheless, the CRTC, particularly over the earlier years of its life, did not attract a great deal of controversy. However,

I bring to the attention of Hon. Members of the House the degree of dissatisfaction which has existed about the CRTC in many rural and remote areas of Canada. Perhaps I will expand on that later in my discourse.

Like many similar organizations, the CRTC has been the target of or, shall we say, opportunity for the patronage process. We have seen appointments to that Commission which would be difficult to justify on any objective evaluation of the qualifications of the people so appointed. Nevertheless we acknowledge that there are many who have made a good start and have made good progress with that Commission. There is no pretence that under the present structure of the CRTC it can set policy for the Government. Because of the pace of technology and the way in which developments have proceeded, there have indeed been occasions on which policy laid down by the CRTC did effectively make policy for the Government. Decisions of the CRTC made policy for the Government whether they liked it or not.

● (1250)

I am reminded somewhat of the Hound of the Baskervilles and the classic exchange between Holmes and Watson when discussing what happened about the dog. Holmes said: "Remember, Watson, the curious incident of the dog in the night-time." To which Watson replied: "The dog did nothing in the night-time." "Ah," said Holmes, "that was the curious incident". There have been occasions when the CRTC did function much as the dog in the night-time and did not do what it might legitimately have been expected to undertake.

We in this Party support the introduction of the clause which gives the Government the right to direct the CRTC to take a certain question, issue or problem under its mandate. By judicious and responsible use of that clause, the Government can indeed prevent the CRTC from being further perceived as the dog in the night-time.

If this power is passed into law, we would certainly enjoin the Government to use it carefully, responsibly and, above all, sparingly. Like any other body in its meetings, the Commission members form an impression of what they should be doing. The introduction of items that were not previously on their agenda is something that can be disruptive to the ongoing functions. In taking the power unto itself, we hope the Government will use it with some responsibility and, as I have said, on a relatively infrequent basis.

I should like to turn to Section 14.6 which gives the Minister the power to exclude a service or activity from regulatory control on the basis that competition is sufficient to ensure just and reasonable rates. I take issue with the previous speaker, whether he be now present or absent, and say that that is a power that we in this Party feel is open to some question and potentially open to some abuse. It is not a power that we like to see in this Bill.

We believe that the regulatory process can be streamlined, such that a mandate of oversight, review, observation and supervision need not take a great deal of resources and need not overly tax the Commission. The power to exempt a particular activity, market or service from the Commission's supervision is one that might be open to abuse. It might in fact be used in such a way that it could create loopholes.

It is assured that there are many industries in which the competitive environment changes overnight. We remember the bank amalgamations of the 1920s and the 1930s which reduced effectively the number of chartered banks in Canada from something in the hundreds to a total of five. Because there is no mention of reinstatement or reversal of such an exemption, we would question the usefulness and the appropriateness of that clause.

I now turn to the matter of the proposed amendment to Section 3 of the Broadcasting Act requiring all programming to promote the equality and dignity of all persons. I personally and my Party are strongly in favour of such an amendment, but if it be inserted in there, it must have teeth. Under the present programming regime, and indeed present state protocol, we would find instant violations. We have a national anthem which states "true patriot love in all thy sons command". This should properly be changed if it were to conform with the proposed amendment to Section 3. Promoting the equality and dignity of all persons is a laudable objective; however, it must be supported by concrete stipulations in the amended Act. It is an objective that is too often the subject of too much lip service within this country and not enough action.

My own concern is specifically with the pornography of violence which I see as being an abuse and, in effect, an assault not only on women, although I affirm that they are the most frequently chosen victims, but also on children and indeed on men. I have no argument with the sincere depiction of the act of love. I have no argument with the depiction of naked forms, be they male or female. But I am concerned that under present programming regimes, particularly as regards some of the imported material from our neighbour to the south, we are allowing a depiction of violence, a depiction of hostility between persons that is in danger of creating in the generation that grows up with television, as I and many others did not do, the belief that violence, verbal and physical assault, hostility—sometimes even worse than we find in this Chamber—is the common currency of every day dealings between people.

The matter of satellite dishes is something that came very close to my heart during the election campaign and, of course, since. There was a situation in the community of Red Lake where over a thousand residents were joint members in an enterprise that set up a satellite dish. It was seized on the orders of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission. I am pleased by the task force that was established on the distribution in underserved communities of satellite-received broadcasting services. That task force is scheduled to report on February 11.

I look forward to a report that will satisfy the legitimate aspirations of Canadians in remote communities, the legitimate needs and expression of the desire for not only cultural programming, but also the full range of programming that is available to many southern, and urban communities.

I support the representations of the Satellite TV Associations of Canada, although in many ways I have to take issue with some of the tactics that were used. When the law does allow for the seizure of equipment without compensation, it is not surprising that people get upset.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I see that the clock indicates exactly one o'clock. May I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) had the floor. The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River not being here, I recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with this opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-20 a very important piece of legislation to amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act.

Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, this Bill or at least a very similar one was introduced in the House by the Liberal Party during the last Parliament. I think it would be useful to provide a quick review of the Bill's history, and I am sure Hon. Members would be very upset if I did not take advantage of this opportunity.

On February 8, 1984, the previous Liberal Minister introduced legislation on telecommunications and broadcasting. Subsequently, a number of representations were made by various parties including women's groups and on May 24, 1984, amendments were made to the Bill. These amendments dealt with the principle of equality and personal dignity and were included in the Bill. On May 29, 1984, the same Minister announced a national film and video policy dealing with cultural as well as economic interests. And here ends my brief review.

Now, however, we see the Government introducing a similar Bill in the House. I was a little surprised, Mr. Speaker, that when the Minister introduced this Bill, he did not have the courtesy to mention the excellent work done by his predecessor. Only this morning, we heard the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) saying how important this Bill was and that it was an excellent initiative and so on. I therefore wish to thank the Member for Calgary West for recognizing this Liberal initiative by the previous Government, and I am sure that when Mr. Fox reads his speech in Hansard, he will be very pleased with what the Hon. Member for Calgary West had to say about him. I think it is important to understand this.

Mr. Speaker, this morning, the Member for Calgary West spent quite some time informing the House that Hon. Members should not take advantage of the debate on this Bill to discuss budgetary cutbacks in telecommunications. He then went on to spend ten minutes explaining that the cutbacks were reasonable, after informing the House that the subject was not a suitable one. Mr. Speaker, since a precedent was created this morning, I am sure you will agree that I should be allowed to say a few words about this subject, in response to what was said by the Hon. Member for Calgary West. In fact, I think I would be remiss if I did not speak to this matter at least briefly, always, of course, in relation to the Bill before the House, because I would not want to infringe on the Standard Orders.

[English]

This morning when the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) was discussing the fact that we need to have cut-backs in the area of the arts and telecommunications, he told us that the Government was not really cutting off programming, that it was not really cutting anything from the CBC but was only cutting off the money. The parallel I made at that time, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure you will remember it vividly, is that it was like saying it did not kill anyone, it just removed the head. But Government has removed the very vital resources which the CBC needs in order to fulfil its mandate, then, of course, some of the programs will be eliminated, will be killed by this action on the part of the Government.

The Government says that it wants to be accountable to the Canadian people, that it wants to respect Parliament. Quite a few promises were made during the election campaign by 338 Tories.

An Hon. Member: Who is counting?

Mr. Boudria: We are counting and the people of this country are counting.

Mr. Lewis: What do you do after ten?

Mr. Boudria: We are counting on this Government to deliver, which we know it will not do, Mr. Speaker. When it made its promises, I don't recall that the Government said that it was going to eliminate jobs. I don't recall that it advocated cut-backs in the arts, social programs and so forth. As a matter of fact, I am quite sure that the opposite was said. I know it seems unbelievable that a government would actually say one thing and do the opposite, but we must remember that this is a Conservative Government and that has been known to happen in the past with that particular political Party.

This Government which is interested in being more accountable to the people has cut off funds to the CBC and we now see a threat to some of the programming of the deliberations of the House of Commons, that precious—I use the overworked word of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)—and "sacred" link with the Canadian people. There is a threat that the broadcasts of Mr. Warren and others who perform the vital role of televising the deliberations of this chamber for the Canadian people will perhaps be eliminated in the future. If that is not breaching the campaign promise to be accountable, to give more funding to the arts and to telecommunications, what is it? This Government is again breaking the very promises it made not so long ago.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West told us that the way for the CBC to succeed is to produce programming which will sell world-wide and create an economic market. I don't know about you, Mr. Speaker, but I don't want the CBC to make another A Team and another Fall Guy and others of those programs which supposedly "sell". As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, we already have too much of that kind of programming on television.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, programs like Radio News which informs the farmers of this country and gives vital information is very much needed. Those are things which we need and which are beneficial to us, but will they sell on the world market? Not likely, Mr. Speaker. Nevertheless, the CBC has that specific mandate. We should recognize that it is not only in business in the competitive sense but the CBC and Radio-Canada have a very special mandate for the people of this country. I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Scott) will recognize that fact and will make our concerns known to the appropriate people since I cannot comment on attendance.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I worked with the CBC.

Mr. Boudria: Yes. I, of course, know that the Parliamentary Secretary worked for the CBC. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I was working on Parliament Hill at the time he was working for the CBC, so I do recall that vividly. I am sure that with his background the Parliamentary Secretary will take our side on this issue and will make that representation to the Minister. He is going to stand up to that Minister and tell him, "Mr. Minister, you are not going to make those cuts to the CBC", and the House of Commons proceedings will continue to be broadcast across this country so that Canadians can hear the deliberations of the House and will know that the Conservative Members on the back-benches seldom speak on those issues which are important. The people of this country want to know that, Mr. Speaker, and they have a right to know it. It is part of the mandate of the CBC to provide that vital link and it is part of the Conservative promise which was made to the people of this country. A promise was made to bring Parliament closer to the Canadian people and to make it more relevant. Now is the time for the Government to live up to the promises it made.

We had a long lecture on economics this morning from the Hon. Member for Calgary West. He told us about the deficit. I find it unusual that the particular discourse that we heard this morning on the deficit, and how we should cut things back, was not made during the election campaign. If the policy advocated by the Government is so good, why was it not good enough in July and August? The situation has not changed. It is still the same country and they are still the same voters out there. The only thing that is different is that the Government is now in a position to deliver on its promises, but it is not delivering on those promises, Mr. Speaker. That is the disappointment which the people of this country have to live with.

I am sure that the back-benchers and the bookends, the Conservative Members sitting on this side of the House, will know how important it is to deliver on those promises. When those back-benchers and bookends go back to their constituencies this weekend—assuming they do go back to their ridings on weekends—their constituents will say to them: "Listen, Mr. Bookend or Mrs. Bookend, we expect you to speak up on those CBC cut-backs. We expect you to stand up in the House on our behalf and say that we want to keep those important radio and television programs". Those constituents don't want more A Teams or Fall Guys, and all of those other programs which I try to forget but with which we are faced every day on the other television channels and even on the CBC on occasion.

We heard about the deficit this morning, Mr. Speaker, and about the ratio of our funds which are spent on the deficit. Last weekend I went to a number of different activities in my riding, as some of us do every weekend, and I listened to what my constituents had to say on various issues. Do you know how many talk to me about the deficit, Mr. Speaker? None.

Mr. Lewis: How many talk to you?

Mr. Boudria: No one talked about the deficit. I want to tell the Hon. Member opposite that if he wants to follow me for a weekend—as his Conservative friend tried to do during the election campaign—he is welcome to do so. He is welcome to run in my riding. I beat the last Tory candidate by 10,000 votes in the supposed Tory landslide. I still managed to scrape by with the largest Liberal majority in the country. So he is welcome to follow those Conservatives who attempted to do that at the time. He will know that I have seen many people circulating throughout my riding, as he has.

• (1420)

The Hon. Member knows perfectly well that the people of his constituency and the people of mine expect this Government to live up to its campaign commitments. The people of this country do not expect the Government to spend most of its time doing the exact reverse. That is not good enough because they elected the Conservatives in good faith. Could it be that what we are witnessing today on the part of this Government is just a little bit more of what the Prime Minister said at some point in the campaign when he was heard saying off the record or what have you, or is purported to have said, that just maybe you tell the people of this country something a little bit different than you tell the Tories? Could it be that this Government, which said it was going to be thrifty and do things right, spends just a little bit more time on things that it should not?

Instead of putting money into the CBC and other valuable programs, what does it do? We heard this morning from the Hon. Member for Calgary West that there is no free lunch. I am glad to hear that, Mr. Speaker, but he forgot to say that there is a free ride. To be specific, $500,000 worth of free rides in only a couple of months for Conservative Cabinet Ministers flying across this country. Another example was not a free ride but it cost $24,000 to deliver the mail on November 8. This was to deliver copies of the mini-budget by messenger to the provinces, and two of those messengers were not even sworn to secrecy. It cost $24,000 in one afternoon to satisfy the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who wanted to soften up his buddy-buddy provincial counterparts. And the Hon. Member for Calgary West has the nerve to come into this House and say that there is no free lunch. Well, there may not be a free lunch for the people of this country or the people at CBC, but there should not be a free lunch for Members of Cabinet either. If we are to represent our fellow citizens in this great Chamber, we should remember that we are not their kings, we are their representatives.

This Government claims that our Party is stalling on legislation. I find that very interesting. Members opposite say that when they were in opposition and deliberated Bills at length, or should I say ad nauseam, that was not the same. They were deliberating on omnibus legislation and, of course, their legislation is not omnibus, according to them. Even when they are amending 50 different statutes with the same Bill, that is not omnibus. The difference is, Mr. Speaker, that now they are in power. Well, the Government cannot have it both ways. The Tories cannot on the one hand claim the Opposition is abusing Parliament when we express the very great concerns of the people of this country on very important topics such as communications, the CBC and others, and then claim they had a right to express their views for hundreds and hundreds of hours on individual Bills in the last Parliament. We have a right to speak on behalf of the people of this country on this very important legislation and the other Bills brought before Parliament.

I, for one, was elected on one promise to the people of my riding. That was that I would speak on their behalf in the Parliament of this country and would work as hard as I could to deliver the goods and ensure that they would be properly represented in this great and illustrious Chamber. I invite all Members of the House of Commons to take that attitude and say what their constituents think about the attitude this Government has towards the promises it made last September 4.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the Hon. Member's speech and I just wanted to ask him about communications in the CBC. In view of the articles rampant in the media about dissension in the Liberal caucus and the problems they are having, especially with the caucus communications director, and in view of the difficulty the Official Opposition is having in Question Period, would he suggest that the CBC discontinue televising Question Period in order to eliminate the embarrassment of the comic books between the bookends?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am really pleased that the Hon. Member brought up the matter of communications. His Party took five months to tell us there were going to be two systems of measurement in this country. Then he says we have trouble communicating in this caucus. The schizophrenic policies of his Government are such that we have no reason to apologize for our communications. We in this Party speak with one united voice on the issues. We know where we stand.

The Hon. Member and his colleagues across the way may be at times confused on various issues. He may have difficulty in understanding what the issues are, and many of his colleagues have a hard time even remembering each other. One of them the other day managed to get out of this Chamber without being recognized. They say we have a hard time communicating but they do not have a hard time recognizing me when I leave the House, Mr. Speaker.

We have communicated to the people. They know who we are. If the Hon. Member wants to be recognized and wants the people to know who he is, well, it is he who needs better communications, not us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) on a question, I presume.

Mr. Dingwall: Comment and question, Mr. Speaker. I know the Hon. Member shares my view on regional development policy, that the national Government ought to use every agency at its disposal to try and create economic development across the country. I want to know from my colleague whether or not he agrees with me that the decision by the CBC to single out the poorer areas of this country, particularly Atlantic Canada, regarding the cut-backs of the CBC, dispersing and dispensing with valued employees, flies in the face of what this Government promised in the election campaign. They were elected on the basis of creating jobs, not to decrease jobs. I want to know from my colleague if he agrees with the assertions and statements I have made that this Government, through the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) and the auspices of the Financial Administration Act, ought to give a directive to the President of the CBC to reverse those decisions on cut-backs so that individuals who have lost their jobs can be rehired forthwith.

Mr. Boudria: I think the one thing we should emphasize is that the Minister has continuously pleaded innocent to the charge of cut-backs in the CBC. In my view he is guilty on two counts. First, the cut-backs should never have been made to start with. The Minister has to acknowledge responsibility for that. Secondly, he should be there to ensure that the regions of this country are properly protected, whether we are talking about possible abolishing of certain Francophone radio stations in remote communities or talking about Atlantic Canada losing services and so forth. The Minister's job is to be in charge of communications. If he does not do his job, perhaps he should let someone else do it for him.

During the campaign the Conservative Party made many promises. I will review only a few of them due to my limited time. The Canadian Conference on the Arts sent out a questionnaire to which the Conservatives responded that they were committed to maintaining federal funding for agencies and councils in line with inflation. I did not know inflation had gone down this year. Do we have negative inflation this year? Everyone seems to be losing this year. As far as I am concerned the cost of living is still going up.

In response to that questionnaire during the campaign the Conservatives said that they were committed to real growth in federal contributions to this sector. Since when does real growth have a negative number? Perhaps the Hon. Members who lectured us this morning on economics could explain to us how real growth has a negative number this year. The Tory Government has not maintained funding for agencies and councils, the arts or communication. Instead it has cut funding in these areas by $121.5 million.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) on his excellent speech on a very timely subject. He brought up the problem of cuts within the CBC. I see some Members here in the Opposition from Newfoundland who understand what the outlying areas of this country are all about.

The basic industries of my riding in Prince Edward Island are agriculture and fisheries. Two of the most important informational programs for farmers and fishermen were Radio Noon and Window on Resources. Window on Resources supplied fishermen and farmers with an update on market conditions, catches, and other items which are extremely important to those two very important sectors. On December 1, Window on Resources was discontinued. Radio Noon provided quality local information. It contained weather forecasting, product prices and market conditions in the entire Maritimes region and in Toronto. Those pieces of information really helped farmers and fishermen plan their futures.

I see my good friend from Newfoundland who obviously knows the value of weather forecasting. He is a former sea captain. Fishermen rely on all of this information. I come from a farm, Mr. Speaker. For years when the farmers and fishermen were eating their lunches they listened to the forecast. The farmers wanted to know whether they would be baling hay the next day. Those were very important programs. Could the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell comment once again on the extreme importance of those programs?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret that the period for questions and comments is now over.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-20. It was interesting to hear the last speaker for the Liberal Party remark that the Government Members, whether the bookends on either sides of us in the House or those across the way, are not speaking on this legislation. I find it ironic that we elect so many people to the Government side for them to sit here and not speak. When the Liberal Party was in government we used to say some rather nasty things about their back-benchers. I suspect that the Hon. Member who just spoke does not mean to reflect on his own colleagues who never did speak in the last four years.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is either inadvertently or intentionally being negligent in his comments. First and foremost, Members who are sitting here today played a very active role in the last Parliament. I think it is totally out of order for this Member to comment or make judgments on previous intentions, comments, or lack of comments by other Members in the previous Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the nervousness which the Liberal Party may feel about this. Regardless of what legislature one talks about, it is a fact that if the Government wants to get legislation through it will tell its back-benchers not to get up. The Hon. Member who rose on the point of order is not new to the House and must recognize that on many occasions it was opposition Members who kept the debate going in the House. By and large government back-benchers do as they are doing today, which is to say nothing. Unfortunately that means that their constituents are not being represented in this debate. We do not know what people in various parts of the country think because their Members are not speaking on this legislation, which affects a number of them.

The Liberal Members spoke with regard to the abuse of Government jets and things of that nature. That is not a new thing. During a provincial election in Manitoba three federal Government jets were sitting at the airport in Winnipeg. Three Ministers discovered that they had to be in Winnipeg on a certain date and they could not fly together. I presume that the abuse by the present Government is nothing new; the old Government did it too. These things did not happen only after September 4.

I would like to speak about the Bill itself. I come from a riding that will be affected by this legislation. There are sections of the legislation which I must applaud. I do not agree with everything in the legislation, but there are some ideas which have been a long time coming. I agree that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) should have the power to give policy direction to the CRTC. This is often necessary within the CRTC or the CTC. I see that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is in the House. There is often a Government commission which makes unpopular decisions. We ask questions in the House of the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Communications and are told that that was not done by them but by the CRTC, the CTC or some other body which happens to be filled with Government supporters. It is essential that the elected Ministers make the policy decisions and take responsibility for them. We support that particular change in the legislation.

However, as a caveat to my earlier remarks, I wish to say that it is important that there still be a forum through which those people affected by such measures have an opportunity to make their representations known. The CRTC has performed such a role over the years whereby people who were affected by certain applications would be able to appear at a hearing before the CRTC to make representations.

I hope that when the Government makes decisions about cutting back services or encouraging private enterprise to the exclusion of the CBC it will also provide a forum for those citizens affected by those decisions to make presentations. I must say that I do not believe that that is necessarily a job for the committees of the House of Commons because most of them do not travel. Commissions such as the CRTC and the Canadian Transport Commission are able to travel to the areas affected by applications. We hope that the CRTC will continue to play a role in hearing evidence from concerned groups affected by policy on the future of communications in this country.

There is another aspect of this legislation that concerns me. In areas where the Minister believes there is enough competition in the future, the CRTC would lose its power to make regulatory decisions. I am not convinced that there is much competition with regard to communications. Most communities across this country have only one or two stations serving them. Most people who subscribe to a cable network only receive one cable network. Therefore, we should realize that there is not a lot of competition in the communications business in this country and it is necessary to have a regulatory body which will retain the authority to hear submissions not only about price but the level of service being provided to the various communities. If this clause is put into law, I hope there will not be many exclusions from the regulatory process which has generally served us well in the past.

My riding covers the northern two-thirds of Manitoba. It covers 186,000 square miles and consists of 50 communities. One study which will affect my riding is that by the CRTC special task force on service to small, isolated communities. One of our difficulties in speaking to this legislation presently is that we do not have the findings of that task force at the present time. When we are speaking on a Bill which affects the future communications policy of the Government and the direction which communications will be taking, it is unfortunate that we do not have that information before us at the present time.

This has been a problem in the past because this aspect of communications is one for which rules that were set up for the CRTC were really meant for larger communities with greater numbers competing for licences and areas where inexpensive cable systems can be established. These are areas where Canadians live close to the American border and are already able to receive extra service.

The problem faced by northern and smaller communities was that they either received no television or radio or perhaps only received one network, which was the CBC in most cases. The CBC had a mandate to serve smaller towns while the private enterprise networks, by their own admission, did not see a profit in providing a television or radio service to communities such as those in my riding and those in the riding of my colleague, the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

The advent of the satellite dish provided the capability to pick signals out of the air. As a result, many of these communities became involved in what was called illegal broadcasting. For example, one of the first satellite dishes in Canada, certainly in northern Manitoba, was brought in by a reserve in my riding, Red Sucker Lake. That reserve did not even have CBC service, let alone any other service. The chief and council took $60,000 from funds that were raised from various sources such as bingo and sports and bought a satellite dish. It picked up signals for free and provided broadcasting to the residents of that reserve. Although it was illegal, it was the only way they could get any television service.

That system mushroomed throughout the North and the rest of the country. In reaction to the situation the Cancom satellite network was set up whereby legal service was provided which could be used by many of those northern communities. However, that is a very expensive service to provide. One of the inequities that exists at this time is that larger cities such as Winnipeg have fairly reasonable rates, such as $6.40 a month for cable service, while the poor, small communities in my riding must pay $19.20 a month or more to get the Cancom satellite service. Many of the people in those communities are unemployed and do not have a lot of money.

When the task force makes its recommendations it should find ways of providing good Canadian service, because we need a service which guarantees a minimum of Canadian content. Certainly there is enough Canadian content available, with Ontario educational TV, the CBC and some of the programs coming from the National Film Board. However, it should also consider the price of that service. I hope that report takes the provision of cheaper service into consideration for the eventual regulations.

We should also recognize that the people who live in smaller communities do not have the same entertainment options as those who live in Winnipeg, Regina, Toronto or Montreal. Quite often they are tempted to pick up illegal satellite reception of channels which cover sports or movies, such as the Home Box Office, because they do not have professional hockey in their communities, and many communities in my riding do not have movie theatres. The only way they can see hockey or baseball or have access to a variety of entertainment is from channels received with a satellite dish.

I hope the task force considers that serious problem in its recommendations. It may be said that these communities can watch the CBC. I believe the CBC has done a good job in the past and Canadian content is important to keep the cultural identity of this nation. However, we must also recognize that these people live in communities where the entertainment options are very limited. They have a greater need for a variety of programming than people in some of the larger areas and cities of this country.

There is one other item on which I would like to speak before my time draws to a close, Mr. Speaker. It is a concern which has an underlying theme in this debate. We are not sure where the Government is going in its communications policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: I think many of us in the Opposition and probably some Members on the Government side would feel more comfortable in this debate if we had a more comprehensive communications policy set forth before us at this time. When the Minister talks about reducing regulation where there is competitition, I would like to know what he means by competition. As I said earlier in this debate, we do not believe there is that much competition in television service in this nation. We know by the very nature of the physical arrangements that most people do not have an option regarding which cable company they contract with. They have a choice of maybe one or two cable companies. In most cases it is a system where they only have one. In most communities there are not that many cable companies. Perhaps in Toronto the situation is different, but in most communities across this country there are not that many television stations. There might be one, there might be two. In most of the communities in my constituency we have only the CBC and in a few other communities we have the CTV network. None of my communities has the Global network. None of my communities has the Ontario educational system. I do not see a lot of competition out there. I would prefer, when the Minister makes the suggestion that he has in this legislation, that he clarify what he means by adequate competition.

I would also be concerned that we are giving him the right to make policy decision and to give policy directions to the CRTC. We agree with that and I support him. I would like to know what policy directions the Minister is thinking about. I think we have a right to know. I note that the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary is here today. I hope there would be some clarification of what kind of process will be there for the public to have input when the Minister is making policy decisions. I hope the Member indicates that to this House when he has a chance to speak a few weeks from now. It is a major concern.

This week alone we have a group of people concerned about the future of the CBC. Pierre Berton, Farley Mowat, and others have been sitting in this House and expressing their deep concern about what is happening with the CBC in the future. I have received letters and I am sure other Members have received letters about what direction the new youth network will be taking. Will it be done, as some of our Members have suggested, by the National Film Board, or will it be done by an American-based company such as Walt Disney? Again, that is a policy matter, just as it is a matter of the CRTC. The Manitoba Teachers' Society, for example, has written to me about what they would like to see and how they can present some of the questions they have with regard to youth networks. How will that happen if the Government is making policy decisions? How can they have input? Certainly one or two of those kinds of organizations will be rich enough and have the means to talk to the Minister directly, but in many cases that is not possible. I would like to see some kind of forum for hearings by the CRTC or some other means by which the public can have input.

I think there are some very good clauses in this Bill generally we support the direction of the Bill. We certainly support the addition of sex as one of the areas that must be considered in controlling and regulating broadcasts so we can make sure sexually abusive broadcasting is not taking place in Canada. Certainly this need has been demonstrated in the last year or two.

There are improvements in this Bill to help make the broadcasting system better in Canada. There are some weaknesses also. I would hope some of the Government Members who are knowledgeable in this area will get up and take part in this debate and let us know what they are thinking, perhaps with the help of speaking notes from the Department.

I have one other concern which I have not had a chance to express and it is a good one on which to end my speech. There is an increasing level of violence in television programs coming into this country. For the most part they are not Canadian-based programs. They are brought in in most cases, by the very nature of our system, from the United States. I am concerned about this. Like many people, I have a chance to flip channels to see what is going on. There is much too much violence, much of it degrading. I do not believe this is necessary. I believe the CRTC or the Government itself should take some action and look at the amount of violence taking place, violence which most parents are not in a position to control. They do not know what channel their children are watching at a given time. They do not know what is on television. That is a personal concern of mine, and I hope that the Government or the CRTC would look into this.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment and then a question for clarification which I will address to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), whose very thoughtful remarks have been listened to carefully on this side and will be taken into consideration.

I am the designated clean-up speaker at the end of the second reading debate on Bill C-20 and at that time I will address directly the questions which the Hon. Member has raised.

I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) and I had the honour to host a luncheon for Pierre Berton, Farley Mowat, Dinah Christie, Doris Anderson, the former Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, the Hon. Pauline McGibbon, and Ray Hazzan, who is the spokesperson for the CBC producers. We are well aware of their concerns. We had a most useful exchange at that luncheon.

I listened with interest to the argument made by the Hon. Member for Churchill that the Government should have greater power of direction over the CRTC. Would the Hon. Member not agree that the CRTC, the Canadian Transport Commission and other such bodies are quasi-judicial in nature? They are and in my view must remain initially at an arm's length relationship from the Government. I agree with the Hon. Member that they should not be policy setters. The Government should set the regulations, then these Commissions should enforce them and carry them out. Is the Member making the point that the problem with the CRTC now is that it has wound up being both policy-maker and regulator?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the Hon. Member survived his luncheon with the various people who are concerned about the CBC and I hope the CBC survives this Government.

With regard to the substantive matter which the Parliamentary Secretary has brought up, whether the CRTC, the Canadian Transport Commission or others should have an independent policy-making role, I believe that will always be the case to some degree anyway. Just this last month, the month of January, there were decisions made by the Canadian Transport Commission which will have the effect of reducing service to a number of communities on the CN rail line in my riding. Two historic railway stations will be closed down and eight station agents will be cut, many of whom speak Cree. The population of my riding in many communities speak Cree. They will be in a situation of finding it very difficult to get service in the future. Some will say that is an administrative matter. I would say that when the Government cuts services affecting one language or cultural group in the country, in effect it is setting a policy or it is following an existing government policy. It is a bit more than administration.

I can speak with some experience as I used to be the vice-chairman of the Manitoba Police Commission. Even though the Government of Manitoba set a policy, the decisions of the Police Commission or any other commission in the decision-making process somehow established policy for the future. It is a balancing act. I hope the Government sets the general policy so that we in the House can rise and question the Minister as to policy directions and express our concerns to various Ministers, whether it be the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) or whoever. At the same time there are other citizens and interest groups out there who need something like the CRTC or the CTC which visits their communities and hears presentations from people affected by the ultimate decision.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment on the address of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). I particularly appreciate his remarks in the latter part of his speech when he referred to the need of the community at large to hear and to feel the impact of the CRTC in a very local sense. Clearly, that is what has been missing in the past.

I should like to refer to some small communities in the Slocan Valley such as New Denver and Silverton, communities of that nature. They are a very isolated area where the geography is vertical instead of horizontal. When their permits expired for the rebroadcast of a Canadian channel—and at that time it was the CBC—they were told by the CRTC that they would not be relicensed. When CRTC officials came to me to describe the reason for that decision, they suggested that perhaps the little town of New Denver should put in a television studio to broadcast from the community at the base of the mountain where no signals were available, so that the people in that community could receive television. Those are the kinds of things which have been alluded to that make absolutely no sense. They demonstrate that the Government and the bureaucracy at the time were totally out of touch with the people. I am pleased that this Bill will open up that entire component and allow communities such as the little town of Burton with 300 people to have these services. Instead of the people in Burton watching the signal from the north and listening to a French language program when the people of that town are not bilingual—and I must say that they do not undersand Cree or Inuit—and instead of receiving two very poor signals, the circumstances have been revised and improved upon and they are now receiving CBC and CTV programming, programming which they need in order to be informed.

I should like to conclude with the following remark which deals with the inequities of communications and refer once again to that little town of Burton with 300 souls. There is a telephone line going right by its door. It carries the signal of CBC Radio. They cannot listen to it. These 300 people have radios which do not have sufficient strength to pick up CBC Radio, yet the CBC signal runs on the telephone line by its door. They cannot tap into it. I suppose they could do so if they were millionaires. However, the bottom line is that the rate which the B.C. Telephone Company wants for the service is so astronomical that there is no point in even considering it for a community of some 300 people.

Again I thank the Hon. Member for his comments regarding the need for the CRTC to relate to the circumstances of smaller communities and in isolated areas of Canada. I very much understand his comments in that regard.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my strong reservations about Bill C-20. They are not related to the original intentions of the Bill, for it is very similar to the one prepared by the previous Liberal Government and introduced by the previous Liberal Minister of Communications, the Hon. Francis Fox, nor are my reservations about Bill C-20 to be found in its wording, although there are some important omissions in it and amendments are needed.

My reservations are more fundamental than that. When amendments were written under the Liberal administration, we assumed that there was an absolute understanding by all—and this was right and reasonable—that the Government would continue the arm's length policy of not interfering with the CRTC, the CBC or, for that matter, with cultural and arts councils. That was always Liberal Government policy, and it was written at the time. The Liberal Government at that time assumed that that relationship would continue. However, I now have strong reservations after only six months of rule by the Tory Government. All indications are that the Government and the Conservative Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) have a different approach and a different agenda in mind.

On November 29, 1984 The Globe and Mail indicated that the Tory Minister of Communications said that he wanted to rethink the arm's length policy and that his Government was moving rapidly to apply a direct political hand into the affairs of the agency, the CBC. He hired three private consultants to advise him on the fate of the CBC. He interposed political agents into the CBC situation and asked them to monitor and, I imagine, to manipulate. This has already been brought to the attention of the House by my Liberal colleagues.

Another proof of flagrant government interference is by hands on manipulation—by putting its hands on the throat of the CBC to strangle it financially, to force it and to intimidate it, to make it tremble and conform to Tory Government objectives. Imagine the ramifications of Bill C-20, if it is put into force now, in the hands of this Minister and this Government.

How can we trust the Government with power of direction of the CRTC? How can we trust it in light of the facts? In the few short months the Government has been in power, it has created more havoc and chaos among the cultural and artistic community than any foreign invader could have done in as many years. By its massive and ill-considered budgetary cuts to the CBC and to numerous arts and cultural organizations in the country, the Government has created distrust, fear and consternation among broadcasters, writers, artists, musicians and communicators of all kind who give us a sense of our own identity. Our feeling of national identity is now being threatened. The cuts the Government has made to the CBC will result in a serious blow to Canadian programming. CBC management has virtually conceded this.

I ask the Government how it can go on reducing Canadian programming at a time when the cultural sovereignty of our air waves is being threatened as never before. I remind the Government that it was its own Party which originally founded the CBC with the following words:

> This country must be assured of complete Canadian control of broadcasting from Canadian sources . . . free from foreign interference or influence.

Why, then, is the Government actively behaving as if it wants our air waves to be filled with American programming? Does it know that two major documentaries have recently been aired in Europe devoted exclusively to discussing the pathetic and tragic situation that is occurring in the Canadian television situation?

• (1510)

Does this Government realize that on any evening of the week, only 23 per cent of the programs over television have any Canadian content whatever? Does it know that for every hour of Canadian drama seen in this country, 24 hours of American drama is broadcast? Finally, if it is aware of all this, why is it carrying out a policy that will make a bad situation even worse?

The record of this new Conservative Government in broadcasting is one that no true Canadian, no Canadian with any sense of feeling for this country and what it stands for, can support. By slashing the operating budgets of the CBC, the National Film Board, the Canada Council and all other institutions which we rely on to give us our sense of identity, the Government has thrown away any credibility it may have had as a defender of our national dreams.

It is this Party's forerunner that created the national dream by building a railroad across this country. We now see the sorry side of this very same Party destroying a national dream of another kind, a national dream of a Canadian identity expressed through the artists and their broadcasters.

This Government cannot be trusted to control broadcasting. It has shown that in a few short months. It slashed the central pillar of our broadcasting system, the CBC, so deeply and indiscriminately that it is in mortal danger. Given the record of this Government and its shameful betrayal of our national dream, our expression of our Canadian identity, given the record of betrayal of public broadcasting by this Government, we must not allow it to gain even more control over broadcasting by means of this Bill.

Let us look at the record of this Government in the few short months it has been in office with regard to its communications policy. There have been massive cuts to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation which have been widely decried as hasty and ill-considered. The $85 million cut to the CBC has needlessly created 1,200 unemployed broadcasters at the CBC. In addition, hundreds of independent contributors to the Corporation are now without a source of income.

There has been a major reversal of the traditional arm's length relationship between the Government and the CBC. The behaviour of the Government has created an atmosphere of fear, distrust and unease amongst the artists and broadcasters of this country. Culture is a multimillion dollar industry in Canada. The cuts to the CBC were not eliminating frills. The CBC budget is spent to support scores of film laboratories, sound studios, small production companies and other associated industries.

The CBC appropriation spends over $15 million every year on musicians and composers in this country. No one else supports our musicians to the same degree. Every year well over $20 million goes to the writers and performers who belong to ACTRA out of the CBC budget.

What will be the trickle-down effect from the CBC cuts on these talented Canadians? To the thousands of technicians, writers, artists, musicians and performers, the CBC is not a frill. It is the principal if not the only source of their income. The cuts to the CBC will mean that these people, who have never found it easy to survive, now face truly difficult times.

The Minister of Communications is reported to have admitted last December that, in retrospect, perhaps he ought to have looked at the mandate of the CBC before he made the cuts. That is small comfort to the thousands of CBC workers.

My riding is in Toronto. What I will say is not only because of letters I have received from people in the CBC, but from my understanding of the problems of those who report in my riding. The morale of the CBC is in tatters. With wholesale slashing of its operations, personnel and program budgets, the organization is bleeding. The rumours of further cuts and the hints of secret government reviews have engendered an atmosphere of bewilderment and terror at the Corporation, yet nowhere have we seen a rational agenda for the cuts to the arts.

Let the Minister of Communications understand one thing. The CBC cuts were not, as he seems to believe, simply efficiencies in a bloated bureaucracy. The cuts meant that hundreds of professional people are out of work with little likelihood of finding professional work elsewhere. The cuts have meant that the only program for native people, Our Native Land, will not be returning. Let the Minister of Communications tell our native people that the CBC cuts will not affect programming. The respected children's show—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I would just like to point out that the Member's speech should be relevant to the subject, that is, the CRTC and modifications to the Act concerning the CRTC, and not the cuts to Radio Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I would like to point out that this morning, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) spent at least fifteen minutes talking about other things, and the Chair decided to allow this. He talked about the deficit, he talked about almost everything under the sun except the Bill. So I think the Hon. Member . . . I merely want to state this fact, and I know the Hon. Member is listening. The Hon. Member can certainly relate the cutbacks to the Bill, because there have been cutbacks at the CRTC.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): First of all, I shall if I may inform the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) that this morning, the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) did not speak for a period of fifteen minutes about Government cutbacks or the deficit and that, as far as I know, he related the Government's cutbacks to the subject dealt with in Bill C-20. It is true that this morning, the Chair was rather broad-minded in its interpretation, except that in the case of the Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille), I do not see how, up to now—

[English]

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to defend the relevance of what I am saying on Bill C-20. It will be seen, if one reviews the text of what I have said, that I have been establishing a very simple principle. I said at the outset that Bill C-20 as written would have no problems within it if the Government operated on the basis of an arm's length relationship. That was the assumption when this Bill was first introduced. It was based on the assumption of an arm's length relationship.

I am establishing that in every area the Minister and the Government are not carrying out an arm's length relationship with the arts, the CBC and other cultural organizations for which the CRTC presumably is responsible. If this Bill passes and it defines for the CRTC its areas of responsibility on the basis of the Commission's record, this will threaten our freedom. Therefore, it is extremely relevant as to what has been done to the CBC by this Government. I hope, Mr. Speaker, you will give me the three minutes I lost because I would like to establish that it is an extremely relevant relationship that I have been trying to develop. Let the Minister of Communications understand that the CRTC cuts are not simply efficiencies to a bloated bureaucracy, as he seems to believe. I was pointing out that these cuts affect our native people. I stated that Our Native Land will not be returning as a program. I was saying that we should let the Minister of Communications tell our native people that this will not affect programming. The respected children's show, The Friendly Giant, will not be continued. Let the Minister of Communications tell Canadian children that CBC cuts will not affect programming.

The cuts have meant that the CBC cannot increase its participation in the Telefilm Fund. The Tories say: "Well, so what?". I will tell you what, Mr. Speaker, The CBC is the broadcast organization which has provided over 80 per cent of Telefilm projects with Canadian independent producers. If the CBC can no longer afford to co-fund with Telefilm, where will the independent sector find air time and dollars? Let the Government tell the Canadian independent film industry that the cuts will not affect programming.

There has been a major reversal of the traditional arm's length relationship between the Government and the CBC. It is no longer 1984, but it appears as if Big Brother is alive, well and living in Ottawa. The appointment of a troika of so-called consultants from outside to oversee the CBC and its cuts amounts to a major reversal of the traditional arm's length relationship between Parliament and cultural agencies such as the CBC. I am using the CBC as an illustration.

The Government cannot and should not tell newspapers what to print, nor should it tell the CBC what to do through the instrument of the CRTC. If the Government can tell the CBC which dollars ought to be spent where or how, the Hon. Minister of Communications could in theory control the CBC. I suspect that few Canadians knew that the Conservative Government's communications policy was to undermine what has been one of the most respected information services in the world.

This Government maintains that the CBC is inefficient and over-funded. Yet the Minister is reported to have expressed surprise at the results of his budget slashing, which has been the loss of 1,200 jobs. It appears as if the Minister and his appointed overseers had not foreseen this disastrous effect on the CBC.

What objective proof did the Minister have to justify the cuts to the CBC? A major study of the CBC by the McKinsey Management Consultants concluded that, compared to any other broadcaster in the world including the BBC and Australian and American broadcasters, the CBC is substantially more productive. They found that the CBC produces twice as much programming per employee while the cost is much lower. What is more, the CBC does the costly programming that the private network in the country will not do because it is not profitable to do so. That is why the CBC does the only drama, religious and science programming in Canadian television. The private industry will not undertake to provide Canadian information.

One must ask oneself if the Canadian television industry must face this cut of $85 million and possibly more. Why are the Tories doing this? Is there a sinister purpose? Certainly given the Government's activities in the last few months, there is a growing mistrust of a government policy which has apparently been shaped behind closed doors. Many of our talented young people are gathering around the country to ask what this policy will do in terms of their futures and in terms of the future of the arts and the sciences. What about their roles as young people?

I suggest that we are facing a very critical time. I wish to say on behalf of our arts and communications industries that there are people in Toronto, for example, who are seeing the loss of jobs of those who are paid by the CBC as well as those in allied industries and realizing that the whole cultural framework that is centered in that metropolis is being gravely threatened. I am told by my colleagues, not only on this side of the House but also on the other side, that in Montreal there is a large community that is extremely anxious, suffering and very concerned about its future as well.

I would like to conclude by saying that I would feel much more comfortable if in fact the Tories had not put forth these other policies during the past six months. This Bill would have made sense in the context of an arm's length relationship. I feel I must express my reservations and I feel that, under these circumstances, I cannot give my support to this Bill when I know that the Government is not able at the present time to give us a policy for an attitude and relationship with the arts community that would ensure that it would stay at arm's length, allow the Canadian identity to be protected, and not allow a collapse of our entire identity as Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief question to ask the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille). I must commend him on his very fine speech on this very important subject.

I know that I receive many letters from constituents dealing with the quality of the programming that is on the air waves. Most of this programming is coming via satellite and in some cases is probably not quite legal. However, we are seeing more and more violence on programs and more and more sexually explicit programs. This Bill, in some way at least, addresses the quality of programming, and I think that is certainly a step in the right direction.

I wonder if the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence would share his views on the kind of programming he would like to see. It is a very delicate situation. It is very difficult to get into the area of ccensorship. How does the Hon. Member see the role of the Government and of the CRTC in addressing this very delicate subject?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, it would certainly not be possible to lay out all of the possible ways in which the Government or the CRTC could in fact impose limits upon that kind of undesirable broadcasting. I certainly agree with the Hon. Member that the passage of such a Bill would do a great deal, if in the right hands, toward bringing about a proscription of those things which are obscene, violent and undesirable.

The conundrum is that if one supports a Bill like this, one hopes to put into the hands of a responsible Government the opportunity to deal with irresponsible kinds of broadcasting. That is why putting it into the hands of the Government, as was planned with this Bill originally under the Liberal Government, would have brought about the possibility for the Government to step in when such abhorrent things as promiscuity, attacks on women and attacks on children were taking place. That would have been the good side.

The down side, which I have tried to develop and which the Hon. Member probably understands and perhaps even shares with me, is that in light of the policies of the Government over the past six months during which it has been in power, the Government has been causing mayhem in the communications industry and particularly with that very organization which has been the keystone to presenting an option from the Canadian side. That is why it is a conundrum. If one votes against this Bill, then one is voting against the possibility of dealing with obscenity and other kinds of abuses. If one votes for this Bill, then one is voting for a Government that would strangle the CBC as it is strangling other arts organizations. That is the problem which I was developing.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) a question. Is it not the height of arrogance to say that the Liberal administration, which was trounced so badly at the polls because the people no longer wanted it, was a responsible Government and could have handled this Bill whereas the Government which was elected by a vast majority of the people is irresponsible? Is it not arrogance on the part of the Liberals when they tell the Canadian electorate that it did wrong?

• (1530)

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member should try to remember the history of the situation because the Liberal Party and its Government were in power for some 40 years and had the support of the Canadian people in all of the developments on which I have spoken, such as the development of the Canadian identity, fighting for Canadian sovereignty, bringing back the Constitution to Canada, the development of our own energy policies and our own resources, and the evolution of our own national flag and anthem. These were all fought against by that Party opposite which, for a few short months now, has held power. I must point out that the Liberal Government had power for 14 years in a row. With the exception of about six months, the Liberal Government has had uninterrupted 14 years of large majorities. No, it is not arrogant at all for a Liberal to stand up and say that the Canadian people are behind a policy that supports a CBC which will protect and uphold a sense of Canadian identity. But this should not be a partisan argument.

Mr. Dick: You made it that.

Mr. de Corneille: What I am doing is simply pointing to the record of the Conservative Party during these past six months and what it has done to tear apart and tear down FIRA and now the CBC. Those are institutions which will protect and affirm our Canadian sovereignty and identity.

Mr. King: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member, who has just provided us with a recitation of the wonderous things which liberalism has brought to Canada, would also identify that liberalism with the $190 billion deficit which it has brought to Canada and the $35 billion deficit which is facing the nation in this current year? I wonder if the Hon. Member would identify liberalism with the fact that one-third of the revenues of Canada now go to pay interest on the national debt which Liberal philosophies and practices have produced?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, earlier, the Chair spoke to the Member who had the floor about his comments which were not related to the Bill before the House. I think the Member who has the floor has strayed from the subject of Bill C-20.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I must inform the Hon. Member for Bourassa, as I said earlier, that the Chair finds itself in a situation somewhat of its own making as a result of this morning's occurrence.

Comments were made earlier to the Hon. Member's colleague, the Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille), about the relevance of his speech, and we must now deal with the consequences.

[English]

Mr. King: I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he also identifies Liberalism with the fact that one-third of the revenues of Canada now go to pay interest on the national debt?

Mr. Benjamin: Order.

Mr. King: If the Hon. Member does not wish the Government to restrain spending, at what point would he think it is important that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Government of Canada take note of the increasing amount which is going simply to service the interest to the national debt? Would the Hon. Member allow it to go to 33.33 per cent, to 40 per cent, to 50 per cent or to 60 per cent before taking action? Where would the Hon. Member think would be an appropriate point at which to draw the line?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Respectfully, the period for questions and comments is now over.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I will keep my remarks brief and hope that one more speaker from the Liberal Opposition and perhaps my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) will be permitted a few moments to make the points they have in mind.

This Bill is intended to change the regulations of TV and radio broadcasting. It is intended to give the Minister power to regulate the content of what is broadcast by any "undertaking", as it is called, and also to define the "undertaking" so as to include most of those which are not now clearly enough licensed. It also undertakes to give authority to the CRTC to regulate the content with regard to any attacks upon the equality and dignity of any group, and that specifically includes any attacks related to sex. It also undertakes to regulate only the larger outlets and not the very small ones, although those are not defined clearly.

I believe my constituents, from what I have been told, would agree with the main thrust of this Bill. The people of Spadina are patriotic people whether they were born here or came here from other countries. They want to see news of Canada. They want to see a variety of Canada represented on TV and on radio by the CBC and by other stations. They do not want to be fed exclusively with what comes from across the border or from overseas. They recognize, therefore, the need to have the Canadian state regulate what is otherwise capable of being monopolized by one private point of view. In that respect, they appreciate the state enterprise created by the Tories half a century ago. Some of my constituents recognize that as a very positive forerunner of socialism.

There are some defects in this program, however. This Bill does little to deal with the question of violence on TV. It gets closer to it but does not get very far. It also leaves the way open for total deregulation, which we know is in the philosophy of Reaganomics, which philosophy is espoused by the Government at the present time. That is a worrisome matter and leaves undefined the question of services to small communities, although perhaps there is a task force report which will deal with that subject.

As has been pointed out, this Bill does nothing to offset the danger to Canadian content, the danger of losing the presentation of Canadian news, lifestyle, drama and music. There is the danger of destroying that opportunity through the budget cuts which have previously been referred to and which, as you have said, Mr. Speaker, have in fact become part of this debate. I agree with your ruling, Mr. Speaker, that they do belong to this debate, certainly from the point of view of the people in the constituency of Spadina.

There are many people in Spadina who earn their living, albeit a very small one, by producing programs not only for the CBC but for the private producers on radio and on TV. No amount of careful regulation under this new Bill will ensure that they can make their contribution as Chinese, Portuguese, British, Irish or native people, whoever they may be. No amount of regulation will make sure that they can make their contribution if the whole of the funding for the work they do is destroyed by the budget cuts of this Government. We will be hearing more from them in the next few weeks, Mr. Speaker, because they are organizing with others in this country to present their views publicly. I will therefore not take any more time to present their view today, but I will be back.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have some concern about the Bill before us and I have discussed one or two of them with the Parliamentary Secretary, who was very forthcoming regarding the intent of this legislation. The amendments to the CRTC Act will give the Governor in Council the power to direct the Commission on policy matters. My concern lies with the procedural safeguards.

For those regarding the tabling of documentation, referral to committee and the time period, I commend the Government. I think it is important that Members of Parliament, regardless of political faith or ideology, have an opportunity to discuss in great detail the changes the Government might wish to bring forward. There is no better avenue than the floor of the House of Commons or the committee rooms.

Concerning the amendments to the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act, I am happy to see that the CRTC will have a clear mandate for dealing with all types of abusive programming. I hope that, notwithstanding the statements regarding sexually abusive programming, this will cover violence as well. Notwithstanding the desire of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) to make Canada the fifty-first state, we are quite different from the U.S. I think a lot of that has to do with our programming. As you know, Mr. Speaker, in the U.S. there is a very great and sophisticated lobby to maintain the public broadcasting system. I hope that in Canada we will continue with an enriched CBC in the future and with its quality programs. In this respect, I hope the Government will very clearly spell out to the CRTC its policy direction on abusive programming. Other Members have alluded to the violence we see on television, particularly in rock videos. A number of programs and videos are quite damaging. However, I am optimistic that the necessary and all-encompassing policy direction will be forthcoming.

The other amendments to the Broadcasting Act are designed to reduce the burden of broadcasting regulation on the private sector. I applaud that intention, but one thing did concern me and I raised it with the Parliamentary Secretary. I do not wish to misquote him so if I do it is not intentional and he will have a chance to clear the record. I am talking about unlicenced satellite master antenna TV systems. There seems to be a proliferation of such systems in Canada which gives those operators an unfair advantage over those who have gone to the CRTC to plead their case for a licence or a licence renewal. I was hoping this legislation would clearly spell that out, but I am told that is not the case. I have no doubt, in view of the majority on the other side, that these amendments will be passed, Mr. Speaker. However, I hope the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), shortly after passage of the Bill, will get up in the House and state his policy in this regard. We do not want these unlicenced systems proliferating in Canada. I think this is extremely important and I am confident that the Parliamentary Secretary will be cognizant of the suggestion I am trying to make and will take some action on it.

I have alluded to some positive aspects of the Bill, Mr. Speaker, but the part of the Bill which gives me the most difficulty is Section 14.5. It says in part that the Minister shall consult with the executive committee of the Commission with respect to the nature and subject matter of the direction or notice. Perhaps on some other opportunity, unless there is time to debate this matter into the wee hours of the morning, the Parliamentary Secretary could elaborate on this. Indeed, perhaps the Minister could do so. What do they mean by consultation? Is it a 30-minute meeting with members of the executive committee or is it passing on a statement to members of the committee? Is it meaningful consultation with members of the Commission who, I have no doubt, will be appointed to that body because of their objectivity and competence, not because of their political persuasion? I have no doubt that will happen now as it has in the appointments we made, Mr. Speaker. What of the consultation? It has to be meaningful, very meaningful.

I draw this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, because, as you know, cuts were applied to the CBC as well as to many other aspects of our cultural efforts, that is, to the Canada Council, the National Film Board and the Arts Council. Where was the consultation there? I am afraid that because of the loose language contained in the Bill, particularly in Section 14.5, what we may be authorizing here today is the opportunity for the Government to go forward in its direction to the CRTC, but that it will continue to slash arbitrarily, without meaningful dialogue with those who regulate telecommunications here in Canada. I do not think the Parliamentary Secretary, in view of his distinguished career in the other place, would want that to happen. This ought to be amended to read "meaningful consultation". It has to be spelled out so I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will be cognizant of my concern in that regard and, hopefully, we will be able to raise that matter in committee.

The other aspect of my concern, and it is semi-related, concerns the direction which the Government of Canada can give to the CRTC on policy matters. One can applaud this because in essence what the Government is saying is, "We, the national Government, will decide and give direction to the CRTC". Another tool which it has is Section 99 of the Financial Administration Act which related to Crown corporations. Pursuant to that section it can give clear, unequivocal directions to Crown corporations on how it wants them to proceed. It is incumbent upon those who occupy positions of responsibility, whether in the CBC or other Crown corporations, to follow the directions contained therein. I refer again to Section 14.5 which relates to consultation. What does it mean? The Government has not elucidated what it means by that. We have seen what has happened with the cuts in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Knowing your objectivity and background, Mr. Speaker, you can readily see my concern for those areas in Canada which, through no fault of their own but because of geography and the way in which people are dispersed throughout the country, are experiencing very serious effects as a result of the CBC cut-backs.

There is no consultation, Mr. Speaker. The Parliamentary Secretary and the Government cannot argue that there is. I hope that in the future the Government will be clear in its policy with regard to abusive programming. I hope that the directives will not be solely of a budgetary nature.

In my area there are some very devastating cut-backs which are very much related to this legislation. The program Radio Noon is an example. I know that there are Hon. Members here from urban areas of Canada who, perhaps because of restraints, have not travelled as extensively as they would wish. Window on Resources is another very important program to those individuals in Canada. It is very unfair to cut back on that. One could make the argument that it is in breach of the constitutional accord. There are programs which are akin to the more urban areas of the country. Surely the Canadian national Government would want to have programs which affect, assist and aid the rural areas of Canada as well as the urban areas. Fishing communities have been dependent upon those broadcasts for a considerable period of time. Due to lack of knowledge some Members may feel that that program cannot be that significant. It is significant when you live in an isolated community where that is your only communication resource. I urge government Members to attempt to effectuate a change in that type of policy.

There are other programs in my own riding that have been cancelled. Talent Cape Breton—

Mr. Brisco: What talent?

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Conservative Member says, "What talent". I know he did not make that statement intentionally. He does not want to cast aspersions intentionally on the artists employed by the CBC who participated in that program. I am sure he does not want to do that, Mr. Speaker. I hope not. I hope he is a big enough Canadian to appreciate that there are many areas in this country with a different background and culture than his. Surely he can appreciate that although it may mean nothing to him, it meant a great deal to the individuals associated with the programs Island Echoes and Fresh Air. In the Hon. Member's wisdom he may have a second thought about casting aspersions on the individuals associated with those programs.

The individuals who conceived and produced those programs and the artists who were retained to provide their services and talents met with a great deal of success and public recognition and acceptability. That ought to be fundamental to any national policy concerned with communications. I hope that members of the Government recognize that because of the geography of our country and the way in which people are dispersed throughout it, we need an improved CBC rather than cut-backs.

If the Government wants to change management, it should do so. That is its prerogative. The CBC provided a very important service to all the people of Canada. The Government is wrong in the direction in which it is trying to take us. I retract that, Mr. Speaker. I do not think the Government has a direction in mind. I was hoping that the Minister of Communications would give us a clear policy. He has not done that. That is the old Tory philosophy. When they do not know what to do, they just cut back. That is very harmful to the Canadian people. It is very harmful to the individuals who have lost their jobs. Many of these individuals have been with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for a considerable period of time and have prided themselves on the work they have done. They have done a good job and now, because of the cutbacks announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8, their jobs no longer exist.

That is a shameful way for a national Government to proceed against a constituency, the true intrinsic value of which all Canadians, regardless of philosophy, have learned to appreciate.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to draw the attention of the Chair to the comments made by the Hon. Member who has been speaking. I asked the rhetorical question, "What talent?", providing him with the opportunity to tell us of the talent of Cape Breton for the first time in his address. Why should he feel so negative toward this Party and toward the Member for Kootenay West when I have given him that opportunity? I clearly fail to understand. He should be grateful for the fact that I have given him that opportunity.

Mr. Prud'homme: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but with respect, I submit this is not a point of order. This is not Oral Question Period, and the Hon. Member did not raise a point of order. I submit this with due respect.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Shall Order No. 2 stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Does the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) wish to move this motion before the House, since the Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) is not here?

Mr. King: I believe it has already been moved.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point or order. It is my understanding that the motion was introduced some time ago. We are resuming debate on it. Perhaps the record should show the original mover and seconder of the motion. I do not believe the seconder was the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King). Perhaps the record should be corrected to show the person who actually seconded the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I profoundly regret that the confusion may have come from the Chair. This is not the same motion. It is a different motion.

The problem that we are presently confronted with is the fact that I believe the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills is not in the House. The Chair would like to know if there is a mover to replace the Hon. Member.

It was my previous understanding when the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen rose that he would accept to be the mover of the motion. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. King: Yes.

Mr. Brisco: I second the motion.

Constitution Act, 1982

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

ADVISABILITY OF AMENDING ACT TO INCLUDE PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House the government should amend the Constitution Act 1982, to include property rights and, that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights so that it reads as follows:

"7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

and this House urges that the Legislative Assemblies of all provinces and the Senate pass similar resolutions.

He said: Mr. Speaker, if the good people in Ottawa would drink more of that Similkameen wine they would soon be able to identify the region and associate the quality of debate that comes from this desk with the quality of that wine.

I wish to acknowledge the cogency of what the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) has said about the entrenchment of the right of enjoyment of property in previous remarks in the House. I have the greatest respect for him and I know that we share the concern for the protection of property rights. It is a concern that farmers in all of our constituencies have expressed to us in earnest terms. This has not only been expressed by farmers but, since I am a farmer, I refer to those good citizens of Canada.

Private Members' Hour provides an opportunity to discuss, in a general way, some of the issues arising out of the idea of entrenching property rights in the Constitution. However, I do not believe that Private Members' Hour is suitable for resolving a matter of such significance. This is so, even though it is my wish that the property rights should be entrenched in the Constitution. It must be recognized that there are many individuals and groups, as well as provinces, who have expressed reservations about the entrenchment of property rights. In that context, it does not seem to me that it is appropriate to make decisions about this matter during Private Members' Hour.

I emphasize my support and the support of my Party for the entrenchment of property rights. It bears repeating that it was the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, the late former Prime Minister and Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, who introduced the Canadian Bill of Rights in 1960. As a result, the right of enjoyment of property is protected at the federal level in Canada.

Since that time, the Progressive Conservative Party has supported the entrenchment of property rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As a matter of fact, we lobbied to have property rights included in the Charter when it was first established. We have continued to advocate its inclusion.

We in the Progressive Conservative Party believe that property and the right to enjoy it are essential features of our democratic society. These features, among others, distinguish our society from totalitarian countries. The well-being of our country is not dependent solely on government. In Canada, government, business, individuals and others are economic partners. We want to retain that system.

At the basis of our ability as individuals to participate in this partnership and contribute to the well-being of our country, is the right to own and enjoy property and the right to employ our property in our business enterprises. Our business enterprises, whether large or small, are the backbone of our economy and they are owned by individual Canadians.

These individuals provide the resources and the capital upon which these enterprises depend. In this context, the comments of Professor Jack Knetsch of Simon Fraser University are particularly apt. I quote the following from page one of his book Property Rights and Compensation:

> In most societies a system of entitlements has evolved which, among other effects, largely assures that the rewards to productive effort are returned to those making the effort and are not gratuitously appropriated by others. This "sowing and reaping" rationale remains, in most communities, a major protection for investment and an important incentive for the efficient use of resources. Entitlements that encourage individuals to husband property, and individuals' efforts to obtain further advantage, provide gains for the community.

I suggest that it is appropriate to note that the socialist philosophy of state ownership which is espoused by the NDP provides the exact opposite, a disincentive to progress and economic development.

The right to own and enjoy property allows us to enjoy the fruits of our endeavours whether we are self-employed or wage earners. It enables us to own automobiles, homes and farms and to have the sort of things we need to carry on the good life that we enjoy in Canada. Our right to own and enjoy property gives us a stake in our country. It is important then that property rights should receive adequate protection, and that means entrenching them in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Entrenching property rights would mean that they would not be dependent on the good-will of the government of the day. The Charter is now the supreme law of the land. The tradition of the supremacy of Parliament has been altered. The actions of government are now subject to the scrutiny of the courts which are charged with interpreting and enforcing the Charter. It is, however, precisely for this reason that the entrenchment of property rights requires careful consideration. The consequences of entrenching property rights are potentially far-reaching.

Many individuals and groups as well as provinces have expressed sincere concerns about the possible consequences of entrenching property rights. This concern must be recognized and dealt with. In this connection I would note that the federal Government cannot by itself entrench property rights in the Constitution. Amending the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms to entrench property rights would require resolutions of the legislative assemblies of at least seven provinces with at least 50 per cent of the population. To date, however, only two provinces, British Columbia and New Brunswick, have passed resolutions supporting the entrenchment of property rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Other provinces have expressed some reluctance to support the entrenchment of property rights. That is why we say that perhaps a Private Members Motion is not the best way to ensure that full consideration and negotiation is established before this is entered into.

The provinces are concerned that by entrenching property rights we will enable the courts to interfere with laws which protect important societal interests. As examples of this the provinces cite land use planning and municipal laws, environmental laws, resource laws, real and personal property laws, building and health and safety laws, and other types of laws. They ask, for instance, whether an entrenched right to the enjoyment of property might affect their ability to control the use of privately-owned land in order to protect the environment or to protect communities. Their concerns are sincere and deserve consideration.

I believe that the provinces are open-minded on this matter. Because their support is necessary if we are to entrench property rights, we should be working together with them to see if we can resolve their concerns in a way that is acceptable to all interested parties. We should be attempting to build a consensus on this matter, adopting the co-operative and conciliatory approach to federalism which is the hallmark of the new Government of Canada.

There is another reason for taking this sort of approach. Subsection 38(2) of the new Constitution, that is, the Constitution Act, 1982, allows a province to opt out of a constitutional amendment which "derogates from the legislative powers, the proprietary rights or any other rights or privileges of the legislature or government of a province". It would appear that a property rights amendment would undoubtedly come within Subsection 38(2). It is possible then that acting in an untimely fashion might prompt a disaffected province to opt out of a property rights amendment, which would be its right. It is surely our responsibility to avoid the resulting inconsistent application of property rights protections across the country. Doing so requires us to endeavour to reach a consensus on this matter.

Not only the provinces are concerned about the effects of entrenching property rights. Women's groups are apprehensive that the entrenchment of property rights may jeopardize the interests of women as they have emerged in recent family law reform. These reforms were intended to recognize as equal the contributions of homemakers and breadwinners to the family. They do so by providing for a presumptive equal division of assets when a marriage breaks down. The courts may award assets to one spouse even where the other spouse has the apparent legal title. Women's groups are afraid that constitutional property rights guarantees might prevent a court from doing this, with a resulting adverse impact on women. Even if the courts were ultimately to uphold these matrimonial property laws, women's groups are concerned that women will have to bear the cost and hardship of fighting the cases which will inevitably arise under a constitutional property rights guarantee. The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women dealt with the matter of the entrenchment of property rights in a resolution dated September 27, 1983. It reads in part:

Whereas on March 29, 1983, an amendment to Article 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, concerning property rights, was introduced in the House of Commons and was defeated;

Whereas a second similar amendment may be introduced;

Whereas the aim of the amendment of March 29, 1983, was to protect property rights in the traditional sense of the word, meaning primarily real property;

Whereas Canadian women in general, are not owners of real property and, furthermore, own relatively little property of any kind;

Whereas the probable consequences of such an amendment have not been sufficiently studied and discussed;

Whereas such an amendment could have grave consequences on the rights which women have already obtained, such as the right to division of the matrimonial home;

Whereas any increased protection of property in the Canadian Constitution must also protect new types of property, which are often social rights and benefits such as rent control, pensions and labour standards;

The CACSW recommends to the federal government that no new amendment be introduced in the House of Commons before an in-depth study can be made to establish the consequences of such a measure on the lives of Canadian women. We also ask that any such measure be submitted to the general public so that Canadian women be given the chance to voice their opinion on the matter.

It seems to me that these are sincere concerns that have to be considered. Women's groups appear to be open-minded on these issues. We should make an effort to resolve their concerns. The opportunity to do so should not be forgone.

Even assuming that we can reach a consensus on the entrenchment of property rights, it remains for us to settle the form of the protection. Even the two provinces which have passed resolutions to entrench property rights have not agreed upon the form that such a constitutional amendment should take. The Legislature of that great Province of British Columbia has passed a resolution to entrench property rights in the Constitution—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. King: —by amending Section 7 of the Charter to include the right to enjoyment of property. B.C. has proposed that Section 7 should read as follows:

Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

• (1620)

On the other hand, New Brunswick, the only other province to pass a resolution regarding the entrenchment of property rights, proposed that everyone has the right to the enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law. This provision differs from the one proposed by British Columbia, by providing that a person may only be deprived of the right of the enjoyment of property by due process of law rather than in accordance with the principle of fundamental justice.

There has been much debate about the meaning of fundamental justice and due process of law, as well as about the differences between the two phrases. I do not propose to consider that debate now. Suffice it to say that these questions must be addressed in consultation with the provinces on the entrenchment of property rights.

We should also keep a sense of perspective about the immediacy of the need for action on the constitutional front. My concern and that of many constituents is the economy. We must work toward the restoration of a healthy, balanced economic framework as a first priority for the achievement of all-important social and political objectives.

With property rights protected at the federal level by the Canadian Bill of Rights and with the proprietory safeguards available in the provinces by common law and by statute, I do not see any overt risk to the property of our citizens which requires us to move as the first priority on the constitutional amendment.

I see Mr. Speaker signalling that my time is up. I know that there are people who are awaiting my final words. They will have to speak with me privately in order to obtain them.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, it is probably not often that you get the official response of the Government before you hear the motion by the Hon. Member who is backing it. Indeed I would like to speak privately with the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) because I have a feeling that his private views are somewhat different from the official view which he presented—

Mr. Murphy: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: —albeit there are some legitimate questions which could be discussed. In my view this is a critical subject and it is an important opportunity for the House. We, as individual Members of Parliament, once again are given the opportunity to rise and say to the Governments, the executive levels, federally and provincially, that we stand with the people, that we stand for the rights to property. Of the four fundamental freedoms for which our ancestors fought and died, there are only three entrenched in the new Canadian Charter of Rights. Of course they are life, liberty and security of the person. However, the fourth fundamental right for which our ancestors fought and died is not entrenched in Canada. It is true that it is part of our common law tradition and that it is part of our statute law, provincially and federally, namely the Canadian Bill of Rights, but it is not entrenched.

When we as Canadians through the House committed the nation to an entrenched system of rights, we should have included that ancient and historic right to property. The battles of 1215 for the Magna Carta, the battles of 1689 for the Petition of Rights, the battle of the French people in 1790, the French Revolution, and the American War of Independence, were fought for the four fundamental freedoms—life, liberty, security of the person and property.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Thacker: In the 1700s when people were given the right to property, we opened up the creation of wealth. This has meant that even poor people in the western world are better off than the kings of old. In the 1700s when all wealth was concentrated in the kings, the kings had absolute jurisdiction, and ordinary people were serfs on the land; they had no future at all. However, when we tried this economic experiment of giving people their rights individually and to land, they worked hard and saved for subsequent generations. As a result, we are a wealthy people today.

We have more than just the ancient and historic reasons for entrenching property rights. This nation, Canada, is a signatory to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1948. We as a nation are a signatory. Therefore, I believe none of us can stand in the House and oppose that. What does the Universal Declaration of Human Rights state? Article 17 reads:

(1) Everyone has the right to own property alone as well as in association with others.

(2) No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

We often see members of the New Democratic Party standing and quoting the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. I often wonder why they selectively skip over Article 17. It is because fundamentally they do not believe in property rights. We cannot have security of the person, liberty and freedom without property rights. When people have property rights, the chance to work and create, they create their own pension plans. They can then turn up their noses at power, bureaucrats and Governments because they can look after themselves. This is why it is critical. That is the difference between western and eastern democracies.

Another step in that ancient trail was the Canadian Bill of Rights. Everyone should read Article (1)(a). Several provinces have statutory Bills of Rights which talk about the right to property, but there is a major difference. A statute is a statute. It can be changed overnight. Once it is entrenched and becomes part of the fundamental law, it cannot then be arbitrarily taken away by Governments that might be responding to the immediate heat of the day rather than to the long-term good of the people. Therefore, having decided as a nation to go into an entrenched Charter with all it means in terms of the transfer of power to the courts, I say that we should have all of it.

Why was it not in the Constitution Act, 1982? It is a sad story, because for a few hours it was there. When the constitutional committee was sitting, I remember the Progressive Conservative Party put in an amendment on a Friday. It was debated and accepted by the Liberal majority. The Leader of the NDP stood up on Saturday and said that if the Liberal Government did not take it out, the NDP would withdraw its support. On Monday, to its perpetual shame, the Liberal Party removed that amendment, and we lost forever the right to property.

Mr. Benjamin: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: I appreciate the fact that NDP Members are happy that we are over that step, but I do not think Canadians are.

Mr. Murphy: Where were the Tory Premiers? What did your Premier have to say about it? What is the official position of the Government of Alberta?

Mr. Thacker: Where are we now? It is interesting that NDP Members get fired up over this. The provinces have a position. At the constitutional committee level the provinces, quite properly, raised some legitimate perspectives. They said that under the Constitution Act, property and civil rights are provincial jurisdiction and therefore should be left with them to protect. That is a fair perspective. In response I say to them that we agree, but to be Canadian is to mean something, to have a Canadian citizenship means something. It means the right to life, the right to liberty, the right to security of the person and the right to property. It should be entrenched for those reasons.

If we put it out to the people, I am confident they would adopt our perspective rather than the provincial view that it should be left to their statutes. I am fair-minded. Let us put it out to the people. Let the people decide. In my own mind I know they will go for entrenched rights.

Certain other provinces, such as the Province of Prince Edward Island, were concerned. It is within two generations that Prince Edward Island was totally owned by foreigners. Because it is such a small island, it wanted to ensure that it would have the provincial right to control ownership. Prince Edward Island did not want to be owned by non-residents. Nova Scotia can express the same perspective because of its shoreline, which was being taken over by Americans.

There is protection in the entrenched Charter for Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. That is Article 33, the notwithstanding clause. They could legitimately pass a statute and say that notwithstanding the Canadian Charter of Rights, if you are non-resident, you cannot own property in Prince Edward Island. That would be upheld by the courts because it is a reasonable limitation on the rights of other Canadians because of the small size of Prince Edward Island. Likewise for Nova Scotia with respect to its shoreline.

I am convinced we could switch the view of provincial Governments because of Article 33, the notwithstanding clause. I hope this House will join with the Legislatures of British Columbia and New Brunswick and the Territorial Legislature of the Yukon, which have all passed resolutions on the entrenchment of property rights. All we need is for this Parliament to pass a resolution. We then just have to convince seven other provinces. We have three years in which to pass a similar resolution and it can become an amendment to our Constitution.

We are here to present the views of our people. I have no hesitation in asking my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this is the third opportunity I have had to speak on a resolution put forward by a Conservative Member on property rights in the Constitution. As happened on other occasions when I spoke on this proposal,

I suspect it will be the Conservative Party that will ensure there is no vote and no resolution of this issue in the House.

The two previous speakers, the Member who moved the motion and the Member responding for the Government, tried to blame the New Democratic Party for the fact that this is not in the Constitution. The Member who spoke on behalf of the Government pointed out all the problems that might occur if this were in the Constitution. We have never had an official Conservative Government position on this. That is what is missing from this debate.

Members are probably quite sincere when they put forward motions and present their Private Members' Bills to this House of Commons, but they are part of the governing Party. I would like to know the official position of the federal Conservative Government. I have yet to hear it in this House of Commons. I have never heard it. It was not in the Throne Speech and it was never presented by a government back-bencher. Individuals have stood here and made a few political points and used the occasion to attack our Party.

I am the official spokesman for our caucus on the Constitution, including the issue of property rights, and I can speak with the authority that that position gives me. In the past I have introduced motions which say that we believe in property rights. I said that we can even accept the principle of property rights in the Constitution, but that we must do so only if we do it in a way that does not take away at the same time the rights of other Canadians. The motion is on the book. It was made as an amendment to a motion made by the Conservatives when they were in opposition. It is a motion which I as the official spokesman for our Party stand by at this time.

The Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King), speaking on behalf of the Government, pointed out many of the same concerns that I have expressed, as have many other Canadians, about the inclusion of property rights in the Constitution. He said there are a number of women's groups which are concerned about the effect of property rights in the Constitution and what that would do for the hard won rights women have achieved over the last many years, especially as most women are not considered the owners of real property.

That is a very legitimate concern of women's groups and others in this country. Coming from a riding where there are many native groups, I find they are also worried about how property rights can affect their land claims and land entitlement. Those groups add their concern to the voice of women. Labour groups have expressed concerns about how the rights of workers will be affected versus those who own property.

When I spoke of this type of proposal on the previous occasion, I read from an article in the Winnipeg Free Press of July 1983. A representative of mortgage holders explained why he wanted property rights in the Constitution. He stated that because a mortgage is considered property, he would have more rights than a worker or others who may make claims on the assets of a company which had gone bankrupt. That is a legitimate concern. He was speaking for his industry and his special interest group. He said that, as a mortgage holder, someone who had lent money to a company, he had more rights than did the workers who had given their labour. There is somebody from the other side explaining why they want property rights in the Constitution.

Environmental groups have spoken about their concerns and what kinds of laws can be passed in this land if property rights are in the Constitution. More important, Conservative provincial Governments right across this nation have said that they do not want property rights in the Constitution. It is not 30 New Democrats in the House of Commons who are preventing or have prevented in the past property rights from being in the Constitution. It is the Premier of Alberta and the Premiers of other Conservative Governments across this land.

Members do not have to take my word. They can check the word of various Conservative provincial spokesmen. As the mover of the motion is from Alberta, I will use the example of his own provincial Government. Mr. Horseman, the Minister of Inter-Governmental Affairs of that Province, said:

> It is made clear that the Government of Alberta's position is that the Constitutional responsibility for property and civil rights is that of the provinces. It should properly remain there and not be entrenched in the Charter of Rights and thus become subject to any control by the federal Government.

I do not know Mr. Horseman personally. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) does. I presume they are friends and colleagues. I presume the Hon. Member was not calling his provincial colleague a socialist. I further presume it was that man's responsibility to speak for the Government of Alberta. The official position of that provincial Conservative Government is that it does not want it in the Constitution. Don't blame us, blame your colleagues. The Government of Alberta is not alone. I further quote Mr. Horseman:

> After a brief survey of other provinces by the Province of Alberta, it was clear that there was very little support given by other provinces for inclusion of the subject of property rights in the Charter.

The time period in which they spoke was very similar to the present time period. Almost every one of those provincial Governments is led by a Conservative administration. Let us not play politics. Let us be honest with each other. Let us tell the truth about who is really opposing property rights as an entrenched part of our Constitution. If we could resolve the other concerns which I expressed, the concerns about the environment, the concerns about the provinces' ability to regulate the use of land within their jurisdictions; if we could make sure that we could protect the ability of provincial Governments to make sure that farm land is owned by residents of the provinces, by people who are actually working the farms; if we could protect the rights of women, and if we could prove that the right to property is not a right that is more equal than the rights of the workers, then there is nothing wrong with property rights being entrenched in the Constitution. However, if property rights will be put in the Constitution as rights which would make one group of Canadians more powerful and will give one group of Canadians more rights and more privileges than others, then it is a problem.

I am not speaking strictly as a New Democrat, I am speaking also on behalf of provincial Governments and women's groups, just as one of the previous Conservative Members did in the past. I am speaking on behalf of labour, on behalf of people who are concerned about how they will get back wages if there is a property rights clause in the Constitution. Those are concerns that are expressed by many, many Canadians. Therefore, I cannot support this resolution and I will leave it up to other Conservative Members to make sure that it does not pass.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to participate in this debate this afternoon. I listened very attentively to the comments made by the Hon. Member who proposed the motion as well as to those of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

I think it is obvious that this is an issue with which various Members have very deep concerns on either side of the issue. It is not a clear-cut and easy issue to discuss. The people who have opinions on this issue have opinions which are very heartfelt indeed and they feel very strongly about their beliefs.

I think everyone is in favour of Canadians having their full rights to own and keep what is theirs. I do not think that that is really what we are discussing here today. I think we are discussing what the inclusion of property rights as such in the Constitution will do or could potentially do positively or negatively. That is somewhat different from the principle that everyone wants to retain his or her own property.

I would like to remind the Hon. Member, who presented this motion in a very partisan way by reminding us how the Tories were in favour of this motion and how in his opinion others were not, that in my opinion the largest expropriation that ever took place that I can remember was the expropriation of the shares of Crown, Seaway and Greymac Trust Companies in the Province of Ontario. Those shares were expropriated by a Conservative Cabinet Minister and his colleagues. To accuse others who are not of the same political persuasion of not being in favour of property rights is not quite correct. I would like to remind the Hon. Member who proposed this particular issue of that.

Mr. Brisco: Look at the record.

Mr. Boudria: Another Conservative Member says, "Look at the record". If we do look at the record, we will find that Governments of various political persuasions have in the past taken actions which affected the rights of individuals owning property. On the one hand, if we look back at the Crown Trust issue in Ontario, it was the public interest or the so-called public interest versus the rights of the individuals owning the shares, an issue which is still being debated in the Ontario Legislature and one to which I am not sure we will ever find the answer. It is a very, very complicated issue.

I do not think that there is anyone here who will say that he or she is in favour of having someone's rights violated or that he or she is in favour of someone's property being confiscated. Again, that is not what we are discussing.

Let us go back in history and look at what happened to the same issue in the United States. For a great many years, courts in the United States interpreted the inclusion of property rights as precluding legislators from enacting minimum wage laws. What would happen if that would be the effect here in Canada? It is fine to say that we are in favour of people retaining and holding what property they have, but on the other hand, the inclusion of property rights must never have that kind of adverse effect on people. I think we must assure ourselves that any amendment to include property rights, albeit many of us are in favour of its inclusion in principle, will not have side effects which are far worse than any benefits that we could potentially derive. I believe that we should always keep that in mind.

As well, the reason why some of the provinces are against the inclusion of property rights, apart from the reason to which I have already referred, is the fact that they are of the view, and rightfully so to a degree, that the property and civil rights issue under the Constitution as presently stated falls within the jurisdiction of provincial Governments anyway, and to put that in the constitutional document elsewhere under the Charter would, in their view, be taking something away from them. I can understand that reluctance on the part of certain provincial Governments. It is not simply an issue of Conservative Members being in favour of property rights and others being against them. Anyone who attempts to portray the issue in that way is over-simplifying it a great deal.

We had a similar debate—I would not say the same debate but a similar debate—not that long ago in this House. At that time, I expressed the view that I was in favour of the principle of our rights being protected, but felt somewhat worried about the potential side effects of such an inclusion. I received a letter from one of my constituents and I would like to quote a few sentences from it if you would permit me to, Mr. Speaker.

This is to express my objections to the proposal you received that the right to private property be enshrined in the Constitution.

After reading about this in the newspaper "Le Carillon", I got in touch with other members of my organization to call a special meeting and ask that the proposal be withdrawn. However, because of my workload, I was too busy to follow through with my plan. As you probably know, my work tends to spill over into my leisure time. In any event, I mentioned it to—

—to others . . . in the same organization, Mr. Speaker. This person is talking about a proposal by an organization to which he belongs, and I left out the name on purpose to avoid using this name here in the House. My quote continues:

—and he told me he was not there when the motion was adopted. He said, in fact, that he did not like the suggestion either.

As you know, the right to private property is directly related to the right to work.

That is another subject we could discuss this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

Why ask for one without mentioning the other? Which is the most urgent of the two? The answer is obvious. I wonder whether the people who drafted the motion even stopped to think for a few minutes—

And the author of this letter adds in brackets:

—(if they can think).

I am sure you have enough sense not to support this motion, at least until people have had a chance to talk about it. Personally, I do not think even an opinion pool would be an adequate way to deal with this. If you analyze it, this is a matter that goes beyond the right to own property constitutionally.

Finally, the author of the letter concludes by reiterating his concern that such a proposal would be enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

What it all boils down to, Mr. Speaker, is that many people would welcome some kind of formula whereby they would be personally assured that nobody would invade, take over or even remove their property, but at the time they emphasize that such a guarantee should not have a negative impact which might totally offset any positive aspect.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said in the last debate on a similar subject: some of us are in favour of this principle, and we certainly do not question the good will of the Hon. Member who has raised this issue. Perhaps the best thing to do as parliamentarians would be to submit this file to a parliamentary committee and ask constitutional experts with wide-ranging experience in Canada and the United States, where they have been familiar with this kind of entrenchment for years, to give us their opinion and reassure all of us that such constitutionally guaranteed rights would not, as I said earlier, turn out to be a disaster rather than a blessing.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to acknowledge the commitment the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) has shown to the entrenchment of property rights. It is a commitment that I too share. I am pleased that we have the opportunity today to deal with this matter and to discuss some of the issues. At the same time I must say that I agree that Private Members' Hour does not lend itself to a full examination of the issues. The entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution is a matter of no little significance and of some debate. We should be careful to accord this matter the consideration it warrants and not to foreclose public debate by all the interested parties.

I approach this matter with the basic premise that property rights should be entrenched in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms along with such other basic rights as the right to life, liberty and security of the person. The point of entrenching property rights in the Constitution, as I see it, is to ensure that the property rights which we now enjoy are not dependent simply on the good will of government. Governments do change, as we all know. Currently there is nothing to prevent a Government in Canada from passing laws which unfairly restrict property rights. By entrenching property rights in the Constitution, we would protect them from the arbitrary encroachments of government. Today we enjoy, by virtue of the common law, many property rights protections against the action of other citizens. We can, for instance, sue in the civil courts persons who trespass on our land or who create nuisances which affect our enjoyment of our land. We would, however, be, to a great extent, legally helpless if Government were to pass a law enabling it to affect arbitrarily and detrimentally our use end enjoyment of land. Entrenching property rights in the Constitution would provide protections against such arbitrary and ill-considered government action.

In entrenching property rights in the Constitution, we would be following the lead of several western nations. In the United States, for example, property rights are protected by the United States Bill of Rights. The United States federal Government has been subject to constitutional property rights guarantees for almost 200 years.

In 1791, the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution was passed. It provides that no persons shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation. Towards the end of the 19th century, but still more than 100 years ago, the United States Constitution was amended to apply property rights guarantees in respect of the state Governments. In 1868, the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution was passed. It provides that no state shall "deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law".

In the United States and other countries, property rights have received constitutional protection because they recognize, as we do, the fundamental importance of these rights to the preservation of democracy. In my view, the concept of property is inseparably linked with freedom. This link has been articulated by the American legal scholar, Charles Reich, from whom I would like to quote. At page 733 of Volume 73 of the Yale Law Journal he wrote:

The institution called property guards the troubled boundary between individual man and the state. It is not the only guardian; many other institutions, laws, and practices serve as well. But in a society that chiefly values material well-being, the power to control a particular portion of that well-being is the very foundation of individuality.

Professor Reich traced further the connection between property and liberty at page 771:

Property is a legal institution the essence of which is the creation and protection of certain private rights in wealth of any kind. The institution performs many different functions. One of these functions is to draw a boundary between public and private power. Property draws a circle around the activities of each private individual or organization. Within that circle, the owner has a greater degree of freedom than without. Outside, he must justify or explain his actions, and show his authority. Within, he is master, and the state must explain and justify any interference. It is as if property shifted the burden of proof; outside, the individual has the burden; inside, the burden is on Government to demonstrate that something the owner wishes to do should not be done.

Thus, property performs the function of maintaining independence, dignity and pluralism in society by creating zones within which the majority has to yield to the owner.

I think that Hon. Members will agree that Professor Reich very persuasively makes the case for the protection of property rights. On this understanding of the concept of property, the right to own and enjoy property is no less important than the right to liberty, which is already protected in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

At the same time, I must say that there are other values and rights against which property rights must be balanced. My colleagues have noted that there are many laws created by all levels of Government in Canada which serve important societal interests but which in some way affect the use and ownership of property. Some of the provinces have been reluctant to support the entrenchment of property rights because they are afraid that the result of doing so may be to endanger these laws.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King), noted, women's groups are also concerned about the risk that recent family law reform may be invalidated by the courts on the basis of the right to enjoyment of property. Environmentalists are concerned that laws providing for the regulation and control of industrial wastes and emissions may be challenged on the basis that infringe on the industrial land owner's right to use their land. Environmentalists are also concerned that legislation providing for the safeguarding of prime agricultural land might also be at risk if property rights were to be entrenched.

None of these Governments, organizations and individuals are unalterably opposed to the entrenchment of property rights. Rather, they are concerned that we have not had the opportunity to study and consider fully the ramifications and consequences of entrenching property rights. It may be that by taking the time to deal with their apprehensions, we will be able to resolve them in a way which will produce a consensus on this matter and which will facilitate an amendment to the Constitution. In the meantime, there are a number of areas which deserve further consideration. As my colleagues have stressed, the process of constitutional reform takes time—

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pride that I rise to speak on second reading of Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act. This Bill will always have special significance for me in that it is the first piece of social policy legislation that I, as Minister of National Health and Welfare representing the Government of Canada, have the opportunity to present to the House. This Bill will correct a very serious social problem which has long concerned myself and almost all Members of the House of Commons.

The Bill before us today will extend the protection of the spouse's allowance program to all widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 regardless of the age of their spouse at death. This proposal was a firm commitment made to the people of Canada during the last election campaign. It was formally enunciated in the Speech from the Throne in November. I am pleased that the Government of Canada is fulfilling another of its election promises this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The group I am referring to today represents approximately 85,000 Canadians who are widowed and between the eligible ages which I have already announced. It is important to note as well that the vast majority, an estimated 72,000 of the 85,000 who are eligible, are widowed women. I do not think there is a more important cause to which the House of Commons can address itself than the financial situation which these people are now in. This legislation does not and cannot consider the separation, sense of loss or loneliness which these people experience. Those highly personal conditions can be addressed only by individuals interacting with those people. I believe that, within the economic restraints of the country, it is incumbent on us as legislators to address the economic realities these people face.

Since coming into office the Government has had to face up to the very sad fact that the state of finances of the Government of Canada were in even worse shape than we had been led to believe. As the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has told Canadians, tough measures will be required to reduce a deficit which has been allowed to skyrocket over the past decade.

However, we cannot and will not allow a very vulnerable segment of Canada's near elderly population to continue to suffer because of circumstances completely beyond their control. There is an urgent need which has been consistently identified by present and past Members of the House of Commons as well as other members of society. Low-income widowed persons aged 60 to 64 do not have many of the options available to most of us. For instance, the vast majority of the persons who will benefit from this Bill are women who have been financial dependants for most, if not all, of their lives. They did not question this financial dependence because society deemed it appropriate. Societal norms dictated that the husband would enter the labour force and earn the money while the wife stayed in the home and performed the unpaid role of mother, housekeeper, companion, nurse, guidance counsellor and community worker—the list is endless. If the wife did take a job it was most often as a secondary earner to supplement the family budget.

I believe that the Bill before us today recognizes that contribution in part. I know that one cannot quantify that contribution in financial terms. So often in our society we want to put a financial value on service or work. No matter what Members may feel about the Bill with regard to whether it goes far enough, I think they would agree that the contribution these people have made to our society goes beyond financial measure. All of us realize that today is but a small recognition of the contribution that they have made to each one of us.

While there will be men who benefit from this proposal, there is no denying that poverty is largely a woman's problem and that widows in particular are among the poorest. These women have held down numerous responsible jobs throughout their adult lives and are more experienced and capable than many people are after spending 40 years in the paid labour force.

Let's not kid ourselves: in most instances, the 60 to 64-year old widow is not the one the personnel manager will hire. Why hire someone who might have only a few years until retirement while there are other young and perhaps better educated people competing for job openings available today? Therefore society must show compassion for these near elderly widows.

Compassion is what Bill C-26 is all about. Widowed persons aged 60 to 64, effective September of this year, will be guaranteed a level of income with which to meet their basic living costs. They will not be well off by any means, but they will no longer be destitute.

I believe that the best way of explaining this proposal is first to look at the evolution of income-tested assistance for persons in the 60 to 64-year age group. In 1973 the federal and provincial Governments undertook a complete review of Canada's social security system. During this review various options for a program of income support and supplementation for all low-income Canadians was studied. The federal Government advanced a proposal to the provinces in early 1976, but due to a lack of clear response on the part of the provinces, the proposal was withdrawn in 1977.

In the meantime the federal Government had already introduced the income support concept for elderly couples by means of a spouse's allowance program. Under this program which began in 1975, an income-tested benefit became payable to the 60 to 64-year old spouse of a low-income old age security pensioner. This step was taken in recognition of the fact that many of these elderly couples had no income apart from one basic old age security pension and a single guaranteed income supplement. That was little enough for one person to live on and far too little for two.

Since the beginning of the spouse's allowance program, there has been continuous pressure for the federal Government to expand this benefit to include other needy persons in the near elderly category. To date there have been two extensions to the spouse's allowance program. Originally, the spouse's allowance ceased to be paid when the pensioner spouse had died. In 1978 the federal Government introduced a Bill which resulted in the allowance being paid for six months following the pensioner's death. The theory was that this would give the widowed spouse time to adjust to a changed situation before losing the benefit, but it really just prolonged the agony of a situation that was often inescapable. In truth, there was no good reason why 60 to 64-year old widows and widowers who had been relying on the spouse's allowance program to make ends meet should lose their allowances until they became eligible for the old age security pension at age 65.

For this reason, when the Progressive Conservative Government came to power in 1979 we further amended the spouse's allowance program. As a result of that legislation, a widowed spouse's allowance recipient in need can continue to receive the allowance until age 65. I am proud today, on behalf of the Government, to extend that commitment that we made in opposition and that step we took in government in 1979. Those objectives and commitments for those less fortunate than most Canadians are again being extended further today.

During the debate on the amendment, Members of the Government were the first to admit that many more elderly persons in need were still excluded from the spouse's allowance program. Nevertheless, we did not feel we could go further until such time as an extensive review of Canada's retirement income system was concluded. Such a review was conducted in 1983, by a special Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform which released its findings in December of that year. Among the Task Force's many proposals was the extension of spouse's allowance to all low-income widowed persons 60 to 64 years of age. I am pleased that the Task Force on Pension Reform made that proposal, and I am pleased that this Government is coming forward in a legislative forum to give life to that proposal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I would be remiss at this point if I did not give recognition to Members in this House who are members of that Task Force. The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) was the Chairman of that Task Force, and as Chairman he signed the report. I commend him for his foresight.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Hon. Minister for Employment and Immigration, the Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), throughout the period of time she has been in this House of Commons, has given attention to the plight of these Canadians. I commend her today for another advance in the cause she has espoused.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): There are other members of the Task Force whom I cannot name at this time, but I know they represent members from all political parties and I thank them.

There are two people, possibly three, apart from the ones I have recognized today, whom I would like to mention, Mr. Speaker. One is the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) who, throughout the period of time he has been in the House, has kept before our caucus and the Government the recognition that Canadians of this age group have made a contribution and that in legislative form we must recognize that contribution. There have been two others. I know it is not the habit of Members to give away caucus confidences, but I will this morning. I want to speak of the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) and the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Time after time these two Members have spoken to various members of our caucus on this issue and I see the Hon. Member for Bow River in the House today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): There is one aspect of this legislation, possibly two, that Members will want to identify as not going far enough. First is the matter of whether this Bill could extend the same benefits to Canadians who are separated, divorced and single. I do not have the ability to take each individual case of people who would fall into those categories and say that they are not as much in need as the group to which this legislation addresses itself. I think Members would recognize that the most urgent as a group—and I am not arguing individual cases could not be raised to make the other point—to which this legislation addresses itself are those in greatest need.

The other point I raised for the consideration of the House is whether legislation of this type, with a Charter coming into effect on April 17, and other social policy legislation could be challenged under the terms of the Charter. When you look at our social policy legislation, Mr. Speaker, you will note obviously that it discerns on the basis of age. Those 65 and over get an old age pension and those who are younger do not. It discerns on the basis of people who are eligible for family allowance; for example, if they have dependent children. An argument might be put forward that the legislation discriminates on the basis of marital status.

If I could speak personally for a moment, I had some involvement with the discussions on the Constitution and the Charter of Rights. No matter what viewpoints were put forward, either for or against the Charter, when the discussions were completed I do not believe any Member of the House wanted the Charter to be interpreted in such a manner that legislation such as we have before us today, and principles upon which social policy legislation is founded, could be brought into question or jeopardized.

While some might want to raise it as a point of discussion, I suggest that if that argument is taken to its most logical conclusion, the only manner in which one could address social policy and benefits would possibly be by providing a guaranteed annual income for everyone. While I am not deprecating that viewpoint, I place that caution before the House. Before that position is taken too strongly, proponents of that view should look very seriously not only at present legislation but at collective agreements, for example, and how they could be affected.

I should like to make one further point; it is the real reason this legislation appeals to me. In the years I have had the honour to represent my constituency in the House since 1972—I think both Members who came into the House in this Parliament and those who have been here a longer period of time would agree—without question the most difficult cases with which I have had to deal were those of women who made the contribution of which we have spoken as mother, spouse and so forth. They had made that contribution but were unable to contribute to a pension plan because they were "not earning a regular income". They had lost their spouse and if he was a person of pensionable age, that pension was gone. Not only had they suffered a personal loss, they had limited financial resources. We went through the various steps of what the pension might be for which they might be eligible and came down to one quiet statement—and I am sure all of us have made it; "Well, Madam, there is always social assistance". That is not good enough for the contribution these women have made to Canada. It is not good enough to tell individuals that the best we can do for them is welfare.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): As I said, this proposal will extend important financial assistance to an estimated 85,000 widowed persons. These are low-income Canadians. I have already given the estimates of the number of people involved in terms of male and female. These widowed persons will be guaranteed the same minimum income as that already being provided to other widowed spousal allowance recipients. The monthly benefit, which is $536.26 currently and which will be somewhat higher by September due to quarterly cost of living increases, certainly will not put these low-income 62-to 64-year olds on Easy Street. Nevertheless, it will give them an income which is enough to live on and place them in a better situation than they are now. It is something many have gone without for much too long.

This proposal is not inexpensive. To provide this very necessary financial assistance will cost approximately $190 million in fiscal 1985-86 beginning in September, while in the first full year of implementation, 1985-87, the cost will be $350 million. As I have said, the cost is high, but I am sure Hon. Members will agree it is an expense that the country must afford.

Just to elaborate the point a little further for those who say the Bill does not go far enough, the cost estimate of including everyone is in the order of $1.5 billion. When we look at the financial resources of the country, there are two questions to answer. The first is, if we cannot include everyone, should we not do anything? The other question is whether we do what we can for those in greatest need. Obviously that is the approach we have taken. While this Bill proposes that the extended spouse's allowance benefit become effective in September, 1985, it is very important that this legislation be passed now. Given prompt passage, we will have ample time for potential beneficiaries to apply, for the advertising campaign, so that they can become eligible by September, 1985. I do not have to remind Hon. Members, I am sure, that a fair amount of personal paperwork as well as governmental organization has to take place before the program can be implemented.

There are 85,000 Canadians that this Government has to contact, 85,000 applications that have to be completed and sent in and 85,000 new payment files that have to be prepared. On top of this, it is imperative that we co-operate with the provinces to ensure that where a provincial program is affected by this SPA program, the transition be made as smoothly as possible.

This Government is the first to acknowledge that there are other near-elderly persons in need who remain excluded from the important financial protection provided by the spouse's allowance program. However, as was recognized by the all party Task Force, the Government of Canada, in other words the Canadian people, cannot at this time go much beyond the proposals we have made. What we can do and must do, given current economic circumstances, is to take this next logical step in extending the spouse's allowance program. The other most logical step after this legislation is seriously to take the pension reform proposals that have been made both by the task force and by other groups and give them life over the course of the mandate of this Government. That is the commitment that we have made. As Members will note, this is but one element of a commitment to a goal we have as a government.

In conclusion, I am filled with great gratitude, which I extend both to my Cabinet colleagues and my colleagues in the House. No matter what is said of Parliament and its lack of response, to me, on this issue they have all responded and I thank them for it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, before getting into the main elements of my speech today I want to indicate—this may come as a surprise to some of the political novices in this House—that there are times in the life of a Parliament in which all Members of the House will congratulate and applaud a decision by the Government. The announcement today by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is the kind that will receive the acceptance of Members of all Parties in this House.

With regard to the goodwill and importance of this legislation today, I congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I also congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). Over the years she has spent a great deal of time promoting the cause of the extension of such legislation to include largely the women in our society but also others who have been left out from some of the social legislation which has been introduced in the House over the years.

While I am in the congratulatory phase of my remarks, the one person I think should be recognized is not here today but usually sits at the table of the Officers in the afternoons. I am speaking of Stanley Knowles, the former Member of Parliament for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Frith: I recognize his personal contributions. It has been a lifetime quest of his to improve benefits to the elderly in our society. Had he still been sitting here as a Member of Parliament, I am sure he above all would applaud the decision made by the Government today to extend the spousal allowance to all those between the ages of 60 and 64 who are widows or widowers.

I do not wish to make the congratulatory phase of my remarks too long. I noted that the Minister of National Health and Welfare was rather non-partisan in his remarks except on a couple of occasions. He was mildly partisan on those occasions and I will say that my two interventions in that sense will be mild as well.

The Minister mentioned earlier in his discussion that part of the problem of not being able to extend the measures beyond those put forward today was caused by the economic situation in which the Government found itself when it took office. However, I would like to remind the Minister of National Health and Welfare that above and beyond his duties as a Minister of the Crown, one of the prime responsibilities of a Minister of Health and Welfare within the Cabinet system is to be a protector of the poor and those with modest incomes.

I congratulate the Minister on being able to win round one of the battle by getting the $190 million required to extend this program today. I would also indicate that past Ministers of Health and Welfare have also been faced with the same economic difficulties in the large context. I point to the record of Monique Bégin, a former Minister of National Health and Welfare who in 1980 increased the guaranteed income supplement by some $35 a month and, in the last year of our mandate, found the money, despite the economic difficulties and the size of the deficit, to increase the guaranteed income supplement by some $50 per month in the year 1984.

To a large extent this is an issue that extends beyond the bounds of politics. Therefore, I would like to indicate that many of the sentiments expressed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare are probably shared by most of the people in this room. Very early on he mentioned that of the 85,000 people who will be affected by today's decision, some 72,000 are women. In percentage terms that means that some 87.5 per cent of the recipients of today's announcement are women. This indicates that the problem about which to a great extent we learned through our work on the pensions task force is that we have almost institutionalized poverty among women in the country. This is not just a product of the inadequate system but a product of a society that has never really moved to address the issues of divorce reform, employment opportunities for women as compared to those for men and the discrepancy that exists between the pay levels for women and men in our society. A number of factors affect the final lifestyle of women in our society as they reach their retirement years.

At the outset, I would like to indicate that we as well would like to see some improvements made to the legislation that is being tabled today. I noticed that the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that part of the problem with this legislation concerns whether or not it contravenes the Charter or Rights. The indications that I have from a legal perspective is that it would not. It may in fact contradict the human rights code because we are not supposed to discriminate on the basis of marital status. A decision would have to be made by the courts to determine whether or not this is a good or a bad service. That is part of the problem, from a government standpoint, of trying to extend this provision to cover others in our society between the ages of 60 and 64 who are divorced or single. Members of any caucus will eloquently plead the case that the Government should extend the guaranteed income supplement to those individuals as well.

The Minister briefly touched upon the other problem that exists. He indicated that there are some 85,000 new recipients of this benefit and this will require the filling in of a great many forms. There is bureaucratic process that must be undergone in order to put these people on the guaranteed income supplement scheme. If possible, I could speak to the Opposition House Leader and indicate to him that quick passage in committee could speed up the process so that we may be able to have this measure instituted by June rather than September.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Frith: In addition, I want to talk a bit about the reason why we have allowed our society to evolve to the extent that we find that 87 per cent of the people who will qualify for this measure are women. Members of all three political Parties have advocated very eloquently the necessity for improvements in various pieces of legislation so that the next generation of Canadians will not find itself in the same situation in which this generation has found itself of having in fact institutionalized poverty among women in our society.

We spoke a bit about the requirement for pension reform. I know the Minister of Employment and Immigration and I were probably the first to promote within our own committee the extension of the Canada Pension Plan to include homemakers. I know as well as I know that I am standing here that pension reform is high on the list of reforms planned by the Government. The situation would have been the same if the Liberal Party had been in power. In fact, there are periods in our history in which a particular goal may be achieved. I believe that pension reform is here. It is my understanding that there has been a consensus package agreed to for reform in the private pension plan systems. With some small amount of negotiation, I believe a package could be ready to be put forward to all the provincial Governments in the next 12 months. I think that would go a long way toward removing for the next generation of men and women alike the spectre of poverty in their elderly years.

I now return to the homemakers' pension proposal. I know that the Minister of Employment and Immigration and I spoke a bit about this but were never able to convince the majority of the committee members to undertake this kind of reform. In light of announcements made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the last two weeks, there may well be the possibility of allowing members of the Cabinet within the Cabinet structure to promote that idea. I hope they will listen as I outline it to them.

There is a need for pension reform. There is a problem with pension coverage. However, I must admit that today's generation of Canadians, women and men alike, are not facing the same demographics that were faced by our parents' generation. As a result, with some adequate improvements in the Federal Standards Benefits Act and in April's Budget, I think we can begin taking steps toward improving the situation for the Canadians of today's working generation.

The way the pension legislation exists today, one must be age 45 or have worked for ten years for the same company in order to receive both one's own pension contributions and the contributions of one's employer. Very early on we recognized there are two emerging trends that indicate that the existing pension legislation is not adequate. First, the emerging work pattern indicates that many more Canadians of this generation can be expected to be more mobile in their quest for employment and perhaps may work in two or three different provinces. More than likely they are going to have to undertake periods of retraining in their lifetimes. Today's fast-emerging technological changes in the workplace indicate that workers will probably require some retraining in their lifetimes. This means that work sharing or part-time work will be more prevalent than it has been in the past.

Workers will have to be more mobile in their quest for employment and therefore it is imperative that we change the pension legislation to reflect that reality. There should be an earlier locking in of the employer and employee contributions and the system should be made more portable. Part-time workers should be covered in the same way full-time workers are by pensions. Pieces of legislation must be changed federally as well as provincially. I hope all of us are cognizant of the need for speed in the passage of these kinds of improvements to our legislation.

The issue of part-time work is a women's issue as well. Far more women than men find themselves being part-time workers or shared workers. To a large extent, the issues of improved survivors' benefits and divorce reform are women's issues as well. Under the existing laws, today's pension assets are not divisible upon marriage breakdown. I do not particularly like the emerging family pattern which is evolving, but as legislators we must realize that the divorce rate is affecting 50 per cent of the population. The laws must reflect the emerging family pattern. As well, the laws must reflect the emerging work pattern. Other critics from my caucus will be indicating their desired improvements in the legislation, particularly with respect to women's issues.

I want to return to the subject of homemakers; I know it is at the heart of the negotiations between the federal Government and the Provinces. As we are aware, it requires the approval of two-thirds of the provinces, representing two-thirds of the population, to effect changes to the Canada Pension Plan. In effect, the Province of Ontario, because of its size and population, has the power of veto. I assume that the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Finance will be involved in the negotiations for the inclusion of homemakers in the Canada Pension Plan. I want to reiterate the importance of allowing that inclusion. I want to stress the importance of including homemakers in the pension plan, in the hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Employment and Immigration will take my arguments before Cabinet and convince their colleagues of the intelligence of my contributions.

There is a very poor understanding of the way in which the public pension system operates in Canada as opposed to the private pension system. It is at the heart of the political debate and it will be at the heart of the ability of political parties to generate the political will to undertake the necessary reforms which must be made to the pension system. Many people are worried that when they retire in 2004 there will not be a viable Canada Pension Plan which will allow them to have an adequate pension.

I want to go back almost 20 years, to 1966, to indicate to the House why the existing pension plan evolved to the state it is at today and the improvements which can be made to it. In 1966 there were 14 workers for every person over the age of 65. Had we allowed the public pension plan to be funded the same way as a private plan, there would have been a rapid increase in the surplus of the fund, to the extent that the Government could have purchased 58 per cent of the Toronto Stock Exchange. There was concern in 1966 about the magnitude of the surplus which was being held in the hands of the Government. Therefore, the funding mechanisms for the public pension plan were devised in a manner totally different from the private pension plan. In essence, a "pay-go" system was allowed. In other words, enough money was collected each year to pay the pension requirements and to have a two to three-year surplus. That was the essence of the funding mechanism for the Canada Pension Plan. Basically, the plan considered only men in 1966. That is why homemakers were not included.

In 1966 our fathers did not have access to private pension plans and were facing retirement without adequate pension assets. In their lifetimes they paid taxes which built up the infrastructure for universities, roads and hospitals. Therefore, we transferred the burden from one generation to another. In 1966 the young workers in Canada indicated that they would supply their fathers with an adequate pension in order that they could live their twilight years in relative comfort. The younger generation accepted the burden of paying for that pension. Everyone who has collected a pension in the last 20 years has paid only 17 cents of every dollar which was taken. The remaining 83 cents was paid for by the next generation. No one quarrelled with the transfer of that burden. However, in 1966 women were not included. Why did we not include our mothers? They worked just as hard to build a family life and they allowed Canadian society to expand. Therefore, I would plead, along with the Minister of Employment and Immigration, that homemakers should be included in the revisions which will be made to the Canada Pension Plan.

If we are going to change the contribution rates to the Canada Pension Plan, there should be a debate on the floor of the House of Commons to improve the plan beyond the inclusion of homemakers. Two weeks ago the Minister of Finance met with his provincial counterparts in Montreal. At that meeting it was agreed that the contribution rates to the Canada Pension Plan would be increased significantly. The definition of "significant" will determine the extent to which the surplus beyond our expectations will develop within the Canada Pension Plan. The Minister of Employment and Immigration will remember the debate in which the Liberal Party recommended that the "pay-go" philosophy should not be altered significantly. As I indicated earlier, the "pay-go" system meant that the money which was collected in one year was adequate to meet the pay-out level of the fund, with a possible cushion of a two to three-year surplus.

Those were the demographics which we witnessed when we made the recommendations some 18 months ago. It meant that significant increases were not required to the pension plan premiums. It required some increases, but the increases could have been phased in very gradually to the point at which, to have it fully paid by the year 2030, it would require approximately 10 per cent of the average take-home pay to cover the costs. If the decision of the provinces is to go beyond the "pay-go" system—and that is the heart of the matter which is before Cabinet—with a two to three-year cushion, and if the decision will mean significant, front-ended increases, it will result in a massive build up of surplus funds.

In our Task Force report on the Canada Pension Plan, we indicated that if the decision was made to go beyond the "pay-go" system, then three questions had to be asked. First, what will be the size of the surplus? Second, who will control the funds? Third, to what use will those funds be put? We indicated that those questions had to be addressed if the Government ever changed the "pay-go" philosophy of the public pension plan system. I realize it is theoretical, but if the decision is made to go beyond the "pay-go" system in order to build up a surplus, then I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare might want to advocate other changes to the plan.

I agreed with the Minister when he mentioned earlier that in our political day-to-day life the major problem which we face is that of individuals who are between the ages of 55 and 64 who, through the death of their spouse, divorce or breakdown in the family pattern, find themselves impoverished. The other area in which we face significant problems is that of an individual, male or female, who is the primary breadwinner in the family and who finds himself or herself disabled through no fault of their own and has no access to long-term disability benefits in the workplace. That person must rely solely on Canada Pension Plan disability payments.

I believe all of us recognize that that is an area which is woefully under-funded. In terms of improvements to the pension plan, I do not think any of us would stand in the way of improving the payments to disabled persons. I recommend that that cause should be advocated with respect to the increased surplus in the Canada Pension Plan.

I agree whole-heartedly with the inclusion of homemakers in the plan. That would go a long way to removing the stigma of poverty among today's elderly. I spoke earlier about the intergenerational transfer. In 1966 we told our fathers that we would give them a reasonable standard of living in their retirement years and, because we had jobs, we told them that we would accept the burden of paying for their pension. However, the problem today is of a different magnitude. The greatest problem which faces all political parties today is that of unemployment. Largely, but not exclusively, we have a youth unemployment rate which is significantly higher than the national unemployment average. I am not trying to take away from those individuals who are middle-aged and find themselves unemployed, but specifically, I want to talk about youth unemployment.

In 1966 our youth transferred a gift to their parents. That gift was a retirement with reasonable expectations. If we talk to the people of Canada between the ages of 60 and 65 years who have paid off their mortgages, we find that they would like to have an early retirement but cannot do so because the Canada Pension Plan kicks in at age 65. There are also those who would like to have an actuarially-reduced Canada Pension Plan.

Perhaps the solution would be to transfer from that generation to the young generation the availability of a job and then they would receive the benefit of early retirement. I note that the Province of Quebec, which is the first province to go out of synchronization with the other provinces under the Quebec Pension Plan, allowed for the first time in history an actuarially-reduced Quebec Pension Plan. Some 50,000 Quebecers then decided to take early retirement. I do not know if there is a direct correlation between that and the unemployment rate in the Province of Quebec which has dropped from a year ago, but these are statistics which one might want to study.

Certainly, I would say that a beneficial use of those surplus funds, rather than giving them back out to the provinces at lower than prime rates, and a better use of those social funds, would be to address the number one problem in the country today, namely the unemployment problem. I say that not with any great knowledge of the statistics which would be required, but I know the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands, well remembers Mr. Michael Wolfson, and another person who has earned a great deal of our respect for his contribution to the pension task force and who now works for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Michael Hatfield. It seems to me that one might want to be able to use some of those statistics in order to determine perhaps a better use of those surplus funds than others might envisage around the Cabinet table as those discussions take place.

Let me end, Mr. Speaker, by reiterating my congratulatory message at the beginning of my remarks to the Government for having brought in this particular piece of legislation. I cannot disagree with it. It reflects the recommendation which, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated, was one of the prime recommendations our Party made through our own pension task force.

Second, I would hope that in committee one might want to explore the possibility of improvements to the legislation by perhaps speeding up the process for a June delivery date rather than September.

Third—I know that others in my Party will want to promote this—would be the extension of the plan for people between the ages of 60 and 64 years on the basis only of income and not marital status. I know as sure as I am standing here that the Minister of National Health and Welfare fought hard for that.

I recognize that there are saw-offs around any Cabinet table when it comes to the distribution of dollars. I recognize the problem the Minister faces with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), the Hon. Member for Yukon, and the Minister of Finance, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre, and I wish him well in trying to convince his Cabinet colleagues. I know some of his colleagues around the table probably think the same way he and I do and I would hope that he could convince the other neanderthal members of the Cabinet to see the progressive necessity of such a measure.

Finally, I want to say that I hope that in this particular session of Parliament we will see legislation which would allow the federal Government to become the most progressive in terms of Governments in our country which recognizes the need for pension reform, which recognizes that the issues of unemployment, pension reform and tax reform are very interrelated and, to a large extent, are women's problems. I hope that progress will be made in these areas, Mr. Speaker, and if progress can be made, let us hope it is accomplished with swift passage.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) for bringing forward this measure to expand the application of the spouse's allowance. He should be especially congratulated, Mr. Speaker, because he chose this as the first piece of legislation to introduce into the House for debate. I am quite sure that the passage of this particular measure is guaranteed by all sides of the House.

Having made those complimentary remarks—I see the Minister is smiling; he did say earlier that he did not introduce this Bill without anticipating some negative comments and that perhaps he would be criticized for not taking the measure far enough—I want to assure the Minister that his predictions are absolutely right on. I intend to make a few comments about what I think are serious omissions in the measure brought forward by the Minister, although, as I have already indicated, this Bill will have the full support of myself and my caucus. We will do nothing at all to prevent its speedy passage.

I am, perhaps, at the point of making the Minister an offer which he cannot refuse. One aspect of the Bill, obviously, with which we are disappointed is the length of time it will take to put this measure in place. I believe there will be a ten-month delay until September. If it will accommodate the Minister in terms of bringing such a measure in by the end of this month, my Party would agree that I would be the only speaker. We could then get it through all stages as quickly as possible, if that would accommodate the Minister. If the Minister would agree to that, all he has to do is to send me a note and we will look upon it as kindly as possible.

The most serious criticism, of course, is that this Bill, while it goes a long way toward removing some of the really serious problems which many individuals have faced in the past, still excludes those individuals who have never been married; that is, the single pensioners. I know the Minister tried to head off some criticism in that area in his remarks. However, I believe it is still incumbent upon Members of the Opposition to point out in a very serious way that many of those individuals who are excluded are really having a hard time making ends meet, for a number of reasons which I will get into during my comments.

The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), in the course of his remarks, spoke very kindly about the former Member for Winnipeg North Centre, the Hon. Stanley Knowles, and the contribution he has made to the whole question of pension reform and, indeed, the structuring of the pension system in our country. In fact, I would even suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if any Hon. Member wishes to determine how pensions have been formulated in this country and how policy has been determined, the required reading would be the speeches of Stanley Knowles in the House and his questions and comments in the course of his political career. As a matter of fact that is what I have done, especially his speeches related to spouse's allowance. I went back quite a way and found that this is something which Mr. Knowles had concerned himself with over the years.

For the purposes of today's debate, however, I think it is sufficient to go back to the debate which took place in this Chamber on May 26, 1980. Mr. Knowles, with respect to the improvements, small as they were, to the pension system at that time, said: "While the movement has been good to improve pensions, we are still labouring under what I think is one of the most unfair pieces of social legislation ever introduced in this country, that is, the spouse's allowance". He went on to explain why he thought that was unfair. Later on, on the following day, Mr. Knowles said as reported at page 1456 of Hansard:

> Second, I ask the Minister, and I press this upon her as strongly as I can, whether in this term of office she is enjoying she is going to do something about the disgrace of the spouse's allowance legislation.

He went on to say that especially for women between the ages of 60 years and 65 years, for the most part there is applied a marital test. He continued:

> If a woman has a man or has one that dies while she is in that age bracket, she gets the pension. But if she does not have a man because she is a spinster or divorced, or became a widow before age 60, or she became a widow before her husband was over 65, there is no pension there.

● (1200)

I read a speech that the Minister made last June in which he made much the same argument. It is to his credit that the first thing he did was to live up to the concerns which he expressed six or eight months ago. However, that still leaves a large number of women who are single, having never been married, without that extra amount of money which they could well use. Even at this late date as we go through committee perhaps we can still persuade the Minister and his Cabinet colleagues to do something for that large group of people.

I was surprised and a bit curious over the last week or two when I received two pieces of correspondence from a member of the former Government, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Saint-Marie (Mr. Malépart), who expressed some anxiety and concern about that large group of single women who were excluded from this Bill. If the situation were not as serious as it is, I would find the flights of rhetoric used by this Member quite funny. I would simply ask the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie where the hell he was over the years when Stanley Knowles was pressing the Government on this particular issue. I went through Hansard to see whether this particular individual was even mentioned as expressing a concern about this while he was a member of the Government. I could find no reference to it.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I tried to find a reference too.

Mr. Young: The Minister tried to find a reference also. We welcome the Hon. Member's support, albeit newly-found, while he is in opposition. However, I would be much more impressed by his arguments and concerns if, while he had an opportunity to do so, he had pressed the Government of which he was a member to do something about that inadequacy in the pension legislation.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I did not say something about the present Government's previous commitment to pension reform and why it has not done something about it now that it forms the Government. I looked up Hansard for May 10, 1984. I read with some interest the motion that was put forward by the Progressive Conservative Party on that date, being an Opposition Day. I would feel comfortable moving that motion today, with a few changes in the dates, of course. For the interest of new Members in the House I will read the motion:

> That this House profoundly regrets the two-year delay of the Government in bringing in promised legislation to improve guaranteed supplements for low-income single elderly Canadians, and condemns the Government for its failure to respond to the innovative proposals of the all-party Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform to expand opportunities for Canadians under age 65 to make adequate provision for income in their retirement years.

That motion was put forward by the present Government while it was in opposition on May 10, 1984. It was moved by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), the present Minister of Employment and Immigration. I know that that Minister feels strongly about the issue of pension reform. I wish her every success in lobbying and making her voice heard within Cabinet to bring forward the much-needed improvements which she spoke about in the course of her remarks on that Opposition Day. In fact, I intended to make much the same argument to the present Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The age-old argument is heard again. The Government says that it would love to bring in real pension reform for all senior citizens who gave their lives to make this country as great as it is, but it does not have the money. It says that it will make those improvements when the economy picks up and we are rolling in loot again. That argument has been made as far back as I can read in Hansard.

In 1951 an end was brought to the means test for old age pensions. At that time Stanley Knowles referred to debates that had gone on years and years before. The old argument was used then as well. The Government said it would love to do something for pensioners but the country could not afford it.

I recall reading what Tommy Douglas, the former leader of my Party and the former Premier of Saskatchewan, said on the subject. He said that Governments have used that argument time and again until it is shop-worn. He said that Governments can never find money for social programs to allow people to live with some social dignity in this world, but in order to finance a war they can grab oodles of money out of nowhere. I think the same arguments hold true at this time.

I would like to quote the comments made by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands on May 10, 1984. I am sure Members on the Government side will find this interesting. I certainly do. She said:

> The fact that we have 600,000 elderly Canadians living in poverty in a country as rich and bountiful as Canada, in a society suppposedly as compassionate and humane as ours, is a national disgrace. The fact that this has been allowed to continue month after month, year after year, is a telling indictment of the Government. The Government is bereft of ideas, drained of decency, and unable to recognize the priorities which must be dealt with in this society. I know the Government has its priorities: bail-outs of de Havilland, Canadair and Maislin; bonuses for executive officers in de Havilland and the Canada Development Investment Corporation; and the purchase of Petrofina gas stations. We know what the priorities of the Government are. For the people who have, throughout their lifetimes, worked for and contributed to the development of this great country, there is only a promise trotted out time and time again that some day, some time, they too will become a priority.
> Is it any wonder, Sir, that today we condemn the Government? We condemn it not only for its failure to introduce legislation that would meet the current needs of today's elderly poor, but also for its failure to bring about long overdue pension reform of the whole system so that we can ensure that the poverty of today will not be meted out to those who will be senior citizens in 10, 20 or 30 years' time. We must begin to come to grips with this issue and reverse what is happening.

I wish I had made that speech, Mr. Speaker, and I just did. The same arguments hold true today as they did on May 10, 1984, during the debate in 1951, and during the debate in the early 1930s when pensions first began to be spoken about seriously by the decision-makers in this and other countries. It is time that the Government did something about it rather than talk. When the Minister tabled the child and elderly benefits consultation paper, I thought he would have taken the opportunity to say something serious about this topic. I have no doubt that the Minister is a sincere person. The Minister is a man with integrity and I thought he would have taken the opportunity to say something serious about pension reform.

However, he said in his paper that while not proposing changes at this time in the elderly benefits system, the Government invites proposals and comments regarding the age exemption and the pension income deduction, the elderly benefits system and so on. We do not need another study on pension reform because the issue has been studied to death over the years.

I was an alternate to my former colleague, Ted Miller, on the Pension Reform Task Force. Incidentally, I also want to congratulate that committee for dealing with a very difficult and complex subject and proposing the recommendations that it did, even though I disagree with some of them. I believe the committee could have made stronger recommendations on some of the issues it was studying. In any event, I believe it is time for real pension reform in this country.

I would be remiss if I did not also mention the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) who, two years ago, headed our Party's task force to look into the problems of older women across the country. She issued a very impressive document as a result of those investigations and I would be more than happy to provide the Minister with a copy if he has not seen the document. I believe it deals with these problems in a very human, warm and compassionate way.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is appropriate that I end my remarks by referring to some statements which have been made by the Council on Pension Reform for Singles. The Hon. Member for Sudbury may recall that Miss Cheevers, the secretary of that Council, appeared before the Task Force on Pension Reform and gave testimony that astounded everyone in the room at that particular time. Miss Cheevers is a woman in her late seventies, I believe. She was brought up in an era when the money that was available to a family usually went to the male in order to provide him with an education.

This was her testimony at the hearing. She said that there were two children in her family, herself and her brother. It was assumed that since there was a shortage of money at the time and that only one of the two children could receive an education, her brother would receive the education because he would eventually be the breadwinner. Miss Cheevers was denied the right to an education because of the lack of money in the family. It was expected that she would grow up to be married and raise children in the usual stereotype situation that we would not accept today.

The First World War broke out when Miss Cheevers was growing up. Most of the males in Canada who went overseas returned with spouses and many never returned. According to Miss Cheevers, this is one reason why she never married. Not only was she involved in the war effort at home, but her parents had become elderly by the time the war was over. Since she was expected to look after her parents she did not enter the workforce until she was in her mid-fifties. She did not have an opportunity to make contributions to a private pension plan and it was too late for her to make contributions to the Canada Pension Plan. Registered retirement savings plans were of no use to her because she did not have an income that would allow her to buy an RRSP. What happened to Miss Cheevers and thousands like her who are members of this Council is that they are now living on a very meagre pension. They are excluded by this legislation that is being brought forward by the Minister and they are having a hard time to make ends meet in this country.

Let me quote from a newsletter that was issued by the Council on Pension Reform for Singles. It says more than I can say because these people are speaking from their own experience. I am sure Members will be interested to hear what they have to say:

In the last administration it was the Minister responsible for the Status of Women who said that singles who had not married and not had children and contributed nothing to Canada. With that kind of representation who needs enemies?

Our kind friend should have been around during two great wars and a real depression, 18 years out of what should have been the most productive period of their lives when it was the single women who turned in to keep the home fires burning and were acclaimed as heroes and the backbone of Canada. In those days we did not advocate leaving the country helpless against the enemy. We had to defend it and did so with every ounce we possessed. There being no men left to marry following the wars, they turned in to support their war widowed mothers and young brothers and sisters, only to find that a grateful Canada has abandoned them pension wise as though they don't exist—

We know what we are talking about. We are of an age who went through it all and we feel that we have as much reason to be proud of our achievements as any women who sits in the House of Commons and it is time we were recognized. There are not many years left.

Having got off our chests that which has been choking us so long, dare we hope that the House of Commons members will take the time to do some homework by reading and learning something about the roots of Old Age Security. It is very evident they need the education.

I think that sums up any contribution I have to make to this debate. I wish the Minister well. If Members of my Party can be of assistance to him in pressuring other members of his Cabinet, he will always have our support and I hope he will use it and act as quickly as possible.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the Minister on this overdue Bill. Let me also congratulate the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) and the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) for adopting a reasonable attitude in this debate. This may be one of the rare days in the House when we will take the action that the country has asked for with a minimum of rancour.

I have been a long time supporter of pensioners, veterans and other Canadians who have found themselves disadvantaged by the sins of omission or commission in various forms of our legislation. I heartily welcome the progressive initiative taken by the present Government.

I am pleased to have this opportunity, my first in this Parliament, to speak on this topic. The main purpose of this Bill is to broaden the eligibility of widows and widowers in financial need for a spouse's allowance by allowing applications to be made by a surviving spouse between the ages of 60 and 64, regardless of the age of the deceased partner.

The spouse's allowance was first introduced into the Old Age Security Act in a 1975 amendment. Since that time its scope has been extended on four other occasions, making this the fifth amendment relating directly to the spouse's allowance.

While this amendment is not discriminatory—men and women are both able to benefit—by far the largest beneficiaries will be women. For some reason unknown to me but adequately supported by statistics, women tend to outlive men and therefore many more of them will receive assistance as a result of the amendment. Our Government maintains a commitment to ensure the legislation in this and other areas reflects accurately the needs of the population. It is progressive legislation.

In my 12 years in Parliament on both sides of the House I have advocated, with the full support of my colleagues, several important issues along the same lines as this amendment to the Old Age Security Act. In each instance an injustice had been brought about by legislation which was too restrictive or did not address the problem that had arisen. Now that we are in a position to implement the progressive measures that we have proposed over the years, I am sure the Canadian public can expect many more. Indeed, the Speech from the Throne outlined measures which are outlined expressly "to ensure that social measures in Canada keep pace with the changing needs and circumstances of our people".

I, too, would like to mention two former Members of this House who shared my concerns about the inequities of legislation, especially that affecting pensioners and their spouses. The first is the late Hon. Walter Baker. He was a tireless worker who, with his obvious legal skills, combined with large doses of compassion, spoke often about the needs of pensioners and about the lack of will demonstrated by the former Government to amend legislation to remove certain inequities. I am sure he would be sharing my enthusiasm for this amendment to the Old Age Security Act if he were here.

The other former Member who has been mentioned by everyone preceding me this morning and who still graces the House with his presence at the Table at times is, of course, known far and wide for his interest and advocacy on behalf of pensioners and veterans. I am referring, of course, to the Hon. Stanley Knowles. Incidentally, he was a great help to me as a new Member many years ago with his advice on all pension matters. Throughout his decades here as the Member for Winnipeg North Centre he was always a champion and watchdog of government. He did not miss an opportunity to remind the government of the day of its obligations to the people who worked and fought for the rest of us and then found their government less than generous in providing for their retirement years. I shall do my best, along with other colleagues who share these concerns, to continue that tradition.

My constituency, Victoria, has almost 89,000 individuals living and, my notes say, working in it. Unfortunately, a very large number are no longer working because of the difficult economic times that we have. Of the 89,000 people, a very significant proportion are over the age of 60. As a matter of fact, 29,000 or 32 per cent of the population of Victoria are over 60. Of that percentage, about 61 per cent are women.

It was, therefore, a great day when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) tabled the discussion paper on elderly and family benefits. The paper has reinforced the concept of universality for elderly benefits by stating that removing universality is not an option being considered by our Government. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in the days leading up to the election, promised that. The Government has repeatedly maintained its commitment in this Parliament and now the Minister has confirmed that commitment.

In a statement last November, the Minister said:

—our goal is to strengthen the integrity of universality, its goal of comprehensiveness and fairness . . . Canadians have never had a version of universality in which the theory and the reality are absolutely the same.

My constituents can be assured of continuing benefits which they richly deserve, as indeed do all elderly Canadians.

This Old Age Security Act amendment is only the latest in a series of progressive legislative initiatives which my Party has supported. One in which I was proud to have played a part was that involving pensions for those who defended our country during past wars and their spouses. In fact, the last time I spoke on this side of the House in favour of a Government Bill was on my own Bill on this very subject. While I was Minister of Veterans Affairs in the 1979-80 Conservative Government, I was privileged to introduce, with the support of my colleagues, amending legislation which applied to the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act.

Among other things, that Bill, which was Bill C-28, did away with two previously ignored inequities. First, it provided the widow of a veteran who had been in receipt of a disability pension of less than 48 per cent with a proportionate pension. Up to that time the widow had been unable to claim a dime if the disability pension had been less than 48 per cent. Second, the other significant change in that legislation was to provisions of the Veterans Land Act. Previously, the spouse of a veteran had not been entitled to any interest in land acquired by a veteran under the Act and court orders were ignored by the director of the Veterans Land Act administration. With the passage of that amendment the spouse would be able to make application through the courts for an interest in the veteran's property, and the Director would be obliged to take notice of the claim. It is hard to believe that a provision such as this was not even considered prior to 1979. In any event, our Government came to an end two days after introduction of the Bill so I was unable to see it come to fruition at that time. I was thankful it was adopted by the succeeding government as Bill C-40 and given speedy passage, and it is now the law of the land.

In 1982 there was another Bill of this nature introduced in Parliament and passed without much fanfare at the time. This Bill was entitled Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act. However, proclamation of Parts II, III and IV of the Act were inordinately delayed. The purpose of the legislation was two-fold: to remove constraints against public servants being garnisheed and to allow spouses to obtain direct from the Government all or part of a public servant's pay or pension where there is a court order for family maintenance. The intent of this portion of the legislation was to circumvent difficulties some spouses had and were having in collecting maintenance orders. This sort of thing was leaving them in precarious financial circumstances. Seventeen months later this Act still had not been proclaimed, leaving many spouses who were anticipating proclamation swaying in the wind.

At that time I proceeded by way of correspondence, questions and speeches in the House to have the problem resolved, which was finally done by passage of a second Bill. I expect that some of the senior staff of the House of Commons are more aware of what held up the proclamation of Bill C-35 than I am. Eventually, the impasse was resolved by the passage of an additional Bill which said that yes, employees of the House of Commons would have to come under the provisions of the Bill as passed by the House of Commons.

That is a brief record of the Party's and my own position on legislative initiatives in the same vein as those before us today. Anomalies and inequities will continue to be revealed in our legislation. The reasons they occur are legion, but I believe those relating to changes in social attitudes are slowly but surely coming to be recognized and omitted.

Once again, may I read from the Speech from the Throne two statements to confirm our commitment to social equality:

—there is some distance between the principle of equality, widely accepted, and its reality, still far short of achievement. It is the duty of Parliament and Government to help ensure that Canadian society travels that distance as quickly as possible.

Further on in the Speech we find:

Canadians value and support the comprehensive social security system that has been put in place over many years . . . Many areas of the system must be strengthened to respond to the changing nature and needs of our society.

What is much more difficult to bring to light are those inequities created by our economic situation, a situation created in large part by profligate spending by our predecessors, an economy shaped by political expediency, short-sightedness and reactionary measures. Now that the Conservative Party has an unambiguous mandate from Canadians to set to right the damage inflicted over the last 16 years on our economy, this legislation is proof that it will be done judiciously. It is proof that our Party will cure our society's economic ailments while at the same time ensuring protection and fairness to those whose finances are limited.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: Our Government is fortunate to have the present Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is known for his compassion, sense of fairness, and capability. I am confident that this needed amendment is a harbinger of further equitable legislation. Canada's elderly citizens can share my confidence.

● (1230)

There are some parts of Bill C-26 which are somewhat puzzling. I realize that the committee is the place in which to study the Bill very carefully and either have its parts satisfactorily explained or changed. I am rather concerned about Clause 1(1) which defines a spouse and about the part which speaks of the bar to remarriage. I trust in committee we will ensure that we are not making moral judgments or reinforcing a moralistic attitude by denying funds to people who need them just as much as if they were the most moral people in the world. I do not think it is a part of federal legislation to set out absolute moral lines as to who can qualify.

I should like to see other legislation come on stream. Now there is a possibility of this. I look forward to the day when we might be equal to the country of Belgium which has a pension for women at age 60. It would ensure that inequities would not be disclosed only after legislation is put into effect. At the present time, and even after this Bill is passed, in the case of 62-year old twin sisters, one will be able to draw this pension because she was married and the other will not. That does not seem fair, but the facts of the Bill are generally pleasing. As I understand the Bill, with zero income the monthly payment will be $536.26. This will be gradually reduced. If there is outside income, it will have to go over $10,500 before the allowance will be cut out completely. It is an understanding Bill.

In summary, my wholehearted support for this legislation is what I wish to express. It is an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act. It derives from its compassionate nature. It addresses some of the issues about which we care a great deal—those issues affecting elderly Canadians, in particular women. I hope my colleagues on both sides of the House will share my enthusiasm for this Bill and give it quick passage so that its benefits can proceed without undue delay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech? If not, we shall resume debate with the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to address the issue of spousal allowance and applaud the decision of the Minister in this regard. The Government is extending this benefit to help an estimated 85,000 elderly widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 65 regardless of when their spouses died. For this group it is an excellent first step. I support this measure in the hope that it will evolve even further and that at some point in time we will be able to consider the 80,000 to 85,000 who are left out of the provisions of this particular Bill. I am sure the Minister felt as badly as I do in having to exclude this segment of single elderly Canadians from the proposal. The prospect of poverty for them is very real and very frightening. I am sure the Minister shares that concern.

[Translation]

I want to congratulate the Minister on presenting this legislation, which is in the best interests of all Canadians. We do not intend to oppose the passage of a Bill that was examined by a task force set up under the previous Government. The task force was headed by one of our Members, the Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith). Incidentally, this Government is introducing quite a number of Liberal measures and seems to be abandoning the reactionary Conservative measures advocated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I am delighted that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has been able to make his contribution to the wellbeing of our society.

[English]

I am basically very concerned because I believe it is often the case when we talk about these kinds of measures that we really do not stop to think of them in terms of a total portrait or picture. We often say that all these measures are from the bleeding hearts of society and that we cannot afford them. What we really cannot afford is a society which allows people to live in abject poverty. This has an impact upon their families, their children and themselves. In the long run this is very costly to society.

I should like to tell a story about my friend Jeanne. She is in her late fifties. She works in a large company. Her task is to train employees to run computerized machines. She earns about $18,000 per year. She considered herself well paid at one point, but now she has come to certain realities. After 12 years on this job, other men and women start with the company as clerks and secretaries with salaries of $19,000 to $21,000 in their first year. This seems unfair to Jeanne, and it is. What is even more unfair is that the men she trains for the job are immediately put into higher positions than hers. They are promoted and receive higher salaries, and she has trained them.

She would like to fight the system in order to be treated more fairly, but she is afraid she will lose her job. She does not think she could get another job because she is too old. She has no other income and no pension. She cannot change the world alone. She needs all our help as legislators.

I should like to suggest that the Canadian economy and the subject of women's income is one and the same thing, in a sense. I will be told that these are two separate issues, not one issue. I believe that for far too long women's issues and issues related to the Canadian economy have been considered separately when in fact they are one issue. Too often political and business leaders, economists and public officials say: "Today I will take a speech and talk about women. Tomorrow I will talk about social policy. Then maybe on Friday I will outline our economic policy". To treat the income problems of more than half the population separately from major economic questions is to short-change women, for their role, welfare and well-being are synonymous with economic and social policy. I am quite pleased to note that in the economic summit which the Government is planning the voice of women will be heard. It is almost too late, but certainly it is a step forward.

The reality is that today and for too long women in Canada have been losing out economically. The harsh fact is that two-thirds of Canadians working at the minimum wage level are women. The startling fact is that over half of all Canadian women can expect to be poor at some point in their lives. Another sad fact is that 2.5 times as many women as men are forced into part-time work because that is all they can find. The bitter fact is that when couples separate, although a man can generally look forward to rising income the woman anticipates only diminishing income. Only 27 per cent of employed women are enrolled in private pension plans and only one out of four widows has a pension. To quote one of the great North American Liberals, "When is a buck not a buck?" It is when a woman earns it and it is only worth 62 cents.

Now, some will say: "There she goes again, talking about spending taxpayers' money on social policy". I have discovered that the real difference between social policy and economic policy is when someone else is describing the life of a single woman working and raising a family on a minimum wage or a woman without any income at all. When we talk about that, we are talking about social policy. If you happen to be that woman who is living on the minimum wage or has no income at all, what is happening to you is an economic reality.

It is time to change economic realities. It is time to act. It is time to devise and implement a national economic policy that counts women in rather than dealing them out. We must make a commitment to end the historic economic injustices that have been done to women in this country. We must make a commitment to the working women of Canada, those who want to work outside of their homes and those who have no choice but to work outside their homes.

If you go to work in Canada to support your family and yourself and contribute to the wealth of this country, you will receive equal pay for work of equal value. We cannot wait. We must commit ourselves to action now. We must do nothing less. That is fairness and equity. We must start with the premise that in the workplace women are not different from men in their abilities, in their energies, in their drive to work and in what they can produce for their families and for the nation.

We must accept the fact that many women are not paid fairly for what they do. This inequity is found at all levels of income. It is also true for women with university educations. For example, women who have MBAs who started with the same salary as men find they are thousands of dollars behind their classmates in a few short years. Therefore, we must act now.

The federal Government must pay its employees equal pay for work of equal value. We must be pro-active in this matter and lead the reform, not simply leave the onus on those who feel that they have a grievance. The federal Government should contract only with Canadian companies, professional firms or institutions that provide to its employees equal pay for work of equal value.

There are those who would argue that such policies must be gradual and depend on a growing economic tie in Canada. We can work at being just if we just get a bigger economic growth, a bigger pie to share and to cut.

Miss MacDonald: Exactly.

Mrs. Finestone: I am glad to see the Minister in the House.

Miss MacDonald: I have been here all along. Where have you been?

Mrs. Finestone: I have been here. I just looked your way.

The economic boom of the 1960s and 1970s proved that this was not the case. While the nation's wealth grew dramatically, the gap between the incomes of women and men did not close. Whether the Canadian economic pie gets bigger, and we are all working to ensure that it does, or smaller, which I doubt, or remains static, which is the fear of some, whatever the size of that pie we must divide it more fairly. The slice women have had has not been a fair slice, and it should be.

In addition to a commitment for equal pay for work of equal value, which I know the Minister is presently studying—and I await with a great deal of interest her reaction and that of her ministry to the Abella commission—there are two other areas where we can act.

As a person who feels that there is a tremendous need to see increased equity, we must act to help the low-income single head of the household who is raising children. We must do more to help Canadian women in their late fifties and sixties who suddenly lose all sources of income. The action undertaken by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is one step. I mentioned the other which I hope some day we can realize.

Allow me to deal first with the major economic question of women who are single heads of households, unable to work or working at the minimum wage or not much more. The situation in Canada is that there are over 580,000 Canadian women today who are single heads of households. Forty one per cent of these women live below the poverty line. Most who have married and are now separated are unable to enforce child maintenance orders. In fact, only 30 per cent are receiving the awards allocated to them. What is more, the trend in our country is that half of those who marry under the age of 30 will separate. If we do nothing, we will see a worsening situation in which women find themselves. Three out of four women in Canada either do not marry or lose their husbands through death, divorce or separation.

In my talks with women and women's groups, I have been told the same story over and over again. It is the story of a single person with a minimum wage. Most of those people are women who must pay rent, feed and clothe their families, pay their own transportation and look for daycare. The harsh reality is that she cannot stretch that minimum wage to cover the rent, food, clothing, transportation and daycare. That amount of income just will not cover the cost of the basics.

The question is what do we do for women faced with this situation? I do not have all the answers, but I ask Hon. Members to consider what is happening when women are forced to quit. We lose her productivity and her work outside the home. We lose her contribution to the economy. We pay the welfare costs for being at home and out of the workforce. We destroy the spirit of one more Canadian who has given in and given up on herself and on society. There has to be another way. I think it is a lack of political will sometimes to resolve to meet these problems and find answers.

Let me turn to the second group of Canadian women who require change in our economic policies. I speak of the woman who has never been in the workforce but who has had to work all her life in her home. She is a worker and by working with her family she has contributed enormously to the social and economic infrastructure of Canada. Suddenly her husband dies and she is alone, or he leaves and she is alone. I am not talking about hypothetical situations. I could take you by the arm, Mr. Speaker, and introduce you to scores of women whom I have talked to and know the situation. They have no income. Only one in four widows has pension benefits. Only 6.7 per cent of women have survivor benefits in private pension plans if their husband dies before the age of 65. We need pension reform. Portability, vesting and survivor benefits all need to be reformed. We need to act so that women are not caught forever in this situation.

A person just widowed, never having worked outside the home, with no training for today's workplace, looking for a job in a community with unemployment running as high as it is, describes the life of many human beings in serious difficulties with no possible hope for the future except Government supplementation. This is not what we want in the future. We want people to be able to provide for themselves. We need the necessary incentives. These women need the support of the entire society and they should receive it. Those women can have it this year if we are prepared to act. I believe the support should go to both men and women in this predicament with no financial means of support, no private pension, not having had the opportunity of being able to save for RRSPs so that they could have a decent lifestyle.

These important measures must be considered. There are scores of economic issues that affect women, such as daycare, pension reform, skills training, technological change and their treatment within the tax system. We must proceed with reform in all of these areas. Pension reform, for example, is urgent, but these pension reform measures will not help right now. We need to take the interim step in order to support them.

We must work at all the economic issues in Canada and, as politicians, we must also have priorities and the courage to pursue them boldly. I urge action in these most pressing areas because action will help those Canadians who need it most now. I urge the implementation of a new economic policy for all Canadians but one that will create greater income for women. That is why I urge a vigorous pursuit of a policy of equal pay for work of equal value, of income support for low wage single heads of households and of a basic income for Canadians and especially women in their late fifties and early sixties who have been forced into an incomeless life.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, many individuals reach retirement age without having achieved a minimum of financial security, and I think it is vital that we should continue to demand changes in private pension plans and old age security pensions so that our elders, those who built this society, can have the security and the kind of life that is a reflection of ourselves and our values. I am sure you have heard I think it is an old Chinese saying that we can judge a society by the way it treats the elderly.

[English]

Therefore, I believe it vital that we treat our elders as we would like to see ourselves treated in this society, put into place those measures that are needed in the short term and plan those economic measures that will have in their fiscal impact the kind of results that will not see poverty, and particularly the face of feminism in poverty, in the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment to make followed by a short question. I as one Member of the House, welcome this Bill. My own mother was one of the people who did not receive a pension after my father died because of the existing legislation. I think this step is certainly long overdue and I would hope that the legislation passes without too much opposition.

I hope the Minister will respond to the offer of our spokesman, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), who suggested that if the Minister was able to have the enactment of this legislation moved up from next September, we would certainly be willing to help facilitate the passage of this legislation through all stages. I believe that was the offer he made.

As has been mentioned by Members of all three Parties, the former Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Stanley Knowles, was one of the leading advocates of this type of legislation in the House Commons for many, many years. I believe that the weakness in this legislation was pointed out by something that Mr. Knowles said not only to our caucus but to the whole country through his speeches in the House of Commons, and that is that it is completely unfair for a women to receive a pension based on whether or not she has a man or whether or not she had a man. Her entitlement to adequate pension should be based on the fact that she is a human of a certain age group who lives in this nation, and I would hope that the Government would move quickly toward that position. In this day and age we should not be looking at whether or not someone was married when she was 40, 50 or younger; we should be saying that if she is of a certain age and has a limited income, she would be receiving that pension. I would hope the Government would act quickly on that.

The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) spoke of the economic pie being large in the 1960s and 1970s. Why did the Liberal Government not act in those years when there was a lot of money in this society?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I think there are a number of answers to the question asked by the Hon. Member. First, Liberal policy regarding the interests of women has been very forward moving. It has not been fast enough in my view, but certainly within the larger picture of social reform, it has moved ahead. Liberals brought in the guaranteed income supplement and increased the guaranteed income supplement. The entire Old Age Security Act and the income supplement were Liberal initiatives. The spousal allowance was a Liberal initiative.

In 1979, as president of La Fédération des Femmes du Québec, I can remember having a very serious concern about the poverty face which was a feminine face. We ran a major conference on aging and poverty and looked at new policies for aging in our society. At that time the Quebec Minister concerned and the federal Minister, Monique Bégin, were our guest speakers. Interestingly enough, and I believe the present Minister of National Health and Welfare will be interested in this, Madam Bégin came before us with a whole series of facts and figures as the present Minister did, and outlined the cost to implement spousal allowance. Needless to say, that is where her heart was, as I believe that is where the heart of the present Minister is. However, she was having a very difficult time with her caucus.

We should take a look at who was in that caucus. It was mostly men who were in that caucus and there are few men who have as broad a concept of the role of women as partners in society as the present Minister has. I would imagine that Madam Bégin had somewhat of a difficult time pushing through what eventually did go through, which was the spousal reforms.

I believe we have been effective. We have trained men to think in much more feminine terms. I am very proud of what the Liberals have done in the past, and will continue to support and do in the future.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment to make and a question to ask the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). First, I would like to acknowledge the great debt that we all owe to the former Member for Winnipeg North Centre, the Hon. Stanley Knowles, for the pioneering work that he did over the years for pensioners in this country. Without the advocacy that he carried on throughout the length of his parliamentary career, we would not have a pension system upon which to improve. I believe that, as Canadians, we all acknowledge our debt to the Hon. Stanley Knowles.

What are the feelings of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal with regard to lowering the age of eligibility for pensioners? Is it adequate to leave the age of eligibility at 65 or, as has long been advocated by this Party, do we need to lower the age of pension eligibility to 60? Together with that, this legislation before us is taking a good step toward extending spousal benefits to married people. I wonder what the Hon. Member's views are with regard to extending those same kinds of benefits to single people.

If the Hon. Member sees the need to extend benefits to single people as well as to married people and is sympathetic to lowering the age of eligibility, how can she explain the fact that her Party when in government failed to take action on these matters? What is there to give us any confidence that if that Party were ever to approach that side of the House again at some future time, it would act any differently when in office than it did the last time around?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to point out that the word "consultation" was not a word that was invented during the reign of the newly elected Conservative Government. Certainly Hon. Members on the other side will remember the times we went to the population on pension reform with green papers, white papers and all kinds of consultative documents. We have travelled, we have talked, we have listened and we have looked. From that point of view, I feel no discomfort and I feel a great sense of pride.

They say that imitation is the finest form of flattery. I am so flattered that they have copied our style and are out there consulting with the population. I just thought of that. Isn't it great?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

FIREARMS

EASE IN OBTAINING HAND-GUNS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on December 17 a Montreal woman committed a murder with a hand-gun which she had bought legally only a few hours before from a registered gun dealer.

In this case the woman was able to get the firearms acquisition certificate and hand-gun permit in a total of three hours, despite the fact that the law requires a check into an applicant's history, including their criminality, mental stability, and violent activity. It is obvious that in this case the checks were either not made, or not properly made.

One of the principal reasons for the checks which were imposed by Parliament was to assure a cooling-off period, and to impose a delay in obtaining a gun, to reduce the murders which are a result of emotional crises. When the law was passed a few years ago it was thought that the checking procedures should take from one to three weeks. The three hours' time which was taken in this case is ridiculous and makes a farce of the law. The Montreal coroner took a similar view.

I urge the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) to look into this matter immediately and to take steps, by regulation, to impose a minimum waiting period on all applications for firearms acquisition certificates and permits.

RED MEAT PRODUCERS IN DRUMMOND REGION OF QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to speak to a subject that is causing great concern to red meat producers in my region. I am referring to the red meat stabilization program.

There are more than 900 red meat producers in my riding. Pork producers have been particularly affected by unfavourable market prices over the last five years. Many will soon be on the brink of bankruptcy, so the situation is extremely urgent.

Mr. Speaker, production costs for producers differ according to the region where they are located, and we must allow for this difference if we want to avoid creating disparities among the provinces. Under the former legislation, the Liberals were maintaining this unfair situation, and not only in this sector, and as a result they were repudiated by Canadians during the last election.

The producers' contribution to the Quebec Stabilization Fund has tripled over the past year, and the Federal Government offered no compensation to help relieve the pressure on producers who were participating in the provincial program. Finally, Mr. Speaker, as far as red meat stabilization is concerned, a tripartite agreement with each province is necessary to establish a degree of equity at the national level, and this is aside from the existence of provincial stabilization plans—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry but I must inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CRITICISM OF LIBERAL PARTY POSITION ON NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, Liberal double-talk and deception, when it comes to the nuclear arms race, have reached new depths in the mouth of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), whose hypocrisy on the issue seems to know no bounds.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry has said that his Party will be demanding a full parliamentary debate on NORAD and star wars. Where was he when millions of Canadians wanted a full parliamentary debate on the Cruise testing, and the Liberals refused? There would have been no debate in the House at all if the NDP had not used one of its days to provide for such an opportunity.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry now claims that the Liberals were unwaringly sucked into the Cruise testing. They thought they were only re-signing a defence-sharing agreement with the Americans, and they ended up testing the Cruise. Those poor innocent Liberals!

What happened to all the morally pretentious arguments about how we had to test the Cruise because of our NATO commitments—not our NORAD commitments, but our NATO commitments? That Liberal lie was promulgated from coast to coast. It is now to be officially forgotten by Liberal Party historians.

The Hon. Member's last refuge is ignorance, claiming that he did not know what was really going on. The truth is that he still doesn't. The Liberals never have, and they never will. Blinded by years of deceit and wilful ignorance, they deserve to become the laughing stock of those who are concerned about nuclear disarmament. The future of the planet is too important for anyone to seek comfort in the next chapter of Liberal grandstanding on issues of peace and disarmament.

STATUS OF WOMEN

R.E.A.L. WOMEN OF CANADA

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, now hear this! Today I want to talk about women—REAL Women. A growing organization in our country is the R.E.A.L. Women of Canada. "R" stands for real; "E" for equal; "A" for active, and "L" for life. Put together, it spells R.E.A.L.. It is a splendid name.

These women believe that the traditional family is the basic unit of society, and that strong families mean a strong nation. The organization has realistic and positive views on marriage; believing that marriage is a sacred contract based on love and commitment, which adds survival, enrichment, and strength to meet the stresses and strains of everyday life. This is quite different from the views of the feminists who urged young women "to think of marriage as a mating with a fruit fly and an elephant . . . with a great financial and physical deal for men and a high risk activity for women".

The objectives of R.E.A.L. Women of Canada encourage high principles and good living, based on the best traditions of the past. It is pro-life and it will fight for women's rights, but not at the expense of human righs. Motherhood is enhanced, and it places equal value on women who stay in the home, nurturing their children, as on those who work in the marketplace.

REAL has put into words what millions of Canadians of both genders believe in their hearts. I salute the R.E.A.L. Women of Canada, the real women of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—MEASURES TAKEN BY CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was ill-informed on Friday, February 1, when commenting on acid rain negotiations with the United States. He is not aware of the facts.

With respect to the emission of sulphur dioxide, the United States produces 26 million tonnes of sulphur dioxide annually. Canada produces 4.5 million tonnes, or one-fifth.

Second, in Canada we are cutting our SO_2 emissions by 25 per cent between 1980 and 1990. The United States is not.

Third, parallel to this program, there is a unanimous commitment which was made by federal and provincial Environment Ministers, who on March 6, 1984, agreed to cut our SO_2 emissions by 50 per cent by 1984. On that date, and again in June, 1984, federal and provincial Environment Ministers declared their unanimous will to go it alone.

Fourth, we are part of an international movement called "The 30% Club", whose members have pledged a minimum cut of 30 per cent of SO_2 emissions by 1993. Twenty nations have joined; so far the United States has not.

Fifth, United States regulations on NO_x control standards are much more stringent than ours. Our public consultations were concluded in December, 1984—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

PUBLIC WORKS

AUDITOR GENERAL'S CRITICISM OF DEPARTMENT'S LEASING PRACTICES

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts is currently reviewing the past leasing practices of the Department of Public Works. The Auditor General, in his latest annual report, wrote:

—there appears to be no effective mechanism to ensure that the Department and its client departments comply with the directives and policies of Treasury Board.

This failure to comply has resulted in approximately $63 million of wasted tax dollars.

Canadians simply will not tolerate this kind of government mismanagement. They suffered long enough under the previous Government and its practice of careless spending and high deficits.

I urge the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) to ensure an effective mechanism of control over the leasing activities of Public Works and to ensure that this kind of over-spending does not occur again. I have every confidence that the Minister and this Government will manage the finances of Canada with care and responsibility.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MEARES ISLAND, B.C.—ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, in response to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) said that he would take whatever steps he could to resolve the dangerous conflict at Meares Island.

Since then the Minister has done nothing but back away from his earlier commitment. He now says that he will get involved only if both sides to the dispute request him to do so.

Meares Island is not just another part of MacMillan Bloedel's tree farm licence, to be logged at the company's convenience. Neither is it simply another part of a general land claim by the Nuu-chalnulth Tribal Council. Meares Island is at the very heart of aboriginal claims in British Columbia. As a specific site, it has been used for hundreds of years by the Clayoquet and Ahousaht peoples.

• (1410)

Indian people have said that Meares Island will not be logged, and intend to back up their words with their bodies. They will be joined by hundreds of concerned environmentalists who recognize the unique features of Meares Island, one of which is Canada's oldest and largest trees.

We should hear the words of the Indian people not as a threat but as their reaction to a threat. A threat to their land is a threat to their culture and to their future as a people. Instead of paying attention to another "Zimmerman telegram" from the head of MacMillan Bloedel, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) should honour his earlier obligation—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CRITICISM OF LIBERAL PARTY IN OPPOSITION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, as an impartial and objective observer of the political scene, it has been my observation that the Opposition, especially the Official Opposition, is falling apart. I am sure, on occasions, the Leader of the Opposition Party waxes elequent, but sadly he stands alone. Last week he vehemently condemned out of hand the Investment Canada Act legislation, but the effect was entirely lost when only 14 of his supposed supporters bothered to turn out for the vote.

S.O. 21

As the Liberal Party self-destructs, and as its front-bench members spend more and more time at their lucrative law practices, and less and less time in the House of Commons, it appears that the New Democratic Party is taking on the real job of opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: In order to reflect this reality and to be fair to both mini-opposition Parties, would it not be a good idea, Mr. Speaker, if the second question of Question Period be taken from the Liberals and given to the NDP? I throw that out, just as a helpful suggestion. If the Liberals refuse to use even their very limited—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, after five months there is so much division within the Progressive Conservative Government that there does not seem to be any hope for serious reform.

First of all, in Quebec the real power does not lie with the members of the Caucus but with the National friends of the Prime Minister, with people like Fernand Roberge, Jean Bazin and Michel Cogger.

The Quebec council of Conservative Ministers is so ineffective and confused that the Prime Minister is letting the quarrel between the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Communications run its course in the hope that it will finally produce a real leader, which is highly improbable, Mr. Speaker.

As far as their new policies are concerned, their main objective is to keep up appearances. Last Sunday, the Progressive Conservative Parliamentary House Leader even had the nerve to say on "Sunday Morning" that Canadians did not vote for new policies but for a new approach.

Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservatives have always criticized metric conversion and they have always done so for the wrong reasons. The Prime Minister has now decided to appease his ultraconservative supporters by bringing back imperial while keeping the metric system, the latter to satisfy the progressive elements of his Party. And he himself is putting the blame on small- and medium-sized businesses.

Mr. Speaker, in the light of these facts, I have no compunction in saying that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to inform the Hon. Member that his time has now expired. The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—CONTADORA GROUP'S PEACE PROPOSALS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, "Ten Days for World Development", an education program of the relief and development agencies of the Anglican, Catholic, Lutheran, Presbyterian, and United Churches of Canada, is once again drawing the attention of Canadians to the crisis in Central America and the need for peace. These churches are to be commended for their continuing efforts.

The Canadian Government, as well, has a part to play in striving to bring peace to Central America. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government must actively urge the United States Government to listen seriously to the peace proposals of the Contadora group of Mexico, Columbia, Panama, and Venezuela, which is calling for a diplomatic rather than a military solution to the crisis in central America.

Second, the Canadian Government can make a commitment to signing the protocol to the September, 1984, Contadora peace Treaty, thereby demonstrating Canadian support for it. Twelve European nations, including our allies, the United Kingdom, France, and Germany, have signed this protocol.

Furthermore, we can inform the United States that we are opposed to U.S. military intervention. Let Canada act, and be counted amongst the peacemakers.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

ESTABLISHMENT OF KOREAN PLANT IN CANADA

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose some questions to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. He announced this morning an investment by Korean car manufacturers in a new auto parts plant in his area. This raises some very important questions, Mr. Speaker, about the lack of any over-all automotive policy of the Government. In less than seven weeks there will have to be a decision taken on what to do with the quotas, yet the Minister has yet to meet with the automotive task force, nor has he had specific negotiations with either the Americans or the Japanese.

Can the Minister tell us whether the deal between himself and the Korean auto manufacturers for this investment in plant is in return for continuing the duty-free status which the Korean auto manufacturers presently enjoy? Or does the Minister intend, in fact, to change that status?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to hear a question put by the Official Opposition critic for regional industrial expansion on Day 45. This is the first opportunity I have had to wish him the best in his role as critic.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: And may he stay there a long time.

Mr. Stevens: In direct answer to the Hon. Member's question, I am sure he will be very pleased to know that, leading up to the Hyundai decision to open a plant in Canada, there were no negotiations. It is all being done with its own money. As was said at the press conference today, it feels there is a good opportunity in Canada to open up, and it wants to share in that type of opportunity.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, considering the fact that the Hon. Minister did not find it possible, with his own timetable, to attend any of the debates on the Investment Canada Bill—he was not here one day during that debate—

Mr. Gauthier: That's right.

Mr. Axworthy: It is difficult to ask questions when the Minister is not here to participate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FIRA REVIEW PROCEDURES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, considering the comments made by the Minister about the investment decision, I assume the Minister knows that the decision by Hyundai to invest is part of an agreement which was made by that manufacturer under the provisions of the Foreign Investment Review Agency in terms of new business. Now that the Minister has seen the advantages of a foreign manufacturer making an agreement under FIRA to invest in Canada, is he prepared to bring back those review procedures into the Investment Canada Bill?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again in reply to the Hon. Member, I would like to assure him that I was indeed here many days during the debate on Investment Canada.

Mr. Axworthy: Oh, no, you weren't.

Mr. Stevens: In fact the record will show that I answered questions, but not from the Hon. Member.

In answer to the question put by the Hon. Member, I would like to assure him that in no way does the investment which Hyundai is proposing alter our view with respect to the Investment Canada Bill. In fact I believe that the Investment Canada Bill will ensure that there will be even more Hyundai and other non-Canadian investment made in Canada, if the Opposition would just stop defeating job creation by blocking the Bill in the way it has been doing.

IMPORT QUOTAS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would again simply point out to the Minister that it was this Party, when it was in Government, which established the legislation that made sure that Hyundai invested in Canada in the first place. Any continuation will simply be because of the commitment which was made.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What's the punch line?

Mr. Axworthy: The punch line, Mr. Speaker, is this—we have less than seven weeks in which we have to make a decision on what to do about import quotas for Japanese autos. We would like to know whether the Minister agrees with the report by the Combines Investigation Branch that such quotas should not be implemented. Is he prepared to meet with the automotive task force and agree that we need more Canadian content in those arrangements? When is the Government going to ensure jobs for Canadians by coming up with a position on what to do about Japanese quotas?

● (1420)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I know you noted that the Hon. Member went full circle. His original question queried me on the terms and conditions I have settled with Hyundai with respect to their opening. His final question indicates that it was all as a result of their agreement.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question, the fact is that we have had discussions in Japan and Washington with the industry and labour leaders. I think that in due course there will be an announcement concerning the continuation, or otherwise, of quotas. I can assure the Hon. Member that jobs for Canadians will be our paramount consideration.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF INVITATION EXTENDED TO HYUNDAI CORPORATION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Mr. Speaker, as the Minister is aware, the heartland of Quebec has been severely affected by factory shutdowns: Wabasso at Trois-Rivières, involving 1,250 jobs; Merchers at Berthier; and Le Carbure at Shawinigan. Thousands of jobs have been lost in the heartland of Quebec. Before inviting the Hyundai corporation to set up a plant in his own riding, did the Minister give the Quebec Minister of Industry and Trade a chance to make offers that might attract this industry to Quebec, at a time when the heartland of Quebec and the province in general have lost thousands of jobs since the Conservatives came to power?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that the suggestion of Hyundai opening up in the fine riding of York-Peel is something I first learned of when I read it in the press last week.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: That was certainly in no way the result of any negotiations such as the Hon. Member would have the House believe. In relation to the situation in Trois-Rivières, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that only last week we met with a group that is attempting to take some constructive steps to get the Wabasso plant re-opened. We have given them every encouragement to try to put their plan into a more concrete form so that jobs will once again be created in that area.

TEXTILES

REASON FOR REFUSAL TO MEET WITH REPRESENTATIVES OF CANADIAN TEXTILE INSTITUTE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, although I am pleased that the Minister met with representatives from our area, I still wonder why, since October 30 of last year, he has refused to meet with representatives of the Canadian Textile Institute who wrote to his office in the last week of October, requesting a meeting to discuss the textile situation in Quebec and in Canada in general, since cities like Winnipeg and other areas of Canada are also affected. The Minister has refused to meet them ever since the last week of October in 1984.

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that there has been no refusal whatsoever on our part to meet with representatives of the textile group, or individual companies within that group. The Hon. Member will probably be very pleased to know that we have even met several times with the creature of his previous Government, the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. In fact the head of that Board is now the commissioner of FIRA and may even be the head of Investment Canada. Therefore, we are very much in touch with the problems in the textile field.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—IMPORTANCE OF SETTLEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is for the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism. The Minister will know that yesterday the President of the National Association of Japanese Canadians met with the executive of that body, and that they in turn reconfirmed their confidence in the approach that he has been taking on their behalf in meetings with the Government of Canada.

It is of profound importance that we reach a settlement on this important tragedy in the history of our country which all Parties in the House can accept and agree upon, and more important, that the Japanese Canadians will feel at home with. Will the Minister assure the House that he will follow up on Mr. Miki's request to meet with the Prime Minister, by urging that the Prime Minister agree to such a meeting?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, obviously I cannot speak for the Prime Minister in terms of whom he will and will not meet. I have indicated to Mr. Miki and any other members of the Japanese community that I am prepared to meet with them at any time they see fit to discuss this very important matter further. My offer and invitation still stand.

REQUEST FOR NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House thank the Minister for his reply. Will he also indicate clearly to the House that the Government is willing to fulfil its own previous commitment to have serious negotiations with representatives of the Japanese Canadian community before any particular matter is brought before the House for the purpose of agreement?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, my reply to the Hon. Member will be roughly the same as my first reply. I am prepared to sit down and discuss this matter with the Japanese community at any time. They understand that. I would expect some overtures by Mr. Miki and his group this week. If that takes place, I will be prepared to sit down and talk about any matters that may arise from one end of the spectrum to the other.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, from past discussions on this matter, which have taken place both in and outside the House, the Minister knows that there is an important distinction to be made between the terms" consultation" and "negotiation". Is the Minister now prepared to say that the Government will continue with the negotiating process on this important matter before any legislation or resolution is brought before Parliament?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I have communicated to the Japanese Canadian community that I am prepared to have discussions. One of my major concerns is that, if we get into a negotiating position, which I understand some members of the Japanese Canadian community would like to see, with their lawyer representatives at the table, that inherently puts us into more of a confrontational type of position. I want to try to do everything in my power to stay away from that. I would like to have the question discussed at great length, if necessary, so that both sides are firm in their understanding of the direction we should go. I do not think it would be in the best interest of either side to sit down and start to negotiate, as such, at the present time. I am very much concerned, as I know the Hon. Member would be, that it could lead to more confrontation.

GENERAL MOTORS' SEARCH FOR NEW PLANT LOCATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Recently General Motors announced that it was looking for a site for a $3.5 billion assembly plant for its new Saturn project. It is also known that some 19 Governors of States in the United States are pressing to have that plant located in their areas. Exactly what are the Minister and his officials doing to get that plant located right here in Canada?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member for Windsor West that we are very much in touch with the officials in the Canadian head office of General Motors, as well as in Detroit. We are working with the provinces and federal officials to ensure that Canada is considered and hopefully will be able to win the type of development that General Motors is talking about.

GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister realistically expect to have any chance to get that plant located in Canada when, in the face of very extensive incentives being offered to General Motors by the 19 State Governors I have mentioned, to have the plant located in their areas, he and his Government have reduced support for the auto industry that was previously available to it through the Industrial and Regional Development Program? Will he not agree now that he must reverse those cuts if he is to have any chance of getting that plant located in Canada?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the Hon. Member that he get a better researcher, because the fact is that this Government has in no way reduced the amount of funds that are available under the Industrial and Regional Development Program. In fact those that might be available to help the auto industry are very much still available.

As the Hon. Member must recall, when it was proposed that General Motors put a substantial plant at Ste. Therese, Quebec, of course we were there offering assistance, along with the Province of Quebec. We would do so in the future if it meant more jobs for Canadians.

RENEGOTIATION OF TREATY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the discussions with respect to renegotiation of the NORAD Treaty. As the Minister knows, in 1981 the previous Liberal Government deleted the clause dealing with the ABMs, thus paving the way potentially for our entry into star wars. Would the Secretary of State assure the House today that, in the negotiations taking place now and in the weeks to come, his Government will make it abundantly clear to the Americans that we want that clause put back in, and thereby prevent us from getting involved in an offensive star wars program?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct when he points out that there was a deletion of a clause. I have naturally inquired as to why the Liberal Government agreed to that deletion at that particular time. I am informed that, in fact, that particular clause was deleted precisely to avoid any suggestion that either Canada or the United States might take actions which would breach the ABM Treaty.

I would be prepared to discuss that matter at greater length with the Hon. Member, with others in the House who are interested, or to make officials available.

To the best of my understanding, after inquiries, that was the reason for that clause being deleted. Consequently, I would be surprised if Members of the House who are anxious to have the ABM Treaty respected would want to reinsert a clause which might contain the suggestion that it would open the way for the United States to depart from the obligations of that treaty.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE EXAMINATION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I find the logic a little difficult to follow. I believe the only way to clear this matter up is to ask the Secretary of State if he will undertake to make sure that the complete NORAD Agreement is brought before the House Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for complete examination before it is signed by anyone, either on this side of the border or the American side of the border?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will be aware that there was a recommendation from the Standing Committee a year or two ago calling for a review of the NORAD arrangement prior to its renewal. Its renewal occurs in March of next year, which is more than a year away.

The Hon. Member will know that there will be a reference to the committees of Parliament of both a white paper from the Department of National Defence and a green paper from External Affairs, which will cover those questions, among others. If parliamentarians, after seeing those papers, conclude that that does not provide an adequate opportunity for that kind of study, the Government certainly will be prepared to consider any requests for any further opportunities to ensure that there is wide public understanding of all of the implications of renewal of the NORAD Agreement 13 months hence.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT REVIEW

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General, and it concerns the Richard Hatfield marijuana case. In view of today's press reports and the many questions that have been raised about this case, will the Solicitor General initiate a complete and independent review of the investigation and prosecution of the case so that the public can be assured that our criminal justice system has worked fairly and objectively in the matter?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the Hon. Member's question. At this time I must respectfully decline to give any such assurance.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, given all the circumstances surrounding this case, will the Solicitor General not agree that a public, independent inquiry is necessary to ensure that the public continues to have confidence that all persons are treated equally before the law?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that the very tenor of the question, and some of the comments that have been made, are rather contrary to that noble principle which he has just advanced.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: I do wish to assure him that I will take his representation seriously, but I repeat that I do not believe at this time that it would be appropriate or necessary.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—AUTOMOBILE EMISSION STANDARDS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Minister of Transport, concerns the remarks made by the Prime Minister on Friday about acid rain and the need for Canadians to clean up their own backyard before we can negotiate from strength with the Americans.

Will the Minister tell us today, in keeping with the spirit of the Prime Minister's remarks, whether Canada will soon move to adopt the recommendation of the parliamentary subcommittee on acid rain that the current standard of 3.1 grams per vehicle mile be tightened to one gram per vehicle mile, which is the current U.S. standard with regard to emissions of nitrous oxide?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is a matter that is currently under active consideration by myself and Cabinet colleagues. Of course, we will be cognizant of the statements made by the Prime Minister on Friday.

REQUEST FOR EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister be more definite? He knows that he must make this announcement by April 1 if it is to take effect by the 1987 car model year.

Could he give us assurances that he will make that announcement before April 1—indeed before President Reagan's visit—so that the Prime Minister would be able to point to some concrete Canadian action in his discussions with the President of the United States about acid rain?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, any announcement relative to exhaust emissions will be made in due course.

BUDGETARY CUT-BACK

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could he clarify the $30 million cut-back to the Medical Research Council's budget? Is the $30 million part of the MRC's basic budget A? Was it for normal MRC's granting programs, or a special one-time capital expenditure and equipment purchase purpose?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the MRC plan is for five years. There was an acceptance of a five-year plan. Second, there is what is known as the A base budget, which is generally shown on the estimates. Furthermore, for the first year of the five-year plan there was a $20 million appropriation beyond the A base. Last year it was $30 million. There were no provisions for placing this money on the A base for the next three years. It is obviously that issue with which the Government has concerned itself.

CANAGREX—REQUEST FOR CONTINUATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. There has been widespread concern, expressed by agricultural groups such as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the National Farmers' Union, about the cut-backs in Canagrex. For instance, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture stated in its brief to the Minister last week that it was angered and surprised by that Minister's and the Minister of Finance's arbitrary action.

● (1440)

Also, in view of the tremendous success this corporation has had in its first year when it sold over $16 million worth of farm products, and has another $160 million under consideration, would the Minister be prepared to reconsider his decision and allow this corporation another year of operation to prove that it actually can improve on its first year's successes?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, I must indicate to him that, as far as I am concerned, and as far as this Government is concerned, Canagrex is really history.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member should know that since the Government took the decision with reference to Canagrex I have been in a position to receive representations of all kinds from all regions of the country. Other than the two or three exceptions which the Hon. Member has mentioned, the vast majority of representations that I have received have all been positively in support of the decision taken by the Government.

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT'S DECISION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Minister does not know what the two national farm organizations are. I am referring to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the National Farmers' Union.

Let me ask the Minister of Agriculture why it is, when the United States and the EEC countries are more aggressively marketing and selling agricultural commodities, that we are shutting down the one organization that is set up to sell our commodities abroad? Why is it that we are going in one direction while very other country in the world is more aggressively marketing farm commodities?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that this Government will very aggressively follow the export market for agricultural commodities. We are satisfied, given that very dismal record of Canagrex, that we can do it far more successfully, far more efficiently and effectively, with officials in my Department. Indeed, some reorganization has already begun, and we do not need an additional Crown corporation to provide the much needed export guarantee package. Our Department has already entered into negotiations and had discussions and that role will be carried on more effectively and more successfully with the Export Development Corporation properly financed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BRAZIL—DETENTION OF CANADIAN CITIZEN

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would like to thank him for his help to date. As he is well aware, a Canadian citizen Mr. Roberto Starita, of Prince Rupert, has been held by the Brazilian police at the Praca Maua Prison in Rio de Janiero for three weeks now, without charges. Since Mr. Starita was recognized by the United Nations as a political refugee in 1977, at which time he was in Brazil, has the Minister taken any steps with the United Nations in attempting to secure his immediate release and return to Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have taken no steps with the United Nations yet, but the Hon. Member will know that, due to his own very active intervention in the case, and his contact with me and with my officials, representatives of the Canadian Embassy have been in touch regularly with Mr. Starita, and we are doing everything we can to ensure his security and to prevent any worsening of his situation. If it appears to be appropriate that we make appeals to other bodies, we will do that.

CONDITIONS OF DETENTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since the Brazilian authorities are content to hold Mr. Starita in a windowless, black cage, without even sanitary facilities, without charge and without trial, does the Minister not think it is about time to place a call to the new President-elect of Brazil, Mr. Neves, to protest vigorously to him about this abuse of a Canadian citizen?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we will consider any action that would be productive and helpful in easing this situation. If it comes to a call to Brazilian authorities, we will naturally make that call, but I would only want to make that call after we were sure that other avenues open to us were not going to be productive.

PUBLIC SERVICE

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—JOB CLASSIFICATIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In his 1983-84 annual report, the Auditor General referred to a serious problem in Public Service job classifications. He pointed out that 19 per cent of Public Service positions were overclassified, at very high cost to the taxpayer. When my colleague from Windsor West was President of the Treasury Board, he announced serious measures aimed at correcting this overclassification. Could the Minister inform the House what he has done and what he intends to do to deal with this very serious problem?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as far as job classifications in the Public Service are concerned, the Government generally agrees with what the Auditor General said in his annual report. In fact, all this was already very obvious from the Treasury Board's own audits in 1983. Corrective action was taken in 1984, and the situation has improved considerably. I can assure the Hon. Member that I intend to keep a very close watch on the process to ensure that the new measures are indeed being effective.

CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, one of the countless election promises made by the Conservative Party was that staffing procedures, classification, technological change, designations, and other issues would be made negotiable in public service contracts in the future. The Minister will also know, I am sure, that job contracts for 62,000 public servants expire in the first six months of this year. Will the Minister tell the House that when new contracts are negotiated with the Public Service Alliance or with public service unions in general, job classification will be made negotiable?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have been meeting on those election promises which the Hon. Member mentioned.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Do you find the time?

Mr. de Cotret: Yes, I try to find time. I have been meeting very regularly with our labour leaders. We have had a number of meetings over the past few months and I am happy to report to the Hon. Member that we are making some very interesting progress on all six issues that we are discussing at the moment.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASES IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. It has to do with the recent tour of the NDP action group on jobs in Atlantic Canada and in western Canada. During that tour, business groups and individuals on many occasions brought to our attention that the present government purchasing policy discriminates against businesses in Atlantic Canada and western Canada, since less than 15 per cent of all government purchasing now comes from Atlantic Canada in combination with western Canada.

Considering that discriminatory purchasing policy is in place, and considering the need for jobs in both of those areas, is the Minister prepared to consider placing targets for government purchasing in those two regions?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member I would like to assure him that it also concerns us that there is not more purchasing as far as government procurement is concerned in regions such as the west, including British Columbia, and Atlantic Canada. I do not know whether it is fair to say it is a discriminatory practice. I think what is needed are more measures to ensure that whatever opportunities there are, are known to the local businessmen so that they can at least bid on the business. If the setting of targets, as the Hon. Member has suggested, would help, we will look at that. If, in order to encourage it, the greater selling and the buying of products in regions such as Atlantic Canada and the western areas would be helped by the setting of quotas, we will do it.

PROCUREMENT FROM SMALL BUSINESS SECTOR

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses. He, on many occasions, has indicated that 90 per cent of jobs created in Canada are being created by the small business sector.

Considering that 90 per cent of new jobs are created in the small business sector, the Minister will be aware that less than 30 per cent of all government procurement comes from the small business sector. Is he prepared to consider setting targets and government purchasing policies to assist small business, to assist the real job-creation sector of the country?

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, we are taking a very serious look at the area of government purchasing from small businesses, and consultations will be held throughout the country to give business people a chance to tell us their views, and I will be able to give the Hon. Member an answer at some time in the weeks to come.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—SUGGESTED TOPICS FOR MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his forthcoming trip to the Soviet Union on December 29, will he discuss the continued presence of Soviet armed forces in Afghanistan and, second, will he talk about the dissidents of Ukrainian and Jewish origin?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and his continuing concern about these issues. The answer to both of his questions is yes. I will be discussing the continuing Soviet presence in Afghanistan, and I will naturally be bringing to the attention of Soviet leaders, as I have in the past, the situation of dissidents imprisoned or badly treated in their society.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, my question is directed to the Acting Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the Minister promised a Bill redressing fundamental injustice and discrimination against Indian women in the Indian Act within the next week, Indian women's groups have been pressing for a clarification of just exactly what the Minister meant when he said specifically that he would be presenting a Bill on "the restoration of their rights".

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the only reason I was looking around is that the Minister has a very competent Parliamentary Secretary and, obviously, it was in his right to consider answering the question. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is involved in discussions both with Cabinet and with appropriate groups. When he is ready to make the announcement public, I am sure the Hon. Member will be pleased with it.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope we will be happy with the announcement. Pressure groups would like to know whether it means automatic restoration or reinstatement. Will it include Indian women? Will Indian women have to apply to band councils? Will it include their children, and back to what generation?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Member that those questions are valid. She will see them answered when the Bill is presented.

RELOCATION OF INGLIS PLANT OPERATIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Last week John Inglis in Stoney Creek announced that it was moving part of its operations to a plant which was previously part of the Admiral chain in Cambridge. Will the Minister investigate the terms and conditions of the agreement between the Government of Canada and John Inglis which afforded John Inglis $3 million of Canadian taxpayers' money for the acquisition of Admiral, to determine what job guarantees are in the agreement to protect 150 people and their families from the loss of employment?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to do that for the Hon. Member, and I will be in touch with him.

EFFECT ON EMPLOYEES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in addition to looking at the contract, would the Minister arrange to discuss with Inglis the inappropriateness of its actions over the course of the last number of months with regard to the moving of parts of its operations out of existing plants to other parts of the country which, albeit provides employment in those areas, dislocates the lives of many families in the areas where they were previously located?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would agree that he should first give me an opportunity to read the agreement, if there is such an agreement, and to take appropriate action after I have had an opportunity to read it.

FINANCE

BUDGET PRESENTATION INQUIRY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the meeting today of Premier-designate Frank Miller of Ontario and the Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: —and in keeping with that good old family tradition and principle of consultation and consensus—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: —and as a result of their discussions to this moment, is the Minister of Finance now in a position to inform us when he will be bringing down his next Budget, which the Prime Minister has indicated will be so horrendous?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the unpaid commercial which he has given us, and encourage him to keep doing that. The answer to his question is simply that I do not have a specific date. I think he is aware that we are looking to bring down a Budget in the spring. As we move close to that date, I will be giving the House a specific date.

ONTARIO GASOLINE TAX

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the Minister's comment about commercials, he will need all he can get.

Also with reference to the same meeting, could the Minister of Finance indicate when the next provincial election will take place in Ontario?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: Will the Prime Minister and the Premier-designate be discussing or reassessing federal-provincial taxes on gasoline, in view of the fact that the Province of Ontario has always collected twice as much tax on gasoline as the federal Government in the past? I am wondering whether the Prime Minister is talking—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I am unable to provide all the answers to the questions posed by the Hon. Member. Perhaps those matters are being discussed by the two gentlemen today, right now. Obviously, as the Minister of Energy has indicated, we are working very hard on getting a resolution to very complex tax matters relating to energy policy. I would hope that they will be a part of the Budget.

OVERPAYMENTS—REQUEST FOR RETROACTIVE COVERAGE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. A tax court decision recently resulted in an unemployment insurance overpayment to about 350 persons. In one case an individual owes an overpayment of $40,000. Is the Minister prepared to review the situation and exercise ministerial discretion and consider for unemployment insurance purposes only that these individuals, between 1978 and 1982, were indeed covered under the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the problem to which the Hon. Member refers has arisen as a result of a court ruling that reversed the previous legislation. As a result, once the court had ruled, individuals were not able from then on either to pay into the unemployment insurance fund or to draw benefits from it. If they had, as has happened in this case, the Unemployment Insurance Commission is required by law, under the terms of the Unemployment Insurance Act, to pay back moneys which were paid in improperly, and to retrieve benefits which were paid out improperly.

However, I inform the Hon. Member that if these payments are to be retrieved, it must be done in a fair and humane way. I have instructed that anyone who is on unemployment insurance, welfare, or in that sort of situation, must not be asked for repayment at this time.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister consider changing the law—and she has our commitment on this side of the House that we will give it speedy passage—to alleviate the pressure and stress which are being brought to bear on many of these families? Can the Minister assure us that she will bring in a law which will put them onside and avoid the overpayments?

● (1500)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly give the suggestion that has been put forward by the Hon. Member every consideration. I understand the concern that he expresses. I want to assure him that, at the moment, under the terms of the legislation both I and the Commission have very little discretion with which to act.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

EXPORTATION OF ARMS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) on Friday, February 1, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

CN RAIL DOUBLE TRACKING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to present a petition on behalf of many hundreds of people from the constituency of Kamloops-Shuswap who are concerned that the CN double tracking in the City of Kamloops has caused damage to more than a hundred modular homes and many other regular homes. The residents urge the House of Commons to request the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that CN Rail compensates the residents for all damage resulting from its double tracking program in the vicinity of Kamloops.

SUMMER CANADA PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of my constituents in Espanola, Massey, Nairn, Webbwood and other communities in that area petitioning the House of Commons and the Government to reinstate the Summer Canada Program which has provided between 500 and 700 jobs to young people across the Algoma constituency for the past many years.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES POLICY AND PROGRAMS

MOTION RESPECTING STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

On the Order: Government Notices of Motions:

January 31, 1985—The Minister of State (Government House Leader):

That the quorum of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages Policy and Programs be six members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses, the government and the opposition are represented, and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when four members are present so long as both Houses, the government and the opposition are represented; and

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Section (2) of Standing Order 25, this Government Notice of Motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 202.

[Text]

DELAY IN INVESTMENT IN DREDGES

Question No. 202—Mr. Malépart:

Which regions of the country will be affected by the delay of capital investments in dredges delayed by the Department of Public Works?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): The delay of capital investments in dredges by the Department of Public Works will affect mainly eastern Canada. Shipyards obtain supplies from all over the country, so that other regions will be affected to a lesser degree.

[Translation]

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The House is ready for the question. Mr. Epp (Provencher), seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Ms. Mitchell: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Oh! Oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not one to intrude in the debate, but I thought you had put the question. I was just wondering, as a matter of clarification with respect to this matter, if the question was put, whether it is incumbent then for somebody to stand after the question has been put. I may have misunderstood what happened.

Mr. Speaker: No. The Chair asked if there was anybody who wished to speak. Is the Hon. Member seeking to be heard on this point of order?

Mrs. Finestone: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair asked if there were any further speakers on the matter, proceeded to read the motion that was before the House and started to get to the point of putting the question. With due respect, I had not at that moment put the question. At that point I saw the Hon. Member for Vancouver East and I recognized her.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I am in a difficulty. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) would now like to be heard on a point of order on which I have already ruled. Is that correct?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, it is a point of clarification. When the time lapsed at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) was still on her feet. She had a couple of minutes left. She also stood to be recognized.

Mr. Speaker: In the first place, that is the second point of order. In the second place, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) was present. If she had time left, she should have risen or else somebody else would be seen. In the thrid place, the Table advises me that her time had expired. If the Hon. Member for Mount Royal thinks that her time has not expired, I am advised by the Table that it has. An extension of her time is possible if the House were to give unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. I must therefore recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all Members of the House agree that this is a very important subject that we are discussing today. There are many ramifications that should be raised in addition to the specific parameters of the Bill. I would like particularly to speak to those in my remarks.

When he spoke this morning, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) presented the New Democratic Party position with regard to Bill C-26. We will not oppose this Bill since it extends benefits to widows and widowers. It also includes common law partners who have lived together for three or more years. It corrects some of the language which was sexist.

We will not unduly delay this Bill. However, we would like to speak out again on how limited the coverage of this Bill is, considering the needs of older citizens, particularly those aged 60 to 65. While the Government has removed the sexist language, and we do not object to that, by the nature of the Bill and the limitation of its coverage it continues to practice sexual discrimination against single persons 60 to 65.

The former Member for Winnipeg North Centre, now sitting at the Table, the Hon. Stanley Knowles, stated many times in this House that spousal allowance legislation is sexist. It discriminates against single people. It requires that a man or a woman must live with a partner in order to qualify for the special allowances. There is a glaring omission in the Bill which discriminates against single persons aged 60 to 65, of which there are many in our society today. Statistics Canada estimates that 10 per cent or one in 10 women between the ages of 60 and 64 years are single or divorced.

The task force on older women which this Party conducted several years ago stated that these people in society are the poorest and least secure financially. The number of women in this age bracket has more than doubled since 1971. Women are the poorest of the poor in our society. In many cases they are much worse off than women aged 65 who at least receive the old age pension.

I again remind the House that the Hon. Stanley Knowles spoke to this matter repeatedly. I would like to remind the new Members of the House of one of the speeches he made on May 26, 1980, in regard to this matter. As reported on page 1400 of Hansard, he said:

● (1510)

I want to speak about some of the groups that are still left without the consideration and the attention they deserve. That group consists mainly of women who are alone or unattached. A good deal has been said about this $35 supplement that we are going to give now, and are giving in many cases to single women. . . . But we are still labouring under what I think is one of the most unfair pieces of social legislation we have ever produced in this country, and that is the spouse's allowance. No amount of trying to fix it up, as the former Liberal government did just before it was defeated or as the Conservative government did while it was in power, got us away from the fact that the spouse's allowance continues to be an unfair arrangement. I know this works both ways; it applies to men if they are the younger ones, but there are not that many of them.

I would say that there are more such men at this time than the Hon. Member may have realized in 1980. He went on:

According to this arrangement, women in the age bracket 60 to 65 who might be in need get no consideration at all unless they are married to, and living with, an older spouse. The woman in that age bracket who is a widow, divorced or single receives no consideration at all. I know there are a few cases of women in that age bracket who were spouses and were receiving the spouse's allowance but then lost their husbands and now receive the spouse's allowance until they are 65 years of age. That touches only a small part of the problem.

Mr. Stanley Knowles went on to say:

The only way that it can be corrected is by providing whatever you are going to provide to the spouse between the ages of 60 and 65 without regard to marital status.

I would stress that, Mr. Speaker. I wish the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) would hear this. These allowances should be provided regardless of marital status. Mr. Knowles went on to say:

This business of saying to a woman, "You will get consideration, you will get the pension, you will get the allowance, only if you have a man,"—

—was quite rightly criticized by Mr. Knowles.

I would also remind the House that in July of 1981 I spoke to a resolution put forward by the same former Member for Winnipeg North Centre which dealt with this matter but took it one step further and really looked at the entire question of eligibility for allowances for persons who are not in the workforce, persons who are unemployed or choose to apply for pension at age 60. At that time this resolution, which was presented several times by the then Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, concerned old age security and the guaranteed income supplement as well as the Canada Pension Plan. The recommendation was that these plans should be available at age 60. I said that they should not be available for everyone but should be for those who are not in the labour force or for those who choose, and they should have the right to choose, to retire at age 60. I also said that they should have the assurance that they will have adequate incomes on which to survive.

In many of his remarks, the then Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre went on to say that we should also have a flexible retirement age and that persons such as himself, who at that time was over seven years beyond the age of retirement and indeed now is several years beyond that again and still sits at the Table, should not be forced to retire but should retire as a matter of choice.

Mr. Benjamin: The Minister isn't listening anyway. He's been very busy.

Ms. Mitchell: I think he is not listening. Perhaps he will read these words and ponder them later.

The Minister's own officials in the federal Department of Health and Welfare estimate that there are 80,000 men and women between the ages of 60 and 64 who are being excluded from the provisions of this Bill on the basis of marital status. In effect, Mr. Speaker, this represents the discrimination and perhaps even the sexual discrimination which is prevalent in this legislation. To quote the Government's own discussion paper on equality issues in the federal law which was raised in the House last week, I would say the following:

The question is whether marital status is an appropriate reason for choosing between equally needy people, particularly when the criteria for receipt of an allowance is need.

There should not be any reason to choose. In fact, this Bill condemns the estimated 80,000 needy people who are in the 60 to 64-year old bracket who happen to be single to the tender mercies of their respective provincial Governments, because if they are in need they have no other alternative but to apply for welfare. We know that welfare payments are so low that many people are lining up at food banks.

I would like to refer, as did my colleague, to a task force on older women that we put in operation which presented resolutions that were accepted by the New Democratic Party in 1983. This Party, unlike the Liberal and Conservative Parties, is very proud to tell the public and the House about the type of policy which we believe is very important and which is a part of the goals that we are advocating.

As a result of our task force on older women, we presented a number of policy resolutions that apply to older women which I have advocated in this House. We advocated employment programs for women, particularly targeted to women in their middle years so that those women who have raised families and who have not had many years in the workforce would have an opportunity to pay into the Canada Pension Plan and would have equal opportunities for adequate benefits at the point of retirement. We also approved the following resolution which would provide adequate incomes for older women:

Until such time as a universal guaranteed income system is implemented—

—if ever—

—the federal government should lower the eligibility age for OAS-GIS for all unemployed people to age 60;—

Again, this is following on the resolution of Mr. Knowles.

The Old Age Pension must be raised above the poverty line with full indexing;

In view of the increasing number of unemployed and especially the number of older women living in poverty, that the NDP press the federal government to establish an action study group with a view to instituting a guaranteed annual income for older people under 65 who are unemployed—

We went on to talk of other pension reforms that were needed. I mention this because when we are looking at revisions to legislation that will affect our senior citizens and citizens in the pre-retirement ages, we should be looking at these matters in a very broad context. In many countries the pension age itself is lower than age 65. I think it is pretty regressive that we are not looking at universal pension eligibility at age 65. Until such time as we can persuade governments to look at that in a major, progressive way, we feel that the benefits for those who are covered by spousal allowances should be extended to include single people. I think this is important not only for single women but also for single men.

A recent study done in the City of Vancouver looked at unemployment in the Province of British Columbia, and I am sure the situation is the same in all provinces. This study concluded that there is a whole new group of chronic unemployed in our country which consists of older, experienced, skilled men, many of them skilled tradespeople and professionals who have now become redundant. These men are in the age group 55 to 65. I am sure many of us have encountered very tragic situations in our constituency offices. Certainly I have had many cases in my riding of construction workers, many of them immigrants from Italy, who have come to Canada, worked hard all their lives, raised families, often built their homes and who never received a cent of unemployment insurance until they reached the last year or two of their working lives. Now, those people are not only out of work and judged redundant, but they cannot qualify for retraining programs. They are on the scrap-heap. It is a terrible situation. When those people reach the age of 60 it is important that they have the option to have a minimum level of pension income until they are able to receive the full amount at age 65.

I present these points to urge the Minister not to be complacent and not to limit his planning and social policy review to the extension of the spousal allowance. We will not object to the passage of this Bill, but we must pass it with the understanding that it is very limited and that the needs of our older citizens are great and are becoming greater because of the unemployment situation which affects older people more than many of us in the middle-age group.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? If not, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Peterson).

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank you for recognizing me, as this is the first opportunity I have had to address the House of Commons. I would also like to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on the contents of the Bill.

As the Member for Hamilton West, I follow in the path of two very distinguished Conservative Members. The first is the Hon. Ellen Fairclough. She has the distinction of being the first woman Cabinet Minister in Canada. In fact, last Friday she was honoured by women in Toronto. The second is the Hon. Lincoln Alexander, who was the first black Canadian to serve in the House and the first black Member of Cabinet. Both of these people contributed in their own unique way to the betterment of the City of Hamilton, this Chamber and Canada. It is certainly my hope to use their performance as a yardstick to ensure that the people of Hamilton West are properly represented.

In addition, I would like to extend my gratitude to the electorate of Hamilton West who have expressed confidence in me and in the Government.

It was 17 years ago when Lincoln Alexander, my friend and former MP from Hamilton West, rose in the House to address the Speech from the Throne. In that address he challenged the Government of the day to be socially compassionate. I agree with his remarks and I quote: "In a just society it should be the continuing responsibility of government to be constantly aware of and concerned about the degree of the quality of life which Canadians experience. If there is any disparity, no matter how little, then the Government should set itself immediately to reducing it, thereby assuring that each and every individual can live a full and productive life and become an essential part of the mainstream of Canadian life". That, coupled with the Government's commitment to a comprehensive social security system—one which responds to the changing nature and needs of our society—is encompassed in the Bill before us. The legislation to amend the Old Age Security Act represents one of the many positive policy decisions which our Government has promised and which it will implement.

In the debates during the week prior to the Christmas recess there was a lot of heated discussion on the concept of universality of social programs. Nothing was really accomplished by the Opposition except a lot of television footage. I had the opportunity to watch those exchanges and, in the context of this Bill, I would like to offer my own thoughts on universality in our social programs.

Bill C-26 will amend the Old Age Security Act. It will amend a social program which was introduced in 1975. That social allowance, then or now, has never been universal. This Bill proposes that all low-income widowed persons aged 60 to 64 should become eligible to receive the spouse's allowance, regardless of when their spouse passed away. The Minister of National Health and Welfare stated in his news release of November 15, 1984 that income support for older Canadians—the guaranteed income supplement and the spouse's allowance—are programs which are not universal but available only to those who are in need. If these were truly universal social programs of the type that some would advocate, then all widows and widowers aged 60 to 64, regardless of their income, would receive the spouse's allowance.

If such were the case with this Bill, then the widow of our famous but fictitious $500,000 bank president who is living comfortably on investment income would also receive the benefit. Is this what some who oppose it mean when they speak about universality of social programs? I do not feel this is the logic which Canadians want their Government to apply to social programs at this time of economic restraint. Such Utopian thinking should be left to those who ponder it.

My constituents and I applaud the Minister's grab-the-bull-by-the-horns approach. It is a hands-on approach which recognizes the needs of older Canadians. It couples those needs with sound fiscal management.

Some may ask why we did not go further with this Bill and why we excluded low-income persons in the 60 to 64 age group who are single, divorced or separated from the spouse's allowance program. Estimates indicate that there are some 80,000 such individuals. In addition, there are 250,000 low-income married couples in this age category who have not received financial assistance in the form of security benefits. For the most part, assistance for any of the people who are in need will continue to be provided and administered by many of our provincial Government programs, with assistance from the federal Government, until such time as further extensions can be made responsibly. Similarly, if the spouse's allowance was provided to all low-income persons in the 60 to 64 age group, it would cost approximately $1.5 billion in the first year.

If the Liberal Opposition during their regime had exercised fiscal responsibility, the ability to provide more resources for social programs may have been possible. However, as a result of the previous Government's policies, we are prevented from further extending the social expenditures required to facilitate all the needs of our senior Canadians. But, we cannot use the fiscal shortcomings of the previous administration as a scapegoat. Instead, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare has stated, "even in this period of economic restraint we have an obligation to those who most need our help".

With this Bill it is clear that we are fulfilling that obligation. It is an obligation which provides for widowed persons who are nearing age 65, but are not yet eligible for old age security and guaranteed income supplement benefits. It is these Canadians who are consistently identified as being the most urgently in need. In fact, it is estimated that over 60 per cent of widowed Canadians who are age 60 to 64, most of whom are women, would qualify for the proposed extension to the spouse's allowance. In December of 1985 there will be 93,000 beneficiaries collecting spouse's allowance. The proposed extension to other widowed persons aged 60 to 64 will increase the number of beneficiaries up by 85,000, with only an annual cost of $190 million in the 1985-86 fiscal year. This initiative by the Minister represented the next logical step in the provision of greater income assistance to the near elderly.

In 1979 the Conservative Government's amendments to the spouse's allowance program extended entitlements for 60 to 64-year old widowers or widows who had been receiving the spouse's allowance benefits prior to the death of the pensioner or spouse. This extension of SPA to all needy widowers or widows in this age group, as recommended by the Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform, would further remove some of the inequities which currently exist in the treatment of widows or widowers who are aged 60 to 64 under the Old Age Security Act.

This proposed amendment to Bill C-26, Mr. Speaker, results from a firm commitment made by our Party during the 1984 election campaign. In the Speech from the Throne on November 5, 1984, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated that "during the coming session of Parliament we would be asked to consider legislation to extend the income-tested spouse's allowance to widows and widowers aged 60 years to 64 years regardless of the age of their spouse at death". It is indeed, Mr. Speaker, truly positive to see another campaign promise, reaffirmed in the Throne Speech, translated into legislation. This action goes a long way in restoring the faith which Canadians once had in our parliamentary system. It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that this Government is responding to the needs of all Canadians.

This is international youth year, a year of great concern for our youth, Mr. Speaker, and across Canada and throughout the world, Governments, organizations and private business should be sponsoring a wide range of awareness programs for our youth. Our Government has done so, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) will be announcing employment incentives geared for our youth. We recognize the important contribution made by our young people to Canada.

In Bill C-26 the Government is showing sensitivity to the needs of our near senior Canadians, a group of Canadians who have already contributed to the wealth of our country, and nowhere is this contribution more evident than in the City of Hamilton. What is in the Bill, in my view, is necessary. It is timely and deserves the attention of the House in terms of quick passage. I can foresee no obstacles which would preempt the swift passage of this Bill through the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech?

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, not to ask any questions or make any comments but, rather, to congratulate the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Peterson) on his maiden speech. I know that he will follow honourably in the footsteps of—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We shall resume debate.

[Translation]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased that finally, after five months, the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Peterson) can speak to the Canadian people. I regret, however, that it has taken complaints on the part of the Opposition to the majority in this House and especially to those Members elected in the Hamilton area who have refrained from rising in the House until today. I expect to hear many more speeches by the Member for Hamilton West and also by the Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin). I know the Hon. Member is following in some very important footsteps, those of Mrs. Fairclough, among others. I was indeed delighted to be a guest last Friday at a dinner with Mrs. Fairclough. This Progressive Conservative is an example to all Canadian women, and I was very happy to be one of her guests.

He has a big pair of shoes to fill with regard to his predecessor, the former Member for Hamilton West, whom the Hon. Member did not name or perhaps forgot to name, the Hon. Stanley Hudecki, who, I think, had a reputation among all Members of this House as a member who rose above party politics and interests. He was truly an Hon. Member in every sense of the word. I just want to say, as a Member of this House, that we miss him very much.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the women of Canada, on behalf of my Party and on my own behalf, I am very pleased to support what has been said so far on the subject of the spouse's allowance. However, and I think the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) referred to this point before, there is a small problem with respect to the present wording of the Bill. When the Bill indicates that the spouse's allowance is transferred to Canadian widows or widowers, it reflects, and I would say it does so by omission rather than by design, to recognize the economic problems facing Canadians between the ages of 60 and 64 who are either separated, divorced or single.

[English]

I know, for example, Mr. Speaker, that the Government has introduced a measure which we will all support. At the same time, however, I believe we have to recognize that there is an inherent discrimination, as has been pointed out by Hon. Members on this side of the House, with respect to this particular piece of legislation. I would suggest that the Minister and his officials, in making the decision to extend the spouse's allowance to widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64—which, by the way, I think is a terrific move—should have gone that extra step and extended those same benefits to people who, for whatever reason, have chosen never to marry or who have not been as successful in their marital endeavours as others and have ended up as separated or divorced Canadians.

I know that in my own province—having had the privilege of working on the amendments to the Ontario Human Rights Code which was introduced by another Conservative Government some three years ago—that particular Government decided that within the context of the Ontario Human Rights law, there would be a non-discrimination clause on the basis of marital status. I would suggest to the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) that, prior to the implementation of this law in which there is an exclusion of separated, divorced and single Canadians, the Minister in fact investigate whether this particular proposed law is in fact in contravention of the Ontario Human Rights Code. The Human Rights Code does in fact specify that goods and services must be made available to all Canadians with no discrimination on the basis of marital status. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the current legislation in its present form is clearly discriminatory, not only toward those Canadians who have chosen never to marry but towards those who are no longer married.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, if I can speak on behalf of a number of the women in this House, that there are a number of politicians in general who, for whatever reason, have chosen to devote themselves to political life and have either not married or their marriages have not been successful. I believe there are a number of people in this House who would agree with me that the status of being a divorced or single Canadian is not one which should subject anyone to government discrimination such as will happen under the law represented by this particular Bill.

I would suggest that the original intention of the law was good, that is, to extend the current benefits which at this time are not made available to those Canadians between the ages of 60 and 64 who happen to have been widowed.

Only last weekend I had the opportunity of speaking in my constituency office with a woman who will be able to benefit through this particular Act. However, we are putting ourselves in the very difficult situation, Mr. Speaker, of actually discriminating not only on the basis of marital status—because the law will not cover separated, divorced or single Canadians—but we are also putting ourselves in the situation of discriminating against married people between the ages of 60 and 64 who naturally, notwithstanding their financial need, will not be eligible for this particular benefit as long as they remain married. I will use as an example the situation of the woman with whom I dealt most recently. She happens to be 61 years of age. Her husband was 64 when he died in the last few days only. As a result of his decease, this woman, when the Act comes into force, will be actually eligible for the benefits which would have formerly only accrued to those spouses who are married. At the same time, even though her family happens to be a family in need—neither she nor her husband were wage earners at the time of his death—if her husband had not died, he would not have been eligible for any benefits under the spouse's allowances, nor would she, until he reached the age of 65 years, which would have meant that her benefit would have been at least one year in abeyance. Therefore, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we not only have a clear case of discrimination against single, separated and divorced Canadians between the ages of 60 and 64, but we also have a possible case of discrimination against married couples, both spouses of whom happened to be between the ages of 60 and 64, who would not, under this current rather limited extension of benefits, be eligible for any assistance.

I believe, if I can read into the rationale of the Minister in introducing this legislation, he is recognizing that there is an age group in our society which under certain special circumstances needs special short-term assistance. I feel that the original introduction of the spouse's allowance as a concept, the original introduction of the guaranteed income supplement as a concept, and the original indexation of those supplements under previous Liberal Governments, were introduced because the Government recognized that, certainly in the short term, we needed to provide direct financial assistance to those individuals who were not immediately benefiting from the kind of pension reform which we are suggesting over the long term.

I certainly concur with the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) with regard to the absence of programs available to widows between the ages of 60 and 64 as well as to other unfortunate individuals who may be married and who, through no fault of their own, have lost their jobs, have not been able to compete in the technologically changing market-place, and have been left to the vagaries of the provincial welfare system. In an effort to address the discrimination issue which has been raised in this document, the Minister should consider working with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and developing programs which will assist those Canadians who, through no fault of their own, have become disenfranchised because of the technologically changing market-place. I refer to construction workers in my own constituency.

I think it is important that we speak for all Canadians, men and women. It is certainly of interest to me as a women that this is probably the only Bill before us in the House of Commons to date in which the nomenclature used is "she" and is relating to "her", i.e., the feminine gender. I think it is implicit in the Government's approach to things that it suggests that the only people who are in need of pension assistance or supplements are women. I certainly agree that it is time the Government introduced an over-all pension reform package for people across Canada and that the major beneficiaries of such a package should be the women of Canada. However, it is also about time that we recognized that we have a responsibility to all Canadian women and men between the ages of 60 and 64. We must guarantee them some kind of an economic security.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in its present form, the Bill is clearly discriminatory. It not only discriminates against people who are single or were never married or whose marriage failed, it also discriminates against those who are married today to a woman or a man between sixty and sixty-four years old. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has taken a small step, but I think he should now take a bigger one. If he really intends to tackle this issue courageously, he should immediately bring before the House a complete package of changes to our pension system to help those who are in need, men and women, men between 60 and 64 and women between 60 and 64, whether they are single, widowed or still married.

We know there are couples who need help. The husband or wife, for some reason, and I will give you another example . . . Last week, in my riding, I met a family where the husband who had worked for more than twenty years for a company called Canron, was fired as of February 1 because the company closed down. His wife worked for Arrow Shirts for fourteen years, and last year in November she was laid off because of lack of work in the textile industry and because this Government had failed to take certain measures in this area. It means that two people between the ages of sixty and sixty-four who have worked all their lives are now being fired by their employers within three months of each other. It will be almost impossible for them to find work.

To help these families it is not enough to bring in a small package of reforms that apply only to widows and widowers. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) should set up a clear-cut plan to reform the pension system, which I think would have the support of all Canadians, and especially Members on this side of the House.

[English]

We need more than simply very small reform in pension benefits for a very restricted group of Canadians. We need an over-all pension and re-employment strategy involving the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) with respect to the ILAP designations, which have been helpful in certain sectors. The Minister of Employment and Immigration must also be involved. A designation under ILAP could assist many of the workers at Consolidated Bathurst in my own community who are facing financial ruin and bankruptcy and will be reduced to welfare roles. The majority of them had combined years of service of over 25 years when the company chose to close its doors.

We need more than the measures which are being introduced. We need an over-all strategy. In expressing his concern for older Canadians, the Minister of National Health and Welfare should act with the Minister of Employment and Immigration to develop programs which will assist our seniors financially and help them re-integrate into the workplace when that is possible.

The only thing that many older Canadians have been offered by the current Government is a threat that if they remain on unemployment insurance benefits for too long one of Flora's private police force will ensure that they are removed from them. In the context of the employment programs that are going to be launched by the Government, it behooves all of us to remember those Canadians who have been disenfranchised by the technological age and have found themselves on the street when companies have closed their doors.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What is the relevance of this?

Ms. Copps: The Minister of National Health and Welfare may find it terribly irrelevant that I am talking about older workers who have lost their jobs. The Minister will be aware that we must ensure that widows as well as divorced and single people are receiving assistance from the Government when they need it most. We must also ensure that those workers between the ages of 60 and 64 who happen, through no fault of their own, to be married, can receive some assistance from the Government. The Minister is suggesting that my concern for workers between the ages of 60 and 64 who happen to be married are not covered under the legislation. It is a concern, and that is the relevance of my remarks to this particular Bill.

Excluding married couples, separated, divorced and single people between the ages of 60 and 64 suggests that the Government has no programs to assist them and is directing its efforts only toward one rather small segment of the demographic population between the ages of 60 and 64. No one would argue that the Government should be ignoring the small, albeit deserving, group of widows and widowers. At the same time the Minister must work with the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Employment and Immigration to ensure that older workers who have been contributing for 20 or 30 years and, through no fault of their own, find themselves out on the street, will receive an indication from the Government as to the action it is prepared to take. Rather than doing away with the general training incentives and cutting back on the amount of government based job creation through Canada Works, the Government must come forth with innovative programs. These programs should be targeted not only to young people who need job opportunities but also to the older workers. Most specifically, they should be directed to the target group that is being addressed in this legislation.

Members from all sides of the House who have had a chance to meet with those workers in their constituency on a daily or weekly basis will know that there is nothing more heart-rending than to meet a grown man in tears because he has lost a job after 30 years and is on the street with nowhere to go.

I ask the Minister to work with his colleagues to make sure that there are programs to assist those workers. The Government cannot simply turn its back on those workers between the ages of 60 and 64 who may not come under the category being addressed by this legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare says that this has nothing to do with the Bill. It has quite a lot to do with the Bill, for had he had an opportunity to meet with those workers aged 60 to 64 who have lost their jobs, who have been laid off as a result of plant closures, he would know indeed that those workers, widows and widowers alike, need assistance under the programs, they need from this Government very specific help measures such as they do not have at this time.

Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps you might urge the Minister to join forces with all interested parties in the various departments—the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of Labour, for instance—with a view to implementing a genuine economic policy for all needy Canadians without jobs between ages 60 and 64. What we do not need is a Bill which discriminates against unmarried people, those who are divorced or separated, or those who are still married and whose spouses are under 65. Give us that kind of policy and you will have our full support, because we in the Liberal Party realize that the people most in need in our society right now are those people between 60 and 64 who have been laid off through no fault of their own and who are without hope, who have not been promised anything, or who have had lots of promises but no action on the part of this Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers).

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say one thing to the Hon. Member who has just resumed her seat. The dear lady can say that we are responsible for all our woes, but I would rather suggest that if anyone has to be held accountable for the current situation throughout Canada, it has to be the Liberal Party which has been in office for over twenty years. We all agree that elderly Canadians deserve more than they are getting, and I think that for the first time in history the Progressive Conservative Party is deeply concerned about the most needy Canadians. That is what I wanted to tell my charming colleague, for I am sure she knows that her Government is responsible for the sorry mess we now have in this country. She might even commend the Progressive Conservative Government for trying to make the situation better. That is the comment I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he ought to commend the Minister of Employment and Immigration for announcing in the House a kind of security plan to throw out all workers aged 50 to 65 because, she said, they are not looking for work. We will need over 700 public servants to force them to give up filing unemployment insurance claims. Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Is the Member asking us on the Liberal side of the House to congratulate his Government when the only concrete and substantial move we have seen it take with respect to employment programs for older workers has been to suggest that we extend our security force by 700 workers so that I can insist that older Canadians who are not looking for work have their unemployment insurance benefits removed? Are we supposed to thank the Government for those initiatives?

If the Member and other Ministers can table specific programs in the House which are geared toward older working Canadians and can show Canadians what initiatives the Government has taken since it was given its massive mandate on September 4, I will be first to applaud. However, I will not applaud when the only initiatives I have seen from the Minister of Employment and Immigration has been a suggestion that older workers do not want to work—

Mr. McDermid: What nonsense!

Mr. Taylor: Show some common sense.

Ms. Copps: —and the suggestion that they are staying on unemployment. If any of the Members had happened to show up at the hearings on supplementary estimates for labour, manpower and immigration, they would have been apprised of what I am talking about.

Mr. McDermid: What has this to do with the Bill?

Ms. Copps: I am responding to the question about why we are not applauding the Government. We will not applaud it when it brings in punitive measures to cut off older workers from unemployment insurance benefits and punitive measures which will do more to hurt older Canadians than the Minister of National Health and Welfare can do to assist them.

If the Member can clarify the measures which have been implemented by the Government to assist those older disenfranchised workers, I invite him to do so. The record of his Government to date has been a punitive one against older workers, which it will live to regret in the next election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments have now been completed. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to say to the Minister, quite frankly—why is he shaking his head? Are you paying attention or just sitting there fooling around?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain has the floor for debate.

Mr. Deans: That is what I thought you said, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): A point of order.

Mr. Deans: We can't have the floor at the same time.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I want to tell the House Leader of the NDP that he has also occasionally risen on points of order for clarification.

I would like some clarification from the Chair. When someone from an opposition Party has spoken, in terms of numbers in the House, do you not then go to the government side?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe that Citation 301 on page 99 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition indicates that the Speaker has the right to recognize any Member he sees rising in the Chamber. I did not see another Member rising except the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. Therefore, I recognized him.

I now recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would have thought that the Minister would want me to rise and speak. I was about to say, before I was so rudely interrupted by him, that we did in fact applaud this somewhat small but nevertheless necessary measure. I was taken aback when he leaped to his feet to try to stop me from saying that. I began to wonder whether I should be re-evaluating my position or whether perhaps I did not understand the nature of the Minister's efforts in this regard.

I want to say to the Minister that I was reading my Hansard, as I frequently do in the evenings when the House has risen and I am finished with the three or four hours of work in my office. I went home the other night, made myself a cup of coffee around 11.30 and got out my Hansard from April 26, 1982.

Mr. McDermid: Which your researcher found for you.

Mr. Deans: No, my researcher did not, strange though it may seem. I happen to read Hansard every evening before I go to sleep just to keep abreast of what the Government is doing.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That explains a lot of things.

Mr. Deans: Members may recall that last week, when the Minister rose, he was pointing out how he went home and read over the reports and came to the conclusion that what he was doing was right. I went back and read over Hansard and came to the conclusion that, to the extent that the Minister, the Ministry and the Government are doing anything at all in this regard, what they are doing is right. In fact, not only is it right, it is consistent with what our Party has been suggesting the Minister ought to do for many years. In fact, as I was saying, as reported on page 16597 of Hansard, when the Liberal Party was in government, my good friend and former colleague, the previous Member for Winnipeg North Centre, the Hon. Stanley Knowles, now frequently seated at the table, asked the then Minister of Health and Welfare, the Hon. Monique Bégin, the following:

● (1600)

My question this afternoon relates to my concern about the unfairness of the plan respecting old age pensions under which certain women—there are some men but it is mostly women—between the ages of 60 and 65 can get a pension provided they are married to someone who is 65 or over. However, persons between the ages of 60 and 65 who are single, whose husbands died before that age, are not allowed any such pension. Will the Minister seriously consider a plan to change that, so that persons between the ages of 60 and 65 who are in need will get that kind of pension?

The Member went on to explain some other regrets. This was his first day back in the House, Mr. Speaker, you may recall, after he had suffered that rather serious illness from which be made a remarkable and miraculous recovery.

When I started, I wanted to congratulate the Minister for having recognized the need, and I do. I understand that for those who will receive this, it will be a godsend. They will be delighted to have it, and have it they must. I say to the Minister though that he has not quite gone far enough. The cost of going the extra distance is difficult to determine, I must say, but nevertheless it is a cost that I believe ought to be borne.

It is unnecessary, I suggest to the Minister, to restrict this payment to those individuals who have been married. The former Member for Winnipeg-North Centre, Mr. Knowles, made reference to that. In his question, in 1982, he indicated his concern for those between the ages of 60 and 65, who were single and who found themselves unable to continue to work for a number of economic or, for that matter, health reasons and who found themselves without any regular adequate income.

The Minister frequently speaks about compassion. I know him well enough to know that he speaks with conviction. He speaks with compassion about compassion. I do not in any way question him, and I think this would be an opportunity for him to display that compassion beyond what the Government may well have identified it wants to do in the meantime and to take into account the submissions of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). He has suggested that perhaps this would be the time to enlarge the scope and to look at ways of taking into account the needs of those who were never married but who nevertheless are between the ages of 60 and 65—I want to talk about other people in a moment—and who are frankly in very difficult financial straits at this point in the history of Canada.

I must be honest and admit that I do not have an economic analysis of it—I do not know whether the Minister has or not and if he does, I would be interested to hear it—nor do I have any kind of accounting that would show me clearly and in accurate terms exactly what the cost would be to extend this level of benefit to other than simply the spouses of those who have been in receipt of the old age pension. I do want to suggest to the Minister that, whatever the cost, I do not think it is impossible for us to find a way to fund it. I do not think for one moment it is impossible for us to reallocate funding from other less worthy causes. I do not think it is impossible for us to look into ways of making this available.

It strikes me that an allowance based on need—which this allowance is I think we all agree—that has as its primary criterion that one has to have been married is unfair. It is unfair, Mr. Speaker. If an allowance is based on need, it ought to be paid to those who are in need on the same basis. If you are in need, you are in need and whether you were or were not married does not alter the fact that you are in need. If your circumstances are the same in terms of your financial capacities, then quite clearly you should be treated in the same way by your Government.

I think the distance that the Minister has gone is fine, but I seriously urge the Minister to go the other short distance and attempt to find a way to accommodate the question to which my colleague who formerly represented Winnipeg North Centre, my colleague from Beaches, and probably my colleague who now represents the riding of Winnipeg North Centre would want him to give some consideration.

I know the Minister himself is aware of the speeches made in the House of Commons by his colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), as recently as May 10, 1984. She made speeches on other days going back to June and February, 1984. There were statements made by another colleague on those occasions with regard to the problems of people in Canada who, because of the economic conditions that now exist, and which did not exist in the 1950s, 1960s and 1970s, are unable to find employment. They have not yet attained what we consider to be the normal retirement age and, as a result of that, they are unable to continue to hold on to what they accumulated throughout their lifetime as a result of hard work.

I do not doubt, when the Minister goes back to Provencher, that he meets in his constituency office every weekend or at the church on Sunday mornings with citizens who are in their middle fifties, maybe in their late fifties, who have worked hard all of their lives and who have been employed perhaps in many instances by the only major employer in the area. Perhaps that major employer has ceased to operate for any number of reasons, and if he has not ceased to operate, at least is operating at a dramatically reduced level. I am confident that there are people who have brought to the Minister's attention the terrible situation in which they have found themselves.

On the weekend in Hamilton—I am sure it is the same in every constituency, I do not doubt that for a moment and no doubt my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Peterson), meets the same kind of people I do—I had an opportunity to discuss with a family its particular difficulty. Here was a man and his wife who over the many years raised a family, had worked at one of the plants in Hamilton and worked there for the better part of 30 years, not quite, but almost. He had an excellent work record but suddenly discovered that the plant in terms of its management was redundant. This plant no longer manufactured a product that was saleable in the consumer market-place. It was not his fault. Every day he went in and he made the product he was asked to make. He made it to the best of his ability, and the company sold it. Gradually, with the passage of time and the introduction of new technology, it became unnecessary for that product to be made. This man, it could be said as an aside—and I am not sure if one can make an aside to something one says oneself—was the victim of two things, neither of them of his own making. He was a victim of a changing market condition and of a rapidly changing economic climate. He may well have been the victim of bad decision-making on the part of the management of the company, which ought to have been able, with proper planning, to alter the manufacturing process, seek out additional markets and manufacture new products. Unfortunately, that did not happen.

Here he is at age 56. He has been to many employers. I have personally sent him to a number of people who I thought might give him a job, but he cannot find one in the Hamilton area. he travelled to Toronto, Kitchener and down to St. Catharines, but there were no jobs. He came to the conclusion somewhat reluctantly that his age is working against him. Although we all know that we cannot discriminate because of age, there are hints that that sort of thing happens. It is not unreasonable to think that at age 56 maybe he is being overlooked just because of his age. He offered to take anything. He cannot find anything. He ran out of unemployment insurance benefits and therefore has no income of his own. His wife works but only part time because she cannot find a job. They have to pay what is left on the mortgage which they assumed 20 years ago. It is not a great deal, but nevertheless it is there. They cannot make their payments. What do we do for a man like this? What do we say to someone like this? He is representative of a host of people.

The Minister brought forward this particular amendment to the Old Age Security Act. Again I say to him in all fairness and honesty that I applaud the initiative. However, it does not really address today's problems. It addresses a part of today's problems, a very small part, but it obviously does not address the much larger, if not more important, problem confronting many workers in the 55 to 60 age group. We have reached the point where we in the House of Commons as Members of Parliament have an obligation to look seriously at the plight of those people about whom I am talking today in a representative sense. We have an obligation to find the ways necessary for them to re-enter the workforce. The Government would love it to happen, but it is realistic and recognizes that with tens if not hundreds of thousands of people in the age bracket of 20 to 30 also looking for work, the chance of our being able to entice employers to hire those in their later fifties and early sixties is somewhat difficult. Also, we would be put in the position of playing off one age group against another. I find that offensive, to say the least. We have reached the point where this administration, if it wants to make a mark on Canadian history politically, must move to reform basic pension plans.

This legislation will not do it. Tinkering will not be enough. There is nothing as devastating as to have worked all your life and to reach the point where you are finally looking ahead seven, eight or nine years to retirement, only to discover that not only do you not have a job, not only do you not have an income of some reasonable proportion, but during the period of time you had anticipated you would be working you are not contributing to a pension plan. This reduces pensionable income and therefore reduces the income received when you reach what is generally accepted as the pension age. You are caught in a catch-22 situation. On the one hand, you have no income while you are supposed to be working because you cannot find work and you are losing the assets you accumulated through your labour. On the other hand, because you do not have that income you are detrimentally affecting, if not eliminating, the potential pension income you would have had, had you been able to work to the normal retirement age.

It is unacceptable that we as a Parliament are not dealing with that issue right now. I know the Minister feels as strongly as I do about it. This has to become one of the highest priorities of Parliament. We cannot afford to gloss it over, neither can we afford to be overly lavish in our praise of the small change. We are thankful for the small change. Those who will receive it will be grateful for it and it is right that they should get it, but it is insignificant when viewed over and against the need.

I want simply to say to the Minister that whatever else the Government believes it has on its agenda, we have to deal with this matter. We must deal with it. We cannot put if off. There is no way back for those individuals. With every passing month, with every passing year, the dilemma confronting them becomes even more enormous and the hardship more unacceptable. We cannot apologize to them eight years from now and say, "We really wish we could have done something for you; unfortunately it was just not possible". That will be too late for them. Therefore, it is necessary that we agree together in the House that we will find the time to deal as expeditiously as possible with the dilemma confronting those particular people about whom I speak today.

If the Minister will commit himself to bringing forward legislation in this regard during this session of this Parliament, I will commit this Party to making sure that we put forth every single effort we can to guarantee the success of the legislation. I ask him to recognize that delay compounds the hardship. We simply cannot have delay on this matter.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy)—Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements (a) Consultation with provinces (b) Reviews of equalization payment made to Manitoba; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—Nuclear Energy (a) Request for parliamentary inquiry into industry (b) Industry's accountability; the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy)—Employment (a) Student summer jobs (b) Allocation of funds. (c) Government consultation.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for recognizing me. I started a diet this morning and I thought for a minute that I was having excellent success and would not be recognized.

This is the first time I have risen in the House to speak formally in a debate. I would ask for your patience for a few moments so that I might acknowledge and congratulate you on your appointment as Acting Speaker. I know you will do a great job, as you have done to this point. Also I should like to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). This is the first opportunity I have had to do so. I know he will do an excellent job. I had the opportunity of working with him when I was a Minister in the provincial Government. I know how dedicated he is to his position of responsibility and his desire to do well for the Canadian public.

I also take this opportunity to thank my constituents for showing me that they had faith in my ability to be their Member. I will try to live up to their expectations. Particularly I thank all those people who worked for me during my campaign.

Winnipeg-St. James is a relatively new riding. It was assembled in 1979 with the redistribution and was represented by a friend of mine, Mr. Robert Lane, a Progressive Conservative.

It was then held by the present Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). For some reason he decided to move to the constituency formerly held by the Hon. Stanley Knowles. Whatever were the reasons that made him decide this, it seems to have worked out well for both him and me.

● (1620)

Winnipeg-St. James is an urban riding. The Winnipeg International Airport is almost in the centre of my riding. As the Member of Parliament for Winnipeg-St. James, I cannot guarantee that I will welcome you every time you arrive there, even though that may be the custom. That gives a general idea of the location of our riding.

The riding is a good cross-section of Manitoba. Citizens of over 20 ethnic backgrounds form an integral part of the social fabric of Manitoba. Like most Manitobans, they are very hard working citizens. Some are long-time residents, some are immigrants, and some are new Canadian citizens. We have a good cross-section of the various citizens in our province in my riding.

We have blue collar workers, executives and free entrepreneurs, so we have a cross-section of the business community as well. Without getting you too excited, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that it is the home base of the Grey Cup champions for 1984, the Winnipeg Blue Bombers. I tried to congratulate them under Standing Order 21, and I almost got it through. At this time I would like to congratulate the Winnipeg Blue Bombers, the reigning Grey Cup champions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Minaker: I did not want to say that the Speaker used to be an Edmonton Eskimo. I am proud and privileged to represent Winnipeg-St. James. Having made those few comments, I would now like to speak to the Bill.

As a former Minister of Community Services in the Province of Manitoba, I had day-to-day contact with the very problem that this Bill will help to alleviate. I know the sincerity and commitment of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). I applaud him for the first step he has taken in alleviating the problem that exists for the 60 to 64 years olds in the low income bracket. I support his approach to consultation with the public and the provinces. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) commented on the former Liberal Government consulting with the provinces and being leader in the consultation field. That was not the case when I was Minister of Community Services. If being called to a meeting, sitting at a table and having the federal Minister say what the Government was going to do is consultation, I will not agree. I know the present Health Minister will not follow that approach.

The objective of this Bill is to provide assistance to low income widowed persons in the 60 to 64 year age group who meet the same 10 year residence rule as other spouse's allowance recipients without regard to the age at which the spouse died. As a result of this reform in the present law, about 85,000 widowers and widows aged 60 to 64 will qualify. There is a definite need for this. I understand that when this Bill is passed and the program comes into effect in September, about 61 per cent of the entire widowed population in that age group will qualify. This clearly indicates that there is a need in this area and we will be alleviating part of that need.

The maximum benefit will be $536.26 per month and will be income tested. This reform will remove the inequities which currently exist in the treatment of low income widowed persons. It represents the next logical step in the provision of greater income assistance for the needy elderly. The proposal to extend the spouse's allowance was a firm commitment of our Party during the election. It was a promise in the Throne Speech. I am happy we are meeting that commitment. I congratulate the Minister on bringing forward the legislation at this time.

I wish to comment briefly on the general background of the development of pensions. I think it comes into play with what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) talked about. It has been accepted in the past and is at present that the federal Government has the prime responsibility for pensions such as the old age security, the guaranteed income supplement and the Canada Pension Plan. The reason is primarily the immense cost to fund these types of programs. The provincial Governments have taken on the share of responsibilities with the federal Government on other social services such as income security programs, welfare and rehabilitation. I am confident the Minister will look into these because there are now areas of responsibility being split and, in some cases, being duplicated.

What is the economic impact of our spouse's allowance program? I understand that in December, 1985 there will be some 93,681 recipients of the spouse's allowance with program costs in the area of $11.5 billion. Therefore, it has a big economic impact on the budget of the Government of Canada. The proposed extension to all widows and widowers will be in the order of some $350 million when the program is in the full year of operation. It has a fairly heavy economic impact on the Government's expenditures.

What are the long-term objectives for the low income single individual? We in this House would like to see the step taken whereby any single person between the ages of 60 and 64 and is needy will qualify. I am confident that the Minister will work to that end. It amplifies the problem which the Government faces. The Minister indicated many times in this House that we need economic growth in order to provide these extended services which all Members would like to see. It stresses the importance of our program of regaining confidence in this country by both investors and citizens so that we as private entrepreneurs can reinvest in creating jobs and creating the revenue for financing these programs.

We are all concerned about those who are not covered by this Bill. The low income person between the ages of 60 and 64 who may be single or divorced, and there are 80,000 such individuals, will continue to have assistance provided through provincial programs. I want to mention this because the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain hit on a fact of which many of us might not be aware, that is, that there are provincial programs. They vary from province to province. They look after some of the problems he cited. Given the current economic situation, it would be difficult to meet the needs of all persons in this age category through federal benefits. If the spouse's allowance were provided to all low income persons, we would be looking at something in the order of $1.5 billion. Again, that is more money from the taxpayer.

● (1630)

I would like to remind Members of the House that governments do not have money. Governments spend taxpayers' money. That was taught to me approximately 18 years ago when I was first elected to the City of St. James Council. Do you know who taught me that, Mr. Speaker? It was a Liberal, and I might say he was a very fine and hard-working man by the name of Reg Wightman.

An Hon. Member: Must be dead now.

Mr. Minaker: Yes, unfortunately he is.

The former Liberal Government did not recognize that fact. What did it do? It spent and spent and spent, and then it spent again. Then it borrowed and borrowed and borrowed some more until it had borrowed to the tune of $190 billion. I believe that governments must have a conscience. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if it is right to borrow money continually on behalf of our youth and our future taxpayers, committing them as citizens of this country to pay back these debts without even consulting with them. That is what is happening when we have a deficit.

I might remind the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who spoke about discrimination that having no regard for future taxpayers by spending wildly is, I suggest, a form of discrimination against the future taxpayers of Canada including the women of Canada. If we create such large debts that interest expenditures approach 75 per cent of what we borrow, then we will have to restrict our social programs, and that will affect the very women to whom the Hon. Member for Hamilton East was referring.

I think it is wrong to borrow money continually on behalf of future taxpayers. Our Government is committed to reducing that deficit with which we are now faced, and that is one of the reasons why we cannot afford to take that one extra step which all of us would like to take at this time to help the needy in the age group of 60 to 64. In my estimation, the taxpayers cannot afford that $1.5 billion per year. Some day after our economy keeps growing and after the Government puts its own House in order, we will be able to afford that.

Because of the earlier comments of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, I would like to comment on some of the provincial programs that are available in Manitoba for the needy, programs which are federally cost shared through the Canada Assistance Plan. I believe this amounts to somewhere in the order of $3.9 billion in total across Canada. As Minister of Community Services for Manitoba, I was part of a Progressive Conservative Government which instituted the new programs and extended existing programs to deal partially with the needy aged 60 to 64. I say that we dealt partially with those needy people. One of the major steps that the Sterling Lyon Government of Manitoba took was to lower the qualification age from 65 to 55. We found that there is a need felt not only by those of the age group of 60 to 65 but also by those of the age group of 55 to 60. Furthermore, an individual could qualify for some of these programs if at least 50 per cent of his or her income came from a pension. Those were the basic criteria we established.

The particular age group to which we are referring right now is unique. I do not believe that the problems this age group faces now will exist in 20 years because of the fact that we are entering a stage in life in which both the husband and wife work and are paying toward pensions. We may have to adjust some of these programs down the road to accommodate that.

To give you an idea of some of the programs that we developed, Mr. Speaker, the Manitoba supplement for pensioners which was already in existence that paralleled the guaranteed income supplement was doubled. We were a very progressive Conservative Government. We doubled the amount of money the citizens received and lowered the qualifying age to 55. We also developed what we called a shelter allowance for elderly renters, and this allowed someone who was over the age of 55 to qualify for up to $1,448 per year in allowance toward rent if he or she fell within the income bracket about which we are speaking. In addition to that, we provided an additional rebate on education tax for homeowners or renters. We expanded that so that if homeowners or renters fell into a certain income bracket, they would receive an additional rebate on their education tax. As we all know as Members of Parliament, there is as well what is called the income security through the social allowance, which is always the last resort and is very demeaning to the individual who must receive that allowance. I hope that some day that allowance will not be required by people aged 60 to 64.

I hope that I will have an opportunity to speak on a future Bill which will provide an allowance for single needy citizens aged 60 to 64. I am confident that I will, for the more our economy grows, the greater is the probability.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker) on a very excellent speech and one which made real sense. In spite of what we do through this Bill, and this Bill is filling a great deal of the gap, there will still be a gap because most provincial Governments and this Government have not as yet been able to deal with single women between the ages of 55 and 65. There is a real need in that particular area.

The comment I would like to make is that I do not think there is anyone who does not want to do everything possible for everyone they can help. However, the problem in this country is productivity. We have been borrowing ourselves into debt.

We owe $200 billion. Until we are able to start reducing our deficit and increasing our productivity, there is a real danger of even holding on to the social programs we have today.

When speaking to people in my riding who need help, I find that their biggest fear is that governments will go overboard and eventually leave them with nothing. If we go too far, we finally find that we do not have anything because we do not have the productivity to cover anything. I would urge all Canadians to increase productivity at the fastest possible rate. Let us get our entrepreneurs investing so we will have jobs. When we do that, we will get closer and closer to being in a position in which we can fill that gap and look after all the people who need help. It is the productivity that will determine it in the final run.

I would like to commend the Hon. Member for touching upon these points. Certainly there are many programs across the nation, but there are very few if any programs designed for single women between the ages of 55 and 65 and there are some real needs there. Let us increase our productivity so that we can look after these needy cases. That and not borrowing will be the answer.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that I agree with the comments made by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) and I thank him for asking the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any further questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I think that many congratulations have been extended today and when I heard what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker) said about you, I thought for a moment that you would leave the chair but you decided with humility not to do so.

I wish the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) could stay and listen to what Hon. Members have to say about Bill C-26 which I consider quite important. I would have liked to congratulate him and I also wanted him to attend—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) on a point of order.

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that the Hon. Member is referring to the attendance of the minister in this House. Those remarks are contrary to Standing Orders and practices of this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but this is not a point of order.

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, I said before that I was sorry not to see the Minister, who has now left the House—probably to attend to certain duties at his department—because I would have liked him to hear what I have to propose or say to him at the end of my speech. I know the Minister is a very dedicated person. I have known him for quite some time, and I am sure he is the right man in the right job, and as I said earlier, I want to congratulate him on presenting a bill, Bill C-26, which, I think, complements the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to repeat what has already been said: how many people are involved—about 85,000; that the Bill mainly affects widows and widowers; and that it neglects a segment of the population that is in similar circumstances, namely, 80,000 people who are single, divorced or separated. It is an excellent piece of legislation, one in a long line of old age security programs established by the previous Government, and it clearly shows the evolution that is taking place with respect to the old age security system.

This has been happening since 1975. The first step was to give the spouse who had not yet reached the age of sixty-five and was married to a pensioner of sixty-five the right to receive a spouse's allowance, provided certain conditions were met. Around 1979, another amendment was added to deal with the fact that if the pensioner died, the surviving spouse who had not yet reached the age of sixty-five was automatically eliminated from the program. That, as I said earlier, was another step in the evolution of our social security legislation.

However, 80,000 Canadians are being left out. I suppose it is understandable that for budgetary reasons and other considerations, this Bill is not as complete as we would have hoped. However, it is absolutely essential that we review the entire question of old age security—I would suggest the words "golden age" instead of old age. We must find a mechanism to provide all Canadians who are in need and who have reached the age of sixty some kind of guaranteed income, which would automatically eliminate the Canada Pension Plan, the Old Age Security Pension and any other allowances involved, such as income security, for people who have reached the age of sixty.

Before we reach that goal of course, there are many ways of trying to improve the existing system. In Quebec for instance, the Régie des rentes has amended its regulations so that people aged 60 years and over who are no longer active on the labour market can draw a pension at age 60 subject to a penalty.

I do not know whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare has done this, but the former Minister, Miss Bégin, was due to meet with her provincial counterparts in June last, to discuss the important issue of amendments to the Canadian Pension Plan along the lines developed by the Quebec Régie des rentes, to allow taxpayers to retire at age 60 and draw benefits from the Canada Pension Plan, provided they are no longer on the labour market, and subject to a certain penalty. In so doing, we would have put many more people to work. We could also have satisfied the needs of those who are in need, as was mentioned earlier, but have no program to help them adequately. I am not suggesting that this would have solved all the problems, but it could at least have solved some of them and it could have given people something to help them out of misery, at least temporarily.

However, this has not been done. I wonder why. But I think we should think very seriously about amending the Canada Pension Plan, along the lines developed by the Province of Quebec last Summer.

This is causing exceptional and extraordinary hardship to people especially to those hundreds of thousands of civil servants who have worked all their lives in the Province of Quebec and now live in Ontario, and to those in Quebec who have worked all their lives in Ontario, as this does happen in the Hull-Ottawa area where there are 100,000 federal civil servants. Actually a civil servant from Quebec who has worked all his life in Ontario, cannot retire at age 60, while his Ontario counterpart who has worked in Quebec all his life can retire at 60.

There is inequity in my view, something we should change. Because when the Canada Pension Plan was established and the Province of Quebec decided they would have their own plan, the agreement was that both plans would work along the same lines, which means that whenever the Province of Quebec or Canada would amend their respective pension plan legislation, there should have been, if there were not in fact, consultations to avoid the current inequities. I suggest the Minister of National Health and Welfare would be well-advised to very seriously consider what I just listed in the way of possible changes as between the Quebec Régie des rentes and the Canada Pension Plan.

In my view, as it has been so often repeated in this House, this is a complementary bill, a very good bill.

I hope that we shall go much farther, not only in providing assistance, but also in giving those who have contributed so much to Canada some security in their old age which is itself unfortunately a natural handicap whose consequences we must all endure as we grow older. In addition, available income is much lower for this group of Canadians.

It is therefore imperative that we find the means to provide a guaranteed income for needy people who have reached a certain age, such as 60. I can also tell the House that, according to actuarial projections, we should consider this problem as soon as possible since the birth rate in Canada seems far from what we might describe as "healthy", and if the present trend continues, there will be a reversal in the normal pyramid of ages with many young people at the bottom and fewer older people at the top in view of the decrease in the number of young people. There will eventually be a great number of older people or of people about to reach the age of 60, which will represent an enormous danger for the Canadian society, the Treasury and Government budgets, whatever the party in power.

When we say that the provincial Governments have excellent bridging programs, that is programs to provide support for people before they reach the age of 60 or 65, we should remember that the federal Government is the one to foot the bill since 50 per cent of the costs of all social security programs in Canada are paid by federal taxes, by transfer payments to the provinces so they will be able to pay for their own social programs.

This is what I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker. I could go on much longer but everything has already been said and I do not want to be repetitive. I simply want to point out to the House that eligibility for pensions plans in Canada should be lowered, so that a contributor can decide when he reaches 60 and no longer works that he will receive his pension subject to a few penalties, which I have already explained. This would provide employment for many more people and meet the needs of a forgotten group of citizens with virtually no income, and it would allow these people to live their remaining years with relatively few problems.

Mr. Speaker, this is what I wanted to say, and once more, I want to thank the Minister of National Health and Welfare for having thought of those who unfortunately cannot protect themselves or see to their own needs. I hope that he will continue in this spirit and that he will introduce in the near, and even the very near future, a bill which will cover old age security benefits and guaranteed income supplements for the people who have been forgotten in this bill, namely those who are single, divorced or separated and who number 80,000 in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there no more questions and comments? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to participate in this debate, even if I can only begin my comments today.

Mr. Frith: It will be the best five minutes the House has had today.

Mr. Keeper: I appreciate the complimentary comment made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith).

I would like to begin my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by paying tribute to the former Member for Winnipeg North Centre, the Hon. Stanley Knowles. I would also like to pay tribute to his predecessor, J. S. Woodsworth, and to the social and political movement in this country of which I am a part, the CCF and the NDP. I begin that way, Mr. Speaker, because both Mr. Knowles and Mr. Woodsworth and the Parties of which they were a part had a very significant impact on pensions in this country. Without the contribution of these individuals and without the political movement of which they were a part, we would not have the pensions we do today.

In 1926 the old age pension was first enacted, and it was only enacted because of pressure from J. S. Woodsworth, who was the first Leader of the CCF. He was able to bring pressure to bear on the Government of the day because it was in a minority situation. Because of the dedication of this man and of the people who supported him, and because of the vulnerability of the Government of the day, pensions were first introduced in this country. Obviously, not only members of the CCF Party were involved, but people in the labour movement and people of social concern right across the country were pushing for this innovation.

In 1966, again facing a minority Government, the New Democratic Party was able to pressure the Government to establish the Canada Pension Plan. I think it is only fitting that I take this brief opportunity to acknowledge the work of my predecessor, the Hon. Stanley Knowles, in this important area. We are fortunate to have him here in the House today during this debate on pensions. He serves as a reminder that the fight for adequate pensions in this country has been going on for a long time. Obviously, we have much more work to do in this area. We are really building today on the shoulders of those who did the work before us.

In 1973, Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party, and Mr. Knowles, were once again able to force a minority Government to take further action in the area of pensions and establish the full indexing of the Canada Pension Plan. So I wanted to begin my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by paying tribute to the work of Mr. Knowles, who is with us today, and to Mr. Woodsworth before him and to the socialist movement of which I am a part, the New Democratic Party which arose from the CCF.

We in this Party are prepared to support the legislation which is before us because it does extend additional benefits to some 85,000 Canadians who are in need of those benefits. These beneficiaries are elderly women between the ages of 60 and 64 who are spouses of people who are eligible for the pension. This legislation which is before the House will therefore receive our support.

Hon. members of my Party who have already spoken in this debate have pointed out that not only those who are married and the elderly need additional benefits. There is also a group of people who are single, who have never married, who also need the extension of pension benefits. We are, therefore, bringing to the attention of this Government the need of these people and pointing out that simply to deal with the needs of those who are married and to forget the needs of those who are single throughout their adult lives is discriminatory.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to Order No. 73?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FARM CREDIT ACT

SUGGESTED GUARANTEE FOR MORTGAGE HOLDERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Farm Credit Act in order to provide for a guarantee to any person that takes or holds a mortgage on farm property.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my motion before the House this afternoon in Private Members' Hour was before the House in the form of a Bill in the last Parliament. It simply provides for an amendment to the Farm Credit Act to enable the Corporation to guarantee mortgages. This cannot be put forward in the form of a Bill in the House by a Private Member because it has financial implications. However, I hope that the Government will be in favour of having this matter referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I believe the idea would be very beneficial. If we cannot pass it as an amendment to the Farm Credit Act, at least it could be reviewed by the Standing Committee on Agriculture. If it was found to be acceptable there, there would be a positive report to the House to make this amendment to the Farm Credit Act.

If this motion were to be adopted by the Government, it would have two very important applications to the Act. It would enable a farmer who is retiring and selling his farm to his son or a neighbour's son to take back a mortgage. After proper appraisal of the property, the Farm Credit Corporation would be able to guarantee that property. There could perhaps be provisions that if the farmer selling the property passes away the guarantee would be implemented.

The greatest problem in agriculture today is the financial crisis. It is due to many things. Clearly, a simple amendment to the Farm Credit Act cannot solve all of those problems. During the past 10 years, farm commodity prices have stayed approximately the same or gone down a little bit. Input costs have continued to rise. Farm interest rates went up very high and then dropped down to some extent.

The most serious aspect is that farm land values have dropped by up to 25 per cent and in some cases up to 50 per cent during the last two or three years. The agricultural community, including the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Cattlemen's Association and the National Farmers' Union, is asking for a system of agricultural financing in the country with interest rates far below the regular commercial rates. Many farmers who are retiring would be willing to sell their farms and take back a mortgage at lower interest rates of perhaps 8 per cent or 9 per cent if they had a loan guarantee by the Farm Credit Corporation. This would achieve two purposes. Retiring farmers often have difficulty finding someone with the capital or long-term debt money to purchase the farm. Young farmers often have difficulty getting a mortgage at reasonable interest rates.

This proposal of providing a loan guarantee would be very beneficial to our agriculture community. It would be of assistance to young farmers starting out looking for relatively low interest rates and to retiring farmers. The retiring farmer knows that if he takes back a mortgage and provides a reduction in the interest rate the mortgage will be guaranteed. I think that is a very important aspect. The crisis of dropping land values would be helped by this situation because long-term money would be available.

The second aspect of this motion is with regard to the emergency situation which we face in our country today. Land values have dropped by 25 per cent or 30 per cent. Farmers who were in a strong equity position have suddenly lost their equity position. Last Thursday members of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture had consultations with Members of Parliament from Ontario. One of the members spoke about his hog operation in northern Ontario. He purchased a farm for $320,000 about 10 years ago. He took out a $240,000 mortgage with the Farm Credit Corporation. The hog operation was appraised last year at $165,000. In other words, he had lost half of his equity. The Government must take some action to resolve this problem. Simple foreclosures just drive down land values.

The United States government has established a set aside program under its farmers' home administration program. It has some 273,000 loans. It has lent about $25 million or $27 million. On approximately September 18 it notified farmers that it was establishing a farmers' loan set aside program whereby it would set aside one-quarter of their mortgage for a period of up to five years, provided that that would put their farming operation in a positive cash flow situation with a 10 per cent margin. I believe that in the long run that type of program will save a lot more farms than the Minister will with his little three point program which will allow some farmers to reduce their mortgage interest rate from 14 per cent to 12.75 per cent. They can appeal a decision by the Farm Credit Corporation if it is going to foreclose. In a number of counties in southwestern Ontario there is a review board consisting of an agriculture representative, an FCC representative and others from the community. Such a consultation and appeal procedure is of some benefit because it gets the creditors together. However, there is no legislative authority to set aside a portion of the loan.

With respect to the U.S. system, besides the set aside program for the direct farmers' home administration loan, there is a program whereby other lending institutions such as banks, credit unions and production co-ops will forgive a portion of the debt to at least 10 per cent. The farmers' home administration will provide a loan guarantee of 90 per cent of the balance of the mortgage.

My motion would provide that kind of loan guarantee. This type of program has been adopted in the United Sates and, I understand they have already set aside some $3,000 in loans under the farmers home administration.

Those are the two applications that I see for this provision which I am suggesting for the Farm Credit Corporation Act. We would then be able to provide that kind of loan guarantee, and I think it would help young farmers in financial difficulty as well as retiring farmers who want to give a favourable interest rate to young farmers who are just starting out. They would also have their position protected by the guarantee, and the Farm Credit Corporation would be protected also because it would do a proper appraisal, they would have a loan guarantee, and I am sure there would be supervision over the loan to ensure that the obligations were met.

The more urgent problem is that of the short-term set aside program. I believe the Minister will act in the near future to establish a program in this regard. I do not say that because I am in the Opposition and do not have the responsibility of a government Member, but because I believe that it is the right step to take. If one examines farm bankruptcies or foreclosures in Canada, one finds that the average loss to the Farm Credit Corporation is $80,000 to $90,000. If the Farm Credit Corporation were to set aside a portion of the loan for a period of four or five years, as has been done in the United States, surely the interest on that portion of the loan set aside will not be the $80,000 or $90,000 which now the corporation loses.

The number of farmers in difficulty in this country today is the most disturbing figure since the 1930s. This is due to the devaluation of farm property. I have already described the case in northern Ontario.

The Farm Credit Corporation conducted a survey last summer. It was a sampling of 6,000 farm operations across the country and was properly carried out under Statistics Canada guidelines. It showed that some 39,000 farmers are in serious financial difficulty.

There are three criteria for classification of those in serious financial difficulty. First, a farmer's equity must be less than 15 per cent. Second, payment on the debt is more than 40 per cent of the gross. This means that a farmer with a $100,000 cash flow would fall under the criterion of being in serious financial difficulty if he was paying more than 40 per cent of that gross amount to meet the mortgage and interest payments. The third criterion is that the borrowings be greater than the capital investment. In other words, the farmer is borrowing to keep the farm in operation. A farmer would be in serious financial difficulty if he met one of these three criteria.

While 39,000 farmers are in serious financial difficulty, the survey also showed that 1,700 of those surveyed had no equity left in their property. The fact that their debts were greater than their assets put them in a particularly difficult situation.

The more remarkable aspect of this survey, as stated by the Chairman of the Board of the Farm Credit Corporation in the interview, is that the 39,000 or 17 per cent of farming operations in Canada in serious difficulty had risen to 45,000 or 20 per cent. The problem is becoming greater and the spinoff factors are also serious. I hope the Government will seriously consider my proposal that we provide the Farm Credit Corporation with the authority to give loan guarantees to individuals or corporate groups.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais).

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I must say that we certainly appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). Perhaps it is regrettable that so few of his colleagues in the previous Government were here to pay close attention to his remarks, because we might not be in such a difficult economic situation as we are in now to come to grips with our agricultural problems, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member is suggesting that the Government ought to consider the advisability of amending the Farm Credit Act. In fact, he recommends that we provide for a guarantee to any person taking or holding a mortgage on farm property. I presume that there is no difference between the working proposed by the Hon. Member and his own thoughts, for I see in his representation an appeal to the Government to entertain the possibility of underwriting private mortgage loans rather than loans made by banks or other types of lending institutions, for if such is not the request of the Hon. Member, I can tell him right now that the Government is not prepared to consider that possibility.

However, Mr. Speaker, if his request is aimed at suggesting a new approach to promote greater participation by individuals in agricultural funding, I will say that our Government has already looked into that issue. Indeed, I think that the Hon. Member for Algoma is in a position to appreciate—he does not say so very often—the work and efforts of this Government to stabilize and improve the situation in the agricultural sector.

It is time members of various economic sectors in Canada regained control of their own destiny. Agriculture is one such sector. The Progressive Conservative Government's priority is to promote job creation and economic recovery. Agriculture is an important sector of our economy because many Canadians are directly engaged in it and even more work in a related field.

I would like to give a few figures which will help Hon. Members better understand the importance of agriculture in the Canadian economy and, consequently, the priority given to this sector by our Government. In 1983, farm income amounted to $18.7 billion, which includes only the income earned in 1983, for a net agricultural income of over $3 billion. In that same year, all lending institutions granted farm loans totalling just under $10 billion. This includes banks, caisses populaires, trust companies, credit unions, mortgage loan companies, public financial institutions such as the Canada Farm Credit Corporation and its provincial counterparts, farm equipment dealers, cooperatives and, naturally, since this is what we are now discussing, private lenders.

Still in 1983, Mr. Speaker, banks provided $844 million in long-term credit to farmers. During the same period, the Canada Farm Credit Corporation granted $854 million in loans. In third place, private lenders provided approximately $376 million in loans. The average interest rate charged by the banks on these loans was 13.42 per cent, while the Farm Credit Corporation charged just under 13 per cent or 12.95 per cent. However, and this is worth mentioning, private lenders charged only 11.5 per cent.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the interest rate on the $1.1 billion in long-term outstanding loans granted to private citizens in 1983 averaged 11.68 per cent, while commercial lenders charged more than 2 per cent more, namely 13.76 per cent on the $2.2 billion in outstanding loans.

Hon. Members will agree that the parties concerned can play a major role in agricultural financing. In this regard, we agree with the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). It is absolutely essential that we see to it that more individuals agree to finance the sale of their operation themselves. Such initiatives will help to restore confidence among Canadians, and our Government is determined to encourage this type of financing.

However, it must be kept in mind that, if interest rates which are generally lower than the market rates are to the advantage of the purchaser in this type of transaction, the process must also benefit the seller. If through some mechanism, the Government decided to provide a certain guarantee to private citizens who take mortgages on farm properties, three important results would ensue.

First, such an initiative would make this form of credit more attractive for farmers. It is easy to understand that a farmer who has worked all his life to build up his operation is not willing to sell it off. In addition, he is not necessarily willing to take over its financing. We should examine the fiscal consequences of such a transaction. With present provisions on capital gains, that procedure is not very profitable for farmers. To make such a measure efficient, the scope of the bill should be widened. This is the reason why the matter needs careful consideration.

A second consequence of such a guarantee would be felt in the level of capitalization of this particular industry. Agriculture is an industry where the income depends on many factors on which producers have no control. Therefore, it is an industry where the return on capital is low and difficult to forecast on the short term. By encouraging retiring farmers to keep safe investment in the agricultural industry, for example, the capital accumulated through years of farming could be left in that sector.

A third consequence of such a program would be to provide individuals with an opportunity to invest directly in farming. The result would surely be a decreased demand of cash which the Government has to invest through its direct loans programs.

If I may, I would like to return to the costs of farm financing. I said a few minutes ago that interest rates set on transactions by individuals were usually lower than those of other lenders. A larger number of such transactions would increase the credit available at reasonable rates for farmers, especially young farmers. Some sort of guarantee offered by the Government could probably reduce the interest rates below the market level and would obviously reduce the costs of middlemen. Such a program could also greatly simplify the process of private financing.

I fully appreciate the motion moved by the Hon. Member, and I must emphasize that, as he can see, neither the Government nor I are against apple pie and motherhood. However, I should like to remind him of a number of issues which must be addressed before a federal guarantee program can be set up for privately financed transactions in the area of agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, there exist already some federal and provincial programs which guarantee in various ways the loans granted by commercial lenders. Naturally, these guarantees are given within the framework of programs with very specific objectives and vary from 10 per cent to 100 per cent of the total loans.

We are being asked to amend the Farm Credit Act, so that the Government may provide a guarantee to whoever is taking or holding a mortgage on a farm property. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may be unaware that under certain circumstances, privately financed transactions are already covered by guarantees. For instance, a private mortgage which is followed by a second mortgage is essentially a first mortgage which is guaranteed by a second mortgage. The frequency of this phenomenon is poorly understood and requires a more in depth analysis.

Before deciding to set up such a program, it is necessary to properly identify the principles which would underline its operation. One of the conditions such a program should meet would be to make long term credit more affordable for farmers and especially new farmers who are beginning or want to expand.

We should also establish as a priority the conservation of capital in the farm industry. That should be a major consideration. This could be translated into long and short term fiscal benefits. Every precaution should be taken, however to prevent such a program from negatively affecting other areas of the economy. And private investments should not be made at the expense of other industries which are in such dire need of them.

As a matter of fact, if we had only this industry in which to work and correct past mistakes, it would be simpler, but there are several areas where the Government must intervene.

If ever the Government should implement a system of guarantees for privately financed mortgages, we should have to minimize the capitalization of benefits in the evaluation of assets. I can already hear the opposition blaming us for our material concerns, but we must face up to reality. There have been too many farm assistance programs which served only to put off the inevitable or, what is worse, which have hurt a whole generation of young farmers. We shall have to make sure that if the Government decides to provide mortgage guarantees, the prices of farms is not artificially inflated. Today, as Hon. Members are well aware, the price of land is dropping. Unfortunately, not only land values but also the value of many farmers' assets, paid for in years of hard work, is dropping as well. However, it would seem that when the price of land stabilizes, it will reach a level that is fairer and more equitable, considering the return on investment. What we would not need at this point is a Government that with a well-intentioned but poorly prepared program, becomes a major factor of inflation in the agricultural sector. Mr. Speaker, we can hardly be expected to introduce legislation that would reactivate the inflationary spiral we have been trying to control.

Those are the lines along which we would approach this question, and I would now like to explain some matters of a structural nature, Mr. Speaker.

I do not know whether the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) is aware that a program similar to the one he is asking us to consider is in effect in New Zealand. I mention this particular country, Mr. Speaker, because its economy is very dependent on the performance of its agricultural industry, and as a result, on the New Zealand Government's agricultural policies. In New Zealand, tax exemptions, certain forms of guarantees and Treasury bonds have been used to encourage farmers to take the responsibility for financing the sale of their farm. Without necessarily intervening directly by guaranteeing mortgages, the Government helps the buyer take advantage of the vendor's terms. I have given this example, Mr. Speaker, to show Hon. Members that an effective program does not necessarily involve direct Government intervention. We know of course that the previous Government was extremely fond of this kind of direct intervention at every point in our daily lives. We must not continue along those lines, and it is our policy to get rid of this kind of intervention.

As far as Canada is concerned, Mr. Speaker, we must determine the total amount that could be guaranteed. What would be the ideal term for a given rate under such a program? Ten years? More? Less? We would also have to calculate the level at which interest rates would have to be set. Should they be set according to the yield on Government of Canada bonds for comparable periods? Should they be set at a higher level? Could someone who already has a guaranteed loan borrow for a subsequent mortgage? How would a guarantee application be approved? There are many questions, Mr. Speaker.

And there are more. Since the Farm Credit Corporation is responsible for administering the Farm Credit Act, would it also be responsible for administering this program? Or should the program be administered by provincial agencies, by the vendor or by the buyer?

Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House is not as straightforward as some Hon. Members would have us believe. I must say, however, that last November, at the agricultural financing conference, all provincial Ministers of Agriculture—the word "all" is important because there was a unanimity that we did not have before September 4 and that has been apparent in most of the meetings we have had with the provinces—recommended that this kind of guarantee be established. The federal-provincial task force on agricultural financing has also been considering this question.

One aspect I have not yet discussed but which must absolutely not be disregarded is that of the program funding, whether we like it or not. Clearly, this is not the Opposition's main concern. At least it has not been in the past. Whether we like it or not, this program will cost the Government something. But even before discussing any potential losses, we must look at how that kind of program would be funded.

I am quite aware that the costs would not be huge, but we must decide who will pay for them. Some will say that the Government should. But we, the Government Members, are not so sure of that. I can tell the House that, in view of our experience with other direct loan and guarantee programs, losses under such a program could reach 1 per cent of the principal lent out. Of course, during the first years, losses could be reduced to a minimum and their cost, if there was a need to recover the guarantee, would depend on the very structure of the program. The loss potential could be reduced to a minimum by only guaranteeing loans on real farm property. Losses could be controlled by a precise ratio of loans to guarantee, or still charges could simply be added to cover the losses. Those are various possibilities.

We cannot either get into loan guarantees without assessing what the demand would be for such a program. We know that in 1983, $376 million were loaned to individuals. How much guarantee should we provide to increase those transactions to the level required? The aim is not to launch a new program just for the sake of it. Success must be seen to be there, it must be obvious.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, some kind of bureaucracy would be needed to implement the program. Unfortunately, the previous Government created plenty of bureaucracy. We have no shortage of that! We must now work with what we have and try to maximize our returns. I think that the Farm Credit Corporation could play a role in this area, but its limits must be clearly defined.

I briefly referred to this earlier. A program of this kind would require amendments to the Income Tax Act. At the present time, farmers may defer capital gains over ten years if they sell the farm to a member of the family. The term is reduced to five if the farm is sold to someone outside the family. This will therefore have to be discussed with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, remind Hon. Members that this type of program would be of no help to farmers who are in financial difficulty. We will therefore have to consider and consult as well on new programs to help producers who really need assistance. All Members are concerned about this.

The Government is prepared to consider any realistic proposals to help Canadian farm producers. This is a priority, Mr. Speaker, and we have shown this quite clearly by certain concrete measures we have taken in the last three weeks, and I am sure no one will deny that. I am aware that the Hon. Member who proposed this amendment to the Farm Credit Act did so with the best of intentions. The proposal is an admirable one. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I would like to see this motion referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. First, however, I would like to make the wording of the motion more precise. I move, Mr. Speaker, an amendment to the motion.

[English]

I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin):

> That the motion be amended by striking out line 4 and substituting the following therefor:
> "individual that takes or holds a mortgage on farm property."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question just for the purpose of clarification.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member would require unanimous consent to ask a question. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question about the use of the term "individual" rather than person. When drafting motions I simply use the term "person" because I understand, in terms of law, that a person is either an individual or a corporate entity. I assume that the Parliamentary Secretary in using the term "individual" rather than "persons" was advised by the Department or the law officers of the Crown that this is the more proper legal terminology to use. If that is the case, I am delighted to support the amendment. Is it true that the use of the term "individual" rather than "person" would mean that such a loan guarantee could be provided to either an unincorporated person, to an incorporated farmer or to another incorporation? I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary could comment on that.

● (1740)

Mr. Blais (Bellechasse): That is the case, Mr. Speaker. It is meant for an individual who is unincorporated, either as a company or a corporation.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Therefore, the debate is on the motion as amended.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this motion, as amended, is one that I would strongly support. Most of us who have been in the House for a number of years have been addressing this type of problem of the general farm financial distress situation and farm financing difficulty almost ad nauseam. We have done so to the point where we have considered almost the whole range of things possible, broad sweeping changes to the Farm Credit Corporation and so on. We had an Opposition Day to consider a number of the measure that could be undertaken by the Government to help assist in resolving some of the financial difficulties in agriculture.

I take pleasure in being able to participate in this debate and debate to join in support of the motion to have the Standing Committee on Agriculture consider the motion as amended. This is one of the possible solutions to the difficulties that we face. It is one way that we might approach assisting agricultural financing.

Needless to say, if farm prices were high enough, we would not have a need to discuss this or a number of other measures in farm financing. The real world does not function that way. The prices that farmers and agricultural producers have been able to achieve have not been sufficient to provide adequate returns. We are left with the situation where there are a number of pressures and economic stresses that have to be addressed, unfortunately in piecemeal fashion sometimes.

Since World War II, Canadian agriculture has become a capital intensive industry that is subject to volatile world markerts. This suggests that farming businesses have become sensitive to various economic pressures, including variability of the cost of capital. However, we must be careful in our search for solutions not to look solely at isolated variables. It is the interaction of a number of economic factors which causes problems for the agricultural sector, and we must understand these if we are going to devise policies that are in harmony with the needs of the industry.

In the 1970s, farm real estate values were increasing faster than the rate of inflation. This had a strong impact on farmers entering the industry, on established farmers expanding their operations, on the transfer of land by retiring farmers, and on non-farmers who purchased farm land for investment purposes.

The net result of the farm investment decisions made in the 1970s about farm real estate is that the total level of farm debt has risen dramatically. Farmers borrowed money to buy or expand farms. Farm debt ballooned from $5 billion in 1972 to over $20 billion in 1982. The largest growth occurred in the long-term credit market because long-term credit tends to be used to purchase land. Long-term credit outstanding in Canada rose from $2.1 billion in 1982 to almost $10 billion in 1982.

In the seventies, land prices increased so rapidly that purchasing a farm, even at 100 per cent financing, seemed to be a good investment. In some years, the inflation of land prices provided a handsome return on investment even after paying interest costs. To give an example of how this worked, let us take a look at a peak year for land price inflation, that is, 1974. In that year, land prices inflated 27.7 per cent. Nominal interest rates were 7.3 per cent. This means that the real agricultural interest rate, which is the nominal rate minus land price inflation, amounted to minus 20 per cent. The impact of this is that farmers were in effect earning about 20 per cent on the money they borrowed to buy farm land.

These returns resulted in the demand for credit to expand. Commercial lending institutions began moving to the farm mortgage market. Producers bought land, acquired modern buildings and purchased new equipment, betting that land prices would keep on going up. In the 1980s the bubble burst.

Today, land prices have dropped. Interest charges are higher than in the 1970s. The real agricultural interest rate in 1984 was over 20 per cent, which meant that farmers' investments were eroding. Consequently, the demand for credit has sharply declined. To give an example, as of January 15, the Farm Credit Corporation has committed only about $200 million. This compares to about $700 million for the same period the year before.

The consecutive declines in cash flows and purchasing power have forced many farmers to reduce their debt by offering some or all of their land for sale, but there have been few buyers. This has reduced or stagnated land prices. Those who could wait no longer to sell were forced to leave farming, producing a record number of bankruptcies. We know that some commodity groups, such as beef and hog producers, have been harder hit than others.

The trends that I have described show the general economic framework affecting farmers. Not all farmers are in difficulty. A Farm Credit Corporation survey carried out earlier this year indicates which farmers are experiencing problems.

The survey shows that the over-all equity position of farmers has declined. In the first farm survey in 1981, farmers owned on average 85 per cent of the assets of their farms. Three years later, their equity had declined to 82 per cent. This is still a strong equity position. However, the industry averages do not tell the full story.

The equity positions of farmers in each region were, as analysed by dividing farmers, in three equal groups according to the amount of equity they hold—low, medium or high equity. While the numbers change from region to region, the average equity of the low-equity group is far below that of the remaining two-thirds of farmers.

In Alberta, for example, the top equity group has an equity position that approaches 100 per cent. The middle group's equity average is 91 per cent. The bottom group's average equity is only 62 per cent. Across Canada, the low-equity group, or one-third of farmers, holds over three-quarters of the farm debt. If production were distributed equally, that would not be a serious problem.

The significance of this finding is that the farmers holding most of the debt tend to be the nation's youngest and most productive farmers. It is not a question of the debt being concentrated in an unimportant sector of agriculture. It is a question of the debt being concentrated in the mainstream of commercial farming. About half of the farm product sales come from this low-equity group.

The farmers across Canada who are experiencing severe and moderate stress are not necessarily headed for bankruptcy. It is estimated that some 1,700 of the farmers in the severe stress category may be on the verge of insolvency because their debts exceed their assets. This means that out of a national total of over 228,000 farms, less than 1 per cent of farmers are in immediate danger of financial collapse. However, the farmers in the severe and moderate stress categories are probably experiencing cash flow problems. They may be falling behind in the payments on their debts.

As of January 1, 1985, about 16,500 or 21 per cent of FCC's 79,000 loan accounts were in arrears for a total of about $197 million. I believe there are two broad considerations when looking at policy to meet the financing needs of Canadian farmers. The first is that we must devise programs so that we can help farmers in difficulty. The second is to consider policies that will meet the long-term needs of the industry.

I want to spend a moment talking very specifically about one thing. Before doing so, I would mention the support that has been given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to agriculture and our agricultural producers in the last three or four months. The Minister of Finance started in his November 8 statement by helping to reduce input costs by relieving some of the tax burden on farm fuels. That was one thing. The second thing he has done, and followed up in the last week with a background paper, is to indicate that there will be a House of Commons standing committee or subcommittee to consider capital gains, agri-bonds and Section 31 aspects of agricultural financing.

Mr. Foster: Doesn't sound very hopeful.

Mr. Gurbin: It is with the hope that they will at least produce an interim report prior to the budget that will be brought down in the spring. Those are solid things that the Minister of Finance has done specifically and all together. I think they represent probably three or four times the level of support in three months that we had in the last four or five years from the Ministers of Finance of the previous Government.

The Minister of Agriculture has also made his mark in a very short time by reducing interest rates of the Farm Credit Corporation. All of those interest rates were above 14 per cent and some of them were as high as 16.75 per cent. Those rates are now down to 12.75 per cent, and this represents a real contribution toward reducing some of the pressures on the agricultural borrower.

As mentioned by the Parliamentary Secretary, we hope that the stabilization Bill will be before the Standing Committee in the very near future. As well, the federal-provincial Ministers' conference that has been held to look at agricultural lending is another important step in looking at the broad perspective. In a very short time, I would suggest, we have made our mark on trying to work out some of the problems that have gradually built up over the last number of years.

One of the final points about which I will spend a moment or two speaking is the effort to assist the people who are in difficulty now and who have problems that they may not be able to resolve no matter how well we can get some of these changes like the changes to the Farm Credit Corporation on track. The Minister of Agriculture indicated that there would be a moratorium on farm credit bankruptcies, and that was in place until January 15 of this year. As that moratorium was lifted, the Minister indicated that there would be an appeal board process through an expanded appeal board of the Farm Credit Corporation across the country. That process is now in place and is looking at those cases of the Farm Credit Corporation which could not see viability.

At the same time, the Minister lent his support to a pilot project in the Counties of Bruce and Grey, which will end on March 21 of this year. This project saw an extraordinary level of co-operation from the local agricultural community, the Canadian Bankers Association, the Farm Credit Corporation and the provincial Ministry. This seven-person board is now meeting, hearing cases and making proposals, some of which have very creative aspects, and these proposals will then be returned to the Farm Credit Corporation and other lenders for their consideration. The process itself is working very well. It has the respect and co-operation of all those involved to this point in time.

I think the final determination of whether or not this or other processes will be useful will have to wait until they are finished and we see the reaction and response of the lending institutions. However, in the end, I think it will be another example of how the Government is actually attempting to solve some of the problems that have been allowed to exist over a long period of time. I lend my support to the Hon. Member's motion as another example of things to which we can look in an effort to create additional support in the agricultural lending field.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am a bit concerned that you did not recognize me as third speaker as that is a tradition of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Perhaps that is something the Hon. Member might be able to take up with the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and his parliamentary committee. Perhaps Private Members' Hour should be extended to two hours. The Chair cannot recognize everyone in the House during a one hour period.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, this approach to farm credit is not unique and it is not new. It has been suggested on many occasions, and the previous Government had the opportunity to put it into place. It sounds very good. Perhaps it is even very practical. However, I could say many things about it that would make it seem unacceptable.

I thank the Hon. Member from the Government side who gave us a very technical approach to the possibilities for and against the motion as it stands. However, what we really need to discuss here is not farm credit but the situation in which agriculture finds itself. We are now in a position in which farm credit is only one of the very small issues for which we have some concern. In fact, this particular motion which might change a small part of the Farm Credit Corporation Act is a band-aid upon a band-aid. It is suggesting that we will help farmers who are in trouble to get more money by providing guarantees to the lender. The banks can tell us right now that there is no shortage of money to lend. The guarantee is necessary, and for that reason I will support the motion put by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

In many ways, this band-aid is not a very effectual one because credit is only one of the problems facing agriculture. If it were possible for farmers to face the need for credit, then we would be talking about something that would be worth-while. We would be having a worth-while debate. As the previous speaker suggested, perhaps all we need to do is to put into effect some kind of a guaranteed price for the products of the farmers. Then we would not have to worry about all these little band-aids which will take care of credit or the cost of farm fuel or things like that. We need to have a global debate on the problems of the farm and look at those problems all together rather than look at each small problem as it comes up.

Over the years, the input cost of farmers have increased by about 300 per cent. In the same period of time of eight or ten years, the commody price has not increased perceivably. We have a situation in which incomes are going down or staying the same and the costs are rising. There are many other solutions at which we could be looking. We should be looking at them now and we should be looking at them all together.

This Government and apparently the previous Government were afraid to look at parity as a possibility which would help farmers. They were unable to suggest reducing the price of credit entirely so that it would not become a factor in the elimination of farmers from the business.

We need to be debating a straightforward income security program for farmers which would make these kinds of band-aids unnecessary. Then we would be going in a direction which would allow farmers to know that if they produce well, they will survive and make a good living for themselves and their families. If we can have that kind of government-sponsored global approach to agriculture, it would be worth-while. These band-aids are not worth bringing before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion as amended is as follows: Mr. Foster, seconded by Ms. Copps, moves:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Farm Credit Act in order to provide for a guarantee to any individual that takes or holds a mortgage on farm property.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as submitted?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Foster) as amended agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being six o'clock, the hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES. (B) REVIEWS OF EQUALIZATION PAYMENT MADE TO MANITOBA

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, once again I want to use the opportunity that this adjournment debate offers to bring to the attention of the House the very serious economic position which the Province of Manitoba faces and the need for immediate action by the federal Government both to come to grips with the serious problem of equalization payments and to fulfil the commitments which were made by the previous Government to provide information and a review of the equalization formula, which is essential for the provision of jobs and economic growth.

On November 27 I raised a question with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) after the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had gone through his somewhat unusual technique of releasing information by dropping it in a hotel lobby. At that time, I asked whether the instructions which were given by the Deputy Minister of Finance—which was to keep Manitobans loose and easy, but that no commitments were to be given—was in fact the position of the Government. Of course, we did not receive an answer to that question.

What concerns me most is that when the original formula for equalization came forward, the previous Government agreed to a transition period in which the payments would go from $400 million a year to $480 million a year. The previous administration recognized that there would be a transition period which would provide a cushioning effect during the time that the new formula was being put into place.

We all know the reason for the new formula. It was implemented during the time of the economic downturn, when the formula went from a ten province average to a five province average. If that had not been done, some of the richest provinces in the country would have been able to cut into equalization payments. There was a very clear rationale for it. An adjustment was required and the previous administration provided a three-year adjustment period. However, by 1983 it was clear that because of the economic repercussions of the recession, the formula which was originally devised in 1982 and the forecasts which were based on that formula would not be fulfilled. At that point in time our Government agreed that it was important to review the formula and the equalization agreements and to share that information with the Province of Manitoba in order to renegotiate a settlement. On behalf of the Government of the day, I communicated that information to the Manitoba Government in July of 1984.

The important question is: Has that review been undertaken, and if so, why has the new Government not been prepared to bring forward the results of the review and share those results with the Government and the people of Manitoba? It is quite clear that conditions have changed. We recognized the changing conditions and therefore we recognized the need to renegotiate the settlement. If that is not done, the Province of Manitoba is likely to suffer a loss of approximately $72 million in its new fiscal year, which begins in March. It will have a very severe impact on education, social services and the provisions of a wide variety of activities in the Province of Manitoba. It is important for the Government to come clean and put on the public record—and certainly with the Government of Manitoba—what it discovered in the review that the financial officials were asked to undertake and, as well, to renegotiate a new settlement.

At the same time as there has been a reluctance to deal with the equalization payment issue, we have also experienced an enormous number of severe cut-backs in the Province of Manitoba. For example, the cut-backs in the National Research Council laboratories, the substantial reduction in grants under the IRDP, and the recent cancellation of the VIA Rail centre. The estimate, as a result of those cuts, is that over 4,000 permanent jobs will be lost and 2,000 jobs will not be there for summer students. Manitoba has perhaps suffered more than any other province because of government cut-backs, and at the same time the situation is being compounded by the lack of response to the equalization problem.

The Minister of Finance of the Government of Manitoba and a number of people from social services and educational institutions in Manitoba visited Ottawa last week. They simply asked for a willingness to come to grips with it. It is our hope that the Government will now respond and recognize that it has inflicted major economic damage on the province through its cut-backs and it should not further enhance and aggravate that damage by not coming to grips with the equalization problem. There was a commitment made by the last Government to come to grips with the program, to negotiate it, review it and reach a new settlement. I believe it is incumbent upon the Conservative Government to live up to the kinds of commitments which were made last year.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) on the subject of Manitoba's equalization entitlements. As he well knows, the principle of the equalization program and the important role it plays in ensuring that all provincial Governments have sufficient revenues to provide an appropriate level of services to their populations, have never been a matter of debate among the three Parties represented in this House. This is reflected in the fact that those principles are now enshrined in the Constitution Act, 1982. However, the Hon. Member expressed concern that this Government is not consulting with Manitoba in reviewing a specific part of this program, the transitional guarantee which the previous Government, of which he was a member, was responsible for introducing.

The Hon. Member seems unaware that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has been consulting continually with all of his provincial counterparts, most recently with all provincial Finance Ministers on January 15 in Montreal. This was the reason he met with the Manitoba Minister in Winnipeg on November 26. The Minister of Finance had a very productive meeting with Mr. Schroeder, and the issue of the transitional equalization payments was discussed in a frank and cordial manner. The Hon. Member will know, too, that the two Ministers met again last week.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry also asked whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was aware of the previous Government's commitment to review the transitional guarantee and to share information from this review with the provinces. The Minister of Finance is indeed reviewing this matter and, as I noted, has been consulting with Manitoba and other provinces. The issue of the transitional guarantee is indeed an important one, both for Manitoba and for Quebec, which is also affected. The Minister of Finance is currently examining this matter in the over-all context of the fiscal situation we inherited and how our policies will affect all provinces.

Our policy of ongoing consultations and openness with the provinces since September 17 on these and other matters Mr. Speaker, is a good one. I might add, it is a policy which was not pursued by the previous Government. These consultations with the Provinces have continued and will continue. The transitional payment in question will be fully reviewed and the Government will soon be in a position to come to some conclusions on Manitoba's stated concerns.

NUCLEAR ENERGY—REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY INTO INDUSTRY. (B) INDUSTRY'S ACCOUNTABILITY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to follow up on a question I asked of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) on November 20. At that time I asked if the Government was going to be true to the intentions of the Progressive Conservative Government in 1979 and initiate a parliamentary inquiry into all aspects of the nuclear industry in Canada. The Minister's answers to me at that time were very disturbing in so far as she indicated that she would be consulting only with officials of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the nuclear industry in Ontario and New Brunswick as to whether or not such an inquiry was a good idea.

What kind of advice does the Minister expect the AECL and the nuclear industry? Does she expect them to invite public scrutiny by telling her to go ahead with an inquiry? Why did she not also make a commitment to discuss the usefulness of such an inquiry with the Canadian Coalition for Nuclear Responsibility, for example, or others who take a more critical and less self-serving view of the nuclear option?

It is over two months now since I asked the question of the Minister and she has said nothing about an inquiry. If you look at her answer of November 20, you see that the writing was on the wall. She said to me that, "The problems may perhaps lie more in the marketing area", a statement which reveals very clearly the uncritical attitude she takes toward the nuclear power question. The kind of inquiry I have in mind would be one that goes deeper than she is obviously prepared to go and asks whether things like nuclear reactors are what we ought to be marketing at all, even if we could successfully market them, which we have not been able to do to date.

Tragically, the Minister seems to be able to reflect on the nuclear power question only from a commercial point of view rather than from an ethical or environmental point of view. This kind of myopia on the Minister's part is very frightening.

Take, for example, her view of the concern expressed by many Manitobans over Atomic Energy of Canada's underground research laboratory at Lac du Bonnet. In answer to a July 20, 1984 letter from the town council of Gimli, she responds to their resolution of concern about the disposal of radioactive waste by saying with respect to the disposal of radioactive waste from other countries that "such a project could offer considerable commercial benefits". This statement, taken together with the fact that the Americans are now considering making an investment in the underground research laboratory at Lac du Bonnet, is hardly reassuring to those of us who want to stop and reflect on the nuclear option as a whole and who want assurances that under no circumstances whatsoever will Manitoba become a radioactive garbage dump for the rest of Canada, the United States, or the world.

I call on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to answer the letter he received from the Committee of Concerned Citizens of Manitoba, and to meet their request that he publicly instruct AECL that, as a matter of policy, Manitoba is not and will not be a location for radioactive garbage dump. I also call again on the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to initiate a full parliamentary inquiry into the nuclear industry as recently asked for by the British Columbia Medical Association who, like myself, has been pressing for such an inquiry for several years.

In introduced a Private Member's Bill to this effect in 1980 and I intend to do so again in this Parliament as I try, in any way I can as a Member of Parliament, to stimulate the debate which is so necessary on this issue. The fact that so far the Government has been able to get away with business as usual on the nuclear side, and massive cuts in the renewable energy research, environmental monitoring, and wildlife conservation, does not bode well for the future. I invite those who share my concerns to let me know so that we can work together to change the mind of the Government.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) for the question and the follow-up which allows us to discuss this tonight.

Over the past decade the various aspects of Canada's nuclear fuel cycle have been the subject of a number of comprehensive federal and provincial inquiries and reviews. Two major inquiries were undertaken in Ontario, the producer of 85 per cent of the country's nuclear generated electricity. The Ontario Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning, commonly known as the Porter Commission, devoted a considerable amount of time to scrutinizing Ontario's nuclear power program, as did the Ontario Select Committee on Hydro Affairs. As of the present time we are awaiting the report from the interfaith hearings on nuclear energy sponsored by a number of groups including the Anglican diocese, the Jewish community, the Roman Catholic archdiocese, the United Church and the Baha'i community.

In Saskatchewan, the Cluff Lake Board of Inquiry—the Bayda Commission—examined the expansion of uranium mining in that province. While like the two Ontario inquiries, the Bayda Commission studies all aspects of the nuclear fuel cycle from uranium mining to radioactive waste to disposal, it also examined nuclear ethics highlighting the nuclear proliferation issue. It is encouraging to note that all three inquiries supported the continuation of Canada's nuclear programs.

In addition to these large scale inquiries a number of smaller, more specific inquiries have been conducted. Federally, an environmental assessment review panel reported on four different locations for a new uranium refinery in Ontario. A panel report was also presented on a proposed uranium refinery site in Saskatchewan. Provincial inquiries relating to uranium mining have been conducted in Newfoundland and Labrador and in British Columbia.

• (1815)

A federal study entitled the Nuclear Industry Review was released by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in the summer of 1982. The report concluded that long-term prospects for the domestic nuclear industry are favourable as nuclear power is the most economical choice for new electricity generation in many parts of our country today. Despite the current downturn in demand, CANDU remains an attractive generating technology both for domestic and some export markets. While this report recognized that Government initiatives might be required to preserve manufacturing in the short term until domestic demand is sufficient to sustain it, the immediate positive economic spinoff of such initiatives cannot be discounted.

As the federal Government enters a new era, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has indicated her interest in investigating the usefulness of such an inquiry as was suggested by the Hon. Member. The Minister has stated that such an inquiry could consider, among other things, what role the industry might play within the energy sector, the international marketing of CANDU reactors, which the Hon. Member seems to criticize, the electricity exports to the United States and the production of heavy water.

The Minister reiterated just two weeks ago her commitment to review nuclear matters. The Hon. Member says she has not mentioned it in two months. She mentioned it just two weeks ago when commenting on the recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada's report Connections: An Energy Strategy for the Future. At that time she promised to study closely the Council's recommendations dealing with nuclear energy, particularly those relating to continued government support of Canada's nuclear technology. I can assure the Member that this investigation is going on and we will be reporting the findings to the House in the not too distant future.

EMPLOYMENT—STUDENT SUMMER JOBS. (B) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS. (C) GOVERNMENT CONSULTATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, on January 28, I directed a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss Macdonald) about a document which describes a program called SELF, which stands for Summer Experience and Learning Fund.

I asked the Minister if it was not true that the document described expenditures amounting to $140 million which would provide summer employment for some 65,000 students. On that occasion the Minister indicated that a program would be announced after she has had an opportunity to consult with all those sectors of the community that were worthy of consultation.

In response, I pointed out that the Canadian Federation of Students were told, in response to a request for a meeting, that essentially the Minister would not be able to meet with the Canadian Federation of Students in the foreseeable future.

On the subsequent day the Minister discovered that indeed, as the document indicates, she had seen and agreed to a program called SELF which is described in intimate detail, with the implication that it will be the basis for the implementation of a summer student employment program after approval by Cabinet. Furthermore, I determined on that same day that in spite of the previous denial of an opportunity for the Canadian Federation of Students to meet with her, she had indeed agreed to meet with them.

There has been some change in direction. I hope that this change in direction will continue and that these consultations with the Canadian Federation of Students and others will bring about a modification to some elements of the program that I think are subject to criticism and concern.

I should point out that the program's very title indicates a considerable shift in emphasis from a job-creation program to a training program. In fact, what has been done is to use Summer Career Access as the basis for a $108 million program. There are difficulties with that because I think most of us realize that not every job available will be appropriate to the particular kind of vocational training or education that a student is pursuing in a college or university. There will be some problem of fit. I do not want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is a basic objection to the appropriateness, indeed the value, of having summer jobs which are matched to the degree or diploma a student is pursuing. The difficulty is that the entire program will be of that character, and I think this suggests considerable difficulties.

One of the major difficulties is that last year the deadline for applications for Summer Canada projects was February 24, with an announcement made in December. I think that should make it clear to you, Sir, that we are already very late in the year in advancing a program that will be accessible and useful to students. I think it is not going too far to suggest that students must feel some considerable insecurity and doubt about the availability of jobs.

First, let us focus on the fact that the Minister has reiterated the point, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in describing the cuts applicable to Summer Canada, said that $85 million was involved and 40,000 student jobs. Although $85 million was budgeted, $201.9 million was spent creating 86,000 jobs. Will the Minister consider advancing a program that will at least ensure that the same number of student job placements will be created in 1985 as were created in 1984?

Will it not be reasonable, in view of the lateness of the hour, to consider reducing the career access portion, that is ICE and centers for the career employment portion to the level of the pilot programs or at least to introduce more flexibility in the program to counter the eventuality that there will not be enough career places to satisfy the needs for student employment?

There are a number of other aspects of this program that I think are subject to considerable concern. There is the concern, first, that Summer Canada was previously a project-oriented program that served the community needs of a number of people in this country who suffered one difficulty or another. I am speaking of the disabled, women, the unemployed and so on who were served in many communities by student groups. There is a great deal of concern about that. It would be very desirable from the point of view of this vast number of community organizations helping the deprived and the dispossessed, if that portion of the program were again introduced, that is to say, that the project-oriented portion be given increased emphasis compared to what is suggested in the document, and that the community benefit aspect of Summer Canada be considered again as appropriate.

I should point out that in the past there was an affirmative action aspect to the program requiring that places be reserved for the disabled, women, natives and so on. We would like to see that reinstated.

There is another element in the program that concerns me also. There is a portion of the program which is based on a United Way type of campaign which depends upon private business to create jobs by a kind of propaganda effort. What worries me is that it is recommended in the document, and I hope this will be turned down, that moneys will be withdrawn from ICE, that is a wage subsidy program, in order to encourage the successful implementation of the voluntary program. I think that speaks of considerable dangers to student employment.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): On behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the question of my colleague from Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

I must admit that I am a little bit surprised that the Hon. Member should raise his question this evening because, if we look at Hansard, it first came up last Monday. The question was raised in the House by my colleague on January 28, and the Minister did say that programs would be announced within about two weeks. Still, I am glad that my colleague has mentioned the fact that the consultation and the points raised last week have led to some results. Mr. Speaker, it goes to show that the Minister of Employment and Immigration is open to all suggestions, be it to meet with students or to answer a question on a document which has now been put into circulation and which, at the request of the Hon. Member, is the subject of a special study.

Very soon, the Minister of Employment and Immigration will announce new programs. As you know, she is now consulting the provinces, the Northwest Territories, companies, workers, students and young Canadians.

As to the questions raised by my colleague, namely: Will the same number of jobs be guaranteed? Can existing programs be replaced by other programs so as to save the same number of jobs, community projects and positive action projects, I should think that the Minister will consider the question, that it is the subject of current consultations, and that it will be included in the announcement which the Minister said last Monday would be made within about two weeks.

The Government is perfectly aware of the situation of young people, that what they need most is good job opportunities. They do not want to walk down a dead-end street as they did before. Mr. Speaker, that is why I think a distinction has to be made between being late in the year and being late, period. I know that this year the summer programs will be announced later than last year, but that does not mean we are too late. Hon. Members of the Opposition have been raising a fuss because the programs have not yet been announced, but I rest assured that all Canadian youths are patiently waiting for those new programs and, as the Minister told me, I can assure you that the announcement is forthcoming and that nobody will be disappointed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.28 p.m. the House adjourned.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 62(4), I must make a decision as there are two motions on the Order Paper. I choose the motion standing in the name of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—SUPPORT FOR AGRICULTURE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its inadequate response to the growing financial crisis in the agriculture sector and for its failure to provide sufficient support and services to farmers who face severe economic difficulties in all regions of the country.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion which you have just read to the House underlines a very acute problem for our farmers right across Canada. Of the 300,000 farms in Canada, thousands are in deep trouble. This is an industry which should claim the attention of the House. There is over $187 billion in growth production in agriculture and those industries related to agriculture in Canada. One in six jobs in this country is related to agriculture. It is the most important sector in the country.

We not only have the duty to boost our economy by farm production, but I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you will not reject the proposition that we have the potential in Canada to feed a hungry world. We have the duty to ensure that our agricultural production is mustered and marshalled so that we feed our neighbours throughout the globe who are starving.

This is the most productive industry in the country. Eugene Whelan, who was a great Minister of Agriculture for 12 years, never failed to remind Canadians, when addressing either an urban or rural audience, that when it came to productivity and efficiency the farmers in Canada were the most efficient in the world and the farming industry in Canada was the most efficient in the country.

I bring the motion to the attention of the House and Canadians because, despite that potential, farmers today face all kinds of uncertainties. Not only do they face the traditional unpredictable weather but in parts of western Canada they face floods, drought and an economic climate which is uncertain. Farmers have struggled through three or four years of inflation and recession, price fluctuation and uncertainty of markets.

The farming community in this country includes the best of our entrepreneurs, the best of the free market spirit. They are the real risk takers in Canada. They need our support and encouragement. Most of all, the farmers of Canada want their Governments, federal and provincial, to treat them fairly. They do not want handouts or something for nothing. They want fairness.

The purpose of this debate is to draw to the attention of the House and the country the fact that the Government is not keeping its solemn commitment to treat the farmers in this country with fairness or understanding. Instead, since coming into office the Government has undertaken almost a systematic campaign to renege on those promises it made during the election campaign.

Farming is important in every province of the country but I would say particularly in western Canada. As I travelled in western Canada since the election, the question I heard throughout the West was why the Government, with its overwhelming majority of Members from western Canada, has been treating farmers in such a callous and off-handed matter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I see that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has come into the House. He has the honour to represent a great Ontario riding. I suggest that he do a little travelling and go to western Canada. I think he will learn what the situation is out there.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We have finally woken them up! They do not do anything for most of their time here but sit quietly, flapping their fins when the seal master brings them forward. I consider one of my duties in this House is to wake them up and get a response from them.

• (1110)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): For a Friday morning, Mr. Speaker, those Conservatives are not bad.

Mr. Mayer: It is Tuesday morning.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is Tuesday. As a matter of fact, this House is so empty, I thought it was a Friday morning, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Where are all your 211 Members? There are less than 10 per cent here.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I invite the Minister to re-read that Prince Albert Charter. He has it right there. I am glad that it is loose-leaf because it can be torn off page by page.

In Prince Albert, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the campaign laid forth his undertaking and commitment to the farmers of the country. The Minister of Agriculture has the list of commitments in his hand. The list was long and impressive, but the list of commitments kept is short and disgraceful.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have this great document as well, Mr. Speaker. As I say, it is in loose-leaf form and it is replaceable, expendable and disposable. The Tories promised to abolish capital gains on farm land. Here is the commitment and it is in a letter dated July 17, 1984 to the President of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. Item No. 8 of those promises, signed in the Prime Minister's own hand, reads:

> We will abolish the imposition of capital gains tax on the sale of farm property for continued agricultural purposes.

In the same letter, part of the Charter, under item No. 2 we read:

> A Progressive Conservative Government will establish an Agribond Program to provide loans at reduced interest rates to agricultural producers. A tax exemption for earned income on these bonds would be provided to attract investment capital to this program.

Take a look at item No. 7, Mr. Speaker, from the same letter. It reads:

> We will change Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, as it applies to farmers, to reflect the principles of equity, neutrality, simplicity and certainty. In addition, the strong-arm and confrontationist tactics presently practised by the Department of Revenue will be immediately abolished and a practice whereby the taxpayers treated openly and honestly will be instituted.

Mr. Frith: Does it sound like a sacred trust?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I hear the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I know he is useful here, particularly on a dull day when that fog horn voice of his can pierce through this Chamber.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He is close enough to you and to the chair, Mr. Speaker, to put him on a leash. It might be a long leash, but just keep him on a leash.

An Hon. Member: Go back to sleep, Don.

Mr. Mayer: It's a dull day so far.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Those three clear commitments were made the subject last week of a discussion paper. And here we go again. The Minister of Agriculture is not fulfilling those commitments but he brought out another discussion paper for as yet an unnamed committee to study, for as yet an unspecified period and for as yet an unspecified location. If you read that paper, Mr. Speaker, it argues against those commitments. It argues against changes for farm taxes.

I want to read what that paper contains. First, the discussion paper of the Minister of Agriculture makes no reference to the promises made in the Prince Albert Charter or to the promises made to the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. The Minister's paper states that one should reduce the over-all tax rate on farmers to some 4 per cent of total farm income. The proposed changes in the taxation of capital gains and the agri-bond concept raised questions about unfair competition, the potential for upward pressure on farm land prices and fairness, vis-à-vis other taxpayers. Also the discussion paper indicated that by changing the $5,000 limit on farm losses, a part-time farmer now could jeopardize the position of full-time farmers. In other words, the problems faced by farmers because of inflation and the fact that land values have risen sharply, particularly since 1971, have put farm land out of tune or out of step with the actual productive capacity of the land. That paper rejects, in the way it was framed, all three of those commitments. It opens discussion but rejects all three of those commitments.

Speaking on behalf of farmers, I can say that it mainly repeats past arguments of officials of the Department of Finance against any changes to farm taxes. Once again the discussion paper puts off to never-never-land or puts on the back burner those commitments. It is a prolonged process. I am referring to the commitments which were made, almost in a sacred fashion, in Prince Albert and were reduced to writing to the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. They have been put away, neglected and forgotten. I will tell the House that farmers will not forget. I say that to the Minister.

We want to tell the Government that it did not promise discussion documents; it promised legislation, it promised action. I challenge the Government to bring forward these measures in legislative form for debate. They should not be sloughed off in some discussion paper. It has been a long winter for farmers. They may have time to read the discussion paper, but they feel sick inside because they need and want some action.

Then there were flowery, grand promises about freight rates for grain. I am sorry the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is not present. The Tories said: "Elect us and we will freeze increases". The only freeze on that front is the Government which is frozen in inaction. They promised to amend the Grain Stabilization Act for earlier pay-outs so that farmers would have cash for seeding this spring. We have not seen that legislation. If farmers in the country have any problem, particularly those in western Canada, it is the cash flow problem.

We made that undertaking but we were rejected. The Government was elected with a massive majority in western Canada, but it is reneging on that commitment. It has been a long winter, and farmers can reflect upon the actions of last summer.

Also the Tories promised to expand research and development for agriculture. What have they done? They have cut funding to build a pharmaceutical testing laboratory in Trois-Rivières. They cut back on the forestry research being conducted by the Department of Agriculture. They cut back on environmental studies of pesticides. Now farmers will not know what chemicals do to the environment. In terms of farm financing—and this goes to the gist of the motion before the House—today there are more than 45,000 farms facing financial ruin and difficulty. The Minister has instituted a review committee at Farm Credit Corporation to which individuals can appeal FCC decisions on repayment, but the review committee has no real authority or statutory power.

It is incumbent upon me to congratulate the Minister for lowering that interest rates on some 5,600 loans to 12.75 per cent. However, there are still some 6,800 loans at rates above 13 per cent which were not reduced. What does he plan to do with those?

Farmers everywhere in the country are caught in a cost squeeze between the price of the commodities they grow and market and the cost of the ingredients which go into production of produce, whether it be fertilizer, fuel or machinery. Farmers are also caught in a liquidity vice. They are caught in a cash flow bind, and commodity prices are not helping.

• (1120)

Another incredible move announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his November statement was to increase by $32.3 million farm services charges for such things as feed inspection, quality control, record of livestock performance and so on. What is most amazing is that when tens of thousands of farmers face economic difficulty, the Minister is not only planning on raising the current fees, but he intends to look for other services because his paper says there are certain services which are now not charged for on which he can slap a fee. The farmers are in difficulty: he raises service fees for the farmers across Canada and is looking for other areas in which he can charge them fees.

[Translation]

I am sorry to see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) is not here this morning.

An Hon. Member: He is hiding!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I suppose the Hon. Member is afraid to go back to Joliette, nowadays.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, we should mention the fact that a cheque for $13 million, thirteen million dollars, was signed at a public meeting by the Minister of Public Works, for the benefit of Quebec's hog producers. This was indeed a tangible commitment. The cheque was significant in more ways than one, but unfortunately, it is worthless, because the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) refuses to cash it, claiming that he did not discuss the matter with his colleague from Joliette who signed the cheque in the first place. A fine state of affairs.

I would ask the Minister . . . with his translation system, he is going to see his colleague from Joliette . . . the cheque may still be somewhere in Quebec . . . so sign, endorse and cash the cheque, and meet the solemn commitment made by the Member for Joliette!

Mr. Speaker, when asked about this matter by the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) and other Members of the House, the Minister of Agriculture claimed we should not broach the subject because it is an area of delicate—I am quoting the Minister—negotiations with the United States. We get the same story about "star wars". When questions are put to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) or to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), they say: No questions, please, not even in the House, not even in the nation's forum, because we are involved in delicate negotiations with the United States.

Perhaps we should talk about the Pacific salmon treaty. Last week, Mr. Speaker, I put a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser). Our representative on the committee, your committee, Mr. Speaker, did not even see the text of the treaty before it was signed here in Ottawa, and when I asked the Minister about this, his reply was: Be careful, this is a delicate matter. We do not want to disrupt the negotiations. We do not want the U.S. Senate to refuse to ratify the treaty. So, please do not ask any questions about the treaty.

An Hon. Member: They are selling out Canada!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It was the same story yesterday and the day before, about NORAD, our North American Defence Agreement. When questioned, the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs informed me and the Members of Winnipeg-Fort Garry and Saint-Maurice (Mr. Axworthy and Mr. Chrétien): Do not ask that kind of question, it is a delicate matter. We are negotiating. No text for us Members, the matter is far too delicate. And now the Minister of Agriculture tells us not to ask any questions about the matter involving the Member for Joliette, the Minister of Public Works, because this again is a delicate matter since we are negotiating with our neighbour, the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for your advice: What can we talk about in the House, if every subject is taboo until this Government gets Washington's permission to talk about it?

• (1125)

[English]

We have not had much action from the Government, or news as a matter of a fact, as to what the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) or the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) are doing about a strike of 1,200 grain handlers. There are 1.6 million tonnes of grain languishing in Thunder Bay right now and the Wheat Board is doing nothing. That is an insult to farmers and an insult to the grain handlers.

I will not be long, Mr. Speaker. If time is troubling me, perhaps the Minister would give me unanimous consent to finish a few remarks.

Mr. Speaker: The 20 minutes allotted to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has expired. However, he could continue with unanimous consent. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKenzie: No.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Given the Member's position in the House, I will seek the House's consent one more time. Is there unanimous consent that the Right Hon. Member may continue his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKenzie: No, never.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the Right Hon. Member's time has expired. However, I find that there is a minute in which the Right Hon. Member may conclude.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I regret very much that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) is in such a rough humour this morning. Where are the members of his caucus who have railed and raved for years about Liberal policies, claiming that they hurt farmers? What are they doing for farmers now that they have finally gotten into government? They are suddenly silent. Not a word in debate is coming from the back-bench. Members of this Party intend to speak out on behalf of the farmers of the country. We are led very well by our critic, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): On behalf of the farmers of the country, I urge the Government to recall its consultation papers, bring forth the legislation it promised, cancel the cuts in agricultural programs, stop the increase in fees which will be an additional burden on our farmers, bring forward for debate in the House the legislation which farmers need to avoid economic disaster, and remove the threat of financial ruin which too many of them are facing today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting and indeed gratifying to some degree to have known the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the former Prime Minister, for quite a number of years. It is true that he had a bit of a sabbatical from being a Member of the House some time ago, but I first arrived here in 1972 and the Right Hon. Member was a Member of the House at that time. This is the first time that I can recall the Right Hon. Member utilizing an opportunity to speak about the agricultural industry. I suppose one could take some satisfaction from the fact that finally, after years and years of neglect of the agricultural industry by the Liberal Party, Canadian farmers turned their backs on that Party and on the former Prime Minister on September 4. I suppose we can take some satisfaction from that.

I have a number of very simple and straightforward questions to ask the Right Hon. Member. When the right hon. gentleman was so quick to praise the former Minister of Agriculture, Eugene Whelan, why did he, as Prime Minister, remove Eugene Whelan from the agriculture portfolio? Perhaps he might shed some light on that. Why was it that during his tenure as Prime Minister of Canada he did not make one move to extend the special farm assistance program? Not one dollar was spent. That program exhausted all of its funds on January 1, 1984—

• (1130)

Ms. Copps: You are going to lecture us on Eugene Whelan?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing against my predecessor. In fact, I have supported Eugene Whelan on numerous occasions. However, I wondered what the former Prime Minister had against him and why he removed Mr. Whelan from the Cabinet.

Why are the Liberals so indignant today when they thought that interest rates that were at 16.75 per cent, which locked farmers in for long periods of time, were fine when they were in government? That was not fine for us, and that is why we moved very quickly to bring interest rates down from 16.75 per cent to 12.75 per cent. That provided a benefit of $16 million to 5,600 farmers.

I believe that the Leader of the Opposition is somewhat confused in citing the Prince Albert paper with the letter that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wrote to the President of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, Mr. Harry Pelissero, on July 17. That letter contained 11 commitments. Why did the Hon. Leader of the Opposition ignore commitment No. 1, which referred to the funds for municipal drains in eastern Ontario? Indeed, everyone knows that situation. Commitment No. 2 dealt with agri-bonds. That has been referred to a parliamentary committee. Why did the right hon. gentleman not mention item No. 3 which dealt with tripartite stabilization? That Bill has been tabled in the House of Commons. Those are the commitments which were made and that is where we are. Why did the Right Hon. Member not touch on commitment No. 4, which was part of the Prince Albert statement and dealt with the rebate on the 9 per cent sales tax on farm fuels? We delivered on that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must remind the Hon. Minister that he has taken up to five minutes of the ten-minute period which is allowed for questions and answers. I will now recognize the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, you will notice that we did not interrupt him.

Mr. Masse: What about the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps)?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In response to the Hon. Minister's first question, he will know that when I had the opportunity to serve in the House of Commons in a number of portfolios, I paid special attention to agriculture. I travelled the country, and I was responsible for lifting the capital gains tax on the transfer of family farms from one generation to another.

I could list a number of opportunities which I created for the farming community in Canada when I was responsible for the finance portfolio.

Eugene Whelan was appointed by the previous Government to the position of ambassador to FAO. That Government believed that his talents and his knowledge of the world food situation would be of great benefit to this country and to the people who are starving throughout the world. When the current Government ripped up that appointment, it deprived the agricultural community world-wide of one of the most knowledgeable Canadians on the subject.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It cancelled the post despite the advice which the Minister recently received as to the necessity of that post.

The former Minister of Agriculture brought in Canagrex. The Conservative Government did not promise to axe Canagrex, but the Minister says it is now history and that it has a dismal record. I am responding to the issue of Canagrex because of his comments about Mr. Whelan. Canagrex received its terms of reference from Treasury Board in May, 1984. It is responsible for $18 million in export sales and negotiations are under way for an additional $100 million in export sales to Pacific rim countries. Canagrex exports canola, white beans, potatoes, honey and animal feed. Canagrex has also performed market surveys in 16 countries and has had over 300 requests for assistance. Yet the Minister says that Canagrex has a dismal record and that he has received letters which support his decision.

Once again referring to the brief of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, I wonder whether he has read the brief of January 31, in which Ontario farmers said that they were "angered and surprised" by the decision to eliminate Canagrex, which was the creation of Eugene Whelan.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No explanation has been given for its elimination. No reasons have been provided. It is just another example of how this Government got carried away with its own rhetoric.

This Government did not promise to cut flood relief in northeastern Saskatchewan. The previous Government set aside $16 million for flood relief. This Government is providing less than half of that amount—$7.4 million—and the farmers of northeastern Saskatchewan are surprised when they get their cheques. Instead of getting a two-to-one ratio on the federal contribution, it is down to $1 for $1 of provincial aid. We have not heard a word from the Tory Premier of Saskatchewan, who during the summer said that the problem was acute and approaching disaster. The only one who gains under the scheme of the new Minister of Agriculture is the orange blossom wheat midge which, as the Minister will know, thrives in wet conditions.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) would explain to the House where the policy of his Party on the red meat stabilization program differs from that of the Bill which was just presented to the House. Specifically, why has his Party not been putting forward the kind of stabilization program which would be cost-based rather than market-based?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. gentleman knows that it was a question of getting an agreement with the provinces, and we were moving in that direction.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that most of the provinces have programs which are cost-based. I believe it must have been a major problem for the federal Government to bring into the negotiations when it switched those provinces from the cost-based programs, which the farmers liked, to the old market-based system which goes back as far as 1958. Since it was obviously a problem of philosophy with his Party, I wonder if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition could tell the House what is the problem?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, as I recall, only the Province of Manitoba wanted a cost-based system. The other provinces were of a different view. That was the problem.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments has expired. We shall now resume debate. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had expected the Government to respond to the motion, but apparently the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) does not wish to do so.

Mr. Wise: We want to hear your advice.

Mr. Althouse: The motion which is before the House today was introduced by the Official Opposition. It condemns the Government for its inadequate response to the growing financial crisis in agriculture, and also points to the failure of the Government in not providing sufficient support and services to farmers who are facing severe economic crises.

The economic statement of November 8 indicated the direction which this Government was taking. I believe farmers received the very clear message from that statement that agriculture would not be as high a priority after the election as it was before the election. We only have to look at the various cut-backs which were proposed in that statement to realize that. Cut-backs in the Department of Agriculture amounted to $62.9 million.

Some of those cut-backs were very hard to rationalize, if we view them in straight business terms. For instance, the cut-backs in Canagrex which the Government says will mean a savings next year of $6.6 million, my information is that so far this year about $3 million has been spent. With two months yet to go, spending will not be anything approaching the $6.6 million. Information the Government has provided indicates that there was between $16 million and $17 million worth of sales completed in the first five months of operation, with something over $100 million in progress. That seems to me to be a cost-benefit ratio of about 2 per cent to 3 per cent of sales.

It may not be widely known, but farmers see overseas sales as new business, which I think is the case with anyone who has ever been in business, and they see this agency as providing them with something in the neighbourhood of $100 million worth of business which would not otherwise have occurred, all at a cost to the treasury of $2 million to $3 million thus far. I think most business people would think that was a pretty good return on investment.

However, the Government, for its own reasons, chose to abandon that particular agency. I think this had nothing to do with dollars and cents, Mr. Speaker, or providing a needed service to farmers. However, it had everything to do with the Government's own philosophy regarding Crown corporations and the Tories' long and arduous struggle to oppose Canagrex when they were in opposition. I think the Government would be well advised to admit that it is for philosophical rather than business reasons that Canagrex is being shut down.

Additional attempts to reduce Department of Agriculture expenditures are also aimed at exports to some degree. The Government is proposing to reduce assistance to the Canadian Dairy Commission in its efforts to increase exports of cheese and dairy products. The reduction is some $4 million in the coming year and will increase to a full $6.6 million in the year following.

I think the more noticeable form of cuts lies in the fees the Government is now proposing to charge for inspections done on behalf of Canadians and therefore normally paid on their behalf by the Government. It is now proposing to collect these fees from the agricultural producers and processors. Some $32 million is projected to be collected. The Government is attempting to collect a fee for meat inspection, as well as replacing some federal inspection with in-plant inspection. All of this has raised a great deal of concern among consumers as well as people in the industry.

The question arises as to whom the inspectors will be acting for. If the plant pays for the inspection service and hires the inspector, will the consumer be adequately protected? Further questions have arisen regarding the inspection of imported meat. I am sure the House will recall the recent report from Halifax where the federal inspector decided there was too much hair and manure in a shipment of imported meat. On appeal to the Department of Agriculture veterinarian, the meat was permitted to enter. This sort of thing has happened on several different occasions. The argument is not over whether the veterinarian or the meat inspector has jurisdiction; it is over the attempt to switch responsibility from a federal agency to an importer or processor.

Another concern arises from the very rapid increase in fees which producers have been paying. I will cite only one example in the time I have. Seedgrowers in this country have just found out that an Order in Council has been prepared which indicates they will pay fees from 400 per cent to 500 per cent higher than they were last year. The Government is pretending to have consultation with the people concerned but the negotiating room the seedgrowers have is very limited when the Order in Council is ready to go.

Another area of cut-backs which does not seem to make any sense on the surface, and I hope eventually the Government will provide a better explanation than it has to this point, deals with the decision to cease the inquiry into potato marketing in the five eastern provinces. As the House may be aware, that particular industry has been studied for the last 13 or 14 years. All these studies have resulted in some dissatisfaction among all parties concerned because it was always felt the real truth had not been sorted out. A decision was taken some time ago to set up the judicial inquiry with a judge at the helm who would have the power to subpoena witnesses and their records so that the real truth could be found. However, apparently someone on the Government's side felt this might be threatening to some of their particular friends and that investigation ceased forthwith.

Farmers are still asking questions about the marketing of potatoes and are quite unhappy the real truth was not dug into. I think the new Government had a very clear and fresh mandate and certainly looking into the true facts of potato marketing would have been a suitable beginning for a new Government. I am sorry the Tories saw fit to stop this one chance to shed a little light on some of the inner workings of the Canadian potato marketing system.

The Government announced during its economic statement in November that it would be discussing three taxation issues affecting farmers. There were very clear promises in the election campaign to do away with capital gains taxes. In some of the back roads of the country it was simply referred to as doing away with capital gains. Perhaps those people were more right than they know when you look at the price of farm land, which is going down in virtually all parts of the country. Perhaps it is part of the Government's economic policy to run agriculture into the ground so that the capital gains in farm land which accrued with inflation will now reverse itself and we will go back to 1971 prices. Of course, the Government will then indeed have done away with capital gains. However, I think it was the taxes that they were promising to do away with.

As well the Tories promised to make some drastic changes to Section 31 of the Income Tax Act and implement something called an agri-bond, although their particular description was never made very clear. In the few places where it was described it sounded somewhat like the agri-bond which is in place in the United States that provides a tax break for investors. It has proven to be a rather inefficient way of providing assistance to farmers since the forgone income revenue from the Government amounts to several times what the direct cost would have been had they simply subsidized the farmer who is eligible to receive the borrowed back money which has been invested in agri-bonds.

On November 7 we were promised that there would be an interparliamentary committee set up to study these issues. To my knowledge, the committee has not yet been named. However, we do have a discussion paper which came out last Thursday or Friday. Some of the issues that the Government is proposing to put forward for discussion are focused on the wrong areas. For instance, it is fairly clear from the discussion paper that with regard to in-family roll-overs, relatively wealthy farms have no problem with capital gains tax. They generate enough funds to enable the existing generation of farmers to provide themselves with savings and retirement funds, meanwhile rolling the farm over to their sons, daughters or grandchildren. However, the middle and lower income farmers do not usually have that kind of income. Therefore, the roll-over provision is not so helpful to them. They are forced to sell all or part of the farm and to pay some capital gains tax. The current system is working quite well for the relatively wealthy but not so well for the middle and lower income people.

The treatment of farm losses by Revenue Canada was a real eye opener. I could conceptually understand that high income people would get the biggest benefit. However, the discussion paper includes some studies which show just how much benefit high income people receive by writing losses off against a farm. Table 13 of that discussion paper indicates that the average off-farm income of 105 returns was $406,000. Their farms were relatively large, having an average gross farm sales of $120,000. The surprising thing is that our tax system permits a relatively large farm with gross sales of $120,000 to have an average farm loss of $187,000. A person with off-farm income of $406,000 pays tax on $219,000.

There are about 1,700 taxpayers who have off-farm earnings in excess of $100,000. Virtually all of those in that category write off about 50 per cent more than the farm actually generates in total sales. I am referring to total sales rather than profits, Mr. Speaker. Anyone who knows farming knows that the money left over for wages and reinvestment tends to be in the range of 14 per cent to 20 per cent. Yet the focus of Section 31 seems to be on people whose off-farm incomes run from $10,000 to $25,000. Ironically, these people run farms with gross sales which far exceed the amount of losses that are written off against them. These are almost economical units in terms of cash flow in and losses out. Yet those are the people whom we have been concentrating on. There do not seem to be any proposals in the discussion paper to change the focus or to concentrate on the real tax outflows.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that in the first four or five months that the Government has been in power it has given some very clear indications of what it thinks of agriculture. It has made some promises which it has yet to keep concerning the establishment of an inter-parliamentary committee to study the three issues I have just been talking about; capital gains tax, Section 31, and agri-bonds. The Government is acting on its serious intention to cut some $63 million from the agriculture budget. We have only begun to see how this will cost in terms of extra fees for service. We have only begun to see, as the seed growers have found out, that it can be very expensive to become self-sufficient in the area of supply and services for farmers.

The current Government seems to have no real understanding of the need for expansion of trade in agriculture. By cutting back on the dairy program and doing away with Canagrex it has thrown out the baby with the bath water. The Government has washed its hands of in excess of $100 million of new business. We will remember that two years from now when we assess the Government's commitment to agriculture. It will be measured by how it replaced those programs and how much money was spent on their replacement. We will be watching these things because the moves the Government has made so far do not make very much economic sense.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, would the agricultural critic for the New Democratic Party encourage the referral of the paper on tax issues concerning agriculture to a standing committee where witnesses could be called to determine what approach should be taken with respect to these tax issues?

Mr. Althouse: I understood from the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that he was going to establish an inter-parliamentary committee to which these discussion papers would be turned over. He indicated that three months ago and still has not taken any action. We are waiting for that committee to be struck. It is an obvious place for these papers to go.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I take it that the Hon. Member's Party would be in favour of the referral of these papers to a committee, and that he and his House Leader would expedite that referral.

• (1200)

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, at the moment there is no place for them to go. However, if the Minister follows through with his proposal to set up that committee, by all means these papers should be referred to that special committee.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the agriculture critic for the New Democratic Party. There is a small number of farmers in my riding. One of the complaints I have been receiving from them over the last number of years concerns the effect of interest rates especially on young farmers and those farming in frontier regions such as exist in my riding. Equipment is expensive and farmers are trying to develop agricultural lands, which means that returns are limited at the beginning.

Today's paper indicated that the Canadian dollar is again threatened. In the last five years, every time the Canadian dollar was threatened with devaluation, the Liberal Government and the preceding Conservative Government jacked up interest rates. In the Member's opinion, what would be the effect of another period of high interest rates in Canada?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I suggest the answer is quite clear to everyone in the House. Farmers are losing their farms as a result of a number of years in which interest rates were extremely high compared to the money being earned. That combined with permission to grant loans that float instead of being set for fixed terms at fixed rates created havoc for farmers and small businessmen as well as home owners.

A resumption of an increase in interest rates will only make banks and credit organizations much more nervous and will probably result in more foreclosures of farms, particularly before the spring seeding season begins.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no more questions or comments, we will resume debate with the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise).

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to address the subject of the Opposition motion that was introduced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). I must repeat what I said in the period following the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition's remarks. It is the fact that he did not provide us with an answer to why he decided to replace Eugene Whelan as Minister of Agriculture. He did not use the opportunity to explain to the House and the agricultural community in particular why, during his term of office, he did not move at all to provide interest rate subsidies to FCC clients who were locked into high interest rates. Indeed, it appeared that during his term of office interest rates for FCC clients were quite satisfactory at a rate of 16.75 per cent.

I would also like to clarify for the record that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition confused the Prince Albert statement with a letter which was written to the President of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture on July 17 of last year and signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Leader of the Opposition was extremely selective in assessing what action had been taken on those 11 points which we put to the President of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture on July 17. In order to set the record straight, it would be interesting to see exactly what the Ontario Federation of Agriculture has indicated with respect to those commitments made by the Prime Minister on July 17.

A brief was submitted to all Members of Parliament on January 31 of this year. It contains a report, or assessment perhaps, which was made by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, a very respectable farm organization in Ontario. In the opinion of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, action has been taken with regard to our commitment on agri-bonds. That has been referred to a parliamentary committee.

The OFA has indicated that action has been taken with respect to the second commitment about Section 31. That has been referred to a parliamentary committee.

Our third commitment refers to capital gains. It should be noted that farm organizations have been making representations to the federal Government on these three items for many years. In fact, the Liberal Government has been in office for most of that period in the last 10 to 15 years. That Government chose to ignore these three items.

The fourth commitment was to take action on the advance payments legislation. Indeed, legislation is presently being drafted and will be introduced in the House very soon.

With respect to the fifth commitment on stabilization, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should know that that Bill has been introduced in the House of Commons. I expect that it will be debated very soon and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Item No. 7 dealt with the commitment to the Farm Credit Corporation. Indeed, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture assessed this item as action being taken. All members have copies of this brief that was presented on January 31 of this year. I would draw the attention of Members to the letter to all Members of Parliament that was signed by the President of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. The second to last paragraph states:

> The OFA was heartened by the announcements of Agriculture Minister John Wise regarding assistance to farm operations in financial difficulty.

I believe the statements made by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture certainly justify its position with reference to action we have taken.

There is more. In the opinion of the OFA action has been taken on the commitment to set up farm finance review boards. Indeed, the right Hon. gentleman recognized that we have established Farm Credit Appeal Boards in this country to deal with cases of severe financial distress. In addition, there is the pilot project taking place in the counties of Bruce and Grey in Ontario.

Commitment No. 9 was to take action on beef imports into this country. The Canadian beef industry made constant representations to the Liberals when they were in office. Yet when the Liberals were in office and the leader of the Opposition was Prime Minister, he chose once again to turn his back on the agriculture community. He took no action whatsoever and, as a result, the Canadian beef industry suffered losses of between $25 million and $50 million.

We did not ignore the Canadian agriculture industry or the Canadian beef industry. Indeed, in co-operation with my caucus colleagues and Cabinet colleagues, we invoked the beef import law.

With respect to Item No. 11, it was another commitment given at Prince Albert in which we indicated that the food producers of this country would receive a tax rebate to offset the additional energy costs. Although it is a budgetary item and it would have been appropriate to provide that rebate, we did not wait for a budget to implement that. Parliament opened on a Monday and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) gave a statement on the Thursday and provided that benefit to Canadian food producers. That will provide a benefit to Canadian food producers to the extent of $100 million. That is the further commitment we gave for the promise that we made and the further actions that we have taken and fulfilled.

It goes on, Mr. Speaker. We are up to item No. 12. These items raised back in July totalled 11, but we are now up to 12 items. This was a commitment we gave during the campaign to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act to allow tobacco growers, if they so choose, to establish a national marketing agency. We did not turn our backs on the tobacco producers of this country at all. We gave them a commitment in June. The election was held. Canadian agriculture turned its back on the Liberal Party. It supported us and we accepted our obligations and responsibilities. We provided the required amendment in the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. Hearings are now going forward and it is up to the tobacco growers to determine whether they will establish a national marketing agency.

In addition to that, an issue that has always been an issue on which I have been fighting for a good long time is the decision of the Liberal Government to cancel the offshore labour program. The Liberals did not recognize the need for that program, particularly in southwestern Ontario and in other parts of the country where we have large orchard operations in fruit and vegetables, tobacco, et cetera.

It is absolutely essential that we have that offshore labour program. I can remember when I first arrived here in 1972. The Government at that time was, of course, a Liberal Government. It made up its mind, as it did it almost each and every year without exception, and was determined to wind that program down. If that were ever allowed to happen it would create very serious economic consequences to agriculture in many parts of the country. If it had not been for the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley), the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), the Hon. Member for Kent, at the time and myself, I am certain that the Liberal Government would have succeeded.

We did not hold the industry out this year at all. We met with the commodity organizations and the groups that were extremely interested in having the offshore labour program announced and announced early. My colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), a few weeks ago took an early opportunity to signal to that particular segment in the agri-food industry that the offshore labour program would continue for this crop year.

We also made it clear that the European student program would be in place. As well, the clarification with reference to the metric policy was made in a statement the other day to the House by my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté). That measure caused chaos and confusion, has resulted in a number of court cases and unfortunately a number of crop losses due to the problem of trying to convert from one system to another or to one system only. Perhaps an imperial sprayer or something of that nature was involved. The Liberals always ignored that problem. They did not understand some of the difficulties that program caused in the field and at the farm level. That move on behalf of this Government will bring an end to chaos and confusion and add some common sense and clarity to the situation.

In conjunction with my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty), we have responded to representations by caucus colleagues, particularly the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), with reference to some changes in the national revenue policy of this Government. This will allow farmers who have received cash payments of one kind or the other the opportunity to work out an agreement with National Revenue to roll those receipts into next year. That is helpful.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: Some of the things that I have mentioned at the end are not of large national significance, but I mention them because I think it is movements and measures of these kinds which signal to the farm community that we understand some of their individual and smaller problems. It is a message that we want to send to them. We do not have much money. We are committed to lowering the deficit and we should never lose sight of that. If we do, then we will fall into that route to disaster, the road to bankruptcy, followed by the previous Government. That means total and complete disaster for the agricultural industry.

The state of the agricultural industry is determined to a large extent by the state of the general economy. Perhaps this industry more than any other industry in Canada is affected in that way. An industry that might compare would be the small business community. But other than that one exception, the economic well-being and health of the agriculture industry is determined by the state of the general economy. There is no question about that. We can provide bits of stabilization here and there. We have and we will continue to do so. But let us not be distracted by thinking that by moving a little here and moving a little there it will resolve this economic problem we have, because obviously it will not.

I talk to people in the industry. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition indicated that I should travel across Canada more. I should love to do that. I think I have made three or four trips to western Canada. I have made two or three trips to eastern Canada and I have been in the Province of Quebec on three or four occasions. If it were not for the motion put down by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I would not be here today; I would be in the Province of Quebec, I would be involved in a sod-turning ceremony at a research facility in St. Hyacinthe, a $17 million project. I was to meet with a number of people from farm organizations in the Province of Quebec. Hopefully, I would then have had an opportunity to work out the details of the Quebec compensation payment to the extent of $30 million. We are co-operating with the Government of Quebec with reference to the manner in which that payment should be made. However, that will have to be delayed for another two or three days or perhaps even longer because I will not have an opportunity to be there and to meet with some of these people. I was also going to speak to another group of people in Montreal today.

We in this party have our priorities set properly. I am interested and all of our caucus and Cabinet colleagues in this Government are interested in dealing with the farm finance problem. It is our number one problem and we are making it our number one concern. It was not a hard decision for me to make to cancel these plans that have been in place for quite some time. I made a decision that indeed this was the place to be. It is not often that we have the agricultural issue raised by the Official Opposition.

I think the spokesmen for the New Democratic Party recognized the importance of this issue. I believe one of the first Opposition Days held in this House was not utilized by the Official Opposition but by the New Democratic Party. Spokesmen for the NDP put a similar motion on the Order Paper, so we did have an opportunity to talk about the problems in the agriculture industry at an earlier date.

• (1220)

I am not sure how much time I have remaining. I have not as yet referred to any of my notes because I felt that we had a tendency to be somewhat misled by some of the comments made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. However, there is no question: the record is clear and speaks for itself. The Liberals completely ignored the agricultural community for years and years and years; there is no question about that. The same farm organizations have been making representations to government year after year. We know them by their first names from coast to coast. We almost recognize their voices when we talk to them on the telephone. However, the fact of the matter is that the Liberal Party was in government for years and years and it ignored these problems. It paid lip service to the agri-food industry. We are not doing that. We have not been in office that long, but I challenge any statements by the Official Opposition. It has challenged our actions in a hundred days in terms of what we have provided to the agricultural industry. We are not satisfied. We have only just begun. I would compare any of our hundred days with any of their hundred days.

An Hon. Member: Or 10 years.

Mr. Taylor: Or 16 years.

Mr. Wise: I hear my hon. colleagues, but I am not so sure about that. I know that during the course of this debate my colleagues will utilize the opportunity—and I have not done so—to place on the record some of the actions we have taken in that hundred days. We can total up the actions taken to this point in time by the Government and by the Prime Minister. We have transferred to the agri-food industry of the country in one form or another nearly $1 billion. Actions speak louder than words. Hon. Members can check the record. They can check not only our record but the record of the OFA.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Minister a question. The Minister quoted from the OFA document with which we were all presented some days ago. It was a report card, so to speak, of the points made to the OFA prior to the election. One of the points in the report card dealt with agri-bonds, Revenue Canada's Section 31 and capital gains as actions which have been taken and referred to committee. Since OFA seems to know far more than we know, could the Minister tell us to what committee those activities were transferred and when the committee will become active?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I assure the Hon. Member that a great deal of discussion has taken place between myself and the Minister of Finance. I am quite certain that the Minister of Finance will make that clear very shortly.

Common sense would indicate that all these items deal with tax matters, so I would expect the appropriate parliamentary committee would be the Finance Committee or a subcommittee of the Finance Committee. I understand the Hon. Member has given us a commitment to support that reference. If the critic of the Official Opposition would give us the same degree of commitment, it would assist us greatly in rapid referral of the discussion paper.

There seems to be some misunderstanding with reference to the paper which was tabled last week by the Minister of Finance. It was a discussion paper, a paper which will be referred to a parliamentary committee or a subcommittee of a parliamentary committee. It is to act as a discussion paper only. I am sure it will encourage discussion and debate, so let us not misrepresent the paper tabled by the Minister as a statement from the Government. Rather, as I said, it is a discussion paper.

We have the commitment from the New Democratic Party. I am sure that we will get one from the Official Opposition. If that second approval is forthcoming, I would expect that the Minister of Finance within a matter of days would make an announcement on the action.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anything preventing the Government from putting a motion on the Order Paper respecting a reference of these three items. It seems very clear to me that in the election campaign there were pretty solid commitments to bring in legislation on capital gains, agri-bonds and Section 31. We would prefer to see the Government bring in legislation, but if it decides to refer them to the committee to be studied, naturally we will co-operate because they are important issues.

There is nothing holding up the Government. There has been nothing since November 5 to prevent the Government from putting a motion on the Order Paper referring these three items to the standing committee or to a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture felt that they had already been referred, but a reference has to be put on the Order Paper, moved by the Minister and debated in the House. That has not happened.

The Minister was self-congratulatory this morning in his address, saying how many billions of dollars have been paid. I should like to ask him about the $500 million plus in crop insurance, the $223 million in western grain stabilization, the flood relief and so on. All those payments were put in place by legislation of the former Liberal Government. They would have been paid regardless of who was in power. I was surprised that the Minister did not spend more time talking about the farm financial crisis. He answered a question of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) by saying that the former Government had not reinstated the special farm assistance program. In fact, we were committed to doing that in the election campaign. We would have applied it to all those higher rates of interest, whereas the Minister's legislation, which took him four or five months to bring in, only applied to 5,600 outstanding farm loans with the FCC. In fact, there are another 6,800 mortgages over 15 per cent to which it did not apply. He brought down interest rates to 12.75 per cent at a time when the Canadian Cattlemen's Association is saying that farmers can only afford some 8 per cent interest.

On looking down the list of Tory promises, I do not see many which have been acted upon. For example, what about advance payments for crops, the amendment to the Agricultural Stabilization Act so that payments are made when they are needed, the re-establishment of a long-term dairy policy or the expansion of agricultural research and development? All we have to do is look at the number of laboratories and the toxicology centre which have been cancelled.

The Minister was very congratulatory that he got through the House with our co-operation—and why would we not co-operate?—the tobacco legislation to establish a tobacco marketing board. His own Members filibustered the Bill last June. If they had not done that, we would not have had to deal with it. After being filibustered last June, the Bill passed the House in one day. That could have been done just as easily last June.

There is one question I would like to put to the Minister. His Party promised to allocate the necessary funding to assist producers in refinancing their loans at current prevailing interest rates. Was that in fact a commitment of the Party? Did it apply to FCC loans? Did it apply to all outstanding farm loans, both short term and long term? When they talk about current interest rates, are they talking about demand note interest rates? Is that promise still valid? Does it apply to all outstanding loans of the 39,000 farmers, now increased to 45,000, who face very serious financial difficulties? Can the Minister clarify that point?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, let me correct another inaccuracy which has been placed on the record with reference to the cancellation of research facilities within Agriculture Canada. Not one research facility has been cancelled within Agriculture Canada. Two projects came on stream from found money. They involved two laboratories, one at Three Rivers and one at Victoriaville. I said before that we have not cancelled either of those facilities; they have been delayed. There is a difference between delaying the construction of a facility and cancelling it.

The Hon. Member asked whether our commitment applies to farm loans across the board. Obviously it could not. Our commitment was to deal with FCC clients. That is the only legislative authority that we have.

I draw a comparison between the special farm assistance program of the previous Government, which ran out of funds in December, 1983, was ignored by that Government, and which assisted about 2,000 FCC clients. To be eligible for that program, you had to plead your case of dire straits and that was difficult. Our program will apply across the board to FCC clients. It will involve not 2,000, 3,000 or 4,000, but 5,600.

The Hon. Member made a comparison with the great program that exists in the U.S. He did that the other day. We have been watching that program very closely. Our research tells us that that program is less than successful. That is exactly how I responded the other day. That great program in the U.S. assisted only about 8,000 farmers.

Mr. Mayer: In our context, that is like 800.

Mr. Wise: That is right. Our program was designed and suggested to me by FCC officials. I congratulate those officials for being extremely helpful in working with farm groups, with the officials in my Department, myself and the Ministry of Finance. Our program assisted 5,600 farmers. If you compared our Canadian program with the U.S. program, using a scale of one to ten our program would have benefited about 56,000 American farmers. That is an excellent comparison. There is no question about the effectiveness of our interest rate conversion program.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over. We shall now resume debate.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is here today. I am sorry he had to miss the official ceremony to open the laboratory in St. Hyacinthe in la belle province. I know he enjoys openings and sod-turnings for facilities which the Liberal Government put in place. The previous time when he appeared before the Agriculture Committee, he had just performed a ceremony in Nepean at a new Government laboratory. The way funds are being handled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), the only federal Government buildings and sod-turnings in which he will take part are those inaugurated by the previous Liberal Government.

Mr. Mayer: Do you want us to cancel them?

Mr. Foster: I am just saying how sorry we are that the Minister cannot be in St. Hyacinthe today for that official opening. Being such a great House of Commons man, I know in his heart he would really rather be here today.

This Government seems to be caught up in the process and the optics of government—not really taking action but seeming to perform. We saw the symbolic signing of a cheque by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle). With great flourish he signed a $13 million cheque for the pork producers. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and this Government love that kind of symbolism. They love to be seen to be doing something. Studying agri-bonds, Section 31 and the problems of agriculture is just as good to them as taking action. From a superficial point of view, they may appear to be actually doing something. However, when you get down to the individual pork producers in the Province of Quebec, they will call the Minister of Public Works to account for that cheque. They are going to go to the bank and try to cash that cheque. Regardless of how much the Minister of Agriculture pooh-poohs the action, the pork producers in the Province of Quebec will not be put off.

In this whole process, the Government is abandoning many of our agricultural producers. The Farm Credit Corporation report showed that 39,000 farmers are in serious financial difficulties. This morning the Minister spoke and responded for 10 minutes. He did not say how he was going to help the 39,000 farmers in very serious difficulty. These are real people. It is not the agricultural producers who are the best off. If they spend more than 40 per cent of their cash flow to pay debts, if their quota is less than 15 per cent of their operation or if they are borrowing more than what they are spending on capital expenditures, their finances are in a very serious position. The tragedy is that they are the young farmers, those who have been in agriculture for 11 years on average.

Beyond that, those farmers are really our hope for the future because they are the most productive and technically advanced farmers and produce half of all the food produced in this country. It is just not factual for the Government to say that by reducing interest rates from 14 per cent to 12.75 per cent, we will solve all the problems. I do not know how to describe that other than by saying it is just not factual.

Last week I saw a farmer in my office who was with the OFA group. He described how he bought his hog-producing farm for $320,000 ten years ago. He took out a $240,000 mortgage with the FCC. He had the farm appraised last summer because he had heard some stories about farm properties dropping in value. In fact, his appraisal came out to $165,000. He has lost half his equity in the last two or three years. I would like to know how the Minister's little reduction in interest rates from 14 per cent to 12.75 per cent will help that producer.

The 70,000 or 75,000 agricultural producers in the country carry $17 billion worth of the $21 billion over-all debt in this country today. When the Farm Credit Corporation appeared before the Agriculture Committee, it indicated that in the next year or two there will be defaults of about $2 billion on these farm loans. That is a colossal amount of money. I do not know how many thousands of farmers it represents. It would seem to be very, very many of them. In fact, Ralph Ashmead, a research analyst for the Farm Credit Corporation, said in an interview recorded in The Manitoba Co-operator back in October that he estimated that there were between 2,000 and 3,000 farmers who were headed for immediate financial collapse.

I was surprised that the Minister spoke of the lack of success of the American farm set-aside program. That program is designed to help the farmers whose equity has dropped dramatically like the farmer from Nipissing to whom I referred. Obviously it is a program which will not help all farmers. If a farmer has lost his equity, no program can help him. However, when setting aside a portion of the debt for a number of years will put the farmer in a positive cash flow position and give him a margin of approximately 10 per cent, then the American Farmers Home Administration which is similar to our Farm Credit Corporation will set aside that debt and pay the interest on one-quarter of the debt for up to five years.

The Minister of Agriculture has no program of a similar calibre. One could say: "That is really only bailing someone out. Should we actually do that?" I say that we should consider very seriously doing that in this country. Every time the Farm Credit Corporation has a default, a bankruptcy or a foreclosure, it loses between $80,000 and $90,000. We know that when there is a bankruptcy, half of the stock is replaced and half of the chattels walk away overnight. Rather than losing $80,000 or $90,000 in a foreclosure, why not assist a farmer by setting aside a portion of his debt, thereby putting him in a positive cash flow position for several years and ultimately allowing him to be responsible for his debt at a later time?

In September when the farm debt crisis began in the United States and farm property values dropped by 25 per cent to 50 per cent there and in Canada, the Americans announced this set-aside program and the Farmers Home Administration sent out notices of it to about 150,000 of its clients. As well, it has received over 100,000 inquiries from people asking about the program and whether or not they can take advantage of it. In fact, for over 8,000 farmers interest rates have been reduced from 11 per cent or 12 per cent, depending on whether it is a production loan or land loan, to around 7 per cent or 5 per cent. As well, the Farmer's Home Administration has handled 3,000 farm set-asides.

To compare the Minister's reducing interest rates from 14 per cent to 12.5 per cent with the Farmers Home Administration Program in the United States, which has reduced interest rates from 11 per cent or 12 per cent to 7 per cent or 5 per cent and created a set-aside program—

Mr. Malone: What were the interest rates when the Liberals were in power? They were 22 per cent.

Mr. Foster: —is simply not viable. I notice that Hon. Members opposite are really getting agitated. We want to know when they will begin to take action on all of these problems.

In the statement made by the Minister of Finance on "bloody Thursday", November 7, in which he effectively said; "We are not only going to kick the farmers when they are down, but we are going to really go at them," the Minister almost declared war on the potato farmers of Prince Edward Island and the grain farmers of the west. Through service fees, the Government will collect $32.3 million in the coming year. For instance, germination fees will go from $12.50 to $50.

The potato farmers in Prince Edward Island are having a very difficult time this year. Their cost of production runs about 5 cents a pound and their selling price is around 6 cents a pound. They are facing a very difficult situation. For fresh fruits, vegetables and potatoes being sold to other provinces, a 33-cent per hundred pounds inspection fee will be imposed. I am told that in an average production situation, that will run to about $66 per acre for inspecting potatoes produced. From an average size potato farm of 200 acres, the cost will be very significant. My preliminary estimate is that the cost will be something around $12,000 or $13,000 for inspections.

As well, there will be increased inspection charges for inspecting potatoes which are produced for seed amounting to something like $11 per acre. That could run something like $2,200 per farm. There will be a charge for secondary tuber inspections of 7 cents per hundred pounds. It goes on and on.

In the Agriculture Committee meeting yesterday, we tried to get information about this from the Minister but he said: "Oh, well, we are discussing it with producer groups across the country, but we cannot give this information to the Agriculture Committee of the House of Commons. The Agriculture Committee of the House of Commons is a very important agricultural group. It seems to me that if the Government will impose dramatic increases in farm service fees, it should be prepared to provide pertinent information to the members of the committee.

There are an endless number of items on which I would like to speak today but obviously time is moving on. I would like to draw attention to the fact that the Government—at a very difficult time for many agricultural producers across the country—is imposing a new disaster insurance scheme on them. Because of the drought which was experienced in western Canada this past summer, the federal Government and the provincial Governments jointly shared a program which provided $60 million in Southern Alberta and Saskatchewan. The previous Liberal Government agreed to provide $16 million. That amount has been cut to less than $8 million by this Government, and the provincial Government of Saskatchewan has matched that figure and provided $8 million.

Under the program which the Government is proposing, farmers will pay half the cost, the federal Government will pay half the cost and the provincial Governments will be required to pay nothing under the program, except perhaps administration costs. Just think what the situation would have been in northeastern Saskatchewan, in the five rural municipalities which suffered tremendous flood damage, two years in a row, late in the spring season, if those 1,700 farmers had been required to provide the $8 million which was provided by the provincial Government. The farmers of the country are being abandoned by the Government at a time when finances and farm debts are the most severe they have been in 30 or 40 years. In addition, the Government is imposing fees to cover inspections and disaster insurance.

We are disappointed that the Government has decided to cancel Canagrex. When the Tories were campaigning in the last election they talked about Canada becoming a superpower in agricultural exports. In fact, Canada has a very high standard in that regard. For example, in 1983 Canada exported $9.5 billion worth of exports, which amounted to 10 per cent of Canadian exports for agricultural commodities. As well there was a surplus of $4.3 billion over imports. I recognize that much of that was due to the Canadian Wheat Board and to the exports which were made by the Canadian Dairy Commission. The previous Government wanted to establish the Canagrex program to market many commodities, such as beans, canola, honey and all of the relatively smaller-volume and dollar-wise commodities which are often fragmented by provincial Governments. We have seen the situation in Canada in which provincial Governments compete with each other in pork sales. Therefore, Canagrex was established to co-ordinate, identify and test markets, and to provide one-stop financing assistance. The first five months in which Canagrex operated, it had sales of some $17 million and it was in the process of arranging an additional $160 million. Canagrex has performed market surveys on 16 countries and has handled 300 requests for assistance. Those requests have not just come from small commodity groups, but from big corporations such as Canada Packers and the Cargills of the world, who recognize the advantage of an agricultural export corporation.

The Government is abolishing Canagrex at a time when the United States has brought in an excellent program for their agriculture exports. The Secretary of State for Agriculture has indicated that the United States is going to be more aggressive in marketing its commodities abroad. This Government is abandoning farmers at a time when they need more help. They require help in research, marketing and financial assistance. The Government should be looking toward the continuation of farmers, as is the United States. The Government is simply abandoning Canadian farmers.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, talks like the one we have just heard from the Liberal Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) run off the backs of the prairie farmers like water off the back of a duck. When I hear the Hon. Member with his crocodile tears talk about this Government, which has only been in power for five or six months, not keeping its promises, I cannot understand how he can have so much gall.

In 1980 Prime Minister Trudeau promised that if the Liberal Government was re-elected it would change the Valuation Day from December 31, 1971. That brought hope to hundreds of farmers whose "nest-egg" was tied up in that Valuation Day. The Minister of Agriculture at that time, Mr. Whelan, promised prairie farmers that he would change that date and there was no doubt about it. Was that date ever changed? Every time Mr. Whelan was asked in the House when the date was going to be changed, he would say "Soon". "Soon" never came. As a result, hundreds of farmers in the west, and indeed across Canada, had their pension plans ruined. Yet, the Hon. Member for Algoma has the gall to talk about this Government breaking promises. When I listen to him, I suspect that a leopard can change his spots. Why did the Liberals not change the date after their Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture had made definite promises? When the Hon. Member starts practising what he preaches, maybe we will listen to him.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who is a very good friend of mine and a person whom I have known for a great many years, makes a lot more sound than light. If we look at the Tory promises, three-quarters of them have not been adopted and nothing is happening.

Mr. Taylor: Not in five months!

Mr. Foster: He should take a look at the list.

Mr. Taylor: How about the Valuation Day?

Mr. Foster: The number one promise on the Tory list of action is to abolish the capital gains tax on the sale of farm property for continuing agriculture purposes. Parliament has been here since November 5. Why has it not brought in the legislation? Why is it not sending it to committee?

Mr. Taylor: We are doing it.

Mr. Foster: Well, why don't they do it? The Order Paper of the House of Commons is empty. Why does the Government not bring in a Bill to abolish capital gains tax? It wants to send the whole matter off to committee to study it. As a matter of fact, I predict that the Tories will welsh on that promise.

Mr. Taylor: Oh yeah?

Mr. Foster: If the Hon. Member for Bow River took the time to read the document entitled Tax Issues in Agriculture, he would find that the Minister of Finance is not with it. The Minister of Finance is back-pedalling on the whole question. If the Government is going to abolish the capital gains tax on farm property, why did it pass the capital gains provision in Mr. Lalonde's Budget of last spring?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

EMPLOYMENT

URGENT NEED TO ESTABLISH FAIR PROGRAMS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, it has now been two months since the report by Judge Rosalie Abella was tabled, and the Progressive Conservative Party has yet to respond to the 117 recommendations for dealing with problems related to job discrimination.

This is a matter that requires special attention and immediate action, especially where visible minorities are concerned, as demonstrated in a joint study prepared by the Toronto Metro Social Planning Council and the Urban Alliance on Race Relations. The study condemns the racist attitudes to which ethnic groups in Toronto are exposed. Racism is not peculiar to the Toronto area, however. It is something we find in Canada as a whole.

It is therefore a matter of great urgency that equal opportunity programs be established for women, native people, the disabled and visible minorities, in addition to providing immigrants with adequate language and job training, because they are faced with both open and indirect discrimination, as reported by the Special Committee on the Participation of Visible Minorities in Canadian society.

As a society, we have a responsibility to eliminate at source any discrimination against minority groups, but the Progressive Conservative Government has a duty to take appropriate measures.

POTATO INSPECTION AND CERTIFICATION FEES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, last week the P.E.I. Potato Marketing Board and the P.E.I. Potato Producers' Association received letters from the Deputy Minister of Agriculture outlining increases in potato inspection and certification fees, considered as cost recovery measures by the Department of Agriculture.

Inspection fees for table stock potatoes are to be 33 cents per hundredweight, effective April 1 this year. When we look at the average yield based on Prince Edward Island production of 200 hundredweight per acre, that means the cost per acre will jump to $66. For the average farmer who produces 200 acres of potatoes, that means over $13,000 in inspection fees.

A fee has also been introduced for seed potato producers which, on average, would amount to about $5,000 in most cases. This will be prohibitive to many farmers who are already finding it difficult to get their products to market at a price above the cost of production.

The potato producers of Prince Edward Island are opposed to this new fee structure. They are particularly concerned that the changes will come into effect without consultation, and apparently without compromise. I do not believe the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is fully aware of the implications of this for the farmers of Canada, and I recommend a full consultation process take place, allowing producers to air their concerns on cost recovery measures.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

REFUGEES

TREATMENT OF DETAINEES CLAIMING REFUGEE STATUS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, refugees and other persons who arrive by aeroplane at Pearson International Airport and are for any reason detained at the minimum security facility in the Avion Motor Hotel, ought to be treated no worse than criminals condemned to imprisonment in Canada. However, I am advised that indeed they are. I have been told that they never receive as much as one full hour per day outside in the fresh air. In fact, more often than not they receive none.

Detainees are strictly forbidden to talk with each other, even in the line-up for meals. There is no library. Security staff arbitrarily search the detainees' rooms and stored belongings, without permission, and some detainees allege their belongings have been stolen. The security staff frequently use abusive language and, ironically, threaten detainees with jail.

I call upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to inquire into the operation of this detention facility and report to this House on whether Canada meets the expectations of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, and in particular, as to who determines the rules governing detainees, who is responsible for administering them, and what recourse is open to a detainee who feels unjustly treated.

CANADA-UNITED STATES CO-OPERATION

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks we have heard the Opposition in this House continuously attack our U.S. neighbours on matters of foreign investment, defence sharing, and trade. While our new Government begins initiatives to get our country back to work through co-operation inside and outside Canada, all Canadians see is the Opposition "American bashing", rather than joining with us and working toward jobs and prosperity in this country. Many Canadians, including myself, are sick and tired of this action.

I suggest that most Canadians want co-operation with our good friend and major trading partner to the south. Due to the poor investment climate in the past, too many Canadians took their investments to the U.S. I challenge Canadians to invest in Canada. As well, rather than criticize foreign investment, why not get involved in joint ventures with investors from the U.S., Europe, and the Pacific rim countries who want to invest in this great country of ours?

Canada has prospered because of joint research with the U.S. in many areas such as health care, communications, and transportation, to name a few. U.S. advances in technology have helped in Canada's over-all prosperity, a prosperity which our new Government is attempting to restore, not with pessimism and contempt but with fairness, openness, and a willingness to work with our friends. This positive approach will not sell newspapers, but it will get Canadians back to work and at the same time keep Canada a strong and sovereign nation.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—NEED FOR AGREEMENT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to encourage the Government to work toward an agreement with the National Association of Japanese Canadians. The need to arrive at an agreement at meetings between representatives of the Government and the association appears to have been recognized by the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta), and I commend him for that. He does well to pursue the urgent task of arriving at an honourable agreement with the Japanese Canadian community, which has this past weekend reaffirmed its support for the position taken by its national leadership. I urge him to press ahead fearlessly.

S.O. 21

Canadians do not approve of discrimination against visible minorities. Even those who question the need for compensation, recognize that the King Government acted against a group of Canadians who stood out only by reason of their race and origin.

World War II proved to be a massive struggle against genocidal racism. The Government now faces the challenge of redressing a great wrong done to a Canadian visible minority in those days. I challenge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to ensure that the Government resumes the negotiations it promised in December and considers all the grievances suffered by Japanese Canadians.

INDUSTRY

IMPORTANCE OF TEXTILE AND CLOTHING INDUSTRIES

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, the textile industry in Canada is a vital part of our nation's economy. It is a complex, highly capital intensive, and highly concentrated sector, affecting all Canadians. Combined with the clothing industry, there are 183,000 Canadians employed throughout Canada in this business. Some 45 per cent of these people reside in Ontario. Textiles are very important in my riding of Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington. Many of my constituents are employed, either directly or indirectly, in this industry. All Canadians use textiles. The future of the industry in Canada is an important concern for all of us.

I congratulate the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) for continuing his consultations with various textile representatives. It is my understanding that the Minister will be meeting with the chairman of the Canadian Textile Institute, Mr. Ray Chevrier, and Mr. Des McLaughlin, director of government and textile trade relations, of Celanese Canada Incorporated, later this month. I am confident this type of consultation is a good omen for the textile and clothing industries in Canada. There is much work to be done, and we will be doing it together. The concern, opinions, and advice of this important industry are invaluable. The Minister deserves our encouragement throughout this process.

THE ADMINISTRATION

WEAKNESS OF CONSERVATIVE QUEBEC CAUCUS IN OTTAWA—CONSEQUENCES FOR QUEBEC

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, the weakness of the Quebec Conservative caucus in Ottawa is becoming most alarming. The caucus has so little clout that every day it is being outsmarted by the Ontario caucus. Ministers from Quebec are nothing more than francophone spokesmen for the important Ministers outside Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, at a time when Wabasso is closing its factory in Trois-Rivières, Melchers is closing down in Berthier, Le Carbure is closing in Shawinigan, and now that Montreal's biggest construction project, the VIA Rail maintenance centre, has been cancelled, the Aviation Safety Board has been transferred from Montreal to Ottawa, the Vieux Port de Montréal projects have been suspended, and Summer Canada projects have been scrapped, we see the Hyundai corporation, a Korean automobile manufacturer, getting ready to set up a factory not in Quebec but in Ontario, and not just anywhere in Ontario but in the riding of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens).

People always said the Conservatives were ignoring Quebec. Mr. Speaker, as long as Conservative Members elected in Quebec remain silent and as long as the Parti Québécois is in bed with the Progressive Conservative Party, all Quebec will get from this Government is a lot of promises, some nice medals and a lot of unemployment.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CANCELLATION OF RADIO PROGRAMS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that CBC Radio has cancelled two more of the longest running programs on its AM network, namely, Identities and Anthology. Having already cancelled Our Native Land, this means that the CBC has killed three programs that have been on the air for more than 50 years and which were especially informative to minority groups in Canada.

One of the major objectives of the CBC should be to help minority groups attain their full standing in Canadian society. Instead, the CBC is now pushing shows based on its view of consumerism because it believes it can appeal to some market researchers' version of what today's "yuppies" want to hear.

Before these changes are approved by the CBC senior management I ask the President of the CBC to review them fully, in view of the Corporation's mandate to serve all Canadians. I also appeal to the Minister of Communications to give the CBC the opportunity to appear before the House Committee on Communications and Culture to explain the changes which it is making as a result of the cut in its budget.

NECESSITY TO PRESERVE FOOD PRODUCING LAND

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, the Ethiopian crisis that wrenched the emotions of Canadians during the past year is one tragic example of the world's growing need for human food. Yesterday around the world 40,000 children under the age of five died of starvation. Today another 40,000 will die, and there will be yet another wave of tragic deaths from starvation tomorrow. Additionally, 70 million persons per year, roughly three times Canada's present population, suffer permanent and irreversible brain damage from a shortfall of protein.

In the face of that overwhelming and clearly demonstrated need for human food, Canada still does not have a widespread understanding or appreciation of the need to preserve our agricultural land. We are complacent in the false comfort that the world's hungry people are elsewhere, and that the problem is not ours. We accept the myth that Canada has an abundance of agricultural land. The truth is that Canada is diminishing its food producing capacity at such a rapid rate that a tragedy in both economy and nutrition is inevitable if we do not reverse the rate at which we destroy our food producing soil.

One-half of the original farmland in Ontario is now permanently removed from agricultural production. From 1971 to 1976, 200,000 acres of farmland in Canada's largest province were removed from agricultural production.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SPOUSE'S ALLOWANCE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government—through the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), or of social injustice in Canada—has introduced Bill C-26 whose unfortunate result is to discriminate against 80,000 Canadians. I should like to quote a telegram:

> The Quebec Association for the Defence of the Rights of Retirees and Early Retirees denounces the discriminatory character of the social measure under which only widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 will receive the federal allowance.

Further on, it states:

> Single or divorced men and women aged 60 to 64, destitute and oftentimes savagely thrown out of the labour market, should be entitled as well to the minimum protection of a guaranteed income, as the one given widows and widowers in the same age bracket.

Mr. Speaker, a copy of this telegram has been forwarded to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) urging him to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to set aside the funds required so that the House will not discriminate against those Canadians.

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF BENEFITS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Government must pay particular attention to those in the age group of 50 to 65 years who, through no fault of their own, are in a position where they are unable to find any meaningful employment. They are at a stage in their lives when the contributions they would normally be making to pension plans would afford them with an income upon reaching a reasonable and acceptable retirement age. I have discovered, as I am sure many Members have, that there are untold numbers of individuals and families suffering tremendous hardship.

Would the Prime Minister consider the possibility of extending such things as UIC benefits in order to ensure that those in that age group, who cannot find employment and are about to lose everything they have worked for, for their families, will be given a reasonable source of income to tide them over until a change in the economy takes place to allow them to re-enter the workforce?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a few questions for the Prime Minister which relate to our ongoing relationship with the United States. Recently the Prime Minister, and several of his Ministers, made factual errors—perhaps misstatements—on a number of ongoing issues.

I will deal first with the issue of acid rain. I believe that the Prime Minister threw away a very important bargaining chip in our negotiations with the United States when he proclaimed, last Friday, that Canada ought to clean up its own act before pressing the Americans. He has already been contradicted by the Premier-designate of Ontario. He was contradicted today in Montreal by the Ontario Minister of the Environment, Andrew Brandt.

Will the Prime Minister recognize that by these statements he has put us in a bad bargaining position on a very important issue? Will he recognize that he needs to reach an agreement with the President of the United States at the summit meeting in Quebec City on March 17? If he fails to get a full agreement on the control of acid rain, he will have failed Canadians.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if there has been failure in dealing with this very important issue over many years, and failure there has been, there can be no doubt that the responsibility for it rests in large part with the Liberal Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: In point of fact, if my right hon. friend wants to quote provincial Ministers, he will find that at the same conference that was convened by the Minister of the Environment this morning, the Minister of the Environment for the Province of Quebec—

—the Hon. Adrien Ouellette said, practically word for word, that Mr. Mulroney was quite right when he said Friday, and that the Quebec Government is in complete agreement with his initiatives and his remarks.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that the United States and Canada share responsibilities in this highly important and sensitive sector. In my opinion, acknowledging as we do our share of responsibilities as Canadians—we ought to clean our own backyard before blaming others—is clear evidence of our good faith and our desire to co-operate openly with a view to settling the problem of acid rains once and for all.

That will not be achieved overnight, Mr. Speaker, but in all good faith we will initiate the process over a period of time so as to conclude agreements which indeed will enable us to clean our environment.

NORTH WARNING SYSTEM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would call to the attention of the Prime Minister that on March 6, 1984, the federal Minister of the Environment signed an agreement with all of the provinces to limit sulphur dioxide emissions by 5 per cent by 1994. Today the Ontario Environment Minister, Mr. Brandt, said that he does not believe that Canada, especially Ontario, has lagged behind the United States. He said: "I think we've done more in terms of reduction of sulphur dioxide emissions in Canada than in any other jurisdiction".

I will turn now to the subject of the DEW Line.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am dealing with misstatements made by the Prime Minister and his Ministers. They have blamed the deterioration of the DEW Line on previous Canadian Governments. The Prime Minister knows that is not true. He and Cabinet Ministers were factually wrong about which Party made the original commitment to bring nuclear arms on to Canadian soil. He knows it was Mr. Diefenbaker.

Some Hon. Members: Shame! Shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I happened to be in the House of Commons—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: So was I, and you're wrong.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —when that deal was welshed upon by Mr. Diefenbaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You're wrong.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It provoked the resignation of Douglas Harkness and brought about the defeat of that Government. I was right here in the House of Commons when that happened.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker: Does the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition have a question?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There seems to be confusion or a distortion of facts on the other side. Will the Prime Minister agree that no northern warning agreement should be signed with the United States until Members of the House have had an opportunity, on the floor and before the standing committee, to review the negotiations on the northern warning system, so that Members of Parliament who do know the facts will be given an opportunity to review that agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend says that he was in the House of Commons in 1962. He was doing better then than he is now—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —because I know that my right hon. friend can do a lot better than defame the memory of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, who served this House and country long, honourably, and well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: That denunciation of the Liberals did not come from me. It came from a very distinguished Canadian, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau, who wrote that the Liberal Party became the defrocked princes of peace when it did its volte-face and accepted nuclear arms on Canadian soil for the first time. That is what happened with the Liberal Party in 1962 when it sold its soul for temporary power. That is what is wrong with the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Now you won't take them.

Mr. Mulroney: Now we are hearing from the NDP. This is going to get priceless. The latest members of NATO.

Mr. Skelly: Don't count on it.

Mr. Mulroney: I can give my right hon. friend, who is a man of distinction and accomplishment, the assurance, which I know he will accept from me, that this Government will defend at all times the interest of Canadian sovereignty and will sign no document that does anything other than enhance the sovereignty, integrity, and independence of Canada.

Mr. Gauthier: How about before the House?

Mr. Mulroney: Indeed, we will be honoured to share with all Members of the House, via a House committee, all information relating thereto, and we will be delighted to bring it forward.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Of course we must welcome that assurance, but we don't have to accept any attempt by the Prime Minister to rewrite history in this House. He need only consult his Minister of Veterans Affairs who resigned on the issue I have described, because the Diefenbaker Government—I knew the right hon. gentleman as well as the Prime Minister did, and in ways I knew him better—

Mr. Speaker: With due respect—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Let him finish.

Ms. Copps: How come you let him go on at length? Be fair.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I have kept a stopwatch so far on the questions and the answers. They have both been extraordinarily long.

Mr. Gauthier: You cut him off.

Mr. Speaker: If members wish to hear a supplementary question from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I will grant one.

WEST COAST SALMON TREATY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I suppose that these issues are serious enough, particularly when history is being toyed with, to deal with fully on the floor of the House of Commons. My question now relates to another matter, but relates again to the failure to bring Canadians into the picture.

I put a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans before the Prime Minister wanted the treaty on salmon fishing on the West Coast accelerated and initialled last week in Ottawa before any Member of the House saw the text of that treaty. As a matter of fact, when the Minister of Justice was a substitute for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, he said that we were dumping salt cod into the United States, which was again wrong.

Will the Prime Minister undertake, before that treaty is signed by him and the President on March 17, if it is ratified by the U.S. Senate, that he will give the Members of the House an opportunity to see the text and give their views as to the benefits of that treaty to Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend does the House and me a disservice by suggesting that I would have brought pressure to bear on our negotiators to conclude an agreement simply so that there would be a document of convenience to sign in Quebec City. I think that is to underestimate considerably the wisdom of Members of the House, and my sense of duty and patriotism.

I can tell my right hon. friend that the negotiator for Canada throughout was a very distinguished Canadian, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp. He will tell my right hon. friend that at no time did I do anything other than encourage him to proceed in the national Canadian interest. He has done that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I want to give the Prime Minister another chance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: That "tell us what to do Government" of nightwatchmen, Ministers who fight amongst themselves, and a Minister of Finance who admittedly enjoys the support of the Prime Minister occasionally, has succeeded in creating so much uncertainty and confusion that the Canadian dollar has been driven below 75 cents.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: We know what the Prime Minister used to say about the Canadian dollar.

With this obvious loss of confidence, will the Prime Minister undertake to get behind the Minister of Finance in order to remove those divisions in Cabinet so that some over-all, coherent direction can be given to economic policy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I notice that my hon. friend from downtown Westmount takes the liberty of making such pretentious suggestions only when the Member from Shawinigan is not sitting next to the Opposition Leader.

I can tell my hon. friend what he already knows, and which he has had the kindness to acknowledge many times in private observations and in comments about the House. He and I view the Hon. Minister of Finance as an outstanding, able, and brilliant Minister who is serving Canada and the Government extremely well.

PRESENTATION OF BUDGET—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker, the clichés and platitudes of the Prime Minister are already legend in this country, and I would like to direct my next question to the Minister of Finance.

Could the Minister give the House the assurance that this Government, so full of ambiguity, contradiction and dissension, will be bringing down a budget as soon as possible, before the end of April, in order to restore confidence in this country's economy?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have spent considerable time talking to a number of people throughout the country in the three months since the economic statement. I am continually impressed by the increasing confidence in their minds about the direction that our Government is taking, including the policy direction and the long term approach that we are taking to solve the country's economic problems.

The Hon. Member has asked me on two or three occasions when I will bring down the Budget. I think we have made it quite clear that we want to go through the process of consultation with the First Ministers' meeting, and then the economic conference. I will be tabling a Budget in the House as soon after that as I can.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. John Pike, the Director of Space Policy for the American Federation of Scientists, suggests that weapons designed to intercept ICBMs in mid course would have to be based in Canada. Another report from George Lindsey, the Chief of Operational Research in the Department of National Defence here in Canada, suggests that nuclear weapons might have to be placed in Canada to intercept incoming ICBMs. Has the Minister investigated these possibilities with his American counterparts? Has he informed them that Canada would not accept, under any circumstances, such weapon systems on our soil?

● (1430)

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the Hon. Member giving me the opportunity to clarify continuing statements that are in the newspapers that do not relate to government policy. The Prime Minister had a press conference on Friday. He stated very clearly what the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I have stated on a number of occasions in this House. That position is the policy of the Government, and it will continue to be the policy of the Government.

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I got an answer. I will try again. The same Mr. Lindsey, and this is not a quotation from a newspaper, it is from a Senate hearing just down the hall, stated that it would be "operationally desirable" to place a ballistic missile defence system under the operational control of NORAD. Therefore, will the Government withdraw its endorsement of star wars until it learns the full implications of this whole program as it affects Canada?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, what really infuriates me is that the Opposition attempts to take two or three different programs, and mixes them up, and suggests to Canadians that things are not very clear. The Prime Minister on Friday made it very clear where this Government stands. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and I have made it clear earlier. There is no reason for me to be repeating every day what our position is. The Canadian people know what our position is, and it is what the Prime Minister said on Friday. We are in a position where we have no nuclear weapons on Canadian soil, and we have no present intention of receiving any nuclear weapons on Canadian soil.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I notice the Minister said that the Government has no present intention of accepting nuclear weapons on our soil.

NORTH WARNING SYSTEM

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): I have a final question for the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister admit that you cannot have a ground radar tracking system for star wars in Canada that is distinct from the—updated north warning system? Will he also admit that that is an integral part of the airborne SDI, you cannot divide the one from the other and therefore, logically speaking, Canada is now committed to star wars in this country?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will not accept any of the philosophy of the hon. gentleman. What I will say again is that we are negotiating a warning system with the United States, and simply a warning system. Nothing more than that.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It has nothing to do with star wars.

COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, now that we are on the ground of trying to clarify what these statements are, let me ask a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: Get back to your own area.

Mr. Axworthy: In an answer to the Leader of the Opposition, the Prime Minister indicated, I believe he gave the word assurance, that there would be an opportunity for this House to examine the agreement before it is signed with the President of the United States, concerning the defence warning system.

Mr. Crosbie: It is more than you ever did. Where were you two years ago?

Mr. Axworthy: I would like to have confirmation from the Prime Minister that that document, prior to any initialling or agreement with the United States, will be submitted to a parliamentary standing committee of this House, and that we will have the opportunity to hear witnesses and representatives relating to the Department of National Defence and the Department of External Affairs before anything is signed. Will the Prime Minister give us that very clear assurance?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have already spoken to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and suggested to him that the Government would be most anxious to provide Members of Parliament with a full, detailed briefing of the radar warning system in the context of North American defence.

I am prepared to have that start happening this afternoon. If members of the other Parties want to wait, we can wait. But we are prepared to start that briefing just as soon as possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Minister that members of this Party have been asking for that for the last three weeks, not beginning this afternoon.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why didn't you ask that when you were in Government?

Mr. Axworthy: We can only say that we are now pleased to receive a positive reply.

STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, while we are on the issue of seeking assurances, going back to the Prime Minister's press conference on Friday, he was not as clear as he might have been in indicating that this Government and this country would not accept any involvement in the star wars initiative through its implication to the radar system or through its implication to NORAD. Can we have the assurance of the Government that it has no intention of accepting any involvement in star wars, whether procurement, involvement, or command sectors, or we would never accept any placement or deployment of nuclear weapons on our soil by the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, made clear earlier today, the answers to that question have already been put on the record. The policy of this Government is, as it will be, that there will be no nuclear weapons stationed on Canadian soil. That can be taken as categoric. It is intended that way. That is the position of the Government of Canada.

With regard to the question of any association with any aspect of the Strategic Defence Initiative, I can give the Member assurance now, as I have before, that there is no plan, current, pending, or anticipated, that would have the Government of Canada involved in any way with the Strategic Defence Initiative.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

STUDENT SUMMER JOBS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who has repeatedly told the House that she would not introduce her student summer employment program until she has had an opportunity to consult widely, and presumably with students, including the Canadian Federation of Students. Would she explain why she never did meet with the Canadian Federation of Students and in fact has postponed any meeting with that body until next Monday, which will be five days after her planned announcement of her student program tomorrow?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I can explain very easily, Mr. Speaker. The persons whom the Hon. Member mentioned were out of the country at the time I was available to meet with them.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I can say categorically that that is not true.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to explain why this kind of excuse is being employed, instead of actually meeting with them as they have been asking her to do for weeks? How is it possible for her to introduce a program which is supposed to serve students who have not been consulted at all, I have not been consulted through the Canadian Federation of Students, or through any other organization representing students?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that I have been meeting with students, with individual young people, and with groups of young people, in every part of the country, and I intend to continue to do so. I wish the Hon. Member could have been with me last Friday in Montreal when I met with 150 young people, students, who have been taken off the unemployed list and put back into training programs that will lead them to permanent jobs.

Mr. Axworthy: Good Liberal training programs.

Miss MacDonald: That is the kind of information I need to be given to me about how they can succeed in moving from school to unemployment, to work that is of a productive nature. I have been doing that right across the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

SIGNING OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): My question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Last week, his Minister of External Trade made public a document on Canada-U.S. trade relations. During his press conference the Minister said he intended to reach a final decision within three or four months. Yesterday, however, the Premier designate of Ontario warned the Right Hon. Prime Minister that he was opposed to hasty decisions by the Government before all elements of the question were known. How does the Prime Minister intend to reconcile yesterday's legitimate request by the Premier designate of Ontario, Mr. Miller, and his own Government's desire to sign a free trade agreement with the United States as soon as possible?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is misrepresenting the facts. We are certainly not seeking an agreement with the United States on free trade, and we never have. We are consulting.

Mr. Chrétien: Ah!

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member for Shawinigan via Bay Street says: Ah! But it is true. This is part of the consultation process.

The Premier designate of Ontario gave me his point of view which I understand and respect, and we shall be listening very carefully to the Premier designate and to all the other Premiers on the fourteenth of this month and also to all other socio-economic partners in Canada, and we shall see . . . A definitive policy will be determined and announced in due time.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—INQUIRY WHETHER DOCUMENT TABLED BY MINISTER WILL BE STUDIED BY COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

The Prime Minister is actually denying what his own Minister of External Trade said at his press conference. The Prime Minister says that he wants to consult and hear what everyone has to say. In fact, the document tabled by his Minister . . . this would be an opportunity for a committee of the House to examine the very fundamental issue of Canada-U.S. relations.

Can the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that the document will be referred to the appropriate committee for consideration, so that Hon. Members will also hear what the provincial Premiers have to say, and the House can then make recommendations to the Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it is common knowledge that the Government is now preparing a White Paper on foreign policy which will also concern matters such as trade relations and our international economic relations. The document will be made available to a committee of the House, and I repeat what I said yesterday in a different context: If Hon. Members think the document is not sufficient for their purposes, the Government is prepared to submit as well the document tabled last week by my colleague, the Minister of External Trade.

I fail to see why Liberal Members look down on a Canada-wide consultation process, because I think one of the basic changes Canadians were seeking on September 4 of last year was to have a government that would at last be prepared to listen to the views and requests of Canadians. That is what this Government's objective is today.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF HON. PAUL SCHOENALS, SASKATCHEWAN MINISTER OF ENERGY AND MINES

Mr. Speaker: I should like to interrupt proceedings to advise Hon. Members of the presence in our gallery today of the Hon. Paul Schoenals, Minister of Energy and Mines of the Province of Saskatchewan.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will know that at this moment on foreign exchange markets the Canadian dollar is trading at 74.89 cents U.S. He will also know that in the past when the Canadian dollar softened, the Liberal Government made ordinary Canadians carry the brunt of that softening by increasing interest rates, including mortgage rates.

Knowing that an increase in interest rates at this crucial time would have a devastating effect in terms of investor and consumer confidence, will the Minister follow the traditional Liberal pattern, stand passively by, and allow the Bank of Canada to increase interest rates on Thursday?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Hon. Member has drawn attention to the fact that for some 21 out of the past 22 weeks interest rates in Canada have gone down successively, to the point that they are now down to a level which we have not seen for a number of years. That has done a tremendous amount to increase the confidence of Canadians and the expectations of increased improving economic performance.

We have watched while some changes in the U.S. dollar have put some pressure on the Canadian dollar in recent days, but I think the Hon. Member should not be too impatient. These are things that normally happen in a market.

CONFIDENCE INQUIRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House recall that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, and the Minister of Finance on many occasions indicated that after September 4 billions of dollars would move into Canada from outside, strengthening the value of the Canadian dollar as it built confidence. Could the Minister explain why that hasn't happened, why in fact the Canadian dollar is falling, and why there is little indication, as a result of that, that confidence is growing?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think there has been every indication that confidence in the country has grown significantly since September 4. We have seen close to 100,000 jobs created. We have seen retail sales increasing successfully in the months since then. There is no question in people's minds that this increased confidence is expected to continue and result in a very enhanced economic performance certainly over the months ahead and years ahead. The Hon. Member likes to walk around with a little cloud above his head. I think he should look around and see what is happening about him, before he asks these pessimistic questions.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

GRAIN HANDLERS LAID OFF

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Could he explain why 1,200 grain handlers have been laid off in Thunder Bay? At the same time, could he explain this terrible mismanagement by the Wheat Board? This type of lay-off is unprecedented. It is even more than those experienced under John Diefenbaker. I would like the Minister to explain this to the House.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, this is truly an important question. I wish they would get their act together. This morning the Leader of the Opposition referred to it as a strike, and this Hon. Member refers to it as a lay-off. I will explain why, very simply. It is a very serious situation for all of western Canada. We had a very bad crop last year. Our production is down 25 per cent. If he is accusing the Wheat Board of mismanagement, there are about 150,000 farmers out there who received final payments and were very satisfied. There are 150,000 farmers out there who believe that the Canadian Wheat Board has done a very good job of managing and selling farmers' grain, as we do on this side.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RAIL MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister, in his reply, has missed a very important point. He should know that grain handling which should have been done on the Great Lakes has been shifted to the West Coast. That has caused the type of lay-offs which took place. I want to know why there has been no use of winter rail movement. During the course of the last four years about 100 trains moved roughly one million tonnes of grain. Why has there not been a single train used for a single tonne of grain this year?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, let me repeat it very simply for the Hon. Member. He makes a very good point. Farmers this year on the Prairies produced about 25 per cent less grain than they did the previous year. The reason for there being no eastern movement by rail is a decision of the Wheat Board. If he is telling me that he thinks the Wheat Board is doing a poor job, and if that is the position of his Party, then I think western farmers would be interested in knowing that. However, very simply, there is not enough grain to move. We would very much like to have surpluses of grain which we could sell. There would be winter movement of grain to eastern ports, and it would make jobs in eastern Canada. However, we simply do not have the grain to move.

MATERNITY BENEFITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

My question relates to the remarks made by the Minister of Finance before the Canadian Club. The Minister has suggested that maternity benefits be eliminated in order to reduce the high cost of unemployment insurance for small businesses.

Can the Minister assure the House that maternity benefits will not be eliminated from the unemployment insurance program, since those benefits accounted for only 4 per cent of the overall cost of the program in 1984?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question which was raised by the Minister of Finance was raised, first of all, at the time of the economic statement on November 8. That question as to whether or not social benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act should be paid out of the unemployment insurance fund or out of general revenues of the Government has been raised by people in business, labour, employers, and employees, on a continuing basis. This is a question which can be raised under the unemployment insurance review.

● (1450)

COST OF PREMIUMS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, we are all concerned about the increasing costs to the employer and employee with respect to premiums. All of this was caused by the previous Government placing the costs of unemployment insurance on employers and employees. Is the Minister prepared to consider a premium arrangement whereby the Government would accept part of the premium cost, thus reducing the cost of the premium to the employer and employee?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is always forthcoming with good ideas. I suggest that he put that forward at the time of the unemployment insurance review.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

DISTRIBUTION OF PRINTING CONTRACTS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services. During the fiscal year 1983-1984 under the Liberal Government, the Department of Supply and Services spent approximately $127 million for printing services, of which $2 million, or less than 2 per cent, went to the three most westerly provinces, and even less to the Maritimes, I might add. Will the Minister consider initiating a more equitable distribution of printing contracts to all regions of Canada, possibly directing tenders on a regional basis where feasible?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I was aware and concerned about the maldistribution of government purchasing opportunities in terms of printing. We put in place a policy whereby printing costs are assessed on an FOB plant basis, to remove any penalties of geography. I am asking for regular reports from my officials to see that the program works and, hopefully, we will see some progress.

EMPLOYMENT

STUDENT SUMMER JOBS—PROGRAM ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is supplementary to the one asked by the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville. On January 17 the Minister promised me in this House that she would announce a summer employment program within two weeks of that date. That deadline has passed and we still have had no announcement. This morning in the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs, the Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs said that he did not know what summer employment program there would be for young native Canadians, or when it would be announced. He said he had no idea, that the decision rested with her Department. What kind of management and leadership is that? Does she not realize that that kind of procrastination is affecting the lives of thousands of young Canadians? Will she tell the House exactly when she is going to announce that program?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SCOPE OF PROGRAM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, praise the Lord. Last year's Summer Canada program not only helped thousands of students, but thousands of community groups and many client groups such as daycare Centres, senior citizens, and the handicapped. Will she give an assurance that her program will help all those client groups?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will realize that I will release the details of the program at the time of the announcement. I would only undertake to tell him at this point that it will be substantially larger than the $85 million which the Liberal Government had set aside for that program this summer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BRITISH COLUMBIA UNEMPLOYMENT ACTION CENTRES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In its hearings last week the NDP action group on jobs heard testimony on the key role of unemployment action centres in providing counselling and advocacy services for the unemployed, and in helping the unemployed to help themselves. In British Columbia full-time co-ordinators for 28 centres had been funded by the federal Government, but this has been discontinued. Will the Minister assure the House that there will be at least interim funding for four months while the British Columbia Federation of Labour attempts to secure a more permanent source of funding for these action centres?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have been following the travels of the NDP committee which is travelling across the country looking at employment. Some of the statements that have been forthcoming from the various members are very good. They say that discussions on employment and job creation should centre on the need for more self reliance, more decentralization of federal programs, and development of small, appropriately scaled local businesses. In the programs that we are developing, those are the very characteristics that we are putting into the program design. I also assure him that in that consideration we are looking at the needs of the unemployment help centres.

REQUEST FOR FUNDING

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister recognizes the very important role that these centres play. I would like a commitment from her that she is prepared to guarantee funding so that the B.C. Federation of Labour down the road can secure continued funding. Will she provide that kind of bridge funding so that they can continue?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do indeed understand the role that the unemployment help centres are playing in British Columbia. It was for that reason that I extended their payments last autumn.

ENERGY

TAKE OVER OFFER FOR UNION GAS

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the Minister assure the House that if there is a take-over of Union Gas by Unicorp, this will not negatively affect the credit status of Union Gas, or negatively affect the crucial role of Union Gas in ensuring security of gas supplies to all of eastern Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the Hon. Member that my Department is aware of the take-over offer from Union Gas. I have asked the Department, and also the National Energy Board, to look into the matter. He will be aware that we do not have control over share transactions, but we certainly do have an interest in the transmission lines and the storage facilities which, as the Hon. Member has indicated, serve far more than Union Gas itself.

THE ADMINISTRATION

APPOINTMENT OF HIGH COMMISSIONER TO UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. During the election campaign the Prime Minister said on the CTV program Question Period that the key position affecting economic or foreign policy should be screened by a House of Commons committee. Does the Prime Minister not believe that the job of High Commissioner to London is "a key position affecting foreign policy"? If so, which committee of the House will review that appointment and, if not, why will a committee not review that appointment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the same committee that reviewed the appointment of the Hon. Don Jamieson to London.

Mr. Allmand: You are holier than thou in that appointment.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend should not get so exasperated, because the Hon. Member for Shawinigan said that the appointment of Mr. McMurtry was a billiant one, and a good one for Canada. I thought he spoke for the Liberal Party on external affairs. Obviously the leader of the waffle speaks for the Liberal Party on external affairs, so he was wrong. In point of fact, I communicated—

Mr. Blaikie: Don't insult the waffle.

Mr. Mulroney: I apologize. I withdraw that on behalf of all wafflers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the Prime Minister like to complete his answer?

Mr. Mulroney: I have communicated with the Hon. Member for St. John's East, who is chairing the task force on parliamentary reform, ably assisted by the agriculture critic of the Liberal Party.

• (1500)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I defended him. One of our people said that he did not have a grain in his head, and I defended him, Mr. Speaker.

I have communicated with the Hon. Member for St. John's East and asked him and his distinguished colleagues if they could provide a formula whereby such appointments will be vetted by committees of the House of Commons, as we all wish.

IMPORTANT APPOINTMENTS—ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Prime Minister now assure the House that he will follow up on his election promise and set up a committee to review all major appointments before further appointments are made, particularly before the appointment of Mr. Davis to Washington?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, our ambassador to Washington, Mr. Gotlieb, is a distinguished member of the public service, and I had the honour to confirm his appointment. Apparently, the Hon. Member did not listen to the answer to the first question. As a matter of fact, we have already asked the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) to seek with his colleagues of the other parties a formula which in future would enable the House of Commons to review similar appointments.

Mr. Speaker: I have received notice from the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) of his intention to raise a question of privilege at this time.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DISCLOSURE OF CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege and I have given you notice of it under the appropriate Standing Order. My question of privilege is based on the comments made by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) that were reported in yesterday's Montreal, Gazette. The Hon. Member abused the privileges of his fellow parliamentarians by revealing information given to him in confidence concerning the Premier of New Brunswick.

We in this country still believe in the fundamental principle that one is innocent until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt in a court of law.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: By revealing hearsay and innuendo, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston has tarnished the reputation of the Premier of New Brunswick, a Privy Councillor. The Hon. Member has also tarnished the reputations of several young people—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question of privilege has the same difficulties as a previous question of privilege. Before the Hon. Member embarks upon what he thinks is also true, I must ask him, if he sees that, to tell me very clearly and quickly what his question of privilege of the House is as opposed to what he thinks about what another Member did.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston, in revealing the information given to him in confidence by the Justice Department official, has tarnished the reputation of all Members of the House. Now members of the public will be afraid to give information in confidence to Members of Parliament for fear that such information will be revealed publicly. I urge you, Mr. Speaker, to rule that a prima facie case of privilege has arisen and refer this matter to the House Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member did provide me with a document and with the press clipping to which he refers. I did read it and I have looked over the precedents on this matter. The Hon. Member appears to be making a claim that, because of something another Member did, the privileges of the House have been breached. On the basis of what he has said, I find that there is no privilege of the House that has been breached. I can find nothing else.

As I think the Hon. Member knows, my dilemma is that if he wishes to make a specific accusation or charge against or about the conduct of another Member, he is free to do so. That is his right. However, on the basis of what has been put before the House today, I must find that there is no prima facie case of the privileges of the House being breached.

It has been the custom for me to reserve my rulings on these matters but because this is a similar kind of situation to the one that was dealt with earlier, I thought it would be wiser if I simply indicated that what I had to say in the last case applies in this case. What we have here is a dispute about whether or not what one Member has done is appropriate. Any Member may feel as any Member wishes to feel about any other Member, but I hope that all Members know that an accusation or comments made about another Member of the House should only be made by way of substantive charge and that there are certain consequences that go with that. It would be entirely outside the bounds of the Speaker to find that a question of privilege had been breached as it was in the previous allegation. I must find, therefore, that there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Speaker could assist us by indicating the previous case to which he is referring. Was he referring to the case of the remarks made by the Hon. Member whose conduct is presently questioned against the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), or was he referring to another case?

Mr. Speaker: I am speaking of cases on which I have already been asked to rule with regard to the conduct of Members.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I may, I think that there is a certain relationship which exists between Members of Parliament, their constituents and the public at large, so that—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member rising on the point with which we have already dealt or is he rising on a separate point of order? He knows that if he is rising on the same point of order, he may not do so.

Mr. Rodriguez: On the same question, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps to clarify it and put it in proper perspective.

Mr. Speaker: I did not mean to create a dilemma for the Hon. Member. I waited to see if others would rise on the question of privilege. No one else rose. My options were to reserve my judgment or to make it now. Since I knew what it ought to be, I chose to make it now.

SOCIAL SECURITY

TABLING OF AGREEMENT WITH GOVERNMENT OF BELGIUM

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 40(2), I would like to table in both official languages an agreement on social security between the Government of Canada and the Government of Belgium. As provided by Standing Order 46(4), I would ask you to refer this report to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

PETITIONS

MAIL DISTRIBUTION IN SAINT-MICHEL-AHUNTSIC

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by some 100 residents of the Sault-au-Récollet project in my constituency of Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic who are asking that door-to-door mail delivery be provided to the project as soon as possible.

It is unacceptable that this public service for which these people pay taxes is still not being provided. The surveys are completed, the request for letter carriers has been submitted to Mr. Warren and these people are still waiting for the decision of the President and Chief Executive Officer of the Canada Post Corporation.

This situation causes hardship to my constituents. It results in inconvenience, time losses, costly trips and other charges because of lack of parking near the post office.

I therefore present this petition and strongly recommend that the Government act upon it.

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE—BUDGETARY CUTBACKS—SACKVILLE (NEW-BRUNSWICK)

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, once again it is my duty to present a petition signed by Sackville residents who denounce the cut-backs in the Canadian Wildlife Service and ask the Minister to restore the programs which were abolished without any consultation.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES POLICY AND PROGRAMS

MOTION RESPECTING STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations among House Leaders, and I believe you will find that there is unanimous consent to call Government Bill No. 9 on Motions rather than as an Order of the Day. I think you will find that it will be adopted without debate.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreeable to the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn moved:

That the quorum of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages Policy and Programs be six members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses, the government and the opposition are represented, and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when four members are present so long as both Houses, the government and the opposition are represented; and

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 67 and 138.

[Text]

SOLICITOR GENERAL—USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Question No. 67—Mr. Nunziata:

1. Since September 4, 1984, how many times has the Solicitor General used government aircraft and, in each case (a) what was the point of origin and destination (b) who accompanied him?

2. Was it impossible to use regular scheduled commercial flights and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): 1. The Solicitor General has used government aircraft on two occasions since September 4, 1984.

(i)(a) Ottawa to Toronto and return, (b) Mr. Von Veh.

(ii)(a) Ottawa to Halifax, (b) Dr. Doucet, Office of the Prime Minister, Mrs. Laura MacKay, Miss Wendy MacKay, Miss Rebecca MacKay.

2. (i) Yes, due to the narrow time frame and urgency of attending a meeting.

(ii) Yes, due to urgency of a meeting and the fact that no commercial flights were available.

"PENTHOUSE" MAGAZINE

Question No. 138—Mrs. Pépin:

1. Did the Minister of National Revenue state in the House on December 4, 1984, that he had asked departmental lawyers for legal opinions concerning the January, 1985 issue of Penthouse magazine and, if so (a) how many opinions were requested (b) from whom (c) what is their professional background (d) how often are they called to give their opinion concerning such material (e) what was the content of the opinions submitted to the Minister?

2. Does the Minister call upon third parties for opinions on such material imported and, if so, how often?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): 1. (a) Yes, the Minister of National Revenue initially requested an opinion from the Department of Justice. A second opinion at a more senior level was then requested from the Department of Justice to confirm the initial opinion.

(b), (c), (d) and (e) It is not the practice of this House that legal opinions or advice provided for the use of the Government be produced, nor is it the practice to identify the individuals providing such advice.

2. The only third party that is asked for opinions on these matters is the Department of Justice. The number of cases submitted to Justice varies between 30 and 40 each year.

[Translation]

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—SUPPORT FOR AGRICULTURE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

That this House condemns the Government for its inadequate response to the growing financial crisis in the agriculture sector and for its failure to provide sufficient support and services to farmers who face severe economic difficulties in all regions of the country.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest this morning when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) spoke on this very important topic. It occurred to me that for a Party that has been in power for 20 years to come into the House with a motion which castigates the Government for not acting on behalf of the farmers in the first five months of its mandate takes a lot of gall, as the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) said. It is also interesting to note that the Leader of the Opposition moved the motion, spoke to it and then disappeared from the House. If he was really interested in the well-being of Canadian farmers, one would have thought that he would have had enough interest to stay and listen to the debate.

I must give a good deal of credit to the NDP critic who had the common decency to say that this Government will be judged on its actions four or five years hence. That is a reasonable position to take. But for a Party which was in power for 20 years to do what it has done takes a tremendous amount of gall, and I find it offensive.

I suppose we can understand why the Liberals want to attack us and say that this Government has not been doing anything, since they did nothing for 20 years. I cannot think of one thing that could be considered an agricultural hallmark which was left by the previous Government. The previous Government and the previous Minister of Agriculture were very good at talking about the problems and the nasty situations in agriculture, but I defy anyone to name one thing which that administration was able to accomplish.

Someone might say Canagrex. Well, the Conservative Party understands the importance of the agriculture industry and knows the value of exports to Canadian farmers. Out of every dollar which a Canadian farmer earns, 50 cents comes from exports. In western Canada it is higher; it is probably closer to 75 cents out of every dollar. We know the value of exports.

The previous Minister, in talking about Canagrex, said that on a conservative estimate—he liked to use the word "conservative"; unfortunately, he never understood what it was to be a Conservative—we could look for $500 million worth of sales in the first year. What happened? There was about $17 million worth of sales, which is less than 5 per cent. A passing mark in most cases is 50 per cent, and Canagrex attained less than 5 per cent of what was anticipated. In many ways, that is lamentable. If it had performed there would have been no question that it would have had the full support of this Government and would still exist. However, there was no indication that it would perform and that was the problem.

It is obvious why the Official Opposition—and I wish it luck in its new role—does not want to talk about its record. The former Prime Minister asked why he should sell wheat in western Canada. Why would the Liberals want to talk about that? Who wants to talk about the fact that the Canadian farmer now pays more for energy supplies than the American farmer? Why do they pay more? Because the Liberals heaped tax upon tax. It is more expensive for Canadian farmers to go to the field than ever before, largely because of the tax which was imposed by the previous Government. It was that Government, through its irresponsible and totally reckless spending, that drove interest rates through the roof. That is the legacy of the previous Government. It is no wonder the Liberals do not want to talk about that record. It is obvious that is the reason they complain.

The Liberal Party says that it wants the Standing Committee on Agriculture to function. We do as well. Unfortunately, a year ago we could not get that committee to meet. We asked the chairman of that committee, in the House, when the committee would meet. We could not even get him to call a meeting. We had a meeting one night to discuss the Western Grain Stabilization Act, but had to adjourn because there was not a quorum. There was not a quorum because only one government Member, the chairman, came to the meeting. With that kind of dismal record, it is no wonder the Liberals do not want to flaunt it in public.

I do not think the time will be long enough to allow me to go through the items which this Government has managed to accomplish in less than five months. This morning the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) indicated that a lot of the things which had been done were not earth-shattering. We know that, but putting all of our initiatives together one can see the attitude which this Government has toward the resource industries in Canada. Canada has the potential to become a more powerful and influential country in agriculture if we pay some attention to the resource industries. Those industries include agriculture, forestry, fishing, energy and other resources.

One of the first things which happened when we formed the Government was that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) decided that the campaign commitment to reduce the amount of tax on farm fuels would be kept. That was done. A system was arrived at, with the help of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), whereby there would not be a rebate. That tax will not be collected and then refunded. We hope that very shortly there will be a tax number available to farmers so that the reduction in the cost of farm fuels will be available when the fuel is purchased. That is a benefit to Canadian farmers.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) froze Seaway tolls. I admit that that is not a large saving—$1.5 million to $2 million—but it will help Canadian farmers. It is a step in the right direction.

We have addressed the policy on metric, on which the Minister spoke very well this morning. That policy will help Canadian farmers. It was an election promise and it was carried out. In addition, initial barley payments were increased in an attempt to put more cash into producers' hands.

I was disappointed during Question Period when one of the opposition Members spoke in very unkind terms about the job which the Canadian Wheat Board is doing. I find it unfortunate. The Wheat Board has just announced final payments which were very good and it should be given credit for that. The Wheat Board has been doing a good job.

It was also interesting to note this morning that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy)—who I understand is the Opposition critic for the Canadian Wheat Board—has not had enough interest in his position to ask a question about western grain since November 14. When he was Minister he did not know enough about the system to sign the forms which would allow cash advances to be made available to farmers. As a result, for the first time since I can remember, and I have had a permit book for almost 30 years, cash advances were late. Why? Because the previous Minister did not have enough organization about him to even get the forms signed.

That is the record of that Government in agriculture. It is no wonder that the Liberals do not want to talk about their own record. You would have thought that after 20 years there would have been a lot of things that they had done for agriculture. Why is agriculture in such bad shape? To the extent that government can have influence in this sector, theirs was a negative influence. We have to put up with what that crew left us.

On advance payments we moved as quickly as we could. Again this was not a large item but it provided relief for people with unharvested grain in the Peace River country. It helps those who have had an early snowfall and not had a chance to harvest their crops. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), along with the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher), invoked the Meat Import Act. This was a major problem. Had we had some understanding of the cattle industry by the previous Ministers, we could have used this in the previous calendar year. Unfortunately there was no interest shown, it was left hanging too long, and it is this Government which will look after what we believe is some unfair competition from Irish beef imported into this country. Who is doing it? This Government and this Minister of Agriculture.

The Liberals talk about research. Sod is being turned today for the construction of a research plant. They cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. They cannot castigate us for cutting out research and say that it is a good deal to go ahead with these projects. We agree that research is important in agriculture, but at least give us credit for the fact that research is going ahead and has not been cut back by the Department of Agriculture.

There has been talk about Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. I believe the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) has gone a long way in interpreting that section to give farmers the benefit of the doubt.

There was some concern expressed this morning over the Western Grain Stabilization Act. The Act has been in force for 10 years and we intend to amend it very quickly so there is an interim payment to producers for spring seeding. But do you know when the payment came out under the previous Government? In August. Big deal! There is no reason why the previous Minister could not have had the legislation amended in time for an interim payment to help the producers in their spring seeding. Why was that not the case? Because there was no interest in agriculture on the part of the previous Government.

Then we have the situation in southwestern Ontario with the tobacco industry. It is a very serious situation. Some of the Members opposite were here at the end of the last Parliament. They will understand the political shenanigans that went on at the close of the session. I happened to be here, and a totally political Bill came in. We had the tobacco growers up in the gallery and it would have been very easy to pass the same kind of amendment this Government passed before Christmas which would have given the tobacco industry some hope for the then current growing season. This Government moved, and we give the Opposition credit for supporting it and getting it through in a hurry. But it would have been just as easy for the previous Government to do the same thing.

The National Farm Products Marketing Council is in the process of holding hearings to see what they can do about a marketing board for tobacco growers if that is what they want. But it was this Government and this Minister of Agriculture who understood the situation and got things done.

Mr. Foster: You guys filibustered last year.

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) should be ashamed of himself. He is a learned gentleman. He knows very well the kind of politicking that was going on in his own Party. I had a chance to talk to some of the Members of the Government at that time and there was no unanimity among them on that issue. So this shows what can be done if there is some will and determination and a proper attitude on behalf of the farmers in this country.

Another thing we have done is reach an agreement with the protein oils and starch research plant in Saskatoon. The Hon. Member should realize that is a research project. The agreement is to provide ongoing funding for another five years. That was on the table with the previous Government but it never got done. We took it over and in a few months we have been able to work out an arrangement so that they will have ongoing funding for five years. That is very much an agriculture matter and of benefit to Canadian farmers.

The Liberals talk about the Americans. Whether we like it or not, they are very, very important agricultural tranding partners of ours. One of the first acts of this Government was to sit down with the American Secretary of Agriculture and work out a process whereby we can meet with him once every six months to talk about agricultural trade matters. This is in sharp contrast to the previous Government. Whenever they went down to the U.S. they would insult them. That is no way to get along with your neighbours. All we are doing is going to the table in good faith and if we have problems we will sort them out. That is certainly a step in the right direction.

The Minister has established some farm finance review boards on an experimental basis to see what can be done for people in financial difficulty. He has also moved to reduce interest rates for some 5,600 farmers who are paying as high as 16.75 per cent.

Mr. Riis: What about the other thousands, Charlie?

Mr. Mayer: Admittedly there are lots more. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) makes a very good point. There are lots of problems out there and it is virtually impossible for the Government to address them all. But if we have the proper attitude and do what we can in the areas where we have some responsibility, eventually it will have some effect.

The Leader of the Opposition says he has travelled, Mr. Speaker. Let me tell him that I would like to travel with him to some of the farming communities and see what kind of reception he gets as opposed to the reception Members of this Government would get, based on the treatment they have had in the first five months of this Parliament. The Hon. Member shakes his head. I will go with him. I will challenge any one of them. I will go to any farming community they want in this country and we will talk about what we have done in five months as opposed to what they did in 20 years. We will see who gets the best reception. I will take up that challenge with any one of them.

Mr. Lapierre: Any time in Quebec.

Mr. Mayer: Any time. You set the date and I will be there. That is a challenge I would very much like to take you up on. Any time in Quebec. I would be happy to go to Quebec. I have been in Quebec many times and if you are a farmer, as I am, you talk the language no matter where you are in this country.

One of the first things the very distinguished Minister of Transport did was freeze branch line abandonment, Mr. Speaker. There will be no more abandonment until we have had a full hearing to make sure there can be no other use for these lines before they are torn up. No one here talks about that. They talked about a rate freeze this morning. Freight rates are going to go down next year largely as a result, unfortunately, of a poor crop. We do not have the volume to ship and volume is a factor in determining the full rate. But that is even better than a freeze. The Minister did not stand up and take a lot of credit for the fact that rates are going to go down. He quietly said that if we put the freeze in it will cost money so we will let the rates go down normally and worry about it another year. That is certainly a benefit to the Canadian farmer.

Another thing which we take for granted, because it has happened so gradually, is that interest rates have come down about 2.75 per cent since this Government assumed office. Rates have come down every week, with the exception of last week when they went up a very small amount.

Mr. Lapierre: And next week.

Mr. Mayer: If you are wishing some bad luck on us, you must realize you are wishing bad luck on the whole Canadian economy. I think you should be happy that they have come down.

There are many other things we have done. Something which affects western Canada and was very well received was the licensing by the Department of Agriculture of something called HY320. This is a new high-yield variety of grain. It was grown experimentally for the last couple of years and licensed last week. Again this is not earth-shattering and it will not receive a lot of national press attention, but things have been done on behalf of Canadian agriculture. So for the Official Opposition to come into this House with that kind of motion I find absolutely appalling. I suspect that people tuning in will also find it so.

Surely to goodness it would add to the debate and the demeanour of the House if we could have a balanced approach in this House. There are some things the previous Government did that I could give it credit for; but when hon. gentlemen get up in the House all you hear is gloom and doom and how terrible things are. The Leader of the Opposition says there is a strike at Thunder Bay. Another Liberal Member said that people have been laid off. Why are we not shipping grain from Thunder Bay? I can tell him that there are eight feet of ice there and how are we going to ship grain from Thunder Bay? That is obvious. You look like absolute fools.

I congratulate the official spokesman for the NDP on agriculture. He had a balanced statement. He criticized some of the things he thought we should be doing or where he thought we were going in the wrong direction. But he ended up by saying that the real judgment of what this Government is doing will come in four years' time. I am suggesting that if you look at the real consequences of the previous Government being in power for 20 years, they are obvious because we have some serious problems in Canadian agriculture.

I will conclude by saying that I will defend the Government's record with regard to Canadian farmers at any place in the country, on any platform, with any Member of either opposition Party, and I will be happy to do it. I think farmers would like to know the record. I would very much look forward to doing that if anyone wants to take me up on it.

Our mandate is for at least four years. In that period of time we intend to carry out as many of our campaign commitments as possible. We certainly look forward to that opportunity. On behalf of Canadian farmers I look forward to doing what I can, as part of the Government, to ensure that that very important sector of the country is treated fairly. Those are the exact words that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) used. If we can treat it fairly it will certainly be a new and novel way of treating a very basic and important industry in the country as compared to the treatment it received from the previous Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Minister's speech with a great deal of interest. However, he neglected to deal with some very specific promises made by some of his colleagues, including the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). I have three points I would like to see clarified by the Minister.

First, the question of stabilization payments owing to Quebec hog producers. The $13 million, the cheque that was symbolically signed by the Minister of Public Works. Is the Minister prepared to inform the House today that he was indeed going to cash the rather bouncy cheque written by his colleague from Joliette?

Second, the $60 million promised Quebec producers to compensate them for damages suffered as a result of drought. Is the Minister prepared to undertake today that $60 million in compensation will be paid to Quebec producers?

Finally, I would like the Minister to explain the advantages of his dairy policy and justify the cutbacks he made in the Government's dairy policy, that his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture made in the Canadian Dairy Commission's policy, without prior consultation with Quebec and Canadian producers.

[English]

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I am quite familiar with the situation of pork producers in Quebec. To use the words of the Leader of the Opposition, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is a very fair-minded individual. I am sure that with the good representation which we have from the Member's province and the attitude and reputation of the Minister of Agriculture, the pork producers in Quebec will be treated as fairly as is any other group of producers in the country. That undertaking was made prior to the election in September. That will be the hallmark of the Government. It will treat people in all parts of the country equally.

I cannot give the Hon. Member an answer about the drought because I am not totally familiar with the circumstances. I know that there was a drought agreement signed with the prairie provinces to maintain livestock numbers. That was one of the first things that the Minister of Agriculture did after September 17 when we assumed office. I am sure that the people in Quebec will be treated as fairly as are any producers in any other part of the country.

With regard to dairy policy, the previous Government talked about a dairy policy but it was postponed and reviewed every year. I believe that the Minister has given the assurance that he is working to establish a new dairy policy by August 1. When we say that we will work with people, we will do exactly that. We sit down and talk to people. With that attitude and process I believe that an agreement can be worked out. The Minister of Agriculture has given the deadline of August 1 and we will do our best to ensure that that deadline is met.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board is with regard to Prince Rupert Grain Elevator No. 1. I know that he and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) have been working very hard to find ways to keep PRG No. 1 operating. The Price-Waterhouse study which was provided to the Canadian Wheat Board, the Government of Alberta, Prince Rupert Grain and a few others on February 1 is going to be considered on February 14 to see whether commodities other than wheat can be moved through PRG No. 1. Could the Minister give us an idea of how things look with regard to PRG No. 1? PRG No. 2 is about to open. The net loss of jobs in the Prince Rupert area will be very substantial if PRG No. 1 is closed down.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) raises a very important issue. We have had some conversations about this on a one to one basis and have sent some correspondence back and forth. He makes a very good case. If my memory serves me correctly, we stand to lose about 75 jobs in that area. We need about 100 people to operate PRG No. 1 and something like 25 are needed to operate the new terminal. There is grain in the new terminal on an experimental run-in basis.

The problem is compounded this year by the fact that there was not a good crop on the Prairies this year. At the very time when we have increased capacity on the West Coast, our exports will be down because we had a poor crop. I have had some conversations with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and I can assure the Hon. Member that we will be happy to work with him and do everything we can to ensure that PRG No. 1 remains open. He makes a good case that the matter should be looked at with regard to some special crops such as alfalfa pellets.

The Government is committed to doing what it can to ensure that PRG No. 1 remains open. However, we must bear in mind that exports will be down because the volume produced on the Prairies is down. I appreciate the concern expressed by the Hon. Member on behalf of his constituents.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, does the Minister agree with the policy announced on December 21? At that time the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced that the disaster relief agreements which have been in effect for a number of years will be done away with. Through those agreements the federal Government and the provinces shared on a two to one basis compensation for disasters such as drought and flood. The former federal Government had agreed to pay $16 million in addition to the $8 million paid by the provincial Government as compensation for flooding in northeastern Saskatchewan. The new Government only provided $8 million on a dollar for dollar basis. I believe that a federal-provincial agreement provided for $60 million of relief in southern Alberta and southern Saskatchewan.

My understanding is that the Minister of Agriculture plans to do away with that arrangement and make the federal Government and the actual producers responsible for disaster situations. The Minister knows how important the participation of the provincial Governments was in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Quebec this past summer. Does the Minister agree with the new approach of the Minister of Agriculture? Will he be supporting him in Cabinet on this matter? This will mean that the producers will have to put up dollar for dollar equally with the federal Government and that the provincial Governments will not make any provision for assistance in disaster situations.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I can say two things to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). When farmers or any other groups have problems due to weather, a good case can be made that there should be some assistance forthcoming from various levels of Government. The agreement which was worked out with the provinces was agreed to by the provinces. It was not a two to one agreement, as the Hon. Member suggests it should have been; it was an equal sharing of one to one. It is my understanding that the provinces accepted that. I have not received any correspondence from any of the provinces saying that they should have had more. I take it from that that the provinces are in agreement with the provisions that were worked out.

Second, we are all looking for ways to make crop insurance work better. Crop insurance is available to provide some assistance in those situations. If people choose not to buy crop insurance, both levels of Government have reason to take a hard look at providing assistance on an emergency basis. Providing crop insurance can be made responsible enough; it should be able to provide farmers with support and assistance in those situations.

The agreement was worked out with the provinces and they agreed to it. We are looking at ways to ensure that we can handle those situations in the future with crop insurance. Hopefully, we will not get into a situation where we must provide emergency aid, whether for drought or for excess water.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I will start out in this debate today from the same position I took last night in the short intervention I made on the subject of credit during the debate in Private Member's hour. During the election campaign the Conservative Party made it very clear that it had a program that it intended to bring forward and pass this year. The measures behind that agricultural program should be put before the House so that we can either commend or criticize the Government on the fulfilment of its commitments.

● (1540)

Let me read from a letter that was written by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) before taking office, which states what the Progressive Conservative Party would do about agriculture when it came to power. I will then comment on its fulfilment of those commitments. First:

A Progressive Conservative government will commit its share of the necessary funds in order to ensure completion of the municipal drains in Eastern Ontario under the E.O.S.A. Agreement.

I cannot comment on that commitment but I gather that the Government has taken action.

Second:

A Progressive Conservative government will establish an Agribond Program to provide loans at reduced interest rates to agricultural producers. A tax exemption for earned income on these bonds would be provided to attract investment capital to this program.

We have heard much about this approach but there has been very little action. If one is to believe the document entitled Tax Issues in Agriculture, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will not be particularly happy with the agri-bond approach. Although it is a promise, there is no commitment to fulfil it.

The third point is:

We will work with producers and provincial governments to establish a Voluntary National Income Stabilization Program for the red meat sector and any other non-supply management sector which wishes to take part. Where tripartite agreement cannot be reached, we will amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act so that payments will come when they are most needed and greater emphasis is placed on costs of production.

The Government has introduced some amendments to the Agricultural Stabilization Act. I suggest that even Liberals who are trying to defend their past programs will have to admit that the Government's approach to the Act follows its commitment. If we accept the legislation, the amendments will at least plug a few holes that are currently affecting farm groups.

The fourth point reads:

We will reduce the price of farm fuels by 20 cents per gallon by removing the 9 per cent federal tax and by not collecting the current excise tax.

While this measure has been implemented, the method is not quite the same as indicated in the letter. It is a rebate system instead of the reduction of the price of fuels. The actual amount of reduction has been put into place and the Government has fulfilled that promise.

Point five is:

In order to provide aid to the tobacco industry, we will immediately introduce a unique Bill which will specifically designate tobacco under the Farm Products Marketing Act.

That legislation has been passed.

Point six reads:

A Progressive Conservative government would look to expand the role of the Farm Credit Corporation to take into account the high cost of entry into farming, high interest rates, high land values and low commodity prices. We would ensure that the allocation of interest subsidies reflects the need to assist those who have entered farming in recent years.

I do not think we could expect the Government to fulfil that promise completely in the few months that it has been in power. However, it is important to consider whether the Government really has a commitment to address that problem because it is a key factor in the situation in which the agriculture industry finds itself. It will be interesting to see how the Government approaches this very difficult problem.

Point No. 7 reads:

We will change Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, as it applies to farmers, to reflect the principles of equity, neutrality, simplicity, and certainty. In addition, the strong-arm and confrontationist tactics presently practised by the Department of Revenue will be immediately abolished and a practice whereby the taxpayer is treated openly and honestly will be instituted.

That is a very laudable position. Section 31 deals with part-time farmers. Again, the document of the Minister of Finance entitled Tax Issues in Agriculture deals with Section 31. If we are to believe what the officials in the Department of Finance are saying, I would suggest that it is unlikely that there will be any change to Section 31. While we have heard discussion about that promise, there has been no action and may not be in the future. We will have to review that commitment in six months' time.

Point eight states:

We will abolish the imposition of capital gains tax on the sale of farm property for continued agricultural purposes.

There is much rhetoric on this but no action. There have been ongoing suggestions for the establishment of a task force or subcommittee to study this issue, but that has not been set up as yet. Again, I would refer to the Minister's Tax Issues in Agriculture. There is not much hope that the Government will move to remove capital gains, if one believes the approach in that particular document. However, the Government has the opportunity to fulfil that promise in the next few months if it wishes to do so, and we will wait before judging the Government on that commitment.

Point No. 9 reads:

A Progressive Conservative government will commit its share of the necessary funds to ensure that the Ontario Veterinary College proceeds with the renovations required to regain full accreditation.

I am not aware of the progress made in fulfilling that commitment.

Point 10 reads:

A Progressive Conservative government would be very aggressive in dealing with subsidized agricultural imports. We would move to control these imports in order to offset their negative effects.

I believe that the previous Government has much to answer for with respect to this issue. In the last GATT negotiations, our negotiators from the previous Government managed to increase the amount of tariffs against our exports and decrease the amount of tariffs against our imports. The actual effect of the last GATT negotiations by the previous Government was to increase the competition for our products in Canada and decrease the competitiveness of those same products when they were exported. We can support the present Government if it takes the appropriate action in this area in the future.

Point 11 reads:

> We will amend the Advance Payments on Crops Act to double its cash advance levels. The present legislation only doubles these levels for Western grains. We believe all crops, in all areas of Canada, should be equitably treated in a government's agricultural policy.

Again, such a policy will be adequate and worth-while if it is fulfilled. The Government has indicated that it will do so.

Let us judge this Government in a couple of months. There are other promises too that this Government has made or did make before it took power and on which it has not acted. We have had considerable information and suggestions that the Government would deal with the Western Grain Stabilization Act. The Tories said that when going into the election and they said it when they first appeared in the House. Somewhere about the middle of November the Tories indicated it would only be a matter of a few days before amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act would be made. We are still waiting for those amendments, and both opposition Parties have indicated they would support such amendments. The Tories have failed to bring them forward.

The present Government also indicated it would do away with the abandonment of rail lines. I must say that, to their credit, the Tories have made that move. But they have indicated very little if any commitment to the action which they themselves have taken. It seems to me window-dressing rather than an actual commitment to replacing into service those lines needed to give the agricultural part of western Canada the kind of transportation service which it needs and which was removed by the previous Government over a matter of about 15 years.

This Government and the previous Government should beware of throwing stones. The Conservatives still have a lot of promises which they have not fulfilled.

Mr. Foster: They never will.

Mr. Hovdebo: The commitments they are making now are ones on which they will be judged in the next few months and years.

As I mentioned before, the three promises made concerning Section 31 on agri-bonds and capital gains do not look too good, according to the report of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Foster: They are dead ducks.

Mr. Hovdebo: Some of the moves this Government has made have been against the interests of farmers. I can mention one specifically, one that was brought out before the agricultural committee yesterday. The services provided to seed growers have been increased by 400 per cent and 500 per cent by this Government in a recovery program. The inspection of meat and the inspection of plots for registered or certified seed doubled, tripled or quadrupled in cost in comparison with what it was before. This is at a time when farmers can ill afford to have increased costs. But this Government has been one of the institutions that has increased the costs of farm production and made it a little more difficult for farmers to make ends meet at a time when the farmer needs every opportunity and every method possible to allow production and good, profitable returns.

I think that the Liberals particularly should not throw stones. They had 20 years of opportunity to solve the problems of agriculture. They had 20 years in which their Government ignored the problems. The Liberals did a lot of things about agriculture here, there and all over, some of which benefited the farmers marginally and a lot of which disturbed the farmers and caused some harm. The most glaring example was the elimination of the Crow rate, a guaranteed subsidy to farmers which they needed. This too was done at a time when they could ill afford any extra costs.

We should not be wasting our time on debating which Government is the worst, the past Government or the present Government. It is the sort of situation where we are fiddling while Rome burns. That is exactly the situation in which agriculture is finding itself today. There are thousands of farmers in disastrous situations who are on the verge of leaving the industry. It is time that we in this House, as a Government, as three Parties that have been elected to be responsible for what happens in this country, get together and put in place a global approach, an income security structure which would allow the farmers to produce. If they produce well, they will know that they will be able to meet the high freight rates which the previous Government instituted, inspection costs which this Government has established, and high fuel, chemical and fertilizer costs. If the farmers have the kind of income security structure that would allow them to pay for these things, we would no longer have to worry about band-aids such as stabilization and insurance programs, because the income security program would cover those kinds of possibilities.

One could start out by saying that the Government would be giving a fair price, a price that would include the cost of production for each and every one of the commodities the farmers produce. That obviously would be the most direct and the easiest way to solve the farmers' problems. If that is too difficult, then let us take these two programs, the Western Grain Stabilization Program, the agriculture stabilization program and a variety of other programs which are part of the prop-up system that we are attempting to make available to farmers, and put them all together. Let us approach this on a global basis and say that what is available to the farmer is a certainty and that if he works well, produces well, is efficient and uses the market in the proper way, he will survive and be able to provide a living for himself and his family. He will not go under because of the interest rates, because of the lack of credit or the high cost of machinery; he will produce as he should expect to produce and get enough for it so he can survive. That is the basis on which this House should approach agriculture, not on the basis of small band-aids which may help now but at some time will have to be reviewed and replaced by a global structure which allows the farmer to farm well and make a living.

Mr. Greenaway: I have a question for the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker. On several occasions we have raised the subject of Section 31. I think all Members in the House agree that it is a problem as it is presently enacted in the present legislation. Could the Hon. Member give us his ideas as to a possible solution to that problem or his Party's solution to the problem?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, our Party has discussed this as I suppose has every other group of people interested in agriculture. I cannot say we have a particular position. We have, however, put forward a number of suggestions. We hope to have the opportunity to put these possibilities before the Government and talk about them.

• (1600)

The idea that Section 31 might harm bona fide farmers is most often raised as an argument against changing it. I suppose we should be looking at an increase in the minimum if we think it must remain in place. That is a decision which all of us in the House may have to make. If we think the limitation should remain in place, we will have to decide on its size. Many of my constituents have indicated that they would be happy with it remaining in place if it were raised at somewhat the same level as inflation over the years. As we all know, the $5,000 of a few years ago is a pretty small sum today. That is one of the suggestions which has been put forward and which we would like to discuss with the Government.

Also we should define in Section 31 a little better than have the income tax people what is a commercial farm and what is a viable farm. We have to recognize the needs not necessarily of young farmers but of beginning farmers. I have discovered in my constituency that many farmers 40 to 45 years of age are just now trying to get into farming. They thought they could get into it in three years but they have found that it takes from five to seven years. They are getting caught in that section. That matter needs to be discussed. I am not saying that we have a particular position on it, but we have a number of ideas we would like to put before the Government and to discuss.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was with myself and others on a trip to Washington in connection with the United States program of what amounts to agri-bonds. I would like to hear his comments on whether he felt that that was a proper way to assist farmers in terms of their long-term capital requirements. Keeping in mind the experience in the United States, does he think we should do something different from agri-bonds, or does he think it would be important for a Commons committee to study the report on tax issues in agriculture which was tabled the other day so that we could obtain evidence in Canada with respect to agri-bonds? Also, in terms of Section 31, does he think that we should take this matter before a Commons committee?

Mr. Hovdebo: I would think that a Commons committee with very specific terms of reference to deal with agri-bonds and Section 31, if possible, would be a good idea. What we need in this particular area is input from many people other than ourselves, because we become isolated if we stay in the House too much.

As far as agri-bonds are concerned, I recognize, as did all of us who visited Washington, that the biggest factor against the agri-bond program or the exempt bond program in the United States is the loss of money or funds to the Government over a long period of time. As Members of Parliament who were elected to govern Canada, not just one section of it, we have to look at that as a detriment to putting into effect the agri-bond structure as it was described to us in the United States. However, that program in the United States got money to the farmers when it was needed. I guess it was at a larger cost than we would like to expend. However, I am quite certain that we in Canada have the ingenuity to take that program and develop it in such a way that we do not have that loss. For instance, our Party's position on that is that it should be done at least in those cases where elderly farmers want to sell their land. Then the agri-bond becomes part of their retirement benefits. There are a number of such approaches. That particular suggestion was not made in the report on tax issues in agriculture. It is the kind of suggestion which needs to be made. This is the reason I think a committee or task force to study the matter and bring some suggestions to Parliament should be set up as quickly as possible.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member concerning Section 31. When one reads the discussion paper, I think one begins to worry that Section 31 will be buried in a lot of bureaucratic mumbo-jumbo and that nothing will happen. That is my worry.

Would the Hon. Member and his Party be willing to suggest that at least when an audit is being conducted by income tax auditors, they should be forced to call upon an expert in agriculture to accompany them when they inspect the farm? Then they could come up with some concrete ideas and thoughts on whether or not a farm is capable of producing a profit, whether it is a viable farm or, in other words, in what category the farm should be placed. I have found in my riding that auditors would just arbitrarily place a farm in the hobby class, although they did not have the expertise to do that. Would the Hon. Member agree that that is the very least for which we should settle?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I know the exact problem to which the Hon. Member referred. I have many of those people in my constituency as well. I think it is important that a definition be established, but I worry about establishing such a definition. I recognize that the Department of National Revenue has been inadequate in that particular relationship, in the use of that section in the past. It has been used mainly retroactively. I think that is the biggest problem. However, I am not at all sure that establishing a definition for farmers, for farming or for valid farms is what we want to do. Does it mean that we do not think part-time farmers are making a contribution to the agricultural industry in particular areas? For instance, around Prince Albert there are many farmers who also work part-time at the pulp mill or in the bush. They are really productive people. To some extent they are attempting to build up their farms, but they are making a very good combined living. If they were unable to farm or not allowed to make that kind of living, they would probably move away, particularly people who work in the bush in the winter. They would not be able to make a living on the farm and the bush work would not be enough. We need to look at the whole structure and allow enough flexibility in it so that if decisions are made, they are not made to the detriment of taxpayers.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan)—Energy (a) Venture Oilfield Project (b) Negotiation of offshore development agreement with Province of Newfoundland; the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle)—Social Security—La Régie des rentes du Québec—Canada Pension Plan—Injustice to public servants in National Capital region; the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp)—Multiculturalism (a) Implementation of committee recommendations (b) Abella Commission report—Date of presentation.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—SUPPORT FOR AGRICULTURE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

That this House condemns the Government for its inadequate response to the growing financial crisis in the agriculture sector and for its failure to provide sufficient support and services to farmers who face severe economic difficulties in all regions of the country.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, could I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately the period provided for questions and comments is now over. We shall resume debate with the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Brightwell).

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate. The importance of maintaining a strong and dynamic agricultural industry has always been understood by the Progressive Conservative Party. We have only been in office a short time, and already we can point to a proud record of achievement in support of farmers across the country.

• (1610)

If we look at the history of support programs in this country, we find that the majority of federal agricultural legislation and agricultural institutions were established by Conservative Governments. The Canadian Wheat Board, the Farm Credit Corporation, crop insurance, the Agricultural Stabilization Act, ARDA, and the Prairie Grain Stabilization Act are all good examples of our concern for Canadian agriculture and the welfare of Canadian farmers. At the provincial level, the same holds true. Conservative Governments brought in most of the marketing boards which have done so much toward stabilizing farm income and bringing order to the agricultural market-place.

I want to make it clear, however, that these institutions and the legislation are only support mechanisms. They were never intended to interfere with farmers' personal freedom or their responsibility for their own success.

In my close association with farmers and in business life I am well aware of the harsh realities of agricultural life. Farmers know, when they enter the business, that there is no guarantee of security. They have to be careful. They have to be frugal. They have to work hard and live within their means because of the narrow margins, the traditionally poor returns on capital, and the risks of both natural hazards and the uncertain market-place. The market-place is no less threatening to farmers than flood, drought or frost. Each farm family must take primary responsibility for coping as best it can with these hazards. Farmers understand there is no escape from the harsh realities, no excuse for bad management. In short, farmers know that they must carry their weight, take their own risks and live with the consequences.

Every independent businessman must maintain that sort of attitude towards his or her enterprise. The federal Government recognizes, however, that there are some aspects of the agriculture industry that are unique. There is the vulnerability to the weather and to international political and economic forces, for example, all of which require Governments to adopt special support programs for farmers.

These support programs are not designed to guarantee every farmer a living, but rather to ensure there is an economic environment in which farmers may prosper. They also ensure that Canadian consumers have a continuing supply of high-quality food at reasonable prices. In addition, government support programs enhance the agriculture industry's contribution to the national economy, a contribution that is substantial, I might add. In terms of trade, for example, the agriculture industry contributes some $4 to $5 billion annually in surplus foreign exchange.

Federal and provincial Governments have adopted a wide range of programs to help the agri-food industry. In total, at the federal level, nearly $2.5 billion annually is spent on agriculture. In ballpark figures, this includes $60 million in stabilization payments, $300 million in dairy subsidies, $160 million for crop insurance, and that will be closer to $186 million this year, $250 million on research, $220 million on inspection and regulation, $650 million through the Crow benefit, and $110 million through the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Then there are the many market development programs, including advance payments for crops, which provide around $450 million a year in interest-free cash advances to farmers. There is also feed freight assistance to feed-deficient areas.

There are also the federal-provincial agricultural subsidiary agreements under which we encourage market development, technology transfer, and improvements to the natural and human resources of agriculture. Designed in co-operation with the provinces, these programs are tailor-made to deal with problems that are specific to each region of the country.

Let me return for a moment to crop insurance. It is one of the best examples of federal and provincial Governments and the producers co-operating to provide support where it is most needed. While most areas of the country enjoyed reasonable growing conditions last season, the Prairies were hit by a combination of serious drought in most areas and floods in some areas.

Last year more than 118,000 farmers insured 37 million acres of crops, for a total of $3.4 billion. Premiums, with the producers paying half, came to $331.2 million. Payments to farmers for 1984 crop losses exceeded $521 million. In other words, for an investment of about $165 million, farmers ensured a cash flow of more than $521 million. Needless to say, most of that went to prairie farmers hit by the drought, $257 million to Saskatchewan, $205 million to Alberta, and $29 million to Manitoba.

At the same time, a Government must remain flexible to deal with special situations. The severity of the conditions on the Prairies last summer warranted extra action, and we entered into agreements with the provinces for a Prairie Livestock Drought Assistance Program to help some 30,000 livestock producers affected by the drought. This program pays $48 per head for cattle and $10 per head for sheep in zones designated as being severely affected by the drought, and $30 and $6 per head in moderately affected zones. Producers will share some $63.5 million in benefits, with the federal Government paying half of the costs.

Similarly, we are sharing with the provinces the cost of flood support programs that will provide about $15 million for farmers in northeastern Saskatchewan, and we are working out details for a similar program in Manitoba. A program for 1983 forage crop losses in Quebec has already been announced.

Crop insurance has been successful because it is the kind of program that farmers share in and understand. It is voluntary and it is contributory and leaves the farmer free to make his decision based on his own management style and resources.

Producers have indicated they would prefer that same system for stabilization programs. Amendments have recently been introduced to the Agricultural Stabilization Act to reflect that view. Even a cursory examination of the present stabilization program shows its flaws. Farmers do not know how much support they will get under the program until long after they have made their production and marketing decisions. It is a case of justice delayed is justice denied. Furthermore, under the present program, farmers often receive their stabilization payments just at the time when market prices are recovering. That is not only bad timing, but it can also distort production decisions.

The new program, which Members will be able to discuss in detail before the Agriculture Committee very soon, will be prompt, it will be voluntary, and it will provide an improved level of support without costing the federal Government much more than the current program. In short, the new approach to stabilization will be in keeping with the whole thrust of this Government's fiscal strategy to spend smarter, not more. That same approach will be reflected in amendments we propose for the Western Grain Stabilization Act. An interim payment in the spring will help farmers with cash flow at the critical time when they are making their planting decisions.

To summarize, it is clear that farmers understand their fundamental responsibility for the success of their operations. Secondly, an extensive system of supports is already in place. Finally, new, innovative programs and policies are being developed by this Government to provide more effective protection and encouragement for farmers, but in a more economical fashion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions and comments? If not, we will resume debate.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, very simply, let us go to what this debate is all about. It is designed to spur this Government into some form of action. The time has come for all the paperwork, all the rhetoric, all the grand promises and exaggerated commitments to come to an end and for the Government to do what it was elected to do, which is to take some action on behalf of farmers who are facing some very immediate, very critical short-term problems.

It is all right for the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) to talk about the need for some far off global strategy to solve ultimately and finally the problems of the farmers. However, at this very moment, farmers in various regions of Canada are facing very specific and immediate problems and they are looking to this Government to provide some leadership which, until this point, has been totally lacking. It has not been lacking because of any great sins of commission; the Government just has not done anything. It has not begun to address the issues about which it spoke with great flourishes during the summer. Government Members said that they were going to be the great helmsmen of the agricultural community. We need only look at some examples to see what has really happened.

● (1620)

We should look at the paper put forward on tax issues in agriculture by the Department of Finance. What does it say about all the commitments the now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made last summer? It says that they will not really work. We have heard all this gobbledegook from the Department of Finance before. We know that it can find all of those answers to questions over which members of the Conservative Party rose in wild indignation during our tenure in government. Here they are coming up with exactly the same thing. There has been no change. The same paper has been put forward by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He is a Tory, I believe. The paper is in his name and it contains such things as why agri-bonds will not work and why capital gains cannot be established. The most effective critique of Mr. Mulroney's promises come from his own Minister of Finance.

We cannot expect the farmers, who have been waiting in grand expectation since the summer for Mulroney and company to get their act together, suddenly to pick up this paper that was produced by the Minister of Finance and say—

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) rises on a point of order, which I believe will be that the Hon. Member should not name the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) by name.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that when he is addressing or speaking of other Members of the House, he must address them by their constituency or by their office.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member knows that.

Mr. Axworthy: I beg the pardon of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I would not in any way want to denigrate the Prime Minister by calling him by his last name.

I would say that the Hon. Prime Minister has one more time been befuddled and betrayed by his own Minister of Finance who contradicted everything he has said in this white paper. Either that is so or it is the Minister of Finance who is really telling it as it is and it was the Right Hon. distinguished, esteemed gentleman who occupies the seat of the Prime Minister who does not know what the hell he is talking about. It is probably closer to the point that the Prime Minister simply made a commitment that he had no intention of fulfilling. He was up on that platform about which most farmers know a great deal because they know exactly what cows produce. That is the platform on which Tories stand when they make agricultural promises.

Let us look at another very critical issue, Mr. Speaker. The Government was going to deal with the immediate cash crisis of the western farmer. When our Leader spoke in Prince Albert, he said that the very first piece of legislation that would be brought into the House would be an amendment to the Western Grain Stabilization Act so that western farmers would have cash in their hands on discretion either before the new year or after the new year, depending on their tax positions.

This House opened the first week of November. The "associate-we're-not-sure" Minister responsible for the Wheat Board—and I will return to that in a moment—has said consistently, "any day now, mañana". I think he took his parliamentary lessons from the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) who keeps making promises—

Mr. Redway: That's right.

Mr. Axworthy: Oh, there is one of our distinguished agricultural representatives from the City of Toronto sitting in the corner.

The fact of the matter is that the Government had every opportunity to bring in that change to the Western Grain Stabilization Fund at the very beginning of this Parliament. It is now the first week of February. Where is that change? As a result, many farmers do not know what choices to make in terms of purchases of fertilizer and in terms of making their commitments to the future, because they do not know what kind of refund they will receive from that fund.

For Government Members, it is simply called action, Mr. Speaker. It is simply called deciding that they are now a Government and are not here to act Henny Youngman or Lenny Bruce and do a stand-up comedy routine in the House of Commons every day. Government Members should be trying to provide some leadership on major agricultural problems. We know that nothing is more important than getting cash in the hands of the farmers at a time when they need it. That time, Mr. Speaker, is now. Farmers need that money now, not after some consultation and not after another white paper.

I can only suspect that the real strategy of the Conservative Government is to help the pulp and paper industry. All of this is designed to bring employment back to the pulp and paper industry. No Government in the history of this country had produced so much paper read by so few people containing so little that no one knows about what they are consulting.

A constituent of mine went to the Queen's Printer and asked for one of the Government's consulting papers. The Queen's Printer said that that would cost $18. We know with whom Government Members are consulting. They are consulting with their own bagmen and friends who can afford to pay that kind of price. They have no interest in consulting with the general public. They are not prepared to hold public hearings.

They are not prepared to use House of Commons committees. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) will consult by taking a piece of paper to his friend in Toronto in the dark of the night and slipping it under a door, thereby saving his friend $18. That is the kind of consulting that is going on. Government Members are not prepared to get into a public debate.

We on this side of the House are using our time in opposition to bring those issues forward so that the Canadian public will know exactly what it is that they can expect. It is interesting to note that the Ministers are so seriously committed to this issue that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) have not quite found it possible to spend this day in the House listening to agricultural issues.

Mr. Thacker: That's because they are meeting with farm groups. You never, ever met with them.

Mr. Axworthy: It is about time that Ministers of this House learn that their first responsibility is to this House.

I would like to correct the Hon. Member. I was in his riding this weekend and met with farm groups there. The Hon. Member had better go back and check on those groups because they are not too happy with what he and the Government have been doing.

We are beginning to sense some of the reasons why the Government is behaving in this manner. I would like to raise a particular point which came to light yesterday in very interesting testimony before the Agriculture Committee. We have always paid proper respect to the necessity of having a Wheat Board with its own Minister with his own independence and his ability to provide for the direction of an agency which is very clearly responsible for much of the important work done in western Canada. I would have to say, as would some of the western Conservative Members if they were allowed to speak, that we have always been concerned that the Department of Agriculture has had designs on the Wheat Board. It did not like the fact that the Wheat Board was deciding about and representing the marketing and export interests. We discovered yesterday that the new Government, which says it is so reflective and representative of western interests, has now substantially altered the relationship between the Wheat Board and the Department of Agriculture. According to the organizational chart, the Wheat Board now reports directly to the Deputy Minister and Minister of Agriculture. The poor Minister of State for the Wheat Board is stuck way off in the far left-hand corner behind a dotted line, the meaning of which we are not sure. It probably means that he gets to see the Minister of Agriculture at least once a month. I think that that is the definition of a dotted line.

This is no laughing matter, Mr. Speaker. This is a very serious matter for western Canada. It means that the Department of Agriculture has taken responsibility for the Wheat Board and has basically made the Minister of State for the Wheat Board into a kind of a glorified Parliamentary Secretary. The Wheat Board is under the thumb of the Department of Agriculture, a Department which has its own very different interests. I can testify to the fact that those interests are not necessarily ones which will promote the activities of the Wheat Board.

This is a very serious change and one that totally dilutes and diminishes the powers and responsibilities of the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. There is no longer any point in asking him any questions because he is reporting back to the Minister of Agriculture. We confirmed that by questioning the Minister of Agriculture, who we know is an honest and upstanding gentleman and one of the few such gentlemen on the front benches. Yesterday he said, "Yes, indeed that is the case". He said that he is basically running the show.

I think that that kind of merger carries with it very serious implications for the Wheat Board's ability to make judgments required in order to carry out its responsibilities. To compound the problem, we also found that the grains group is reporting to the Deputy Minister of Agriculture. God forbid! There is a serious problem in that organization. It means that the Wheat Board has seriously compromised its ability to represent western grain interests with regard to marketing exports. It would be far more beneficial to western Canada if the Wheat Board were more closely tied to the area of export marketing, because that is where the action is. That is where the responsibility resides. I hope that the Right Hon. distinguished, esteemed, plenipotentiary Prime Minister—and I hope that satisfies the Hon. Member for Mississauga South—will take a look at the organizational chart, which probably escaped him because he is so busy rehearsing his comical lines, and recognize that he has not lived up to the responsibilities of the Prime Minister, which is to run the Government and to ensure that all regions are effectively represented and that the agencies serve their purposes.

A major and fundamental change is taking place in the United States with respect to agricultural policy. The policies of Secretary of Agriculture Block and the new budget which was put forward by President Reagan basically wipe out all farm subsidies and supports. That is the proposal which Congress is considering. It has an important implication for Canadian wheat growers, and especially grain growers, because Secretary Block has said that he will get the money from the farmer by marketing in the most ruthless manner possible. We have seen the results of that. We have seen how the Americans have used their tremendous capacity in the grain export market to keep prices low or to drive the prices down.

Canada is in a situation which is compounded because of the problems of the existing drought and the loss of export markets. We are now in the position where we should be playing hardball with the United States. However, from what we have experienced so far, this Government does not want to play hardball with the Americans. In fact, it likes to play cream puff with them. The Government is not prepared to knuckle down and deal with the United States. We have seen time and again that when the United States President says, "Jump", our Prime Minister says, "How high?"

Western farmers will be faced with intense competition from the U.S. agricultural department, which will use the wonderful techniques, subsidies and marketing devices to keep the international grain market at a low level and to flood and dominate that market. Ultimately, Canada will be forced to make a tough response.

I am pleased to see that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is in the House because, at least in a titular way, the responsibility is on his shoulders. He will have to ensure that Secretary of Agriculture Block's pronouncements do not come true. We would much prefer to have the Canadian Wheat Board more closely aligned with External Affairs' activities in the trade area, to ensure that our western commodity interests are properly protected.

If we looked carefully at the trade paper—that grand design which amounted to 32 pages of regurgitated old material—we could ask ourselves what it said about the grain trade and the commodity markets. In Winnipeg we use a wonderful Ukrainian expression which means "there is nothing there". There is nothing which would enable western farmers to recognize that this Government is taking seriously the necessity to address the very major turbulences in international grain developments.

The Wheat Board does its job—it markets. But the number of countries in which Canada has been marketing has been shrinking substantially over the years. That is partly because we are being driven out of foreign markets. I would also suggest that it is partly because we are not taking full advantage of the opportunities which many of the new specialty crops provide in the export area. It is very important that another trade paper be developed which will deal specifically with the strategy, intentions and programs which will support extended export markets for commodities, specialty grain crops and staple grain crops.

When in government we did our part. We changed the grain transportation legislation to ensure that there would be an efficient and effective transportation system. A lot of decisions are still outstanding because of those changes, and we will be watching with interest to see what the Government intends to do when the report is received on the method of payment question. I hope it will learn how to take a stand, because that Party did not take a stand during the several months of debate on that legislation. The Government will be required to make a decision, and it is very important for that decision to be aimed at expanding our export market.

In addition, this Government has not taken a stand on the question of minimum compensatory rates for canola crushers who have severe problems in western Canada. The problem is one of uncertainty. If a decision is not made, then the ability of the canola crushing industry to provide for new capital investment, to develop markets, and to look at new opportunities as an industry will be left in limbo. Once again, it is simply a plea for action.

Decisions have not been taken because the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board has been cut adrift and no longer has agency responsibilities. Agriculture has been pushed aside because of consultation papers, grand dreams and promises. In the meantime, there is a lot of hurt and a lot of uncertainty, which will ultimately work to the detriment of the entire Canadian economy.

I would like to mention another issue, which is vital to western Canadian agriculture, upon which we expect action. It is the major problem of soil erosion and water. The Liberals established a major water commission which is due to report. The previous administration also held a number of negotiations and consultations in which the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) was very effective. We have seen year in and year out the inconsistency of the grain growing belt which is affected by major changes in climate, particularly the availability of water. There are approximately 200,000 hectares a year which are taken out of major grain production because of soil erosion in the southern parts of Alberta, the central and southern regions of Saskatchewan and parts of the Province of Manitoba. In order to respond to the predicament of our major grain growing area we will need capital. It is the responsibility of the federal Government, in co-operation with the provinces and industry, to provide the dollars which are needed for major water projects. The Government cannot avoid that responsibility. Yet the Minister of Finance and his cohorts are preaching the theology of deficit reduction. They do not recognize that governments from time to time must invest. Government has a direct public responsibility to invest in better production, improved facilities and infrastructure. In western Canada there is no more important a priority than investment in the area of soil and water development. But we cannot do this with nothing. It is very important that the point be made now before the budget comes down in several weeks. We must ensure that the Minister of Finance and his Cabinet colleagues include a provision for investment in major water projects in western Canada so that we can begin to stimulate the provinces in order that they will be able to respond. That is the kind of public expenditure which I think all Members of the House can endorse. It is an effective investment, designed to increase production and ensure protection for western farmers and the agriculture industry. I hope that those who are so quick to latch on to the new theology, the neo-conservatism in the prescriptions of the Minister of Finance, will, at least in this area, recognize that this kind of pound foolish philosophy has no place when it comes to dealing with these problems in western Canada.

● (1640)

In this opposition motion we are simply saying that this is the Government now. Members opposite cannot keep blaming the past and rewriting history. They are the ones with the responsibility, they must make the decisions. The western Canadian farmer is waiting for those decisions, and so are we.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, my friend gives a fine speech in opposition and he will be there for many years. Would he agree that, in the international sphere, the EEC is really the bad boy when it comes to agricultural subsidies and international marketing? The United States will retaliate nose to nose, and Canada will be in a very difficult position because we lack the financial clout to compete with those big boys. That is primarily because of the huge national debt and the amount of revenue necessary to service that debt. Why did the Liberals run up the deficit so high? It is now affecting our ability to make the investments he talks about. Why did they so consistently kick the United States in the shins and insult them in every possible way? As a result, we are now having difficulty reaching agreement with them. Why did they not sign an international agreement giving a base price for wheat? Why did they increase the input costs of agriculture so high? I am referring to fuel costs and transportation. Why did they not enact plant breeders' rights so that when the new varieties come out it would have a multiplier effect on our economy? Why was there no action for over 20 years on soil erosion and loss of agricultural land in western Canada? Why, for 20 years when they were the Government, was nothing done?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly agree at the outset, and that is where the agreement will stop, that there is a very major problem with the EEC in international marketing. This is particularly true in coming to grips with the subsidies and supports they provide. We would be far more effective if we had some joint strategy. But what I have been trying to say through the course of my speech is that there was nothing in anything the Government has done, particularly in its trade paper, to indicate it was addressing the issue. It did not demonstrate what the Government was doing, what kind of intervention it was prepared to make, or whether it was endorsing or adopting the same kind of response the Americans were going to make. We are simply saying that the opportunity was there and if the Government did not want to use it, then it had better come out with another paper right away so that we know where it is going.

The Hon. Member has engaged in a form of mental gymnastics which I find is peculiar to the acrobatic school, causa Conservatus, which relates everything back to the deficit. The fact is that government expenditures provided job training, major innovations in transportation, and export development. They were used for major investment in regional development. I remind the Hon. Member that one of our initiatives which this Government, to its credit, has continued to support, was the establishment of the economic regional development agreements. They incorporated a number of agricultural agreements with the provinces. In my own Province of Manitoba we signed a $23 million agricultural agreement to provide for new research and development. There were new initiatives in water research and development and irrigation projects. We also signed a $200 million program, part of which went for a major restoration of the Port of Churchill, so that there was an alternative deep sea prairie port. We will have the opportunity tomorrow in committee to determine if this Government is going to fulfil the requirements of that agreement. For the first time in the history of western Canada we took the decision, under that agreement, that grain cars would be manufactured in western Canada.

We used the power of expenditure, which he was so concerned about, to do exactly what I was talking about. We were investing in the future. We were putting in place the kind of research and development infrastructure which would allow the agricultural community, through those projects, to improve itself. That is why we are now in real danger of committing some serious mistakes given the approach the Minister of Finance takes when he says you cannot afford to spend on anything. In fact, in the economic statement of November, the Government added substantial new charges for farmers. Some $32 million was added to the cost burden of farmers. In some cases, in provinces like Prince Edward Island, charges have increased from $15 to $50 for the inspection of potatoes. This comes at the very time we are saying it is important to try to reduce costs. The Minister of Finance is adding to those costs, adding to the burdens of the farmer, not trying to relieve them.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's speech, as I did to the speech of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) this morning. He mentioned Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, and unfortunately I was not able to ask him a question about that. I think the Hon. Member will agree that for a number of years now Member after Member in this House raised the issue of Section 31. Finally, last spring, the previous Minister of Finance agreed that he would set up a consulting group to go out and bring us back some answers. I cannot find any history of that group. There are no recommendations. We do not even know who made up the group. I would like to know from the Hon. Member what the present position of his Party is on Section 31. What does he propose we should do with that section?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat intrigued by the Hon. Member's question. He should really he asking that question of his own Minister of Finance. The position of our Party is that we are going to be very interested to see what the answer is. It is quite true that a number of Members spoke to this issue. Our Government indicated we would set up a consultative group to look at it, and now what has happened is that we have had these grand promises for legislation. This goes back to our basic thesis that you cannot make promises and then, all of a sudden, do a double flip-flop and say, "We are now going to study it". It is now back in committee for examination and we think it is very important that the Government take a stand. Let us see the colour of the eyes of the Minister of Finance. Then, my hon. friend, our critic on agriculture, will be more than happy to respond.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Hon. Member suggested that the previous Minister of Finance planned a consultative committee to look into the whole matter of problems associated with Section 31. Did he ever get around to doing that?

Mr. Axworthy: I think that is a very appropriate question to ask of the Minister of Finance whose Department is responsible. We discovered several cases where we had initiated reviews, as in the case of the Manitoba equalization, that the Department of Finance was not quite so anxious to follow up until it saw what happened on September 4. It is now quite satisfied because nothing is happening, so its own basic biases are being supported.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Still blaming public servants.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I come from the same kind of rural riding as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I was wondering if he could comment on the question of financial help for farmers. I was wondering why he did not compliment the Government on the change in the tax on petroleum products. After all, that was a massive reduction of taxes on the farming community. It certainly complied with the promise to give financial support to farmers. Why did he not comment on the reduction by our Government of interest rates through the FCC from 16.75 per cent, which he and his colleagues demanded farmers pay, to 12.75 per cent?

● (1650)

What new program should he be advocating the Government undertake in view of this motion? After all, surely it is the obligation of the Official Opposition to present alternative programs to the Government which need to be discussed and examined. There is nothing in this motion except the condemnation of the Government with no alternative being suggested.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to answer the question. I find that the Member for Mississauga South has not outgrown old habits. Like an old dog he still plays old tricks. He has not quite got used to the idea that he is now a Member on the government side of the House. In this Parliament the Government is responsible for coming forward with the proposals. We in opposition are always pleased to provide along the way whatever helpful advice we can. If the Hon. Member was listening, which I know he does raptly to everything I say, he will have heard that we did suggest that it is time that the Government got on with business and brought the stabilization fund forward, which could have provided close to $800 million of new cash flow for western grain producers. We have been waiting around since November for the Bill to be presented in the House. We made a very clear commitment to provide for an immediate cash flow to enable farmers to start their plans under the stabilization fund.

All we get from the Government is promises, promises, promises. That makes a good title for a Broadway play but it makes a lousy agriculture policy. The whole thrust of our motion is to say that there is a new Government now and it is about time it recognized its responsibility. It is about time it made decisions on these commitments. It does not do much if, at the same time as it is reducing taxes on excise fuel, it is adding service charges that end up costing the farmers more.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret but the time for questions and comments is now over.

[Translation]

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, my riding includes many constituents who are farm producers. In the riding next door . . . I am surprised at the comments of our Liberal friends. They are starting before I have even started my speech. Some Liberal Members are starting to interrupt instead of listening to what we have to say. They have not yet realized the shoe is now on the other foot, although they should, the figures are clear enough. If we look at the number of Liberal Members in provincial legislatures across Canada and in this Parliament, they represent a grand total of 16 per cent. A little more realism and everything should be fine.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Shefford, on a point of order.

Mr. Lapierre: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I realize my colleague from Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) has just been elected and may not be aware of the rule that provides that his speech must be relevant to the motion before the House. I do not think we have a motion on the number of Members elected in provincial legislatures. In fact I think the problem of farm financing is much more important. I therefore suggest that, at the invitation of the Chair, the Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead should speak to the motion before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Shefford also knows perfectly well, since he has been in the House for a number of years, that when a Member begins his speech he is allowed an introduction, especially since the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead was indeed interrupted by one of your colleagues. The Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead.

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, it is their ignorance of agricultural problems that brought about the national landslide that reduced their numbers from 980 to 162, while we have 579 Members across Canada, including this Parliament. Ask anyone, that is what producers are going to tell you, including hog producers.

We have been listening to practically everything that is being said about our hog producers. The subject came up in connection with the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), who was absolutely right in doing what he did, and he still is today. Hog producers across the country, and I know what our own producers are saying, will tell you they are well aware there is a major problem with the United States, and if it is dealt with too hastily, we might be hit with export restrictions, and that is something our hog producers want to avoid. I think we will be able to find a political solution to the $13 million question. Not a solution of confrontation, as you have always advocated for much too long—which explains why we have reached the point where we talk about two Opposition parties here. A policy of consultation, that is what it says in the document of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and that is a document for consultation. Pay close attention to the last paragraph on page 67: "The Government expects to hear from all interested individuals so as to know their views on these issues concerning the tax treatment of the agricultural community, in light of this document and of the principles contained in the Agenda for Economic Renewal". That's it!

Mr. Speaker, my riding is predominantly agricultural. There are dairy producers, hog producers and sheep producers. They know the agricultural community is experiencing difficulties. They want to hear what Hon. Members have to say about the real problems in agriculture. We all know what those problems are: a problem of overproduction, a problem of increasingly difficult exports caused by worldwide surplus production, a problem of surplus equipment, and a problem of indebtedness compounded by steep financing charges.

Today we are debating the issue of financing. Mr. Speaker, I wish all Hon. Members could have been in Washington where, in a non-partisan approach, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), for instance, and my colleague from Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) played an active role in the discussions in an attempt to find sound solutions to various agricultural financing problems. And after three days in Washington, there seemed to be unanimity, a consensus to the effect that we should not earmark less money for agriculture. All parliamentarians agreed that funds have to be set aside to help some categories of Canadian farmers. The idea was to find the most effective formula, the most profitable, rather than pick one at random only to admit later on that we made a mistake. We were there to draw inspiration from the American experiment. It is a new program.

When the Ministers of Agriculture attended the federal-provincial conference, there was no way to benefit from that American experiment. Now we can, and that is why the agribond program might be altered, solely with a view to finding the best way to finance farmers, particularly those who are just starting out in the business and others who are facing difficulties.

It is because there are so many of those farm producers in my constituency that I spend the greater part of my time here trying to identify the problems, trying to find with them what those problems are exactly, trying to identify them and find the most adequate solutions.

Farmers also are prepared, Mr. Speaker, to go beyond the mere question of farm financing. They know it very well because they have experienced and are still experiencing problems left over by the previous administration, the problem of too large a deficit, of too much government, a government that too often meddles with their lives as with the lives of all Canadians. They too are prepared to make sacrifices. They did not resolve to complain just for the sake of complaining. They want us to help them find a long-term solution, with government action aimed not only at solving one immediate problem but at solving a long term problem. And the long term problem, Mr. Speaker, . . . I hear again the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) who is trying to interrupt me rather than making a positive contribution in this House! They know the problem is related to their production costs. If he calls on the milk producers in his constituency, they will all tell him the problem is related to production costs. They would like to get a price close to their production costs, the everlasting problem. They will not have anything else to tell him.

Mr. Speaker, the only way is to proceed through consultation, ongoing consultation as this Progressive Conservative Government has been doing for a number of weeks, trying to get the best answers by way of consultation. This Progressive Conservative Government has been using a new approach to the question of farm financing. A co-operative approach, with an attitude conducive to closer work between the various parties involved, including the Provinces which must be taken into account, as I say to my Liberal friends.

At this moment, the Farm Credit Corporation is involved in financing programs in several Provinces. It is interesting to note that such programs are generally directed at helping young farmers go into business or expand their operation. We are directly co-operating with provincial financing programs in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Quebec, Nova Scotia and Ontario.

The officials of the Farm Credit Corporation are constantly looking out for new methods to increase the level of co-operation. They are experts, and I often urge my constituents to call on those experts and seek their advice. The 20 per cent of farm producers who are in difficulty can often find the solution to their financing problems simply through an orderly and intelligent discussion with the Farm Credit Corporation experts.

The Farm Credit Corporation has persistently set as a major goal for the coming year the putting into place of new programs that will help farmers in real need in a more aggressive and better adapted way.

There are indeed a great many farmers in my riding. They call me on the phone, they write to me and they are prepared to sacrifice almost anything to survive these difficult times. If there is anything I want to say about the part the Government should play in farm financing, it is that we have worked very hard since the election to help farmers. Those who were stuck with interest rates on their loans of more than 16 per cent—more specifically 16.75 per cent—saw them reduced to 12.75 per cent per year a few days ago, which was certainly a step in the right direction; these farmers know now that this Government has made agriculture one of its top priorities.

This Government has been elected and given the mandate to consider problems with a fresh look and from a new point of view. I can assure the House that our Government has the firm intention not to shirk its responsibilities. We have helped farmers finance their operations and we will continue to do so, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to repeat what I feel is the major message the Government is trying to convey to the Canadian people: with your help, we can improve the well-being of the Canadian people.

The Government expects all interested parties to express their views on tax issues related to agriculture in light of this document and of the principles put forward in the economic statement. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for 1500 copies of this document that I intend to send to all farm producers within my riding.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments? The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) on his speech and to tell him that, basically, the only words we heard from him were consultation, new approach, and so on. This is all very nice. He can send 1,600, 2,000 or 5,000 copies of his speech to the farmers of his constituency. This will help the printers, but it will not be of much help to the farmers.

I want to ask the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead something. I know that he has a lot of imagination and that he did not come to Ottawa only to listen to others. When he entered politics, he had answers. Well! Not a single one was mentioned in his last speech. He spoke of the problem when going to Washington, and we all know why the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sent him to Washington. There have been many newspapers articles about the trips of Conservative Members of Parliament abroad. I am not certain that the purpose of this particular trip was to solve the problem of farmers; he might have been more interested in solving his own problems.

Mr. Speaker, this is what I want to know. The Hon. Member talks about consultations. The UPA does not accept the figure of 12.75 per cent. They think it is too high and affects only a minority of producers. They think that the Hon. Member should rise in this House and ask for a much lower interest rate. What does he think?

I would like his comment because he spoke of his trip to the United States earlier and nearly fell into the trap set by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) by saying that the $13 million put aside for Quebec pork producers should not be released immediately because this might upset the Americans. Does the Hon. Member for Megantic-Compton-Stanstead agree or not that the Government should meet the commitment made by his colleague from Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and immediately send to the provincial stabilization fund the cheque for $13 million which he promised to the federation of pork producers? There are sheep farmers in his constituency. Does he want the $400,000 due to these producers in his constituency to be paid directly or is he afraid of upsetting the Americans? This is what I want to know. I also want to know whether the Government will soon introduce the tax reform which his Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has just postponed indefinitely. Will his Government exempt farm transfers from one generation to the next from capital gains tax? Does his Government intend to act in this matter instead of being satisfied with consultations?

Mr. Speaker, if you bow down too much, you run the risk of getting stuck in that position, but I am certain that a man like the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) will not bow down before all the useless papers produced by his Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin).

Mr. Gérin: First of all, Mr. Speaker, concerning the study session in Washington which began at noon on Tuesday and ended at four o'clock on Thursday, where we heard a dozen odd speakers, I would point out that it was not intended as a make-work exercise for backbenchers: we went there with open minds to listen and to learn. That was our motivation and perhaps it explains why the Liberal Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) and the Liberal Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) joined our delegation. It was a non-partisan effort. Time is running short, unfortunately, but I think I might give the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) an idea of what we learned down there; I am sure he would be interested. Indeed, I would even suggest that he might express different views after a briefing, for he too is an intelligent man, Mr. Speaker. If he were to read the document made public by our Minister of Finance—your Minister of Finance, in fact, the Minister of Finance of all Canadians—he would see on page 64 a full report on agribonds which practically sums up everything we learned down there. That is the problem. It would be an easy thing to do.

I can tell you that if the Liberal Members are not prepared to consult or would rather skip that essential consultation process, there is no way, of course, I can settle the problem all by myself. Perhaps the Conservative Members might share this task. As for me, I will order an additional 1,200 copies of that document and send them to my constituents of Shefford. I would like to know what they think, and the reason I do not know is that Members to my immediate left never did bother to consult those producers. I think that is what I will do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I listened very closely to the remarks of my colleague, since he probably has farms in his riding, part of which are also in mine.

Here is my first comment to him. Last September 4, the people of Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead did not elect a Member to make studies; they elected a Member expecting him to act and find solutions to their problems. Now, I would have a number of very specific questions that can be answered by either yes or no. The learned Member said earlier that pork, mutton and hay producers were willing to make sacrifices. Must I understand, in the first instance, that they are willing to give up those $13 million for their pork, those $450,000 for their mutton and those $40 million for their hay? Secondly, I would appreciate having his comments on the response obtained from Mr. Proulx, who is not just anybody, when he said that the decrease in interest rates on the one hand was unacceptable, and on the other hand, would benefit a mere 700 farmers in Quebec. He went even further. He suggested it was discriminatory, because the interest rate reduction applied to a short period only. I would therefore appreciate having the Hon. Member's comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin).

Mr. Gérin: It is still better to go and learn, Mr. Speaker, than to talk nonsense. I think that my colleague from Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) should know that. I wonder what he was doing, while I was studying during the recess. But as soon as I went back, I told producers in my constituency, at three different meetings with something like 400 persons, about the results of that trip, and that gave results. His constituency borders on mine, Mr. Speaker, and indeed I have called one such meeting to be held in Bury next Sunday, and I invite him to attend. This will be an opportunity for him and his colleague from Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) to profit from our experience.

Concerning those $13 million, I will ask him the question again, because there is something else that concerns me. He was a member of the previous Liberal Government. They are responsible for the awful situation in which the pork producers find themselves. But now that we face the problem, a year later more or less, I am going to ask him: "If the Government were to pay out $13 million, how much of that amount would go directly into the pockets of the Quebec pork producers?" He should tell that to the pork producers, and discuss the issue with them. But he should first study the question. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to the question is obvious.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I see that time is running out, but I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. He does not need to give a long answer. My question concerns the cost recovery program on food products and products produced on the farm. As the Hon. Member knows, subsequent to the Wilson document in December, $32.3 million was identified in the Department of Agriculture for a cost recovery from that Department basically on inspection fees. First, does the Hon. Member agree that potato producers or producers of agricultural products should be paying inspection fees rather than inspection fees coming out of general revenue, because inspection basically serves the consumer? Does the Hon. Member agree that farmers should be paying their share of inspection fees?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin). He should be reminded that there is but one minute left.

Mr. Gérin: Do I have only one minute left? It would take me more than a minute to answer my colleague's question. I will repeat what I said earlier. Farm producers are aware that the Liberal Government has created for us some terrible conditions. Farmers are ready as all Canadians to take part in the collective efforts necessary to correct such conditions. Such efforts will have to be made not only by the industry or wage-earners but also by farm producers and they know it. Cuts will not be made at the CBC only. Too many millions of dollars have been wasted. We have to pare spendings almost everywhere. We have to do it. We have to re-examine just about every thing from the very beginning. As you know, the accumulated deficit has reached $200 billion. It is shocking. Farm producers are quite aware of it. They are aware of the disastrous economic conditions. All kinds of reports constantly refer to the disastrous economic conditions to be corrected. This will require some sacrifices. However, I think that farm producers are quite conscious of that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments has expired.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise to speak to this opposition motion indicating the inadequate response to the growing financial crisis in the agricultural sector and identifying the Government for its failure to provide sufficient support and services to farmers who face severe economic difficulties in all regions of the country.

I am fortunate to represent a constituency in Canada that has a substantial number of farms, to be precise, 1,200 farms, of which 50 per cent are cattle ranches, 30 per cent are in various field crop opeations, 10 per cent are in fruit and vegetable growing, and 10 per cent are in specialized and mixed farming.

I am not going to make a speech today, but instead I shall reflect on three or four issues facing the agricultural sector that I feel are of particular importance today.

When you look around the world today, Mr. Speaker, and you recognize the trends internationally, you see that farming communities in Europe, often heavily subsidized, are competing now directly with Canadian exports. In many cases those crops and products are so heavily subsidized that fair competition does not exist any longer. We see the situation in other countries, such as Argentina. Argentina in a sense is dumping its wheat on world markets, prepared to sell it at any price, not so much that Argentina is in the wheat sale business but it is in the business of obtaining foreign currency. The much needed American dollar in that part of South America motivates its pricing system for grains.

When you consider that in the United States today the Government is determined to protect a number of its sectors to subsidize heavily its agriculture sector, we face a very difficult international trading community when it comes to agricultural products.

Here at home with a new Government there is one concern that overrides all others, namely, that of the deficit. I am not confident at this point that the necessary support and assistance will be given to ensure that not only viable agriculture continues in Canada but, more important, that family farm or family ranch in western Canada continues as a viable producting unit. I see us as being at a crucial point today as a result of the financial crisis where we will be making decisions in the next number of weeks that will determine whether agriculture in Canada goes the way of the family farm or the family ranch or whether it goes in the direction of large-scale corporate agricultural business.

In terms of the future of Canada, it seems to me that it would be appropriate for the Government to take steps that would ensure that the family operator remains a viable food producer and not take steps that would inevitably see the rapid drift into the hands of corporate agriculture where we would have large commercial farms perhaps run by breweries, oil companies or petrochemical companies with very little interest and commitment, if at all, to the real agricultural community.

I have been fortunate enough to be part of a New Democratic Party action group on jobs. We have been touring the country over the last number of weeks. We have been to all parts of Canada, from Atlantic Canada to western Canada, to central Canada, through Ontario and Quebec, and if there is one thing that has been made perfectly clear at every single session, whether held in rural areas, in small communities or in large metropolitan areas, it is that there is a profound interest and a deep concern for what is happening to agriculture today.

What about farm bankruptcies? They continue to increase year after year. In 1980 we had about 200 farm bankruptcies. In 1984 we had about 600 farm bankruptcies. In 1985 it is predicted that in excess of 1,000 farms will experience bankruptcy. Those numbers, when you consider the number of farms in existence, may not be particularly problematic, but we should recognize as legislators that this is only the tip of the iceberg. For every farm that actually experiences the bankruptcy proceedings and the personal horror attached to that, there are hundreds and hundreds and thousands more farmers who are simply giving up. People simply give up and walk away because they can no longer make a living from the operation.

The Farm Credit Corporation informs us that 39,000 farms at the moment are facing serious financial difficulty. Nearly 2,000 farms are on the brink of financial collapse. That is why we are here today. That is why the Opposition has decided that it is appropriate to discuss the seriousness of the situation in an effort to encourage government Members to use whatever powers they have with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to ensure that the necessary steps are taken. We can no longer afford to do nothing. We can no longer afford only to consult and discuss the situation. For years and years, as I recall, farm groups representing every possible area of the country and every possible sector of the agricultural community have been making their concerns known to Members of Parliament and to the Government, past and present. The problems being faced by food producers today are not a mystery to anyone. The problems are clear and, perhaps more appropriately, the solutions are relatively clear.

I became a little disconcerted when I received a discussion paper on tax issues in agriculture from the Minister of Finance. I, like all of us, am very interested in the taxation system as it touches the agricultural community. Yet, when I read this recently released report, page after page, I did not see any particular conclusions. I did not even see any real options provided. I saw three or four options provided, but they say that two will not work or will cause all kinds of problems and that they are not sure about the other one. I am not particularly encouraged by Section 31, which has profound influence in my constituency. Half the ranchers and farmers in my constituency are required to seek income off their operation. They have been harassed unbelievably by the Department of National Revenue. These people are now considered to be part-time farmers when some of the ranches have been in the family for three generations.

One of my most saddening experiences as a Member of Parliament, in my brief career here, happened the other day when I visited a small cattle ranch. I suspect that traditionally it would be running 250 to 300 head of cattle. It was run by a young family with three children in their early teens. Both the husband and wife had grown up on ranches, one on that ranch and another on the neighbouring one, as had their parents and their grandparents. They had just lost the family ranch, despite relatively sophisticated management practices and good equipment. They had worked for 12 months of the year, probably 18 hours a day. The entire family had worked—the mother, father and three children. They lost the ranch. The bank decided that it was appropriate to take over that operation. The tragedy was that if that family had mismanaged its operation, if it had not put up adequate hay, or if it had not looked after its cattle properly and some disease or whatever had infested the herd, that would be one thing. However, the family lost that ranch because of interest rates, an item over which it had absolutely no control but over which the Government has control.

I noticed an article in The Globe and Mail the other day which was headlined: "Farmers are experiencing the worst time since the 1930s". On the opposite page it read: "Bank profits in Canada the world's best". On one hand our financial institutions now rank among the most profitable in the entire world, and on the other our farmers are experiencing financial difficulties like they did in the 1930s. What is the Government doing about that? In my estimation—and I know certain Hon. Members opposite would disagree with me—the Government is not taking any steps to reduce the deficit.

Just today we have seen the Canadian dollar dip below that important psychological level of 75 cents. I am afraid that the natural response of the Liberal Government will now be taken by the Conservative Government and interest rates will be increased to bring up the value of the dollar. I want to indicate that if that is the response of the Government to a decreasing dollar, which has other problems attached to it, it will be one of the most devastating moves the Government could take because of the fragile recovery that is out there. Farmers across the country welcomed a change of government. That Government promised to do a number of things. Farmers had said, "I suppose nothing could be as bad as it is now with the Liberal Government; we have nothing to lose". When Hon. Members opposite and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that the new Government would do certain things, there was a sense of hope. I suspect that, to a certain extent, that hope still exists. However, if interest rates go up next Thursday and on successive Thursdays, we will see not 1,000 bankruptcies in 1985 in the farming community but substantially more. I suspect hundreds of thousands will just walk away from operations to which they had dedicated their entire lives, as had their parents and grandparents before them. That is a very critical point. I must say that the discussion paper of the Minister of Finance is a disappointment. I personally—and I know it was the case with my Party—was certainly hoping for much more action than that publication suggests.

We must take action to reduce interest rates. I know the Government has an aversion to taking action to reduce interest rates. I guess it is quite content to spend hundreds of millions of dollars week after week to buy up our own currency to buoy up interest rates. That is an expenditure which I guess people do not mind.

Mr. Althouse: They do not see it.

Mr. Riis: I ask the Government to take the matter of high interest rates seriously and to recognize that real interest rates in Canada rank among the highest in the world. I do not think we need that status much longer. Quite frankly, the status I would like to see would be that of a viable food producing community of family farms and family ranches, people producing from the soil.

Mr. Fulton: Where they own their farms.

Mr. Riis: As the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) just indicated, where they own their farms. That is the kind of Canada we would like to see. Barring a lack of interest or a lack of commitment to reduce interest rates across the board, there are other alternatives. The agri-bond alternative is one to which all Parties agreed at one time. It is something worth looking at. That is why I was disappointed when I read this. I do not think the Government will now move on agri-bonds, unfortunately. Originally we suggested that the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act could be reintroduced as another method. While that worked back in the 1930s and the 1940s, I realize that it would have to be modified to work today. However, it is an option open to us now. As I said, not many months ago all Parties agreed to at least look at it seriously. I would like to see that initiative taken by the Government again.

I should like to refer to the whole matter of the set aside program. I want to remind all of us—and particularly Hon. Members opposite—that in the United States the Farmers' Home Administration has been authorized to set aside without interest for five years as much as 25 per cent of the debt owed by farmers in distress, up to a maximum of $100,000. Private lenders willing to write down a portion of loans to reschedule repayment obligations can apply to the Farmers' Home Administration for a guarantee on the remaining outstanding debt of up to $400,000 for operating credit and $300,000 for real estate. That Government recognized that it had to do something to help farmers who lost equity in their operations and that one way to do it was to set aside a certain amount of the debt, to be dealt with at a time when the farm was more of a producing unit. That is another alternative.

We have to look at something else, which is very serious for those of us who are interested in cowcalf operations or feeder operations. We have to look at introducing some type of beef stabilization program based upon the cost of production. A stabilization program based upon the averaging of prices does not help many people. Today, when the prices for beef are in fact lower than the cost of production, making that into a major guiding factor will not be of much help. A beef stabilization program to help provide that kind of support would enable the family farm or ranch to be successful.

I do not suppose there is much hope that the new Government will reconsider its position on Canagrex. Time and again the Minister of Agriculture has said that Canagrex is history in this country, something of the past, nothing to do with the present, and certainly nothing to do with the future.

• (1730)

Let us look at what Canagrex did over a very short period of time. Up to October 31, 1984, the total expenditures to set up Canagrex were $2,659,000. Canagrex arranged $16 million in sales and had an additional $100 million in sales that it was planning to wrap up by March 31, 1985. It had found and developed $160 million in sales in that short period of time. By the way, those figures are taken from Hansard where the Minister was answering a specific question.

If there is one thing that Canada must do, not only in agriculture but in other areas, it is to seek out and develop new markets much more aggressively. Never before has international competition been so difficult and yet important for Canada.

People in the farm community thought that Canagrex could play a very important role in certain areas. Some sectors were doing an excellent job. They were marketing our agricultural products extremely well. By and large, as in other areas of our economy, that was and continues to be a weak point. Canagrex was one of those operations that could have supported a lot of agriculture in Canada, particularly the newly developing agriculture where we are developing new crops and export potential.

I am a little hesitant to hark back to the old Government, but when you look at some of the deals we got under the last GATT agreement you, have to laugh. Our negotiators are out there to negotiate a great deal for Canada. I hope my Liberal colleagues will find some humour in this. Our negotiators managed to raise the tariffs on a whole set of our exports. That was supposed to help us, but I could never figure out how that would work. They reciprocated and said that we would lower the tariffs on all imports. That is not the kind of negotiation we were hoping for when they were negotiating on agricultural commodities, but so be it.

I want to close today, after having had an opportunity to say a few words about the problem facing agriculture, particularly in western Canada, by saying that the critical aspect is our shipping rates. Canada is the second largest country in the world. We have to ship many of our products a long way. That is why we fought so hard to keep the Crow rate to assist western grain producers.

The other day I happened to come across some information regarding the transportation costs on a case of corn being shipped out of Ontario. It cost $1.36 to send that case of corn to Japan. When the corn leaves here, it goes through the port of Vancouver and on to Japan. To send that same case of corn to Vancouver costs $1.63. In other words, it costs more to send it to Vancouver than to send it to Japan. It will cost 76 cents to send that same case to Germany. However, it will cost $1.22 to send it to Newfoundland. One of the critical areas in which we must work, if we are going to support a viable agriculture sector, is in the re-examination of transportation charges on agricultural goods.

I hope the Government realizes the seriousness of the situation. Opposition Members made the case today that we have a financial crisis in our agricultural community. Unless something is done very quickly, we will see the beginning of a massive demise of agriculture, more particularly of the family farm and family ranch.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I certain enjoyed the speech of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). He made a lot of points and stressed the serious nature of the agricultural community today. Is he aware of the cost recovery programs that were announced in the Wilson economic statement of November 8? Also, is he aware of a letter that was sent to different organizations involved in the marketing of food products, especially the potato industry in my Province of Prince Edward Island and in the Province of New Brunswick? The proposal, to be made effective on April 1, 1985, less than two months from now, is for an inspection fee of 33 cents per hundredweight to be set on all table stock potatoes for human consumption shipped out of Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick.

In Prince Edward Island the average crop yield is about 200 hundredweight per acre. This means that the inspection cost would be $66 per acre. The average potato farmer on Prince Edward Island grows 200 acres of potatoes. Therefore, he is looking at something around $13,000.

A seed inspection is also proposed of $25 a hectare for field inspection. That works out to $11 an acre. In my province, the Province of Prince Edward Island, 86 per cent of potatoes are grown as seed potatoes. However, less than 50 percent, probably 42 per cent, are sold as seed and the rest go into table stock. There could conceivably be a double inspection fee. Approximately 40 per cent of the production on P.E.I. would be subject to these proposed fees. That will involve $77 or $78 an acre.

That letter was read to me last night by the chairman of the P.E.I. Marketing Board. I read it back word for word to see that I had my facts straight. It was signed by the Deputy Minister, Mr. Quesnel.

I wonder how the agricultural community in my province could survive that sort of a huge price increase. The present cost of producing potatoes in P.E.I is six cents a pound. We get 4.5 cents a pound FOB P.E.I. so we are already selling them 1.5 cents below the cost of production. No farmer can operate very long that way. This is very discriminatory. If you look at the production of potatoes in the Province of Ontario, you see that most potatoes grown are sold within the Province of Ontario. Therefore, they would not be subject to the inspection fee. Areas like Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick are totally reliant on shipping out of province or to the export market. I see the Minister is now here. I hope that he will make some comments regarding this very serious situation about which I am speaking.

● (1740)

If the Government goes through with this measure, this to me would spell the end of agriculture as we know it in the Province of Prince Edward Island. I would like to hear the Hon. Member's comments on that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the elaborate question put by the Hon. Member, as well as his deep concern. Those same letters went out to people not only in Atlantic Canada but to people across Canada generally. I believe that the Hon. Member's calculations were $77 or $78 per acre. Our calculations, as best we could make them out, were in that same area. As the Hon. Member has indicated, I think that what this does is to spell out the end of agriculture as a viable sector in Prince Edward Island.

A similar argument can be made as well for a whole number of areas. I tend to concentrate on the beef industry in which the situation is the same. The costs are greater than the prices people are receiving. That is why I say that we have come to a critical point at which we as legislators must make a decision regarding whether or not we want agriculture in P.E.I. and other areas as well to continue as a viable way of life. By imposing those kinds of fees on producers, the industry will obviously not continue. By failing to take action on a whole variety of fronts, including the financial front, agriculture will begin to fail across the country.

Countries like Japan, for example, have taken it upon themselves to say that they believe that agriculture is critical for their countries. Self-sufficiency in agriculture is their goal. We have no goal like that. As a matter of fact, if we are to identify a goal based upon the point made by the Hon. Member, the goal would be to phase viable agriculture in Canada out of operation. That is why we must decide whether or not potato growing in P.E.I. will continue as a viable economic activity. From our point of view, we must take steps to ensure that it will continue.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the Hon. Member. I agree that we must have a goal, but I am wondering about the Hon. Member's views on the inspection fees themselves. I believe that inspection is a protection for the consumer and that the cost of inspection fees should be borne solely by general revenue. It should not be levied against the producers who are already very hard pressed. It is a protection for the consumer. I wonder how the Hon. Member feels about that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I suppose I can only say that I support the view held by the Hon. Member that inspection fees exist to protect the consumer. We are here representing the consumer. Obviously those costs ought to be paid from general revenue. Logically, it seems to me that that would be the only legitimate source of those funds. To go to the producer for that type of support seems to be an illogical approach.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to address this motion. I heard the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) speaking of the dilemma regarding inspection fees facing our potato farmers. I know that the Minister has also heard of that and I believe that he has sent some 60 letters out to groups affected by inspection fees and that 40 of these groups have replied. No Minister, and particularly this Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), would allow a viable agriculture industry in any region of the country to be hurt in any way by inspection fees. I am sure he is prepared to negotiate those fees if they do pose a problem in his region or in any other region of the country. That is an important discussion and I can understand the Hon. Member's concern.

I have a great deal of difficulty with the speech made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), however, and I feel an obligation to respond to some of the things he said. I will begin by dealing with his suggestion that the consultation paper costs $18. That is a good place to begin because that is completely false. Any person wishing to receive this paper can phone the distribution office and receive a copy. If that person would like more copies, he can then phone the Department of Agriculture and receive more copies, free of charge, of course.

I know that members of the Liberal Party, and particularly the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, have a lot of trouble with consultation. When the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry was Minister, he knew all the answers. He did not have to consult with anyone because he knew all the answers. When we who were in opposition at that time were consulting with our constituent farmers across the country, we asked the then Minister legitimate questions about things that were hurting farmers' viability. His response was that the Government knew what it was doing and that it had the answers. That is why, as we put forward papers with suggestions—not policies but suggestions—the Hon. Member has a great deal of difficulty with that and calls it something that assists the printing industry.

We have no difficulty with that. These are policy positions that we discussed during the election campaign. We want to make sure that the farm community of the country has the opportunity to respond to those suggestions. We put forward some alternatives. We have not put forward all of the alternatives. We hope that some other suggestions will come forward to allow the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to put in place the kinds of policies that are up to date and will suit the continuing viability of agriculture in the country. That is why we are committed to discussion papers. As a Member who participated often on the Standing Committee on Agriculture as it crossed the country discussing various issues, I know that those parliamentary committee reports always contained good advice to the Government, advice which was often taken.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry had the audacity to speak of the Western Grain Stabilization Fund and to chastise the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board for not yet bringing in an amendment to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. If the former Minister who was responsible for this Bill had accepted our amendment at that time, an amendment which was requested unanimously by opposition Parties, we would not have to amend the Bill. Our amendment requested that an interim payment be allowed at the discretion of the Minister. That would then allow the Minister, when he felt a need for a payment on the Prairies, to make that payment in advance of the date specified by the Bill. No, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, the Minister at the time, would not heed that suggestion. The present Minister is now forced to deal with the situation, and he will deal with it. He will meet that promise and it will be put in place before the farmers plant their crops this year. You can be assured of that,

Mr. Speaker. The situation on the Prairies is desperate and many farmers are depending on payments from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund for cash to put their crops in the ground this year.

I agree with the statement made by the Hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) that we in government must look seriously at alternatives that will assist us in keeping family farms all across the country viable. I know that when this Party sat down before the election and deliberated on policy, it had that in mind. If we look at the record of this Government, in the short time that it has been in office, we will find that the Government has adhered to more promises in that short time than did the last Government with two Ministers in five years. I could go through the policies which have been implemented, but other Members have already done that. Those policies have assisted in lowering the cost of production to many farmers. It has given farmers an opportunity to be optimistic about being able to meet their payments and to put in their crops in 1985.

● (1750)

There is much financial distress as a result of what happened from 1970 to 1981. During that time land prices increased dramatically and the cost of production increased together with inflation. The cost of production perhaps increased even more rapidly than inflation. At the same time, the price of agricultural production was also increasing. When the 1980s arrived, Governments were not prepared for the results. Interest rates skyrocketed as agricultural prices leveled off, and in many cases became depressed. At the same time, the cost of production also increased rapidly. Lending institutions, including the Farm Credit Corporation, were lending money to farmers based on increased equity. The lending institutions were looking through rose-coloured glasses in anticipation of higher prices for farm products. Those higher prices never resulted.

We cannot blame the farm managers for getting wrapped up in the escalating war for land, or for trying to plant crops and getting a reasonable return. The best advice in the country was telling them to do that. If we look at the statistics, the farmers who produce most of the food in the country are also the farmers who are most capital-intensive. In most cases they are farmers who have the potential for getting into financial stress if everything does not work properly.

We know the difficulties in agriculture. Even those who live in the cities probably had fathers or grandfathers who were in agriculture. We know that weather can be a determining factor. It is a factor which will not be found in other businesses. Nothing is more distressful than to see a farmer being removed from his property. He is also removed from his home. There is something good about being close to the soil. When farmers are forced off their land, it is a very serious matter. In a lot of instances the land has been in the family for a number of generations. Factors which are different from those in the business sector come into play. Even the best managers can experience bad weather and be forced from their land because they are unable to make payments. Governments have a responsibility to bring forward the kind of policy which will keep farmers viable across the country.

Many Members have spoken about the difficulties in getting our produce into world markets because the United States and the EEC are presently battling over markets. But Canada has a good record in that regard. The Progressive Conservative Government of the 1960s was able to get into the markets in Russia and China and lead the way in getting Canadian agriculture products into those markets. We now have preferential treatment when our grain is moved into those markets. Even in these competitive times, the Canadian Wheat Board was able to sell, in the last four or five years, all the grain which our transportation system has been able to get to port. It is an excellent record upon which the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) will build.

I am pleased that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has dealt with the Farm Credit Act and has allowed the farmers who were locked into high interest rate loans to bring them down by 4 per cent or 5 per cent. That practice is assisting more farmers in Canada than the set aside policy of the United States. I believe there are 8,000 farmers in the United States who are being assisted, but there are 6,000 or 7,000 farmers in Canada who are being assisted by that policy. If the Minister's policy can be adopted, it is worth looking at. I believe a number of banks are responding to it.

There was a situation in my constituency in which a cattle feedlot company was in financial difficulty. It went to the bank to seek a solution to its difficulties. The company had $1 million in debt which it had accumulated over the past three or four years because of stabilized cattle prices and increasing costs. After much deliberation, the bank was able to work out an agreement. The bank bought half the shares of the cattle company and set aside half the loan for five years. The company will pay the loan on the other half. That will allow the company to get back on its feet and, hopefully, to repurchase the shares which are now owned by the bank.

Financial institutions are now prepared to write down some farm loans. Perhaps the farm financial review boards which are now operating on an experimental basis in two counties in Ontario will find the same kind of success as they bring farmers in distress together with financial institutions in an attempt to work out solutions which will allow those farmers to stay on the land. As the Government brings forward policies to assist in the lowering of the cost of production and in getting more agricultural produce into world markets, farmers will have a much brighter outlook and they will be able to deal with the loans which they have accumulated.

Earlier today the Minister of Agriculture mentioned the 12 significant policy changes which have been made during the past four months. In my constituency, the average farmer will now save approximately $1,000 on fuel costs when he puts in his crop this year. It is a significant cut in the cost of production for farmers. That was one of the policies which was brought forward in the economic statement. The Minister of Finance in the economic statement made important cuts in order to deal with the deficit in a number of departments. However, in the Department of Agriculture the cuts were less than in other departments. As well, the economic statement included a fuel reduction of $100 million. That shows the kind of emphasis which the Government immediately placed upon the agriculture industry.

In conclusion I would like to note that while we had a motion which was put forward by the Liberal Party, very few suggestions were made by that Party as to how the Government should proceed. Therefore, I assume that the provinces—

Mr. Foster: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to ask the indulgence of the House because of the circumstances today where we heard the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) rather than the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif). Since it is our Opposition Day and we have only had three speakers while the Government has had four or five, I wonder if we might not see the clock for 15 or 20 minutes so the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe might have an opportunity to make his speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I understand what the Hon. Member is saying. The combined Opposition has 70 Members and they had six speakers. The Government has 211 Members, close to three to one, and we had five speakers. I think that is a very fair distribution. If you wanted to go proportionately, we could have gone very much the other way and had more speakers on this side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): There is not unanimous consent.

Order, please. It being six o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that proceedings on the motion have expired in accordance with Standing Order 62(11).

ENERGY—VENTURE OILFIELD PROJECT. (B) NEGOTIATION OF OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss a question that I asked on November 26 and the answer I received from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It concerned two very important matters, that of the Venture project off Nova Scotia and the Hibernia project off the coast of Newfoundland. I was really not satisfied with the answer the Prime Minister gave, and since then the situation grows increasingly more confused with respect to the Government's policy on these two very important projects. These projects have the potential to create and maintain many jobs in the hard-hit Atlantic region of this country where unemployment is a tremendous problem and getting worse all the time.

The main reason this lack of direction exists, Mr. Speaker, is that there is no intention on the part of the Government to put forward a fiscal regime for these two very important projects. I asked the Prime Minister, concerning the Hibernia problem, when the agreement would be signed. What was the situation? He referred in his answer to an accord being worked out. An accord, Mr. Speaker, had been worked out. It had been agreed to in June, 1984, between the then Leader of the Opposition, now the Prime Minister, and the Premier of Newfoundland. This was an accord between two buddies who supposedly are so enamoured of each other that they feel there is no problem in reaching an agreement. We had that accord in June and a second one in December, but we have yet to get the agreement. Where is this agreement? Supposedly the federal Government offered the Province of Newfoundland everything it wanted, yet there is still no agreement. This is taking far too long. The Government is not coming forward with answers to the question regarding Hibernia. It sloughs it off completely.

On a subsequent occasion we asked for the environmental impact study, and the Prime Minister said he would provide it. In response to subsequent questions from my colleague from Corner Brook someone in the Government said that there was not an environmental impact study and that all COGLA had was a draft of the environmental impact study. We are not getting answers to these very important questions. If these two accords between the two Parties are so unanimous, why do we not have an agreement at this stage?

This situation has now extended to western Canada. The federal Government said that there is now an era of compatibility and there will not be any problem reaching new agreements with the three western provinces. Yet on two occasions the deadline set by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has been extended. The Minister has undertaken to use the energy sector as an engine for growth. I agree that this is an extremely important aspect. If the Government looks upon this as an important aspect, why has there not been more of a concerted effort to reach agreements with the Province of Newfoundland and the three western provinces? There have not been negotiations with the Province of Nova Scotia since the agreement with the Province of Newfoundland was signed. There has yet to be a meaningful dialogue with the industry.

With these things in mind, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Government to make more of a concerted effort to bring these very important questions to a meaningful consensus.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it bothers me greatly to see the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) so perplexed. I am going to set his mind at ease right now so that he will have a wonderful evening and can relax.

On the matter of the Venture gas field, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) explained when the Hon. Member raised the question of the fiscal regime last November, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has advised the companies associated with that important development that the Government will ensure a favourable fiscal regime that will not place companies at a disadvantage in any way vis-à-vis anything that might have been available in the past.

It is incorrect to infer, as the Hon. Member did, that there is no fiscal regime in place to govern the Nova Scotia offshore. The Canada Oil and Gas Act, which was passed by the Thirty-second Parliament in December, 1982, clearly establishes an offshore fiscal authority which is applicable to Nova Scotia. That Act provides for a 10 per cent basic royalty on the value of production, as well as a progressive incremental royalty on 40 per cent of new profits over a certain level.

In addition to this framework, last June the previous federal Parliament passed the legislation formalizing the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement for offshore oil and gas resource management and revenue sharing. I am sure the Hon. Member remembers that, and he is probably briefing the Member for Hamilton East (Miss Copps) on that very agreement. That agreement provides for a mechanism to ensure that Nova Scotia receives, with the exception of federal corporate income tax, all revenue from adjacent offshore activity until the province's per capita fiscal capacity reaches 110 per cent of the national average.

That answers that part of the question. There is a fiscal regime in place for Nova Scotia. In addition, and of most importance, there are provisions for Nova Scotia to substitute for the present agreement any agreement made by the federal Government with another province which would be more favourable to Nova Scotia. The agreement, to be reached shortly with Newfoundland, and relevant provisions from forthcoming agreements with the western provinces, could be considered under this most favoured province clause of the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement.

With reference to Newfoundland, may I say at the outset that the Government remains firmly committed to the formalization of the Atlantic accord with Newfoundland. There is no problem with it and things are going swimmingly, as they might say in Newfoundland. We are very pleased with what is happening with the agreement.

Since our Government assumed power, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has met twice with her counterpart in very fine meetings. There is not the acrimony that we saw with the previous Government. As a matter of fact, both sides have shown a determination to work co-operatively and expeditiously to finalize these very complex and vital arrangements. I do not believe the Hon. Member would want them to rush and make a poor agreement that would be detrimental to Newfoundland or to the people of Canada.

I can tell him that a third meeting between the Newfoundland Minister of Energy and the federal Energy Minister will take place this Thursday. We are most hopeful that great progress will be made. The negotiations that are taking place now are being held in the best of atmospheres. Progress is being made, and I know Canadians will be very pleased at the results which I am sure we will hear in the not too distant future. In the meantime, the people in Newfoundland, the oil and gas industry and Canadians as a whole will benefit from all the agreements that the Government is carrying out in a very conciliatory atmosphere.

I must say that my constituents and people to whom I have talked throughout the country are happy to see that. They do not want to see the provinces fighting with the federal Government as we have seen over the last number of years.

SOCIAL SECURITY—LA RÉGIE DES RENTES DU QUÉBEC—CANADA PENSION PLAN—INJUSTICE TO PUBLIC SERVANTS IN THE NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, on December 6, 1984, I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) a question to which I did not receive a reply, a question that is of considerable importance to the region as it concerns the Régie des rentes du Québec and the Canada Pension Plan. My question was that the Government of what used to be "la belle province" has changed the regulations for the Régie des rentes du Québec and lowered the pensionable age to sixty, provided the individual is no longer in the labour market and agrees to a certain penalty, a decision that affects, and I think Hon. Members will agree, thousands of public servants in the Ottawa-Hull region.

I read, because this is quite subtle, that "if an Ontario resident works all his life on the Quebec side, he is eligible for benefits under the Régie des rentes du Québec, while a Quebec resident who has worked all his life in Ottawa or Ontario is eligible only for benefits under the Canada Pension Plan which does not operate in the same manner as the Régie des rentes du Québec in this respect."

In other words, Mr. Speaker, this means that there has been injustice. I do not know whether this flaw could have been detected or even existed when the plan was established. It seems that when the Province of Quebec decided to set up its own plan, it was to be identical to the Canada Pension Plan. That was one of the basic criteria established at the time.

Previously, I put this question to the former Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) in March 1984. I could not do so before that time because what used to be "la belle province" changed the legislation on the Régie des rentes du Québec as of January 1, 1984. The injustice apparent here is something we do not find anywhere else, where people in border areas are concerned. That is why I would like to know whether the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and especially the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), in the course of conversations with their provincial counterparts, intend to find a way to remove this injustice, these inequities for contributors to the Canada Pension Plan and the Régie des rentes du Québec.

Of course, a person who lives in Quebec all his life and observes the rules and regulations laid down by the Province of Quebec and who wants to stay in Quebec, but is in a position where he has to work in Ontario all his life, cannot take advantage of such benefits as the province provides for its fellow Quebecers.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I asked the Minister whether he was willing to deal with this flaw in the Canada Pension Plan and the Régie des rentes du Québec. We must remember that this was done unilaterally, and that there were no consultations, as far as I know, between the authorities of what used to be "la belle province" and the federal authorities with a view to amending this legislation. So this was done unilaterally, and the question I want to put to the Minister is whether he is willing to meet with his provincial counterparts to talk about this very considerable flaw that has developed over the years, especially during the past year, with a view to eliminating this injustice, these inequities that are affecting hundreds of thousand of federal public servants, Ontarians working in Hull and residents of Hull working in Ontario, and get rid of this very discriminatory situation. That is why I wanted to get an answer from the Minister. It is not because there is any loss of money involved, because I hope the Canada Pension Plan reaches the same conclusion as the Quebec Pension Plan, because we put more people in the market and it does not cost the Treasury a cent more, for the simple reason that a condition, a penalty is added, I think it is 5 or 6 per cent between sixty and sixty-five and at sixty-five there is no increase in the normal rate. The cut remains until you are no longer drawing a pension. And the other condition too, the criterion as I said, is that the individual must no longer be in the labour market.

So I hope ... I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Bertrand), the Member for Brome-Missisquoi. I hope she will be able to provide an answer that will satisfy the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are caught in a situation that could easily be remedied.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) to note that in his comments he used the word "injustice" many times as well as the expression what used to be "la belle province", and I want to point out to him that the province of Quebec is still a "belle province". In reply to his question, I can say that we are indeed aware of the amendments made by the Quebec Government to the Quebec Pension Plan, making the payment of pension benefits available at age of 60, with an actuarial adjustment. You explained it quite well. This change, which has been in effect since January 1, 1984, allows contributors to the plan to receive early retirement benefits provided they leave their job. The pension of those requesting their benefits before age 65 are reduced by 0.5 per cent for each month remaining until they reach that age. It is very important to note that, because of the actuarial reduction factor, the amount of the benefits paid out over the lifetime of those who opt for early retirement is equivalent to the amount of unreduced benefits which would have been paid to them had they waited until the age of 65 to retire.

Since the establishment of the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans in 1966, there have always been differences between the two plans. Early retirement is only one example of this. However, in spite of these differences, the two plans have always been considered basically similar.

As for determining under which plan the benefits should be paid, the rules are quite simple. Someone who has contributed only to the Quebec Pension Plan is protected by this plan wherever he or she resides. By the same token, someone who has contributed only to the Canada Pension Plan is protected by this plan, wherever he or she resides. For people who have contributed to both plans, there is an agreement between the Canada and Quebec Governments dealing with the payment of benefits. Under this agreement, a contributor to both plans who resides in Quebec at the time of his application for benefits is subject to the provisions of the Quebec Pension Plan. On the other hand, if he resides in a Canadian province other than Quebec at the time of his request for benefits, he is subject to the Canada Pension Plan.

I find it quite fair that all those who have contributed to a plan can equally benefit from it. This is why I do not see any need to amend the rules for the payment of benefits.

As for the question asked by the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer, I believe that his suggestion would be quite welcome in the context of the reform of the Canada Pension Plan which we supported during the election campaign and which would recognize provincial jurisdictions.

MULTICULTURALISM—IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS. (B) ABELLA COMMISSION REPORT—DATE OF PRESENTATION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, on November 14 I asked the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) a couple of questions dealing with the report of the Special Parliamentary Committee on Visible Minorities, and I followed with a query about the awaited report from Judge Abella. Admittedly and understandably the answers I received were quite tentative. I requested then the opportunity to speak further on the matter. Now, about two and a half months later and more than twice as far into the life of the present Government as we were at that time, it is appropriate to consider the record of the Government to this point. Also it is appropriate to inquire about the possibilities of early action and to press for that early action which various members of the Canadian community, visible minorities of all sorts, have been hoping for so long.

The report Equality Now focused on the need for action in a great variety of areas, but I want to focus particularly on the employment recommendations. Of course, the Abella report contained concerns about equity in employment. That was its main focus.

The record of the Government to this point has not been very reassuring. The recommendation to establish a Department of Multiculturalism never had the support of the Conservative Party. Presumably it will not be a policy of the Government now. That is to be greatly regretted because it is important to have someone responsible, a minister with a department and substantial resources, in order to achieve the ends for which so many Canadians hoped. Whether we will have a standing committee perhaps is not entirely in the hands of the Government. It is likely that recommendations 25 and 26 of the report will not be acted upon. One is tempted to conclude that we are likely to see the same contrast between rhetoric and reality which characterized preceding Liberal Governments ever since the policy of multiculturalism was enunciated in 1971.

Another area of concern is that of appointments to various boards, commissions and other offices which the federal government control. An assessment of the actions of the new Government, whatever the protestations of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have been, again have been disappointing. There were precious few appointments of people from the visible minorities, from the ethno-cultural diversity of the country. However, I am pleased to see that Francophones and women fared rather better in appointments.

Recommendation 21 of the Commission still awaits action. The activities of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism vis-à-vis the National Association of Japanese Canadians in the last few weeks, focusing on recommendation 33 of the report, again arouse concern. There is no readiness to negotiate a very narrow concern about redress for that aggrieved community. I only hope that my expression of concern proves to be unjustified.

These particular decisions by the Government in past weeks leave one concerned about the extent to which there will be action in areas of employment. Surely employment is ultimately the area in which there has to be action if the report Equality Now and the Abella report are to mean anything at all to Canadian society in general.

The various recommendations in Equality Now call for the early establishment of a five-year program by the federal Government with regard to the various corporations and institutions that it was involved with, a well formulated five-year program designed to achieve a measure of voluntary compliance and tests of it. As far as corporations doing business with the Government were concerned, the report called for contract compliance provisions to be established.

These recommendations in the Equality Now report were reflected in the Abella report in various ways, focusing on means by which equity in employment might be achieved. The judge has done a magnificent job in clarifying means in law and in institutions, in new provisions designed to smooth the way for a broader participation in employment among Canadians. These recommendations have had the support of various important bodies. The Canadian Ethno-Cultural Council and the Canadian Human Rights Commission have both recommended actions along these lines. I await the response of the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) for his observations and to assure him that this Government is committed to ensuring that there is equality of economic opportunity for all racial and cultural minority groups in our society.

I want to inform the Member that the Minister has submitted a number of recommendations to be included in the forthcoming government response to the Abella report Equality in Employment. As he may be aware, a number of those recommendations dealing with the employment sector have also been identified in Equality Now, the report of the special parliamentary committee on the participation of visible minorities in Canadian society. These dealt primarily with barriers which impede the full participation of visible minorities in the employment sector.

The results of a recent study in Toronto entitled Who gets the Work?, which was funded by the Multiculturalism Directorate, demonstrates that job barriers faced by visible minorities as a result of racial discrimination are major factors in the job search for individuals from these communities.

I want to say at this time that this Minister and this Government are strongly opposed to any form of racism and will direct the necessary energies to combat it with all the means at our disposal. Indeed, I can say that with the conviction of one who represents a riding in Hamilton with a multiplicity of ethno-cultural groups unmatched anywhere in Canada.

Specifically, this Government will work co-operatively with the private sector to encourage the elimination of discriminatory practices in training and promotion. With respect to programs offered by Employment and Immigration Canada to the private sector, consideration will be given to the designation of visible minorities as a target group. In the public sector, the implementation of special measures for visible minorities will be introduced where necessary, following a survey of public service employees in the spring of 1985.

Of course, since any policy dealing with the elimination of discriminatory barriers involves more than just the federal Government, a strategy which includes provincial, municipal and other non-government agencies is being developed.

The Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) has already started consultations with his provincial counterparts in order to have included in the forthcoming federal-provincial conference on multiculturalism a broad discussion dealing with the area of attitudinal and institutional change aimed at addressing a number of issues of major concern to Canada's cultural and racial minorities.

In conclusion, the Minister's multiculturalism officials have already developed a number of initiatives with the Federation of Canadian Municipalities and the Canadian Labour Congress to develop specific programs to overcome attitudes and practices that create limiting and unjust situations.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

AGRICULTURE

DISASTER RELIEF FUNDS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, as if Canadian farmers are not worried enough about increasing farm costs, they now have an additional worry, the announcement by the Conservative Government that ad hoc disaster relief agreements with the provinces will end.

Instead of special disaster relief funds involving the federal Government and provincial Governments, farmers will be forced to absorb extraordinary disaster relief through higher crop insurance premiums.

While disaster could strike any part of Canada, the impact of this new Conservative Government approach, which amounts to disaster relief for the provinces, not farmers, will have its greatest impact in western Canada.

Presently, crop insurance programs are not comprehensive. Although efforts are being made to extend crop insurance programs to all crops, the special needs of feed producers and of livestock producers have yet to be met.

More than just damage to crops, disasters such as drought or floods damage the land itself through erosion and other problems which affect not just crops in the ground but crops yet to be planted.

Major disasters such as spring flooding in Manitoba, drought in Saskatchewan, and late flooding in northern Saskatchewan, have required extraordinary relief needs, which were provided in conjunction with the provinces by previous Liberal administrations.

This amounts to disaster relief for the mostly Tory provincial Governments and higher costs for farmers, particularly farmers in western Canada. It is unacceptable. The Government is abandoning the farmers of this country.

RAILWAYS

VARIABLE FREIGHT RATES

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address an issue of serious concern to thousands of Saskatchewan farmers and their families. CN Rail and two grain companies have applied to allow special, lower freight rates at certain times in my home town of North Battleford and two other western communities.

On the face of it, this appears to be an incentive to farmers. However, Mr. Speaker, I am suspicious and gravely concerned that this is merely the first step toward variable freight rates. Lower rates being used at certain locations will have a drastic effect on smaller communities, farmers, and grain movement. Variable rates will sound the death knell for many of the small towns and farmers who use local shipping points. I ask that the Canadian Transport Commission hold extensive, full, and open hearings to let producers voice their opinions on this application. We don't want variable rates.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST SALMON SPORTS FISHING LIMITS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, recently the Vancouver Sun newspaper reported that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) had reached an agreement with sports fishermen in the Province of British Columbia.

This agreement indicates that he is prepared to allow them a catch limit of 20 fish per year. For 400,000 sports fishermen this amounts to 8 million fish. Assuming they fish with children under the age of 16, we could expect to double that figure to 16 million Chinook. Since the Americans are only going to allow us, under the treaty the Minister signed, 275,000 Chinook in total in the Gulf of Georgia, would the Minister please present to this House a plan on how he intends to allocate those sportsfish between the sports fishers, the Gulf trollers, and the incidental net catch fishers?

A suggestion from this side of the House would be that the Minister either explain the plan, take remedial arithmetic, or present to the House a piece of legislation that would indicate, one, that he is able to allocate the salmon resources of British Columbia and, two, how he intends to do that, before he imposes the treaty?

CROWN LANDS

DUNCAIRN COTTAGE OWNERS, SASK.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, Duncairn Dam was constructed by PFRA in the early 1940s. The reservoir thus created is located in southwestern Saskatchewan, some 20 miles upstream from the city of Swift Current. Some 30 years ago a number of local individuals placed summer cottages on Crown land on the shore of the reservoir. These Duncairn cottage owners were left alone, and no serious attempt made to remove them until the Department of Justice, at the request of the PFRA, began court action in 1981 to reclaim possession of the land on which the cottages are located. The cottages do not cause the Crown any problem in terms of water quality or supply. I am advised the cottages cannot be flooded because they are situated at levels higher than the top of the dam.

The PFRA apparently fears that setting up such resort areas would be an open invitation to other potential cottagers to do likewise around other reservoirs. PFRA also says there is no jurisdiction in the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act to permit such developments.

These cottagers are causing no harm to the Crown. They pose no risk. It appears that the public good could be well served if the cottagers were left alone. It should be noted that recreational shoreline in southwestern Saskatchewan is scarce indeed and, considering the lack of water recreation in the area, it might well be advantageous if additional development were permitted.

It is time to seek an amicable solution to this long-standing problem.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PROTECTION SOUGHT AGAINST TAX REBATE DISCOUNTERS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, we know that at this time of year ice hogs emerge from their holes in the Canal in Ottawa during Winterlude. But all across Canada a certain species of shark also emerges, the kind that preys on the economically disadvantaged. These sharks charge a fee to provide cash advances for tax rebates. If you annualize the fee of 15 per cent they charge, it comes to as high as 90 per cent. Sixty-five per cent of those who use these services have incomes of less than $8,000. Forty-two per cent are women receiving the Child Tax Credit. Fifty per cent to sixty-five per cent of the clients are unemployed or on welfare. This year close to one-half million Canadians will pay out $43 million to these people.

I have raised this matter with the Government before, and so have groups such as the National Anti-Poverty Organization. Two provinces have outlawed the practice. But across the country this practice is mushrooming, and the ripoff of lower income people and the Canadian taxpayer is enormous, and growing. I call on the Government to implement the recommendations of my former colleague, Judy Erola, and immediately bring in steps to outlaw the practice, or somehow stop this ripoff of lower-income Canadians.

Ms. Mitchell: You were the Minister who did nothing.

ENERGY

REQUIREMENTS FOR CREATION OF POSITIVE INVESTMENT CLIMATE

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, Canada's energy sector, if properly stimulated, can provide immediate and long-term employment which will contribute to economic growth throughout Canada without aggravating the current government deficit.

• (1410)

Since the introduction of the disastrous Liberal National Energy Program, the industry has suffered an erosion of internally generated cash flow due to front-end taxation. The energy industry is unique in Canada in that it is taxed on gross revenues rather than on net profits.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) is now formulating the new Conservative energy program. It is important in this new program, first, that we move to market pricing for oil and gas; second, that we phase out PGRT; and, third, that we phase out PIP. These three items will create a positive investment climate here in Canada.

I urge the Minister of Energy, along with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), to treat the resource industry the same as other industries, by moving to a profit-based system of taxation and giving the industry a long-term program to enable management to set realistic goals and budgets for its future operations and investments.

CANADA COUNCIL

RESTORATION OF BUDGET CUTS URGED

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign the Progressive Conservative Party proposed an increase in funding to the Canada Council which would at least keep up with the rate of inflation.

As deserving as any other industrial sector in Canada, the arts deserve the promised increase. The arts are the eleventh largest of the manufacturing industries in the country, and first in terms of size in employment and labour intensity. Yet its workers form the second lowest income group in Canada, next to pensioners. At a time when everyone acknowledges unemployment as the single greatest domestic problem, it makes good sense to foster an industry which is part of the solution.

Aside from the economic importance of the arts, I should like to stress the value of the contribution which the arts play in creating a cultural identity for Canadians. The quality of life in many cities across Canada is immeasurably enriched by the contribution of artists. Public support of the arts is an investment in the cultural lives of all Canadians.

The Canada Council is the only entity which provides direct aid to artists. The recent cuts in funding to the Council should be reconsidered and restored, and the inflation-based increase that was promised should be honoured.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

TRANSPORTATION OF AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS—TREATMENT OF APPLICATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, if there is anything that Canadians can't stand, it is bureaucratic red tape. Hundreds of entrepreneurs during the Liberal regime became so frustrated that they either put their money in the bank or invested it in another country. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and our Ministers have told the world that investment under our laws is welcome in Canada.

If our country is to employ the thousands of unemployed, we will have to increase our world trade immensely. For example, western U.S.A. and Pacific Rim countries want our agricultural products, but at the present time there is no Canadian transport dedicated to moving such cargo. Canadians saw this gap, formed a world cargo international company, and already have a potential minimum one-year contract involving 5,000 revenue hours. It is a large agricultural sale, in excess of $15 million.

The application to provide this full-time service was received by CTC early in January, and CTC was asked to move as quickly as possible. When informed that the $15 million contract would be lost if the CTC took too long to consider it, CTC asked: "How many foreign carriers have you checked with in order to send this cargo?" Foreign carriers! We want the jobs for Canadians which will come with the realization of this great potential in world trade. If the bureaucrats can't change, let's change the bureaucrats.

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): "Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister should apologize to the people of this country for having made these horrible appointments", so said the Leader of the Conservative Party on July 25, 1984, in reference to appointments made by the Liberal Government. So far, after five months in power, this same double-talking Leader has already appointed hundreds of his own cronies. This is the same man who said, and I quote: "The overriding criteria for an appointment will be competence and a willingness to serve Canada".

Remember when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that Liberal appointments were "a fraud, a deceit and a sham"? I dare him to stand up in the House and repeat these words now. I ask the Prime Minister: where is the promised patronage reform? Where are the criteria for quality appointments? Where is the screening committee? If the Prime Minister was sincere about his promise during the campaign, why did he not wait until all of those were in place before making his appointments? This is a Prime Minister of Marie Antoinette in reverse. Let them all eat pork is what he says.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—FUNDING OF STUDENT SUMMER JOB PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It relates to her statement outside the House about an hour ago. She, with her colleague, the Minister of State for Youth, just tried to pull off one of the biggest public relations stunts in the history of this country, at the expense of our youth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Last summer the Government dedicated $200 million to summer jobs. In November the Minister of Finance specifically cut $215 million off student programs. This afternoon the Minister and her colleague restored $205 million, for a net shortfall to the students of $10 million. It was cut by the Minister of Finance, and restored to a partial extent by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why did she not have the guts to tell the students and the young people of this country that she really meant to cut their programs?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, for the Leader of Party which allowed only $85 million—

Mr. Axworthy: That's not true.

Miss MacDonald: The Liberal Government allocated only $85 million to Summer Canada this year. We, I am proud to announce, have put $205 million into that program for this year. The name of the game is really not the amount of money. The name of the game is the number of jobs that will be created. This year there will be 95,000 jobs produced from that program, and a great many more will be provided by the private sector.

MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister in her announcement had no commitment from the private sector whatsoever, no allocation to the constituencies of the country. I repeat that in November the Minister of Finance cut Canada Student Loans, General Industrial Training, Young Workers' Exchange, Environment 2000, The Young Entrepreneurs Programs, Parks Canada employment, and even cut Katimavik. Will the Minister of Employment and Immigration acknowledge that her announcement this afternoon was purely an exercise in public relations and a cruel attempt to hoodwink the young people of this country?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that 95,000 jobs is very significant to the young people of this country who are looking to the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: That approach is substantial. It is not the smoke and mirrors that the Leader of the Opposition tried with First Chance. This is substantial. It will provide jobs for young people this summer. What is more, it will encourage the private sector to take up its responsibility, something which the Leader of the Opposition did not think was necessary in the programs he put forward.

ACQUISITION OF JOB TRAINING AND EXPERIENCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister mentioned the First Chance program, which was a program—

An Hon. Member: Last chance.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It will be the last chance for you over there if you don't put it back, I can tell you that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If they feel like they are getting roasted this afternoon, wait until the young people of this country really look at this program. The Minister mentioned the First Chance program, which was a program of the Government which would build up to 100,000 training jobs per year for our younger people, to fill in that gap between school and a job. It would give them some experience for their résumés.

• (1420)

Would the Minister be specific in telling us what she will do to fill this training gap and provide what we attempted to provide in concrete terms and in co-operation with the provinces, the private sector, and labour, that would give our young people some training on the job? What does she have that will answer that question?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Leader of the Opposition has not had a chance to review the program that we have announced for this summer, but I would encourage him to do so at the first opportunity. This program will provide young people with opportunities for career-related employment this summer. They will be able to get jobs that will take them back into school but will provide work experience for their CVs. It will help them get permanent jobs. That is one benefit of the program, and that is the method the Leader of the Opposition spurned earlier. He did not want to work with the provinces and the private sector. We believe in that kind of co-operation, and it will be for the benefit of young people this summer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MODERNIZATION OF POLLUTING INDUSTRIES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the outcome of yesterday's meeting of Environment Ministers in Montreal hinges entirely on one key commitment which can only be given by the Prime Minister of a Government which is regrettably prone to cuts. Can the Prime Minister give this House, the Canadian people, and the concerned provincial Governments, an ironclad assurance that there will be no cuts to the Industrial Regional Development Fund in order to ensure that the modernization of the polluting industries, in conjunction with the private sector, gets under way?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, yesterday an agreement was concluded with all provinces, an agreement qualified by our Quebec counterpart as a historic one, under which funds will be allocated to the provinces for the purpose of reducing acid rain. We also agreed, this in reply to the Hon. Member's question, that the responsibility for paying the cost of cleaning up pollution lies with industry, but that considering present market levels and depending on individual circumstances, there must be a measure of participation by the provincial and federal governments.

[English]

INDUSTRIAL REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT FUND

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, if the Right Hon. Prime Minister declines to answer this question in light of his strong commitment, then I must ask my supplementary question of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, because I did not get an answer. Will the Government give an ironclad commitment to the House, to Canadians, and to affected provinces, that there will be no cuts in the allocation to the Industrial Regional Development Fund that will permit the modernization of the non-ferrous smelter industries?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised that the Hon. Member would be seeking ironclad assurances after there was such a sad, sad reflection on that term when his Party was in power. In answer to the Hon. Member's question, I would like to assure him that he received a very forthcoming answer from my colleague, and I do not think that any further assurance is needed.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—PROGRAM FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration concerning her announcement today of the summer job program. Last year a Liberal Government, faced with record levels of unemployment amongst young people, announced a sum of money that the Conservatives, then in opposition, said was totally inadequate to meet the task. Why has the Government now, which was then in opposition, produced the same amount of money for jobs which last year it described as inadequate? Why is that amount adequate this year when produced by the Tories, and why was it totally inadequate when produced by the Liberals?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is an entirely different approach.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: This measure provides a wage subsidy program—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: I know that some Liberals will not be able to understand this, but it is a wage subsidy program which will encourage the private sector to participate. I would like to bring that home to the Leader of the New Democratic Party. It encourages the private sector to take part in the program, so that the program will be extended by the involvement of the private sector, and the involvement of the provinces, which goes over and beyond what the federal Government itself is prepared to do.

ROLE OF COMPANIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the amount of money is totally inadequate. We in this Party, who know that students want jobs, and want to be able to save for their education, also believe that a Government ought to be able to make work available to them when they want work.

Since the Minister has said that the details of the program have been changed, is she aware that companies in Canada now have more than an average 30 per cent of employees on lay-off. Why in heaven's name, when they already have lay-offs, will they want to hire students? The Government is leaving students out there swinging, and the Minister knows that.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that I did something last evening which I do not believe he could have done. I met—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: I am sure you will understand.

Mr. Axworthy: Explain!

Miss MacDonald: There's lots I can do and he can't do. Nevertheless, I met with the chief executive officers of eight major corporations last night and asked them if they would be prepared to assume some responsibility in this regard, over and beyond what the federal Government is prepared to do. Jointly, they are going to create 10,000 jobs. That will add to the number of jobs which will be available to young people this summer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR MORE FUNDS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to hear how the Minister spends her evenings. However, I think the Minister had better go back and do her homework again, because that is fewer jobs than were announced by an equal number of corporations last year, and we ended up with 180,000 unemployed students. Unemployment is no easier for students when it comes from the Conservatives than when it came from the Liberals.

I would like to ask the Minister a very straightforward question. When she sat on this side of the House she expressed great concern, not only about students, but about the poor and other groups of Canadians who needed assistance. Why can she not get some compassion and care into this uncaring Cabinet, to get more money for students who want to work?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is because of those very characteristics, which are shared by every member of this Government, that the announcement has been made today—$205 million; 95,000 jobs—which shows our concern for young people.

I can tell the Hon. Member, and all Members of the House, that while we are working to get commitments from the private sector at the national level, with national organizations, I hope the Hon. Member will take the opportunity to go into his riding and do the same kind of work with business, corporations, and community groups, so that they too will help to create jobs for young people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESEARCH

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Minister is aware that his Government's cut-backs and indecision regarding research funding are threatening the lives of hundreds of young Canadian scientists. While the Minister of Employment and Immigration talks about new approaches, the reality is otherwise. According to a prominent neuroscientist, we are in danger of losing a whole generation of young scientists—

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

Mr. Mazankowski: Question.

Mr. Berger: —because of the dithering of the Conservative Government. When will the Minister make a decision regarding funding for the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council and the Medical Research Council? Is he waiting for these young scientists to move to the United States to join the Prime Minister's friend, Mr. Reagan?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member rather over dramatizes the situation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: In fact, Mr. Speaker, he knows that NSERC receives in excess of $300 million in funding this year. This Government is committed to a continuation of adequate funding and stability of funding in support of post-graduate research in all of our Canadian universities, and I will be submitting shortly to Cabinet the next five-year plan to ensure that funding is realized.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NATURAL SCIENCES AND ENGINEERING RESEARCH COUNCIL OF CANADA—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister informed the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates on December 4 last year, and I quote:

> It should be clear to everyone that the current uncertainty surrounding the total budget of the Council must be resolved, and resolved quickly. I will do everything within my power to be back before you with further supplementary estimates—

My question is a very simple one. We are still waiting to hear from you. When are you coming back to the Committee?

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the appropriations for the present fiscal year are being honoured by this Government. If there had been an opportunity for additional supplementary funding, it is rather puzzling that our predecessor did not put that through Cabinet in the earlier part of last year when it had that opportunity. I would remind all Hon. Members that when certain financial measures were announced on November 8, there were absolutely no reductions in the levels of funding for research within our Canadian universities.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—STUDENT SUMMER JOB PROGRAM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration said that the name of the game is the number of jobs created by, I gather, faith, hope, and "wait and see". She also admits that she is having difficulty with the process of consultation on the question of ensuring jobs, and wants us to join in. Why would the Minister not stick with the program which was project oriented last year which could guarantee jobs this year as it did then?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can understand where the Hon. Member is coming from and, obviously, he will take a number and say that is all that can be done. We don't believe that. We don't follow that logic. We think that there can be more jobs generated in the private sector by working with it, not by ignoring it as did the project approach last summer.

ROLE OF PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, no one dismisses the possibility of private sector co-operation, but what we have here is the Minister challenging the private sector to do her job, and what we are concerned with is jobs this summer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Right.

Mr. McCurdy: I ask the Minister again, what guarantees does she have from the private sector that those 80,000 or more jobs that she speaks of are actually going to be produced?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the 95,000 jobs which we have determined for this summer will be in place because of federal Government projects. But we are not satisfied with that. We want to see more. That is why we are going out and challenging the private sector. That is why we are taking a wage subsidy approach which produces two jobs for one, which is different from the approach which was taken previously.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

MARINE INDUSTRIES LIMITED CONTRACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services and concerns employment.

There has been a lot of talk about historic agreements, and I think we are indeed making history this week in the House of Commons: the Progressive Conservative Government is getting ready to shaft the province of Quebec a second time in a row, the first having been on Monday, when the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion brought an industry to his riding without giving Quebec a chance to make an offer. Today I would like to ask the Minister of Supply and Services whether it is true he intends to cancel the contract on which Marine Industries Limited was working in Sorel and which it can no longer fulfil because of a strike, and whether it is true that instead of awarding the contract to the second lowest bidder, Canadian Vickers Limited in Montreal, the Minister intends to put out a new tender at the request of his colleagues who want to give this contract to another province?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that there are no shipyards in Calgary bidding for the work.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: I would also like to tell the Hon. Member that the Department of National Defence requires the Saguenay to be outfitted for manoeuvres next winter so we can meet our commitments to NATO. While we do not in any way want to intrude ourselves into the labour dispute which is presently going on, it may be necessary for the Government to take action to ensure that our defence commitments can be made. When that action is taken, it will be done in a way which will preserve the jobs and ensure that the taxpayers receive proper value. I believe the Hon. Member is jumping to a conclusion in assuming that any decision which might result in the jobs being transferred to Calgary, or any other shipbuilding area, has been taken.

BIDDING INQUIRY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, perhaps there is none in Calgary, but I know there are shipyards in the province of the Minister of National Defence. If at this time the Minister is about to ask for some new bids, it is going to be unfair to the second bidder because its price is already in the market and a competitor will know that tender of Vickers Canada Inc. I know that Vickers is willing to do the job for the same price. Will the Minister guarantee to the House of Commons that he will do nothing to undermine Vickers and the workers in the shipyards in Montreal?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I intend to ensure that Canada and Canadian taxpayers are well done by. The Hon. Member is taking an accusatory stance. He has created a straw man on a decision which has not been taken, and is flailing away at the straw man. I can assure the Hon. Member that if—and I say "if"—and when any decision is taken to have the Saguenay refitted in another yard, that decision will stand up to scrutiny and will be defended and, indeed, applauded, by taxpayers from coast to coast.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—APPLICATION IN NON BUSINESS REGIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. This afternoon we witnessed a most incredible political shell game. After two months of delay and procrastination we have a student summer employment program with less real dollars this year than it had last year, and more money being directed to the big business sector than to the voluntary non-profit sector. How does the Minister intend to provide work for students in those parts of the country where there is not a big business sector, such as the Maritimes, the Gaspe, northern Quebec and Manitoba? What about the students in those areas?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I had sent a copy of the release and the details to the Hon. Member well in advance of Question Period and I thought he might have read it, but he will have noticed that there is the same allocation of funds this year, or more, to every province in the country. That means that that money is going to be allocated and, as the release points out very clearly, if it is not taken up in the private sector, it is there for municipal Governments and community organizations to use, and it is there for groups right throughout all sectors of society to use in creating jobs this summer.

SCOPE OF PROGRAM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, while the Government is diddling around looking for jobs in the private sector, it will be summer. The summer will be all over by the time the money is available for these other community organizations to use. The Minister knows there is not the private sector strength in those areas to hire those students during the summer. I am asking her—and we have all Conservative Governments down there in the Maritimes and in the West—what about the thousands of children who were taken care of in summer day camps? This not only benefited students but it benefited community organizations, the handicapped, the blind, and senior citizens. How does she expect her program not only to help students but to help those people in need?

● (1440)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I can only reiterate, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member should reread the press release. Community organizations will be able to participate. What is more, they will receive a 100 per cent subsidy in order to allow them to do so.

KATIMAVIK PROGRAM FUNDING

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It was announced today that Katimavik has been cut from $50 million to $19.7 million. This is a community-based program, and in many of the constituencies across the country we do not have the benefit of large corporations. The program is also bilingual, and provides equal opportunity for women workers. Can the Prime Minister give us the assurance that he is prepared to reconsider this disastrous step of cutting Katimavik?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member will again read the release he will see that community organizations are addressed in this program.

Mr. Broadbent: A small part of the money.

Miss MacDonald: The people he talks about, women, young people, and the disadvantaged, will have a very real opportunity to take part in this summer program.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Minister's nocturnal admissions with the corporate leaders, we know who is being screwed in the process.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to ask the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to ask the Minister what provision—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to ask the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Boo!

An Hon. Member: Why do I have to be sitting here?

Mr. Rodriguez: If you will just settle down over there, I want to ask the Minister—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Apologize!

Some Hon. Members: Out!

Mr. Axworthy: We're getting a lot of hot air from over there.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I suppose you think that is funny, Lloyd?

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to ask the Minister what provision there is in this announced program for affirmative action to make sure the increase for post-secondary institutions for women—what provision is there for some affirmative action to ensure they get their fair share of the jobs?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I make no apology for my nocturnal activities when I can come out of a meeting with 10,000 additional jobs for young people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the programs which have been announced will be extremely helpul to women because they do not rule them out of so many programs as they did in the past, programs which were directed particularly to construction activities where they were not allowed or not able to participate. What this program does is to allow them to be involved in wage subsidy programs, in businesses large and small, and they will have a more than adequate share of what comes out of this summer's program.

ACID RAIN

INDUSTRIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question directed to the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday, an important federal-provincial conference on acid rain was held in Montreal, and our Government must be delighted with the outcome of this meeting which represents a major step towards improving the quality of life of Canadians. Could the Minister inform the House whether specific measures were discussed with her Quebec counterpart to provide assistance to industries like Noranda Mines which are a major source of pollution in my riding?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question. Quebec has made a commitment to reduce sulphur dioxide pollution by 600,000 tons by 1994, and our financial input will depend on the discussions we have with Quebec and Noranda Mines. In any event, the federal Government will be taking part in this collective effort to reduce acid pollution.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCOME TAX DISCOUNTERS—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF LOW-INCOME PEOPLE

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister will know that at this time of year tax discounters arise to prey on low-income Canadians. He knows that between 50 per cent and 65 per cent of those Canadians are on welfare or unemployed, and 42 per cent are women receiving the child tax credit.

Ms. Mitchell: Why didn't you do something about it, then?

Mr. Rompkey: The Minister has had recommendations put together by the former Minister, Judy Erola, since last spring. Will the Minister now act on those recommendations and stop this rip-off of low-income Canadians?

Mr. Crosbie: Why didn't you do something?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. In fact, what we have here is legislation that has been in effect since 1979, and I am referring to the Tax Rebate Discounting Act. We are now negotiating with provincial representatives and a majority of the discounters involved, and as soon as the consultation process has ended we will be in a position to issue a definitive policy on the subject.

[English]

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, it is time for the Minister to stop consulting and act. Two provinces have brought in legislation to outlaw this practice, and the Minister should do the same thing.

INCOME TAX

PAYMENT OF REBATES

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. If the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will not bring in legislation to outlaw this practice, will the Minister of National Revenue take steps to speed up the delivery of the child tax credit and other tax rebates to low-income Canadians so that this swindle of low-income Canadians and Canadian taxpayers can be stopped?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member quite correctly understands that obviously any direct action has to be taken by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. However, with regard to the Hon. Member's question to me, I have good news for him.

In contrast to the delays there were when he was Minister of National Revenue, we are taking steps to speed up the processing of cheques. This year we are going to be starting the processing of cheques one week earlier than last year, which means that on error-free returns Canadians will be receiving their cheques at the earliest date in history.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—PRIVATE SECTOR CO-OPERATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for employment. In her earlier comments she indicated that 95,000 jobs would be created as a result of her initiative today. She would also recognize that more than two-thirds of those jobs would look to the private sector to be willing, and more probably able, to provide that opportunity.

The Minister knows that the private sector in most parts of Canada is operating at between 60 per cent and 70 per cent of capacity. Major plants have laid off employees. What guarantee does the Minister have that the private sector will be able to co-operate to the levels she is anticipating?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, prior to this announcement today there was a great deal of consultation with the private sector on what they would be prepared to do in order to further this very worth-while program. We do think it is worth-while and it will be successful. We do, because we have faith in the private sector of this country, something which the NDP should learn about.

• (1450)

PRIVATE SECTOR CAPACITY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister admit that what she is really saying is that at least two-thirds of the jobs that she is promising to 95,000 Canadians today depend on the ability of the private sector to produce those jobs? Will she not agree that in many parts of Canada, even if the private sector is quite prepared to provide those job opportunities with the 50 per cent subsidy, it is simply unable to because it is operating at 60 per cent to 70 per cent capacity and cannot expand when its own employees have been laid off for many months?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no, I do not admit to that. I simply will not take that kind of interpretation which the Hon. Member chooses to put on it, because the money has been allocated for summer jobs beginning in April or at the end of April this year. That money will be going into summer jobs.

As the Hon. Member says, there may be parts of the country where the private sector is not able to pick that up. That means it will be going into jobs created by municipal Governments, created by community organizations—

Mr. Broadbent: It will be too late then.

Miss MacDonald: —created by groups across the country.

Mr. Broadbent: It's too late then.

Miss MacDonald: The Leader of the NDP Party says that it is too late. If he thinks it is too late in Oshawa he should let me know, and I will go to Oshawa and make sure that it is not too late for them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: You will get a phone call, Flora.

INQUIRY WHETHER VIA RAIL WILL PURCHASE ROLLING STOCK FROM BOMBARDIER CORPORATION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday the Minister announced that additional funding would be allocated to VIA Rail for the purchase of rolling stock. Could the Minister give the House the assurance that VIA Rail's first purchase will be made from the Bombardier Company in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the budget for the acquisition of new rolling stock will be made from that which is already proven and established, and it will be Canadian.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Members from Quebec were asking why. Thanks to the Hon. Member for Champlain, we now know that Progressive Conservative Members from Quebec are all a bunch of "deuces of spades". I would like to get from the Minister of Transport the assurance that he will not again send his Minister of State, his "jack of spades" to Montreal to announce that VIA Rail's first orders will be placed with General Motors, rather than with Bombardier.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, let me advise the Hon. Member that there have been a number of discussions with Bombardier and other suppliers. The discussions have been very fruitful and productive, and the acquisition of new rolling stock and new equipment will be fair to all parts of Canada.

ACID RAIN—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT ON CONTROL MEASURES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the agreement on acid rain reached yesterday between the federal Government and the provinces. As it stands, the agreement reached yesterday is a reconfirmation of previous agreements with the provinces. In fact, as it stands, it is only an agreement for a 42 per cent reduction instead of a 50 per cent reduction.

When will the Canadian public know just how much the federal Government is prepared to pay, what it will require of the polluters, and what will be expected of the provinces, so that we can know what action is contemplated, as well as intentions?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct a few things just referred to by my hon. colleague. It is true that 50 per cent of acid emissions were to be reduced by 1994. The very difficult aim was to allocate emissions to each Province. That tremendous difficulty was overcome yesterday in a co-operative spirit and if my hon. colleague will have enough patience, we will shortly announce the Canadian Government's participation in that area.

[English]

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister because it is the Prime Minister, not the Minister of the Environment, who will be meeting with Mr. Reagan on March 17. Does the Prime Minister not think it would be useful for the Canadian public as well as the Americans, to know by that time just what the Canadian Government is prepared to put up, with respect to acid rain? When will the Prime Minister put our money where his mouth is, not just for our sake but for the sake of our negotiating position with the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Canadian public knows that for the first time the national Government of Canada is taking the calamitous problem of acid rain seriously has indicated its capacity to reach an important accord with the Provinces of Canada in a short period of time, and is committed to the resolution of the problem. I am honoured to tell my hon. friend that the thrust of our activity has met with approval across Canada, including the Coalition on Acid Rain.

ENERGY

MULTINATIONAL OIL COMPANIES' PROFITS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The combined profits for Imperial Oil, Texaco Canada, Gulf Canada, and Shell Canada are 42 per cent above the profits for 1983, or $1.42 billion in total.

In her discussions with these four multinationals, has the Minister received an undertaking from them that they will reinvest these profits in new developments in the energy sector in this country, and not for other purposes such as buying up Canadian-owned companies, or sending the profits to their head offices outside Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Hon. Member for his endorsement of Conservative oil pricing policies. He was recently in Calgary—imagine a Liberal in Calgary—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: —where he was advocating an oil pricing agreement with a fiscal framework that would be conducive to increased energy activity. Of course, that is what we are doing. He joins his colleague, the NDP critic, the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, who was in Edmonton—imagine a New Democrat in Edmonton—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: We are the opposition in Alberta.

Miss Carney: He was advocating a safety net for consumers.

Mr. MacLellan: I would like to thank the Minister for her travelogue. I want to say to her that she better get used to Liberals in Calgary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INVESTMENT OF PROFITS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister have absolutely no concern for the unemployed, or does she not care where the multinationals are putting these profits? Has she received that undertaking from these four multinational corporations?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the question is not whether we have to get used to Liberals in Calgary; it is whether Calgary will get used to Liberals there.

Some Hon. Members: Never!

Mr. Andre: We have a spare telephone booth.

Miss Carney: I can only add to my comment that it is essential to our negotiations with the producing provinces that the economic activity, or investment activity, is increased.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF CANADIAN IMPRISONED IN NEW JERSEY, U.S.A.

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Many Canadians across the country have been expressing concern over the case of Bruce Curtis, an 18-year old boy from my constituency of South West Nova, who was sentenced to one of the harshest prison terms in New Jersey court history. Would the Minister inform the House what actions have been taken by his officials to ensure that justice has been carried out in this case?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question about Bruce Curtis. That is a case that has attracted the interest of Members throughout the House.

The Department of External Affairs, the Government of Canada under three administrations, I believe, have been working assiduously to try to ensure that the interests of Bruce Curtis were fully protected in court proceedings in the United States. It is the view of this Government that those court proceedings were proceeded with in a way that fully followed American law. A decision has been rendered.

It is the view of this Government that it would be as inappropriate for us to interfere in the judicial proceedings of the United States as it would be for us to accept interference in judicial proceedings in Canada, by the United States.

Mr. Speaker: One question. The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. It concerns the Canadian frigate program. Would the Minister confirm to this House that the frigate patrol program's management and production are in the hands of Americans from Bath Iron Works, and that the services provided by Bath Iron Works will run in the order of $100 million or more? Since the last Government made a commitment that there would not be any financial overruns, could the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I asked the Member to put one question. I cannot, therefore, allow him to put three. The Minister of National Defence.

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there was a report to the House last week in relation to the situation of the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program. The people at Saint John shipyards have indicated to my departmental officials that they have made some additional rearrangements in their operations. They will be reporting back to my departmental officials in early March, and at that time I will be in a position to provide additional information to the House with regard to that program.

MAIL DISTRIBUTION IN SAINT-MICHEL-AHUNTSIC

POINT OF ORDER

REMARK OF MR. RODRIGUEZ DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regret having to rise at this point after the Question Period, although it is the appropriate time to raise a point of order which I think casts a serious reflection on the proceedings in this House.

I draw reference to the remarks during Question Period made by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), which I consider, and I am sure most Members in this House consider, to be in the nature of a vulgar and sexist remark which is unacceptable in this House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is a serious place and profanity has no place in the House of Commons. If you look at Beauchesne's Citation 319(3), Mr. Speaker, it states that in the House of Commons a Member will not be permitted by the Speaker to use any profane or indecent language. What I have to say I say with some sadness because I respect the Hon. Member and the Party that he represents, but when a Member of the New Democratic Party stands up and utters what I consider to be a sexist and obscene statement on the floor of the House of Commons, I think it is incumbent upon him to stand in his place and withdraw those remarks unequivocally.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I have already sent a note to the Minister in which I clearly pointed out that there was no insult meant and that no casting of any aspersion on the Minister was intended. It is an unfortunate remark and I apologize to the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Government House Leader—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Once a Member has risen in his place to withdraw the offending comments, the matter is normally regarded as over. I say normally.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: A point of order of that sort is normally regarded as over. Does the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr.

Ouellet), however, have some comment on a separate point of order?

Mr. Ouellet: I rise on a similar point of order, Mr. Speaker. I take great exception to the Government House Leader standing here in this House and asking the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) to withdraw his remark.

A similar type of intervention was made earlier this week by the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) against the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). If the Government House Leader is going to adopt this type of attitude, namely, citing remarks made during Question Period, I would ask that he counsel his own Minister to make sure that he does not utter sexist remarks, as he did earlier this week.

Mr. Speaker: I accept that the Hon. Member for Papineau had a point he wished to make to the Government House Leader, but if there was language used earlier this week that he thought was improper, I suggest to him that it was his right and in some ways his duty to bring it to the attention of the House at the time.

I take it we may regard the matter as closed.

PETITIONS

CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, once again it is my duty to bring before this House another petition from the people in Sackville who view very seriously the cuts announced to the Canadian Wildlife Service, and those people once again are asking the Minister of Environment to reconsider her actions and reinstate the programs.

NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of some of my constituents in the riding of Sarnia-Lambton who are concerned with Cruise missile testing. TAX BREAKS FOR CORPORATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of residents of Canada who request this House to amend the income tax laws so that large corporations will receive the customary tax breaks only in proportion to the number of net new jobs they have created or have guaranteed to create, and that the number of jobs created by each corporation and the tax breaks will be reported quarterly to Parliament.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 207.

[Text]

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Question No. 207—Mr. Henderson:

Does any relative of the Prime Minister hold a position in the Prime Minister's office, either in Ottawa or in his constituency and, if so, what is the salary of that employee?

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): There is no relative of the Prime Minister holding a position in either the Prime Minister's Office or in the Prime Minister's constituency office for whom a salary is paid by the Government of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I draw the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary to question No. 93 on the Order Paper which has been there since November 19. It inquires with respect to the scale of fees which the Government proposes to charge for those setting up camps on Parliament Hill. As the summer approaches, perhaps if that fee schedule were announced, those intending to protest would determine where to apply and what fees are to be paid.

Mr. Dick: This is a very complicated matter, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the response will come soon.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

S.O. 30

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 30

EMPLOYMENT-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Speaker: I have received notice of an application under Standing Order 30 from the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 30, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre), that this House do now adjourn for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the Government's late and inadequate employment creation programs, including those for youths in the summer of 1985.

Mr. Speaker: As is customary and as I said, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East has given me notice of his application for an emergency debate.

As Members know, Standing Order 30 provides a procedure for:

—the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration—

What is envisaged is a sudden emergency of such importance that the national interest calls for its immediate consideration by the House. The adequacy of programs designed to create employment is a matter which has been with us for a long time and is ongoing. It is a matter of continuing debate. Standing Order 30(5) requires the Speaker to have regard to, and I quote again:

● (1510)

—the probability of the matter being brought before the House within reasonable time by other means.

Four allotted days remain during the current supply period and the subject could be chosen for debate on one of those days. As to whether the Government's employment-creation programs are, to quote the Hon. Member, "late and inadequate", this is a matter of political judgment. It would be difficult to find that a difference of political opinion could form the basis of an emergency debate within the meaning of the Standing Order.

Therefore, I am unable to agree that the Hon. Member's application meets the requirement of Standing Order 30.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It seems to me that if we do not deal with this today and change that program, or convince the Government to change that program, there will not be adequate employment for students this summer. That is an emergency for the youth of the country.

Mr. Speaker: I will not take that as a comment on my ruling. I will simply recognize that the Hon. Member was getting his point on the record. I understand why he rose.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, in terms of House business, I have informed House Leaders of the Opposition Parties that the order of business for today and tomorrow, until further notice, will be the Bill with which we dealt on Monday with respect to the spousal allowance, Bill C-26. If it is concluded today, we would then deal with Bill C-20, the one relating to the CRTC.

Mr. Lapierre: Forget it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Hon. Member of the Liberal Party says "forget it". The people of Canada want the Bill regarding spousal allowance passed so that the seniors of the country will have more equity than they had under his administration.

I simply want to point out that tomorrow we will deal with the Bill relating to the Small Businesses Loans Act, and if by chance we do not reach the conclusion today of the Bill relating to the Old Age Securiuty Act amendments, then we would carry on with the consideration of that Bill after concluding the one relating to small business loans.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Government House Leader whether I understood him correctly when he said that we ought to hasten passage of the Bill dealing with the old age security improvements. Might it be his intention to put them into force before the month of September, when they are intended now to come into force, if we pass the Bill more quickly?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I appreciate the Hon. Member's question because it shows that he is following the debate. I should like to have the Bill dealt with in an expeditious fashion so that Canadians would know the effective date and we would have the legislation in place. Then people will in fact be entitled to benefits which they would not otherwise have had, were it not for the election of this Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: On the same question!

Mr. Speaker: On the same question. The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, what the House Leader of the Government has just done to me is indicative of the tyrannical attitude of the majority. We have had one day of debate on this bill. We want to improve it. We want to convince the Government that what discrimination there is, is the one being incorporated in our Canadian laws. We want to ensure—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Question! I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I know exactly what is happening. What is happening is debate on the Bill and its progression.

Mr. Gauthier: Well, he started it.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate how it started. My dilemma is that if the House business question starts being used as a time for debate on the progression of a Bill, we are introducing an entirely new procedure with regard to the business question. If the Hon. Member for Shefford has a question on House business, I will allow him to put it.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the House Leader of the Government. I want to ask him whether he would agree to widen the scope of the bill so as to extend the benefits to previously married or divorced people. If he were, we would be willing to agree to the bill immediately.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, of course, I am not the Minister, but he has said to me personally that he can hardly wait to have the Bill before committee so that we can hear the wonderful suggestions of all Members of Parliament and in fact bring forward the best Bill possible for the people of Canada.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, February 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we have resumed debate on this legislation. I must say that it was rather comical to hear the Government House Leader suggest that he would like the benefits to arrive on the doorsteps of old age pensioners much more quickly. However, he showed a distinct reluctance to change the legislation so that it could come into effect earlier. If he really wants the benefits to get to people more quickly, why not have the legislation say that it will come into effect in March? If these calls for quick action from the government side are to mean anything, then they should put something behind them.

Indeed it is a pleasure to speak in this debate. While I must say that we support the measure which the Government has brought in, it is a limited one. I want to reiterate just briefly what I said on Monday when I started my speech. When we discuss pensions in the House, it is only proper that we pay tribute to the work of those who have gone before us. I am thinking of the former Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, the Hon. Stanley Knowles, and his predecessor, J. S. Woodsworth. I want to assure Hon. Members of the House and people in the country in general that we in this Party will continue the fight for adequate pensions for seniors started by these two gentlemen.

Just as I began my remarks on Monday, it was five o'clock. Thereafter I talked with Mr. Knowles and he described to me the very severe conditions in which elderly people lived when he was a young man and began the fight for an adequate pension system in the country. From his description of conditions then, I must say that we have certainly made considerable progress as a country in providing decent pensions in retirement years. Obviously the job is not finished because large numbers of Canadians, even though they receive pensions, still live below the poverty line.

The measure before us today will extend benefits to spouses. This is welcome, particularly by those approximately 85,000 individuals who will receive them. It will be of real benefit to them, and this is why we support the measure.

At the same time it is sad that senior citizens who are experiencing the same need will not be receiving the benefits simply because they have not been married. Clearly that is a discrimination on the basis of marital status and something which we would deem to be unacceptable today. It would make eminent sense for the Government to extend these benefits not only to spouses but also to older single women who never married. This would not be a major step on behalf of the Government and it would not bankrupt the country. It probably would not even add to the deficit because these people need the money and, when they received it, they would spend it immediately. Therefore economic activity would be stimulated, and it would be to the benefit of the Government in that money would come back in the form of taxes. I would recommend most strongly that the Government give immediate consideration to extending these benefits to single women as well as to married women. It is a modest proposal but one that would eliminate discrimination on the basis of marital status which is inherent in the legislation before us.

I hope the Government gives this matter serious consideration and that by the time it passes through this House that discrimination will have been eliminated from this proposal. It is not simply incremental change or modest proposals in terms of pensions that we need. We need much more fundamental change in our pension system in order to bring about a situation in which all Canadians can enjoy adequate pensions and security in their old age. This notion is not just something I or the Members of my Party believe or something that the Members of the Liberal Party are now advocating. It is something which Members of the Government caucus have recognized. They recognize there is a need for fundamental change in pension plans in order for people to have an adequate income in their old age. They certainly recognized this when in opposition.

I want to remind the House of the remarks of the present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) when she was in opposition. It would appear that when the Hon. Member was in opposition she had a heart and now in government she has lost that heart. This is what she said in a motion that she moved on May 10, 1984:

> That this House profoundly regrets the two-year delay of the Government in bringing promised legislation to improve guaranteed income supplements for low-income single elderly Canadians, and condemns the Government for its failure to respond to the innovative proposals of the all-party Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform to expand opportunities for Canadians under age 65 to make adequate provision for income in their retirement years.

She made a few comments to support her motion which are relevant to the debate today. For example, she made the observation on May 10, 1984, while in opposition, that "there is still no sign of legislation to address the pressing needs of Canada's 600,000 elderly poor". She recognized there were 600,000 elderly people in this country living in poverty. She is now part of a Government which is taking action for only a small fraction of those 600,000 poverty stricken people, some ameliorative action for 85,000 elderly women who are in need. However, even after this action is taken, those people will continue to live below the poverty line.

She went on to describe the inaction of the Government in very descriptive words. She described the lack of action of the Government with regard to those 600,000 elderly Canadians as "a national disgrace", as an "indictment of the Government". She went on to describe the Government as "bereft of ideas, drained of decency, and unable to recognize the priorities" of the country.

It is strange to see Members of this House who less than a year ago recognized the circumstances of 600,000 elderly Canadians living in poverty and who now in government fail to take action on this priority. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands went on to say: "We know what the priorities of the Government are". She was talking about the Liberal Government. I suggest these words can apply to the present Conservative Government. She continued:

> For the people who have, throughout their lifetimes, worked for and contributed to the development of this great country, there is only a promise trotted out time and time again that some day, some time, they too will become a priority.

The circumstances and the needs of 600,000 Canadians who live in poverty were recognized and these people were given promises when the Conservative Party was in opposition, when it was seeking office and seeking power. Now that they are in government, the interests of these people are swept under the rug and they continue to be ignored. That is a sad commentary on this Government which has developed quite a reputation as a flip-flop Government, a political Party and a group in this House who in opposition would say one thing and now in government do something altogether different. If there is one thing that has characterized this Government it is the fact that what they called priorities in opposition they ignore when in office. While we need fundamental pension reform, what we have been getting from this Government is a series of questions about social programs.

We have had doubts sown across the country by the Government about the notion of universality in social programs. They recently backed away from this as it affects pensions. It is obvious they did that because they started to feel the heat of public opinion. When the public said it did not want them to fool around with their heritage or the fruit of the labours of people such as J. S. Woodsworth and the Hon. Stanley Knowles, who fought for justice for elderly Canadians, under the heat of public opinion and public pressure the Government backed away from questioning universality in pensions.

Rather than questioning the universality of social programs and pensions, the Government could have questioned the tax expenditures which the Government makes. Governments give out billions of dollars to the private sector by way of tax write-offs for various purposes. The Government should look at those tax expenditures and make a distinction between those which result in employment for people and those which have no visible impact upon the level of employment in this country. Having examined those expenditures and made the distinction, we could use the savings that we reap to buttress and increase the social programs that we need. Those saved dollars could be used to help the 600,000 Canadians in their retirement years who continue to live in poverty.

I call upon the Government to come to its senses, to remember the statements it made while in opposition and to realize that we need fundamental reform in the area of pensions. As a short-term measure, it could extend the benefits it is now proposing for people who were married to those who have never married. Why continue with this discrimination against single people? All elderly Canadians need financial support to give them real security in their retirement years. Let's cut out the discrimination and realize that we need fundamental reform in the area of pensions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Hon. Member. I know that he is aware of the situation and that he works hard for his constituents. In his speech, he said that it is the single people who are left out in this bill. He is certainly aware that there are not only 80,000 single people in Canada, but also previously married people, who for personal reasons are now separated or divorced and who will be completely excluded from this legislation. Can the Hon. Member tell us his position in this regard?

[English]

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for elaborating on the weaknesses of this legislation. Clearly, those weaknesses need to be redressed. The Government is taking some incremental, piecemeal action which, of course, deserves support because whenever we can extend benefits to those in need, we should do so and do so expeditiously. I would like to thank the Hon. Member for pointing out additional faults and gaps in the legislation to which I did not refer in my speech. I believe those gaps needed to be closed as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in today's debate on Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, I wish to express, first of all, my full support for this legislation.

The Bill embodies the policy announced in the Throne Speech on November 5 of last year, by extending the income tested spouse's allowance to widows and widowers aged sixty to sixty-four regardless of the age of their spouse at death. The objectives of this legislation have been defined, first of all, in terms of improving the financial situation of a particularly vulnerable group of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill before the House today is a very important one and is to be seen as a measure that will improve our universal system for the basic old age security pension and also as a way to encourage low-income taxpayers. The purpose of this amendment is to ensure that the Government's social policies are adapted to the constantly changing needs of our society. By tabling this Bill the Government has shown it is concerned above all about redirecting programs to make them of greater benefit to those Canadians who are most in need.

To do so, the Government is reconsidering tax exemptions which today mainly benefit the wealthier taxpayer. In the case of programs for the elderly, it was obvious that this amendment was necessary. Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that the Government has no intention of cutting benefits to low- and middle-income Canadians who are retired or are about to be. We are not only concerned that our social policy should be in line with the needs of these people or groups of people, we must also ensure that our income support programs are in line with our socio-economic objectives.

Bearing in mind the fact that the universal old age security pension is only part of the Federal Government's system of benefits and advantages provided for our senior citizens, we are fully aware that considerable improvements remain to be made to the system itself so as to provide for a better distribution of funds allocated under existing programs. Since the Government intends to consider carefully what is involved in each element of the system of benefits and advantages provided for the elderly, there is certainly no question of betraying the social commitment we made to the Canadian people several months ago.

Canadians have a three-tier pension scheme: the OAS program, the Canada Pension Plan—or the Quebec Pension Plan—and private pension plans. Since the OAS program was launched over thirty years ago, the Government has always urged Canadians to consider the basic old age security pension as a starting point on which to build their retirement income, and all our private or public retirement plans have been designed in light of that principle. That explains why most Canadians expect to get the old age security pension since they have contributed to the pension fund of others who have retired before them. We intend to make sure that people who are now planning for their retirement will also be able to rely on that source of income, like others who are now retired.

Anxious as we are to improve the benefit sharing formula which elderly Canadians now enjoy under our system, I want to say today that I fully agree with this progressive measure, Bill C-26. Mr. Speaker, I should think that most Members see nothing untoward in the purpose of this Bill to amend the Old Age Security Act. To understand the significance and scope of this amendment, one must compare the proposed and the existing formulas.

Now then, what exactly is the existing spouse's allowance program? It is a monthly allowance subject to a means test and offered to the 60-to-64 spouse of a retired individual who receives the basic old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement.

Mr. Speaker, I should point out that the allowance is geared to income, in the sense that the higher the income, the lower the allowance. A recipient of the spouse's allowance who becomes a widow or a widower is entitled to the allowance until age 65.

Under Bill C-26, eligibility for the spouse's allowance program would be extended to a category of people, mostly women, who are most in need. Under the existing provisions, as we all know, the allowance can be paid only to the spouse of a pensioner, alive or deceased, who receives or has received the guaranteed income supplement. Estimates and recommendations in that respect made by the task force on pension reform show that 85,000 Canadians should benefit from this amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity not only to express my support for this bill but also to answer the allegations make by our colleagues opposite who suggested that the bill is both discriminatory and incomplete. However, I remain convinced that, when they hear the arguments put forward during our sittings, our Liberal and NDP friends will support Bill C-26 if they sincerely want, as they have always claimed, to assist our most needy citizens.

Of course, this amendment does not go far enough. However, we should not forget that this bill is only a substantial stage in the improvement of social justice and it should be emphasized that we are taking this step during a period of economic restraint.

The cost of such amendment which is supposed to come into force in September 1985 is estimated at $190 million for the next fiscal year but it is an expenditure that we have to make even if we remain conscious of the fact that the program is only a complementary measure consistent with the comprehensive development of our social policies. Under the present circumstances, we had to accept that partial option if only for two main reasons. First and foremost, we have to give recognition to those people in the 60-to-64 age bracket who have limited financial resources, but who made a very worthwhile contribution during their more productive years by coping with the daily problems of their families.

Besides this strictly humane consideration in the Bill, which is aimed at a group of married people whose needs can best be defined as being urgent, the Bill also has a political and social connotation. The extension of programs already existing within the structure of our system, derived as they are from the Old Age Security Act, is the fulfilment of our political commitments as well as the reflection of our obligations towards the less fortunate among our fellow Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to make these few remarks today, and I take this opportunity to congratulate my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on responding to the expectations of thousands of people whose daily existence is highlighted by hardships. I commend him as well for having had the courage to take action in spite of the precarious economic context, and to propose such major amendments to the social benefit structure. Most Canadians will welcome this initiative, for they realize that those changes are long overdue. The new provisions will cushion the impact of the increase in the cost of living and, in keeping with a more equitable redistribution of social benefits, give less fortunate Canadians another chance to raise their standard of living.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have listened attentively to the fairly well written speech which was read by the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) and which, obviously, was mostly aimed at praising the government for the legislation it is about to adopt. I have no basic objection to the fact that the Hon. Member wants to support Bill C-26. He sits on the government side. However, his speech had a major flaw in that he has failed to mention this bill's major shortcoming, namely, that single, separated or divorced persons and those who are not widowed will not be eligible for these benefits. I wonder whether the Hon. Member has no such people in his riding and whether he has not been pressured by such people who feel treated as second class citizen because they are excluded from the benefits of Bill C-26.

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to my hon. colleague. First of all, my riding of Duvernay is not so poor or unorganized as all that. One is fortunate to have the privilege of representing such a riding. I want to indicate to the Hon. Member, however, that I have not had many opportunities to discuss this issue with my constituents. I shall certainly discuss it with them, and that is the reason I am interested in this bill.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that in view of the means at our disposal, it is a beginning and a step in the right direction. I indicated in my remarks that this was not yet quite enough, that this is only a beginning which we will be able to improve upon with the cooperation of all our colleagues, and I see an Hon. Member behind him who is very much interested in this issue. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, this requires money, and as soon as we have some . . . I agree that we should not penalize anybody.

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I was interested to hear the critical tone of the Hon. Member with respect to the role of the NDP on pensions. I wonder if the Hon. Member has taken enough interest in the history of his Party to know that in 1926, when the first pension was introduced, the Conservative Leader of the day, Arthur Meighen, remarked that it was a social evil and that we would all come to regret the notion of pensions and providing income for the elderly. That is the historical inheritance of his Party. It is an attitude which has not completely disappeared.

The Hon. Member acknowledged that there was more work to be done. I regret that he was not more specific. There are a number of areas in which the Government could have acted. One area which comes to mind is the improvements which could be made to the pensions for CNR and CPR pensioners. We are all aware that the Standing Committee on Transport is looking into this matter and will either have a subcommittee or the whole committee look at the question of railway pensions.

Time and time again CN pensioners have made a good case for having the status of their pension fund, and the need to be able to get more out of that fund, reviewed by the Government. CN pensioners have received support for that stand from Members on all sides of the House. The same is true of the position which was taken by the Canadian Pacific Railway Pensioners' Association. CP pensioners also need to have the status of their pensions reviewed. Many pensioners who retired 10 or 20 years ago are in bad shape with respect to the ability of their pensions being able to match the purchasing power that those pensions once enabled them to have.

I know that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) has given support to that cause in the past. I hope, now that he is on the government side, that he will have the opportunity to make representations and to get action with respect to Canadian Pacific pensioners and Canadian National pensioners. Over the years those pensioners contributed a great deal to the building of the country. Many of them are very elderly and in need. We owe it to them, through any sense of justice which we might collectively hold, to get the CPR and the CNR to loosen up the purse strings and provide those elderly pensioners with the income they deserve.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the comment which was made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). As of yesterday, I received a communication from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) which indicated that action will be taken on the railway pensioners' situation. The Minister is quite familiar with the problem. I think there have been enough studies on railway pensioners; therefore I am pressing for fast action with respect to CN and CP pensions.

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to my hon. colleague from the NDP. I have only been here for four months. I am sad that my colleagues in the Opposition always talk about the past. I was not even born in 1926. I am surprised that his Party criticizes the Government as it does. I believe the NDP should be the first to join us in something positive. The NDP should not be concerned with 1926. I am concerned about 1985 and 1986, because I too have old people in my constituency.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I can repeat what I said earlier, namely that it is a beginning. It is certainly not enough. I find this initiative interesting and I am sure we could do more if we had more money, but this first step represents progress, and I am ready to defend my party. I am proud of being here to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) has some talent in the field of energy, but he did not impress us today in the area of social legislation. He had a good speech prepared by the Library, but I would like to ask him one question.

● (1550)

I would like to know, and this is the question that I ask all Conservative Members of Parliament, how, in all conscience, the Prime Minister could decide that a widow or widower aged between 60 and 64 with a very low income could be facing more hardship than someone else in the same situation who is only separated.

I understand that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) could make a compromise to please everyone where the metric system is concerned, but this bill deals with human beings. I am convinced that this legislation affects people even in the constituency of Duvernay as it concerns a total of 80,000 people, including 30,000 in Quebec. In all conscience, how can the Hon. Member say that he will help only half of them this year? Would it not have been better instead since he is an energy expert, to take the increase of three cents a litre on the price of gasoline and use it to help these 80,000 people? Would this not have been better?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce).

Mr. Della Noce: I will speak briefly, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would like to thank my colleague for his kind words. It is a fact that I worked for 20 years in the energy area trying to make a positive contribution. I would now like to reassure my colleague that my conscience is perhaps more at peace than his own. I can also tell him that the last increase in the price of energy is not 3 cents but only 1.1 cent. If you want to go back to 1942, as my colleague did, it is another matter but if you refer to the tax last year, it is also a different thing. You have been here for a very long time and you may have more experience than I do on the matter, while I have more in the energy sector, but we are now dealing with Bill C-26. What did you do in the past to improve the program? We are trying to improve it and you had the opportunity to state your views. Perhaps if I had been here for 8 or 10 years, gas would not now be that expensive in Quebec.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments has now expired. We will resume debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with this opportunity to contribute to the debate on Bill C-26, whose purpose is to extend the spouse's allowance by providing a similar allowance for widows and widowers. We agree that widows and widowers in this country between the ages of sixty and sixty-five, many of whom are in need, certainly deserve and need Government assistance. That is why our Party is in agreement on the principle of the Bill and will support a measure to have this allowance paid to widows and widowers in this country. However, Mr. Speaker, although the Bill as such is a good piece of legislation, it is incomplete. As other Hon. Members mentioned earlier, there are many Canadians in the same age group who are just as much in need and are facing problems similar to those faced by widows and widowers, and I am referring to people who are single, separated or divorced or have any status other than that of widow or widower. They will be getting nothing. In fact, the numbers involved are quite considerable. Bill C-26 will benefit about 85,000 widows and widowers in this country. However, there are 80,000 Canadians who will receive absolutely nothing as a result of this measure. That is why we on this side of the House say it is a discriminatory measure.

I advise all Members of this House, and especially those on the Government side who are supporting this Bill, to listen very carefully to their constituents. What are people talking about in homes for senior citizens, at senior citizens' clubs and meetings of the AQDR? What is being discussed around the bridge table? One woman says to her friend: You are lucky to be a widow because on September 1, you are going to get an allowance. Why is the Government doing this? My income is less than yours, and just because I am single, I will not get the allowance. The elderly do not understand. They do not consider that their marital status should make a difference. To us, this measure is extremely discriminatory because it only helps half of the people who should benefit from it. Even the Government Members who support this Bill agree this is true. The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) who spoke earlier said in reply to a question by one of our Members: It is a good Bill but it is not enough. It certainly is not enough if we are going to neglect part of the population in favour of another.

For instance, why are so many elderly women in this country living below the poverty level, in utter poverty? Because in most cases, these people on low incomes depend on welfare. Hon. Members are aware that welfare benefits provide less money than old age security benefits or the spouse's allowance. This means that all senior citizens between sixty and sixty-five who are not receiving allowances and are living on welfare are looking forward to the day they turn sixty-five, when they will be eligible for a federal pension.

What about the philosophy of the Progressive Conservative Party which the Prime Minister has expounded so many times in this House and which, if we are to go by his words, is to help those who are in the greatest need? Can we identify in our society people who are in greater need than those people on low incomes, between the ages of sixty and sixty-five, most of whom are women? If the Government is serious when the Prime Minister says that his priority is to help those who are most in need, the Government would extend these allowances to cover, without exception, Canadians who are single, separated or divorced, as well as those who are widowed. On the Government side they will say it is a matter of money. Of course, the whole Cabinet and the whole Conservative Party have been mesmerized by the sharp knife being wielded by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in an orgy of cutbacks.

The Hon. Member for Duvernay said that it would already cost $190 million to make the allowance available to widows and widowers. Clearly, the question we are entitled to ask is this: If we want to include those who are single, separated, divorced and so on, where are we going to find the money? Well, Mr. Speaker, I can suggest one way of finding the money that is fast and fair in my view.

When the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) recently introduced his white paper adorned with a blue cover, to redistribute the money that goes into family allowances, child tax credits and exemptions, he started with a fiscal attack on middle-income citizens, withdrawing the equivalent of $571 million in benefits and redistributing only $161 million to the people most in need, to the families in need. The Opposition criticized this action saying that it was giving a meagre 48 cents a day to those really in need. Something must be kept in mind however, namely that out of the $571 million which the Minister will be taking from the pockets of Canadians, of average workers, only $161 million will go to the neediest. Where then is the balance going? Well, the federal Government is saving $80 million and the Provinces are getting $330 million.

Those $410 million are more than enough to extend benefits to those people who are single, separated or divorced. Why give $330 million to the Provinces, which are mostly run by the Conservative Party? In my view, a much better use would be made of that money if it were directed to senior citizens who are now subjected to crass discrimination by Bill C-26. So let not the Progressive Conservative Party pretend they do not have the money needed to extend the allowance to people who are not currently covered by the legislation.

In fact, since the Minister is about to launch his $571 million fiscal attack on middle-income workers, he should redistribute the benefits he will reap to those who need them, including our senior citizens, rather than funnel most of the funds to his Conservative friends in the provincial governments.

• (1600)

Mr. Speaker, eventually we will be referring Bill C-26 to committee. We will do so because we want associations representing senior citizens, such as the AQDR, to be able to appear before the committee and explain to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) how discriminatory his legislation is because it only gives benefits to half of the people who deserve them.

We are certainly not impressed by the threats and claims being made by the Government House Leader who says that we are trying to delay the implementation of this measure. In any case, the Government does not expect the cheques to reach senior citizens before September 1. In fact, we think that is far too late, and we will certainly have finished talking about the subject well before September 1.

As soon as we manage to make Hon. Members on the other side of the House understand that half of the people who should benefit from this measure will not, one of the first questions I would ask is: Why wait until September? This measure could be made effective at an earlier date.

We want the Bill to go to committee because we intend to propose changes. However, considering the changes we wish to see, namely that single, separated or divorced Canadians will also be eligible for the allowance, it will be difficult to propose amendments of this kind, in committee, to Bill C-26 as it is now, with a royal recommendation that only covers those who are widowed. We will not be able to propose an amendment to include others who are not covered by the measure because this would require a change in the recommendation.

I think the Government House Leader . . . the Minister of National Health and Welfare should consider this aspect and change the Bill here in the House by providing a new royal recommendation, so that the Bill can be referred to committee in a form that is equitable and non-discriminatory.

Mr. Speaker, I warn the Government that we on this side of the House, and especially the Liberal Members, are looking into ways to ensure, by proposing amendments or through any other form of parliamentary action, that this Bill is changed, because although we are in favour of giving allowances to widows and widowers, we do not agree that people who are separated, single or divorced should be excluded. I warn the Government that this Bill will not be given an easy passage through Parliament unless the discriminatory aspects it contains are removed and this is done before the Bill goes to committee. Those were my comments, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments.

[English]

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the passionate plea that the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) made in his argument. It must have been very discouraging for him to make it in the name of the Liberal Party when no member of his Party was present until one came in during the last few minutes of his speech. Nonetheless, he made his speech with enthusiasm but I had to wonder why the enthusiasm was so long delayed.

He kept asking: Why is this benefit not extended to people who have suffered marriage breakdown or separation and living on their own? I suppose the answer could be, for the same reason his Government could not provide that benefit during the long years it was in office. The Canada Pension Plan has been in existence since the mid-1960s. It existed during years of government surpluses. Now we have a deficit. Yet during all the years of prosperity his Government enjoyed, it did not once expand this benefit to cover the people for whom he is now the self-appointed advocate.

We are doing our best as a Government, Mr. Speaker, during a time of great deficits. We could have a very strong case to make for not doing anything at all in view of the financial needs of the country. In spite of that, this Government is taking to heart the needs and claims of people in their sixties who require this kind of social assistance. Instead of ending his speech with the threat or warning he gave, I wish that, on behalf of those people, he might have ended with an assurance of support for this Bill.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed funny that the Hon. Member would have the nerve to rise in this House and accuse the Liberal Government of having done nothing for the elderly in this country. The seniors of this country know better than that. They know that successive Liberal Governments passed legislation for their benefit and improved on that legislation year after year. What he is telling the seniors of this country in his remarks is simply that we are not going to do it because the Liberals did not do it. If that is his answer to the people of this country, let it stand on the record.

As far as we are concerned, we are doing our job in the Opposition. We are not on that side any more. If I was on that side I would plead for the seniors of this country, the same as I am doing here. But I am doing it from the place the electors of this country have given me.

The Conservatives accused us during the whole campaign of not doing right for years and now the Member is saying they are going to do just like the Liberals and not help the singles, divorced, the separated and so on. Let that be his stand, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, the fact is we are not taking a stand-pat policy. This Bill is taking us further, even further than the financial situation might justify if we wanted to take our stand there. We are going beyond those limits and taking this country into a social program where it could have been years ago if the Liberals had had that social consciousness when they had the opportunity.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the remarks of the Hon. Member who has just spoken, I would like to make a comment and ask a question to my colleague. Obviously, he does not know anything about social issues. Among other things, he asked why the Liberal Government did not do anything.

I will enlighten the Hon. Member and tell him why the previous Liberal Government did not do anything for people living alone and aged 60 to 64. It is simply because, between 1980 and 1984, people aged 65 or more and living alone were below the poverty line and, unlike the Progressive Conservatives, the Liberals did not see any point in taking half the benefits from poor people to give them to other poor Canadians so that they would all be equally poor. The first thing to do would have been to use the guaranteed income supplement to increase the income of people aged 65—people living alone or couples. I would remind him that the Government raised the guaranteed income supplement by $35 in 1980, $17.50 for each spouse, and in the last budget there was another $50 monthly increase in the guaranteed income supplement and the spouse's allowance for people living alone. I might also point out that, contrary to what the Hon. Member has just said, the Liberal Government promised during the election campaign that all needy individuals—married, couples or people living alone—would be eligible at age 64. That was a commitment.

It so happens that the Bill has been introduced by the Progressive Conservatives. The Hon. Member might honestly answer this question: Why would a widow suffer more hardships than a single person with a similar income? Why that person? Some 165,000 Canadians are in the same situation, their standards are identical, so why make a distinction? As far as the money is concerned, would he not agree that instead of spending $36 million to change the colour of the uniforms of our—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), but he knows very well that his questions ought to be directed to the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), not to the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse). I take this opportunity to draw this to your attention, and give you a chance to "redirect" your questions if you wish. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I understood that the question was for me because I made the main speech. To reply to my colleague from Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), I can obviously not speak for the Progressive Conservatives and tell the Hon. Member why they took such action. They tried to improve a program introduced by the previous Liberal Government. The spouse allowance is basically a Liberal initiative introduced by the previous administration. We are not blaming the Members opposite for taking a step in the right direction. The reason for our criticism is that they are not taking the second necessary step.

When introducing social legislation in this House, the Liberal Party of Canada never proposed discriminatory amendments and this is what is happening now. What we find objectionable in this bill, and this is why we are trying to improve it, is its discriminatory nature. Otherwise, we believe of course in giving money to widows and widowers, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Still on questions and comments? The Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin).

• (1610)

Mr. Marin: Mr. Speaker, I found it interesting and enjoyable to listen to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault). These comments were all the more interesting since his speech seemed to deal more with the facts than with the circumstances. Naturally, like everyone else in this House, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques is aware of the problems facing Canadian men and women between the ages of 60 and 65. He suggested, which I found interesting, a means to take what he called the second step. It would seem that this was not considered to be the best option by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). However, it would be interesting to know whether or not when it is impossible to take two steps at the same time, it would be better to stand still. I believe that following the studies and initial consultations of the Conservative Government it was decided that it would be better to take a first step and do something for widows and widowers between 60 and 65. Why that particular group? I could perhaps simply reply with a rhetorical question. It is perhaps because it was in the interests of justice to provide widows and widowers with some of the social benefits earned by their spouses during their lifetime.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments are now over. The Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay).

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): The Chair is very kind, and I am most grateful.

Mr. Speaker, it is of course with very great pleasure that I join previous Hon. Members in support of the proposal in Bill C-26 dealing with the spouse's allowance.

First I would like to remind the House that this is not really a new piece of legislation, but rather an amendment to an existing statute. Clearly, the Bill implements the policy outlined in the Throne Speech of November 5, 1984, by extending the spouse's allowance to all low-income widowers and widows aged 60 to 64, irrespective of the age at which their spouses deceased. Of course this proposal is aimed at improving the financial situation of a group of Canadian men and women who are specially vulnerable. It is estimated, as was said earlier, that some 85,000 people will benefit from it or, it is important to stress it, something like 72,000 widows and 13,000 widowers. Also, this group represents some 61 per cent of all widows and widowers in that age group.

For the fiscal year 1985-86, that measure will entail extra expenditures totalling $190 million, and for 1986-87, that is a full fiscal year, totalling $350 million. Most widows and widowers close to 65 years of age and not entitled to old age security pensions are in urgent need. This is a tremendous step forward, an improvement—and I stress the word—in the help provided to people nearing retirement age.

In the speeches that have been made today on this Bill, we have heard the Official Opposition yelling at what they chose to call discrimination. Mr. Speaker, clearly as the Government Party we have many lessons to learn. But for the Official Liberal Opposition to try to teach us lessons in that way, is going a bit too far! Talking about discrimination, apparently they are referring to the meaning in their dictionary. And to that same extent, not being in power but in opposition would also amount to discrimination. Or again, how else can one explain that the Act we are amending with this proposal needs to be amended? Was there discrimination before?

I would remind you that it was in 1979, under a Conservative Government, that the spouse's allowance program was amended in order that all widows in need should keep on getting the allowance until age 65. Mr. Speaker, they had every opportunity to get rid of that "discrimination" they are referring to. They are bringing the debate down to a level that suits them well, a very low one. Either wilfully or by ignorance, they make no difference with the concept of discrimination in the legal sense of the term. A distinction must be made between a right and a service. Otherwise, discrimination can be seen everywhere.

Mr. Speaker, it is all too easy to refer to particular cases encountered in our ridings and say that so-and-so, being separated or divorced, is not eligible for the spouse allowance. It is all too easy to underestimate the scope of the legislation and raise a special problem or the case of a citizen who will not be eligible. What we should consider, Mr. Speaker, is the bill in its entirety. As mentioned by other speakers, a move in the direction suggested by the opposition would represent a $1.5 billion cost in a single year.

I would remind the Liberal party that in February last year, their Minister of Finance realized that the treasury was empty. He announced that, from last October, if I am not mistaken, the sales tax would be increased by 1 per cent. Already in February, the government knew that their coffers were empty. At the beginning of the election campaign, they realized they were in trouble—I will refrain from referring to their shameless waste—that they were going to be beaten. The Canadians, who witnessed the whole thing, literally evicted the former government.

Mr. Speaker, we are proposing a series of social and economic measures, because it is fine to set up the best social structure in the world but without a sound economic system, short term measures will not go far enough. A moment ago, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) said that we were providing funds to the provinces. We said from the start, and it can be confirmed now that we are in power, that we would go through a period of consultation.

• (1620)

As I have expressed or stated on previous occasions, Mr. Speaker, there is no magic formula to any system. There are, on the other hand, favorable attitudes and resolves. In short, what is needed or what we think is needed is to convince the various levels of government to reach a consensus and pull together in the same direction with all interested parties being involved, so that we can truly improve the economic framework and, ultimately, update our social legislation accordingly.

I would be delighted to deal today with a bill that would include all the people who are currently excluded from this bill, but we must realize that this laudable objective must be supported by reality; in view of the situation we have inherited, we have chosen to act in a reasonable way. There is something which becomes clear when we return to our own ridings: the Canadian people are aware that this Government is trying to act in a responsible way, because of the manner in which we administer the country and the direction we set for all Canadian men and women. I have had opportunities and I will have more opportunities to meet with senior citizens and discuss with them the legislation from which they will benefit or not benefit. When we explain to them how things stand in a calm way, not in the vociferous way which the opposition seems to prefer, when we take the time to examine the situation and explain the development and progress, first of the situation we have inherited, and second the steps we have taken to improve this situation, the people are all for us, they congratulate us, and one can sense a feeling of hope which we will not disappoint.

In this context, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) who, in spite of very difficult circumstances and within a very short time, has managed to put an end to the old discrimination imposed by the previous government. We are gradually opening the gate, and from the legal point of view, this is no longer a form of discrimination, but rather a breakthrough toward short and middle term improvements which we aim to bring to full achievement.

I am pleased, therefore, to support the provisions of this Bill and I am sure that my colleagues will do likewise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Marin): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has the floor.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the Hon. Member who just spoke, and I must say that I miss the former member for Lotbinière, as do the people in his riding, I am sure, because he was not here simply to sell the Government's wares. He was here to truly defend the interests of his constitutents.

Mr. Speaker, the comments I have just heard . . . He said he removed one discrimination and created two others, Mr. Speaker. This is true Tory policy. I know that in Quebec, all those Members are not true Tories, because some of them happened to be last-minute Conservatives. But not the Hon. Member who just spoke. He is a Conservative to the core. He could easily live in the West with all those Conservative Members. I would like the Hon. Member to tell us when he goes to his constituency office, when he goes calling on senior citizens' clubs, how he is going to respond when someone says to him: "I have worked all my life, I have raised children, I have paid taxes like everyone else, but it so happened that I have had to separate." We know there are programs and initiatives for the benefit of battered wives. That someone will tell him: "Should I have stayed on and kept being battered in order to qualify? How come you, the Member of Parliament for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay), did not stand up and fight for me? You said you were taking a short step forward. Then how come the Minister of Justice said: "We are going to increase the judges' salaries, they only earn $100,000?" What will the Hon. Member for Lotbinière answer to that?

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say this, if I may: I have never heard the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) strongly object to his personal salary increase effective as of January 1st of this year. Never! He has not uttered a word in that regard.

About his question concerning separated people, as I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, obviously we would prefer to extend this allowance to them as well, and we are working towards that. However, circumstances are such that we have to consider the situation as it comes. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that he and his colleagues have had every opportunity in the past, having been in power not just for six months but for a good many years, to amend the Old Age Security Act and eliminate all those discriminatory provisions he has been referring to. That benefit was already extended to the widow under 65 years of age, providing her husband had been receiving it. However others did not get it. So that was discriminatory, according to his own way of thinking. And speaking about women who are separated from their husbands as opposed to widows, you know full well, Mr. Speaker, that short of knowing the future or being instrumental in that decision, widowhood is a state that occurs unexpectedly, without warning. It is an act of God which is beyond one's control. Things are altogether different with those who are divorced or separated. I do not know what the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie is referring to, whether he is personally in this situation or friends of his are, but one thing is sure, our ultimate goal is to improve the situation of those people. But right now, we must choose our priorities. Considering the limited financial resources available to us at this time as a result of the situation we have inherited, we believe that those widows and widowers should benefit without delay from this spousal allowance, even before those who are separated or divorced from their spouses.

Mr. Malépart: The Hon. Member is entirely mistaken when he says that I never discussed my salary. When I was a Member of the Quebec National Assembly in 1973, there was a debate on a salary increase, and, my colleague could bear me out, when the vote was held I recall that the six P.Q. Members at that time acted like hypocrites in voting against, only to pocket the increase afterwards. What did I do? I took the salary increase cheque voted under Robert Bourassa and gave it to community groups in my riding. That answers his first question.

Mr. Speaker, I find it shocking to hear him say a widow is more sorrowful. He does not know anything about this legislation. He says that one becomes a widow overnight. Mr. Speaker, there are widowed men and women who have been in that situation for ten years and will become entitled to the benefit; this will not come as a surprise to them. As for divorced people, divorce is no more surprising, people are not unhappy. As for single people—Come on, stop joking! Since when should we draft a social legislation on the basis that "this particular group of people is more distressed"? That's going back to the 1880s!

I would like to know what the Hon. Member thinks, and whether he still maintains that the woman who has been a widow for the past ten years is in for a surprise on September 1.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, even if it means repeating myself, again, it has nothing to do with the number of years that one has been a widow or a widower. I simply said that one becomes a widower or a widow through the whims of fate, it is a factual matter. It it not the same for people who are separated or divorced, even though again we are aware of their status and we are concerned about them. When the Minister introduced or tabled the Bill, he actually said that. We want to correct this situation eventually but at present, we give priority to widows and widowers who need it. As a Government, we have set that priority just as the people have set the priority for the Progressive Conservative Party to lead the country and for the Liberals to be in opposition.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to tell the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay) that I would gladly do without the 2 or 3 per cent raise we received in January if he is ready and willing to vote against that bill.

Second, I totally agree with the Hon. Member that this legislation could be wonderful in theory if it were fair and equitable. But in its present form, it is perfectly scandalous and totally discriminatory. I believe the Hon. Member is a lawyer. Although I do not have any figures, he will probably be able to demonstrate that separated or divorced women are probably in a worse financial situation than most of the widows. What should you answer to these separated or divorced women when they ask you why they are not eligible?

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, you have been kind enough to recognize me again. I will make the best of it although it is not enough to repeat oneself to get through to the opposition.

I would remind the Hon. Member that even before this Bill is adopted, our legislation contains a provision granting the spouse allowance to widows under 65 years of age whose husband received the old age pension. In a way, it is a discriminatory measure according to either the French or the English definition of the word, but it should be considered in the context of its social and legal definition. My hon. friend seems to be a bit confused, and it is quite normal since some Hon. Members are boasting and claiming that they are ready to give up their 2 per cent. But they have been getting it for a few months, two months to be exact, but as soon as we push them a bit, they suddenly agree to give it up. But it is too late and too little!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should first understand what is the currently available spouse allowance.

This allowance is not meant for the widowed, otherwise we would have no need to introduce a bill. He is a lawyer and I am a "people's lawyer". So, I imagine that I have a better understanding of the world. At the present time spouse allowances are being paid when one spouse gets the Old Age Security Pension and the Guaranteed Income Supplement and the other, between 60 and 64, is eligible. We are the ones who introduced the spouse allowance and it was not meant for the widowed persons. Moreover when he speaks of the Opposition's role, let me tell him that without the work of the Opposition Members, both Liberal and NDP, and of certain groups, the Tories would have put an end to the universality of old age pensions.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in my years as a Member of Parliament I have not very often spoken on the question of pensions because until the election of 1984 my friend and colleague, the former Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, was the one Member among all Members of Parliament, and certainly of our Party, who spoke most often on this issue. He put the case for improving the lot of senior citizens, of those who were retired, if not every day, certainly it was every week.

I am pleased to participate in this debate. The pension plan was begun in Canada in 1926 because of the efforts of the then labour Members of Parliament from the constituencies of Winnipeg North Centre, then represented by the Hon. Stanley Knowles, and Winnipeg North, then represented by Mr. Heaps. After the election in 1926, no Party had a majority, so those two Members wrote to the then Leader of the Conservative Party, Mr. Meighen, and the then Leader of the Liberal Party, Mr. King. They said that they would support whoever of them promised to bring in a pension plan for retired people. Mr. King responded to that proposal and brought in a pension plan. It was $20 per month for people aged 70, with a means test. It was a very small beginning, but it was the beginning.

The pensions of retired people were very low for many years. It took continuous agitation by members of my Party and its predecessor, the CCF, and the threat of elections to get Governments to improve pensions. In the 1960s we urged the then Liberal Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, to increase pensions to $75 per month. Mr. Pearson was loathe to do it because he said that the country could not afford it. From my experience in Parliament I do not think we ever made a more important improvement in the lives of people than when we indexed pensions during the minority Government of 1972-74.

Mr. Dick: It was a Conservative initiative.

Mr. Orlikow: I hear the Hon. Member. It was a Liberal minority Government and the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Dick: Bob Stanfield suggested it first.

Mr. Orlikow: It was NDP Members of Parliament who told the then Liberal Government that unless it brought in the indexation of pensions, it would be defeated. Indexing pensions or tying them to cost of living increases has been the salvation of pensioners. Without it pensioners would still be waiting from year to year or would still be running hat in hand to whichever Party formed the Government to obtain the improvements they needed.

We have indicated quite clearly that we will support the Bill, although it meets only a small part of the needs of older citizens. It extends the benefits now provided to elderly Canadians to widows and widowers in the age group of 60 years to 65 years. That is an improvement. We support it. As was indicated by members of my Party who spoke earlier, this has been advocated by us for years and it was ignored and rejected by previous Liberal Governments. I find it passing strange that Liberal Members have risen during this debate to ask the Conservatives why they are only taking the first step and not taking the second step to cover people between the ages of 60 and 65 who were never married or are separated. The Liberals would not even take the first step when they formed the Government. Now they are saying to the Conservative Government that it should take the second step. We are where we have always been. We say that the people between the ages of 60 and 65 need to be covered by these programs, not just those who are widowed and widowers, but all those in that age group, including those who were never married or who are separated.

The problems of older women include poverty, loneliness, poor health and poor housing. Increasing the pension as we are doing only meets a small part of the problems and difficulties of older Canadians. The Canadian Council on Social Development estimated that the poverty line for a single person in 1982 was $7,925 a year. All those whose income was below that live in poverty.

We know that 600,000 older Canadians receive income below the poverty line and that more than half of them have incomes at least 25 per cent below that. Women are much more likely to be included in that group than men. Very often women have no pension at all, no insurance and no income except welfare because they have only worked in their homes raising their families.

I am sure I am not the only Member of Parliament who received letters on this. Approximately two years ago I received a letter from a woman in my constituency. I want to place part of that letter on the record. I quote:

> I am over 60 and a widow. We did not pay into the pension fund as we did not earn much. My husband was sick for quite some time. He died one month before his sixty-fifth birthday in 1975. I was told we have to draw the line somewhere. I happen to be on the wrong side of the line.

She could not get the assistance we felt she was then entitled to because the Liberals did not believe the country could afford it. We get the same argument today from the Conservative Government, saying "We cannot afford now to give this benefit we are giving to widows and widowers to people who were never married or who are separated". Women nearly always worked at jobs in the lowest paying sectors of society. Almost always the employers provided no pension plan. Our pension system still leaves a great deal to be desired. We in Canada like to think that we are generous, that our country does the most for our seniors citizens. Nothing could be further from the truth. We are way behind most countries in western Europe. They do much more for their pensioners than we do.

Less than half of all working Canadians are covered by private pension plans. Only 38 per cent of full-time employed women are covered by such plans. If you look at our present pension system, you see that while the old age security, guaranteed income supplement, and the Canada Pension Plan are indexed and tied to the cost of living, private pension plans are not indexed. People retire, the cost of living goes up sharply and no adjustment is made. Most private pension plans are not vested, so people who change jobs lose most of the benefits they should have earned.

Private pension plans do not help women who earn less and work fewer years than men. Only one-third of those who receive Canada Pension Plan benefits are women and their benefits are about 40 per cent less than the benefits received by men. That is why we are so concerned about this legislation and why we say it does not go far enough.

We have been told again and again by Conservative Members of Parliament including the Minister, that this is the first step, that this is all we can afford now. That is not what Conservative Members of Parliament were saying before the election. They did not say they would move very slowly. I wish to put on record a few of the promises made by Conservative Members of Parliament. The Toronto Star for August 16, 1984, just a few months ago, quoted the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as saying:

—many elderly women live in poverty "and it is the obligation of the state that we provide more than just subsistence against poverty . . . and that's why this matter . . . should be addressed in the very highest priority at the next session of Parliament."

Now we have this legislation. It improves the lot of widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 65. Let us compare what it does with what the Prime Minister was saying last August. After this legislation is passed, most people who will benefit by it, and I do not question that they will benefit, will still be living in poverty.

Let us look at a speech made by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, now Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), on May 10, 1984, when she moved a motion of non-confidence in the then Liberal Government dealing with the plight of elderly Canadians. I wish to read a few excerpts from that very eloquent speech in which she put the case for helping seniors in this country. She painted a picture of the plight of our older citizens much better than I can do. I will put on record a few sentences from the speech. I quote:

The fact that we have 600,000 elderly Canadians living in poverty in a country as rich and bountiful as Canada, in a society supposedly as compassionate and humane as ours, is a national disgrace.

It was a national disgrace in 1984 under a Liberal Government and it is a national disgrace in 1985 under a Conservative Government. The only thing that has changed is that the Conservative Members who were then on the opposition side of this House have moved to the other side and are now the Government. She further states:

For the people who have, throughout their lifetimes, worked for and contributed to the development of this great country, there is only a promise trotted out time and time again that some day, some time, they too will become a priority.

Those words were true when she described the attitude of the then Liberal Government. Those words are still true under this Conservative Government. Since bringing forward this legislation, the Conservatives have been saying time and again that they are taking this small step and making this improvement now, but some day, some time when the money is available and the economy is better, they will move another step or two. It reminds me of an old World War I song which said "You will have pie in the sky when you die". People will have pie in the sky if they wait for the Conservatives to do much for the pensioners. She then said, apropos the then Liberal Government:

We condemn it not only for its failure to introduce legislation that would meet the current needs of today's elderly poor, but also for its failure to bring about long overdue pension reform of the whole system so that we can ensure that the poverty of today will not be meted out to those who will be senior citizens in 10, 20 or 30 years' time. We must begin to come to grips with this issue and reverse what is happening.

● (1650)

Those were very, very eloquent words. The Minister was enunciating a very important principle.

The fact that the Minister has moved from the opposition benches to the government benches has not lessened the importance and truth of what she said less than a year ago. The position of our senior citizens is as bad now as it was then. As she said then, 600,000 of them are living in poverty. I would ask how many fewer will be living in poverty as a result of this relatively minor change we are debating today.

We will support this proposal as we have, over the years, supported any proposal which would bring the slightest degree of improvement to those retired Canadians. We say, as the Minister said a year ago, that senior citizens have worked and contributed to the building up of this country. They have contributed toward building one of the most prosperous countries in the world. They contributed whether they worked on a job or in the home helping to raise their families. They made their contributions and are entitled in their retirement years to live in comfort and dignity. Too many of them do not live that way. We say that while we will support this Bill, it simply does not go far enough.

Let me conclude by indicating some of the measures which we think are required if we are to provide for retired citizens the kind of life to which we believe they are entitled. Community care facilities like adult day centres, home care and community health centres should be financed and expanded as practical alternatives to the expensive institutional care we have now. Housing for older Canadians is still far from satisfactory. Despite the efforts of the Government and of non-profit organizations, thousands of older citizens still live in single rooms. We need to increase accessibility to non-profit housing for older Canadians. Last, and this will not solve all of the problems of senior citizens, we need to amend and improve the Old Age Security Act. The amount paid to a retired citizen must be raised so that no retired Canadian will live in poverty as so many of them do now. We need to increase the amount paid to pensioners and the pension must be fully indexed. Until that is done, members of this Party will not be satisfied with the proposals made by the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great appreciation to the speech of the Hon. Member and especially to the historical discourse he gave at the beginning of his speech. I certainly join with him in acknowledging the significant contributions made to the history of pensions in Canada by the late James Woodsworth and by Mr. Stanley Knowles. However, to be complete and accurate, as I am sure the Hon. Member would want us to be, he should have acknowledged at least two other significant contributions. One of them was the leadership given by the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. In 1957, after having been elected partly on his commitment to increase old age pensions to a reasonable amount, he carried forward expeditiously the fulfilment of that promise, raising pensions from the inadequate $46 with which the Liberal Government had been content to $70 a month. That may not seem to be much to us now but in terms of 1957 dollars, it was an impressive amount.

I would also want history to include the very important contribution of the Hon. Robert Stanfield. In the election campaign of 1972, it was Bob Stanfield who introduced to Canada the idea of indexing old age pensions so that old age pensioners would not be the victims of inflation and so that the Government would not make a profit on inflation. During the campaign, that idea was derided by the Liberal Government of the time but—

Mr. Blaikie: Not the NDP.

Mr. Stackhouse: Maybe not, but the idea was introduced and pioneered not by the NDP but by the Progressive Conservative Party and its Leader. The idea received such approval and support from the media and the Progressive Conservative Party came so close to winning that election and forming the Government that the Liberal Party, clinging to office by the skin of its teeth, was shamed into introducing a proposal that it had derided during the election campaign. That was a very important addition to social improvement in Canada and it ought to be included in any record of such improvement.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in the few moments I took to put on the record the parts played by two Members of Parliament from the part of Winnipeg which I represent, Mr. Woodsworth and Mr. Heaps, in getting our pension system started, I of course did not deal with all the people who worked for improving pensions over the years. I would never suggest for a moment that ours was the only Party and that NDP Members were the only people who advocated improvements in pensions. What I did say and what I will maintain is that we were the first and we have been consistent in that support.

Of course Mr. Diefenbaker improved the pension system. I wish that there were Progressive Conservatives like Mr. Diefenbaker in the present Government. I do not see many of them. What I see are Conservatives but I see very few if any progressives. As a matter of fact, I tried to indicate the difference between Progressive Conservative Members when they are in opposition and Progressive Conservative Members when they form the Government by putting on the record the speech made by the present Minister of Employment and Immigration when she was a member of the Opposition and comparing it with the actions of the present Government of which she forms a part.

There were Liberals like Mr. Paul Martin and Senator Croll who were great advocates of pensions. Of course, when one looks at the history of the pension system, one should give credit to all those people. There were many outside of Parliament who contributed as well. One of the most honourable and important roles in the fight for better pensions over the years as well as today was and is played by the trade unions of the country which have been among the foremost advocates of improving the pension system.

I am prepared to give credit where credit is due. I would say to the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) that if and when the present Government brings in the kind of improvements it promised when it was in opposition, I will be very quick to support it and give it credit for that. However, I am afraid that given the state of the economy, in which I do not see any real improvements in the next few years, we will hear the usual excuses from the Conservative Government that we used to hear from the Liberal Government, which is that the economy is just not good enough to allow the Government to make those improvements.

Yes, we have difficulties. Yes, we have a deficit. Although this is not the time to go into it in great detail, I would say that there were over 8,000 Canadians who had incomes of over $50,000 a year who did not pay a penny in income tax. There are corporations which have hundreds of millions of dollars in deferred corporate taxes, taxes which some of them have admitted they will never pay. I do not agree with those Conservatives who have suggested that they know that what the Government is proposing does not do everything but that it is a first step and the Government cannot afford to do more. I say to the Hon. Member for Scarborough West that if the Government wanted to do more, it could do more. If it taxed the people who would be paying the taxes, the money would be there.

• (1700)

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). The serious problems which senior citizens in the country face are important. In my riding there is a serious problem which pertains to the Minister of State for Science and Technology

(Mr. Siddon). In my area many senior citizens have a problem with income, but they also have a problem maintaining meaningful involvement in the community. I wonder if the previous speaker could provide me with some guidance in this matter.

Three senior Cabinet Ministers come from the Province of British Columbia—the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and, of course, the Minister of State for Science and Technology. It is unfortunate that many senior citizens' groups which have been working on major projects have not been able to meet with or get a response from the Ministers who represent British Columbia. Those Ministers are not only responsible for their own specific Ministries, they are also responsible for representing the people of British Columbia and its senior citizens in Cabinet. I wonder if the previous speaker could provide me with some guidance on how we might be able to persuade Conservatives, particularly the three Ministers I mentioned, to pay attention to the general needs of senior citizens, and what might be done to encourage the Government to respond to their requests for meetings. Could the Hon. Member comment on the integrity of such a Party and its concerns about the senior citizens of the country, in particular those who live in the riding of Comox-Powell River?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wish I could give my hon. colleague some advice, but I do not have any more information than he does as to why Conservative Cabinet Ministers will not meet with concerned citizens—seniors or any other group. I find it passing strange that the Cabinet Ministers in the Government who speak so much of consultation will not consult with the people in their respective provinces who have problems which they want to discuss.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments has expired. I will now recognize the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson) on debate.

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, as I rise in the House today to make my maiden speech, I feel both pride and humility at the responsibility which was entrusted to me in representing the citizens of London East. At the same time I would like to thank the voters for the support and confidence which they showed on September 4. At this time I would like to reaffirm my commitment to upholding their interests in Parliament. It is a goal which I pursue with confidence, a confidence that can only come from being a member of a decisive, strong and open Government.

I would also like to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on the sensitivity and competence with which he is carrying out his responsibilities. I commend him for wasting no time in presenting this Bill which is of such importance to women and older citizens, two groups who have not always enjoyed credit and opportunity commensurate with their contributions to society.

It is very satisfying for me personally, in the first debate in which I am taking an active part, that the subject is one of such immediate concern to senior citizens. London cannot adequately be described without reference to a vitality which reaches all sectors of the community. The City of London is the southwestern Ontario regional centre for the three pillars of our economy: services, retailing and manufacturing. It has many small businesses which, as we all know, form the heart of our economy. London's educational and cultural resources rival any city which is twice its size. Its ethnic and religious organizations give a rich and varied character to the city. One exceptional quality of the city which comes to mind today is its broad array of facilities which address the needs of senior citizens. We are privileged to have several senior citizens' residences in the riding, as well as Parkwood Veterans' Hospital, and many service clubs and organizations which work closely with the senior community. They give London an outstanding record and bring credit to the people of London.

In the interests of social justice and, even more important, on account of its significance to a great many citizens of London, Ontario, I welcome the opportunity to speak today on a subject which badly requires reform.

Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, cannot be faulted on either its logic or its substance; both are consistent and well thought out. This proposal will extend the spouse's allowance to widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 who are trying to live on a very low income. It will make no difference when the applicant's spouse died. The legislation will assist approximately 85,000 widowed persons, which represents over 60 per cent of the people in that age bracket who have suffered the loss of their spouse.

Those 85,000 people, in all likelihood, are having an unfortunate amount of difficulty trying to make ends meet. To relieve this burden from so many older people, Bill C-26 allows the Government to keep a very specific promise which it made to senior citizens during the election campaign. More important, through passing this legislation, we can demonstrate to the Canadian people the seriousness of our commitment to a comprehensive system of financial assistance to help the disadvantaged. I feel strongly that Bill C-26 is a very effective piece of legislation. I am glad to see that all Parties of the House have recognize that.

Some opposition Members have expressed faint criticisms regarding the Bill, in terms of what it does not do. I would like to spend time addressing those concerns. Legislation which is drawn up carefully and responsibly has very precise limits. There are both logical and natural boundaries to the effects of the policy instruments which the Government chooses in any particular circumstance. That is certainly true in the case of Bill C-26.

Both the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) have tried to seize moral high ground by pointing out that the Bill does not address the problems of older people because it does not tackle the issue of high unemployment due to technological and economic readjustment. I share their concern for what is one of the largest social issues which faces industrialized nations. It is my sincere hope that the Government can address, in a comprehensive way, the increasingly severe economic hardships which are experienced by the older people in the labour force. However, to criticize the Bill for not solving this distinct, larger and very much more complicated issue, represents a failure to recognize that the point of Bill C-26 is to provide a solution for one very serious and specific problem. As only a few members of the Opposition have suggested in their remarks, this piece of legislation can only be judged in terms of how effectively it relates to its clearly stated goal. To do otherwise is irresponsible and does a great disservice to the thousands of needy Canadians who will benefit directly from the implementation of this amendment.

In the remainder of my remarks I shall attempt to describe the natural scope of the legislation and explain why Bill C-26 effectively targets financial assistance to one particular group which has a legitimate need.

The Government is trying to adjust the spouse's allowance provision of the Old Age Security Act. Opposition Parties should examine that fairly obvious point more closely. The purpose of the Bill is to amend or correct imperfections in an existing piece of legislation. Since the part of the existing legislation which is affected is the section that establishes the spouse's allowance, it is logical and consistent for us to address our remarks to the difficulties faced by a particular group in society, namely spouses. Clearly, divorced and single people are not spouses, although they have problems similar to those experienced by widows. However, enough differences remain to justify the decision of the Government to try to reduce the particular difficulties encountered by widows and widowers of advancing years.

• (1710)

If members of the other Parties choose to continue using the very negative sounding word "discrimination" to describe this legislation, I will be disappointed. This would reveal an insensitivity to the unique position which the spouse has in the marriage and in society. Our society is changing very quickly, Mr. Speaker, for better or for worse. The role of the family and of the parents is no longer as clear as it once was. This point applies particularly to mothers. In my riding of London East over the past five years, the number of men in the workforce has decreased marginally while the number of working mothers has jumped by well over 10 per cent. There is no alternative for this Government but to recognize that it must adapt its legislation and its policies to quickly changing circumstances.

I rise today with a concern that must not be kept from a debate on a subject like this. It is a message that, in a slightly disoriented society, is not always remembered. It concerns the important contributions of the family throughout Canada's history and the significance it holds today. It is particularly relevant to say this in the debate on Bill C-26 because it is a Bill which implicitly recognizes that many men and women today are members of families which are organized along traditional lines. In this circumstance, one spouse, usually the wife, is very often totally dependent upon the husband in terms of her economic well-being. I praise Bill C-26 because, in a sense, it protects this traditional arrangement which has been the building block of every stable civilization. I do not hesitate in supporting this Bill that, while allowing people to conduct themselves as they choose, removes one of the misfortunes that can result from a commitment to the family unit.

Among the elderly women in our society, the group that is the most dependent and vulnerable surely consists of those who have committed themselves to staying in the home to raise a family. It is only because of the self-sacrifice to their families that many of these women may not have a marketable vocation with which they can support themselves. Today, through Bill C-26, we have the chance to extend some relief to the most needy of this group, those bearing the burden of widowhood. To delay this decision because other poverty-stricken individuals are not also helped is at best a case of misplaced good intentions.

I would now like to talk briefly on the subject of another matter that comes to mind in consideration of this Bill. Whenever we look at government legislation, particularly the implementation or expansion of a social program, it is natural to evaluate it from a cost benefit point of view. Hon. Members of the Liberal and NDP Parties must have some concern that due consideration be given to efficiency and effectiveness in the dispensation of government money. To expect good management and financial prudence from a Government, a charity, a business or a household is not unusual; it goes without saying. Even so, financial responsibility seems to have been forgotten in Canada for the last 20 years. We see from the mandate of the new Government that people have finally got tired of listening to political Parties which would solve all social problems by throwing money at them, while fostering dependence on the state and plunging it into debt.

Our new Government has committed itself to financial responsibility. You would think, Mr. Speaker, this would be an easy task with so much room for improvement. However, it is easier said than done when you are carrying nearly a $200 billion debt on your back. I have to say, therefore, that it is not easy extending the spouse's allowance to some 85,000 widows and widowers. It is not easy but in this case it must be done. This is representative of our Government's firm commitment to the Canadian tradition of looking after the less fortunate. As a Government, we will never overlook the need for initiatives such as expanding the spouse's allowance plan.

As the House supports this measure, it must also recognize and support the context in which it is put forth. The Government can propose legislation like this, and in the future it will continue to do so because we are confident that the resources will be there when we really need them. This can only be a reality through responsible Government. Control over government spending does not mean spending $35 billion more than revenues allow. Controlled spending means reducing the deficit.

I hope that everyone in this House who supports the need to expand the spouse's allowance will also support the measures the Government is taking to generate real economic growth and jobs, and to return honesty and good management to government. When the next generation, our children, are running the Government, they will be able to do a lot more for their senior citizens or unemployed youth if we leave them a debt of $30 billion and not $300 billion. Now is the time to work toward this goal.

I would like to say in conclusion that I am indeed very happy that we will very quickly be able to provide some badly needed assistance to elderly people since it appears that we have the support of all Parties on this Bill.

In the course of this debate, some well deserved attention has been given to the needs of the older part of our population. Bill C-26 is a good and substantial start on the Government's intention to address the host of problems of this nature which confronts society. I am optimistic and confident that a number of other issues will be dealt with by this House in such a constructive and expedient manner. Hon. Members of all Parties have used the occasion of this debate to draw attention to the serious questions that must be dealt with to ensure that our seniors enjoy full and equal participation in society. I will take this opportunity publicly to urge my caucus to continue its consideration of measures designed to assist older members of the labour force who, because of changing technologies and demands for skills in the market, often find themselves dislocated from employment. These people are legitimately concerned that they will not find some way to contribute to society and earn a living from the skills they have relied on for so many years.

Finally, I will say that I support this Bill with great enthusiasm because of the recognition it gives to our collective obligation to widows and widowers. It is good that so many people undergoing hardship at this time will have their problems alleviated, and I am happy that this Bill has allowed the Government to recognize those who have sacrificed so much in contributing to their marriages and families. Over the next few months and years of this session it will become obvious that the tradition of this Government is one of responsible stewardship, with a conscience for those who are truly disadvantaged.

May I also say, Mr. Speaker, that we should not look to Government alone when addressing the needs of those who are in financial need. Let each of us ask ourselves what we can do to help a disadvantaged brother. Are we not our brother's keeper? I hope that all Hon. Members of the House will join me in supporting this very thoughtful, compassionate and practical piece of legislation.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on that triumph of piety over precision and ask him whether or not he holds the same view about throwing money at problems when it comes to our economic problems. I notice that the Hon. Member, like many other Conservatives I have had the opportunity to listen to over the years, is always very quick to criticize the throwing of money at social problems. In fact, when I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a question in the House the other day about the corporate tax sector, he said, "We don't believe we can just throw money at the environment". But we never hear from Conservatives about the habit which has developed in this country over the last ten or 20 years, or even before that, of throwing money at the corporate sector in order to create jobs with no guarantees that those jobs will be created. There are no performance guarantees, no strings attached. We do not see any indication from the Government at this point that it is prepared to stop throwing that kind of money at problems. There are no strong indications there will be tax reforms so that we will stop throwing money at the rich in the form of reduced tax rates and enabling some of the wealthy in this country not to pay any taxes at all.

Is the Hon. Member against that kind of throwing money at problems? If he is, will he give us a commitment, as a colleague and an Hon. Member of the House of Commons, that he will go after his Government to stop that kind of throwing of money at problems, which, I might say, amounts to a heck of a lot more money than we are talking about when we are talking about pension reform?

Mr. Jepson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) for his question. As one member of the Conservative Government, I want to see responsible stewardship with accountability to all Members of the House for the Government's programs and spending. In addressing the allocation of funds to areas of legitimate need, I have observed over the years that the NDP is all "spend", but I do not see any emphasis on finding where the dollars are to come from.

I happen to be an individual who has a great deal of confidence in the free enterprise system. I believe our corporate citizens make a great contribution toward the wealth and stability of our country. I have every confidence that the business community, if properly and responsibly encouraged, can be and is the only vehicle for the growth needed to make dollars available for the programs so desperately needed. I hope that answers the question.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is obviously practising for the day when he will be in Cabinet because he did not answer the question at all. I asked him whether or not he was against throwing money at the wealthy in the form of tax concessions and loopholes. He says the NDP is in favour of spending. Well, it seems to me that over the years we have developed a great way of spending that is not always recognized as spending. It is called tax expenditures. The last time we had an accounting of tax expenditures in this country was in 1979. To its credit, the Progessive Conservative Government of the day produced a tax expenditure account. Those expenditures were in the neighbourhood of some $32 billion. At that time the yearly deficit was, I believe, around $14 billion. There we were in the position of having an annual deficit of $14 billion while not collecting some $32 billion. That is a form of spending.

What I want to hear from the Member, if he is truly concerned about government spending, is why he does not stand in his place and reject the kind of hidden spending that goes on every time the Government allows taxes to be deferred, allows tax loopholes, shelters, write-offs and depreciation allowances and all the other ways in which the corporate sector in this country has the nerve to be on welfare while criticizing ordinary Canadians who happen to be the beneficiaries of social programs at which the Hon. Member does not want to throw money.

Mr. Jepson: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member, as a member of the NDP, that he does not have to worry about ever having to prepare for a Cabinet post.

I hear this same political rhetoric from the NDP on corporate tax rip-offs—

Mr. Blaikie: Get used to it because you are going to hear a hell of a lot more of it.

Mr. Jepson: —and all the figures about which they rant and rave and which they throw about. However, I am not yet convinced, Mr. Speaker. It is easy to cite figures.

Mr. Blaikie: Answer the question.

Mr. Jepson: If the Hon. Member would like to discuss this with me on a private basis—

Mr. Blaikie: It is a public issue. Answer the question.

Mr. Jepson: No, you are throwing figures at me—

Mr. Blaikie: Your figures.

Mr. Jepson: —and it is very easy to bounce figures around when you are making speeches. You show me, my friend, and I will be glad to sit down. But I suggest that if you want to do it in a public forum such as this, your motives are transparent. You are trying to score political points rather than making legitimate and constructive criticism for the best interests of Canadians.

Mr. Blaikie: I can't help it if you are not prepared.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, in his speech, the Hon. Member said that he was happy and pleased that his government had decided to help people in need. I would like him to explain to me why there are in Canada 165,000 people who share the same need for help, the same age, who live alone, in an apartment, who have the same income . . . and I shall give him figures for Quebec; I do not have the figures for the other provinces.

Some people between 60 and 64 now receive $427 a month, whether they are widows, widowers, separated or divorced. This is an allowance that safeguards human dignity. How can the Hon. Member boast that he is pleased, that he helps people in need, that he is going to help half of them on the basis of their civil status. Is it not a move backward to the time when the help given was a handout and the dignity of the individual was not taken into account? Can the Hon. Member explain that when people have the same income, when they are in the same situation?

[English]

Mr. Jepson: The Hon. Member reminds me of someone walking up to someone else and saying: "Isn't it a beautiful day?" The answer you get back from the Liberals is, "Yes, but it must be raining somewhere else". No matter what positive initiatives the Government takes, it seems the natural response from the Liberals is that it is not enough. Well, on September 4 the people said it is enough and they gave us a very decisive mandate. They saw a Government that was not willing to show responsible stewardship, a Government that indiscriminately threw money at everything it could. This was not in the best interests of the people but it was in their own best interests.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this Government will not take that posture. This is a Government that will do what it can within its means and, hopefully, it will achieve a financial position in the very near future that will allow more revenues to go to those many people who are still suffering economic hardships, those people we would all like to help. As this Bill indicates, we are covering a very specific sector and we are pleased to be able to do this. But we are just not going to throw money around indiscriminately in the hope that when we go to the well, it will not be dry. The well is dry and it is time we started filling it up again in order to allow us those opportunities in the very near future to meet needs far greater than those that exist today.

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to condemn harshly all divorced and separated men and women. He said they are not spouses. Later on, he praised the united family, and rightly so, but it seems to me, from his speech, that the Hon. Member believes these people are second class citizens. I would appreciate his comments on that particular aspect of his speech.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is now over.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak today to a Bill I think is very important and which should not be considered along party lines. I think it is one of those Bills that all Members of this House should examine with a great deal of humanity and sensitivity, in order to produce a measure that is fair and equitable and respects the dignity of the individual.

If we look at the Bill's definition, what exactly do we have now in terms of security programs for senior citizens? There is the old age security pension, which is universal. We have the guaranteed income supplement for people in need, and something was done for couples when one spouse was sixty-five and eligible for old age security pension and guaranteed income supplement and the other spouse, being between the ages of sixty and sixty-five, would normally not be eligible for any benefits. The age criterion discriminated against the person living alone. The Liberal Government introduced the spouse's allowance. The Conservative Government has now decided to extend the spouse's allowance, part of our old age security programs, to any person in need and living alone, between the ages of sixty and sixty-four. I can only applaud this. However, the Government decided, and perhaps people who know more about the subject could check this—I think it is the first time in the history of this country that a Government has added a criterion based on marital status, a criterion that raises the question whether we should help people because the spouse died ten years ago, and she was married, or whether we should penalize people who are separated or people who have decided not to get married at all.

• (1730)

Mr. Speaker, the program had three criteria which were acceptable: age, living alone, and income. Now they are adding the widow and widower criteria, in other words: marital status. At the present time, to be eligible for the spouse's allowance, no marriage certificate is necessary. It is not necessary to have had a civil wedding. The law is humane. The two parties must sign a form and acknowledge that they had been living together for a year. That is it. The law does not intrude in people's private lives. But the amendment that the government wants to bring in might give rise to a class struggle. In my opinion, from a human point of view, some thought should be given to this matter. I do not want to put the blame on the government and suggest that it acted in bad faith. I know that it is a technicality and that any well-meaning person in a hurry is liable to forget the technical aspect and cause discrimination as in the present case.

Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, I think that this bill concerns all members and should be above political partisanship. In its present form, it will have an impact on other social measures, because it may be found in the future, regardless of the government in power, that according to statistics there are 100,000 aged married couples, while there is only enough money available to help half of them. It will be decided, since there are fewer women and more men, to help men first, then women. I suggest that we are on shaky grounds with that kind of criterion, because we have Conservatives in office now, but tomorrow it might be the NDP or the Liberals, and they might be tempted . . . We ought to think it over before adopting that criterion. I think we should be realistic.

Mr. Speaker, this Government has been bragging about consultation. Fine, I have nothing against consultation. But it now has an opportunity to show whether it consults only to dictate its own views, or if this consultation process is just another way of lending an ear to the big shots. Let us admit for a moment that the Conservative Members and the Minister think that the NDP or the Liberals do that for political motives. Let us suppose that such is the case. I have here letters from various organizations in Quebec, Prince Edward Island, Sault Ste. Marie in Ontario, organizations concerned with elderly people and women. To this day, all those organizations are asking and urging the Government to make any person living alone eligible for the spouse's allowance.

I also have a copy of a letter, and I think that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) bragged about being anxious to meet with various groups, he would rather wait before making any changes in other social programs about which we will be talking later on, family allowances and old age security pensions in general. I have a letter dated October 4th that was sent to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), on behalf of the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare, by Mrs. Yvonne Raymond. This letter was sent after October 4th, and that committee was set up to advise the Minister, October 4th is later than September 4. On page 12, it says:

> The Council recommends that the spouse's allowance be replaced by benefits determined following a means test and equivalent to the combined guaranteed income supplement and the old age security pension, for all low-income men and women, aged 60 to 64, whatever their marital status. That last detail is important: the spouse's allowance is extented to certain low-income spouses and certain widows and widowers aged 60 to 64, but not to many other Canadians in the same age group who are also in need, and this is creating difficulties. The Conservative Party's election promise to extend the spouse's allowance to all the 60,000 low-income widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 is a major step forward, but it will not help the 190,000 single men and women in the same age group who also need financial help. Of course we know that some reforms are too costly to be implemented overnight, but we are asking you to give them your special attention in coming years as they represent a fundamental part of an overall pension reform program.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a telex from the Quebec organization which fights for the rights of pre-retired and retired people, an organization with branches in all of our ridings and whose mission it is to fight for the rights of senior citizens. I think all Hon. Members will agree that senior citizens are not the noisiest people, or the most vocal protesters, and that they are not the group of citizens in our society that has the best structures needed to make himself heard, as opposed to the workers' unions struggling against industry, as opposed to the farmers who are a lot better organized and in a better position to come here to do what we call lobbying and get their points across.

I think everyone will admit that senior citizens need the parliamentary support of their representatives in this place.

Mr. Speaker, if we had wanted to play politics and make political gain, we would have let the Government pass this legislation and we would have blamed it for four years. The debate began long before the Government introduced its legislation because we knew quite well that, when the Government had made up its mind and decided to freeze certain funds, it would be impossible to make any changes. We in the Liberal Party said: This is not a partisan debate; it deals with human issues and we shall start immediately to try to prevent the Government from doing this. As I said earlier, the various groups also advised the Government against such action before it introduced the bill.

What does this represent in monetary terms? We hear that it means a lot of money. Granted. If we look at what the Government is paying out to these 85,000 widows and widowers, we find a figure of $325 million, but what the Government is not saying is that there are now people between the ages of 60 and 64 who receive social welfare benefits which is also a social program, but whose costs are shared equally. As far as the benefits to these 85,000 people are concerned, the federal Government is saving $20 million and the provinces another $20 million.

There are still 80,000 people who need our assistance. If the bill is not amended, 80,000 people in Canada will be forgotten, which means about 30,000 in Quebec. This is a lot of people. It would cost $300 million to provide assistance to these 80,000 people. As far as the benefits to these 80,000 people are concerned, the federal Government is saving $18 million and the provincial Governments another $18 million. What is the income of these people? I shall take Quebec as an example. What is the present income of these people? They are not wealthy. We are not talking about extending the universal pension benefits.

They are now receiving social welfare benefits of $427 a month. What would they be getting tomorrow in concrete terms if we made them eligible for those benefits? Would we make them rich overnight? Would they be sitting pretty, as some Conservative members would like us to believe, if we granted them those benefits of $533 a month, or $106 more than they are getting? It would mean a lot to these people although they would still live below the poverty line. I am not asking the government . . . If I wanted to play politics, I would tell the government to grant this allowance to all those in need between 60 and 64 years of age, whether they live alone or with their spouse. In his speech, on Monday, the Minister quoted the figure of $1.5 billion. That is how much it would cost to give benefits to single people and couples. I do not want to score political points with that issue any more than any other member either New Democrat or Liberal. The government has made up its mind and we respect it. After all that party was elected on September 4 and it decided to help the people who live alone.

The Liberals had promised during the campaign to help all those in need, by first reducing eligibility age to 64. It is matter of choice and I am not going to question it. I respect the decision the Conservative have made. What we do not accept, however, is that you should stop half way, and this is where the discrimination lies. The strange thing about it is that not so long ago, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) tabled some amendments to various Bills so that they would be in accordance with the Charter of Rights which was passed in this House to prevent discrimination. This is the reason why I still hope that the Minister will reverse his decision or consult with his Department's officials to get a clear picture of the situation. Quite frankly I do not understand why he should insist on a discriminatory approach Mr. Speaker, in monetary terms what Liberals Members were asking for would not have amounted to that much money. I have met privately with some Conservative Members and I am convinced they would agree, but I am not expecting them to come forward and admit it here. My party has been in power before and I know that it is easier to make one's mark at caucus meetings than by delivering a speech in the House. Now the Conservatives are in power, their speeches reflect the Ministry's wishes. Some Conservative Members, in fact a good proportion of them, are worried about this legislation and would like the Government to reconsider. We are only short about $200,000,000 or $250,000,000 not billions of dollars. I could be partisan and say: what is 36 millions? I believe that is more or less what Canadians said about changing the color of military uniforms; we do not need long consultations, everybody would agree to transferring that and 36 millions would be found easily.

During the campaign, I believe all leaders had promised to levy a minimum tax on people making $50,000 or more, who pay no tax thanks to tax shelters. $200 million could be netted and that would settle the matter.

I, for one, am convinced that if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) wants to look into . . . I am convinced that the Minister of National Health and Social Welfare (Mr. Epp) would like that. But I believe that the Prime Minister should be sensitized to it because he will have to make the decisions. During the debate on universality who decided to flip-flop? The Prime Minister. I believe he alone can change that legislation. If he does not want to be remembered in future as the man of injustice, he will have to reflect on that, to reconsider his position and then he will certainly find those $200 million.

The Canadian Government could have reduced its advertising budget by $40 million. I think that every Canadian and every member of this House could examine the budget and make cuts . . . In my opinion, it is a humanitarian question. I could play politics and name the members who said: "What were the Liberals doing for older people when they were in power?" It is quite easy. If you want to know, you only have to refer to the blue book tabled by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on programs for children and senior citizens. Look at the series of dates and years and put names beside. You will eventually find a Tory measure.

I congratulate the present Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. Crombie) who, with respect to the spouse allowance, did right a wrong even if a Liberal government was involved. But I admired that minister who was not like his colleague, unless this one changes his mind. Indeed, when the bill was before the committee, we reminded him that some people would not be eligible unless his proposal was made retroactive. The minister did not try to hide behind the statement of the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). And he did not pretend either that the government had no money. He said that we were right, that he would try to do something about it. And when he returned, he had won his case. But he was a minister as dedicated as Mrs. Bégin. I do not think anybody in Canada could question the honesty and the work done by Mrs. Bégin.

But the then Minister of National Health, who is now Minister of Indian Affairs, had taken seriously his role as spokeman and advocate of the rights and needs of middle and low-income citizens. Without exception, he would side with senior citizens, with families and children, and he would defend the health system. But, unfortunately, the present Minister of Health, unlike all his predecessors, is only a spokesman for the Minister of Finance. That is not his job. The Minister of Finance and the executioner at Treasury Board can manage by themselves. Within the Cabinet, we need someone who is concerned, someone with guts. If the Minister of Health cannot play that role, he should change jobs with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, because his colleague could do the job. I think he will make his mark.

I see the Parliamentary Secretary. I trust her. I think she is a kind person, who knows life, who has political experience, who knows her riding and I am confident, I am convinced, that she will try to do her best to persuade the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to come up with a solution, not givaways but an honourable solution. As I said, it should be remembered that in each of our ridings, when the legislation . . . After all, there is no urgency, we do not have to pass this legislation tomorrow because, anyway, it will not become effective until the 1st of September. So, why pass it right away? People will not have more money. It is only on the 1st of September that they will get anything. Is it to silence people that we are trying to pass this bill so quickly? We Liberals say no. We will not let the bill pass unheeded.

I think it is important that each and every Hon. Member think it over. Over the holidays and weekends, we will return to our ridings; perhaps it would be important to raise the issue with our constituents. Let us forget the financing factor. I am sure that if we look carefully into the expenditures of all departments, we can find the money to behave in a humane manner.

Remember that if we allow this bill to pass without change, an elderly women may visit your riding office and say: "I am 62. Being on social welfare, I do not live below the poverty line, but under the distress line. I have raised a number of children and I meet all the requirements. Yet, when I went to the Old Age Security office, my application was turned down." You will ask: "How is it possible?". And she will say: "Well, you see, I separated from my husband a number of years ago". She will feel that the House is penalizing her once again. Perhaps she will feel guilty for not putting up with her husband who was beating her. We are trying to assess what it is worth in dollars and cents. Is a widow more deserving than a single or separated woman? I think there are Hon. Members representing rural ridings . . . How many people here have had to support dependent children—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the 20-minute period is now over. Questions or comments! The Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay) has the floor.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the last words of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who was referring to a potential cause for divorce. I would like him to tell us whether it is widespread, whether most divorces and separations come about as a result of the kind of situation he referred to. I would also like him to explain why during his last term, from 1980 to 1984, when he was in power . . . the Government did not improve the situation of the widow who received a spouse allowance provided her husband had previously received the Old Age Security Pension. That being, according to his definitions, discriminatory, why did the Government not then extend the application of this provision in order to do what he is suggesting today?

• (1750)

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, he is asking me: How many persons? I am not the one . . . I am not an expert nor a lawyer, but I have the figures from the Department. There are 80,000 separated and divorced people in Canada, 30,000 in Quebec. So, I do not need to know whether the woman who is separated deserves more than the single one. I think it is inhuman, and I am even humiliated to be forced to debate the question in these terms. I think it would be preferable to say that we will help the persons who are on their own. They have the priority, although there are couples as well who are not a lot richer, but I understand that the government cannot find $1500 million. I think that we have to be realistic and say that this applies to all persons on their own, whatever their status. Is there going to be a police investigation? What you don't know is that a divorced person will not be eligible, but a separated person will become eligible when the spouse dies. Have you thought about all the problems caused by this? Have you thought about how it will be applied? Have you considered the human dimension?

The second question was: Why was it not done before? I will state again for the Hon. Member the reasons I have given earlier: In 1984, we fought to have the Minister of Finance grant funds to increase the guaranteed income supplement for people 65 and over living alone, because it was under the poverty line by $70. Unlike the Hon. Member who looks like a true Progressive Conservative, we were not in favour of keeping people poor and of taking the money to make other people poor. You remind me of the review, on the subject of family allowances. Take the money from poor people and give it to other people. It is like your $1 billion . . . The Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) boasted that he had a $1 billion for job creation. He cut $4 million from projects which created jobs and he makes $1 billion from that and says: What do you think of my $1 billion? Well, it does not make sense.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) for his eloquent speech in favour of a class of citizens who are extremely poor. I understand he made a vast operation of consultation on that subject. I would like to know whether in those consultations he met one person or one group, that is in favour of the bill under review.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, in answer to my hon. colleague, I can tell him I did meet . . . In the Province of Quebec, we have three federations, three organizations dealing with older citizens, representing thousands of people. They are FADOQ, AQDR and the Forum des citoyens du troisième âge. I met with these groups during the Christmas recess. There is no doubt these three organizations are opposed to any discrimination. I really cannot understand . . . if a journalist asks a Member of this House "Are you in favour of discrimination?", I do not think any Member, assuming he is not stupid, will answer "Yes". These three groups have asked questions. I mentioned earlier a telegram sent by one of them, but the other two groups as well made representations to the Prime Minister.

I think Members should visit groups of older citizens and meet with them. We are talking of 80,000 this year, but some people are going to turn 60 next year and will suffer the same discrimination because it will not end this year.

[English]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a brief question to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). Will he vote against the Bill or for it?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member probably does not know my style. At 12, I went on strike as an altar boy. I am 46 now. You surely remember that in those days it was unheard of, but I won. I was getting 5 cents a mass, but I immediately got the quarter I wanted, and I was kept on—I learned something then. I am not fighting for the sake of glory, I never do. I got through the worst Conservative landslide in my riding. I was not fighting for votes, but I had something on my mind. Whether or not my party was going to win the election was not the main issue for me. The issue was that I wanted to fight to avoid discrimination against 80,000 Canadians. I call upon all Hon. Members, whatever their party, to join in that fight. If they do, nothing can stop us!

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act. Like other members of my Party, I have no intention of holding up the legislation because it provides some relief for one small group of senior citizens who are not covered by previous legislation. It extends spousal benefits to low income widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 65. It is important to emphasize, as my colleagues have done, that the Bill does nothing for people who were never married or for people who are divorced. In fact, it does nothing for couples between the ages of 60 and 65, neither of whom has reached the age of 65. It illustrates illogical discrimination on the basis of marital status and is indicative of the patchwork approach of the Government toward pension reform. It really follows what the last Government did. It is a patchwork approach rather than a comprehensive one.

I should like to refer to some of the history of our pension system. When they were first introduced in 1926, they provided for a pension of $20 per month for seniors over the age of 70, with a very strict means test. It was not much, but I was more than those people had before. We are proud of the founder of our Party, J. S. Woodsworth, in securing that for senior citizens of Canada. Through his efforts and the efforts of his successors, Stanley Knowles and others within the CCF and the NDP, as well as the efforts of other Parties, as has been pointed out, improvements have been made since then. The means test was abolished in 1952. During the sixties the age was gradually reduced from 70 to 65. I remember that my father was in the cross-over period, and I think he finally received the pension when he was 67. He was very thankful to get it. Later we introduced a partial means test for spousal allowance for those aged 60 to 65. Now we are extending that, as I pointed out, to widows and widowers who can pass an income test. This is well and good, but it does not go far enough.

The Government missed a golden opportunity to bring in the kind of comprehensive pension reform for which the Conservative Party called when it was in opposition last spring. Last May the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) introduced a motion of non-confidence in the Liberal Government. She did well to do so. She condemned the Government for its failure to deal adequately with the real needs of Canada's seniors and for not bringing in a comprehensive program.

I should like to read the following few lines from what she said at that time:

> Is it any wonder, Sir, that today we condemn the Government? We condemn it not only for its failure to introduce legislation that would meet the current needs of today's elderly poor, but also for its failure to bring about long overdue pension reform of the whole system so that we can ensure that the poverty of today will not be meted out to those who will be senior citizens in 10, 20 or 30 years' time. We must begin to come to grips with this issue and reverse what is happening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. André Bissonnette moved, for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, that Bill C-23, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Mr. Bissonnette: Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour for me to table in the House today, on second reading, on behalf of the new Progressive Conservative Government, Bill C-23, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act. Hon. Members will not be surprised that one of the first steps taken by this Government at the beginning of a new year should be to table an extension to this legislation.

In 1961, the Small Businesses Loans Act was passed for the first time under the Government led by the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. Hon. Members will therefore note that it was a Progressive Conservative Government that initiated this action to protect the interests of small businesses in Canada.

The legislation is a clear example of a policy aimed at establishing a favourable climate for the generation and growth of small businesses in Canada, a vital sector of our economy too often neglected by the previous Government.

Mr. Speaker, this Government intends to enable small business to play its role as one of the key factors of economic growth and job creation. The Government is firmly resolved to support small businesses and to do so through consultation, not confrontation, by providing assistance and support instead of raising barriers, and by restoring hope to those who had lost confidence in the future.

Canadians expect their Government to lead the way towards economic renewal. This Bill is one step, and an important one, in this national process, because it will help small businesses participate in our economic recovery.

In April 1983, Parliament provided for a two-year extension of the SBLA, the Small Businesses Loans Act, setting the lending ceiling at $1.5 billion. Unfortunately, as a result of the rapid and sustained rate of increase in the number of applications under the Act during the past year, the ceiling was reached at the beginning of January, two months before the previous extension was due. This means that unless the ceiling is raised immediately, the Government will have to stop approving loans. The lending institutions have been informed of the new approach where lending ceilings are concerned and of the Government's intention to table as soon as possible a Bill that will raise the lending ceiling for the current period as well as extend the legislation for a subsequent period.

I would therefore ask Hon. Members to show their co-operation and make an effort to have this Bill passed as soon as possible. The legislation before the House will make it possible to raise the present lending ceiling by $300 million, thus bringing it up to $1.8 billion, from $1.5 billion. Thus financial intermediaries will be able to provide loans under the Act until March 31, 1985, the date on which this lending period expires. Furthermore, the Bill provides that the lending period will be extended by five years, starting on April 1, 1985 and ending March 31, 1990.

This Government is engaged in a process aimed at creating a favourable climate for the generation of new businesses. The new lending period which is to extend over an unprecedented five years will give entrepreneurs and lenders greater stability for planning purposes, in line with the Government's new approach to providing for this country's economic renewal.

The period of time covered by the new extension clearly demonstrates this Government's commitment to help small businesses. It will also mean a considerable reduction in the departmental and parliamentary resources that would otherwise be involved if the Act were extended for several shorter periods. The lending ceiling for the next period will be set initially at $1 billion. However, it will be changed in accordance with the Appropriations Act.

Consequently, Parliament will still carefully review the loan ceiling throughout the estimates preparation process. Instead of trying to forecast the total loans over a five-year period, this amendment will provide the Government with more leeway in fixing the ceiling because, under the program, loan rates fluctuate along with the vagaries of the economic situation. Henceforth lenders and borrowers will no longer be uncertain about the loan ceiling.

The existing legislation provides that eligibility under this program is restricted to businesses whose annual sales are less than $1.5 million. The Bill contains an amendment aimed at raising the eligibility limit to $2 million. This amendment is our response to requests from lenders and interest groups that have taken up the cause of small businesses. The eligibility limit has remained unchanged since 1977 and the increase I am proposing today will partly offset the impact of inflation since that time. The $2 million limit will also keep the definition of small business more in line with the one used by Statistics Canada and the small business secretariat. The amendment will therefore make it easier to reconcile the statistical profile of businesses which take advantage of the Small Businesses Loans Act program with the basic data used by Statistics Canada and the small business secretariat; thus we will obtain a more accurate statistical analysis of that sector.

According to the existing legislation, a borrower may apply for loans whose overall amount must not exceed $100,000 at any time. Consideration was given to a higher limit, but since the average loan in 1984 was only $28,888, such an initiative does not seem to be justified for the time being. However, an exemption concerning that limit is provided under the Bill should a group of borrowers decide to amalgamate. If at least two businesses with outstanding loans under the Act opt for amalgamation and their aggregate loans are over the $100,000 limit, a new clause stipulates that, in such a case, the Minister will not reject any request for repayment by arguing that total loans outstanding under the Act exceed the $100,000 limit, which would be the case of a single borrower.

The amendment also provides that those amalgamated businesses will again be eligible for additional loans under the existing program as soon as the total of outstanding loans drops below $100,000, with the understanding, of course, that the annual sales of the amalgamated business are not more than $2 million and that it does not contravene the other provisions of the Act. This legislative amendment will eliminate an anomaly in the existing program.

Businesses which have received loan assistance and expanded through amalgamation are often small businesses on their way to becoming medium-sized or large companies. This Government is committed to promote the expansion of small businesses and, thanks to the proposed amendment, such growing businesses will no longer be penalized.

With a view to explaining the latest amendments featured in this Bill, Mr. Speaker, I should like to describe briefly the various loan activities since the Small Businesses Loans Act became law. Before 1978, borrowers could ask for an interest rate which was set twice a year and which was often lower than the prime rate.

In 1977, all loans totalled some $96 million, while all claims paid by the government to financial institutions because of losses incurred following defaults totalled $600,000. In 1978, the formula for determining the interest rates lenders were allowed to charge was changed from a fixed rate to that of the prime rate plus 1 per cent. Following the application of this new formula, the number of loans made available under the Small Businesses Loans Act increased tremendously, for it made it more financially interesting for banks and lenders to participate in this program. The actual loans made available increased from $96 million in 1977 to $180 million in 1978. Following this amendment, the claims paid by the government also increased tremendously. In fact, they more than doubled in one year to reach $1.4 million.

Since then, both loans and claims have been on the increase, so that some $900 million were made available in 1984 under this program. The government received that year claims totalling $43 million. Moreover, even if the program was cancelled now, we would still have to compensate lenders in the months and years ahead for losses incurred due to defaults in the past few years. The greatest flaw of the Small Businesses Loans Act, in its current form, is that the government assumes full and complete responsibility for the losses thus incurred. The government is satisfied with the way financial institutions have administered the program, but the tremendous increase in loans as well as good sense seem to dictate that lenders should assume part of the risk they are willing to take. Lenders have an edge now because they are being paid interests of 1 per cent over the prime rate on these nearly risk-free loans and participate in a program which is a precious marketing vehicle.

Originally, the program had been established as an incentive for chartered banks to offer term loans. Here is why. In 1961, chartered banks did not have the power or authority to lend money on mortgages or against the various instruments of today. Because lenders are now competitive enough in this area, they should naturally be willing to assume part of the risk. Accordingly, the bill which I introduced today provides for the sharing of losses between the government and various lenders and will apply naturally only to loans granted after April 1, 1985. It suggests a 90-10 government-lender loss-sharing ratio.

Our aim in drafting this bill was to establish an equitable and fair loss-sharing ratio which would not jeopardize the program while transferring part of the responsibility for the losses incurred to the lending institutions. Mr. Speaker, it is of utmost importance to continue offering incentives to private lenders to encourage them to offer voluntarily this program which promotes a climate which is conducive to the creation and development of new businesses in Canada.

• (1120)

Like the loan ceiling, the cost-sharing ratio will be amended pursuant to the Appropriation Act. This way, the Government will be in a position to readjust the ratio, subject to parliamentary approval, based on the changes in the economy and the financial needs of businesses.

The last major amendment to the Small Businesses Loans Act provides for only one fee equivalent to one per cent of the amount of the loan allowed under the Act. Let me explain. When a business borrows $50,000, the bank or lender will have to pay one per cent just once, upon granting the loan and applying to the Government for a guarantee. That fee will cover part of the cost of the program to the Government and will ensure that the program is continued in the private sector. It is quite reasonable to ask for a fee on a loan guarantee, and the Small Businesses Loans Act is one of the few such programs not requiring a fee. That one per cent fee will not be prejudicial to the small businesses which take up loans under the program. They will still be paying the same rate of interest as provided for in the Act, namely one per cent over and above the prime rate. Assuming that the loans level stays at its current figure at about $900 million a year, that fee will bring in some $9 million a year to the Government, to cover for loan losses. The overall impact on the lenders' rate of return over that period or over the term will be minimal. The volume of loans should not therefore experience a significant decrease.

The review made by the Department before the drafting of the amendment pointed to certain small administrative problems in the Act. Accordingly amendments are proposed in order to clarify the registration requirements for loans and payments in respect of applications, and to give the Minister the authority to make regulations as needed for the proper administration of the Act.

Mr. Speaker, Members from every party in this House are aware of the importance and of the significant contribution of small businesses in the Canadian economy. Further more, 95 per cent of Canadian businesses have a yearly turnover of less than $2 million and they contribute one-third of the private sector's gross national product. They also account for 25 per cent of jobs in Canada. Between 1978 and 1982, they created just about all the new net jobs in Canada. A large number of small businesses are owned and operated by Canadians. Therefore, they do create economic activity in every city, town and village and make a major contribution to regional economic development and to import replacements, to local economy diversification and to innovation. Also, we feel that the growth and vigour of small businesses are essential to the long-term viability of the overall Canadian economy. The provisions in the Bill I am introducing today make up the most complete overhaul of the Act since it came into force some 25 years ago.

The $300 million raise in the loan ceiling for the current period will ensure that loans are granted until April, when the new loan period begins. The new loan period will extend over five years, as of April 1st. This proves this Government's commitment to the needs of small businesses. Moreover, raising the maximum qualifying turnover figures will allow a larger number of small businesses to obtain loans under the program.

The new rules dealing with joined borrowers will remove an artificial obstacle to the growth of small businesses. Moreover, a ratio for the sharing of losses and low security costs will reduce the total costs incurred by the government and will more equitably divide loan losses while maintaining that efficient and popular program in the private sector. The minor amendments will make for a more rational management of the program by spelling out more clearly the Minister's responsibilities and powers under the legislation.

Considering that the loan ceiling and the ratio of loss sharing will be established under the Appropriation Act, the government will have more discretion to alter the parameters of the program and submit them to the approval of Parliament.

The traditional commitment of the Progressive Conservative government to small business is once again clearly shown in a spirit of co-operation and consultation with all Canadians.

This new national government has made a clear choice to give Canada a renewed prosperity, Mr. Speaker. It has also initiated an economic renewal and a new prosperity for all Canadians in November last, when my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduced some measures to simplify the income tax of small businesses and today with the bill now under consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all hon. members to support our policy aimed at bringing about the changes demanded by Canadians on September 4 last and more particularly I ask them to pass swiftly that timely and necessary legislation which will be of direct benefit to small businesses and the Canadian people.

• (1125)

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has introduced a Bill, allegedly to extend financial support for small businesses. Yet, Mr. Speaker, the provisions of this Bill go against the very spirit of a statute which for many years has contributed to the development of small businesses in Canada.

This legislation, which was tabled without any real consultation or concern for the needs of small and medium sized businesses, is another example of the mismanagement and irresponsibility of this Government, which manages the nation's business by approximation rather than with the ability required to govern a country such as ours.

Although the Government keeps on telling us that it believes is consultation, it had no hesitation in introducing in the House a Bill which is obviously ill-designed and which does not meet the needs of small businesses.

Consultation with whom? What does the word "consult" mean for the Conservative Government? For the Liberal Party, it has always meant that the input should come from the users who benefit from the services provided by legislation.

This Government seems to prefer working in secret, behind closed doors.

The Bill to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act is a measure which will make the Canadian economy move backward and cause many problems and headaches to small businesses while, in theory, it should be promoting the development of our industries and businesses.

Mr. Speaker, this ill-designed Bill should simply be withdrawn if the objective of the Conservatives is really to promote the growth of small businesses in Canada. The amendments which the Government wants to make to the Small Businesses Loans Act are clearly unacceptable to our Party and to the organizations representing the small business community.

Let us consider one by one these amendments stemming from a simplistic analysis of the situation of small businesses. Even though the $1.5 million ceiling for the yearly gross revenue has not been increased since 1977, this Government, in what it calls a major review of the Act, increases the ceiling only by half a million dollars in Clause 1. As for Clause 2 of the bill introduced by the Government, it goes against the spirit and the letter of the existing Small Businesses Loans Act whose purpose was to encourage lenders to grant term loans to small businesses thus allowing them to upgrade and modernize their equipment and facilities and ultimately increase their productivity. Mr. Speaker, it seems that this Government wants to discourage any new loan by creating unacceptable new requirements for lenders. We must ask ourselves whether the Conservative Government does not simply want to ruin the Small Businesses Loans Act by making it unacceptable for lenders. Such a strategy, camouflaged in provisions which any serious analyst would obviously find unacceptable, would cause serious harm to the Canadian economy.

We cannot believe that, to keep the unrealistic promises it made during the electoral campaign, any Government would dare sabotage deliberately a piece of legislation which is one of the cornerstones of Canadian economic development. However, Mr. Speaker, if this is not a manoeuvre aimed at making the law inoperative, nothing justifies the provisions contained in the various sub-clauses of Clause 2. In view of the guarantees required from lenders and the essential purpose of the legislation, the new loss-sharing ratio seems simply aimed at limiting the number of loans. While basically the Government participation under this legislation must be to stimulate the economy by encouraging the granting of loans to develop small businesses, this will create a climate in which the lenders will become suspicious of businesses. It is obvious that this Act was passed in 1961 to encourage lenders to finance businesses which could not otherwise afford certain other programs usually offered by lenders. By using an extremely cautious formula and by taking into account the maximum losses sustained in a year, the Government can expect to recover a maximum of 0.7 per cent of the total value of loans thanks to the new loss-sharing ratio proposed in the bill.

A cost-benefit analysis of this bill would establish that potential revenue is insignificant since hundreds of millions of dollars in loans will probably be refused to small businesses by lenders who will worry about the appearance of the loss-sharing ratio. The refusal of 10 per cent of loan applications would mean a loss of investment capital for small businesses. It seems obvious that, at a time where economic growth is essential, the legislation proposed by the Conservative Government is irresponsible and dangerous for the Canadian economy. In addition, the clause requiring the banks to pay a premium of 1 per cent on the total value of each loan granted is also unacceptable.

Moreover, representatives of small- and medium-sized businesses have made it clear that this obligation will destroy the legislation and make it inoperative. Mr. Goeffrey Hales, vice-president of the Canadian Organization of Small Businessmen stated in response to this Bill, and I quote: "If lending organizations have to pay such a premium, they will withdraw altogether from the program provided under the legislation." In the same spirit, John Bulloch, president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, said recently that it would be foolish to charge such a premium to banks. Whom did the Conservative Government consult before introducing such amendments to the legislation which are totally unacceptable to all partners in the business world?

We have seldom seen such a consensus against a provision in a bill. Once again, we have to ask the following question: Is the Conservative Government trying to destroy the Small Businesses Loans Act by imposing unacceptable conditions? If so, it is taking the necessary means to that end.

Is the Government really so unaware of present economic conditions in Canada that it is ready to put aside an act which has promoted the growth of our small businesses for 23 years? The Liberal Party will never allow the Conservative Party to hinder the development of our small businesses. Through its legislative program, our Party has always encouraged their growth. The Liberal Party knows that strong small- and medium-sized businesses are essential to provide sustained job creation and economic growth in Canada. We know that this sector has provided 70 per cent of jobs in Canada between 1979 and 1980 and practically all jobs created between 1979 and 1982. The Liberal Party knows that at least 90 per cent of businesses in Canada are small- or medium-sized and that they account for more than 30 per cent of the Gross National Product.

Faced with such an irresponsible piece of legislation as this Small Businesses Loans Act, it might be appropriate to remind to Conservatives of the measures which a competent Government responsive to the needs of small- and medium-sized businesses has introduced in the past years. From 1980 to the 1983 budget, the Liberal Government has taken many steps to help the small business sector:

Program to promote subcontracting with Canadian companies (August 1980): The purpose of this program is to provide greater opportunities for small Canadian businesses to bid on subcontracts for major projects awarded to the federal Government's main suppliers.

Lower tax rate for small businesses: Small businesses are taxed at a rate lower than the rate applicable to major companies.

Small businesses investment grants: This measure was announced in the June 1982 budget. Grants were made to cover 4 percentage points over a two-year period and paid to the financial institutions by the federal Government on behalf of the borrower.

To promote even further the expansion of small- and medium-sized businesses, the Liberal Government gave them priority in the budgets of April 1983 and February 1984.

In April 1983: Investment Tax Credit: The budget provided a special refundable tax credit for small businesses investment recovery. In addition, companies that made investments and issued new equity shares were authorized to transfer to the purchasers any investment tax credit earned after April 19, 1983.

Research and Development Tax Incentives: The budget provided for the replacement of the 50 per cent tax deduction for increased research and development by an additional tax credit of 10 percentage points for all research and development expenditures, up to 30 per cent for the Gaspé area and the Atlantic provinces, 35 per cent for small businesses and 20 per cent for other businesses.

Carry over of losses to past or future years: The budget allowed for an extension of the period for carrying back or forward losses other than capital losses so as to reduce taxable income for past and future years.

Recovery Export Fund: The budget established a $180 million special recovery fund and an additional $20 million to be administered by the Export Development Corporation to help small- and medium-sized businesses win larger export contracts.

Shared wage costs: According to the budget, the new NEED program and the Youth Internship program of wage subsidies were to enable businesses to hire the required staff and share the cost with the Government.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we find the following in February 1984: Simplifying taxes for small businesses: the Budget contained proposals to simplify and shorten the tax form for businesses, to reduce the costs of applying the tax rules, to increase tax savings and to cut the small business tax legislation by two thirds.

Improving the fairness of tax administration: The Budget proposed a number of immediate initiatives to lighten the administrative burden of taxpayers and make the tax system fairer.

Employee profit-participation plan: The Budget proposed a maximum credit of 10 per cent of profits as an incentive for employee profit-participation plans.

Aid-Trade Fund: The budget proposed the creation of a fund to ensure closer coordination of development assistance and export financing policies.

● (1140)

While, throughout the years, we were able to propose measures to promote the development of small businesses, the Conservative Government, after all its promises, can only introduce in this House a bill which, according to small business representatives themselves, will, in effect, simply sabotage the Small Businesses Loans Act. The irresponsibility of this Government is such that it jeopardizes the development of many small businesses. Ladies and gentlemen on the other side, we suggest that you do your job, that you examine all these Liberal initiatives which were able to meet the needs of small businesses and that you come back to the House with a realistic bill which will truly meet the needs of Canadian small businesses. As we say, Mr. Speaker: "Do your homework." The Canadian people have a right to expect their representatives to show a modicum of ability. You have no alternative but to withdraw an irresponsible and harmful bill. The Liberal Party will never agree to legislation which would harm the economic development of our country.

Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes which I have left and I should like to mention the confusion created by this Government. We now have before the House a bill which, in practice, could slow down the activities and the development of small businesses because of the two provisions dealing with the 10 per cent share which the banks or lending institutions must guarantee, and the fact that these institutions must pay a fee of 1 per cent of the loan when the loan is registered.

Mr. Speaker, I read with surprise the following excerpt from the speech which the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) delivered on January 28 before the Canadian Club in Toronto. I quote from page 7:

> Nobody can contribute more than the small business to the recovery of the economy and the creation of new opportunities. It has created most of the new jobs in Canada over the past few years. What is more, it has the greatest potential for creating new jobs over the next few years. If we really want to entrust the private sector with the economic growth of our country, we must see to it that entrepreneurs are rewarded for their spirit of enterprise and risk-taking. We must also take every possible step to eliminate all obstacles to the development of the small business.

This means seeking ways and means to ensure small businesses have access get the capital they need, especially when starting operation.

It is not a backbencher who said that, Mr. Speaker, but the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He said that small businesses need loans and capital to pursue their development; and yet, the Minister of State responsible for Small Businesses introduced today a bill which for the most part will cause problems for small business people who statistics indicate are those who avail themselves most of this program.

Mr. Speaker, another fact remains: Since mid January, small businessmen have been unable to obtain loans because the maximum ceiling has been reached.

I ask the Hon. Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette) to divide this bill in two, so that banking institutions may continue right away to grant loans until March 31 and we can continue to examine his proposed amendments to the Small Businesses Loans Act.

If the Hon. Minister believes in the development of small businesses, Mr. Speaker, he must divide this bill and amend it so that small businesses in Canada may plan their operation and requirements.

[English]

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to lead off my Party's participation in the debate on the Small Businesses Loans Act. I want to say at the outset that I find it interesting that the Conservatives in government are acting no differently from the Liberals in government. They are bringing in a Bill in a rush and saying that they have to have it passed now. The Conservatives have known for quite some time, I am sure, that funds might not be available and that there was a need to top up the amount of loans available.

I want to say to the Minister responsible for this Bill that we will be supporting it reluctantly. I say that because we think it is an imperfect vehicle to support small business, but it is the only one available realistically this day nationally. We will support it and we will support the fine-tuning of the Minister.

I find it interesting that the Liberals, on the other hand, are trying to have it both ways. First, the Liberals want to have the Bill withdrawn but then maybe they want it split, I am not sure. Perhaps the Minister is not even sure what exactly the Government wants to do with this Bill.

I am quite happy to speak up in support of small business. As we all know, small business is the only sector creating real jobs in Canada today. Small business is the only sector that is creating jobs in our smaller communities. Small businesses are the only ones who are able to respond to changing economic situations in a way which protects themselves and their communities. They are the sector which tends to buy Canadian, to do its work in Canada and to share its profits in Canada. I think we have to support them. They also tend to be Canadian controlled and locally controlled so that whatever decisions they make are important to neighbouring communities. They do not, with the viciousness we have sometimes seen on the part of large corporations, make arbitrary decisions which eliminate the jobs and livelihoods of many people in smaller communities. They deserve to be supported in a non-interventionist manner.

Governments do not have to own small businesses, but we as legislators have a responsibility to ensure that we establish a climate which allows them to survive, to grow, to create wealth and therefore to share wealth within the context of Canadian society. We have seen that happening. We have seen in the last number of years that the only growth in employment has been in the small business sector.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business, in a submission to the Macdonald Commission, showed very clearly that the percentage increase in employment was greatest in the smallest firms. Those firms with from zero to four employees had an increase of almost 76 per cent in the period from 1975 to 1982; those with five to nine employees, 28 per cent; those with 10 to 19 employees, 19.1 per cent; those with 20 to 49 employees, 9 per cent; and those with 50 to 99 employees, about 2 per cent. However, those firms with over 100 employees saw a decline of almost 3 per cent in jobs available, and big business saw a decline of 2.5 per cent.

When we look at the future, we see that between the years 1983 and 1990 there will be very little growth in the large corporate sector and that there will be no growth in the public sector. But there will be considerable growth, projected to 1999, in small- and medium-sized enterprises in the country. We have to foster that.

The Small Businesses Loans Act which we are debating today is one such vehicle. At least it is a vehicle which is in place. With the improvements being made by the Government, these loans will be more appropriately used. May I say that the banks accept, at least in part, their responsibility for the provision of capital to the small business community.

As I said before, we should be doing all we can to direct government assistance to the private sector and orient it toward the small business community. The amendments proposed in this Bill are definite improvements. The topping up by $300 million for this fiscal year to allow the program to continue is clearly an excellent move. Perhaps I would have been happier had this Bill been presented to us in the fall instead of demolishing the Foreign Investment Review Agency, because it is something we can support and work toward. We are now in a catch up situation. We are trying to put money in place because we have run out. We reached our ceiling two or three weeks ago, according to the Minister. It is clear that we should have been doing this last fall. We on this side of the House would have been happy to insist and ensure that the money was in place when it was needed.

The extension of the new lending period from two years to five years makes much more sense. We on this side have always demanded that the Government extend its sights beyond a year or two and develop some long-range plan. While there has to be a yearly allocation of the ceiling, it makes more sense to have the Act in place for five years. I caution the Minister that perhaps some of the things he is doing in the Act should be tied in some way to the cost of living.

For instance, in terms of the definition of small business, the Minister admitted in the material which he distributed that the increase to $2 million will partially deal with inflation. It would make more sense to build into the Act some inflationary component so that two or three years from now, if we have an accumulation of 10 per cent or 15 per cent inflation, we do not have to come back to make an amendment. It should be a mechanism which automatically works its way along and reflects conditions in the market-place.

It will also allow for more stability in the small business sector. Applicants will know that for five years the funds will be there, assuming the Government is prepared to ensure that the ceiling is high enough. However, we question whether the legislated $1 billion limit is adequate. We are clearly reaching $900 million per year now, and with the improvements in the Bill there may be further demand. I would appreciate hearing from the Minister later as to the annual indication of how much the ceiling will be so that we will know whether or not $1 billion in terms of a legislated floor is something which perhaps should be improved now rather than finding out a year or two from now that there is a problem with it.

One aspect which we on this side of the House really like is the fact that finally the banks of the country will be forced to take their responsibility for supporting small businesses. In terms of the 90-10 split, perhaps we would have used a different ratio; perhaps it would have been 80-20 or 70-30. However, I think the principle is important. Although they accept their share of the responsibility, they are demanding collateral from applicants. In effect, they are being insured twice—once by the Government and once by the applicant. I recognize that there is a need for collateral. Perhaps the Minister could address this subject at a future point, that is, the relationship between the Government insurance aspect and the kind of collateral which the banks are demanding. Sometimes I think they demand too much and put small business persons in the situation of not being able to take advantage of other aspects of the market-place because they have had to lock up everything with banks for capital expenses even though they are insured by the Government. Then they do not have any equity to acquire operating or inventory financing which they may desperately need in order to survive. I encourage the Minister to look at that to see what impact it has and whether or not an improvement could be made in committee.

The most controversial aspect of the Bill is the user fee. The Minister proposes that the banks should pay the Government a fee to help offset the cost of defaults which may occur. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the Canadian Organization of Small Business have both suggested very strongly that that change will give the banks an excuse not to play ball or to avoid using the Small Businesses Loans Act. While I share their concern—and I have spoken to the Minister about this—we have to ensure that they are not allowed to withhold their funding under the Small Businesses Loans Act.

However, I disagree with the suggestion by those two organizations that the small business people should be paying the fee. The last thing they need is yet another expense on top of the cost of borrowing and the cost of running a small business in this day and age. They do not need a fee of 1 per cent or 1.8 per cent up front on their total capital request to add to their economic burden.

I encourage the Minister not to accept the arguments of the two small business organizations in the context of not placing the burden on the applicant. It rightfully belongs with the banks. As I indicated before, they have to accept their responsibility as well. If we were debating amendments to the Bank Act as opposed to the Small Businesses Loans Act, we could suggest mechanisms that would require the banks to set aside a chunk of their capital, earmark it for the small business sector and make it available at realistic rates of interest and on realistic terms. That Bill is not before us so we have to work within the context of this Act.

We did a quick survey of the co-operative financial institutions of this country. Although they are not exactly excited about the prospect of having to pay this fee, they did indicate quite clearly that they would not use it as an excuse not to participate. They believe that the Small Businesses Loans Act is a good vehicle for them to support people who come to them.

I suggest that the Act should be broadened. It now restricts the availability of capital to acquisitions and, therefore, cannot use capital for operating or inventory. As my colleague from Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) indicated in this House quite some time ago, we would be pleased to see that provision changed so that they could use the insurance aspects to gain access to operating capital.

There is something else we would prefer to see. I am in a quandary because I will have to say glowing things about the Conservative Government of Ontario in doing so. What is worse, it was the Hon. Claude Bennett who initiated this program. The Ontario Development Corporation with branches of the Eastern Development Corporation and the Northern Ontario Development Corporation provides funding to small and medium size enterprises throughout the province. One of its key programs is the provision of financial assistance at a fixed rate of interest for a fixed period of time, that is, 15 years. The rate established is the going rate of the day, but they can guarantee those small businesses that for the next 15 years they will not have to pay anything more than the market rate of the day. There is that long-term planning capability. They will know from today until 1999 or 2000 what the payments will be.

The other positive aspect of that program is that if the market rate drops below what you are paying, you have the option to pay off the loan with no penalties. That is in Tory Ontario. As part of the discussions we will be entering into with the discussion paper the Minister will be presenting later today, we should look at that option as a means of supporting the small business sector of this country. During the recession a lot of businesses went under, not because they were poor managers or because the market disappeared, but because the banks told them they could no longer afford the new high interest rates that they were having to pay either for capital or for operating.

No one knows what the future will hold in terms of interest rates. This Government and the previous Government would not take the necessary steps to intervene directly in the interest rate sector to ensure that rates stay down. We have to provide some protection for the small business community to ensure that they remain viable and have a long-term planning capability.

Something we would want to address if one of the other Acts were before us—this is something a number of us have been encouraging the Government to do—would be the matter of taxation, how we tax the small business community on one hand and inappropriately tax the large corporations on the other. No matter how often we raise that question in the context of making sure the big corporations pay their fair share, Ministers who respond suggest that we want to tax the small business sector at a higher rate. Nothing is further from the truth.

Small businesses in this country now pay more than their fair share whereas the corporate sector, the big companies, pay much less. It is the big corporations which get the tax breaks. They have billions of dollars of deferred taxes outstanding. Not many small businesses have deferred taxes outstanding. They do not get those kinds of breaks. We should look at how we deal with that.

There was an excellent editorial in the January 30 edition of The Toronto Star which I want to enter into the record. It deals specifically with tax breaks for the corporate sector. The editorial is entitled "Wasteful corporate tax breaks". I quote:

According to the Income Tax Act, corporations are supposed to pay 36 per cent of their profits in federal income tax. In 1980 the corporate sector actually paid about 18 per cent. The difference—accounting for more than $8 billion in lost federal revenue in 1970 alone—was the legacy of years of corporate income tax breaks.

This $8 billion price tag represents a 400 per cent increase in federal tax breaks for the corporate sector since 1972—the year in which Canadians first heard the slogan "corporate welfare bums." This suggests that in producing corporate tax "incentives," the federal Department of Finance has itself been running one of the growth industries in Canada for the past several years.

But in strengthening our economy and promoting job creation, are corporate tax expenditures really effective? Was the $8 billion spent in 1980 a down payment for the resiliency and the technology that our economy so desperately needs? Study after study has shown that on both count, the answer is: probably not.

In a 1980 Canadian Tax Foundation study, for example, Richard Bird, Director of the Institute for Policy Analysis at the University of Toronto and one of Canada's leading authorities on tax incentives, concluded that "we know amazingly little about the efficiency and effectiveness of the investment incentives we employ so profligately. What little we do know suggests that these incentives are neither efficient nor effective in achieving most of the objectives for which they were supposedly introduced."

One of the most popular tax breaks of the 1970s—super-depletion—underscores how inefficient tax expenditures can be. With super-depletion, for every $100 companies spent searching for oil, the government paid $105. As a result, super-depletion was less notable for the energy finds it financed than for the profits that were made. If the government had so allowed, it would have been profitable under this scheme for oil companies to drill at Bloor and Yonge.

Since tax expenditures improve the "cash flow" of business, they are supposed to provide a key source of funds for expansion. But in examining the effects of cash flow on investment, a Carleton University study of 70 manufacturing firms found that where demande for the output of the firms was strong, the lack of cash flow did not impede investment; where demand was weak, additional cash flow was not channelled into plant and equipment. In other words, for these firms, tax breaks had little to do with investment.

It is ironic, but at the same time as corporate tax expenditures were proliferating in Canada, they were being significantly curtailed by the Japanese. In describing this trend, Keimei Kaizuka of the University of Tokyo pointed to his findings that "we could not find evidence demonstrating the effect of tax preferences on economic activities. We could only mention the undesirable consequences of eroding the tax base."

Why have tax expenditures become the principal fiscal instrument for economic development in Canada? Most, if not all, corporate tax expenditures are a testimony to the good intentions of the governments which introduced them. In budget after budget, one finance minister after another has used them to pursue such laudable goals as increased employment, investment, productivity, international competitiveness, modernization, research and technological progress, in addition to more balanced regional development. Perhaps the unassailability of these objectives has served as an impediment to the scrutiny which these tax expenditures deserve. Perhaps it is the administrative simplicity with which they can be introduced.

But more likely, the steady proliferation of corporate tax expenditures has to do with the "politics of appeasement"—finance ministers are supposed to keep the business community happy. The aftermath of former finance minister Allan MacEachen's November, 1981 budget bears witness to this rule. After MacEachen launched his assault on tax preferences, business coalesced and MacEachen was through. In an effort to make peace with the corporate sector, Mr. MacEachen's successor at Finance, Marc Lalonde, introduced in his first budget almost $1 billion in new corporate tax breaks.

The essential problem with tax expenditures is that there are just too many of them. Each tax expenditure was introduced to encourage a particular type of activity. But the effect of any tax expenditure dissipates when many activities are rewarded at the same time. In his study of tax incentives, Bird concluded that "The more incentives are given, the more are needed to achieve the differential impact presumably sought in the first place."

With $8 billion in corporate tax concessions, the time has come for a major review. Since it is business that so desperately wants to see government spending cut, it is business that should be encouraging Finance Minister Michael Wilson to re-examine the effectiveness of each of these hidden "spending" programs. Instead of pointing to social programs, the corporate sector should begin scrutinizing its own set of books.

Those are very thoughtful words, Mr. Speaker, words which we should heed and look to as a method of bringing economic fairness to this country. We must foster the business community. In part, that means taxing it fairly.

There have been suggestions of allowing legitimate new small businesses—and we must be careful because often a business simply changes its name and starts all over again—to go for one or two years with a reduced tax rate or even with no effective tax rate as a means of allowing entrepreneurs to get established. It is worth looking at.

I think there are a number of other possible ways we can deal with this situation. However, I think the important thing is that we look at this Bill to see if we can improve it further. We should look to see if we can firm up its support and put in place mechanisms that will ensure that the concerns of the small business community regarding the banks avoiding the use of this program are met. Perhaps the Minister already has some mechanisms in mind in terms of regulations. We should make sure that that support exists and that the small business community has access, not just in the major centres but in the smaller communities throughout our hinterland, to those mechanisms. We should make sure that a delivery system is in place.

As well, following a full discussion of the options that the Minister will place before the people of Canada in his discussion paper, the Minister should make a commitment to bring the Bill back to the House within the next six months to a year if there are some indications of further changes that could be made to the Small Businesses Loans Act. If that were to happen, then we would finally have a vehicle that is all-encompassing and will ensure the continued growth and survival of the small business sector in the community.

I thank you for your patience, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the continuation of the debate and we will see what the final product will be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to compliment the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus) on his very excellent presentation. As a small businessman, having been involved in retail pharmacy for the last 20 years, it is very heartwarming to hear of the kind of support that we are getting in the community. As well, it gives me an opportunity to say how thankful I am to the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Bissonnette) for his efforts in helping me survive as a small businessman.

I have one or two small items to raise with the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan. I would like to know whether or not the user fee will act as any kind of a deterrent to the bank. My own experience with bankers has been that a small business loan is primarily offered to the bank's regular customers, the people they already know and with whom they already do business. It is a no-risk loan because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, it is not only guaranteed 100 per cent and even 90 per cent by the Government but is also secured on the other end because that is one of the requirements of the law. Prime rate plus 1 per cent is not a bad fee to be charging because that easily gives the banks a four or five point differential over what they are paying for their money.

As for whether or not this measure should apply to inventory or operations, those of us in business traditionally have a line of credit which is pegged to the inventory which is then pegged to the operation. If we are at all successful, we can certainly operate and live within those constraints. We get ourselves in a bind when we want to purchase, build or modernize premises, if we want to buy land for expansion or if we want to get involved in any capital improvements. We then find that the banks' very stringent requirements do not allow additional capitalization. The availability of a small business loan is what gives us the assurance that we can proceed.

I remember very fondly the year 1963 when I opened my first pharmacy in Dollard des Ormeaux. I practically had to mortgage my family's and my wife's family's assets to be able to raise any money with the bankers. I then saw a development that began during the time of the Hon. John Diefenbaker in 1961. At that time, small businessmen could go to the banking system almost like their big business brethren could and ask for a certain type of consideration. At the beginning that consideration was perhaps only $25,000 but today it can go up to $100,000.

We have come a long way and I will probably make a few more comments regarding that later. However, I would like to say that I am very thankful for the comments made by the Hon. Member. I have noted them very carefully. Again, I thank him for his consideration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I now recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for debate.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak today on the Small Businesses Loans Act. This Act is important to the unknown number of small businesses that need a little extra help as they expand and adapt to the needs of the market-place. No sensible person can deny the success rate attributed to this Act in the past. Over the years from 1961 to 1983, this Act has enabled 140,380 small businessmen to expand their facilities, to purchase equipment and to modernize their plants. In my own particular case, it allowed me to go from partnership in one drugstore to a small chain of six, each and every time with the assistance of the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Indeed, this happened with a success rate of 98 per cent, there being only 2,878 claims paid in that 22-year history. This only offers further proof of the reliability of small businessmen and their tenacity if one looks back at the difficult period they have come through over the last 10 years or so.

Significant changes have been made in the past, changes that highlight not only the need for this Act but the need for us to be flexible. We must adapt the conditions of the legislation, the terms which we impose on the borrower, so that they are realistic and meet the needs of today's small-businessmen. I heartily endorse the proposal to increase the gross revenue allowed from $1.5 million to $2 million, because there has not been an adjustment since 1977 and there have been considerable periods of inflation. That increase will not only permit an additional number of small businesses to apply, but it will ensure that those businesses which need that kind of volume in order to survive will be able to qualify. In addition, it will not penalize the small businesses which have been successful and exceeded the old limits. I believe that small business is and will continue to be the engine of economic growth. We must continue the process of strengthening the small business sector and the Canadian economy.

This program has a successful track record yet, in cases where a claim is made, it is most unfair to expect the Canadian people to absorb 100 per cent of the losses. Instead this legislation proposes a 90:10 Government-lender loss-sharing ratio. Lending institutions should be made to share some of the responsibility for the loans which they have approved, since they are profiting from them.

At the same time, while we demand some accountability from the lending institutions, we are not being unreasonable because the Government will not reject a bank's claim in cases where Small Businesses Loans Act borrowers amalgamate and their combined loans exceed the $100,000 limit. Accountability is important, as it should be whenever public funds are involved. As such, it is perfectly natural and just for Government, as guardian of public moneys, to insist that a lender respect and comply with the regulations or be liable for the full claim.

Dollard riding contains one of the most heavily industrialized cities in the Province of Quebec—Ville Saint Laurent. The city has a population of 65,000. It has 3,900 businesses, 1,800 of which can be construed as small businesses in the confines of the legislation. Overall, the businesses employ 78,000 workers. In addition to that, there are many other ancillary businesses and services which have been built up and which will continue to build because of the energetic leadership of Mr. Charles Robitaille, who is the Director of Economic Development for Saint Laurent. Through his leadership, Saint Laurent has been able continually to attract new industry and businesses, which gives small business an opportunity to flourish. The regulations which this legislation contains will provide more money to business so that they can locate close to the industries. Major industries cannot exist alone in a vacuum. Sustaining them and their employees are a myriad host of service industries which account for 40 per cent of the loans.

At the same time, the riding of Dollard has a broad multicultural base. Fifty per cent of the population comes from visible minority groups from various multicultural backgrounds. The Bill of Rights has enshrined true equality in Canada, but we need only examine the upper strata of big business, both in the public sector and the private sector—be it at the municipal, provincial or federal level—to discover that ethnic representation is practically non-existent. It is obvious to people who have businesses in Canada that the ethnic community still has not taken its rightful place in our society.

However, the ethnic community does play a very important role in small business. There have been a number of instances in the last few weeks in which members of the ethnic community have come forward with applications for small businesses. One case involves a man who owns a garage which employs five people. He wants to modernize and expand that facility and in doing so he will be able to create an additional five jobs. Another case involves a man who owns a cleaning establishment. That man also wants to expand his facility and create another five jobs. That type of activity makes up the cornerstone of our community. The majority of the jobs which are created in my area are created by small-businessmen.

From these communities have come a new generation of small-businessmen. They are hard-working and dedicated to their dream of building a new and prosperous life in their chosen home, Canada. They often require financial assistance when initiating their new enterprises. Those enterprises are creating new jobs for Canadians and this legislation offers them the assistance which is needed to purchase equipment or expand their premises.

I support this Bill. It will encourage the entrepreneurial spirit, aid some of our most progressive and innovative businessmen, and help to ensure more jobs for Canadians and a successful economy. No greater powerhouse for economic renewal than the small-businessman exists. We must remove the obstacles and permit small-businessmen to grow.

The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus) has already mentioned several instances upon which I would like to expand. We could look at simplifying the tax and regulatory environment. Small-businessmen are burdened with paperwork which has become an unsurmountable obstacle. Small-businessmen should insist that the Government reduce the amount of paperwork. Small business must have access to the necessary equity capital, and this legislation will provide that. As well, I hope the Government will look at the effect of unemployment insurance premiums. It is a contentious issue; however, it is a payroll tax and a deterrent to job creation.

Canadians must expect less of Government and more from the private sector. There must be a better balance in the Canadian economy between the public sector and the private sector. We must restore confidence and commitment to sustain economic renewal, and it must begin with the small-businessman.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the speech which was made by the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner). He said that we must separate business from government and, in essence, get government off the back of business. Could he explain the type of government which should be taken off the back of business? Could he be precise as opposed to general?

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, it is an interesting concern. In many instances government has become an active competitor with small business. For example, the recent takeovers in the oil and gas industry. In one case, Petrofina became an active competitor with small business. Sometimes that is done with practices and methods which are not available to small business, such as marketing and the costs which are disbursed through bureaucracy. That is one particular instance but I believe there are many others to which I could refer.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made a variety of points in his speech and often referred to the fact that more emphasis must be placed on the private sector. I think that people would generally agree with that. He mentioned the fact that there were too many government restrictions and that we should look at the unemployment insurance premiums issue. Is he suggesting that Petrofina should be eliminated? Can the Hon. Member give us two or three examples of present government programs which in one way or another affect business and should be eliminated?

● (1230)

Mr. Weiner: There are a lot of Crown agencies in this country and there are a lot of businesses which the Government is now running and administering. Parts of those businesses were previously in the hands of private entrepreneurs. I know that we have now reached the point where the whole situation should be discussed and looked at carefully. I do not want to simplify it. I will just say that it should be the object of a more careful examination, just to make sure that those areas where private and small-businessmen have flourished and have given adequate and proper service remain their exclusive domain. I believe care should be taken before those areas are removed from them.

In terms of the small-businessman, I was also referring to the amount of red tape with which we are involved. The forms and paperwork are really on top of us. I know that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) has already taken some steps to put small businesses in a position where, even if there is going to be an audit, it can be construed that they are innocent until proven guilty.

I can tell the Hon. Member that a few years ago when our family business had an audit, a team of people came in in September and stayed with us until Christmas. They were with us from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. daily except for the hour and a half or two hours when they went to lunch. During the four-month exercise they found absolutely nothing. I am not saying that the Income Tax Department was wrong to request the information, but I think it was abusive. With the type of requests it made and information it wanted it just sat on top of the situation. I think we have to find ways of putting across the idea that small business is innocent until proven guilty with respect to tax situations. Small businesses are ready to give us all the information we require but I think we have to be less oppressive in the way we handle their tax matters.

Mr. Orlikow: My colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus), has already indicated that we support the major principles of this Bill. I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question with regard to what seems to me to be the main problem of small business.

In recent years, because of the recession and because of the high interest rates charged by the banks, when small-businessmen want to borrow money either for operating expenses or for expansion the banks have dealt in a very tough way with them. If we look at the large number of bankruptcies in recent years, we find that it is the small-businessman who has been forced into that situation. I compare that with the very generous treatment given to large businesses, some of which have borrowed hundreds of millions of dollars from our banks and have not been able to pay either the interest on their loans or the principal. We have over $8 billion in non-performing loans, mostly to the large corporations. I wonder if the Hon. Member would tell us whether the Government is giving some consideration to this problem, not in the sense of passing legislation but in discussing with the banks the idea that they should be much fairer and easier on the small-business person and treat him in the same way as they treat the large corporations?

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question because it is certainly an issue which is very real and alive in my thoughts. The feeling I have is that there is a different kind of pressure and regulation exerted on the small-businessman. We are almost on our knees with our hats in our hands in discussions with our bankers. We do not have the same familiarity with the boardrooms and the first-hand contact which has been developed because, as the Hon. Member knows, very often loans are made on the tip of a hat or a nod. We can have a document as thick as our hand but if we don't get the right nod, we don't get the right approval.

I recognize the kind of pressure which is put on the small-businessman because he has no other option. He has no other method of financing his operation. On the other hand, the big-businessman has other means of raising capital and cannot be blackmailed in the same way. I am concerned with that attitude. I do not know how to answer it.

As recently as last Tuesday morning, I had the pleasure of visiting the head office of one of our banks. It was a very friendly meeting. I have been less than actively involved in a business since September because the electors of Dollard have given me another job and, happily, the Government has also asked me to be the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). However, my brother still runs the family business. The meeting at the bank was frank and open but I felt that the bank was exerting a pressure which was not as applicable to big business. It still went along with most of our suggestions. We asked for a little more time to provide the documentation, and so on, which big business would have at its fingertips. It is a real problem and I don't know how we are ever going to solve it.

With respect to the usury kind of interest rates, I can remember the day when, if we wanted to buy equipment, the bank would not finance it so we would do it through the company which was selling the equipment. Of course, we ended up paying at least double the interest rate, which meant that at the end of a three-year or five-year period we probably paid three times the price of the equipment.

What is done now with the Small Businesses Loans Act is that small business can buy the equipment at a rate which is even better than the regular rate that it is paying the bank because normally the small-businessman is paying prime lending rate plus two. He does not get the prime rate plus one-quarter as does the big guy. So we are making it easy and giving the businessman a rate at prime plus one with a five-year to ten-year pay-back. That makes it very easy for him to expand or modernize his business. It makes him better able to handle the market-place and to become more successful in what he is doing.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I notice the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members of this House are referring to business people as "businessmen" very consistently. I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he has any comments on the fact that not only are more women going into small businesses, but, indeed, they have a very good success rate. Yet they often find that there is much more discrimination, if you like, or difficulty in getting loans or financing from the banks. I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to comment on those points?

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. I do want to comment. First, I hope the Hon. Member will excuse my use of the term "businessman". I do it without any malice, in the same way as I might refer to a "chairman" when I should refer to a "chairperson". Perhaps we should have a new vocabulary which incorporates those terms.

I would like to relate a true story. My wife is an active member of the business community. She is a very successful businesswoman in her own right. She runs a very large travel agency in Dollard-des-Ormeaux. But I do have the feeling that in any relationship she has with her bankers, there is still that unspoken suggestion: "Well, why don't you drop in with your husband? Why don't you show me your husband's statement at the same time? Why don't you use his assets as a back-up for what you are asking?" She does not want to do that. She has made it in her own right. She has her own assets and her own equity to show. She is able to stand on her own feet.

I think this is a problem somewhat similar to that which my ethnic constituents are facing. We have to come to grips with the reality that we still do not have true equality, that we must continue to work for it. The positive and affirmative action which we need in that sense, with proper incentives and initiatives, must be taken here as well. I can only say that I have not yet had the pleasure of dealing with a female bank manager. Perhaps they exist, but they too, like the ethnics, must have their rightful place in this society.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall now resume debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to speak briefly in the debate on Bill C-23.

Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised the Government should have waited so long to table Bill C-23 in the House. I see the Minister across the way and I am sure he would have preferred to table the Bill before the "well ran dry". I am positive, Mr. Speaker, but I suppose he does not have enough influence on . . . He may not have enough money either—I do not know since I am not familiar with his personal finances. But he definitely does not have enough influence on his colleague, the Government House Leader, because we know, Mr. Speaker, that the well has run dry, as I mentioned earlier, and that instead of tabling this Bill at an earlier date and helping small businesses, this Government preferred to help the big U.S. multinationals by spending much of this session on the Investment Canada Bill. Why set a higher priority on Investment Canada when we could have been helping small businesses?

I would like the Minister to answer that later on, Mr. Speaker, because it is very important for us to know what the Government's commitment is to small business.

Perhaps the Minister could also indicate why the Government is so keen on having the Investment Canada Act, which I think will reduce opportunities for small business. When small businesses, with their very limited resources, must compete with the multinationals, obviously things are going to be very difficult for them. I am convinced that my Progressive Conservative colleagues in the House will agree, since they see themselves as the friends of small business.

However, Mr. Speaker, we know this is not so. They are friendly with big business, with the big U.S. corporations, and especially with the U.S. Government, and, as we know, they have very little concern for Canadian small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, while we are on the subject, I think we should remember the promises this Government made during the election campaign, promises with respect to small business.

• (1240)

[English]

I have with me a document, Mr. Speaker, containing promises made by the Conservative Party. I am sure you will recall that the Conservative Party made quite a few promises during the last election campaign. We in the Liberal Party have tallied up some 338 promises, but of course we know there are far more, such as the bouncing rubber cheques to producers of Quebec and so forth. If you add them all up there are probably 500 promises.

I have here a list of Conservative promises to the small business community. It is an authentic list because it was prepared by the Prime Minister's office. I am sure you will agree that it is a very authentic document, as authentic as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would like it to be. Let us review this list in order to familiarize ourselves with all the promises the Conservatives made to the small business community, recognizing that five months later, once the funds had run dry under the Small Businesses Loans Act, only then did the Government choose to introduce a Bill in this regard. It chose first of all to help out its big business American friends with the Investment Canada Bill and worried about small business much, much later. Of course, that is not what they said during the election campaign. Here is what the Government said. It was going to reduce the burden of excessive regulation and reporting requirements. I do not know what the Tories have done yet to satisfy that particular election promise, which was made on July 26 by the Prime Minister himself, then Leader of the Opposition.

The Tories also said they would rationalize and improve access to a variety of small business assistance programs offered by the federal Government. Again, nothing done. They would review Government purchasing policy and ensure that small and medium size enterprises obtain a fair share of government business. Another empty Conservative promise. They would encourage capital investment in small and medium size enterprises and improve financing options for small business. That one is rather interesting, Mr. Speaker, in view of the amendments we have to the Bill today. I would like to know from the Government how reducing the component from 100 per cent to 90 per cent is going to satisfy the promise of improved financing options for small businesses. Obviously it is not going to do that, it will do the opposite.

Would you believe it, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives are going to actually break a promise. This is the first time it has happened in the last 15 minutes. It is something like breaking patronage appointment promises. They are known to have done that once or twice in the last 24 hours. Once or twice every day since they were elected, in fact.

However, let us follow through on more promises. I notice I am starting to wake up some of the Tory back-benchers and the book-ends. That is a good thing. Let us review some more promises. This seems to be grabbing the attention of some Conservative Members.

An Hon. Member: Stick to the Bill.

Mr. Boudria: Well, we are discussing small business and this Government's commitment to small business. Maybe the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and others are not interested in the commitments they made to small business, but I am. The small business community of this country is interested in their promises, especially the ones which have not yet been fulfilled. That is to say, exactly 100 per cent of the promises to small business have not been fulfilled. Let me continue.

They said—"they" being the Conservative Party, which I am sure you will recognize, Mr. Speaker, being the non-partisan person you are—they would increase the amount of management assistance to small businesses through such vehicles as the Counselling Assistance to Small Enterprise programs. In other words, the CASE program. What is going to happen with that program? What will happen when this Government abolishes the Small Business Development Bank, as we know it is proposing to do? That is no secret. We know the Tories want to abolish the SBDB. We know this is another promise that will be broken again. That is two promises they have broken in about 30 seconds. They do not have a very good batting average, you must admit.

They said they were going to broaden and better define the role of the federal Government to lending institutions, to augment and complement the role of private financial institutions serving small businesses. What are they augmenting? Since when does reducing from 100 per cent to 90 per cent augment anything? Would you believe it, Mr. Speaker, they have again broken another promise to the Canadian people. It is a very sad state when we have a government which is really not interested in observing the commitments it made. But we have to enumerate these promises to the people. They need to be reminded of the broken promises of this Government. I see this is waking up some of the Members across the way again.

Mr. Gormley: You are reminding them of why they voted you out.

Mr. Boudria: Listen to this promise: to facilitate the introduction and adaptation of new technology and encourage the spread of technical knowledge in businesses through adequate information and training programs and so forth. Well, I think it is about time we looked at the Government's cut-back book to see what it has done to fulfil that particular promise to small business. I venture to bet we are going to have another broken promise very shortly.

Let us look now at a $4.4 million cut-back in research and technology. Would you believe it?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Government, which has just promised us it is going to help small business, has just cut $4.4 billion from the research, science and technology program and a program that was providing support for research projects by small businesses. It is hard to believe that the Government has once again broken a solemn commitment, a sacred trust as a well-known Progressive Conservative has been heard to say. It is hard to believe this could happen and that this Government could renege on its commitment.

I have here a document from the Prime Minister's Office which contains the reply Ministers were supposed to provide in response to the budget cuts announced on November 8. Somebody drafted some nice little replies, so that when a certain question is put to a Minister, all he has to do is consult this document. The paper is called "Announcement of expenditure reductions", Ministers' document, secret, and so forth. This document was prepared by the Prime Minister's Office and provided to Members of Cabinet so they would know what to say.

It is important that the Ministers should know what to say, Mr. Speaker, or more important still, what to read when they do not know what to say. The Minister opposite seems a bit concerned, but I must tell him that he himself has no cause for concern, because he was expected to say nothing. The document makes no reference to that, so it is clear the Minister was expected to say nothing on that.

But I would like to refer to the next matter. Here is a question, a "potential" question that a reporter was supposed to ask the Minister. "With the increase in fees for small inventors' patents, are these people expected to disappear?" The minister is supposed to answer this: "No, the fees will be significantly reduced in some cases". And then: "How much will be the increase?" Then the Minister would answer: "The increase will be from $550 to $4,000. This is a Conservative bargain for small businesses. Patent costs will be increased to $4,000 from $550 to $4,000." I wonder how the Minister (Small Businesses) could explain this bargain which he is offering the small enterpreneur who wants to register a patent. I am anxious to hear his answer.

• (1250)

An Hon. Member: You will not have to wait for 20 years!

Mr. Boudria: No, I know we will not have it in the next 20 years, because we never get any answer from the Tory Government on almost anything, Mr. Speaker, and I am in total agreement with my colleague here who just said the Conservative Government offers nothing and answers nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I have another question which was supposed to be asked and it reads as follows: "How can you justify the increase in incorporating fees, when your Government boasts of supporting small businesses?" This is what the reporter is expected to ask, and the Minister should answer: "Fees have not been increased for years, and in any case incorporating fees are but a small fraction of the costs of doing business".

Mr. Speaker, since our small entrepreneurs have that much difficulty right now, I wonder whether the Minister personally feels—and I am confident he will say frankly in a few minutes whether he is personally in favour of increasing those fees, the incorporating fees—whether he feels that such an increase is reasonable, and whether it is by overburdening small businesses that we are going to help our small Canadian entrepreneurs.

Mr. Speaker, along with my colleagues, I think that this Government since it came to power has proved to be totally unconcerned and unwilling to help our small businesses. They have had five months to do so, and to this day they have done just about nothing.

[English]

I am glad I woke up another Hon. Member on the other side who is asking me what the Liberals have done for small business in 20 years. I am glad to hear the question. I am glad that the New Democratic Member praised the Ontario Development Corporation. As the Hon. Member knows, that was a joint federal-provincial program begun six years ago. I would like to thank the New Democratic Member for mentioning that. I am sure that all my Liberal colleagues will be pleased to read that in Hansard.

I will indicate some of the improvements that Liberals made to the law. The law was established in 1961 and was improved in 1971. The amount that could be borrowed was increased from $25,000 to $50,000. In 1977 the amount was increased to $75,000. Those are major strides made by Liberal Governments. I am glad that my colleagues in the Conservative Party asked what the Liberal Government did. We Liberals are proud of the things we have done for small business. We did not wait until the very last hour and then try to slip the Bill under the door with regressive clauses in it in order to get our way. We introduced those Bills in due time and we will continue to do so.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) mentioned a Bill or a change in the legislation passed in 1961—

Mr. Boudria: The answer is no.

Mrs. Mailly: —because in 1961, the Government—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but this is not a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There is a ten-minute question period provided after the Hon. Member's speech, so I think she should save her question for those ten minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I told her it was not a point of order, and neither is this a point of order. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, as usual you are absolutely right. Not only was there no point of order, but the point was not a good one.

What I said was, that the legislation was passed in 1961 and improved subsequently by various Liberal Governments. Now that we have established that, I imagine the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) will get her facts straight next time.

I got as far as 1978, when further Liberal improvements were made to this legislation, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

In February of 1978 the formula establishing the maximum interest permitted was changed from a fixed rate and established semi-annually at the prime rate of the chartered banks plus 1 per cent. In April of 1978 the responsibility was transferred from the Department of Finance to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In July of 1980 the maximum total indebtedness outstanding was increased form $75,000 to $100,000.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals have a very good record of assisting small business and a very good record over-all for governing the country. The record of the Liberal Government is much better than the Conservative Government's will be after four years.

The issue which affects small business in the country the most right now is the price of gasoline. The increases which the Government has perpetrated on the small businesses of my riding are nothing short of scandalous, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), so aptly said. Those issues are very important to the small-business people in my riding. They are very concerned with the price of gasoline. The Tories want to increase the price even more, Mr. Speaker. How will this assist small business?

The Government has not earned the trust of small business and will not do so in the next few months when it gives priority to large businesses instead of small ones. It has not acted in a proper manner to gain their confidence. The small-business people of my constituency are not pleased with the Government. I would venture to say that small-business people across the country do not like the Government. It has led the population of the country into error. It has made promises which it is not fulfilling.

[Translation]

I mentioned several promises that this Government failed to keep. I should add that not one of the promises made to small business has been kept, and this after more than six months. On the other hand, it is surprising that big business and the President of the United States and others were promised that we would have an Investment Canada Bill, that it was put first on the priority list and that small business was moved down to second place.

A Government that has betrayed small business does not deserve its support.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be a period for questions and comments after Routine Proceedings. Order please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

PENSIONS

RECOMMENDATIONS OF NATIONAL PENSIONERS AND SENIOR CITIZENS FOUNDATION

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, recently the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Foundation, representing some 400,000 pensioners and senior citizens, presented a brief to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), with a number of recommendations of interest and concern to senior citizens.

Some of the important points raised, which I believe are worthy of support by this Chamber, are that the Government should provide adequate and equitable pensions for all Canadians and increase the guaranteed income supplement benefits; that recipients of old age security on limited incomes be exempt from having to forward income tax quarterly; and that the Government, in co-operation with the provincial Governments, build small, accessible, publicly-owned rental developments, with tenant participation in the management process.

I would ask the Government to give favourable consideration to these and the other recommendations as they represent the views of the vast majority of Canada's senior citizens. This body has represented the seniors well in the past, and if these recommendations are adhered to by the Government, I am certain that it will be for the benefit of all Canadians.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

EFFORTS TO RECOUP OVERPAYMENTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Unemployment Insurance Commission is seeking the repayment of alleged overpayments of unemployment insurance benefits made to approximately 350 Canadians, not because of any fault or dishonesty on their part, but rather because the retroactive effect of an income tax court decision to which they were not parties and at which they were not represented.

In one of these cases an unemployment insurance board of referees has stated that the Commission's efforts to recover $21,120 from a constituent of mine offend the principles of natural justice. Notwithstanding that, the Commission has appealed the board of referees' decision.

There are three solutions to this problem. First, the Unemployment Insurance Commission can withdraw the appeal and not proceed with any appeals on similar cases. Second, under Section 60 of the unemployment insurance regulations, the Commission has the right to waive any attempt to collect overpayments in cases of undue hardship. Third, the Unemployment Insurance Act itself can be amended.

I know that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is most concerned about this very disturbing problem. I am sure all Members of the House will co-operate with her in dealing with it in a just, reasonable, and compassionate manner.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his allotted time has expired.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—LEAD TIME FACTOR

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise some concerns with regard to the Government's youth employment program announced yesterday. I want to suggest that it is entirely possible, with sufficient lead time and somewhat improved economic conditions, that the direction in the program the Government has announced could work. I do not think anyone would deny that that is a possibility. I do, however, believe that there is not sufficient lead time to allow for that program to work effectively this year. I think if it were announced now for next year, and the private sector, which the Government is calling upon to respond, had enough time to work the program into its hiring practices and to look at projects, it would be possible that by next year it might in fact prove to be effective.

S.O. 21

I want to suggest to the Government that it should go back to the job creation type of programs to which we have been accustomed, for two reasons. One, because they have worked and they have provided job opportunities for many young people. Second, because they have provided opportunities for municipalities, community groups, and voluntary organizations to provide a service to their communities a service that otherwise would not have been provided. The Government, therefore, would do better this year recognizing that is so, that it is not fictional or fictitious, and that if the Government would leave in place the program which it now has, and then work toward a greater degree of involvement from the private sector—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

HARBOURS

STRAIT OF CANSO—ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF EDDY POINT MARINE CENTRE

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, in my constituency we have one of the finest ice-free harbours on the eastern seaboard of North America. I am speaking of the harbour at the Strait of Canso. Into this harbour have sailed the largest ships afloat. The Port of Mulgrave has been used over the last 15 years at various times to service off-shore rigs. The entrance to the harbour is Chedabucto Bay. This Bay is busy with marine traffic, including deep sea trawlers, freighters, barges, and other marine traffic.

This harbour is one of our greatest resources. It is an important part of our effort to attract employment related initiatives.

It is therefore with concern that I learned of the decision to close the Eddy Point Marine Centre. I want to call upon the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to review this decision by departmental officials, with a view to continuing this important service to the marine traffic that uses this high traffic area. Such a decision by the Minister would be a strong vote of confidence in the area and would ensure the continuation of a valuable service to our marine industry.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): After hesitating for a long time, Mr. Speaker, the Government has finally made public its student summer employment program.

My first comment about it is that the Province of Quebec got the short end of the stick.

In 1984, the Liberal Government had allotted $44.5 million to create summer jobs for Quebec students—$36.8 million for community projects and $7.7 million for the "Career-Access" summer program.

According to the decision announced by the Conservative Government, $41.9 million will be set aside for Quebec, a cutback of a little over $2.5 million. While the Quebec budget is slashed, Alberta's has gone up by $5.5 million. I commend the Members from the Province of Alberta for looking after their own, and I would urge the Quebec Conservative Members to do the same thing and make sure that Quebec students are not penalized this year and, if possible, that Quebec's budget for this program be increased on a par with the higher funding granted to the Alberta students.

My second comment has to do with the so-called "Student Entrepreneurs" project.

Does the Minister of Employment and Immigration have the legal authority to administer such a program? If not, which federal department will be responsible for the administration of those loans and through which agency?

I would also urge the Minister to make public as soon as possible the application forms to be used by municipalities and community organizations and, finally, to establish clearly the rules of the game and the selection standards.

Hardly ten weeks remain until students complete their school term, so it is imperative that all administrative details be made public if we want—

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my delight at the recent agreement between the federal and provincial Governments regarding acid rain.

The provinces affected by this environmental brute are closer than ever to actual pollution cut-backs. We must be sure to follow through the proposal to cut back harmful emissions by 50 per cent in the next 10 years.

Our new Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) has shown her mettle in dealing with her provincial counterparts at the Montreal talks.

I sincerely hope the cost of this important initiative will be treated with some priority by the Government. Few investments this decade will yield greater benefit to the people of Canada. The federal-provincial agreement is the cutting edge for negotiations with the United States.

I would ask the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to redefine the standards for automobile emissions in Canada to meet the current, harsher standards used in the U.S. It would be nothing less than politically prudent to have a commitment in place prior to President Ronald Reagan's visit in March.

Let us give our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) the bargaining power to ask the President for cut-backs in the country he represents. We must have our own house in order before we ask others to do the same.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CALL FOR BANNING OF TAX REBATE DISCOUNTERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, increasing numbers of tax discounting operations are preying on low-income Canadians by offering refunds on income tax returns in advance, at annual interest rates of more than 60 per cent.

• (1410)

Representatives from organizations such as the Quebec Association for Family Economy, and the National Anti-Poverty Organization have continually told the Minister that the tax refund business has grown by more than 600 per cent since 1981, that two-thirds of persons using discounters have average incomes of $8,000, and that 40 per cent of all users receive federal government child tax credits.

The Government intends to increase child tax credits substantially. This will only increase those exorbitant profits. The only way to stop the rip-off of low-income Canadians is to ban tax discounting and substantially speed up the processing of tax refunds.

We regret that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) has not acted on this urgent matter, and further regret reports that his staff is promoting alternatives, such as a sliding scale interest rate charged on the size of the refund. It is time for the Minister to stop, to study, and to take some action.

POLITICAL PARTIES

HOCKEY MATCH RESULT

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, we must have pity on members of the Liberal Party. Not only have they lost their long-time Leader, their personal "PET", and the federal election, but yesterday they discovered that the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) could do something that they couldn't. The shock must have been totally devastating, because last night they couldn't even hold on to the puck. Yes, they lost that too, six to one. However, I noticed that by the end of last night's game a part of their anatomy was turning blue. Since they are now adopting the right colour, maybe there is hope for them after all.

Last night the PCs replaced the Liberal six and five program with our six to one victory. Maybe now they can see the light.

On behalf of all my colleagues I should like to extend our sincere appreciation and thanks to the National Capital Commission, and to the students of Carleton University, for a wonderful evening and a delightful reception.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ADMINISTRATION

POLITICAL APPOINTMENTS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, there is often quite a difference between what the Prime Minister says and what he does.

Last July, the Conservative Leader pretended to be shocked by the appointment of a Liberal minister in Rome. Today, he is appointing a former Conservative minister, Roy McMurtry, in London.

Last July, he promised to put an end to political appointments especially in Crown corporations. But now he appoints a defeated Conservative candidate, Mr. Lawrence Hanigan, Chairman of VIA Rail. That last appointment, Mr. Speaker, is pure patronage. The man who has succeeded in inflicting 20 strikes in 10 years to the Montreal Metro users will take the place of Harold Renouf, a competent and unbiased administrator who had managed within two years an important recovery at VIA Rail.

I say to the Prime Minister that he has failed to honour his election promises and is guilty of very bad patronage.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—COMMENDATION OF MINISTER

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday at the Terry Fox Centre I had the pleasure of meeting and talking with about 75 young students from across Canada. These students are here in Ottawa as part of a continuing program to make our young people more aware of the machinery of government and of the people behind the scenes operating our many Departments and agencies. I was struck by their devotion to Canada, their nationalism, their understanding of and their appreciation for our national institutions. They represent the future of our country, and I truly believe that Canada will be in good hands.

Yesterday the Government announced a program which recognizes the industriousness and spirit of our young people. I commend the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) for the innovative program which they have jointly developed. The Government has proven in this program that it wants to nurture and develop the entrepreneurial spirit of our young people, rather than simply devote dollars just to keep them busy for two or three months.

Young Canadians want to develop their skills. It is time that both government and the private sector co-operated together to ensure that the qualities which I recognized in the students I met yesterday will be developed and applied to their future careers.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

DATE OF BUDGET PRESENTATION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Minister of Finance has arrived. He knows that the Statistics Canada leading indicator has declined now for three consecutive months. He also knows that the employment figures of which the Prime Minister has been so proud are in fact not 100,000 but considerably less. Even with arithmetical acrobatics, they cannot be rounded up from 88,000 to 100,000. He knows that the dollar has weakened. He knows that interest rates are moving up and, to top it all off, we find a waffle about the budget date. We suspect that it has to do with the provincial elections—perhaps Mr. Miller's, Mr. Lougheed's, Mr. Buchanan's—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Johnston: I hope the Minister of Finance—and this is my question—will confirm the statement made in the House by the Right Hon. Prime Minister on January 30 when he said "—the Minister of Finance will bring down a Budget towards the end of April, as agreed". That statement is from Hansard of January 30. Would he confirm that it is still operative?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wondered if the question was ever going to come.

An Hon. Member: Now answer it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will give an answer. I do not have anything different to say from what the Prime Minister has said on previous occasions in the House. As the Hon. Member knows, we are going through a very extensive consultation process. There will be the First Ministers' Conference next week. The following month will be the National Economic Conference in Regina. As soon as we are able to digest the multitude of good ideas which come out of those meetings, I will be bringing forward a Budget. I am still aiming for some time toward the end of April.

REQUEST FOR ECONOMIC STATEMENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am relieved, and I hope Canadians are relieved, to hear that. The country needs a Budget. If there is any change in plan, would the Minister of Finance undertake—and even in the absence of a change in plan—to bring forward an economic statement at an earlier date?

An Hon. Member: Not another one!

Mr. Johnston: Clearly circumstances have changed dramatically from what was put forward in November. Along with that economic statement, would he undertake to introduce some immediate steps to control interest rates and to stimulate employment?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring forward an economic statement, but I don't think it is quite appropriate to have an economic statement followed very shortly with a Budget. However, I might tell the Hon. Member that, if I did bring forward an economic statement, it would show an improvement in the economic forecast for this year. Interest rates are lower, economic growth is higher, and we are expecting that unemployment will be lower in 1985 than we had anticipated in the economic statement last November.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Minister ought to share his personal forecasts with the Members of this House. I therefore would like to put the following question to the Minister: The Canadian people gave this Government an overwhelming mandate to govern, to make decisions and to provide leadership for this country, none of which has materialized to this day. Is he really proud of his Department's performance, of his own performance and the performance of a Government that has done nothing about the economy or the direction that should be taken with respect to economic issues?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of our Government's performance, and when I bring down my budget in April, I think all Canadians will be proud of the decision they made on September 4.

Canadians have given us a mandate, and we have a mandate to consult with the Canadian people before we make any decisions, and that is what our Government intends to do.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—FUNDING OF WAGE SUBSIDY PROGRAM

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is noteworthy that the Minister is advancing a new theology. Yesterday she advocated and extolled the virtues of the wage subsidy program. In fact 72 per cent of the money under Challenge '85 is directed toward wage subsidy programs. Will the Minister explain why, all of a sudden, a wage subsidy program will be the panacea for creating thousands of jobs among our young people when in fact, in this House on May 24, 1984, the Minister said, and I quote:

> Wage subsidies and employment tax credits will be of little value in these economically depressed regions.

Will the Minister explain this obvious contradiction?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of wage subsidies in economically depressed areas is something that the Hon. Member should really know all about because the wage subsidies in economically depressed areas will go to community organizations. This will go to support those groups and organizations that can produce community work, and they will be 100 per cent subsidized.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, this is an obvious about-face by the Minister. It is very obvious. Will she explain to the House why, in real dollars, the people of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and Quebec are receiving less money than they did last year? Will she explain to the House why?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I understand that there would be a certain amount of sour grapes on the part of the Opposition. I am sorry about that because, except for the 70 Members sitting on opposition benches, there has been positive response to this program all across the country, including the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, student groups, chambers of commerce, and labour unions all across the country. I invite him, as I have done other Members, to get in and work at it, and try to make this program successful from his point of view as well.

THE ECONOMY

CONFIDENCE OF PEOPLE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. At noon today we learned that the Canadian dollar dropped to its lowest level in history. About 18 minutes ago we discovered that interest rates jumped a full half percentage point, and more than 1.5 million Canadians remain unemployed. Considering that the Prime Minister was elected to get rid of the problems created by the Liberals instead of perpetuating them, what does the Government plan to do now to begin to bring confidence in the economy to the people of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that the economic program that we set out last November will clearly bring the results that both the Hon. Member and we want, more jobs for all Canadians who were put out of work as a result of policies brought in by the previous Government. Yes, there has been an increase in the interest rate today, but I should point out to the Hon. Member that the interest rate went down for 20 or 21 weeks straight, mortgage rates came down, and about 100,000 jobs were created.

REQUEST FOR ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister cannot have it both ways. He took credit when interest rates went down in the fall. He now has to accept responsibility when the interest rate is going back up. He said in a speech he made in the House of Commons last fall that high interest rates lead inevitably to increases in unemployment. We have been saying that day in and day out, in fact year in and year out, on this side of the House. Now that the Minister has responsibility and can do something about interest rates, why is he not keeping them down and generating growth and confidence in the Canadian economy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about two weeks of increases against a background of four months of decreases. What has happened now is that we have record highs of the U.S. dollar against all industrial currencies. The Canadian dollar, unfortunately, cannot be immune from that. That has caused, unfortunately, an increase in the bank rate today, but we believe that the policies that were set in train back in November will, over a period of time, lead to a drop in interest rates, as has clearly been demonstrated since September 4.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, Marc Lalonde and Allan MacEachen could not have said it better. In fact, they used to say it just the same way.

My question is to the Prime Minister, if he is going to accept his responsibility and answer some questions about the economy. If not, I will direct it to the Minister of Finance. During the election campaign the Prime Minister said that he would not move to increase the interest rate in order to deal with the falling dollar because, as he pointed out, that leads to increased unemployment. Why has the Prime Minister reversed his policy? Why is the Government of Canada still pursuing the old Liberal policy of jacking up interest rates?

Why does the Government not accept its responsibility to get growth in our economy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we do accept our responsibility for creating growth in the economy. I suppose that I am no less concerned than my hon. friend when interest rates, notwithstanding an important and encouraging pattern over the last four and a half months, do increase. Any increases in interest rates, even for the valid reasons mentioned by my hon. friend, such as the record strength of the American dollar, inhibit economic growth, particularly for small business.

I know my hon. friend will remember that, apart from the ongoing circumstances with which we are called upon to deal, we also must in a parallel way, deal with 20 years of profligacy and the heritage left us by the Liberal Party. We have to introduce policies to deal with these structural deficiencies in the economy. I think that begins with a rebirth of confidence for consumers in the private sector and the labour movement, and that is going to create the strength we need in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PREMIER'S TRIAL—LAYING OF CHARGES BY RCMP

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Attorney General of Canada. In view of the assurances that the Attorney General gave last October that there would be no government interference in the Hatfield police investigation, and that he would follow the long-established practice in federal cases of leaving it to the RCMP to decide whether to lay charges, when to lay charges, and what charges to lay, did he, any law officers of the Crown, or any government officials outside the RCMP, give instructions to the Mounties about what charges to lay, when to lay them and, indeed, in front of which New Brunswick Judge to appear to lay those charges?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the charges that were laid in the Hatfield case, these matters were dealt with in the normal way by the Department of Justice and the RCMP. The RCMP consulted the Department of Justice because this is a federal matter under the Narcotic Control Act. They proceeded in the normal course of events. They were instructed by me that I expected the case to be dealt with on the same principles that would be applied to any similar case. They assured me that they had arrived at their conclusion on that basis, and I accepted their advice and conclusions. That is how the matter was conducted. I can assure the Hon. Member that the integrity of the system of justice in this country was preserved absolutely in the matter of the prosecution of Mr. Hatfield. On the basis that I know the man and am a friend of his, I am happy that he was found not guilty.

INSTRUCTIONS INQUIRY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): I do not have any difficulty with the idea of the RCMP getting legal advice or consulting senior officers about the question of whether or not charges should be laid before making its own decision. I am asking the Minister to confirm, for the sake of the integrity and credibility of the RCMP, that no instructions were given to the force from outside sources, including the Department of Justice officials who should not do so. I am asking the Minister to confirm that they did not give instructions about what charges to lay, when to lay those charges, and before what judge to appear to lay them.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have just told the hon. gentleman that the normal course of events was followed in this case. The RCMP, as it is entitled to do, sought the advice of the Department of Justice. The RCMP was not instructed by the Department of Justice to do anything. Members of the RCMP asked advice as to what they should do and how they should do it. They asked for the legal direction to which they are entitled from the legal officers of the Crown who, in every case, give them that advice with great propriety and a sense of responsibility, and without any interference at all on the political level.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In Winnipeg on June 25, 1984, the Prime Minister said that if he were forced to choose between higher interest rates and a lower Canadian dollar, he would take a lower dollar. The Prime Minister promised the people of Canada that that was what the Government's policy would be. Is that in fact the policy of the Government?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there has been no reversal in government policy from that which I set out on November 8. It was very clear, and has been very clear, that within the last four or five months we have had falling interest rates. I would expect that the Hon. Member would be congratulating us for our achievements during that period of time.

Mr. Broadbent: What did you do for five months?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the New Democratic Party cannot have it both ways. He says that I cannot take credit for the lowering of the interest rates but that now I must take full credit for the rising interest rates.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In the past four or five months, there have been 22 weeks of falling interest rates and two weeks of rising interest rates. Surely the Hon. Member should be pretty pleased with that performance.

ELECTION STATEMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the rise in interest rates today was a substantial rise in interest rates. There is now an uncertainty in the country. The investment community and the consumer community are very concerned. They are hearing different signals.

The Prime Minister said that if he were forced to choose between higher interest rates and a lower Canadian dollar, he would take the lower dollar. The Minister of Justice said that they as a Government would opt for a lower Canadian dollar and not higher interest rates which would ruin economic growth. That is what the Government indicated its policy would be. Is that the policy of the Government today?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I simply repeat the answer I gave the Hon. Member a minute ago. We cannot run economic policy in this country by looking at two weeks as the measure of the success of that policy. We have seen a policy which has brought interest rates down every week, week in and week out, since September 4. We have had two weeks of increases. Surely the Hon. Member can show a degree of patience and encouragement, and see that that is a good performance. He should be encouraging us to continue with that performance over the weeks and months ahead.

PREMIER'S TRIAL

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and it too concerns the Richard Hatfield marijuana case. I would like the Prime Minister to advise the House of the exact date on which he first became aware that marijuana was found in Premier Hatfield's luggage. I would also like him to advise the House what instructions, if any, he issued concerning the case. Finally, can the Prime Minister indicate whether or not he or members of his staff communicated, either directly or indirectly, with Premier Hatfield regarding the discovery of the marijuana in his luggage?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can deal with these questions because I am the Attorney General and I—

An Hon. Member: Are you the Prime Minister?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Are you a sleaze bag just like the other Hon. Member? An absolute sleaze bag.

Mr. Gauthier: Withdraw that!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Minister did not mean to use the word he used, and would perhaps withdraw it now.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if that is what you direct, I will withdraw it.

Dealing with this question, which is a sleazy question—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: —at no time in the conduct of the matter involving Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick has the Prime Minister communicated with me about the matter, nor have any of the people in his office. However, I of course have kept the Prime Minister advised at the proper time as to what was happening as is my duty.

INQUIRY OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, my question was directed to the Prime Minister. Surely Canadians have a right to answers from the Prime Minister. I would repeat my question and put it to the Prime Minister.

On what date did the Prime Minister first become aware that marijuana was found in Premier Hatfield's luggage? Was the Prime Minister aware that a meeting took place between the Solicitor General and Mr. Pat Ryan, the ATV correspondent, in Halifax, prior to charges being laid? Was a member of the Prime Minister's staff present at that particular meeting?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no idea of the second part of that lengthy statement. I suppose the Hon. Member would have to ask the Solicitor General in regard to that. I have no personal knowledge of the matters suggested by my hon. friend.

I may tell the Hon. Member that, to the best of my recollection, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General for Canada took me aside prior to a Cabinet meeting to advise me that a charge would be laid in the matter of the Queen and Mr. Hatfield, either that afternoon or the next morning. That was the first and only advice that I received of the fact that the matter would go ahead.

Mr. Rossi: That's all you're supposed to know.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—SIZE OF FUNDING

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who, after months or procrastination, prevarication and puffery, has produced a masterpiece of sleight of hand, in which her hands never even left her arms and, indeed, no new money left the treasury. Will the Minister admit that the new $205-million youth employment program represents nothing more than the reallocation of funds cut from previously existing youth programs such as Katimavik and Environment 2000?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the amount of money that was allocated to the summer program came from the $1-billion fund that was saved from government expenditures last autumn and reallocated to the job creation, training, and human resource development, on which this Government places a very high priority.

PRIVATE SECTOR ROLE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the answer to my question is yes. I will ask the Minister a different question.

Is the Minister of Employment and Immigration at all concerned about what she has heard today about the effect of high interest rates on small business, and the effect that that will likely have on this ambitious dependency upon the private sector and particularly small business, to create jobs, considering not only the short time period in which to implement the program but the deep concern on the part of potential employers about their own survival?

• (1440)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member is concerned. But I want to tell him that representatives from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business said today that they would play their part in making this program successful. Chambers of commerce across the country have said that they would play their part in making the program successful. I can tell him that the President of the Student Administrative Council at the University of Toronto said that the $205 million program was fantastic. He is one of a number of student presidents who have welcomed this approach.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I would ask the Hon. Member to have as much faith as the students.

PROVINCIAL LEVELS OF FUNDING

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the same Minister, which concerns a region of the country where her reviews are not nearly as favourable. During the course of her press conference and in her statements in the House she said that no province or region would receive less funds than it did in the previous year.

The Province of Saskatchewan will have 1,000 fewer summer jobs than it did last year, and the Province of Manitoba will have 700 fewer jobs because of substantial cut-backs in the level of funding which was provided last year in the summer youth program. Obviously, the Minister has made a mistake. Will she now say that she is prepared to restore that funding so that the students will have the same jobs which they had last year?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member was Minister of this Department he did not think to take into account the co-operation of the provinces and the private sector, and look at what their contributions could be, over and above that of the federal Government. When the program is fully funded, he will see that every province will do extremely well, and better than last year.

ROLE OF PRIVATE SECTOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the Minister refuses to increase the level of funding to those two provinces so that the students in those provinces will have the same chance as they had last year.

Is the Minister aware that since last summer in the city of Winnipeg alone there have been up to 1,000 lay-offs in various plants? How does she expect the private sector in that area to respond to—

Mr. McKnight: They were from your office.

Mr. Axworthy: It is because of the cut-backs of this Government. We know the reason for the lay-offs. It is because this Government does not have the representation from Manitoba to bring in the kind of investment it needs.

Because of the inability of the private sector to provide that kind of response, will the Minister not reconsider and bring about a revision of her funding arrangements so that those provinces and their students will have the same chance, and the fair chance, that they had in previous years under Liberal Governments?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have said before that we will be working with the private sector. The private sector has given us a great deal of assurance that it will play its part in the program. The private sector was not prepared to play that part with the previous Government, simply because the private sector did not trust the previous Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: That was evidenced on September 4, and it was evidenced in the latest Gallup poll which showed where the Hon. Member's Party stands. We will not use the funds in the way that the previous Government did to create a huge slush fund which could be handed out to Liberal Party friends.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

POTATO INSPECTION CHARGES—EFFECT ON PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FARMERS

Mr. Pat Binns (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Department of Agriculture has proposed cost recovery in inspection services for vegetables. Prince Edward Island potato producers could face major increases if the proposals which were recently announced by the Department are implemented. Combined inspection charges could cost a producer over $90 per acre or, put another way, over $18,000 for a 200-acre farm.

Since the potato industry has been facing severe financial difficulties, and since implementing these proposals, as is, would be a hardship which producers cannot withstand, will the Minister have his Department review the proposals, through consultations with the industry, and make changes with which both the Government and producers can live?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member's question and, indeed, I want to make it very clear to Members of the House that I share his concern.

I want to make it perfectly clear that the cost recovery results from our responsibility to make a contribution to the deficit reduction program of the Government. We are presently communicating with about 60 groups, and I want to make it clear that we are in no way advising these groups. We are now studying proposals. I share his concern and recognize that there are certain areas which are far more sensitive than others. We will consult and negotiate to arrive at a mutually satisfactory decision which will benefit all concerned parties.

YOUTH

KATIMAVIK PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration about the Katimavik program. Could she tell us what criteria justify cutbacks from $50 million to $19 million in the Katimavik program? That is a very specific question.

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, saying that there has been a cutback from $50 million to $19 million is an erroneous statement. The truth of the matter is that, in its 1983 budget, the previous government had set up a special additional fund of $40 million broken down as follows: $10 million for 1983-84 and $30 million for 1984-85. Since we do have to keep budget restrictions in mind, Katimavik will simply have to manage with its previous basic budget, something which Katimavik's executive director has been aware of for quite some time now.

EMPLOYMENT

YOUTH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister is aware of the fact that the new program announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration is obviously designed for students. Here is my question.

Since the 4,500 Katimavik youths had already quit school—therefore they are no longer students—what new program did the Minister of Employment and Immigration or the Minister of State (Youth) establish for those young people who no longer attend school?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised the question of other young people who are no longer in school and who are unemployed. It is true that the program which was announced yesterday addresses itself to young people who will be returning to school. I can also tell him that the programs on which we have been working, both in my Department and in Cabinet, address themselves to the over-all $1 billion fund for human resource development and training. Coming from that, announcements will be made concerning other measures which will be taken to address the needs of the young people to which he so rightly referred.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—DEADLINE INQUIRIES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister must realize that students need to count on a certain income to be able to go back to school. In her program announcements of yesterday she gave us no clarification as to the time deadlines. I would ask the Minister to give the students of Canada three dates: the deadline for private sector business to produce the job creation programs and projects; the deadline for students to apply; and the start-up date and the duration of the projects. When will the Minister give us those answers?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be sending the details to the Hon. Member in a very short time. I hope that she will then undertake to communicate those details to all students in her riding, as I hope all Members will.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF FUNDS DISTRIBUTION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): The Minister said that the funds would be distributed at the provincial level, then she said it would be done on a regional basis. How will she make sure that there is fair and equitable use of the funds in our ridings? What does she mean by region. How will she make sure?

● (1450)

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I informed the Hon. Member yesterday, as well as other Hon. Members of the House, the distribution of the funds will be allocated based on unemployment figures in regions and in provinces. The funds will, therefore, go to those who need the help most, to the place where there is the highest concentration of unemployment amongst student groups. I believe the Hon. Member would agree with me that that is fair.

TRUST COMPANIES

PIONEER TRUST COMPANY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. In view of the fact that published reports have indicated that Pioneer Trust Company of Regina is in a financial situation serious enough to warrant the Government of Saskatchewan guaranteeing the purchase of some $30 million worth of preferred shares, will the Minister first confirm that an investigation by the Department of Insurance is under way? Second, will the Minister tell us if that report will be made public?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the situation about which the Hon. Member has asked. I appreciate his concern. My officials have bee monitoring this situation and, if there are any further developments, I will be happy to inform the Hon. Member.

PROTECTION OF INVESTORS AND DEPOSITORS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, there is a tremendous concern in Regina as well among my constituents. The city is rife with rumours. Would the Minister guarantee that, whatever the findings are, those findings will be made public so that both the investors and the depositors in Pioneer Trust will be fully protected?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am sympathetic to the Hon. Member's question. I have already informed him that I will let him know of any further developments.

INCOME TAX ACT

RHOSP PROVISIONS

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question, through you, to the Minister of Finance. Would the Minister consider reviewing the legislation governing the use of funds saved under RHOSP, specifically the articles outlined in Part I of the Income Tax Act which define "owner occupied homes"? I have had a number of inquiries from elderly constituents who have been offered accommodation in a co-operative on a long-term lease basis. The terms of the lease would run 21 years and the complete term rental is payable in advance. This represents an immediate capital outlay of $55,000. These constituents have learned that their RHOSPs cannot be applied to this lease-purchase nor can they be converted into RRSPs, thanks to the legislation put in place by the Liberal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I believe that is the question. I have already heard at least one question.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He has already heard the answer, too.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. He poses a very complex question, one which I would be pleased to discuss with him at some length. I think the Hon. Member should realize, though, that this is a matter which is the subject of a Budget. If any changes were to be made in the RHOSPs, they would be brought down in a Budget.

EMPLOYMENT

YOUTH—MUNICIPALITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As we known, this Government's password seems to be "consultation", but we saw yesterday that those who are most concerned with summer employment, the students, the Canadian Federation of Students, had not been consulted by the Minister.

There is now another very important aspect to the program. This year municipalities will have for the first time to assume 25 per cent of the cost of students' salaries, plus 15 per cent for social benefits.

Before announcing the program, did the Minister consult, as she is committed to do, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it is recognized that I consulted quite widely with student groups across the country, many of whom I heard from today, and I have consulted with individual municipalities such as the Municipality of Gander which is not one of, perhaps, the most affluent municipalities in the country. I was told that it would be pleased to put up 25 per cent of the cost if the federal Government was able to deliver 75 per cent. It is a response like that which I think is encouraging as far as this program is concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, the Minister may try to delude us here in this House, but I will tell her that the Federation of Canadian Municipalities were not consulted, and it is now realized that her program will not work. I just spoke to them about the 25 per cent she is asking them to contribute, along with the 15 per cent for social benefits. Municipalities have already voted their budgets, Madam Minister, and at this point it is too late to add anything for this coming summer. Students will be paying for your failure to consult. I ask the Minister: Will she increase the federal contribution, to make sure that municipalities can participate? If not, her program is liable to fail, as I am told by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I simply do not accept the statement that this program is doomed to failure. People from across the country have been getting in touch with my office today to ask how they could take part in the program, how they could become involved, and how they could be assured that they will receive some of the subsidy which the program produces.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ACTIVITIES OF TAX REBATE DISCOUNTERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister received a brief yesterday from the Quebec Association for Family Economy which pointed out to him that there has been a tremendous increase in the number of low-income families who have gone to tax discounters to get their income tax refunds paid in advance. The Association recommended that the Minister stop the discounting and repeal the legislation which permits it. Would the Minister tell the House when he is going to respond to that kind of proposal?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated, I believe, that we are now consulting. We had intended to meet with our representatives from the Provinces over the coming weeks, and also with the discounters. As soon as we have completed those consultations and received those recommendations, we will take the necessary action.

[English]

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, this question has been brought before Governments for the last two or three years. We understand that the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs appointed an interdepartmental committee and that it has made recommendations that this process be stopped. Would the Minister table the recommendations made by the interdepartmental committee so that Hon. Members of the House, and the people affected, can see what those officials are recommending?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): To our knowledge, Mr. Speaker, the only recommendation or statement made under the previous administration was a statement in this House made on April 2, 1984 by the then Minister. It quite simply implied that there were to be meetings with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, after which recommendations, new provisions and amendments to the Act would be proposed.

AGRICULTURE

FARM CHEMICALS—REQUEST FOR DUAL MEASUREMENT LABELS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture, despite the fact that the Hon. Member for Regina West is sitting beside him. My question falls on the heels of the initiatives taken by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which would make the metric system more palatable in Canada. Would the Minister now cause an action which would bring it about that manufacturers of herbicides, pesticides, farm chemicals, and fertilizers would use dual labelling? Because of the fact that the average age of farmers in Canada is nearing 50 years, labels in both imperial and metric would be advantageous to them.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I certainly welcome that question because I am indeed receiving a number of similar inquiries from other Hon. Members of the House, as well as from those members of the agricultural community. I would just like to indicate to the Hon. Member, and to Hon. Members of the House, that the policy of the Government, which was enunciated by my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—the policy which brought to an end the confusion and chaos of the food and petroleum industries—will apply to the agricultural industry as well—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: —in that we are currently looking to see whether or not it is necessary for us to change the regulation which would allow for manufacturers of chemicals and fertilizers, and the like, to provide the imperial nomenclature as well.

KATIMAVIK PROGRAM

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and I am sure he will understand the reason for it. He is very aware of the very worthy and uniquely established program, Katimavik. This is a bilingual program which has been a great success and acclaimed by many people throughout the country. He knows that, with the present cuts taking place, some 2,700 students and 400 group leaders will be losing their jobs. Will the Prime Minister himself personally give consideration to continuing this program during this International Youth Year?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the Katimavik program has not been terminated, has not been cut. It has been brought back to its normal basic budget. The Secretary of State and myself are very well aware of this marvellous aspect, but we both feel there will be more effective and cost-efficient ways to make young Canadians bilingual than adding another $30 million this year.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader what his plans are for the business of the House for the coming week.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. House Leader of the Opposition for the usual Thursday question. I want to advise the House that I would like to designate Tuesday, February 12, as the fourth allotted day in the current supply period.

With respect to the business for tomorrow and the coming days, it will be as follows: First, Bill C-26. When debate is concluded on that we will resume consideration of Bill C-20. Following that we will begin consideration of the Bill which my colleague, the distinguished Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees), will be introducing in the next few minutes to amend the Pension Act. Once the House has completed consideration of that Bill, we will begin the debate at second reading of the Bill to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development. If the House has not completed consideration of second reading stage of the Small Businesses Loans Act amendments today, we will then resume consideration of Bill C-23.

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SOCIAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF CONSULTATION PAPER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations among the House Leaders of each Party and I believe you will find there is unanimous consent for the presentation and passage of the following motion without debate. The draft order is as follows:

That the document entitled "Child and Elderly Benefits—Consultation Paper", tabled on January 28, 1985 be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs;

That the Committee examine and report on the issues raised therein; and

That the Committee report its findings no later than April 1, 1985.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. the Government House Leader have unanimous consent for the introduction of his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Does the House agree to the motion?

NAZI WAR CRIMINALS

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question of major concern to Canadians everywhere and which has been the subject of much controversy over recent days. I refer to the question of Nazi war criminals and the possibility that some of these war criminals may have entered or attempted to enter Canada. After working with the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) on this problem as directed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who is extremely interested in the question, we have reached certain conclusions.

We are all aware, Mr. Speaker, of the concerns recently expressed about the possibility that one particularly notorious war criminal, Josef Mengele, may have entered Canada or attempted to do so. The Government is very mindful of the atrocities alleged to have been perpetrated by this particular individual and is most anxious that if anything can be done within Canada to bring this individual to justice, that it be done immediately.

There have also been statements by a number of associations and their representatives interested in the bringing to justice of war criminals that there are indeed within Canada a considerable number of such criminals who may have escaped to this country in order to avoid prosecution for the crimes they committed or to avoid punishment for such crimes. It is stated by these associations that many war criminals have entered Canada through a variety of illegal or fraudulent means, and that many are still resident here and continue to avoid justice.

Mr. Speaker, these statements do not accord with the information that the Government has respecting these matters. The Government has the results of a number of comprehensive investigations into the activities and background of individuals either now or previously in Canada and suspected of having been involved in the commission of war crimes related to the activities of Nazi Germany during World War II.

In so far as the Government's knowledge extends, we understand from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police that there are relatively few persons living in this country alleged to have been involved in war crimes as described by some of the associations and groups I have referred to. These cases have been the subject of careful investigation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in co-operation with law enforcement authorities in other countries. The House will recall the extradition of Helmut Rauca to the Federal Republic of Germany. Other cases are under continuing investigation.

The Government has nevertheless concluded that statements by some of the groups and associations I have referred to pertain to matters of such importance that we must go to the very depths of the questions posed so that we may be assured that we are not, unknowingly, harbouring within our midst some of the individuals guilty of committing the horrible Nazi war crimes of World War II. These individuals must be brought to justice and to the extent that the Government can act to assist in attaining that purpose, we will do so to the fullest extent.

Therefore I wish to announce today the establishment of an independent Commission of Inquiry under Part I of the Inquiries Act to conduct such investigations regarding war criminals in Canada as are necessary in order to report to the Governor in Council upon recommendations and advice relating to further action that might be taken in Canada to bring such war criminals to justice. The terms of reference of the Commission are:

> To conduct such investigations regarding alleged war criminals in Canada, including whether any such persons are now resident in Canada and when and how they obtained entry to Canada, as in the opinion of the Commissioner are necessary in order to enable him to report to the Governor in Council his recommendations and advice relating to what further action might be taken in Canada to bring to justice such alleged war criminals who might be residing within Canada, including recommendations as to what legal means are now available to bring to justice any such persons in Canada, or whether and what legislation might be adopted by the Parliament of Canada to ensure that war criminals are brought to justice and made to answer for their crimes.

This Commission will have full power of access to personnel and all relevant papers, documents, records and books of any kind in the possession of departments and agencies of the Government in order fully to review and consider the information as it is presently known to the Government. The Commission will have the power to proceed as it may deem expedient for the proper conduct of the inquiry and it will receive sufficient staff and resources as it may require to meet its responsibilities. It will have the power to sit at such times and at such places within or outside of Canada as it may decide, and it is anticipated that its research and investigations will require it to undertake a considerable amount of work not just in Canada but also in other countries, and particularly those in which the activities of war criminals were carried out.

I would also refer at this time to the publication today of a working paper by the Law Reform Commission dealing with extraterritorial jurisdiction. In that paper it is stated that Canada's war crime legislation is outdated and ripe for review. The Commission will, in the course of discharging its mandate, consider this question very carefully and make appropriate recommendations. The Government will wish to proceed promptly on all phases of the recommendations and advice ultimately offered by the Commission. This, together with our wish to deal as soon as possible with the issues already raised pertaining to the presence of war criminals in Canada, has led the Government to stipulate a reporting date of December 31, 1985 for the Commission's findings and recommendations. We believe that time frame will meet the immediacy of the situation and permit the inquiry sufficient time fully to carry out its mandate.

I am pleased to announce the appointment of the Honourable Mr. Jules Deschênes, a Justice of the court of Appeal of Quebec and former Chief Justice of that province, as the Commissioner responsible for conducting an inquiry on war criminals. He is an exceptional jurist who, throughout his professional life as a counsel and Justice of the Court, has earned the admiration and respect of all those who know him and his work. He has already rendered many years of service to Canada through his work in the Court of Appeal of Quebec. The Government is grateful that he has accepted this important challenge represented by the mandate that he is about to undertake. I am certain that all Members of the House will join me in wishing him well in the discharge of his responsibilities. We shall all anxiously await the results of this historic inquiry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), I have very great respect for Mr. Justice Jules Deschênes. I am sure that he will conscientiously do the job assigned to him by the Government.

I am bound on behalf of my Party to express the concerns I feel about the course of action proposed by the Government at this time. In the statement which the Minister just made he drew a conclusion. He said:

> In so far as the Government's knowledge extends, we understand from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police that there are relatively few persons living in this country alleged to have been involved in war crimes as described by some of the associations and groups I have referred to.

The Government conclusion to which he is referring is drawn from a very considerable amount of work already done by the Government of Canada under the direction of the former Government. I am concerned that this inquiry will be a substitute for action by the Government for one full year, to December 31. I know that during the time of the former Government only one war criminal was extradited; only one trial occurred. I would like to remind the House that although only one was extradited, as the Minister indicated, there was a very considerable amount of work done by the Government to carry out investigations and to examine all of the Government policies and past practices to which the Minister referred.

I would like to suggest to the Government that it would have been more appropriate to have action. It would be more appropriate to continue in the direction of the former Government and to make public the information which the Government already had that I have discussed with the Hon. Minister and that he knows was more or less in a shape that, with very little additional time and effort, could have been made public. That information should be made public now rather than simply being given to the Commissioner and delayed for another year.

In addition, there were a number of investigations under way. Any one of them might have resulted in a case of extradition. Those should be continued. I do not think there should be a delay in extraditions during the course of this royal commission. I would like to remind the Minister and to tell the House that the former Government was prepared to begin a process, under the successive Citizenship Acts of Canada, of taking away the citizenship of war criminals who had come to Canada having misrepresented their pasts. I urge the Government not to wait until this royal commission is concluded to carry those matters forward.

There are other theories available for dealing with war criminals in this country and bringing them to justice. Last week a group sought to appear before the Justice Committee while we were amending the Criminal Code. They wished to propose to us a method by which war criminals could be brought to justice in Canada. The Government blocked the appearance of those witnesses before our committee on that question. I think they should have been allowed to appear. I think that the report of the Law Reform Commission should be referred to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs now while we are amending the Criminal Code to enable us to do these things now. I would have welcomed a commission like this years ago when there was an absence of information and an absence of a strategy for dealing with war criminals.

In closing, I would like to remind Members of the House and the Justice Minister that the horrors of World War II, the holocaust to which this policy is addressed, is not quite history yet. It is not history as long as there are still fugitives from justice at large in our country. It is not history as long as there are still victims in Canada of the crimes that were committed during World War II. However, it is rapidly becoming history. There are not very many more years in which it will be legally possible to bring these war criminals to justice. The matter is urgent. I think that a year is too long for inaction. I think a year is too long for study.

I would urge the Government to continue the policies that have been begun, to continue the prosecutions, to continue the investigations, and to examine all of the amendments that have been proposed by eminent jurists and by the Law Reform Commission for improving the laws we have now so that war criminals can be brought to justice at this time rather than in 1986. In 1986 it will be too late for many cases that could be brought in 1985. That should not be forgotten. The Government should continue to press forward with policies that will bring war criminals to justice now.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, 1986 is too late, 1985 is too late, and I must say that 1984 was also too late.

I would like to begin by commending the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) for taking the action he has announced today establishing a commission headed by a very respected judge to study all aspects of this very important and difficult issue. At the same time I would like to note that this opportunity must not pass without recognizing that it was the inaction of previous Liberal Governments which led to the admittance of Simon Wiesenthal on to Canadian soil. I need not remind the House as well of Canada's shameful record with respect to the immigration of Jews who were seeking to escape the tyranny of Nazism before and during World War II. I need not remind the House of who was in government at that particular time.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, that the commission which has been established by the Minister of Justice not be seen in any way as a substitute for speedy action by the Government. The Government must not put on hold the actions which have been started. Indeed, I would urge that the investigative unit of the RCMP, which has been established, be strengthened and that its resources and staff be increased. Indeed, the Minister should consider the possibility of a special unit such as has been established in the United States to attempt to identify Nazi war criminals in Canada.

We must address another very fundamental question in the context of this issue. Having identified the possibility of Nazi war criminals on Canadian soil, there must surely also exist a mechanism in Canada to ensure that those war criminals who cannot be extradited to other countries, for whatever reason, do not escape their day of reckoning for the crimes that they are alleged to have committed.

For that reason I would strongly urge the Government to consider seriously implementing the recommendations of the Law Reform Commission on this question. We must establish a means of trying, with all of the legal safeguards which exist in the Canadian judicial system, those individuals in Canada who cannot be extradited to other countries. In that regard I regret the decision of the Government not to permit the possibility of an amendment to the Criminal Code which would have facilitated such trials in Canada.

It has been noted already that the passage of time cannot in any way erase the enormity of the crimes that we are dealing with here, and this has come into sharp focus recently. Many of the victims of the holocaust and their families are still alive. The trial in Israel has clearly documented the atrocities committed by Dr. Mengele. This Commission of Inquiry must have full access to all documents, including immigration documents, records of refugees who have come to Canada, and indeed must be able to look at Cabinet documents to ensure that there is no stone left unturned in our pursuit of justice.

Today there are those in Canada who would deny that the holocaust occurred, who would deny that six million Jews died. We in this Parliament must take every possible step to ensure, first that the perpetrators of those crimes are brought to justice; second, that there is an environment in this country which will lead to justice and not perpetrate the kind of anti-Semitism which was the seed of Naziism in Germany. When we see the burning of synagogues in my own area of Vancouver, when we see denial of the holocaust in courtrooms in this land and when we look at the possibility of Canadian Government complicity with respect to Josef Mengele, these are all questions that must be addressed by this Commission.

I welcome the decision of the Government, Mr. Speaker, as do members of my Party, to establish this Commission. I certainly hope that at the same time as the Commission is studying various alternatives the Government would press forward to examine carefully whether these Nazi war criminals are in Canada and to look at the possibility of prosecution of those individuals in Canada.

In closing, I would note, as has already been stated, that not only are the perpetrators of these atrocities still alive in many cases but so also are their victims, and not just in Canada but everywhere. It is our obligation, as citizens not only of Canada but of the world, to ensure that crimes against humanity are not left unpunished. To the extent that the establishment of this Commission will help to achieve this objective, we welcome it.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any questions?

Mr. Crosbie: May I respond, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: No, it is not possible.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, Members will know that this past fall I had the honour of representing the Government at the United Nations as a member of the Canadian delegation. On the floor of the Third Committee I made a statement at one point which invited all member nations present to send to Canada and to the Canadian Government any information that might be in their possession on the subject of Nazi war criminals who might be resident in Canada.

May I ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) whether, if that information comes to the Government of Canada at this point or in the next few months, it will be passed on to the Commission? Second, does the Government of Canada or the Commissioner in his instructions have any intention of writing to other governments which might be in a position to provide information and advice to us on how best to proceed? Is there anything in those terms of reference that would broaden that inquiry in a deliberate way to seek information from other nations?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference of the inquiry are quite broad. There is nothing in the terms of reference that will prevent the Commissioner from seeking information from other countries. In fact, we contemplate he will visit other countries and authorities in other countries to see what further information he can obtain. If he finds that some alleged war criminals are present in this country, he will then follow up as to how they go into this country, and then naturally he will have to ask questions in other countries.

I am glad the hon. gentleman has asked me this question. He, at least, indicates that he approves of this inquiry. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), who had been in government for four years, had the audacity to try to blame us for taking no action. For only nine months in 1979 and 1980 and for the past five months the Progressive Conservative Party has been in power, whereas for 22 years the Liberal Party was in power. For four years the Hon. Member for York Centre was in office. And he gets up today to criticize us for not taking action!

Mr. Deans: Ignore him.

Mr. Crosbie: I will pass that by because the critic for the New Democratic Party rectified his own sins of error and omission by welcoming the inquiry. I believe this is the way we can establish the facts. We can find out who is responsible for allowing alleged war criminals into Canada since 1945. We do know that of the 40-year period that has expired, 33.1 years were a period of Liberal government, four of them a period of time during which the Member for York Centre was Solicitor

General. I am glad the hon. gentleman is taking some interest in this matter because the Hon. Member for York Centre spoke and left. That is the extent of his interest in this question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The answer to the Hon. Member is yes, we are expecting him to make inquiries abroad and if the Commissioner has any difficulties with the terms of reference we will amend them so that he will indeed have ample scope to look from 1945 onwards to see how the present situation happened to arise.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question with respect to those individuals who are alleged to be Nazi war criminals in Canada but who are not subject to extradition. During the previous Government's term, the Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) in 1981 said in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs:

> I do not think, personally, it would be advisable to start having trials in Canada on actions that occurred in other nations—
> I do not intend to introduce a piece of legislation in Canada to deal with crimes committed in other nations some 35 years ago.

That, Mr. Speaker, was the position of the previous government. Is the Minister prepared to assure this House that he will consider as an option, as recommended by the Law Reform Commission, the possibility of trials in Canada, with all of the legal safeguards that exist with trials of other criminal offences, for crimes against humanity, bearing in mind the fact that the Charter of Rights does permit such trials in Clause 11 of the Charter?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has correctly pointed out that the Government of which the Member for York Centre was a part took the position that legislation to make war crimes, crimes against the laws of Canada, would be retroactive legislation and that his Government would not support it. That was the position when the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice was the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. It was the policy up until that Government was defeated in the election on September 4, 1984. Members of that same Government are chastising us today for not taking action, after they failed to do anything in this direction for the last 30 or 40 years.

The answer to the Hon. Member is that I am prepared to consider the suggestion that there should be legislation of that type passed. It is one of the matters on which this Commissioner has been asked to advise us—as to whether he thinks legislation would be desirable and proper. When we receive his report we will make a final decision.

I am willing to listen to arguments for and against. There is the objection that this would be retroactive legislation in the criminal field, but because it is an extraordinary area and the nature of the crimes are so heinous, we certainly have to consider it. That is one of the tasks of the Commissioner, who will be reporting by the end of this year. We will act quickly once this report is before us. That is my answer to the hon. gentleman's question. The policy of the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) and his Government was that that could not be done. We will look at it with an open mind, and we hope to have the assistance of this Commissioner's report.

• (1530)

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) some questions arising out of his statement. There is no doubt that Members on all sides of the House are very concerned about, in fact, we are very desirous of, having prompt and effective action taken to deal with the possibility that there are in Canada people who have been involved in Nazi war crimes. For that reason I want to ask these questions of the Minister of Justice.

Will his Government allow to continue in existence the special unit in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police which was created by the Solicitor General who is now critic for the Official Opposition, the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), during the time of the previous Government? I am referring to the special unit of the RCMP which was given responsibility for investigating the possibility of there being people in this country who committed war crimes as part of the activities of Nazi Germany during World War II. I want to remind the House that it was the activities of that unit which enabled the successful extradition to Germany of Albert Rauca. Will the Government not only allow that special unit created by the former Government to continue in existence but in fact strengthen it and add further resources to it?

During the term of the royal commission which the Minister announced today, will the work of investigating cases which may lead to the extradition of other people resident in this country for prosecution in other countries for Nazi war crimes, be continued? Will the Government carry on the work already under way and begun by the previous Government of investigating the possibility that there are people in the country whose citizenship could be removed because they did not truthfully answer questions when they entered into Canada about their activities in connection with Nazi war crimes? Finally—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I have now heard approximately one question and seven supplementary ones. Therefore I ask the Hon. Member if he would allow the Minister to answer. There are other Hon. Members who wish to ask questions as well.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I expressed my remarks in the form of questions. I could just as well have expressed them as a statement.

Mr. Speaker: No, with great respect, the Hon. Member could not have done so, since this is a time when Ministers may make statements and their critics may respond, following which all Hon. Members of the House have the right to indulge in a question period with the Minister. Given the Hon. Member's position in the House, I allowed his question and supplementaries, but I must ask him to allow the Minister to respond at this point, given the number of questions he has asked.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer the Hon. Member's questions, as far as I can remember them. This unit in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is still operating. We intend for it to continue operating. The Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) and I have met several times to review its activities. Where matters now stand, there are active investigations under way. As the Hon. Member knows, there are many difficulties in respect of what kind of prosecutions can be launched. We are looking at any situation which involves the possibility of extradition. We are looking at possible deportation. One of the difficulties in that connection is that the records are not always available to show what answers certain people who landed in Canada made at the time.

There is one particular case where we may well be able to initiate a prosecution in that direction. Hopefully we will get the remaining necessary evidence in the next several weeks.

This work is continuing. It is our intention that this unit continue to operate. If satisfactory evidence is obtained, prosecutions will be launched while the present commission carries on its functions. There is no reason that that should not be the case. We are not proposing that the commission proceed and that all other activities cease. They will go on apace. Of course they will also assist the commission and turn over to him all information they have on hand. I assure the hon. gentleman that that work will continue unimpeded.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is next, and then I will recognize the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) for one further question.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have two very brief questions. First let me say to the Minister that I applaud the actions of the Government today. I think it is well past the time when the Government of Canada should have acted in this regard.

Is it the intention of the Governdment to give the commission full access to Cabinet documents in order that it can have all the relevant information it requires?

Also, how does the Government propose to maintain the confidentiality of information which may be forthcoming from citizens with regard to other citizens of Canada and their alleged involvement in Nazi war crimes? We must recognize that we are not only talking about matters which will turn out to be real but about the possibility of matters which may turn out to be inaccurate, information that in fact may not be accurate and could destroy the lives of people.

I think the Minister could tell me fairly quickly how we propose to ensure the necessary degree of confidentiality to enable people not to be victimized by what I suppose could be vindictive actions taken by others against them.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, these are sensible questions; it is a refreshing change.

Mr. Deans: Do you never give up?

Mr. Crosbie: Those comments were not for the hon. gentleman; just refreshing generally. With respect to the question concerning full access to Cabinet documents, the Commissioner will have full access to whatever documents a commissioner with the power of subpoena and so on is entitled to have. I cannot say that he will have full access to all Cabinet documents.

We all know the present contretemps. We all know the situation where one Prime Minister in a former administration agrees and some difficulties may arise. If the Commissioner says to us that he needs access to certain Cabinet documents because he thinks they may reveal x, y or z, then we will endeavour to give him access to them and do what we can to assist him.

I cannot commit myself more than that because there are some problems with Cabinet documents. However, he will have full access to all other government documents, such as immigration records, citizenship records, External Affairs records, Department of Justice records, RCMP files and personnel records.

The Hon. Member pointed out a real danger. We do not want people such as John X, an alleged war criminal, exposed in public when no one knows whether or not he is one. This could present a danger such as we saw in the Grange Commission. Of course the terms of reference direct the Commissioner that the proceedings of an inquiry be held in camera on all matters where the Commissioner deems it desirable, in the public interest or in the interest of ensuring the privacy of individuals involved in specific cases which may be examined.

The Commissioner will have to use his own good judgment and good sense in determining how he will deal with specific cases of individuals to protect their privacy. He will have to decide what criteria he will use. We certainly want him to be very careful in that respect. That is all that I can tell the hon. gentleman. A great deal will depend upon how the Commissioner decides to proceed in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: As I said a moment ago, I will recognize one supplementary question from the Hon. Member for Windsor West and then end it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. In view of the Minister's comments about not having matters slowed down which would otherwise continue while the royal commission is in operation, would he instruct his Parliamentary Secretary to propose at the next sitting of the Justice Committee a motion to reverse the decision taken by the Conservative majority in that committee not to hear Professor Irwin Kotler, past President of the Canadian Jewish Congress, and representatives of the Network Canadian Jewish Student Movement? These two groups were recommended by the steering committee to the standing committee as witnesses to be heard on the matter of amendments to the Criminal Code Bill before the committee, dealing with the issue of trying war criminals in Canada for activities which had taken place outside the country.

Pension Act

● (1540)

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is not properly representing what happened in that committee. The committee has not decided not to hear Professor Kotler and to deal with this issue. The committee has decided, as guided by the law clerk of the committee, that the matter is not relevant while considering the present Criminal Code amendments before the committee. It is going to hear interest groups, Professor Kotler and whoever else wants to be heard later, I think on some date in March.

I am astounded at this continous sniping partisanship which is a part of the Liberal approach to our trying to deal with this problem, which they failed to deal with for the last 40 years. It is a partisan, narrow attempt to get some little advantage, as they perceive it, for their Party by asking such silly and partisan questions in such an unfair, jejune and juvenile manner.

PETITIONS

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting to the House a petition on behalf of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council. The petitioners call upon Parliament to enact employment equity and contract compliance legislation on an urgent basis and urge that employment equity planning in departments begin without delay, and that Parliament support the Abella recommendation for language training and those recommendations directed at the other designated groups, women, the handicapped and the native people.

PENSION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-28, an Act to Amend the Pension Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Ron Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 198.

[Text]

GRANTS TO FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

Question No. 198—Mr. Stackhouse:

In the past fiscal year, have any loans to foreign governments been converted to grants and, if so, what was the total amount?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): There were no cases of loans to foreign governments being converted to grants in the last fiscal year.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On December 5 I placed a question on the Order Paper asking very specifically what contracts had been let in the riding of Manicouagan since the election. One would think the Government would at least know what it was doing in the riding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and would have the decency to respond after two months. I wonder if you, Mr. Speaker, could assist Members in trying to get some answers from this Government, which is just not very forthcoming.

Mr. Stewart: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question as enumerated by the Parliament Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bissonnette that Bill C-23, an Act to Amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Speaker: At this point I am advised that the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) had completed his speech but that the 10 minute period for questions and comments remains.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). He rambled quite a bit, but he did touch on one very important point. I want to ask him a question since he is obviously very knowledgeable about these kinds of things. He will know that for some years the Small Business Development Bank has caused problems in business circles. When a small business gets too big, it has to transfer its accounts to the Federal Business Development Bank, and when a big business gets too small, it has to transfer from the Federal Business Development Bank to the Small Business Development Bank. Has the Member given any consideration to an amalgmation of the Small Business Development Bank and the Federal Business Development Bank?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, as interesting as this question may be, it has nothing to do with the Bill before us, as you have probably recognized, nor does it have anything to do with what I said in my remarks this morning.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the reason I raised the question was that the Hon. Member mentioned the Small Business Development Bank in his remarks. Did the Member realize there is no Small Business Development Bank?

Mr. Boudria: No, Mr. Speaker. I talked about the Federal Business Development Bank and the campaign promises in the document which I have in my hand. It came from the Prime Minister's Office. I would assume that the information in it has at least some semblance of truth in view of the fact that it comes from his own Leader's office.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, many of us sat through the Hon. Member's speech this morning and heard him allude to the fact, as improbable and impossible as it would be, that this Government would somehow be reneging on its promises to business. As this Government is truly the representative Party in Canada, and I think that is beyond dispute, I would like to ask the member of a political Party which brought us FIRA, the National Energy Program, and the untold havoc they created, 22 per cent interest rates, 12 per cent inflation, an Income Tax Act that went to over 1,000 pages, excessive government regulations, 1.5 million people unemployed and other such economic indicators, if he can claim in fact any sort of commitment as a Liberal to small business or, in this case, the amendment to the Small Businesses Loans Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am proud to answer the Hon. Member's question. I can certainly say that the Liberal Party has indeed always been committed to small business. I will even take this opportunity to provide you with a few examples.

First of all, in August 1980, the government established a sub-contracting promotion program for Canadian corporations. It also reduced the tax rates applicable to small businesses. These steps were initiated by a Liberal government in 1972 and improved upon in 1981. The Liberal Party also created the small business advisory council in 1982. Moreover, there have been small business investment grants provided for in the June 1982 Budget which reduced interest rates by as much as 4 percentage points. There has been also the 6 and 5 per cent committee for small businesses. The April 1983 budget also established an investment tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, I believe my hon. colleague asked me the following questions: What action has the Liberal party ever taken for, or what commitment has it ever made to small business? I am in the process of answering his questions. And as you certainly realize, Mr. Speaker, I will need a long time to do so, because the Liberal Party has done quite a lot for small business. I continue.

The April 1983 budget provided also for a research and development tax credit, as well as the forward and backward averaging of losses. There have been also the Export Development Fund, the sharing of labour costs, the amendment to the Federal Development Bank, and I am now coming to the February 1984 budget and all the measures that were taken at that time to improve the small businesses' lot. There have been the streamlining of the tax system for small businesses, a more equitable administration of taxation, the profit sharing program, the changes to the sales tax and, finally, the international trade assistance fund.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. colleague, I can say that the Liberal Party has done quite a lot for small business, and as soon as we return to power, we will continue to demonstrate to the Canadian people our commitment to small business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions! The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has the floor.

• (1550)

Mrs. Mailly: Yes, I would like to make one comment in particular, Mr. Speaker.

In his review, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) overlooked the MacEachen budget which almost destroyed private enterprise. He also neglected to mention the legal action taken by the Department of National Revenue which involved putting a freeze on bank accounts of small businesses. He also forgot to mention the pressure of interest rates as high as 23 per cent felt by small businesses, especially during the summer of 1982. He also neglected to mention the fact that the small business development bond was a measure introduced by the Clark Government in 1979.

We have been in power only four months and we have achieved two very important goals. We introduced a measure which has improved the situation under the previous Government with respect to assistance to widows and widowers and old age security pensions. We also introduced the small business development bond which the Liberal Government, in an absent-minded moment of wisdom—and there certainly was not much of that during its 1980 mandate—included in the MacEachen budget, the only measure that was not changed, Mr. Speaker. There were forty-one measures in the MacEachen budget, and I think thirty-five were changed because they turned out to be harmful, not only to small business but also to the average Canadian.

I therefore have a question for the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

He was employed by the House of Commons under the previous Government. I remember him as the friend of the average Canadian. This was a man who was interested in the average person and who showed concern and sympathized with other people's problems. I think that what I want to say should be seen as a comment rather than a question. I would like to say to the Hon. Member that we admire him for what he is today, a Member of this House. We share his concern as a Member of Parliament who wants to represent his constituents, and we like to see his enthusiasm for defending his constituents. However, we are disappointed that he should be using methods that are perhaps not quite as honest as those he used to help his fellow Canadians when he was an employee of the House of Commons. For instance, at the very beginning of our mandate, in September, he asked this Government for a plaque to commemorate employees of the House of Commons who were killed in the Second World War, and we helped him in this endeavour. I remember that I offered him my support. So I just want to give him some friendly advice, as a fellow Member.

We want to improve the situation of small businesses because it is a sector that will have generated at least seventy per cent of employment over the last five years including this year. It was the only sector to do so because big corporations are struggling with spending problems and lack of capital. They have suffered tremendously as a result of the federal deficit—a deficit we inherited from the previous Government—which made it impossible for them to raise capital on Canadian money markets and forced large corporations to borrow abroad, with a weakened dollar. Government and business were facing major problems. Small businesses were—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time for questions and comments has expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure to have the opportunity to rise this afternoon to make some comments regarding the Bill before us, a Bill to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act of Canada. At second reading, it is customary that we discuss the Bill in principle only, and that is what I will do this afternoon rather than look at the various parts of the Bill and deal with specific amendments to it. That will be done in committee.

I would like to say at the outset that the New Democratic Party feels that this particular Bill is an appropriate one and that it will provide some assistance to the small business community of Canada. We will support it in principle and we will have a number of comments to make and amendments to put forward when it reaches committee stage.

I would like to indicate first that we are talking about what is possibly one of the most important topics that we could be discussing in the House of Commons. It is important in the sense that we are talking about 900,000 businesses in Canada that are referred to as small businesses and are defined as small businesses by the Government of Canada. These businesses are 100 per cent Canadian-owned. Not only are these companies 100 per cent Canadian-owned, their commitment is 100 per cent to Canada. In fact, their commitment is usually 100 per cent to the community in which they are located. These are the businesses that cater to the minor hockey teams and various community organizations. These are the firms that source their products locally wherever possible. These are the firms that are represented on the local chambers of commerce and the local business associations.

The small business sector is the sector of our economy that is committed to Canada and to Canadians. This is also the sector that has created most of the new jobs which have been created in this country in the last five or six years. In excess of 70 per cent of all the jobs created in the private sector have come from the small business sector. I suspect that in the next decade, a full 90 per cent or more of the new jobs created in the private sector in Canada will come from the small businesses of Canada. In terms of finding ways to put 1.5 million people back to work, it is the small business sector to which we must look for that action. The small business sector must be assisted, encouraged and nurtured in every way possible to enable it to grow, to expand and to create those much needed jobs.

I think it is important that when we are talking about businesses that are 100 per cent Canadian, we are also talking about businesses that do the majority of the research and development that has occurred in Canada over the last few years. Not surprisingly, that research and development has come not from the large corporate sector but indeed from the small business sector. It is within the small and medium-sized business sector of Canada that the research and development through to production is being carried out. It is not being carried out in the large corporate sector because most of the large companies are branch plants by definition and their research and development is done back home at the parent company in a country other than Canada.

The important thing is that the small business community of Canada represents the dreams and aspirations of Canadians everywhere. In the large metropolitan areas, in the small cities, in the small communities and indeed in the rural areas, we find that small business person. I say "small business person" because all too often we refer to small business men. We do not mean short business men. However, today, most of the new businesses being created in Canada are being created by women who have entrepreneurial aspirations, dreams and ideas about opening up new ventures. They also have experience. Indeed, not only are most of the new businesses in Canada created by women but more of the successful small businesses in Canada are headed by women. Interestingly, it has become clear that women are the successful business persons of the country and form the sector in which most of the energy is being focused in terms of creating new business opportunities.

When we talk about the small business community, we talk about the very life-blood of the community itself. I do not suppose that there are many people in the House of Commons today or many people who are watching the proceedings today who have not opened up a small business themselves in the past, who are in the process of doing so, or who dreamed of that day when they may open up their own independent business. It is part of the fabric of Canadian society. It is what built Canada.

• (1600)

I would totally eliminate what Liberal Members have said about small business in this debate. If we looked at what Liberal Governments did year after year, decade after decade, to support and encourage small business and the number of programs which were designed to cater to business, we would realize that there were only three programs out of 200 which were designed to help small business. The remaining programs were designed to help major business. It is clear by that where the Liberal priority has been.

During the past year, something in the neighbourhood of $30 billion was lost to the federal Treasury as a result of business tax breaks. We could talk about whether or not tax breaks are serving their appropriate role, but nevertheless $30 billion was spent to provide incentives to business. Of that amount, 80 per cent goes to the large corporate sector, which represents 1 per cent of all the businesses in Canada. That 1 per cent receives 80 per cent of the corporate tax breaks. So if we talk about the efforts of Liberal Governments it is clear where the priorities have been.

I suspect it is too early to criticize the present Government about the extent to which it will support the small business sector. However, I am concerned that the first major piece of legislation which was introduced by the new Government was the Investment Canada Bill. The Government told outside investors and foreign companies that Canada was open for business, even though Canada has more foreign control and ownership in its economy than any industrialized country in the world. That means that the large corporate institutions will move into Canada and provide more competition to existing small business firms. We could debate the merits of that and whether more of our economic future will be determined in Hong Kong, Houston, Texas, and New York. We could also debate the fact that, as a result of more foreign control and investment in our economy, more sourcing of goods and supplies will come from outside Canada. Small business in Canada buys locally and inevitably Canadian, but multinational or transnational corporations which operate in Canada by definition source from their parent companies in other lands or where their major interests lie, which, of course, is not Canada. The Investment Canada legislation indicates where the priorities of this Government lie, and it would seem that once again those priorities are not necessarily with the small business sector. However, as a caveat, I would suggest that it is still too early to say.

There is another indicator about which I am very concerned. If we want to provide support and assistance to small business, the most appropriate action the Government could take would be to reduce interest rates. It should forget the dozens of programs and the tax incentives which are of little value to the small business sector. After all, we could throw all the tax incentives we wanted at that sector, but for the first few years of a new venture no profits are realized. We want to encourage the new small business sector and the creative aspect of business. If small businesses do not make any profits, tax incentives will be of little interest to them. However, I suspect that the Government will provide tax incentives to those small firms which cannot use them.

Of course, the banks and the large corporate sector can use those incentives. Today it was indicated that oil company profits are up 50 per cent and that the banks had an 18 per cent return of equity this year. They can use the tax breaks, but the small business sector will not be able to. The way to assist the small business sector is through interest rates.

Today we witnessed a very disturbing fact. At two o'clock it was announced that interest rates in Canada had jumped substantially for the second week in a row. I suspect there is not an honest financial analyst in the country who would say that interest rates are not likely to continue to increase. Not only are increasing interest rates the sort of thing which will dampen small business expansion in the country, but it is the uncertainty of those interest rates that will have a major effect. This Thursday interest rates are a little over 10 per cent. What will the rates the next Thursday, five Thursdays from now or 16 Thursdays from now? It is that uncertainty which makes it difficult—and I suspect some would say impossible—for most small businesses to begin or to expand. If we are to assist the small business community, we must have stability in order that people can predict with some certainty what will happen in the next few months. If a small entrepreneur has no idea what the interest rates will be next Thursday, let alone six months from now, it makes it impossible to make predictions and do the necessary financial planning.

Other countries assist the small business community, and particularly the small businesses which are just starting up. I think it is fair to say that we do virtually nothing. Granted, we are talking about the Small Businesses Loans Act and the fact that the Government will provide more money. However, out of the 50,000 new businesses which started last year and the 900,000 businesses which already exist, only 25,000 made use of the Act. That is a small but important proportion.

However, the point is, are any changes really being made? We are not really making any big changes but two small changes are being made. One is that the government guarantee will be reduced from 100 per cent to 90 per cent. Over the years this legislation, which was introduced by the Liberal Government, has been a money-making machine for the banks of Canada. The previous Government allowed up to $100,000 to lent to anyone who was starting a business and guaranteed that the bank would get paid. It did not matter if it was the goofiest idea in the world or if there had been any past experience or confidence in the business, the lending institution received a 100 per cent guarantee from the Government. We can imagine what the banks must think of us as legislators. I sometimes feel that we give a lot to the banks, but I suspect that if they were to pick a target, they would say that this is an unbelievable piece of legislation because the Government guarantees 100 per cent of any loan which is written under the Act. Obviously, it is something which had to be changed. Bringing the guarantee down to 90 per cent may be the proper route, but it could also be brought down to 80 per cent or 70 per cent. The banks must be assured that the Government is paying attention to a particular small business and that it will be making some effort to encourage and advise that small business on financial matters, but, with a 100 per cent guarantee, it does not matter if the business fails because the banks will get back the money.

Another aspect of the Bill which concerns me is the imposition of the user fee of 1 per cent which we are asking banks to pay. I am not suggesting that we should not ask the banks to pay that 1 per cent. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the Canadian Organization of Small Business have both said that the banks should not be asked to pay that. They feel it is unfair. If it is not enticing for the banks to assist small business, the banks will not do so. That is what those organizations are saying.

I think it is time that Parliament sent a very clear message to the banks of Canada telling them that they have a responsibility as privileged financial institutions which are operating under the Bank Act. Our banking system is such that five large banks control 90 per cent of the banking in the country. I would not say that it is a cartel, but it is close to that. We should be telling the Royal Bank of Canada and the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and so on, that we expect them to set aside a portion of their loan money for the small business sector. I think it is time that we as a Parliament said to the banks and trust companies that we expect them to assist that growing small business sector. This is where the jobs are going to be created and this is where we should expect them to co-operate. Other countries do that, Mr. Speaker. Other countries tell their banks that they must set aside money at an 8 per cent guaranteed interest rate for assistance to family businesses over a 25-year period, and they must do that for family homes as well and in some cases for small family farms. And the banks do it, Mr. Speaker, and they still do very well. It is time that Canadians started to make some of these same kinds of demands on our chartered banks.

West Germany, for example, Mr. Speaker, in order to assist its small businesses which are just starting out but are viable, provides for the first few years a subsidy of between 6 per cent and 15 per cent of the total investment. It gives an outright subsidy for the first few years in order to allow the small businesses to get their operations underway. In New Zealand, the Government provides interest-free loans for each business for every job which is created. If a business creates 15 jobs or 35 jobs, it receives interest-free money to reflect that. In Ireland, low interest financing is available. In Denmark, cash grants of up to 25 per cent of the initial startup cost is available, plus 15-year fixed interest loans. Japan puts out a book two inches thick listing all the ways in which it assists small businesses. Japan assists small businesses by having an interest rate set at 5 per cent. Japan, one of the countries in the world which is most tied in to the international money market, says, "We can have a 5 per cent interest rate because that is what is going to stimulate our economy and that is what is going to motivate those people who saved to invest their capital in the small business sector and elsewhere". It is time that we started to lower interest rates in order to assist the small business sector. It is time that we altered the Bank Act to make it very clear to the banks that we expect them to assist the small business sector in a direct way by fixed low interest small business loans. It is time that this Government introduced by buy-Canada policy so that when government supply and services are being sourced in this country, they are being sourced from Canadian suppliers first. I am suggesting that we have to be competitive in terms of pricing but we must, as our first priority, assist our own businesses.

I would also like to make the point that this should be developed equally across Canada. When we look at where government sourcing takes place today, we find that the overwhelming sourcing takes place in central Canada. Ten per cent of supply and services is sourced in western Canada. That is a disgrace, Mr. Speaker. Less than 10 per cent is sourced from Atlantic Canada. Those are the two parts of Canada where we need to do everything possible in order to get their small businesses back on track. Government sourcing from those two areas would certainly be an appropriate step and one which the Government could introduce almost immediately.

We must look at a variety of ways to assist the small business sector. Something that we could do is to provide some seed money, some small financing to those business groups which are working together in an effort to combine their creative and manufacturing talents and their efforts in terms of seeking out new markets and developing new products. I refer as an example to a group in my own community, the Thompson-Nicola Manufacturing Association, a group of manufacturers which came together as an association to find out, by combining their efforts, talents and the equipment available, how much more could be produced and how many more markets they could access. It is that kind of co-operation, Mr. Speaker, that deserves assistance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret, but the Hon. Member's time has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Public Service—Auditor General's report—Job classifications. (b) Contract negotiations; the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone)—Employment—Summer jobs for students. (b) Request for announcement of plans; and the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson)—Income Tax Act—Provision affecting land purchases.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens (York-Peel) that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Hon. Member which might make him more realistic. I can understand the problems with the banks, but unfortunately, we still do not control the banks and it is up to them to decide whether a loan will be approved or not.

If my hon. friend looks at the statistics collected up to now, he will see that the majority of jobs have been created by small businesses. I think that everyone will agree with that. This morning, everyone said that, during the last few years, 80 or 90 per cent of all jobs created were in the small business sector.

If we look at the statistics, as I understand what the Hon. Member was saying, 50 per cent of all small businesses have used the programs offered under the Small Businesses Loans Act. If we look at the figures, as I was saying, we can see that these are all new businesses. Naturally, the first time a Canadian businessman goes to the bank and asks for a loan, he does not have any experience. It is therefore very difficult for the banks to give him a loan.

Under the Small Businesses Loans Act, the Government guarantees 100 per cent of the loans, which will make the bank more willing to grant a loan to newcomers in business than if, as provided by this bill, the amount of the guarantee goes down to 90 per cent, in addition to the 1 per cent user fees. In practice, I can assure you that many banks will refuse loans, which means that we shall lose jobs because, usually, every new business creates four or five new jobs.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain I understood the exact question. I believe the Hon. Member was saying that the Small Businesses Loans Act does enable a new firm to obtain money because of the guarantee, and he asked if that was a good thing. I would have to say, of course, that it is. That is why we are supporting this particular Bill going into committee. However, I believe 100 per cent is a little too much to ask while expecting the banks not to get involved in any serious way themselves. A 90 per cent guarantee in this day and age, I suspect, is about as much as we can expect.

But I do want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the problem I have with the Small Businesses Loans Act is that it is the prime rate plus 1 per cent. Interest rates are going up again. They are higher today than they were a year ago. I think we need to make that point. A year ago today, interest rates were lower in Canada than they are now, and now they are on an upward track. Let us hope that this does not continue, but as I said earlier, all the financial analysts suggest that this is what is going to happen. The prime rate today, Mr. Speaker, plus 1 per cent works out to something like 12.5 per cent. A small business which is expected to pay back a loan at 12 per cent, 13 per cent, 14 per cent or 15 per cent is going to have difficulty doing so. As a matter of fact, it may even be an impossibility. So while it is a step in the right direction, I must say that it is a tiny step. Certainly, much more must be done in terms of changing the Bank Act to require banks and other financial institutions to set aside a certain portion of their loan portfolio for small businesses at a lower rate than prime. That should be an expectation and a requirement under the Bank Act. Perhaps a step in that direction would be for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to sit down with the chief executive officers of Canada's banks and ask them at least to shoulder their responsibility during these difficult times and encourage and nurture the small business community.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is always a joy to listen to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) speak on behalf of the New Democratic Party. Today he spoke some truth when he indicated that the most significant thing which could happen for small business in this country is a low interest rate. I am pleased to see that a sense of enlightenment has come to him and to his caucus. I wonder whether or not the Hon. Member is signalling to the House, on behalf of his Party, the fact that in the future we can anticipate the same support for the Government's effort to reduce its borrowing requirements as we are receiving today for this particular piece of legislation? This is a very significant factor in interest rates in this country. Will his Party support our efforts to reduce those borrowing requirements? Likewise, will his Party support our initiatives which are designed to bring into this country from abroad equity capital as well as skilled entrepreneurs? By doing that, we can signficantly reduce interest rates and create jobs. Can we expect that kind of support from his Party? Is his desire to lower interest rates really genuine?

● (1620)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we say those are our intentions. We are the only political Party for many years which has said that we should direct the Governor of the Bank of Canada to start enacting a made-in-Canada interest rate policy and start moving interest rates down. We are the only political Party which has said that that ought to be the case. But what we do not support is the Governor of the Bank of Canada, today and every other day, going out and spending millions, nay, hundreds of millions of dollars in some weeks to buy our own currency to keep interest rates up. That we consider to be folly.

I respect the Hon. Member's question and I understand the point he is making, but I want to say to him that we in the NDP do not feel it is necessary to go to Japan, Europe, the United States or Southeast Asia to find capital and creativity and entrepreneurship to develop the Canadian economy. We are convinced it can be done right here in Canada. We are convinced that we have enough capital to start. We have the creativity, energy, talents and resources right here in this country. What we lack is the will. As long as Members opposite can send out a signal to Canadians that they do not have enough faith in Canadians so that we have to bring in foreign citizens to solve these economic problems, Canadians are going to be reluctant to take this Government into their confidence.

Interest rates at present levels are an incentive for Canadians and others to save. When you have a choice to invest in a secure term deposit and obtain 12 per cent to 15 per cent return with no effort, no work, no worry and no risk, or take the same money and put it into a business venture in Canada today, what would you do as a sensible investor, Mr. Speaker? With interest rates as high as they are, savings are encouraged and the entrepreneurial spirit, willingness and ability of people to invest is discouraged. So we say, let us have confidence in Canada. The best way to do that is to stop looking outside Canada for answers and take steps to mobilize the capital we have in our country.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now over. The Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard).

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak about small businesses in relation with Bill C-23.

[English]

However, before beginning my introductory remarks, may I make some comments on the speech this morning made by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). I enjoyed the slap and dash and flash of that speech. It reminded me a little bit of the hockey game last night: lots of fire and flash, but unfortunately they kept losing sight of the goal.

Ms. Copps: But who has the trophy?

Mr. Winegard: Since I have now heard, as usual, from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), may I say on this particular subject, Mr. Speaker, that I hope she will immediately move into a small business enterprise because her salary from this Chamber will certainly not pay the hospital bills to which I intend to subject her for falling on my shoulder last night.

This area of our economy, namely small business, is one that former Liberal Governments have never really understood. It is an area, as we heard earlier today, which has been hampered by red tape, excessive government interference and a tax system that even the Ministry of National Revenue did not understand. The current Government is taking and will continue to take all the steps necessary to ensure that small business is able to generate the jobs so badly needed in this country. This Government understands that private enterprise creates wealth and jobs, not the Government. When small business flourishes, Canada flourishes. What this country needs is more small business people making more money through their own endeavours and enjoying the fruits of their labour as they bring Canada back to prosperity.

Things have changed in the last 30 or 40 years. There was a time when people did not need so much government help in starting a business. I would like to relate my personal experiences in small business and how things have changed. Immediately after World War II, my father, my brother and I began a small business, which still continues. When we opened that business in 1945, we had some veterans' allowances to contribute, but the most important thing is that we opened with 500 gallons of gasoline—the oil companies were prepared to give you credit in those days—one tire, I think one patching kit and three orange crates for chairs. Now you know and I know, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot start a business like that today. It costs you hundreds of thousands of dollars to move into such an automobile business because you need to have a large stock of parts, the best equipment and so on. It is very difficult for someone in the early stages of setting up a business to accumulate that kind of capital. Indeed, it is difficult for someone to go to the bank without any collateral and seek that kind of money. They must have an ironclad opportunity.

Bill C-23, this Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, as the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) said just the other day, demonstrates the federal Government's recognition that small business is the engine of growth and that the changes we propose, following consultation on the future of the Small Businesses Loans Act with business, are the first results of that continuing process of consultation aimed at strengthening the small business sector and, as I said earlier, thus strengthening the Canadian economy.

Who is eligible? When I think of small business, I think immediately of the service industries, the retail industry, small manufacturing. Of course, they are the ones that are eligible.

• (1630)

The purpose of this Act is to provide for the purchase of equipment, which is so expensive and difficult to come by, the improvement or modernization of equipment and plants themselves, and even the purchase or construction of premises. Those are all necessary to run a small business today. The last report on the Small Business Loans Act indicates that 40 per cent of the authorized amount was taken up by the service industries, 26 per cent was taken up by the retail industry, and 10 per cent was taken up by the manufacturing industry. Others were, of course, significantly lower. That may be the only thing that one can credit the Liberal Government for in terms of small business. The rest of its policies have been a disaster. The group which I have just named will strengthen the economy.

This Bill increases the existing two year loan ceiling by $300 million to $1.8 billion. To a Conservative, $1.8 billion is a lot of money. No further proof is needed of the success of and need for this program than the response of business people. Quick passage of this Bill will provide people with the funds they need to develop the engine of growth in this country.

I would like to reiterate the remarks made by the Hon. Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Bissonnette). He said that the efficient private sector delivery of the Small Business Loans Act is one of its most attractive features. The program's simplicity of delivery and lack of red tape have contributed greatly to its popularity with lenders and borrowers alike. Government helps the private sector to help itself. We should have had that kind of philosophy for the last 20 years.

The interest rate on these loans is reasonable in today's terms. The sharing of the risk by the financial institutions is also an important element of the modified program. The lenders are part of our free enterprise system. It is appropriate that they share the risks as well as the benefits of our system.

I have no quarrel with the definition of small business in this Bill. I think that the eligibility limit of under $2 million is a good compromise. On average, the larger corporations have more resources, both financial and human, to use to find ways to finance their operations. Small businesses, however, are often owned by a family or a small group of people whose expertise is in operating the business rather than in trying to find money to keep it going. The Government is prepared to help small business people get a start, to modernize their plants, and to obtain better equipment in order to compete. When they work, the country works. I am pleased to support this Bill, Mr. Speaker, because it is one way to help return the country to prosperity.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with a lot of interest to the points made by the Hon. Member. If he is really interested in helping small business, would it not be most appropriate to take action to reduce interest rates in the country and to establish a made-in-Canada interest rate policy as opposed to a made-in-America interest rate policy?

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I think we are taking action. We have had an economic statement, which will indeed revive the spirit of the country. We can expect a budget in April, which I hope will signal once again that we mean business in terms of reducing government expenditures so that we do not borrow so much that our interest rates will go up. We need to turn business loose, particularly small business. This particular Act is a small measure. As the Hon. Member said in his speech, there is much more we can do and I hope we will do it.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for giving credit to the Liberal Government. This morning I said exactly what the Hon. Member has said now. I asked the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Bissonnette) whether he would split the Bill in two in order to allow us to give speedy passage to the part to which the Hon. Member referred.

What is the Hon. Member's opinion of the 90-10 per cent ratio guaranteed between banks and the Government and the 1 per cent user fee? Does he think that these two amendments will reduce the lending activity between banks and small businesses?

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the fee will reduce the lending activity at all. That kind of deterrent is not going to be very significant when money is available. I certainly do approve of the 90-10 split. In fact, I might have gone even further because I believe that the lending institutions should accept some of the responsibility and risk in return for the benefits they enjoy in this free enterprise system.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question relating to the answer which the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) gave about the 90-10 split. Could he elaborate on his answer? The previous speaker for the New Democratic Party said that he is in agreement with that because the banks should be taking some of the risk. Two organizations representing the small business community in Canada have voiced support for that particular measure. I cannot understand why everyone who has spoken on the Bill supports this measure. Would this not cause the banks to have a second look at that loan? Would this not discourage the banks from actually giving the loan? Would this not make them think twice, as the fee would make them think twice? Why are these organizations, representing small business in Canada, saying it should be more difficult for the small businessman to get a loan? I do not understand it.

• (1640)

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it will be more difficult for the small businessman to get a loan. The banks in this country, not as much as the banks in the United States, I grant you, are used to taking risks. They need to take more. I am delighted that even 10 per cent of this risk will now reside with the lending institutions of this country. I would have gone further but I am at least content with that, unlike the previous Bill which was for 100 per cent and you had Government once again believing that it must do everything.

Mr. Hicks: Mr. Speaker, I discovered that the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) and myself have a great deal in common. He and his father went into the garage business many years ago. My father and I did the same. I wish to make it clear to him, however, that his operation was extremely luxurious in comparison with ours. We could not afford the orange crates.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hicks: The specifics of the Bill that are being debated probably will not alone create a great deal of jobs. The specifics of any proposal being put forth by this Government will probably not create, in themselves, a specific number of jobs.

Mr. Riis: Lower interest rates would.

Mr. Hicks: What I see happening is confidence, a great deal of confidence, being instilled across the country, because actions such as this are contagious. Does the Hon. Member agree with what I have just said?

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I never disagree with the Hon. Member who has just spoken. I have to tell him that the orange crates were given to us. I think my younger brother had some kind of an in with the grocery store at the time.

As always, I am delighted to find that the Hon. Member and I are in complete agreement with what has to be done in this country.

Mr. McKenzie: Is there still time for a question, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, a short one.

Mr. McKenzie: The Hon. Member mentioned that years ago he was able to operate and survive because we had stability in the country, Mr. Speaker. I remember at that time that interest rates were 3 per cent and 4 per cent. We lost all stability in this country when we had the Liberal-NDP coalition from 1972 to 1974.

Mr. Riis: What a confidence builder! You keep whining and whining.

Mr. McKenzie: In complete co-operation with the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Government of that day inherited a $673 million surplus and turned it into a $4 billion deficit.

Mr. Riis: You never say anything positive.

Mr. McKenzie: And the NDP boasts that minority governments—

Ms. Copps: There he goes.

Mr. Riis: Do we have to have more?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If the Hon. Member wants to ask a question, I will try to recognize him, but now the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine has the floor.

Mr. McKenzie: I realize the truth hurts, Mr. Speaker, only too well.

Mr. Riis: There he goes again. Do you eat nails for breakfast?

Ms. Mitchell: No, I think it is garbage.

Mr. McKenzie: Would the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) agree with me that this enormous debt which the Liberal-NDP coalition ran up in that period when our debt payments ran at something like 28.4 billion, which was an increase of 50 per cent in that period, was the start of the economic chaos in this country and the destruction of the free enterprise system? It was in that period with that coalition that the downfall of this country started. We had increases in inflation and increases in interest rates. Would the Hon. Member agree or disagree with me on that?

Mr. Riis: Are you bringing it up again?

Mr. McKenzie: I will bring it up every time, you phoney. We have had enough of that b.s.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Guelph for a very short reply.

Mr. Winegard: How could I disagree with such wisdom, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now been terminated. Is the Hon. Member for Hamilton East rising on debate?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understood the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) to say he had had enough of that. We had been lectured yesterday—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Ms. Copps: We had been lectured yesterday by the House Leader on the government side—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Ms. Copps: —about civility. It seems to me—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. We are now on debate. Is the Hon. Member for Hamilton East rising to debate this Bill?

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is oftentimes said that to the victor go the spoils. I am sure a number of the government Members have been gloating over that particular premise since September 4. I just want to respond very briefly to the comments made by the very able hockey player from the riding of Guelph by saying that although the Government won, it was the Opposition that took advantage of the spoils. We will be happy to present the trophy to its rightful owners in the House tomorrow. The trophy is currently in the possession of the opposition Parties. To the victors did not go the spoils. I know that the medical bills—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Those of you who did not participate will know that we all had a lot of fun last night in a very non-partisan way, and I am sure we would love to see that spirit flow over into the House today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I know that the medical bills that I will be receiving from the Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) will be very high. This Government has closed its eyes, as have the provinces across this country, to extra billing. Knowing the number of opted-out physicians in the City of Guelph, I am sure the opted-out bill that I am going to receive will be very high, but it will be paid accordingly.

On a serious note, Mr. Speaker, I was intrigued by the comments of the Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) who pointed to the demise of the modern economic system as dating back to 1972. First, I think he gave us a decade of good government on the Liberal side of the House, and for recognizing that I would like to congratulate him. I would like to make sure he stands up and clarifies that in the House. Second, and it is a point that I would like to relate specifically to this Bill, is his comment regarding the alleged Liberal-NDP coalition. We have heard the comments from the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party with respect to this Bill. They follow very closely along the position taken by the Government. I refer to the decision of the Government to introduce a Bill that will force small businesses into a position of not being guaranteed 100 per cent but simply 90 per cent liability. Anybody who has been in business will know that one of the greatest difficulties in establishing and maintaining a business is the problem of venture capital and cash flow. It seems to me that in this particular measure the Government is not going to back up small businesses 100 per cent. The Government is saying that it will only back them up 90 per cent. I have seen friends in my own constituency who have gone to their bank managers pleading for an extra month's extension on a payment. I have seen people trying to juggle the kind of cash flow between receivables and payables that can make or break a small business.

I would like to point out in passing that a number of Members in this House have referred to the difficulties faced by small businessmen. Of the new businesses generated in Canada last year more than 50 per cent were created by a new level of enterpreneurs, namely, by women of this country. I think it is about time that we excised from our vocabulary the notion that the only people who could be interested in business are businessmen. It has clearly been shown through past history that women, being the frugal sort that we are, have a greater opportunity to succeed in starting a small business. That is certainly showing itself in the successful record of women in business which is beginning to emerge across Canada.

I cannot understand why the NDP supported the Government in what I perceive to be a very regressive measure, in particular as it relates to lending practices for small businesses seeking venture capital. They need the kind of loan guarantees which may in fact make or break them.

I am happy to see the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) here today. In terms of the housing industry, CMHC does not only say that it will guarantee a percentage. It says to the bank that if the borrower is prepared to put up a certain percentage, it will provide a 100 per cent guarantee from that point forward. I cannot understand why the Government is suggesting that the same financial incentives should not be provided to the small business sector.

I should like to take this opportunity to remind government Members of the promises which were made to the small business sector prior to the last election. There were a number of promises. We know they numbered in the three hundreds across all areas, but I will not debate that at this particular time. However, in the area of small business there were in fact 12 promises, most of which led to the idea of developing more accessible capital, in particular development and venture capital for small business, as well as reducing bureaucratic red tape and the difficulties currently being faced by small business people who expect to obtain loans. I should like to cite them for the record.

The first promise was to reduce the burden of excessive regulations and reporting requirements with which small business has to cope.

An Hon. Member: It has been done.

Ms. Copps: What has happened with that regulation? I am sorry the Hon. Member for Saskatchewan has not had a chance to read the Bill. If he had read it, he would know that in Clause 5 the Conservative Government is saying that from now on the Governor in Council will be allowed to change by regulation all registration of loans, procedures for submission, processing and payment, the fee, and the payment and calculation of the fee. The Government is taking a Pontius Pilate approach to streamlining small business loans. It is now saying, as of this clause, that it will wash its hands of any responsibility and that it will be the Governor in Council who will have the opportunity to do so through regulation which will not even be examined in the House by Members who were duly elected across the country. It will now be the responsibility of the Governor in Council to design regulations relating to small business loans.

There is nothing written in this Bill which will guarantee that the Governor in Council in fact will move to streamline the process. Rather than seeing an attempt to show some leadership to take economic matters in hand and to cut down on red tape, the Government is saying that it cannot do it and is passing that responsibility over to the Governor in Council. If the Governor in Council decides in the future to decrease the availability of loans, to increase the amount charged in terms of interest rates, or to increase the amount of regulation required, it can be done without any reporting to the House. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this particular Bill, the fifth provision is a clear abdication of the responsibility of the Government to live up to the promises it made to taxpayers on September 4.

In a similar vein, the third promise was to reduce the level of taxation facing small business and the complexity of the tax system with which it must cope. We do not see a move to reduce the level of taxation, but in fact there is a move to increase it by imposing a 1 per cent user fee on all people who are currently able to take advantage of the provisions of the Small Businesses Loans Act at no charge. While the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard), who has been in business for a long time, may feel that a 1 per cent deterrent—and he did call it a deterrent in the House—may not be very large, I can tell him on behalf of all new and struggling businesses, and those businesses that in fact create new jobs for Canadians, that a 1 per cent surcharge on a loan which can potentially be in the hundreds of thousands of dollars can be a very severe detriment. Not only is the Government suggesting that 1 per cent surcharge or that 1 per cent user fee, which even government Members decried in the Chamber today with respect to the Government's decision to start charging user fees in the agricultural sector, it is also suggesting that it is not prepared to stand behind the small businesses of the country by offering 100 per cent loan guarantees.

I do not know how many Members of the House have had dealings with banks. I am surprised to see that the NDP has not taken a more progressive attitude in this particular respect. Anyone who expects that banks will not look harder and approve fewer loans as a result of this measure is simply not in tune with the realities of cash flow difficulties currently facing small businesses. I am sure there are Hon. Members on all sides of the House who could rise and indicate the problems which small businesses have with banks. They have been well documented. I am sure they could attest to personal difficulties or recount personal horror stories in which they or their constituents have been subjected to great difficulty.

Banks are not prepared to take risks. If we reduce by 10 per cent the amount of government guarantee for banks, we will find ourselves in a situation where the already squeezed cash flow, which is currently not being made available on an equitable basis to small business in comparison with large business in the country, will in fact be even further reduced, coupled with a 1 per cent user fee. This basically tells Canadian small business people—

Mr. Riis: Banks pay the user fee.

Ms. Copps: I understand that. Just as the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said with respect to CMHC, eventually it is the consumer who pays, whether he be a borrower in terms of a house or a borrower in terms of a business. Surely the Hon. Member does not think that banks will give a free ride on the actual user fee. Of course banks will pass that particular cost on to borrowers. If the Hon. Member thinks that banks will pick up this particular 1 per cent fee without passing it along in terms of increased charges to consumers of lending services, he does not understand the way in which banks work or he has not looked at a bank service charge lately.

I should like to refer to another promise—

[Translation]

—made by the Government before September 4. They said they would improve the financial options for small businesses. But now we see what they are doing with this Bill. They are doing exactly the opposite, because what they are asking for is more than simply giving all responsibilities to the Governor in Council. Henceforth, the Government will no longer prescribe regulations governing loans made under this Bill. According to Clause 5, it will be up to the Governor in Council to decide whether the regulations should be changed, whether the rate of interest ought to be lower or higher.

Even if we were to agree to the rest of the regulations, Clause 5 makes it quite clear that regulations governing small business loans will no longer be made by this House of Commons. The Governor in Council will change anything at any time at will, and that is why, Mr. Speaker, I am saying that this Government has adopted this kind of Pontius Pilate approach, contrary to the promises made during the last election campaign, before September 4.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I am waiting for questions—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

[English]

I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I should like to advise her that it is now five o'clock and we have to go on to Private Members' Business. Before doing so, however, I should like her to know that she has five minutes remaining as far as her speech is concerned and the 10-minute question and comment period will follows when the Bill comes back to the House.

[Translation]

Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to Item No. 126?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

ADVISABILITY OF AMENDING THE ACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 11, 1984, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lopez:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order to eliminate reassessments and legal actions for the payment of income tax in arrears in cases where errors or omissions happened in taxpayers' income tax returns for the pre-1984 fiscal years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) had 15 minutes remaining. Is he going to participate? He is not here. The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise to continue the debate on this motion made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez). I suggest to the House that it serves a very useful purpose today. I compliment the Hon. Member for taking the time to become involved in the process so early in his career. Having read his speech, I believe he put some thought into what he is trying to do. Now I want to pose some questions on the other side of the issue and expand it.

The debate on this motion gives us an opportunity to examine some of the important issues that are involved in our income tax system. It gives the Members of this House an opportunity to reflect on the many changes which have been introduced by our Government respecting the administration of the Income Tax Act. I hope that through this debate we will increase public awareness and the understanding of some of the problems that exist.

I suggest that our experiences during the past year, especially of those who were here in the last Parliament, demonstrates the axiom that perhaps we do not realize the value of an institution until it starts to develop problems. For half a century the federal Government has relied heavily on income tax revenue to finance the many services and social support systems on which Canadians count. Not only does it generate a large part of the revenues needed, but the tax system is used by Governments to further economic and social goals. Through its array of deductions, exemptions and tax credits, it provides an incentive to economic activities that we want to encourage, tax relief in certain circumstances and income support to others such as low income parents.

There is no question about it, the tax system is a vital part of our Canadian community, but it is also a system that has to be handled with some care. We cannot forget that the tax system is based on self-assessment. The Government relies on Canadians to make out their own tax returns, to report their incomes fully and to compute their own tax bill. Obviously that kind of a system demands a mutual trust and respect between the taxpayer and the Government. It is equally obvious that under the previous Liberal administration, the system developed severe problems.

In recent years, the amount of tax arrears owing to the Government rose to $3.5 billion. There were probably many reasons for that, including the economic recession under the former Liberal Government, which placed severe pressures on the financial positions of Canadians. There was an inability to pay taxes incurred in previous years. There was a need for liquid cash on the part of the person who owed the money. Aside from that, there arose during that period growing difficulties in relations between the taxpayer and the Government. Instead of the relationship continuing to be one of mutual trust, it became very adversarial, not at the tax appeal court level, but at every level.

Under the Liberals, the practice grew of various income tax offices using quotas to judge the performance of tax assessors. Any chartered accountant, of which I am one, can tell you that you cannot base the tax you are going to assess on how long it took you to assess it. There is absolutely no relationship whatsoever between the two. It was the practice of the former Government which allowed that to happen. It then became undue pressure as well as a quota system.

As a result of that terrible abuse of the rights of Canadian taxpayers, the Progressive Conservative Party set up a task force on Revenue Canada under the chairmanship of the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty). That task force travelled not just to Toronto and Montreal, but to smaller communities across Canada. It heard depositions from the people who were being abused by the tax system and the assessors. As a result, we produced 72 or 73 recommendations within three months of the formation of that task force, at a time when the consultant hired by the former Liberal Government was still trying to hire his staff. We had made our recommendations long before the Liberal Government's consultant was able to get off the ground. We are now in the process of implementing those reforms, some in the form of legislative amendments to the Income Tax Act and some through administrative improvements.

Let me go back to November 8 when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made very clear to the Canadian people the serious consequences of the escalating deficit under Liberal Governments and our huge national debt. When more and more of our financial resources are required just to carry the cost of servicing the debt burden, the Government's ability to meet the economic problems of the country are restricted.

The effect of the proposal before us, despite its good intentions—and no one doubts the good intentions of the Hon. Member—would run counter to the Government's effort to start putting our financial house in order so that we can better promote economic renewal and job creation. That is the background and the context from which we have to look at this motion of the Hon. Member for Chateauguay.

A recent experience under the Liberal Government proves that it is important to create and maintain a policy of treating taxpayers with fairness, sensitivity and respect. Revenue Canada has the legal responsibility of enforcing the tax laws which this House passes, and so it must be firm. We all realize that. However, as well as being firm, it has to be fair. The two must go hand in hand in any taxing authority. Frankly, it is not clear from this motion that by its passage we would be firm and fair. It would have the Government abandon any effort to collect taxes that are legally owing for past years in cases where the taxpayer has made an error or omission in his or her return. It is not clear whether or not the sponsor of this Bill means that that is to cover only inadvertent errors or omissions or deliberate ones. On the face of it, the wording of the motion would include deliberate attempts to falsify returns or the omission to report income which should be taxable. I am not saying for a minute that there is a great deal of that, but this motion would have the effect of including deliberate attempts. I suggest that that is a large amnesty to be handing out under the Income Tax Act given the financial situation in which we find ourselves.

• (1710)

I would also note that the motion would not seem to provide the same amnesty to taxpayers who have declared all their income and whose tax returns are in dispute but who are simply, because of their economic circumstances, unable to pay the taxes owing. It would, however, provide amnesty for an unknown but very large amount of taxes owing on money from the so-called underground economy.

I suggest that the motion does not provide for fair and equitable treatment among those groups to which I have referred. It would certainly not be seen as fair by the vast majority of Canadians who have been paying their taxes fairly and fully, people who have been keeping their side of that unwritten social contract that exists between the Government and the citizens.

During the time of the MacEachen Budget of November, 1981, I found out from my colleagues in the accounting profession that there was a very real concern among the accounting firms of the country that by being unfair with taxpayers, the Government would drive the honest Canadian taxpayers, of which the vast majority of them are, into dishonesty. They felt that there would be a breakdown in the self-assessment of farmers, fishermen, lawyers, accountants, doctors and school teachers, and that breakdown would reach all the way up to the largest corporations in the country. The people in the profession were very much bothered by the fact that unfairness on the part of the Government would drive businesses, quite frankly, to cheat. That would lead to a breakdown and to chaos in our tax system.

I must caution the House against doing anything which would seriously damage the fabric of the income tax system, that very important system that transcends all political Parties. The income tax system has nothing to do with political philosophy. The fact is that Canadians can be proud that we have a good system of self-assessment. That trust exists. We cannot afford to lose it.

There is a danger that there would be a feeling of unfairness and betrayal of confidence among those taxpayers who paid their taxes in full. That would be increased by the realization that an amnesty such as the one the Hon. Member suggests in good faith would mean writing off hundreds of millions of dollars of revenues owing to the Government. The lack of that money would increase the national debt. It would increase the deficit of which we are trying so hard to gain control and which weighs so heavily on the Canadian taxpayers and the federal Treasury.

If I may, I would like to return to the matter of the $3.5 billion in overdue taxes which is owing to the federal Treasury. The Government is making efforts to reform the tax collection system along the lines of further fairness and firmness. The House will know that the Minister of National Revenue has put forward initiatives which will increase the collection staff of the Department and make a reasonable effort to collect more of those unpaid taxes. That is in the interest of all of us.

The total of that $3.5 billion represents taxes that are not disputed. What we must do is to increase the number of collectors but also to increase the fairness with which taxes are collected. By increasing the number of people available to collect money, we will take the pressure off those who are there. That will give the tax collectors an opportunity to sit down with taxpayers who may very legitimately be short of funds and see if they could find a way for them to pay their taxes through a mutually acceptable method. We hope that this initiative will bring in an extra $400 million in revenues that would not otherwise have been collected. We hope that by doing this, the revenues will be collected in a way which treats all taxpayers more fairly.

The Minister is insisting that taxpayers who are in real financial difficulty should be treated with compassion and decency. It goes without saying that under the Liberal Government, there was no compassion and decency when dealing with the Canadian taxpayers. Canadians are becoming more and more aware of the reforms that are being brought about in Revenue Canada's operations. It is our feeling that this is bound to give the taxpayers the feeling that they are being treated fairly and that they are not being asked to carry an unfair share of the burden.

I would point out that one of the single most important changes in the Income Tax Act will recognize the rights of taxpayers and will alter the Department of Revenue's collection procedure for the collection of disputed taxes. It is a reform that is long overdue. It is not something about which the former Liberal Government cared. The Ways and Means motion which was tabled by the Minister of Finance will go a long way toward providing protection for the basic civil liberties of taxpayers. When a tax assessment is in dispute, a taxpayer will no longer be required to pay the disputed tax first before the appeal is heard. "Pay now and justice later" was the Liberal way. Our way is "Justice now, and if you are found to be owing, you pay later". I think that is the way we should go.

The old rules led to a feeling among taxpayers that they were guilty until they could prove their innocence. Under the Liberal Government, they did not receive that opportunity for a long time because the system was bogged down. I used to tell my constituents not to fuss around with the assessors but to file notices of appeal to force their hands. Because of the delays, that is what we did. My constituents filed notices of appeal which I kept in my office. We forced the Liberal Government to pay attention to the taxpayers.

This new law will make the tax system fairer for all Canadians. Another thing we will do is to allow the Tax Court of Canada to award costs to taxpayers who are appealing their cases. That brings more fairness to Canadians who win their cases when their assessments are brought into question. They will get their costs when the Government is in fact wrong.

There will be a whole series of administrative changes designed to improve the working of the tax assessment and collection system and to make sure it works in a fair and open way. There will be many more instances of tax assessors checking first with the taxpayers before making changes in their returns. Assessors will ask for information first before sending out notices of reassessment and having the taxpayers file notices of appeal. Notices of appeal were filed quickly when I had the opportunity to do so, but we are now forcing the assessors to ask before they reasses. I think that that is another improvement.

In closing I would like to say that I appreciate the intent of the Hon. Member's motion. However, the Government is making every effort to restore fairness and firmness to the tax collection system in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the motion of the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez). Mr. Speaker, his motion provides:

> That . . . the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order to eliminate reassessments and legal actions for the payment of income tax in arrears in cases where errors or omissions happened in taxpayer's income tax returns for the pre-1984 fiscal years.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, however challenging and important this proposition may be, it is altogether unacceptable at this time, for reasons which I will explain.

Still, I do want to congratulate my colleague the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez), for he is doing our country and Members of the House a great service by giving us today another opportunity to debate once again the values underlying our tax system.

• (1720)

[English]

In his motion, the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez), is in effect proposing an amnesty for people who made errors in their tax returns which were filed before 1984. I do not want to repeat what has already been said so well in the House by a number of other Members, but I would like to add a different perspective by turning briefly to the very basic point which this motion raises, and that has to do with the value system on which our tax system is based.

Historically, the Income Tax Act was introduced as a temporary measure during World War I to raise revenue for the war effort. Like so many temporary measures, it is still with us today. However, it is not the same statute which was passed during World War I. That was an Act which was purely and simply a revenue-raising statute. Since that time, Parliament has seen fit time and again to add social and economic policies to the tax legislation. It has become the vehicle through which government has continued. Is income redistribution a public goal? Achieve it through the Income Tax Act. Is it desirable to stimulate the Canadian film industry or oil and gas exploration offshore? Achieve it through the Income Tax Act. So it goes, in a saga which is familiar to all Members of the House. The end result is the development of a statute which, as the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) previously stated, is now over 1,000 pages long. It should not be surprising to anyone to find that the taxpayers of Canada, in completing their tax returns, from time to time commit innocent errors. I think that is the most important thing which was on the mind of the Hon. Member for Châteauguay. If innocent errors have been made, certainly no one is looking to address that point in any kind of punitive fashion.

I do not think that we can stop the analysis there. I would like to return to the first speech which I made in this Chamber. At that time I stated that my credo in politics is simple and clear—I believe in fair shares for all and special privileges for none. I fear that this motion, though it be well intended, would in fact accord special privileges to some taxpayers of the country who submitted their returns prior to the cut-off date with some error who are now going to be forgiven. However, the other taxpayers of the country filed their tax returns according to law, in good faith, and paid their rightful share of the burden. I do not see that it would be fair to accord that kind of amnesty which would give a special privilege to some and deny it to others.

However, we are not stalled in dealing with this problem. There are other ways to deal with it. The Government has already indicated that, through a program of tax simplification, a number of problems which have occurred when taxpayers previously completed their returns will be abolished. There will be a greater simplicity in the Income Tax Act.

Another value which is very important and which has been brought to sharp relief by this motion is the one to which my hon. colleague from Simcoe North referred—that the very basis of our tax system is one of self-assessment. It is an honour system. Granted, it is an honour system which is fortified by severe legal sanctions, but it proceeds on the premise that taxpayers will be honest in declaring their income and paying the amount of tax which they owe on it.

We have seen a very disturbing phenomenon develop in the country over the past decade. We have seen that men and women who are wage earners and have their tax deducted at source pay their fair share. In addition, the medium- and small-sized businesses have made their deductions and remitted their fair share to Revenue Canada. However, the very wealthy and the large corporations have taken advantage of the provisions which are in the legislation and, with the benefit of well-paid legal and accounting advice, the end result is that the amount of tax which they pay cannot be called their fair share. The Government has indicated that it will respond to that situation in the upcoming budget and that those provisions in the Act which now lawfully permit people to have exemptions and to take the benefit of programs, and as a result pay little or no tax, will be eliminated. I think it is high time for that to happen. When the working men and women and the medium- and small-sized businesses of the country pay their fair share and others do not, it is not hard to understand their feelings. It is like 12 people going into a restaurant and having a great lunch. We all eat our share of the meal, but when the waiter brings the bill, two or three people walk out without paying. The rest of us are left to pick up the tab. On a grand scale, that is what has been going on in Canada. It has been going on for too long, and that is part of the reason there was a change in government. It is also the reason there will be changes made to the tax legislation in the next budget. I would not have campaigned as hard as I did to be in this Parliament and I would not be a strong supporter of this Government if that were not the case.

I believe there is a problem at the other end of the economic scale in Canada, as far as collecting income tax is concerned. It has been referred to as the hidden economy. It is the thousands of transactions which take place every day when someone renders an extra service and gets $20 or $100, whether it be moonlighting or an extra job on the side. It is income which is never reported and tax is never paid on it. Amounts are estimated, but even the most cautious and low estimates of the value of that hidden economy are truly staggering. We would have a fair lower deficit today if the people who are earning that income would "fess up", declare it and pay their fair share of the tax.

I sound one note of caution, Mr. Speaker, and that is that until we restore integrity to government spending and get value for the dollars which are spent, we should not judge too quickly those who are reluctant to send their tax dollars to Ottawa. When a person works long and hard in order to earn a livelihood in this country, and then sees the kind of prolific waste and runaway spending which went on in Ottawa and realizes the state of almost despair it has caused in the last few years, it is hard to blame that person for being reluctant to send hard earned dollars to Ottawa to be poured into that big hole in the ground.

I believe, therefore, that we have a very special duty, as part of our mandate, to get the finances of this country back on a sound footing. We must also convince Canadians that they are getting value for dollars spent by the Government, thereby restoring the belief that each citizen not only has the great benefit of living in this country but should in fact also share the burden of paying part of the overhead. It is the first duty, perhaps, of a citizen to elect a Government for himself or herself, and that being so, the second duty is to pay a share of the cost of that Government.

I have heard a lot of people say, "Why should we be paying taxes? What are we getting for it?" It does not take long in this country to begin to put together a list itemizing the many things rendered through government programs which are of tremendous benefit. We are truly the envy of other countries in the world. If we have immigration problems, Mr. Speaker, it is because there are so many people around this globe who would love to live in this country. Canadians, in moments of realism, do not deny that fact. But the other side of the coin is that they must accept the responsibility of paying their fair share. That is why I believe that to proceed with this motion to give amnesty to some taxpayers who, through error or whatever other reason, did not pay their little share of the over-all load, is not perhaps appropriate in terms of the message it would send to the rest of the population.

Through our efforts we must ensure that there is not only fairness in the tax system but that it is seen to be fair. That is why the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) has earned such respect in this House and indeed across the country. He has brought a clarity and sense of purpose to his Department in fulfilling his mandate as Minister of National Revenue.

There are a number of Hon. Members in this House who recall the task force which the Progressive Conservative Party sent from coast to coast a year or so ago. It talked to taxpayers about their legitimate grievances under the Liberal Government in the way in which the tax branch operated. It is truly incredible how badly off the rails that system went. The result of the task force was to yield up some 70 recommendations on how the position of taxpayers in this country could be made more fair. We are now in the process of seeing positive and prompt action being taken in implementing those common-sense recommendations, those ideas of fairness.

Just last week in this House, Mr. Speaker, notice was given that we will be changing the laws so that taxpayers will not be required to pay income taxes in dispute until a court has made a ruling on their appeal. They will be innocent until proven guilty, and it is high time that happened. Under the new legislation, Revenue Canada will not institute formal collection proceedings against a taxpayer during the 90-day period in which the taxpayer is entitled to file an objection of the amount of the tax assessment. If the taxpayer files such an objection, formal collection proceedings for amounts in dispute will be delayed until 90 days after Revenue Canada has formally responded to the taxpayer's objection. If the taxpayer appeals that decision to the courts, collection proceedings will be further delayed until a court renders its decision. That is the new procedure which will be followed as a result of legislative changes now proposed by our Government. That will introduce a sense of fairness into the tax system and a sense of fair play among the taxpayers.

Under this proposed tax change, if the taxpayer loses his first appeal to the courts, he will then be required to pay the disputed amount or at least to post security for it. Even though an appeal is carried to a higher court, where an amount of tax which is in dispute has already been paid by the taxpayer, the new legislation will provide for its repayment to him, pending the court's decision. Again, that is a major change and an important one.

I believe the Minister of National Revenue has on occasion spoken in ways which would be relevant to the motion here today. He has tried to distinguish between taxpayers who try to escape payment of their taxes and people who are in financial difficulties which make it impossible for them to pay. In the moments remaining, I would like to mention some of these points because they are fundamental and must not be misunderstood in the context of this motion. Our Government is determined that Revenue Canada will treat people in need with compassion and decency. We have seen from past experience how an adversarial approach by Revenue Canada can lead to mistrust, frustration and most certainly to tax evasion. It is important in tax matters to be both firm and fair. Today, Revenue Canada, under the Minister of National Revenue, is acting promptly to improve the collection process. It is appointing additional staff which will give collectors more time to work with taxpayers who have difficulty in paying their taxes. The goal is to work out with the taxpayers mutually agreed plans for delayed payment. The target of the Department is to collect $400 million in additional revenue to that which would have normally been collected from tax accounts owing to the federal Government.

The Minister has also addressed the problem of those Canadians who have been hiding unreported income in the so-called underground economy. Last fall in Toronto, the Minister spoke to the Canadian Tax Foundation and appealed to the taxpayers who have failed to disclose or declare all of their income so far to come forward now and pay up without fear of prosecution under the Department's procedures for voluntary disclosure. That, I think, Mr. Speaker, is the kind of amnesty which is appropriate in the present context of tax collection in this country.

On the collection side, the Department of National Revenue, I understand from my inquiries, will be doing a fair and more thorough job of collecting unpaid taxes. When a tax becomes overdue, the Department—and I think this procedure will be interesting to Hon. Members of the House because it affects many of our constituents—will send out a series of collection notices which more clearly outline departmental policy and the rights of the taxpayer. Then, before taking legal action, the collection staff will be required to make every effort to contact the delinquent taxpayer by telephone so as to give him or her every opportunity to settle the debt short of legal process.

Other amendments to the Income Tax Act aim at the same goal of treating taxpayers with fairness, sensitivity and respect. It is because of that approach, and with those goals in mind, that I think that finally across this country Canadians have the sense that once again there is a Government on the banks of the Ottawa River that truly cares, one that is bringing a sense of fairness, firmness and compassion to the important task of raising the revenue so necessary to pay for the services which have given us such a high standard of living and a special position for this country.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my remarks on the motion on the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez) by indicating that, while I may not agree entirely with the substance of the motion and the measure it proposes, I certainly agree with the underlying spirit of reform which I am sure prompted the Hon. Member to present this motion to the House of Commons. It has been pointed out by many that the spirit of reform is what the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) has in mind as he approaches the task presented to him by his Ministry. I think the Hon. Member for Châteauguay, by presenting this motion, advances that process of reform, whether or not the specific proposal is consistent with the policies the Government may wish to pursue.

Before I continue my remarks, may I take this opportunity to record the fact that this is my first opportunity to address you as Speaker of the House in your occupancy of this famous chair. I have watched you in the House and on television and I am impressed by the high level of the demeanour you present to the House of Commons. I know it is no less than one can expect of you in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: I know the constituents of Edmonton North will miss your interventions in the debate in the House, but nonetheless they will be well represented by the influence you have and will continue to exercise in this House and Parliament. It is a testimonial to your record of public service in the past, and I am sure that I and all Members are very pleased that you are in this position today. We know you will conduct the proceedings of the House with the measure of good faith and fairness which you have always exhibited in the past.

With respect to the motion, Mr. Speaker, again may I say that we are more interested in the reform of the tax system in general terms than we are in the specific measures presented from time to time. We have to face the fact that specific measures in tax law are the duty and responsibility of the Government. The decisions have to be made by the Government and presented to the House of Commons. I am sure it is a duty and responsibility which is accepted by the Minister of National Revenue and the Government because it certainly was an issue we brought before the Canadian public continually prior to and during the election campaign. Tax reform has to be at the heart of the initiatives which the New Conservative Government presents to the House of Commons.

As other Members have pointed out, this spirit and desire for reform is evidenced by substantive and concrete measures. We have already had before the House of Commons Bill C-70, which was adopted on November 29, 1984. It contained a number of amendments and new provisions which indicate the concentration on the area of tax reform. More important, we have the new initiatives such as the Ways and Means motions which have been introduced in the House, in particular the proposal for Section 225.1 of the Income Tax Act which deals with the collection process. Just to underline once again the importance of that new provision, let me say that it takes the burden off the taxpayer in that it does not penalize the taxpayer for resorting to the appeal process. The taxes are held in abeyance until the appeal is determined. I think that kind of measure indicates the sympathy of the Government for the taxpayer, and it is in marked contrast with the attitude of successive Liberal Ministers of National Revenue.

It has been pointed out many times, but it is always worth underlining again, that our taxation system in Canada is a self-assessment process. There has to be faith in the system and faith in the officials who administer the system or you will not have a proper attitude on the part of the taxpayer. They want to have faith in the system and the people who administer the system and it is our duty and our challenge to create that faith so that the taxpayers of Canada will file their annual returns confident that they will not be treated unfairly by the system or its administrators.

I want to deal generally with the subject of tax reform, Mr. Speaker, since I believe that is really the subject raised by the motion before us. I want to begin by referring to November of 1981 and the infamous Budget presented to this House by the Hon. Allan MacEachen, then Minister of Finance. For those Liberals brave enough to recall it, he presented to the House a Budget which he said would bring about equity in the tax system. The then Minister of Finance actually stood in this House and said he was single-handedly going to bring equity to the tax system. But what did he do? He introduced a number of measures, some of which I think bear detailing again, even though I fortunately had the opportunity on many occasions in the House to detail those measures which the then Minister said would bring equity to the tax system.

One measure was to tax employer contributions to health plans. Some seven million Canadian workers would have been taxed on their health plans. It would have virtually destroyed the employer-employee health system in Canada. It would have imposed taxes which had no relationship to the earning ability or ability to pay taxes of seven million working Canadians. Mr. MacEachen and the Liberal Party said that that was bringing equity to the tax system.

The Minister also proposed to tax senior citizens by removing the $1,000 exemption on pension income. There are literally thousands and thousands of Canadians who have been forced into early retirement from their careers in the Public Service, the Armed Forces and a number of other areas. They had to provide for their old age by working after they were forced into early retirement. But the Liberal Minister of Finance proposed to remove the benefit they received in respect of pension income if they were paying into another pension plan.

I could go on with a number of the proposals contained in that Budget, but let me conclude that aspect by saying that whatever the intentions of the Minister in November of 1981, he certainly advanced the cause of equity in the tax system to no extent of which I am aware. However, he did do a service to Canadians. He focused more attention on the various measures which make up our tax system. He made Canadians, or at least the Progressive Conservative Opposition made Canadians aware of the degree to which they are affected by their tax system and the degree to which that system can be changed overnight by an act of government. In other words, by his failed attempt at tax reform he at least caused Canadians to realize and recognize that we did have it in our capacity and power to reform the tax system. As time went by the attention of the Progressive Conservative Opposition of the day was concentrated on that. We must give full credit to the present Minister of National Revenue who focused attention on this aspect of opposition activity. We were then able to deal with the matter of tax reform in such a manner that the public reacted to it.

• (1750)

Following the 1981 Budget of Mr. MacEachen, we set up a task force in the Progressive Conservative Party to allow Canadians across the land an opportunity to comment on that Budget. It was very successful. Canadians across the country were very pleased with the opportunity to come before that group of opposition parliamentarians to express their concerns about the Budget. That tax force, on which I was proud to serve, was able to formulate the concerns of Canadians in a report on the Budget. It was as a result of that report and of our continued activity of pressing the then Minister of Finance in the House of Commons that many changes were made to that Budget.

When we focused the attention on the need for tax reform through the same process, we were able to establish the tax force on Revenue Canada under the current Minister of National Revenue. That task force again gave Canadians an opportunity to appear before a group of parliamentarians to express their general and specific concerns with respect to the income tax laws by which they were governed. That tax force on Revenue Canada resulted in a report which received a great deal of public attention at the time.

I would like to refer specifically to the aspect of the report which proposed a Bill on taxpayers' rights. The recognition that taxpayers have rights too focused attention on the heart of tax reform. The Income Tax Act imposes obligations and responsibilities on Canadian income earners and specifically imposes the responsibility to pay tax in respect of that income. However, the Income Tax Act does not give any rights to those taxpayers in relation to the responsibilities. That results in a lack of balance in our tax system. The equity which Mr. MacEachen claimed to be creating in his 1981 Budget was not there because he did not give any rights to taxpayers which could be balanced against the responsibilities under the Income Tax Act. That is exactly what the Minister of National Revenue proposes to do through the Ways and Means motions to which I have referred and other reforms within Revenue Canada. They are really carrying out the promise of Mr. MacEachen to bring equity to the tax system.

There is an interesting article in the Financial Post magazine with respect to the Minister of National Revenue. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call your attention and that of Members of the House to some elements of the article because it puts in very clear terms the challenge of the Minister of National Revenue and the Progressive Conservative Government to bring about equity in the tax system. As indicated in this article, the challenge to the Minister is to humanize the tax system and the tax department. That puts the matter very clearly. It must be recognized that the taxpayers and the persons upon whom responsibilities are imposed by the Income Tax Act are citizens of Canada. They are the same people whom we were trying to protect in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. They are the same people whom we are trying to benefit in many other legislative measures. It never made sense to me, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to taxation and measures such as the Income Tax Act of Canada, that we then try to deprive those very Canadians of the rights that we were so proudly conferring upon them in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

It is as simple as that. We must humanize the tax laws and recognize the balance that ought to have been maintained between responsibilities and rights, because there can be no separation of Canada from the people of Canada. Our nation is the conglomeration of everyone in Canada. All Canadian citizens share the burden of the tax system. There is no authority to impose anything other than fairness in taxation of the Canadian populace.

There are, however, many practical aspects of the matter, as we all recognize. The ability of the Government of Canada to carry out the many programs that are required to benefit Canadian people must be financed. The principal method and technique of financing is the personal and corporate income tax imposed by the Income Tax Act of Canada. We must be realistic about this. Over and above the necessity of demanding revenues necessary to carry out government programs is the requirement for fairness. It is to that element of fairness that we must direct the parliamentary mind. The Member for Châteauguay has proposed one specific measure. He has indicated that it is an amnesty. I am impressed by his words. He says that it is a fresh start for taxpayers. I think there is a great deal of merit in taking that approach. A fresh start always has advantages, particularly in the light of 16 years of unfair administration of the tax laws by the Liberal Government. It would be nice to have a fresh start, but at the same time there may be an element of financial responsibility that prevents the Government from giving that kind of carte blanche. It would not be fair to those Canadians who have assessed themselves and paid taxes over the period prior to 1984. While the idea has merit and application to economic renewal, I do not think that in terms of financial responsibility it can be employed. That does not take away from the desirability of having that and other reform measures brought before the House of Commons for discussion and consideration.

Much has been said about the amount of $3.5 million which remains uncollected in the tax system. I understand that the Minister of National Revenue has taken steps to ensure that that debt to Canada is collected. I want to be assured, as I am sure all Members of Parliament do, that the debt will be collected fairly. One of the specific programs undertaken by the Minister of National Revenue is to employ more personnel for tax collection in order to be able to give taxpayers the proper consideration in determining a fair method of collection of outstanding taxes.

I am greatly taken with the idea presented by some Members that if there is to be amnesty in respect of back taxes, those taxpayers ought to be given an opportunity to come forward, admit their tax liability, and arrange some sensible and fair method of collecting the taxes. The point is, Mr. Speaker, that there is a great deal that can be done. We compliment the Member for Châteauguay for bringing forward this measure for discussion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—JOB CLASSIFICATIONS. (B) CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on February 4 of this year, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) a question about the serious problem regarding public service job classifications. This is a very complex subject which nevertheless requires special attention, since in his 1983-84 annual report, the Auditor General of Canada referred to the problem and even pointed out that 79 per cent of public service positions were overclassified.

This implied that incumbents in these positions were receiving remuneration in excess of that justified by the duties they were performing. It also meant that one out of five public servants was overclassified and receiving a salary that was too high, compared to what his fellow public servants were being paid. It also meant additional costs for the Canadian taxpayer, and my interest in the matter became such that I put a question to the President of the Treasury Board to find out what he was doing in the way of taking corrective action and remedying this problem.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that the issue of job classification is a very technical one, but I would like to give a definition used by the Auditor General himself, and I quote:

> Job classification is an integral and important part of employee compensation in the federal public service.
> It is a process by which the relative worth of federal public service jobs is determined and through which each job is assigned to an occupational group and level.

He goes on to say, and I quote:

> The actual rates of pay and other terms and conditions of employment for a particular occupational group and level are determined either through collective bargaining or unilaterally by the employer, the Treasury Board.

The Auditor General also mentioned in his report that the classification system used today covers about 222,000 employees. The system is characterized by extensive delegation of authority to deputy heads of departments and heads of agencies to classify jobs. It is therefore very decentralized.

In several occupational groups there seems to be a noticeable shift—that is, noticeable to the Auditor General as a result of his examination—towards upward reclassification of jobs to higher paying levels. Overclassification was therefore being used in a number of cases to promote public servants.

The Auditor General of Canada also pointed out deficiencies in management controls over job classification. He said there were no official mechanisms obliging those responsible for classification decisions to account for the manner in which they exercised that responsibility.

In April 1984, and I mentioned this to the Minister in my question, my colleague from Windsor West, the former President of the Treasury Board under the Liberal Government, reacted to this criticism by the Auditor General and introduced corrective measures to remedy misclassification.

My question to the present President of the Treasury Board was simply: Was he prepared to inform the House about what he had done to date to try and remedy this problem and was he prepared to share his views with the House?

[English]

I was not surprised but somewhat taken aback by the answer of the Minister which exceeded my expectations. He told me some wonderful things. First, he told me that he had come close to negotiating contracts with Public Service unions in matters which dealt with job classifications and several other issues. In fact, he referred to six issues on which he apparently had been negotiating with staff associations. He did not give me a direct or precise answer to my question, but he talked about interesting progress and about the six issues which I just mentioned.

• (1805)

After he left the House, the Minister became highly original. He talked about, at least of the issues which are currently being discussed with the associations, a master contract and more political rights for public servants. That is wonderful if it is true. I should like to refer to The Citizen of February 5, the day before yesterday, in which he was quoted as follows: "We hope to have an agreement on the totality of the package in a very short time". This originality came as a complete surprise to staff associations, as it did to myself. They had been taking part in the negotiations and were not aware that the Minister had come to a conclusion. They were on radio this morning saying how surprised but how pleased they were that the Minister was agreeing with them. I see you rising, Mr. Speaker, so I will conclude.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but register my interest that the Hon. Member has been able to ask his question during the "Late Show" so quickly and also pull into his remarks the questions of The Citizen, et cetera. I agree that he got them in, but I do not think they have any relevance to the question which was asked.

I am pleased to note the Hon. Member's compliments to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) on how forthcoming he was. I think that should be noted on the record. Obviously the Member will agree with me when I say that that is the record of the entire Government. I am pleased that he recognized it.

The Hon. Member was right. The problem of misclassification was identified by Treasury Board audits. It was also remarked upon and reported upon by the Auditor General. However, corrective action was taken by the last Government and, to a greater degree, by this Government. I should like to review what has happened.

The corrective measures announced by the former President of the Treasury Board last April covered such items as restrictions on salary budgets to control more closely funds available for reclassification and a requirement to pre-audit any reclassification to ensure that the work being performed actually coincided with that described in the job description. This is what the classification level is based upon. Some 23 per cent of the misclassifications were in cases where that relationship was lacking. In addition, a review of the job classification standards for groups in which significant numbers of misclassifications were evident in the audits is under way. These groups are administrative services, primary products inspection and social science support.

The Government is taking even further steps to correct the situation, and I should like to take this opportunity to review some of them. There is a revision and enhancement of the classification monitoring and audit system to provide systematic and integrated information on the relative performance of the classification system down to the departmental level. Information such as this has not been available previously, except in cases where a central audit, with an attendant high resource level, was conducted. Thus, there will be information available not only to pinpoint problem areas where improvement is required but to remove restraints to managerial flexibility where a continuing and sustained high level of performance in job classification is demonstrated. I could go on—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I know the Hon. Member could, but I regret to inform him that his time has expired.

EMPLOYMENT—SUMMER JOBS FOR STUDENTS. (B) REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF PLANS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, on December 21 I asked the Minister about her plans for a youth summer works program. I asked her how many jobs, what opportunities and how much money, et cetera, would be available for young students, but I did not receive an answer then. I anxiously awaited the announcement yesterday by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne). I thought the Ministers would give me the opportunity to accord them accolades personally and politically if new and more jobs for youth had been announced. I thought these Ministers would seize an opportunity to enhance their credibility and prove their concern for the crucial problem for our young people. Instead, their announced program attempts to pull the wool over the eyes of our young people and tries to convince them that they are getting a better deal.

● (1810)

"Let's make a deal" may be a game between government officials and private business, but it certainly is not one the youth of this country want to play. Liberal Governments made every year one commitment in which young Canadians were treated as a priority for they are the future of this country, and we intend to follow that tradition. The present Government has shown no such commitment.

Last year the Liberal Government set aside $200 million for summer employment programs. The Minister of Employment and Immigration knows full well that the $85 million summer budget she keeps referring to represents the A base figure, the starting point of departure to which each year we added increased funds.

An increase of 30 per cent was announced for 1985, increasing the program from $157 million to $200 million. Given the inflation rate, but also given the fact that even with the Liberal program allocations last year, 180,000 students still could not find employment, the Conservative budget of $205 million is even more grossly inadequate. These are simple facts which are obvious to students and to the Canadian public. Who is the Government trying to fool? Since coming to power five months ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has all but ignored the plight of our unemployed youth.

During the election campaign, youth were one of his top priorities. He then proceeded to appoint a Minister of State for Youth to act as their spokesperson and he gave her authority as Minister of State for untroubled youth. His Minister of Employment is great at consultation, but when it comes to positive action, she falls short.

What this Government is good at is cutting budgets. In the Treasury Board expenditures and programs statement, there were cuts to Canada Student Loans. The General Industrial Training program, the Young Workers exchange program, Summer Canada, Environment 2000, Young Entrepreneurs, Katimavik, and Parks Canada were cut. If you add it all up, it is over $215 million.

In the Challenge '85 summer Canada work project for our youth, the provincial allocations represent cuts in comparison to last year's budget in terms of real dollars.

To cite just one example, after taking into account the 30 per cent increase proposed by the Liberal Government for Summer Canada, Newfoundland was going to receive $2.4 million more than proposed this year, while Alberta, where unemployment is lower, would have received $5 million less. Her allocations are based on unemployment rates, yet the figures contradict this. In addition, she proposes putting $10 million into federal agency budgets. Considering these are the same budgets which were cut in November, it appears she is trying to replace fired and laid-off staff with cheap student labour.

Moreover, even as late as this morning's Canada AM program, the Canadian Federation of Students was not consulted beforehand. First the cuts, then the announcements of new programs were made. Students are outraged and disappointed, and rightly so. Students are concerned about planning their academic and career futures. They have been told, and it is a well-documented fact, that to increase their chances in a future job market, education is vital. Yet without sufficient employment programs, they can scarcely afford to finance their studies. Students need to work a minimum of 16 weeks to cover tuition costs. The programs announced will, therefore, have to be in place, with all the forms completed and processed, interviews finished, staff hired, and materials purchased by the end of April. The forms will not even be in Employment Centres before the end of February. The Minister for Youth stated earlier that she could not perform magic, but that is what will be needed to pull off this program.

Students are receiving negative signals concerning continuing their education. The Bovey Commission has recommended tuition hikes and the budget for Canada Student Loans has been frozen. The dismal scenario is such that, if the summer job programs fall short of meeting the number of jobs needed and therefore fall short of the dollars needed for tuition fees, loans will be necessary. However, since the loans budget has been frozen, fewer students can be helped financially. Accessibility to education, vital to securing a job, is blocked on not one but three counts: first, summer job programs have not been created to meet the current needs given the inflation and unemployment rates; second, tuition costs are rising; and third, it is more difficult to borrow money to meet these escalating costs.

• (1815)

I find myself asking, as I am sure young people are wondering, if this is the way we should celebrate International Youth Year. In my address to the announcement of International Youth Year on January 21, I mentioned the results of the Bovey report and the Project Teen Canada survey. This poll, the most comprehensive survey of teenagers' attitudes and opinions ever made, destroys our conventional stereotypes of youth and characterizes young people as responsible, thoughtful people who are desperately worried about their future. The Government has yet to give them any reason for hope. The very day the story broke detailing the results of the report, the Minister of State for Youth announced that there would be no special, massive funds allocated to provide jobs for youth in 1985. On the eve of the Summer Canada Program, we learned about the Katimavik cuts.

The Tory Government is clearly not prepared to follow through on its promises; neither those made during the election campaign nor those made since September 4. As long as the Government sticks to consultation, things are fine. It is in committing itself to action and taking that next step that the problem starts. I again applaud the consultation undertaken by the Government. I agree that consultation is a necessary first step. However, I urge the Government to continue, to take the next step, to be true to its commitment and to act.

The Tories have indeed created a new vocabulary. Gone are the three "Rs". Instead we have the three "Cs": consult, cut, challenge. Young Canadians and all Canadians—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member but her time has expired.

Mrs. Finestone: I am sorry, Sir. I have half a minute and exactly four sentences left.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): On behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to my colleague from Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) concerning this year's youth programs as announced on February 6 last.

Perhaps it is an overstatement to say that there are no programs, and I think that young people need to work to plan their future. It is a worthwhile concept, and that is why the federal Government, through the Minister, has unveiled a $205 million program geared to student careers, including Challenge '85. Students do need summer employment to prepare their career. We are prepared to give them grants, and the focus will be on three specific sectors. No one can disagree with that, after all we are talking about $163 million. It is easy to claim that we have no programs, that we have no money, that we are cutting, consulting or what have you, but there is really no need to exaggerate. I read the question asked on December 21, something about putting an end to consultations and delivering the programs. Well, the programs have been announced and they have nothing to do with cutbacks. Quite the contrary, they will be an inspiration for students who want to further their career. Some $163 million will be allotted to that end in the public sector, in private industry and in community organizations.

Our second priority is to make it possible for students to gain work experience in a field unrelated to their studies and prospective career, and some of those can be a challenge indeed.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, $30 million will be earmarked for projects designed to help students create their own jobs. We intend to cooperate with the provincial Governments to make loans available for such projects. All we need do now is to set up the machinery, and that will be done soon because we are more than prepared to show leadership in those endeavours. There will be $10 million used to create jobs with the federal Government; $13 million at the National Defence level; $1.2 million for hiring special officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; and $0.5 million to help job preparation shops, pilot projects, as we are now doing in Ontario and all across Canada. In addition to that, $13.6 million must be added for the operation of 400 Canada employment centres for students across the land.

Mr. Speaker, the Government is convinced that next summer several thousand students will derive maximum benefits from that and from their future participation in the labour force, in their own fields of expertise. We are in the process of launching an appeal to the private and public sectors, and I am convinced that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

INCOME TAX ACT—PROVISION AFFECTING LAND PURCHASES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, last week I raised some concerns in Question Period regarding the treatment of replacement property, under Section 44 of the Income Tax Act, by Revenue Canada officials. Section 44 enables the vendor of land to defer capital gains arising from the sale to the extent that the vendor reinvests or ploughs the proceeds of that sale into new land within certain time limits.

It should be expressed at the outset that farmers in western Canada are continually buying and selling land. It may be that a piece of land becomes available closer to home, and in order to acquire that land the farmer may sell other land to finance the purchase. Or an older farmer may retire and a young person may decide to purchase the land and dispose of other ground. Indeed, neighbours may decide that it would be mutually advantageous to exchange parcels of land. In any event, there are countless situations and innumerable transactions.

The farm community understand in a general way that if land is sold, no capital gains will be payable as long as replacement property of equal or greater value is acquired. That is what the farmers understand, and I suggest that is the spirit and intent of Section 44.

The problem arises in the handling of that section by Revenue Canada officials. Like most sections of the Act, Section 44 is rather difficult to read. However, the key operative words are: "If he so elects". The taxpayer is given credit for the replacement property "if he so elects". Unfortunately, neither the Income Tax Act nor its regulations provide for an election form—a form on which whatever information Revenue Canada requires about the sale and replacement purchase could be detailed.

There are other elective sections in the Income Tax Act. Section 85 is a good example. That section provides for tax-free roll-overs of assets from individuals to the holding companies. There is a form prescribed for that election by Revenue Canada, and all practitioners adhere to it.

However, in Section 44 we have a vague and undefined situation. At the very least it creates doubt. I would suggest that that doubt should be resolved in favour of the taxpayer.

It appears that the previous Liberal Government, in its lust for money, instructed Revenue Canada to persecute those unfortunates who sold land after 1978 and replaced that land but did not file a sufficient election that is, an election sufficient in the minds of Revenue Canada officials. Today, most tax practitioners are tuned into Section 44. They know that some piece of paper should be attached to the vendor's income tax form whereby he would claim to elect that the new land would replace the old. Unfortunately, six or seven years ago that requirement was not as well known. Many tax practitioners, like their clients, simply understood the basic intent, that there would be no taxable gain on the sale if land of equal or greater value was purchased. Surely, the vendor of land elects, within the spirit and intent of Section 44, when in fact he replaces the land he sold with other land. When legal agreements are signed, when transfers of title are registered, and when cheques for the purchase price are issued, surely the taxpayer has elected in no uncertain terms.

In any event, it appears that part of the hidden agenda of the MacEachen Budget of 1981 was the instruction to Revenue Canada officials to grab as much tax money as possible without having regard to any standard of fairness or decency. By way of example, and there are plenty of examples, I would like to cite the circumstances of Jacob Schroeder of Gouldtown, Saskatchewan. He is a farmer in his fifties who in 1979 sold two parcels of land for $172,000. In the same year, he purchased replacement land for $226,000. Mr. Schroeder and his tax preparer quite reasonably assumed that the purchase of the new land would wash out any capital gains on the sale. But that was not to be. In March of 1983, Revenue Canada reassessed Mr. Schroeder's 1979 tax return to include additional taxable income of $58,000 for the capital gains. Revenue Canada refused to give him credit for the purchase of land because it said he did not file a sufficient election. He did not elect to its satisfaction. Mr. Schroeder, who made $417 in 1980 and who lost money farming in 1981 and 1982, was faced in 1983 with a bill of some $25,000 for income tax and another $10,000 for interest. That amounted to a bill of $35,000 to a man of modest means who simply sold land and bought some other land.

In its zeal to collect these funds, and in spite of a notice of objection having been filed, Revenue Canada served 21 third party notices—which are the same as garnishee summonses—to every bank, credit union, grain buyer and livestock buyer within 60 miles in every direction. The Schroeders could not even buy heating fuel. The man had to go to the credit union and take out a second mortgage in order to pay Revenue Canada. He suffered ill health as a result of this kind of persecution.

I am relieved that this kind of mean, nasty, aggressive and confrontational collection procedure is being replaced as a resulted of the attitude of our new Government and that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) also understands these things. However, Mr. Speaker, Revenue Canada rejected Mr. Schroeder's notice of objection on grounds of insufficient election. It is evident, therefore, that Revenue Canada officials still refused to place a fair and reasonable interpretation on the Section 44 election. They refuse to look at the facts and refuse to rebate the funds to Schroeder and other people who were similarly affected. Surely the fact of concrete evidence of repurchase of land, the land title transfers, the issuance of cheques, does constitute an election. Simple justice and common decency, Mr. Speaker, dictate that the benefits of any doubt be extended to those who in good faith have actually replaced their property. There is no magic to it.

I simply want to appeal to the Minister of National Revenue to do three things; first, to redress the wrongs done to those already affected; second, to instruct Revenue Canada officials to take a different attitude to Section 44 elections and, third, to recommend to the Department of Finance that this particular section of the Act be amended.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue and Canada Post): I would like to thank the Hon. Member for raising this important issue before the House, an issue, Mr. Speaker, which is of particular importance to farmers and to the Hon. Member from Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson).

My hon. friend asks the Department of National Revenue to accept that the purchase of replacement property in itself constitutes an election to defer capital gains. I must point out, however, Mr. Speaker, that the Income Tax Act requires taxpayers to elect for the deferral of capital gains at the time of filing their annual income tax returns. The Act provides a similar deferral of the recapture of capital cost allowance where depreciable properties are disposed.

I am very pleased to report that Revenue Canada, Taxation has, as a long-standing practice, granted administrative relief to certain taxpayers who have not made a timely election but where an examination of the facts shows that relief is fair and equitable under the circumstances. I would also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that some of these circumstances are outlined in one of the Department's published Interpretation Bulletins, IT-259R. Examples of administrative relief being granted to taxpayers who have not filed the election as required by the Income Tax Act are the following: There is a documentation on a tax practitioner's files showing a calculation for the relevant taxation year confirming that the intent of an election was demonstrated; the taxpayers claim that they prepared their own income tax returns on the basis of insufficient information supplied by the Department; the taxpayers have purchased the farm land in the subsequent year and continued farming after acquiring the replacement property and would have qualified under the Act; the taxpayers are aware that the disposition would have an impact on the adjusted cost base of their land and they may have been misled that when they purchased a property in the subsequent year they had elected and complied with the provisions of the Act—

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST PASSAGE OIL SHIPMENTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, two days ago the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) announced that Panarctic will be allowed to ship crude oil through the Northwest Passage.

This is in total disregard of the 1983 Lancaster Sound Green Paper, the 1981 Land Use Planning Policy for the North, and the Beaufort Sea Environmental Assessment Panel report which recommended that tanker traffic through the Northwest Passage not be allowed until government research, the preparation stage, and experimental program were concluded.

The Panarctic project does not contribute toward oil self-sufficiency. It represents the first step by the Government in allowing tanker transportation in the North and will probably be perceived by them as a further step in obtaining access to the Sisco well site. If this were to happen, it would result in a giant leap in Arctic tanker shipments. This move is unprecedented and will open the door to other companies.

There is already an application before the Minister by a consortium to drill a wildcat well in Lancaster Sound. The Minister should place an immediate moratorium on drilling in Lancaster Sound as required by the Government of the Northwest Territories, and he should reconsider his decision to allow Panarctic tankers access to the northwest.

The Inuit expressed several concerns. Damage done by an oil spill could destroy breeding grounds and natural resources on which the people rely for survival; insufficient—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, two years ago the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that Premier Bill Bennett was taking a step in the right direction with his program of cut-backs and lay-offs. These same policies have devastated the British Columbia economy over the past two years. Since coming to power in September, the Conservative Government has moved in the same negative direction. All across Canada people are beginning to feel the effects of government cut-backs as the unemployment rolls mount. Instead of a renewal of confidence, there is a growing climate of fear and uncertainty as people worry about their own futures, and the future of their children.

British Columbia has been placed under the double jeopardy of two cut-back Governments, and its unemployment rolls now contain 228,000 people. Last month the Government boasted it had created 100,000 jobs across Canada. The reality is that today in British Columbia there are 58,000 fewer people employed than there were in September when the Conservative Government took office. The Conservative Government must now recognize that cut-backs did not work for British Columbia and they are not working for Canada.

It is time to change direction. The Government was elected on a promise of creating jobs. It said it would put jobs ahead of the deficit. Now is the time to begin keeping that promise—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DAMAGE CAUSED BY GULL POPULATION INCREASE

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, my riding in southwestern Ontario is literally being beseiged by an imbalance of nature, caused by an increase in the population of ring-billed gulls, causing enormous numbers of these birds to leave their natural environment, adjacent to the Great Lakes. They have now become scavengers of garbage in urban areas simply because they are starving.

More important to the economy, they are swarming into the fields of my riding in Kent County, an area well-known as the most unique in heat units and fertile fields in Canada producing field tomatoes and other vegetable crops. In Kent County the gulls are costing thousands of dollars annually, as well as costs incurred in urban areas just cleaning up after them.

I understand from the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), that there have been meetings with Agriculture Canada, the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, and the Ontario Vegetable Growers Marketing Board, to discuss this problem.

I commend the Minister for this action and on behalf of those who want to enjoy ring-billed gulls, not fight them, I ask the Minister of the Environment to take steps immediately to control the number of these birds so they will return to their natural habitat, which is not garbage cans and farmers' fields.

SHIPBUILDING

SUPPORT URGED FOR INDUSTRY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, employment and production in the shipbuilding and ship repairing industry in Canada continue to slide downward, and the viability of the industry remains clouded and in doubt. Employment has dropped from a maximum of 14,000 to 7,267. It is obvious that demand for vessels must pick up before recovery can come to the industry, including the allied industries which have the potential of creating some 30,000 related jobs.

As a Government I believe we must do our part. We must give the industry encouragement and pass the right kind of legislation to bring this about so that our industry is able to compete in a more viable way with offshore shipbuilding countries which generously subsidize their shipbuilding industries. We can do this by adopting some of the recommendations which the Government has received from the industry, such as providing concessionary financing to domestic shipowners, doubling the temporary entry duty rate from one-one hundred and twentieth to one-sixtieth per month, placing a duty on imported fishing vessels 100 feet in length and longer, providing financial assistance for petroleum exploration activity only to companies that source in Canada or maximize Canadian content and, last, extending the government grant of 9 per cent for another two years to June, 1987.

These requests are certainly most reasonable and, if adopted by the Government, would go a long way to bring some stability and create many more jobs in the industry and related industries, which would give our economy a much needed boost.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

TREATMENT OF CALGARY RESIDENTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would urge the Members from Calgary to listen closely. The Tory Government seems to think that it can take the City of Calgary for granted. Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has developed discriminatory practices which apply only to Calgary and are harsher then exist elsewhere in Canada. Calgary home applicants are required to sign a declaration swearing they have not had business dealings with a bankrupt company in the past three years. CMHC is also no longer insuring mortgages on new homes in Calgary worth less than $80,000.

The Mayor of Calgary has sent two letters to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) which, to date, have gone unanswered, with the exception of a mere acknowledgement. I sent the Prime Minister a letter last week encouraging him to respond to the Mayor's concerns. The five Members from Calgary, including a Cabinet Minister, have all failed to respond on this important matter.

I feel that these practices are discriminatory and are likely to contravene Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which comes into effect very soon. The Government should put an immediate end to these practices which discriminate against the people of Calgary.

UNEMPLOYMENT

NECESSITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): With two of my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, I just came back from Quebec, which is part of the tour of the NDP action group on the labour force. We travelled to Quebec City and the Lac-Saint-Jean region and our visit has highlighted in human terms the misery and the unemployment woes which beset our country and the Province of Quebec. Even in Quebec City, which ought to be rather prosperous as an administration centre, more than 40,000 people are now out of work. We therefore urge the Government to put an end to its cutbacks and to take constructive measures to solve the unemployment problem in the Province of Quebec.

In the Lac-Saint-Jean-Saguenay region, Mr. Speaker, more than half of the young workers under 19 are looking for jobs. Roughly 30 per cent of the work force between the ages of 20 and 24 is idle. The unemployed have to make do with a $156 monthly social welfare allowance, and nothing else. It is outright misery for them, outright misery for everybody, outright misery for the entire province and Canada as a whole. We were told that hard economic times account for the suicide rate among young Quebecers, now the second highest in the world.

Mr. Speaker, we in this party believe that now is the time to begin creating lasting jobs, not to launch temporary make-work projects and hand out social welfare benefits—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his allotted time has expired.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

CALL FOR ENUMERATION REFORM

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, before last summer's election becomes just a fleeting but heartwarming memory, I urge Members of the House to give serious consideration to the reform of our electoral process.

Under the current system, voters are enumerated prior to a federal election. This past summer we witnessed the frustration of many voters who were denied the opportunity to vote because they had not been enumerated. For example, some long-term residents of my constituency were away on holidays, were in the midst of harvesting, or for other reasons were not at home when the enumerators called. While some were able to have their names added to the voters' list during the period of revision, others were unable to meet the strict deadlines imposed by our current procedures.

I would ask why a resident of a city such as Brandon, Manitoba, cannot be accompanied by a neighbour to his or her polling place and enumerated on election day. Rural voters have long enjoyed this privilege.

Or perhaps the time has come for Canada to establish a permanent voters' list as is done in the United Kingdom, the United States, and Australia. It has long been argued that such a list would be expensive to maintain. However, I would point out that unanticipated expenses made the most recent enumeration a costly undertaking.

Given the increasing problems, injustices, and costs of our current system of enumeration, I urge all Members of the House to give serious consideration to the implementation of one of the above electoral reforms.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST SALMON TREATY—MINISTERIAL ACTION WELCOMED

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, one week ago the sports fishermen on Canada's West Coast were in an uproar about the stringent Chinook allocations allowed under the new Pacific salmon treaty. With considerable fortitude, the Fisheries Minister (Mr. Fraser) travelled to B.C. and entered the valley of discontent. It was the first time in many years that West Coast fishermen had actually seen a federal Minister of Fisheries, and the first time in decades that one had actually listened to them.

A week ago today the Minister announced an accommodation within the treaty that calmed the fears of the B.C. sports fishing community. That is the way this Government works. It welcomes positive input, and then acts.

It should be noted that the treaty can still be improved. Accommodations can still be found. The Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry should be travelling to the West Coast to receive constructive suggestions on the treaty and on other issues. We should be welcoming witnesses to travel to Ottawa to express their concerns.

However, it is important to note that after some 20 years of negotiating, we have a Pacific salmon treaty. Fishermen can plan for the years to come. Our depleted resource can be enhanced. Although we cannot please all of the people all of the time, we can replace inaction with action. Those were our instructions from the Canadian people on September 4, and that is how we will continue to govern.

UNEMPLOYMENT

NECESSITY TO HELP SMALL AND MEDIUM SIZED BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, lending ceiling allowed under legislation providing for guaranteed loans for business development was reached by mid-January. Since then, no new loans have been authorized. If the small business sector in our economy is to survive, it is absolutely essential that the funds required to continue implementation of the Small Businesses Loans Act be approved. The latest statistics have shown a further increase in the unemployment rate, so that it is clearly urgent to help small businesses create jobs.

If the Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette) is truly concerned about encouraging small business, the most important sector of our economy, he will split Bill C-23 and table forthwith in the House a Bill to authorize the funds required to continue this program. The Liberal Opposition will fully support this amendment, and the remaining amendments to the Small Business Loans Act would then be submitted separately to the House for consideration and free debate.

• (1115)

[English]

The Government is trying to piggyback controversial changes on an important and urgent amendment. Small business is where the most jobs can be created the fastest. If the Government is serious about job creation, which it claims is its first priority, then it will split the Bill amending the SBLA and ask the House to provide money for small business loans to be issued again.

EXTERNAL AID

NATIONAL ASSISTANCE ORGANIZATION ADVOCATED

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, those who question whether Canadians can see beyond their own national goals and boundaries will find the answer in the response to the tragic famine in Ethiopia.

Individuals and community groups across the land have organized to provide many kinds of relief. The wide expression of concern indicates clearly that Canadians are prepared to share in the burden carried by those in other parts of the world.

What is now important is that we should not allow this outpouring of conscientious concern to dissipate with the solving of just one of the world's many problems. Our Canadian Government, through Parliament, should act to establish a national body to represent all Canadians and community groups willing to help those in other lands to resolve their problems, and mandate that national body to provide a vehicle for individuals and community groups to assist on a continuing basis.

Let's have national recognition of the fact that Canadians accept their international responsibilities.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE LEVELS—REQUEST THAT BUDGET BE INTRODUCED

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In blatant contradiction to what the Minister stated yesterday, when he said that interest rates were falling and that unemployment rates were falling, we learned today that the prime lending rate has increased by 0.6 per cent and that the unemployment rate has increased by 0.4 per cent. It means that there are 167,000 more Canadians out of work now than there were last month.

In view of the staggering unemployment rate, is the Minister prepared to come forward with the Budget now? What the Minister said yesterday is not true. Canadians need a Budget, and they need it in March.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I said yesterday, and I will say it again today, is that we cannot judge the performance of the Government's economic policy on a short-term basis—whether that be two weeks or one month. I would suggest that the Hon. Member should wait for the Budget. The Budget will come after we have had the opportunity to discuss with the First Ministers, next week in Regina, the ideas which they have on economic policy and which they feel should be reflected in our Budget; and also after the national economic conference. As soon as I can return to the House with a Budget, after the economic conference, I will present that Budget.

CHALLENGE '85—WAGE SUBSIDY COMPONENT

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, that is an obvious about-face by the Minister of Finance. I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

In view of the fact that the youth unemployment rate is a staggering 17 per cent, can the Minister explain to the House why she has made wage subsidies the centre-piece of the employment strategy, when in fact she has evaluations within her own Department which suggest that they will not assist any of the depressed areas of Canada and that 60 per cent of the jobs would have been created anyway? Why is the Minister making wage subsidies the centre-piece of the employment strategy?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, wage subsidies are a major part of the summer employment program, because that is the way we will produce jobs for young people this summer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Again, Mr. Speaker, the record will show very clearly an about-face by the Minister of Employment and Immigration from what she said in May of 1984.

Will the Minister kindly tell the House what she will do in terms of remedial measures for the high unemployment areas in Canada? Unemployment in eastern Canada has reached 23.2 per cent in Newfoundland, 15.6 per cent in New Brunswick, 13.9 per cent in Nova Scotia, and 14.2 per cent in P.E.I. What remedial measures will the Minister recommend to her Cabinet colleagues forthwith?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, clearly the Government and no Member of Parliament can take any comfort from the figures which were released this morning. We said from the outset that it would be a long, hard road. We said that last month when the figures were better, and we reiterate it now.

• (1120)

We have already put plans into place, Mr. Speaker. We have, for instance, introduced Investment Canada in order to bring investment to this country and to create more jobs.

Mr. Broadbent: Where is it?

Miss MacDonald: We have put into place economic development measures. My colleague, the Minister for DRIE, has reached agreements with provinces, particularly those which are hard pressed. This week I introduced a $205 million program for students for the summer, and there are other programs. I would say that what we are particularly looking forward to is the First Ministers' conference and the measures which will be announced there.

UNEMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is not surprising the Prime Minister is not in the House today, considering the figures we have seen. If you want to bark, go bark outside!

My question is directed to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker.

I am not going to talk about the many promises made by the Minister during the election campaign. I just want to remind him it has now been about 100 days since the Government announced its commitments in the Throne Speech on November 5. As part of these commitments, the Minister announced a three-pronged strategy for creating employment for all Canadians. A few days later, the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board announced cutbacks totalling $4 billion in job creation programs announced by the previous Government, although in his economic statement, the Minister said that this Government was going to create jobs. My question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Today, considering the statistics showing that 167,000 more Canadians are unemployed, with increases in unemployment occurring in all provinces, is the Minister prepared to admit before the House today that his policy has failed and that his sole achievement has been to produce an average of 1670 unemployed Canadians per day?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I can tell the Hon. Member is that the policy of the previous Government was a complete failure and that is why the people voted for the Conservative Party last September 4—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —to see a change in Government and a change in policy. I believe that the Hon. Member is displaying a lack of understanding of economic policy if he expects that something done in November is going to have an immediate impact in January or February. We are working in the right direction. We are convinced that the broad direction which we sent out, and the specific areas of policy which were set out in the economic statement in November, are the right way. We never promised a quick fix. We never promised that it was going to happen overnight. But it is going in the right direction, and it is very clear from the economic statistics which we have seen over a period of time that we are moving in the right direction.

I caution the Hon. Member not simply to take one month's figures and say that that is a sign of failure, because Canadians are too smart for that.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Minister says I do not understand economic policy. Be that as it may, I do understand the human factor involved. I am speaking on behalf of 1,500,000 unemployed Canadians.

My supplementary is as follows: Since the Minister answered my colleague that he did not want to bring down a budget, is he prepared to follow my example and tear up this document and release $4 billion worth of job creation programs?

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that Canadians are impressed with the histrionics that the Hon. Member has demonstrated today. What people are looking for is a stable series of policies that will address clearly the economic problems that we inherited as a Government. People saw that in the November 8 statement. They saw that we are on the right track and know that over time this is going to have a clear set—

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: People are interested in jobs, not speeches!

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think if the Hon. Member would close his mouth and listen, he might be able to learn something.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member is not going to listen, it does not make much sense to answer the question.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the figures released today are truly alarming. An increase in unemployment of 167,000 people in one month is the largest one month increase in five years. The situation in truly alarming. It is the direct consequence of the Conservative cut-backs announced in the fall. Instead of increasing confidence and assurance as promised to the people of Canada, we are getting feelings of increasing economic deprivation. That is what the Government has delivered.

Now that the Minister has seen the consequences of his massive cut-back approach which we have previously seen in British Columbia, which the people of England have seen as well, when will he reverse the policy and produce the jobs the Conservatives promised?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it quite plain to the Hon. Member that I am not happy when I see the unemployment rate go up; no more than is the Hon. Member. But we have set out a comprehensive approach to getting the level of unemployment down. That is the clear direction and clear objective of what was set out in the economic statement last November.

Before the Hon. Member gets carried away with his own rhetoric about the impact of the spending cuts, let me remind him that those spending cuts are to take effect after April 1. They have not had any impact on the economy yet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister has said that they are going to take effect after April 1.

Mr. Andre: You just said they have already taken effect.

Mr. Broadbent: Would the fellow with the large month just behind the Minister be quiet for a second?

Mr. Andre: If the fellow with the finger in the air would ask his question.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister has said the effects of the cut-backs will be left after April 1. That will mean one thing and one thing only, unemployment will get worse after April 1. He promised in these measures brought in before Christmas that there would be new confidence which would be felt right away.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are more confused than ususal.

REQUEST THAT POLICY BE REVERSED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, consider what the Minister's Prime Minister said in August, and I quote, "Massive cuts now would guarantee a recession". So said Brian Mulroney in August. What Mr. Mulroney said in August—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Broadbent: —is true now. Will the Minister of Finance recognize the truth of what the Prime Minister said in August, and reverse this disastrous economic policy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the general response to the economic statement, particularly the expenditure cuts announced on November 8, was that they were a measured, moderate approach to a most serious problem, that is, the level of the federal government's deficit, a deficit which is causing problems in capital markets because it forces up interest rates. We are trying to demonstrate to Canadians that we want to get control of that deficit so that interest rates will come down, not overnight, but we have made some very good progress since September 4, and we will make greater progress as time goes by.

Mr. Broadbent: The reality, of course, is quite different from what the Minister says. Interest rates are going up, not down.

DELIVERY OF JOBS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's Government produced figures two days ago, not the Opposition but his own Government, and the composite index said the situation for the next few months is going to get worse, not better. They are not talking about one day, or one week, or one month. They are saying the months ahead are going to get worse. In the last 24 hours we have seen the dollar reach a record low, and interest rates go up a full half percentage point. Most alarming of all, we have seen today an increase in unemployment of 167,000.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The questions are becoming very long again. I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member would ask his supplementary question.

Mr. Broadbent: I will come to the point, then. Considering these figures in the last 24 hours, as well as the negative projections, will the Government change its policies and deliver what it promised, namely, jobs?

Some Hon. Members: Jobs!

• (1130)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the simple answer to the question is no, we are not going to change the economic policy, because that economic policy is clearly accepted in a positive way by Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The reality is that interest rates have been coming down every week since September 4. There have been two weeks in which interest rates reversed. I think that is a very good performance.

I should draw to the Hon. Member's attention one thing that the Statistics Canada commentary said about the leading indicators. It said that they demonstrated somewhat of a slow-down, as I indicated in the economic statement. There is no surprise there.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PREMIER'S TRIAL—BRIEFING OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I will direct my question to the Solicitor General who, I believe, is the Acting Minister of Justice. The country remembers that in the Morgentaler case in the Province of Ontario the Attorney General of Ontario,

Roy McMurtry, waited until his officials had fully briefed him about possible grounds of appeal before he decided to appeal that decision.

With regard to the Hatfield case I would like to know, through the Solicitor General, whether the Minister of Justice was fully briefed about that case before he decided that there would be no appeal. In particular, was he advised that the court had rejected fingerprint evidence which might have been accepted in many other jurisdictions?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member opposite would recognize that those questions, while very pertinent, can only be answered by the Minister of Justice. I can only repeat the assurances that the Minister of Justice has given previously. To the best of my knowledge all proper procedures were used with regard to the handling of the case to which the Hon. Member refers.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Does the Solicitor General believe that the Minister of Justice could apply an independent mind to a decision about an appeal involving a judgment about which the Minister of Justice said he was happy because it acquitted a friend of his?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order. Order. Who is this rookie?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will recognize the fallacies implicit in those questions and the hypothetical nature of the point made. As the Hon. Member opposite, who is a former Minister, said previously, the Attorney General of Canada has a very special discretionary power and answers to no one except himself in exercising it. Under the circumstances I am sure he will agree—

Mr. Kaplan: He answers to the Canadian people.

Mr. MacKay: I am under the impression that the former Minister would agree that the only person who can give an answer under these particular circumstances is the Hon. Minister of Justice.

FORESTRY

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. During the election his Party announced that there was going to be a five year rescue plan for the forest sector and the creation of a full Ministry of Forests. Neither of those promises has been fulfilled to date.

Will the Minister of Finance stop the crazy policy of cut-backs and of returning less than one cent on the dollar to the forest sector, keep his commitment to the one million forest sector workers in Canada, and now allocate the $1 billion which is required to get forest sector workers from Newfoundland to British Columbia back to work?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should be congratulating the Government, and particularly the Prime Minister, for recognizing the importance of the forestry industry by appointing a Minister responsible for Forestry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: That's only one job.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member would meet with the Minister of State for Forestry he would understand more clearly that a number of initiatives have been taken by the Minister, and a number of plans have been put in place to address the serious problem of the forestry industry. That industry had been allowed to suffer over a long period of time without any attention whatsoever by the Government which was in power up until September 4 last.

NEED FOR REFORESTATION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I will put a very specific question to the Minister of Finance. The Canadian Forest Service has determined the urgent need to replant over 600,000 hectares in British Columbia. This would cost $200 million and would create 200,000 person years of employment. It would create a 10 per cent return on investment per annum, which is not a bad rate of return on an investment.

Will the Minister of Finance move on this for British Columbia, which represents 50 per cent of the largest industry in Canada? If he does not he is condemning the forest sector in Canada to becoming a sunset industry within his term of office.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer the Hon. Member's question. He will be pleased to know that active discussions are ongoing with the Province of British Columbia at the present time in anticipation of the signing of a forestry sub-agreement which will be one of the largest forestry agreements ever signed with a province in the history of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PREMIER'S TRIAL—IMFORMATION GIVEN TO MINISTER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It also concerns the Richard Hatfield marijuana case. I would like the Solicitor General to advise the House of the exact date that he was made aware that marijuana was found in Premier Hatfield's luggage. I would like him to advise the House who made him aware of those facts. What instructions did he give to the RCMP with respect to the finding of the marijuana? When did he first advise the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the Member has asked three questions.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will try to respond to my hon. friend. As I recall, the information was conveyed to me by the Commissioner of the RCMP. I believe that would have been some time around September 26. I listened carefully, and the RCMP Commissioner and I had a brief discussion about the events.

MINISTER'S ROLE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, could the Solicitor General indicate what instructions, if any, he gave to the RCMP? When did he advise the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice of the fact that the marijuana was found in Premier Hatfield's luggage? Could he also indicate whether he or any officials in his Department advised Premier Hatfield of the finding of the marijuana during the investigation?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the RCMP Commissioner and I had a session in which he acquainted me with the facts. I gave the RCMP Commissioner no specific directions other than to proceed in the usual way which, as the Hon. Member knows, he is very competent to do. As I recall, there was no communication to anyone by me of any of the information that the Commissioner gave me, as far as I am aware, at least for some period of time. Of course the Minister of Justice and his officials had jurisdiction over much of this affair. As far as I am concerned, my role was simply to keep myself advised about the progress that the RCMP were making in carrying out their duties.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PULP AND PAPER MILL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Returning to the subject of unemployment, I am sure you would find it ironic, Mr. Speaker, that at the time when the Government was cutting back Katimavik by $30 million, it spent $36 million on uniforms for the armed services.

[Translation]

Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

During the election campaign, the Prime Minister and the Hon. Member for Roberval, who now sits in Cabinet, promised to resolve quickly the problems of the pulp and paper mill employees at Desbiens—a small town in the Lac-Saint-Jean area—which ceased operations three years ago. What I want to know this morning, Mr. Speaker, is whether the Minister of Finance will honour this commitment made by his Prime Minister during the election campaign?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not able to give a specific response to the question of the Hon. Member. I will take it as notice and get back to him as soon as I can.

[Translation]

CLOSURE OF PULP AND PAPER MILL AT DESBIENS—NECESSITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO TAKE IMMEDIATE MEASURES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

We have here a Minister of Finance who does not know anything at all about election promises.

Mr. Speaker, I am talking about a pulp and paper mill, and the Hon. Member for Roberval, who happens to be a Minister, is in the House this morning. Some 125 people have been out of work for three years, and all I want to know is whether the Minister or the Government will keep those elections promises. It was a serious promise, Mr. Speaker, and I want action now!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I must remind the Hon. Member that the mill at Desbiens has been closed for four years and that we have hardly been in office for six months. Second, I am sure he recalls that the Saint-Raymond company submitted a project to the Governments of Quebec and Canada last December 19. Answers will be given in due time, and it has absolutely nothing to do with Government cutbacks.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PLIGHT OF MIDDLE AGED UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Let me add my compliments and kudos to the many she has already received on the Challenge '85 program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schellenberg: But where is the challenge for those who are 30, 40 or 50 years of age, who are unemployed and not students? There are many middle aged people in my riding, with an unemployment rate in excess of 30 per cent, who are looking for that kind of challenge.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that my Department and other Ministers of the Government have been working toward a human resources development plan, a new labour market strategy. That labour market strategy and many of its components will be discussed at the First Minister's conference next week.

One of the issues that we are particularly addressing is the increasing number of older Canadians who have been dislocated from their jobs and have had to face disruption because of new technologies. That is a growing concern in the country and one which we think must be tackled, in any new labour market strategy, in a way that it was not tackled in the past.

ENERGY

EAST COAST ENERGY LIMITED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Government backbenchers may be offering kudos to the Government, but the women of Canada are rating it zero because they are the worst losers in this unemployment fiasco that we have seen announced by Statistics Canada today.

My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in the absence of the Prime Minister. In light of the non responses we have had from the Government on other issues, I hope we can get some answers on this one. East Coast Energy Limited of Halifax—which I am sure is a subject of great importance to a number of Members on the government side—has exceeded its $10 million credit line with the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and is being forced to sell off its only major asset, a one per cent interest in the Venture gas field. What is the Government prepared to do to protect the hundreds of small investors across Nova Scotia who stand to lose their life savings?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe that that question should more properly be directed to the Minister of Finance, since it falls within his jurisdiction.

Ms. Copps: I am looking for guidance from the Chair. Is that a redirect?

Mr. Speaker: A question, if you have one.

Ms. Copps: I am sorry that the Minister of Energy knows nothing about this particular venture.

USE OF PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM GRANTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this particular company, East Coast Energy Limited—in case the Minister is not familiar with it—

Miss Carney: I'm familiar with it.

Ms. Copps: —has received over $1 million in Petroleum Incentives Program grants. Will the Deputy Prime Minister ask the Prime Minister to order a public inquiry into the use of those PIP grants, to assure the people of Canada that their money has been properly spent and accounted for?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): No.

UNEMPLOYMENT

YOUTH—INQUIRY ABOUT MEASURES TO BE TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, again my question relates to unemployment, more particularly unemployment among young people which has soared from 16.7 per cent to 19.3 per cent within a single month, between December and January.

Mr. Speaker, is the Government now prepared to shelve its destructive cutback policy and create lasting jobs for the 20 per cent of Canadians—one out of five of our workers is a youth—who are without jobs as a result of the policies of the previous Government, policies which this new Government continues to follow?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the simple answer is no. We are not about to abandon any economic policy that was announced on November 8. I believe that policy has been well received by a wide range of Canadians. It has been the right way to deal with both the unemployment problem and the structural problems that are facing the country. There is no question in the minds of the Government as well as of many Canadians that there will be a very clear, positive effect on unemployment over time and there will be many less people unemployed once the impact of that policy is felt.

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

I have just returned from the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area where the government's policies are not very popular, mostly among the young. In view of the fact that some of them have to make do with $156 a month and that fewer than 30 per cent—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I must make the point at some time today that preambles and questions are getting longer. Will the Hon. Member please put a question immediately?

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: What concrete action is the Minister of Finance considering for the great many unemployed young people in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area of the province of Quebec?

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I presume the Hon. Member has not been in the House this week because the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration has set forth a very clear and positive innovative policy in the amount of $205 million that is clearly directed to the younger people of this country, particularly students.

Mr. Cassidy: Just students.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): She has indicated on many occasions that there are other aspects of this policy which she will be announcing soon. I suggest that the Hon. Member exercise a degree of patience. The answers will be coming.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INVESTMENT TAX CREDITS—REACTIVATION SOUGHT FOR ENERGY EXPLORATION SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary. The Department is well aware that small businesses directly involved in oil and gas activity, particularly seismic lines and well site preparation, have been denied investment tax credits on the equipment used by them in these particular operations. This is of great concern to a riding like Peace River, because it can literally mean hundreds of jobs.

Will the Department address the situation and reactivate the use of these investment tax credits for these people, so we can ensure that we can protect these jobs for the people in Peace River and other parts of the oil and gas industry?

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question as well as his interest in this issue. The point he is making is well known to the Department. The situation results from a judicial decision rendered in 1983, and I can assure the Hon. Member that the Department, following its review of the tax credit scheme offered to small businesses, will announce in the near future that the type of operation he is interested in will be entitled to the tax credit, just as was formerly the case.

PUBLIC SERVICE

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—JOB CLASSIFICATIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board or to his Parliamentary Secretary but I do not see him either. I will therefore direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Earlier this week, I put a question to the President of the Treasury Board about job classifications in the Public Service. In his answer, the Minister said in an offhand manner, and I refer to page 1964 in Hansard:

I am happy to report to the Hon. Member that we are making some very interesting progress on all six issues that we are discussing at the moment.

● (1150)

[English]

I should like to ask the Minister if these six issues to which he referred in the House on Monday were the master contract, political rights, a dental plan, adjustment procedures, amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act, and public service pensions. Are those the issues to which he was referring in the House?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this matter briefly with the President of the Treasury Board, and he says that the discussions he is having with the unions have been very, very productive, and that they are moving along nicely in reaching some resolution to the problems which are under discussion right now. His very great hope and expectation are that the result of these discussions will be a great improvement in labour-management relations.

AGREEMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that staff associations as late as yesterday said on radio—and I quote Mr. Donegani, President of the PIPS group—"since we have yet to have hard input from him", the Minister, "it must mean that he has agreed with our positions, and we are happy to hear that", could the Minister confirm that the President of the Treasury Board, on the matters which I mentioned in my previous question, has agreed with the staff associations? Will he announce today when we can expect a signed agreement on these six issues?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to underline the very good tone which these discussions are taking between the President of the Treasury Board and the various unions. The President is hopeful that these discussions will be resolved shortly and that there will be a positive response. However, I do not think it is helpful for me or for the Hon. Member to try to draw these discussions on to the floor of the House of Commons at a point when they are at a sensitive stage and are clearly resulting in an improvement in the tone of labour-management relations.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

CREATION OF JOBS IN MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the only issue which really matters today, that is, the unemployment rate that exists in the country, and is directed to the Minister of Finance. The one province which is showing that Governments can make a difference in creating jobs is the Province of Manitoba. When will the Minister of Finance keep the election promise of the Government and provide a change in the equalization formula so that Manitoba gets the money it needs to provide more jobs for Manitobans?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Hon. Member is aware, I have had a number of discussions with the Minister of Finance from the Province of Manitoba. He was in Ottawa, I believe a week ago, with other representatives from various organizations in Manitoba, discussing the issue. I set out some of the considerations which had to be taken into account there. I indicated that it wasn't just a one-province issue, that a number of provinces are affected by the issue. It isn't an easy one to resolve because of the large amount of moneys which are involved and the fact that we have a very high deficit with which we have to deal on an ongoing basis. I indicated to him—and I will indicate it to the House—that we are close to reaching a decision on this. I will be communicating this both to the House and to that Minister of Finance in due course.

FUNDING FOR QUEBEC

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer. I am sure we are all awaiting that announcement. Because jobs are so important and we must have action by Governments now, could the Minister tell us that they will be acting on the promise of the Prime Minister in Quebec during the election campaign, and that they will increase the money going to provinces like Quebec through the equalization formula? That was an election promise. It will create jobs. Are they going to act on it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have set out very clearly the broad program we are following to create employment opportunities. As I have said on many occasions, that has been very well received by people right across the country, including people in the Province of Quebec and in the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. Murphy: The Province of Manitoba—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would suggest to the Hon. Member, first of all, that he listen to the answer before he asks another question. I also suggest that he exercise a degree of restraint in his criticism and watch for the results. I can assure him that the results of the program which we have set out will be far in excess of anything he has seen before.

Mr. Murphy: That is what scares us.

TRANSPORT

AUTOMOBILE EMISSION CONTROLS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Right Hon. Prime Minister I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Transport. It has to do with the upcoming scheduled meeting between the Prime Minister and President Reagan in March, when the issue of acid rain will be tackled and where the Prime Minister will need every bit of help he can get from his two Ministers of Transport, having given away Canada's bargaining position in a manner whereby, even if Canada were to close down its emissions tomorrow, it would still suffer considerably from the 26 million tonnes of SO_2 emissions coming from the United States. Now—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The next sentence.

Mr. Caccia: —the Minister of State for Transport is aware that there is a squabble going on right now in Ottawa between his Department, on the one hand, and the Department of the Environment and the Department of National Health and Welfare, on the other hand, over the date of the introduction of these controls.

I am asking the Minister of State for Transport whether he could assure the House that he will make an announcement for his Prime Minister, whereby cars sold in Canada will have emission controls installed in the 1987 models.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, we certainly do not intend to answer on behalf of the Prime Minister. I think that the question should be directed to the Minister of Environment. However, I should say that the Department of Transport will co-operate with the Department of Environment and we will provide an answer.

Mr. Caccia: Obviously, the Minister is not familiar with the issue.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina East.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina East.

Mr. Caccia: I am asking for my right—

Mr. Caccia: I am asking for my right to ask a supplementary question, and I demand it.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order. Take your seat.

Mr. Caccia: I am asking for my right to ask a supplementary.

Ms. Copps: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Caccia: On a point of order—

Miss MacDonald: You can't have a point of order.

Mr. Caccia: I have a right to ask a supplementary.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Caccia: I will not sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina East.

Mr. Caccia: I have a right—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina East.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Caccia: Your Honour is here to serve us.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: I am asking for the right to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Caccia: This is not the first time, Your Honour.

Mr. Speaker: He knows—

Mr. Caccia: I am asking for my right to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina East.

Ms. Copps: On a point of order—

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance.

Mr. Caccia: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister a question—

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Just ignore him, Simon.

Mr. de Jong: I can't be heard.

Mr. Speaker: I can hear the Hon. Member ask his question, and so can the government side. Please ask your question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: Thank you.

TRUST COMPANIES

PIONEER TRUST COMPANY COLLAPSE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Yesterday I asked her questions on the Pioneer Trust Company of Regina, to which she responded as follows:

—I am aware of the situation about which the Hon. Member has asked . . . My officials have been monitoring this situation—

How long was the Minister or her officials aware of the serious financial situation of Pioneer Trust? How many other western-based trust companies are on the brink of collapse?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, Pioneer Trust was one of the first trust companies which was brought to my attention. We had been working very closely with provincial officials—my officials—and with the company for some time. As far as I am informed, there are no other western trust companies on the verge of collapse. Our concern is always for the depositors first.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is the Minister or her officials aware of any activities undertaken on behalf of Pioneer Trust by the senior management of that company which in any way violated the charter of incorporation or the Trust Company Act? Will she consent to an open and full public inquiry?

● (1200)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think it is premature to discuss a public inquiry at this point. As I indicated in my first answer, our first concern is for the depositors. My officials, and those of the CDIC, will be working actively to see that the insured depositors are the priority. We will then be examining the company and will take very appropriate step.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

RECOVERY OF OVERPAYMENTS—REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I would like to raise with her again the case of the 350 Canadians who are required by the Unemployment Insurance Commission to repay benefits received in the honest belief that they were employees within the meaning of the Unemployment Insurance Act. A board of referees constituted under the Act has ruled that repayments cannot be required to be made. Will the Minister review the situation and determine what legal advice she is getting? It seem to make common and legal sense that the Unemployment Insurance Commission desist from making this claim.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have asked officials and the legal advisers in my Department to look at this very serious matter. I have already indicated that those people who are being asked to make repayments and who are in a position of being only in receipt of unemployment insurance or welfare will certainly not be pressed for repayment at this time. However, with regard to the over-all question, that is being reviewed to see what discretion I may have as Minister, or the Government may have.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Witer) on Thursday, February 7, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED BREACH OF STANDING ORDERS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. At approximately 11:17 today you in your discretion allowed a Conservative Member to make a statement pursuant to Standing Order 21. That was clearly in breach of the rules which require that oral questions commence at 11:15. The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) was entitled to a supplmentary and was denied that supplementary. I would ask the Speaker whether there is—

An Hon. Member: Give him the boot.

Mr. Speaker: No. The Hon. Member is obviously concerned. I will simply say that is not a question of privilege.

DENIAL OF SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Hon. Charles L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I feel that I have a question of privilege in having been denied a supplementary following an answer that was a non-answer by a Minister who does not know his file, who denied that he had any responsibility for it and shifted the responsibility to another Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member raising a question of privilege with regard to the denial of a supplementary?

Mr. Caccia: If you would permit me to complete, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: May I ask that he quickly come to his basis of how he finds this to be a question of privilege under Beauchesne or the rules of this House.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I believe that my privilege has been violated because, as the environment critic for the Official Opposition, I speak on these matters on behalf of Canadians who are concerned. By denying me the right to put a supplementary, you have denied my pursuit of a matter that is in the public interest, is urgent and is the responsibility of that particular Minister of State to deal with.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is fully aware of the citation in Beauchesne, and I need not read it, which indicates that the Speaker sees whom the Speaker sees, and, second, that supplementaries are entirely at the discretion of the Speaker.

The Member knows that. I presume he must know since he is raising the ultimate parliamentary—

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Member might also please keep his seat while the Speaker is addressing the House. Beauchesne is very clear on the granting of supplementaries. I take it the Hon. Member does not know the citation. I will quote it. Supplementary Questions, Beauchesne, Citation 371:

> Although there may be no debate on an answer, further questions, as may be necessary for the elucidation of the answers that have been given ... may be addressed to a Minister. The extent to which supplementary questions may be asked is in the discretion of the Speaker.

The House well knows, and I think the Hon. Member well knows because I have said it many times, that Question Period is for the purpose of asking questions. Therefore, I have consistently done my best to show Members, in whatever ways I can, that long preambles to questions are not going to be tolerated by the Speaker. By now the House must know that is the Speaker's view.

The Member will also know, since he was addressing his question to the Chair, as he must, that I waved and signaled to him three times to tell him that his preamble was going on too long. I held the stop-watch up that I use to indicate that he at that point was going well beyond what was appropriate. Nevertheless, he chose to continue with his preamble. He chose, with respect, to take practically a minute before he got to the beginning of his question.

Therefore, in the exercise of my discretion, without embarrassing the Member by rising to cut him off, which is my ultimate sanction, I indicated as best I could to the Member that he should come to the question immediately. Because he did not, I chose to exercise my discretion not to grant a supplementary. I do not find, with due respect, that a breach of privilege or order has resulted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a separate point of order?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege to bring to your attention the following facts. My question was not unduly lengthy compared to other questions. Second, and more important, Sir, if the granting of a supplementary is fully the prerogative of the Speaker and it is granted to all other colleagues of mine, it is not fair to deny it to this Member when he is asking for a supplementary. That is definitely a discriminatory decision which has affected my ability to ask a supplementary. I do not believe my question was unduly long compared to other questions asked in this House. I still feel that I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate that the Member is upset because he was not granted a supplementary. I understand he feels that way. Therefore, I will take no offence and make no comment on the fact that a comment has been made about a ruling. I think that is fair. The Member is upset.

The point I am trying to make to the Member and to all Members is that I will not tolerate long preambles. The Member's question today was by some length the longest question today. I have for the last three or four days—the Hon. Member thinks his question was not. I had a stop-watch on his question and can guarantee him that he was 30 per cent longer than any other questioner today. I can guarantee him that.

At some point I do not have any option but to try and signal Members to come to the question. If Members do not do that, then there must be some penalty. The only penalty I have to invoke is to do what I did. I will continue to do it in a non-discriminatory way against any Members who put questions at too great a length in my view, as I will continue to come back at Ministers who in my view make too long an answer to a question when they can use the procedure of Statements by Ministers if they want to make a statement.

Ms. Copps: You didn't cut off the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: With great respect to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), I have cut off the Prime Minister a total number of times once more than I have cut off the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think we have a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Government House Leader tells the Prime Minister that, I will do nothing for him in the future!

I am trying as best I can and will continue to try to apply this policy equally. If some Hon. Members think it is not applied equally, then I suggest they get a stop-watch and we can debate the time. What in fact is happening is that the Ministers answered their questions today, with one exception, in less than 60 seconds.

Ms. Copps: They didn't answer them at all. They passed them off.

• (1210)

Mr. Speaker: With respect, it is very difficult for the Speaker to find that Members really care about the questions of privilege and points of order they put to the Speaker when they do not listen.

My point is that I have risen to try to help the Hon. Member for Davenport and others understand what happened today. Because the Hon. Member's question was excessively long today, I chose not to grant him a supplementary question. That is my right. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East may not think so but it is. That right will be exercised against all Members in those circumstances and it will be exercised against all Ministers who speak too long. Hon. Members should know that it is my view that Question Period is in the interests of the House and works best when it is shorter, quicker and more spontaneous and is therefore fair to all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I take it that you have just given some kind of directive to the Members of the House in that you have stated that any question lasting longer than one minute and 15 seconds will not be accepted by Your Honour. I am asking you the question because if I heard you correctly—

Mr. Speaker: No, with respect, I said that I gave the Hon. Member for Davenport several indications as best I could. Of course, the Hon. Member was paying attention to the Chair because that is where his question was directed. With respect, I indicated to him several times that his preamble was too long. He chose to continue with his preamble rather than to come to the question. That is the point I am trying to make to the Hon. Member for Davenport. Does the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) have a further point of order?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that you supply us with stop-watches. I will need one from now on because the answers cannot be any longer than the questions. I will buy one.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier knows full well the point I am trying to make. The point of Question Period is for one group to ask questions and for another group to answer. I think Hon. Members also know that the Ministry answers as the Ministry sees fit. If Hon. Members are upset with the answers, as was the Hon. Member for Davenport, they have a remedy under the rules and that is the late show. I presume the Hon. Member chooses to use that remedy given that he is unhappy. I will take his complaint today as an automatic notice to the Chair of a request for a late show question. Perhaps that will help.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid I noticed the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni rising on a question of privilege and I must give him precedence.

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am relatively new at this job but I thought my job here was to debate legislation and not to debate histrionics that could be better solved in chambers.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a question of privilege. I now recognize the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I ask quite sincerely for your indulgence because there are a great many concerns here with regard to Question Period and how Question Period is run.

Mr. Speaker: Is that a point of order?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, do not act prematurely, please. What I am asking—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I have ruled on a question of privilege. I ruled that it was not a question of privilege. I responded as best I could to a particular Member's concern and anger. I think the Hon. Member knows that I cannot allow the House to get into a debate or conversation about a ruling. If that is what the Hon. Member intends, I am in some difficulty. If he has concerns about Question Period and how it is run, may I suggest that he come to see me or put his concerns through his House Leader or Whip, who do see me on formal matters, as is the normal procedure. May I suggest that we leave it at that?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My question to you, Your Honour, is with regard to referral. Is there such a thing as referral in Question Period? Why was the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) not cut off? He did not have a preamble. Why was he not cut off?

In view of the fact that issues are raised on the floor of the House of Commons which are important to all Members, would it not be better to wait until another time—perhaps three o'clock—to introduce guests in the gallery in order to accommodate all Members of Parliament? Would the Speaker kindly consider that?

Mr. Speaker: I take it that these are suggestions and I will take them that way. It is my habit, if I think an introduction has gone on longer than it normally would, to try to grant an extra question at the end of the hour, as I granted one today to the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). This is done in order to retrieve some of the time we lose during introductions of people for whom we have great respect. That is exactly what I do. If the Hon. Member has some other concern, I suggest he put it through the Whip or the House Leader.

Mr. Gauthier: Read your book. It says three o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Of course. The book also says that the Speaker sees the clock and the Speaker sees Members. If the Hon. Member is raising the question of three o'clock, to which clock does he refer? They all read differently. Does he refer to this clock, that clock, the Hon. Member's watch or my watch?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: What is the clock for? It shows.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member also knows that I am required to see Hon. Members in the order in which they rise. The Hon. Member also knows that that is not always the request I receive from the various Parties, that I recognize Members in the order in which they rise. There are things we do here which are a part of our traditions. The Speaker sees the clock and if the Speaker, in his judgment, feels that because the introduction of two visitors has taken place another question might be appropriate in order to make sure that Question Period goes as long as it should go, he will allow for that. That is what the Speaker does. If the Hon. Member has a concern about Question Period, I would welcome hearing about it; but I would suggest that he make that concern known through the normal procedures. I assure Hon. Members that I appreciate the importance of Question Period and I am perfectly happy to discuss it at any time. I invite the Hon. Member to see me about the matter.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the Hon. Member that if it is the same point of order, I will not hear it.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are aware of the maxim that justice must not only be done but must appear to be done. I would ask Your Honour to indicate the reason that a Conservative Member was allowed to make a statement pursuant to Standing Order 21 when it was clearly beyond the hour of 11.15?

Mr. Speaker: Because my clock showed 11.14 and a half.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 30

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Speaker: I have received an application from the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) under Standing Order 30.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if I may briefly explain why I gave Your Honour notice about the intention to move a motion for an emergency debate, we have learned today that unemployment has increased in our country by over 167,000 in one month. That is the largest increase on a monthly basis in five years. Yesterday we saw a record drop in the Canadian dollar and a major increase in interest rates. In short, Your Honour, these various indicators, as well as the composite index which is forecasting continuing problems in the months ahead, show that we clearly have an economic crisis before us that should be debated in this House. If you so rule, Your Honour, I would be prepared to move the appropriate motion under the appropriate Standing Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa gave me notice of his application for an emergency debate. Standing Order 30 provides a procedure for "discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration". As I pointed out when ruling on a similar application only the other day what is envisaged is a sudden emergency of such importance that the national interest calls for its immediate consideration by the House. One of the factors which must be taken into account is "urgency of debate" as distinct from the importance of the issue itself.

• (1220)

Standing Order 30(5) requires the Speaker to have regard to "the probability of the matter being brought before the House within a reasonable time by other means". Four Allotted Days remain during the current supply period and the subject could be chosen for debate on one of those days. In fact, I am given to understand that there is an Allotted Day available for that purpose next week.

I say that recognizing full well with the Hon. Member and other Members that unemployment is a terrible problem which is likely to be an ongoing issue of deep concern. The fact that we have the greatest monthly increase in unemployment in more than four years is sincerely regretable and must be a source of worry to all. An aggravation of this problem is always a serious matter. While the single increase in the unemployment rate would not justify the Chair in allowing an application for an emergency debate, that is not to say that more than one such jump might not constitute the basis for such a debate.

In the circumstances, I must therefore find that the Hon. Member's application does not meet the requirements of Standing Order 30 at present.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, February 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted at six o'clock two days ago, I had indicated my general support for this Bill, which provides pension help for a small group of senior citizens. I had also indicated my regret that the Government was not taking the opportunity to bring in a comprehensive pension reform package which would be somewhat in line with the Opposition Day last May when the present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) condemned the Liberal Government for its failure to move on this question.

It is obvious in the Bill that the Conservatives, like the Liberals before them, are moving ahead by inches while the problem is moving ahead by country miles. We might think that the gradual reduction of pension age over the past few years is a sign that we are becoming a more humane and generous society, but that is far from the case. Our pensions are not keeping up with the basic changes in our society and in our economy. For example, in 1964 old age security provided seniors with 20 per cent of the average industrial wage. In 1983 that same old age security provided seniors with only 14 per cent of the average industrial wage. Today we have reached the situation in which over 50 per cent of our senior citizens must depend upon the guaranteed income supplement to maintain an adequate income for their retirement years.

If we looked at the situation in an historical context, we would realize that it was not unusual for many people to work until the age of 70, or until they dropped, whichever came first. The retirement age has gradually dropped to the age of 65. The pension age followed that, rather than preceded it. Today the economic and job situation is radically different from what it was in the 1960s. That can only be highlighted by the unemployment statistics, about which our Party is concerned, that Statistics Canada released today.

Over the past two or three years the closure of several mills in my riding has displaced many workers who are in their late fifties or early sixties. The tragedy is not just that they are unemployed today and that they have very little hope of getting work in the future, but that they have no pension provisions which will tide them over until the time when old age security will be made available to them.

Last month a constituent wrote to me. His letter bothered me because the kind of questions which he asked are questions for which there are no answers in the present situation. The man was laid off last July and sees little hope for ever again obtaining work. He pointed out that over the last 20 years he has worked in a number of different industries in western Canada and that he was involved in different pension arrangements in which he either made contributions or had contributions made on his behalf. However, he was never in any of those jobs long enough for his contributions to be vested. That is a pattern which is typical of many workers in the construction, logging and similar industries. His last job was in the woodworking industry, but the woodworking pension requires eight years of service before a worker's contributions can be vested. That constituent had worked in the industry for approximately seven years. He now finds himself completely out of luck and is understandably bitter. His letter reads:

> Some fat cat who has been fortunate enough to work steady will now reap the benefit of the hours I have contributed into the fund, while myself and the many others in similar positions can look forward to nothing but a penurious old age embittered by the knowledge that others are reaping the benefits of our labour.

Apart from the fact that he looks upon some of his fellow workers as "fat cats" simply because they will be able to qualify for the pension, I am in complete agreement with what he has written. There is an element of unfairness in which workers pay into pension plans for a number of years and then, through no fault of their own, are laid off and their contributions are returned to them but they do not receive the benefit of the employer's contribution. Of course, that is by no means unique to woodworkers or others in my riding.

Cases such as this led the former Member for Nanaimo-Alberni, Mr. Ted Miller, to issue a minority report of the Task Force on Pension Reform. In that report he listed some of the shortcomings of occupational pension plans. His report indicated that only half of the men and fewer than one-third of the women in the paid workforce were covered by such plans, and that when people changed jobs it was difficult to maintain coverage because of the long vesting periods and the general lack of portability of the plans. The benefits are rarely protected against inflation and survivor benefits are most commonly available only on the condition that the plan member accepts a reduced level of retirement benefits.

In contrast to the shortcomings of occupational pension plans, he stressed the advantages of the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. Those plans are fully portable, have immediate vesting and are fully indexed. One of the shortcomings of the CPP/QPP which we might note is that Indian people who are working on reserves do not have the advantage of that program. I hope the Government will remedy that at an early date. The major drawback of the CPP/QPP is that they replace only 25 per cent of pre-retirement earnings. Mr. Miller suggested that the best way to deal with the pension situation was to raise CPP/QPP to 50 per cent of pre-retirement earnings so that workers across Canada would have a decent pension plan, whether or not they changed jobs frequently, and that their pension plans would be fully indexed and portable and would provide, along with old age security, a decent standard of income. Mr. Miller also called for a reduction in the eligibility age for the old age security and the guaranteed income supplement to the age of 60. He indicated that there should be an immediate investigation of the needs of workers who were between the ages of 55 and 60.

That is the type of constituent I talked about earlier who has been laid off and has no opportunity or hope of ever having long-term, reasonably paid employment again in his working life. Those people suffer that long gap between when they are laid off from a job and when they qualify for old age security; ten years in many cases and even longer. Their only hope is to get on welfare. That is not good enough. The changing conditions in our society today, when so many older workers are being laid off, demand that we bring in some kind of comprehensive pension program which is going to deal with the needs of these people.

These are the kinds of measures which we would like to see in a comprehensive pension reform package, the same package which the Conservatives called for when they were in Opposition. The hallmarks of a pension plan should be adequacy to the situation. Enough should be provided and it should be fair. The present Bill adds to the patchwork quality of our pension arrangements. It continues to ignore the needs of people who were never married, people who are divorced, and couples neither of whom is over the age of 65 years.

We are not opposed to the Bill, but it only does something for one small group of senior citizens. The only regret is that the Conservatives are not prepared to do in government what they called for when they were in opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-25 now before the House is another example of clumsy manœuvring on the part of the Progressive Conservative Party. After confusing the issue for months and after a host of strategic withdrawals from its position on universality of social programs, the Government has given us an incomplete Bill which is basically unfair to many Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, although we agree with the part of Bill C-26 that extends the spouse's allowance to all low-income widows or widowers between sixty and sixty-five, we think that the Bill in its present form is discriminatory and unfair to tens of thousands of Canadians whether they are single, legally separated or divorced. This Government, which has no consistent social policy, is once again improvising and giving too little.

Mr. Speaker, I agree that widows and widowers between sixty and sixty-five deserve to get the proposed allowance and should get it. But what is the Government doing for tens of thousands of Canadians who are single, separated or divorced, between sixty and sixty-five years' old and living on very low incomes and whose lives often come very close to personal tragedy? Instead of proposing a consistent social policy for the aged, the Government prefers to skimp on essentials. This does not surprise me, Mr. Speaker, because the essence of conservatism is surely to turn a blind eye to the neediest among us, and to give only enough to camouflage a given situation. I fail to understand how this Government, in 1985, can table a discriminatory piece of legislation in which the marital status of the individual rather than the individual's real needs is the criterion.

This Bill should be withdrawn for speedy revision to include all persons in need between the ages of sixty and sixty-five, irrespective of their marital status. In a country that has a charter of rights and freedoms that says that marital status must not be a discriminatory criterion, how can we justify in 1985 the tabling of a Bill such as Bill C-26? Mr. Speaker, let us take a closer look at what the Progressive Conservative Party is proposing.

Clause 1 of Bill C-26 states that the spouse is not only the legitimate spouse but also any other person of the opposite sex who is living with that person, having lived with that person for at least three years when there is a bar to their marriage or at least one year where there is no such bar, if the two persons have publicly represented themselves as man and wife.

Clause 5 of the same Bill provides for a spouse's allowance to be paid to a person aged sixty to sixty-five, regardless of the age of the deceased spouse at the time of death. Why does a single person not have the same rights under this Bill, Mr. Speaker? Does the single or divorced person not have the same minimum needs? Do they not have to eat and pay the rent and heat their homes in winter? Do they not have the right to live decently?

Mr. Speaker, this Bill is both immoral and discriminatory. I am happy to see that the Progressive Conservative Party realizes that widows and widowers in need must be helped. I am happy to see that 85,000 Canadians, most of them women, will be able to benefit from a measure that will give them some very real assistance. I find it unacceptable that this bill would make second-class citizens out of 80,000 needy Canadians who are single or divorced.

When I read the bill, I could not believe that such a thing could be possible in 1985 in a civilized country with laws forbidding discrimination. Should these 80,000 Canadians, most of whom are women, be punished because of their marital status? Personally, Mr. Speaker, I find this legislation even more offensive because I had the honour to succeed, as a Member of Parliament, the one person who did the most to establish the principle of equity and social justice in this House, the former Liberal Member of Parliament and Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Hon. Monique Bégin, who fought for years to assert the rights of women, senior citizens, the poor and the handicapped, without any distinction based on marital status, race or religion. This Government is bringing us back tens and even hundreds of years, while the Hon. Monique Bégin, through her tireless work, did everything to ensure that Canada would have a progressive social system adapted to the needs of its people. After dancing to the waltz of universality, the Conservative Government has introduced a bill based on discriminatory criteria.

I would be remiss in my duties and I would disregard the example left to us by the Hon. Monique Bégin, if I did not denounce vigorously the bill before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that all people, whether they are single, divorced or widowed, have the same rights. Living alone is often a hardship for senior citizens. Are we going to add to this a discrimination based on past marital status? Mr. Speaker, nothing can justify the discriminatory aspects of this bill. The Liberal Party of Canada will not allow the Conservative Government to ease its conscience while forgetting the real problems! The Liberal Party of Canada will always fight for equity, social justice and the respect of the individual! This bill must be amended as soon as possible.

• (1240)

In 1985, Canadian men and women cannot tolerate such obvious and unfair discrimination. All senior citizens between the ages of 60 and 65 who meet certain income requirements, must become eligible as soon as possible to the benefits provided by Bill C-26.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard).

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I was listening very closely when the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) made his comments, and in my view he is genuinely concerned about a certain group of people, and definitely very familiar with the proposed legislation. There is one thing I would like to know, further to his comments. Since he also admits there are good things in this legislation, I would then like to know whether he is going to vote for, or against it.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, of course I acknowledged in my remarks that the Government was in fact helping widowers and widows. Where I disagree, Mr. Speaker, and I think I have said this, is on the discriminatory nature of the legislation, because at least 80,000 single or divorced Canadians would not be entitled to the allowance proposed in Bill C-26. We support the principle of Bill C-26. We are going to fight until we can manage to have it amended, so that those other people are included. But, of course, we could not vote against this kind of initiative.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleague the same question I asked following a letter I sent to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). And to fully understand what this is all about, when the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) claim that this legislation is aimed at the people most in need . . . I see two ladies here, and I think they will surely appreciate the importance of the matter.

I would like to refer to three cases in my constituency, the same as in every other constituency in Canada. I have Mrs. Lebrun—

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Government Deputy Whip (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the concerns of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), but his contribution looks like just another speech, and since this Bill is dear to us all, I would ask him this, with the best feelings of friendship in this House: Could we proceed with the debate, in order that the Bill may go to committee as soon as possible, and could we let our colleague deliver his speech now because he must leave for home?

Mr. Malépart: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: My point of order is that I do not feel we have to rush this Bill through, because it is only due to come into force on September 1st, and today is February 8th. It is therefore my view that we have all the time we need to discuss the point of order, and it is a Member's right and privilege to express his views in the House of Commons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I will remind both Hon. Members, the Government Deputy Whip and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mrs. Mailly and Mr. Malépart), that the period for questions and comments is allowed at the discretion of the Chair, and it is in order, occasionally, to ask a member to limit his speech whenever it is thought that he is exceeding his right to speak. But in the case of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), I think you had just started speaking, and I see no reason whatsoever to step in at this point.

Mr. Malépart: To continue, Mr. Speaker . . . That was a question I was directing to the previous speaker while giving him an example, so everybody could understand well.

There is in my riding a certain Mrs. Lebrun who is 62 years of age. She lives alone in her apartment. A widow for the past five years, she pays $250 per month in rent and gets $427 per month in social welfare. Her next door neighbour, a Mrs. Leblanc, is 62 also. She too lives alone in her apartment. She too pays $250 per month in rent and gets $427 per month in social welfare. She has been separated from her husband for the past five years. Her other next door neighbour, a Mrs. Legris, is also 62. She too lives alone in her apartment for which she too pays $250 per month in rent, while receiving also $427 per month in social welfare. She is single. Could my hon. colleague indicate to me on what criterion of justice the Prime Minister based his judgment that Mrs. Lebrun is faced with a more distressing situation than her two next door neighbours?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) has the floor.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, that was the very drift of my speech. I said that we support the introduction of Bill C-26, but that we feel it is discriminatory in that, as my hon. colleague clearly explained, two people of the same age and living in the same surroundings will be treated differently simply because one married and the other remained single. That is what I was saying in my remarks. That situation is discriminatory, unfair and should not be tolerated in 1985.

[English]

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add a few comments in support of Bill C-26, the amendments to the Old Age Security Act, and to support the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). As this is my first speech in this parliamentary session, I would like to thank the electors in Kitchener for their tremendous vote of confidence in me and their words of support and encouragement since September 4. I hope I am able to do justice to their confidence in me.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reimer: Permit me to make a few comments about the riding of Kitchener, Mr. Speaker. The City of Kitchener is well known as a clean city with excellent educational and support services for its citizens, including a very well known farmers' market. The people of the federal riding of Kitchener are an industrious, hard-working and skilled group of people. "Diversified" is a word which best describes the economic community in the Kitchener area. From food products to footwear, chemicals to computer systems, automotive parts to appliances, textiles to tools and motors to heavy machinery—all of these and many other products are manufactured in Kitchener. Indeed, the riding continues to attract excellent new investment because of the enterprise and commitment of its businessmen and, more importantly, the skill and dedication of its labour force.

Kitchener and the Waterloo region is also an area of deep religious roots and conviction as well as an area which has been greatly enriched by its cultural heritage. That is especially true of its German heritage. I know I speak with a pride in my constituency which is common to all Members of Parliament, Mr. Speaker, and let me assure you that this pride is exceeded only by a desire to see the Kitchener riding continue to prosper.

I support this Bill, Mr. Speaker, because it is an important step towards greater social justice. The Bill provides for some financial assistance to approximately 72,000 widows and some 13,000 widowers, to a maximum allowance for widowed spouses of $536.26. Although no Bill of Parliament can help the person who has just lost a loved one, the Bill nevertheless does assist that widow or widower to at least cope financially, albeit not in luxury but not in poverty either. I would like also to make the point that this Bill fulfils another of our election promises, together with other actions on many of our other promises such as the announcement on metric measurement, the Canadian National passenger rail service, the Investment Canada Bill and the actions within our economic statement.

Permit me, Mr. Speaker, to make a brief historical review of this type of legislation. The idea was first proposed by the then Prime Minister, Pierre Trudeau, during the 1974 election campaign. He was going to bring in a spousal allowance which would provide a pension for the younger spouse where the older spouse was over 65 and had a pension. It was then subsequently introduced in the fall of 1975. It provided that where the spouse was between 60 and 65, married to and living with an older spouse who was on a Canada pension, then the younger spouse would receive the allowance to a maximum total of the equivalent amount of the old age security and the guaranteed income supplement at the married rate.

There was, however, one major weakness. That weakness was that if the elder spouse died, the younger spouse's allowance was immediately cut off. The legislation was later amended by the Liberals in the spring of 1979 so that if the elder spouse died the allowance would be extended to the younger spouse for a period of six months. Of course, the obvious question would be: "Why not extend it until age 65?"

On October 17, 1979 the Clark Conservative Government introduced Bill C-6 which was passed on November 22, 1979. I was pleased to support that Bill at that time. The 1979 Bill changed the existing legislation in two very important ways. Widowed spouses would now receive the allowance from age 60 to age 65, rather than for only six months as was the case in the Liberal legislation. Second, it retroactively included those widows between the ages of 60 and 65 who had been cut off during the previous four to five years.

Nevertheless, even with that progressive legislation there were still weaknesses. If the widow's husband died the day before reaching age 65, although the widow may be between the ages of 60 and 65, she would not receive the benefit. The 1979 legislation also did not extend this allowance to widowers.

Bill C-26, which we are debating today, corrects those two omissions. Bill C-26 will extend the spouse's allowance to all widowed persons, male and female, aged 60 to 64, who meet the necessary income and residence requirements, regardless of the age of their spouse at death. This means that all widows and widowers reaching the age of 60 will be eligible to apply for the spouse's allowance on the basis of financial need.

Permit me to put this amendment into perspective, Mr. Speaker. In the 1979 Speech from the Throne the then Conservative Government indicated its intention to make pensions a priority consideration. The passage of Bill C-6 in 1979 confirmed that intention. While its critics claimed that the Bill did not go far enough, the Government indicated its desire to pursue the matter further when economic conditions permitted.

In the 1984 Speech from the Throne the need for pension reform was highlighted again. We now have the introduction of Bill C-26 which picks up where this Party left off with Bill C-6 in 1979. The actions of 1979 and those which are being carried out here today are evidence of the Government's sincere commitment to act quickly, consistently, and compassionately in the crucial area of social concern. Surely all Parties will be able to support this progressive legislation.

Let me respond to two criticisms that opposition Members have made. They say it does not go far enough. They ask about those in the 55 to 60 age group. Economic deprivation is the same whether one is 59 or 60. I admit that economic hardship is no respector of age. However, one might easily ask why not 55 instead of 60? How far back can we push the age of eligibility? Do we go to 55 or 50? People may have different answers to that question.

A reasonable and rational decision must be made, especially in view of the severe fiscal constraints imposed on the Government by the huge annual deficit and national debt left to us by the Liberals. The figure of 60 may be defended as a good and concerted attempt to give priority protection to those individuals, especially widows, who are financially vulnerable at this age and are least able at this point in their lives to re-enter the workforce.

A second criticism made by some in the Opposition is to ask about those who have never been married. They correctly say that the single person aged 60 to 64 is left out on the basis of marital status. Again I admit that financial deprivation is no respecter of marital status. However, there is a much greater likelihood that a 60-year-old individual who has been single all his life will either be employed, and therefore ineligible, or will at least have some 40 years of employment experience and will be more able to continue in the workforce.

It would be nice to make this legislation more inclusive. However, such inclusivity is the privilege of a house with its economic books in order. In response to Liberal and NDP Members who say that this Bill is discriminatory, I would like to say that the irresponsible spending of Liberal Governments over the past 16 years, often supported by the NDP, is much more discriminatory to Canadians through the high interest rates, high unemployment, high inflation rate and weak dollar that it produced.

We must remain as positive as possible, Mr. Speaker. An estimated additional 85,000 low-income widowed persons will benefit from this proposed amendment. Some of the most difficult cases I must deal with as a Member of Parliament are those of widows and widowers in the age group which this Bill addresses. This Bill is trying to meet the very real need of people in this age group.

This Bill deals with persons who have just suffered a great personal loss and, particularly in the case of widows, face a second major setback as they find that there are very few options open to them to re-enter the workforce after many years as a wife and homemaker. This Bill will assist these persons through to age 65 in a compassionate, responsible manner. Even in a period of economic restraint we have an obligation to those who need help the most. The Government accepts the fact that we are our brother's keeper when these people are in need. However, the Government also recognizes that we can help only those in need. This group of people has made a very significant contribution to society. Society now owes them at least the assistance that this Act will provide. Therefore, I encourage all Members of the House to support this very progressive and responsible legislation.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member stated that he does not feel that this particular piece of legislation is discriminatory. He talked about the record of the previous Government and so on. Could he comment on why, among those in the 60 to 65-year age bracket who are generally among the poorest in our society, those who never married should be excluded from this particular provision while those who were married are included? Why should there be discrimination against those single people who too often, I regret to say, have had difficulty in the labour force? They may not have had a wholly satisfying life, and when they reach the age of 60 they find themselves condemned to another five years of living on totally inadequate incomes until they qualify for the old age pension.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I have two things to say in response to the question. There is a very good chance that persons who reach the age of 60 or 65, having been single all their lives by choice, have been contributing working members of our society since the age of 20. Over the past 40 years they will have built up experience in different areas of the workforce. There is a very good likelihood that those persons will continue to work and will be ineligible in any event.

The Hon. Member is perhaps getting at the case of a person who is unemployed and therefore, unfortunately, on welfare. That is the economic strategy that this Government was elected to correct. That is why I said in my comments that I thought the actions of the previous Government were very discriminatory toward older people in that they cannot find or hold jobs today. Some of the most difficult cases that come to my office are those of older ladies or gentlemen who cannot find work. We have excellent programs for youth but very little for the elderly. We must continue with the actions put forth in the economic statement, with investment Canada and other actions which will be forthcoming in the Budget to address the very serious problems of unemployment. That is how we will meet the needs of those people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When the House rose at one o'clock, we were having questions and comments on the speech by the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer).

Mr. Malépart: I would like to comment on the Hon. Member's speech. Unfortunately, he had to leave the House. I would have liked to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: —comment on the Hon. Member's speech before the House rose at one o'clock.

I noticed that according to the Hon. Member, widows or widowers were more in need of assistance than someone who is separated, because in the Hon. Member's mind, a widow had raised children while a woman who was separated had not.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first excuse given by Progressive Conservative Members to justify their position on this Bill, but I do not think there is any distinction in terms of financial need that can be made between a widow and a single person who has worked all her life to serve the community.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): As the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands said, Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party supports Bill C-26 as it relates to the extension of old age security benefits to widowers and widows aged 60 to 65. The problem is not our support for this measure, it is the fact that, in my opinion and in the opinion of my Party, this Bill falls far short of the needs of the elderly and in terms of the necessary reform, it does not address the issues of retirement pensions and the treatment of older people in our society.

This week, or a couple of weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, I spent two days in the Province of Quebec. I went to Quebec City and the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area.

I met with various groups and individuals who are directly affected by the current economic crisis, made still more urgent today with the release of unemployment figures which show an upward trend throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, practically all the individuals and groups that appeared before us during our two-day trip spoke about the impact of technological changes which are beginning to be felt by a great many Quebec workers in a province where youth unemployment is over 20 per cent. In the Chicoutimi-Lac-Saint-Jean area, no less than 50 per cent of young people aged 15 to 19 are looking for work.

We are wondering now whether the policies of this Government, which is so intent on convincing businessmen that growth and confidence will help spur investments and eventually create jobs, will really have any kind of impact on the residents of regions such as Lac-Saint-Jean or Quebec City where more than 40,000 people are now without work. Unmistakably, the answer we got from groups and people we met in Quebec City was no, they have lost hope. They are fully aware of the current unemployment crisis, they are seeking fresh solutions, and they are familiar with the consequences of technological change.

Here are some examples, Mr. Speaker. First, the Alcan aluminum production line in the city of Arvida, where Alcan is now busy replacing old machinery by new technological equipment, with the result that productivity will be four or five times higher.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I recognize that the Hon. Member is new to this Chamber and I am not sure of the rules in the Ontario Chamber, but there is an important rule of relevance in this Chamber. We are dealing with a Bill concerning spousal allowance and so far the Member has not made a single comment which could be interpreted as relevant to the Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, there are many workers over 40 or 50 years old in this region who will not benefit under Bill C-26 if they lose their jobs. People in Quebec say that we must begin to think about early retirement, which means that people could retire at 60 and even at 55 because, if they do not, there will be fewer jobs available for young people. One of the problems with Bill C-26 is that it concerns a very small group of people between the ages of 60 and 65, and it does not make a real contribution. By providing options to older workers to allow them to retire, we would create jobs for younger workers now affected by unemployment. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I believe that my comments deal strictly with Bill C-26.

Many other Members talked about the weaknesses of the bill as introduced. Because a man and a woman were not able to get along and decided to separate or divorce, if one of them dies, the surviving spouse, if over 60, would not receive any benefits under this bill, but someone in the same situation who stayed with his spouse, would benefit if he or she became widowed at the same age. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I do not find such discrimination justified, but it is inherent in Bill C-26 now under consideration. In addition, Mr. Speaker, I believe that, in view of the promises made by the Progressive Conservative Party during the campaign, a measure such as this one is inadequate as it only represents a small part of the reform of social programs for senior citizens which our society needs.

• (1410)

[English]

As I was just saying in French, we on this side of the House believe that while this measure is acceptable and we will support it, it is inadequate because it does not go nearly to the extent necessary even to begin to respond to such problems as the impact of technological change and the desperate plight of older workers in their fifties who have worked faithfully for long hours in many jobs and then find themselves for one reason or another thrown out of work. I am referring to those workers who will be ineligible for any benefit from this measure unless a certain accident or mortality of the spouse makes them eligible.

I should like to give an example of this which is happening right here in the community on Parliament Hill. A number of workers with up to 20 years and 30 years of service in the Government of Canada have been given notice this week. They work for the Canadian Postal Museum in the Wellington Building, which is part of the parliamentary precinct. That postal museum is closing and those workers have been given notice. They have skills which will no longer be valuable on the market. Some of them aged 55, 60 or more will literally find themselves incapable of finding other employment. They face a very grave danger of that.

If one of those employees happens to be over sixty and is a widow or a widower, he or she would at least benefit under the conditions of Bill C-26 commencing in September, 1985. However, that will not be the case for that same employee if he or she happens to be single, divorced or separated. The safety net, if that is what is being proposed, or the support for people aged 60 to 65 proposed in this Bill, has to be more adequate. As well, it has to be part of a more concerted plan to ensure that we have adequate provisions for older citizens rather than doing it on a bits and pieces basis.

[Translation]

When we were in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, we met workers who had worked hard in the building industry or the aluminum plants, who are now in their fifties and who would like to retire because they know quite well that keeping their jobs would kill them. It is a threat to their health and to their safety. They have an occupation where workers have a short life expectancy and the work has exhausted them.

[English]

Unfortunately, this particular Bill does not respond to the very human tragedy of workers whose work has used them up. For example, I am referring to workers in construction or heavy industry in areas like Lac-Saint-Jean, Toronto and Ottawa who are ready to retire at age 55 or 60 but will not be helped in any way by this particular Bill, except in the event that they might happen to qualify because they have lost a loved one, a spouse.

It is time the House of Commons began to take seriously the report of the special committee on pensions of a couple of years ago. It made a number of recommendations which have been ignored. When we have an unemployment rate which has just risen to 11.2 per cent and bids fair to continue rising despite the promises and the bluster of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), we should start to look at whether we as a society can afford to offer workers the option of taking retirement at the age of 60 rather than 65. If they did retire, they would open up positions which could be taken by younger workers who otherwise would be facing unemployment for a very long time.

I recognize that this is a larger perspective than the one proposed when the project was brought forward by the Government a week or so ago. It seems to me that we have to look at it in that perspective, particularly in view of the very real danger that any commitment to social reform from the new Government will be transitory. It will last for a few months and thereafter the Government will say that the cupboard is bare and that it has done what it can. To the older people of Canada, many of whom are now forced to go on welfare, have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits or have had to take very substantial drops in pay in order to keep any kind of job, the Government will say that it is sorry but they will have to wait until next time.

Next time, three or four years down the line, is not good enough. Now is the time to have fundamental reform in terms of ensuring adequate incomes for older citizens when they reach retirement. That should include a much more flexible approach to retirement so that people can take retirement at an earlier age than they are now able to do. It includes reforming the pension system so that perhaps this piecemeal approach would not have been needed. If workers who were retiring or who suffered an early death had had decent pensions and benefit schemes in their jobs, we might not have been required to debate Bill C-26. It could have simply been a matter of course and accepted that survivors' benefits to the surviving spouse would have exceeded the $400 or so per month which will be made available under this particular scheme.

Unfortunately that is not the case. In particular, it is not the case for women because most women do not benefit from any other pension regime if they are in the workforce except the Canada Pension Plan. Canada Pension Plan benefits are unfairly reduced in a discriminatory way because women are systematically discriminated against in terms of what they earn in the workplace.

Most workers do not live to benefit from pensions for which they may have paid for much of their lifetime. Members of the House are in a different and favoured position. However, most workers find that they switch jobs before the vesting period takes place. Perhaps the firm goes bankrupt before they collect a pension. Perhaps they die before they reach the age of 65. There are various other ways by which people lose benefits to which they have contributed, in particular the benefit to spouses to which their other half may have contributed. These kinds of problems have to be addressed, rather than simply leaving them to one side and saying that we are sorry but we cannot afford to do anything about them now.

[Translation]

Poverty is an ongoing affair with our senior citizens. Bill C-26 will alleviate but some of this poverty, as it does not meet the needs of single people or divorced or separated people over 60. It does not meet the needs of those who have lost their jobs because of economic conditions, who were the victims of a plant closedown, who are no longer able to keep their jobs because of health problems and who, between the ages of 55 and 60, now find themselves probably still married, but without the necessary income to live decently. These people will continue to be poor because this Government still ignores their needs and the fact that they should live with dignity in their old age.

[English]

It is for those reasons that, while we support this particular Bill, we do so somewhat reluctantly and with the very strong and expressed hope that the Government will see fit to speed up pension reform, to speed up the option for workers to retire at the age of 55 or 60, and to use early retirement as a concrete means of reducing the economic crisis and the unemployment crisis by freeing up jobs for younger workers in favour of older workers who would prefer to retire now if they could possibly have the option.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I am moved to make a couple of comments in response to the Hon. Member. He is new to the federal Chamber. I mentioned the issue of relevance particularly because I think it is important to get this Bill into law as quickly as possible. People need the benefits. If Hon. Members were to keep their speeches a little shorter and relevant, we could move the Bill through the House more quickly. People say they support it: there is a way to demonstrate that support.

I must comment somewhat upon the substance of the Hon. Member's remarks. It has been my experience in five and a half years in this Chamber that there is no piece of legislation that we can conceive of that does not advantage some people and disadvantage others by comparison. The nature of our responsibility in this Chamber is to do that fairly, justly and in accord with the true traditions of this country. It is also true that those who would lead people to believe that resources are infinite rather than finite are doing a service to no one.

Within that context of advantaging some and disadvantaging others with the certain knowledge that resources are finite, that they are limited, Members of this House should join together to pass this legislation because it does provide some of those limited resources to a group that is very special. These resources are intended to go to recently widowed people who do not have sufficient money to live in dignity. Are they a special class of persons? I suggest they are. When death occurs within a partnership, it is a moment of trauma. It is quite unlike most other experiences in life. When that moment of trauma is accompanied by financial hardship, you really have a situation that is unique, different and important. I am proud to belong to a Party that has a Cabinet which has made it a priority to deliver some sense of economic stability to people who are in that trauma. I hope we will not confuse it with other situations because it is unique, important, something we should all support. I urge all Members to keep their interventions as brief as possible so that we might move this Bill forward and put it in place. It would speak well of this Chamber if we were to act in this fashion.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in responding to the Hon. Member, I certainly appreciate his comments. Having had legislative experience in another chamber, I appreciate that no single project of law can respond to all of the needs that you might want to see responded to. If his Government is so impatient to see this problem resolved, it should propose bringing forward the effective date for these spouses' allowances from September, 1985 to an earlier date. Saving a few hours of debate in this Chamber is not going to put benefits into people's pockets any sooner unless the Government is prepared to change that effective date. If the effective date stays where it is, then we have all the time in the world to debate the matter in this House. It is not the Chamber which is the obstacle; it is the Hon. Member's Party.

The other point is that the Hon. Member was the chairman of the task force on technological change which reported over the course of the summer. I commend him for that report.

However, that report was quickly forgotten by his Party and swept under the rug. I indicated that, contrary to the promises being made at that time by his Leader and now by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the problem of reducing the level of unemployment in our country in the next 15 or 20 years was going to be well nigh insuperable and that we had to start looking, therefore, at other means of spreading the available work if we were not going to condemn large proportions of our population to a lifetime of continuous unemployment or risk of unemployment.

That is a very relevant issue. I probably agree with 80 or 90 per cent of the recommendations that were in the Hon. Member's report, which I found to be excellent. However, to raise that issue in the House and talk about early retirement as one of the constructive things we should be looking at through the leadership of the House of Commons in order to help our older people and also help provide opportunities for our young people is something that can only be seen as a positive contribution. I recognize that it will not be done through amendments to this law, that people like the Hon. Member and myself should hammer away to raise awareness in the House of Commons of the fact that that impact of technological change is among us. It is creating high unemployment. We have to find ways of bringing unemployment down.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comments on the report but would point out something that seems to have escaped his Party. Challenge 85, the program for youth, is based on the concept of that report. Future employment programs which will be announced are also based on the thread of that report. I would hope we might hear a little more positive comment about the direction of employment policy in this country because it is in accord with the recommendations made in the report.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: I will leave it to the next Member, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak as often during this Parliament as there are so many new and excellent Members who should have an opportunity. However, after listening to the quality of the debate from the other side, which I found very discouraging, I want to make a few comments on Bill 26. The purpose of this Bill is to assist low-income married couples where only one spouse is an OAS/GIS pensioner.

It is interesting to look at the history of pensions and benefits for the elderly over the years. This first started in Canada in 1908. Further legislation was introduced in 1927, 1948, 1951, 1952, 1957, 1959, 1962, 1963, 1966, 1967, 1970, 1971, 1972, 1973, 1975, 1977, 1978, 1979, 1980, 1983 and now in 1985. There is further legislation that is to follow with benefits for veterans and their widows which I will cover in just a moment. We have not been backward in this country in the pension field.

In the last number of elections when I have been campaigning, I have found that not every senior citizen is destitute, hard up and broke. Many of them have provided for their own retirement. Not everyone totally relies on the Government to look after them. That is encouraging. Many senior citizens, including widows and widowers, live in their own homes or high-rise apartment buildings. They are not all in senior citizens' homes. The point seems to be continuously made that every senior citizen is destitute, but that is not true. Over the last number of years many Canadians have been providing for their retirement through RRSPs. More and more people are paying into RRSPs. They will retire with a handsome income from that. Therefore, not everyone is always looking for a government pension.

If this country was not bankrupt, if we did not have such a debt load because of the years of Liberal mismanagement, there would be a lot more money for widows and veterans. I will cover the debt and mismanagement in a minute when I explain to the Canadian people the problems that we have.

A veterans' Bill was tabled yesterday. This Government is allotting an additional $22 million this year to cover pensions of veterans and their widows. This will benefit 90,000 pensioners plus 51,000 spouses, children and orphans. Therefore, we are helping a group of individuals there. The third amendment in the veterans' legislation will extend the same rights to survivors of pensioners who have been receiving attendance and/or exceptional incapacity allowances.

A very serious problem regarding veterans' pensions is the length of time that veterans and widows of veterans have had to wait for their pensions to be processed. We are going to eliminate that excessive time. The Liberal Party has been very negligent in dealing with veterans' problems over the years.

There is another example of what we will be doing for pensions in that veterans' Bill. The second amendment will continue a disability pension at the married rate for 12 months following the death of a pensioner. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the reduction to a single rate now begins one month after the pensioner dies. We will be looking after widows immediately. They will not be left destitute.

• (1430)

This change is also important and is in line with the provisions of the War Veterans Allowance Act which has been in place for years. About 6,000 widows and a few widowers are expected to benefit from this change. With each Bill and with each passing day, we are looking after another group that absolutely needs to be looked after.

The Government has also announced that there will be increases in the Canada Pension Plan benefits in January and increases in the family allowances were announced. Over 3.6 million Canadian families that receive family allowance on behalf of 6.6 million children will get a raise in the new year. That is another group after whom we are looking with our limited resources.

As well, old age security, guaranteed income supplement and spouse's allowance benefits will go up in January as stated by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). That is another group after whom we are looking, and the cost is running into billions of dollars.

One of the problems faced by the Government when trying to find money to hand out to everyone and everything including pensioners, provinces and the forestry industry is the tremendous debt that was left by the Liberal Government. I think it is important that we explain to the Canadian people just how we got into the mess in which we find ourselves. The architect of this mess and this huge debt that we have in the country today was the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), who was Minister of Finance between 1972 and 1974. That was one of the most disastrous periods of time in Canadian history. During his term as Finance Minister, the federal payroll, excluding Crown corporations, grew from $3.6 billion to $6 billion. During his term as Finance Minister public debt charges doubled from $2 billion to $4 billion. During his term as Finance Minister utilities, materials and supplies costs rose from $347 million to $537 million, a 55 per cent increase.

I would like to put this on the record, Mr. Speaker, so we can explain to the people why we do not have a bottomless pit of money right now. After the Leader of the Official Opposition had finished his term as Finance Minister, the Auditor General, in his report on that year, stated:

> I am deeply concerned that Parliament—and indeed the Government—has lost, or is close to losing, effective control of the public purse.

That is what happened after this man had been the Finance Minister for a couple of years and that is why we are in this mess today.

The Leader of the Official Opposition inherited a $760 million surplus when he stepped in as Finance Minister and he turned that around into a $5 billion deficit within a couple of years. As the Auditor General highlighted, he introduced blank cheque government to Canada. There was absolutely no control over anything.

The late Senator Maurice Lamontagne, a former Minister in the Pearson Government, wrote a book which is highly critical of the economic policy of the Liberals from 1971 to 1976. This indicates another reason why we cannot look after more widows at this time. In his book Mr. Lamontagne pointed out:

> Government short-term fiscal strategies were seriously mistaken throughout the period.

He went on to state:

> However, the seeds of a serious disequilibrium in the government budgetary position had been planted. The Government had practically lost control over its budgetary position.

That is what we inherited. We are trying to bring it under control and we will bring it under control. According to a study done by the C.D. Howe Institute, three of the five Turner budgets actually widened the gap between the rich and the poor. That was a disastrous period of time for Canada and explains why we do not have a bottomless pit of money right now to hand out to everyone across the country.

The cost of servicing the debt in the fiscal year 1983-84 is forecast to be $18.1 billion, rising to $24.7 billion in fiscal 1987-88. We, the Government, must find the money to pay that huge debt. I think the criticism on the part of Liberal Members who say we should pay more money out is very hypocritical.

By fiscal 1987-88 the cost of servicing the debt will be three times the cost it was in fiscal 1979-80 and 17 times the cost it was in fiscal 1968-69, the year before Trudeau first took office. One public accounts revenue dollar in three or one expenditure dollar in five is used to pay interest on the debt. That is why we are not able to look after everyone faster.

Mr. Benjamin: Easy for you to say.

Mr. McKenzie: Yes, I is easy for me to say, as an Hon. Member of the NDP has stated. I was here during the Twenty-ninth Parliament and I can recall the support that the NDP gave the Liberal Government at that time. Members of the NDP kept the Liberal Government in power for 20 months and they are just as responsible for this mess as the Liberal Party.

Mr. Benjamin: Quit all your crying.

Mr. McKenzie: Yes, it is easy for me to say, as an Hon. Benjamin) says that I should quit my crying. It is the Canadian people who are going to be crying when they have to pay for all of this, thanks to members of the NDP. NDP Members sitting in the back rows were not here then but the Hon. Member for Regina West was.

Another reason we cannot give out more pensions is that when the Leader of the Official Opposition took over the job of Finance Minister, real growth in the country amounted to 6.6 per cent; when he left it was at .3 per cent and on a per capita basis it was negative. There was no growth during this period and that also affected our Government's finances. In terms of real growth, we lost ground when the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra was Minister of Finance. He is very hypocritical today when he criticizes what is going on in the country under this Government. I have already described the record of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra who presided over the country's greatest spending spree since Confederation.

Another reason we can only increase pensions in stages is because of what has been going on in the Public Accounts Committee in regard to office space. Millions and millions of square feet of office space is not required and millions of dollars of taxpayers' money has gone to pay for this phoney rental scheme. We are going to put a stop to that type of government. That is the way the Liberals managed the country's affairs over the years. Anyone who wants to know why we do not have more money to hand out to provinces or pensioners needs only to look at the Auditor General's yearly reports. Those reports did not get better, they got worse under successive Liberal Governments. There was absolutely no control over anything in any Department. Liberal Members certainly have a lot of nerve to be able to complain about anything at all.

I simply wanted to put those points on the record to explain why we cannot phase in the pensions for these widows faster. However, we have made an excellent start. If we were not faced with that heavy debt load, there would certainly be a lot more money for pensioners, veterans and the like. I simply wanted to put those points on the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate. I was intrigued by the line of reasoning developed for our benefit by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie). If his logic were really so stringent and correct, then he and his own Party, for the sake of reducing the deficit and for the sake of increasing payments under the old age security Bill that is before us today, would have refrained from making promises during the election that amounted to the expenditure of billions of dollars. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine must make up his mind. He blames the Liberals for the deficit which he said does not enable the Government to make more generous and broader payments, but he announced promises during the last election campaign which would have increased the deficit. He cannot have it both ways. He cannot condemn and at the same time make extravagant promises and still be on the right track. That does not hold water.

• (1440)

I also regret that he engaged in a character assassination of the Leader of the Liberal Party, who is not present, by harping on what happened 12 years ago. I suppose he was referring to the period between 1972 and 1974. In the 1974 election, the people of Canada must have seen something positive in the then Minister of Finance, otherwise they would not have re-elected the Liberal Party with a majority. Canadians supported what was done in those years.

Although the Hon. Member has been in the House for a number of years, he does not seem to be aware of the fact that there is a reason for having deficits. That is the role of the Government in difficult economic times. When a country goes through a recession the Government must have a deficit situation if it wants to help those who are hard hit by the recession. That can be done in a variety of ways. In 1982-83 the Party of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine insisted that the Government was not doing enough to alleviate unemployment and that it was not doing enough to meet the needs of the industrial communities in Quebec, Windsor and the Hon. Member's home town. That was exactly what the Liberal Government was trying to do. However, if the revenues are not coming in in order to do that, a deficit must be incurred. The deficit provided social shock absorbers and measures which allowed Canadian families to maintain an income in order to survive through the very difficult times and to put money back into the economy.

I am pleased the Government has taken this step. It would be very difficult to say something novel about what this Bill does not contain, but nevertheless there must be some input from those who participate in the debate to lay the foundation, or pave the ground, for the next Bill—which I hope will be introduced shortly—which will take into account the pension reform committee recommendations. That is what the debate is all about. A debate provides Members with an opportunity to express ideas on all sides of the House.

What strikes us on this side of the House is that, while the Bill would provide a benefit to people who are not covered and who would definitely welcome the measure, it leaves out those people whose marital status is not recognized in this measure. In other words, the measure seems to be guided by the marital status of the person rather than by the principle of helping those who are between the ages of 60 and 65 living below the poverty line. That is the principle which we ought to adopt in this and future Bills.

The people who find themselves in difficult economic circumstances are being left out of the legislation. There are a number of men and women who worked for many years in physical but low-paying jobs. Those people reached the point where they could no longer do physical work and were unable to find work because of a lack of formal training in other types of occupations. Those people did not have the opportunity nor the capacity to save money for early retirement. They are a special group of people.

I am sure Hon. Members opposite will agree that this Bill discriminates against those who choose to remain single. Of course, that discrimination may not have a legal substance, but certainly it is something which the Government should consider.

I would like to refer to a letter which was recently received by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) from an organization in London, Ontario, which is called Womanspirit. The letter reads:

> Being aware of the discrimination against a great majority of people, especially women, of the Canadian Government's proposed spouse's allowance, we strongly support an appeal to the Government to extend the program to all single people in need between the ages of 60 and 64. This extension of the program will definitely be beneficial to Canadians in this age bracket who are single, separated or divorced.
> Womanspirit joins other concerned groups and individuals in support of the proposed extension of the spouse's allowance program.
> We would be glad to hear of any progress made in this appeal.

As I previously stated, the principle that guides this legislation is attached to marital status and not to the poverty line. It is an important concept on which the Government, in its term of office, will have to focus because that is the element of fairness and the principle to which the majority of Canadians would adhere. It is also the principle which has guided preceding Governments in introducing progressive steps in pension legislation, as previously stated by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine.

In addition to this, inevitably a debate on amendments to the Old Age Security Act puts on the table expressions of will, recommendations, observations and suggestions which are made by Canadians at large. Many people in their late fifties would like to retire early. That message is particularly strong when it comes from those who engage in hard physical labour. They are asking why the Government does not reduce the retirement age to bring Canada in line with other jurisdictions where it is possible for a man to retire at the age of 60 and a woman at the age of 55. That message is also received from people who have had physical working lives and must retire because they cannot perform physical work any longer. Those people are the construction workers, miners, longshoremen, woodworkers and others who have had to use their muscles and backs all their lives. At a certain point those people feel that physically they cannot continue. They would like a social security system which would allow them to retire earlier than others. They want to be able to make the choice and retire when they are ready, rather than being required to wait for a uniform age which applies to everyone across the board.

Whether one is a blue collar worker or a white collar worker, whether or not one is engaged in heavy physical work—and physical conditions vary from person to person—the natural question which comes to mind is, should we not design a system in a fine democracy like ours which permits choices, which permits a variety of preferences according to the individual? People have different spans of life, of course, and there are different types of activities in the workplace, so these questions do come to mind. Should we not try to design a system which offers the opportunity to choose when we want to retire and when we want to go on a fixed income formula? This is a very crucial question for people whose incomes are modest and who have not had an opportunity during their lifetime to invest for their retirement.

I sumbit to you, Mr. Speaker, that is the record of the Liberal Party which has spoken for this kind of principle on behalf of the people who want to see it promoted. This is also, by and large, the basic principle which has guided us in this country with respect to social security and social progress. This is why Governments have introduced a host of other measures to protect everyone in society from difficult times, whether they are expected or not.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that as we make progress with our social security legislation we have to begin to look for ways to provide certain options for Canadians. We have to take into account the type of work people have been engaged in during their lifetimes and find ways which will permit an early retirement. In this respect, I would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the fact that some workers in certain industries in Canada can, if they qualify, retire at the age of 55 years. It applies to workers who have worked for, I believe, 30 years in four industries—clothing, textiles, tanning and shoes. That measure was actually introduced not so much as a social security measure but as an industrial protection measure in case those industries were to be hit by competition and technological change.

Since a reference was made to the most excellent report prepared by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) on technological change, it is only appropriate to refer to the fact that we do have in Canada today a certain number of Canadians who can retire at the age of 55 years.

The question which then comes to mind is how we can build on that foundation and provide this type of opportunity to a larger number of people, if they wish to exercise that option. Obviously, it is an option which some people may not want to exercise because we all know that there are Canadians who enjoy working beyond the age of 65 years. However, there will be some who will want to exercise it.

The question then which comes to mind, of course, is how do we finance earlier retirement in a manner which is realistic and possible? Will it be done through taxation? Will it be done through redeployment of funds which are presently available to Governments? Will it be done through other means? This is something, of course, to which we have to put our minds, and I believe we will do that because I do not believe there is one Hon. Member in his House who would reject the notion of the desirability of permitting early retirement.

The question of early retirement has been raised both by the elderly and by the youth in times of high unemployment because of the deeply held belief that, by permitting early retirement, the system would then be able to create openings for youth to enter into employment. Therefore, when we debate the question of old age security, we are debating at the same time, to some degree at least, the question of providing employment. The two factors are obviously interrelated.

Of course, the big challenge which faces the Government these days will be that of finding the ways and means of financing a form of early retirement. As Bill C-26 applies to those who are between the ages of 60 and 65 years and who are in need, I would certainly urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is well known for his compassion and his keen understanding of social policies in this country, to consider very seriously the inclusion of those persons who are not covered under this Bill. I am sure that the Minister would be given full support by his own caucus and by both Opposition Parties, and I am sure it would be welcomed by those 80,000 or more Canadians who were referred to with great passion by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), during this particular debate. These are Canadians who need and require the attention of society as a whole through their Government. These are the people this Bill should also include and cover in its total scope.

[Translation]

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member who just mentioned the great passion shown by the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) in defending this issue. In fact, he said on November 30, 1982:

First of all, I have been wondering why Members of the Progressive Conservative Party were opposed to a Bill that placed restrictions on increases in old age security benefits.

He had both passion and compassion at the time, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member spoke earlier about discrimination. Obviously, whenever we set certain limits, there is bound to be some kind of discrimination.

I worked in the school system when the age of admission was set with November 30 as the cut-off date. However, because of pressure from all sides, we had to move the date up to October 1. That took time. First of all, because of all the parents who got involved, and by that time the children were old enough—they went to school eventually! But the measure was finally adopted. Some people would have had me say it discriminated against children who were born on October 2. You have something against kids born on October 2!

In this particular case, the Government is to be congratulated, first of all because it is taking the kind of action it can afford instead of acting according to the philosophy of the Party in power under the previous Government, which was to act across the board. The pension plan started at seventy, then went down to sixty-nine and so forth. The eligible age is now sixty-five, and there was a commitment to lower it to sixty-four, with the guaranteed income.

The present Government has decided to act vertically in a major age group, according to need. This means that we can make considerable headway from top to bottom within the group. Of course, they can always say we are discriminating against those who are not in that group. It was not our intention to do so. However, we consider that the people in this particular group are those who are in greatest need at this time. We must not forget that.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) for his comments. I could not agree more that we must provide protection for those who need it and in my speech, I was speaking up for those who need protection but are not covered by this measure.

● (1500)

That is the substance of our message to the Hon. Member. I would suggest that he learn to be patient when his Government is criticized, because the House is not a place where compliments and words of praise are the order of the day. We must all learn to be critical and to accept criticism with good grace. I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments because he speaks my language. We are speaking about the same subject, which is to provide protection for those who need it, but unfortunately, Bill C-26 which is before the House today, while protecting those who need protection, neglects another group of Canadians who have the same need and are in the same age group but lack this protection. That is why I read, in the course of my speech, the letter from the organization "Womenspirit", which used the word discrimination.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon).

Mr. Plamondon: Like my colleague before me, Mr. Speaker, I am surprised as well by some of your remarks and those of the Hon. Member who was fiercely defending his views and who earlier today handed out to Hon. Members his famous document on the three ladies—Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Gray and Mrs. . . . well, the only one missing was Mrs. Black—anyway, he handed out those three documents and was surprised to see that our Government had not shown any concern.

I should like to point out that our Government made a promise during the election campaign, a promise with respect to that sector: this Bill was to be introduced, and here it is, less than six months later.

Besides, when it comes to promises, Members of the Official Opposition are not in a position to lecture us because, in 1980, they did make some promises which led to the defeat of the Government. It cost $105 million to defeat the Government in 1980—they campaigned against a proposed increase in the price of gasoline, yet less than six months later they raised the price by 65 cents. With respect to promises, Members of the Opposition are ill-advised indeed to lecture us. We keep our promises. We said that widows and widowers aged 60 to 65 would get the allowance, and get it they will. As to the Hon. Member who is concerned about women of 62, he should remember that if his Government had been elected, only women of 60 and men of 64 would have received the allowance, so his three ladies would have ended up with nothing, whereas now at least one of the three will get something. It is sheer demagoguery on your part to harass the Government this way and to make that kind of comments. Instead of sleeping in your seats when you were in office between 1980 and 1984, you should have been wide awake to apply the virtuous principles your are advocating today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: As a follow-up to the comments made by my colleague, and in reply to the last speaker. I think he has just shown his complete ignorance of this issue. If he had read the speech of his Minister, he would have noted . . . I would like my colleague to tell me—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I believe that, according to our rules, a Member should not comment on what another Member has said about a speech. I think that the Hon.

Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is simply supposed to comment on the speech made by the Member taking part in the debate.

An Hon. Member: Right on!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): If I may explain briefly the point we have reached in this debate, the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon) commented the speech made by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) was then recognized because the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) had not deemed it necessary to reply.

We are therefore still on questions and comments and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has the floor.

Mr. Malépart: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, I see that the Hon. Member is always beside the track. Could you give him a lesson once and for all? This is all I have to say on this point of order.

To go on with the question I was asking my colleague, following the comments made by the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon), when I was suggesting he was not at all conversant with the issue, he should read it . . . I would like to know. This is the same question I was asking. The other comment is that he decided not to beat about the bush. But since a Progressive Conservative is unable to follow something up to the end, will my hon. colleague tell me, since they stopped only halfway, what the difference is between a widow in need, whatever her age, her income, or her housing cost, and another person who is separated and has the same age, income and housing cost? What is the difference? How can we determine that one is more in need than the other?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, clearly the question asked by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) gives us another chance to repeat that there is unfairness in this legislation. And I am truly amazed that the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon) would have preferred to introduce another dimension into the debate, which has nothing to do with the issue now before the House. Indeed the subject of the discussion is quite clear. It is whether we should provide help, give pensions to all those who need them, between the aged 60 and 65, that group certainly being a part of that population. And, naturally, as this has already been mentioned, we agree to that protection for those in need in that age group.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is now over.

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this Bill has been long awaited, small as it is. I congratulate the Minister on bringing it forward. Some thousands of low income widowed people who may benefit certainly need it, and if it were possible to speed it up, I am sure Members on this side of the House would be willing to do so. However, the Government, for whatever reason, has said that it will not come into effect until September of this year. Unless it accepts in committee some amendment to that starting date, then no matter what we do today or any other day, it will not bring the pensions any closer. I assume that it will receive examination on that point in committee and I hope that this is one of the points on which amendments might be considered favourably by the Minister and his Government.

We have had some comment as to why the Bill deals with such a small number of pensioners who are in need. The requests of the pension reform committee go far beyond this. The minority report of the dissenting member, Mr. Miller, goes still further beyond this. Mr. Miller pointed out that there are single people between the ages of 60 and 65 who should have this benefit but, according to this legislation, they still will not.

• (1510)

It was suggested by one of the government speakers that the country does not have sufficient money to pay pensions to more than this small number of people. Eighty-five thousand would be a big number in relation to the population of an apartment building, but in relation to the elderly population of Canada it is a small number. It has been suggested by government Members that there is not enough money to extend this benefit to people who may be equally in need and equally deserving but do not happen to have ever been married. One speaker suggested that the Government may have saved some money. In that case, whether they are widowed or not widowed, the legislation is not intended for them. That is not the point I am making. I am talking about people who are equally poor and equally needy but happen to have never been married. That situation is occurring more often in the country. There are more people now who are single, for whatever reason. Marriage is not as common as it used to be 10 or 15 years ago in Canada.

I think this omission is an unnecessary oversight. The excuse used by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) that the Government does not have the money would be laughable if it were not so sad. It is the same silly excuse that was used by the previous Government which he attacked so bitterly.

The Deputy Minister said that the Government has a big debt. He told us to look at the report of the Auditor General. In his report the Auditor General tells us where the greatest part of that debt arises. He tells us that if certain groups paid what the basic principle of income tax would require them to pay, there would be no debt at all. The Auditor General spoke about the $30 billion to $50 billion per year paid to large corporations in the form of taxes not collected. This was arranged under the previous Government when the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Minister of Finance. The bonanzas to the big corporations have developed tremendously in the last dozen years without any complaint from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine or any of the other members of the Tory caucus. they never once suggested that those companies should pay their fair share of the taxes. They never once suggested that those companies should pay the $23 billion of accumulated deferred taxation. They never even said that they should pay interest on that deferred taxation.

Members of the Conservative Government have no interest in collecting the money from the people who have it to pay off the debt. Instead, they said that they are sorry that they cannot pay bigger pensions to single men and women between the ages of 60 and 65. They cannot do it because of the debt which the Conservative Government refused to collect from the big corporations.

The Auditor General seemed to regret that he could not give us a precise figure. He said that it is somewhere between $30 billion and $50 billion. Even $30 billion would be enough to wipe out the deficit. He does not know how big it is because there is no accounting of it. Neither Liberal nor Conservative Governments have undertaken to do any thorough accounting of the money that ought to be paid by the big corporations. The previous Government and the present Government have tried to hoodwink the people of the country by turning out their pockets and crying they are poor and telling the old people, who have given their working lives to this country, that they cannot receive pensions that will meet the prices of today.

Corporation presidents receive pensions of hundreds of thousands of dollars because the corporations received such generous tax gifts from the past Government. Many of the people who worked to produce the wealth of those corporations will have a pension which does not enable them to have a decent room and decent food, let along car fare. Many of them live in Spadina, and I know them. It is shameful that the Government should try to conceal the fact that it has the means to pay larger pensions. The present Government has now had half a year in office during which it could have begun a change in the tax structure which would have reduced that injustice. It could have made a start toward collecting some of the taxes that it should and could be collecting from these corporations.

During the election campaign the Conservatives promised to collect those taxes. However, once in office, they forgot the promise. When reminded of it, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stood in front of us and made a joke of it. He is not worried about his pension. He has forgotten about the pensions of the people he claims he used to work with as a young man and that his father worked with. He does not remember those people except when he wants to brag about his noble origins. He wants to forget them when it comes to paying pensions.

I worked for 18 years in a factory, Mr. Speaker. A few years ago it was shut down. It was bought by another company which decided that the factory was redundant. It want a boardroom decision. Some of the men I worked with are still walking the streets looking for work. Who wants a 55 or 60 years old unskilled or semi-skilled worker? They were good workers in the factory during the 18 years I knew them. They produced and would still be producing because the factory was producing. It would still be producing but for a boardroom decision by the corporations which receive these great tax gifts, supposedly to create more jobs. In fact, they used the tax gifts to destroy the jobs of 145 employees in that plant.

I know those people by name. Some of them are single. Those people should be eligible for this sort of benefit when they reach 60 years of age. They will not get it if the Government does not move. We are told that some day after the Government has paid off all its close friends, if there is any money left over, it will give it to those elderly workers.

This side of the House will support this legislation. We are not holding it back. It is the Government that is holding it back until next fall. We would be willing to speed it up. Our first speaker, the Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), made an offer. He said that we would put up only one speaker if the Minister would make the law effective as soon as possible. The Minister did not take him up on it. The Minister intends that no one will get that benefit until next fall. Furthermore, it will only benefit some of the people who really need it. The Government does not intend to give any of this benefit to people who have not been married, who have reached the age of 60 and who are poor. There are many of these people around the country. We see many of them sleeping in the TTC shelters on the streets of Toronto in the cold weather. We can see them sleeping on the stairways of Toronto Parking Authority garages, especially in front of City Hall. They are people who need this benefit, but the Government will not give it to them because it would rather give it to the oil companies, the banks and the others who contribute to its election campaign fund.

I regret very much the stinginess of the Government. I will support it in so far as it will give this benefit to a few of the people who need it. However, I wish it would give it sooner rather than wait until September, as provided in this legislation. I suggest that the Government reconsider this measure and give this benefit to single people as well as to widowed people.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the fact that an offer was made the effect of which would have held his Party's participation to one speaker. That offer was contingent upon our making the Bill effective immediately. To whom was that offer made, at what time and who refused it! This sounds like an interesting proposal that should have been brought to everyone's attention.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will find it on page 1947 of Hansard of February 4, 1985. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) said:

> I am, perhaps, at the point of making the Minister an offer which he cannot refuse. One aspect of the Bill, obviously, with which we are disappointed is the length of time it will take to put this measure in place. I believe there will be a ten-month delay until September. If it will accommodate the Minister in terms of bringing such a measure in by the end of this month, my Party would agree that I would be the only speaker. We could then get it through all stages as quickly as possible, if that would accommodate the Minister. If the Minister would agree to that, all he has to do is to send me a note and we will look upon it as kindly as possible.

It is evident that the Minister did not respond.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I am too new to the Chamber, having only been elected on September 4, and I do not know if that is the proper procedure to make offers with respect to very important legislation. I would assume that the House Leaders or the Member responsible would make the offer through the proper channels, rather than making it inadvertently in a speech, as this one was made.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Spadina, I would simply point out that these matters are discussed across the floor frequently. That is what debate is about.

For example, at this moment the House Leaders for the three Parties are not here, but we still carry on the business. If there were some difficulty about the matter but the Minister or the Government House Leader was interested in taking up the offer, he was certainly free to begin any negotiations he wished. It is clear that he did not wish to do so. For some reason that I have not heard, the Minister wishes to delay the effect of the Bill until September.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to make a comment at this point. Let us place the emphasis where it properly belongs with respect to the statement made by the Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), who is not empowered to speak on behalf of his Party in the first place.

Mr. Benjamin: He is our spokesman.

Mr. Hawkes: Let us re-read what he said:

I am, perhaps, at the point of making the Minister an offer—

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) is our critic on pensions and is empowered to speak on behalf of our Party and make any offers he wants. He has the support of our caucus for that purpose.

Mr. Hawkes: It is clearly understood in the House that arrangements about unanimous consent are made by House Leaders. House Leaders are empowered to speak on behalf of the Party.

Let us go back to what the Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) said:

I am, perhaps, at the point of making the Minister an offer—

Then he concluded:

If the Minister would agree to that, all he has to do is to send me a note and we will look upon it as kindly as possible.

Who in his right mind would accept that type of invitation in which they want us to make a commitment while perhaps they will make a commitment? It does not come from the two opposition Parties or the independent Member, but simply from a political Party that is well known to be in bed with the other opposition Party on every conceivable occasion. It was simply a trap for the Government, and I commend the Government for having had the wisdom not to step into that trap. Our Government understands the importance of co-operation and consultation. It understands the importance of reaching acceptable agreements with people.

If that Party is interested in reaching an agreement, the proper process to follow is for the House Leaders to negotiate. We hope that Party will use it and show how genuine they are in wanting the change.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for "Spadeena", otherwise known as Spadina.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, everybody in Spadina calls it Spadina.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): May I just point out to the Hon. Member for Spadina that in Sherbrooke we call it "Spadeena", but in the circumstances I will respectfully call it Spadina.

Mr. Heap: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now we have two names.

I can only suggest to the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) that a note could have been sent in which the terms were qualified. The Government could have responded to the suggestion from our spokesman on the matter, our spokesman in the House at the time.

If the Government was worried about 211 Members being trapped by 30 Members—I understand that it may consider us formidable—at least we could have been sent a note.

We are not talking about a question of unanimous consent. It was a question of whether Members would continue to speak. I chose to speak, notwithstanding the request from the government side essentially that we should shut up.

I remember when the Hon. Member was on this side of the House. He certainly thought that the job of the Opposition was to oppose, and he did so vigorously, at great length and very often. Now that he is on the government side he thinks that the job of the Opposition is to shut up. In fact, the job of the opposition is to criticize where necessary, and since our criticisms are not being heard by the Government, I hope they will be heard by the public, especially those who are being deprived by the limitation of this Bill.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief comment on the speech of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). It seems that friendly Friday has been deteriorating since the end of Question Period today. I cannot listen to some of the cheap shots this afternoon without making a comment. If the Hon. Member is going to support the legislation, he should not criticize the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and make comments on what he says unless he is quoting directly from a credible source.

The fact is that the Prime Minister has not forgotten the people he used to work with. The House will recall that the settlement at Schefferville was the most generous in Canadian history. When he was forced to close the mine in Schefferville it was a decision he had to make that was very regrettable, but he certainly did not forget the people he used to work with in Schefferville.

Mr. Heap: What about Labrador City?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I recall the Prime Minister saying in the House a couple of weeks ago that if the NDP will not help us help the needy, we will do it ourselves.

Mr. Heap: Why doesn't he help the needy in Labrador City?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We simply cannot afford to be all things to all people. That is why we cannot be all things to all people with respect to this particular piece of legislation. Therefore, it has excluded people between the ages of 60 to 65.

I remind the Hon. Member for Spadina that our Prime Minister is sincerely concerned about the citizens of this country.

• (1530)

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, at the outset let me indicate that I will try to concur with the wishes of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) who indicated that Hon. Members should speak briefly and to the point.

The legislation has some good parts. The market which it attempts to serve is a good one. There is no question about that. As my colleagues said at the beginning of the debate, as Members of Parliament we should approach the issue of providing assistance to those in need very responsibly. In part I support the measures contained in this legislation.

I do not think I have heard Hon. Members on either side of the House suggest that what the Government is attempting to do is bad. In point of fact, there may be a great deal of loopholes.

Mrs. Mailly: Name one.

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Member rarely listens. I would hope she would at least attempt to be as sincere as I am trying to be with regard to the substance of the legislation.

Mrs. Mailly: I am.

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Member is known for her dealings with the press. She is grasping at straws for the sake of publicity. Surely she has the courtesy at least to listen. I am not a member of her Party. Perhaps I share a different philosophy or ideology, but courtesy ought to be part of the demeanour of the Hon. Member.

I point out for the record that it was a Liberal Government that introduced spousal allowances. The Conservative Government has now decided to extend the spousal allowance, part of the Old Age Security Program, to any person between the ages of 60 and 64 in need and living alone. That is very commendable, but, as I said earlier, there are some loopholes. There are thousands of single Canadians who would like to be included in this particular package. It is not good enough for government Members to join in a chorus of catcalls and to say, "We can't afford it" when during the election campaign there was no mention of any restraint. In fact, there was a proliferation of promises during that campaign, in excess of 330. They cannot have it both ways. Were they irresponsible during the campaign or were they responsible? I know they will try very hard and very diligently to have it both ways, but I suggest that they cannot have it both ways.

I want to go on record as supporting that part of the legislation which will affect an additional 85,000 Canadians. If the amendments my Party is seeking are accepted, an additional 80,000 Canadians would benefit. We must remember that a large number of Canadians do not enjoy the perks or the lifestyle which we in the Chamber enjoy, or indeed that of other professions.

It is discriminatory, intentionally or negligently, for the Government to exclude this group of Canadians. Hon. Members of my Party who have spoken before me, and those who will speak following my remarks, will repeatedly reiterate that concern. We hope that the Government will take cognizance of what we are suggesting and implement those changes.

Again I commend the piece of legislation before us from the perspective that it contains a recommendation of the parliamentary task force on pension reform. It is in the best interests of Parliament to bring forward legislation containing a recommendation of the parliamentary task force, upon which there was unanimous agreement, as quickly as possible so that it can be put into effect for the benefit of Canadians.

There has been some suggestion today that perhaps we ought to expedite the implementation date. I am in favour of that, whether it is a matter of fiscal responsibility on the part of the Government of the day or a matter of lining up an agenda item for a budget, which was to come down in April, May or even later, depending upon what happens in the Province of Ontario.

There have been some sincere suggestions by New Democratic Party Members in an attempt to expedite this piece of legislation. It serves no useful purpose for the Hon. Member for Calgary West to rise in the House of Commons to admonish the New Democratic Party and its members for attempting to put into effect a piece of legislation affecting low-income Canadians. That was not the spirit in which this particular measure was discussed by the parliamentary task force.

I want the record to show clearly that I support the measure which provides assistance to the individuals I have already mentioned, but I repeat that the Government should extend those benefits to the group which is being excluded. Perhaps the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) would use his influence when speaking to his Cabinet colleagues and his back-benchers to extend those benefits to those other Canadians who are in need. I believe that is fundamental. I have received letters from Canadians in British Columbia, Ontario and other parts of the country who are very upset that we in Parliament would support in principle such an idea but in fact discriminate against a certain class of individuals. Surely we do not want to do that as parliamentarians. Surely we do not want to inflict further difficulties on individuals who are facing difficult economic times at present.

We could advocate that in this Bill there ought to be a homemaker's pension or a whole host of reforms. However, the Government has refused to do that; perhaps we will have an opportunity to debate them at another time. This piece of legislation is earmarked to be implemented in September, 1985. If that is the Government's wish, with its mandate it is virtually impossible for us to change it. However, I do not see any great need for the majority on the opposite side and the book-ends on this side to say that Members of Parliament are dragging their feet or slowing down the process of Parliament. We are attempting to debate this piece of legislation in an intelligent way. We are attempting to have the Government recognize that, notwithstanding the good parts of this legislation, many parts of it ought to be changed to include the amendments we are suggesting.

● (1540)

Finally, I will conclude by saying that I am happy the Government has brought this Bill forward, although I do not agree with it entirely. Second, I am happy that it is accepting the recommendations of a parliamentary task force which worked for a considerable period of time to put this legislation on the floor of the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to make a comment on the Hon. Member's speech. I also wanted to reassure him by saying that when I suggested that this legislation should be referred to committee, it was not because I was not listening to his speech, but rather because I was actually listening. He was telling me that in his view perhaps the Bill was not perfect, that it could be improved upon. I know the Hon. Member sits on the Committee for Regional Development and I know that he is well acquainted with his subjects. I was therefore simply suggesting that there was the place where we could improve, so he said, on this legislation he is so concerned with. Therefore, referring the Bill to committee is not brushing the matter under the carpet, it is simply referring it to another forum where detailed examination may take place.

[English]

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her comments. I am aware and fully appreciate the process with which Parliament has to deal. However, I would hope that Members on all sides, of all Parties, whether it be the independent Member or Members who are not in this House, would fully avail themselves of the opportunity to debate this legislation now on the floor of the House of Commons. We could elicit suggestions here to improve the Bill. I am sure we could improve upon it even more so in committee. Members of Parliament would like to have this opportunity. Since the legislation is not earmarked for implementation until September, 1985, I cannot understand the rationale for having it referred to committee. Surely the Hon. Member is not suggesting that Members of Parliament are only able to make suggestions to improve legislations in committee and not on the floor of the House of Commons. This is the Chamber where suggestions for improving legislation ought to come forward. If the Hon. Member wishes to receive suggestions, I can itemize a number of them for her at the present time.

Mr. Jepson: Mr. Speaker, having heard the Hon. Member's comments in his very sanctimonious speech, feeling as he does the obligation to bring before the people his criticisms on the Bill, I want to say that the Government and the Minister have been very honest in bringing forward this Bill. They have stated that there are some shortcomings in that there are still people with legitimate needs who will not have those needs met. They told the people that very clearly when they brought this Bill forward.

This delaying tactic betrays the fact that there have to be ulterior motives in delaying this Bill from being brought to a fruitful conclusion. It merely delays the opportunity of the Government to bring forward other Bills that we are prepared and ready to bring before the House so that other legitimate needs of Canadians can be met. It is nice to hear his pious platitudes, but the truth is in the pudding. We have declared the shortcomings. We say we would like to do more. At the same time, we are not going to display the irresponsibility and poor stewardship of the previous administration and spend first and look for the money after.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, it is always interesting and perhaps a little bit refreshing to receive lectures from new Members of Parliament on what we should do or should not do, or indeed on the substance of what a speech is or is intended to be. I am always happy when this Hon. Member stands in his place and, not in a sanctimonious way but in a patronizing type of way, suggests what other Members of Parliament ought to do.

Let me say something to the Hon. Member for his own edification and information. He made a very telling statement to the effect that he does not want to spend money without knowing the intent of it. I would ask him about the borrowing Bill. The Government is asking the Opposition in this Parliament to approve expenditures which we do not know anything about. It wants us to approve a sum of money for next year for Government expenditures. That was just a small contradiction by the new Member. I thought I would bring that to his attention so that he would read the "blues". He may wish to make changes. Indeed, he may really wish to show some courage and stand in his place on the next sitting day to correct the record on his irresponsible comment.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson) needs no help from the Member for London West, but I am struck by the comments just made by the Hon. Member from the Liberal Party. When we as the Government are asked for borrowing authority, we asked for much less of a reserve than the Liberal Government asked for last year. It asked for a much greater sum of money sight unseen than we did on the reserve portion of that borrowing authority Bill. The tradition of our Party is not to ask for money for projects that are not yet committed to. We were trying to trim the borrowing Bill, which we did, compared to the previous administration. Therefore, his point with regard to the comments made by the Hon. Member for London East are, I feel, without validity.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, it is always nice that we have opportunities in this Chamber to see back-benchers, Members of the book-ends, get up and speak. It is very rewarding indeed that they would avail themselves of an opportunity to stand up and say something. Whether it is relevant or not is another issue. I am happy that the Hon. Member stood in his place and made a comment. If he wishes the Opposition, particularly the Liberal Opposition, to give approval to expenditures for next year with regard to the borrowing authority, he had better put in place very clearly what the expenditure plan is going to be for this Government. We are not going to be hoodwinked, beaten or pushed around by 212 Tory Members of Parliament.

An Hon. Member: Who is the extra one?

Mr. Dingwall: I said 212 and there are 212. The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) is in bed with those guys. He supports them. What other member of the New Democractic Party received a limousine? Who gave Eddie the limousine? It was the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). They are in bed together.

I am happy that the book-ends of the Conservative Party are finally recognizing that they have to get up and speak on behalf of their constituents and stop taking the directives of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), who is really the Minister of Finance because the Prime Minister has completely muzzled and cut away any credibility that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) may have. I appreciate the Member standing in his place. Notwithstanding that, I find his comments to be totally invalid.

Mr. Jepson: Mr. Speaker, London is very close to Stratford, but I say, having been to the Shakespearean theatre, I have never seen any greater theatrics from the Hon. Member behind me. However, just as the people were not fooled by the political rhetoric on September 4, neither are the people here in the House today. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Conservative Government is the one Government that will be accountable for its spending programs. It will be accountable not only to the Members of the House but to all Canadians.

• (1550)

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that the Hon. Member is suggesting that the Government will be accountable. I would ask him, however, where is the legislation to back up the promise that the situation will be changed regarding moneys from workers' compensation payments being included for the purposes of calculating this GIS? Conservative Members promised to change that during the election campaign but to date nothing has been forthcoming. Where are the homemakers' pensions that they promised? Totally irresponsible—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to participate, albeit briefly, in this debate. What is at issue today is not whether or not one is in favour of this Bill. I would presume that all Hon. Members must be in favour of giving needy people more money. But what is at issue is the fact that this Government is forgetting something. It is forgetting a large group of people. Large numbers of people are being forgotten by the Conservative Party. I still have some difficulty in figuring out who will be in and who will be out of this program.

Mrs. Mailly: You don't know how to analyse it.

Mr. Boudria: I am told that this is because we cannot analyse these things properly. Perhaps those who have such a keen understanding of those issues can answer the following questions. We understand that widows will now be receiving the pension. That is fairly straightforward. They will receive the pension providing, of course, that they are between the ages of 60 and 65 and are in need.

Mr. Hawkes: And widowers.

Mr. Boudria: And widowers too although there are fewer widowers than widows. However, that is the case as well.

Let us look at the following situations. What happens in the case of people who are not married? Of course, these people will not receive benefits. It could be that people were living common-law and became widowed. They will not receive benefits. They could have as many financial obligations and children to support as other widows but they will not be eligible. What happens in the case of a widow who has remarried? Of course, we are told that a widow who has remarried is no longer a widow. That is fine. However, what happens in the case of a widow who has remarried and subsequently divorces? When a person divorces, does she not revert to the marital status she had prior to that last wedding? That would mean that that person would become a widow again. Does that person qualify for these benefits or does she not?

This legislation is so full of holes that I venture to say that the Government will never be able to administer it in its present form. We cannot even understand how it works. It is a virtual impossibility. We are told that other people cannot be included under the program in the name of economic restraint. We are told that single people, separated people and divorced people between the ages of 60 and 65 who in many cases are in as dire need as widows and widowers, will not be eligible. Why is this so? It is so in the name of restraint.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) gave us a lecture on how he claims the Liberal Party created a situation in which the Government cannot afford to give money to others who need it.

Mrs. Mailly: He did it well, too.

Mr. Boudria: We are told that he did it well. That is matter of opinion.

We hear from Conservative Members that the Government is in financial difficulty and that it cannot be all things to all people. It is unusual to hear that from a Conservative Member. After all, it is not that long ago that Conservative Members made certain election promises. As I have mentioned before, they made 338 election promises. Now they cannot afford those important social programs.

A Member has said in this House that we cannot afford to make any more expenditures because, as he claims, the country is not in a position to do so. Why is it that during the election campaign, the Progressive Conservative Party could make 113 promises to spend more money and make five promises to spend less money? Would you believe that that was during the same election campaign, Mr. Speaker? The Conservative Party made two promises to increase revenues and 26 promises to reduce revenues. What kind of accounting is that? If that is the logic of the Conservative Government, small wonder that it cannot make this program workable.

We are being told about the deficit. According to Conservative Members, the deficit is too high, and it very much concerns them. The Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner) appears to be very concerned about this, as do several other Members. The Progressive Conservative Party's program as outlined during the election campaign would have resulted in 139 different actions that would have increased the deficit. Would you believe, Mr. Speaker, that it would have resulted in seven actions to reduce the deficit? All that happened in the same election campaign. Small wonder that the Government cannot figure out what to do.

We are told that there is no money for the single people between the ages of 60 and 65. We heard this at the same time as I was reading a communiqué prepared for us by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates). This communiqué contains very nice, glossy pictures of the new military uniforms.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have heard a moment ago about the situation of Mrs. Lebrun, Mrs. Legris and Mrs. Leblanc, but I have here three pictures of Mr. Legris, Mr. Lebleu and Mr. Leblanc in their new Armed forces uniforms. There seems to have been money available for these three gentlemen; $50 million to purchase colorful outfits for them—

An Hon. Member: $36 million.

Mr. Boudria: I am told $36 million. A number of people have not benefited from these $36 million. Whether it is $36 million or $50 million, the money would have been better spent helping our senior citizens.

Government Members say they are in favour of budget restraint and will not spend money needlessly.

[English]

Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is what they tell us, but at the same time they spent $24,000 delivering the mail on November 8 in order to make sure that the provincial Premiers would have copies of speeches made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). They spent $173,472 on cars in the last four months. Those are the vehicles that they bought for the extra Cabinet Ministers so that they could drive around the Parliament Buildings with their political commissars. That is $173,472 on top of what the previous Government already had. That does not even include the automobiles that have been rented. They will not respond to the Order Paper questions which ask how much money has been wasted on that particular program. That is coming from the same Government that has no money for our senior citizens.

We recognize that this measure will help some people. That is not what we are here to discuss today. We are here to discuss the people who have been forgotten. The Government is forgetting a large segment of needy people. This is unfair. It is about time the people spoke up. It is about time that Members of Parliament heard from their constituents—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved that Bill C-216, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act (political rights), be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill was debated in 1982, again in 1984, and it is now being debated for the third time. On the previous occasions, members of the Conservative Party supported the legislation, and in particular the former Member for Nepean-Carleton, Mr. Baker. Now the Conservatives are in power and the Liberals are part of the Opposition. I hope that members of the Government will continue supporting this legislation as they did in 1982 and 1984.

All I am asking in this Bill, with a few exceptions, is for federal public servants—be it with the Government or with a Crown corporation—to have the same political rights which are enjoyed by those people who are not federal Government or Crown corporation employees. On five occasions I have had to apply to my employer for a leave of absence without pay to be an organizer or a candidate. The leave was granted, albeit not willingly. When the election was over, I was able to return to my job without loss of seniority, at the same position which I held previously or at a better position. Surely that right should be enjoyed by those who are employed in the federal Public Service.

I suspect it will be mentioned by a few Hon. Members opposite that there are negotiations presently going on between the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and members of the Public Service unions. The parties are negotiating what is called "the six-pack"—six items which are not necessarily contained in the collective agreements. In a statement before the press in Quebec City, the President of the Treasury Board indicated that an agreement had been reached on those six items. One of those items was the issue of political rights. I want to state categorically that an agreement was not reached. The only agreement which was reached was that the Government's proposals would be discussed further by the people in the unions and that they would then meet again further to discuss these matters.

It was claimed in yesterday's news reports that the meetings were held a day or two ago. In fact, on investigation it turns out that there have not been any recent meetings and that the meeting which was scheduled two weeks ago had been cancelled. The meeting was cancelled because the President of the Treasury Board was speaking at a school. Be that as it may, that would indicate that there is some degree of willingness on the part of the Government to make changes in those six areas, especially the area of political rights.

I would be happy if the subject matter of this Bill could be sent to the standing committee so that we could hear from the representatives of the Public Service who are affected.

I am very proud of my Party's record because the first legislation which was introduced anywhere in Canada—and, for that matter, probably anywhere in North America—which gave full political rights to public servants, was introduced by the CCF Government of Saskatchewan in 1946 under the leadership of Tommy Douglas. Since then there have been numerous occasions when employees of a Crown corporation or a provincial government Department in Saskatchewan obtained leaves of absence to take part in an election campaign for the Parties which operated in the Province. When the legislation was introduced, there were four Parties. All of them, without exception, were granted their leaves of absence and were able to return to their duties. To my knowledge, all of those employees performed their duties in a most conscientious manner, even though in some cases their private political views differed substantially from those which were held by the Government of the day. There is no reason to think for one moment that the same attitudes could not be held by federal public servants as those which have been held by public servants in the Province of Saskatchewan since 1946.

I submit that unless and until the Government makes a move to grant these rights—not privileges but rights—sooner or later someone will take the Government to court and the Government will lose. We should not wait for that to happen, because no matter what Government it will be, it will be an embarrassment.

I hope that Members on all sides of the House will agree that the legislation is long overdue and that we should pass it very quickly to ensure that the political rights of federal public servants are the same as those enjoyed by other citizens of the country. For many years, Members of Parliament from all Parties, as well as my own, have put similar legislation before the House. I hope that we will finally agree that it is time to do something about this matter. It is time that the rights which belong to all Canadians, including federal public servants, should be put in place.

This legislation will in no way infringe upon negotiations which are going on between the federal Public Service unions and the Government of Canada. In a number of cases the collective agreements are up for renewal. The legislating of political rights will not infringe upon those negotiations. I hope no one will attempt to use that argument to talk out this Bill.

It is somewhat embarrassing that this legislation is so long overdue and that a Private Member of the House is required to introduce it. There is the whole question of how political rights can be and should be exercised by members of the federal Public Service or employees of federal Crown corporations. It is implicit in the Bill that those political rights may only be exercised in a public manner, outside working hours. The same was applied to myself. When I was an employee of the private sector, I conscientiously carried out my duties during working hours and at no time did I practise partisan politics. When I was off duty, Sir, I did carry out political activities, even though my employer did not agree with my political views, but my employer always knew that at no time did I transgress upon his requirements of me when I was on duty.

I am confident, Sir, that all federal employees would act in just as conscientious a manner, if not more so. I am sure that none of these employees in the course of exercising their political rights, in their own minds and hearts, and in their time off duty, would ever allow that to infringe upon their duty when they were at work for the federal employer. I believe that they would carry out their duties conscientiously and would not allow their own political views and activities to interfere with their work on behalf of their employer.

I believe it is a red herring when anyone tries to raise the argument that employees who work for a political Party and organize openly and publicly for a political Party which happens to be of the opposite view from that of the government of the day, would somehow or other not do their work properly when they were on duty. That is a specious argument, Mr. Speaker, and it is totally unfair to the federal employees of this country.

I hope, Sir, that Hon. Members on all sides will agree that it is time to make the appropriate amendments to the legislation as put forward in my Bill so that we will once and for all get rid of the stigma which has been attached to the statutes of this country for too many decades, a stigma on the democratic process and the democratic rights of all citizens of this country. I hope, Sir, that I will have the support of all Hon. Members in my endeavour to have this Bill passed.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) for bringing this matter to the attention of the House so early in the session. Usually this matter comes up during election time only. We have four years ahead of us, at least some of us think we have four years, and I believe it is appropriate that this subject matter be studied by the House.

It is a difficult question which has begged to be resolved over the last many years, and I hope that at least we will be able to come to grips with it. Hon. Members will recall that the Chairman of the Public Service Commission, for example, every time he comes before a committee of this House—at least in the last four or five years that I have had the pleasure of chairing some of these estimates committees—repeatedly asks Members of Parliament to clarify Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act. His duty in interpreting Section 32 has created some difficulties, for example, during the last election campaign, not only for the Commission but also for public servants. The Commission is charged with the interpretation and the application of the Public Service Employment Act, which does, in my view, have some very grey areas of interpretation.

[Translation]

Bill C-216, to amend the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act, has some explanatory notes which are quite clear.

The purpose of this Bill is to provide public servants—

—with some exceptions, obviously—

—with the right to engage in political activity as may any other Canadian who is not a public servant, and to be a candidate at federal, provincial and territorial elections.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill contains one exception, as far as I can see, that would prevent deputy heads of departments, in Clause 6(2) which reads . . . other than—

(6) Nothing in this section permits a deputy head to engage in the activities described in this Bill.

To my mind, the Bill does not go quite far enough in excluding only deputy heads, and I shall try to explain within the short time available to me why I think we should perhaps consider the arguments set forth by wellknown commissions such as the D'Avignon Commission on the merit principle, which, as the House will recall, submitted recommendations on the important issue of political activity.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time the Bill has been considered in the House. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) mentioned as many as three times. To me, considering this Bill or a similar one and proposing amendments has always been a worthwhile cause, but because of problems occasionally arising in connection with election activities, the House has preferred to refrain from acting on these proposals. I hope we shall proceed as the Hon. Member suggested and refer the subject to committee for study and consideration, so that the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates responsible for examining this Bill will be able to reach certain conclusions that will eliminate any doubts as to the interpretation of Section 32 of the Act.

Mr. Speaker, in 1982 we adopted a charter of rights, which contains, in Sections 2 and 3, a number of specific rights and fundamental freedoms. Section 2 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, for instance, reads as follows, and I quote:

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(a) freedom of conscience and religion;

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association.

Section 3 may be more important in this context, and I quote:

Democratic Rights

3. Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

That is the Charter, that is the Canadian Constitution which gives Canadians the right to be candidates, to come forward and be active in an election, and I think that the Hon. Member for Regina West was right when he said earlier that the day will come when somebody will test Section 32 of the Act before the courts, and it could then prove to be an embarrassment for a Government to be told that it is violating the Canadian Charter of Rights.

Mr. Speaker, using the British system as a model, the D'Avignon Report suggested very clear and very specific provisions for dealing with and solving the problem of political participation. I urge Hon. Members to read the four short but very explicit pages of the report of the Special Committee on the Review of Personnel Management and the Principle of Merit and carefully read the remarks made by the Commissioners.

I will not take the time of the House to read all that, but I see in that report 12 or 13 very specific recommendations as to how to implement that recommendation.

It was simply a matter of allowing federal public servants, those who are not employed in an advisory or counselling capacity, or who have no responsibility for developing specific Government policies, all those who are at the administrative services or support level, those in the professional groups, of allowing those people to fully participate in the election process. This is only fair in my view. Of course, and here I may disagree with the Hon. Member for Regina West, senior executives, people who directly advise the Government, should be excluded in my view, from all levels of the political process.

Let us not be mistaken about that. One cannot, on one hand, give professional political advice to a Government and, on the other, divorce oneself from that context and criticize, even when one is at home, at work or among relatives. In my opinion, it is imperative to restructure that right or those arrangements so that public servants who are not expected to give political advice to the Government be free to participate and enjoy full freedom. However, if they have a political role to play in the full meaning of the word—give advice, make assessments and draft policies—I think they should not be allowed to voice criticism and be politically active because there might be a conflict of interests, obviously.

The recommendation of the D'Avignon committee or commission was echoed by the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada which, in a brief entitled "Parliamentary Dialogue 1984", made recommendations of its own. Only three of those relate to this issue, and I think it might be a good idea to put them on the record of this House. I quote from this "Parliamentary Dialogue 1984":

> We recommend that a special parliamentary committee be struck to draft legislation with the following objectives:
> 1. Grant full political rights to public servants (in line with the D'Avignon committee recommendations).
> 2. Indicate to all public servants, in clear and specific terms, to what extent they are allowed to be politically active, regardless of the category to which they belong, according to the D'Avignon report.

And I think that the third recommendation is just as important, Mr. Speaker:

> 3. Extend full freedom of expression to public servants so that they may speak openly on public issues, whether or not such issues directly concern the Government.

I have some reservations about this one, but I quite agree with the first two recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, the scope of the Bill under consideration is clear enough and, as I said earlier, it might be referred to a parliamentary committee for further study. At the end of my remarks, I may have a suggestion to that effect to help Hon. Members, or to expedite the process and make it possible to refer this Bill to a committee.

● (1620)

[English]

Earlier this week, Mr. Speaker, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) about another matter of vital importance to public servants. It was, of course, the very serious problem of classification standards. In his answer, the Minister touched on the six issues he was negotiating with the public service staff associations. Among those issues was indeed political participation. He did not say that in the House but outside the House, and it was reported by the media, the radio in particular, yesterday morning on CBO Morning. Although I asked the question today, the Minister was not in the House, unfortunately, and I got an answer from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). But I am not satisfied with the answers I was getting to my inquiries, which were very clear. Evidently the Minister of Finance is not able to give me much specific information as to what exactly is being negotiated. Nevertheless, I find it gratifying and somewhat—

Mr. Jepson: It might be a problem of understanding.

Mr. Gauthier: What was that remark?

Nevertheless, I find it gratifying that the President of the Treasury Board is negotiating the subject matter with the staff associations and, in his own words, is making very interesting progress on all six issues. I guess that means we have an agreement forthcoming on the important question of political participation, as well as that of the dental plan, classification standards and other issues.

To my amazement the staff associations had not heard of these encouraging statements or of the progress because they believed the negotiations were taking place in camera. Since the Minister was so forthcoming to me on Monday in telling me that he was very enthusiastic and encouraged by these developments with the unions, I say quite candidly that they were quite pleased with this progress, and they said so publicly on radio yesterday morning. Indeed, they think now that the Minister has agreed to their requirements and that shortly he will make public the agreement on these six difficult and, I think, important issues. No details have been given of the nature of what has been agreed to, but even the staff associations, as I am sure all Members in the House, will appreciate the Minister's coming to the House and making a statement clarifying his Government's position.

Surprised? Yes, many of those issues are complex. Classification is a very complex issue, as are political rights in their solution. I only hope that the Minister will see fit to bring the Parliament of Canada into the process of studying whatever proposal he has elaborated which he will be offering to the staff associations for negotiation. I say that advisedly because I think we would like to know about the dental plan and the cost of these things. We would like to know exactly what is in the offing for our public servants.

I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, that the Bill being proposed this afternoon by my good friend from Regina West has, in my opinion, one glaring flaw.

Mr. Dick: I knew you guys were together.

Mr. Gauthier: Did you want to speak, Paul?

Mr. Dick: I said I knew you guys were together.

Mr. Gauthier: Well, he proposed the Bill, not you. So I am talking to—

Mr. Dick: You said, "Your good friend".

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, he is my good friend. Like you, I think.

Mr. Dick: What time is that?

Mr. Gauthier: From time to time. I won't go to Calabogie anymore.

I think, Mr. Speaker, justice would be done as well as seen to be done if we were to agree here this afternoon, and I include my good friend from Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) in this, that we would like to see this matter studied further by a committee of the House. With the agreement of the Hon. Member for Regina West, I would like to propose this motion:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-216, An Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act (political rights) be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

I see that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) seconds this motion, and with that I will sit down, hoping that we have the agreement of all Members of this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, this side of the House has not even had an opportunity of speaking to this Bill. I think it would be premature to move a motion such as that.

Mr. Benjamin: It is open for debate.

Mr. Dick: I can only indicate that at this time, and only because it is at this time, the Government does not feel the matter should go to committee. We think it is premature only because it is now being discussed in another forum and we do not think it should be discussed in two forums at the same time. They are in the midst of difficult negotiations, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) indicated. These are very dicey topics. It is only for that reason. However, I think other people in this Party would like to participate in this debate.

• (1630)

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much the comments just made by the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick). I would ask Members of the Government to reconsider very seriously the statement he made suggesting that it is premature to have the subject matter of this Bill referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. I say that very seriously. I respect what he said and what my friend from the riding of Ottawa-Carleton has been telling me as well. He indicated that there is some fear that an early consideration of this subject matter by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates may jeopardize negotiations now under way, which is essentially what the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton said as well.

I have taken this issue very much to heart since I became a member of the Ontario legislature. When I was a member of another Parliament I put forward Bills on this subject. I said I would fight on this issue here in the House if I was elected. I think that there would be no objection by my Party if, once the matter was referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, it was held back for a month or two in the hope that concrete results would ensue. I would like to make that suggestion and I ask members of the government Party not to talk the Bill out and thus prevent the motion for referral of the subject matter from coming to a favourable vote.

I had the opportunity of speaking directly with one of the leaders of the public service unions involved about this matter several weeks ago after the initial discussions between The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the public service unions. I was updated on this subject less than 24 hours ago. My information is that while the subject matter has been raised, by no means does it indicate that a specific proposal had been put forward which is the subject of negotiation. Only the most preliminary indication has been given that the Treasury Board is prepared to consider the possibility of having discussions with representatives of the public service unions. There is nothing more than that, Mr. Speaker. That would indicate to me that at this point negotiations are not actually being engaged in.

From time to time I battle in caucus for the opportunity to question the President of the Treasury Board on this subject. Unfortunately I have not been able to. In the fall, when I had the opportunity to do so, he was travelling and I could not raise the issue with him at that time.

I appeal to members of the Government not to block this motion at this time. This Bill came forward with relatively little notice due to the parliamentary calendar. However, through our House Leader we have been in touch with the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) since this morning seeking to give advance notice to the government Party that this was coming forward. We indicated that we would certainly be willing to have the matter referred.

I welcome the motion of the Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I regret the fact that my predecessor, the Liberal Member for Ottawa Centre, who sat in the House for five years, never supported this particular measure. In fact, the last time this Bill was before the House of Commons he was instrumental in talking the Bill out, despite promises made by the Liberal Party prior to the 1980 campaign that it favoured political rights for public servants. I respect the position of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier. I hope he will be successful in ensuring that that is the position of the whole of his Party. It is certainly the position of my Party.

I could talk about this issue at length, Mr. Speaker. It was a major issue in my campaign. I argued for it very strongly, and I think the people in my riding responded. They believed that the vast bulk of public servants could and should have political rights like any other citizen. That is what was called for in the passage in 1982 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In a few weeks a court case which I launched during the election campaign in conjunction with four members of the Public Service to test the constitutionality of these restrictions will in fact come before the Federal Court of Canada.

I would like to conclude by appealing once again to Hon. Members in the government Party. I would like to remind them of the pledges which were made by the Progressive Conservative Party in the responses that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sent to the public service unions when they asked for his Party's position on political rights. The Progressive Conservative Party's response to the Public Service Alliance was quite unequivocal. It reads:

> The PC Party favours a general removal of the restrictions on political activity, especially for those public servants covered by collective agreements. These restrictions are unnecessary and may not be justifiable under the terms of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There are some senior public servants whose job responsibilities are very political in nature, and whose rights should be somewhat restricted to prevent conflict of interest, but we are confident that these people could be covered separately, without disenfranchising over 200,000 public servants in the process.

I am essentially in agreement with that position. I believe that position is in accordance with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. By referring the subject matter of this Bill to the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates we could in fact seek to put flesh and bones on that particular issue. If negotiations with the public service unions come to conclusions, the parliamentary committee could consider what was achieved in those negotiations and provide input and advice.

In its response to the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, the Progressive Conservative position was even more explicit. In the summer, the Prime Minister said:

> We believe that this matter should be addressed by an all-party parliamentary committee in consultation with public service organizations, and we believe the situation can be quickly resolved. Much of the work, after all, has already been done as part of the D'Avignon Report, but the current Government has not demonstrated the political will necessary to implement the long-overdue changes.

The present Government has been in power for close to five months now. I believe that there is sincerity on its side in seeking to resolve this issue in a positive way in accordance with the promises which were made. I remind Hon. Members opposite of the very explicit promise that this matter should be addressed by an all-Party parliamentary committee in consultation with public service organizations. I have had that kind of consultation already and have been encouraged to have the matter sent to a committee.

I would ask Hon. Members to carry through on the promise that their Party made in the course of the election campaign. They should bear in mind that the timing of the consideration before the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates can be varied relative to any negotiations which would take place. They should bear in mind that because of the Private Member's calendar it may not be possible for one of our Members to bring this matter before the House again for some time. I do not think the matter should be bottled up when there is an opportunity to carry through on a promise made during the election campaign by my Party and also by the Party of the majority of Members in the House.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. colleague for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) for his confirmation of the sincerity of the Government in wanting to improve the political rights of public servants. I raised the matter myself during my own election campaign, and this is why I want to support the comments made by my colleague for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick). The problem is that the discussion of this issue with the unions is now underway. It is therefore a sensitive issue. We do not want to jeopardize the negotiations. In addition, this subject will certainly come back on the floor of the House because of the limited number of Private Members' Bills on the Order Paper at the moment. Moreover, other Members have introduced Bills on the same issue and they will certainly be debated soon. It will act as a safety valve thus serving the same purpose as was proposed by the Hon. Member when he suggested that the subject matter be referred to a committee in case the negotiations with the unions are not successful.

However, as this subject will be discussed during the debate on other Bills on the Order Paper and as this Bill might even come back to us in a short time, which has already happened in the case of other Bills as the list of Private Members' Bills is not that long for the moment, I simply want to ask the Hon. Member to be patient and let these tricky discussions between the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the unions run their course.

[English]

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C-216. The Bill raises a very important subject. The purpose of this Bill, which is to give political rights to civil servants, is also an important part of this Government's agenda. However, such rights will have a tremendous impact on the way our Public Service is perceived and the way it is in fact run.

I see the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is shaking his head. I do not know how long he has lived in Regina but if he was there in the late forties, as I was, he will recall that the CCF Government at that time introduced political rights for civil servants in that province. While I commend that move, it was done in a rather heavy-handed way. There was much discussion throughout the province about the viability of the method of granting political rights, and I recall that there was a large movement to join the socialist Party because the bureaucracy and the Civil Service were frightened for their jobs. The implementation of political rights for civil servants was not done properly, and I would not want to see that happen with our federal bureaucracy. That is why I would ask that the House use caution and prudence in dealing with this subject-matter.

Certainly we should not forget the history of our Civil Service and its relation to political activity. More than 75 years ago, Parliament, through the adoption of a system of recruitment and selection based on the merit principle, eliminated political patronage in the then Civil Service. I do not believe that should be jeopardized by Bill C-216.

I am sure that Conservative Members of Parliament who have many civil servants in their ridings will fight vigorously to obtain political rights for their constituents. The Conservative Party has gone on record that it will do so. However, I believe there is much work to be done before such a measure can be implemented.

It is my understanding that the Government is currently negotiating with the unions. I believe it is very important that the view of the Public Service unions be taken into account. I would encourage the House to give this Bill careful consideration before accepting all the contents of the Bill.

I refer particularly to Clause 3. While I can accept the legislation up to Clause 3, I have grave concerns about the profound effects of the removal of Subsection 39(2) of the present Act. That subsection reads:

(2) The Board shall not certify as bargaining agent for a bargaining unit, any employee organization that

(a) receives from any of its members who are employees,

(b) handles or pays in its own name on behalf of members who are employees, or

(c) requires as a condition of membership therein the payment by any of its members of any money for activities carried on by or on behalf of any political party.

I suggest that the ultimate effect of removing that subsection would be staggering. I believe there needs to be much more discussion before anyone would agree to exempt public service unions from demanding money from their members that otherwise might be paid to a political Party. In other words, the union could well become a political Party and an employee may have to join that Party to be in the Public Service. I find it rather disturbing for that to be in Bill C-216.

The Progressive Conservative Party also believes that some relaxation of the current restrictions on public servants' political rights should take place, particularly for those covered by collective agreements. Indeed, it will be very important that the views of the public service unions be taken into account, as well as those of the Canadian public before the Government finalizes its own views in this important matter. Any proposal will need to take into account the long-standing traditions of our Public Service and reflect the particular needs and desires of our present-day Canadian society and its concerns. We are all aware of the deep implications of the Charter of Rights in this respect.

In our society it is important that all citizens have a voice in the affairs of state and that as many as possible play an active part in public life. At the same time, public interest demands the maintenance of impartiality and professionalism in the Public Service, and of confidence in that impartiality is essential.

Members who have spoken before me have pointed out how important it is that policy advisers in the bureaucracy not criticize that advice outside of their working hours. It only makes common sense that not all members of the Civil Service could be politically active. I am sure that many civil servants throughout the country would agree with that.

I believe that by striking an appropriate balance in all of these important issues—which I believe this Bill does not—we can move on to ensure the political rights of our Public Service so that its members can take their full part in the democratic process in this great country.

Finally, I urge the House to use a great deal of caution and wisdom in supporting this Bill without a great deal of change.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been here nearly 17 years. I want to draw to the attention of the House that for the first time in my experience a Prime Minister has come in and paid some attention to Private Members' Business and to hear the debate among Private Members. I want the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to know that we appreciate it very much and we hope that it becomes a common practice on his part and serves as an example for any succeeding Prime Ministers, no matter whether he is here for four years or for 24 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1650)

Mr. Benjamin: We would all be grateful if the Prime Minister would now rise in his place and take part in the debate. It would be a precedent and something which I do not think has happened since the days of Sir John A. Macdonald. Perhaps he could take part in the debate and tell his colleagues, as well as the rest of the House, that he agrees the subject matter of the Bill should be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to second the remarks of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and indicate to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that I appreciate the fact that he did not rise in his place, thus giving me the opportunity to speak on this Bill. That was truly gracious and I much appreciate it.

I am also proud to stand in this corner of the House and be able to look at my Prime Minister because I know, with a sense of conviction, that one thing which motivates him is his concern for the working man. His entire career is an example of that.

I was also proud this summer to be part of a political Party which had in its political platform a genuine commitment the extension of the political rights of public servants. That will be done by this Government during this term of office. I thank the Prime Minister for that political platform. It was a pleasure to run on it, and it will be a pleasure to see that happen.

Also, as I stand here today, I am puzzled because one fundamental thing that makes the country one of the best in the world, if not the best, is the fact that we have workers' rights, a history and tradition which is free and democratic and which includes the right to collective bargaining. The collective bargaining process is essentially one which involves the views of management and labour. They come together to argue so that an agreement can be reached which is acceptable to both parties. When it comes to the issue of political rights for public servants, yesterday, today, and tomorrow, that process is taking place. We have a process in place where representatives of public servants through their union are at the bargaining table with the Government in an atmosphere where issues can be resolved.

I was surprised the New Democratic Party came forward today and tried to indicate to the House that the judgment of Members of the House of Commons should supersede the collective bargaining process. It really invited us, by asking for the subject matter of this Bill to be passed on to committee today, to abrogate the rights of workers to participate in the collective bargaining process. It was much like asking us to legislate workers back to work. I find that very surprising, I really do.

We on this side of the House have a sincere and genuine conviction about the rights of workers. If a matter turns out to be unresolvable in the collective bargaining process and there is need for action on the part of the Parliament of Canada, it would be appropriate for the Government to bring forward a reference establishing a committee to look at that issue and that issue alone.

There are many new Members in the House of Commons, but I urge all Hon. Members to consider whether or not it is appropriate to pass this kind of subject matter on to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. Essentially that committee is comprised of a group carefully selected by the nominating committee to look at budgetary matters such as budgetary consequences. Is it really the most appropriate group to look at issues relating to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and at political issues in terms of the image of the Public Service of Canada?

Mr. Benjamin: Read the Bill.

Mr. Hawkes: I hear the Hon. Member for Regina West. I have read it. What the Bill fails to do speaks eloquently about what was on the Hon. Member's mind. In his Bill he says that we should open up the rights all the time to virtually everyone in every circumstance.

Mr. Benjamin: No, it doesn't say that.

Mr. Hawkes: It really does. It does not deal with this issue as the British Parliament has dealt with it. The British Parliament has dealt with it in a manner satisfactory to those who work in its Public Service by establishing categories of public servants. Some categories, such as people who have jobs as file clerks and so on, have all the political rights and freedoms which the rest of us enjoy. However, people in very sensitive positions are classified somewhat differently because of the belief that if they were to exercise those rights, the rights of others would be affected. I bring to the attention of the Hon. Member the fact that there are three—

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the importance of this debate, I would not like the Hon. member to overlook the reference to Section 32(6) in the Hon. Member's Bill, which in fact excludes deputy heads from the activities described and therefore makes the exceptions he is seeking.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) knows very well that that is not a point of order but is, rather, a question of debate.

Mr. Hawkes: It excludes 70 people out of a quarter of a million. If that is not virtually everyone, I do not know what is.

I bring to the attention of that Hon. Member and others that many public servants are, on behalf of all of us, in positions which require very sensitive decision-making. Let me use as an example a position which may appear simple on the surface, such as that of an immigration officer who basically has to make a decision whether or not someone is an acceptable or desirable immigrant to Canada. If he or she were to be viewed by applicants as favouring people of a particular political persuasion, would that be in the best interests of the applicants or of the country? What about those who make regulatory decisions?

Mr. Cassidy: What about them? Your Party favours the principle of the Bill. It said so in the campaign.

Mr. Hawkes: This Party favours the principle of the Bill that political freedoms and rights for Canadian public servants be extended as broadly and as securely as possible forever, so that a wrong which has existed for over a hundred years can be corrected. However, today, in February of 1985, this Party says to the House that representatives of public servants are at the bargaining table with the Treasury Board. The best and most knowledgeable representatives in terms of the sensitivities of their jobs are public servants. On this day this House should not interfere with that process. We either believe in it, we either believe in the rights granted those workers, or we do not. The Progressive Conservative Party, the Government of Canada, in February, 1985 believes in that process and believes in those workers. We think the matter will come to its proper resolution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, February 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, on Friday I had spoken for some eight or nine minutes on Bill C-26. Today I would like briefly to conclude my remarks.

The main point on which we were speaking at that particular time was not whether or not Hon. Members were against the provisions of Bill C-26 but that provisions of Bill C-26 do not extend to all people in need who are between the ages of 60 and 65. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you would agree that it is not fair that some people be excluded from the provisions of Bill C-26.

On Friday we were speaking of a potential situation in which a widow would be eligible under this Bill while a single person of the same age and living under the same financial circumstances would not be eligible. I cannot for the life of me figure out why the Government does not insist on providing all people in need who are between the ages of 60 and 65 with the same kind of benefits. To discriminate against people because of their marital status is extremely unfair.

The other day we were discussing the fact that the Government, in its wisdom, has chosen to make certain people ineligible for this benefit. That is most unfortunate. We were also discussing the fact that the Government has decided that it has other priorities for its funds. I am sure that Hon. Members across would agree that the Government's spending of some $40 million or $50 million on coloured uniforms for the Armed Forces is a rather strange priority when those funds could be used to ensure that there are adequate benefits available for all people in need who are between the ages of 60 and 65.

[Translation]

Last Friday, Mr. Speaker, we were talking about the fact that, in his speech, my colleague from Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) had compared three different persons: the first was single, the second was separated or divorced, and the third was widowed. Their financial status was identical, but not their benefits. For the purpose of his speech, my colleague had decided to call his three constituents Mrs. LeBlanc, Mrs. Legris and Mrs. Lebrun.

Friday, Mr. Speaker, I pointed out to you that I had a picture which had been given to us by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates), showing a Mr. LeBlanc, a Mr. Lebleu and a Mr. Legris. Messrs. LeBlanc, Lebleu and Legris are in the Armed Forces, and the Government found enough money to buy uniforms of different colours for those three gentlemen, but not enough to help the needy and the underprivileged.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that is a rather strange priority for a Government which went on the campaign trail promising just about anything to anybody for any reason.

But it did make a commitment to the elderly—higher benefits. In that respect, I must say that the Conservative Government has once again hoodwinked the Canadian people by failing to provide similar benefits to Canadians whose needs are similar.

Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to the fact that, in its approach, the Government has certainly neglected the Canadian people. And I am not the only one who says so, because in an article published this morning in a Toronto daily newspaper, Mr. Jeffrey Simpson refers to the Government priorities, a Government which has seen fit to buy uniforms for the military instead of helping needy Canadians.

[English]

The article to which I referred indicates in part that we should buy coloured uniforms for politicians if that is to be the priority rather than give funds to the needy. According to the author of this article, we could buy a uniform for the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) in the colours of the American flag. That would be appropriate for that particular individual. For the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) we could buy a uniform made of pigskin. That would be good as it would indicate an intention of fulfilling one campaign promise that was broken by the Government. I will not bore you with all the other details, Mr. Speaker, but I will say that the author is of the view that we could have sheepskin jackets for all the Tory back-benchers who follow the Government so blindly and who do not have minds of their own on various important issues.

It is quite obvious that the provisions of Bill C-26 need to be examined very seriously. I invite the government back-benchers who are heckling at this particular moment to rise in their places and tell the single people between the ages of 60 and 65 that they cannot have those benefits. I invite them to rise and say that the Minister is right, that we should buy coloured uniforms instead of giving money to the needy. If that is how he feels, he should tell the House and his constituents. They would be pleased to read that in Hansard, and they would treat it accordingly at the next election.

• (1110)

Obviously, the priorities of the Government are completely backwards. I would like briefly to describe a situation today which I described in the House last Friday. The situation involves a widow or a widower who is 60 or 61 years of age. In most cases it is the widows who are in financial need. However, the people who are in need, whether they be widows, widowers or single people, require benefits. In some cases widows receive survivor benefits from the Canada Pension Plan. However, divorced or single women do not have that benefit. So we can see that in certain cases the provisions in this legislation could be construed as being completely backwards.

It is obvious that a large segment of the population has been forgotten. I think that all legislators, before the end of this debate, will agree that the legislation must be modified. In addition, the Canadian population should seize the opportunity, when the House recesses next week, to tell their Members of Parliament that this law needs to be amended in order to ensure that no one is left out.

Another issue with which I have some difficulty is the way in which eligible individuals are determined. We could say that it is easy to determine, because we all know the definition of a widow. However, I do not believe it is easy and I would like to cite a few examples of how this issue could be complicated. If a woman's husband is deceased, of course she is a widow. But what happens if a widow remarries? Of course, if a widow remarries we could say that she is no longer a widow.

Mr. Grisé: What do you expect?

Mr. Boudria: I invite my hon. colleague on the other side of the House, who seems to be so smart on these issues, to answer the following question. What happens to the widow who remarries and subsequently divorces? Is she or is she not eligible for this pension? I would say that no one in the House has the answer to that question. According to the information which I have received, a person who remarries and subsequently divorces returns to the marital status which they had prior to the last marriage. That person would again have the widow's status which she had before. If that is the case, would she be eligible for this pension?

One thing is obvious. The Government House Leader, who is nodding, like myself recognizes that this legislation is impossible to administer in its present form. Being the objective, non-partisan person that he is, he will recognize that the only way to make the legislation work is to have it apply to all people between the ages of 60 and 65 who are in need.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Let's get it into committee.

Mr. Boudria: Now that the Government House Leader has understood this, I am sure he will run off to tell his Cabinet colleagues that the law should not be passed in its present form. It needs to be amended to ensure that all Canadians in need will qualify and that there will not be discrimination based on marital status.

• (1115)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spent a great deal of time discussing the cost of these new uniforms. Has he any idea how much it has been estimated it would cost to restore the old uniforms? I understand that cost is equal to the cost of replacing the present uniforms.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will give that matter all the attention it deserves. As far as I am concerned, the military are presently wearing uniforms and they can keep on wearing the ones they have. I put a question on the Order Paper months ago asking this Government what the value is of the stock of old uniforms we have on hand. The Government refuses to answer that question because it will embarrass the daylights out of it if we find out that we probably have millions of dollars worth of the old uniform stock which we can't get rid of right now. That is an embarrassing situation for this Government, Mr. Speaker. The last thing we need is a Government which intends, as its priority, to spend money on military uniforms of different colours—as colourful as they may be—for no apparent reason at all other than to satisfy some preconceived idea that the military had a long time ago about how cute they once looked when they had different coloured uniforms. Instead, I believe the Government should put that money towards meaningful social programs. I don't apologize for thinking we should put our money where it is needed, towards the seniors of this country, instead of into that kind of a scheme.

Mr. Dick: Then why didn't the Liberals do it in 20 years?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have heard that some people in the military ranks, upon looking at the military expenditures, feel that the money could be better spent on refurbishing some of their equipment which is inadequate. In other words, there are more urgent and more useful ways of using these dollars, even if the dollars are to be used in the military sector. I am wondering if the Hon. Member has heard these same kinds of comments from the military people?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, that is a very excellent question indeed put by the Hon. Member. I have had numerous conversations with constituents who are in the Armed Forces and I have yet to meet one who has told me that this investment—and I use the term generously—in new uniforms is worth while. All of the military people I have met were unanimous in saying that this is the last thing they need. They are of the view that putting the money into social programs, or even into other investments within the Armed Forces, would be preferable to what is being proposed. There are other questions they want answered; I am sure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) has had the same reaction from military people in his own constituency. For instance, if a military person works part of the year at the Canadian Forces base at Ottawa North, which is the airborne type of military, and the rest of the year he works in another area of the Armed Forces, would that particular person have to switch uniforms twice a year because part of the year he is with the air force and part of the year he is with the army? So we will have people in fact having to have more than one set of these particular uniforms in order to satisfy the ridiculous idea of the Minister of National Defence.

To answer the question, Mr. Speaker, yes, the money would be far better spent elsewhere, even elsewhere in the military. As far as I am concerned, we should take that money and put it into the social programs represented by Bill C-26 so that the Bill can be enhanced to cover more people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no more questions or comments we shall resume debate with the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am really delighted to have an opportunity today to address a few comments to Bill C-26 which will provide spouse's allowance to all widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 65. I am told there is something like 85,000 of those people right across the country.

It is very difficult to know what sort of impact legislation, this legislation in particular, will have on one's own riding. However, as you may be aware, my riding encompasses parts of two of the six municipalities which make up Metropolitan Toronto; the City of North York and the borough of East York. The City of North York has a relatively young population. Only about 8 per cent of the population are 65 years of age or over. However, the portion of North York included in my riding contains the original community of Don Mills and Victoria Village, both of which were developed in the 1950s and early 1960s. Therefore the population in those particular areas is somewhat more advanced in age than is generally the case in North York as a whole.

As far as the East York portion of my riding is concerned, it is quite clear that this legislation will have a very significant impact. The borough of East York has a seniors population second only to the City of Victoria, British Columbia. In fact, depending on the study you look at, the population of seniors in the East York part of my riding is either 16 per cent or 20 per cent, and as high as 22 per cent for those 60 years of age or over. That category has been growing very substantially in recent years. Between 1971 and 1976 it went up by 1 per cent. Between 1976 and 1981 it went up by 2 per cent. A recent study by the planning department of East York indicates there is something like 6,000 people between the ages of 60 and 65 in that community, and of that about 1,000 would be single people living on their own. We have 282 ridings in this country and roughly 85,000 people who will be in a position to take advantage of this legislation. That works out to approximately 300 people per riding. If I have 1,000 people in my riding in this category, that means my constituency will potentially benefit about three times as much as any other riding. So there will be a very substantial benefit to the people of York East.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that we could have much better pensions. I do not think anyone on either side of the House, including Ministers, would not agree in their hearts that we could have better pensions if we had enough money. There are all sorts of things we could do. We could extend this spouse's allowance to cover single people as well as those divorced or separated. That goes without saying. We could also make this a universal pension. I might say that during the last election campaign there were a lot of people in my riding who pointed out to me that this is something the Government should be looking at. We should be looking at reducing the pensionable age to 60. They suggested we drop it a year at a time, starting with 64 and going down until we get to an old age security pension starting at age 60. They pointed out to me that this would have at least two dramatic effects. The first would be that all people in that age bracket who are now unemployed and cannot get a job because of their age would benefit and be able to withdraw from the labour force. Second, it would be an added incentive to people now approaching that age to retire early, therefore making jobs available for younger people. That is another reason we should be looking at improved pension benefits.

Another aspect is clearly the amount of spouse's allowance that we are considering. We are considering a benefit of just over $500 a month. That will total approximately $6,500 a year. Recent studies by the Metropolitan Toronto Social Planning Council indicate that it costs a single person in the senior citizen category living on their own in a home or apartment somewhere around $10,000 a year to support themselves. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, while this will be of great benefit, it will actually fall short of the money needed to live above the poverty line.

There are a number of benefits that we should be considering and a number of improvements that could be made to the old age security system. I think the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) put it quite correctly a few minutes ago when he said that this is much better than what we have now. It is fine to suggest that we do all of these things, and I would like to see us do all of these things, but we are facing a rather horrendous deficit. We have government expenditures for the coming year in the neighbourhood of $100 billion. Our revenue from all sources will be in the neighbourhood of $63 billion. That leaves us with a $37 billion shortfall. As much as I would like to see the benefits for seniors and near seniors extended beyond what we are suggesting today, it is obvious that this is a great step forward in light of the deficit which we face.

It is quite clear that if we want improved benefits for our senior citizens we must get our economy moving again in order to generate the wealth to provide these benefits without interruption. We must also ensure additional benefits, such as a universal pension for everyone over the age of 60 and improved pension benefits to ensure that everyone lives above the poverty line. In that regard we should ultimately be aiming at something like a guaranteed annual wage. Of course, that guaranteed annual wage must not discourage people who have saved for their retirement. It must protect them at the same time as protecting those people who need help.

Parliament should be aiming at all of these things, Mr. Speaker, but they will all depend on the generation of more wealth in the country. Today we should be applauding the Government's move for improving the spouse's allowance benefits. All Members of the House should be dedicating themselves to getting the economy moving again, getting people back to work again, and turning people into taxpayers rather than welfare recipients so that they can generate the tax money in this country to provide for the things we are talking about today—a much better social security system and social safety network in the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Since we have been debating this Bill for eight hours, speeches are now limited to ten minutes with no questions or comments afterwards.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act. The Act extends the spouse's allowance to low-income widows and widowers between 60 and 65 years of age. Single and divorced people in that age group are still excluded, according to the Bill.

While the New Democratic Party will support this legislation, I think our members have indicated a number of weaknesses in the Act which we hope the Government will address when the Bill goes to the committee. The main weakness is one which has been well documented and presented to the House. The benefits are extended to a very arbitrarily defined group. Their application is not universal at all and there is no intention for it to be universal. The Bill does nothing for low-income people between the ages of 60 and 65 who were never married or who are divorced. The fact that this legislation discriminates against a certain group is unacceptable in our society and this matter should be dealt with in the committee so that the Bill can be changed before it is enacted into law.

The other weakness that has been pointed out to the House is that if those in this particular age group are suffering financially at this time, then this Bill should be put into effect immediately instead of September, 1985, if it can be passed quickly. The fact that people need this help now means that they should receive the benefits of this legislation as soon as it can be passed. Therefore, we would like to see this legislation become effective immediately on the date of its enactment. If we recognize the need there is no reason why we should not act quickly.

The measures in this Bill are partly a response to the recommendations of the Task Force on Pension Reform which reported in December, 1984. Our member on that commission was Ted Miller, a member in the previous Parliament. He also made a minority report. He recommended expanding the general public program of Old Age Security, the Canada Pension Plan and Quebec Pension Plan by making them available at age 60. I believe our ultimate goal should be to have a universal program for all people.

Although some members of the Liberal Party in the House agree that such a change would be beneficial and should be implemented, the previous Liberal Government made no attempt to implement any of the recommendations brought before it by the Pension Reform Committee in 1983. Except for the two-stage, $50 per month increase in the guaranteed income supplement, the previous Government was content to leave pension changes to those that did not help lower income people but definitely helped the upper income groups in Canada. We support this Bill and are willing to discuss it in committee where we might be able to convince the Government to make some changes so that it will be less discriminatory.

Pensions have a very interesting history in Canada. The first old age pension legislation in Canada was introduced during a minority government in 1926. At that time the real impetus behind that particular move for pensions was instigated by J. S. Woodsworth who was the Labour Member of Parliament for Winnipeg North Centre. The measure was opposed by the Conservatives in the House back in 1926, then blocked by the Liberals and the Conservatives in the Senate.

Following the election of that year, when it became a campaign issue during the election, it was reintroduced by the King Government and passed the House and the Senate with very little difficulty. It is very interesting to note that that particular pension was $20 per month and very strictly means tested.

That particular period of history is very interesting as far as social welfare legislation in Canada is concerned and I would commend members in the House and other Canadians to read it. It shows the ability of one determined man or a group of seven Members in the House who were able to change the direction of social welfare legislation in Canada to a direction that has not changed perceptibly since that time. We have added to that legislation on several occasions.

The CCF conducted a considerable amount of policy discussion and development. When Stanley Knowles was elected in 1942, he immediately took up the responsibility of his predecessor from Winnipeg North Centre, J.S. Woodsworth, and called for pensions as a fundamental right and free from the humiliating means test. In 1952, ten years later, after considerable pressure from the CCF in the House, the Government introduced universal old age security and made it payable at age 70.

I am reviewing this history because since 1926 until now we have made inroads into taking the responsibility for senior citizens, recognizing their contribution to our country and that we, as representatives of the people of Canada, have a responsibility for their dignity in old age with a lifestyle that is free of want. Consequently, we implemented the guaranteed income supplement, old age security, senior medicare programs as well as dental programs. Now we should be looking at the extension of these services to as many people as possible in that particular age group. Our policy suggestion has always been that if we cannot move the applicable age down to 60 universally, then what we should do is make the allowance available at age 60 for anybody who is not in the workforce. That is what we will attempt to do in committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Continuing debate. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin).

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy with this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-26, to amend the Old Age Security Act. Under this legislation, next September the spouse's allowance will be extended to all widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64 and living on low incomes. They will benefit from this allowance regardless of the age of their spouse at death.

Those Canadians will receive up to a maximum of $536.26 per month, to be indexed quarterly to the cost of living. More than 85,000 Canadians will benefit from this new measure.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should applaud this new proposal which will help consolidate and upgrade the old age security program. During the last election campaign, I met with groups of widows and widowers in my riding who took advantage of the opportunity to inform me about their extremely precarious situation. In many cases the sudden death of a spouse had left them without any significant income, often with dependents, either directly or indirectly. Those people had high hopes in our plan to upgrade the old age security system, and I am sure that today, they will be able to point with pride to their new Progressive Conservative Government that is going to "deliver the goods" and provide them with a significant measure of assistance.

The House will recall, and I think this is important considering certain arguments that have been made recently, that the implementation of this new proposal will involve additional spending of $190 million, and over $350 million in 1986-87 when the program has been in existence for one year.

Mr. Speaker, of course our Government would have liked to have done more for all individuals in the 60 to 64 age group by extending its program to those who are single, divorced or separated, as the opposition parties have insisted that we do. Unfortunately, the disastrous financial situation we have inherited from a series of previous governments precludes committing the $1.5 billion that would be involved in extending this program to all people on low incomes in this age group. Of course, the fact that previous governments saw the public treasury as a well that would never run dry is now preventing this Government from extending the program to all widows and widowers between 60 and 64, and this obviously leaves us very little room to manoeuvre and to do everything we would like to do to provide a decent standard of living for all these groups. It is also obvious that if we were not facing a deficit that will reach nearly $200 billion this year, our Government would be in a position to consider a far more generous old age security program.

I think we must regenerate Canada's wealth before we can share it. That is the objective and that is the position of the Government that was elected on September 4 of last year. We must stabilize the Government's financial situation. We are working on it very actively and we have no choice but to succeed unless we want to be haunted once again by the spectre of brankruptcy that threatened this country until September 4 of last year.

Meanwhile, although this measure is not a panacea for all the problems facing the elderly in general and widowed individuals in particular, the 85,000 Canadians who are anxiously waiting for Parliament to adopt this new measure will have cause to rejoice. I think that our Government and Progressive Conservatives and in fact the entire House will have cause for rejoicing, and I am delighted to see that this Government, as it said in the Throne Speech, is delivering the goods and is trying to gradually improve the old age security program, and I think this is a very significant measure that the House should approve.

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, it was very interesting to listen to the debate and hear the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) sing the praises of this Government, but I am rather disappointed that the Hon. Member did not ask himself whether this measure was fair and equitable, whether this kind of discrimination was acceptable in a free and democratic society, and whether, now that we have our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, we can tell people: We are going to make a distinction on the basis of your marital status. Whether we can say, in a society like ours: Mrs. So-and-So, you are widowed and you are entitled to the allowance, and, to a single woman: You are not entitled to the allowance, when they are both in the same financial situation.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why the previous speaker is not worried about the inherent injustice of this legislation. I think Hon. Members on the other side of the House are well aware of the fact that this Bill discriminates on the basis of religion. I see the Parliamentary Secretary, the Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) who is aware of the situation of nuns in Canada, especially Catholic nuns who, unfortunately or perhaps fortunately, are not allowed to marry, according to their religion, and who will now be discriminated against because they have decided to dedicate their lives to God, and although they "marry" God, they are not likely to be widowed.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that our religious orders must be asking themselves some very serious questions about this Government. I see the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté). I know he has nuns in his riding to whom he will be hard put to explain the fact that since they are not widowed, they will not be eligible for the allowance when they turn 60.

I would also like to mention the case of people who are divorced. What does the Progressive Conservative Party have against people who had an unfortunate experience in their lives and who have had to suffer the heartbreak of a divorce? Mr. Speaker, do we, as the Parliament of this country, have the right to discriminate against those who are divorced? Does our society not accept divorce, unfortunate though it may be? We should recognize the needs of these people. I realize the same applies to people who are separated. I fail to understand why this Government has decided to commit itself to meeting the needs of widows and widowers. I agree that widows and widowers have needs, but certainly not any more so than people who are single, separated or divorced.

Mr. Speaker, does poverty have a marital status? What this Government is trying to do is to treat marital satus as a basis for discrimination, and I am sure there are associations that will protest and take this decision before the courts. In Section 13, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms gives all Canadians the right to equality. I am positive that in the months and years to come, many cases will be registered with the courts.

When I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) who sat with me on the Committee on the Constitution and made some excellent speeches against discrimination and now, the first Bill tabled by the Minister in the House contains all the elements that contravene Section 13 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mr. Speaker, I think that in the weeks to come, Government Members will be put under pressure by those who are separated, divorced and single, and members of religious orders, and they will realize that the Bill is discriminatory and lacks the justification referred to in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in Section 1, and I quote:

> The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

• (1150)

And to this day, after all the speeches we have heard from the Government side, no one has been able to show that that kind of discrimination is justified except by harking back to the deficit problem.

Mr. Speaker, there is no court of law where the point made by the Hon. Member for Charlevoix would hold. No court of law would tell him: Yes, in view of the deficit problem you may get away with discrimination. And this is the question in my view that the Government Members should ask themselves. They should go to their constituencies and ask those who are single, divorced or separated: Do you think this is fair?

Everybody will tell them: No, Mr. Speaker. We all agree that if the Government had been faced with a financial problem, certainly the solution would have been to progressively lower the age of entitlement. They could have said age 64 or 63, but the same should apply to everyone.

And this is what I am concerned about in this Government's philosophy: they selected one group, without any economic justification unless there is one in the briefing books of the Hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand). But I am anxious to hear her. She took part in televised debates, but then she was unable to substantiate her point.

That is the question that must absolutely be asked here, today. And I hope the Hon. Members opposite will be asking it too. I know, Mr. Speaker, that being a distinguished lawyer you have asked yourself that question, and surely you are in doubt as to whether in these circumstances discrimination is acceptable.

It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that in upcoming minutes, upcoming hours, upcoming days, and hopefully in upcoming weeks, when this legislation is discussed, Conservative Members will manage to convince the public and the House that they have a right to resort to discrimination. It is against the spirit and the letter of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. And certainly the courts will tell you that, Mr. Member of Parliament for Charlevoix. I am sure that within the next few months, this will be proven in court.

Now they say: Yes, that will cost millions and millions of dollars. I hope that Hon. Members can convince the Minister of Defence not to spend $54 million on uniforms. Speaking of choice for the Government, I feel it is more important to help our seniors than to change the colour of military uniforms. Mr. Speaker, our military personnel already have all the clothing they need but our senior citizens are hard put to buy clothes. And we know how destitute our citizens aged 60 to 65 and living alone can be. This is why the Government cannot hope to get off the hook by saying: "We have no more money:" They have money for new uniforms, for new cars. They want to buy guns and what have you, ships galore, and of course everything the Americans wish to sell them. But when it comes to our older people, they say: "We have no money!"

This is an argument the Opposition will not buy. We welcome the first parts of Bill C-26, but we know it is a piece of legislation that was hastily put up together. Of necessity they could not think of everything. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), who certainly has an innate sense of justice, certainly will reconsider his position at the urging of his Parliamentary Secretary who knows the real people, who certainly can tell him that in her constituency religious orders are not at all happy with that. She can tell him that in her constituency, separated or divorced people should not be stigmatized for the rest of their lives, but should benefit now from the provisions of the legislation.

As I said, this is why, Mr. Speaker, we will try to convince them during the upcoming weeks, we will try to win them to our side. Indeed, backbenchers like the Hon. Member for Charlevoix, instead of trying to rationalize this Government's Bill, should tell the Minister: "We were elected to be fair and just." He should tell him that the separated, divorced or single people in his constituency also want this benefit and need it. This is what he should be doing. Not that I feel any urging to repeat what was said by the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne). But hearing the speeches made up to this day, that is the impression which one gets from the work of some Members. As we know, the Hon. Member for Champlain did not mean it as a compliment when he said his colleagues were "deuces of spades".

But I am anxious to hear him rise and tell the Minister of National Health and Welfare that the errors in the legislation should absolutely be rectified. I feel certain we would have a unanimous response from the House if tomorrow the Government were to introduce such an amendment. He could even make sure that this would be implemented now rather than in September, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I too am very pleased to take part in today's debate on Bill C-26. This Bill is indeed an important piece of legislation, aimed to extending the protection of the spousal allowance program to all widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64. As has already been well documented, the proposal would affect approximately 85,000 Canadians and thus add to the 94,000 Canadians who are currently already enjoying these benefits.

It is on the whole, I believe, a positive step which builds on the strength, the vision and the courage of legislation initiated by a former Liberal Government in 1975. In this regard I congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). As a new Member of Parliament in this House, I have come to respect his abilities as a parliamentarian and, perhaps more important, his caring attitude as an individual.

Much has been said in this House about Bill C-26, but I would like to focus briefly on three important realities which I believe flow from this piece of legislation. The first is that of the 85,000 recipients, 72,000 or 87 per cent are women. Second, this Bill declares as ineligible over 80,000 Canadians between the ages of 60 and 64 who were never married, are separated or divorced. Third, there are countless couples between the ages of 60 and 64 who are facing severe financial pressures largely because their employment marketability is severely undermined by the traditions of our society. Their concerns are also unanswered by this Bill.

These are important realities which Bill C-26 does not address. The obvious question that Canadians are asking is, why not? While the Bill, I repeat, needs to be applauded for what it will accomplish, the legislation also speaks quite loudly about the matters that it does not advocate or will accomplish. Therefore, as parliamentarians, while we need to recognize the advantages offered by this legislation to Canadians, we cannot allow its limitations to be overlooked or forgotten.

We need to ask ourselves about the plight of Canadians who are between the crucial ages of 60 and 65 and find themselves alone with little financial security. We also need to come to grips with the harsh realities facing women within this age bracket. We need to understand the many faces of poverty and admit that they do exist with all too much frequency in our communities and across this country. We need to face those realities and we need to act. We therefore need to discuss and subsequently implement matters of pension reform, matters of homemakers' pensions and improved benefits for part-time workers.

In his speech on this Bill the Minister of National Health and Welfare spoke about poverty and the fact that widows in particular are among the poorest in Canada. He then touched upon the employment shortfalls:

> Let's not kid ourselves: in most instances, the 60 to 64-year old widow is not the one the personnel manager will hire. Why hire someone who might have only a few years until retirement while there are other young and perhaps better educated people competing for job openings available today?

The Minister was correct in his analysis. It is shared, I believe, by all Members of this House, but the scope of this analysis was all too narrow. The single, separated or divorced 60 to 64-year old is also fighting for economic survival. The single, separated or divorced 60 to 64-year old also faces employment discriminations. There are also 60 to 64-year old couples who face increasing difficulties. The situation where the husband or the wife is laid off and the salary of the other partner becomes a single salary and quite inadequate to make ends meet, also warrants a concerted effort on our part. This Bill does not make that effort.

• (1200)

Just last week I visited a couple faced with such a dilemma. The husband is 62 years old and has worked all of his life in construction. He was recently laid off but construction work has been his only employment experience. Thus he is seeking a similar job. His problem, and he realizes it, is his age. He too is the first to admit that perhaps a younger person would be more physically suited to that position. His wife, who is one year younger, has worked for 30 years cleaning and scrubbing other people's floors. She too is at the point of being physically worn out and she too feels that it would perhaps be appropriate for her to step aside in favour of a younger person in need of work. The question, however, is how can she do so?

I am not suggesting that this is the definitive experience of all Canadians. However, there are too many similar real-life cases. There certainly are enough such cases to justify a change and enough for us to realize that people in the age group of 60 to 64 merit special and careful attention from Parliament and indeed society.

During the recent federal election campaign and subsequent visits and discussions with my constituents in York West, the most often repeated concern from old, middle and younger-aged alike was the matter of old age pension eligibility being 65 years of age. My discussions clearly indicated to me that this threashold age is in need of urgent reform. Canadians are looking to other countries that currently provide pensions for men at 60 and women at 55. These countries have undertaken this progressive legislation despite the fact that they have less resources and wealth than our country.

If the Canadian couple I illustrated earlier did have access to pensions at the ages of 60 and 55 respectively, would it not ease their lives? Would it not permit the wife to stop scrubbing floors? Would it not permit the husband to ease up and perhaps pursue a hobby rather than look for more mortar and bricks on yet another construction site? Would it not allow the couple to live a happier, less hectic and less pressurized lifestyle? Would it not also allow other younger individuals seeking work a far better chance of finding that work? It is my opinion that Canadians share this concern and that the answers to those vital questions would be in the affirmative.

Quite often our country's status among other countries is measured in terms of wealth or economic output. While this is a valid and accepted form of comparison, this measurement should also be complemented by a social indicator that would reflect the type of lifestyle that Canadians lead, the benefits they enjoy from their Government and at what age these benefits come into force. If we followed such a practice, we would be surprised to learn that while some other countries trail Canada in over-all economic production, the sum lot of the individuals in those other countries is in some cases superior to that of Canadians.

An important facet of this social equation concerns the elderly and near elderly in our society. Earlier in this debate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), reminded the House of an old proverb which says that we can judge a society by the way it treats its elderly. I believe that that proverb is a very real and accurate one and one that is central to any discussion we are to have on Bill C-26. This legislation, as I indicated at the outset, moves in the appropriate direction but it definitely needs to be strengthened in order to make up for its shortcomings and it needs to be embodied as one component of a larger and more comprehensive policy thrust.

I hope and Canadians hope that Bill C-26 is but the beginning. While this legislation will no doubt improve the lives of some 85,000 Canadians, what do we say to the other hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are asking themselves: "What about me?" What do we say to the single, divorced or separated men and women of our country who are between the ages of 60 and 64? What do we as a country say about the over-all state of affairs for Canadians approaching their sunset years? We cannot afford to leave these individuals behind. If we do, we cannot truthfully say that Canada works well and fairly for everyone.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act. I would like to make three or four observations in the short time available to me. My first observation is that I acknowledge that this Bill is a step in the right direction in terms of recognizing one of the many problems that were outlined in the report presented by the Task Force on Pension Reform in December, 1983.

Just to preface my remarks, I would say that I am listening with interest to my colleagues and friends from the Liberal Party who rise to ask why the Government is not recognizing these problems. I would point out that the report commissioned by the Liberal Government through the task force hearings was tabled in 1983. If members of the Liberal Party were concerned about what was happening to the seniors of our country, there were ample opportunities to introduce legislation, particularly after the task force report laid out its recommendations so very, very clearly.

The member of the New Democratic Party who was on that task force, a member who came from British Columbia, wrote a minority report because he did not feel that the task force went far enough. He felt that there were a number of things on which the Government should act immediately. Just to put today's comments made by members from the three political Parties in some context, I think that that was an observation worth making.

We have some concerns about the legislation but we are certainly not going to hold it up. We will be raising these concerns at the appropriate time in committee. However, let us recognize that the benefits provided by the Bill, which basically extend the spouse's allowance to all low-income widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 65, leaves single and divorced people in that age group excluded from consideration. It is a very arbitrarily defined group at which this increase in pension is aimed. The Bill offers nothing for low-income people who are between the ages of 60 and 65 who have never married or presently are divorced.

As well, it is useful to point out that the amendments, once approved by the House, will not come into effect until September of this year. We are hearing good arguments from all spokespersons that there is a need to move with some haste. I would like to think that we need not wait until September of this year before action can actually be taken.

As the person who last spoke indicated, how we treat the elderly of our society is a pretty clear reflection of how advanced, mature and civilized we are as a country. I think that there is a good deal of room to move in that respect. There is much that can be done.

There are two issues to which I would like to see some thought given on behalf of the seniors of the country, recognizing the contributions they have made to our society, and one of those is the issue of senior citizens' housing. In many communities across the country, both large and small, there is a growing need for senior citizens' housing of a variety of types.

I might say that in the province from which I come, the Province of British Columbia, while the allotments of money are somewhat limited as compared to the federal Government, such housing does exist. However, the provincial Government, in the name of restraint, has decided that it will not build any more senior citizens' housing units in the Province of British Columbia because it is not a priority and the Government simply cannot afford to do so. I think it is a very cutting comment to say that the Government cannot afford to provide decent housing for the senior citizens of the Province of British Columbia. That tells us a great deal about where the priorities of the Government of British Columbia lie. We must look at ways and means of providing better housing for our senior citizens in the country.

As well, we should use this debate as an opportunity to flag an issue that should be dealt with now, and that is the matter of providing more opportunities for early retirement. On Friday we learned that the unemployment figures had leaped significantly higher than they had leaped for a considerable length of time. The number of unemployed in Canada appears to be growing. We heard from the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) and from many of the spokespersons in that Party that the young people are the ones who are being particularly hard hit during this time of recession or virtual depression-like conditions.

Those people who have the means and the will to retire at an age other than 60 could take an early retirement option and that would provide opportunities in the workplaces of the country for young people to access the job market.

• (1210)

This week a major report in one of the metropolitan newspapers indicated that many seniors have been fortunate enough to put money aside and are financially prepared for their retirement years. Those seniors are prepared to retire at an age other than 65 or, perhaps, 60. They will be able to live the rest of their lives with enjoyment and satisfaction. That early retirement will enable those seniors to do a variety of things which they have looked forward to during their working lives. Rather than paying UI or, indirectly, welfare benefits from the federal coffers, we could provide a pension for people who are considering retirement at an age earlier than the traditional age, and that would provide much-needed jobs for the young people in our society.

In conclusion, I would like to say that we will be supporting the principle of the Bill at second reading. However, we look forward to committee stage in order to consider extending the group that is involved, which has been arbitrarily defined. We will also make an effort to have this legislation become effective prior to September of this year.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that no other Member is interested in speaking on this legislation at this particular moment. Of course, I am sure that there are Members who wish to speak and, during the ten minutes which are allotted to me, I am sure other Members will come into the House to express their opinions.

I have listened to the debate and, when I was not able to be in the House, I read the debate in Hansard. I think we must realize one thing. When we pass legislation such as this we must be careful when we say that the legislation will benefit x number of people. In any social security legislation which is passed by the Parliament of Canada, we must be very careful when we say that it will benefit, for example, 85,000 people, as has been stated in this Chamber.

There are certain people who will qualify under this legislation. They will receive a cheque, but they will not be allowed to keep one penny. They will not benefit from the legislation. That is a very unusual statement for a Member of Parliament to make. I am referring to the thousands of people who are in institutions, or who are in government-subsidized nursing homes, senior citizens' homes or homes of special care. I bring this up today to make an appeal to the Government of Canada and to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). There are certain standards in Canada which are not being maintained. It requires a strong arm on the part of the federal Government in dealing with provincial authorities and regulations. I am referring to the whole question of the social security safety net.

I would like to illustrate a situation. Suppose a person was about to retire, without money, and that person was going into a senior citizens' home, a nursing home or a home for special care, and had a choice in which province they would retire. Where would that person retire? It is an important question. Under this legislation, with a person between the ages of 60 and 65 who is in an institution which is being subsidized under the Canada Assistance Plan and through the provincial departments of social services, it would depend on which province that person decides to live in that determines the amount of money which will be made available to them. I find that absolutely incredible.

If we looked at the comforts allowance that a senior citizen or a person between the ages of 60 and 65 is allowed to keep out of the cheque, we would find that one province in western Canada will only allow that person to keep $34. However, if that person was not receiving the cheque, they would still receive $34 from the provincial department of social services. Of course, that $34 is cost-shared under the Canada Assistance Plan and comes from the federal Government Department which is introducing the legislation. In another province that person would be allowed to keep $115. In Ontario, if the person is between the ages of 60 and 65, they would receive $77. However, if that person is older than 65 years of age, they receive $105.

Who determines on a national scale how much money a senior citizen requires to buy birthday or Christmas presents for their grandchildren, to buy pipe tobacco if the person smokes, or to buy a bottle of brandy once a month? Who determines how much money senior citizens are allowed to keep from their comforts allowances? As a policy, it is a decision of the provincial Government. No one in this Chamber can say that a measly $34 a month is adequate for a senior citizen who is living in a senior citizens' home.

We must also realize, under the financing arrangements with provincial Governments, that the deficit on the operation of senior citizens' institutions is cost-shared monthly with the federal Government on a 50/50 basis. In other words, a person between the ages of 60 and 65 will not benefit from this legislation. That $500 cheque will go to the person and they will be given back an amount of money which is exactly equal to what they received before they qualified for the cheque. The federal Government, through one branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare, is paying $500 on the deficit of operating the home for that particular senior citizen, whereas previously the total deficit was shared on a 50/50 basis. In other words, by issuing that cheque the federal Government is reducing the provincial Government's input on the debt of that institution.

I have brought this matter up today because I have noticed that this Government wants to have a very cosy relationship with the provincial Governments. The Government will not object to provincial regulations in which the net benefit to senior citizens has varied by as much as 300 per cent between the provinces since December 31. It is alarming. We cannot call it a social security safety net. Some provinces have 90-day rules respecting welfare. People can starve under that rule. People say that we cannot starve in Canada, but the fact is that we can if there is a 90-day rule respecting welfare. In other words, if a person made more money than they would have received from welfare and they lost their job, and the amount of income from that job amounted to more than they would have received from welfare for the previous 90 days, that person would not qualify for welfare for 90 days.

Something should be done. There should be a national standard. The Minister should amend the Bill to allow a person living in an institution to keep 50 per cent of what they would receive under this legislation. The Minister should also change the rules as they apply to other branches of his Department, such as the Canada Pension. For example, let's say that someone applied for disability under Canada Pension and over a period of two or three years he argued the point with Canada Pension. Then all of a sudden he is notified by Canada Pension that he will receive $8,000 because his claim became effective two years ago. That person would then be horrified to discover that, because of a recent agreement with provincial Governments, 100 per cent of any kind of assistance he receives from the provincial department of social services for drugs and so on will be deducted from the disability payments under the Canada Pension Plan. In other words, the person ends up getting nothing for the period for which he qualified. The cheque is automatically sent to the provincial Government.

● (1220)

There is the straight injustice of the matter, Mr. Speaker, but what is more, the federal Government in effect is paying $3 for every $1 that the province puts out. In the first instance it is 50-50 cost-shared under the Canada Assistance Plan, and then there is a lump sum payment equal to the total amount of social assistance paid out. In other words, the provincial treasury actually makes money on the deal.

I am sure there are other points, Mr. Speaker, which other Hon. Members will want to make in the continuing debate on this Bill. There are many things which should be said. I call on the Government and the Minister of National Health and Welfare to give us the assurance that, when he says that 85,000 Canadians are going to benefit from this legislation, 85,000 Canadians will benefit, including those in senior citizen homes, nursing homes, homes for special care, or those in any subsidized housing which the Government cost-shares under the Canada Assistance Plan. That is not the case today. The Minister should be made aware of that fact and should change the legislation accordingly to guarantee the individual at least 50 per cent of the money which we are saying he will receive.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, at first glance, Bill C-26 should give many Canadian citizens a reason to rejoice, and rightly so. When the Government announces that a number of Canadians, widows or widowers, between the ages of 60 and 64, will be eligible for the Guaranteed Income Supplement or its equivalent, this is of course a positive point, and we on this side of the House have said as much in the course of this debate.

We have also pointed out that this improvement to previous legislation is in fact the outcome of action taken several years ago by successive Liberal Administrations which have shown an ongoing concern for senior citizens, by introducing the Old Age Security Pension, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, the Spouse's Allowance and indexing of pensions and regular increments. Bill C-26 is of course one more step in this direction, and we welcome it.

However, we do not welcome the discriminatory aspect Bill C-26 contains. It is a little like deciding, for no particular reason, to give one child an allowance of $5 a week and the other nothing, even if they happen to be twins. What is happening here? A woman of 63, for instance, who is in financial need and who is a widow will receive an allowance, and another woman who is single will not. That is the kind of discrimination we want to bring to the Government's attention and which we urgently want to see corrected.

A while ago, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) in his speech explained that it was mainly for a financial reason and he quoted a figure of $1.5 or $1.4 billion. Mr. Speaker, it would not take a billion and a half to correct the injustice contained in Bill C-26. We are talking about 80,000 people and the estimated cost is around $270 million, without mentioning the fact that, by extending the benefits of Bill C-26 to single, divorced or separated people, there would be a decrease in the amount spent on cost-shared programs, as mentioned by my colleague just a moment ago, because, whether those eligible are widowed, single or divorced, if they are eligible, it is because they need assistance.

These people already receive social assistance, and since the costs of social welfare programs are shared equally by the Federal Government and the provinces, it is obvious that the net amount of $270 million which has been mentioned would be reduced by several million dollars to take into account the savings realized under the Canada Assistance Plan.

There is also the fact that if this program were extended and its discriminatory aspects eliminated, since this is a universal program, which means that all those eligible receive benefits, we would also be removing some of the concerns of a great many senior citizens and giving them social tranquility and peace of mind about their economic security all of which would probably reflect on the state of their physical health which would also be an additional advantage.

What is even more important, Mr. Speaker, is the savings that will be made because of the subsidies. My colleague explained this earlier when he outlined very clearly how senior citizens who are affected by these programs or bills similar to the one under consideration and who are treated in senior citizens homes, and residences and asked whether they would be left with the same amount of money as they were under the regulations applied since December 1984. My colleague, who has a lot of experience in this regard, mentioned an amount of $34 in certain provinces and $77 in others, which means additional savings.

I can assure the Hon. Member for Charlevoix that the net amount necessary to eliminate the discrimination contained in Bill C-26 is not $1.5 billion, and not even $270 million, but perhaps $100 million. This is the amount which would put some equity in our system and eliminate a type of discrimination which is totally unacceptable. Later on, I would like to say a few words about the way this bill will be administered, which will be extremely difficult if it remains in its present form. What I want to emphasize however, is that we could at the same time remove this discriminatory aspect and treat all citizens equally. Nowadays, because of our changing society and societal attitudes, there is much more understanding for people who, for one reason or another, have become divorced or separated. Today, this is much more acceptable and even permissible socially. Why should these people be treated differently?

Mr. Speaker, if we are objecting to that discrimination and pointing out that the funds involved are not excessive, we also want to emphasize the administrative nightmare that will result if Bill C-26 is passed without amendments, because all kinds of cases will occur. I will ask the minister how he defines a widow or a widower. The answer will be: It is quite simple, it is the person whose spouse is dead . . . However, what happens to the person whose spouse is dead when he or she remarries or is separated? How will that situation fit with the definition? Such cases exist, and they are not uncommon, as any member of this House will know. How will you deal with such individuals? Will they be considered a widower or a widow or as separated? This is fertile ground for discrimination.

Let us consider also the administrative aspect of the problem; the monks and nuns to whom my colleague from Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) referred earlier have taken a vow of celibacy. Does it mean that they are entirely ineligible to government assistance? I think that it could be highly discriminatory and some answers will have to be provided with respect to the administrative aspect.

Mr. Speaker, even if Bill C-26 is an interesting improvement, and I readily admit it, I do not understand why such discriminatory provisions are included in the bill, thus creating many problems. All the members, for example, have visited homes for the aged where the main activity is a game of bridge. There will be four persons around the same bridge table having the same financial means, one of whom will receive the pension and another not.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding, since you have just indicated that the time allotted to me is almost expired I would like to come back to the financial issue and reiterate that the additional cost to the government to remove the discrimination in Bill C-26 is not as substantial as suggested by the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) if we take into account the savings made in social welfare and administrative costs for the care of individuals residing in senior citizens homes, then the net disbursement by the government is not $270 million but much lower. Moreover, if we also take into consideration other programs announced by the government such as the new uniforms for the Armed Forces or some of the answers given to questions on the Order Paper dealing with expenditures made by this government, I am convinced that we could give the priority to our senior citizens and remove that discrimination from Bill C-26.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak to Bill C-26. First of all, I rejoice with those who will qualify for the allowances, some 85,000 Canadians. It has also been pointed out that these allowances will go mostly to needy people and others experiencing difficult times. It is indeed appropriate that we rejoice, Mr. Speaker, But why have single and divorced people been left out? How is it that single people aged 60 to 65 as well as divorced people in the same age bracket are not eligible for those allowances? Are they not full-fledged citizens like others, Mr. Speaker? Why create a second class of citizens who will be treated less generously than others?

Here is what the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) said about Bill C-26:

[English]

This is an important step towards greater social justice.

[Translation]

And the Minister went on to say:

[English]

Even in a period of economic restraint we have an obligation to those who need help most.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the Minister's statement—we must help the needy even in times of economic restraint.

However, I have one question. Why does the Minister talk about social justice and help for the needy, while seemingly prepared to create an injustice? To my mind, the injustice lies in the exclusion of single persons aged 60 to 65 and of divorced people.

We have been told that we are going through difficult times and that the Government must keep a close watch on expenditures. Of course, we have to keep a close watch on expenditures, we must always do that. But at times like these, the first thing to do is to set priorities. Although the economic prospects are discouraging, money has been found to dress up our Armed Forces in brand new uniforms. This is probably a commendable endeavour, but if we think of those uniforms in terms of the issue we are now debating—excluding single and divorced people from the provisions of this Bill—I would suggest that we have to establish priorities in accordance with needs.

With respect to the military, can we say that the need was real, that the people in our Armed Forces just could not do without new uniforms? Can we say that their need was as real and urgent as those of Canadians aged 60 to 65? What we have to do, Mr. Speaker, is to decide where our priorities lie, who will benefit from our services.

Mr. Speaker, my riding of Westmorland-Kent has a very high rate of unemployment and the entire Province of New Brunswick does not fare any better: ours is the third highest rate of unemployment in Canada. Why am I mentioning the unemployment rate? Simply because I was reminded, when the relevant data were published over the week-end, that once again unemployment had gone up in Canada. If I insist on this, it is not only because the general public in my area—the people back home, as I should say—are affected, but because a particular group, namely those who are 60 years old and over, are most severely affected. These people have much more difficulty finding jobs because whenever they apply, employers unfortunately have a tendency to give the preference to less mature people. And because the unemeployment rate is very high back home, there are a great many young people looking for jobs, which makes the situation even more difficult for people who are 60 years old and over.

● (1240)

Mr. Speaker, we must help all these people who are 60 years old and over. We must see to it that they are not discriminated against. Mr. Speaker, I should like you and all Hon. Members to answer this question: Who can state positively that single and divorced people have worked less hard for Canada and, therefore, have contributed less to the economy of this country?

That is a question we must ask ourselves, Mr. Speaker. Are there any good and valid reasons to exclude these people? We must see to it not only that the relevant benefits apply to all people 60 years of age and over, but that we speed up the adoption of this bill and make it effective before September 1985.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take up the statement made by the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to the effect that even in this time of economic restraint, we have an obligation to provide help to those who need it most.

Mr. Ricardo Lopez (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to say a few words today about Bill C-26. I am really surprised to see our Liberal friends launching such an irresponsible attack against our Bill.

Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that I too would like these provisions to apply to all needy people, but it is better to help categories of people such as those most in need than not helping anybody. We have been in office for four months now and we began by gradually helping the most underprivileged Canadians. It is not as if we were helping everybody, of course, but the Liberals did even worse since they did not help anybody. So why are they now making such a fuss over the fact that we want to help a group of people who are among the most needy in our society, those between the ages of 60 and 64? If we had adequate resources, I would be the first one to stand up and say that we ought to help all others as well, even those over age 64. I wish we could help people of 50 or more if it were possible. We are doing what we can, and I think it is better than nothing at all. In twenty years, the Liberals did not even cover half the distance we have gone in four months. It seems to me they will have to show more flexibility and agree with us on that point.

Earlier today, one of my colleagues brought up the case of widowers who have remarried and then separated again. Such people do not really belong to the group of people covered in this Bill. In many such cases, they may have additional income or get matrimony allowances. In other words, their situation is different, as are their needs. I readily endorse Bill C-26 because I am convinced that it is a worthwhile measure which will help a group of our fellow Canadians who are really in need. Better to help them than not helping anybody at all. I support this Bill without any reservation and I would suggest that our friends in the Opposition are shirking their responsibilities when they speak out against it.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss the impact of Bill C-26 and the spouse's allowance provisions of this important Bill. As far as this Bill goes, it will certainly provide an additional benefit to widows and widowers. It will extend the provisions made in 1975 and expanded in 1979. Benefits paid to persons between the ages of 60 and 65 will be improved. That recommendation was made by the special committee on pensions. The proposals are to be applauded as far as they go.

A great many people in the age group 60 to 65 are unemployed. They often have ill health, do not qualify for provincial disability pensions, and require additional funding. Approximately 94,000 Canadians now receive the spouse's allowance. Those people receive it because their spouses receive the old age pension and guaranteed income supplement and they meet the requirements of the income test. Bill C-26 will extend that benefit to widows and widowers in the age group 60 to 65. It is very beneficial in that regard.

To receive a benefit a person will not have to lose a spouse who is receiving the old age pension or guaranteed income supplement. They will only have to be in the appropriate age category and qualify with regard to income levels. This provision will extend the number of recipients across the country from 94,000 to 179,000. From that point of view it is a very good move.

• (1250)

The concern being expressed in old age residences and other facilities throughout the country is why there should not be total equity in this program between widows and widowers and others in the same age group with the same financial level. For instance, why can it not be provided to divorced people as well, who often face serious financial difficulties when they move from a relatively secure situation when married to a poorer financial situation when divorced?

Of course, there are those who have never married. There are men in this age group who have lost their jobs after productive years of work and women who do not have a job or are unable to work because of ill health. I believe that the demographics and studies of that age group indicate that the lowest income group are women from 60 to 65 who do not have other sources of income.

It is difficult to explain why the Government would introduce legislation that favours widows and widowers over people who have never married and those who are divorced. I have had inquiries from my constituents about why these provisions are not made available to all people in this age category with income levels of $10,728 or less. I hope the Government will introduce an amendment to assist this group because it is certainly rank discrimination on the basis of marital status.

I suggest that if the Government referred this Bill to the Supreme Court it would find that it is discrimination that would not be allowed under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If the Bill is passed in its present form I am sure it will be challenged in the Supreme Court on the basis of discrimination because of marital status.

I hope before the Bill passes second reading stage the Minister will extend these benefits to people who have never been married and people who are divorced. It would be quite improper for the Government to provide benefits purely on the basis of marital status. I suggest that is unacceptable to all Canadians.

It is quite possible that this legislation was debated in Cabinet before it was introduced in the House. I can only surmise that perhaps it was drafted on the basis of a recommendation by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who was trying to save money. The fact is that it would cost somewhat more to provide the benefits to people who have never been married and to divorced people. In fact, it would cost $135 million per year to extend the benefit to separated and divorced people and it would cost $180 million per year for people who have never been married.

However, when one considers the fact that the program as it is proposed now will cost $1.345 billion, surely it is not an unreasonable financial expenditure in order to provide equity to these many other Canadians. They have worked hard in this country and have contributed to OAS. They also paid their taxes according to the earlier provisions in the Income Tax Act which provided for a separate contribution to the old age security fund. Those Canadians paid their taxes under that regime during the 1940s, '50s and part of the '60s in anticipation of receiving the full benefit when they retired. Now we see a proposal being put before the House which discriminates against this group of Canadians between 60 and 64 who are single, separated or divorced.

I hope the Government will realize the unfairness of this Bill and introduce an amendment before we finish second reading. In that way, these 80,000 or 90,000 Canadians who have contributed so much throughout their working years will not be discriminated against and hopefully the Bill will be more fair and equitable to everyone concerned.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the House to debate Bill C-26 at second reading. It being so close to one o'clock, and for the sake of continuity in my address, could I call it one o'clock and continue my comments this afternoon?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I call it one o'clock. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 12.57 p.m. the House took recess.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—CALL FOR PROGRAM CHANGE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, last week, two months later than usual, the Minister for Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) produced her summer employment program. What did these two months of delay and procrastination give us? To begin with, as a result of these delays it gave us a program that will be more difficult to implement for students this summer. Second, it gave us a program in which there is less in real dollars this year than there was in last year's program. Third, it gave us a program in which many of the elements are the same as last year but where there are different names. For instance we have "Challenge '85" instead of "Summer Canada". Fourth, and finally, it gave us a program where there is a higher priority for employment with big business than for employment with non-profit community organizations.

It did not give us, as the Minister claims, a program that is more career related. That was a principle object of last year's program as well.

Therefore, after a delay of two months, the principal result is a summer employment program with a higher priority to big business than to community service. Now, however, there is some doubt whether big business can even deliver on those jobs that were promised. In Saturday's Citizen several spokespersons for big business stated they cannot guarantee the creation of 10,000 summer jobs as claimed by the Minister.

While there is still time, I ask the Minister to change this program to allocate specifically a good percentage of the money to community services and thereby assure students and regions of a greater number of summer jobs.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REGIONAL WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post Corporation is eating into the profits of small newspapers by charging delivery rates for advertising inserts with which small businesses cannot compete.

Moreover, publishers will not accept to pay for the Canada Post Corporation's deficits because they cannot expect to be subsidized whenever they run a deficit, as does the Crown Corporation.

The implication of such unfair competition is in the longer term the total disappearance of regional weekly newspapers and the information they disseminate, and in the shorter term lower profits resulting in a further reduction of already very small editorial staffs.

As a former newspaper publisher I am very much aware of everything that worries editors.

Mr. Speaker, it has come to my knowledge that the management of Canada Post Corporation intended to meet soon with spokesmen from the Government.

This is why I am asking those Government spokesmen to find, within the shortest possible time frame, a solution that is favourable to regional weekly newspapers, because their survival is at stake.

In view of the number of other complaints we have concerning the service provided by the Corporation, I urge you to impress upon the management the mandate of that Corporation, which is first and foremost to distribute the mails to all Canadians as fast as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—IMPACT ON INDIAN YOUTHS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Challenge '85, the Government's summer job program, completely fails to meet the needs of Indian young people. Population statistics show a much higher percentage of Indian young people entering the labour market than in the case of the general population. But these young people have very few economic opportunities because of growing pressure on their land and resource base. The tragic consequence of this can been seen in statistics on suicide, alcoholism, and imprisonment.

What does Challenge '85 offer? Only the native internship program which is designed for native students to "gain an understanding of how the federal bureaucracy works", as though Indians can solve their economic problems by becoming bureaucrats. Where are the funds that will go directly to Indian bands or native organizations to help them run projects that are important to them?

Last week the Minister said if the moneys were not taken up by the private sector, it would be there for other groups. In other words, Indian young people will get the crumbs that fall from the table of the private sector.

Where are the provisions for employment equity in the private sector? What provisions are there to ensure that funding is spread fairly throughout the province instead of being used up in areas where the economy is strongest and unemployment already lower?

Indian young people deserve better than this.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE ECONOMY

PUBLIC'S RESPONSE TO GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, several economic and financial indicators clearly suggest that Canadians are beginning to respond positively to the measures that this Government has taken to revitalize the Canadian economy.

The new direction for our journey of economic renewal is proving to be as rewarding as it is challenging. The process of recovery is producing results that boost confidence and demonstrate to the people that this Government is capable and prepared to provide real leadership.

These improvements represent only the first few steps toward our ultimate objective, but they nonetheless point to an encouraging and hopeful trend. Since September, close to 100,000 jobs have been created; inflation has dropped to a 13 year low of 4.4 per cent in 1984; economic growth in the third quarter of the last year clocked in at an impressive 7.6 per cent, and Canada's trade surplus is at a record high level.

Our unprecedented commitment to consultation with the people of Canada on the important issues that affect them has inspired their willingness to take up the challenge and join us in our journey toward economic renewal.

Our nation is poised for greatness as we prepare to unleash the spirit of enterprise, risk-taking, and initiative that can contribute so much to economic growth, development, and confidence which this nation so badly needs.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—APPLICATION TO NEWFOUNDLAND MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) had shown that same confidence in her summer student program that she announced recently. It is interesting to note that, of the $205 million, some $20 million is for loans to students so they can hire themselves during the summer and pay the money back to the federal Government. Even more outrageous is the fact that this program is heavily geared toward metropolitan areas. In Newfoundland, the businesses and government Departments are located in the city of St. John's. That program discriminates against the rural areas of Newfoundland.

On top of that, Mr. Speaker, the Minister announces that she is going to make the municipalities pay 25 per cent of the wages, 25 per cent of the benefits, and 100 per cent of the material costs. That works out to about 50 per cent of the total cost of the programs that has to be paid by the municipalities. In Newfoundland, no municipality can afford that.

The Minister stated that she had checked with the Gander Town Council and they said yes. I am sorry, the Gander Town Council did not say yes to that program because they just don't have the money to put into it.

The Minister should change the program now. Why wait for spring? Do it now, because she will have to change the program, and why go through the waste of money involved in printing the forms twice?

FINANCE

YIELD ON GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, once again I am making an earnest appeal on behalf of those Canadians who, in the past, purchased federal government annuities that are paying a very low return.

There has not been an increase in the yield on these annuities since 1976, despite assurances by the Government that increases would be reviewed from time to time to reflect on-going increases in the cost of living.

The people holding these annuities, most of them now senior citizens, have received nothing but empty promises over the years that the whole matter of government annuities would be reviewed so that this unfortunate problem could be made right by redeeming the annuities at full value, thus eliminating this longstanding hardship once and for all.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has implied that the annuities were originally a contract between the Government and the purchaser, and that this consideration has to be taken into account.

The purchasers are Canadian citizens who purchased these annuities in good faith, faith in the Government, faith that they would be treated fairly by those in charge and not taken advantage of because of changing circumstances.

I believe the time for rhetoric is over. Therefore, I call upon the Minister of Finance to right this injustice at long last when the Budget is presented this spring.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JUDGE'S COMMENTS IN RAPE CASE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my concern over some statements attributed to Mr. Justice John Bowlby which have been widely reported in the press in Canada over the course of the last few days. Mr. Justice Bowlby, sitting on the bench hearing a case in which an accused was found guilty of brutal rape, made comments which could have led any person reading them to come to the conclusion that perhaps the victim was at least in part to blame.

I want to suggest that rape is in itself a crime that cannot be shared by the victim and the perpetrator, and it must be made clear to those who sit on the bench that comments such as this are not the kinds of comments that are acceptable to those of us who sit in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

STIMULATION PROVIDED BY PROFIT MOTIVE

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, both the Liberals and the NDP have raised questions concerning the profits of oil companies. They both think profit is a dirty word. Without profits, taxes are not paid, jobs are not created, and investments are not made. What entrepreneur will open a store, plant a field, drill a well, build a machine, fish the sea, or commence a mine, without the anticipation of reward? Profits have made our society the richest and most diverse, and have given the entrepreneurial spirit the room and the reason to soar.

The difference between our system and the communistic society is the profit motive. It was the anticipation of profit that spawned the development of computers, xeroxing technology, micro chips, and universal jet travel. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what has the communist society invented? Profits are what drives this industry, this country, this society.

Hurray for the profits!

BENEFITS—DELAYS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call your attention and that of the House to a situation which exists now in Canada and especially in the province of Quebec. Unacceptable delays are presently experienced regarding the payment of unemployment insurance benefits. It is a fact that the Unemployment Insurance Commission has been faced with major staff relations problems for the past few months at its payment centre, and I could mention a number of cases where recipients have not received their benefits for the past three months. Departmental officials' reaction is that this is a labour dispute which unfortunately cannot be settled overnight.

I call on the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to intervene personnally to ensure that unemployment benefit recipients, who cannot afford to wait for months in a row to get their benefits, get them as quickly as possible. We are aware of the problems at the data processing centre, but individuals have to pay the rent and cannot afford to wait for their cheques.

We know that for the past few months, the Unemployment Insurance Commission has built up a backlog of hundreds of files concerning people who can rightfully claim unemployment insurance benefits, having paid their contributions, and who are now faced with serious financial problems because the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has failed to act.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Hon. Members are coming across similar cases in their respective ridings, and I hope that within the next few weeks, or days rather, the Minister of Employment and Immigration will personally intervene to put an end to this situation, and instead of hiring between 700 and 800 police officers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEGACY OF 1945 YALTA AGREEMENT

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, today marks the closing date of the Crimean conference ending in the Yalta agreement 40 years ago. The Yalta agreement divided Europe into two blocs of political influence and set the stage for the cold war. For 40 years millions of people have been deprived of the right to self-determination and self-government, and are subject to limited human rights and individual movement. It was at Yalta, as well, that a group of Soviet trained communists were declared the nucleus of the future Polish provisional Government, this without any Polish representation.

One cannot but wonder at the hyprocrisy of the Yalta agreement. What good was supposed to result from invoking "the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live" if no guarantees were provided to ensure that the principle would in fact be adhered to?

From the point of view of international law, the Yalta agreement does not fulfil the formal criteria of an international treaty. The legality of the agreement is further eroded because it was transacted without the agreement of the peoples affected.

Forty years after the signing of an agreement which resulted in the vast expansion of the Soviet empire and the creation of a zone of instability in the middle of Europe, it would be appropriate for the Parliament of Canada to issue a statement denouncing the Soviet domination over central and eastern Europe, and reaffirming the right of the captive nations to recover their freedom.

DANGEROUS PRODUCTS

SOLVENT SNIFFING DEATHS IN MANITOBA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Winnipeg Anti-Sniff Coalition, an association of some 60 groups and individuals working for prevention of solvent abuse in the Winnipeg area, has seen its efforts get bogged down over the years in a jurisdictional quagmire that appears to have no end.

Years of work to get a municipal by-law regulating the sale of sniff to minors, accomplished in 1979, were frustrated in 1982 when the Manitoba Court of Appeal held that the matter was beyond the reach of provincial authority, and was a matter for the criminal law. Subsequent discussions between the Attorney General of Manitoba and the federal Minister of Justice in late 1982 identified the Hazardous Products Act as the vehicle for federal regulatory control, and this was also the approach recommended in a Department of Justice document on the same entitled Legal Approach to Solvent Abuse.

Action is now long overdue. Sniffing is again on the rise in Winnipeg. In 1983-84 there were six sniff-related deaths in Manitoba. Many other children suffer both short and long-term effects from inhaling harmful chemicals. I call on the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to bring in the appropriate legislation, and help put an end to this continuing tragedy, and the tyranny of commercial freedom and profit over public well-being.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—SOLICITOR GENERAL'S MEETING WITH PREMIER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to—

An Hon. Member: Welcome Chrétien back.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This is not going to be a funny matter.

I would like to put a few questions to the Solicitor General arising from his secret meeting with Premier Hatfield at the Chateau Laurier hotel on the night of October 7. Our purpose in pursuing this matter over the past two weeks has been to ensure that all Canadians are treated equally before the law, and to ensure that the senior law officers of the Crown adhere to that principle.

At the time of the meeting the Solicitor General knew that an investigation was under way by the federal police. He also knew that a federal charge against Premier Hatfield was pending. He also knew it was within his jurisdiction to order the police to lay a charge or not lay a charge. Did the Solicitor General not know and recognize that the sole purpose for such a meeting with a potential accused was to discuss the pending charge? Did the Solicitor General not know that the full purpose for the meeting was to attempt, surely, to influence the Solicitor General, or the RCMP, not to lay that charge, particularly when the counsel for the Solicitor General's Department was not present at the meeting, nor for the Department of Justice nor, indeed, a representative from the RCMP?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will endeavour to answer the Right Hon. Member's questions. First, I must correct him. It was not a secret meeting.

As a former Minister of Justice he should know that it is not within the purview or the ability of a Solicitor General to instruct whether charges be laid or not. In fact that is completely devoid from my responsibilities as Solicitor General.

The purpose of the meeting, as I said already, was simply because the Premier of New Brunswick indicated that he had a matter of urgence to discuss with me. The hon. gentleman indicated to me, and I took his representation very seriously, on November 30 last, that one should not presume whether anyone is innocent or guilty unless and until all charges have been laid. That would apply equally to someone who was under investigation.

PRINCIPLE OF EQUALITY BEFORE THE LAW

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing here with the discretion left solely to the police under the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General as to whether to lay a charge or not lay a charge. The Solicitor General said that the reason he saw the potential accused was because he was a Premier. In the Solicitor General's opinion, does that not violate the principle that everyone should be treated equally before the law? More important, does that not violate, and I use the words of the Prime Minister, the sacred principled that justice should not only be done but be seen to be done?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to come back, with all deference and respect to my right hon. friend, for whom I have great respect, and state that I believe there is a fundamental misunderstanding as to the role of the Solicitor General. I repeat, in no way do I have prosecutory discretion or jurisdiction to instruct the RCMP to lay charges, whom to charge, or indeed as to whether charges would be laid. My responsibility is the practice, and procedures, and policies. I say to him no. I do not see anything different about seeing a Premier, except that under our system a Premier is worthy of a great deal of respect. Any Canadian who has something of urgency to talk about with a Cabinet Minister, I think deserves a fair hearing.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we can quarrel about the legal authority of the Solicitor General. However, I waited until Parliament assembled today to hear the responses of the Solicitor General. In light of those responses, I must suggest strongly to the Minister that he sit down with the Prime Minister to discuss his continuing ability to hold the office he now holds. Under the circumstances of the Minister's responses, I believe that he has only one honourable choice to make.

Before that happens, I would ask him whether or not he would be willing to make a full statement to the House regarding his involvement with the affair in New Brunswick, the position and knowledge of the Minister of Justice regarding that particular file, and whatever knowledge the Prime Minister may have had.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in response to my right hon. friend, I can say, as I said earlier, that I have great respect for his office and his opinions. I can also say to him categorically that there was absolutely nothing improper about the meeting. No assurances were asked for and none were given. I maintain that under the circumstances, as I indicated to the Right Hon. Member at the beginning of Question Period, it was a proper thing for me to do.

As far as my discussions with the Prime Minister are concerned, the Prime Minister and I have many discussions. I say to the hon. gentleman, with all seriousness, that I do not know what, if anything, other Ministers may know about this particular matter. I do not know what the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister may know. I know that I kept my own counsel on this matter.

I repeat to the Right Hon. Member that I made no effort to keep this meeting in any way secret or clandestine. It was interesting to me that the Official Opposition, with all its acuity and assiduity, had to wait until a journalist asked the obvious question: "Did you see Mr. Hatfield," to which I immediately replied: "Yes, I did".

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, it would appear as if the Solicitor General does not understand that it is a basic and fundamental principle of our criminal justice system that all persons be treated equally before the law. I would like to remind the Solicitor General that our Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees that every individual is equal before and under the law, and is entitled to equal protection and equal benefit of the law. It also appears as if the Minister is not aware that justice must not only be done but must appear to be done.

Would the Solicitor General not agree that by meeting with Premier Hatfield privately at a neutral, surreptitious location, he has created the appearance that justice is not being done and that Mr. Hatfield was given preferential treatment by his friends in Ottawa? Would he not agree that he has exercised poor and unacceptable judgment by involving himself personally in a criminal investigation? Will the Solicitor General not do the honourable thing and resign as Solicitor General immediately to maintain the integrity of our criminal justice system?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to my hon. friend's several questions and the answer to each one of them is no.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF DISCUSSIONS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Solicitor General is aware that in this country it is a criminal offence to obstruct justice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: It is no laughing matter, Mr. Speaker. It is a very serious matter.

Section 127 of the Criminal Code provides that anyone who attempts in any manner to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice is guilty of a criminal offence.

Prior to agreeing to meet secretly with Premier Hatfield at the Chateau Laurier, was the Solicitor General not concerned that the meeting might be, or might be perceived to be an attempt to obstruct justice? During the meeting did he warn the Premier that anything the Premier said could be used in evidence against him in a court of law?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that particular Section of the Criminal Code. I trust that my hon. friend is not accusing me of being in violation of it. If he is, I hope he will be honest enough to say so. Finally, my answer to the Hon. Member is that I am not going to conduct a post-mortem on a confidential meeting, after the Premier of New Brunswick has been tried. I am not going to see him tried in the House of Commons.

SOLICITOR GENERAL'S CONDUCT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I believe the Deputy Prime Minister and I share one thing in terms of the way in which politics ought to be conducted, and that is a sense of the conduct we expect from Ministers of the Crown in the exercise of their responsibilities. Given all of the things the Deputy Prime Minister has said over many, many years, I would ask him if he does not feel that the meeting held between the Solicitor General and Premier Hatfield, given that the Solicitor General knew prior to the meeting that the Premier was under investigation, draws into question to the Solicitor General's appropriateness in terms of the way in which he conducted himself at that time?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister himself has answered that question on several occasions in the past, and very capably so. As far back as October 26, he said in recorded media interviews the following:

> I think that the matter was handled with a very meticulous regard for all of the circumstances. The process worked well and it was done in the proper way.

At that point the Solicitor General was referring to the investigation. He went on:

> I have no intention at this point of getting involved in the mechanics of what the RCMP are doing. I have confidence that they will carry out their duties in an exemplary way. I don't intend to in any way interfere with the procedures here.

Those statements stood then and, if I understand what the Solicitor General is saying today, they stand now. If I know the Solicitor General, I am sure he will follow those most immaculate processes in the future.

RESPONSE TO INVITATION TO MEETING
