GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, December 17, 1984, consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and on the amendment of Mr. Gray (Windsor West) (p. 1302).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I hope you had a good Christmas.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I hope all Members had a good Christmas and I welcome them back to the House. I hope that our continued session will be very productive and that the Government of Canada will change its attitude toward the people of Canada and give them a break instead of introducing further cuts to two very important programs instituted by the former Liberal Government, a Government which had a feel for people. We can see now how this particular Government is preoccupied with the deficit and not really interested in the people of Canada.

I want to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, on the amendment of the Opposition House Leader. The motion was made primarily for two reasons: one, that the Bill introduced to the House is rather hazy and does not meet the objectives stated by the Minister in its introduction; second, that the actions of this Government certainly do not bear out the intentions of the Bill as outlined by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

We have seen the actions taken by this Government since the House adjourned for the Christmas break. We saw the federal Government meeting with the provincial Governments in a spirit of consultation and deciding to sock-it to small businessmen again by increasing the Canada Pension Plan rates for all businesses in Canada, all employers and all employees.

To consult with the provincial Governments on this action might seem strange to the general population of this country. Why would the Government of Canada consult with the provincial Governments on this measure? Surely it is not only because of the Government's stated intention to consult. To consult with the provincial Premiers about an increase in the CPP rates is like consulting with landlords on a rent increase. It is exactly the same. It was not explained by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or the provincial Ministers of Finance that the CPP fund has been used since its inception to provide money to provincial Governments for their spending programs. In other words, since 1966 or 1967 there has been a drain on the fund surplus by provincial Governments based on what their businesses and workers contribute to the fund. However, Mr. Speaker, the provinces have yet to pay any money back to the fund. As I recall, the money was borrowed on the basis of 20-year debentures. In other words, every month the provincial governments borrow money from the CPP fund on a 20-year debenture and there have been no repayments to that fund since the provincial Governments starting borrowing. However, repayments are supposed to start in 1986.

What has not been explained, Mr. Speaker, by the Minister of Finance or his provincial counterparts, and certainly what Canadians want to know, is what will happen to those repayments in the hundreds of millions of dollars which will start in 1986. How will that jibe with the amount of money that is predicted to be required by the CPP fund in the year 2000? So to consult with the provincial Governments on this issue but not explain it to the Canadian people is, to say the least, completely misleading. It certainly does not jibe with the stated intentions of the Government. Or is it the intention of this Government to increase the amount of money loaned to the provincial Governments? In other words, are we getting these increases in order to give back to the provincial Governments the money they will have to start paying to the fund in 1986?

As I said, Mr. Speaker, it is because there have been so many actions by this Government which do not agree with the stated intentions of this Bill that the Opposition House Leader has had to introduce his amendment.

In introducing the Bill the Minister stated that the primary concern of the Government was job creation. In fact, he was so preoccupied with that thought that he jumped for glee when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) were very pleased to state at the beginning of this month that they had created 96,000 jobs in the private sector since they came to power. I heard on the radio and saw on television the Prime Minister and the Minister of Employment and Immigration taking credit for the 96,000 jobs which were created since the Tories came to power on September 4. It is too bad they did not check the record. If they had they would have seen that in the comparable period under the Trudeau administration more jobs were created in the last three months. If the Government wants to take credit for private sector jobs created in the country, it works out to something like 24,000 jobs a month. During the last three months of the Trudeau administration it worked out to about 32,000 jobs a month in the private sector. In the two months in which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was in power it works out to even more than that. He beat them all; it works out to 33,000 jobs a month in the private sector.

The point is that it is unfortunate that governments try to take credit where credit is not due because they were not really responsible for anything. The effect, if any, of the signals sent out by the Government was to decrease private sector jobs.

One need only look at what I would call the bible of the new Government which is contained in the expenditure and program review of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). This outlines that in special export payments in the dairy products area they are cutting out $6.2 million. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is so interested in making exceptions for cultural agencies in this Bill that they have cut out $7.5 million. They have cut out $250 million for grants to the petroleum industry. That certainly does not jibe with this Bill. They have cut $60.8 million from energy research and development. They have cut $4 million from the program for export market development which provides federal assistance to business through the sharing of financial risk in entering more export markets. They have cut $5 million from the Canadian Commercial Corporation. They have cut $11.7 million from programs to assist in the development of the fishing industry. The list goes on and on, Mr. Speaker.

We come to the very department of the Minister who introduced this Bill and we see a cut of $200 million in providing financial assistance to support private sector initiatives in the coming year. They are going to increase fares on VIA Rail. They are going to increase the cost of transporting goods and save $93 million. They have cut $2.8 million from the mobility program to move workers around the country to where they can get jobs. That makes it almost impossible for a person to get a grant to move from an area of high unemployment in the country. To make matters worse, in that same department they cut out the job sharing and job training program and the youth exchange program.

These cuts relating to the very Bill introduced by this Minister make us wonder what we are dealing with in the House of Commons. When the Minister of Employment and Immigration is asked what she and the Government have done since they came to power, she always points to the $400 million fund for direct job creation. Practically every Progressive Conservative candidate who ran in the last election went around deriding that program and demanding that it come to an end.

You must realize, Mr. Speaker, that while these jobs are being filled a young person or a female who has never worked before, both of whom are of paramount concern to the stated claim of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, is not allowed to be referred by Canada Manpower to any of the jobs. According to the guidelines sent out by the Minister of Employment and Immigration to the Canada Manpower centres in the country, the direct job creation program of the federal Government states that no young person who has never drawn unemployment insurance before is allowed to go to work on a direct job creation program of the federal Government.

With respect to women, who the Minister claims to be so interested in getting into the workforce, no woman who has never been in the workforce before and drawn unemployment insurance is allowed to be hired. We should think about that. Rather than consider hazy proposals by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, should we not, as the House of Commons, be concentrating on what is actually happening to people throughout the country and realize that those job descriptions will not permit these people to gain employment?

As I have already stated, the problem goes right back to consultations with the provincial Governments three years ago. Their major concern was to get their own expenditures down and they decided that for all job-creation programs under federal and provincial negotiations they would ensure that people on social assistance are hired first. In that case, the federal Government decided that it would make sure that everyone who is drawing unemployment insurance is hired second. This is the situation which led to the guidelines.

You have indicated that I have one minute left, Mr. Speaker, and I have not even addressed the Bill. There are many issues to address. The Government has made so many errors and has introduced so many cuts that affect so many people that I have not even been able to address the Bill since I began speaking at eleven o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, let me extend best wishes for 1985 to you, to other Members of the House and indeed to all Canadians. I hope that the House will be able to achieve something for the people of Canada in this coming year.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill C-15 because of its importance in determining the future of the Canadian economy and Canadian society. Like the cut-backs that were announced in the fall, this is one of the very early but very clear indications of the direction in which the Government is intending to head. I and my Party have a great deal of opposition to that direction. We believe that it will not help the Canadian people.

First, I want to examine the method that the Government is using in trying to promote this Bill. Let us examine some of the rhetoric that the Government has been using. When the Government talked about sending out signals it was using activist language designed to convey the concept of an activist government doing something about our economy when it is actually abdicating its responsibility. It is sending out a signal that the Canadian barn door is open and the Canadian watchman is asleep on the job.

We also hear rhetoric from the Government about returning decision-making to the market-place. The market-place presents a friendly image to most Canadians because it has a small town connotation, such as a meeting place for people. The image of government, as opposed to the market-place, is one of a big, bureaucratic and alienated entity. People feel much more at home with the friendly image of the market-place than they do with the image of big government.

We must ask what is the reality behind the image of the market-place when we talk about it in 1985. The reality is that our market-place in 1985 is dominated by multinational corporations which are characterized by interlocking directorates, world-wide networks of information and access to resources and the mobility of capital. It means financial resources and power that are greater than the financial resources and power of many nations in the world and an ethic that is dominated by the maximization of profits.

We hear much rhetoric that speaks of takeover capitalists in terms of risk-takers. The risk-taker is presented as the existential hero of our time. But there is a fear in our Party that the real risk-takers in Canada—and there are real risk-takers among some small business people—will be crowded out and swamped by foreign firm takeovers.

We are concerned about the weak nature of combines legislation in Canada. Certainly the past Liberal Government did nothing to strengthen it and from many of the noises we have heard from the present Government it does not seem to have that as a very high priority either. By opening the door to foreign capital, we will place more Canadian businesses at greater risk than ever before and we will all be living much more dangerously. So much for the image of the risk-taker.

Dian Cohen and Kristin Shannon, in their book The Next Canadian Economy, worry about the growing tendency for capitalist takeovers and for capital to concentrate on safe investments where there is no risk. There is a growing tendency toward takeovers that do not create jobs. If we can judge from our own experience in British Columbia, and I presume it is the same in other parts of Canada, takeovers very often involve a loss of employment. How will this kind of opening up to that kind of capital encourage Canadian risk-takers? It will not encourage them at all, Mr. Speaker. It will place them at greater risk, at greater danger, and it will lead to a loss of jobs.

We need to ask where will this process end. The Tories say that FIRA is an obstacle to international investment in Canada. Stephen Clarkson in his book Canada and the Reagan Challenge details some of the American objections to FIRA. He points to the objection that the Americans had to performance requirements that would require companies buying into Canada to have a certain level of Canadian content or that would require a certain level of job creation.

Suppose we get rid of FIRA? Suppose we do as Bill C-15 proposes and no longer have those particular obstacles to foreign investment but we still do not attract foreign investment. What then? Suppose foreign investment capital decides that our environmental regulations are a detriment to investing here. Does that mean we will change our regulations with regard to the environment? Is our environment up for sale? Suppose labour standards stand in the way of foreign capital coming here. Does that mean we will be changing our labour standards to make more acceptable to foreign investment? Where does the process end?

One thing this Bill does is recognize the reality of foreign capital in terms of its power and mobility. It recognizes it largely by bowing down and serving it as though it were some god to be worshipped. We all know that FIRA was not an adequate tool for dealing with the reality of foreign investment, but it was one tool that perhaps could have been improved.

An example might be helpful. Let us look to some of the early history of labour unions in Canada. Around the turn of the century and especially in British Columbia there was a lot of opposition in labour unions to immigration. Many working people saw immigrants as a threat to their standard of living. Working people tried to organize to fight for better wages and for safer and better working conditions. Immigrants, however, would often be hired at lower wages and were willing to work in poorer conditions. The unions had two options. They could either give up the struggle and say: "Because of these immigrants under-cutting what we are trying to do, there is no use fighting so let us carry on working for lower wages in poor conditions"—which is essentially what the Tories are doing with FIRA—or take a position which said: "Let's try and keep immigrants out of Canada. Let's try to maintain Canada as an enclave for people who have set decent standards of living and keep other people out".

That was the position they took for awhile and it did not work. Finally they decided to fight for decent wages and decent conditions. They also decided to open up the concept of unions to a wider kind of solidarity which included everybody. On the basis of that they were able to establish decent working conditions and decent wages for all people.

I am suggesting that that is what we have to do with FIRA. We have to maintain the restrictions of FIRA to ensure that Canadians are protected. However, we have to move beyond that to a wider solidarity with other people in the world. We have to attack the question of ensuring that the actions of multinational corporations in the world are responsible ones. This cannot be done by one nation alone; it has to be done by Canada acting in concert with other nations.

I do not like to see the Government simply abdicating its responsibilities or saying that there is nothing more it can do, so it will simply abolish FIRA and open the doors for foreign capital to come in and do what it wants. We should maintain FIRA. We should try to strengthen it. As the labour unions did in the early part of this century, we have to expand the concept of solidarity with other people in the world. We have to work in an international manner to insist that multinational corporations act in a responsible way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech? Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words on this Bill. The Investment Canada Bill raises the many concerns of Canadians about the approach of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) towards the United States from the moment he won the election and was sworn into office. Before he ever met with the press or with the House of Commons, he immediately hied himself off to Washington to say to the Americans: "Come to Canada and buy out whatever you want with no questions asked". This Bill really follows through with that approach.

Let us look at the history of the Prime Minister. We see that his idea of Canada is kind of a branch plant operation from Washington. Clearly that is his approach in foreign affairs and in investment, right from the early days when he used to sing Danny Boy on Colonel McCormick's knee in Baie Comeau, his constituency. His general approach has been to see Canada as a branch plant operation of the United States. When he was with the Iron Ore Company of Canada and was in charge of the Sept Îles and Schefferville operation, and when he got his orders from Cleveland to shut it down, and Brian said "Shut it down". Of course, that is his general approach with this Bill.

Canadians are really very uneasy with this approach. There has clearly been a lot of foreign investment in Canada. We need a lot of foreign investment but we want it on our terms. We do not want the situation to be wide open where American companies come in to buy out and take over the sales forces of small Canadian companies that have been doing a good job and are concerned not only with their economic welfare but with the welfare of Canadians as a whole. We do not want them expanding their markets in our country and then shutting down the manufacturing side, only to be supplied from the United States. That was the idea of FIRA. It was rather successful. I doubt that it discouraged much serious foreign investment in this country.

Let us look at the foreign investment that we had in those years. In the period 1964 to 1973, we averaged approximately $690 million per year in foreign investment. Since the FIRA agency was established in 1974, we averaged $1.4 billion of investment. The average investment in the last four years has been $2 billion per year. In 1983, the capital inflow into Canada was $2.8 billion.

This investment was all on the basis of whether it was advantageous to Canada. Surely it is not too much to ask a foreign investor whether he is coming into Canada on the basis that there will be a benefit to this country. If a company says no, that it wants our market but will do the manufacturing and research in the United States as well as have the management there, that is unreasonable. I do not see that we are turning away anybody who is interested in providing a benefit to Canada. If we look at how FIRA has operated over that period, we see that 92 per cent of the applications have been approved. Since 1982 when the rules and regulations were streamlined, modernized and updated, 97 per cent of the applications have been approved.

Those raw figures do not indicate whether we were able to negotiate local management or a bigger chunk of the international pie. It does not show how much R and D we were able to promote for Canada. The Prime Minister threw away this bargaining tool on his first visit to Washington, before he met with Parliament or even with the Canadian press. He stated that we would adopt what they want us to do with regard to the National Energy Program, FIRA and defence spending. He should have used the power of FIRA to negotiate a better position for Canada. In my opinion, the Prime Minister was not a very good negotiator. The United States does not have a monolithic system where the President has all the power. A lot of power resides with the Congress and the Senate. When you negotiate, you should negotiate from a position of strength, using all the tools at your disposal.

In a front page article in the Thunder Bay Chronicle Journal of January 15, it is reported that Senator Larry Craig, a Republican from Idaho, and Congressman Jim Weaver, a Democrat from Oregon, are sponsoring a bill in Congress to limit imports of Canadian softwood lumber to 25 per cent of United States demand. That is approximately 8 per cent less than currently. The impact of that decision would result in plants closing in northwestern and northeastern Ontario and British Columbia. It is planned to start hearings on this legislation in February.

We need only look back two years to the International Trade Commission hearings which went on for 33 weeks and the Secretary of Commerce hearings which were held at the same time to find that there is a very protectionist position in the United States Congress. If we want to respond to that, we must use every bargaining tool that we have. Clearly FIRA could be used. We should not give away our bargaining position. I will be interested in seeing whether the proposition being sponsored by these two congressional leaders, one of whom is chairman of the United States Interior Subcommittee on Mining and Forestry Management, will result in 8 per cent of the United States market for softwood lumber being closed to Canadian suppliers. It will be interesting to see whether our Government's attitude is that they can do what they want. These points need to be bargained on a mature basis, not by a subservient government in Ottawa responding to a dominant and much more powerful neighbour. Our positions should be mature and we should deal on a much more equal basis than what the Prime Minister would have us do under this Bill. Canadians are very concerned about the present attitude and approach. There are many restrictions in the United States, such as the "Buy America Act" which provides a barrier to Canadian urban transportation equipment going into the United States.

A recent study by the Brookings Institute indicates that non-tariff barriers erected by the United States against Canada and other countries increased from 20 per cent in 1980 to 35 per cent in 1983. It cannot be all one way. We cannot ask them to come and buy anything they want with no questions asked at the same time as these non-tariff barriers are being erected. We have to act in a much more mature and positive manner than what is proposed in this Bill.

The Tories and the Prime Minister like to rail against the National Energy Program and the idea of Canada having a 25 per cent carried interest in our oil resources in the Canada Lands. They talk about the loss of billions of dollars in investment. When we look at the billions of dollars of investment that went to the United States in the early 1980s, we see that much of it went there to increase our ownership of Canadian oil companies, and in the last three or four years Canadian ownership of our energy sector for petroleum and natural gas increased from 28 per cent to 40 per cent. The objective was to reach 50 per cent by 1990. I do not know whether that will be changed. I hope that will not change once the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has negotiated her deal with the provincial Governments. The objective of the National Energy Program was to see that we became oil self-sufficient by the year 1990. In fact, on a net basis we became self-sufficient by 1983. It is pretty significant that we became self-sufficient in a two or three-year period.

A few weeks ago some of my colleagues and I had the opportunity to be briefed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Officials of that Department revealed that their projections show us to be self-sufficient in oil until the end of the century. That is not bad. This happened seven years sooner than we had dared to hope it would happen when the National Energy Program was established. We are self-sufficient in oil with the bringing on stream of the new western basin oil, enhanced recovery, the tar sands and so on. As well, the frontier oil in the Beaufort Sea and the East Coast offshore has been brought on stream.

We are now oil self-sufficient. According to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, our oil and gas explorations and developments are up some 53 per cent over those of 1980, and 1980 was a record year. As well, our natural gas reserves are so extensive that we now have some 33 years' supply, and in fact there is not much of a demand for further exploration and development at this time.

The results to which I have referred are very encouraging. We can see the tremendous strides that have been taken in improving our natural gas reserves. On a net basis we are self-sufficient in oil now through to the end of the century. Canadian ownership has moved up from 28 per cent to 40 per cent. Those achievements are very significant in our move toward greater Canadianization and greater ownership of our natural resources.

Referring to this Bill, Mr. Speaker, the proof of the pudding, as they say, is in the eating. I believe the proof of the Tory approach to foreign investment will be in the results. It is interesting to note that there have been reports indicating that U.S. bankers see no increased capital flow into Canada. I think it really boils down to the opportunity that exists for investment, profit and making a buck. That is a legitimate business approach and one to which we are not opposed provided it is good for the country.

In the City of Sault Ste. Marie, which is in my constituency, the Abitibi-Price plant was planning to shut down or sell out its operation. There was an opportunity for a group from the United States to take over the plant. We negotiated a great deal in order to get financial assistance from the Government of Canada and the Province of Ontario to see that that plant, which employed some 400 or 500 people, would have an opportunity to change its product line and modernize and upgrade. This happened exactly a year ago and took a period of months.

At that time we were very concerned that the plant might shut down. We were dealing with a massive Canadian company, Abitibi, and a small entrepreneur from the United States whose interests, ideas and ingenuity we welcomed. However, the problem was not with FIRA. The FIRA screening never concerned this entrepreneur and I do not think it concerned anyone else involved because his idea was an obviously good one and he had a new product line to sell. He has now taken over the company and indicates that he hopes to expand.

We welcome that kind of investment and innovative approach that changed an old round wood mill to a plant producing a new product line, the super calender line, for which there is a market in the United States. There was practically no problem with the FIRA screening of that company. The American company which was set up to operate the Abitibi plant in Sault Ste. Marie, a plant which is now known as St. Mary's paper, felt that FIRA was not a problem. The problem was getting financial assistance, much of which ended up coming from the two senior levels of government.

I would be surprised if the criteria of most American, West German, Japanese and other investors are not economic opportunities. For instance, in Saturday's Toronto Star on page D-1, I saw an article which indicated that at this time Nissan was not interested in investing in Canada in order to establish a new plant. It is planning to expand into Britain, the United States, China and Southeast Asia but it has no plans to expand into Canada at this time. That can be compared with the four new plants which were established in Canada last spring. This Bill will not suddenly make a big difference in the kind of foreign investment that is coming into our country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech?

While I am standing, I would like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members that under Standing Order 35(2), we have now entered a period in which speeches of only 10 minutes maximum will be allowed with no opportunity for questions or comments.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, this morning I was rather horrified to find out that the Hon. Members from the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party who spoke are in favour of unemployment. It appears from what they are saying that they do not want us to create jobs in this country.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We know why you're speaking now. We can't ask you any questions.

Mr. Dick: I would gladly have spoken earlier but unfortunately the Speaker recognized someone else. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to quarrel with the Speaker, something I would not wish to do. However, I will be glad to discuss this matter with the Hon. Member and perhaps, if there is unanimous consent, questions can be asked after I speak.

I have not heard as much junk as I heard this morning in an awful long time, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), an NDP Member, said that our Party was against immigration. When our Party was last in power for a brief period of time in 1979, which Party allowed 50,000 refugees into this country? The Hon. Member forgot to mention that. Who is trying to get people into this country now—

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I certainly never said and did not mean to imply that the Conservative Party was against immigration. I do not think Conservative Members were listening very carefully. If I did say that, I would want to apologize and withdraw it. However, I would like to check the "blues" to be certain about what I said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe the Hon. Member has made his point.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, he did say that. Perhaps he simply misstated his thoughts. However, we will be glad to look at the "blues". I would like to make sure it is put on the record that we encourage immigration and encourage people to come to this country to work and to fulfil their desire of beginning a new life in this country.

I would also like to speak about the words of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) who said that he believed that FIRA was important and that the NEP was good. During the last election the people of this country voted in with an overwhelming majority the Party which said it wanted to change FIRA and the National Energy Program. Is the Hon. Member saying he disagrees with the Canadian people who voted as they did? Is he saying that he wants to change it back to the way of the Liberals who did all kinds of things without any consultation which loused up this country? Is he saying he would like to go against what 50 per cent of the voters decided back on September 4?

Mr. Foster: Fifty per cent voted against you, too.

Mr. Dick: Does the Hon. Member think that his Party's 28 per cent is more reflective of what the Canadian people want? It sounds to me as though the Liberals, again in their arrogance, do not care that the voters very clearly said that they wanted to change FIRA and the National Energy Program, and that they wanted to get Canada running again.

I would like to refer to a few events which happened in the past, Mr. Speaker. In 1973 the group of people aged 14 years to 24 years had a 9.7 per cent unemployment rate. In 1974 unemployment had risen to 10.6 per cent and it continued to rise each and every year right through the 1970s during the time the Liberal Party was in power partly because of its kind of autocratic rule and the fact that the Canadian people had lost confidence. Those Canadians with money have taken something like $68 billion in the last eight years and invested it outside of this country. For the first time we had this massive outflow of capital. Canadians are developing the downtown core of Dallas, Texas. Canadians are buying up Florida left, right and centre. It was the Reichman brothers, Canadians, who bought seven or eight skyscrapers in New York. Canadians invested outside of Canada because they could not stand the government which the Liberals and their NDP buddies were providing this country. That is why Canadians made massive changes in their voting patterns back in September. They wanted a new start and a new chance.

I would just like to point out that for three months our Party has been talking positively about an opportunity for people to invest in this country, for foreigners to invest in this country, and that in the month of December, for the first time in years, unemployment has gone down. There were 100,000 new jobs started up.

Mr. Riis: What about trade?

Mr. Manly: What about British Columbia?

Mr. Dick: British Columbia? There were 100,000 jobs in Canada.

Mr. Keeper: How many people have given up looking for work?

Mr. Dick: I believe, Mr. Speaker, that that is a small modicum of success and if those Hon. Members opposite would only have the faith that the Canadian people have and go along with us for another year or two, I am very optimistic there will be many thousands of new jobs created. But the Opposition Parties bring out a red herring and ask if Canada is going to change the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. That is a hypothetical question. That is way off in the future. Some dreamer opposite thinks that because we change something dealing with foreign investment, we will do away with child labour laws in this country. That is ridiculous and it is a red herring which the Liberal-NDP coalition have always tried to throw up.

Mr. Boudria: They are your friends, not ours.

Mr. Dick: This Party ran on a platform to put people back to work and when we do so we find the New Democratic Party criticizing us, saying we are going to cut out jobs. Those Hon. Members were the ones who supported the Liberals in minority governments. They were the ones, along with the Liberals, who brought down the Conservative Government in 1979. It is that coalition which has brought about unemployment and driven investment out of this country. That is what our Party wants to change and that is, obviously, what the Canadian people want to change.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You had better begin by changing Reagan.

Mr. Dick: We want to change the name from the Foreign Investment Review Agency to something which is more positive, such as Investment Canada. If those Hon. Members would read the Bill they would note that Part IV deals with reviews and Part III deals with notifications. We are not wiping this out entirely because no one in their right mind is going to let everybody come in. We are still providing a review mechanism for consideration of any massive takeovers or expansions in this country.

The Hon. Member for Algoma said that under the Liberal administration, supported by the little pink rump from out west, 92 per cent of the applications were approved. Then the law was changed in 1982 and 97 per cent were approved. If one is going to have a rubber stamp, then why not put something positive into it? Why not change it a little so that there is the same approval rate but it encourages people to come into this country rather than being always negative, as the New Democratic and Liberal Parties always are when it comes to dealing with unemployment and investment in this country.

Yes, there are problems and we must consider them. We must have a review and must know what foreign ownership there is in this country. The Americans do it. Just last month I noted that a Canadian who bought some land in Mississippi has now been ordered by the courts to turn it over because foreigners are not allowed to own land. When the Canadian Development Corporation was trying to buy out the Kidd Creek mine owned by Texas Gulf, it ended up in a long series of court battles in Texas where it was illegal for a foreign country to buy up control of a Texas corporation. It was only through protracted negotiations and after some switching of assets that Canadians got control of the Kidd Creek mine, but the deal was held up by American laws. There are laws in the United States midwest against the ownership of oil and gas lands and farming lands.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): And radio stations and TV stations.

Mr. Dick: The Americans are not the only ones. An American cannot buy a radio or TV station in this country. I do not mind that. The Americans are protecting their interests and we are protecting ours. But we should be aware of these things. I agree that there must be a review and that there should be notification, and this Act respecting investment in Canada provides for those very things so we will be aware.

I would like to point out that there has been a steady increase in unemployment in this country since the 1972-1974 era, since we brought in the Foreign Investment Review Act. That may not be the only reason.

Mr. Riis: You are right.

Mr. Dick: Remember, it was the New Democratic Party which gave us that Government in 1974 and in 1980. The NDP, in supporting the Liberals, gave us the Government which created that atmosphere. It may be an intangible. We cannot predict exactly how many jobs will be created this month or this year, but we know that if we create a better atmosphere, a more co-operative atmosphere, people will invest in Canada. We want Canadians to keep their money here. We want to get back that $68 billion which flowed out of Canada in the last eight years. If we had kept that money here instead of creating jobs in other lands, principally in the United States—Florida, it seems—we would be much better off.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order.

Mr. Dick: I am sorry my time has run out, Mr. Speaker, but I hope the New Democratic Party and the Liberals will start acting positively and talk about creating jobs rather than supporting unemployment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, the Hon. Member's time has expired. I trust everyone rested well over the holidays. I recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in response to the last speaker, I will say that we will have something positive to say. One of the most positive things we are going to say is that this Bill should be hoisted for the next six months. This Bill, an Act respecting investment in Canada, should be renamed, Mr. Speaker. It should really be called "an Act to sell out Canada". It could be called "an Act to give more control over the future of our children to foreigners".

Mr. Dick: Let's get them to work. Let's get them off unemployment.

Mr. Riis: If this were the United States of America, and if this were Congress, the galleries would be packed today. People would be standing and fighting for their own country, not fighting to find some way to give their country away to foreign citizens.

Mr. Dick: They want jobs.

Mr. Riis: Then let us get them working, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Hon. Member opposite, who is doing all the responding—I won't say "yelling"—to tell us where research and development is going to take place in the country. It is going to take place in a branch plant of a foreign company or it is going to take place back home where the parent company sits? The facts are perfectly clear, Mr. Speaker: the research and development takes place in the parent company's headquarters, not in a foreign branch plant.

• (1200)

If this were Congress today and Congress was told that 30 per cent of all non-financial institutions in the U.S. were owned or controlled by foreign interests, there would be panic. It is only 3 per cent there but what do we find before Congress today? There are Bills being presented to almost every economic committee of Congress to protect American enterprises at home because 3 per cent of all non-financial institutions are foreign-controlled. But here the percentage is 30 per cent. In the manufacturing sector it is 48 per cent. In mining it is 40 per cent. The oil and gas industry, one of the most critical resource sectors in our country, is 65 per cent foreign controlled. This means that the Government of Canada is saying that it wants the economic future of our sons and daughters, our grandchildren, nieces and nephews, to be determined in Hong Kong, Tokyo, Frankfurt and other cities in foreign countries.

Mr. King: You know better than that.

Mr. Riis: I do not know better than that! Let the Hon. Member stand in his place and prove that the economic future of his grandchildren, and I assume he has grandchildren, is not being determined by businessmen from Hong Kong, Japan or the U.S. It is certainly not being determined by Canadians. No other industrialized nation in the world is faced with the percentage of foreign control that I have just quoted. No other industrialized nation would tolerate for a moment that amount of foreign control. But not only do we accept it, the Government of Canada says we want more. Can you believe it, Mr. Speaker? The Government of Canada is saying that we want more foreign investment, more foreign control of our economy, that we want to have more research and development done outside of this country.

It is time we started looking at what this Bill really represents. It means that research and development is going to move out of our country. As foreign control of our economy increases, research and development is done in the country of the parent company. This will result in an exodus of jobs. Many of these branch plants are here to serve the Canadian market only. Not long ago the President of Bell & Howell said this to Canadians: "You have to understand our mandate here in Canada. Bell & Howell has been established here since 1954 with the prime objective of selling its products to the Canadian market without the intention to export to other markets, as our parent company has arrangements for export to Europe and the rest of the world".

One of the critical challenges facing Canadian industry today, Mr. Speaker, is to identify, explore and develop new foreign markets. Yet the President of Bell & Howell says that they are here for the sole purpose of not doing that. A branch plant in Canada is not encouraged, it does not have the mandate, to go out and open up new export opportunities. Why are manufacturers not exploring overseas markets? Why are out resource companies not exploring more overseas markets? Because they are here to develop the Canadian market only.

Consider what that means to the development of a sourcing-in-Canada policy. One of the strongest policies in the United States is the "Buy American" policy. Buy American first. What is our policy in this country as a result of this Bill? It is to buy foreign products as much as possible. It is only natural that foreign branch plants in this country will do their sourcing back home; it is financially to their benefit to do so. Wherever possible they will source their component parts with their parent company or other branch plants. What does that mean for competing Canadian firms? It means that sourcing from Canadian sources as a priority is being put on the back burner. Source foreign is essentially what the Government is saying to the people of Canada.

The best or most recent example I can think of concerning what foreign control means is when the Soviets were building a major pipeline through central Europe and a number of companies operating in Canada said that they could not participate in that project because their American parent companies were prohibited by law from doing so.

Mr. McDermid: We introduced a law to change that.

Mr. Riis: There was a law in the United States called the Trading with the Enemy Act. The name has been changed in the last little while but it is to the effect that American branch plants cannot trade with countries we trade with, Mr. Speaker. Cuba is an example. I ask the members of the Government opposite, what does this mean for Canada's economy when so much of it is controlled by foreigners? In some sectors it is 90 per cent, in some it goes as high as 99 per cent controlled by outside foreign interests. What does this mean when those branch plants make profits? Where do the profits go? Are they inevitably invested back here in Canada? Sometimes they are but more often than not it is only natural that they go back to the parent company.

By having Bill C-15 before us today, Mr. Speaker, we are suggesting that we want more money to be drained out of Canada through remission of profits and dividends to other countries. That money should stay here and be invested. So I ask those people opposite to consider that this Bill will result in less research and development and unfair competition for Canadian-owned firms. It will result in profits and dividends being moved out of the country. It will not encourage the development of new markets overseas. Why are we doing this? The Gray report of the 1960s and the Watkins report of the 1970s pointed out in hundreds of pages why we should not be progressing with this Bill today. Have Members opposite read those reports? If they had, I could not imagine how they could have the courage to speak in favour of Bill C-15, an Act to sell out Canada. I do not understand why Members opposite would be continuing this debate when we should be moving on the amendment right now to hoist this Bill for six months in the hope that economic and financial sanity would once again return to the benches of the Government.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-15, entitled the Investment Canada Act, which we are debating today, is just about the only Bill that the Conservative Government has offered us on the Order Paper that is not a Bill the previous Liberal Government proposed and tried to get the Tories to pass. Now the Tories want the House to pass the Bills proposed last year by the Liberals which they opposed or dragged their feet on. Bill C-15 is merely the first offering by the Tories, made by Tories and designed for Tories.

While this Bill will be debated now, when it is put into the context of the problems that face Canadians in 1985, it is tragic to think that despite the need for a constructive program to put more than a million people back to work, despite the need for us to be able to provide jobs this summer for a very large number of young people, despite the urgent need for us to try to salvage our ecology and prevent the horrors of acid rain, despite the economic and fiscal problems we have, the best the Tories can offer us nearly five months after being elected to office is only one new Bill that was not designed by the previous Liberal Government; that is, Bill C-15. Five months!

For a Tory Government that said it was going to create tens of thousands of jobs and rejuvenate this country, we see precious little that has happened over this time. Again we are seeing that "Tory times are tough times". This is because it is a do-nothing government. Tories can tell you what is wrong with almost anything, but given power they cannot do a thing that is right.

Unfortunately, that is also the case with Bill C-15, the offering we have today. One of the most valuable contributions of this Bill, and perhaps its only one, is its title, "Investment Canada". If the object of the exercise is to get more foreign investment in Canada, the title of the Bill is probably a good public relations move. This proposed new title sounds more streamlined than the present title, "Foreign Investment Review Act", or FIRA. If our objective is to simply increase the number of foreign dollars invested in Canada, a sleazy name-change might help.

The reason that FIRA was introduced in the first place was not to discourage foreign investment in Canada, but rather to ensure that foreign investments would be made in such a way as to provide some significant benefit to Canada, in contradistinction to investments that could or would weaken Canadian companies, enfeeble Canadian ability to compete, destroy Canadian jobs, defer or prevent growth of Canadian research and development and so on. We looked at our own house in Canada and saw that the percentage of foreign ownership in some key areas of our resource industry was out of balance. Canadians agreed with this, the polls showed it, and the Government received the support of the people. Canadians everywhere agreed, and they agree now, that just as the United States has entire sectors of its economy off limits for foreign control, such as shipping, the aircraft industry, air transport, broadcasting, defence production and on and on, we in Canada believe that it is in our interest, just as it is for any other sovereign nation, to have limits on the degree of foreign control of our key industries. Canadians agreed that we had a right, as does every other sovereign nation on earth, to fully share in the benefits of our own resources.

FIRA was not introduced to discourage foreign investment in Canada, but it was an honest title which proclaimed what Canadians wanted to have and wanted to say to the world. It said that Canada is open for business but is not up for sale. Canada's businesses and resources are not to be sacked, gutted, or sold out at cheap, firesale prices.

On December 11, 1984, with the introductory words of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) on the Investment Canada Bill, he set out to dismantle the progress we have made in this country to place our country under the control of Canadian entrepreneurs and workers. This Tory Minister is trying to reverse the process of asserting our right to exploit our own resources to our own benefit and to keep the advantages we gain from the inventiveness of our own scientists and researchers. He is undermining the great strides which the last Government made to affirm our own Canadian way of life and to proclaim our sovereignty.

The Minister says he is going to wipe out the Foreign Investment Review Agency and replace it with something called "Investment Canada". Under this name the new organization is supposed to do the same kind of screening of investments FIRA did, with the big exception that the holes in the screens will be so big that many or most of the businesses of Canada will not be shielded or protected from raids by foreign investors who can come and buy them up and eviscerate them. It will only register the intentions of those who will invest over $5 million directly or $50 million indirectly. The screen which the former Government put up, ponderous though some may think it was, protected the jobs of Canadians because any large investments or takeovers under the Liberal FIRA management had to show that they were for the benefit of Canadians. If 11 per cent of the foreign investors were discouraged by FIRA, which is what the evidence seems to indicate, that is a small enough price to pay to save jobs for Canadians, our resources and research.

Other countries take stringent steps to wall out foreign competition and products. In the United States, that great paragon of conservative free enterprise, there is enterprise but it is not free, at least not to all. A recent study by the Brooking Institute shows that 35 per cent of American manufactured goods are protected by quotas and "buy American" rules and other non-tariff restrictions, and that this protection has gone up, not down, by 15 per cent in the last three years under Reagan rule. While our boy scouts in the Tory Government do their good deed for the United States and open the door to American and other foreign investors, they have the door slammed in their face by United States protectionism mechanisms.

This Tory Government is not just bad, Mr. Speaker, it appears to be a disaster. The reason American or any other foreign investors will invest in Canada is certainly not because we might change the name from the Foreign Investment Review Act to the Investment Canada Act—from FIRA to ICA. The reason investors will invest in Canada is that they believe this country is a good place to invest their money to earn profits and have equity value gains. It will be because of security and profits, not because of the name change or because they must fill out fewer forms. It is because money can be earned in Canada and because this is a safe country with a stable Government. It is a stable country in which to live, operate and invest. That is the reason people will invest. No superficial changes or attempts to sell out this country are going to attract American or other investors. Investment is made because there is an honest dollar to be earned by honest investment in this country.

Despite the nonsensical, misleading assertions and statistics of the Tories before, during and since the election, the amount of foreign investment, direct or by portfolio investment on new issues, is very considerable indeed. Foreigners invest in this country because we have a stable and good country and a good climate for investment. Thank you for allowing me this time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, on this first day back, given the new adornment which I sport, I thought I might rise and say a word or two to get out of the way all of the barracking and hooting that I will have to put up with.

I do not want to make a speech about this so much today as just to share some views that I have about the move that the Government is taking and to try to juxtapose those views with what is happening in Washington at the moment. I said some time ago, on behalf of my colleagues in this Party, that we were vitally concerned about the potential for economic disaster that exists if a country does not have any way of making some determinations about what kind of investment, development and job opportunities will be developed within its own borders. It is equally important to be able to decide when and under what circumstances it is appropriate for foreigners to be involved in investment within our country.

Quite frequently one hears people who are on the conservative side of the argument—not necessarily the Conservative side of the House because I include a number of Liberals in that conservative argument—making the point that Canada does not require any review procedure with regard to investment because American investors will do what is in the best interest of the business community which, by its very nature, is in the best interest of the country. Frankly, there are so many errors in that belief that it would be impossible to name them all in the short time that is available today.

Let me say that I have never believed that the Foreign Investment Review Agency as we have known it pursued the job that it was given with the kind of intensity that I would have liked. Although that agency did extract commitments about jobs, research and development and the manner in which investors in Canada operated, it really did very little to follow that up and insist that those investors did in fact fulfil their commitments.

All that aside, at least it was a window on investment and gave us a sense of what was happening with respect to foreign investors and how they were performing compared to domestic employers and domestic corporations that were operating within the same general economic area. Therefore, that agency was valuable in that respect because the reports of FIRA could allow one to determine who was buying what, how much was being accumulated and what sectors of the economy were of interest to certain kinds of investors. It was valuable because outside investment must go through a procedure which made such investment public. It also afforded Canadians a vehicle with which to say no if that was the most appropriate action. I believe the Government's present action will eliminate those very useful exercises.

What I find most distressing about this is that when the Government is eliminating FIRA, American investors who are talking about their domestic economy are advising the U.S. Government that it should be restricting Canada's entry into the United States if not by way of investment, certainly by way of sale of products.

Hearings have been held in Washington during the past week which are directly related to the question of free trade, sectoral or otherwise. Those hearings are aimed at deciding what the business community in the United States believes is best for it. I was somewhat surprised to read in the paper that a significant number of those appearing at those hearings are suggesting to the U.S. Congress that it ought not to give in to Canada's request for sectoral free trade.

I know that you had a particular interest in this matter before you were elevated to your lofty position, Mr. Speaker. When these matters came before the House of Commons in the past, it always appeared as though Canada was responding to questions that were posed from the White House with respect to opening up the trade barriers and making it easier for a free flow of trade between the two countries. While the message that was given in Canada by the former Trade Minister or the present Trade Minister was that the United States had initiated these discussions, it appears that the reverse was being said in the United States. United States manufacturers, industrialists and investors who were concerned about the U.S. economy were being told that it was Canadians who were trying to initiate the opening up of the trade lines, reduction of trade barriers and the introduction of sectoral if not total free trade.

I suggest we should wait for the results of the hearings before the Congress in Washington and the eventual negotiations that will presumably take place between Canada and the United States before the Government dismantles and eliminates those agencies which protect Canada from an unnecessary, perhaps unwanted or perhaps unfettered investment in areas where we may not want that investment.

I believe we should have an agency which we can use to screen new investment. This is necessary in order to make some accurate assessments about the effectiveness of the entire free trade initiative. Such a free trade arrangement may totally eliminate the incentive of American investors to invest in Canada. They may have considered investing in Canada regardless of free trade but as a result of the elimination of those barriers they would no longer be required to invest in Canada because their production for the Canadian market could simply made up by the end run of their production which is unused by the parent operation in the United States. Without the appropriate monitoring agency with regard to free trade arrangements, there will be no means of assessing the effectiveness or impact of those free trade arrangements on investment in Canada.

The Government wants to proceed with this Bill in the belief that it was one of its major planks in its election platform. However, until there is a clearer picture of what will happen in the negotiations over the question of free or sectoral trade with the United States and their impact not only on the United States and Canada but on the balance of our trading partners, I suggest that the Government postpone this measure for now.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by wishing a happy new year to all Members of the House. I would add that 1985 will be a better year as a result of what happened on September 4.

This debate on Bill C-15 is particularly opportune for me as a Member of Parliament from Nova Scotia. Just on Friday an international corporation announced plans to build a major facility in Nova Scotia. This announcement calls for the investment of millions of dollars and the creation of hundreds of jobs for Nova Scotians. I represent the Cape Breton Highlands-Canso constituency in northeastern Nova Scotia.

This corporation will put unemployed Nova Scotians back to work. Nova Scotians call my office as well as the offices of many other Government officials. They are not concerned about whether the corporation is foreign. People want a cheque at the end of the week. People want to be able to pay their bills in the same way that Members of this House pay them. People of Cape Breton have been denied this opportunity for months and in many cases for years.

I want to congratulate the Government of Nova Scotia, Premier Buchanan and his Minister of Development for the aggressive manner in which they sought the investment the people of Nova Scotia so dearly want. This corporation is co-operating in an admirable manner with the Government of Nova Scotia to develop training programs so that untrained Nova Scotians who want to work can be put to work and will gain training as a result.

Foreign investment means jobs. It means there is an opportunity for young, bright and energetic Canadians to become productive members in our economy. We in this Party strongly support that kind of investment. This is not a debate about ideology; the question here is unemployment, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Neil: In our area of chronic unemployment I know full well the social costs that have been paid for the ideological pursuits of the previous Government.

This debate is also about our need for capital. Unemployed Canadians and their families are continuing to pay the price for the blind nationalism of the previous Government. The people of Cape Breton want jobs. They want foreign investment if that means jobs. My constituents and constituents in other parts of Cape Breton have the most to gain from legislation of this nature. Yes, in the past we have paid the highest price for the policies of the previous Government.

In 1974 when FIRA was introduced unemployment was far lower than it is today. The people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso have waited a decade for the rush of Canadian investment promised in the early 1970s. They have paid the price dearly. They have endured years of hardship. They have suffered the social consequences of unemployment. Yes, Mr. Speaker, the people I represent decided they have paid enough. On September 4, 1984 they opted for change, the change which this Government represents.

What about our future? Canada needs $100 billion in new equity investment between now and 1991. If the existing legislation is not altered, we will experience a serious shortfall in our capital needs. Canada was recently ranked last among 22 countries with respect to its receptiveness to foreign investment. That reputation is another legacy of FIRA, a legacy which meant lost opportunities for Canadians. Our Party campaigned on a commitment calling for more investment. Our Government has moved quickly to honour this commitment.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has invited non-Canadian investors to Canada. Our Prime Minister has expressed the strongest possible support for Canadian investment. We are committed to creating an atmosphere in Canada so that Canadians will invest at home and their money will go to work for the benefit of all Canadians. Surely this Government need not apologize for that. Surely this Government is not expected to apologize for its determination to assist the needy, or for its determination to put employment ahead of ideology.

The Bill under discussion is known as the Investment Canada Bill. The effect of this Bill is to replace FIRA with a new agency, namely, Investment Canada. This agency's mandate will be to encourage and facilitate investment. It is the kind of investment that creates jobs, introduces innovative ideas and technologies. Clearly Canada's reputation as a place to invest must be improved. This legislation changes the name and mandate of FIRA. In doing so it goes a long way toward improving Canada's reputation. It is a clear statement to Canadians and non-Canadians alike that we want to increase investment and to stimulate trade and industrial development.

Major acquisitions by non-Canadians will still be assessed on the basis of their net benefit to the economy, but that process will be greatly altered. The new process will be simpler and faster. For example, almost all investments to establish new businesses in Canada will be eliminated from review. This Bill eliminates from review most acquisitions of businesses in Canada by non-Canadians except for major acquisitions that can have an important impact on the economic, industrial or cultural interests of Canada. This Bill provides authority to review smaller acquisitions and the establishment of new businesses in culturally sensitive areas, such as book publishing, film production and distribution. This Bill recognizes the difference between acquisitions of businesses in Canada where the majority of assets in the transaction are located in Canada and those where the Canadian assets are only part of a larger transaction which occurs outside of Canada. This Bill ensures speedy decisions on proposals that require review by establishing firm deadlines through simplifying the decision-making process and providing advance consultation to potential investors.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that during the course of this debate Members of the Opposition have stood to speak on FIRA and have said in its defence that it really has not discouraged foreign investment. Then they go on to give a litany of reasons why we should be against foreign investment. That is the paradox of their position. Having recognized that foreign investment can and will create the jobs which this country needs, recognizing that Canadians want to work and have a balanced view of this problem, we in this Party and our Government are moving to attract new jobs to Canada. The people of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso look forward to foreign investment and to jobs for themselves and for their families. They would prefer that Canadians invest, and they have invited Canadians to do so for decades. Surely we should not be asked to endure more decades of economic underdevelopment with its accompanying social costs.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-15, the Investment Canada Act. Some people in the House of Commons may wonder why I, coming from Prince Edward Island, would be overly concerned about changing the name of FIRA to Investment Canada.

In Atlantic Canada FIRA itself did not have a major impact. It certainly did not have the major impact on Prince Edward Island that it have on many of the other provinces. If we were to look at the figures for investment in the Atlantic region over the last ten years, Atlantic Canada only accounted for 3 per cent of acquisitions and 5 per cent of new businesses. That is not to say this proposed Investment Canada Bill will not change the effect that foreign investment will have on the Atlantic provinces.

Foreign investment is needed in Canada for reasons of development and job creation. It was needed historically for regional development and contributes to the present regional and over-all development of Canadian resources. In the late 1800s and the early 1900s foreign investment was necessary for the building of our transportation system. Foreign capital was needed to complete it. Capital at that time usually came in the form of portfolio investments which left control of Canadian enterprises in Canadian hands.

Today we find a bit of a different situation. Investment today is direct, with the ownership of most of Canada's major companies no longer in Canadian hands. We do not want to discourage investment in Canada, but we should all be trying to increase the level of Canadian ownership in Canadian companies. Of course, Canadian ownership ensures that the best interests of Canadians are being observed. A balance between investment and ownership can be reached. Canada has bountiful resources. There are many opportunities for successful investment by making use of those resources. However, it is equally important that Canadians maintain control over their resources, especially those resources based upon our primary industries, such as agriculture, fishing, forestry and mining. It is important for the future of those industries and for the maintenance of a competitive role for Canada in the international market-place.

I should like to look at some of the changes from FIRA to Investment Canada. One of the most notable is that responsibility will be taken away from Cabinet in the final decision of reviewing applications. No longer will there be regional representation that can determine what is best for the regional interests of Canada. In other words, the Minister responsible for Investment Canada can basically make that decision on his own. That troubles me as a Member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada, certainly from Prince Edward Island. I am not sure whether the Minister understands entirely what Atlantic Canada is all about.

We would have to take a look at some of the statements of that Minister in the last number of years. First, he has not been a great proponent of job creation in the context we in Atlantic Canada know. Our area is a very depressed one. It relies very heavily on job creation. It does not have the heavy industrial base which exists in some parts of our great country, specifically in central Canada. We are dependent upon our basic traditional resources—agriculture, fishing and mining.

The debate thus far has been mainly centred on south of the border, on what happens with investment between the United States and Canada. Most of the speeches were concentrated on American investment. There is another investment opportunity which was used in the past and will likely be used in the future, that is, European investment. I do not know whether the Minister and the Government have fully thought out exactly what could happen under the Investment Canada Act in the fishing industry if it is not carefully scrutinized. The Minister responsible has stated, for example, that Fishery Products International, that Crown corporation or that investment of the Government of Canada, is up for sale if there are buyers. The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) said that we have about as much chance of selling that company as putting a man on the moon. I sort of agree with him at this time. Most of those companies have fishery quotas. It would be very easy for any foreign investor who is a competitor to buy up the assets of some large companies and make them inactive for certain periods of time. Naturally one is in business to make a profit; there is nothing wrong with that. We may well be looking at the closure of many plants, displacing or putting out of work thousands of people in Atlantic Canada. That is a very genuine concern in terms of a foreign takeover, especially as it relates to the fishing industry.

Let us take another look at agriculture, in particular the processing of potato products. If the situation in the United States or in another country was such that it might want to eliminate competition, a corporation could come into this country and buy up some of the potato processing plants and perhaps put them on the back burner. Just as we are asking for this piece of legislation to be put on the back burner for further study, they could be put on the back burner until such time as new markets are gained for a specific corporation, thus eliminating any such previous markets held by firms such as McCain or Cavendish Farms. I am not very clear about the answers to those questions. Some of these things could conceivably happen. If they happen, they would certainly be to the detriment of Canadians. I am concerned about those matters.

Let us look at the World Court decision which gave Canada control over a very rich part of the Georges Bank. This should be of great benefit to Canadian fishermen. However, the United States International Trade Commission issued a report indicating that Canadian fish imports to the U.S. allowed an unfair advantage to Canadian fishermen who received such benefits as market assistance and vessel subsidies from the Canadian Government. In essence, the commission has supported the contention of American fishermen that Canadians are dumping fish on the American market. There is a threat that this will result in countervailing duties on Canadian fish entering the U.S. market.

We have to look carefully at any new idea of Investment Canada. Perhaps the name change is all right, but the content scares me and many Members on this side of the House. More time is needed by the Government. Sometimes it is nice to rush through legislation. We sat on that side of the House. Some of us understand that Ministers like to get through new legislation. Only legislation which benefits all Canadians is good legislation. This is why sometimes what we do in haste may be to the detriment of certain areas of the country.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak in this debate today. The Minister, the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. O'Neil) have implied that the debate today was about the future of employment in Canada. Nothing could be further from the truth because what we are debating today is foreign control of the industry of Canada. We are debating whether or not Canada should be concerned about foreign control of its industry. We are debating whether or not there should be a review procedure in place for the control of money coming in and possibly even money going out. We are also debating the effect of an increase of foreign control of our economy on Canadian entrepreneurship. Those are the matters we are debating today.

We know there is a need for jobs and that jobs can be made available by the development of industries and by the development of the economy. But who should do it? That is what we are debating, not whether the jobs are necessary. We are debating whether the method being established by the Government is the proper one to deal with the problem.

This Bill will sell out Canada. It will turn the industrial estates across Canada into foreign enclaves. We already face a branch plant structure in Canada. This will be the common standard for Canada. Eventually there will be so little production by Canadian firms that it will reduce the amount of possible exports.

At present, 51 per cent of Canadian manufacturing is foreign controlled. Foreign interests control 98 per cent of the rubber industry in Canada, 51 per cent of agricultural machinery production, 92 per cent of transportation equipment, 70 per cent of electrical apparatus, 71 per cent of the chemicals and 52 per cent of the small miscellaneous items purchased in the store. Many of those items can be produced by Canadian entrepreneurs. The Government, through this Bill, is suggesting that the production not be done by Canadians but by foreigners.

What is the effect of 55 per cent or more foreign control, such as we have in Canada? As my colleague stated previously, Canada is the only country with this kind of foreign ownership. In 1982 foreign control of industry in Sweden increased from 7 per cent to 7.2 per cent. What did the Swedes do? They immediately put in place controls to disallow the increase of foreign development in that country. The increase in foreign investment in Sweden was curtailed immediately. They were worried when foreign control of their industry went above 7 per cent. We are not worried that it is over 50 per cent in Canada. In fact, we are offering the sale of Canada in order that we will have a larger portion of our economy foreign owned.

What happens when there is foreign investment in a country?

Mr. Shields: Jobs.

Mr. Hovdebo: I am glad the Hon. Member said that. Just before this past Christmas, Black & Decker took over a plant in Barrie. In the process of that plant being closed, the Town of Barrie lost 600 jobs. That is what foreign ownership can do.

Why would a company allow a Canadian branch plant to compete with the parent plant? If the American parent plant is having a problem getting rid of its goods, will it let the Canadian branch plant produce and compete with the parent? There is no way they would allow that. The first plant to go would be the branch plant in Canada. This Government now wants to increase that kind of ownership.

First we have the loss of jobs. Not every takeover creates jobs. A large part of foreign investment has been and will continue to be for the purpose of taking over plants and companies in Canada. Following a takeover, the logical procedure is to allow the plant to operate for a while. When it starts to compete with the parent company, it is shut down.

We believe this Bill should be hoisted and looked at again before it is passed. We do not want the amount of money that is presently flowing into the United States to be increased. The statistics which I have, and they are more than a year old, indicate that $2 million per hour flows from Canada into the United States. That $2 million per hour is in the form of interest on bonds, interest on investments, research and development and profits to companies operating in Canada. If that amount continues to increase, eventually all of the profits, all of the research and development and our hope of getting control of our economy will have gone to the multinational corporations, most of which are controlled by the United States.

We have a real difference in priorities. This Government has prided itself on the private sector, small business being the engine of the economy. This Bill is forcing small entrepreneurs who want to produce a given item to compete against the large multinationals, with the kind of backing the large multinationals have. Instead of protecting the small entrepreneur, this Government makes him compete with the large multinational. In fact, the large multinationals are invited to come here and either take over an existing operation or set up a plant in competition to it. That is an example of lack of planning and lack of recognition by this Government. This is what will happen if this country is left open to unlimited development or control by foreign investment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REVISE PROPOSED MEASURES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made his economic statement, many groups, especially in the arts and the cultural sphere, have advised me of their concerns. The budgetary cutbacks planned in connection with federal cultural programs are quite alarming. The cuts of $75 million at the CBC, $3.5 million at the Canada Council and $1.5 million at the National Film Board, to mention only a few, will have a very detrimental effect on Canada's cultural development.

We must not forget that cultural activities constitute an industry in themselves. The main parties concerned have every reason to be alarmed, and I would therefore urge the Minister of Finance to reconsider his proposals, as the cutbacks will have a disastrous impact on one of the most dynamic sectors of our economy.

TRANSPORT

PRIVATE INDUSTRY—POSSIBLE IMPACT ON PROVISION OF BRANCHLINE SERVICES

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to discuss a matter that gave rise to considerable comment in 1981 in the regional press and created much bitterness among my constituents, the people of Labelle.

Mr. Speaker, I am referring to the unilateral decision by VIA Rail to eliminate passenger rail services in Labelle because they were no longer considered a viable proposition by the authorities at the time. The decision was never reconsidered by the former Minister of Transport and was made without consideration for the wishes of the public.

Mr. Speaker, this cut in passenger rail service—I am referring to the "P'tit train du Nord"—and, more recently, the application made by CP Rail for permission to drop its freight service, all this has had and will continue to have serious consequences, including the adverse effect on our local tourist industry and on local economic development at the corporate level and among small—and medium-sized businesses, and discouraging projects by local businessmen.

That is why I would like to draw the attention of the House today, to the excellent work being done by the present Minister of Transport who has ordered a six-month study of the potential of small branch lines in terms of local transportation services provided by the private sector. As you know, Mr. Speaker, because the territory is so vast, transportation in the riding of Labelle is by road only, which, for all practical purposes, has created a monopoly situation with respect to transportation for the travelling public, and any situation . . .

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the Hon. Member's time has expired. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

AGRICULTURE

FARMERS' NET INCOME LEVELS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the Parliament of Canada resumes, I want to draw attention to the continuing and worsening financial crisis facing Canadian farmers. Low farm incomes have continued over the last decade. Net farm incomes are now almost identical to those of 10 years ago. It costs almost three times as much to live today as it did in 1974, but Canada's farmers are being told that they will have to adapt to a much reduced real net income.

When confronted with the facts, the Government speaks of harsh realities and of how many of the existing farmers should not remain in business, or it says that when the market is working there must be failures. With these glib ideological statements, the Government ignores the facts.

Who is being forced out of farming? It is the so-called technologically superior producers who are being forced into bankruptcy. It is the most productive farmers who are in the younger age groups who are being forced out. These farmers made the apparently unforgiveable error of attempting to upgrade their productive capabilities.

The special needs of beginning farmers are being ignored by the Government as it recycles the old policies of the previous Government. It offers only minor respite from high interest rates. It will allow higher-cost loans to be rescheduled, but at 13¼ per cent. This is happening in an industry that has shown an ability to generate a return of only 3 per cent to 4 per cent.

There may be some hope, Mr. Speaker. The Government now seems to be talking about a rent-back provision reminiscent of the Saskatchewan land bank scheme. Will the new Government ignore its philosophical rhetoric and actually—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CANADA

HAPPY NEW YEAR GREETING

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Happy New Year! What? With a $200 billion debt, over one million people unemployed, a deficit of $37 billion and our treasury empty and, I am saying "Happy New Year"?

Yes! We have tremendous untouched natural resources; the finest soil in the world; an abundance of livestock, manufacturing, industrial and transportation potential which is probably greater than that of any other country; a skilled and energetic people, including thousands of youths who are able to train for any technical job in the world; universities of high standards; oceans and rivers loaded with fish; entrepreneurs large and small who are ready to invest and go to work; teeming cities; beautiful contrysides; clean air and clean water. Indeed, we have an abundance of everything that is needed for a worthwhile, good, and healthy life.

We have a great country, and a new Government that is determined to hold Canada together through fair and honest dealings by providing an opportunity to management and workers to increase productivity. Productivity is the bottom line when dealing with paying off our debts and helping all those who need help.

King George VI brought hope to the free world when it was facing annihilation by quoting a poem by Haskins, which reads as follows:

> And I said to the man who stood at the gate of the year: Give me a light that I may tread safely into the unknown!
> And he replied: Go out into the darkness and put thine hand into the hand of God. That shall be to thee better than light and safer than a known way.

So Happy New Year, Canada!

NATIONAL PARKS

HALIFAX CITADEL AND LOUISBOURG FORTRESS PROJECTS

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on November 9, 1984, the Government of Canada announced that the restoration of one of Canada's most visited historical sites, the Halifax Citadel, has been cancelled, and that the completion of capital projects at the Fortress of Louisbourg has also been frozen. As all Members are aware, the Halifax Citadel is one of the last surviving examples in North America of a bastioned fortification. It incorporates the past, and presents it to its visitors. It conveys the feeling of history to all who visit this site. It provides us with culture and helps explain why we have two great official languages, English and French.

The Citadel is scheduled to be completed in the 1988-89 fiscal year and, if left uncompleted, will end up as an eyesore and disgrace not only to the people of Halifax but to Parks Canada personnel as well. The cost in closing out this project is substantial because of the required mothballing of equipment, severance pay, loss of employment, and the potential loss of tourist dollars.

The freeze on capital projects at the Fortress of Louisbourg, which I might add is the jewel of Parks Canada, will stall major maintenance to exterior details of some of the buildings which require installation of period shelters and storm windows to protect the buildings during the winter season. I urge that the Minister responsible for Parks Canada, and the Minister responsible for the Province of Nova Scotia, take this matter up immediately and reverse this very regressive action.

THE ECONOMY

MESSAGE OF CONFIDENCE

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the House a question which is on the minds of so many Canadians as they start the new year, the question of confidence. During the past month all Members have met and talked with fellow Canadians across the country, gauged their mood, and discussed their expectations. In my own case I spoke to many of the people of Capilano, including retailers, students, homemakers, and leaders in the business community. The message they asked me to convey to this House deals with the necessity to build and substantiate the growing sense of confidence which they have felt since the new Government took office.

From many people, I heard: "We are getting ready to make new investments; we are thinking about expanding our activities. Customers are calling and we are on the brink of creating new jobs and of expanding our trade potential. However, what we need from you is an assurance of continuity. We like what we have heard. Provide us with more, and show that you are truly serious about your faith in the private sector and the ability of the Canadian entrepreneur".

As we embark upon our duties for 1985 we must realize jointly that, no matter what Party we represent, we have a responsibility to our fellow Canadians who are seeking work, and to those who are seeking hope and opportunity. We have a responsibility to conduct ourselves in ways which will raise the level of respect for Parliament, and we have a responsibility to debate and put in place—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

REPORTED UNITED STATES PLAN TO STORE NUCLEAR WEAPONS AT CANADIAN BASES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a major concern expressed by many Canadians, and that is the contingency plans of the United States Government to use Canadian military bases and military equipment to store and deliver U.S. nuclear weapons, and specifically nuclear depth charges at Comox and Greenwood. The vast majority of Canadians oppose the concept of Canada's involvement in the storage or delivery of nuclear weapons, and call upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to state unequivocally that Canada will not be involved in the storage or delivery of U.S. nuclear weapons.

• (1410)

Canadians remember that the Canadian Government would never acknowledge or give details on the presence or deployment of nuclear weapons in Canada. It would never provide Canadians with information about the testing of the Cruise missile. In the past the American administration has put Canadian bases on alert, which is a compromise in Canadian sovereignty. In the past the United States has flown nuclear weapons regularly into Canada, to be used in the event of a conflict. Present hon. members of the Government, and many candidates in the past election campaign, committed themselves to creating a nuclear weapons free zone in Canada. It is time for the Prime Minister to stand and clear up this matter and ensure that both Canadians and Americans understand that Canada will never be a base for, and Canadians will never use, nuclear weapons.

SHIPBUILDING

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to censor the former Liberal Government most emphatically for the way it has hurt the Canadian shipbuilding industry in recent years by taking its business to foreign countries. As a result, the 16,000 jobs still existing a few years ago dwindled to 7,260 by September 30 last year, and this does not include all the indirect employment lost in related industries. Fortunately, the Liberal Party has almost become a thing of the past. We in the Progressive Conservative Party are now going to try to restore order to our economy.

Mr. Speaker, I remind my hon. colleagues on the Government side and on the Opposition benches of an important meeting I shall be having this Wednesday with representatives of the shipbuilding industry. The unions will also take part, and the press will be welcome. In recent years, this basic industry, an essential sector of our economy, has experienced a serious economic slump. It will require quick intervention on our part, which may even mean eliminating the loopholes allowed by the former Liberal Government and which Liberal policy still contains today.

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, last month's pre-Christmas orgy of Conservative patronage is but another example of how deliberately and shamefully dishonest the Conservatives were with Canadians during the election campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: Sit down.

Mr. Nunziata: The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is displaying unparallelled hyprocrisy and contempt for the Canadian public by the manner in which he is appointing his bagmen and Tory friends to patronage positions. If Liberal patronage was so wrong, Mr. Speaker, what makes Conservative patronage so right?

Now that the Prime Minister has an option, now that he has a choice, now that he can say no to the old systems and attitudes, he is saying yes. Herein lies the hyprocrisy. Is the devil making him do it, or is he simply living up to his pre-election promise to dance with the Tories "who brung him"? Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians seriously question the credibility and integrity of the Government?

The Prime Minister's unspeakable arrogance is not going unnoticed by the Canadian public. Canadians will remember the Prime Minister campaigning long and hard during the election campaign against the evils of patronage. Canadians will remember the pre-Christmas pork-barrelling. Where are the criteria for quality which he promised that will impress the Canadian people? Where is the reform that he promised us? More important, Mr. Speaker, where is the honesty in this Government? If there is anything worse than an "old whore", Mr. Speaker, it is a hypocritical "old whore".

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, our great Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is truly deserving of the immense praise and acclamation we in the House of Commons wish to bestow on him today. Our outstanding and dynamic leader has succeeded in uniting Canada, an accomplishment which, until now, had only been aspired to. The November Gallup Poll has concluded that Canadians are no longer lacking confidence in the future of Confederation.

The Prime Minister has attained an historic benchmark in Canadian politics through his achievement in bringing about unity and harmony. Separatism in the west and in Quebec has been laid to rest, resulting in a strong and united Canada solidly fused by the Prime Minister. The spirit of unity in this Government, which represents all parts of the nation, is a true reflection of the unanimity now held between Canadians.

Congratulations and thanks to the Prime Minister for his paramount triumph, which is regarded as a supreme success by all.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SENIOR CITIZENS' INCOME TAX EXEMPTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I can only say, at the beginning of a new year in Parliament, that we did not start this particular performance of applause, but I do want to say to the Prime Minister, in personal terms, that I wish him health and happiness. Apart from that—

An Hon. Member: That is far enough.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): One thing I do want to say is that this Party takes particular satisfaction in the fact that it appears, as a result of a statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that the Government has retreated from its attack on the principle of universality—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —of our social programs, particularly old age pensions and family allowances. We will await the document to see if we are really satisfied with the position of the Government because, Mr. Speaker, Ministers of this Government, indeed, the Prime Minister, have been changing their positions and reversing themselves as frequently as tides in the Bay of Fundy.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of National Health and Welfare did say, however, that the Government was still considering eliminating the income tax exemption for our senior citizens. In view of the fact that our senior citizens are among the least affluent in our country, particularly women, would the Prime Minister make a commitment to the effect that the Government will not eliminate the old age income tax exemption when that paper is produced?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I believe the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, when he takes a look at the statement that was made on Friday last, and statements made by the Prime Minister, will see that universality was not in question, that that remains, that there was not going to be a means test, and that there was not going to be—

An Hon. Member: It is a sacred trust.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Yes, a sacred trust, and that is what we maintain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That being the case, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I am sure when he sees the paper next Monday, a week today, will have our positions confirmed, and not his alleged agenda.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We will look forward to that, Mr. Speaker.

INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND OLD AGE PENSIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Since the Minister of National Health and Welfare has risen to reply for the Prime Minister, would he comment on the other remarks he made in response to questions when he emerged from the Meech Lake discussions, that the Government was still considering discontinuing the indexation of our family allowances and old age pension payments? Surely when we are talking about the most vulnerable element of our society, our citizens who need it most, that is not in the mind of the Government.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that I did not make any statements coming out of Meech Lake, so I believe he should check that detail. Second, in terms of the position, or the debate which he is trying to recreate, I believe if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would examine my remarks he would find that what he has said does not stand that test, and the position we have taken very clearly is that the program which is in place, the universal program for the elderly and the family benefits, remains.

We are going to put forward a consultation paper. I hope that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition can convince his caucus that, while they might have a political agenda which is valid from their point of view, there is a greater agenda, and that is how do we best protect the social programs for those who need them most.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. gentleman that our agenda is on behalf of the senior citizens and the families of this country. The fact that the Minister had to rewrite that paper during the Christmas holidays indicates just how important that agenda was.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA PENSION PLAN

PREMIUM LEVELS—HOMEMAKER'S PENSION PROPOSAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My final supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance made a statement—and I hope he will confirm it—that the Government is contemplating raising the premiums on the Canada Pension Plan. That being so, where is the commitment that the Government made during the election campaign to introduce a homemaker's pension? If there are going to be these extra funds generated, where is the homemaker's pension? What is the Government's position on that particular subject?

• (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I made the comment, as the Right Hon. Member has indicated, in reference to the Canada Pension Plan premiums. That was the extent of the comment that I made. I would ask him to be patient in respect to the other question that he put.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment. In less than three months thousands of Canadian students will be out of universities and colleges looking for jobs to pay for next year's tuition and other expenses. In November the Minister of Finance cancelled the successful Summer Canada Program, and so far we have had nothing announced to take its place. When, if at all, is the Minister going to announce a program for summer employment for students, and will it contain a direct employment provision so that we can make sure those students get the jobs they need before next year's term.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, coming out of the very successful federal-provincial conference on employment strategies last Thursday, I stated at that time that summer programs for students would be finalized within a couple of weeks. I may say that I am pleased to tell the House that those programs will have the co-operation of the provincial Governments and the private sector. I may also add that these programs will be more career-oriented than those of the past, so that students working this summer will be able to use that experience as a training ground for permanent jobs in the future.

CAREER ACCESS PROGRAM INQUIRY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, it has been customary to announce the summer program well before Christmas. We are now into the month of January and we still do not have anything. As everyone knows, it takes a good deal of lead time to put these programs into operation successfully.

The Minister talked about career oriented programs. Last year, as part of the Summer Canada Program, we had Career-Access, a very successful program. Will she continue that program in this summer's program?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Hon. Member, there are many aspects of Career-Access still in operation. He may not be aware of that. Indeed there will be many programs that will be announced for this summer, and I think when the Hon. Member sees them he will be very satisfied.

FINANCE

CORPORATE TAX STRUCTURE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance whose economic statement resulted in about $4 billion being cut from a variety of program expenditures. However, the billions of dollars involved in corporate tax expenditures were not touched. In the days following his statement the Minister indicated that he would be studying the matter and the Government would be looking into the restructuring of the total corporate tax structure. Is that study under way, and will it result in changes being introduced via the Budget in an overhaul of our corporate tax structure?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that certain things have flowed out of the economy in particular in my economic statement. We do have, as some would say, tens of thousands of new jobs, but you can count it up to about 100,000 new jobs since the turn of September. There has been a significant drop in interest rates. We have seen a very positive performance in retail sales during the month of November, directly in response to the economic statement. A lot of very positive things have come forward.

In response to the specific question, yes, work is going on right now in the Department on the whole question of tax expenditures. I hope that I will be bringing something forward around the time of the Budget, in that connection.

STUDY TIMEFRAME

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, will that study be completed by Budget time, and will the overhaul of the corporate tax structure be part of the Budget, or will that study continue beyond the budget date?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking a question about a very, very complex area of tax reform. It is not going to take place within the period of a few months. However, we should have a very good basis for judging the basis of that reform so that decisions can flow quickly from it.

MELCHERS AND WABASSO—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Since September 4 of last year, Quebec has been suffering a number of severe setbacks owing to loss of jobs. In the Montreal area, the Government has made cuts in VIA Rail and the CBC. In Berthier, Melchers has closed down, and the economy in the Saint-Maurice area will be severely affected as a result of the liquidation of Wabasso and the resulting loss of nearly 1,200 jobs. My question to the Minister is as follows: Is the Government going to become financially involved in "rescue operations" for Melchers and Wabasso instead of standing aside and blaming the workers for their misfortune, as the Minister of Public Works did last week?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have decided to offer the services of an industrial commission to help unemployed workers in Montreal—

[English]

I would say to the Hon. Member that, in addition to the commissions which will be working with these groups, whether in connection with the lay-offs at Wabasso or Melchers, we are also examining the various sectors in the Trois-Rivières region and other regions to see whether or not they can now be designated for additional programs such as ILAP, the modified ILAP, or whether they come under the terms of SERB. I am looking at these programs in conjunction with my colleagues, the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

I am delighted to see that the Minister is willing to use the previous Government's programs which she has been known to criticize with considerable fervour. However, the people of Trois-Rivières and Berthierville are very uneasy, since they know the Prime Minister is an expert at creating ghost towns.

I would therefore ask the Minister what specific measures she intends to take to prevent Berthierville and Trois-Rivières from meeting the same fate as Schefferville.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I said the Government was very concerned about the lay-offs at Wabasso and other companies. I have already announced that we would start helping committees to assist the workers concerned, and we shall continue to help workers in this industry.

FINANCE

CORPORATE TAX STRUCTURE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I hope he will cease muzzling himself for the Question Period on this point.

Before Christmas the Government announced over $4 billion in cuts in programs affecting ordinary Canadians. The Minister of Finance has just acknowledged that the $20 billion tax expenditure program which benefits corporations, and which the Auditor General and many businessmen have called into question as entailing millions of dollars of potential waste to the economy, is going to remain unchanged in the forthcoming Budget. My question is simply this. Why is the Government prepared to change programs directly affecting middle and low income Canadians in a very negative way, but is leaving unchanged in this Budget expenditures of hundreds of millions of dollars which could be saved, and which could result in our leaving our social programs entirely alone?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Leader of the New Democratic Party would presume to articulate policies that will be in the Budget. I would have thought that he would have joined in some modest rejoicing in the fact that, in a short period of time, almost 100,000 new jobs have been created. The bank rate is down 2.7 points, which I think he would agree is very important. The unemployment rate dropped below 11 percentage points for the first time in 32 months. I think that is very healthy and encouraging for the people of Canada to know.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: While these signals of improvement are, I acknowledge, modest, they are important, and I can assure my hon. friend that the point to which he referred, and others, will be actively considered and included by the Government in economic statements and Budgets designed to create jobs in Canada. That is what it is all about, the creation of employment, and that is precisely what we are going to do.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Minister of Finance with care, and I heard him say that the kind of studies that my colleague asked about in his question just a few minutes ago, are going to continue after the Budget. He did not say that we are going to have major corporate tax reform in this Budget. He said that there are going to be studies which will continue. I would like the Prime Minister to clarify this question, because it involves millions of dollars and affects social programs and jobs.

A document produced by the Government which shows two things was brought to my attention over the Christmas period. It shows that corporate tax reduction policy is the most costly and the least effective method of job creation. That is a document produced by a federal Department. Is the Prime Minister prepared to act on this? Is he prepared to act in the coming Budget? Specifically, will he change corporate tax policy to ensure that dollars going out to corporations will only go to them if directly related to job creation? Will he put an end to give-aways?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will tell my hon. friend what he already knows—a policy that has been consistent throughout the years. Tax changes will be announced in the Budget, and not anywhere else.

REQUEST THAT POLICY BE ENDED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is not quite so easy. The Prime Minister himself said after the meeting at Meech Lake there were going to be other expenditure cuts. I am referring to what the Prime Minister has said. He said there would be expenditure cuts, and if I understood him correctly that was in the social program direction, but he can clarify that. Why can he not tell the people of Canada in the interest of justice, fairness, and job creation, that he will put an end to a corporate tax policy which is costing us billions of dollars and is ineffective in creating jobs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are committed to a policy of greater fairness in the tax system, both for individuals and corporations. We are committed as well to the creation of jobs. My hon. friend might agree that we have done a reasonable job so far in creating almost 100,000 new full-time jobs in Canada in a three-month period. I can assure you that all intentions and policies which will be announced at an appropriate time by the Minister of Finance will be designed to do precisely that.

USE OF FUNDS BY PROVINCES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, in the past surpluses in the Canada Pension Plan have been used by the provinces as a source of cheap borrowing. My question is for the Minister of Finance. In the present round of renegotiations with the provinces on the contribution rates, would he guarantee Parliament that he will stop abuse by the provinces in the way in which they have those funds and, instead, advocate those surpluses be used to enhance the payments to Canada's disabled through the Canada Pension Plan disability payments, and to introduce, for the first time in Canadian history, the ability of Canadians to take early retirement? The Province of Quebec made this move one year ago.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting to watch all these conversions on the road to Damascus. The Liberals established the Canada Pension Plan to provide for the cheap borrowing by the provinces in 1966. I do not know what has changed since then that the Opposition is going to criticize the Government for reviewing this whole policy at this time.

We are looking at the structure of premiums, with the provinces. This matter has been recommended to Governments for a number of years but was continually put off by the Opposition when it was in Government. We are looking at this because there is some real concern on the part of pensioners as to the integrity and sufficiency of the pension plan. There is also concern by the provinces as to whether the money will be there for them to borrow. We also want to allow small business to make plans based on what has been acknowledged is an inevitable increase in premiums if we are going to maintain the viability of the Canada Pension Plan.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, there have been more conversions on the road to Meech Lake than there ever were on the road to Damascus.

REQUEST FOR DISABILITY BENEFIT INCREASE

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): My supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. If there are going to be significant increases in the contribution rate to the Canada Pension Plan this will result in a significant surplus being created. Will the Minister not advocate the use of surpluses to enhance the disability payments to the disabled? Will he not look at the possibility of allowing Canadians a chance of early retirement, thereby creating job opportunities for our young people who presently have the highest unemployment rate?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not tell the House that if no changes are made to the Canada Pension Plan it will be broke in a number of years, so changes must be made. That is the essence of the review that the provincial Finance Ministers and myself made a week ago in Montreal. We will be looking at the impact of changes, not only on the size of the fund, and therefore the monies that would be redirected to the provinces, but also on the impact on small business which is concerned that any significant increase over and above what is needed in the Canada Pension Plan will make it more difficult for it to create jobs. We do not want to have that impact on small business.

FINANCE

CORPORATE TAX STRUCTURE—REQUEST FOR REFORM

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I have just returned from British Columbia and I want to tell the Minister that food banks—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Mitchell: I want to tell the Minister and the Government that food banks have doubled, and people are being turned away hungry. The unemployment rate has increased, with 25,000 jobs having been lost over the past three months. Crime rates are up, and children are being permanently damaged by poverty. This is just in British Columbia.

People simply cannot take such additional harsh restraint measures as I understand he is proposing in his coming Budget. Why will he not introduce the kind of corporate and personal tax reforms that our Leader and Party have been advocating? Why will he not let people know that for once he is going to benefit ordinary people rather than the corporate sector?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to welcome the Hon. Member back to Ottawa.

Mr. Waddell: Don't be so smug. Don't be so patronizing.

Ms. Mitchell: It's about time you went out there yourself.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me respond to the question.

Mr. Blaikie: It is not a joking matter, Mike.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I responded to the question put by the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap to the effect that there would not be major tax reform in this Budget. It is too early for that. There are too many complexities.

Mr. Broadbent: It is too late.

• (1440)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will say to the Leader of the NDP that if he wants to have a disruptive tax policy that will upset job creation by small business, the way to go about doing it is to throw a fast tax reform on them too soon, without proper thought.

The direction of the economic statement in November was to reduce interest rates. A reduction in interest rates will have the most far reaching effect of creating jobs and addressing the problems that the hon. lady referred to a moment ago.

REQUEST FOR TAX CHANGES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, let me go back to a comment made earlier by the Minister of National Health and Welfare about his concerns about how best to protect social programs for those who need it most. Will the Minister of Finance follow our leader's suggestion and reform the child tax exemptions, impose a minimum tax, and raise the marginal tax rates so that there will be a savings which can then be put into increased family benefits for families that need it desperately?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe that all of the matters which the Hon. Member has put forward today are matters which are best dealt with in a Budget. I appreciate the comments that she has made. I disagree with some, but we will have to wait until a Budget to see how those are dealt with.

JOBLESS YOUTH—GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Government has cut back on job programs specifically directed to the youth of this country—school to work transition apprenticeship programs like First Chance on-the-job training. Under the new Government, how long will it take before the economy can absorb the 454,000 jobless youth we are faced with today? Will the Minister take the House into her confidence and tell us what the Government will do for these young people?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member was not in the House earlier when I responded to a question from her colleague, the Member for Notre Dame-de-Grâce.

Mr. Allmand: That was about Summer Works.

Miss MacDonald: I would say that the plans with regard to young people will be announced within a couple of weeks.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker—first of all, Madam Minister, I was not speaking about students looking for a summer job, but about three quarters of our youth who are no longer in school, but on the labour market and without a job.

Madam Minister, you have not been straightforward with the Canadian people. You and your colleagues talked about seasonally-adjusted rates while I am speaking about rates which are not seasonally-adjusted, which show a loss of 11,000 jobs between October and December. What action has been taken to reduce this unacceptable level of unemployment?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, one thing about which I can be absolutely sure, when it comes to questions from Members in the Liberal Party, is that they will never recognize any good news when they see it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: I can understand that, given the fact that their standing in the polls continues to drop month after month. When you get locked into bad news like that, it is hard to change your mindset.

I would point out to the Hon. Member that, thankfully, the unemployment rate for youth has begun to come down and has dropped a full percentage point in the last month.

AGRICULTURE

DEVELOPMENT OF NEW WHEAT VARIETY

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the representative of the Minister of Agriculture. Scientists at the Agriculture Research Station in Swift Current, Saskatchewan, have developed a new variety of medium hard wheat, HY320. Through some ten years of testing this variety has proven to yield some 30 per cent more than the Red Spring wheat hard varieties. It also appears that there are export markets for HY320. When can we expect HY320 to be licensed?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I might point out that the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board is presently on government duty in Saskatchewan. I believe the Hon. Member has raised a point which certainly the grain producers feel is very important. I know that the approval procedure has the support of the Wheat Board, the Canadian Grain Commission, Agriculture Canada, and others. It is my understanding that the matter is now under review and a decision is expected very shortly.

REPORTED UNITED STATES PLAN TO DEPLOY NUCLEAR WEAPONS AT CANADIAN BASES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence who said that he did not know anything about the United States' plans to deploy 32 nuclear depth bombs in a time of crisis at Greenwood and Comox. Since the Minister now knows about the U.S. deployment plans, does he continue to argue, as he did last week in a radio program, that in fact Canada has no need to know and no right to know about U.S. nuclear deployment plans, and that Canada is in fact simply an extension of U.S. territory in nuclear matters?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is nice to hear where Canada stands as a nation from an NDP point of view. I find it rather difficult to reconcile what the Hon. Member is saying to me in relation to a so-called leaked document in the United States with her statement that perhaps the NDP should now consider some common sense and reconsider their position as far as NATO is concerned.

With respect to the question, I want to say that the document to which the Hon. Member is referring is an old document that was conceived in 1975. It has nothing to do with consultation between Canada and the United States. I can assure the Hon. Member that if there are any plans in the future in relation to mutual defence between Canada and the United States, there will be consultation with this Government.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, the Minister should resign.

CANADIAN POLICY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that the nuclear planning group has no knowledge of U.S. contingency plans for the deployment of nuclear weapons outside of its territory, nor did the Canadian Government have any knowledge. Now that the Minister does know, will he communicate Canadian policy to the United States before it makes further contingency plans? That policy is the one adopted previously by the Prime Minister that there will be no nuclear weapons on Canadian soil.

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is a simple answer to the Hon. Member's question. There are no such plans.

EFFECT OF ARMAMENTS EXPENDITURES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance with respect to the very important matter of job creation. He is probably aware of the musings of his colleague, the Minister of National Defence, over the Christmas holidays, suggesting that the economic recovery strategy of the Conservative Government is increased defence expenditures. At a time when there are cut-backs on help to industry, cut-backs on research and development, and a threat of increased taxes for pensioners, does the Minister of Finance endorse the position taken by the Minister of National Defence that we will have economic recovery by spending more money on armaments?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should cast his mind back to November 8 when we clearly set out a very broad economic development program, part of which is related to the very successful performance that we have seen in Canada over the past four months with the creation of 100,000 jobs. I invite him to look at the broad economic program. There are various elements in the program to which the Hon. Member may want to refer, but the three part program is the over-all economic development program that we have set out in a broad way which will create many thousands more jobs than have been created to date.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that it might be more helpful if the Minister's colleague, the Minister of National Defence, read that statement and quit misleading the Canadian people that the way we will create jobs is by spending money on arms.

I want to know from the Minister of Finance, or perhaps the Prime Minister, if they are now disavowing and rejecting the position of the Minister of National Defence, who says that we are going to create economic recovery in Canada by spending money on arms. Is the Minister prepared now to say that that is a foolish policy and will not have the results which the Minister of National Defence says it will?

Ms. Jewett: You should know. You spent lots yourself.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister of National Defence has said is that a contribution can be made by the very successful defence sharing arrangement that he and the Secretary of Defense in the States have worked out, whereby small business and medium-sized business can participate to a much greater extent than in the past in the broad range of defence spending programs in the United States. That will create jobs in Canada, in addition to all the other factors that were directly addressed in the economic statement of November 8.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: We are a war machine, are we?

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

AWARDING OF CONTRACT

Mr. Michael Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It concerns the quite extraordinary contract of $1.8 million a year which has been awarded by the Government to an advertising firm headed by Messrs. Pierre Nantel and Peter Simpson. In view of the commitment the Prime Minister made in the election campaign to clean up the patronage practices of the former Liberal Government, can the Prime Minister explain why such an important contract is being awarded, with no tender being called, despite the fact that this is explicitly required under Section 8 of Chapter 310 of Appendix F of the Treasury Board's Government Contract Regulations?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister assigned these responsibilities to me he asked me to take initiatives to reduce the cost of advertising to the Government of Canada. One of the initiatives we took immediately was to wind up the CUIO. Another initiative was to seek a better contract with the agency of record than the previous administration had with its agency of record. We negotiated a better contract resulting in a savings to the Government of $18,000 a month. We will be taken more initiatives to save more money for the taxpayer, because that is the mandate I have from the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MEASURES TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Michael Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Will the Minister say how many other firms were asked how much they would have been prepared to accept to do the job? If the Government is not prepared to rescind this contract, what measures will the Minister take to ensure that a Conservative advertising placement agency does not use its powers over the placement of $60 million worth of advertising to reward media favourable to the Government, and penalize media that oppose the Government?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the $60 million figure is a figure from the previous administration. That is not our figure. It is not what we will be spending.

The advertising business is not amenable to tendering. It is not tendered anywhere in the world—in the free world, that is, where they have advertising.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Let's hear it for the Communist market system.

Mr. Andre: My instructions to my officials were very explicit. They were to negotiate a contract that would result in the saving of dollars to the taxpayers of Canada. We will, in addition, be implementing an element of competition in advertising that Departments might undertake—

Mr. Deans: I thought that there wasn't any in the free world.

Mr. Andre: —by providing for those Departments a list of three, four, or five agencies, so that these agencies might compete for the business, instead of the previous system where a single agency was assigned to a specific Department.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

EFFECT OF SUPPLYING CANADIAN AIRCRAFT TO TURKISH AIR FORCE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Could the Minister advise the House whether a decision has now been made to give 20 CF-104 aircraft to Turkey? If it has, would the Minister be prepared to reconsider that decision in light of the on-going concerns and problems with our NATO allies, Greece and Turkey, in light of the fact that Canada has had a peace-keeping force on Cyprus for the last 20 years, and in light of the fact that the United Nations' recent efforts for mediation on Cyprus have been terminated this weekend?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the decision on the CF-104s is a decision that was taken some two years ago. It was taken after consultations with all of our NATO allies, including Greece and Turkey. At that particular moment Greece indicated no interest in those aircraft and, as a result, Turkey indicated an interest, and certain arrangements were made.

The Greek Government recently has indicated a reconsideration of its original position and has asked us to examine the possibility of providing Greece with some aircraft. We have indicated a willingness to give consideration to some of the additional surplus equipment that we have available being provided to Greece. Discussions are going on at this time in that regard.

AWARDING OF CONTRACT—INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a question relating to the issue of government advertising. My question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. The Minister will recall that over the last few weeks there has been quite a bit of controversy over the issue of government advertising and certain allegations have been made. Is the Minister now prepared to indicate whether the Government is willing to co-operate fully with a Royal Canadian Mounted Police criminal investigation into the allegations that were made to that effect over the Christmas holidays?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the press reports that led to the Member writing a letter to the RCMP were inaccurate. There are absolutely no kick-backs involved. My instructions to my officials were to sign a contract that would result in a saving to the Canadian public. They fulfilled that contract with no other conditions.

We are fully co-operating with the RCMP. I have made the contracts in question available to the RCMP. The Member can have them, and so can anybody else. I have them here. Members can examine the contracts at any time. I must ask the Hon. Member to recognize that what he is suggesting is criminal activity, and there is a tradition in this place that one is very careful about making those kinds of charges.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have not charged anyone with anything. I have asked the Minister for his co-operation. That is all I have asked.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, in view of the controversy which the allocation of this contract has given rise to in the last few months, can the Minister assure the House that this whole issue could be settled by a Parliamentary Commission which would be responsible for ensuring that, in the future, this type of contract will be awarded either through tenders or another process, with the co-operation of the industry, which could appear before this Parliamentary Commission to assure us that the promises made by the Government during the election campaign will be kept and that government patronage will be eliminated?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I will assure the Hon. Member that the contracts I signed on behalf of the Government will result in a better deal for the taxpayers than any signed by the previous administration with its advertising agencies.

I would also inform the Hon. Member that the advertising business is not susceptible to the tendering process. The agencies are paid a percentage of the total advertising budget. That is the way it is done. I do not think it is within our capability to change that practice that has been in place for 100 years. I will guarantee to the Hon. Member that he will be able to examine the contracts that we have signed, the future ones, and satisfy himself that we are getting full value for the taxpayers, which is fundamental to the mandate the Prime Minister gave me.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEPARTMENT'S ACCOUNTABILITY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Why does he feel that it is necessary to provide for his Department a policy which would result in the intimidation of taxpayers who would reasonably believe that they may have cause to complain about their tax treatment but who, in fact, would be dissuaded from doing so because of the Minister's actions?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, far from that. At the very same time as the Hon. Member and his colleagues sat mute last year, Members on this side of the House went across the country saying that taxpayers' rights had to be respected by the tax Department. That remains our policy, even though the Hon. Member remained silent throughout the whole period.

What I have said was, I thought, in keeping with the position the Hon. Member took last fall. Perhaps he has changed. His position then was that the Government should be as forthcoming and accountable as possible. What I have said is that I want to ensure that, where allegations are made about my Department's activities, we are held fully to account, and that we are forced to do so publicly.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

TAX BREAKS FOR CORPORATIONS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) on Friday, December 21, 1984, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF CLERK ASSISTANT (RESEARCH)

Mr. Speaker: I am pleased to announce today the recent appointment by Governor in Council of Mary Anne Griffith as Clerk Assistant (Research) of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Mary Anne Griffith joined the House of Commons staff in 1970 and worked for various services, including the Committee Reporting Service, the Committees and Private Legislation Branch, as well as the offices of the Clerk and the Administrator of the House. Recently, she was principal clerk of the Research Branch for the Table.

[English]

As Clerk Assistant (Research), she will continue to guide the work of that branch whose mandate includes research for the Chair, the Table and Members of the House, as well as the publication of procedural papers and volumes of precedents. The branch is now undertaking a major project which includes the creation of a procedural data base and the eventual publication of a comprehensive new work on Canadian parliamentary practice and procedure.

[Translation]

This appointment gives evidence of the significant development of professional research within the House procedural services.

[English]

I have come to know our new Clerk Assistant extremely well and, as always, this House is extraordinarily well served.

NUCLEAR ARMS CONTROL

PROPOSED BILATERAL NEGOTIATIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on January 8, following two days of meetings in Geneva, United States Secretary of State Mr. George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Mr. Andrei Gromyko agreed to undertake a new set of bilateral negotiations on nuclear arms and space weapons. That agreement represents an important step forward in relations between the United States and the Soviet Union and in the prospect of reducing the danger of nuclear conflict. The negotiating process which it initiates can have far-reaching and positive implications for East-West relations and also for negotiations in multilateral arms control fora in which Canada is a direct participant. I take this first occasion in this session of Parliament to congratulate both the United States and the Soviet Union for resuming negotiations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We are especially enheartened by the objectives agreed upon by the two parties, namely prevent an arms race in space and put an end to that race on earth, restrict and reduce nuclear weapons, and reinforce the strategic stability so as to pave the way for a complete ban on nuclear arms. Such objectives have long since been the main components of Canada's foreign policy. As indicated in the joint statement issued at the end of the Shultz-Gromyko talks, the object of those negotiations is, and I quote:

a complex series of questions related to space and nuclear weapons—both strategic and medium-range—which questions shall be considered and resolved with all respect for their interdependence.

It has been agreed that one of the major topics of discussion will be the existing relationship between offensive and defensive systems.

Defensive systems will include the strategic defence initiative of the United States and the Soviet defence systems. It is therefore quite appropriate that both existing and future defence systems of the two parties be on the agenda of those negotiations.

[English]

The United States President, Mr. Reagan, has stated that the strategic defence initiative is a research program designed to examine the feasibility of strengthening strategic stability and reducing reliance on nuclear weapons through greater attention to non-nuclear defensive measures. To date, the full extent of the program has not been explored and it would therefore be premature to draw definitive conclusions about it. Given the extraordinarily complex technical questions which SDI raises, questions which even an intensive research program is unlikely to resolve for many years, if ever, it is obvious that it is a highly hypothetical concept.

As the program is presently understood, research on SDI does not in and of itself contravene the provisions of either the 1967 Outer Space Treaty or of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, both of which Canada strongly supports. In light of significant Soviet advances in ballistic missile defence research in recent years and deployment of an actual ballistic missile defence system, it is only prudent that the West keep abreast of the feasibility of such projects.

However, actual development and deployment of space-based ballistic missile defence systems by either side would transgress the limits of the ABM Treaty as currently constituted. That could have serious implications for arms control and would therefore warrant close and careful attention by all concerned. We welcome in this regard President Reagan's affirmation that the U.S.A. would not proceed beyond research without discussion and negotiation.

We should be under no illusion that the course charted at Geneva will be an easy one. It will not be. What we are witnessing now is the beginning of a long and sensitive process. The conduct of Canada should be calculated to encourage the success of that process. Nothing is more important than that the two nuclear superpowers agree on means to end the arms race.

For our part, Canada will continue to work actively in the United Nations, in NATO and elsewhere to make practical progress on arms control and to improve understanding between East and West. The agreement at Geneva, after a long and dangerous stalemate, offers a new chance and the world cannot waste that opportunity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for giving us some notice of his statement; we received it just before 1.30 this afternoon. However, I want to thank him for his report to the House and for giving us some idea of the Government's position on the resumption of talks between the two major superpowers. We are glad to use this occasion to congratulate both the Soviet Union and the United States on resuming those negotiations.

[Translation]

The nuclear arms race is the most urgent problem facing mankind today. As the Minister said, a complete ban on nuclear weapons remains the major concern of Canada's foreign policy.

• (1510)

[English]

What the Minister did not mention, however, is the tradition of Canadians and their successive Governments to speak out for common sense, dialogue and a meaningful position in the world's quest for peace. While the Minister did say of the Gromyko-Shultz meetings, and I use his words, "the conduct of Canadians should be calculated to encourage the success of the process", it appears from his statement that the Minister and the Government are doing little more than restating the United States position. There is no indication that Canada will play any role in search of peace in the tradition of Pierre Trudeau, Lester Pearson or Louis St. Laurent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister said in London that the present Government was not about to continue, and I think I use his words, "the drama of the peace initiative of Mr. Trudeau". I say to him quite clearly that the drama is not in the initiative. The drama is in the problem and the risk to the world in this nuclear crisis. In fact, the Government of Canada now appears to tolerate, if not to fully support, the development of the star wars concept which past Governments of this country have always rejected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There could be no more of a destabilizing element in those negotiations or in the escalation of the threat than that particular initiative by the United States.

I want to point out that members of the Liberal Party in this House have been the only ones who have consistently argued for an active interventionist, international Canadian role. That is why during the motion on arms control in this House before Christmas, we proposed an amendment to a motion from the NDP which motion rejected the Liberal tradition of realism in the arms race. We voted unanimously on that amendment, despite some of the comments afterward. In fact, when we talk about shading a view, I notice the statements over the past weekend of the Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) to the effect that her party, the NDP, should review the opposition to the NATO Treaty. I am very interested to see the comments on the monolithic unity of that Party on this issue in subsequent weeks.

We seized the opportunity to put before this House sensible propositions which would have sent a clear message to both superpowers to put on their agenda for these negotiations the negotiation of a mutually verifiable nuclear freeze with reductions, strengthening of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, renewed emphasis on mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna, those talks having broken off, the moving up in the United Nations of the special session on disarmament which is now scheduled only for 1986, an agreement to ban the testing of high altitude anti-satellite weapons, star wars, about which I have been talking, and to refine and improve nuclear weapons verification techniques. In short, our idea was that the Parliament of Canada could send a clear, unanimous message to the two superpowers to find agreement on these issues.

That amendment was rejected by both of the other Parties, too locked in to the left and the right ideologies to support constructive dialogue between the superpowers. The point is that the possibility of nuclear confrontation is not just an issue for the superpowers. It affects every man, woman and child on this planet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Every Government speaking on behalf of Canada has the duty to speak out for constructive dialogue on this issue and to put pressure on both superpowers to find a solution. I see the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the House. I am glad he is here because the issue is important. In response to a question before Christmas from my colleague from Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), he accused that Member and indirectly the Members of this Party of being anti-American in taking this point of view. I say to him that it is not anti-American—and I do not stand in his shadow in wanting a better enhancement of our relationship with the United States—to insist on an independent foreign policy and to look at this most crucial issue in the eyes of humanity and in the eyes of most Canadian citizens. He said in New York that Canada is open for business again. I always thought that this country was open for business. Whatever point he was making in New York, I say to him that we may be open for business, but we are not up for sale.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This means sometimes having the courage to tell our friends the truth. My caucus and I are deeply disappointed that the Government has rejected the opportunity to follow that tradition and to accept that duty. I urge the Minister and the Prime Minister to move the active quest for peace up somewhat higher on the Government's agenda.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) for renewing the practice of making a statement on motions and enabling the two other Parties in the House to respond to it. Like the Minister and my colleagues, and I am sure his colleagues—I really do not know where the Liberals stand—I am pleased to say to the Minister on behalf of my colleagues that the foreign ministers of the two superpowers did in fact agree to at least start talks. We have no idea whether any positions have changed, softened or anything, but it is in the interests of world peace, if we ever reach it, that negotiations do proceed.

I was a little disturbed to see them broken into three baskets in the way they were. Many of us would have preferred to have seen negotiations on intermediate and strategic weapons joined. I would have liked to have the view of the Minister on that matter.

I would also have liked a further explanation from the Minister as to what the U.S. and the Soviets mean in the communique by saying that the negotiations will address "a complex of questions concerning space and nuclear arms with all these questions considered and resolved in their inter-relationship". I wonder if the Minister's envoy to Ottawa succeeded in explaining that to the Minister because I know that the Minister takes a rather dim view of bureaucratise. I take it to mean that the three sets of talks will be linked and there will not be a simple dealing with only one set of negotiations and then going to another and then to another. Since they are not merged in a single basket, it is absolutely essential that there be very close links among the three sets of talks.

The rest of the Minister's statement addresses in an extraordinarily convoluted way the strategic defence initiative of President Reagan. I find that the Minister has basically taken his advice on this from the United States Department of Defence rather than taking any independent advice. For example, he said that it would be premature to draw definitive conclusions about the SDI. He says that given the extraordinarily complex technical questions that it raises, it is obvious that it is a highly hypothetical concept. That is what the United States Defence Department is saying but that is not what most of the ablest scholars in the United States are saying. In fact, they are saying quite the opposite, that we do know enough about the SDI to know that it will produce yet another round in the nuclear arms race. Once again, we are deceiving people everywhere by thinking that some so-called defence system can work. The Minister himself has swallowed that.

In the next paragraph, the Minister speaks of significant Soviet advances in ballistic missile defence research in recent years and of deployment of an actual ballistic missile defence system. Does the Minister not know that the Soviets deployed that system under the ABM treaty, something which they were allowed to do? He makes it sound as if they have suddenly just now deployed an ABM system. The U.S. declined but the Soviets did so around Moscow.

The Minister rather scares us into thinking that the Soviets are making all of these great advances in ballistic missile defence. Does he not know that the U.S. military has said that the Soviets cannot possibly match U.S. technology in star wars developments? Of course, that is why the Soviets do not want those developments to begin.

Dealing with the next paragraph, does the Minister really believe that the U.S. will stop the research on star wars? Does he not know that the Americans have already tested component parts, something which I think is contrary to the ABM treaty? Does the Minister not know that more tests and even partial deployment of star wars are coming? Has he been taken in completely to believe that only research is in progress? Clearly he has been taken in. Since so much of the Minister's statement deals with star wars, I find it very alarming that he has been taken in completely by what the American Secretary of Defence has told him to believe. I would hope that on a further occasion we will hear from the Minister a more critical and thoughtful examination of the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Speaker: Questions?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise several questions for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) regarding a very shocking reversal of the tradition of the country of being an effective advocate for arms control measures. The Minister has said that he does not believe that the Government should take a stand against star wars even though, in his own statement to the United Nations, he made a clear case for the prevention of any form of militarization of outer space. First, I would like to know why he is now reversing the position he took when he spoke before the United Nations by allowing the introduction of a new military force in outer space?

Second, how does the Minister deal with the issue of which he as a student of history would be aware, that throughout the entire history of arms development since the Second World War and the nuclear age both great powers have always played a catch-up game? When any one power indicates that it is about to make a new technological breakthrough, the other power responds in like kind. If we support the United States in its $25 billion research program, are we also to tell the Soviets to go ahead with their $25 billion research program or missile system so that they may catch up to the Americans?

In other words, how does the Secretary of State for External Affairs in any way reconcile the incredible instability that the star wars SDI program represents with the entire area of superpower relationships? For goodness sake, why is he breaking with the tradition that this country has adopted for years of putting forward its advocacy to try to restrain the arms race rather than supporting a measure that will only add to the arms race?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of comments I should make in answer to that question. The first has to do with the idea of a reversal of traditions. I find that rather strange coming from the Hon. Member, from the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) and indeed from the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party who, at the time of the Bomarc decision, was, if I am correct, a member of the Liberal Party. There has been only one occasion in the history of Canada on which the question of nuclear arms on Canadian soil was a question of differences between Parties. At that time the Progressive Conservative Party, the Party which now forms the Government of Canada, opposed the question of the placing of the Bomarc missile here. The Liberal Party and the present spokesperson for the NDP, in her then incarnation as a Liberal, supported the nuclearization of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If there is a question of reversal of positions, there is no doubt that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) speaks with a certain expertise. What is important here is that when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry suggests that in terms of the nuclear situation in the world we are involved in a catch-up game between superpowers, he is out of date. What we are involved in now is a negotiation between the two superpowers. It might be that the Hon. Member would prefer to be at the table himself. He is not at the table. The Soviet Union and the United States are at the table. There is a negotiation in progress and the most important role for this country to play is to ensure that the negotiation with the agenda now before it has the prospect of success. It would be unpardonable for this country, this Government or this Parliament to take a position which would throw those negotiations off course.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in his statement the Minister gave us a great deal of rhetoric in favour of disarmament. However, I would like to refer him to the question that was asked by my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), regarding a statement made by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates), who said that one of the ways of increasing employment in this country is to increase expenditures on armaments. I refer the Minister to the well known Thorson report and I quote from an article published in the Chicago Sun-Times written by Pat Orvis. In summarizing that report the article reads as follows:

The arms race costs jobs rather than creating them, according to a report on "The Relationship Between Disarmament and Development" done for the United Nations by 27 countries,—

This report is informally known as the Thorson report. I can also refer the Hon. Minister to many other statements which indicate that moneys invested in armaments have the smallest multiplier effect in producing jobs of any sector.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Allmand: Yes, I will put the question. Armaments can be compared with retail trade, education, hospitals, newspapers, power manufacture, metal manufacture and other sectors.

I wish to ask the Minister two questions. Does the Minister approve of the statement made by the Minister of National Defence, who indicated that we can solve the job problems of this country by spending more money on armaments? Second, how can he convince the world that he is serious about disarmament when the Minister of National Defence is suggesting that we greatly increase our armaments production in order to produce jobs, something which will not even happen?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, it may well be and indeed it is the case that in a perfect world there would be no need to spend money on defence. We do not live in a perfect world. We live in a world that is torn and divided not only by conflicts between nations but by conflicts about values. The conflicts about values are conflicts in which Canada is not neutral. We stand for freedom. We play our role for our allies in defence of freedom.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We are prepared to accept our obligations in the defence of freedom just as we are prepared to accept our obligations in encouraging arms control and disarmament.

I will not read a long list, but I do make the point that under the former Liberal Government the consultative committee on disarmament was never convened. It has now been convened by the disarmament adviser appointed by this Government. Even in a time of budgetary restraint, this Government is now spending money to ensure that Canada is able to carry on its contribution to the essential process of verification of arms control agreements should they be achieved. The list is long and it goes on. The point I would like to make is that it is absolutely consistent to work simultaneously toward both peace and freedom and that is the commitment of this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to a question which was raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), and to take up the Minister's very disturbing suggestion that the process of what he has called research into the star wars concept is basically acceptable to the Canadian Government. I would like to ask the Minister one question on that matter and one question on a related subject.

Would the Minister clarify to Parliament and the people of Canada whether or not he has any differences whatsoever with the American Government's position and the position of Ronald Reagan with respect to the so-called research on star wars?

Will he indicate precisely what his knowledge is of the extent to which there has been not merely research but as well a number of important steps taken on the road to deployment? What differences, if any, exist between the position of the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States with respect to the star wars research and deployment?

Second, Mr. Speaker, on another very important subject the Minister has indicated that Canada is prepared to take our stand in defence of freedom and, of course, we agree with that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What about NATO?

Mr. Robinson: I want to ask the Minister whether taking such a stand includes Canada being included in contingency plans by the United States Government, past or present, without our knowledge and consent? Would the Minister clearly indicate—

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I suppose nothing could demonstrate the difference in attitude toward our responsibilities to achieve some agreement on arms control better than the suggestion that, at a time when delicate negotiations have finally begun, we, instead of supporting the people at the table, should be scrounging around looking for differences which we can advertise. So that might have some effect on setting those negotiations off course. That may be the position of the New Democratic Party, but it is not the position of the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): A general question has been asked as to whether there is any difference at all on a concept which is in an early hypothetical stage—

Ms. Jewett: It's not hypothetical.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —and that has to do with a very complex question. The only way I can answer that, Mr. Speaker, is to ask the Hon. Member, if he has a specific question to put to me regarding an aspect of the research involved in the SDI, to put it to me rather than to hide behind that kind of general and evasive questioning.

With regard to the Hon. Member's last question, I cannot speak for the conduct of past Governments. I can speak for the conduct of this Government. We have sought and have received, as a result of events in recent days, a clear assurance from the Government of the United States that there will absolutely be consultation regarding any nuclear action in time of crisis which might affect Canada—

Ms. Jewett: Too late.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —and that no such action would be taken without the agreement of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I will allow one more question.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, while the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the New Democratic Party are debating where they stand or do not stand on star wars, let me tell them that the Liberal Party is against star wars whether in the United States or in the Soviet Union, and we are definitive about that.

I find it somewhat fascinating, a convoluted exercise in mental gymnastics, to try to follow the logic in this statement. On the one hand, we have the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicating that the Government of Canada approves tacitly, or turns a blind eye, on SDI development research—$25 billion worth—in the United States and, on the other hand, in the very same statement we find the words, "to date the full extent of the program has not been explored and it would, therefore, be premature to draw definitive conclusions about it". That is right, it would be premature for this country to send a signal across the western world that somehow we tacitly approve that United States expenditure. Surely the Minister has no difficulty, not in taking sides, but in saying to both the United States and the Soviet Union that the development of nuclear weapons or new technology in space is wrong and we unequivocally oppose it in the United States or in the Soviet Union. Why can the Minister not take that position now? I am not asking him to take sides.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, all I can say, I suppose, about the prelude to the Hon. Member's question—and I take it he speaks on behalf of the Liberal Party—is that some members of the Liberal Party are definitive; some members of the Liberal Party are much less definitive on this question.

Mr. Gauthier: Name them.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We would look forward to learning what their position is. Our view is that the most important question at issue now, the most important development not only in arms control but, indeed, in the possibility of the world achieving peace, has been the resumption of negotiations between the super powers. Those two super powers have established an agenda. It is a broad agenda.

It is my view, as well as the view of this Government, that our action, our public comment and our private comment, including those made during my visit to the Soviet Union in April, should be to both sides to do everything we can to encourage the success of those negotiations and not to succomb to the temptation to address a partisan audience at home in a way which would set off course those essential negotiations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INTERNATIONAL YOUTH YEAR

OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT OF COMMENCEMENT

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, 1985 is still young, and I hope that you and our hon. colleagues will allow me to offer my best wishes for the new year. With you and with all those who have remained young in heart and spirit, I want to wish the young people of this country and young people the world over the very best during this year.

Today, I have the honour of officially proclaiming the beginning of the International Year of Youth, and I urge every Member of this House to help us work together for the benefit of young Canadians.

[English]

Today's generation is a rich mosaic. It is no longer the almost uniform group it was in decades past. It seeks a greater role in Canadian society. The adult world, which is also very diversified and which is undergoing rapid technological change while grappling with serious economic difficulties, to some poses a challenge and to others a threat. However, we must not exaggerate the scope of the challenge. We should not underestimate the potential of our young people. Most of today's youth is well equipped to confront life's obstacles. Becoming better informed and better educated, the young people of today are demonstrating great realism. Prospects for meaningful work, global peace and security and the state of the environment, top the list of their concerns. They cannot succeed alone. We as Member of this House have a responsibility. We must attempt to break down the prejudices against young people and encourage our partners in the business and labour communities to make their fields more accessible to them.

In the interests of young people themselves, we should stop making youth a political issue.

The situation of young people today deserves special attention but should be considered within the context of society as a whole. Although our vision of the world and our philosophies may not always coincide, there are a number of concrete points on which we should be able to agree. There is, for instance, one area that concerns us all, and that is the need to create permanent jobs. The best way to achieve this is to get our economy back on a sound basis. In this respect, the Government will continue to take any action that is necessary to promote the economic renewal that will lead to the creation of new jobs.

The International Year of Youth also provides an excellent opportunity to renew our approach to young people, and we, as Members of this House, are in a very good position to listen to young people, to register and consider their aspirations and to encourage them to participate fully in the life of this country.

We are also particularly well placed to make the public aware of the situation of our young people and the asset they represent, of the need to encourage them and welcome them with open arms.

The program developed by the Government for the International Year of Youth takes into consideration the points I have just mentioned as well as the themes proposed by the United Nations: participation, development and peace.

[English]

The year's activities include a grant program which is intended to facilitate the implementation of special projects undertaken by young people or on behalf of young people by volunteer groups and agencies. In addition, partial funding will be provided for joint initiatives by the Youth Secretariat and other federal departments and agencies. The peace and development program will increase the understanding of young Canadians of international realities here and abroad. An information and communication program is being established to inform Canadians about the situation of young people and to promote greater awareness of their contribution to society. I will soon be announcing appointments to an advisory committee composed of young people from all parts of Canada. Finally, five national forums will be held in various regions of the country. These exchanges will reflect our intention to involve young people fully in the development of the policies that will affect them.

● (1540)

However, International Youth Year is more than just a program and a string of projects, Mr. Speaker. It is a year for discussion and action. It is first and foremost a year that belongs to young people and all those who are interested in their welfare. Considerable time and energy has already been committed by many Canadians and I commend them for their efforts.

As we embark full of hope on this International Year of Youth, we must bear in mind that our aim is not to find some magic formula but to make progress.

Mr. Speaker, on this day when Parliament resumes its work, I wish to repeat this Government's intention to promote actively training for young people. The Youth Training Options First Chance Programme has been set up as a pilot project, and my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is developing new programs to provide young people with training consistent with the demands of a modern economy.

[English]

This Government will not overlook students who will need summer employment. However, before embarking on a new program we wish to consult broadly to determine how best to achieve this objective. Youth is one of Canada's untapped resources and I am committed to seeing that International Youth Year reaches beyond 1985. If we work alongside young people and our partners in the social and economic sectors, this special year will be more than just a year of celebration; it will be a year of real progress for and by youth. These are the objectives that I have established and will endeavour to realize during International Youth Year in close co-operation with each and every Canadian.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party of Canada welcomes the opportunity that this International Year of Youth offers us to renew our focus and commitment to all the youth of this country. We are sensitive to their concerns and aware that our future lies in their potential to contribute to the ongoing growth and development of this great nation. In these turbulent times the future security and protection of this major human resource is as important as short-term fiscal considerations. Public policy must be innovative as well as just. In launching the International Year of Youth, the Minister of State has made abundantly clear once again that neither she nor the Tory caucus are committed to preventing a serious tragedy among our youth. They promised jobs but announced cuts. Sixteen to 37 per cent of our youth are unemployed in parts of Canada, and the Government offers nothing to assuage their disillusionment or to assure their sense of dignity and self-worth. A significant part of our society is now adrift. Their scars will last a lifetime. It will affect us all and make a mockery of the themes of participation, development and peace which are the focus of this year.

Although I do not feel inclined to criticize the Minister of State for Youth, I must point out a few shortcomings in her work and action. There are close to half a million young people, one out of four, that are unemployed. If the Minister is concerned with and wants to talk about those of our young people who perform well in our society and put the accent on them, I have no objection. But is that where the true priority lies given such high unemployment, the suicide rate, the growing use of drugs and alcohol, delinquency, single mothers, poverty and so on? Her department which was allotted a $28 million budget, was established to operate programs and projects for the International Youth Year and to speak on behalf of the young. Judging from her action to this date, it would seem that either she does not understand what her role is, or worse still, her colleagues do not listen to her. Who then speaks for the young? Clearly, it is not the Minister.

The programs already announced are but a drop in the bucket. Her projects bring no encouragement whatsoever to the young who are being hurt, who see no future and no job opportunities, who feel short-changed by society. If her caucus think that the private sector alone will create enough jobs for those 454,000 young unemployed, they are daydreaming!

[English]

True, the Minister has a narrow mandate, but she does have a role as advocate for young people and their concerns. Yet she stated this past weekend that the federal Government is not going to single out any one group for special consideration in 1985. This is in strange contradiction to her mandate, one which is unacceptable to me. Where was her voice when her Government severely scaled down the Youth Training Options First Chance Program? This is the most flagrant indication of the Conservatives' lack of care and concern toward our youth's needs. The reasoning for the First Chance Program was very important. While Government was spending billions of dollars on post-secondary education, very little was directed toward the preparation and training of three-quarters of our youth who need practical career help for their transition from school to the labour force where the unemployment level is the highest. Our youth need work and appropriate training. These are the key issues, Madam Minister.

Where was she when the young entrepreneur programs were chopped and the young workers exchange program terminated? Where was the Minister when $85 million was cut from summer employment programs?

Consultation is fine, but leadership is needed, too. How long do youth have to wait for government action on employment? The Minister allowed the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to put the cart before the horse when they stripped and cut important programs which affect our youth. She should have insisted that the programs geared for youth stay in place until the new Tory orientations for 1986 were ready to go. Did we hear the Minister speak out about cutting the chance to earn and learn for our youth? International youth themes of participation and development will not be met by this Government's rhetoric.

Where was the Minister when Radio Canada and CBC underwent drastic cuts? What were involved were quality cultural programs aimed at our young people.

Where was she when the Solicitor General was asked to postpone until after April 1st the implementation of the Young Offenders' Act?

[English]

Where was she when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) attacked peace protesters, when reforestation programs were slashed and when the volunteer training program, Katimavik, was cut? Has she forgotten that ecology and disarmament are prime concerns for young people? Where is her voice with respect to various mental health questions raised by the Badgley report and the growing suicide rate of our young people? Where was her support on the issue of social housing which affects poor young families and single parents?

Young Canadians, Mr. Speaker, employed or unemployed, do not go to the Rideau Club or belong to the Chamber of Commerce. The Minister must reflect their concerns and take actions on their behalf. It is a noble gesture to celebrate the United Nations Year of Youth, but, Mr. Speaker, the Minister has shown that her voice, her advocacy, has not been heard. Her silence screams at us, and youth are scandalized by Tory insensitivity and misguided priorities. I think young Canadians deserve better than this.

Our Canadian youth needs a voice that can be heard. Their future is at stake.

[English]

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to join with all Members of this House, I am sure, in congratulating Canadian young people on the International Year of Youth which has been proclaimed this year by the United Nations. It has three central themes, that of participation, development and peace. These are themes which I am sure all Members of this House would support on a non-partisan basis.

I must say that, in listening with care to the remarks of the Minister, I tried to put myself in the place of a young man or woman in my constituency or a constituency in any part of this country who has been out of work for many months, someone who perhaps has a young family or is a student looking to this summer without the hope of a summer job or a longer-term job. I put myself in the position of that young person and asked myself what hope can be drawn from the actions of the Government to date. Actions speak much louder than words, Mr. Speaker. The central themes, as chosen by the United Nations, of participation, development and peace should be reflected in the actions of member Governments. Yet the Government has so far failed Canadians in the most important challenge of all of providing full and meaningful employment of our young people.

The Toronto Star published a survey yesterday of the major concerns of young people. I am sure that the Minister saw that survey. It showed a very disturbing result. Some 65 per cent of young people had a very deep and serious concern about unemployment. The Government says that we should trust it because the business sector is going to be stimulated and in turn jobs will be provided; the old trickle down theory. It was not worked before, Mr. Speaker, and it certainly is not going to work today. There are close to 700,000 young Canadians between the ages of 15 and 24 who want to work but cannot find jobs.

I do not have the time to give the many personal examples that I, and I am sure all Members of the House, could give of the anguish and financial and emotional hardship which is caused by this failure to provide meaningful jobs. That is the most damning indictment of the Government's failure to act to date. There has been reference made already to the Summer Canada Program. The Minister has promised that there will be more, but surely students should have been told by now what the nature of the new Summer Canada Program will be. Surely the voice of the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) should have been raised long ago demanding that her Government take meaningful action for summer jobs for students.

Reference has been made to post-secondary education by both the Minister and the Liberal Member who just spoke. At the same time as the Government talks about optimism and hope for the future for young people it is freezing the level of Canada student loans. Tory provincial Governments are talking about adopting policies which would create bastions of elitism of our post-secondary institutions. The Bovey Commission advocates dramatically increased tuition fees. The Liberal Government policy of cutting back on funding to post-secondary education has certainly not been reversed by this Tory Government.

I noted that peace was selected as a central theme for the International Year of Youth. Indeed, what more crucial or essential question could there be than peace and disarmament? Just today the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) suggested that Canada is acquiescing in the research and testing of a new generation of weapons. What will young people think when they hear of that decision by this Government?

Mr. Speaker, I would also urge the Minister to consider thoroughly the recommendations of the Badgley Commission to make sure that our young people are better protected against the sexual and other abuses examined by the Commission.

As for the Young Offenders Act, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Minister will co-operate with her colleague the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. MacKay) and demand that this important legislation be fully implemented as soon as possible. The Minister knows quite well that the legislation is meant to meet the special needs of young people under 18 years of age who have often been neglected in our legal system. And I hope the Minister will urge her colleague the Solicitor General to resist the pressures of provincial conservative governments which would like him to abstain from promulgating that legislation protecting the equality of our young people everywhere in Canada.

[English]

In closing let me say that I certainly join with the House in celebrating with enthusiasm the symbolic significance of the International Year of Youth. Youth are concerned as well, of course, about unemployment. The Minister, as the advocate for youth, has been silent on unemployment and a clean environment. The Minister is silent on the cut-backs to the Canada Wildlife Service, the quality and maintenance of our parks and programs designed to conduct research into the effects of toxic industrial chemicals. Young people are concerned about this and they want a Minister who will speak out on their behalf on these concerns.

We had International Women's Year and that was a hopeful beginning. This year is a symbolic beginning, but I urge the Minister to recognize that young people demand action in the areas that I have outlined. They demand action to put an end to the injustices of global poverty. We must provide that leadership to them, Mr. Speaker. We must not fail our young people in this of all years.

Mr. Speaker: Questions?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment and then a question for the Minister. Although I can join with the Minister in applauding that it is the year for youth, I am appalled at the fact that there has been no concrete action taken by the Government to assist young people in the country. I point out to the Minister very clearly and unequivocally that young people in the country are fed up with politicians, particularly on the government side, who talk of prosperity tomorrow. The youth of the country want prosperity now. They want jobs now. They want an opportunity to improve themselves. They do not want more rhetoric from this Minister.

When is this Minister going to implement the recommendations which were contained in the employment advisory board report which talked about a pre-retirement plan to provide more jobs for youth? It talked about reducing the hours of the work week. What is the Minister going to do? Has she done anything on that or is she hiding outside the Cabinet room listening to the musings of other Ministers? What is she going to do?

Mr. Rossi: You are not on television now. This is the time to speak out. You are not play acting in "Un homme et son péché."

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I could not help hearing the comment of the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) since he was obviously a faithful fan of that famous TV series. He showed good taste in those days.

[English]

I can understand that the young people are fed up with politicians. They have had 22 years of this. The Member said they want prosperity now. The Government would certainly like to be able to have all of the money, but the cupboards were bare. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) said a few minutes ago in the House that she will be announcing a replacement for Summer Canada. She is the Minister responsible for this and it is not for me to make her announcements.

● (1600)

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister a very direct question. If she has no concern for youth within her Ministry, just exactly what is her role in that Cabinet?

Mr. Rossi: She is an actress.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order. You are a clown.

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I am a very vocal spokesperson for young people within the Cabinet, as my colleagues will agree. The Government has had to make some very difficult decisions, some of which affected young people. We will have to suffer the problems of the last 22 years for a while longer. However, we are working very hard, and I can tell the Member that I am doing my job within the Cabinet as well as outside the Cabinet.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, in her speech, the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) referred to youth as a rich multicultural mosaic. She went on to say that we should cut down the prejudices. I agree with her.

One recurring theme that came through loud and clear during my meetings with the various ethnocultural organizations of the country is unemployment among their ranks. The Minister will see in the report on visible minorities that in some cases unemployment among young people in visible minorities in certain regions of the country that are most depressed is up to 87 per cent.

What specific programs would the Minister and her Government introduce to address that very real and significant problem, particularly in the most depressed areas in this country?

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that 87 per cent unemployment among certain people started on September 4. We are looking into those problems along with the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta). The Canadian mosaic will be well represented in the advisory committee to the Minister, and I am sure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration will make sure that those programs will be varied and well suited to the different regions of Canada and the different needs of the provinces. I am sure the situation will be much better in the months to come.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, as we celebrate this International Year of Youth, what advice would she give to young people in British Columbia, for example, where there are 25,000 fewer jobs today than there were when her Government took office? There are 200,000 unemployed people in British Columbia today.

What opportunities are there for young people who will come out of schools and colleges in the summer? As we celebrate their year, what opportunities are there after cutbacks were announced to the program in November? Why has it taken this long for the Government even to get around to saying it will announce a new program? Why is this program not in place now so that young people will be able to plan their lives and have something to celebrate?

[Translation]

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, a summer employment program had been suggested by Hon. Members opposite during the last election campaign. Following a review, this program proved impracticable and extremely costly. We then decided to hold consultations which took me as recently as last week to British Columbia where I had conversations with many young students and where I met a month ago with Mr. McClelland, the Minister responsible for the International Year of Youth and Young People. Efforts are being made everywhere and I know that we will see the results very shortly.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just stated that the previous government had proposed a program. She is wrong. The Summer Canada Student Program was already in place. I think it is important to say so.

A moment ago, you indicated to my friend the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) that he had been watching a good program in which you were starring. I watched it too. Unfortunately, I must say that if her performance as an actress was outstanding, her performance as a Minister is very poor. What young Canadians need now and what this government is not likely to give them is action and not speeches. All this patter is great fun. Our students need the Summer Canada programs which gave them the opportunity to acquire some experience. Young people like those in the Montréal-Sainte-Marie, Hochelaga-Maisonneuve and Rosemont ridings are those who will pay the price for this too close association with the private sector and the provinces, for you want to help only university students at the expense of high school students.

I should like therefore to know whether the Minister will stand up for these young people from the working class who are high school students and who will be unable to attend the CEGEP if they cannot find jobs this summer.

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I demonstrated the importance the government is giving to the training of our young people, both those who are still attending school and those who have graduated from high school or university, when I spoke of this kind of blend of the two programs a moment ago. I was not referring to the Summer Canada program, but rather to the training program which was put forward last summer. The Summer Canada program will be replaced very shortly; you will realize then that there is something for everybody, for university students as well as all classes of our society and all regions in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, when discussing the International Year of the Youth, we are supposed to be celebrating this year. Earlier today the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) expressed pleasure about the fact that the rate of unemployment has dropped below 11 per cent for the first time in a long time. We know that the unemployment rate among young people is almost 20 per cent.

The Minister said that the Summer Canada Program devised by the former Government has been scrapped and that there will be an alternative program. Assuming that it is a better program than the Summer Canada Program, it will only employ a very small percentage of unemployed young people. At the end of this International Year of the Youth, how much less than the almost 20 per cent at present will the unemployment rate for young people be and what will our young people have to celebrate?

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, along with the Member opposite I want to say that I am disappointed with everyone being so gloomy today when we are expressing hope for the young people of Canada.

Mr. Gauthier: Give us something to be happy about.

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): I said in my speech that I am not a magician. I will not predict the percentage, but I am sure that, with the help of my colleagues in the Government, it will be lower than it is now and especially lower than it was during the reign of the former Government.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I am not asking the Minister to be a magician. I am asking her to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to do something for unemployed young people who are poor.

Will the Minister ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to change the guidelines for the hiring on direct job creation programs by Canada Works in Section 38 to allow people between the ages of 18 and 25 to qualify for a referral? Under the Minister's guidelines they cannot even get a referral for a job under direct job creation programs of the federal government. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister check with somebody, her Deputy Minister, somebody, and find out whether what this Member is saying is correct? If she does that and finds out I am correct, will she ask the Minister of Employment to change that guideline, which is outright discrimination about which the Human Rights Commission should be concerned and certainly about which this Minister of Youth (Mrs. Champagne) should be concerned. I am asking the Minister a question. Does she understand, first, what I am talking about? If she does not understand what I am talking about, will she tell the House that she will try and find out what I am talking about? Will she do that on behalf of the poor unemployed young people of this country who, if they are 18 years of age, do not qualify for welfare if they are living at home? You do not qualify for family allowance when you reach 18, and you do not qualify for any of the jobs announced by the Government under the direct job creation program. Yes or no? Will she ask the Minister of Employment to change this?

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I know that some of those criteria are being looked at at this time. I know that the Minister, certainly in the conversations and in the meetings we have had over the last couple of months, will hopefully help the young people in that very sector.

Mr. Nunziata: Where do you stand?

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): I would like to remind the Hon. Member that within all the programs in my Department, because we have not talked about them at all, I have to live with some criteria that were defined by members of the Hon. Member's Party.

Mr. Baker: Why don't you change them?

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Because there is a question of equity between people who have already been refused, and we are not allowed to have one new job according to that. Yes, this Government will be changing those criteria.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Minister claims to be a loud voice in Cabinet for the concerns of youth. Obviously the Minister knows that young people would like to make a contribution to Canadian society. They would like to have jobs. They are concerned about global justice and about the disparities in income between Canada and Third World countries. They are concerned about peace and disarmament.

Looking at the record of this Government today and the fact that something like one out of every four young people is without work, the fact that development aid has been cut and that the Minister's Government has allowed the testing of the Cruise missile, I wonder just how loudly this Minister has been speaking in Cabinet for the concerns of young people? How can she explain this record of this Government in line with her mandate to speak up for the concerns of young people in Canada?

[Translation]

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, according to the remarks originating from every part of the House—either during the speech made by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) or during those we have just heard—you would think I was the only one responsible for all existing problems, not only in Canada but throughout the continent, if not the world. Believe me, I am discharging my responsibilities in the Cabinet, and I think people will have to be more patient and that the aspirations of everyone in this International Youth Year . . . As I said earlier, we may not be swaying a magic wand, but we will make significant progress for and with the help of young people, and, I should hope, with the co-operation of the Members of the House.

PETITIONS

CUTS IN POST OFFICE HOURS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition this afternoon on behalf of a number of concerned citizens of the Village of Penobsquis who are extremely upset about the proposed cut in post office hours, a subject on which the postal corporation has asked the local post office to present a proposal. People in rural Canada, let alone rural New Brunswick, are extremely concerned about the treatment they are receiving. I ask this Government to treat them as fairly and as equitably as Canada Post is apparently intending to treat urban customers.

CANCELLATION OF JOB CREATION PROGRAMS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present a petition on behalf of my constituents of the riding of Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic who urge this House to take into consideration their concern with respect to the abolition of the Summer Canada Program and other job creation programs. The unemployment rate is so high throughout Canada that those workers quite properly wonder whether their jobs are secure. In addition, Mr. Speaker, many young people in my riding are quite upset by the possibility of going into debt or quitting school as a result of being unemployed this summer.

CANCELLATION OF SUMMER CANADA PROJECT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, at the request of my constituents, I have the honour to present to the House a petition against the abolition of the Summer Canada Student Employment Program which until now used to fund summer camp activities in three schools of my riding, Dante, Honoré-Mercier and Pierre-de-Coubertin.

Mr. Speaker, this measure will prevent a great many children from taking part during their summer holiday in programs organized in their neighbourhood, while at the same time doing away with summer jobs for students who look after those programs.

(a) and (b) Not applicable.

SECURITY SERVICE—REQUESTS FOR WARRANTS FOR SURVEILLANCE

Question No. 77—Mr. Nunziata:

Have any requests been made for warrants for surveillance by the security service and, if so, how many?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Applications for warrants have been made by the Service in accordance with the provisions of section 21 of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act. It is not in the interests of national security to reveal at this time the number of applications made for warrants.

REGIONAL MARINE CENTRE

Question No. 96—Mr. Dingwall:

Will the Minister of Transport provide moneys to set up a Regional Marine Center that will accommodate the Canadian Coast Guard offices in Louisbourg, Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): No. (a) Not applicable. (b) There are no Coast Guard offices in Louisbourg. Existing accommodations for the Louisbourg lifeboat station are adequate.

CRTC HEARINGS ON CN-CP APPLICATION

Question No. 102—Mr. Orlikow:

Did the CRTC hold formal hearings from September 4 to November 16, 1984 into the application of CN-CP Telecommunications to provide interchange competition and, if so, how many (a) items of correspondence were received from individuals and groups by the office of the Minister of Communications concerning telephone system deregulation and telephone rate structure rebalancing (b) petitions were received by the office of the Minister concerning telephone system deregulation and telephone rate structure rebalancing and how many individuals had signed the petitions?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) held public hearings from September 4 to November 16, 1984 on an application by CNCP Telecommunications to provide long distance telephone service.

As of December 10, 1984: (a) 10,899 items of correspondence concerning deregulation and rate rebalancing of telephone service have been received from individuals and groups by the office of the Minister of Communications; (b) 51 petitions signed by 5,592 individuals have been received.

STUDIES OF VALUE ADDED TAX

Question No. 107—Mr. de Jong:

1. Did the Department of Finance undertake or did it have undertaken for it any studies as to the matter of the implementation and administration of a value added tax in Canada and, if so (a) did such studies examine the federal jurisdiction only or did it also examine the tax with respect to its application on a federal-provincial scale (b) how many were completed and, in each case, on what date?

2. Are any studies presently under way and, if so (a) how many (b) who are the participants (c) what is the estimated cost, in each case?

3. Have any studies been completed and, if so, will they be tabled or released to the public in some other manner?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Ways to improve the efficiency of Canada's tax system are always under review by the Department of Finance. In particular, Canada's commodity tax system has been under intensive review for some years. Several alternatives to the present manufacturers' sales tax have been identified and value added taxation is one of them. While no detailed studies of a value added tax have been prepared by the Department of Finance, the report of the Federal Sales Tax Review Committee submitted to the Government in May, 1983 has a discussion of this option.

The Department of Finance has commenced a review of value added tax (VAT) following the Federal Sales Tax Review Committee report. First hand information about the operation of existing value added systems in the European Economic Community was obtained during a recent visit to Europe by officials from Finance and Revenue Canada. Information gathered by this group forms the basis for work now in progress in the Department to evaluate this option.

This activity should not be interpreted as endorsement by the federal Government of the value added tax alternative. No decision has been made to replace the manufacturers' sales tax, let alone the nature of a possible replacement.

No external studies of federal-provincial aspects of value added taxation are in progress, though federal-provincial aspects are central to the feasibility of such an option in Canada and are under consideration in the Department of Finance.

One external study on the operation of VAT has recently been commissioned by the Department. This examines the relatively difficult areas of housing and financial sectors under a VAT framework. This study will cost $21,500.

No studies have yet been completed in the Department. When any studies are completed, the Government will examine the feasibility of making them available to the public.

DPW CONTRACTS IN CONSTITUENCY OF MANICOUAGAN

Question No. 112—Mr. Boudria:

Since the September 4 election, how many Department of Public Works contracts have been awarded or filled by suppliers or contractors, originating in part or in whole, from the Constitutency of Manicouagan and, in each case, what was the total value of the contracts?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Since the September 4 election four public works contracts have been awarded. The total value of each of the four contracts is as follows: $6,720, $23,302, $11,799, $58,670.

CABINET MINISTERS' CHIEFS OF STAFF

Question No. 125—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Were courses given to chiefs of staff of cabinet ministers' and, if so (a) at what cost (b) how long did they last?

2. Were tenders called before the contract was awarded to the Biolink Management firm and, if so (a) how many tenders were examined (b) what were the names of individuals or firms who submitted a tender (c) what were the amounts of the tenders?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): 1. Chiefs of Staff were able to subscribe to a course (a) costing $986.80 per participant; and (b) over a period of one evening and two full days.

2. No contract was awarded by the Government of Canada to the Biolink Management firm.

Investment Canada Act

PROJECT CUTS IN SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY PROGRAM

Question No. 162—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the Ministry of State for Science and Technology cut any projects in its science and technology programs in order to absorb the reduction in its expenditures required by the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance in the House on November 8, 1984 and, if so, what are they and what are the projected costs?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): There has been no reduction in expenditures resulting from the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance in the House on November 8, 1984.

DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE

Question No. 163—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the Secretary of State cut any projects in its science and technology programs in order to absorb the reduction in its expenditures required by the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance in the House on November 8, 1984 and, if so, what are they and what are the projected costs?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): The Department of the Secretary of State does not administer science and technology programs.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development, and the amendment thereto by Mr. Gray (Windsor West (p. 1302).

Mrs. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this is my first opportunity to join the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) who this morning extended his wishes for a Happy New Year to the members of the House of Commons and to all Canadians. I am sure I express the views of my colleagues in the Liberal Party when I wish all Canadians a Happy New Year. It is for that reason that I see much difficulty in this measure being introduced by the Tory Government.

Mr. Speaker, it is a well known fact that the issue of investment in Canada is of concern to all Canadians because, as was promised by our Prime Minister during the election campaign, as soon as elected a Conservative Government would create thousands of jobs. We in the Liberal Party said we would introduce a policy that would create that kind of jobs for all Canadians. Unfortunately, the kind of measure introduced by this Government will do exactly the opposite. Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate that since the setting up by the former Liberal Government of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, we had the pleasure as Canadians to exercise a degree of control over our economy.

[English]

I, too, like the Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) would like to wish all Canadians a happy new year. I, too, like the Hon. Member for Bow River and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of this country would like to help to create tens upon thousands of jobs for Canadians. But, Mr. Speaker, the motion before us with respect to the Government's move to take the teeth out of the Foreign Investment Review Agency with the creation of Investment Canada does not promise the nirvana that this Government would have Canadian people believe will be brought about. It does not offer the kinds of job guarantees and creative approaches to the new economy for which we in the Liberal Party are looking. It does not say to Canadians that we will welcome foreign investment as long as it does not result in a loss of Canadian jobs, as long as Canadian can retain the kind of control we are beginning to achieve over our own economy.

• (1620)

The Government would have us believe that in fact the Foreign Investment Review Agency was a failure, but the facts speak otherwise. From 1974, from the creation of FIRA to 1982, if we look at the figures in the manufacturing, petroleum, natural gas mining and smelting sectors—in fact, in all sectors of the Canadian economy—we see that Canadian ownership began to play an increasing role in our investment. I should like to bring a personal example to bear. If we look at foreign multinational companies, those which have caused closures of many Canadian plants during the economic downturn, we see that those firms did not look to the Canadian Government to ask how we could keep our economy going. They did not look to the Canadian people to secure jobs and to guarantee jobs for them. When times got tough, foreign investment got going; they left this country in such a way as to leave Canadians employed in branch plants with no jobs, no security, no hope for the future. In the 10-year period since the introduction of FIRA, Canadians have begun to realize the objectives of gaining control over our own economy.

Certainly it is with great fear and trepidation that I look at the policy of the Government which is to snuggle so close to the American President and Republican economic policies of the United States as to embrace the whole concept of free trade. We know by quoting a former member of the Conservative Party that not all foreign investment is necessarily good for the economy. I refer to an article which appeared in The Citizen this January in which is was indicated that it was naive to think that all foreign investments would boost the economy and that some capital could bring harm, as economist and former Tory Member of Parliament Jim Gillies warned in a newspaper article.

We know that if the Government moves in the direction of free trade which has been espoused by a number of its members as we will see, according to estimates by the Ontario Economic Council, under multilateral free trade, employment in leather goods, miscellaneous manufacturing and machinery would be cut by at least 10 per cent and the knitting mill industry in Canada virtually wiped out.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the Quebec government members support a policy which will lead to the total destruction and disappearance of the Canadian textile industry. As a representative of a constituency in South Western Ontario, I saw Wabasso close down in that region, and I know quite well that the Canadian people would support a policy whose major objective would be to maintain and guarantee jobs for Canadians.

[English]

I see nothing in this government legislation which tells Canadians that we will welcome foreign investment as long as it is coupled with the protection of Canadian jobs. I should like to turn to Gallup—

—the poll which says that more than two-thirds of Canadians are afraid of losing their job.

[English]

We have a challenge in this House of Commons which involves a made-in-Canada economic policy including a move toward full employment, creative measures relating to the issue of early retirement and a stimulation of the economy on a domestic level through the development of an industrial strategy, not merely a scraping and bowing to foreign investment such as was articulated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he went to New York to say that the country was up for sale.

If there is one heritage of which the Liberal Party can be proud, it is that we have Canadianized our economy. Unlike a former Prime Minister who said that we should be drawers of water and hewers of wood, this Party believes in stimulating the economy at the secondary level, even if it involves certain elements of domestic protection. I know about a situation in my own riding involving Susan Shoes. Very shortly the Government will be faced with the opportunity to renegotiate tariff quotas with respect to the importation of shoes. My colleagues and I will be fighting hard, not only to save jobs for Canadians but to tell multinational firms what we want, as we did with FIRA. FIRA was not a block to foreign investment to Canada. FIRA was a tool with which we told companies that if they wanted to come to Canada to take advantage of our tremendous natural resources and tremendous productivity offered by Canadian workers, they would be able to do so by ensuring their participation fully in the Canadian economy, including the job guarantees which we do not see in the document tabled by the Government.

Earlier in a discussion regarding this Bill I said that it should be renamed. It should not be called Investment Canada. It should be renamed "Abandon Canada". Under the lack of leadership of the Government which we have seen with the star wars policy and with the shallow shell of a foreign investment review policy, this is a Government which is not committed to a made-in-Canada economic strategy. It is not committed to creative new ideas. It is not committed to job creation and job guarantees for millions of Canadians who are looking for leadership.

It is on that sad note that I conclude my remarks that the new year will not be a very happy one for Canadians unless the Government agrees to our hoist motion to sit on this Bill for at least six months before proceeding with a measure which will mean lost jobs for Canadians from coast to coast.

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise in the House and participate in the continuation of the debate on Bill C-15, a Bill which will benefit all parts of Canada through the encouragement of investment and the creation of jobs. It will be particularly welcome in my riding of Kent in southwestern Ontario.

We have an area with some of the most productive agricultural land in Canada. We are also very progressive industrially and anxious to expand the manufacturing sector. New housing areas are continually growing. Just last week we had an announcement of an interest free federal-provincial loan to help build 32 units of moderate-cost rental housing in the City of Chatham. We have natural gas supplies, unlimited hydroelectric power and good water supplies, along with excellent highways and township roads. We have all the requirements for industrial growth. What we need is capital.

Canadians want jobs. That is their number one priority, and it is certainly understandable. As a Government we want to make it possible for private industry to provide those jobs. Government alone cannot provide long-term, meaningful employment. Although I know some Hon. Members in the House have expressed the view that the Bill before us will result in lost jobs, frankly I do not believe it.

In a survey this past summer, the European Management Forum ranked Canada as twenty-eighth out of 28 nations in its receptiveness of foreign investment. That figure would not present any problem if we had ample investment capital in the country to develop industrially to the point which is necessary to put our people to work, but it is obvious that we do not have it and that FIRA was not doing the job despite the defence put forward for that agency in the course of this debate.

An Hon. Member opposite was worried that this Bill would steal jobs from working men and women. The gentleman was further worried that economic and social policies in the country would be determined by foreign investors. I remind him that between 1980 and 1984, $18 billion of direct investment capital left Canada. There is no need to ask what effect that had on working men and women. The answer is obvious.

The Foreign Investment Review Agency, or FIRA as it is called, was established in 1974 to screen foreign investment proposals and to determine if those investments would have significant benefits to Canada. Unfortunately, instead of encouraging investment, it sent out signals leading interested foreign and domestic investors to think Canada was not receptive to foreign investment.

The Bill before us will undo the damage that FIRA has done, and it puts a new agency into place with a clear mandate to encourage and facilitate investment, with a fresh and different philosophical approach. I think the approach is worth noting and I draw attention to the preamble to Bill C-15 which states that "increased capital and technology would benefit Canada" and therefore proposes "to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians that contribute to economic growth and employment opportunities". FIRA, by contrast, stresses "that the extent to which control of Canadian industry, trade and commerce has been acquired by persons other than Canadians and the effect thereof on the ability of Canadians to maintain effective control over their economic environment is a matter of national concern,". Under the present Bill, the criterion for allowance is net benefit to Canada, which is a more practical approach.

Canadians asked for change, in fact they demanded change, and the economic statement made it clear that the Government intends to carry out that mandate. As part of that change of thrust, a clear message is going out that Canada wishes to become a better place for foreign investors to do business.

There are those, of course, who believe that foreign investment in Canada is dangerous and who call for less rather than more foreign capital. That would be fine if we did not need foreign investment, but we do. The Conference Board of Canada in its second in a series of studies on the role of foreign investment in Canada received some very interesting replies to the questionnaires it sent out. According to the study's author, over half of those surveyed said that FIRA had hindered their investment plans.

The President of the Conference Board in a release last week has now concluded that although the second report indicated that there were a number of areas of concern to investors in Canada, in looking at the new legislation, each of these areas has been addressed.

This Bill has won the general approval of the business community, and I can think of no endorsement more significant than that of the Vice-President of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce who is quoted as saying, "Now we have something solid—here's the beef". I believe he put that very well.

The Financial Post of January 5 calls this new legislation a giant step forward on the foreign investment front. It goes on to call for the Government to deal with the present unfinished business and to administer the new legislation in a manner which keeps the focus on the role foreign investment must play quickly in the national economic strategy of reliance on the private sector.

For those who argue that foreign investment rules should be tightened, not loosened, there is no reason for them to be worried about this new legislation. Investment Canada, while welcoming foreign capital, still reserves the authority to review any purchase in sensitive areas or when the investment is over a certain amount. The money is not coming into Canada without scrutiny, but it will come in without hindrance unless there is a valid reason for delay.

For those who call for less foreign investment and less involvement with the U.S., it would be well to remember that almost a third of Canada's Gross National Product in 1983 was attributable to exports. Of total exports, 73 per cent went to the United States, as did 80 per cent of manufactured goods. This means that about 20 per cent of Canada's GNP and the jobs of 3 million Canadians depend on the U.S. market.

The newly industrialized countries have become more competitive, and protectionist pressures have grown in the U.S. Canada is particularly vulnerable in that our $130 billion in two-way trade is much more important to us than it is to the Americans. We should not take that market for granted in spite of our proximity to the States and our long history of friendly relations.

If we are to create 2 million new jobs over the next few years, it is estimated that we will need about $4 billion in foreign investment, and even at that we will still need three Canadian dollars for every one foreign dollar.

We have reached a point where we have to be practical in our approach. Under this new Bill, the maximum turnover time for a foreign investment application will be 45 days. The Minister will decide, rather than the full Cabinet, if the new foreign investment offers a net benefit to Canada. We will no longer read articles like the one in the Halifax Chronicle of December 8 last when, in a column about foreign investment, it mentioned the whole Cabinet pondering a $1,000 takeover when the average cost to the taxpayers of a FIRA review is $6,000. That certainly is a case of over-kill.

Investment Canada represents an honest effort to find a solution to the long-standing problem of how to get the necessary capital to develop and still maintain control over our own destiny. This Bill offers an opportunity to do both in a realistic way.

It is obvious that Canadians will not, or cannot, provide the investment necessary, and the only answer is foreign capital, since Government alone cannot provide the 1,500,000 jobs so urgently needed in this country.

In my own riding, there are firms that are ready to expand and have the expertise and manpower. What they lack is money. These firms do not want to be taken over and they are not afraid of that happening. They would welcome an input of foreign capital.

I discussed this Bill with a couple of businessmen in my riding and, in the words of Mike McGregor, President of Canadian Fram in Chatham, it is "time for the agency to develop a new personality. Even a new name helps eliminate the stifling nature that has created an unfriendly approach to foreign investment in Canada".

Don Benn, President of Benns Iron Foundry in Wallaceburg, also came out in support of this new agency, and he warned that "Canada should not consider itself a completely developed nation. We need foreign investment to increase our productivity and develop our human and natural resources and, as more foreign dollars begin to move into Canada, Canadians will likely find themselves also investing in their own country instead of savings accounts. The present level of 11 per cent of Canadian dollars in savings accounts should be reduced to about 4 per cent".

I can sympathize with the fear of losing control that comes through loud and clear in the course of this debate. I understand that view as long as it does not go beyond reason. I would say that the Hon. Member who felt that the end result of this legislation will be that Canadians' standard of living will suffer immeasurably, has not looked into homes in his riding where the breadwinner is unemployed. These people are already suffering and they are searching desperately for work. That is a situation that cannot be ignored.

I call for a realistic approach on this question of foreign investment and foreign capital. Canadians have shown no inclination to risk their capital, and the economy cannot expand without the necessary funds. It is as simple as that.

Under this new agency, potential foreign investors with less than $5 million will be able to proceed without review. With respect to the fears expressed about harm to the already struggling business community in Canada, there is no reason to think that that will be the case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I respectfully advise the Hon. Member that his 10 minute period is up.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Social security (a) Level of revenue affected by budgetary cut-backs (b) Budgetary cut-backs—Position of Baie-Comeau residents; the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Unemployment insurance (a) Policy applicable to pension income and severance pay (b) Calculation of benefits; the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—National Revenue—Verification of research and development investment.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and on the amendment of Mr. Gray (Windsor West) (p. 1302).

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate. What the Government is proposing to do is of crucial importance to the Canadian economy. I say "proposing to do" because there is still a serious question as to whether this legislation will get through this House. By debating the legislation we hope to give the Government time to reflect on what it is doing, and by making points in debating the legislation we will give the Government reason for reflection.

In this legislation the Government is proposing to abandon the review of foreign direct investment in Canada. It will abandon any effective review of that foreign direct investment. It is taking the controls away from foreign direct investment and at the same time promising that this will bring about economic renewal in Canada and that it will provide jobs for Canadians. This is an empty promise and I intend, while speaking today, to demonstrate why that promise is empty.

I think we must also ask ourselves, if the action that the Government is proposing to take will not result in economic benefits for Canada, in economic renewal or in a greater number of jobs, why is the Government taking this action? It seems to me it is taking this action for a number of reasons, but one of them deals with its ideological commitments. The Government which was elected on September 4 has an ideological commitment to the unregulated free market. Its philosophy is similar to that of the American economist, Milton Friedman, who was the idea man for the economic experiment that took place in Chile right after the coup d'état, the death of Salvador Allende and the putting in place of the military régime. In that country, a monetarist economic experiment was carried out which was a total and utter disaster for the economy of that country, a country which was once the most industrialized nation in the southern hemisphere.

This Government is committed to carrying out the same kind of experiment here in Canada. It is committed to hitching our economic wagon to the philosophical notion of an unregulated free market. It is bringing this legislation forward because of its ideological commitment and not because of a reasoned examination of the economy and of the likely results of its action. This is sad because Conservative Members belong to a Party which historically has recognized the need for a national economic strategy in this country. The first Prime Minister of the country ran on the platform of a national policy. Clearly, if Canada is to survive in the very harsh competitive environment that exists internationally today, we need a national economic policy.

This Party is abandoning its own traditions and heritage in the economic field. Its move to free, direct foreign investment and away from regulation is not only misdirected but is also sad. It is an abandonment of the Party's own political heritage.

I would like to deal with some facts about the Canadian experience with direct foreign investment in order to give the Government some reason to reflect on its notion that the deregulation of the entrance of foreign investment into Canada will be of benefit to our country. Foreign-controlled firms do not spend as much as Canadian firms on research and development. This is very significant because research and development underpins economic growth and productivity.

I wish to read a few statistics into the record which come from the Economic Council of Canada. We all know that small firms are the firms that account for most of the job-creation activity in a modern economy, so it is crucial to observe what is happening with small firms. Dealing with firms that employ fewer than 50 employees, the ratio of research and development over sales is 11.2 per cent. What is the record with regard to foreign companies, Mr. Speaker? If foreign direct investment is to be a great boon to the Canadian economy, we would expect that the ratio would be higher or, if not higher, then at least the same as the ratio for Canadian companies. While Canadian companies with fewer than 50 employees have a research and development over sales ratio of 11.2 per cent, the ratio for foreign companies of the same size is 3.3 per cent. Foreign companies spend less than a third spent by Canadian companies on research and development.

If we are concerned about the country's record with regard to research and development and if we are concerned about the impact of our policies on small business, one of the great creators of employment, then we should ask ourselves about the action of the Government to deregulate the entrance of foreign investment into the country. However, perhaps this is simply an aberration. Perhaps this is only the case with small firms that are involved in the economy. Perhaps when dealing with larger firms, foreign-controlled companies might lead to greater research and development and therefore to a better Canadian economy. Let us examine some of the facts.

In firms that employ 50 to 100 employees, the ratio of R and D over sales for Canadian firms is 10.1 per cent. The ratio for foreign-controlled firms is 4.3 per cent. That is less than half of the rate of investment in research and development of Canadian firms. With regard to firms that employ 100 to 200 employees, foreign firms invest at a ratio of 3.7 per cent while Canadian firms invest at a ratio of 9.1 per cent. Dealing with firms that employ more than 500 employees, Canadian companies invest at the rate of 10.3 per cent while foreign firms invest at the rate of 2 per cent. That is about a fifth of the rate of investment made by Canadian firms.

If we are concerned about the strength of the Canadian economy, about productivity and about our capacity to compete internationally, then we must ask ourselves some very serious questions about foreign investment. We must ask ourselves whether a particular investment will be to the benefit of the Canadian economy or whether it will be to the detriment of the Canadian economy. We have documented evidence that indicates that firms controlled by foreign investors spend less on research and development in this country and therefore undermine the strength of the Canadian economy.

It is not only in the area of research and development that the Canadian experience has taught us to be wary of direct foreign investment. For example, when a firm undertakes any particular activity, there are always spinoff benefits from purchases in the area of machinery and other productive inputs. These spinoffs can benefit Canadian suppliers. However, through experience, we have found that foreign-controlled firms import more of their requirements than do Canadian firms. Firms controlled by foreign investors spend less of their dollars here in Canada and spend more—I take it my time is running out? I will just sum up briefly, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Respectfully, the Hon. Member's time has more than run out.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, as I take part in this debate today I should like to begin with a few words which accurately describe the changes initiated since September 4. Finally, yes, finally, the Government, our Canadian Government, has initiated a true policy of co-operation with its partners in the private sector.

Bill C-15 now on second reading is the concrete evidence of the major guidelines for economic recovery which our government proposed during the election campaign. Faced with a massive national deficit of nearly $38 billion and a record unemployment rate, the Canadian Government must effect a major change of direction. The Progressive Conservative Party did realize this need for change and this is what the Canadian people have asked us to do.

People come to see us in our constituency offices. People even stop us in the street. What worries them, what they want to discuss with us, is the question of jobs. People want to work; they want jobs. They urge us to take action to improve their lot. What we are doing with Bill C-15 is precisely a step in this direction.

We want to get rid of that piece of legislation of the previous Liberal Government which has irritated businessmen and stopped them from investing in Canada. We are finally doing something to help Canadian men and women looking for a job by opening up our doors to investors. We shall abolish FIRA and replace it with Investment Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the new and vigorous initiatives taken by our Government in the areas of economic recovery and employment are realistic. They are pragmatic and draw their inspiration from the major social and economic tendencies of our industrial society. The major philosophy behind Bill C-15 creating Investment Canada tells us that the state alone can never replace a new type of partnership between the Government and the private sector. Mr. Speaker, by itself, Canada will never get out of the impasse created by the welfare state nurtured by our Liberal predecessors. In spite of its few electoralist virtues at the time, this welfare state has succeeded only in leading our country into a constitutional, economic and social dead-end.

To have a better idea of the national situation before our coming to power, we must add the unprecedented unemployment problem throughout the country, with an unenviable record high rate of 18.6 per cent recently reached in my region of Chicoutimi-Jonquière. By opening the door to foreing investors, Bill C-15 shows our national will to create a new partnership between the state and the private sector with a view to building a new social and economic order. Finally, we are abolishing the welfare state and replacing it with a new cooperation between the public and private sectors where each will respect and promote the activities of its economic partner in its own field. This is the new spirit behind the creation of Investment Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy and proud to be part of this new team, this new government of reconciliation, and to take part in the creation of Investment Canada to replace FIRA, the Foreign Investment Review Agency. It should be understood that our new open door policy to foreign investors is not simply the result of a political whim. We must recall that foreign investors, whether American, Japanese or other, were shocked to have to come before FIRA and submit to investigations which were often long and useless. In any case, the intervention of FIRA verged on the ridiculous. It is sufficient to recall in this regard that 98 p. 100 of all proposals were approved. When we want to protect Canadian businesses against potential foreign invaders, we cannot use a net with holes of that size. Thanks to Bill C-15, Canada will be open to investors.

However, welcoming investors does not mean that we will shun our responsibilities. Investment Canada will promote foreign investment. Briefly stated, a foreign investor will be able to inject directly $5 million in our economy or $50 million into a business under Canadian control without having to submit to unpleasant and loathsome investigations or reviews. This is the open door policy. However, beyond this, Investment Canada will make its presence felt by firm controls and initiatives to protect our businesses against overly strong competition or losses of control. The door will be open, but there will be controls in the case of major investments. In addition, in every case without any exception, Canadian culture and identity will have to be respected.

Mr. Speaker, Investment Canada means jobs. It provides a needed economic stimulus. Investment Canada spells an open-arms policy, not discrimination. Investment Canada is the link between recovery and prudence.

In the longer term, this new policy will change our money-saving mentality. In that respect, Bill C-15 will encourage Canadians to invest in their own economy. Those investments will indeed make Canadians appreciate the advantages of more direct control over their own economic levers.

Mr. Speaker, Investment Canada is a challenge for the future, particularly for us in remote areas.

The presence of major industrial complexes in the riding of Jonquière—pulp, paper and aluminum companies—ought to attract investors anxious to set up labour-intensive processing plants. The existing Grande-Anse deep water harbour and the impending construction of a major highway encourage investors to look favourably upon our region. I can say in no uncertain terms that foreign investors are welcome in our region.

Recently, in May 1984, during the summit on the economic development of our region, local Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean and Jonquière riding leaders did reach a regional consensus on that point.

Well, quite appropriately, the Bill sponsored by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) reflects the political will of this new government, which is to promote the establishment of industries in Canada. Particularly through Investment Canada, Bill C-15 stands as evidence that we are listening to the regions and aware of their needs, especially when it comes to gainful employment. We are doing something, Mr. Speaker, and I am proud to follow up on the concerns expressed during our regional economic summit and speak on behalf of the people of the riding of Jonquière. I fully support this Bill.

[English]

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I briefly want to say at this point in the debate that I can well appreciate the fact that the Minister responsible for this piece of legislation, either intentionally or otherwise, is not here to listen to the concerns of Members of Parliament with respect to it. There can be no question, as echoed by other members of my caucus and of my Party, that foreign investment in Canada is certainly welcome. There is no question about that, Mr. Speaker. However, there are a number of issues that we in this Party believe are paramount in the sense that we as Canadians ought to have some control, if you will, over where that investment may take place in the borders of our country. It is amazing to me, Mr. Speaker, coming as I do from one of those areas of the country which is beautiful in its geography but, unfortunately, its economic clout is not as great as other areas of Canada, to see Hon. Members on the government side stand in their places and echo the sentiment that foreign investment will rid Canada and the youth of this country of unemployment because it will create lots of jobs. But we heard in committee, Mr. Speaker, before the last federal election from a Tory provincial Minister of Fisheries. He was asked about foreign investment with respect to the fisheries and as to where he and his Government would seek financial assistance to help the crippled fisheries industry in Atlantic Canada. Despite the musings of the Tory Members of Parliament who, for the first time in this Parliament, have stood in their places and addressed the very important issue which faces the Canadian people, the Minister could not provide an answer. Therefore, I listen with a great deal of doubt to the words and sentiments expressed by Hon. Members of the Tory Party that opening the floodgates to foreign investment, whether from the United States or other parts of the world, will be of great benefit to Canadians in terms of creating jobs. I have yet to see the conclusive evidence the Government says it has with regard to creating jobs. Furthermore, in concluding my remarks at this point, Mr. Speaker—

CANADA SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved that Bill C-212, an Act to protect and enhance the quality of drinking water in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on second reading of my Bill. The Canada Safe Drinking Water Act is intended to address some of the serious concerns felt by Canadians about the quality of drinking water on which we rely every day.

The recent report of the Niagara River Toxics Committee underscores the gravity of the present environmental situation in the Niagara-Lake Ontario water system. This report is another in a long list of environmental warnings on which governments should be taking prompt action. The evidence is clear to anyone who cares to look that there is a crisis in this water system caused by toxic chemical wastes either being directly discharged or which are leaching into the Niagara River from chemical waste dump sites. No one knows, however, just how great the economic social, medical and personal costs of this pollution are at present or will be in the future.

In this Bill, I propose to move toward some resolution of this problem. The Bill provides opportunities for public involvement in the making of regulations to set maximum permissible levels for contaminants and other substances in drinking water. The Bill calls for the establishment of a Water Review Board which would be empowered to hold hearings on the safety of our drinking water. It provides for the establishment of a Water Advisory Council which would advise the Minister of the Environment of the results of current research related to drinking water quality and the effects of contaminants in drinking water. The Bill would also make it an offence for the operator of a public system to provide water which contravenes the regulations or fails to comply with monitoring and notice requirements, and would permit water users to sue to recover damages for contravention of the Act.

The Niagara River Toxics Committee was set up in 1981 to investigate toxic chemicals entering the river. It is a committee of government representatives from Canada and the United States. A recent report of the committee focused public attention once again on the magnitude of the danger posed by toxic wastes in the Niagara River and in Lake Ontario. The committee indentified 261 chemicals which exist in the river system. Of these, only 34 were considered to be of little or no concern. Fifty-seven other chemicals were felt to require immediate regulatory action because they pose an environmental or human health risk.

Because of a lack of information, scientists just do not know how worried we should be about the other 168 identified chemicals. The lack of knowledge about chemicals is a constant thread in discussions dealing with toxic contamination. Most chemicals have not been in existence long enough for us to know what long-term effects they will have on people and on other life. Of course, the industries that make and profit from these chemicals are quick to minimize the risk, yet there is a real need for independent trustworthy information on which to base policy on how those chemicals affect our environment. Even though we are told that only minute quantities of compounds exist in our water systems, and we are constantly advised there is no immediate concern about our drinking water, this has failed to satisfy public concern on the matter.

We are told by many knowledgeable scientists and environmental groups such as Pollution Probe that the effects of bio-accumulation, dramatically increasing the concentration of contaminants in higher levels of the food chain, are indeed cause for alarm.

The Niagara River Toxics Committee identified 29 point sources located on the U.S. side of the river that contributed 91 per cent of the total pollutants found in the Niagara River. On the Canadian side are eight point sources which account for 9 per cent of the contaminants. Each day these sources produce an estimated 1,323 kilograms of metals and cyanides and 270 kilograms of organic contaminants. The non-point sources of toxic chemicals are much more difficult to estimate. However, they have a frightening potential for damage. On the Canadian side, of 17 waste disposal sites, the committee determined that only five had significant potential for contamination of the Niagara River. There is no detailed inventory on the quantities and types of contaminants likely to be found at these sites. On the American side, Mr. Speaker, 164 hazardous waste disposal sites located within three miles of the Niagara River were classified by the toxics committee as potential contaminant contributors to the river.

If no action is taken, much of this toxic material may leak into the river system. According to the Layman's Guide to the Niagara River Toxics Committee Report, which is an unofficial report produced for internal use by Environment Canada, we learn that:

> The reality is that given the existence of these dumps in their present state, it is not a question of whether this leakage will occur, it is merely a question of how much and when.

The Hyde Park dump is considered the most serious of the dumpsites because of the known presence of dioxin there. The site, which was used by Hooker Chemicals, a company now owned by Occidental Petroleum, from 1953 to 1975, after the infamous Love Canal was filled, holds 80,000 tons of hazardous chemical wastes, including an estimated minimum of one ton of dioxin, an extremely toxic chemical and carcinogen. At present, it is estimated that the total amound of dioxin that has entered Lake Ontario is roughly between one ounce and one pound. This small amount has resulted in detectable levels of the chemical in herring gulls and fish and more recently in raw drinking water. Surveys done in 1983 showed that the extent of chemical migration from the site was considerable. This site has the potential to cause an environmental disaster of unprecedented proportions.

The Layman's Guide to the Niagara River Toxics Committee Report goes on to state:

> Clearly, the Niagara River and Lake Ontario are poisoned ecosystems in which all media including people, contain varying amounts of biocides or chemicals, produced specifically to kill biota. Ethically, this situation should not be acceptable.

Again, it states:

> The sobering reality is that, given the existence of these dump sites in their present state, particularly those containing TCDD, the most potent dioxin, the potential for a contamination event that would irreversibly eliminate the ecosystem all the way down the St. Lawrence and beyond cannot be dismissed.

● (1710)

The Niagara River provides 83 per cent of the tributary flow to Lake Ontario. Four million Ontario residents draw their water from the lake and millions more from the St. Lawrence River system. According to Pollution Probe, Toronto drinking water contains traces of more than 50 hazardous contaminants. Existing water treatment facilities were designed more than 40 years ago and have effectively eliminated viral and bacterial illnesses transmitted by disease-causing agents in the water. They are not, however, capable of removing toxic chemical waste. Among the chemicals found in Toronto are mutagens, that is chemicals that will cause mutations. It is now believed that a side effect of the present chlorination technology used to purify Toronto water is that mutagens are in fact increased through this process.

Although we are told that the drinking water from Lake Ontario is presently well within safety guidelines, citizens can take little solace in the fact that there are no legally enforceable standards in existence and that the guidelines that do exist apply to a limited number of chemical contaminants. Another governmental body, the federal-provincial working group on drinking water, has developed guidelines for only 42 substances. Less than half of those relate to toxic organics. There are no guidelines for hundreds of toxic compounds that now find their way into the water system. The guidelines that do exist are often considered to be dangerously high.

When these guidelines were established they were done on a chemical by chemical basis, even though people are exposed to a whole combination of different substances. The harmful consequences of these combinations can only be guessed at because the research being done on this is minimal. Medical research has shown that often the effect of two harmful substances together is much more serious than either substance in isolation. According to the National Research Council, asbestos workers are nine times more susceptible to cancer than the general public, and asbestos workers who smoke are 92 times more likely to die of the disease. To ignore the possibility of similarly tragic consequences of minute amounts of several different chemicals in drinking water is extremely irresponsible.

Although we know that many chemicals are hazardous in large quantities, little is known of the effects of the tiny amounts of toxic material in drinking water over a long period of time. Many chemicals build up in human and animal tissues, and only after many years will signs of the effects of that contamination show. Since human beings are at the top of the food chain, we are more likely to have the strongest concentrations of these chemicals in our bodies over time.

A Pollution Probe report, Drinking Water, Make it Safe, states:

> Of the 53 contaminants identified in Toronto's treated drinking water, 16 are recognized . . . as causing cancer in test animals and/or humans . . . Also present in Toronto drinking water are industrial solvents such as xylene and toluene. Although not cancer-causing, these two solvents are known to cause liver and kidney damage from continuous exposure.

If we avoid addressing the problem now, we are ensuring that we, or our descendants, will pay an awesome price in illnesses and personal suffering.

Contaminants from the Love Canal site are believed to have caused cancer chromosome damage, birth defects and respiratory trouble. We just do not know how great a price will be paid somewhere down the road for medical treatment, hospital charges, disability pensions, days lost from work and personal suffering.

Residents of Toronto are concerned about the quality of the water they drink. It is estimated that Toronto residents spend $4 million per year on bottled drinking water. What about the economic costs of a polluted water system, Mr. Speaker? Again according to the Layman's Guide to which I referred before:

> The economic value of Lake Ontario is enormous. The replacement cost of this resource has never been estimated. Increasing contamination of this resource will make it necessary for us to undertake this calculation as it becomes obvious that this resource is not inviolate.

As I pointed out, Mr. Speaker, one of the crucial faults with the present situation regarding drinking water quality is the lack of enforceable standards. We have some guidelines but they are not enforceable and cover a very limited range of the chemicals to which we are exposed in water, and it is questionable whether the maximum limits are really safe. That is why I propose the creation of a Water Review Board which would provide opportunities for public input into the making of regulations to set levels for contaminants in drinking water.

In the face of the serious problems facing Lake Ontario and our water environment generally, I find it absolutely incredible that the actions of this particular Government would have been such that they seriously affect, if not destroy, the policing activities which have been going on by scientists through government funding over the years. The present Government says it is making industrial growth a priority in Canada. We certainly need jobs, Mr. Speaker, but let us not create them at the expense of the environment and people's health. Let me assure the Government that environmental health concerns are not seen by Canadians as a luxury.

I, along with many other Canadians, was disappointed to hear the response of the present Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) on CBC radio to questions about cut-backs in environmental research. He said he considered "environmental quality as a service; it is not in itself an engine of economic growth". This implies that environmental quality has to take a back seat to industrial growth. I completely reject that notion. It is this type of attitude which has created the environmental crisis that our planet faces today. We do not own our environment. We simply borrow it from future generations. We have absolutely no right at all to use our environment as some kind of giant sewage disposal system for industry. Surely industry and Government have a responsibility to ensure that our environment is a safe place in which present generations and future generations which have yet to be born can live.

During the election campaign, the present Government stated:

> A P.C. Government will work with the provincial Governments to establish a set of regulations which will lead to standards for safe drinking water. This will be accomplished with due regard to the best practical technology and to economic constraints.

I would simply invite members of the Government not to talk this Bill out. Rather, they should ensure that the Bill is referred to committee where the public can have full input not only into the existence of those hazardous chemical wastes in drinking water, but can also undertake a close examination and have some input as to how the Government is formulating policies in so far as they affect our environment.

I have had more correspondence, not only from constituents, but from people across the country who are seriously concerned about what the Government is doing with regard to these cut-backs in environmental projects and in research. I would urge Members of the government side to use whatever pressure they can within their own caucus circles to put pressure on the policy makers to ensure that our environment is not going to take a back seat when Government is formulating policy.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to join in the debate today since I represent the great riding of Hamilton East which happens to be the most industrialized riding in the country of Canada. The people of Hamilton, and in particular the steel workers, are well aware of the problems associated with the environment and in particular the problem of clean water which we are being confronted with in the discussion of the Bill today.

Having spent some time in the Ontario legislature, I have some understanding of the process involved with respect to provincial involvement. It seems to me that we must look at this issue of clean water, not only from the federal perspective, but also from the point of view of provincial as well as municipal responsiblity.

The Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) will be aware that the Canada Water Act was originally introduced by a Liberal Government at the federal level to give this country jurisdiction over our water. At the same time we have seen from time to time very serious problems being created because of the lack of provincial intervention.

I speak specifically of the situation in the Niagara River and more particularly about the situation in the Member's own riding of Beaches last year. The House will be aware that the federal Government, through its Capital Recovery Program, was able to provide financial assistance to try to clean up the situation of the beaches not only in the riding of Beaches, but across the City of Toronto and other regions of Ontario, including Sudbury and St. Catharines.

As a Liberal, I am proud to say that our role in bringing environmental issues to public attention takes a back seat to no one. I think of the work that was done by the former Member for Sault Ste Marie on the issue of acid rain. His committee was able to bring to the attention of the public and of Parliament the necessity for Canada to be prepared to act alone on acid rain emissions if the United States, under the leadership of its President, was not prepared to recognize the problem. The issue of acid rain is rapidly coming to a head as the President of the United States remains among the very few to recognize the direct relationship between sulphur dioxide emissions and the destruction of our environment.

It saddens me as a Canadian, and particularly as a Liberal, to see the position taken by the Government, which is again another hands off position and a refusal to intervene in the issue of environment, which is the most critical area of Canadian quality of life. Not only has the Government taken a hands off approach to the whole acid rain question, we can see through the budget review process, the environmental statement and the actions of the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) that the Government has made a political decision to cut back on budgetary expenditures with respect to the environment across Canada.

In my own area there is the Canada Centre for Inland Waters with the herring-gull collection program. In fact, the Minister was forced to do a double flip on her position. However, notwithstanding her public relations promotion with respect to the reinstatement of that program, indeed it has not been fully reinstated. Groups across Canada that are concerned about the environment have been deeply disappointed by the position of the Government and of the Prime Minister.

During the election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) took the time to send a letter to the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain stating all of the wonderful things he would do the moment he was elected. We can see the results of that. They are pitiful.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the government generally and the Prime Minister in particular have made promises concerning the environment, and although I represent the most industrialized riding in Canada, I know the days are long gone when most people claimed that environment programs were impracticable because they were costly in jobs. We realize today that by protecting the environment, we are creating jobs for the future.

An Hon. Member: What have you done over the past 20 years?

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member would like to know what we have done over the past 20 years, Mr. Speaker. I will tell you what we have done. We have implemented the Clear Water Act and established a consensus within such committees as that chaired by Mr. Ron Irwin, made up of representatives of the three political parties, and which dealt with the acid rain issue.

Before the election, all Tory members agreed that Canada should carry out negotiations with the United States to reduce the level of toxic pollutants in Canada, especially sulfur dioxides. Yet, when they formed the new government, they forgot their promises altogether. Now, they refuse to act, unless they have the full support of the American president. There is something I should like to know, Mr. Speaker: As Canadian citizens living in Quebec, Ontario, or any of the other provinces, are we merely puppets of the United States? If not, I will ask you through bills such as this one which was introduced by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) to increase the support which the Canadian people is giving to environmental issues.

[English]

In my riding, the Windermere Basin has been recognized as one of the three most pollutted bodies of water in North America, as cited by the International Joint Commission. This is a result of the negligence of provincial Governments such as that of the Province of Ontario which has refused to recognize the serious nature of the pollution problem at places like Windermere Basin and the upper Ottawa street dump in my own community.

The provincial Government's refusal to upgrade sewer systems across the province has led us to a situation where the federal Government was forced last year to try to bail out the sewage systems in the Cities of St. Catharines, Sudbury and Toronto simply because the provincial Government was not prepared to make a firm commitment to clean water.

The record is clear. The Member for Beeches has already stated the situation as outlined by Pollution Probe in the City of Toronto with respect to the Great Lakes and particularly the people who drink the water in Lake Ontario. I not only drink the water of Lake Ontario, I swim in the water of Lake Ontario. I have very serious concerns about the degradation of the quality of water as I have seen it over the last few years.

The issue of the environment is one on which we can unite across Party lines. It is an issue that involves standing up to the American administration and saying that we will act on our own to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions if the American Government continues to resist all scientific evidence and international information and if the U.S. Government continues to insist that sulphur dioxide emissions are not the cause of acid rain across our nation. We are currently the recipients of a laissez faire—

—a policy of laissez faire on the part of our government, in spite of the letter which the Prime Minister wrote during the election campaign to Canadian coalitions against acid rains. He wrote: As soon as I am elected, I shall do my utmost to raise this issue within international circles. But we see what has happened. Ever since he has been elected, he has done everything the President of the United States wanted. He has done nothing to defend Canadian rights on the environment, to defend our rights to clear water to drink, to clean air to breathe and other vested interests like those of my constituents.

[English]

The people in my riding would like the Government to live up to the promises that it has made, particularly with respect to the environment.

Politicians no longer refuse to recognize environmental change because of its expected negative impact on the economy. We now realize that we need to maintain a quality of life in industrialized countries and cities in order to expand into the sunrise industries. This Bill and other measures which can draw attention to the lack of commitment to this area by the Conservative Government are welcomed by our members and our Party. We are now entering 1985.

[Translation]

We are entering 1985. We are giving one last chance.

[English]

We will give the Government a last chance to tell the Canadian people that it will reverse its direction with respect to the environment. We will ask the Minister of the Environment not only to fully reinstate the herring-gull program but to reinstate and increase the Government's financial commitment and its international political commitment to the issues that face us with respect to the environment.

If the Government is not prepared to do this and to introduce measures that will force provincial Governments across the country to respect the demands about the environment being directed to them by our citizens, then the election of September 4 was a fraud. I must confess that the election of September 4 has been a fraud, perpetrated on the Canadian people by a Government that promised to clean up the environment, that promised to deal with acid rain and that promised to talk tough with the Americans. Instead, its promises have totaly collapsed as a result of the pandering and kowtowing the likes to which have never been seen before in the country of Canada.

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note the interest and concern shown by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) in tabling Bill C-212, an Act to protect and enhance the quality of drinking water in Canada.

The public is very concerned about what is happening to fresh water supplies destined for human consumption, especially when there is any suspicion of chemical contamination of drinking water taken from surface or ground water sources. This contamination may be caused by a number of factors, including leaching of toxic waste discharges, pesticide contained in water drained from agricultural land, pesticide percolating through farm wells, the presence of nitrates as a result of using fertilizer, the presence of arsenic and uranium in areas where there has been mining activity, waste evacuation and leakage from holding ponds and discharges.

Public concern about the quality of drinking water has led to a phenomenal boom in the sales of equipment for treating the household water supply. A number of equipment types are a matter of some concern to public health authorities because of the bacteriological problems they create. In fact, there is no legislation that provides for adequate control over this equipment. Some people have opted for bottled water, a decision that is a burden on the consumer's pocketbook, while the quality of the bottled water may be inferior to the water it is supposed to replace. A source of safe drinking water is essential to survival. Drinking water is usually defined as safe if it is devoid of contaminants while containing enough minerals to make it pleasant to the taste.

Bill C-212 raises a number of questions that concern both the federal and the provincial governments and will require further discussion with the provinces. The House is of course aware that matters relating to the quality of drinking water which come under the jurisdiction of this Parliament are the responsibility of the Hon. Jake Epp, Minister of National Health and Welfare. In line with his mandate and his responsibility with respect to the quality of drinking water, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has started talks with the provincial governments with a view to formulating proposals and tabling in the House a Bill concerning the quality of drinking water in Canada. The purpose of that Bill will be to set objectives for ensuring the quality of drinking water. The Bill will also provide for quality control of chemical products and substances used in water treatment and of equipment designed for this purpose. My Department supports without reservation the work being done by the Department of National Health and Welfare. The quality of drinking water depends on the quality of the water supply. Environment Canada is concerned with this matter and works in close co-operation with the provinces on the evaluation and protection of lakes, waterways and ground water reserves in Canada. Whenever possible, preventing contamination of drinking water before the water reaches the treatment plants is preferable to building costly treatment plants for the purpose of eliminating the contaminants. Consequently, my Department complements the activities of Health and Welfare Canada in this area. More specifically, it identifies and evaluates the main sources of drinking water, prepares federal-provincial guidelines for water quality and develops guidelines for the discharge of effluents as well as pollution control plans to promote better procedures for waste discharge.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the existence of an important committee that is concerned with these matters at the federal level, and which is chaired by my Department. Created in 1968, the Interdepartmental Committee on Water is responsible for coordinating federal programs concerning water resources and for advising the Government on such programs. Since the committee was formed, it has been busy meeting the requirements of its mandate and has held 53 meetings. A total of 21 departments and agencies concerned with water issues are represented on the committee, which has 27 members. Sub-committees and task forces are formed as needed. At the present time, five sub-committees are examining respectively the agreement on water quality in the Great Lakes, the quality of our water supplies, floods, preparation of replies to reports by the International Joint Commission and finally, the co-ordination of federal activities with respect to the Mackenzie Basin.

In addition to the work of these sub-committees, I would like to mention several problems or matters of interest that were brought to the attention of the Interdepartmental Committee last year, including the Commission of inquiry on federal policy on water; a draft policy by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans on the management of fish habitat; the Qu'Appelle water supply project; a water purification plant for the cities of Regina and Moose Jaw; the Fraser estuary management plan; the Canadian heritage waterways network; water and soil conservation in Western Canada; a study of mercury in the Wabigoon-English River system; exports of water by tanker ship; special projects in Ontario; a Bill concerning drinking water proposed by Health and Welfare Canada. Mr. Speaker, through this committee, other departments with an interest in water issues will be asked to work together with Health and Welfare Canada on drafting the legislation on the quality of drinking water to which I referred earlier.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to draw your attention to the inquiry on the federal Government's policy on water. The Commission on Inquiry is now winding up its last round of public hearings which started on September 18 in Halifax. In the course of these hearings, committee members have met with over 200 Canadian citizens and representatives of agencies to discuss federal water policy and hear briefs on the subject. The committee is responsible for identifying and describing present water problems, including drinking water, and for identifying the ramification for the provincial, federal and international jurisdictions concerned. The Committee's final report will be forwarded on July 31, 1985. There is no doubt that the recommendations on the quality of drinking water will make up an important part of it. All through this study the consultation process is viewed in such a way as to include a large number of water issues that will have some bearing on the global question of how to provide Canadians with drinking water of a very high quality.

I bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, because in my view it is premature at this point to discuss legislation on the quality of drinking water in Canada within the framework of a Private Members' Bill. I am convinced that my colleague, the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), will make good use of Bill C-212 and the results of the Pearse Committee investigation when preparing recommendations on the quality of drinking water.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take this opportunity to raise other issues. My Department is chairing the Interdepartmental Committee on Toxic Chemicals. It is the potential presence of toxic chemicals in drinking water that is the greatest single threat to human health. The IDCTC is currently preparing a number of plans for dealing with the major issues relating to those chemicals. It is important to prepare a plan to deal with good quality drinking water and to provide for the coordination and effectiveness of federal action in that area.

The traditional role of the provinces and the municipalities in areas such as the construction, operation and maintenance of water purification plants and affluent treatment stations, as well as in the establishment of standards concerning drinking water quality are of prime importance for supplying Canadians with good quality drinking water.

In drafting a drinking water quality legislation, it is important to allow enough time for the Canadian Government and provinces to thoroughly review the question, because such consultation is essential to the preparation of any federal legislation in that area.

Questions pertaining to drinking water supplies and quality have constantly been included in the priorities of the Health Ministers' Conference and the Advisory Committee on Hygiene and Work Environment. Task forces responsible to the Advisory Committee, with representatives from the Canadian Government and the Provinces, have drafted recommendations on the quality of drinking water in Canada that are currently under review. Toxic chemicals are being discussed more closely in the latest edition of those recommendations. The recommendations deal with maximum concentration of substances that can influence the quality of drinking water and water used for other domestic purposes.

My Department is co-operating in the drafting of those recommendations by giving expert advice on matters pertaining to environment, the seepage of contaminants and the end use of chemicals that can affect drinking water. The implementation of those recommendations is not mandatory. However, they are finding their way into drinking water requirements established by the various agencies.

Water quality objectives provide not only a standard to determine whether water quality is acceptable, but also a means to ensure effective management of water quality by specifying limits to protect certain uses, including the supply of drinking water.

Similar objectives have been set under the Canada-United-States Agreement concerning the quality of the water in the Great Lakes and for the purpose of other joint agreements. At the meeting of the Canadian Resource and Environment Ministers Council held in 1984, the participants decided to standardize all across Canada the water quality guidelines. Those guidelines provide the basic scientific information used in the establishment of quality goals for specific areas.

The Canadian Government will assume that responsibility, in co-operation with the Provinces, by publishing surface water guidelines. The latter will deal with a number of water uses, including domestic use, and will be of significant value to ensure Canadians a good quality water supply.

Mr. Speaker, my Department and other federal Departments as well as the provinces work with zeal on another project. I refer to guidelines concerning the quality of surface water, a project leading to the setting of standards on the quality of water. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks on the aims of standards for the quality of water and their use. The quality of water is usually measured on the basis of its capacity to meet various needs. Is the water drinkable? Can it allow the growth of healthy schools of fish or the benthos? Will a direct contact with water provoke a skin rash? Is the water adequate to irrigate the land or to water the cattle? It may be difficult to answer those questions which seems so simple especially if we consider that the accessibility of drinking water depends on public perception and the availability of adequate treatment techniques.

Fisheries depend on the management of fish species and the food chain. The industry of aquatic recreation is growing even in areas with a low recreational potential. The quality of water for irrigation depends on the type of soil and culture. It is possible to answer those questions by drawing up or selecting criteria to determine relevant qualities for a particular use. From those criteria, quality standards are set and applied by organizations to manage water resources normally intended for various uses. Those standards provide acceptable or desirable concentration limits for various matters found in water, in sediments or in biotas.

I also want to mention the National Conference on critical issues related to the quality of drinking water held last February and organized by the Federation of Canadian Environmental Associations. Delegates from Canada, the United States and Europe attended this conference. While the participants shared to some extent the same concerns for the quality of drinking water, they did not agree on the seriousness of the problem and even less on the way to solve it. It is important to take these opinions into account before introducing a bill in this House.

On the other hand, I wish to emphasize that there is no shortage of laws and regulations related to water resources. Indeed, there are already 15 major federal statutes and 82 provincial laws in this area, for a total of nearly 100. Before introducing another bill, we must make sure, like the Minister of National Health and Welfare is certainly doing at this time, that we understand the problem and have examined all the legislative options available.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that Bill C-12 is based on good intentions, but it does not really constitute an adequate mechanism to promote harmony between the Federal Government and the provinces and to protect and improve the quality of drinking water in Canada. I have already explained how the Department of National Health and Welfare, in co-operation with several other departments including my own and the inquiry committee, is now examining this question.

I therefore recommend that Bill C-12 be withdrawn until my colleague, the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare, can introduce his own bill which will allow the House to review in depth federal concerns related to drinking water.

[English]

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for London West I am pleased to participate in this debate. My riding is surrounded by three beautiful lakes. The occasionally turbulent Medway Creek and the beautiful Thames River also run through my riding. London has a system of wells which are among the most elaborate and the earliest in the history of Canada. The question of water drinkability and water safety concerns me and my constituents.

For this reason I wanted to explore and outline the system of protection and enhancement which exists at the federal level. In reviewing the Bill it is necessary to be aware of the responsibilities of the federal and provincial Governments. Also it is necessary to be aware of the areas of close co-operation between those two levels. This is an important concern in a Bill such as this one where there is a need for full and complete discussion with the provinces. The federal Government is already deeply involved in drinking water safety as are the provincial agencies.

I should like to review the range of activities carried out by the Government so that we may better put this Act into perspective. It should be appreciated that we are already involved in a wide range of activities, some of which go beyond the scope of the proposed Bill. About 85 per cent of Canadians obtain their drinking water from municipal water distribution systems. These systems include facilities for both the distribution of water and the provision of the treatment necessary to ensure safe water. While about 90 per cent of municipalities in Canada have water disinfection facilities, only about a third of them have filtration systems, a basic component of conventional water treatment. There is a great deal of regional disparity in the country in the availability of treated water. Few municipalities have facilities which could be called state of the art.

Responsibility for matters relating to drinking water supplies in Canada is, like many things, multijurisdictional. Responsibilities are shared among federal departments and provincial and municipal Governments. The provinces have the primary responsibility to protect and control water sources from which water supplies are drawn. That is their primary responsibility. Also they are to define the standards which drinking water must meet. Municipalities and water utilities are generally delegated authority to produce and deliver safe drinking water to residents. The federal Government has similar responsibilities within federal lands and territories. In addition, federal responsibilities include the conduct of research to assess water quality and to develop guidelines for drinking water quality. The federal and provincial Governments share responsibility for international water sources such as the Great Lakes.

Co-operation among federal departments and provincial or municipal agencies is very close. For instance, first, major studies of drinking water treatment have been undertaken with federal and provincial co-operation. The federal-provincial working group on drinking water is responsible for making recommendations regarding Canadian drinking water quality guidelines. Second, in the past, many water treatment plants were constructed with federal assistance through CMHC. While no funds are currently available for such programs on a regular basis, direct assistance to specific drinking water projects for municipalities has been provided by the federal Government under special programs. Third, the federal Government provides assistance to the three prairie provinces for well and dug-out construction in rural areas under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act.

This Government is concerned about the safety of drinking water and is already involved in a wide range of activities involving a number of departments. Under the direction of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), this Government develops guidelines for Canadian drinking water quality, in collaboration with the provinces and with the help of the Department of the Environment. These guidelines are used by responsible agencies for developing drinking water requirements and for assessing the safety of tapwater.

The Department of National Health and Welfare also conducts national surveys for specific contaminants in drinking water, toxicological and epidemiological studies on relationships between contaminants and human health, and research into drinking water contamination problems. Extensive work is also carried out by that Department to develop new analytical technology; to investigate techniques for water treatment for drinking purposes, alone or in conjunction with the provinces; and to conduct research and evaluation studies on home water treatment devices for private supplies and individual homes. All of this information is made available to the public in the form of publications and special information releases.

The Department of National Health and Welfare also enforces bottled water regulations and revises them, as required, and monitors drinking water quality in the workplace for all federal public servants in urban and rural environments and federal ships.

This Government also has considerable involvement in providing safe drinking water to Indian and northern communities. The Department of National Health and Welfare monitors raw and potable water quality and the operation of treatment plants, and provides advice on the design of community water services in Indian and northern communities. This work is carried out in collaboration with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and also involves training native water treatment operators.

The Department of National Health and Welfare also administers the "potable water regulations for common carriers" under the Health and Welfare Act. This important Act requires the approval and monitoring of all water supplies on interprovincial and international trains, buses, ships, aircraft, ferries and Great Lakes vessels. At the federal level, the health-related aspects of drinking water are the concern of the Department of National Health and Welfare. There are a large number of other human health-related concerns, including food, drugs and medical devices for which National Health and Welfare is responsible, and therefore it is appropriate that the Department retain the responsibility for drinking water.

I have gone on at length about the responsibilities assumed by the Department of National Health and Welfare for drinking water safety. Other federal Departments also contribute to ensuring the safety of Canadian drinking water. Environment Canada has commissioned an inquiry on federal water policy, chaired by Mr. Pearse, which has been conducting hearings across Canada on this most important topic. The results of these hearings will have a bearing on the issue of safe drinking water, and it is premature to assume what the conclusions of the inquiry will be. Environment Canada believes that it is important to protect the rivers and lakes that are our drinking water supplies. This preventive approach is surely much safer and in the long run less expensive than building expensive treatment plants to produce safe drinking water or trying to clean up contaminated rivers and lakes. Environment Canada is following this strategy and has identified as a high priority the need to identify and assess the quality and quantity of rivers, lakes and groundwaters that are major sources of drinking water. This will be carried out using existing federal-provincial agreements on monitoring the quality and quantity of water.

Environment Canada is also developing, with the provinces and the Department of National Health and Welfare, water quality guidelines for raw drinking water supplies. These guidelines will be published under the auspices of the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers and will be applicable to all Canadian waters. They will define the quality of rivers and lakes. Having defined the water quality that is necessary for our supplies, it is also necessary to put in place appropriate control measures. This will be done. In order to help protect drinking water supplies, Environment Canada develops effluent guidelines and pollution control initiatives to help protect surface and groundwater supplies.

Let us now turn to the Fisheries Act and see what is being done. Environment Canada has developed effluent guidelines and pollution control initiatives in eight sectors under the Fisheries Act. Environment Canada maintains an inventory of municipal waterworks as well as waterworks systems and it is evolving new guidelines.

In conclusion, the range and nature of these activities, and I have only introduced some of them, show that the system is in place and that there is a concern for safe drinking water. A number of studies and mechanisms of co-operation are in place. Our commitment to water safety and to the quality of drinking water in Canada should not be doubted. I believe that the machinery for co-operation among Governments is there and that it can enhance and protect water in this country. If they do not, we will not hesitate to improve on them.

Adjournment Debate

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the minute that remains, I would like to congratulate the mover of this motion. I think he will recognize that he is moving into a very touchy constitutional area. The spokesman presented the reasons why it should not be gone forward with. At the same time, be of good cheer. I am simply saying that 92 per cent of all this pollution that he talked about is a money maker. The way to get around the provinces to show them how this can be cured without spending their money and making money for the individual to do it at the same time is the quickest way to get action.

I will conclude with one sentence. Clean water is a problem for the whole world. I will wager that in the next two decades we will have in most countries of the world methods of cleaning water not only to have water that is free from solids, but water that is free of germs and viruses and, second, water that cures major diseases at the same time. That knowledge has been under way and collected over the last 14 years, oddly enough by an Ontario company. We will have that around the world in the next couple of decades, but we have to work cooperatively with the provinces with a sense of goodwill and not under dictation by the central Government.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise to advise the House of the business for tomorrow and Wednesday. I have had discussions with the Opposition House Leaders and have advised them of my intention to carry on tomorrow with the Investment Canada legislation that is now before the House. If we are able to deal with that legislation tomorrow, I would like to follow it up with Bill C-20 which deals with communications.

With respect to Wednesday, Mr. Speaker, I would like to designate that day as the first allotted opposition day. Once we have had the opportunity of carrying on further consultations, I hope I can rise on Wednesday and let the House know what will be happening during the rest of the week.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

SOCIAL SECURITY (A) LEVEL OF REVENUE AFFECTED BY BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS (B) BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—POSITION OF BAIE-COMEAU RESIDENTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to refer again to a question I raised a month ago in the House with the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), which concerned the universality of access to and eligibility for social programs in this country. The House will remember that the debate both in the House and elsewhere taxed the patience of Canadians who were anxious to know what the Government intended to do with these programs. Statements by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Prime Minister were so contradictory that public opinion was becoming very concerned, and I think that was ample justification for the debate we had in this House. Hon. Members will recall that on December 14th I asked the Prime Minister at what income level he intended to cut back or reduce benefits provided under social programs and services.

The Prime Minister answered that his Government wanted to consult. Good. It wanted to consult with Opposition Members, consult with the unions, and consult with the private sector. He referred to the First Ministers' Conference scheduled for February 14th and 15th of this year, he said how anxious he was to bring help to needy Canadians, and he urged me to co-operate with the Government; I will read his exact words: to co-operate with us in the preparation of more generous policies towards our destitute fellow Canadians. That is an admirable principle, and although it did not answer my question, which was to what income level they were going to cut back services, it was an evasive but nevertheless informative reply.

In my question I said to the Prime Minister that 90 per cent of Canadians were earning less than $35,000, that is, the majority of Canadians had tax returns that fall below the $35,000 mark. An average of $26,000 would seem more realistic. These are the same people who obviously are paying for a large part of our present social programs through their annual income tax.

Hon. Members will recall that for weeks on end the Prime Minister and his Cabinet colleagues waffled on the issue of universality, not quite sure what they wanted, not quite sure what they ought to do. Indeed, they just did not seem to be able to find a way out of their own mish-mash of electoral promises. They had made so many promises that they were forgetting many things, including their ultimate objective. They had promised jobs, jobs, and more jobs. Well, they did lower their sights. I happen to know that the unemployment rate in my riding of Ottawa-Vanier stood at 6.8 per cent one year ago and thatit is now 9.4 per cent. The unemployment rate has gone up as well in Ottawa-Carleton. Obviously, that is not because the government has created jobs, quite the contrary, it has been slashing right and left.

We were told that social programs were a sacred trust.

• (1805)

[English]

A sacred trust of this Government. But what happened? We had six straight weeks of debate, indecision, absolute confusion amongst those in the front-benches and chaos with respect to public opinion.

Mr. Blenkarn: No, no.

Mr. Gauthier: I hear the Hon. Member saying, no, no. But that Hon. Member was also absent during that debate. We on this side heard loudly every day from constituents who told us they were concerned and, indeed, very worried about the intentions of this Government.

Last Friday, six weeks to eight weeks after debate had started, and an article in the Ottawa Citizen of January 19 quotes the Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) stated:

Health Minister Jake Epp announced Friday the Government has no intention of changing the universal aspect of programs now in place, and specifically ruled out a special surtax on benefits paid to high-income Canadians.

Instead, the Government will consider other options for improving the social benefits package in a review paper to be released January 28.

This white paper or green paper—God knows what it will be, it could even be a brown paper, as far as I am concerned—will state the position, I guess, of the Government. I think it is the biggest con job that we have ever had. We hear that it is a sacred trust. We hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) setting up the Canadian public, telling Canadians, "We have a terrible situation here. We are going to have a budget which is going to have a real hard and mean touch to it. We are really going to have to give it to you guys in Canada and we are going to use the fiscal system, the income tax". But what will the Prime Minister actually use? Will he use the $1,000 interest deduction?

Mr. Blenkarn: Yes.

Mr. Gauthier: The Hon. Member says yes. I know him to be a well informed Hon. Member and I will take his nod to mean affirmative action. But will senior citizens be told that maybe their deductions will be reduced, to the extent of even being eliminated? Will the Child Tax Credit be reduced?

Mr. Blenkarn: No, no.

Mr. Gauthier: Will Canadians be also told that other exemptions, and there are quite a number of them, will be reduced in order for the Government to bring in more funds? These ways and means the Government will use to bring in new funds will be made public next Monday. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, we on this side will be studying very attentively the position of the Government on the sacred trust approach to universal programs. We will no doubt want public debate on this paper.

I see you indicating, Mr. Speaker, that I have little time left. I am sorry because I would love to debate this. I have a whole series of notes here dealing with the subject. However, I guess I will get an opportunity to debate this subject next week after we have had a chance to study the position of the Government in this paper that is to be published. I look forward to that.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) implies that the government is considering lower social security standards, particularly benefits, old age security and family allowances. The government never did announce such measures. However, we believe that a review of those social programs is necessary if we are to implement a worthwhile social policy designed to allocate our resources properly during this period when heavy constraints are a drain on the financial resources of the federal government.

We have every intention of stabilizing our social programs, while respecting the principle of equity in our social policy.

In addition, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier will recall that, in the Speech from the Throne and in our economic statement, we did announce our intention to extend the spouse allowance program to all low income widows and widowers aged 60 to 64. That measure shows that, far from wanting to weaken existing social programs, we will do our best to improve them.

I want to say again that any proposed change in social programs will take into consideration our priority, which is to protect needy Canadians. Let it be clearly understood that we have no intention whatsoever to cut the benefits of those people.

As you know, we will soon make public a working document on family allowances as well as on benefits and tax relief for the elderly. The government will be seeking the advice of all interested parties, including the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, and ask for their suggestions concerning improvements to those programs.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE (A) POLICY APPLICABLE TO PENSION INCOME AND SEVERANCE PAY (B) CALCULATION OF BENEFITS

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise regarding a question I asked of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) on November 27, 1984. It is not a debating point, Mr. Speaker, but it is a fundamental issue which the Government of Canada must confront in the next number of months. It is particularly fundamental to the senior citizens of Canada. The Government is suggesting that severance pay and pension income will now be included for purposes of determining unemployment insurance benefits for older Canadians.

There are issues in this country, Mr. Speaker, which are important, but I have never seen the hypocrisy shown by this Government regarding this important issue. During the election campaign the Tories were the Party of moderation, the Party of pension reform. But what have they done? Yes, they have reformed, Mr. Speaker, in a way which affects very negatively those Canadians who are least able to deal with those changes. The Government is saying to older Canadians, many of whom have worked for 30 or 40 years, that when they reach the age of 65 and wish to retire they will be prevented, or deferred if you will, from collecting unemployment insurance.

I hear the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) muttering over there. He does not have the guts to go into the union halls across this country and put on the record his position as a Tory Member of Parliament. That is hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker, by another Tory Member of Parliament and we see it here every day. I will not take issue with him because he is not a bad guy, if you can believe that.

To go back to my point, Mr. Speaker, this is an important issue and this Government promised pension reform. But it is hitting older Canadians in their last year of employment. It shows what the ideology, the philosophy of the Conservative Party is. On the one hand they say we must do something through moderation and reform of pensions. Their actions do not match their rhetoric. They have completely reversed themselves. They have singled out the retired person who has worked for an extended period of time and has planned with his spouse and family to set up his income so that they may take advantage of a program which they have paid into for an extended period of time.

The Conservative Party does not believe in the Unemployment Insurance Act. They believe it to be a welfare program. I do not, Mr. Speaker, and neither does my Party. We believe it to be an insurance program into which individuals across the country pay sums of money. Canadians who have paid sums of money into the unemployment insurance program ought not to be prevented from collecting UIC benefits as the Government is suggesting they should. The Conservatives will say that they will get their money from UIC. However, they will have to end up on skid row before they will be able to take advantage of unemployment insurance.

That is hypocrisy by a Prime Minister whose mutterings during the campaign were that his Party stood for the little guy. The Conservative Party stood as the paragon of all good to those individuals less fortunate than we are. What have they done? They have done the complete opposite.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I will say that Tory times are tough times. What the Tories have done to the retired workers in this country in four months is devastating. They have allowed the Minister of Employment and Immigration to take money from those who are in greatest need to hire, at a $30 million price tag, individuals who are going to police and harass those on unemployment insurance. Shame on the Minister of Employment and Immigration and shame on those sheep over there, like the Hon. Member from Mississauga. They should be ashamed of their Party and their leader. They ought to resign forthwith.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, as already stated by the Minister, unemployment insurance benefits will continue to be fairly and equitably computed for all Canadians. Under the present rules, the severance pay can be supplemented with unemployment insurance benefits. Thus for a period up to 50 weeks a double income is provided.

It has been decided that from March 31, 1985, the payment of unemployment insurance benefits will be delayed or reduced as a result of earnings paid on the termination of employment. Those earnings include more especially the severance pay, the pension, the retirement allowances, credit for accumulated sick leave, premiums, gratuities, wages in lieu of notice, holiday pay and retroactive salary payments. Those provisions will eliminate the payment from two sources but will continue to provide to the beneficiary all the advantages of the system that is making up for any shortfall while avoiding the duplication of remuneration.

As for the retirement pensions, changes will come into effect in January 1986. It will be possible to draw unemployment insurance benefits while receiving a pension, but the latter will be subjected to the rule of 25 per cent which provides that any remuneration over 25 per cent of the weekly benefits rate will be deducted from payable benefits. The postponement of those changes will allow the private sector to make necessary adjustments.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the proposed amendments will apply to all workers and not only to senior citizens, as suggested by the Hon. Member. However, temporary measures will protect workers who have already negotiated severance payments in accordance with unemployment insurance regulations now in effect. Consequently, workers receiving benefits before the enforcement of those changes will be subjected to the present rules. Moreover, workers covered by a collective agreement or an employee-employer agreement dealing with the closure of a plant will be subjected to the present rules until the expiry of the agreement.

I should like to emphasize that in such countries as Austria and Germany, older unemployed people who become eligible for old age security pensions before age 65 have their benefits suspended. In the United States, Mr. Speaker, in accordance with federal legislation, all pensions paid by the government or another party and based on an individual's past record of employment also reduce unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Dingwall: A point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): There is no point of order permitted during the adjournment debate.

NATIONAL REVENUE—VERIFICATION OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight with respect to a question that I raised with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) on December 10. It concerns the famous R and D tax credit scheme that was put through the House in the last income tax Bill presented by the former Government.

That scheme enables a company to sell its R and D tax credits in such a fashion as to pass them on to some other taxpayer. The effect of a quick flip of R and D tax credits has been to significantly damage the national revenue. That was clearly pointed out by this Party while in opposition. We were particularly opposed to this particular provision of the income tax Bill.

Indeed, the effect of the amendment of a year ago was to reduce the revenue this year by at least $1.5 billion as people have taken advantage of R and D tax flips to wipe out or substantially eliminate personal and corporate tax.

Based on the federal tax payable on an individual basis of 34 per cent and an average return of 50 per cent on an individual basis and a possible 50 per cent on a federal corporate basis, not only is there a massive transfer in any case, it is an absolute reduction in tax payable. Very few companies and individuals pay at the maximum rate. The effect of the provisions of the Act is to reduce federal tax beyond what could conceivably he paid by virtually any taxpayer.

Furthermore, the effect of this $1.5 billion loss of revenue would not be so bad, perhaps, if we received $3 billion to $4.5 billion worth of new R and D. In that case we would have changed Canada from spending about $1.1 per cent or 1.2 per cent of its GNP on research and development to something in excess of 2 per cent in one year. However, I doubt that is the case. I suspect that there has been a great deal of fudging the books with respect to R and D tax credits.

The problem I wish to raise with the Minister is that he suggests he can do nothing unless there is fraud. It is very difficult to prove fraud in tax law and criminal law. Therefore I believe the Minister should introduce amendments to the Income Tax Act, not only to deal with the matter on a fraud basis but to change the whole concept of R and D tax credits so that while the tax credits exist, they are fair and compensate companies for conducting research and development that is valued, already paid for and completed, and which is not proposed research and development. Also to provide that R and D be handled in such a fashion that we are sure when money is taken from the treasury of the country that the research and development is done and done in such a way as to contribute to the growth of the country.

We cannot go on, as did the previous government, throwing away the taxpayers worth. What we must do is change this whole provision of the Income Tax Act; not just the quick flip provisions which the Minister has dealt with by regulation, but the whole provision so that the Income Tax Act will provide, when you do R and D, that you get back a portion as a tax credit toward the R and D actually expended. If you have no taxes payable, a tax credit is not too useful to you. As a quid pro quo the Government ought to make a positive transfer to those doing R and D. After the R and D has been done, after we have the baby we ought to pay for it, but we should not be paying for R and D in advance.

Under the present system money is deducted, an account is set up and you are supposed to spend the money on research and development. There is not real tight definition of research and development. Money is deducted, transfers are made from one person to another. Bankruptcies can occur and in many cases I very much fear that the present hole in the Income Tax Act is going to lead to a massive reduction in revenue, not only this year as indicated by the Minister, but next year and the year after. The present system, while it may not lead to many prosecutions for fraud, will lead to a serious erosion in revenue with very little benefit to the national wealth.

I say to the Parliamentary Secretary that he should take back to his Minister the view that the provisions of this Act must be changed to make the R and D tax credit sensible.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, the scientific research investment tax credit was implemented in January, 1984 in respect to expenditures made since April, 1983. This scheme made it possible to transfer as a tax credit as much as 50 per cent of research expenditures to investors in a research corporation. Through one of the characteristics of this scheme, an investor could use the "sale-repurchase" mechanism of titles to make quick gains without any risk involved.

People quickly realized that this mechanism was the main way to use the scheme, with the result that the research firm involved received less than half of the funds it needed to carry out the eligible research without being subject to Income Tax payment under Part VIII. This tax must be paid by a corporation which transfers tax credits to investors. This tax is refundable or non chargeable if the corporation spends enough funds on eligible research within the prescribed time.

Therefore, in order to cope with the provisions of the legislation and those requirements, the Minister launched a review program under which assessments were made with respect to the income tax provided for in Part VIII Income Tax, and a case by case examination determined whether a guarantee should be obtained or collection measures immediately taken. When bona fide research work had been done with sufficient funds to eliminate any income tax under Part VIII, no action was to be taken, Mr. Speaker.

This has been a fair way to deal with the situation, in order to avoid abuse without jeopardizing the program.

However, in view of the questions raised as to the efficiency and effectiveness of the program, since all the funds were not directed to the intended beneficiary, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced last October 10 a freeze on the sale-repurchase of shares qualifying for the income tax credit for scientific research. That freeze will remain in force until a complete review of the program has been made, in consultation with the interested parties, including individual Members of Parliament.

The Government has taken the firm commitment to improve incentives aimed at increasing research and development work in Canada, and is seeking more effective ways of directing fiscal incentives to those firms involved in research and development work, so they may derive maximum benefits.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, common shares meeting the criteria for entitlement to the income tax credit on the purchase of equity shares will be entitled to the research credit.

Further, in order to ensure a fair transition, some arrangements were recognized as vested interests provided they had been made or substantially advanced before the announcement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Concerning the application submitted, Mr. Speaker, they will be re-examined to ensure that they are bona fide, and where any fraud is uncovered, appropriate measures will be taken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.30 p.m., the House adjourned.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, January 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and on the amendment of Mr. Gray (Windsor West) (p. 1302).

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to continue my remarks with regard to the amendment and the Bill known as Investment Canada which is before the House. When this Bill was introduced I was somewhat concerned that it came at an inopportune time. I thought, as did many Canadians, that due to the statements made in the Throne Speech and the statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and more particularly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), that a great deal of consultation would take place in Canada with regard to legislation and the direction in which they wished to take the Government of Canada.

Unfortunately, the opposite is the case. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) really wants to be the Minister of Finance, as evidenced by his actions. The Minister of Finance talks of consultation on one hand, but on the other hand implements action without any consultation. I find it quite disturbing that there was no consultation on an important piece of legislation like Investment Canada. The provinces of Canada were not consulted.

All through the years that the Conservative Party was in opposition, and particularly in the pre-election days, the sentiment was expressed that provincial Governments across the country ought to be consulted on a regular basis, not only with regard to the process but with regard to the substance. Again, Mr. Speaker, there was no consultation whatsoever. I thought that perhaps the Conservative Government would have placed the issue of foreign investment on the agenda as an item to be discussed at the economic summit. Again we hear the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance talk of consultation, mutterings if you will, and then they do the exact opposite, which is unilaterally to bring in a piece of legislation which Canadians wish to be consulted upon.

There is a need in this country for consultation about foreign investment and foreign control because it affects the daily lives of Canadians across the country. Foreign investment is an important issue. I do not have to remind Members of all the industries that are foreign controlled in Canada, but I think it would be appropriate to list three or four. The tobacco industry is 99 per cent foreign controlled. The rubber products industry is 90 per cent foreign controlled. There is 75 per cent foreign control in the chemical industry and 70 per cent foreign control of transportation fuels. There are some very important industries in Canada that are foreign controlled and I am certain that Canadians, at least in my constituency, would like to have been consulted about those changes which the Government has brought in.

I take issue with some of the comments and statements made by members of the Conservative Party that the previous Foreign Investment Review Act was hindering foreign investment in Canada. The facts do not bear that up. The fact is that over 90 per cent of those applications which were submitted and processed were approved. That is a pretty good batting average in any game. I believe that it is not very logical to suggest that the fact that a small number of applicants have been refused or the process was slowed is reason to throw out the Foreign Investment Review Act. However, it is very valid to say that where the process was slow it ought to have been improved. We attempted to do that in 1982.

I think we have lessened the negative impact or criticisms made by individuals with regard to the Foreign Investment Review Act. I do not wish to suggest that the Foreign Investment Review Act was perfect because it was not. However, I wish to quote what Duncan McDowall said about the Foreign Investment Review Agency in Canada. He talked about Canada as a place for investment and said: "Canada has long been considered a stable and remunerative place for foreign investment".

The points which are trying to be raised by the Conservative Government are simply not valid. Canada is a good place for foreign investment and we had a very good regime in Canada to protect and enhance that foreign investment in order that we may create jobs.

Other countries like Canada have had apparatus put in place to guard against foreign investment. We need look no further than the United States to see such things as shipping, broadcasting and air transportation which have restrictions with regard to foreign investment. I point out to the House that Australia also has a regime for foreign investment. Japan also has a regime to guard against and promote, if you will, foreign investment in that country. Therefore Canada had a good regime with the Foreign Investment Review Act. It has been displaced by Investment Canada. I must say that this has been done through the back door in the sense that the Government has predicated the Investment Canada Act on the claim that it will create thousands upon thousands of new jobs.

I have asked the Minister and members of the Conservative Government to show the documented evidence which would prove unequivocally that thousands upon thousands of new jobs would be created by more foreign investment and by relaxing the standards that were already in place. Where is the evidence? There is no evidence. It is a smoke and mirrors situation put in place by the Prime Minister.

As we all know, the Prime Minister is kowtowing to the Americans at every opportunity. I believe this is threatening our sovereignty as a nation. I do not want Canada to become the next state of the United States; I want Canada to continue as an independent country both in terms of its foreign policy and in terms of investment and economic policy. It is utter nonsense to think that Canadians will believe that thousands of new jobs will be created with the introduction of Investment Canada. The same myth was perpetrated against the Canadian people during the election. The Prime Minister said: "Elect me and tens of thousands of new jobs will be created". That has not been the case. He said that overnight these jobs would be created, but that has not been the case, Mr. Speaker.

What about Investment Canada? How many jobs will come out of this? Will it be one million jobs in four years or 1.3 million? What will it be? This type of thing shows a lack of depth by the Conservative Party, in particular by the Prime Minister and the sheep who sit behind him. I say to you in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that this Tory Government bent on selling Canada to the United States will have a great fall in the next general election.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the view of the majority of Canadians the most serious problem facing this country is the tremendous number of unemployed. There are 1.5 million people unemployed. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recognized that this was the main problem. During the election campaign he said the major issue that he wanted to address was jobs, jobs, jobs.

The Bill we have before us now is supposed to help us achieve the objective of job creation, according to the Government. The Government is arguing that if we only throw open the doors to more foreign investment and remove the very minimally slow downs created by the Foreign Investment Review Agency, the money will flow into Canada and create jobs.

Newspapers such as The Globe and Mail and The Financial Times have analysed this question and made it very clear, as a result of discussions with American investors, that there will be no quick movement of investment capital into Canada as a result of the passage of this Bill.

This Government seems to believe that any investment is good investment. With very few exceptions the Government intends to open the doors and put this country on the sales block. Everything will go to the highest bidder.

In the few minutes I have I would like to deal with just one aspect of investment that leads to job creation, namely the critical ingredient of research and development. The Government has emphasized the importance of research and development, particularly in the dynamic sectors of electronics, manufacturing, telecommunications, software development and other high-tech areas. The fact is that among all the industrialized countries Canada is virtually at the bottom in terms of the percentage of our Gross National Product which is allocated to research and development. While we are still hovering at about a 1.5 per cent allocation of our GNP to research and development, many of other countries are now investing 2.5 per cent or more of their Gross National Product in research and development. They are forging ahead of us, Mr. Speaker, in the use of the newest technologies.

We are told to let the money come into Canada and there will be more jobs. But in the manufacturing sector where over 50 per cent of the enterprises are already foreign owned, we have virtually no interest in, no expenditure and no concentration on, research and development. I will come back to that if I have time.

We have found, and studies have made it clear, that major efforts in the field of research and development in Canada are carried out and have been for a number of years either in Canadian universities, Government departments or Crown corporations, such as the National Research Council. These bodies are the ones which have done the research and they are now suffering from the Government's unwillingness to play a major role in stimulating research and development activities because funds have either been frozen or, even worse, cut by the Government.

I want to give one specific illustration of what I mean, Mr. Speaker. There is no better signal of the Government's contradictory strategy than the move that has been taken to eliminate the Institute of Manufacturing Technology in my home city of Winnipeg. Winnipeg is a manufacturing centre in its own right. Also it is home to two major universities and several technical institutions. It was logical to choose Winnipeg as the home of this centre which had as an objective the kind of research and development work not now being done in this country—the revitalization of techniques, processes and methods which could be used in manufacturing in the country or marketed abroad as applications in other countries.

IMT was located in Winnipeg not as a result of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) pushing the idea while he was a Cabinet Minister. It was not an example of porkbarrel politics. It was the result of long-term planning by the Manitoba Research Council which dealt with a proposal by the then Conservative Government of Manitoba to the National Research Council in 1980. An enormous amount of planning went into IMT only to be scuttled by the Government which now intends to open the doors to the free and unfettered exportation of American jobs.

The intention was to tie in the academic resources of the Universities of Winnipeg and Manitoba, the research facilities of the National Research Council and the expertise and industry experience of the private manufacturing and production sector. This is the kind of labour-intensive activity which creates beneficial spin-offs. Already 42 of the anticipated 125-member staff of the institute have been hired. Major equipment has been ordered and received. Research projects have begun at various locations across the country. To eliminate this project now is the worst of mistakes and completely contrary to this Government's supposed policy.

It was at IMT that Canada was to begin to address the problems of adapting technology, developing new processes in such advanced areas as flexible manufacturing systems, sensors, robotics, computer-aided design and manufacturing, and artificial intelligence. All these areas offer great promise and are being investigated in other countries. All could aid in giving this country the advanced manufacturing capability it needs. Yet one of the first steps taken by the Government was to cancel a project into which so much effort had been put, a project which would have benefited not only my City of Winnipeg but manufacturing facilities all across the country.

As I said earlier, many people work in the manufacturing industries. More than half of this sector is U.S. controlled and very little research and development is being done by it. One of the largest corporations in Canada is General Motors. It is virtually doing no research in automobiles in this country. Not only is it conducting research in automobiles in the United States, but it is now branching into other important fields in that country.

I should like to refer to an article which appeared some time ago in The New York Times. It indicated that the General Motors Corporation was beginning a major new research effort to integrate computers, software, robots, sensors and telecommunications systems into a highly automated manufacturing process that might lower the cost of producing automobiles and conceivably revolutionize production processes in a range of other industries. Similarly, a major chemical company in Canada, du Pont, is embarking upon new research efforts, not in Canada but in the United States. The New York Times reported that du Pont was embarking upon research to penetrate the life sciences, biotechnological and electronic areas. Scientists at du Pont are studying such varied subjects as the structures of polymer chemicals, the genetic controls of tobacco plants, the molecular biology of immunology and leukemia, and optical laser recording disks, all in this in the U.S.A.

Are they proposing to do anything in Canada? Not at all. We have the beginnings of very interesting and competitive micro-electronic companies and the beginnings of companies involved in biotechnology. These are small companies but they can lead to whole new industries which employ many people. They are cash poor and are logical candidates for a takeover by American companies. When these companies are taken over, the jobs that have been developed will be moved to the United States.

• (1125)

For that reason among others, I and the members of my Party oppose this Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in this debate on the amendment to Bill C-15, as proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

[English]

This Bill has been debated in this House for a number of days. It is becoming more and more evident that the people of this country do not want this type of legislation. If government Members across the way and those who are commonly referred to as the book-ends, those who sit on the opposite side of the Chamber from the rest of their colleagues, would take a few moments to do the following exercise, it would be of great benefit to them and their constituents.

Over the next few weeks I intend to consult the people of my riding on this issue. My next constituency mail-out will contain a questionnaire. I will ask the people of the great riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell how they feel about Bill C-15 and its potential effect of reducing Canadian ownership of our industries. From discussions I have had with the people in my riding I am sure that neither they nor the rest of the people of Canada favour this type of Bill.

When I was a member of the Ontario legislature, I sent out a questionnaire which included a similar question. The question was: "Do you feel that there is a sufficient amount of Canadian ownership of our industry at the present time?". Another question was: "Are you in favour of stricter measures to ensure that Canadian ownership of our industries is maintained?". The large majority of voters in my riding consistently expressed the view that we do not have enough control over our industries at the present time and that we should not allow the situation to deteriorate further.

The intent of this Bill is puzzling. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) described how this Bill leads us to believe that it proposes freer restrictions and wide open policies that we will be advertising in the United States and has certain hidden restrictions which, although not immediately apparent, are there. This schizophrenic feature of the Bill is somewhat confusing.

Let me give a few examples of how this Bill is confusing. We are told there will be exemption of all new business investment and all direct investments involving assets under $5 million. How does one determine whether the assets of a particular company are under $5 million? The only way to do that is to have the new agency review all pertinent documents, the books and so forth of that company, as was done in the past. Once those companies are reviewed, we can tell them that we do not have to review them because they have less than the amount that was advocated by the new Bill. Of course, in order to find that out, we must go through the process.

I find that particular feature of the new Bill to be somewhat confusing. Perhaps government Members would seize the opportunity afforded to them by the speech rotation to explain to us specifically how one would be able to identify whether or not new companies qualify under this Bill for the reasons I have previously mentioned without going through the process of examining their books. It seems to me that that is inconsistent with what the Government is attempting to do.

We are told that the final authority is now to be vested with the Minister rather than the Cabinet and that no provision for appeal to a higher authority is formally stated. Again that is a rather confusing position on the part of government Members, who on the one hand attempt to attribute to themselves such adjectives as free, open and democratic, and on the other hand will now give power to one Minister rather than giving it to the entire Cabinet, which in my view is a more democratic way of doing things. Again this is inconsistent with the message government Members are attempting to send to Americans and to all foreign investors.

We have also heard that the criterion for permitting acquisition has changed from "significant" to "net" benefit. Whether one word is used or another, it is quite obvious that we will have to examine such benefit as is derived from an investor before being able to determine whether the benefit is significant or only net.

Regardless, I think it is obvious that a good part of the process which existed before will be retained even though government Members are attempting to say the opposite. Nevertheless, the clear message they are sending is that the previous legislation was ineffective and did not welcome foreign investment. If that was the case, then why was it, as pointed out by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), that the approval rate was 97 per cent? If foreign investment was not welcome, why did we approve 97 per cent of it? Presumably, Mr. Speaker, we did so because the previous legislation was indeed quite effective.

I think it is important to recognize that at one point the previous legislation needed amending and it was amended to reflect changing times. It is true that foreign investment is welcome. However, it is not true to say, as government Members are attempting to say to the Americans, that foreign investment shall be unrestrained.

We respect the United States. It is our very close neighbour, a very powerful nation in the world and a nation which has been very friendly to us. However, as I said when I spoke on this issue previously, just because someone is our friend does not mean that we open our door, give him a set of keys and let him in at any time. I have friends but I do not give them keys to my house. If I do, I do it sparingly and for very good reasons. However, doing that does not make our friends any less friendly to us. It simply means that we assert the authority that we have as a nation. I do think it is time that we recognized that to be masters of our own house does not mean that we are to be unfriendly.

Some of my colleagues have stated that the United States and indeed several other countries do have restrictions like we have and some countries are even stricter than us with regard to the ownership of airlines, broadcast industries and so on. Recognizing that and recognizing that other countries surely have a right to such restrictions, we must recognize that we have a right to such restrictions as well.

I am thinking of the situation which now exists in this country with regard to restrictions planned for the area of agriculture. I am sure all Hon. Members of the House are familiar with the potential danger created by the Americans cutting off imports of pork products from Canada to the United States. Several thousands of jobs could potentially be affected by this. We do not hear that discussed much in the House. The only think we hear from the Government is that we should have our door wide open. When we greet a friend we sometimes do open the door, but we must recognize that we are our own masters and that foreign investment in this country, albeit welcome, should only be allowed when it is of the greatest benefit to all Canadians.

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer you and all Members of this House my best wishes for the new year, and I hope that what we do this year will be of benefit to all Canadians.

I represent the riding of Beauce, where Canada begins. We are on the U.S. border, with the State of Maine as our neighbour. As you may know, the people of Beauce tend to get along very well with their neighbours and to co-operate with them, so we are particularly aware of the benefits of good relations, and I am therefore on familiar ground when I speak to Bill C-15.

Canada's national policy must be based on international objectives. Economic renewal starts with renewed investment, a very welcome challenge for this Government. The people who elected us have faith in us. We must keep a level head and we must be realistic. We all want to succeed, but we will have to open our doors to investors, to those whose faith in our country and our government has been restored. Investment capital remains the basis for economic success.

Investment is the key to economic growth because it will help finance the facilities that will make Canada more productive and create more jobs for Canadians. That is what we want. Canadians will appreciate this new boost for the economy, because the unemployment rate in Canada is now 11 per cent, while the real rate is probably even higher. Considering this situation, Mr. Speaker, we must ask ourselves what FIRA has been able to achieve after ten years of operations and whether it has any legitimacy. That is why our Government has decided to act by tabling this very important piece of legislation. We must remember that before the good years in the sixties and early seventies, Canada was built on foreign investment, first British and then mainly American, and that without such investment, it would have been impossible to industrialize this country.

Whenever measures to control foreign investment were introduced as an expression of nationalistic fervour, they have led to underdevelopment, and I am thinking, for instance, of Argentina and Mexico. Local capital has never benefited from such measures, since it is a fact that the specific nature of investment, a critical factor in industry, is to act as an engine, not as a dead weight. Our economic growth depends on investment. In Canada, a good example would be the oil industry. Sheltered like a hothouse plant by the Liberals' National Energy Program, Canada's oil industry has lost access to foreign capital, resulting in the unprecedented action taken by the Government, and I would refer Hon. Members to the monster Petro-Canada has become.

According to Jacques Forget, editorial writer for "Finance" in Montreal, in addition to investment being the economy's moving force, its impact is reinforced by what economists refer to as the multiplier effect. Traditionally, foreign investment in Canada has been the prime engine of economic development. A responsible government, as we claim to be, must act to bring down a federal deficit that has increased steadily under the Liberals.

This Government realizes that to encourage economic growth in this country, it will have to gag FIRA. After the Prime Minister's speech before the Economic Club in New York recently, foreign investors realized that with the advent of the Progressive Conservatives, Canada would again become a prime investment area, where investors would be able to invest safely and profitably. We are going to show our confidence in the long-term investors, in business and in the individual entrepreneur. The Canadian economy will benefit as a result of increased employment and a rising balance of payments, a decisive factor in determining the value of the dollar, all of which will certainly reduce pressure on interest rates.

All this can be done because this Government is a Government of people who work, people who save, people who invest, people who create businesses and jobs. Mr. Speaker, there is a renewed faith in the free market system, in the freedom of Canadians and in Canada.

For 20 years we have been living beyond our means because of an irresponsible Government, some of whose members are among the survivors opposite, now under a new leader with a recycled image. Since September 4, Canadians have had confidence in our Government and according to the polls they are showing that confidence today. It is a Government that is promoting realistic and courageous policies.

Mr. Speaker, on the Opposition side we often hear a number of fantastic and I might even say frivolous comments. Why don't these people stand up to make speeches and give their point of view? All we hear are a lot of grunts and groans that tend to disturb whoever has the floor. We must make difficult choices for the benefit of future generations. Canadians put an end to Liberal rhetoric when they realized that Liberal Government was not the solution to Canada's problems because it was the problem.

Future capital requirements will probably exceed any since the industrial boom right after the Second World War. Expanding industries such as telecommunications, robotics, computer systems and genetic engineering all require massive investment and are thus capital-based. For instance, today's secretary works on equipment worth $3,000, but tomorrow's secretary who will be a computer specialist, will require an investment of as much as $25,000. The growth in productivity will certainly be considerable—that is not the point. When all is said and done, we have no choice. Increasingly, our labour force will consist mainly of people who are qualified for white-collar jobs. They will not be productive unless they have the tools this kind of work requires and unless we can benefit from adequate foreign investment.

Mr. Speaker, let us be realistic. We must understand and accept that any reduction in youth unemployment will have to be preceded by foreign investment. Those who are opposed to foreign investment are thereby opposed to reintegrating young people in the labour market. We must realize that we will not get the jobs Canadians need unless we invest the capital this requires. We must be realistic. We need others to help our economy grow. President Reagan has understood this. The economic upsurge in the United States is mainly due to an increase in investment which means greater confidence in the government. This has helped increase GNP growth from 0.7 to 1.8 points, thanks to the pro-business philosophy of the Reagan Administration.

Mr. Speaker, if the United States is able to attract foreign capital, why should Canada not attract capital from the United States and elsewhere? Our country has to rebuild capital supplies to meet the challenge of a new industrial revolution. This month, in his message on the State of the Union, President Reagan stated, and I shall end on this note: "America is back". We might add: "Canada will follow".

[English]

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in the debate on Bill C-15, the Investment Canada Bill, and I speak in support of the amendment before the House to read the Bill a second time six months hence.

I am opposed to any relaxation of a law which already allows decisions to be made regarding investments that are against national interests and will increase the possibility that such development of the Canadian economy will not serve the needs of Canadians, whether as Canadian investors, as engineers and developers of technology, or as suppliers of products. On a number of different points it is possible to demonstrate not that we need a relaxation of the law, but that instead we should administer more strongly the legislation which already exists.

I would like to explore some of these areas because it is very important to appreciate what will be the consequences of these decisions. In the process of thinking about these decisions we must ask ourselves whether the Government has done more than to suggest in an ideological way, as an article of faith—as did the last speaker—that we need to open the doors wide, and that it is only by those means that we can ensure that the country will achieve full employment and that Canadians will again know prosperity.

The Foreign Investment Review Agency has been in operation for about a decade. The record of the Agency demonstrates the importance of political will. In particular, during 1984 it became obvious that a Government that was not concerned about the consequences of foreign investment—which was recognized time and again at the end of the 1960s and through the 1970s—could in fact ensure that the Foreign Investment Review Agency represented little hindrance to foreign investment. One could conclude from that that the legislation before us is to some extent designed to fly the flag, or perhaps to pull the flag down, before foreign investors, in a supine surrender to their investment decisions which would be exercised in Canada.

During 1984 FIRA approved many foreign investment decisions. In only a very small number of those cases did it actually require foreign investment to lead to the creation of employment in Canada. In few of the cases did it even require that there be new investment in Canada from outside. From the beginning of 1984, 16 per cent of the applications approved promised neither new jobs nor new investment. Of course, in those cases one had to ask what were the consequences of the investment decisions being approved, considering the change of control which was taking place in Canada with the foreign operators having a larger influence in the direction of the Canadian economy. On that point I could say that the consequences of these foreign investment decisions have become quite clear in my own community.

In the last week there has been concern in the City of Thunder Bay about the prospect that one of the stores which Canada Safeway operates is likely to be lost. During 1983 the food retailing business in Thunder Bay was significantly consolidated when Loblaws and Dominion Stores retired from the scene. The A & P and Canada Safeway took over these stores and established, as far as national retailing outlets are concerned, a "duopoly" in which the two of them were jostling for control of the market. The Foreign Investment Review Agency allowed that to go ahead even though it realized that Canada Safeway, in its acquisitions in Thunder Bay, Winnipeg, Regina and perhaps other centres, was significantly increasing its domination of the market. What FIRA apparently did was to require some reduction of outlets as a means of trying to increase competition and reduce this domination.

It now seems that Canada Safeway has been using that decision as a means of closing down perhaps its oldest and smallest outlets in order to consolidate its operations in large centres. What this means for one area of Thunder Bay is the loss of an old and much patronized store, forcing its patrons to go some distance to shop. In the case of senior citizens who do not have cars this would mean travelling by bus or probably by taxi in making trips of some distance in order to buy their groceries. That is obviously a serious matter for people with very limited incomes.

Of course, blaming this on FIRA is taking the matter up in mid-course. What we have to consider far more is the activities of large food retailers, in this case two American-controlled companies, who have succeeded in establishing dominance in a community and then forcing people into that kind of unfortunate plight. Obviously one can only regret the disappearance of Dominion and Loblaws from Thunder Bay because they represented more competition in the market. Surely this is a demonstration of what the consequences of foreign investment can be.

I submit that we have not had any substantial demonstration in this country of the advantages of foreign investment. People say as an article of faith that it is necessary, but of course my colleagues have taken a leading part in focusing on the dangerous consequences. We have had a great deal of superficial discussion of foreign investment. However, there has been little recognition of the fact that the kind of foreign investment we are faced with these days is one particular style of putting capital to work which has much more far-reaching consequence than some of the other possibilities.

When this matter was being debated last December, someone asked about the extent of British investment in the United States through the 19th century. What that person failed to note is that that investment was very largely that of portfolio investment. That is to say, British investors bought shares in companies. They invested in American railway bonds or whatever. Unless they were brought together in a committee because the enterprise was not doing well, they were hardly involved in any kind of controlling interest in the activity.

Portfolio investment, joint ventures and possibly licensing agreements are all means by which capital can be obtained. But what is not being recognized by our colleagues on the government benches for the danger it represents to the Canadian economy is that foreign investment these days is in the form of a subsidiary. No matter how profitable it is, a closely held corporation will never be available for investment by Canadians unless we have a tightening of the law and we demand that the enterprise offer shares to Canadians so they can participate in the profits. Instead we have a subsidiary with presumably some injection of foreign capital at the outset, but after that it draws on Canadian capital sources. That surely, even on the theory our friends have on the other side, will represent a reduction in capital available to Canadians.

In these various ways, where the subsidiary draws on foreign technology rather than encouraging Canadian technology and research and development, where it draws on the parent for products and encourages the importation of materials to Canada rather than production in Canada, we then see the way in which the activities of the subsidiary go against the national economic interest. In those circumstances I can only regret on behalf of the Canadian people that a government which calls itself national will undertake these actions of expressing a colonial mentality in selling out the interests of the Canadian people.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, in the eighties, few people fail to agree with the need to increase investment capital, both foreign and domestic, in order to give our economic development a new impulse. Clearly FIRA, which approved more than 90 per cent of foreign investment applications over the last ten years, has played a major role in developing our economy.

FIRA was established in 1974 to respond to the concerns of the Canadian people over the ever-increasing foreign control of our economy. In 1973, for instance, foreign investments in Canada totalled $32.9 billion, as against a mere $20.6 billion in the United States, whose economy was then ten times greater.

In 1973 foreign interests, mainly American, were controlling 57 per cent of the Canadian manufacturing industry, 75 per cent of our oil and gas industry and 58 per cent of our mining industry. Surveys had shown that 70 per cent of all Canadians believed our economic opportunities were highly imperilled by such a degree of foreign control.

Over the past ten years, under the previous Liberal administration and thanks to FIRA's efforts, the level of foreign control on Canadian industries and especially the energy sector has decreased significantly. Over the last ten years, although investments have increased from $690 million in 1974 to $2 billion in 1983, the amount of foreign control has declined significantly.

What is the Progressive Conservative Government proposing in its foreign investment policy? First, any new foreign investment will no longer have to be reviewed. Second, any takeover of companies with less than $5 billion in assets may be done automatically. With these two provisions, the Government opens the door to the foreign control of 90 per cent of our industries and companies. Third, in the case of an indirect takeover, or in other words where a foreign company with a Canadian subsidiary is taken over by another foreign company, the transaction will be reviewed only if assets exceed $50 million.

The Progressive Conservative Government is thereby handing over our economy, bound hand and foot, to foreign capital, without concern for the actual impact of foreign investment on this country's economic growth.

Canada is open for business again.

[Translation]

Or rather, as the Bible so aptly puts it, it has sold its birthright for a plate of lentils.

[English]

Canada is open for business again.

But the way the Conservatives see it, it is the business of others before ours.

With respect to foreign investments, we ought to know that a great many subsidiary companies of multinationals and quite a few national companies operate under a patent or licence issued by a foreign firm and must do so within the limits of what is called restricted mandates, under which research and development activities, production and international marketing are limited. Restricted mandates quite often specifically ban exports to another country, but the public at large is unaware of this since the companies themselves generally keep such mandates secret. Obviously, those restricted mandates severely hamper Canada's export efforts and we will have to try to have some of those restrictions lifted. Whereas the Liberal government always stressed, through FIRA, the importance of attracting to Canada companies likely to spur our economy, the Conservatives would rather sell out the country to the highest bidder.

[English]

Canada is open for business again.

[Translation]

But I ask, Mr. Speaker:

[English]

For whom? Business for those who tell us that our companies can no longer export as they wish, that they will no longer be able to invest the moneys required for research and development?

Over ten years, FIRA approved more than 90 per cent of investment applications. Rejected applications had often been filed by individuals or companies anxious to do business in Canada and take advantage of our resources without contributing anything to this country's development, since they would have saddled their Canadian subsidiaries with restricted mandates.

Whereas the Conservative government wants to implement a laisser-faire policy which will enable anyone, on any condition, to take over any Canadian company, the Liberal Party of Canada has always emphasized the urgency of securing foreign investments which would create real economic growth in Canada and long-term jobs for Canadians. We believe it is important to have a control mechanism such as FIRA so as to make it possible, among other things, to promote foreign investments in Canada which create subsidiaries with world-wide rather than restricted mandates. It is only because of tariff avantages that subsidiaries locate in a country, and these subsidiaries are fully dependent on the parent company for everything related to product design and product marketing. They will remain in that country only when the tariff advantages are financially beneficial to their investors.

If we want to promote economic growth in our country rather than increase the profits of foreign investors, we do need an agency like FIRA. The point is not to turn down investments offered by multinational companies, but rather to ensure that their subsidiaries have what are commonly called in economics world mandates.

It is the responsibility of the Government to ensure that companies created by foreign investments are independent production bodies which are asked by the parent company to design, manufacture and sell on the world market one or more than one product.

Through its policy, the Liberal Government always tried to encourage companies with world mandates to locate in Canada. You, the Conservatives, have just destroyed ten years of work. Through FIRA, we had always emphasized the international marketing aspect because we know that subsidiaries with a world mandate invest a lot in research and development.

With the creation of Investment Canada, small businesses will become choice targets for foreign takeovers. The clause which exempts acquisitions of small businesses from any review is probably the most dangerous clause of this Conservative Bill.

Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party will sell public corporations to their most dangerous competitor and allow the acquisition of our small businesses by interests which will take all they can out of them before going somewhere else.

[English]

Instead of saying that Canada is open for business, we should say that Canada is ready for a close-out sale by the Conservatives.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in this debate on the amendment which effectively hoists Bill C-15 for six months. I think that it is a wise amendment because it gives the Government an opportunity to rethink its position.

I do not think there is anyone in this Chamber or this country who did not feel a considerable amount of pride when we repatriated our Constitution. I think that deep down Canadians started to feel a sense of being Canadian, that we can, within the borders of Canada, amend our own Constitution. It was a point of maturity to be able to determine the way in which our country should be governed. I think that is very important to a sense of being Canadian.

Another aspect of Canadian maturity is the question of controlling our economic destiny; in other words, being in control of our economy and the way it develops and grows. That has been sadly lacking. An example of that is the climbing interest rates in this country in 1982. Pressures were being put on the Government in the House and across the country to do something about rising interest rates. The Government of the day, a Liberal Government, consistently said that it could not do anything about them because they are determined in Washington and on Wall Street. It is the American economy that determines the interest rates in this country. It is the American economy that by and large determines what takes place in this country. We all hoped and prayed that the economic recovery in the United States would be such that their interest rates would come down so that our people could get some relief from high interest rates.

Part of economic maturity is being able to determine where investment coming from outside the borders of Canada should be. We should be able to determine whether those investments are in the best interests of Canadians. When I consider my own situation as an immigrant to Canada, I believe it is a privilege to be a Canadian citizen. I realize that there is a contribution which must be made to the life of Canada. We immigrants believe that. I believe we should look at foreign investment in the same way. It should not come in, make a quick buck, rip and run.

I believe there must be a commitment to developing Canada. Of course, investors can derive benefits from this as all Canadians do. Screening foreign investment is important because we cannot assume that our good friend, the United States, can always be trusted. In the past, our good friends have been known to do very unfriendly things to Canadians. For example, the CIA paid money to Canadian psychiatrists to do tests on Canadian citizens.

There are other examples in which foreign parent companies have forbidden the Canadian subsidiary to sell to other countries because the United States Government does not recognize the political philosophy of those other governments. I refer particularly to the sale of Ford vehicles to Cuba. The American Government instructed Ford to instruct its subsidiary here not to sell vehicles because the American Government had an embargo on Cuba. Our former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, never took such a position yet we had an American law being enforced on a Canadian subsidiary on Canadian soil. We also had the prevention of Robin Hood Flour, a subsidiary in Canada, selling to Red China, as it was called at that time. However, we have recognized the Government of China since 1970.

Those are examples of very unfriendly acts which are sometimes taken by our good friends. Occasionally the Americans get caught up in their own sense of power and view countries like Canada as an extension of themselves. That is a denial of mature Canadian citizenship and that is why there is a need for screening.

It is interesting to note that the first place the new Progressive Conservative Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) visited after being elected was Washington, to pay a fealty and kiss the ring of king Ronald. The second place he visited outside of our borders was Wall Street, to tell the bankers—

Mr. Stewart: Where it's at.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Conservative Member on the other side says that's where it's at.

Mr. Stewart: That is right.

Mr. Rodriguez: He went to assure the bankers that Canada was up for sale. The Conservatives have tried that in Saskatchewan and in British Columbia. British Columbia was opened up by the Social Credit Government of Bill Bennett. It was up for sale. The foreign investors simply came in, ripped and ran. That province today is experiencing one of the most stifling unemployment rates in this country. It is a fantastic province with great potential but is being devastated by unemployment and hard times.

It is quite obvious that the Government is bowing down to the imperialistic monopolies of Wall Street. There is no doubt that they must give some assurance to the money bags of Wall Street that the country is up for sale so that foreign investment will come to Canada. The Government has assured them that foreign investment will not be screened.

Every mature country in the western democracies has some sort of review process. For example, Japan has a very effective review agency. Australia has a foreign review board through which they review foreign investment in their country. Our country needs a proper screening mechanism to ensure that the investments which come to Canada are indeed in the best interest of our country and do not come in to rip, run, rape and take off, leaving Canadians holding the bag.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment to defer the Bill for six months. The recently tabled Investment Canada Act, Bill C-15, represents an attempt by the federal Government to reduce its ability to control and oversee foreign investment in Canada. The consequences of this legislation will reduce the number of transactions subject to review by 90 per cent as compared to the existing FIRA Act. It will totally exempt most new investments from any review and will limit the new agency's mandate to review acquisitions. The net result of this legislation will be an increase in the degree of foreign control over the Canadian economy.

I agree with the member who spoke previously about the—

—the pride of Canadians which is now becoming apparent, and I am all for that.

[English]

Since the early 1970s the degree of foreign control has fallen. Part of this change can be attributed to FIRA and to the National Energy Program.

The Government claims that this new Act is intended to reverse the effects of these same programs. Since it is the avowed goal of this new legislation to increase direct foreign investment in Canada, it is useful to consider the implications that foreign domination of our industry might have on the economy. First, let us consider a few aspects of this particular Act. Let us examine the area of culture. There is the right to review all investment in culturally sensitive sectors. While this area has not been clearly defined, it does include the media and telecommunications.

[Translation]

That has me worried because our cultural life is involved, and I should think that at least we must have a broader and more comprehensive definition if we are to preserve what makes us different as Canadians.

[English]

Second, research and development. It has been argued that Canada suffers from a technologically weak manufacturing sector, that this sector is small in size relative to the Canadian economy, by OECD standards, and undertakes less research and development than other industrialized nations. According to data presented in the New Directions for Canada, Canadian private R and D funding ranks last at .8 per cent among the OECD countries. The Science Council of Canada has long noted that there is a strong relationship between our poor R and D performance and the level of foreign ownership in the economy. International companies tend to concentrate their R and D activity and the location of this activity in either the home country or where the largest market is located. Both of these factors work against Canadian R and D activity and I believe that this is a very serious concern.

According to the Science Council of Canada, foreign-owned firms engage in significantly less research here than do Canadian-owned firms. As foreign ownership increases and displaces Canadian firms, employment opportunities for our labour force in this area will fall. What will happen to all of our students who are presently studying in the field of science and research? This must be considered. Will we be concerned about a brain drain and perhaps not think about what the impact of this will be on research and development?

In this respect it is particularly relevant to note that the acquisition of small enterprises is exempt from review under this new Investment Canada Act. Yet it is precisely these firms which tend to be the most R and D intensive and innovative in the economy. This may be a particular danger in the high-tech area where we have shown tremendous expertise. Consider our pride in the Canadarm when our space shots took off. It is small innovative firms such as those, many of which are below the $5 million threshold set by the Minister, which will suffer the impact of the legislation. Something concrete will be lost. What will be gained? That is a very important key.

I think we need this delay so we can really research the impact that this Act will have on Canada as an independent country. Having other U.S. firms buy up small Canadian corporations, meld them into their own over-all organization and withdraw them from the Canadian labour force I think is detrimental to ourselves. This Bill does nothing for small business, which we all know is the major key to regrowth and development in Canada. It is that very proof that we count on to revitalize our economy.

I want to emphasize that the Liberal Party is not against foreign investment. We welcome foreign investors, but as partners in the Canadian economy, not as controllers of our financial destiny. Through FIRA, which may have had a bad reputation but did not have bad results, the previous Government was able to negotiate benefits for Canadian workers. This Bill does away with a safeguard that I believe is necessary if Canada is not going to become the handmaiden of the United States. Our Leader has said time and again that we are open for business but we are not for sale. I want to re-emphasize that. I think we must maintain our Canadian perspective.

According to Glen Williams of Carleton University, Canadian branch plants have experienced a long history of export restrictions by their American parents with probably 75 per cent of all Canadian branch plants having their exports strictly controlled by their parent. This can be a serious matter for a country like Canada which relies so heavily on exports for our national income.

Look at the Americans who have complained loudest and have been the most protectionist of their interests. A recent study by the Brookings Institute demonstrates that the percentage of U.S. manufactured goods protected by non-tariff restrictions, such as quotas and other barriers, has risen from 20 per cent in 1980 to 35 per cent in 1983. The truth is the United States is as economically nationalist as we are here in Canada.

What the Tories have attempted to do with this Bill is to repackage a piece of legislation that in reality worked quite well. In the past five years, over 92 per cent of all applications for FIRA were approved. This is a perception that the legislation was an impediment to foreign investment, but these statistics do not bear that out.

Let us take a look at what a well-known journalist from the Toronto Star has said. He wrote that the Minister of Regional Development had announced that 90 per cent of all foreign investment transactions will no longer be reviewed. The criterion of "significant" benefit will be replaced by "net" benefit. Investment Canada will now actively seek out foreign investors rather than bargaining with them for the best deal; and instead of the full Cabinet deciding on the 10 per cent of large takeovers that even the Tories deemed to be too important to leave to the market, those decisions will now be made by the Minister alone. One single Minister will rule on billion dollar decisions. The biases of one man will decide the fate of thousands of workers or the interests of entire regions. There has not been such an imbalance between power and capability since Caligula made a counsel out of his horse. I think that is a very important aspect of this Bill. I do not think that is what Members of this House expected, and I do not think that is what Canadian electors voted for when they voted for change. That is not a very democratic process.

I would like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members that other factors also have an impact. Regulations, both federal and provincial, have a direct bearing on the level of foreign investment in Canada. It is not enough just to change FIRA which represents only one layer of the various strata that govern our economy. The constraints are not addressed by this Bill nor have they been alluded to or addressed by the Minister. Maybe they have escaped his focus and myopic view of Canadian problems. We need increased productivity, true, and access to foreign markets, yes—jobs, growth and development. But when one has a fixation on setting climate with words and chooses to ignore the many factors that impact on our economic weather patterns, the forecast is clouded and unreliable.

I see my time is running out. I would really like to press you, Mr. Speaker, to consider the other factors that have been very important in having businessmen make decisions. I would like to underscore the importance of Canadians being encouraged to invest in Canada. We have experienced the flight of capital.

Mr. Dick: Now that was the Liberal Government.

Mrs. Finestone: I think there are ways in which we can prevent that and encourage Canadians to invest in Canada as well. I think the fixation is misplaced. All kinds of other issues are integral to the creating of a favourable climate, such as taxation structure, labour atmosphere, regulations and the availability of trained manpower. Regarding taxation, it is heaviest in Canada and certainly in Quebec.

In conclusion, I want to reiterate that we on this side of the House welcome foreign capital into Canada if it is going to improve our economy, help create jobs and be of significant benefit to Canada. Unfortunately, there is very little evidence in this Bill to substantiate these claims. I think we really need to have this delay so we can examine this legislation much more closely, legislation which appears to be like any other Tory charade and like the many the Tories played out in the election campaign on universality and jobs, jobs, jobs. The Minister's rhetoric is just a smokescreen which will soon disappear, leaving behind the real problems that still need to be addressed by this Government.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this Bill that will have the effect of limiting Canadian control over investment in this nation. I rise to speak with three different roles in mind: first, as federal-provincial relations critic for our caucus; second, as the labour spokesman for our caucus; and third, as a constituency Member of Parliament. In all three roles I am concerned about this piece of legislation.

As the federal-provincial relations critic I am concerned that with this legislation neither the provinces nor the federal Government will be able to control or regulate the economies of their various jurisdictions. We will be in a situation, as has so often been the case in Canada, where the real decisions that affect the development of our economy, that affect the employment prospects of our children and the development of our resources, will be made elsewhere. In other words, they will be made in other nations, in the board rooms of companies that are basically offshore.

It has been evident from past foreign investment in this country that Canadians have suffered as a result of foreign investment. Sure, there have been some jobs created. Sure, there has been some research and development. Sure, there has been some extraction of our natural resources and as a result there has been some benefit to Canada. But there are other statistics as well. Those statistics will point out that where there is foreign ownership there will not be as much research and development. They will point out that where there is foreign ownership there are more layoffs than there should be in comparison to what has happened in Canadian-owned firms. There are statistics that will show we have been a net loser in terms of interest and dividend payments ever since 1926. For that matter, in 1983 we had a loss of $9.4 billion which had to be paid to companies other than Canadian nationals. What that meant was a dollar drain on our economy, dollars that should have been used for more research and development, for more investment and for more jobs for Canadians.

We have also seen historically that foreign-owned corporations tend to do less manufacturing with our natural resources. In other words, they tend to take the natural product from the ground and move it in an unrefined state to their headquarters or to factories in other nations. If we had Canadian control over those corporations there would be more opportunity for secondary and tertiary employment of Canadians.

We are allowed to speak for only 10 minutes in this debate. That is unfortunate because there are a number of points I would like to make. However, I will talk about something now which affects all of us, whether we be on this side of the House or on the opposite side of the House. Last October I wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about a study of the Science Council of Canada. Certainly it was not done by a group of socialists or labour people; it was done by the Science Council of Canada and it examined the role of foreign investment over the last many years that the Liberals were in power. It contains some very interesting conclusions. First, it indicated that by and large foreign firms did not match the research and development dollars which they received from the federal Government or from provincial Governments. At the same time Canadian-owned firms were matching on a dollar for dollar basis the money they received from Governments.

That study was conducted by Frank Longo for the Science Council of Canada. It established that this was the pattern over the last many years in this nation. In other words, foreign firms would take the tax benefits, grants or whatever they could get from government and use them for some research and development but would not put in their own money. Any research and development conducted with their own money would be done in nations other than Canada.

What does that mean to Canadians? It means that research and development was not done here. It means that Canadians are less likely to receive the benefits of research and development. Also it means that young people lose the possibility of working in research and development because most of the money spent by foreign-owned firms in being spent elsewhere. Canadians either lose the opportunity or they must leave Canada to work in research and development in those corporations. Also it means that the many jobs resulting from R and D will not be located in Canada. We are the losers in many ways when corporations refuse to do research and development in Canada.

There is another interesting aspect of the Longo study. It was that the vast majority of foreign-owned firms did significantly less research and development with or without government grants than Canadian companies. In other words, they do not match the money they receive from the Government of Canada or from the provincial Goverments, although Canadian-owned firms at least match that money for research and development purposes, and in addition, these foreign firms, by and large, do not do as much research and development in the nation. This study for the Science Council of Canada which is headed by the former leader of the provincial Liberal Party in Ontario. He is not known for left-wing, radical thought. For that matter, on many issues he has been proven to be to the right of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Boudria: Now, now!

Mr. Murphy: I know that is hard to believe, but certainly there are some Liberals who are right of the Conservative Party. The point is that that study examined the record of the previous federal Liberal administration. It pointed out that we were losing research and development dollars because of foreign investment and that the youth of the nation were losing opportunities because of foreign investment.

What is the Conservative Government doing about that? It says that even though the weak controls of the past were not working, they have to be disbanded and further weakened so that we have less control in the future.

I come from a riding with many natural resources. There is high unemployment among women, the youth and native people. The fact that there will be less control over foreign-owned corporations, which control so much of the industries and companies in the field of natural resources, means that we will have even less control or less say in the future in terms of what happens in Canada, particularly what happens in my riding.

For this reason I believe the amendment to postpone discussion on this Bill for six months is a good one. Then we could examine not only the studies of the Science Council of Canada but other information which proves that we cannot afford to weaken the very limited controls we have at the present time.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am pleased to take part in the debate on our Party's amendment to Bill C-15. Parliament and the country needs that time to review this piece of legislation. Essentially the Bill will dismantle FIRA, to make way for a proposed new investment instrument which will be known as Investment Canada and thereby dramatically alter the process by which acquisitions are to be addressed by the new Tory Government.

In reality Bill C-15 is yet another attempt by a government far more interested in the art of public relations than in actual substance, a government prepared to sacrifice long-term economic planning and economic sovereignty for short-term, image-making propaganda.

The Minister who introduced the legislation late last year declared the following in his press statement:

> We are back in business. This legislation sends a message to the world that, once again, Canada welcomes investment.

Of what world did the Minister speak? Where has he been for the last number of years? This country has always been open for business and has always welcomed investment. If this were not the case, we would not be witness to what is, on the whole, a very great, prosperous and thriving nation. In terms of economic investment, under a Liberal Government and through FIRA specifically Canada like any other country wanted and stressed what was good for Canada and for Canadians. Is that a negative attitude to take as a country? Is not that how a country attains a degree of respect in the international business community?

FIRA, introduced by a Liberal Government, was an essential and calculated policy instrument which sought to ensure that foreign investment also included significant benefits to Canada. FIRA allowed Canadians to bargain and negotiate with a huge variety of multinational interests from a point of strength. A case in point was the 86 per cent share of Canadian Reserve Oil and Gas Ltd. which Getty Oil acquired in 1980. Getty's initial application to FIRA in 1981 was rejected. Serious negotiation followed, which resulted in a stronger package for Canada being approved only a year later. This package included commitments by Getty to reduce its ownership of the Canadian company to 50 per cent and to spend $5 million in four years developing known reserves. It also agreed to spend many millions of dollars over a period of years on exploration and development. The company also agreed to buy Canadian goods and services whenever they were competitively available and to sponsor scholarships in Canadian universities. Finally, residents of Canadian origin had to make up 80 per cent of the directors of both companies. Getty was required to transfer technology to Canadian reserves and to spend money on research in Canada.

In this illustration, it is very clear that FIRA had an important role in ensuring that this foreign investment was totally beneficial to Canada in addition to satisfying the investor.

The objective of FIRA was never to prevent or discourage foreign investment, but rather to cater to the needs and aspirations of our country. It should be noted that since its inception in 1974, as was previously mentioned, FIRA approved an average of 92 per cent of the applications. This figure clearly demonstrates that foreign investors not only wanted to invest and did invest heavily in Canada, but that they were willing to meet the criteria established by FIRA. In short, these investors realized and appreciated that more jobs for Canadians, more research and development for Canada and greater Canadian exports was part of the investment deal. Our Party and Canadians are asking themselves, why should it be any different today?

It is doubtful whether FIRA discouraged in any significant way any foreign investor who was serious about investing his or her capital in Canada. In fact, the Conference Board of Canada, in a study last April, determined that FIRA provided a deterrent for only 11 per cent of foreign investment. This was tied largely to the time factor.

More importantly, Statistics Canada figures indicate that FIRA did not halt the flow of U.S. investment into Canada. In fact, the gross inflow of U.S. direct investment into Canada continued to expand during FIRA's time. Gross inflows varied between $1 billion and $1.4 billion throughout most of the 1970s before skyrocketing during 1980 and 1981.

Therefore, a quick analysis of the facts and figures effectively contradicts the Government's blinded portrayal that FIRA was the enemy of foreign investment and that the removal of FIRA, replaced by Investment Canada, would bring a new beginning. Nothing could be further from the truth.

As the Bill stands, direct acquisitions by non-Canadians of businesses in Canada with assets of less than $5 million are not subject to review. Neither are indirect takeovers resulting from the acquisition of parent companies outside Canada when the Canadian subsidiary has assets of over $50 million. This is of grave concern to the Canadian small-businessman, particularly in the increasingly competitive field of high technology. The Government will open the doors to takeovers of firms below these thresholds. What will Canada really gain if these small enterprises are more prone to shut-downs? What would we gain if these Canadian jobs are not guaranteed? What steps will be available to the Canadian Government to prevent such economic hardships? What action can the Government take to guarantee benefits to Canada and to ensure jobs for all Canadians? Unfortunately, the answer to these and other questions is that this Government wishes to wash its hands of its commitment to the small-businessman.

These economic concessions will no longer be possible through Investment Canada. Many firms that are below the new thresholds may in fact be small, but collectively they are the engine and the spirit behind the creation of new jobs in Canada.

To further compound the inequities of Investment Canada, the larger takeovers which dictate the fate of thousands of Canadian workers and the interests of entire regions will now rest at the mercy of one single Minister. Under FIRA, these would be shared by the full Cabinet in order to incorporate and understand the variety of disciplines, interests and regional necessities. The perspective, in the end, was much more encompassing. Now, a billion dollar decision in the hands of one single Minister centralizes power to an unprecedented degree and with it imposes horrendous limitation as it relates to the spectrum of interests.

Not only is the concept that FIRA discouraged foreign investment a fabricated myth perpetuated by the Tories, but this inaccuracy is also complemented by a feeling that at the present time the United States is least likely to undergo active investment abroad. This growing view was echoed in a fascinating article in The Globe and Mail dated December 20, 1984, in which leading New York investment bankers claim that "those waiting for job-producing foreign moneys to flow into Canada should not hold their breath. You don't get the idea that there are a lot of folks with money bags at the border, waiting to get into Canada".

Consequently, when you combine this limited investment attitude with the reality that FIRA did not discourage foreign investment, one asks why Bill C-15, and how can we grow and profit as a nation from the establishment of Investment Canada? Investment Canada is the first major piece of Government legislation and it provides Canadians very quickly with the philosophical bent that handcuffs the Conservative Party. A debate of FIRA versus Investment Canada is a classic example which distinguishes a Liberal Government from that of a Conservative Government.

Firstly, FIRA was an instrument of nation building; an instrument to safeguard and promote Canadians and Canadian economic sovereignty. Investment Canada will do neither. Secondly, while foreign investment was viewed as an indispensable sector of the economic pie, FIRA was an initiative by Canadians to put Canadians first; it was an initiative that attempted to instil a sense of purpose, vitality and leadership. Investment Canada will merely perpetuate the often heard criticism that Canada lacks the drive and self-fortitude to make things happen. Thirdly, FIRA put Canada second to no one; it viewed Canada and the United States as co-tenants of the North American continent. Investment Canada views the U.S. as the owner and Canada as the subservient tenant.

I have other things to say, but I believe my time is up.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to rise on behalf of my constituents of Nepean-Carleton to speak against this amendment and in support of the Bill. This Bill recognizes that investment is central to economic growth and employment opportunities and the key to technological advancement.

I could hardly believe some of the speeches which preceded me this morning in support of FIRA, particularly when the Canadian Press last week carried an article with which I would like Hon. Members to be familiar entitled: "Canada ranked worst". I quote:

A survey released Monday on the international competitiveness of 28 countries ranks Canada as the seventh-most competitive country, but dead last in terms of welcoming foreign investment.

The survey repeated oft-heard criticisms that Canadians are probably the world's most unfriendly recipients of foreign investments.

Presumably FIRA has contributed dramatically to this kind of perception by those who want to invest in Canada. In the case of Nepean-Carleton, a riding that is comprised in large part of small businesses, a riding that is the high technology centre for Canada, this new investment Bill is particularly welcome. The high technology industry must raise capital quickly. Twelve to 18 months is crucial for the turnaround period in that industry. Equally important is the desirability of cross-licensing within the high technology industry and of being able to move with cross-licensing very quickly. The small business industry and the high technology industry in Nepean-Carleton very much want this new Bill to be operative as soon as possible.

I would like to direct my comments for a few minutes to how the new Bill affects the mining industry in Canada. I am particularly delighted that the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton) is in the Chamber today. This Government and this nation are particularly fortunate in having this Member to provide the legislative and policy leadership for Canada's great mining community.

We are the third largest mining community in the world, ranking after the United States and the Soviet Union. At the minehead or at the millhead, we produce approximately $33 billion to $35 billion of new wealth annually. That new wealth constitutes about 30 per cent of Canada's net exports. It is a very, very competitive industry. It is an industry that is being confronted with an array of problems, many of which relate to the investment community. I would like to share some of these problems with you for a moment.

In Canada, it is now taking about four to five years to find every new ranking ore deposit. That exploration program, when related back to each new find, is costing about $25 million to $30 million per deposit. Equally, in these world-ranking mining institutions the cost of developing these mines is anywhere from $200 million to $400 million, a colossal amount of capital for anyone's investment portfolio.

In the mining industry there is a need for an inflow of large amounts of capital. Superimposed upon that need is also something which this House and those of us who are responsible for legislation relative to the mining industry ought to note, and that is that there is a tremendous time factor associated with the development of a mine. Exploration takes three to five years. The planning of a new operation takes another two to three years and it takes probably at least another five years to bring a major mining complex into production by developing the mine, the mill, the community infrastructure and everything else that is associated with it. The mine then enters into production and it needs a period of at least 10, 15 or 20 years of stability so that that mine can produce.

The point I would like to make is that from the time one starts to invest one's money in the mining community to the time one receives the total return on that mine, a period of at least 20 to 30 years can go by. Therefore, there is a need for stability in the tax system and in the investment world for the mining community to grow and thrive.

One of the great problems from which the mining community has suffered over the years, beginning in about 1971, 1972 and 1973 is the bewildering array of legislation which applies to taxation and investment. That has tended to hinder this great industry, slow it down and give it a lack of confidence in what Canadian legislators and policymakers would want from the industry. I hope that through this new Bill that is before us we as legislators can provide the Canadian mining community with an opportunity to attract large amounts of new capital into Canada and that we will very shortly defeat the amendment that is before us and proceed with this very valuable piece of legislation which the business, high-technology and mining communities in Canada, and in fact all Canadians, need so desperately.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too welcome the opportunity to participate in debate regarding the amendment introduced by the Liberal Party to put a six-month hoist on Bill C-15, the Bill dealing with foreign investment in Canada. After hearing the addresses of some of the Hon. Members of this House, I am somewhat amazed—though I suppose I should not be — by the fact that some of the economic theories that I have heard are really 19th century economic theories, as is the understanding of political and economic realities. I also find amazing some of the speeches I have heard by my Liberal colleagues. On the one hand they take great credit for FIRA, yet on the other hand they bend over backward to point out how FIRA has not in fact stopped or interfered with foreign investment in Canada.

I believe all those who recognize the political history of the country know that it was the New Democratic Party which, in the early 1970s, really created the public and political pressure within this House that forced the Liberals to introduce FIRA to begin with. Since then we have seen an erosion of FIRA over the last number of years.

It is not surprising at all that in the last number of years FIRA has been approving some 95 per cent to 98 per cent of all foreign-investor takeovers in Canada. It is not surprising that after all these years of Liberal rule and management—or I should say mismanagement—of our economy we find that, per capita, Canada has more foreign ownership and control than any other industrialized nation in the world and more than many developing nations as well. That is why I was somewhat surprised when I heard the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper) claiming that Canada is considered the country that is the most unreceptive to foreign investment. Oh boy, that is some unreceptivity!

This country or at least a great deal of it is already controlled by foreign investment. We have more foreign ownership than any other industrialized nation in the world on a per capita basis. Yet this is not quite good enough for our Conservative friends. How much do they want? Do they want 100 per cent foreign ownership? Do they just want to sell it all? Do they want us to be totally controlled by multinational corporations? Do they want Canada's economy to be a totally subservient branch plant economy? How much more do they want? How much further must we go? How much more should we sell out? Do we not already hold the world record for this?

I wish some of my Conservative colleagues would tell us how much more foreign investment they would like to see. There is no doubt that foreign investment is needed. However, I am speaking of the type of foreign investment that is needed. Let me put it this way. As an individual, I could rent for most of my life and end up never owning my own home. On the other hand, I could borrow money from the bank, put a down payment on a home and eventually pay it off. Then I would own my home, the roof over my head. But what has occurred in our country is that we have become renters or tenants in our own homes. We will never end up owning the factories, the mines or the mills. We continue paying rent. That is why in 1983 Canada had a deficit of some $9.4 billion in interest and dividend payments.

Since the record began in 1926, Canada has been a net exporter of interest and dividend funds. In other words, while foreign investment provides short-term immediate benefits, people do not invest unless they expect to receive more out of it than they put in. That is simple Adam Smith economics. I am sure my Conservative friends can appreciate that anyone who invests in Canada expects to get more out of it. That has been the case. More dividends and interest payments from past investments are leaving Canada than are coming back in. If the solution is to borrow more money to make up the difference, we are only mortgaging the future.

I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I wish to continue with my remarks later this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

CANADIAN COMMITMENT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, just before the Christmas recess I asked the Hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) whether he was using the purchase of the CF-18A fighter aircraft and the six new patrol frigates to prop up his Party's image with NATO, at a time when these decisions had actually been made by the previous Liberal Government and were well under way.

Prior to that, and during the rather habitual absence of the Minister of National Defence, I put the same question to the Acting Minister of National Defence, who is the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees). The Minister of Veterans Affairs did not know anything about the speech which was delivered by the Minister of National Defence at NATO, but he assured the House that the Minister did make a very good statement at NATO, and also assured the House that what he had said made a great deal of sense, even though he did not know what the Minister had said.

As the record has since shown, the Minister of National Defence was in fact making use of decisions which were made by the previous Liberal Government, and the new equipment which was purchased by the previous Liberal Government, to try to give the impression to NATO that this brand new Government was doing such a fantastic job. In his statement before NATO, the Minister of National Defence is quoted as having said:

> We are completing project definition for the acquisition of weapons to enable our forces in Europe to counter the threat of low level air attack. We are replacing our CF-104 aircraft in Europe with far more capable CF-18 aircraft on a one-for-one basis. We intend, with the transition to the new aircraft, to increase both the operational readiness and the operational capability of the Canadian Air Group—

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

MARITIME FEED FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Pat Binns (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, livestock producers in the Maritime region are recommending that feed freight assistance be increased by the federal Government to a level which will ensure that producers are in a fair and competitive position with the remainder of Canada.

In 1941 the Feed Freight Assistance Program covered 90 per cent of freight costs incurred in bringing feed grain into the Maritimes. However, by 1984 assistance only covered 20 per cent of the cost of importing feed. During the same time period freight costs increased fourfold, and this has resulted in unfair feed grain prices in eastern Canada. The cost of producing a hog is now $20 higher in the Maritimes than in Ontario, because of the feed cost difference.

Obviously the survival of the maritime hog industry is threatened, and a heavy burden is also placed upon dairy, poultry, beef, and sheep producers.

Left unattended, we stand to lose 4,000 to 5,000 jobs in our livestock and food processing industries over the next few years. I therefore ask the Government to implement a feed cost equalization plan for imported western and Ontario grain, and for imported protein concentrates. In addition, I would recommend that Agriculture Canada establish a schedule of bonus payments to Maritime producers for high production levels in feed grain and protein crops.

ETHNIC REPRESENTATION IN GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, an unfortunate tradition which was practised continually by previous Liberal Governments is being continued by the Conservative Government. That tradition, the appointment by the Prime Minister of old friends and supporters to positions of influence and power, was sustained during the Christmas recess when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made over 90 appointments, including 24 top level bureaucracy jobs and 66 to other bodies such as boards, commissions, and that dusty old place, the Senate.

Decidedly obvious by their absence were the ethnic appointments the Prime Minister promised he would make. He was quoted as saying:

> The Progressive Conservative Party of Canada will appoint competent and qualified men and women who reflect our cultural diversity to positions on government boards, agencies, Crown corporations and the senior Public Service.

Now, more and more Canadians are asking themselves and the Prime Minister: "When?" Indeed, the only appointment of a Canadian from our ethnic communities of over eight million people was that of the Saskatchewan neurologist, Dr. Efstathios Barootes, to the Senate.

The Prime Minister is reportedly furious that he has not been given the names of more members of visible communities in Canada from which to choose. Yet we are told by the President of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, Mr. Navin Parekh, that he himself submitted 70 resumes of his most qualified members to the Prime Minister's appointment chief. Not one of those candidates has received an appointment to date.

Is the Prime Minister, in his failure to appoint any of these people, saying that they are not qualified to serve Canada? I honestly hope not.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

S.O. 21

VIA RAIL

REINSTATEMENT OF ATLANTIC LIMITED

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to convey to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Government of Canada the profound delight and satisfaction of the people of Fundy-Royal and southern New Brunswick over the reinstatement of VIA Rail's Atlantic Limited.

My constituents, and all those residing in southern New Brunswick, are pleased that the Government has righted a grievous wrong, has listened to their wishes, and has reinstated a service that is efficient, economic and, most important, wanted.

Three and one-half years ago a Government more intent on saving face than saving rail passenger service, ignored the wishes of thousands of Canadians who vigorously and vocally pushed for the reinstatement of this line; ignored the findings of the Progressive Conservative Task Force Report on Passenger Service in Canada; and neatly circumvented the Canadian Transport Commission which may well have prohibited such a cancellation. Its reward for this arrogance and arbitrary action is its much deserved languish in opposition.

Once again, Canadians will enjoy a direct link between Montreal, Saint John, and Halifax. Once again, Maritime rail passenger service will be more efficient and economical for its patrons. And once again Canadians will be provided with a service which they demand.

In November, 1981, I rode the last Atlantic Limited run between Saint John and Montreal. It is my intention to be on the June 1 Atlantic Limited victory run as Canadians celebrate the reinstatement of this noble line.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

APPLICATION TIME SCHEDULE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak about a rumour, which I am hearing and reading in the media, that relates to the Young Offenders Act. A reform measure was passed in the last Parliament and is being phased into effect under regulation. On April 1 it is supposed to be extended so that all 16 and 17-year olds in Canada will come under the jurisdiction of the Young Offenders Act.

A few months ago Brian Smith, the Attorney General of British Columbia, reported that he had had some success with the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) in convincing him to make changes in the legislation. More recently, Gordon Walker, an Ontario Minister, urged the federal Government to delay the coming into effect of the application of that law to 16 and 17-year olds.

I think it is extremely important that the Government stick to the schedule. I hope that the Solicitor General will let the country know that the Government has no intention of backing away from a schedule which would make a law uniform across this country on April 1. I think it will violate the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, after the equality sections come into effect, if there are different ages across the country.

In addition, I think that by encouraging—through not speaking out on the subject—provincial Governments to believe that there may be a delay, the Minister is perhaps having the effect of failing to see the law brought in as it should be brought in, with all of the arrangements made, and with Governments across the country—

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

AIR SAFETY

SUGGESTED REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, on October 17, 1984, at approximately 3.30 p.m., a Piper Cheyenne aircraft, No. C-GAPT, crashed on the approach to the Lester B. Pearson International Airport, killing all on board. While any loss of life in a situation such as this is a tragedy, the successful past and the brilliant future of the owner, Grenville Martin, makes it doubly distressing. When, as it now appears from all reports, the pilot had been cheating on his medical examinations, the waste of life is even more senseless.

I ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to consider seriously sending a reference to the Standing Committee on Transport asking it, either in whole or through a sub-committee, to investigate and report on the seriousness of this kind of cheating, and to recommend ways in which it might be eliminated.

As a pilot for over 25 years, who is now grounded due to a minor health problem, I am well aware of the struggle that takes place. But if new or tightened regulations will save even one life, it will be well worth the time and effort.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CANCELLATION OF RESEARCH PROJECTS AT GIMLI AND CHURCHILL, MAN.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on the number of occasions I have risen in the House to speak about the Government's intention to cancel research projects in both Gimli and Churchill, Manitoba, I have asked both the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) for a reversal of that decision.

In addition to my own pleas I would now like to enter the pleas of professors from the Department of Physics, at the University of Toronto, and also from the University of Calgary. In their letters they state:

> Our research is directed to the measurement of trace gases important in climatic problems . . . I shall have to give up five years' development time so far, plus the time and resources it takes to initiate a world-class research effort . . . We concurrently a facility which is active and in many respects unique in the world.

● (1410)

> The abrupt cut-off of this programme means that student degree research will be disrupted, international agreements will be broken, and recent "discovery" science will not be exploited, with a loss of leadership position for Canadian scientists involved in balloon and rocket research.

That is the result of just one government cut-back, Mr. Speaker, a program which costs $1 million per year and which will cost the federal Government $10 million to terminate because it has to restore the site to its natural condition.

INTERNATIONAL YOUTH YEAR

IMPORTANCE OF SOLIDARITY ON TASK OF IMPROVING CONDITIONS FOR YOUTH

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely deplore the reprehensible behaviour of Opposition Members in the House yesterday when the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) made a statement concerning International Youth Year.

Mr. Speaker, Members of the Opposition were scornful and mean towards the Minister, yet she responded with calm and dignity. Their cheap and unwarranted attacks concerning the earlier accomplishments of the Minister will never lessen her spirit and determination. The Opposition parties lost a golden opportunity to support the Minister and emphasize the importance of International Youth Year. They should have been cooperative and proved they are prepared to do their utmost to improve the lot of young Canadians, the generations of the future. Unfortunately, as usual they chose to make petty politics by shamelessly accusing the Minister of being responsible for everything that is wrong in our society. What irresponsible behaviour, and just what have our predecessors done for the half-million youths who cannot find jobs in Canada?

Mr. Speaker, I for one call upon the common sense and good judgment of young people who realize that our Minister and our government will work tirelessly to make their future brighter. Henceforth, young people will know who in this House is really defending their interests.

Mr. Rossi: The Minister has not done anything.

COMMUNICATIONS

DEBATE ON FUTURE OF CANADIAN TELEVISION FOR YOUTH—PUBLIC HEARINGS A NECESSITY

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) and the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to put pressure on the CRTC on behalf of young Canadians so that public hearings may be held on the issue of television programs now available to our teenagers.

The National Film Board is sponsoring a request on behalf of a non-profit foundation which includes youth associations and members of the public for the setting up of a television service for young people.

This request has just been denied by the CRTC which also rules out the possibility for the public to take part in the debate on the future of our youth-oriented television services.

I therefore ask both Ministers to take the future of our young people in hand and to allow the various groups of young people and adults to take part in the CRTC hearings. The time has come to show our interest for better Canadian television programming for young viewers between the ages of 12 and 17.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CALL FOR RETURN OF "THE FRIENDLY GIANT"

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it used to be that one would rise in the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

The year 1985 is International Youth Year. It is a year dedicated to the young people of the world, a year to enhance youth opportunities in Canada and around the world, to judge and decide on matters concerning themselves as individuals. As a young Member of this House I have fond memories of many household words like Mickey Mouse, Donald Duck, Snow White, Buck Rogers, and many other imported fictional characters. As someone who grew up during the "me" generation but maintained an unselfish attitude towards sharing what was right and good, I think it is without question in poor judgment, poor taste, and downright selfish that the CBC has coincidentally—and I underline the word "coincidentally"—cancelled The Friendly Giant.

Household words like Rusty, Jerome, and Friendly will be around for a while as reruns, but the Canadian youth of tomorrow will be deprived of an unmistakable element of pure Canadian goodness. I think I am speaking for hundreds of thousands of Canadians under 40, and for future generations, when I say that we have so few good Canadian fictional characters that we should keep what we have. Would the people of Quebec cancel Bonhomme, or would Montrealers do in Youppi? Let us reopen the drawbridge to the castle of warmth and friendship, and keep Friendly, Rusty, and Jerome in business for generations to come.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NUCLEAR ARMS CONTROL

BILATERAL NEGOTIATIONS—REQUEST THAT UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE BE PLACED ON AGENDA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Prime Minister is not here this afternoon. He did not respond to my questions yesterday afternoon, and I hoped that we could recommence a dialogue. In his absence I would like to direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister, who can perhaps reply on behalf of the Government.

I believe the Hon. Member for Yukon knows my commitment to a strong defence posture for Canada. I believe he also understands the commitment of the Party I lead to the principles of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. However, we are also committed to an independent Canadian foreign policy, particularly in pursuit of peace. Would the Deputy Prime Minister accept our request, made in this House yesterday, to call upon the United States to agree to placing on the agenda of the superpowers in their arms control discussions the item of the space based missile defence system called the Strategic Defence Initiative of the U.S., popularly known as star wars? Will he review with his colleagues and the Prime Minister the position of the Canadian Government, in order to urge that that vital element in arms control be placed on the agenda for discussion?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a similar proposal was put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry prior to the beginning of those talks when he suggested it would be useful for Canada to suggest items for the agenda between the superpowers. It was our conclusion then that it would not be helpful to the success of the negotiations to have people who were not at the table inserting themselves in the procedure of negotiations. That judgment has proven to be correct, and the freedom from that kind of insertion from outside was undoubtedly one of the factors which led to the success of the first round of the Geneva talks. I think the reasoning that was successful before, and allowed the talks to get off to a good beginning, stands now and will hold the best promise of success.

As i said yesterday, in our view the most important development internationally in recent months has been that the superpowers have come together to talk. We do not want to take any action for partisan or other reasons in this country which may throw those talks off the rails.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would have hoped that the Prime Minister would eventually address himself to this very important subject, which is not a partisan subject. It is advanced on behalf of Canadians as members of the human race in support of a very important peace initiative.

POLICY REVIEW

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has purported to have undertaken a review of the foreign policy of this country, on behalf of the Prime Minister, including arms control. I ask him where is that particular research or report? Is there anything in it that would justify the inconsistency in the Canadian Government's position on the peace initiative? Will he publish this report so it can become a vehicle for Canadian public debate?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have always respected the respect for Parliament of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I knew that he would be putting to me today questions that would relate to my capacity as a Minister of the Crown replying on behalf of the Government. Consequently I assume that the report to which he is referring is the report we have promised that would be the basis of parliamentary study, the first full parliamentary study, by the way, of Canadian international relations, in a long time, if not ever. That is under preparation and I expect to be able to lay it before the House of Commons within a matter of weeks. I look forward to extensive public debate in the country and in this Chamber on the appropriate positions Canada should take on various aspects of our international relations.

FORMER PRIME MINISTER'S PEACE INITIATIVE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): What we are trying to get at here, knowing the Minister's previous public position on this subject, is whether there is anything in this report or in his further investigation of the situation that would have persuaded him to convince the Prime Minister and the Government to discontinue, in effect, the important peace initiative of my predecessor, Pierre Elliott Trudeau. This would render what I believe to be a very inconsistent position of getting all the available subjects and potential weapons systems, offensive and defensive, on the agenda for discussion by the two major superpowers.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I frankly do not think it would be particularly productive at this point to discuss the pros and cons of the initiatives taken by the predecessor of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I would like to make the point that he was taking his initiatives at a time when there were no negotiations, the superpowers were not meeting together, and there was a stalemate. We are in a very different situation now. That dangerous stalemate has ended. The superpowers are together and are talking. It is the purpose of the Government, and I would hope it is the purpose of the Leader of the Opposition and of all Members in the House of Commons, to do everything we can to ensure that those talks succeed, including resisting whatever temptations might arise to take actions in Canada which would have the effect of putting those talks off the rails.

MILITARIZATION OF OUTER SPACE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I can say on behalf of our Party that we have no reservation at all in endorsing the objective of having those arms talks succeed. We are concerned about what this country can do to help them succeed. I would like to refer to the Hon. Minister's statement made to the United Nations on September 25 last when he said that multilateral efforts, led and encouraged by middle-sized powers, can put specific workable ideas on the agenda and that "we shall encourage the superpowers to ban weapons in outer space". That was confirmed in a similar statement to the U.N. by the Ambassador for Disarmament, Mr. Roche, who said that we call for all urgent efforts toward preventing an arms race in outer space.

If the Minister was prepared in September to call for a major urging of the superpowers to stop militarization in outer space, we now have a direct reversal. Is that reversal because of discussions held between the Minister and U.S. officials? Were we directly requested to change our position?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to answer the suggestion that was smuggled into Question Period directly, no, we were not instructed to do anything by the Soviet Union, the United States, or anyone else. We have come to a judgment as an independent and sovereign Government interested in advancing the cause of peace, and contributing what we can to the stopping of the arms race. We have made an independent judgment that it would not be helpful for us, or indeed for other countries, to try to put items on the agenda that might have the effect of turning the successful arms talks off the rails. That, I hope, is a position which would commend itself to the Parliament of Canada, as I am sure it has commended itself to the people of Canada.

As to the preface of the Hon. Member's question, he quotes a speech I made on behalf of Canada in September. In September the superpowers were not at the table. In September there was a stalemate in the arms talks. That stalemate has ended. We do not want to take action that would return the world to stalemate.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, that was one of the most convoluted descriptions of how the arms control talks work.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): How does the Minister explain that somehow we will end up in stalemate if the other countries and Governments of the world express, on behalf of their people, the fact that we do not want an arms race in space, which is what the SDI Program would bring about? Is it not the responsibility of the Government, confirmed by the consultations in the Roche discussions, which I would ask the Minister to confirm, to take a strong stand against any effort or initiative to have any form of military application in outer space? That would represent the interests and sentiments of Canadians, and it would be useful for the great powers to know what those interests and sentiments are. Why is the Government insisting on going against the interests and sentiments of Canadians?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is a natural partisan temptation to try to have it both ways on this question. I suggest that this matter is too important to the country and the world to play politics with.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry is suggesting that he would not want to interfere with the process that is working now to lead toward arms control. Then he proposes specific means to interfere. We do not propose to act in such an inconsistent fashion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

REPORTED UNITED STATES PLAN TO DEPLOY NUCLEAR WEAPONS AT CANADIAN BASES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will guess that the Liberals are preparing to refuse Cruise missile testing. They are just preparing the ground for that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Jewett: Since we are not getting anywhere with the Minister on star wars, which he has obviously accepted completely, I will pursue with him the question of the nuclear deployment plans of the United States. Is he, unlike his colleague, the Minister of National Defence, aware that the most recent plan was signed by the President of the United States in March of 1984? Is he aware that the latest plan, which involves sending nuclear depth bombs to the two bases in Canada, was not signed in 1975 but 1984? Is he also aware that Norway, Denmark, and indeed Japan, have declined to be included from now on in any of the U.S. nuclear deployment plans abroad? Is he now prepared to agree that to be consulted about it at times of crisis is far too late, because we would have to say yes?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the Government of Canada has a firm guarantee from the United States administration that there would be consultation before any actions were taken which involved Canadian territory. What is more important, the Government of Canada would have the right to refuse any plan which might be conceived which would affect Canadian territory.

With respect to the Hon. Member's preface, I am acutely interested in watching the shifting positions opposite, whether on the Cruise or on NATO.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN POLICY ON NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): I thank the Minister for his interest. Are we to believe or not to believe the Prime Minister who, in July of this year, when announcing the removal of the Genie air-to-air missiles from Canadian soil, said that there would not be further nuclear weapons on Canadian soil? Was the Prime Minister expressing a view, such as Denmark and Norway have done, that there will not be nuclear weapons on Canadian soil?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The policy of the Government of Canada is, as it has been, that there will not be nuclear weapons on Canadian soil. The guarantee of that is that we have sought and received an assurance from the United States that before any plans what they might have, or might develop, which would affect Canadian territory are implemented, there would not only be consultation but there would be the right to refuse in Canada. If it were considered in the interest of Canada, the Government would exercise that right to refuse. It is very simple.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

The medias have reported that the Minister is not at all surprised by the closedown decided by Wabasso and that he has even predicted the same fate for many other communities.

I would therefore like to ask the Minister how he can relate his own defeatist comments with those of his leader who said in Sherbrooke last July 26 that these were certainly not sunset industries and also made 10 commitments in order to ensure the stability and development of the industry. Who was speaking the truth? Do the promises of his leader no longer mean anything or does the Minister intend to take the promised action immediately to save the Saint-Maurice area?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, let me assure the Hon. Member that the words that he attributes to me are not accurate. The fact is that we are deeply concerned about the closedown of the Wabasso Company. SERB has been taking steps to try to ensure that whatever can be salvaged from the closedown, such as what Dominion Textile is doing, may be furthered.

In specific terms, Shawinigan and Three Rivers should receive whatever aid is necessary to ensure that the unemployment situation, that will only increase as a result of the closedown, will be relieved as soon as possible.

WABASSO—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that the Minister is now aware of the situation. Since he has received the Vachon report and knows that the CIRB has already invested $5.3 million in Wabasso, will the Minister ensure that the company will not dispose of its assets in a piecemeal fashion and at a discount before a general proposal is made by the recovery committee to save as many jobs as possible?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again I can assure the Hon. Member that our Department is looking at this situation on a daily basis. As far as we are concerned, the moneys have been expended in the earnest attempt to keep Wabasso solvent and viable are there. Perhaps they have not produced the result that we hoped for, as the company lost $7 million to $8 million last year and we are now faced with the unfortunate situation to which the Hon. Member is referring. However, let me assure him that we will do all that we can to minimize the effect on the unemployed who will come on the market as a result of this closedown.

FINANCE

CORPORATE TAX POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Government has expressed a concern about job creation in the coming months. At the same time the Minister of Finance indicated in the House yesterday that there would be no major change in corporate tax policy in the forthcoming Budget.

The Minister said this in the knowledge that a government report, which I released in the House, and which the Minister has had time to read, indicates that current corporate tax policy is the most costly for job creation, and also has the worst negative impact on the deficit. If the Government is concerned about job creation and fairness, why is the Government not looking at reform of the corporate tax system in the Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first let me say that that report to which the Hon. Member refers is not a government report. It was prepared for the previous Government. The first time I saw it was when it was handed to me outside the House.

I want to draw his attention to some of the weaknesses in the report that was produced. It is a very short term outlook. In the November 8 statement we have set forth some long term policies that will result in permanent job creation that will give Canadians confidence which will be there for some years ahead, and on which they can plan.

In response to the specific question about tax reform, there will not be a major tax reform that will be disruptive and undermine the small business community in particular. However, there have been, and will continue to be, specific initiatives taken by the Government to remove the inequities in the tax system as we identify these, and I would welcome any suggestions which the Hon. Member has.

REQUEST FOR POLICY CHANGES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is not only the New Democratic Party of Canada but such different groups as the Auditor General and a number of businessmen, including the head of one of Canada's chartered banks, if I remember correctly, who have indicated that there is grotesque waste of money coming from the taxpayers of Canada because there is no rational corporate tax policy. It is being thrown out in the rather naive hope that it will be used to create jobs. That is the kind of documented evidence that has been produced by various people.

In light of this, and because he has not hesitated to slash $4 billion from programs that affect ordinary people, why will the Minister not have a tough-minded look at this corporate tax polilcy, and introduce changes that insist if a corporation gets a tax break it must produce jobs in order to get that tax break?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it quite clear to the Hon. Member that we are looking at individual aspects of the tax system and we are making changes. Last year we made a change on the scientific research tax credit quick flip. That was cancelled, and it was widely acknowledged that that should have been cancelled. There will be additional questions as we identify them.

I stress the point that I made a minute ago, that if we embark on a major tax reform it will be enormously disruptive and will undermine the confidence of the small business community. It is the small business community that I believe Members of the House are looking to, to create the jobs on a permanent basis, not the short term jobs from the job creation programs that the Hon. Member would like to have. Those short term jobs will not create confidence or long term growth for our country.

DISTRIBUTION OF TAX REVENUES TO CORPORATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows, or should know, that the small business community pays a much higher effective tax rate than do big corporations, and the same small business community does not benefit from the corporate tax breaks, most of which goes to big companies. If he is interested in dealing with small business in an effective and creative way, he will have our support.

We are asking the Minister to call into question, in a fair and tough-minded way, the mindless handout of millions of the tax dollars of ordinary people that are not going to create jobs, but only create excess profits for many companies that don't deserve them. Will he change this process?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that we are looking at a wide range of matters in the course of trying to assess the effectiveness of the individual tax incentives that are there. We will not have a major disruptive tax reform that the Hon. Member seems to be calling for. I would remind him that the task force headed by the Deputy Prime Minister is studying each one of these tax incentives on an individual basis, with the help of a wide range of people from the private sector, in order to identify where we can make changes. But it will be in a careful, non disruptive way, unlike the way the Hon. Member proposes.

TRANSPORT

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON NATIONAL PASSENGER TRANSPORTATION POLICY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Transport). The Minister is no doubt aware that if we are to have an efficient and cost-effective passenger transport system, we must have modern maintenance centres as well as modern equipment. As far as transport policies are concerned, Member of the Progressive Conservative Party have been referring repeatedly to a national passenger transportation policy. My question is as follows: How do the Government and the Minister of Transport intend to set up a national policy unless they immediately start modernizing equipment and building maintenance centres in Montreal, Halifax and Winnipeg?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides associates maintenance centres with modernizing equipment. Last week at a press conference, the Government announced it would be reinstating six railway routes, which will guarantee the national dimension of VIA Rail. We intend to evaluate very carefully the plans for construction of a maintenance centre in Montreal. We have already announced that the Winnipeg and Halifax centres will be scrapped. We will conduct this evaluation with the action group, which is now doing the necessary studies. On their recommendation we can assure the Hon. Member that the VIA Rail network will be national and that we will meet the demands of—

• (1440)

Mr. Garneau: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

The recent statement by the Minister of Transport is like having the icing without the cake. If we want a national railway service, we need equipment but we also need maintenance centres. How does the Minister of Transport intend to make this a national policy if he concentrates all maintenance operations in the Toronto region?

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, the Government is not putting icing on a non-existent cake. We have identified equipment as a major problem, and that is what Canadians have told us. To us it is not a matter of Montreal or Toronto. It is a matter of providing a service for Canadians no more and no less.

FINANCE

CORPORATE TAX STRUCTURE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Given that within three months of the September election the Minister was able to move to make substantial cuts in the area of social policy, environmental policy, and in other related job policies, why does it take longer than seven months for the Government to conduct a study which would lead it to the inevitable conclusion that the least effective way of creating jobs in Canada is to continue with the corporate tax give-aways?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member forgot to mention also that in those first three or four months we created 100,000 jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You sound like the Liberals of a year ago.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me respond to the specific question. If I can put it in somewhat different words, the Member has asked me why we addressed the cash expenditures before the tax expenditures. The cash expenditures are very direct. They are very easy to measure and there are not the complexities or the inter-relationships that there are in the tax system. It is those complexities and the inter-relationships between different elements of the tax system that have to be studied very carefully, and with the assistance of those in the private sector who are directly affected by them. That is what we intend to do after we have identified the key areas where we think we can attack the tax expenditures program.

Mr. Deans: Let me say quite simply to the Minister, Mr. Speaker, that it may well be there are 100,000 new jobs in the economy, but there are still 1.5 million people unemployed.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CHANGE STRUCTURE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I want to ask the Minister of Finance another question. Given that it has been proven quite conclusively that corporate tax give-aways not directly tied to job creation are the most costly way to try to create employment for people in Canada, why does the Minister not move now to tie tax concessions and corporate tax relief to the creation of jobs directly?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it quite clear to the Hon. Member that we are not happy that there are still over 1.3 million people out of jobs. We have addressed that problem very clearly in the agenda paper issued on November 8. There is a clear economic program there, but I want to draw a distinction for the Hon. Member. The programs he is advocating for direct job creation are short-term programs.

Mr. Broadbent: No, we are not.

Mr. Deans: That is not what I am talking about.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): They are short-term in nature. They do not have a long-lasting effect of assisting in the strengthening of the economy.

Mr. Deans: That is not what we are saying.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is what we are trying to avoid with the longer term approach that will create long-term jobs, a more competitive economy and, therefore, a permanent reduction in the level of unemployment.

PETRO-CANADA

ROLE OF CORPORATION

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague, the Hon. Minister for Energy, Mines and Resources.

During the recent gas price samba in Quebec, a spokesman for Petro-Canada was reported in La Presse of January 10, 1985, as having said that last summer, Petro-Canada sent 68 million $1 coupons to car owners, for a stated cost of $10 million in Quebec. My question is this, Mr. Speaker.

For a Crown corporation, a consumer-oriented attitude might be better. Is Petro-Canada changing over to a new mandate as Petro Burger Canada?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question I could point out that the particular marketing plan he has brought forward was adopted last July when Petro-Canada was under the management of a board of directors, most of whom we have since replaced.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: Our Government's policy toward Crown corporations is that they are to act as if they are in the private sector. In that regard I would suggest that if the Hon. Member does not like the marketing practices of Petro-Canada, he should simply ask its officers: "Where's the beef?"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WILDLIFE

CANCELLATION OF RESEARCH PROGRAMS

Hon. Charles Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of the Environment. It flows from press reports that Canada's provinces and territories told the Minister of the Environment last week that they cannot take over responsibility for wildlife research which fell victim to her budget cuts. The Minister, at the Fisheries and Forestry Committee meeting on December 20, said:

—the cutbacks in the Department of the Environment reflect our approach and our philosophy. Provinces are our true partners and able to assume their own responsibilities.

Will the Minister now indicate to this House who will undertake the wildlife research programs that were axed which the provinces have declared they cannot take over?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, at the ministerial conference on wildlife last week, the issue of research was considered. We realized that there was a consensus and all provincial ministers agreed with me that we needed much more toxicological research in Canada but that the definition of priorities was in a state of chaos. And we immediately created a subcommittee in order to define more accurately our research priorities. And I am convinced that as a result of that process, toxicological research will be intensified and more precisely targeted to meet our real problems.

[English]

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION

Hon. Charles Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of the Environment. Evidently the Minister does not seem to take into account the statement made by her colleague in Manitoba. Therefore, I must ask the Minister, in light of the rejection on the part of her provincial colleagues of her pie-in-the-sky assumption that provincial Ministers will assume this cost, will she undertake to return to Cabinet and continue, or initiate efforts so that the research programs undertaken by the Canadian Wildlife Service will be restored?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the comments of my Manitoban counterpart have been taken out of context to a certain extent. Indeed, he told me that the federal government should not expect that all cutbacks will be made up by the provinces because his own province and other provinces had to reduce their expenditures the same way the federal government has to. In view of that, we agreed with all other provincial ministers to meet more often to improve the management of our shared wildlife responsibilities. That will certainly be in the interests of the Canadian people.

FINANCE

CORPORATE TAX STRUCTURE—ENVIRONMENTAL BUDGETARY CUTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister has said that corporate tax reform is too complex for us to expect any progress toward fair taxation in the April budget. Would the Minister not agree that one of the most complex issues of our time is the ecological interrelationships which are disturbed and interfered with by various forms of human activity? If he does, will he, out of respect for genuine complexity, order a moratorium on these simplistic cuts in wildlife research and environmental monitoring, cuts which many in his own caucus have criticized? Would he tell us why so swift in this complex area, and why so slow to challenge inequities in corporate taxation?

• (1450)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member neglected to listen to my previous answers. We are moving in the area of corporate tax reform. We are looking individually at specific items, but we will not embark upon the major tax reform which seems to be the objective of his Leader. I say that with a clear understanding, having discussed this matter with a number of people in the small business community who say that that type of tax reform will be disruptive and will cause them to be less effective in creating the jobs we all want.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RECONSIDER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister expand his imagination to the point of seeing that a fiscal deficit is not the only kind of deficit, and that there can be such a thing as mortgaging our future in an environmental way that could never be paid back? If he can expand his imagination to that point, would he please reconsider the short-sighted cuts in the wildlife research and environmental monitoring areas, and show some sensitivity not only to the criticisms on this side of the House but to his own caucus?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not have a monopoly on all the ideas in the world. We are saying that in our approach to deficit management and expenditure control we are taking into account as many things as we can in arriving at the objective. We have looked carefully at the effects of policies as they relate to the environment. My colleague has addressed these with great eloquence in the House, not least of which today. I say to him that there can be many other ways of achieving the same goal rather than simply throwing money at the problem as the Hon. Member would suggest we do.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: You are throwing it at the corporations; that is the point.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

USE OF LAND ACQUISITIONS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Agriculture. It was widely reported last week in western Canada that the Farm Credit Corporation was taking over ownership of large amounts of land as a result of the financial crisis in agriculture. Will the Minister tell the House whether the intent of the FCC is to lease this land back to the previous owners for a specified period of time, with a buy-back clause, or to establish a land-bank system?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could clear the air if I answered the second part of the question first. It is not the intention of the Farm Credit Corporation, it is not my intention, nor the intention of this Government to establish a land-banking scheme or system.

I think the confusion is in the fact that there was some misunderstanding and perhaps some misrepresentation—not intentional, I am sure—of the internal study which is going on within FCC today. Indeed, we are looking at ways and means to amend the Act and to change the policy to adapt to the serious situation facing the Corporation and Canadian farmers.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—NEGOTIATION INQUIRY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. It relates to the serious breakdown in negotiations with the Japanese community. The Minister will know that the Japanese-Canadian Association is very disturbed about the two-day process and about the perception that there might be some unilateral action. Therefore, is he prepared to abandon the rush to meet his own Government's timetable, and perhaps return to the table to resume negotiations in a very genuine and structured manner?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member I would say that in view of his Government's past history in that regard I would expect him to be applauding any initiatives we would take, or any discussions we would have with the Japanese-Canadian community.

We have had what I consider to be very good and fruitful discussions with the Japanese-Canadian community, the leadership within that community. I will consult further with my Cabinet colleagues on the matter. As I have said before to the Hon. Member in the House, he will be one of the first to know the outcome of that discussion.

REQUEST THAT NEGOTIATIONS CONTINUE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems to dwell on the past. According to the Association, discussions have not been fruitful. There still are differences. The Minister implied that there was a wide gap. Therefore I appeal to his sensitivity to this issue. Will he assure the Japanese community that negotiations around the table will continue in a structured way until a modification or agreement has been attained, rather than have one of the two parties leaving the table very unsatisfied?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's information comes from news reports, basically from second-hand reports. Over the course of the last number of weeks we have had what I consider to be very positive discussions with this important community, in order to try to settle what many people believe—certainly the majority of people in this country—is a blot against the rights of a particular group of people. I believe the outcome of our discussions with them, and what we hopefully do collectively on the floor of the House of Commons, will do credit not only to ourselves but to Japanese Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Order, with great respect.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

TORONTO CO-OPERATIVE AND NON-PROFIT UNIT ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for CMHC who is responsible for housing. Before Christmas he promised not to cut co-op housing. Why did he permit Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to cancel housing unit allocations committed to five Toronto co-operatives and non-profits which had been told firmly in mid-December that they met all CMHC requirements? They were cancelled without warning of a change of rules on the last possible day, December 31.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I draw the Hon. Member's attention to a letter he has in his possession, signed by me. It explains that there was no change in criteria, no change in policy, and that the policy which Canada Mortgage and Housing used was the same one it used for the last three years. The difference this year is that there was a back up of committed co-op non-profit and private non-profit units to go ahead on December 31 because some units had not received municipal approval, some units had not received their drawings, and some units did not have firm prices and therefore did not meet the criteria established by CMHC over the last three years.

DISTRIBUTION OF UNIT ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister justify the fact that he and CMHC gave more than 500 of the left over unit allocations intended for community based co-operative and non-profit groups not to other non-profit groups which were ready to go in Georgetown and Mississauga, but to one favoured private developer who is linked to the DelZotto brothers, on the last possible day of the allocation year, December 31?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, again I draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that the units which were available were not exclusively for co-ops, not exclusively for public non-profit, and not exclusively for private non-profit.

● (1500)

It is my understanding that throughout the rest of Canada the Corporation could not find other units put by other groups that were available and could start under the criteria of a hard commitment on December 31. The Hon. Member shakes his head. I would ask him to assist me by giving me the names of those groups which were turned down, who met the criteria of Canada Mortgage and Housing on December 31, 1984. I ask him to assist me in that way.

PETITIONS

CALL FOR FREE VOTE ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a petition that was sponsored and circulated by Mrs. Ruth Ross whose husband, Ontario Provincial Police Constable Jack Ross, was tragically murdered while on duty on October 7, 1984, Thanksgiving weekend. Mrs. Ross, her family and friends, managed to obtain 14,277 signatures on their petition which demands that Parliament deal immediately and effectively with the question of capital punishment either by a free vote or a national referendum. I challenge police officers across Canada. If one widowed police officer's wife can collect—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member knows that I have several times said that the purpose at this moment is to introduce the petition. I understand how seriously the Member takes the subject and I understand its importance, but I do not think it would be wise for me to depart from that rule, with great respect.

CLOSURE OF WILDLIFE CENTRE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition to this House on behalf of some 1,700 residents of the riding of Simcoe North and other ridings in Canada who request that the closing of the Wye Marsh Wildlife Interpretation Centre in Midland, Ontario, be reversed.

NATIONAL RESEARCH TECHNOLOGY CENTRE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting a petition on behalf of over 1,000 residents of the City of Winnipeg who beseech this House for some redress of a serious cutback and setback to scientific development in our city, namely the cutback of the $41 million National Research Technology Centre. I hope that the House will be able to provide some redress as this is very important to the future of western Canada and the future of technology in Canada.

MILITARY INTERVENTION IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present these petitions from many concerned Canadians about the situation in Central America. They urge the Canadian Government to state publicly and clearly its unequivocal opposition to United States' military intervention in Central America, including, one, violations in Nicaragua's territory; two, direct U.S. involvement and aggression against Nicaragua by supporting Contra attacks; three, escalation of United States military presence in El Savador; and four, direct U.S. military involvement in a broader regional war.

CLOSURE OF WILDLIFE CENTRE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of the riding of Swift Current-Maple Creek, in the Province of Saskatchewan, who are protesting the closing of the Prairie Wildlife Interpretation Centre and the reduction of opportunity for students and the public generally to learn more about their wildlife heritage.

MILITARY AID TO CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from numerous residents of Hamilton, Ontario, who are protesting against the United States escalating the war in Central America, specifically by increasing military aid from $44 million in 1981 to over $50 million in 1983. They pray that Canada speak out against American support of the Contra attacks on Nicaragua and the violations of international territory, the violations of the territory of Nicaragua as well as the escalation of the military presence. I present that petition.

MILITARY INTERVENTION IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present on behalf of some 700 constituents in my riding of Ottawa Centre a petition calling for the Government of Canada to state clearly and publicly its complete opposition to the U.S. military intervention in Central America, including support for the Contras, the mining of harbours in Nicaragua and the U.S. military presence in El Salvador.

UNIVERSAL SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of constituents in Algoma who are protesting the Government's plan to cut back on our universal social programs and are calling on the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada to ensure that no legislation be enacted which would have the effect of taking away from the citizens of Canada universal social security programs.

MILITARY INTERVENTION IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from some 550 people urging this House to urge the United States to cease its aggression against Nicaragua, its mining of the harbours, its aggressive military presence in El Salvador and its broadening of the regional war to places such as Guatemala. And as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

MAIL SERVICE IN ORLEANS, ONT.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition on behalf of the residents of the community of Orleans in my constituency asking for improvements in the door-to-door mail service in the Town of Orleans. It is signed by 330 constituents.

TAX BREAKS TO CORPORATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of residents of the City of Toronto who call upon this Parliament to enact legislation to ensure that the income tax will be revised so that the tax breaks to large corporations are given only in consideration for their guarantee to provide jobs, and that the number of jobs created will be reported every quarter to Parliament. And as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 7, 43, 74, 108, 129 and 137.

[Text]

ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT ON "OCEAN RANGER"

Question No. 7—Mr. McGrath:

1. Was the report of the Royal Commission on the loss of the drill rig Ocean Ranger made public in August, 1984 and, if so, were recommendations made dealing with Search and Rescue off the coast of Newfoundland?

2. Will Canada's Search and Rescue Capability Upgrade Program be completed and, if so, on what date?

3. In the event of rig evacuation under emergency conditions, what recommendations, if any, were made dealing with the training of key personnel onshore and offshore of SAREC AND RCC?

4. Is it the government's intention to deploy SAR helicopters to St. John's Newfoundland where they will be closer to offshore activity and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, and six recommendations were made concerning Search and Rescue.

2. The Search and Rescue Capability Update Program (SARCUP) was completed in June, 1984. Three additional Voyageur helicopters and being upgraded to SARCUP standards with an estimated completion date of June, 1986.

3. National and Regional Major Marine Disaster Search and Rescue Contingency Plans have been developed. Contingency plans, developed by companies involved in offshore exploration, and reviewed by DND, CCG, and COGLA officials are tested in joint exercises with the RCC, SAREC, SAR Squadrons, industry on shore, on drilling rigs and on supply vessels.

4. A Canadian Forces SAR helicopter will be deployed on a routine basis from its base in Gander to St. John's during the winter months.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 43—Mr. Howie:

On (a) January 1, 1983 (b) January 1, 1984 by rank, what number of persons were serving in the regular force of the Canadian Armed Forces?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence):

	January 1, 1983	January 1, 1984
Total All Ranks	82,207	81,701

Order Paper Questions

DND—INCREASE IN EXPENDITURES

Question No. 74—Mr. McKinnon:

What is the increase in real terms in the Department of National Defence's expenditures, including statutory costs and expressed in percentages, for each fiscal year 1970-71 to 1983-84?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence):

Fiscal Year	Real Increase/(Decrease) as a Percentage
1970/71	(6.7)
1971/72	(2.8)
1972/73	(5.4)
1974/75	(4.3)

1983/84	7.1

Question No. 108—Mr. de Jong:

1. Did the Department of National Revenue undertake or did it have undertaken for it any studies as to the matter of the implementation and administration of a value added tax in Canada and, if so (a) did such studies examine the federal jurisdiction only or did it also examine the tax with respect to its application on a federal-provincial scale (b) how many were completed and, in each case, on what date?

2. Are any studies presently under way and, if so (a) how many (b) who are the participants (c) what is the estimated cost, in each case?

3. Have any studies been completed and, if so, will they be tabled or released to the public in some other manner?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): The Department of National Revenue has not undertaken a formal study relative to the implementation and administration of a value added tax in Canada.

Officials of the Department are co-operating with officials of the Department of Finance who are presently undertaking a study of the value added tax. (See reply to question No. 107 answered January 21, 1985.)

As indicated in (1) above, the Department has not undertaken a study of the value added tax.

STATUS OF WOMEN

Question No. 129—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. From April 1, 1984 to September 17, 1984, what was the amount spent in the departmental office of the Minister Responsible for the Status of Women?

2. Were the budgetary guidelines exceeded and, if so, by what amount?

3. For the same period, how many exempt staff, including those on personal services contracts, were employed by the Minister and what were their names, date of appointment and salary?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): 1. The operational expenditures for the period of April 1, 1984 to September 17, 1984, for the departmental office of the Minister responsible for the Status of Women were $33,486.

2. No, the budgetary guidelines were not exceeded.

3.

Name	Date	Salary
Jane Youngson	October 3, 1983	up to $36,729
Rebecca Butovski	October 3, 1983	up to $36,729

No personal services contracts for the above-mentioned period.

CANADA PENSION PLAN INVESTMENT FUND

Question No. 137—Mr. Nickerson:

1. What rates of interest are borne by the special non-marketable bonds issued by the government to the Canada Pension Plan Investment Fund with respect to Canada Pension Plan contributions made by residents of the Northwest and Yukon Territories?

2. Is this information omitted from the Public Accounts of Canada and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. The securities received by the Canada Pension Plan Investment Fund bear interest at rates equal to the average market yields of Government of Canada bonds with maturity of 20 years and more, compounded semi-annually. These rates are applied each month to new securities, which include securities with respect to Canada Pension Plan contributions made by residents of the Northwest and Yukon Territories. The average interest rate for all Canada Pension Plan Investment Fund securities outstanding at March 31, 1984 was 10.59 per cent.

2. The average interest rate on the special non-marketable bonds of the Canada Pension Plan Investment Fund as at March 31 of each year, is published in the Public Accounts of Canada (Public Accounts of Canada, 1983-84, Volume I, Page 11.9.)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and on the amendment of Mr. Gray (Windsor West) (p. 1302).

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, not being accustomed to seeing you in the chair when resuming debate, I am ready to proceed and wish you a good afternoon, Sir.

As I was mentioning before the noon recess, I am finding problems with some of the rhetoric we hear in the House. The Government apparently hopes that by weakening even further the FIRA provisions in Bill C-15, increased foreign investment will come into Canada. I was pointing out to the Government some of the problems this country experiences with the tremendous amount of foreign investment and control that exists in Canada today. I mentioned that the high level of foreign investment means in the end that more capital leaves the country than comes in. Nobody invests in Canada without expecting to get more back in the long term. We find today that Canada has a deficit of some $9.4 billion in interest and dividend payments on the Canadian deficit, one of the highest in our history.

I would like to go on to point out some of the other negative effects of foreign ownership. Of all imports to Canada, 72 per cent were designated for foreign-controlled firms. Again, this has a further deteriorating effect on the balance of payments and on the Canadian dollar.

The fact is that branch plants existing in Canada do most of their ordering from their parent companies in the United States even though they may be able to buy supplies cheaper from Canadian producers in Canada. In other words, they do not become good corporate citizens. They do not invest in Canada. They do not support Canadian enterprise because, after all, they are just a branch plant of their parent corporations which are located mainly in the United States.

The other point I would like to make is that when looking at Canadian lay off records compiled over the last number of years, one notices that it is the foreign-owned companies that have laid off the most workers. In a downturn in the economy, they are the first ones to lay off workers. Again this has a negative effect on the Canadian economy as a whole.

I would like to point out something else which has a negative effect on the Canadian economy and that is the situation regarding research and development. When looking at the statistics, one sees that foreign-owned companies do not spend the same amount on research and development as Canadian companies. During a good hunk of the 1960s and the 1970s, Canada fell far behind in its commitment to research and development. In fact, our commitment to research and development as a percentage of our Gross National Product is almost equivalent to that of many Third World underdeveloped countries. When investigating this further, as various organizations have, one discovers that the major fault lies with the multinational corporations. Branch plants simply do not do their research here. They do it back home in the country of the parent firm, which is usually the United States.

In a report that was released earlier this fall by the Science Council of Canada entitled The Canadian Industrial Development: Some Policy Directions, the effects of the multinationals on research and development in Canada are discussed. What do we find? We find that the branch plants operating in Canada have lower productivity than Canadian firms. Let me read the following from that report:

> A comparison of the productivity of industries in Canada with that of their counterparts in the United States showed that, for manufacturing, the productivity gap between the two countries is about 25 per cent. A number of factors contribute to poor productivity performance in Canada, but possibly the most surprising is the effect of foreign control. As Saunders has found, high foreign control of an industry in Canada contributes to Canada's poor productivity performance.

I find it surprising that the Government looks at more foreign control as the economic solution to the mess in which Canada finds itself. Surely that is not the road to follow when solving our long-term problems. The solution surely lies in becoming more self-sufficient within this country. It lies in being able to produce the goods and services that we need for ourselves. It means taking a different approach toward becoming self-sufficient. It means taking an approach toward developing new types of technologies, new types of research and development in areas that would allow for small-scale production that is as efficient, if not more efficient, than large-scale production. It means following a road on which we begin to conserve the capital that is available in this country. It means moving down the road toward decentralization, community control and control by workers. It means a new vision for Canada. It does not mean a continuation of the Liberal vision which sees us becoming a branch plant economy under the large economic unit of the United States. It means that we truly become masters in our own house.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are indicating to me that my time is up. I have a few minutes left and would seek the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to continue with my remarks and be able to conclude them.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry, but the Hon. Member has heard that there is not unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to take part in this important debate in the House on foreign investment in Canada. I firmly believe that Canada should not become a mere warehouse for foreign corporations. We all realize that foreign investment is important to Canada's growth, but the Government must remain vigilant and ensure that new foreign investment will have a long-term beneficial impact on the entire country. Unfortunately, eliminating FIRA and replacing it by a blank cheque, as it were, means that large American corporations will ignore the wishes of Canadians and thumb their noses at policies designed to protect and promote Canadian interests.

I shall, if I may, give a short history of foreign investment in Canada to illustrate the shortcomings of Bill C-15. In the past, a number of reports have been tabled in the House, describing the harmful effects of letting foreign investment infiltrate Canada's economy. We had the Gorden Report in 1957, the Watkins Report in 1968, the Hahn Report in 1970 and finally the Gray Report in 1972. Mr. Speaker, all these studies described major problems arising from extensive control of our economy by foreign corporations.

In fact, before 1974, the drawbacks of extensive foreign control included the proliferation of branch plants, the effect being to reduce competition by setting up oligopolies within Canadian industry.

American anti-trust legislation prevented corporations from modernizing and upgrading their branches, thus leading to low productivity, greater inefficiency and higher prices for the consumer.

There was also the matter of branch profits that were siphoned away to the parent corporations outside Canada instead of being reinvested in this country. This was done in various ways, such as establishing transfer prices or through abnormal imports.

There is also the manner in which the branch is controlled by the parent corporation. Branches are often excluded from international production contracts and are run in accordance with decisions taken in a foreign country.

Furthermore, many branches have no research and development facilities, their only purpose being to assemble and sell their products. I may refer to the excellent point made on another occasion in the House by the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), who stated that the total amount of research and development done by Canadian corporations is five times that done by foreign corporations located in Canada. The House is of course aware that research and development are a vital part of Canada's economy growth and economic renewal.

Those were the main problems arising from the excessive powers wielded by foreign-controlled corporations within the Canadian economy before the creation of FIRA.

In 1974, the Foreign Investment Review Agency was created by the Government to deal with the problems I have just mentioned.

Foreign investment proposals were examined by Cabinet to ensure they presented a significant benefit for Canada. The review process was supposed to consider five criteria. First, the effect of the investment on the level and nature of economic activity in Canada, including employment, resource processing and exports. Second, the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise and in the industry to which the enterprise belongs. Third, the effect on productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety, another set of criteria that were used to determine whether an investment was justified. Fourth, the effect on competition, and fifth and last, the compatibility of the investment with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives enunciated by the provinces likely to be significantly affected by the investment.

Mr. Speaker, when FIRA was created, the Americans did not take offence. The United States ambassador at the time, Mr. Thomas Enders, said the following in May 1979: "We were afraid that FIRA would be an obstacle to new investment in Canada. However, we have found that FIRA has been faithful to its mandate, which was to ensure that investment proposals contain certain benefits for Canada". The U.S. ambassador went on to say: "The Agency's present approval rate of 90 per cent is an indication of the quality of the proposals it receives". The ambassador also said: "I understand Canada's position, as a country that is so heavily dependent on foreign investment, that it finds it necessary to have such a mechanism to ensure that its interests are known and respected."

Mr. Speaker, this was said by a representative of the United States who, in 1979, was not making a big thing about the existence of FIRA. However, FIRA has clearly been effective, and Canadians have benefited from this legislation.

Yes it is true that afterwards, on the other side of the border, criticism was levelled at FIRA, but the negative remarks had to do with FIRA's procedural requirements and administrative difficulties rather than on the right or even the obligation of Canada to ensure that foreign investments were more properly geared to our interests.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the new government seems more interested in kowtowing to the United States than in solving problems related to a foreign-controlled economy.

According to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), the new agency, Investment Canada, will be given:

—a new positive mandate to promote and encourage investments.

After reading the Bill, I can see that the Minister is interested in two things: the United States and more wide-ranging powers for himself.

According to Bill C-15, the new investment proposals to be reviewed will have to bear the approval of the Minister rather than the Cabinet, as was the case with FIRA. In other words, the opinion of one person will decide about takeovers which will create or eliminate thousands of jobs for Canadians. The objectivity—the political will, in fact—will be the exclusive realm of one Minister who will make decisions within the confidential confines of his office. That is far too much responsibility and power for one Minister, particularly when one knows who will be the Minister responsible for FIRA or Investment Canada. Mr. Speaker, giving that responsibility to the Minister is somewhat like putting Dracula in charge of a blood bank.

An Hon. Member: And how!

Mr. Lapierre: The Minister has replaced the concept of significant benefit by the concept of net benefit. In other words, the government is more concerned about making profitable investments than ensuring that Canada's foreign trade is in our own interest. It used to be that we were in a position to negotiate and make foreign investments as profitable as possible for Canada. But now the Americans can come to Canada and do practically anything they like. While the Minister responsible extends a welcoming hand to the United States, the Americans are threatening to raise non-tariff barriers against Canadian products.

I see Members opposite and I am sure that they have hog producers among their constituents. They ought to realize that kowtowing to the Americans is not going to do wonders for hog exporters. I am quite concerned about the way things are going and about those Ministers who are walking on their knees before President Reagan and American interest groups that want to continue to control Canada. On the other hand, we find out that all kinds of barriers are raised against Canadian products going to American markets. We now find out that they have been walking on their knees without asking for anything in return. Mr. Speaker, that is not what I call negotiations.

We have heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs give full support to President Reagan and his star war. Well, Mr. Speaker, you know very well that the Secretary of State for external Affairs does not have enough imagination to think in terms of a strictly Canadian policy.

Once again he thinks that following in the footsteps of the United States is the correct approach for Canada. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that, with Investment Canada and the kowtowing of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, they are destroying the independence, sovereignty and pride of Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to listen to some of my colleagues on both sides of the House who were addressing the amendment to Bill C-15. I have to say that I unalterably oppose it.

I was surprised at the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) who spoke about Canada giving everything to the United States, Canada's largest trading partner. Obviously he was talking about a country which he does not seem to realize is the most powerful nation in the world. He does not seem to realize that we are its neighbour and principal trading partner.

The Hon. Member does not seem to realize that Canada has bonds which do not weld it inextricably together with the United States, but that there are bonds which weld us together in many other contexts—in a cultural sense, in a linguistic sense and in multicultural composition.

I had an opportunity to examine and to consider the comments which were made by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). Before he called it one o'clock he made some rather strange allegations about foreign investment. He stated—perhaps accurately so; I have not seen the figures—that of all the industrialized nations Canada has the greatest component of foreign investment. Obviously, in his mind that is bad. He went on to say that Canada has a greater component of foreign investment than some Third World countries. So what? I can think of some Third World countries in which no one in their right mind would care to invest because those countries are so politically volatile and unstable.

We listen to the NDP, with its clarion call and its shrill voice about nationalism, bemoaning foreign investment on the one hand, and then on the other endorsing Weyerhaeuser in acquiring the timber limits which it has in British Columbia. It endorses Weyerhaeuser in the United States and denies Canadian participation. There was a Canadian group which was prepared to take over the operation at the time Weyerhaeuser applied. Whom did the NDP support? It supported the U.S. application. It is a matter of record and I would challenge any Member on the other side to prove otherwise. What was wrong with that? I would say that there was nothing wrong. Weyerhaeuser happened to be one of the very few good managers of the forest sector.

I could provide a better example, that of St. Regis Pulp and Paper. It is an American company which is based in New York and operates in Hinton. It has one of the largest forest nurseries that can be found. At any time that company will not have to go any farther than 45 miles in order to cut trees. It is in a northern climate, it has an excellent nursery system and an ongoing system of silviculture which could well be emulated by the forest industries in Canada which are Canadian-owned and operated.

Those Members from British Columbia who know anything about the forest sector should know whereof I speak. But St. Regis Pulp and Paper is an American company and for some reason it has to have some shadow over it. There has to be some cloud or some element of doubt and concern in the heads of the NDP Members because of that. Well, their economic nationalism is fine until they get to the point of explaining to Canadians that they are going to have to undergo a very serious reduction in their lifestyle and standard of living if we deny the foreign investment they would have us deny.

I listened to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) earlier today talking about Conservatives going out of their way to draw in foreign investment. He did not give us the other side. He did not tell us about his own Government going out of its way to drive foreign investment out of Canada, aided and abetted by the NDP. They created the National Energy Program and not only killed the largest single tax-paying component of the industrial sector of Canada, they also killed off thousands of jobs for blue-collar Canadian workers in the Alberta oil patch. They did that very successfully.

The NDP Members say that they are well informed on that subject. They are so well informed, Mr. Speaker, that the former energy critic for the NDP did not know the difference between heavy oil and tar sands when he talked to people from Alberta. That is how well informed they are. Let us face the fact that obviously the Opposition is unaware of the FIRA process. It is unaware that an application involving $4,000 to take over a car wash in Windsor had to have Cabinet approval. What stupidity. What a waste of the time and talent of any Cabinet. Just a total and absolute waste. Then there was the fellow from Massachusetts who wanted to provide a certain component in the programming sector of the computer industry. One small businessman with a small investment. How long did he wait for a decision, because that intrusion into Canada might have had a horrendous effect on our economy? That gentleman waited ten months for a Cabinet decision. That is the kind of thing that fits the mind-set of the opposition Members. That is the kind of thing they can understand. They know what the bureaucracy is. They live with it, they love it, they created it. But that is not the way we want to operate. That is not the way we intend to operate. We intend to give Canadians the opportunity for jobs which can only be created by, in part, encouraging that foreign investment component.

I would now ask the NDP and the Liberals to give me their answer about the auto makers. Where do Canadian auto workers stand on this position? Tell me about General Motors, Ford, Chrysler and others. Tell me about those and other American giants operating in Canada. I mean, I am sure I could have caught one of those dear fellows sitting down eating a Big Mac from McDonald's. That is a bad name because it is an American name. Well, they take you right from the sublime to the ridiculous. They talk about state of the art. I can tell you what their policies are, Mr. Speaker, they are state of the ark.

I had the opportunity in my constituency at one time to lock horns with a rather big American concern. I am not suggesting that any foreign controlled firm investing in Canada is icing on the cake or is all sweetness and light as well as a very good neighbour. That is not the case. I can recall very vividly one U.S. company which decided to go into a small community in my constituency in the forest sector. It applied to FIRA and was denied. Its representatives came to me and asked if I would assist them, and I did so. When they applied again, they were successful. If I had the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to deny that application today, I would deny it because they lied to me and did not employ one single worker. That is the exception and we are watching those exceptions.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) to the House and reply to him as well. He said that we in the NDP were the shrill voice of nationalism. I would invite him to read the works of the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker. I think he was a Conservative and he used to speak about the values of being a Canadian, how proud he was to be a Canadian and how hard we had to fight to keep an independent Canada. I hope he would not call that being shrill. He was a Progressive Conservative of the old school of which we would like to see more in this new group of Conservatives who have become virtually Mr. Reagan's poodle. He takes them out for a walk occasionally when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) meets him in Washington or speaks in New York.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member misunderstands what FIRA was trying to do. We do not want to reduce the lifestyles of Canadians, not like the conservative Social Credit Government of British Columbia. That is reducing the lifestyles of Canadians. Poverty goes up and you get 15 per cent unemployment. We had that kind of radical restraint, that kind of policy which would open up to foreign investment, except that foreign investment did not arrive. Well, that is not the kind of policy we want to see.

Let me put to you the Conservative position as I understand it. It is that Canada needs foreign investment, but that FIRA is a hostile symbol to that investment. Because of that we are not getting our proper share of foreign investment, therefore we are not getting enough jobs. That, it seems to me, is what the argument is. I think that is superficially seductive in the sense that you want to say, yes, we want the jobs so let us open up to foreign investment. But we have to remember that we are a small country next door to a huge neighbour, but a neighbour we like very much, let us make no mistake about that. They are our allies and friends. The fact is, however, as Tommy Douglas used to say, that the elephant dances among the chickens and says: All right, boys, it is everyone for himself. There is a huge country there and we are much smaller and we have to consider that. There are costs as well as benefits to foreign investment. We would be stupid if we did not face that fact.

The reality, Mr. Speaker, is that FIRA asks a number of questions regarding foreign investment or takeovers. It says that the company coming into Canada has to show significant benefits to Canada. It sets out 10 tests. Will it provide jobs for Canadians? Will it improve Canada's export performance? Will it contribute to having more of Canada's raw materials processed within our own borders? Will the application provide new investment within Canada? Will the applicant buy supplies in Canada, provided they are competitively priced? Will there be new opportunities for Canadians to become shareholders, directors and managers of that enterprise? Will it improve Canada's access to new products and processes? Will it improve Canada's industrial productivity? Will it increase the level of competition? And is it compatible with the Government's industrial and economic policies?

Surely Conservative Members, and especially the Member who last spoke, cannot object to those kinds of tests. Surely those are reasonable tests to protect Canadians against some of the problems and costs of foreign investment. There have been lots of studies done on this. We know that American branch plant companies tend to go home to buy their materials from their parent plant. They buy a lot more of their raw materials from the home company abroad instead of buying them in Canada.

There have been studies done by the Conservative Party's own task force on technological change which show that foreign companies tend to have their research and development done abroad. We know that is a problem. I think all rational Members, which almost all of the Members in the House are, can agree that that is a problem. We know that they tend to repatriate profits more than Canadian companies do. I am the energy critic for my Party and I have found that Canadian industry in the energy area will invest more in Canada than do the foreign multinationals. I invite you to ask Bob Blair of Nova Corporation, a Canadian businessman, who will tell you the same thing.

In other countries investment is screened. Do you know what they call FIRA in the United States? They have an agency which they call the American Congress. At this moment while we are debating, an American congressional committee is holding hearings on the objections from some American politicians and businesses to the fact that Canada has too great a share in the gas industry. We have a 6 per cent share of the gas industry in the United States. They have this continuing FIRA. Other countries have the same thing. We are not a country that is out of step because of our having an organization to consider or screen foreign investment.

The Hon. Member gave an example of a car wash in Windsor with a $4,000 investment which Cabinet has to consider. That is terrible. Let's get rid of it. Let us reform FIRA, but let us not throw it out. Let us not go further by letting the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) have the final say in certain applications. I think that would be a mistake. It seems to me that the worst of all possible worlds this country could have is what the Conservative Party may be aiming for, that is, free trade with a branch plant economy. That is the absolute worst because in the long run that will mean a decline in jobs and in the economy of Canada.

We could end up with an economy with an even higher degree of foreign ownership than at present and a diminished capacity to export and innovate and, hence, to make our own way in an increasingly competitive world. Therefore, in the long run, passing this legislation and getting rid of FIRA rather than reforming it could result in fewer rather than more jobs for Canadians.

An editorial in the Toronto Star dated December 9, 1984 reads as follows:

> The agency's greatest role, indeed, has not been in screening out foreign investment, but in acting as a bargaining lever to persuade would-be investors to sweeten the pot in terms of providing more jobs and benefits for Canadians.

It is the Conservatives who are being ideological here. They are living in a world that is not real. They are being shrill and selling out the Canadian worker in the long run. It is a seductive argument for people, especially in these bad economic times, but we need an agency such as other countries have which will in fact screen foreign investment, rather than throw it out, and make sure that there are significant benefits to Canada. Only in that way can we have an economy that really works.

That is why we in this Party support the amendment to hoist this Bill for six months so that the Government can come back with some decent legislation which will protect us from the costs of foreign investment, rather than just taking this kind of Pollyanna look at the benefits which are supposed to result.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate for a few minutes in this debate on Bill C-15 to create Investment Canada. What I will attempt to do briefly is to show that the intended purpose of the present debate is to score political points rather than attracting the foreign investment we need in Canada.

First of all, it must be said that we do need investments from abroad. Everyone in Canada complains about the fact that there are 1.5 million unemployed. We have vast natural resources, qualified workers who are willing and eager to work and many of whom cannot find a job. We therefore all agree on the general objective of attracting foreign investment. However, I must point out immediately that there are two risks involved. The first is that most of this foreign investment would come from the same country, which has sometimes been the case in the past, thus leaving Canadians wide open to damaging consequences should this foreign country, which has invested massively in Canada, brings about legislative changes detrimental to our interests. Another danger, of course, would be to let foreign interests invest in all areas of Canadian activity without bothering about the fact that some of these areas must be protected in the interests of all Canadians. I am thinking of areas such as finance. As Canadians, we certainly do not want foreign interests to control our financial institutions. At the same time, there is the cultural danger that foreign investors might take over our medias, our publications, or our radio and television stations.

What I wish to emphasize is that, while doing everything in its power to attract investments from abroad, the previous Liberal Government had provided adequate safeguards to protect us from the first danger namely that, to a large extent, the investments would come from the same country. We can recall the initiative of Mr. Trudeau who had tried to provide an alternative by personally approaching European countries in an effort to attract investments from that part of the world. I repeat that the danger would be that most investments might be made by the same country. In this regard, everyone knows that I am thinking about our neighbours to the South.

The attempt to diversify investments from abroad was a laudable effort on the part of the previous government. There is nothing in the present attitude of the Progressive Conservatives to show that they are trying to diversify our foreign investments. On the contrary, their whole public relations operation consists of going down on their knees before the American giant, before Uncle Sam, and of begging our neighbours to invest in Canada. For our part, we certainly want American investments, but we also want investments from Japan, from Germany, from France, from Australia and from most other industrialized countries. The record clearly shows that, in the past, we took action to try to diversify the source of foreign investments in Canada, but the same cannot be said about the present government which is trying something rather strange. Its rhetoric aims at attracting investments by suggesting that the previous government wanted to prevent and reject foreign investments. Of course, this is ridiculous.

Another message that the Progressive Conservative Government is trying to convey is that the Foreign Investment Review Agency, FIRA as it is called in English and sometimes even in French, systematically turned down most foreign investors and blocked the influx of foreign capitals. Nothing could be further from the truth! If we look at the decisions made by FIRA, we realize that, at the most, about 3 per cent of applications were rejected. It is therefore spurious to blame the Liberal Party of Canada for having created FIRA and to say that by doing so it prevented foreign capital from entering Canada.

Quite the opposite, I would suggest that over the last two or three years, the repeated attacks by the Progressive Conservative Party in the House of Commons, and outside the House in the media, their constant criticism of FIRA has scared away foreign investors because of their unrelented allegations suggesting that it was hard to get capital into Canada because with FIRA the Liberals were blocking the entry of capital. Well, with 3 per cent only of past applications being refused, it is readily obvious that all this is pure rhetoric. It is a public relations game designed to have Canadians believe that the Conservatives have such an insight into the economy, that they are so much more eager than we Liberals are to get foreign capital, which of course is an outright invention.

Be that as it may, I look forward to hearing details of how this Government will go about ensuring that foreign investments coming into Canada will not jeopardize certain particular Canadian interests, especially in the cultural and the financial fields I was referring to earlier.

The Government has already suggested that it was going to closely monitor those fields in order to protect them from foreign control. But in saying this, the Conservative Government is actually endorsing the Liberal policy under which FIRA, the screening agency, was established specifically to pursue those goals.

So please let us put an end to all this rhetoric here. Let us stop accusing one another. It is my view that all parties in this House are in agreement as to the importance for Canada of investments coming from abroad and from south of the border, to develop our resources and create the jobs that are in such dire need.

In any case, as far as the Liberal Party of Canada, the Official Opposition, is concerned, let it be clear that we support foreign investments in Canada, let nobody fall for our opponents rhetoric, which would have people believe that we are opposing foreign investment.

● (1550)

[English]

As well, we want these foreign investments to be diversified and to come from several countries rather than one country. We do not want to be at the mercy of legislation passed south of the border that could be detrimental to us. We advocate more investment but from more countries. That is the policy of the Liberal Party of Canada.

[Translation]

Therefore, let us stop accusing one another. And as the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who spoke before me has suggested that Bill C-15 was superficially appealing, I would suggest for my part that it is a rather superficial piece of legislation. Indeed, this is the reason why my party has introduced a motion to postpone discussion on this Bill, to give the Government a chance to review the problems that must be solved if we want Canada to attract more foreign investments, and especially to make sure that such investments will be in the interest of Canadians. No doubt that some reflection will help the Government introduce a more comprehensive piece of legislation, reconsider its rhetoric and realize that we will not attract foreign capital just by criticizing the previous government.

[English]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this assembly today for the first time to comment on the legislation which plans the creation of Investment Canada, as it is somewhat speculatively called, and on the motion to hoist this legislation for a six-month period. In doing so, since this is my first speech in the House of Commons, I should like to take the opportunity to comment on my constituency and on several aspects of the parliamentary process that I feel are worthy of being on the public record.

Let me commence by paying tribute to my immediate predecessor, the Hon. John Reid, who represented Kenora-Rainy River for a period of over 17 years and whom I, eventually and at the third try, replaced here. One of my colleagues charitably says "third time lucky", but he knows as well as I do that luck is when preparation meets opportunity. It is that preparation upon which I will comment later.

Mr. Reid served his riding well, according to his lights and principles and certainly for a long time. He said that he had spent more than half of his adult life in this Chamber and that now he has the opportunity to spend his time in other pursuits.

I should like to pay tribute to his predecessor, the late Senator William Benidickson, who passed away a matter of days ago and is survived by a very devoted and great lady, his wife Agnes. Mr. Benidickson served in this Chamber for nigh on 20 years and as a Cabinet Minister in several posts. He also had a great commitment to democracy, a great commitment to his legal profession and to the people of the Kenora-Rainy River riding.

For me it is an historic day in that this is the first time that a Member for Kenora-Rainy River has ever risen in the House from a seat any place other than on the benches of the Liberal Party. I stand to be corrected, but it may be that the campaign team that put me in this place broke the longest winning streak in Canadian political history.

The riding of Kenora-Rainy River is among the five largest in the country. It is the size of both Germanys put together. It has a population of nearly 80,000, which is spread out in an average density of one for every four square kilometres. For those of us who are not bilingual or bicultural, it is something less than one person for every square mile. They have a diversity of occupations which is truly incredible. It ranges from farmers to trappers, hunters, pilots, miners, lumberjacks and factory, plant, mill and railroad workers. There are many who are employed in the service of either the federal or provincial Governments and many who, like myself before coming to this place, were private businessmen or professionals in private practice.

I dare say that, with over 100 communities in an area the size of Germany, mine is one of the most diversified ridings represented in this Chamber and possibly also one of the hardest to represent.

During our recess—referred to so often and so inaccurately by journalists as a vacation—I personally travelled well over 5,000 miles in the service of my constituents. That is besides a two-week vacation during which I also travelled.

I should like to comment briefly on the ethnic background and make-up of my constituency. Most of this part of Canada was formally ceded to the Crown, formally recognized the sovereignty of the Crown, as late as 1929, 1930 and 1931. There are people alive today who remember the time when a large part of my riding was not part of Canada but was the sovereign territory of the Anishinabek, whose descendants still occupy it today.

● (1600)

It is a great privilege for me to represent the Anishinabek. Napich keechee-énandan kai-seck che-a-anee to-mou-ka anishinabek. I am grateful to them for their strong support. Ga-chee-enan-dan ka-ke wee-chee (ka-pou-tou) show-watch.

[Translation]

I also consider it a privilege to represent people of various linguistic groups, the Francophones in my constituency and people of Ukranian, German, Dutch, and Polish origin, people from every European nation probably, from most nations in the world that are represented either by immigrants or descendants.

[English]

I think it would also be appropriate for me to tell the House today that I am a new Canadian myself. The general election which saw me elected to this Chamber was called on the fourteenth anniversary of my arrival in Canada. That day, of course, will always stay in my memory. One of my favourite themes when I have the opportunity and the privilege to address a gathering, be it in my riding or anywhere else, is the degree of opportunity that is available to us in Canada today. I cannot conceive of having the sort of opportunities I have had in Canada had I elected to remain in my own country. I tell my friends, and it is only partially in jest, that I am a refugee from English beer, from tea, and from Toryism.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Parry: There would be those who would say that I have got my come-uppance. I have managed to avoid both tea and English beer. It seems that Toryism, and I must say this with some regret, has a certain air of inescapability about it, particularly in this Chamber. I would say to my friends opposite, and I would caution them very strongly, not to take it too much to heart because there are, after all, those among them who differ. Let me say that I would much rather be sitting across from them even with their swollen numbers than across from the Tories who presently rule my native country and who are so busily engaged in wreaking destruction upon that country's economy, trade, and social fabric, a destruction which I trust my friends across the way not to repeat in this our Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parry: I would not be here today, Mr. Speaker, without the support of my Party, without the support of my many personal friends and political friends in the Kenora-Rainy River riding, and particularly not without the support of my wife and family. I shall always acknowledge that support and will always be grateful for it. It will always stand in my mind as one of the great thrills of my life.

As I said before, Kenora-Rainy River is made up of over 100 communities ranging from tiny villages of less than 100 people to the prosperous bustling communities of up to 10,000 people in the case of Kenora. It includes such mill towns as Dryden and Fort Frances, railroad and government communities such as Sioux Lookout, and mining towns such as Ear Falls and Red Lake.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I regret to tell the Hon. Member that his time has expired. I know this is his maiden speech but I am sure he will have many more opportunities to speak in this Chamber.

Mr. Manly: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Considering it is the Hon. Member's opening speech, would it be possible to ask for unanimous consent to allow him to continue?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River to continue?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I understand it is the Hon. Member's maiden speech. I am sure that so long as he exercises the same degree of restraint, which I have personally shown this House with respect to time, we would be very pleased to allow him to conclude within a reasonable time.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Government House Leader and his colleagues for extending that courtesy and civility—

Mr. Keeper: And our friends to the right.

Mr. Parry: And our friends to the right, as I am reminded by my colleagues, for extending that courtesy and civility for which I am sure in time he will become universally renowned.

I was embarking on a comparison of my constituency with many others in this country. While I feel they are not more favoured, more blessed or more richly endowed, they are in many ways more privileged. But I will stay those remarks for another day and perhaps will briefly conclude with some remarks on the subject matter of this motion and the Bill before us.

We are familiar with the various analogies that have been used to describe our state of economic affairs as compared with those of our neighbour to the south. I recall one person who was long in this place, although he never demonstrated great respect for it, saying that the Canadian situation was similar to that of a mouse sleeping beside an elephant. It would appear from some of the public statements and also the privately expressed views of our neighbours to the south that we are sometimes seen as the fifty-first state. It is perhaps fortunate, but in other ways unfortunate, that we are part of a continental economy whether we like it or not and that whatever barriers we erect in the way of that continental economy, or indeed whatever paths we smooth the trade that exists between our country and the United States of America is like an umbilical cord. It provides nourishment. However, from our perspective, it works north to south rather than south to north. There the analogy to our co-operation with this economic giant ends.

I should like to dwell on the difference between investment and purchase and to say that what is investment from the point of view of the investor is not necessarily investment from the point of view of a country in which the investment is made. When a Canadian business is purchased, the investment should surely be judged, not by the price paid nor by the change of control of the corporate structure that is used to effect such investment, but on what accrues to Canada as a result of that purchase or change of control. Investments are only made, in the strictest sense of the word, when new productive assets are put in place such that there will be benefits not only to the person making the investment but also to the community or country and, yes, to the workers in the plant or establishment in which that investment occurs.

We have seen in our country the use of foreign investment to further our development. We have also seen the degree to which foreign investment has meant a repatriation of profits. We have seen a patriation from Canada to the United States of the engineering and research and development components of the company or enterprise that has been taken over. We have seen Canada used as surplus capacity because of such investments. We have seen decisions taken that will not be in the economic interests of Canada, Canadians or the communities affected.

We cannot afford to let Investment Canada be perceived as fire sale Canada. The coincidence between the establishment of this agency and the Government's expressed intention to sell off any Crown corporations for which it can find buyers is surely a little too compelling, particularly in the minds of the observers, those who have the cash and the capital and who might make investments. Therefore, I call upon the House to support this motion and to delay for a six-month period consideration of Bill C-15.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Agriculture—Effect of bank interest rates on farmers. (b) Government action; The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan)—Administration of Justice—Unlicensed cable television operators—Prosecution query. (b) Minister's position; the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy)—Government Advertising—Awarding of contract. (b) Measures taken by Government.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development, and the amendment thereto by Mr. Gray (Windsor West) (p. 1302).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this debate on the amendment proposed by my colleague from Windsor West (Mr. Gray), namely that Bill C-15 be not now read a second time but be read a second time six months hence. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we proposed this amendment to give all Members of this House a chance to speak to this very important legislation, Bill C-15. No great feats of imagination are necessary to find clear-cut examples of foreign takeovers in Canadian industry, business and the economy in every riding and every region in our country, and the reason this screening agency was proposed a number of years ago was to strengthen our Canadian economy, not only for its own sake but also to safeguard jobs and, by promoting research and development, to create more economic activity that would produce more jobs.

We are not the only country in the world to set up a screening agency. The Americans have their own procedures and Japan and several other countries have government agencies that are supposed to control foreign takeovers. In the United States, foreign companies may not control companies in certain economic sectors including marine transportation, broadcasting, air transportation and defence production. It is absolutely impossible for a foreign country or corporation to take control of such industries. Australia, for instance, has a Foreign Investment Review Board very similar to our own and Japan exercises very extensive control over foreign investment.

This kind of measure is not out of the ordinary, in that it is already being used in many countries to screen investment.

Mr. Speaker, according to a number of observers, this Bill more or less proposes to open wide the doors of this country to foreign investment, which obviously implies foreign control over very significant economic sectors, whether industrial, commercial or other. I am thinking of a few examples in my own riding of Ottawa-Vanier, which is not an industrial riding, since it has a high percentage of professionals and public servants who are employed by the Government to indeed serve the public. The largest employer in my riding is the University of Ottawa, which has 3,000 employees in Ottawa-Vanier.

Two years ago, the University was having serious problems with its bookstore. Sales were declining, administration costs were very high, and the bookstore was losing between $100,- 000 and $200,000 per year. No rent was charged and the bookstore was perpetually in the red. The University looked for ways to get the bookstore out of the red. Canadian industry, including both publishers and distributors, showed an interest. An American company, Brennan College Service Inc., also became interested and made the University an offer. Negotiations, which lasted nearly a year, made it clear that it was not in Canada's interests to let an American company take over this bookstore and thus, according to some people, become a threat to the Canadian book industry and professional and academic publishing.

FIRA examined and rejected an initial application by Brennan College Service Inc., for the simple reason that it did not meet FIRA's requirement for generating significant benefits for Canada. This is a very important point: significant benefits for Canada, which means there seemed to be nothing to justify a foreign takeover. Following FIRA's refusal, the administration of the University of Ottawa signed a new agreement with the American company under which the University would retain ownership of the bookstore and Brennan College Service Inc. would work with the University on restructuring the bookstore which, as I said before, was in the red.

I was speaking yesterday to the Vice-Rector for Administration who said that things were going well, that the Canadian company, Ottawa Brennan Inc., was operating satisfactorily, that everything seemed to indicate that they would make a profit of around $100,000 this year and that the University of Ottawa was very pleased to have a foreign company as the minority interest within a Canadian company. I have nothing against foreign technology if it can help us acquire new expertise, in administration or manpower training, for instance. In fact, the Vice-Rector of the University commented that they were able to take advantage of the expertise of Brennan College Service Inc. and training provided by the company for employees of the University of Ottawa Bookstore. The outcome was very fortunate, since in the process, an American company was prevented from taking full control of a business in my riding of Ottawa-Vanier, and also the business was able to continue, because I think that otherwise, the University would have been forced to close down the bookstore. So it was a fortunate experience, but it was FIRA's final decision which helped to bring about this agreement. So that was my experience during the past two years with the federal Government's Foreign Investment Review Agency, and I must say it was very worthwhile.

Without FIRA, the University of Ottawa Bookstore would probably have gone out of business and become U.S.-owned. Many people, including myself, feel that the American company does not have the cultural expertise and the biculturalism of the University of Ottawa, nor the University's bilingual capacity. This was not part of the company's makeup, and we might have lost some of that respect for both languages we have been trying to build up as well as the positive attitude to the many cultures thriving in our community. I therefore feel this was a very fortunate solution to a rather serious problem.

This government has introduced Bill C-15, Investment Canada, which provides that 90 per cent of proposed acquisitions of Canadian small and medium-size companies will not even be subject to review by the Investment Canada agency.

Given such a Bill, how can we possibly expect to meet our long-sought challenge—to have a Canadian product patterned after Canadians?

Before establishing its trade strategy, Canada must be in a position to control its economic base. If that base belongs to foreign interests, Canada's decision-making power on the international scene will be severely limited. The government was not given a mandate to make Canada lose its national identity. Canadians love their country, they are friendly people in the widest and deepest meaning of the word, but they are not the kind of people who would sell out their national identity simply to cut a striking figure before the United States.

The government must have misunderstood its mandate. Recent economic history shows clearly that, in times of recession and various crises, the interests of creditor countries take precedence over those of debtor countries. Foreign takeovers can also lead to lost national identity, particularly when sensitive sectors such as education and culture are involved.

Earlier, Mr. Speaker, I was talking about education. I see that you are about to rise to interrupt me. Perhaps I will have another opportunity to speak to the House on that issue. I respect your ruling and close my remarks.

• (1620)

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate with some regret about the Bill we are debating. What we have in front of us is only more cosmetics and superficiality. I see nothing in the contents of this Bill that will advance the cause of job creation anywhere in the country. The Bill provides more of the smoke and mirrors that we have become accustomed to over the past several months.

The implication is given that by changing the name of FIRA and by making other superficial changes, somehow investment from the United States will suddenly speed up. The implication is also that this did not happen before. That is a myth that we should put to rest right away.

Anybody who cares to research The Globe and Mail—FIRA applications were all published the day after they were approved by Cabinet—will see laid out very clearly that over 90 per cent, the vast majority, of applications that came before FIRA and Cabinet were approved. It is a myth to say that somehow there was a bottleneck or stoppage of applications from the U.S. or any foreign country. That is a myth that should be laid to rest right away. This is one reason why the Bill is superficial.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) used that application, and he was right. It is wrong to tell people through this Bill that suddenly, if you make those changes and call the corporation Investment Canada and stop calling it FIRA, with those cosmetic changes U.S. investment will flow. It will not happen as simply as that. U.S. analysts have said publicly that by doing that, it ain't going to change overnight.

Investment in the United States, even within that country, is moving from the northeast to the southwest. They have a problem within their country of declining industries and declining areas. New industries are taking over and they are attracting investment. Even within the United States that kind of situation is taking place. To suggest that because you introduce this Bill and change the name U.S. investment will flow over the border is not correct. It is not as simple as that.

What the Government should be putting before us instead of this Bill is ways and means to encourage the right type of industry in the various regions of Canada. We have Silicon Valley in California and we have silicon valley right here in the National Capital Region. What we should have before us instead of these cosmetics is a strategy whereby new futuristic industries can be encouraged in the regions of the country. That is what the Government should be putting in front of us. How can we attract more high tech firms to the Atlantic area and to various areas in western Canada? That is the kind of policy I would like to see the Government put forward instead of these cosmetics.

Whatever happened to a regional development policy? When is the Government going to tell us how it intends to build up the regions of this country? Certainly we have not seen those measures so far. I would like the Government very soon to spell out very clearly its policy on regional development. When this Party was in power, there was a key element of our policy devoted to regional economic development, but I have not heard that mentioned. I have seen the negative effects of the cut-backs that have been put in place. We have not seen that U.S. investment until now.

The fact is that apart from keeping out U.S. investment, we have been trying to encourage it. When we created Fishery Products International in Newfoundland, many people tried to get private sector investment for that company wherever it was available. All of us, no matter what side of the House we are on, agree that only through private sector investment are we going to create long-term jobs. That did not come and Governments had to step in and provide the capital that was needed.

Another industry will be familiar, namely, the iron ore industry. Apart from attracting new American capital, we are seeing the Americans pull out capital and emphasize operations other than those which they hold in Canada. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway made that point very clearly, and he was right. Just because you have an American branch plant in your country does not mean that you have a secure future. In fact, the opposite may be true. Let us not fool ourselves that by attracting American capital we are automatically going to be on easy street. The fact is that they have been looking after their own interests first and ours second. We should be very wary of that.

We have no hesitation, certainly in my province, about having American capital. We have had a long, warm relationship with the Americans. I remember my grandfather sailing to New England in the days of sail when it was known in my province as the Boston States. We have a very lucrative trade with the eastern United States. Atlantic Canada still does, as we do on the West Coast and in the areas represented by Members all over this Chamber. They have a very healthy trade, particularly the border provinces, with the U.S.

At the time of Confederation in 1949 when we joined Canada, one of the options put before the people of Newfoundland by Don Jamieson, a former colleague in this Chamber who is now elsewhere, was economic union with the United States. Throughout World War II we had five important bases in my province. Many American servicemen in Newfoundland married Newfoundland girls who then went to live in the United States. The real reason for the boom in the economy in the United States at the present time is not Reaganomics. It is all those Newfoundland girls who married American servicemen and created the new Americans who are adding to the vitality of that country at this time.

We have no hesitation in welcoming the Americans with open arms. We have been friends of theirs for decades, indeed centuries. Let us not kid ourselves that they are somehow the enemy at our gates that we have to keep out. They are not. We want and need that investment. That is the only way to create long-term jobs. However, it cannot be done through cosmetics and superficialities. We must come forward with something with more substance than that.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to plug something here. It is a bit of a black market operation and a bit of a subterfuge. However, let me say that one of the reasons given for the screening of investments being processed through the new Investment Canada is the protection of the Canadian cultural heritage. That seems to be all right on the surface of it. There is nothing wrong with being in favour of the Canadian cultural heritage. However, let us not let the Government encourage it on the one hand and discourage it on the other. The Government cannot say that it will screen investments through a Bill like this for possible detraction from the Canadian cultural heritage while at the same time making cut-backs to the CBC.

If something is damaging the cultural heritage of the country, it is the closing and downgrading of various CBC stations, and particularly those in small, remote communities in northern Canada. The only voice, mirror or self-image that those people have is their local CBC station. Now when many communities are fighting for survival, the very means of protecting their self-image and indeed their cultural heritage is being taken away from them. I would ask the Government to review that policy and to intervene with the CBC in order to see that those stations that we need so badly for the protection of our cultural heritage are not taken away from us.

I can give as an example of this the station in Labrador City which is in a remote area formerly served by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada. Communities such as that one are fighting for their lives at the present time. As we know, the iron ore and steel industries are struggling for survival. I do not believe that they are sunset industries by any stretch of the imagination, but they are going through some very rough times. Now, when they are struggling for survival, it seems to me that it is wrong to take away their voice, their self-image and the protection of their cultural heritage. I do not believe that the Government can, on the one hand, say that it can protect this and, on the other hand, take steps to destroy it. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would ask government Members to review that policy.

I am afraid that what we have before us at the present time is nothing of substance but more fluff and more cosmetics from a Government that has certainly become known for that in the economic fields. Perhaps government Members need time. I know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has put forward policy statements which have some substance. We may agree or disagree with these statements, but at least there is some substance to them. The same thing must happen in terms of economic policy.

The Government must put before us meaningful measures for job creation. Instead, what we have are cut-backs. For example, there have been cut-backs in unemployment insurance at a time when job creation is at an all-time high in my own province. For example, there have been cut-backs in the fisheries infrastructure at a time when that particular industry is struggling for survival. There have been increases in the ferry rates to Newfoundland. Ferries are the very lifeline of islands like mine and Prince Edward Island. If the ferry rates are increased, not only will it discourage business and add to its costs but an added burden will be put on the consumer who has the least ability to bear that burden.

Instead of receiving meaningful job-creation measures, we have received cut-backs which will have a negative effect on our economy. I say to the Government that now is the time to forget the posturing, the rhetoric and the public relations and get on with putting before us real policies for meaningful job creation in the country.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in my place today and take this opportunity to address this Bill. I find that I must rise today to caution against what seems to be the unbridled enthusiasm of the Government for advertising Canada as being open for business with no strings attached. I of course have no complaint with the notion that Canada is open for business. I applaud any initiative that brings legitimate investment capital into the country. I remind the Government that approximately 97 per cent of the applications that were brought before FIRA in the past year were approved in any case. Simply changing the name of this agency from FIRA to Investment Canada, while it is a lovely cosmetic change, will not in and of itself have much impact on job creation in the country.

At the very time that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is telling Canadians and the assembled group of boardroom chairmen from the United States that Canada is open for business, there are certain groups in the United States telling us that the United States may not be open to Canadian exports. Canadians know that a few friendly words which passed between the President and the Prime Minister in March do not mean influence over the administration, much less over Congress or various sectors of the U.S. economy. In particular, I speak of the softwood lumber industry for which efforts have been renewed in the last few weeks to curb Canadian exports.

Canada is by far the world's largest exporter of lumber. We supply over 40 per cent of the world's total supply of lumber. More than 66 per cent of those exports from Canada went to the United States in 1982. Of that amount, 56 per cent came from the Province of British Columbia alone.

It seems to me to be somewhat frightening that, on the one hand, while we are advertising that Canada is open for business and has been open for business for some time, on the other hand the United States has increased protectionist tendencies. The softwood lumber sector in the United States is moving rapidly not by means of protest but, in its own mind, by means of legislation to prohibit or restrict to a minimal amount the importation of lumber from Canada.

The forestry industry is the single largest producer and generator of jobs in this country. There is no bigger industry. In terms of our balance of trade, it is bigger than agriculture, fisheries, mining and oil and gas all put together. That is how critical this industry is to Canada. Unfortunately, in the House of Commons and, I would suggest, across the country among the public at large and in particular in the Cabinet, there is not much appreciation of that very real and very startling simple economic statistic.

Rather than getting on with the business of making cosmetic changes to the names of agencies, rather than managing by media manipulation, rather than tying its appearance of competence to the ability of its media managers, I would like to ask the Government when, in addition to practising its love-in with the current United States administration, it will stand up and defend Canadian interests. This administration recently signed an agreement restricting Canadian shipments of duty-free newsprint into Europe to 600,000 tonnes annually. Our quota used to be 1.5 million tonnes annually. I have just told the House about the importance of softwood lumber. Let me tell Hon. Members as well that newsprint is the second major component in the value of the Canadian forestry industry. Over 100 communities in Canada are single-industry towns which are dependent on this industry. Yet an agreement was signed during the Christmas recess, the details of which were announced on December 27 when nobody was paying attention. That agreement restricts Canada's ability to go duty-free into that market. An industry spokesman in The Chronicle-Herald of Halifax a few days ago described it as an unfair decision which was reached without any consultation with industry representatives. If the industry was not consulted, can we assume that other Canadians were consulted?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The industry was consulted.

Mr. Tobin: I would say to the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that The Chronicle-Herald indicated that the industry was not consulted and has described the decision as "an unfair decision". Where is the commitment for consultation that the Government promised? I should point out that the agreement was rejected by the previous administration. The previous administration refused to sign it and saw it as being basically unfair. The previous administration recognized—if we understand the growth that will occur in this sector by the year 2000—that it would foreclose in advance Canada's job creation opportunities for the future. The previous administration turned it down, but this administration signed it and announced its decision on December 27. What was it trying to hide?

Some time ago I suggested to the Prime Minister that he would do himself and the country a great service if he would bring with him into the House a set of ear-plugs. The House has had the unfortunate spectacle of a Prime Minister who has misunderstood the applause of 211 cheering and, with all due respect, mindless supporters, and has taken that applause as being the approval of the people of Canada for the policies which are being announced. I want to tell the Prime Minister that, if he has misunderstood the applause of his tribe for the approval of the people of Canada, he ought to go out with his Secretary of State for External Affairs and his Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) and consult the people in the forest industry about the agreement which was signed with the EEC that will foreclose Canada's future possibilities for growth in that industry. He ought to find out how people in the lumber industry feel about the renewed threat of a limitation on Canadian exports into the U.S. But we have not heard a peep out of the administration.

When I see a Government which has been in power for four months and has not put forward one piece of original or substantial legislation, and which wastes the time of the House by changing the name of FIRA to Investment Canada, I am reminded a bit of the little old lady in the Wendy's commercial. The people of Canada have sent 211 sets of buns to the House. I want to ask, "Where the hell is the beef?"

May I humbly suggest that a six-month hoist is appropriate and is in order at this time.

Mr. Kempling: You have never been humble in your life.

Mr. Tobin: I would suggest to the administration that when it has some beef and some measures of meaty substance to bring before the House for our humble consideration, it should attempt once again to attract the undivided and serious attention of this humble House.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to rise today to discuss a motion to delay the implementation of the Investment Canada Bill for six months for further study. It is an excellent and necessary amendment.

The Government is proposing to protect the cultural heritage of Canada, and government Members have stated during the course of the debate that that is why the Government is not permitting foreign investment in the areas which it deems to be cultural—broadcasting, newspapers and the like. However, one of the arguments which we have made on this side of the House is that a cultural heritage cannot be protected by allowing the economy to be controlled by outside forces. I will not spend much time arguing that point, except to point out something of which we are all very aware, which is that in Canada the cultural heritage of our native people was not very well protected once their economy was taken away from them. I submit that there will be no cultural heritage for Canada if the Canadian economy is gradually eroded, taken away from us and allowed to fall into foreign hands.

I believe good use could be made of the six months to study further the implications of the Bill. I have identified seven problems in the approach which the Government has taken. The Government is assuming that if it attracts foreigners, business will develop and jobs will be created. I have a great deal of difficulty with that, because Canada has been following that line of reasoning since the Second World War, with only the minor change of the establishment of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. The problems are numerous, but I will only outline seven problems which are evident in the legislation.

The first problem is that foreign companies do not spend nearly as much on research and development as do Canadian-controlled companies. Research and development is a key source of economic growth and productivity in our economy. Yet, if we look at the track record of Canadian firms versus foreign-controlled firms, we find that Canadian firms have a much better record of performing research and development than do foreign firms. I would refer the House to two studies, one which was done by the Economic Council of Canada in 1983 and another which was done by the Science Council of Canada in 1984. Both of those studies had similar results. They found that Canadian firms with less than 50 employees spent about 11.2 per cent of their sales in research and development, whereas an operation of the same size which was owned by foreign interests only reinvested 3.3 per cent of its sales.

The studies present a long table which I will not go into, but the proportions get worse as the companies get larger. Canadian-controlled companies with more than 500 employees invested 10.3 per cent of their sales in research and development, while foreign-owned companies reinvested a paltry 2 per cent. Research and development ensures long-term jobs. I submit, on the basis of the findings of the Economic Council and the Science Council—and each organization performed separate research and had results which were very much the same—that foreign firms do not do a good job in R and D. Subsequently, they will not produce as many jobs as Canadian-owned firms.

The second problem that is evident with the concept the Conservatives are pursuing is that foreign-controlled firms import much more than Canadian-controlled firms. Again, I have some numbers that I would like to put on the record which indicate that the spinoff benefits which would accrue from purchases from Canadian companies, mostly inside the country, which create other jobs subsequent to the original purchase, do not accrue when the company doing the purchasing is a foreign-owned company making its purchases from head office in the home country. In fact, foreign companies imported 22 per cent of their sales, which is five times the amount imported by Canadian companies. Of the companies which are involved in manufacturing, foreign companies imported 30 per cent of their sales, which is four times the amount imported by Canadian companies.

It is evident from these figures that foreign companies have a predilection to import from the country of their origin and do not provide the necessary multiplier effect to keep the Canadian economy growing and to prepare the way for jobs to be created in Canada.

The third problem we have with the move to more foreign control of our economy is that foreign-controlled firms make a higher proportion of payments outside of the country. I am speaking now of interest and dividend payments and service charges payable to the head office. This reduces the resources available to Canada, and reduces the opportunity for more jobs and more investment resulting from those profits. As an example, American-controlled firms holding 36 per cent of the industrial assets in Canada in 1981, accounted for 61 per cent of all external remittances. So you can see that, compared to Canadian firms, they exported capital at the rate of two to one. Foreign-owned firms do not have a record nearly as good as the Canadian-owned operations and are not as useful in recycling money and creating jobs in Canada. In fact, they exacerbate the problem by creating a large wound in the economic body of the country which drains money outside of the country.

A fourth problem which I would like to deal with today is that multinational corporations seek to maximize global profits by minimizing tax payments. Some of the countries in which they operate have high taxes and others have low taxes. They then do internal shifting of funds by charging various service fees so that their profits are larger in those countries with the lowest effective tax rate. As an example, a study of the computer industry found a $50 million tax loss through this mechanism, equal to an amount 30 per cent lower than what should have been paid given the amount of money actually earned in our country. That comes from a report done in 1981 by the Evans Research Corporation. I think that in the course of the next six months the House would be well advised to become acquainted with the research which shows that this particular policy decision the Tories have embarked upon is a hazardous one for the country.

The fifth problem we see with this approach is that foreign-controlled companies export much less real product in relation to sales than do their Canadian competitors. In fact, some studies indicate, as the Gray report did, that 90 per cent of the exports of Canadian subsidiaries went to U.S. parents in 1978, when the report was completed, and that 57 per cent of U.S. subsidiaries restricted exports from their Canadian plants. The head office makes certain that the home country gets the advantage of having that subsidiary in a foreign country, in this case Canada, and that the country being colonized, if you like, gets very minimal benefits.

To go quickly to the sixth problem, Mr. Speaker, a high ratio of foreign control of Canadian industry contributes to poor productivity performance by reducing competition, a conclusion that the Science Council found as recently as 1984. I would conclude by noting that studies by the U.S. Senate and the Harvard School of Business have found that U.S. direct investment in Canada produces a significant net creation of jobs for all sectors of the U.S. workforce but for Canada, the other side of the coin, there is a net loss of jobs. I think that makes the point, Mr. Speaker, and I will now allow another Member to speak.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favour of the motion to hoist the Bill and delay its consideration for at least six months. I think this makes sense because, once again the new government has got caught up in its own rhetoric. It believes so much in the free enterprise principle that it cannot fully appreciate the impact of this legislation.

There are two elements in what I guess will probably be a two-part presentation, Mr. Speaker. I would like to deal with how they affect my region of northwestern Ontario. We are at the western end of Ontario and we probably think of ourselves more as part of western Canada than of eastern Canada. One of the problems we have had since the area was first settled was how to attract the investment dollars we need to develop employment and the wealth that so often we miss out on. Just like western Canada, we see money being spent in the Golden Horseshoe around Toronto. Manufacturing is developed there using our resources, the raw materials taken usually from one-industry towns over a period of 20 to 30 years. Those towns are then left without any kind of secondary or tertiary industries to fall back on. In the Foreign Investment Review Agency we at least had a mechanism to try to focus, funnel or, if you like, control where investment, albeit foreign investment, could be placed. That is not to say that I agree with the manner in which FIRA was operating because I believe, and I am sure you will concur, that a government which philosophically does not believe in intervention in the marketplace has really no business intervening because it usually mucks it up. It puts on so many checks and balances to protect its interest that it is an inefficient mechanism and really does not do what it was meant to do. We saw how the Liberals dealt with FIRA in that manner.

Without the controlling mechanism which could have been used in FIRA, and which is definitely not in Investment Canada, any foreign money invested here will go to the Golden Horseshoe area of Ontario to boost the manufacturing sector. But we in northwestern Ontario, and I suggest every other part of this country, will not get the investment we need in order to produce new wealth. It will not focus investment in a community like Atikokan, in Ear Falls, which is currently undergoing a severe employment crisis. It will not help the community of Thunder Bay which has in excess of 14,000 men and women currently seeking full-time employment. I suspect that before this winter is out that number will rise to over 15,000. Investment Canada is not going to steer money to northwestern Ontario and those communities.

I think that if we gave this government six months to do the kind of research that my colleague referred to, to rethink the Bill, perhaps instead of a weakening of our control over our own destiny, we will have a mechanism which will ensure that the money, whether it be Canadian or otherwise, will be used to benefit the Canadian public.

I will take my chair for the moment, Mr. Speaker, and resume tomorrow.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ADVISABILITY OF PROMOTING INDIAN SELF-GOVERNMENT

The House resumed, from December 4, 1984, consideration of the motion of Mr. Penner:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of promoting Indian self-government by:

1. Announcing support for an affirmative policy of constitutional recognition of aboriginal self-government;

2. Pursuing actively, a bilateral process of discussion with representatives of first nations on such issues as self-government, natives claims and the elimination of the extinguishment policy; and

3. Introducing legislation to recognize first nations self-government which should be developed by means of a joint process and utilization of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to speak on a motion which was introduced a few weeks ago with regard to Indian self-government. When I left off my remarks a few weeks ago I had not had the opportunity to go into detail in some of the areas I feel we should be considering. Over the last number of weeks and months I have sat on the Standing Committee for Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I have been able to study in more detail what Indian Affairs is all about and what the problems of native people are. I would like to relate my remarks strictly to the riding of Timiskaming in northern Ontario. There we have bands in the Moose Factory area, the Temagami area and in the North Bay and Sturgeon Falls areas.

We as elected officials have to study the problems facing the native people of Canada. One and a half years ago the committee of this House toured Canada to deal with some of the problems affecting native people. Native housing in the area of James Bay, for example, is an area that we will be addressing. The previous Government failed over the last 16 years to deal with the tragedy which has affected the native people's livelihoods over a long period of time. The previous Government did not deal with the medical problems in the James Bay area. I am very pleased to say that this Government and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) will certainly be dealing with that. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will be in Thunder Bay tomorrow to meet with the chiefs of Treaty 9 which comprises the James Bay, lower mainland area.

This Government is trying to co-operate and work with the native people to solve the problems which have affected them over the last number of years. That is why I have a problem with dealing so quickly with this motion on Indian self-government. This Government wants to work with the native people and the provinces to resolve the problems which have been caused over the years. We will be dealing with housing problems and the health care system which have been neglected over the years.

One area that we must address very quickly is the unemployment problem of native people, whether on reserve or off reserve. Native people across the country have not been given the opportunity to have the steady employment which other Canadians across the country enjoy. It is no wonder that native band councils across the country want to resolve this problem with Indian self-government. All Canadians must be very sincere, concerned and aware of this.

The Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development has addressed many issues affecting native people in the last number of weeks and will continue to do so. Sitting down as we do with the officials from the Government and the officials from the band councils across Canada is the proper procedure to resolve the problems. I am looking forward to being able to say, at the end of our four-year term, that we have worked closely and freely and resolved problems which native people have had for years. The prior Government could not say this. It did not sit down with the provincial officials, the federal officials, and the officials of the band councils in order to solve the economic problems which the native people are facing. However, I feel very confident that this Government, my Minister, and officials from coast to coast will be able to do something to resolve the economic problems facing native people. We will be able to help them to have a stronger place in Canada.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, on December 4 my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), moved the following motion in the House:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of promoting Indian self-government by:

1. Announcing support for an affirmative policy of constitutional recognition of aboriginal self-government;

2. Pursuing actively, a bilateral process of discussion with representatives of first nations on such issues as self-government, natives claims and the elimination of the extinguishment policy; and

3. Introducing legislation to recognize first nations self-government which should be developed by means of a joint process and utilization of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I have had the distinct pleasure of serving with the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior on the House of Commons Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I would like to congratulate him for his sincerity and hard work. As Hon. Members of the House probably know, he chaired the special Standing Committee on Indian Self-government, of which I was a part, which resulted in what is commonly known as the Penner report.

That committee travelled across Canada, visited with bands and councils, and heard from native groups. It became clear that as a result of government legislation in the past we have relegated the Indian peoples of this country to a servitude that no sane Canadian would accept in this enlightened day and age.

I agree with the Member for Cochrane-Superior that the Indian people have been mistreated by the very paternalistic approach adopted with respect to their very livelihood. We must remember that it was not too long ago—clearly I can remember it distinctly as a young boy growing up in northern Alberta—when Indian people, if they wanted to leave the reserve, had to go to an Indian agent and ask for permission to do so. First they had to ask permission, then they had to sign out, and finally they had to tell the Indian agent when they would return. It was not so long ago when Indians could not leave the reserve.

Members will recall that Indians were not allowed to vote in any election in Canada. In other words, they were totally disenfranchised from the vote. They could not participate in the democratic process.

Today, Indian people elect their chiefs and have band council members who are elected by the band members on the reserve to administer the law, the band and the band members. This council may pass a resolution to spend funds which they have generated through resource revenue. However, that resolution must go to Ottawa to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Minister must then approve that resolution because, through legislation, he is the trustee of all the Indians in Canada. This is clearly unacceptable in this day and age and in this country.

I agree with the Member for Cochrane-Superior that we must address this issue. Let me refer again to some of the problems we face in extinguishing this paternalistic attitude and method of dealing with Indian people. I want to compliment the Member for Cochrane-Superior for his initiative in bringing this Private Member's Bill forward. I want to compliment him for his sincerity and hard work. I believe he is a credit to the House of Commons in everything he has done on the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I want that to show clearly on the record, because in the future I think we will look back on his activity in chairing the special committee that travelled across the country and produced the Penner report as a very clear milestone in the inclusion of the Indian people into the mainstream of society. I think we will be very proud of him for having worked for that.

I have one problem with giving unlimited support to his Bill today. I suggest it would be useful to remind not only him but all Members of the House of the recent constitutional developments that have taken place with respect to aboriginal peoples.

In February of 1979, the national native organizations attended the First Ministers' Conference on the Constitution as observers. An agenda item was adopted on "Canada's Native Peoples and the Constitution". In September, 1980, another First Ministers' Conference on the Constitution was held with the national native leaders in attendance as observers.

In late 1980 and early 1981, the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution in Canada held hearings and submitted its final report. It made several specific recommendations, including one on the rights of aboriginal peoples in Canada and on the participation of the aboriginal peoples in constitutional conferences. I believe that a significant milestone was reached at that time.

In 1981, the federal and provincial Governments agreed to the inclusion in the Constitution of a clause recognizing and affirming the existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples. We all know the difficulty we had in inserting that clause by way of provincial and federal negotiations and even in discussions in the House and Committee to ensure that that clause was included in the Constitution of Canada.

In April of 1982, the Constitution Act was proclaimed with several references to aboriginal peoples. For example, Section 25 said:

The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including:

(A) Any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and

(B) Any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal people in Canada by way of land claims settlement.

Section 35 says:

(1) The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal people of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

(2) In this Act, 'aboriginal peoples of Canada' includes the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.

The requirement for a constitutional conference within a year of proclamation was also included.

In March, 1983, a First Ministers' Conference was held on the rights of aboriginal peoples, with the full participation of aboriginal leaders. It is the first time in the history of Canada that this very sensitive issue was addressed with the full participation of the aboriginal leaders. The outcome of that meeting was a Constitutional Accord to amend the Constitution Act, 1982, and to hold constitutional meetings over three years to identify and define the rights of aboriginal peoples.

The substance of these amendments was to ensure that aboriginal and treaty rights applied equally to male and female persons. I believe that we all know the problems we are facing with that issue. Second, it was to ensure that aboriginal peoples would be involved in formal conferences prior to any amendments to certain sections of the Constitution Acts 1867-1982. If I may pause for a moment, let me say that the fact that that section alone was agreed to by the leaders of the aboriginal peoples at the constitutional conference precludes us at this time from moving forward with this Private Members' Bill, as much as I and many Members in the House would like to see it moved to committee.

Third, rights acquired through existing and future land claim settlements would be recognized and affirmed in the Constitution in the same way as treaty rights. That is where we face difficulty. We cannot put the cart before the horse.

● (1720)

In March, 1984, a further First Ministers' Conference on the rights of aboriginal peoples was held. No agreement was reached on the four agenda items. The four agenda items, as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, were equality rights: aboriginal title and aboriginal rights; treaties and treaty rights; land and resources; and aboriginal self-government. That bears repeating. No agreement was reached on the four agenda items. You will note, Sir, that the fourth agenda item is aboriginal self-government.

In the spring of 1985, another First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal constitutional matters is scheduled. It is to be followed by another one by April, 1987.

I think clearly, and with great respect to my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior, this Government is moving and is committed to move in the direction that we want to go, and that is, to bring Indian people of this country along with aboriginal peoples elsewhere, the Inuit, into the mainstream of Canadian society so that they can take their place fully within the total mosaic of our country. They do not like, we do not like, and clearly the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior does not like the situation as it is today. I do not like the fact that individuals in this country, and some of them first Canadians, grown, capable, industrious men still and women, from a white father in Ottawa, a Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, to live and to do the kind of things that we take for granted every day of our lives. Clearly we have to correct this injustice and clearly the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) is committed to doing that. We on this side of the House, this Government, is committed to doing that and we will do it.

The issues involved in these constitutional negotiations are complex. We all know that. They concern the relationship between aboriginal peoples and the rest of Canadians. The resolution will mark the creation of a new relationship. We have to resolve it and when we do, it will be a new relationship. The relationship under which the Indian people in Canada now function is the kind of relationship that makes them second-class citizens. This has to be changed. We are going to resolve this question. But it will create a whole new relationship with the rest of Canada because of the aboriginal rights, because of the land titles, the land entitlements, the land settlements and the treaty rights. All of these have to be taken into account in this complex issue. In time we will eliminate the terrible bureaucracy that we have known as Indian Affairs and Northern Development or DIAND.

In the area of aboriginal government, the complexity of jurisdictional issues is very obvious. Careful negotiations are needed based on a full and frank expression of aims and needs and the determination to develop a set of intergovernmental relationships that will work well. As we all know, reserves exist in every province in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon. Because of the complexity of working with another government, some of the reserves work very closely or are very closely aligned with municipalities, such as, for example, the Hobbema Reserve and the Sarcee Reserve in Calgary. The urban sprawl of Calgary is now starting to surround portions of the Sarcee Reserve. We see the same thing happening in Edmonton where the urban sprawl toward the west has started to encompass parts of the reserve. In both cases the band councils of those reserves, with permission, by the way, of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Affairs of previous governments, have developed subdivisions. We find the same thing in Vancouver and Victoria. The jurisdictional issues are obviously very complex.

The Canadian political tradition is based on interdependence and co-operation among several orders of government. How then are we to fit them in when Indian self-government becomes a reality? How do we fit them in with what we have existing today? Clearly our tradition is based on co-operation. We have gone through a period now of 10 to 15 years or so when there was not too much co-operation between the provincial and federal governments. This new Government is changing that. The signs and the results of that change are showing up right across the country. Because of the powers and functioning stemming from the Constitution, aboriginal government will have to fit into and be part of this political tradition.

I am sorry that I cannot support sending this Private Member's Bill from a colleague whom I admire very much. We will all be proud that he was a Member sitting in this House of Commons when we were here, because we will look back on the work he has done on behalf of aboriginal native people with sincere and distinct pride. I see that my time has elapsed, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry that I must sit down because I had a few more comments to make. Because of the complexity of the issue, we will be addressing it again, and I know the Hon. Member will play a very significant role in any decision that comes out of this House of Commons, or indeed out of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to speak on this Bill this afternoon and to outline some very serious concerns that I have on the matter of native self-government.

I think everyone in this House believes that the native people in Canada do have the right to self-government. It is a right that must be re-established. It was never sold, it was never surrendered, and this Government must take responsibility for recognizing and returning that right to the native people as quickly as possible.

If there is no doubt on that particular issue, I would like to outline briefly the activities of an Indian band in my riding. I am speaking of the Sechelts. The Sechelts have been in the forefront of a campaign to make the relationship with the Government of Canada and the native people in Canada more human. They have taken a very positive, dynamic and energetic stance on this question, particularly the question of native self-government. They have expended a great deal of their resources. It has been a major priority of Chief Stan Dixon, with the Sechelt Band council and people. The expenditure of time and resources on this project has been enormous.

I should like to refer to the basic approach of the Sechelt people. As a result of their experience, their administration in the past, their development, execution and planning of projects, the Sechelt people have developed their band resources to the maximum under the present restrictive nature of the Indian Act. They have taken advantage of all discretionary options that are available. They are still hampered. The quality of life and the potential of the Sechelt people are still hampered by the colonial and fraternalistic legislation which the Government of Canada imposes on all Indian people.

In the face of that difficulty, the Sechelt people, the Sechelt Band Council and Chief Stan Dixon produced a suggestion for the Government of Canada. It was produced a number of years ago and was called the Sechelt Indian Band Act. Their proposal was that the House of Commons should consider this legislation. It was simply an enabling piece of legislation which recognized the right of these people to develop a constitution appropriate to their community. Also it would allow them to pursue activities, as other Canadians under their forms of self-government could do, to improve the quality of life of the citizens of that community.

Unfortunately, as time went by they ran up against government obstacles. I will go back a step and describe what happened. They had approached the district level of Indian Affairs and had received support and assistance for their concept. At the regional level in the western region of Indian Affairs, they obtained financial support and assistance in developing a concept for a Sechelt Indian Band Act and their constitution. They obtained support from the regional district and then came to Ottawa where the concept was supported once again. They approached Members of the House and obtained support for the concept. They approached the last Minister who gave them support. He said that he would be prepared to introduce legislation which would allow the Sechelt Indian people to move forward with their particular form of self-government.

Unfortunately, it became tangled in the race for the leadership of the Liberal Party. It was delayed and delayed until the end of the last Parliament. Instead of becoming discouraged, the Sechelt Indian people again approached all Parties in the House of Commons. They approached the Department of Indian Affairs. Once again they are ready to place before this institution a piece of self-government legislation which would enable their band to develop a constitution appropriate for their community.

It is my understanding that the Government and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) are familiar with this particular piece of legislation, and that they have accepted it as a pilot project to be used in the development of the concept of native self-government and will be introducing it in the House before the end of January. It is my hope that the Minister will be introducing that legislation. He can be certain of the support of the New Democratic Party in expediting that piece of legislation through the House of Commons to meet the needs of the Sechelt people.

The Sechelt Indian Band produced a piece of legislation which I think is appropriate for a pilot project to begin the process of native self-government. Parliament must do something quickly and effectively to recognize and restore that right to native people in the country. In the development and application of this project, the Sechelt people could act as a model which may or may not be appropriate for other bands. Certainly it would be a positive move. If the Minister acts quickly to expedite that piece of legislation through the House, it would allow the Sechelt people to put their construction in place, begin to develop the process of self-government, to remove themselves from the restrictive nature of the Indian Act, and to begin the process of setting up a pilot project with this particular piece of legislation.

Certainly there is a financial side to the situation. It is recognized that the Government of Canada has a financial responsibility to native communities. The Sechelt Indian Band and its people have put forward a proposal to expedite and make more meaningful the financial relationship between the Government of Canada and those people, as well as others who would organize their self-government process. This financial commitment must be recognized. Certainly in passing the membership legislation in the last Parliament to remedy the problems under Section 12(1)(b), we ran squarely into the question of whether it is correct to restore membership to a native community over the heads of the people in that community. We failed to recognize the critical need to provide financial resources to those communities to establish those new members in a fair and equitable way. We must deal with that.

It is my hope that the Government will live up to its commitments to the Sechelt Indian people. I hope it introduces the legislation before the end of January so that the House can deal with it in a quick and expeditious manner and possibly implement one of the first solid endeavours in native self-government in Canada. It would be a credit to the Government and to the Sechelt people who have worked so long and hard on this particular matter.

I should like to read into the record a couple of quotations of Chief Stan Dixon. The first one was reported as follows:

> The Sechelt band has steadily maintained its interest in being "masters of our own destiny." They feel implementation of proposed legislation would leave them free of the Department of Indian Affairs, and in control, but still enjoying the aboriginal and constitutional rights of indigenous people.

Another quotation read:

> Our proposal is simply an interim step which will permit us and others who wish to free themselves from the rigidity of the current Indian Act, to do so with a charter developed at the band level.

What could be simpler? What basic right could be more easily recognized than this particular situation?

It goes without saying that many of the aspects with which the House has failed to deal are extremely important. However, none is more important than the aspect of native self-government. It is a right of the Indian people. That right has to be recognized. It was never extinguished. It was never bought. It was never surrendered. It must be restored.

In the self-government issue there are a number of very important matters. One is education. The right of Indian people to develop a quality of life which is normal and expected in the country has been hampered ever since the present Government of Canada took office. There are enormous drop-out rates in native communities. I was astounded when I visited a number of those communities to learn that drop-out rates are still enormous. The average level of education of a native child in my area reaches up to about grade 10. Certainly there are many communities which receive even less than that. The federal Government has cut back on its funding for native education. Indian children do not have anywhere near the same opportunities as those enjoyed by any other children in Canada. That is a complete disgrace. That disgrace on the country could be eliminated by a decision of Parliament to accept its responsibility to provide Indian children in Canada enough in the way of financial resources to provide education. The Government, in its narrow and tight policy, is failing to meet the educational needs of Indian children. It is destroying the quality of life by that single act, as well as the quality of opportunity for native children.

I spoke with a chief on the central coast of British Columbia who indicated that their problems were financial. He also indicated that they had transportation problems, as well as problems in terms of establishing their rights as a people in the country. He indicated that above all else one of their greatest problems was the problem of human resources. They cannot educate their children because the Government will simply not give them the funds which it gives to other children in the country. Even with the funds which they are given under the master tuition agreement, for example to the Province of British Columbia, they have no guarantees that they are expended in the best interests of Indian children.

This Government must give control over education dollars to those who would direct them most appropriately. The native people of British Columbia, and indeed of all Canada, must have some say in exercising the expenditure of those dollars. One small school district represents tens of thousands of dollars each year. Although the particular school district collects those dollars each year, it does not do what is required for native people. It does not happen and will not hapen until we give control over those federal education dollars to the native people, particularly in the case of British Columbia. It is widely believed that the Province of B.C. is expending those funds in an inappropriate manner. They do not recognize in an effective way the rights of native people to an education.

There are serious questions about the use of those funds. I believe it would be appropriated for the Minister of Indian Affairs to launch an investigation into the expenditures by the Province of British Columbia which we provide under the master tuition agreement and other federal programs. It is widely believed that those funds are not being expended according to the wishes and the programs of the federal Government.

The recognition of those students and the provision of funds to enable them to obtain a post-secondary education or technical training is not being done by the federal Government. It is my understanding that it cut off those funds. It is my belief and the belief of many other people in this House that the federal Government has a responsibility to native children to ensure that they obtain a proper education, take their rightful place and establish a quality of life. It is time we restored that funding to ensure that native children have an opportunity to attend university, technical schools, vocational schools and community colleges. We must provide the resource base to those bands in order that they can begin to develop. This is critically important. It is a serious neglect of our responsibilities in terms of the Government of Canada not to provide those funds.

There is another matter that is important in the issue of self-government. In establishing the needs of native communities through some kind of access, it is important to have a financially stable economic base. This Government must push harder. It must make a solid commitment to resolve questions of the aboriginal land claim. The Province of British Columbia is completely negligent and completely irresponsible in resolving this matter, in recognizing the rights of aboriginal people to the area which they inhabit and the resource base they used in former times. Much of this has been usurped and used for the benefit of communities other than native communities.

One example brought to me time and again is that of the small reserves that were given in the Province of British Columbia. They were not given access to minerals, fossil fuels and timber as was done in other areas of Canada because of a large land base. They were not given access to those resources even though they use they in them in their day to day lives. The reason for the small land reserve base in British Columbia was that those communities were so heavily dependent on fishing. That reason was stated time and again. Native people in British Columbia have been removed from the fishing resource to a large degree. The reserves are too small to handle the people who live there. That is one reason why so many people live in other communities. Often 50, 60 or 70 per cent of the people cannot live on the these small reserves with the inadequate funding.

It will be clearly established that native people have the right and have a claim against territories and resources they previously used. If we provide access to the resource base, the land, fish, timber and mineral resources used in previous times in areas over which those bands had jurisdiction, it would be a way by which those bands could establish some financial and economic security. Unless we give them access, they are not going to be able to re-establish any wealth or financial security.

This Government must move quickly, in advance of the settlement of the land claims, to provide, where possible, access to resource where the native communities have the resources and are in need of assistance. We had an example in the House the day when the Conservatives raised the matter of forestry and criticized the forestry policy in Canada. There was agreement among all Parties to press development of a forestry program within the Department of Indian Affairs for native people. As yet, nothing serious has happened on that. I challenge members of the present Government who stood on the floor of this House in opposition and made a commitment to do something to provide now access to forestry and to do so in a very thorough manner. That is one example.

Access to the fishing resource must come about. Where land is available, it has to be provided. In short, we must begin the process in advance of convincing our colleagues in British Columbia, who are almost neanderthal on this concept, that something can be done to provide a base of wealth for native people.

I see my time is up, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to express my thoughts.

Mr. F. Oberle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in contributing briefly to the debate this afternoon. As Hon. Members will know, along with the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), I shared the responsibility for developing a blueprint for the future, as the Penner report has come to be known, in terms of the future relationship between the Government of Canada, the other partners in Confederation and our native people.

I naturally applaud my hon. friend for bringing this motion before the House. However, I must tell him immediately that there is a fundamental flaw in his motion. As all of us know, if this motion were to pass the House this afternoon, it would be referred to committee.

The flaw that I see in the Hon. Member's motion is that the committee has already dealt with this matter. The Hon. Member and myself, together with several of our colleagues, worked one and a half years and travelled throughout the country in developing a self-government report with 58 very distinct recommendations incorporated in it. That report was tabled in the House. The committee has spoken. It has done its work. As I said, the committee produced a blueprint for the future and, indeed, that is what it is.

Naturally the Hon. Member has to use this opportunity to highlight the affair throughout the country again. However, absolutely no purpose would be served if this matter were once again referred to committee.

I have little problem with the Hon. Member's motion which proposes to affirm the concept of aboriginal rights. As my colleague from Athabasca (Mr. Shields) stated, that is no longer a question. That concept is entrenched in our Constitution in a manner which can no longer abrogate from the distinct rights which native people have in this country, dating back to the Royal Proclamation of 1763.

There is no need to reaffirm this concept. It is done. The question we have to come to grips with now is, what does the concept of aboriginal rights mean? It means different things to different people. There are 258 bands or so-called nations throughout this country. If you meet with all of them, as we attempted to do, you discover that the concept of aboriginal rights and title means something different to all 258 of them. However, there are certain recurring themes, trends and principles that the committee immediately discovered as being consistent throughout. We found, for instance, that to all people, the concept of aboriginal rights means the right to self-determination and the right to self-government. That became very apparent and there was no dissension. It is proper for the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior who was the chairman of that special committee to remind the House of the fact that there is, first, the recognition of the concept of aboriginal rights and, second, that it means the right to self-determination and the right to self-government.

Regarding the form, nature and responsibilities of these self-government structures, the committee report is mute for a very good reason. Again, throughout our deliberations in all parts of the country with different tribal associations, bands and nations, we discovered that everyone had a different idea of the kind of structure they would like to see and which would serve best their heritage, traditions, culture and religion. It would have been wrong for us, the committee, and indeed it would be wrong for the Government to impose a structure of government that would not be suitable to these legitimate aspirations of our native people. For that reason, the committee did not lay out any distinct form of government but laid out a general framework of a self-government structure which would then be left to negotiations between Indian nations and a special representative of the federal Government to define.

Much of the definition of self-government deals with the responsibility that these native leaders would have to assume and with how they would be accountable to the people they lead and govern. Should they be accountable in the same way as we are responsible to our constituents or, as natives, and because of their distinct and traditional form of governing themselves, do they have a better way? That must be discussed. I would venture to guess that there would be a number of different ways in which native people could prove to us that they are and can be responsible to their constituents.

Previous speakers have mentioned the economic foundation upon which these governments will be built. Membership is a critical issue. Another subcommittee dealt with the question of membership and the discrimination section of the Indian Act which has a bearing on this critical question.

I would like to call these forms of governments distinct forms of governments because they will not be municipal or provincial governments but will be distinct forms that will operate within the framework of Confederation. This is another item that the committee established. It is the committee's wish and determination that Indian people join Confederation in a distinct and different way.

We will have to establish how these new governments will relate first to other governments, municipal, provincial and federal, and how they will relate to other native people including the Métis, the so-called non-status people who call themselves the forgotten people, and the Inuit who are not embraced within this discussion. All of these things must be discussed.

It is unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior is not present today. I would not like to see the new Government proceed with the same indecent haste with which the former Government proceeded five minutes to 12 before the election. It brought in a Bill giving all things to all people without consultation or dialogue. The Bill was designed for no other purpose than to get it past the election and earn it the affection of the Indian people who had been so thoroughly disappointed by the former Government. I would not support that kind of initiative and I do not think that the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior would either.

I believe that our dialogue with native people should proceed in the same way as our dialogue is proceeding with the provincial Governments under a new form of co-operative federalism because, after all, we do intend to incorporate and embrace Indian governments in a new scheme of co-operative federalism. We would want very much to know from the native people how they would want us to proceed.

I can tell the House, the country and you, Mr. Speaker, that it is the intention of the new Government to proceed expeditiously, with care, fairness and sensitivity but with firmness as well toward the development of a better relationship with our native people. We will proceed in a manner that is more consistent with the Canadian tradition and is fair, just and designed to repair some of the injustices of the past.

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy indeed to take the first opportunity in the House afforded to me to speak on a subject other than a statement or a question. The reason I wish to speak on the issue of Indian self-government is that I myself am one of the people. Even though I am not a member of one of the Indian tribes, I am of the Inuit people who were commonly known in the world as Eskimos. However, I do not consider myself to be an Eskimo. That is a term which is offensive to the Inuit.

I was one of the past directors of land claims and one of the chief negotiators of our organization from the Northwest Territories for the past four years. We have been negotiating with the Government of Canada since 1974-75. When the Inuit discuss self-government, they want to include everything which governments normally include. However, over the years, we have found, as the Parliamentary Secretary mentioned, that there were so many concepts that it is difficult to come to terms with this unless one goes through a long process.

One of the processes which the Inuit of Nunavut have attempted to use is the political route. We have attempted to use the Territorial Government route by calling for the division of the Northwest Territories. I am happy to inform other Members of the House that a little over one week ago, the groups from the eastern Arctic and the western Arctic had come to some terms over the issue of boundaries. I am sure that over the next few weeks and months, more issues will arise and be clarified.

I would want to see the Government of Canada deal first with the large issue of the division of the Northwest Territories, an issue which has been a consistent theme of the Inuit people in my riding. It is not a radical concept, but a concept which follows the traditional forms of debate in terms of the formation of public governments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I am sure he will have many opportunities to continue his remarks.

Order, please. The hour provided for Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—EFFECT OF BANK INTEREST RATES ON FARMERS. (B) GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on November 20, 1984, I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) if the Government intended to keep its promise to write down all outstanding farm loans to present-day interest rates. The Minister waffled a bit and gave a lot of verbiage, but did not indicate much action in his response.

There is a very serious crisis facing thousands and thousands of young farmers in Canada today. A recent study by the Farm Credit Corporation indicated that 39,000 farmers in Canada are in serious financial difficulty. The criterion for judging that difficulty is that those farmers are paying more than 40 per cent of their gross revenues to cover payments on their properties. The second criterion is that the actual ownership of the farm operations, the equity, is less than 15 per cent. The third criteron is that the farmers are borrowing more than they are investing in capital on the farm. When we apply those criteria we find that each of the 39,000 farmers is subject to one or more of those criteria. It is a very serious situation.

The personal tragedy of all this is that most of the 39,000 farmers are young. They are our most innovative farmers, the farmers who have applied new technology. In fact, they produce half of all the produce produced in Canada each year.

The Government to this point has not taken any decisive or effective steps to help the vast majority of those farmers who are facing bankruptcy or total collapse. The Minister of Agriculture brought in a modest program a few weeks ago which would reduce interest rates from 14 per cent or 15 per cent down to 12.75 per cent for a specific period, during 1981 and 1982. However, we must look at that measure in light of the recommendation which was made by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, the National Farmers Union and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that certain commodity groups require interest rates in the area of about 8 per cent.

An announcement was made last week by the Minister of Agriculture for Manitoba that legislation would be brought in to block all farm foreclosures unless the Government and the bank reduced interest rates to 8 per cent. The disturbing part of this is that the Minister of Agriculture for Saskatchewan has already done that. If the Minister of Agriculture for Manitoba does the same thing, I believe there will be chaos in the farm financing situation. Fist, credit will dry up from the bankers in Manitoba to the farm producers. That credit would enable farm producers to put in their crops next spring. Bankers in other provinces, in anticipation of the action of those provinces, will impose a debt moratorium and will continue with foreclosures. There are currently thousands of cases in which foreclosure action could be taken. It will end up in chaos in farm financing.

If we compare what this Government has done, essentially nothing, to forestall these bankruptcies, with what the Farmers Home Administration is doing in the United States, we will see that they have a program which sets aside one-quarter of the farm debt for up to five years. We will also see that they have already processed something like 477 applications in the first month of that program. They anticipate 150,000 applications and are ready to look after them. They have already lowered the rates on 8,000 approved loans from 11 per cent or 12 per cent to 7 per cent or 5 per cent. What we have in the United States is a very effective program to set aside a portion of the debt to forestall these bankruptcies and stop the kind of chaos we see developing among these 39,000 farmers affected by low commodity prices, decreasing land value and high interest rates. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to respond in a positive way this evening.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture and the Government of Canada, I am pleased with this opportunity to answer the question put by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). The question raised on November 20 referred to high interest rates and what the Government was doing to help farmers beset by financial problems. Unfortunately, the Hon. Member for Algoma does not seem to recall, although I agree farmers are faced with a difficult and in some cases precarious situation with interest rates of 16 and 17 per cent, that our Government was not in power when those rates were in effect.

Last week in Quebec City, the Minister of Agriculture announced that we were fulfilling yet another of our election promises. We had promised farmers we would make available immediately the necessary funds to help them refinance their loans at current-day interest rates.

I should explain that we have received many requests for assistance from farmers with long-term loans locked in at high interest rates with the Farm Credit Corporation. They took out loans when interest rates, and I think you will remember that, had reached their maximum and the FCC refused to let them set the due date. As a result, they were committed to repayment of their loans over periods of as much as 20 or 30 years at rates varying from 14 to 16 ¾ per cent. Most of them are unable to refinance their loans at a lower rate with a commercial financial institution or through small business bonds.

That is why the Minister announced that all farmers who took out loans with the Farm Credit Corporation between April 1, 1981 and December 8, 1982 will be able to write down their rates to 12¾ per cent as of January 1, 1985. This decision will affect 5,600 FCC customers, who have already been informed of the details and the procedure to be followed. All this will be retroactive to January 1, and represents an annual saving of $16 million over the next five years for this group of borrowers. The announcement may have an impact on a number of foreclosures ordered by the FCC. The temporary suspension expired on January 16, but all borrowers whose assets have been seized may now have their case reviewed by an independent appeal board. Measures to that effect were also announced last December. Furthermore, these borrowers can have their case reassessed and if possible have their interest rates written down to a lower rate.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday we had some more positive announcements with respect to farm credit. The FCC has lowered its interest rates as of January 21. Rates have been reduced from 13¼ to 12¾ and finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that it would of course be nice, as my colleague from Algoma suggested, to reduce interest rates to 6 and 8 per cent, but I think everyone will agree that we have already made some headway if we consider the rates of 16 and 17 per cent we had a few years ago under the previous government.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—UNLICENSED CABLE TELEVISION OPERATORS—PROSECUTION QUERY. (B) MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on December 3, 1984 I called on the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to bring justice to the area of the cable TV operators, licensed and unlicensed, in this country. Instead of dealing with the problem an incredible confusion in the industry has been created. This confusion is risking the destruction of the Canadian broadcasting system. It is damaging the rights of licensed cable operators and is leading to very serious financial losses to them.

I rise today to state the case in somewhat more detail. I understand there are two Parliamentary Secretaries here to answer this, but I think it would take a fleet of Parliamentary Secretaries. I do not think there is a good answer to it.

There are now two classes of operators in the cable TV field in the country. There is one class which went to the CRTC and was awarded licenses. They are Canadian owned and carry Canadian content. They are restricted in the amount of American programming they can carry. They pay the Americans for the programming that they use and, in addition, pay a 6 per cent tax to a special fund to create financing for Canadian content and programming in our country. They operate in this country.

At the same time, within their territory, there are operators who did not go to the CRTC, or if they went were turned down and not given a licenses. They established anyway. They are not necessarily Canadian owned and definitely do not carry Canadian content. They pick up American signals from the air without paying the Americans anything for them. They can pick up whatever they like, even channels which are not available to the licensed broadcasters, such as the Disney channel, some channels that carry spicey movies, HBO and Cinemax. They can pick up a whole bunch of lines which are there but which the licensed operators cannot carry. They offer all of these at lower cost to the same people who are now being served by the licensed TV operators. As well, that they do not pay the 6 per cent tax to this fund for Canadian programming.

The former Government began to prosecute the unlicensed cable operators in order to protect the rights which had been awarded to the licensed operators. For example, in Salmon Arm, British Columbia I understand that the two operations are right across the street from each other. One person holds a license and is meeting all of the conditions that I just described, and his competitor across the street is not meeting any of them, and was going to be prosecuted by the former Government when the present Attorney General of Canada directed that these prosecutions be stayed.

I think the reason that they were stayed was because of the last election campaign. I understand there are over 500 unlicensed cable operators in the Prairie provinces alone operating against the licensed operators without licenses or restrictions of any kind. Tory candidates must have gone to them and told them to keep going, that they would bail them out if they won the election. They won the election. The unlicensed operators have been bailed out. When they heard that the prosecutions had been stayed they went ahead and announced that they had won a great victory. They increased their numbers of subscribers, damaging those who were carrying Canadian content, paying the tax and paying the Americans for the channels they were taking from the United States. A great victory was won by the others.

This is a terrible mess. The broadcasting system is suffering as is Canadian content. The property rights of individuals who applied for licenses and got them are suffering. The Government is doing nothing about it.

• (1815)

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in fulfilling the role of chief law officer of the Crown, the Attorney General of Canada is called upon to exercise the judgment and discretion which he feels is in the public interest. He is guided by certain parliamentary, legal and constitutional principles and may look to a rich heritage in the tradition of the holders of that high office both in Canada and Great Britain.

In arriving at a decision whether to proceed with a prosecution, the Attorney General is entitled to seek information and advice from others. That is not to say that he is directed in the course of his discretion by his colleagues or by Parliament itself. Nor is it suggested that the Attorney General is not accountable to Parliament for his decision, which he obviously is.

Anyone who properly understands the position and function of the Attorney General will be able to appreciate that the recent decision with regard to the Broadcasting Act cases was undertaken properly in accordance with our best traditions of both principle and traditions.

As the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Crosbie) has already stated, his decision was based on considerations of public order and policy. He ascertained, with reference to one of his colleagues in Government, that an imminent change in the Government's Broadcasting policy was being planned. As everyone knowledgeable on the subject is already aware, it has been increasingly difficult in recent years to harmonize the law with the realities of the evolving technology as it relates to the distribution of television programming signals to rural and remote communities in Canada.

In these circumstances, with a handful of cases about to be tried in the criminal courts and reconsideration of regulatory policy about to be undertaken, the Attorney General came to the conclusion that the prosecution of those cases should be stayed, pending reconsideration which might well affect some or all of these cases which, by that time, would have been tried. That is the reason for the position that was taken by the Attorney General.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING—AWARDING OF CONTRACT. (B) MEASURES TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, during the federal election campaign, one of the major promises of the Progressive Conservative Party was to clean up the mess of patronage left by the Liberals during their last years of office.

Last July, in one of the few acts in office, the Turner Government awarded a 21-month contract as Agency of Record to a consortium of four advertising agencies known as Canadian Media Corp., with strong ties to the Liberal Party. When that deal became known, the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) was quite forthright about it; a deal which was carried out in top secret without any bids being called. He said the Turner Government was "dipping low into the Liberal porkbarrel".

Mr. Speaker, I asked for this adjournment debate because I find it impossible to distinguish the contract awarded in January to Media Canada as the federal Government's Agency of Record from what the Liberals have done before, except that now the Progressive Conservatives and not the Liberals are going to benefit. Hon. Members are aware of the comments made by Mr. Roger Nantel of Montreal, one of the directors of Media Canada, when the contract was made public. He was the Progressive Conservative Party's chief of communications in Quebec City during the election campaign. His comments implied that the company had made some kind of agreement with the Progressive Conservative Party as one of the conditions of the contract with the Government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, these statements are now being investigated by the RCMP. It is quite clear that . . . regardless of the competence of Mr. Nantel and his partner, Mr. Simpson, they were awarded the contract mainly because they are Progressive Conservatives who in the past have worked for the Progressive Conservative Party and who are continuing to work for the Progressive Conservative Party.

[English]

When I raised this question yesterday, I suggested that the Government's rules for contracting for services were being grossly violated by the decision to negotiate a contract with one supplier of media buying services with no effort to call tenders or look at the capabilities of other suppliers. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) suggested that the advertising business is not amenable to tender. His office told my office that a contract like this one is exempt from tendering under Treasury Board regulations.

I have checked those regulations and the answer is, that is just not so. The Government's own regulations about service contracts indicate otherwise. Paragraph 3.1 of the contract with Media Canada states specifically that "This is intended to be a service contract within the meaning of the Government Contracts Regulations (PC 1975-2042)". These were the regulations that I quoted from in the House on Monday. Section 8 of these regulations is explicit in calling for a contracting authority to invite tenders, "before any contract is entered into" except for emergencies, for small contracts where it would not be in the public interest or where only one person or company is capable of performing the contract.

The amendments made to this government contract regulations since 1975 contain no exemptions for advertising. Nor was that step taken by the Clark Government when it established the Agency of Record system. A change in the Agency of Record is not an emergency. It is a substantial contract. It is hard to see how it would be against the public interest to invite tenders. Also more than one company is capable of fulfilling a contract.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that part of the problems facing us today are due to abuse of the tender system for service contracts with the Government. In some newspaper articles it was said that 85 per cent of service contracts, representing a value of over $2 billion annually, are awarded without tender.

[English]

However, if the new Government were permitted to change it, it would be seeking to clean out the system left by the Liberals, not perpetuating it.

Mr. Andre says that contracts like this are not amenable to Canada. Yet it is common in the advertising business for agencies to compete for contracts, not on the basis of price, but on the basis of the quality of their presentation. Moreover, Mr. Andre—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The Minister, please.

Mr. Cassidy: —prides himself on the fact that he got a lower price. If that is the case, why not tender to see what lower prices might have been given. He says there is going to be competition for individual departmental contracts. If that is the case, then why not compete for this particular contract?

The tendering rules of the Government are not complicated. They could have been followed in this case. There are at least six companies capable of having a go at this contract. There is: Media Canada; Canadian Media Corp. and Foster Advertising in Ontario, an Agency of Record for Ontario, which has good Tory credentials. There is also Harrison, Young, and Pesonen of Toronto; Media Dimensions of Toronto; and Media Specialists of Toronto. All of them could have been asked to compete for this contract, Mr. Speaker. They were not.

I want to suggest that when Brian Mulroney said during the election campaign—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It is the Right Hon. gentleman, the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Cassidy: During the election campaign the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said:

> The vulgarity of the Liberal patronage machine is such that we're all going to have to take a second look at our partisanship.

On the evidence it appears that a second look has been taken and that the Conservative Government has decided that it will be just as vulgar as the Liberal Government was when it was in office.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, first let me make it clear that no contract for $1.8 million has been awarded as the Hon. Member suggested in his question the other day. The company headed by Messrs. Nantel and Simpson, to which my hon. colleague refers, is in receipt of a contract worth $375,000.

This amount, it is true, is for three months work, from January 1 to March 31 at $125,000 a month. The old contract, the Hon. Member should note, was for $143,000 a month. This Government has saved $18,000 a month in terms of those advertising contracts. If the comparison were to be drawn between this contract and similar awards made under the previous regime, it would be seen that on a monthly basis this Government has saved the taxpayer—I repeat—$18,000 a month. The new deal that was entered into was negotiated bearing in mind this Government's commitment to working in the interests of the Canadian taxpayer wherever possible. Let us make one thing clear.

Traditionally the appointment of the Agency of Record was never one that was subjected to the competitive process. Indeed, I should point out that the principle of the Agency of Record, introduced by Peter Simpson in 1979, has resulted in substantial savings to the Government. In fact, by using the Agency of Record, the Government has achieved savings of some $3.6 million since 1981.

I have already said that the Government is committed to acting in the interests of both this country and its taxpayers. The objective of this Government is not patronage, not costly prestige, but solid savings so that our national economy can gain much needed momentum.

The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) has already stated in this House that the business of advertising does not lend itself readily to the competitive process. It should be possible to select the most appropriate organization able to provide its client the services that are required for each specific program or project.

Mr. Cassidy: Why wasn't anybody else asked?

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): From a creative point of view, this would be ideal. It can be made possible if agency charges are made uniform throughout the Government, and this is the intention of my hon. colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services.

The criteria to be met will be those of creativity and competence, responsiveness and trust and individual creditability.

• (1825)

In conclusion, I repeat that the new Agency of Record contract has saved money for taxpayers. The principle of Agency of Record, founded by Peter Simpson, has brought large savings to the Government—$3.6 million since 1981. Our objective, unlike that of the former Government, is not patronage but to save taxpayers money.

At 6.26 p.m., the House adjourned.

YOUTH—NECESSITY FOR SPECIAL MEASURES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, during the holidays I met with several groups to discuss issues of current interest. Two subjects came up again and again, namely, the universality of social programs and unemployment, especially unemployment among young people. Many of the latter spoke to me about their concerns, and I would like to bring this to the attention of the House and especially the Members of Cabinet.

I am sorry to see that the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) is doing nothing to persuade her Cabinet colleagues to take concrete action, especially now in 1985, during the International Year of Youth.

We are told by young workers that they have knocked on the doors of private enterprise but new employees are not hired unless they have experience. Students told us they were shocked by the decision of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to cut the Summer Canada program.

Young farmers' sons are expressing their concern about the many farm bankruptcies being talked about in the press and on television.

I want to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to reinstate immediately the direct employment program for young students, referred to as Summer Canada, and not to rely solely on the private sector.

I want to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to introduce special measures to enable young people who want to get a start in farming to do so with confidence.

Finally, I would ask the Minister of State for Youth to take steps to ensure that the First Chance programs are reinstated in order to meet the needs, not only of young—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

CANAGREX

CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, last spring the Canadian Agriculture Export Corporation, Canagrex, started to serve Canadian farmers by assisting them to sell their products in the international markets of the world, and during several months of operation it has succeeded very well, closing some $16 million worth of sales, with an additional $100 million of transactions expected by March 31 of this year. It is very impressive, especially when we note the start-up costs were only $2.66 million.

In the years ahead we will see very competitive selling of farm commodities in the international markets of the world. The United States will be much more aggressive in marketing its farm products abroad, especially with the pressures expected from the new United States farm Bill.

The Government's decision to wind up Canagrex is very shortsighted. It is firmly opposed by many farm organizations, including the 300,000 member Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the National Farmers Union. Killing Canagrex is like shutting down the sales department of a company wanting to expand its sales.

Canagrex has all the power it needs to help sell our farm commodities abroad by providing farm financing packages, insurance, marketing, analysis, promotion and, most of all, a one-stop selling agency for foreign buyers.

I call on the Government to reinstate Canagrex, in the name of thousands of farmers who want this corporation retained so it can get on with the job it was designed to do.

THE UKRAINE

ANNIVERSARY OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Bill Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House the occasion of the 67th anniversary on January 22, 1985, of the proclamation of the independence of Ukraine.

As a Canadian of Ukrainian descent I want to join with hundreds of thousands of Ukrainian Canadians to acknowledge that the struggle for freedom and democracy may always continue.

Following the fall of the Tsarist empire on January 22, 1918, the Ukrainian Parliament proclaimed and established the independent National Democratic Republic of Ukraine.

S.O. 21

The Ukraine recognized the highest principles of democracy, of freedom of speech, press, religion, assembly, association, and basic human rights.

However, in 1922 the Russian communist regime subverted and conquered this new independent state by force. The Communist regime was more despotic and oppressive than the Tsarist empire.

Today, the spirit of the Ukrainian nation survives. The Ukrainians have paid the price for the pursuit of freedom. History has often forgotten the Black Famine of 1933. More than six million innocent people, victims of Communism, died unmercifully through forced starvation.

We pray that freedom and human rights will always be the hallmark of our nation, Canada. We pray for freedom in other lands, for oppressed people, including the oppressed people in the Ukraine.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

STUDY OF AMERICAN PROGRAM

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): From January 8 to 10, Mr. Speaker, along with a group of Canadian parliamentarians, I went to Washington as guest of the parliamentary exchange centre to study their agricultural bond program and draw inspiration from their experience. This program was launched about four years ago.

We were welcomed by Minnesota representative Jim Obestar and his wife who is on staff at the interparliamentary exchange centre. Our visit had been arranged here by Mrs. Barbara Reynolds.

I would like to say publicly just how much I came to appreciate the work and generosity of our hosts who spared nothing whatsoever to make it easier for us to learn all about this program.

We also had an opportunity to meet and discuss with the American Agriculture Secretary of State and to find out for ourselves that the problems experienced by the American agricultural community are practically the same as ours.

I want to thank all those people for everything they did for us and I can assure them that is was a worthy experience for their Canadian guests.

CURRENCY

INTRODUCTION OF DOLLAR COIN ADVOCATED

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is time that Canada introduced the dollar coin. Recent public opinion surveys have indicated that Canadians desire such a coin. Various vending machine companies have urged the Government to move quickly in this area, as a dollar coin would greatly simplify their operations. In this day and age very little can be purchased for less than a dollar. Bus fares in many Canadian cities exceed a dollar, while parking meters and newspapers are fast approaching that figure.

A dollar coin would be more durable than the paper dollar with its short lifespan. It has been estimated that the federal Government can save up to $300 million over a ten-year period by moving to a dollar coin. In addition, a dollar coin is lighter than four quarters.

The introduction of a dollar coin would have a significant spin-off benefit to single industry mining communities. In the riding of Nickel Belt, Inco has the capability of producing the dollar coin, and in fact such a move would create hundreds of new jobs in this community which is experiencing an unemployment rate of over 15 per cent. If the demand for dollar coins were to improve, nickel producing communities would benefit from this innovation.

● (1410)

I urge the Government and the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre), in particular, to move as quickly as possible to establish the dollar coin in Canada.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

FOOD BANKS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, there are many Canadians from coast to coast who carry with them the haunting images of the Great Depression. They remember well the long line-ups of dispirited men and women silently waiting their turn for a bowl of soup that might stave off hunger for another day.

It is a sad commentary on the priorities of our Governments that the soup kitchen has made a dramatic come-back. In British Columbia the community food bank is now a major growth industry. In Vancouver the food bank has doubled in size in one year and it now serves over 3,000 bags of groceries per week. Yet this week it will have to turn away at least 500 people.

In Kamloops the food bank serves over 2,400 families per month. A typical food hamper for one family for one month consists of 6 cans of soup, 2 cans of vegetables, a can of fruit, a package of oatmeal, a package of powdered milk, a bag of potatoes, some Kraft dinners, 2 cans of pork and beans, a package of lunch meat, a package of sugar, a half pound of margarine, 2 loaves of bread, and a pound of hamburger.

This is emergency assistance for one family for one entire month. It is disgraceful. This is the product of Mr. Bennett's restraint program. This is not the new reality. It is simply the old Depression. Let no one be fooled. Mindless restraint is a recipe for economic and social disaster. That is the reality the people of British Columbia know only too well, and I hope it does not now happen on a national scale.

FORESTRY

NEED FOR REFORESTATION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, each Member in this place is no doubt aware of the dismal forecast regarding the forest industry. Our valuable timber is being used at a rate much greater than it is being replaced.

The forest industry, which is the largest employer of any in Canada, faces virtual extinction in this generation if steps are not soon taken.

The Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) is doing an admirable job of consulting with forces within the industry. However, he cannot do it alone.

We, as parliamentarians, must rise to the occasion if our most valuable resource is to be preserved. Some politicians in Canada have gained a reputation for short-sightedness and self-service. Perhaps we in this Parliament can be remembered in history for our responsible planning for the future.

Roughly one million people are directly and indirectly employed in forestry related jobs, and their future depends on the wisdom of the present.

The replanting, weeding, thinning, and fertilization of logged land is sadly lacking proportionately to the harvest. It is bad enough to use non-renewable resources with wild abandon, but to ignore the disappearance of this renewable resource is truly criminal.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

REFINANCING OF LOANS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on an issue of concern to many farmers. Approximately 1,300 farmers from the Province of Saskatchewan had been locked into high interest rate loans through the Farm Credit Corporation. It came as good news last week when the Minister of Agriculture announced that these borrowers can now have their loans refinanced at 12.75 per cent.

This measure will mean a benefit of over $3 million a year for five years to the Saskatchewan economy. It will lessen the high cost of credit. Further, it will give some farm borrowers who are facing foreclosure the opportunity to remain viable.

I would like to commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), and further urge him and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to help improve the plight of farmers by introducing the removal of capital gains tax on farm land and the use of agribonds to provide low interest farm loans.

STUDENT LOANS AND UNIVERSITY TUITION FEES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government's record on behalf of the students in this country is nothing—nothing short of appalling. It has done nothing for our unemployed youth at the very time when our young people are counting on a post-secondary education to improve their chances for employment. Many are even staying in school because they can't get jobs.

And what do the Tories do about this? The Finance Minister announces that they are cutting $5 million out of their budget and putting a freeze on the level of student loans. This will not only make it more difficult for our young people, it will even deny some of them the necessary funds to stay in school.

And as if this wasn't bad enough, the Tory Treasurer of Ontario calls for university tuition fees to be hiked by 13 per cent a year, and the Tory Ontario Minister of Education set up the Bovey Commission with both hands tied behind its back when, she said to the Commission, "Don't spend the province's money but go ahead and sock it to the kids"—so the report recommends hiking student fees by 50 per cent.

What a bind for our young people caught in this Tory squeeze play, with the federal Tory Government freezing student loans, and the provincial Tory Governments raising student fees. In this, the International Youth Year, it would have been fitting to give more to our youth, not less. The Tories truly should be ashamed.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM INDUSTRY TAX—CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION REPORT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I could scarcely believe my ears this morning when I heard on a CBC broadcast that the Government had concluded a secret deal on a budgetary taxation matter with the petroleum industry. I have the transcript, just to verify what I heard. Indeed it would appear that spokesmen for the industry claim that businessmen had been negotiating a deal with the Government more than a year before the election; that they feel, a fair deal has been struck; and that indeed the Budget in the spring will be the vehicle for putting that deal into action. Will the Minister of Finance stand in the House now and confirm or deny that such a deal has been made?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I really appreciate this opportunity to state for the record that the oil industry official quoted has since issued a statement denying that any such wording was used, saying that the report was totally wrong, and that he was referring to the helpful consultations which have been launched by our Government, and before by our Party, after a decade of unilateral action. His statement also says that the approach we have taken is the one which will create new economic activity and jobs for Canadians.

BUDGET INQUIRY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Well, Mr. Speaker, of course I accept the statement of the Minister, and I am quite surprised that she had to convince the spokesman to issue another release today, which I have yet to read. But if we are to establish the integrity of our budget process, Mr. Speaker, I stress the fact that the Minister ought to table in the House any correspondence with that association, along with the minutes of all meetings, and then the public will be convinced that the integrity of our system is fully protected.

[English]

At the same time I would suggest that it is important that no one be able to profit from advance knowledge of any changes. I should like the Minister to confirm that the changes suggested in that statement this morning will in fact not be made in the Budget next April.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it quite clear that there has been no budget leak because the decisions haven't been taken. The Hon. Minister is still in discussions with her counterparts in the provinces. As she said quite clearly, the discussions which have been held with the industry as well as with other interested parties related to the energy discussions, have been very helpful in trying to focus on the needs of the industry and those particular things which have to be addressed to make the energy industry the engine of growth to produce jobs right across the country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, with great respect.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would be very interested in the telephone conversations which went on this morning between the office of the Minister of Energy and the Independent Petroleum Association. Obviously the Canadian companies in the oil patch were given the direct impression that there was a deal, that there was a commitment by either the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Energy. I ask either Minister to give us an undertaking that he or she will table all negotiations and all correspondence with that Association to assure the House that there is no such deal.

• (1420)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member clearly does not understand Albertans if he thinks that I can convince an Albertan to issue a statement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: As we have explained, there is no deal yet. The statement issued by the Chairman of IPAC makes it very clear that any negotiations carried out will be Government to Government. That is the nature of the consultations taking place. We on this side of the House do not make deals with industry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NEGOTIATION AND CONSULTATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the word which the representative of the Independent Petroleum Association used this morning was "negotiate". It is all right for the Minister of Energy to say that negotiations are only with the provinces, although during the election she said there was a silent accord and that the people of Canada did not have the right to know. If there was negotiation with the industry, this House is entitled to know, because what has happened is that the Independent Petroleum Association and its members have been made insiders into the next Budget to be produced by the Minister of Finance. We take this as a very very serious issue in this House.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is very clear from the Right Hon. Member's question that he does not understand the whole process of consultation. It is so alien to his Party that he cannot recognize it when he sees it. As the IPAC Chairman made clear, and I quote:

> The new Conservative Government is consulting with the fishing industry on fishing policy, farmers on agricultural policy and oilmen on oil policy. This is just plain common sense and will work to the betterment of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO INDUSTRY SPOKESMAN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have supplementary questions on the same matter. The Minister of Energy has suggested that there was no such deal, no such commitment, and has told the House that, miracle of miracles, a spokesperson for the industry has retracted today what he said yesterday. I heard the same gentleman on the CBC report this morning. He said that what was going on between the Government and representatives of the oil industry was a matter that was one of simply working on the mechanics. What he clearly conveyed yesterday was that the deal had been worked out, that a commitment had been entered into by the then Official Opposition with the oil industry.

Notwithstanding what this individual is saying today, when the Minister met last year with representatives of the oil industry, did she undertake in any way or make a commitment in any sense with reference to tax policy that could have led him to reach the conclusion that a deal had been made?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

CONSULTATION INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question on the same subject since it is rather strange that the man who was clearly saying one thing yesterday is saying something quite different today as a representative of the oil industry. It would perhaps not be entirely bizarre if he saw the seriousness overnight of what was involved in all of this. Is the Prime Minister aware of any other representatives of his Cabinet who were then involved in negotiations? Did they talk with representatives of the oil industry and reach any kind of deal that would lead representatives of that industry to believe that they had a commitment from the Conservatives to make a change in taxation as it affects the oil industry?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The other member of the Cabinet who knew that was me. The arrangement that we reached was with the Canadian people, that we would cease the kind of unilateral intervention and hostility as represented by the NEP which crippled economic growth in western Canada for a decade. We were going to stop that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We also indicated that we were going to try, as we did, to make an arrangement with Newfoundland and Labrador where that rich resource could be developed for the betterment of Newfoundlanders and for all Canadians, and that we would do it in a spirit of fairness. Those were the undertakings that we made. Those are the undertakings that we shall continue to honour. This is a free-enterprise country and we plan to respect that.

• (1425)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I say to the Prime Minister that this is the House of Commons and occasionally we expect answers to the questions we ask.

CONTENTS OF FORTHCOMING BUDGET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I am sure that the Prime Minister is aware of the seriousness of this issue. If there were insider information, people in the oil industry, whether in Alberta or elsewhere, were potentially in a position to make hundreds of thousands of dollars if that is actually—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, it is time for the supplementary question.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will come immediately to the question. Will the Prime Minister guarantee to the House that the forthcoming Budget will not contain changes affecting the oil industry of the kinds to which a spokesperson from the oil industry alluded yesterday? Will he tell us that there will not be those changes in the Budget?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Hon. Leader of the NDP always presumes bad faith. He always presumes bad faith. The individual who made the comment—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I think there is a spirit of fairness that should prevail, even with the NDP. The individual involved issued a statement in which he indicated that the news reports—or the one that was given to me in any case, as I did not hear the original statements—erroneously stated the nature of his comments. If that is his statement, then of course that would be entirely consistent with what the Government has been trying to do. What we have been trying to do is convey to western Canada and Newfoundland that, with regard to oil and gas, we will help them lift the burden of regulation and front-end-loaded taxation that has crippled the oil, gas, and energy sectors of the country. We want to make them engines of growth and national unity, as opposed to driving down entire sectors of the country.

EXTERNAL AID

ALLEGATIONS MADE AGAINST GOVERNMENT OF ETHIOPIA

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I put my question in the interests of ensuring a continued Canadian response from both Government and non-governmental organizations to the famine in Africa, particularly in Ethiopia.

The Minister is no doubt aware of the very serious allegations made on the CBC's program The Journal last night, to the effect that the Government of Ethiopia is deliberately starving and, in some instances, murdering innocent people in the Provinces of Tigré and Eritrea. Will the Minister undertake to give us a commitment in this House to acquire a full and independent third-party assessment of those very serious allegations made last night, and to make a full report to Members of Parliament on the results of his investigation? I stress that the investigation should be a third-party and independent one.

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Let me first of all point out that we were well aware that, by providing assistance to Ethiopia, we were helping a country ravaged by civil war. Two options were opened to us: we could either ask the Ethiopians to come to an agreement first, or—and as you will have guessed we opted for the second one—we could provide assistance to starving men, women and children.

I wish to confirm that we shall stay with this second option, and I can say that our aid is reaching Ethiopia and that a report will be distributed as soon as our coordinator, who has just come back from his mission, can give it to us, which should be within a few days.

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT ASSESSMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Minister that I commend the fact that they have had a chance to be in Ethiopia. I commend the efforts that have been undertaken so far. I commend the Government for the assistance that is being brought to the people who are being assisted. However, I am concerned about reports that large numbers of people are not being assisted and are deliberately being denied. I ask this question as one who supports what the Government has been doing to assist those people who have received help up to now.

• (1430)

I ask again, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or his colleague, undertake to report back to the House on a full and, as much as possible—and I recognize the constraints—independent assessment of the charges made on the CBC program The Journal last night? That is important if the dollars are going to continue to flow from both Government and private sources in Canada to people in Ethiopia who still need our help.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind this honourable assembly that, as far as the aid sent to Africa is concerned it is distributed in co-operation with both Government and non-governmental organizations.

Perhaps I should add that two-thirds are distributed by non-governmental organizations and one-third by government authorities.

I repeat that the report of our coordinator, Mr. MacDonald, will be tabled shortly and that we shall be happy to share it with you.

ENERGY

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO IPAC SPOKESMAN

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On the tape of the radio interview with Mr. Morgan—and I have the tape here—he was asked whether he was given any promises for a reduction in taxes in the spring Budget. He replied that the whole effort was accomplished before the election, that he worked with Pat Carney, and that he got the needed commitments for a profit-based system of taxation. What exactly did the Minister tell IPAC before the election?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I told IPAC that, unlike the previous administration, we were willing to listen to some of the problems of the oil industry and work together, in concert with the consuming provinces and the producing provinces, to ensure that we have energy security for Canadians and jobs for Canadians. That is what I told IPAC.

PRIME MINISTER'S CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, that was an incredible nothing answer. I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. He just admitted, in answering a question from my Leader, that he too was involved with IPAC. I would like to ask him whether he told IPAC when he talked to them that he was going to make changes in the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, that he would give them that commitment, and indeed if they got that commitment from the Government to make those changes effective in the spring Budget?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend seems to have implied that there is something nefarious in consulting or meeting with IPAC. I am meeting this afternoon with the Canadian Association of University Teachers in an ongoing process of consultation and mutual understanding. I have met with many other groups, and hope to continue to do so. We listen and from time to time we learn. We listened to various groups in western Canada, in agriculture, forest products, and the oil and gas sectors. We campaigned on a fairly clear-cut program that we think is beneficial to western Canada, and which is beneficial to a rebirth of the energy sector that is so important to all Canadians. We laid it out during the course of the election campaign. There is nothing untoward or secret. It was a straightforward proposal. It was on that basis that western Canadians, and I believe other Canadians, made the verdict on September 4.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED APPLICATION BY NAZI WAR CRIMINAL TO ENTER CANADA IN 1962

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister, but it is on a different subject. An American document which was released today shows that Josef Mengele, the notorious "Angel of Death" of Auschwitz, applied to immigrate to Canada in 1962 and that Canadian Government officials were informed at the time about who he was. I know that the Prime Minister received a letter on this subject suggesting the same possibility about a month ago, and that this morning he apologized for misplacing the letter and ordered an investigation on the subject. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether that investigation will include reference to the Americans for documents which they may have about this Canadian immigration matter? I also want to ask him whether the investigation will include the public release of Diefenbaker cabinet documents, or any of them which may relate to war criminal questions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his question. I responded to the letter which I received from the foundation this morning, as soon as it was brought to my attention. I communicated with the officials of the foundation and immediately instructed the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General to initiate, on an urgent basis, a full inquiry to ascertain if the facts as raised in the letter might be accurate. Clearly we will investigate all avenues to ascertain if the facts suggesting that Mengele sought refuge in Canada were accurate, or any facts which flow therefrom.

I can think of nothing more offensive for any Canadian than to think that the Government of Canada might inadvertently have been a party to his seeking to find refuge here. That would be repugnant and repulsive in the extreme to our citizenship.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Prime Minister that, according to the information in the story, it would not have been inadvertent, since officials were informed who Josef Mengele was.

WAR CRIMINAL MENGELE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Solicitor General. The same article suggested that it was possible that Mengele had been or could still be in our country. My question to the Solicitor General is as follows. Did he ask or is he willing to ask the RCMP to initiate a manhunt for this war criminal in accordance with the RCMP policy for war crimes which I implemented when I was Solicitor General?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the former Minister that the RCMP have been investigating the particular circumstances involved, as outlined by the Prime Minister, since this was brought to their attention. Following the instructions of the Prime Minister, and my own inclinations, I have told the RCMP to use every possible resource they have to follow this matter to a conclusion.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO IPAC PRESIDENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the Prime Minister on the question of today's unveiling of what might well be in the Budget, and to say to him frankly that the consultations which he is having are absolutely excellent. Nobody complains about the consultations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: However, the President of IPAC said quite clearly in response to a question about commitments made, "The whole effort was accomplished before the election. We worked with Pat Carney, talked to Mulroney and got the needed commitments to profit-based taxation". Is that a true statement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the gentleman himself, Mr. Morgan—and I quote from a document which was released by him earlier today—said that the news report which was carried on national radio erroneously stated the nature of his comments. I can only assume that the gentleman is indicating the facts. To the extent that it involves us, to the extent that it involves me or any Minister of this Government is, of course, false.

COMMITMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the rather quiet final point which was made by the Prime Minister, I gathered that he said, to the extent that it involves the Prime Minister and the Government, the statement is false. In other words, what was attributed to Mr. Morgan is wrong. I would ask the Prime Minister this, so we can clear it up once and for all. During the meetings that were held between the now Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Mr. Morgan, or the meetings held between the Prime Minister and Mr. Morgan, was there any commitment made that there would be a change in the taxation policy of Canada in the forthcoming Budget, or subsequently, which would result in a movement to a profit-based tax system?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the only commitments which were made were those which were made publicly by the Progressive Conservative Party when it sought election from the people of Canada. We laid out our program, as did your Party, and there was nothing different. There were no commitments which were different at all from those which we made publicly. I hope the Hon. Member accepts that.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TAXATION OF DEATH BENEFITS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of National Revenue. Canada Pensions recently provided $1,500 death benefits to help cover the funeral costs of a young man who had little or no estate. Later the parents received a notice taxing the $1,500. Will the Minister bring in changes to this Liberal legislation which taxes the dead, and make funeral expenses a deduction! At the very least, will he make death benefits under the Canada Pension Plan non-taxable?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, of course, as the Hon. Member knows, the responsibility for the Income Tax Act is that of my colleague, the Minister of Finance, who, I am sure, had open ears when the question was asked. I can assure my colleague that I will look into the particular case as well. When a colleague such as the Hon. Member makes representations like this, we certainly listen.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Last Monday, in answer to a question by my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce about summer employment programs for students, the Minister said that with regard to the new program that is to be announced, and I hope it will be very shortly because our students are getting impatient and the university representatives will certainly make this known to the Prime Minister, the Minister said that she had the support of the private sector.

In saying this, did the Minister mean that only the private sector will be involved in these programs and that there will be no input in the form of projects by community, cultural and sports organizations?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last week I said that the summer programs for students would be announced in a few days, and when they are, the Hon. Member and other Members of this House will realize that these programs will not only involve the private sector but also the provinces and community groups. This is going to be a program for everyone this summer.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister give the House the assurance that, when she announces the program which, as she just said, will be offering jobs for everyone, including students in the social disciplines, arts or other areas, that each riding will have its own budget?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this is a program for students, for young people in this International Year of Youth. As I said before, the program is open to everyone.

MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH IPAC PRESIDENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance who met with Mr. Morgan recently. Would the Minister tell us what was said in her discussions with Mr. Morgan yesterday which would make him issue the statement which he did early this morning?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, in the process of our consultations I met for several hours with Mr. Morgan. It was a listening session on the part of the Department of Finance and there was absolutely no commitment made of any kind in that meeting. We had a cordial relationship in a discussion of issues of mutual concern.

CONTENT OF DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. As part of these very cordial discussions which took place, did Mr. Morgan indicate to her that previous commitments had been made of the type that he had mentioned publicly that day?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has answered that question—

Mr. Broadbent: No, she did not.

Mrs. McDougall: —and there was no indication whatsoever that any commitments were made.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

SURVIVORS' ENTITLEMENT TO DECEASED SPOUSES' PENSION BENEFITS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question today is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Hon. Member for Provencher. I would like to know if the Minister has any plans to change the rules governing a widow's right to survivor's benefits under the Canada Pension Plan? This was an issue which was discussed but not acted upon by the previous administration. In defence of the family, and to prevent people from having to live common law, will the Minister assure the House that the Government will act to give wives or husbands the right to their deceased spouses' pension benefits in the event of remarriage?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that question is important in terms of any pension reform which is contemplated by the Government. I think it is generally accepted by those who have looked at pension reform. The earlier task force on pension reform had looked at the question. I frankly feel that this is an issue whose time has come. I would like to see a change made. As the Hon. Member possibly knows, in order to get changes to the Canada Pension Plan we need two-thirds of the provinces to agree to those changes. I hope that we can do it. The proposal which the Hon. Member makes has been made by others, and I think it is valid.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG VISIBLE MINORITY YOUTH

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister will no doubt be aware of a report from Toronto entitled "Who Gets The Work?", which builds upon the evidence of both the Abella and the "Equality Now" reports, which essentially say that the minorities of this country, particularly the visible minorities, are not being granted the same opportunities in the work place.

Given that this particular problem is paramount among the youth, and that in some regions unemployment among visible minority youth has reached over 87 per cent, can the Minister indicate to the House and to the country what special programs she has in mind to address this very real and unacceptable level of racism in the work place?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all Hon. Members of the House would join me in deploring racism and discrimination wherever they exist. We in Canada have always prided ourselves on being a tolerant and compassionate society. I would think that we would all wish to see that continue.

I have only had the opportunity to look at the report and I deplore the apparent findings with respect to discrimination which is reported in it. Nevertheless, I would tell the Hon. Member that, in my consultations on training and employment opportunities, one of the things which provinces raised with me, and something that the private sector and youth groups raised with me, is the way in which we could advance the hiring of minority groups. I would tell the Hon. Member that this will be addressed in the response of the Government to the Abella report.

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I believe we have had a long address to that question. I appreciate the good intentions of the Minister and I agree that this House rebukes those acts of racism in the work force, but I would return to my question. We have had report after report. There have been staggering unemployment figures of 87 per cent for visible minority youth. Can the Minister tell those people, in specifics, what will be coming from the Government? Rather than studying report after report, or giving more study groups and perhaps more Members of Parliament that job, would the Minister tell us what concrete measures the people of this country will be getting from this Government?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is because we were not satisfied with the way in which the previous Government was handling those reports that we are taking an entirely different approach to it. The Hon. Member knows, as I have announced before, that information about employment programs and the distribution of the $1 billion employment and human resources development fund will be made available within the next few weeks.

DEPLOYMENT OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. He will recall that yesterday in the House the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that if the United States requested, in an emergency situation, the deployment of nuclear depth charges or any other nuclear weapons on our soil, Cabinet would then consider it. The Minister knows that tactical nuclear weapons, for example, take about seven to eight minutes to reach target. I refer also to the Norway incident of just a few weeks ago.

In view of the fact that there would be virtually no time to convene a Cabinet to discuss the issue, will the Minister finally come clean with the House and the people of Canada and state whether he has already entered into an agreement, or is contemplating entering into an agreement, to have nuclear weapons deployed in Canada, or will he state categorically that under no circumstances will we have nuclear weapons deployed in Canada?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat for the Hon. Member that there are no such plans.

MINISTERS' STATEMENTS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, why did the Secretary of State for External Affairs say that the Cabinet would consider the deployment of U.S. nuclear weapons on our soil when the Minister of National Defence is now saying there are no plans? Who is telling the truth here?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): We have said a number of times, Mr. Speaker, there are no such plans.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS—APPLICATION OF HIRING GUIDELINES TO YOUTH

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Government has cut back on mobility grants. It has cut back on on-the-job training. It is not going to have a job creation program for youth like Environment 2000. It is the stingiest Government in Canadian history. Will the Minister of Employment and Immigration change the hiring guidelines on the present job creation programs in Canada which very seriously discriminate against young people and women, new entrants and re-entrants into the work force?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there are certain regulations that were put into effect by the previous Government with regard to these programs that do address the programs to those people who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits and have no income other than the welfare which may be given to them by the provinces. In the discussion that I have been having with the provinces about new approaches to this issue, we have been dealing with that problem. I can assure the Hon. Member that the new approaches that we will be taking to the whole question of unemployment and human resource development will be much more humane and compassionate than those which existed previously.

Mr. Baker: Yes, put it on the previous Government. I would like to remind the Minister that she is now a Minister in the present Government. The hiring requirements were signed by the present Minister rather than by Sir John A. Macdonald.

REQUEST THAT GUIDELINES BE CHANGED

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Since the hiring for 200,000, 300,000, or 400,000 jobs is being done now, will the Minister not act today to change these hiring guidelines which she has approved, which discriminate against the youth and women of the country?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the programs under Section 38 of Canada Works for this winter apply to people of all ages who are either on unemployment insurance or who have exhausted their unemployment insurance. Those are the two groups to which these programs are primarily directed. There are other programs administered by my Department which apply particularly to young people. I would mention Youth Training Option, Job Corps, and Career Access, all of which apply directly to youth.

ENERGY

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO IPAC PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Earlier in the House the Prime Minister said that Mr. Morgan had denied saying what it was alleged he said earlier today on the CBC. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that he had retracted the words.

I had my staff contact CBC Calgary and I am told they have Mr. Morgan's voice on tape with reference to promises that were made about corporate tax changes in the oil industry. He said on tape, "We had a commitment from the Conservatives on the matter of tax reform", with reference specifically to these changes. In light of this comment made by Mr. Morgan on tape, will the Prime Minister promise the House that he will undertake to have a thorough investigation of this matter overnight and report back to the House of Commons tomorrow?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunately typical of the conduct of the NDP that, to try to get into this matter, the Hon. Member would call the CBC in Calgary rather than the gentleman who was alleged to have made the statement. If he is concerned with the truth, perhaps the next time the Leader of the New Democratic Party rushes out to make a phone call he will call the gentleman who was alleged to have made the statement. I can only presume good faith on his part. He issued a statement which is in front of me. I assume my hon. friend has it. He says, "Today the news reports carried on national radio erroneously stated the nature of consultations between the oil industry". This is the gentleman involved. He is a citizen saying that his statements were erroneously interpreted. I would hope that my hon. friend would take the time to speak with him, rather than dropping implications on the floor of the House of Commons.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I did my checking in light of what the Prime Minister himself had to say. He told the House, as did the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that Mr. Morgan did not say what the CBC, in a nation-wide radio broadcast, said that he said. I thought it entirely appropriate, since the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect—

Mr. Broadbent: All right, I will come to the question. I checked the source that claimed to have reported Mr. Morgan. They said that they have it on tape.

The Prime Minister did not answer the question. The CBC now claims that Mr. Morgan did say that he had a commitment from the Conservative Party to make these corporate changes and that he anticipates they are going to be in the Budget. Will the Prime Minister undertake to investigate this important matter and report back to the House tomorrow?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asked me the question. I said that I had made no such statement, nor had any Minister of the Crown made any such statement. The gentlemen who was alleged to have made the statement says that his statement was erroneously misconstrued. If my hon. friend feels that that is inadequate I can only suggest that he interrogate the CBC. I can say on behalf of the Government of Canada that the commitments we made were to the people of Canada and we were judged in consequence. We conducted ourselves accordingly, and built policy designed to help western Canada and all Canadians get back to work.

OFFICE COMMUNICATIONS INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister instruct his office and the offices of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to ascertain whether anyone in those three offices, or in the office of the Minister of State for Finance, got in touch with Mr. Morgan as a result of that report earlier this morning to ask him to clarify, change, or retract? I would like the House to know what pressure was put on Mr. Morgan by the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may have to apologize to the CBC. I think the Leader of the NDP did not call the CBC in Calgary. He called the Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: You can't joke your way out of this one.

Mr. Mulroney: The last time the NDP raised an issue such as this, to the regret of my hon. friend one of his Members quite properly had to apologize. You are dealing with the reputation of an individual who, quite properly, set out the statement that he had been misquoted. All that I can tell you is that our conduct was honourable and above board at all times. A Canadian citizen says that he has been misquoted. Perhaps you can speak with him.

TREATMENT OF EDMONTON INSTITUTION INMATE

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. There have been comments that Colin Thatcher, an inmate at an Edmonton maximum security institution, has been accorded special privileges, Could the Minister give the assurance to the House and the public that no inmate, no matter what his previous status was, will receive special privileges in our institutions?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I caused inquiries to be made. I can assure my colleague that such is not the case, that Mr. Thatcher is receiving appropriate treatment, and there are no special privileges being extended to him.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, January 22, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Introduction of Bills

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

ABORTION CLINICS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present this petition from the undersigned constituents of the riding of Peterborough who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to work for immediate change in the present law so that abortion clinics are made available to everyone in need of their services.

EMPLOYMENT IN MEAFORD, ONT.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition signed by 2,480 citizens of the town of Meaford, Ontario, in my riding of Grey-Simcoe. The petitioners would like to press upon the Government the serious and deteriorating employment situation in Meaford and request that the Department of National Defence take steps to reactivate the A.F.V. Range Meaford with the potential for local employment. Assistance is also requested through the Department of Industry to help relocate industry in Meaford to replace the closing of Westmills Carpets and the loss of over 100 jobs.

MILITARY INTERVENTION IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition to the House of Commons asking Parliament to urge the Canadian Government to state publicly and clearly, on an instance by instance basis, Canada's unequivocal opposition to United States military intervention in Central America.

REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and privilege to present a petition of 54 residents of Scarborough West who humbly pray that Parliament reinstate capital punishment for anyone who pleads guilty and/or is convicted of premeditated murder.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING VERBAL THREATS TO KILL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-220, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (verbal threats).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to make oral threats to kill a criminal offence. Last October, Donna Kertzer, a Montreal woman, was shot to death by her estranged husband. Although the murderer had threatened to kill Mrs. Kertzer on several occasions, the police could not act because oral threats were not an offence. The purpose of this Bill is to correct that gap in the law.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. André Bissonnette (for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

Question No. 8—Mr. McGrath:

1. Does the government have plans to better serve the Hibernia areas by establishing a separate SAR region for Newfoundland?

2. Between 1983-84 to date, by province, what was the breakdown of spending on Search and Rescue by the (a) Department of National Defence (b) Canadian Coast Guard?

3. Between January and October, 1984 (a) how many incidents off the Newfoundland coast was the Atlantic SAR co-ordinating centre in Halifax required to answer (b) how many involved (i) pleasure craft (ii) fishing vessels (iii) oil industry vessels?

4. To the knowledge of the Government will there be increased drilling on the Grand Banks this winter and, if so (a) is the Government taking any steps to review its policy on winter drilling (b) will the Search and Rescue presence in Newfoundland be increased?

5. Are there any plans to have fixed-wing aircraft stationed in eastern Newfoundland before the start of this year's winter drilling season and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. At the present time there are no plans to establish a separate SAR region for Newfoundland.

2. Neither the Department of National Defence nor the Canadian Coast Guard are able to break down the cost of providing SAR on a provincial basis.

3. (a) There were 35 marine distress incidents during the period January-October 1984. (b) (i) 12 pleasure crafts, (ii) 18 fishing vessels, (iii) none.

4. The same number of rigs (6) as in the previous year will operate in the area.

(a) Federal government and industry representatives continually review drilling policies;

(b) DND will deploy one additional Tracker aircraft to St. John's for the winter drilling season, and when the situation dictates, additional resources will be deployed in accordance with current emergency contingency plans.

5. One Tracker aircraft is deployed to St. John's full time and a second Tracker will be deployed for the winter drilling season.

UNIVERSITY PROGRAMS IN FEDERAL PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 34—Mr. Howie:

1. For the fiscal year ending March 31 (a) 1983 (b) 1984, did persons in federal penitentiaries avail themselves of university programs and, if so, how many?

2. In what penitentiaries did such programs operate?

3. What was the total cost of this program?

4. In what manner and to what extent were appropriate program objectives achieved as a result of the program?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned: 1. Yes.

	Fiscal Year Ending March 31, 1983	Fiscal Year Ending March 31, 1984
Average full-time students	188	138
Average part-time students	76	76

The decrease in full-time enrolment is attributed to the cancellation of the university programs (except for those in British Columbia) by the former Solicitor General effective April 1, 1983. After financial restructuring, all programs were reinstated for fiscal year 1984/85. It should be noted that since that time a steady increase has been reported in the enrolment.

On September 28, 1984 there were 184 full-time and 207 part-time students enrolled in university programs.

2. In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983, campus-type university programs were offered at Laval Institution in Quebec; Prison for Women, Collins Bay and Millhaven Institutions in Ontario; Stony Mountain Institution in Manitoba; and Matsqui, William Head, Mountain and Kent Institutions in British Columbia.

In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, campus-type university programs were offered at Matsqui, William Head, Mountain and Kent Institutions in British Columbia.

Inmates could also avail themselves of correspondence courses at various other institutions across the country during both fiscal years.

3. Total cost for university programs in 1982/83; $818,000. Total cost for university programs in 1983/84; $470,000.

4. Correctional and university officials have found that the programs provide valuable and effective opportunities for personal development and academic advancement of inmates in the above institutions.

CANADIAN ADVISORY COUNCIL ON STATUS OF WOMEN

Question No. 47—Mr. Howie:

1. Are any persons employed by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women and, if so, how many and what is the estimated salary expenditure in the current fiscal year?

2. In each of the two preceding fiscal years, what was the salary expenditure?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): 1. There are 37 people employed by the Council and presently 25 members. The estimated salary expenditure 1984-1985 is $1,020,000 (including employee benefits and honoraria to members).

2. The salary expenditure for fiscal year 1983-1984 was $1,014,207. In 1982-1983, it was $897,190, (both include employee benefits and honoraria).

MEMBERS OF CANADIAN ADVISORY COUNCIL ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

Question No. 48—Mr. Howie:

What are the names of the persons on the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women and, in each case, what amount was he or she paid in respect of that position in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1984?

ASSISTANCE OF CHATHAM-NEWCASTLE AREA

Question No. 51—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1983, did the Department of National Defence announce any grants, contributions or assistance for the Chatham-Newcastle area in New Brunswick and, if so, what grants, contributions or assistance was announced?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretrary to Minister of National Defence): No.

NUCLEAR WASTE STORAGE IN ROCK

Question No. 82—Mr. Angus:

Is research being conducted in Canada to verify the safety of nuclear waste storage in rock and, if so (a) at what sites (b) by site, what was the financial cost for each year that such research was conducted?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has been pursuing a research program since 1978 to assess the concept of disposal of irradiated fuel wastes deep in the crystalline rock of the Canadian Shield.

(a) Geological research has been undertaken at research areas near the following:

White Lake, near Renfrew, Ontario

Chalk River Nuclear Research Centre

East Bull Lake, near Elliot Lake, Ontario

Atikokan, Ontario

Overflow Bay/Denmark Lake, near Kenora, Ontario

Whiteshell Nuclear Research Establishment, Pinawa, Manitoba

Underground Research Laboratory, near Whiteshell (Manitoba)

(b) Because of AECL's cost accounting system, costs of the studies to verify the safety of nuclear waste disposal in rock cannot be isolated from the total expenditures relating to the waste management program. Therefore, only total costs of the program are being shown.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, with respect to answers to written questions, it is a normal practice in the House that the Opposition Parties' House Leaders receive a listing of the questions to be answered each day in advance of the Parliamentary Secretary rising. Has that practice been terminated for some reason?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer the question right now. Normally the list is distributed to certain people on this side but they have not received it either. I can look into it right away and make sure that the House Leaders get a copy of it.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 30

POSSIBLE CHANGES TO TAXATION POLICY

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the House that I have received notice under Standing Order 30 which I should have dealt with before the notices of motions for the production of papers.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to move the following motion: That the House of Commons do adjourn to consider the serious implications of private commitments that may have been made by the Government to representatives of the oil industry, to the effect that specific changes to taxation policy will be introduced in the spring Budget.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) gave me notice of his application for an emergency debate.

Standing Order 30 provides a procedure for "discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration". What is envisaged by that rule is a sudden emergency of such importance that the national interest calls for its immediate consideration by the House. The Hon. Member in his submission has suggested, and he suggests again in the words he has presented to me, that there may have been a breach of budgetary secrecy and that private commitments may have been made by the Government to representatives of the oil industry. The matter is very speculative and hardly specific, the latter word being a very significant element in the criteria governing a request for an emergency debate. More importantly, perhaps, until we have seen the Budget we can hardly determine whether or not its secrecy has been breached.

I must therefore rule that the Hon. Member's application does not conform to the requirements of the Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

Mr. Speaker: Consideration of an Opposition Motion. I had thought there would be someone rising on this matter.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I thought the motion would be read, Sir.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say I noted, as you did no doubt, that there are two motions on the Notice Paper. After proper consultation, and since this is the first Opposition day in this Supply period, we recognize that the Opposition day should belong to the Liberal Party.

EMPLOYMENT FOR YOUNG CANADIANS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government has failed to provide for significant Canadian participation in the International Year of Youth by neglecting to prepare and to put into place comprehensive job training and employment opportunity programs designed to enable young Canadians to find useful and meaningful employment and to contribute to the future of our country.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the International Year of Youth and I have in my hand the document published by the Minister representing Canada's participation in that year. I think it gives us an excellent opportunity to focus in this House on the problems facing the young people of Canada.

The three themes set forth for the International Year are those of participation, development and peace. Those themes, to which young people in this country can subscribe, are thoroughly endorsed by those of us on this side of the House, in this corner of the House. This motion gives us an opportunity this afternoon not only to highlight the problems facing our young people in Canada, but also to invite the Government to find some real solutions.

I agree with the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) when she said in this House on Monday that there is no such thing as monolithic youth. Our youth are diversified. She did not spell that out, but obviously when we speak of our young people we are talking about 15-year-olds on the one hand and couples in their 20's with a child or children on the other. We are talking of those in school and those out of school. We are talking about high school drop-outs and those who have had or are having the opportunity and advantage of a university education. We are talking about our unemployed and those young people who have an opportunity for a job either full-time or part-time. Again, we are talking about those who work on our farms and those who live in the cities, towns and villages of Canada. The one concern which overrides all others, Mr. Speaker, is the question of employment. That is the focus of this particular debate.

The total of our unemployed in Canada now rests at 1.4 million people, or 10.8 per cent of the workforce. In the age group 15 to 24 that percentage rises to 16.7 per cent, or over a half a million young people. We can pinpoint the statistic even more accurately. Thirty-six per cent of all unemployed persons in our country are between the ages of 15 and 24.

This is an incredible tragedy for our young people. It also roses a challenge to our country and to all Canadians, not only a challenge but an obligation to act. All Members of this House, Mr. Speaker, whatever their party affiliation, are daily receiving requests for assistance from young constituents. We must make it possible for our young people to have a normal life in our society, otherwise they may well be doomed to spend the rest of their lives either unemployed or on welfare, with no hope for the future.

[English]

We risk having in this country a climate of despair where our young people will lose hope, ambition and their confidence and dignity. The Government has given us fine phrases since it assumed office. It has given us great rhetoric, but its actions speak volumes for its inability to accept unemployment for youth as a major issue. It has done nothing less than savage the youth employment programs since it assumed office. One of its first acts as a government was to eliminate the First Chance program. This was a program to meet a conundrum or a catch-22 situation whereby our young people go to a prospective employer and ask for a job. The employer says: "Fine, young lady, fine, young fellow; your marks are good. You have worked hard. I like your community involvement, but you have no experience". The young person says to the prospective employer: "How, sir, can I have any experience? I have not had a job. It is my first opportunity".

We have this tragedy in our country of half a million young people with no experience and, therefore, with no job. Until they get a job, they cannot have any experience. That was the reason for this First Chance program, to give our young people a first chance by on-the-job training.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The program was announced and implemented. We were seeking the co-operation of the provinces, of labour and of business. The program was endorsed by the Canadian Labour Congress, by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, by the Chambers of Commerce across the country, by the Business Council on National Issues, and by the Canadian Federation of Labour. It addressed the crying need of young people to get their first chance and some experience to qualify them for a job.

What did the Government do, Mr. Speaker? It cancelled the program and substituted a pilot program—I see the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is here—for three or four thousand young people. It was a pilot project only. This program would have filled a gap for those who do not go on to university to give them some training and experience to get the jobs of the future.

I have looked at the Government's paper which it produced in December, 1984. That paper argues forcefully for the necessity for a school-to-work transition program like First Chance. One turns to page 24 of that document entitled "Training" and reads:

> The second strategy would follow from the view that, in a time of spending restraint, federal expenditures should be increasingly shifted to those areas where the need for federal support is clearest—

It goes on:

> The result of this view would be to place greater federal emphasis on training related to the school-work transition, training for the unemployed and special groups, and training related to major career shifts.

We agree totally with the Minister's paper. We agree also with what the Minister for Youth said two days ago in this Chamber. Here are her words:

> We must attempt to break down the prejudices against young people and encourage our partners in the business and labour communities to make their fields more accessible to them.

We could not agree more. What happened? The Tories axed the very program that would have done that. If the Minister for Employment and the Minister for Youth are worried about the political credit for this program, they should change the name. We could help them find a new one.

An Hon. Member: That is what they will do.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We will even relinquish the pride of authorship because it is more important for the young people to have this kind of a program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There is no more startling proof of the need for training programs like First Chance to ease the school-to-work transition than to look at the unemployment rates of young people who have a grade eight education or less. I should like to refer to the December, 1984 figures from Statistics Canada showing those young people with only grade eight education or less as a percentage of the unemployed in the country, 30.4 per cent; with only a high school education as a percentage of the unemployed, 18.4 per cent; with some post-secondary education, 11.6 per cent of those unemployed; with a university degree, 9.3 per cent of those unemployed. Those rates are unacceptably high in all areas, but they show clearly the need for a long-term commitment by the federal Government to training programs for young people. Those statistics are absolutely convincing. That is a great challenge for the country. There is a great need to have just as strong a commitment to early school-leavers as to traditional support for those who go on to post-secondary education.

● (1520)

I should like to give some other examples of the attack by the Government on programs for youth. Last summer, Summer Canada provided 89,000 jobs for youths and students. What did the Government do? It eliminated that program. What about Katimavik? It reduced expenditures for that wonderful initiative by $20 million. Earlier this afternoon my colleague asked a question in the House about there being $5 million less this year for student loans. Where is the commitment of this new Government to the young people of Canada? Where is the promise for them of more jobs and a better future? I submit that, like so many other commitments and like most of the promises made by those on the Government side before they came through the curtains, entered the Chamber and sat on Your Honour's right, it has vanished and no longer exists.

What we see here is a fundamental difference in philosophy. The Progressive Conservative Party wants to rely totally on the private sector. We agree that the private sector, particularly small business, is from where most new jobs will come. However, what about those regions with no strong private sector? How does the 18 year old boy or girl in rural Newfoundland with no high school education find a job? The unemployment rate in that category in Newfoundland is 57.9 per cent. The Government is abandoning its role in direct job creation.

In my first speech in the House, Mr. Speaker, I explained the principle of Liberalism. We believe in the private sector. We do. But the Government also has a role to play in the labour market when the private sector cannot or will not absorb the demand for jobs.

That is why we have direct job creation programs. According to another principle of Liberalism, equal access to training is essential to enable people to apply for the jobs available. However, equal access is useless if there are no programs available. That is what the situation will be as a result of the direction being taken by this Government today.

[English]

This is why we have chosen to draw this subject to the attention of the House and the country. This is why we in the Liberal Party in this quarter of the House will fight the destructive policies of the Government on training programs. I see the Minister smiles.

Some Hon. Members: She laughs.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There are a half million young people in the country who should see that smile; she is laughing now.

Again the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talked today about consultation, consensus and review. It is now clear that when the Government talks about review, it is little more than a code word for search and destroy. Young people need some help in starting their own businesses. This is why we created the Young Entrepreneurship Program. What happened to that program? It was scrapped. The Government is abdicating its role. How can we expect the private sector to do the job on its own, particularly in the field of training and retraining? The Government is eliminating employment and training programs willy-nilly, and we have not seen any alternatives.

I ask both the Ministers who are sitting here this afternoon: Where is that plan of action? Quite frankly I do not care if they change the names of the programs or find some other epithet for them. We will sit back and let them take some credit, but they should just restore some programs for the younger people in the country who are crying for jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister is now taking credit—don't we all notice it—for the creation of 100,000 jobs since September when he formed the Government. He knows as well as I do—perhaps he does not—that there are time lags in economic policies. Economic policies introduced by any Government take 6, 9, 12 and 18 months sometimes to bear fruit. When he recites those figures, he is just reciting the effects of Liberal policy. Even on the basis of the figures themselves—and one of my colleagues has handed me some numbers from Statistics Canada—in the last three months of the administration of Prime Minister Trudeau the increase in employment was 32,000 people per month. During the three months I had the honour to lead the Government, the figure rose to 33,000 new employed per month. Since the Conservative Government took office, the number has been 26,000 per month. Let us not play games with numbers. It does not help people who do not have jobs. It gives the Prime Minister and the Ministry a little glow of undeserved satisfaction.

With the exception of placing over 100 party faithful in patronage positions after the House rose for Christmas, adding 700 policemen to the Unemployment Insurance Commission and hiring political commissars at 80 grand for each one of the Ministers, all 40 of them—and it is the largest Cabinet in Canadian history—there has not been a single program created by the Government for direct jobs since it took office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have heard that deep voice before; you know what his former Leader, Mr. Diefenbaker, used to say about voices like that.

Because I think it is relevant, I want to turn briefly to federal Government funding for post-secondary education. At the moment the arrangement is a block funding agreement whereby cash and tax points are transferred to the provinces. I can speak in my capacity as Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra in which the University of British Columbia with its 35,000 students is located. The people of British Columbia—and I am sure the people of other provinces—are concerned, as we discovered during the election campaign, that the moneys transferred by the taxpayers of Canada through their federal Government to the provinces under post-secondary financing are not being used by most provinces for the purposes for which the funds are transferred. In British Columbia the figure is about 12 per cent. In Nova Scotia and Ontario the figure is somewhat less but still acute. The Government has not told us how it plans to renegotiate the agreement with the provinces to ensure that money destined for post-secondary education is used for post-secondary education, for research, student loans, grants and bursaries, and for a national standard so that our students can move freely and receive the same quality of education from one end of the country to the other.

I ask the Ministry—and perhaps it is the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) one should ask—what the standards will be. How will the Government in renegotiating those agreements ensure the national criteria that moneys destined by the taxpayers of the country are really spent by the provinces for the purpose of post-secondary education? Is the Government planning reductions in these transfers? I would be interested in sitting like a fly on the wall to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson); perhaps we just have to wait for the tape. Who knows? I would be interested in knowing what those conversations are. That will indicate quite clearly this Government's commitment to youth and youth programs because that formula is up for renegotiation this year. Does it agree, for example, with the Bovey report mentioned by one of my colleagues, commissioned by the Province of Ontario, which recommends a doubling of tuition fees for students so that the students themselves pay up to 25 per cent of university administration costs? What is the view of the Government?

We need a full debate in this House, and I hope the Government gives us the opportunity—otherwise we may exercise our rights in an Opposition day in the future—to debate the renegotiation of this transfer formula.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I spoke about it since my return to public life because I am very concerned that the dollars put by the people of this country into post-secondary education are not diverted by the provinces of Canada.

Members on all sides of the House, particularly those in the Liberal caucus who brought this motion before Your Honour and wish to speak this afternoon, and we as a nation, must be prepared to invest in young Canadians. We must be prepared to offer our younger citizens the chance to build better and lead more productive lives. We must replace the despair of a generation with hope. We must not lose a generation in this country for failing to respond to their needs. The meat cleaver approach taken by this Government to existing programs for youth is counter-productive to that renewal approach. Our young people do not want to hear the words "cut, cut, cut".

The Minister of State for Youth said on Monday that youth is one of Canada's untapped resources. We agree. However, I submit that the attitude and actions of this Government to date are an unqualified guarantee that Canada's youth will remain an untapped resource this year, next year and for many years to come.

I have outlined on behalf of this Party, and I will be followed by my colleagues, areas where urgent action is required now, today. Not next month or next spring, now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Under Standing Order 62(13), there is a 10-minute question or comment period. Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Not on this one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Under Standing Order 62(13), each speech is 20 minutes with a 10-minute question and answer period. That is our Standing Order here in the House of Commons.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner). In 1981, a parliamentary committee of this House reported to the House a document entitled "Employment Opportunities for the Eighties". The committee was chaired by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). I was Vice-Chairman. One thing that has disturbed me for the last three years is that so little of the advice which that committee gave to the Government was accepted.

In the context of the debate on the motion today, I would like to read recommendation 135 and ask the Leader of the Opposition whether he supports that recommendation. I think he is aware that if he does, he is essentially supporting the comments of the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) about what this Government intends to do, which is to accept advice which comes from the consultative process. Recommendation 135 reads:

> The federal Government should continue summer employment programs for students, but they should be simplified, better designed and better coordinated with educational and training programs. To the greatest extent possible, the summer job program should provide additional on the job training for those who are in high school, community college or university.

That was our recommendation in 1981. The Liberals did not accept it then. Do the Liberals accept it today?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is just reinforcing what I had to say, and I thank him.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. In the last number of months he has travelled across this country, particularly in western Canada, and has had discussions with individual interest groups from Atlantic Canada, particularly the less fortunate areas of the country. Does he agree that it is incumbent upon the present Government, particularly the national Government, to provide some economic stimulus over and above what it may give to other areas in order to create jobs, not only for our young people but for older workers as well? Will he agree with this sentiment that I am expressing and which has been expressed by other individual Canadians?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, with his usual perception, the Hon. Member has put it with even more eloquence than I could summon. When we talk about training, although the scope of the motion limited it to our young people because of our concentration this afternoon on International Youth Year, training and retraining is just as serious for the men and women of this country who, through no fault of their own, have been displaced by new technology, new machines, computers, the information processes or a robot. I echo the Hon. Member's sentiments very strongly.

There is another part to the Hon. Member's question. It is clear that this new Government has abandoned what was fundamental to previous Liberal administrations, that there should be equality of opportunity in this country, regional equality. There should be the opportunity for every young man and woman in every part of this country to have an equal chance at a job, whether they live in Cape Breton, from which the Hon. Member hails, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Northern Ontario, the Gaspé or Western Canada. That is a principle which we will reaffirm on another day before Your Honour when we are given the opportunity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if the Leader of the Opposition had a chance to look at the Fiscal Arrangements Act which was amended last year whereby his predecessor forced six and five on education transfers, despite the serious opposition by this Party and the New Democratic Party. Did he look at the amendment produced in that debate by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) which specifically demanded that the Government annually file an accounting as to how the education transfer for post-secondary education was spent by the provinces to ensure that the transfer by the Government was not being used for other purposes? That amendment was put by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands. Eventually the last Government was forced or embarrassed into accepting it. Has the Leader of the Opposition had a chance to look at those debates?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I have. Because of the exigencies of the election campaign, I even had the misfortune and burden of having to read some of the Conservative documents on the subject. I hope the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) will remind the Member for Kingston and the Islands, now the Minister of Employment and Immigration, of the words in that amendment when she and her colleagues come forth to renegotiate those agreements.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) could inform the House whether he was not surprised when, in answer to a question I put to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) about summer employment programs, the Minister replied that the new program she is to announce very shortly would certainly be better than the old one for manpower training.

Is it not surprising that a Minister would say her program will be better for manpower training, while at the same time, that same Minister is cutting millions of dollars from on-the-job training programs? I imagine the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is aware that in view of technological change, if our young people are to have jobs, they must be able to get training. I would like to hear the Hon. Member's opinion on the subject.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member. The statements by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) are not only surprising, they are also grotesque, illogical and cruel.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated.

• (1540)

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: I must admit to you, Sir, that in this House one always takes great satisfaction from hearing the boos coming from Members of the Liberal Party. One realizes then that one is doing something right.

I would like to begin my remarks today by saying that I express my appreciation to the House Leader of the New Democratic Party who because of my schedule made it possible for me to take part in the debate at this time by forgoing his Party's position in the debating order. I wish to thank him for that.

I also want to express my appreciation to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) for having placed the resolution before us today. I would like to tell him that I am grateful for this for two reasons. The first of these is that it reminds the House once again that, as far as the Leader of the Opposition is concerned, expediency takes preference over addressing the real needs of the nation. Second, it gives me the opportunity once again to outline the steps that we are taking to begin to redress the legacy of despair that was left to the people of this country, including young people and older workers from coast to coast, by the former Government.

The Leader of the Opposition has placed this resolution before us and he did so just a couple of days after I had told him and others in the House that there would be programs announced for summer youth within a very short period of time. Of course, what I noticed about his remarks today was his selective memory. I realize that he has been out of the House for some period of years and I can understand why he has forgotten that, as Minister of Finance, he did not see fit to come to this House for any discussion of the Fiscal Arrangements Act with the provinces prior to the time they were negotiated. That goes back a long time. I can see why he was unaware of the debate that took place on post-secondary education in this Chamber and the amendment that I moved to look at the accountability question with the provinces. He was out of the Chamber at that time so obviously he was not aware of what happened. However, I fail to understand how his selective memory is applied to events which have taken place since he returned to the Chamber.

The Leader of the Opposition made some reference to the fact that nothing has been said about job creation or training. I am sure he would have listened with interest to the remarks made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his economic statement of last November. At that time the Minister said:

> We are committed to providing lasting jobs for all Canadians who want to work. The Government will therefore be committing an additional $1 billion in 1985-86 primarily to help Canadians to acquire new skills and to find jobs in the private and public sectors.

That kind of selective amnesia which causes the Leader of the Opposition to leap over the assignment of $1 billion this year to training, human resource development and the development of jobs in all parts of the country is what I consider to be the utmost in expediency and is just an attempt to mislead the country.

It is on the question of unemployment and training where the Leader of the Opposition goes badly off the track. That is not what the people of Canada want to hear. The people of Canada know that the new Government is tackling a whole host of problems, a legacy of problems that was left to it by the former Government. I would like to say that, as far as human resource development is concerned, this Government will make an impact on the economy with which the former Government would not come to grips or begin to address, particularly in a sector that is our greatest resource, our young people.

The Leader of the Opposition commented on the training paper I tabled in the House of Commons. I am glad that he was able to comment on it today and comment on it so favourably. The last time the subject of my training paper was raised, he had not read it, he had not seen it and I do not think he even knew that it was tabled. He is coming along. He is beginning to come to grips with the subject. I am pleased to see the interest that he is taking in this.

However, in his remarks he said that the way to approach this subject is simply to change the names of the programs. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that is not what we intend to do. We are going to take a new approach to this question. I have said that in the Chamber and I will continue to demonstrate it throughout the year and the Government will demonstrate it as it has demonstrated it already over the past months.

The Leader of the Opposition might scoff and belittle the addition of 100,000 new jobs to the economy since last fall. However, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that means that there are 100,000 people who are working at this time who were not working when the Liberal Government was in office. Every individual Canadian who has the opportunity to work means an improvement is made to the economy. That is what our efforts, consultations and developments of new programs are all about.

[Translation]

The International Year of Youth will give us all an opportunity to rethink the role of young people in our society. Fortunately, Canada's youth is talented, enthusiastic and energetic. Our young people can make a tremendous contribution in all areas of our society.

[English]

The ability of our young people to make this contribution depends upon the ability of all Canadians to help them realize their potential and to express themselves in a way that is constructive and beneficial to all of us. Ways must certainly be developed to allow young people to take their rightful place in our society so that they can build productive lives and contribute to the improvement of Canadian life.

During the consultations I have had in the last couple of months I have talked to many young people, and they have told me that they are fed up and disillusioned with the way things have happened in the past. They are looking to us now to develop skills for real, permanent and lasting jobs.

A few months ago, the people of Canada spoke through the electoral process and what they said was that it was time for a change, that it was time for a new and fresh approach to the ills that plague our society. I must say that regardless of how much the Leader of the Opposition wants to encourage us to use the old methods, they simply will not do. When the previous Government was faced with half a million young people out of work, all it could do was to suggest stop-gap measures that did little to relieve the suffering and distress that existed among our young people.

Since I took up my duties, Mr. Speaker, we have adopted a set of measures to turn the Canadian economy around and enable all Canadians to make a contribution to society through well structured programs.

[English]

The motion put before the House today by the Leader of the Opposition is really the kind of approach to the problem that the Canadian people have rejected. It is the idea that if we just go out and throw money at a problem it will go away. How does he expect to solve the problems facing the country when he does not know what they are, and when he has not come to grips with them? How can there be lasting jobs and lasting solutions when that Party's idea of solving issues is to practise confrontational politics?

The Leader of the Opposition talked about First Chance. What he did not talk about was that there was not a single dollar directed to that program.

Ms. Copps: That's a lie.

Miss MacDonald: I have said before that it was an unfunded fantasy. Where were the billion dollars he was talking about? The money was not there.

During the election campaign we told the people of this country that we would again get Canadians working. We have started on that with different programs, some of which are at work at the present time. But we did not use stop-gap measures and we did not make promises of unfunded fantasies. Yes, we have dedicated a billion dollars to job creation and training this year, but we went through the exercise of looking at every program in the expenditures of this Government. We looked at all of them. We reallocated funds. We looked at the priorities which had to be continued. It was a tough exercise to go through, but we ended up with $1 billion dedicated to training, job creation and human resource development in Canada which will provide the jobs, the skills and the security for which Canadians are looking. It will only be a start, because the whole approach which has been taken in the past will have to be turned around. We will not have the short-term, make-work projects that the Liberals liked. We will have the kind of projects that will be ongoing and permanent.

It is because of this, in looking for new approaches and coming up with ways which make skills and training fundamental to our economic development, that I have held consultations across the country with provincial Governments, business, labour, young people, women's groups and native organizations, in order to get their input to the programs which the Government is now considering. I have heard their ideas and I share their concerns. I know what they mean when they say that they do not have opportunities. I hear that all the time. They have not had opportunities in the past. That is what we will address by bringing in a coherent and cohesive policy which will work in all parts of the country and address training and retraining. That means streamlining government programs and eliminating duplications so that public money will be used in the most effective way possible.

The private sector has said: "Yes, we are willing to help in this renewal". We want them to help. The provinces will help. I met with the provinces last week and they indicated that they wanted to co-operate. It is through these consultations that we have discovered there are common themes, concerns and problems which must be addressed by all of us, not only by programs which take in one level of government and ignore the needs and the way in which we can co-operate with people, governments and the private sector in all parts of Canada. We will not use that old unilateralism. That is what the people of Canada rejected on September 4. It is a new spirit of co-operation, confidence and willingness to work together which will make it possible for people to find security.

I noted with interest that the Leader of the Opposition spoke of the need for comprehensive job training and employment opportunity programs. I have to remind him that that is exactly what the previous Government did not give the people of Canada. There was nothing comprehensive about the ad hoc approach which was taken.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it has been the concern of this Government to turn the situation in this country around, to put Canadians back to work and to give our young people an opportunity to become successfully integrated in our society.

[English]

I know that my colleague, the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne), has been addressing this program and consulting in all parts of the country. She spoke eloquently about it the other day. I commend her for the work she has been doing.

[Translation]

We shall be dealing with these problems during the International Year of Youth, but any real and lasting solutions will be the result of concerted and sustained efforts on the part of all groups in our society.

[English]

We have announced the formation of new programs and new approaches to deal with this very critical matter, particularly with regard to young people. The steps which we have taken over the past couple of months will lead, through these consultations, to the First Ministers' conference in February and to the economic conference in March. These meetings will provide an opportunity for leading representatives of all parts of the country to chart the future course for Canada.

We face a difficult challenge. It is one which will test the ingenuity and indeed the determination of Canadians everywhere. We must once again get our economy going. We have started to build confidence. We want to ensure that young people have their opportunity in that confident Canada of the future and not the despair that has been left to them. To that end, we have said that within a very short period of time we will be announcing, with the co-operation of the provinces and the private sector, training and job-creation programs for young people this summer. I would remind the Leader of the Opposition once again, although he is somewhat forgetful, that that has been indicated and it will be carried out. I reassure young people everywhere in Canada that that will take place.

I would also remind him that the way in which this Government is approaching job creation, training and skills development is not on an ad hoc basis. We are not saying that the problem can be solved by six-week jobs or ten-week jobs and then throw people back on to unemployment insurance. What we need is a cohesive and coherent approach to this very difficult problem. I can assure the Leader of the Opposition, who has endorsed my training paper today, that we will see that the goals and objectives stated in that paper are put into effect for young people, displaced workers, and the men and women of the country who want nothing more than to be able to find full and satisfying work. That is our commitment to them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments?

● (1600)

The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I must say I was very disappointed with the statement I just heard, made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). I would never have thought that a $40,000 raise could change a person as quickly as it has the Minister. I thought she was one of those Ministers who were compassionate and human and who were there to defend Canadians on middle and low incomes.

I remember when the Minister was in the Opposition: she would ask questions about people in trouble and insist on getting help right away. I remember when the Minister visited my riding with me during the referendum. She was human then, and I would never have thought that an increase in salary would turn the Minister into a defender of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

I do not think Parliament is the appropriate place for putting on an act. It may be for some Members, perhaps, because it is the only thing they can do, but as far as the Minister is concerned, with her personality and her reputation, I cannot understand how she can tell us that the Government has set aside one billion dollars for job creation when she knows perfectly well that the Government has cut four million dollars from programs and projects whose purpose it was to to create jobs. This is money which would otherwise have benefitted Canadian workers.

When the Minister—I am sure her heart is not in it—when the Minister is trying to say that we have the Progressive Conservative Government to thank for the fact that additional jobs have been created, does the Minister also mean it is the Progressive Conservative Government's fault that 1200 jobs are going to be lost at Wabasso and elsewhere? If they want to take credit for the jobs that were created, they will also have to take the blame for the bankruptcies that will occur in this country.

My last question for the Minister . . . This afternoon, I asked specifically if there would be separate Summer Canada budgets for each riding, and the Minister did not answer my question. Does that mean there will be a general budget that will be coordinated, and that disadvantaged ridings like mine and several others will again have to suffer?

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I will be making an announcement in due course on that issue. However, I would say to the Hon. Member that I hardly expect—and I am sure he does not—that I will be making that announcement in the House today in response to his question. We as a government are on a program which will lead us to much more involvement of young people and the development of the objectives of young people in this country. That is set on a schedule which will lead to the best possible development there can be. I can assure the Hon. Member that those programs will be announced very shortly.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to try to put this debate into its proper perspective, just briefly. I do not question the statistics quoted by the Hon. Minister, nor do I question the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) in his address to the House. We all see and hear about these tragic numbers of unemployed youth in our ridings every day. The Leader of the Opposition stated that the 100,000 new jobs created since September 4 are a result of lags in economic policy of six months, 12 months and 18 months and, therefore, should be credited to his Party. I would like to ask the Minister if she feels that the unacceptable numbers of unemployed youth of this country should also be credited to the Liberals as a result of the cumulative effect of poor economic policies by successive Liberal Governments during the last many years?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, while there are young people or, for that matter, while there are Canadians unemployed, no one takes any satisfaction. I listened to what the Leader of the Opposition had to say and I do feel, Mr. Speaker, that we can at least hope—and that is what this country is really all about, hope—that the trends of the last few months and the decrease in unemployment among young people continue.

I was looking at the figures and I can say that the unemployment level for young people is down by 56,000 from what it was a year ago. It is down by 29,000 from what it was a month ago. That is a beginning but it is only a beginning. When we look at a total of 500,000, half a million unemployed, we know it is only a beginning. The steps which we are taking, Mr. Speaker, are designed to reduce that number further and continually.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have just witnessed the most obvious demonstration of incompetence on the part of a Minister of the Crown, the likes of which I have never seen since I first came to the House.

The Minister gave us a flow of words, or rather a deluge of words which unfortunately fell on a desert of ideas. No specific proposal, Mr. Speaker, nothing at all from a Minister and a government that have already been in office since September. Not a thing! Only accusations against the previous government, a Liberal government which at least had gone to the trouble of creating programs such as Summer Canada. The only obvious thing done by the Minister since taking over her portfolio has been to sack this program which was intended to create tens of thousands of jobs for students this coming summer. That is the only thing she has done, Mr. Speaker.

As a result, young people are growing ever more desperate, uncertain as they are already to find jobs next summer.

And now the Minister has just wasted 20 minutes of the time of the House to say absolutely nothing. All Canadians are waiting for the announcements she has been promising all along. As a rule, new programs are announced in December.

I have only one question for the Minister: Whom does she think she is deluding by making such a meaningless speech this afternoon?

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, once again, I note that a Member of the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), is rising to make certain statements and I understand what he is doing this afternoon. However, I can tell him that his concern is more than matched by people on this side of the House. I would also like to remind the Hon. Member just in passing that those comments come from an Hon. Member whose constituency allocation under Canada Works was increased by 66 per cent this year.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I notice that there are some Hon. Members from British Columbia sitting behind the Minister. I hope they had the good grace to be embarrassed when the Minister talked about creating an extra 100,000 jobs in Canada over the last four months, because since the Minister has taken office there has been a net loss of 25,000 jobs in British Columbia. In September there were 1,226,000 people employed in British Columbia. The December statistics which just came out indicate there are 1,201,000 now employed. There are 25,000 jobs less now than there were then.

Perhaps the Minister might want to attribute that to the attitude of the provincial Government under Bill Bennett, as her Leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), had said that he was taking a step in the right direction. Or perhaps she might wish to take credit for that herself.

I notice that when the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) was in British Columbia last week meeting with a group of young people, she said that young people cannot expect any special preference. She is quoted in an article in the Vancouver Sun on January 19 as saying:

> The situation of young people, while deserving special attention, must be examined in the context of the state of society as a whole ... A balanced approach must be taken. We can neither neglect nor show favouritism to any particular group.

Would the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) tell us when she is going to do something for the people of British Columbia? When are we going to see some jobs created in B.C. instead of the loss of jobs?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the programs which will be announced very shortly will indeed apply from coast to coast. However, they will take into consideration the regional needs of the country. In the past there have been programs that have come out of Ottawa which were applied in the same way in all parts of the country. That does not work. The example which he has given of British Columbia is a very relevant one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the time for questions and comments has expired.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am not especially pleased to find it necessary to rise in support of the motion before the House. With that peculiar kind of naivety which affects new Members I sincerely believed that, despite the philosophical differences between us, the Government would treat the matter of the International Year for Youth with the urgency which the situation of Canada's youth requires. I expected that youth would have an effective spokesperson and that the Government would present bold initiatives consistent with the year's theme of participation, development and peace. Instead we have seen an ideological pursuit of the means of deficit cutting and confidence building based upon the promise of profits for the largely foreign-owned multinationals. At the same time, with unseemly haste, cuts were applied to programs benefiting youth while painful procrastination has yielded only promises of programs to fill the gaps and which will likely benefit profit enterprise more than youth.

The Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) promised to be a spokesperson for youth. I therefore find it rather peculiar that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) responded on behalf of the Government in this debate rather than the Minister of State for Youth. The Minister of State for Youth did promise to be a spokesperson for youth and to express their concerns. Youth are concerned about peace. Where was she when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) became starry-eyed about star wars? Youth are concerned about the environment. Did the Minister extend a helping hand when the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) lay prone before the assault by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on her Ministry? Youth are concerned about controlling their nation's destiny. Where is she as that destiny is being conceded to the economic priorities of foreign profit enterprises?

Canada's youth want to exercise their creative talents. Where was she when thousands of jobs were taken from the cultural community by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse)? Canada's youth are concerned about the Canadianization of our media. Where was she when the CBC was being savaged and as the NFB was rejected in favour of Walt Disney? Canada's youth are concerned about education. What did she say when Summer Canada was cut and 80,000 tuition-earning jobs were destroyed, student loans were frozen and provinces across the land were shutting the doors of our colleges and universities to those who need help most?

Most important, Canada's youth want jobs that will give them a sense of worth and accomplishment that will enhance our society and make it a symbol for all the world of how prosperity can be achieved by a commitment to social justice and peace. Where is she as the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) looks to the engines of war as a vehicle for economic growth?

The Minister has intimated that we should place emphasis on what is good about Canadian youth. If she means to praise them for their character and accomplishment, I would join her. However, there is so much happening to them that is wrong. It is wrong that 701,000 young people in this country do not have jobs and that some have never worked and perhaps never will. It is wrong that in some regions such as Newfoundland as much as 70 per cent of the youth are unemployed.

I was in the Atlantic provinces the other day. There is so much there which is wrong. It is wrong that city sidewalks should be crowded with prostituted youths. It is wrong that young people steel food and rob garbage cans in order to eat. It is wrong that soup kitchens and flop houses are the meeting places of jobless and alienated youth. It is wrong that 80 per cent of black youth in Halifax have never been employed. Listen to Father McKenna of Halifax and the voices of St. John's and Sydney. Mr. Speaker, It is tragically wrong when joblessness means hopelessness, a sense of worthlessness, anger and alienation from peers, family and society. Mr. Speaker, it is wrong when old men play with weapons that may not let young people grow old.

It is perhaps unfair to focus upon the Minister of State for Youth for the failure of the Government, for the Government must in its entirety share the blame. However, she is the spokesperson and must impress upon the Government the real meaning of participation, development and peace. It is clear that if one examines the priorities set out by the United Nations to fulfil the requirements of the theme of this year, the Liberal motion must be sustained.

I will delineate in part what those program priorities are. One priority is to increase employment opportunities through formulation of effective programs, policies and plans to reduce unemployment and to eliminate discriminatory employment conditions amont youth. Another priority is to ensure access to every level of education and to make available technical and vocational training, particilarly in rural areas. A third priority is to focus on concerns and the role of young women in development. Yet another is to develop and promote intersectoral community-based activities for health education, sanitation, nutrition, family life education, family planning and other welfare services for youth with the aim of encouraging and facilitating self-care. Another priority is to create an appropriate cultural environment which facilitates the participation of youth in development.

We of the New Democratic Party have made positive proposals in respect to youth. In urging the Minister and the Government to fulfil their promise to the young people of Canada we have several recommendations for their consideration and implementation. We recommend the allocation of $1 billion to a youth initiative fund to allow young people to create their own jobs. We recommend an industrial grant levy system to provide training opportunities for young people. We recommend the restoration of the 6 and 5 per cent cuts imposed by the former Government to post-secondary education and additional funding to ensure quality, relevance and access and assured levels of funding in colleges and universities. We recommend a House standing committee on youth in order that all Parties may be involved in determining what the priorities should be with respect to this year. A national advisory council on post-secondary education should also be considered in connection with steps to ensure accessibility to the university system.

More than this and those five regional fora that have been described by the Minister, let her ensure that the youth are listened to and heeded on all the important issues of the day rather than just those affecting youth. They should be listened to on the issues of peace, the environment, our Canadian culture, economic development, equality between the sexes for all people, employment, disarmament, peace and so on.

Finally, let the Government change from bashing the deficit, and therefore the poor, to the creation of jobs as a first priority. The New Democratic Party has been clear on what initiatives should be taken and I commend those initiatives to the Government.

• (1620)

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy). As members will know, the Government has eliminated Summer Canada which is a program specifically designed to provide employment primarily to students during the summer months to give them the opportunity to earn so that they may continue their studies in the fall. That may not be such a problem in cities like Toronto or Montreal where the unemployment rate may be very low. However, in single industry communities, of which there are 811 across the country, it is extremely important for that kind of program to be put into effect because they do not have the corporate base on which to employ people.

What is his view with respect to ensuring that there be early notice and announcement of such a program specifically designed for summer employment for young people?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I have been quite willing to attribute the most sincere and constructive intention on the part of the Minister of Employment and Immigration with respect to the introduction of summer employment programs for youth. However, in my view, it is the height of irresponsibility to accede to cuts in Summer Canada without having something to replace that program. It has caused a great deal of uncertainty and insecurity among young people and for many it is already too late to make decisions with respect to the coming year.

There is another aspect of Summer Canada which has been discovered in our consultations on the East Coast and elsewhere through communications received in many of our offices. It is that Summer Canada presented an opportunity to provide services to the disabled, for example, as well as others in our society who needed social services of some kind which were provided by young people. Not only have young people been deprived of the opportunity to earn money for tuition and other expenses, but a number of valuable services which are being extended to people in difficulty in our society have been placed in jeopardy and are uncertain. That is also a serious matter.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) indicated in her remarks that she entered into consultations with a number of groups in the country on employment programs. Of course, we welcome and applaud that action. However, she neglected to mention one group which tends to be forgotten by policy formulators, the disabled who constitute some 10 per cent of the total Canadian population. Within that group there is an unemployment rate of up to 80 per cent, such as the blind population where the unemployment rate is probably in excess of 80 per cent.

Prior to the election the Conservatives indicated to at least one of the major organizations, COPOH, that they would be willing to consider introducing a program of contract compliance within the recommendations that have been made by the House of Commons Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. In his considerations for this debate, has my colleague given any thought at all to programs that would go a long way to helping the disabled become fully participating members in the mainstream of Canadian life?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, we had occasion to talk to representatives of the organizations providing care for and composed of the disabled. I believe the Government should implement compulsory contract compliance which is a measure that group has been seeking. In that respect I would note that on August 14, 1984 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said with respect to whether compulsory contract compliance should be provided: "Yes, along the lines proposed in recommendations 26 and 27 of the 1981 Obstacles Report".

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member clarify the extent to which he believes contract compliance should go? Should it go to the smallest of businesses in Canadian society or should it apply only to big business?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I believe that most of those who have an understanding of contract compliance as it has been implemented in other jurisdictions and been considered appropriate for implementation generally accord some limit of numbers of employees below which it would not be compulsory. I think that is something that would have to be taken into account with respect to deliberations and consultations on such legislation when it is brought forward.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr.Speaker, could we have an idea of the NDP policy with respect to those limits?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest 100 employees.

Mr. Speaker: Further questions or comments? Debate.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to participate in this debate and I believe it is most significant that the Liberal Party has chosen to address the Government's responsibility for youth on this our first Opposition day of the New Year. As this House reopens, we mark the beginning of International Youth Year, a year during which attention will be focused on recognizing and meeting the needs of our young people.

The Tories won the confidence of the population and were elected to effect change. They promised our youth a rose garden but to date, all they have delivered is a thorny bush. I have already said on a number of occasions in the House that the situation in which the youth of this country find themselves is tragic.

Many councils, much research and numerous studies have produced reports identifying the specific concerns and have provided the Government with the starting points for legislative action. A two-year in-depth study by Professor Reginald Bibby, Professor of Sociology at the University of Lethbridge, based on a survey of 3,530 teenagers was published in the Ottawa Citizen on January 21. It states that adolescents have pointed out that adults are against them. I find that very sad. They feel that their opinions do not matter and that they are powerless.

Indeed, both the action and the inaction of the present Government seems to substantiate the thought, feelings and claims of our youth. The teenagers are saying that they must manifest their own values and work hard as young people to emerge as whole individuals.

High on the young people's list of interests and concerns are unemployment, friendship circles, cultural events, sexuality, child abuse and crime, nuclear war, drugs and suicide. These reports lead one to believe that the Government should be directing activity toward supporting any projects or proposals aimed at these particularly crucial issues.

Let us look at the economic perspective of what the Government has done to see the situation today. The major area of youth concern has been that of jobs and the opportunity to feel that they can be active participants with a worth-while role and place in society. With no government programs or policies in place, their sense of deception is profound and it can affect them and society fundamentally in the future.

The elimination of the First Chance program by the Conservatives is perhaps the most blatant indication of lack of care and concern toward our young people's needs. This program was the most important public policy set forward by government in the interests of youth since Prime Minister St. Laurent established the responsibility and role of the federal government for support to secondary education. Prior to establishing this First Chance program concept—and as the Conservatives have this incredible penchant for only consultation and no action, perhaps this will be of interest to their Members—major consultations were held with the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Chamber of Commerce, the Business Council on National Issues, and the provinces. The reasoning which was discussed was very sound and very important. While the Government was spending billions of dollars, in fact $4 to $5 billion on post-secondary education, these programs were targeted to a small percentage of our youth who continue on to college and university. Very little was being done for the three-quarters of our youth population who did not continue on to post-secondary education. Very few dollars are being directed toward their preparation and training. This was key. First Chance was a fair initiative by the federal Government to meet their needs. The cut from $100 million to $27 million in the youth training option, the First Chance type of program to serve only three to four thousand youth instead of the anticipated 10,000, and the cut of the $1 billion proposed and committed to serve 100,000 for this next fiscal exercise is inexcusable. It is poor planning and it shows a tremendous lack of caring. This is where the major area of unemployment problems are found. This is where unemployment is highest and this is where we need to put our effort.

Scaling down First Chance to an experimental program, cutting back funding to $27 million when the value and the need for this program is so evident and there is a necessity to go full steam ahead is unacceptable. In addition to the fact that no replacement project of acceptable proportion has been put in place, it surprises me that it was cut. It meets all the criteria for the True Blue. First Chance served the interests of the private sector as well as our youth. The programs were designed and tailored to the training needs of local and regional industry. The employer had his extra costs met as well as having a first crack at trained employees and could then keep permanently those who demonstrated high motivation. The employer serves as a good corporate citizen, the new entrant employee's First Chance salary was paid by the federal government.

The new entrant, during this transition from school to the work force acquires self-confidence, skills, good work habits and a sense of personal worth, in other words, a chance to earn and learn. That is what you cut out, a chance to earn and learn.

This First Chance program was a training program not a job creation one. It received support from the private sector and focused on those in difficulty. It was a co-operative program between government, the private sector, and community groups.

[Translation]

Young people have casual or temporary jobs for short periods which provide no security and force them to make only short-term plans. For our young people, unemployment is more than just statistical economic data; it is a factual reality, and for many of them, it jeopardizes their chances at independence. It means constant insecurity, the absence of autonomy, the impossibility of making long-term personal plans, and even more serious for both, society and young people themselves, it means a loss of value of their theoretical training if it cannot be put in practice soon enough. When there is no great demand for a particular field of training, employers prefer experience and they have a lot of choice. Many workers then enter a vicious circle: no experience means no job, and no job means no experience. Part-time employment is also a form of hidden unemployment with which many must be satisfied.

[English]

The youth unemployment level is almost twice that of the national level. By not taking action now, the Government risks establishing life-long negative attitudes of our young toward society because it is creating, through economic inaction, a generation of frustrated, discouraged, and therefore unproductive citizens. Unemployment of our visible minority youth is over 85 per cent. Handicapped and native youth need special consideration in employment. Employment equity as outlined in the Abella report is worthy of very careful consideration, and then mandatory affirmative action is needed. It is not only needed, but it is a moral imperative.

This is not just short-term disillusionment that we are looking at, it is a tragedy. Our youth need work and appropriate training. These are the key issues.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is a well established fact that the higher education one has, the easier it is to find a job. The situation is this: Of the great many young people who enter our education system, very few graduate with a terminal degree. And even among those graduating with a terminal degree, many cannot find a job. That is why we need special training programs which would ease the transition from the school to the labour market. This challenge could improve the training and maximize job opportunities.

The government, on the one hand, encourages young people to continue their education, while, on the other hand, the Bovey Commission suggests that tuition fees should be increased and student loans have been frozen. Some encouragement!

[English]

From the cultural perspective, what do we see? Cuts to the CBC children's unit, cuts to the Canada Council, cuts to the National Film Board, governmental agencies that are supposed to protect and reflect who we are, proud Canadians. "Oh, Canada, we stand on guard for thee" does not seem to be the Tory anthem. I put you on guard. It is our anthem, and we expect you to respect that.

How does the Government feel about the high proportion of non-Canadian programming currently available to our young people? Does it not realize that we as Canadians have ideas and creativity to offer in the area of culture? Should we not be promoting our Canadian identity, instilling a sense of pride in our youth in their distinctiveness? Would the Minister not have a feeling of accomplishment in the various Ministries that have supported policies to encourage Canadian initiatives?

The reduction of more than $75 million from the CBC budget, $3.5 million from the National Film Board, to mention but a few cases, reflects a major prejudice against both the cultural development and the economy of Canada. It is also a negation of the importance of a distinctive Canadian culture and our future generations will suffer the consequences.

According to Statistics Canada, 414,000 people are employed in work related to the arts, either within cultural organizations or as individual artistic creators. This level of employment is nearly equivalent to that involved in agricultural production in Canada or to the number employed in the federal civil service.

One of the immediate consequences of these budgetary cut-backs in the cultural industries is the reduction of employment, with concomitant negative effects on the economy, and certainly on our identity. Contrary to this spirit of Canadian direction, which we even see in the Investment Canada Act but do not know how it is defined, the Government remained passive while the CRTC refused consideration of an application by the National Film Board for its Young Canada Television/Téléjeunesse Canada. Here was an innovative proposal for French and English service, directly aimed at filling gaps in existing broadcasting. This youth-oriented cable channel offered high Canadian content and comprehensively included programming for children and youths aged 2 to 17.

[Translation]

The National Film Board's proposal was not the only one. There were others, but none offered such a comprehensive range of options capable of directly addressing young people and reflecting our cultural and national identity. As a matter of fact, the Canadian content of the other proposals was only 25 per cent. As to the rest, they were programs originating from England or the United States, depicting the American way of life, and not concentrating on issues young Canadians are confronted with. These things which make us different.

● (1640)

With respect to according this private youth-oriented cable channel, the NFB proposition would have included young people. In addition it would have given them the capacity to "help themselves", to use the Minister's phrase, and funding would have come from private industry, lotteries and subscriber fees. Government funding would have been in the form of a loan. The Board was not asking for hand-outs or free money.

The NFB proposal seemed to meet every criterion laid out by the Tory Government when talking of job creation and youth-oriented programming. It relied on private sector input. It directly involved young people. It responded to an identifiable lack in existing programs and addressed social and health issues which have not yet been effectively examined.

However, the National Film Board was caught in a classic catch-22 orchestrated by the CRTC in which the Government neglected to intervene—no approval, no licence; no licence, no authorization to approach the private sector for necessary funds. Yesterday I expressed my displeasure at attacks on the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne). I meant that quite sincerely. She is not the person; it is the role and the mandate which she fills that I attack. I hope she understands that. Today I must ask her once again to define her commitment in her role to our young people.

In replying to pointed questions from my confrères, the Minister conveniently shifted responsibility to her fellow Ministers. This passing of the buck is unacceptable. The Minister of State for Youth should realize that her colleagues have not been acting in the interests of youth, nor have they intervened on behalf of young people. Youth need her support. They need her advocacy. They want to hear her speaking out loud; they cannot hear her in caucus. Where has her voice been? For example, in terms of the National Film Board proposal, did she contact the CRTC? Did she speak with the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse)? Those are the kinds of things which we are hoping the Minister will be able to accomplish.

An opportunity to focus effectively and innovatively on youth concerns has slipped through the Government's hands. I am sure that is not what she wanted, or I hope it was not what she wanted. Its inaction has bitterly disappointed members of youth councils Canada-wide, as well as young Canadians and their parents.

I could elaborate further on the crucial implication of the Government's inaction with respect to the issue of youth broadcasting policies and programming. What is so astounding and distressing is that this is but one area in a list of many where youth concerns are being neglected, blatantly neglected. The Government has been eager to cut not one but a dozen programs and budgets aimed at helping our youth in the areas of employment, education, training and development. It seems to me that the Government has put dollars before humans. The Government continues to make a mockery of the themes of participation, development and peace.

From the social perspective, what has the Tory Government done? Program after program has been stripped by the Tory Government. Katimavik, for example, is a national youth service aimed at helping in the personal development of its participants and providing opportunities for a greater understanding of the country.

[Translation]

Young Quebeckers were very fond of the Katimavik program. I hope that the Minister is aware of that.

[English]

In the past two years, over 8,500 young people have taken part in this exciting venture. They have learned and lived what is Canada. Recently, however, more than $20 million was cut from the Katimavik budget. I ask why. Why cut a program which was specifically geared toward the themes of participation, development and peace?

Sadly, the list goes on. The Young Worker's Exchange Program was also eliminated. This program offered the means by which young Canadians could gain a better understanding of themselves, of society and of other countries. Their discoveries helped them in their development as individuals and in their ability to make further contributions to Canada. We should be looking ahead to the future of our country. We should be training our youth to be proud and to appreciate being Canadian and knowing what is going on in the rest of the world. Youth represent our most precious human asset and resource. We cannot afford to let them drift aimlessly. We are taking away from them opportunities to develop independence and responsibility. We cannot do that.

Social housing and co-op cuts are of concern. For the growing number of single parent families with low incomes, shelter and a decent place to live with their families is absolutely vital. I wonder if the Minister is aware of the growing suicide rate among young people. I find it very difficult to absorb the statistics and their implications.

[Translation]

The suicide rate has increased by 400 per cent since the seventies. Even if I quote statistics for Quebec, the situation is similar elsewhere in Canada. Every week, eight young Quebeckers commit suicide and for each one who succeeds, 100 fail. This is serious.

Road accidents are the main cause of those deaths but some experts believe that many drownings, hunting and road accidents are really suicide attempts. Some young Canadians have told us about their fears, their despair and their doubts. Moreover, we are told that if we do not listen to them, the suicide rate will increase.

[English]

The questions of sexual exploitation of the young through the use of juveniles in pornography and prostitution and the high incidence of child abuse reported by the Badgley Commission are looming. Where does the Minister of State for Youth stand on these crucial issues? Will she begin to make herself heard, to act as the interlocutor for young people? Will she begin to oppose actions which greatly reduce and threaten opportunity for our young people? Will she appear at any hearings which involve the concerns of our young people?

The Minister of State for Youth stated yesterday that she would soon be putting into place an information and communication committee to listen to the concerns of young people. I wonder why, almost one month after the beginning of International Year of Youth and five months after the beginning of this Government, this committee was not in place at the outset of 1985. Moreover, I wonder why programs were cut before this committee was consulted. Existing programs should have at least been left in place until new Tory initiatives are ready to go. No wonder the youth of this country are discouraged and disoriented. The Government seems to be working in reverse—cut then consult, act and pick up the pieces later.

Can the Minister give the House and, more important, the youth of the country, some reassurance and a commitment on her part to become a true advocate? This winter has been particularly bitter for young Canadians. It saddens me to realize that it will only get colder if the Tory Government does not start to act in their interests, in the interests of all Canadian families.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt debate on a allotted day, but I thought I would take this occasion to announce House business after the consultations just held with Opposition House Leaders.

Very quickly I want to inform the House that the business for tomorrow will be a continuation of the debate of on Investment Canada, followed by Bill C-20 and the Small Business Loans Act in that order, in the event the Investment Canada Bill is given second reading and goes on to committee.

The other item is that I want to designate Friday as the second allotted day of this trimester. Also, there have been consultations with respect to a draft order. If, Mr. Speaker, you seek unanimous consent of the House, I think you will find it receptive to receiving and passing the following draft order:

For the purposes of Standing Order 2, the first sitting day in 1985 shall be deemed to have been January 14, 1985.

That is for the purpose of regularizing the calendar which has been published with respect to the days of sitting for this trimester to Easter.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Government House Leader. Is there unanimous consent for its introduction?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Government House Leader referred to a small business Bill. I have not seen it on the Order Paper. I was just wondering if he could tell us just where it is.

● (1650)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, it was introduced and given first reading today.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the draft order?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the draft order as read carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—EMPLOYMENT FOR YOUNG CANADIANS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner, Vancouver Quadra:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government has failed to provide for significant Canadian participation in the International Year of Youth by neglecting to prepare and to put into place comprehensive job training and employment opportunity programs designed to enable young Canadians to find useful and meaningful employment and to contribute to the future of our country.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now revert to the 10 minute question and answer period.

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) spoke, he stated that 36 per cent of all unemployed are between the ages 18 and 24. He went on to say that a time lag of six, twelve and even eighteen months exists before government policy decisions begin to show up. Does the Hon. Member agree with her Leader that the current high levels of youth unemployment are the disastrous results of Liberal Government policies?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I sometimes wonder if the Member recognizes that he lives in a very privileged country which had policies in place that supported an incredible international recession. This international recession was not suffered to the same degree in Canada as it was in the rest of the world because we had a wonderful security net in place. The fact that that safety net may have cost some money and increased the deficit is not what requires extra concern at this particular moment. What is important is that our youth and their families were supported.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member on her speech. I am glad she mentioned the hiring criteria of the federal Government. I want to observe for the benefit of the House that the problem is more serious this year than ever before because this Government has done away with the direct employment programs for youth like Environment 2000. There is no such program. It has taken the hiring criteria left over from the federal-provincial agreement on need.

I want to mention briefly to the House the case of a widow living at home on a pension from CN of $350 a month. She has two sons aged 18 and 19 who are at home. They have finished school and cannot find work. She has a daughter who came out of trade school with a bookkeeping course. There is a federal job creation program in that community, but not one of them qualified for a referral under a job creation program. Welfare does not pay for children after they reach the age of 18. Even though the daughter was trained in the trade school and the two sons are capable of working, not one of them qualified for a referral under a job creation program in that community.

The community wants to hire somebody from that family, but it is not allowed to do so. Why? Because the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) signed the hiring regulations which state that first they have to take someone who is on social assistance. The social assistance may be higher than what could be made on the program because Canada Works pays only $200 a week. They then have to take people on UIC even though somebody may be getting the maximum $255 a week on UIC. Forcing that person to go to work for $200 a week will take food out of the mouths of his children.

I have a question to ask. Does the Hon. Member not feel that this is absolute, plain discrimination against the youth of this country and against unemployed mothers who are seeking work? Is it not disgraceful that the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) has not been successful in convincing the Minister of Employment and Immigration to change the hiring criteria after cutting off the direct job creation programs for youth?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member should be clear that the 10 minute period is for both questions and comments. It does not have to be a question, but it does have to be brief.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I wish I could have stated it as clearly and been as precise as my colleague. I do think it is a disgrace. I sincerely hope that the blarney that we have been listening to from the Minister will be the last time we hear such a litany. Perhaps in her next approach in this House she will present good, solid evidence that she has a big heart and is going to present decent programs.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I will begin with a brief comment. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) mentioned the suicide statics, which are of concern to all of us. I brought those statistics to the attention of her predecessor in 1980 in the form of a prediction of a logical consequence of the policy initiatives being put in place at that time, including the National Energy Program and other policy initiatives. I brought that to the attention of the former Prime Minister. I said that if those policies were followed, suicide rates would go up. It gives me no pleasure to have her confirm that that advice was not taken and that the consequences did follow.

The Hon. Member raised the matter of employment in the cultural industries and brought to the attention of the House that over 400,000 people are currently employed in those industries. Having come to the House with that kind of figure, I would assume that she has done her homework. Can she enlighten the House as to what portion of those jobs are totally government supported and what portion are private sector supported?

Can she also indicate how many of those jobs disappeared in the last four years because of economic policy which made it impossible for people to buy tickets, books or records? Is it not clear to her that the 1983-84 report of Employment and Immigration showed that 37,200 jobs had been created by all of these marvellous programs for the youth of this country, person years of employment, and that this new Government in four months has created over 50,000 jobs for young people? Will she admit that maybe we are on the right track and that it is better for the cultural industries and better for youth to follow the course that this Government was elected to follow?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I have two observations to make. First, if the Hon. Members wants all of those statistics, they are available from Statistics Canada. If he does not have the address, I will forward it to him. Second, I would be thrilled to announce and to accept the Hon. Member's observations if I had heard any kind of program being announced across the floor.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a brief comment. I have listened to the present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and previous Ministers of Employment and Immigration. To tell you the truth, there is not much difference. I hear the same sort of promises, studies, how things will get better and how we are following the right economic course. Of course, nothing got any better for young people in the last number of years.

To hear the Liberals now blame it all on the Tories who have been in power for four months is somewhat hypocritical. They have to accept a fair amount of the blame for the state in which young people find themselves today.

Liberals quote figures about suicides among young people. A year and a half ago I rose in this House to make a statement about a young artist in my constituency who had been on unemployment insurance. Attempting to do something about his state, he started a small company which made posters so that young people learning to play the guitar could look at a poster rather than a book. The unemployment insurance scheme decreed that he was self-employed and cut off all benefits. The man was without any resources and ended up killing himself. That was laid on the doorstep of the Liberal regime and all of their little niggly type of regulations they had introduced into the UIC scheme.

The Conservatives came to power on promises of reform and new hope for young people. Young people in this country are thoroughly disappointed because there is no new hope from this bunch. In fact, it is just a continuation. It is blaming the victim, blaming the young, and blaming the unemployed. They are the ones who are shouldering all of the hardships in this country.

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, on Monday and again today, a number of Members of the Official Opposition, showed, more or less appropriately, their affinity for culture and drama. I know one role that would fit them like a glove, and that is the role of Tartuffe, the impostor.

How can a Party that has dashed the hopes and aspirations of an entire generation of young Canadians tell us what to do? We have been in power for only four months, while they held the reins for almost 22 years without interruption. They would have us believe that they would have been able to achieve in four months what they were unable to accomplish in 22 years. Who knows—hindsight is a wonderful thing.

The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) said that between 16 and 37 per cent of our young people are unemployed, and I say that is an immediate consequence of her Party's policies when it was in power. These policies have led to an alarming increase in the unemployment rate among the young. Now the Liberals have the unmitigated gall to hold us responsible for this situation today.

In June 1984, the number of young Canadians who had jobs dropped by 278,000 compared to March 1980, which is when the Liberals came back to power. Between 1980 and 1983, the youth unemployment rate rose from 13.2 to 19.9 per cent in the country as a whole. The number of young people without full-time employment rose by 406,000 between 1980 and 1983. In 1983, the number of young people with jobs dropped by 97,000 in Quebec and 80,000 in Ontario compared to 1980. And now we are being accused of failing to correct the situation in four months!

The Liberal Government's training programs were inadequate and were not set up in terms of labour market requirements.

Programs designed specifically to alleviate youth unemployment were short-term projects only and were not sufficiently geared to the training or job experience already acquired by participants. Although the situation was serious, the Liberals made very few attempts to coordinate their activities with those of the provinces, municipalities and the private sector or to make their programs compatible with long-term economic development programs in various regions.

I said the other day in the House that as we embark full of hope on this International Year of Youth, we must bear in mind that our aim is not to find some magic formula. Neither should it be to encourage hypocrisy. With nearly one-half million unemployed young people on its conscience, the Official Opposition wants to set itself up as an arbiter . . . Let us not be obscene!

What kind of credibility can we assign to the Liberal Party's recriminations and tales of woe? What kind of credibility does a political party deserve which sees Canadian youth as shiftless, suicidal, alcoholic, addicted to drugs and delinquent? This deliberately pessimistic view is an insult to our young people and to anyone's intelligence. Fortunately, most young Canadians are sound in mind and in body. They are diligent and active, with a thirst, yes, but a thirst for life and for ideals.

According to the results of a poll published this week to which the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) was referring earlier, young Canadians care most about friendship. Is it friendship to say that they are just a bunch of failures? Friendship means helping people to stand on their two feet.

I certainly do not mean that this Government intends to leave disadvantaged youth to its own devices, but I think it is rather far-fetched to see this group as representative of Canadian youth, as a whole.

So if you please, stop shedding those crocodile tears, as I asked you earlier this week. Stop using youth for political gains. I ask you once more, please! The interests of the young are at stake.

As Jean-Paul Sartre once said: "The essential thing is not what has been done with Man, but what Man does with what has been done with him." In a political environment, reflecting on that thought can be most comforting. It is indeed when, for instance, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) gives me but two alternatives: either, as she says, I do not understand the nature of my mandate, or my colleagues do not listen to me. I put it to the Hon. Member that I have a very clear notion of what my mandate is, and I am in a better position than she is to assess the impact I have on my colleagues.

For the past four months, the Government to which I am privileged to belong, has been working actively. And soon, very soon my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) will show how unfair such criticism by the Opposition is with respect to youth training and employment. What is to be announced will have nothing in common with the previous Government's huge but unrealistic, if not unworkable, training program. It would take a serious dose of bad faith to shed tears over programs that have been altered or simply cancelled because they were failures, without waiting for the new programs to be announced very soon.

Also, I am working in close co-operation with my colleagues whose responsibilities partly concern our youth. However, it would be premature to report on our exchanges here. All the areas, all the issues referred to by my counterparts from the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party are part of our concerns. Rome was not built in one day.

Contrary to what the Opposition is suggesting, the International Youth Year in Canada was launched under the best of auspices.

When travelling across our great country, I have been able to see that the International Youth Year everywhere is being met with the same enthusiasm. It is being supported equally by the young, the various levels of Government, the business community, labour and non-governmental organizations.

Last Monday, the Minister of Employment and Immigration pointed out to you, Mr. Speaker, and she has repeated it today, that Liberal Members stubbornly refuse to see anything positive in this Government's doings. Given such blindness, I think it is appropriate to say that, like my Cabinet colleagues and contrary to the practices of the previous government, I had very fruitful discussions with my provincial counterparts in November and December. Indeed, we have agreed to keep in touch and the same thing goes for our other social partners.

Having stressed that International Youth Year is more than a program and a series of projects, having emphasized that it will be a year to reflect and take action, I should like to explain the program envisaged by the Canadian government to mark the occasion.

Before mentioning specific projects already approved and to show our openmindedness, let me define the context within which we in the government make such grants.

First of all, we want to encourage young people to carry out various projects which will open their mind to their personal and collective situation, and to give us their advice on the best way to find long-term solutions to their problems.

We do not think that young people can do everything themselves. That is why I decided that eligibility criteria for grants should include a salary or a fee which, among other things, will make it possible for young applicants to use the services of advisers who will help them draft their bids and administer their projects. That will give them an opportunity to benefit from the experience of their elders.

We do not intend to reject any worthwhile project sponsored by young people simply because it would require financing to see it through. I hasten to point out that I do not claim exclusive rights over that initiative since it was recommended to me by groups of young people whose projects had been cavalierly turned down by the previous administration.

Unlike our predecessors, we in this government will go out of our way to ensure that young people have ready access to any program offered to them. Instead of saying simply the program is there, just use it, we tell them how they should proceed to take full advantage of it.

• (1710)

The way we operate is to personalize programs for young people so that they will know where they stand without worrying about red tape.

To promote the implementation of special projects undertaken by or for young people through voluntary groups and organizations, we have allocated over $1 million in grants in recent months.

Let me give a few examples of the subsidies we have granted.

To the National YMCA Council, we have allocated $94,500 to organize, for young people between the ages of 18 and 25, a leadership development program which will include local, national and international studies.

To the organizing committee of the 32th World Congress of the International Federation of Youth and Music, we have granted $50,000 to finance a series of seven regional concerts to be held throughout the country in which will take part 500 young musicians of the 37 member countries of the Federation.

To the Société de recherche en orientation humaine Inc., we have granted $20,000 to organize an international seminar in Montreal.

To the Last Touch Regional Youth Council Inc., we have allocated $75,000 for a national conference organized by young people from Saskatchewan to be held in Fort San next August.

The Conference on Young People and the Law has also received a grant to bring together at an international conference young lawyers and para-legal workers as well as law students. The conference will be held in Montreal in 1985.

A subsidy will help a youth committee to organize the winter games for native youths to be held in Winnipeg during the week beginning February 17. The games are open to all native youths in Manitoba and will include various sports.

An amount of $5,000 has been allocated to the Canadian Ecumennical Youth Coalition to organize a national consultation of young people within the framework of the triennial assembly of the Canadian Council of Churches to be held in Halifax. Its purpose will be to promote increased participation by young people in the decision-making process of Churches.

These are but a few examples. We are not giving our grants in an haphazard fashion, but on the contrary for a precise objective: obtaining from our young people their views on issues which are important to them, their current development and future orientation.

I have stated many times that our action is based on consultation and concertation. The previous government might claim that so was its own action. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you something. During my initial round of consultations which I held with my provincial counterparts responsible for the International Year of Youth, three of them emphasized that they had had more contacts over the past three months with federal ministers about programs of common interest than during the last five years of the Liberal administration. Imagine that!

This is not much, really, compared with the problems and difficulties of all kinds that members of the Official Opposition left at our door on September 4. So, whatever our efforts, they will certainly be more positive that those of the previous government. Which does not mean that we will be satisfied with doing the minimum, or that we will do just about anything.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

[English]

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, young people are very concerned about the quality of university education. I agree with the Minister wholeheartedly that many of the problems which young people face certainly did not originate in the last four months. Those problems have originated because of past policies of former Liberal Governments.

One of their sins was the radical change in the cost-sharing arrangements between the provinces and the federal Government respecting higher education. I felt—and certainly my colleagues in the NDP felt—that transferring money in an unrestricted way contributed to the decrease in funding by the provinces toward higher education. Today we are finding that many students across the country are being turned away because facilities, teaching staff and classroom space are inadequate. More and more universities are restricting the numbers of students who are able to enter the system, either by increasing the academic standards or by increasing tuition. The latter is the most repugnant, because it means that only the sons and daughters from well-to-do families will be able to afford education, and the universality of the higher education system will soon erode.

I wonder if the Minister would care to comment on the very important area of the financing of higher education, and indicate whether she has made suggestions to her Cabinet colleagues, particularly the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) who is responsible for funding and federal contributions to the provinces. In addition, could she indicate if she has met with the National Union of Students to hear their concerns about funding for higher education?

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am quite concerned about that problem. We have held discussions with the Secretary of State, and the problem is on the agenda for our next meeting with the Secretary of State. He has just returned from a meeting with the provinces in which this was the main subject of conversation. We have not yet had the time for a report, but I expect it very soon. I am sure the Minister will be glad to answer that question more precisely in a few days.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have had some consultations with officials of the Minister's Department and have concluded that one of the priorities for spending in the coming year relates to the funding of cultural activities for young people, in particular those who might become performing artists in groups like Jeunesse Musicale. An I correct in drawing the conclusion that one of the priorities for spending in the International Year for Youth is for cultural organizations?

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member would be mistaken in saying that it is a priority, even though it might be within my heart to want to make it a priority. I think that to help the Jeunesse Musicale in the middle of an international conference is very important, but I have enumerated quite a number of the grants, some of which are related to the cultural field. There is not really one sector which is placed over another. It depends on the projects which are presented. The recommendations which come from the Department depend on the project itself, and not necessarily on the field to which it relates.

• (1720)

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the comments of the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne). She spoke about young people who are excellent and exemplary citizens who will undoubtedly be more effective than we are, but the Minister should admit just the same that there is also a large number of young people in trouble.

I think that all members of all parties in this House would rather have no unemployment at all. We all agree on that.

However, should we not be a little more realistic and humane? Being from Quebec as myself, do you not think that there are thousands of young Quebecers who are experiencing discrimination as far as social welfare is concerned? Young people receive only $150 a month. Until the private sector is reorganized and a full employment policy is implemented, would it not be advisable, rather than let them starve, to provide short-term projects to enable them to work or get some new training? I feel that there is an element of compassion in those projects.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne). When she met her provincial counterparts, did she ask the minister responsible in Quebec to alter his discriminatory policy with respect to young Quebeckers, whose social welfare benefits are reduced by 50 per cent solely because they are under 30 years of age?

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Of course, Mr. Speaker, like my hon. colleague I would be most happy if we could completely stamp out unemployment, discard this word once and for all in Canada. But this will not happen overnight, and as was said earlier, we have met with problems. He has referred to the short-term, to retraining. We have seen how the Liberal Government's short-term policies worked out. As a result, the situation has but worsened. This is why this Government, as the Minister so aptly suggested earlier, would like to substitute to the short term something that has a better chance of enduring. As regards retraining, please be a little patient. The Minister told you earlier that she would be announcing whatever plans she has, and I am not here to speak for her.

You were wondering whether I was aware that many people have trouble finding jobs and do not qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. I could tell you about the situation of people you may not even be aware of yourself. I could tell you about the artists, since you are constantly bringing that up, who can never qualify for those benefits. I could tell you about film technicians who never have an opportunity to work 20 weeks in a row. What have you ever done about that?

I remember very well representations that were made to the previous Government on that matter. They were laughed away. I would therefore think that before blaming me after four months, one should look further back and not assume that I am unaware of the issues.

Concerning the problems you referred to with respect to the Quebec Minister, I would point out to you that the Minister whom I have met the most frequently is the one who is responsible for the International Youth Year and President of the Treasury Board. He is not responsible for the problems you referred to.

[English]

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I find some of the comments made by the Minister to be a bit grandiose and hypocritical in the sense that she seems to be operating in a vacuum. May I forewarn her and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) that there are other Ministries of the Government which have a direct effect on the creation of jobs in Canada. Far be it for me, Mr. Speaker, to remind the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration of one such agency, namely the CBC, and the cut-backs which have occurred there, with the accompanying loss of jobs not only for employees, technicians and artists, but for other individuals who have had contract work with the CBC. Therefore, I cannot understand the Minister's thinking. Can the Minister confirm to the House that, in terms of developing an over-all employment strategy, she is setting out a special employment strategy for youth in this country? Can she confirm to the House whether, in fact she is the lead Minister of this Government in setting forth a strategy for youth employment in Canada?

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, in this Government, Sir, there is a Minister of Employment. This Minister is not myself. I am the spokesperson for youth. The Minister and I have a very good relationship and, as she said earlier today, the youth of this country will be looked after very well in very comprehensive new programs which she will announce very shortly.

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with this opportunity to take part in the debate today, first of all as the former Minister of State for Youth and second, because my Leader has proposed a motion today to draw the attention of the House to that very important subject, our young people. This issue was raised in the House thanks to the Official Opposition. Since Parliament reconvened and in fact since we started a new session, this Government has failed to take any time in the House to propose measures that will benefit our youth. It was therefore up to the Opposition to raise this issue and to discuss the concerns and problems of young Canadians. Canada's future and prosperity is in the hands of our young people, and the federal Government therefore has a duty to ensure that young Canadians are equipped to undertake the task of sustaining Canada's growth.

The creation of a special portfolio for youth almost a year ago was the Liberal Government's way of showing that it was aware of the problems besetting Canada's youth and that it would give young people its special attention.

I was listening to the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) criticize the former Government. I would say she has us to thank for the youth portfolio and her seat in Cabinet, since the portfolio was created by the Liberal Government.

But I should like to examine now what has become of the portfolio of the Minister of State for Youth under this Progressive Conservative government. When the debate was opened earlier this afternoon, we saw the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. MacDonald) "shove aside" the Minister of State for Youth, make her remarks and give the news she could. The Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) took a back-seat to her, and the government has demonstrated through its actions that she is just a junior minister not only in the House, but in all government decisions.

Under the Liberal government, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Youth never played second fiddle to his colleagues. He had his own responsibilities. This Minister has allowed the Ministry of State for Youth to become the puppet of Employment and Immigration. Now, she has no choice but to kowtow to the Minister of Employment and Immigration to exert some influence with regard to youth employment policies. She has given up on the Student Exchange Program. Under Liberal governments, the Minister of State for Youth was responsible for Student Exchange Programs. Again, this Minister must bow and scrape to her colleagues.

As far as employment programs are concerned, she calmly accepted the cancellation of Summer Canada. She let this program be completely destroyed, Mr. Speaker. Now, the Minister of State for Youth must make empty speeches such as the one we heard today. I am not blaming the Minister, but I do blame her Government, which is leaving her with the simple job of taking care of public relations for the International Youth Year. She has no other responsibility or power in the Government.

This shows how low a priority the new Progressive Conservative Government is giving to the situation of young people.

I want to remind the Minister that her role is to speak on behalf of young people in Cabinet, not the opposite, Mr. Speaker. What she is doing today is to sing the praises of her Government without worrying about the problems of young people. In my opinion, this is not consistent with the mandate she received as Minister of State for Youth. She has now become a spokesperson for big business and the banking friends of the Progressive Conservative Party, and the only issue which does not concern her is the situation of young people. Yet, her mandate is quite clear. It is not to be the Government public relations officer for young people, but rather to be the soul and conscience of the Government where young people are concerned.

Mr. Speaker, what has the Minister done in the last five months? What has she announced? She has spoken only of consultations, and conference after circumference as one of your political heroes would have said. I think that the only speech I heard the Minister of State for Youth make which was reported in the newspapers is the one where she said: "As Minister of State for Youth, I shall take care of those who are doing well." However, I wish to remind the Minister that those who are doing well do not need her. Those who need the support of a politician like herself are those who are having problems in our society.

I wish the Minister of State for Youth would stop turning a blind eye to those of our young people who are not as successful and that she would realize that as the Minister, she is politically and socially responsible for providing equal opportunities for all elements of our society.

Since proportionally, more young Canadians are unemployed than any other group of Canadians, action is necessary to correct this situation.

We have been treated to a flood of words from the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), but she has yet to make an announcement today. She says she will be making one soon, and it is high time, Mr. Speaker, because we are nearing the end of January. Usually, students could count on programs being announced before the holidays so they could prepare projects and proposals. Companies accustomed to hiring students would know about the programs and be able to plan their activities for the summer, while now, it seems—yes, she said very shortly she would be announcing programs, but her announcement will come at a time when students are starting to prepare for their exams. And, of course, there is the approval process and the usual red tape. When will students be sure they will have a summer job, Mr. Speaker? That is what worries us.

I realize they want to review and rename and repaint and do everything they can to remove any trace of Liberal initiatives, Mr. Speaker. However, they should realize that the welfare of our young people is more important than political gain. They should understand that the interests of Canadian youth, of students who will be leaving school in May and June, are more important that the interests of Progressive Conservative flagwavers.

During our term as a government, and my own brief term as Minister of State for Youth, we took some important measures and it did not take five months. We took important measures to respond to the valid concerns of young Canadians.

The First Chance program, designed to provide young people with specialized training, was to have been a highly original and effective way of dealing with the Catch 22: 'No experience, no job—No job, no experience', facing those entering the labour market for the first time.

Mr. Speaker, this was a $100 million program. The Government took this from under the nose of the Minister of State for Youth, and she saw nothing!

There was a commitment of $1 billion for the next fiscal year, but once again, the Minister of State for Youth said nothing and let this amount pass her by. She has let the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) look after the money in her envelope. I could bet anything, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Employment and Immigration will not use this billion dollars only for young people. Once more, young people will be taken for granted; their concerns will be forgotten, and once again, their unemployment rate will be higher and their hardships worse than those of other Canadians. However, the Minister of State for Youth says that she is taking care of those who are doing well.

The proposed young businessmen program, Mr. Speaker, was aimed at meeting the funding needs of small businesses to promote job creation. No one can say that it goes against Conservative principles to help businesses get a start so that jobs will be created. Yet, even this program was axed. But what do they intend to do? Is everything which was faintly Liberal to be eliminated? Are political games going to be played on the backs of young people who want to set up a small business? Will they be left to fend for themselves as they have during the last four months?

Mr. Speaker, you must, like me, have the impression that this Government is trying to save money on the backs of those who need help the most. We know that the Environment 2000 Program—and we know to what extent the Minister of Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) has also been victimized by the cutbacks—was going to create jobs this winter. This program has also been axed.

Mr. Speaker, we must ask ourselves what clout the Minister of State for Youth really has. Is she being used only to make speeches here and there and to offer a few small subsidies? One would have thought we were at a bingo game when she was announcing grants of $5,000 here and $2,000 there!

Mr. Speaker, this is not what will solve the problems of young Canadians now that we have a new government and the same is true of election promises.

I recall that, during the election campaign, they made nothing but promises, promises, and more promises. And I can still remember that, at the Granby Cegep, the Conservative Party made strong commitments about jobs for young people, among other things. Well, now that they have taken over, their only commitment is to slash into every youth-oriented program, Mr. Speaker. I think that the people, particularly young people, are beginning to see the light and will start applying strong pressure on Members opposite to force them to rise and tell the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) to get the job done.

Mr. Speaker, International Youth Year will give us many opportunities to raise the issue of youth over the next few months. Let us just see how that year was inaugurated and what kind of priority this government gives to International Youth Year. For starters, the Minister of State said during the holiday season that she would be making a major statement after the House had resumed. She gets here with a nice little prepared speech, but the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) butts in and says: If you do not mind, I have a more important statement to make. And the Secretary of State goes on to express his views on the star war, something which young people are dead set against. Once again, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Youth was brushed aside, without getting any press coverage, and that is what she calls a great launching to make the people aware of International Youth Year. But worse, when the Minister of State for Youth took the floor, all the members on that side got up and left. Mr. Speaker, if that is how they show that the problem of youth is a priority for them and that International Youth Year will be a meaningful event, in my opinion, it is a very poor performance.

Therefore, it is all very well indeed to have a slogan, to have a grant program, but what we should know is what the Minister announced. She promised some changes, but on reading her speech, all I found was rehashed. She promised grants; the program existed already. The measures to be taken jointly with departments and other federal agencies have already been taken, Mr. Speaker. The program Peace and Development is nothing new. The same goes for the Information and Communication Program. As for the advisory committee, there was one already. The Conservatives preach participation and say that young people should be consulted and involved in the decisions affecting them. The Minister has announced a grant program and various activities that will take place during International Youth Year and yet, her advisory committee has yet to be appointed, Mr. Speaker. Therefore the young must share in the development of whatever concerns them, of the program affecting them, but they are not appointed, Mr. Speaker.

Of course, I am sure that in her travels she has not as yet met all the young Conservatives and that she must wait for the striking committee to give its blessing, Mr. Speaker. But the problem is that all the decisions have been made before an advisory committee has been established. Advising on what, Mr. Speaker? Once more, this is using young Canadians as rubber stamps. The decision have been taken. Hopefully, the young people who are going to sit on that rubber stamp committee will be able to tell the Minister: 'No, we will not rubber-stamp decisions you have already taken.'

Mr. Speaker, if the International Youth Year is going to be more than a slogan, its three themes will have to be considered in a Canadian context. Those themes are: participation, development and peace. The concepts of youth participation and development are of course closely linked. Unfortunately, despite all the attention which the International Youth Year will focus on the concerns of the young, the current situation does not lend itself to youth participation. While more than 500,000 of our young are unemployed, as pointed out by our leader, the prospects for more active involvement of the young in our society are slight indeed. Therefore, if the theme of participation is taken into consideration, we should make sure that we have the means to foster youth participation in our society. And what they want more than anything else, as far as participation is concerned, is to take part in the labour market. Therefore, given the dullness of the speech we just heard, nothing in the remarks of the Minister will enable our youth to have greater access to the labour market. The growth and development of young Canadians depend largely on the training process, self-sufficiency and the dignity of a well-paid job.

Having said that, rather than implementing badly needed training and job creating programs at a time when unemployment could hardly be worse among the young, the new Conservative Government has decided to put an end to the First Opportunity Program which had been very well received, without proposing anything else instead.

As regards participation and development, there are also problems in many other areas. We can, among other things, consider the post-secondary education system. Again, the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) will evade the issue, saying that it falls under the Secretary of State's responsability. But she must admit that even if education comes under provincial jurisdiction, the Federal Government has a very important role to play towards the Established Programs Act. Canadian universities and colleges are underfinanced, which has a negative impact on the quality of our education system and is characterized by drop-outs.

In addition, if she has consulted young people and listened to them, she has certainly heard some evidence about the financial problems of our universities, access to education problems, and I am convinced that the representations she heard should encourage the government to make a renewed effort to help our colleges and universities.

Even worse, she may be aware of those problems but government action does nothing to solve them. In the few months that they have been in power, the Conservatives have already worsened this situation by reducing by $5 million its contribution to the Student Loans Program and by doing away with the important Summer Employment Program, thus denying many other students the possibility of paying for ever-increasing registration costs.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, with a theme like "participation", opportunities for participation and youth development are getting scarcer everyday.

Certainly, I could also speak about the issue of peace. Given the nuclear arms race in which both superpowers are engaged, the issue of peace and global stability is very important in the minds of all Canadians, but it particularly haunts young people. Unfortunately, the government of Canada does not seem to recognize nor respect the gallant and legal efforts made by Canadians to bring back peace in the world.

The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) was quoted in The Toronto Star of December 25 as saying that "The initiatives taken by pacifists do not deserve so much attention". Mr. Speaker, we know that a great number of young people are members of peace movements. The Minister of National Defence insults them publicly. And what happens? The Minister of State for Youth should have taken him to task for it but she did not say a word.

Mr. Speaker, we could mention a host of other initiatives that the Minister of State for Youth should take. She should assume her role. She should certainly make sure that the crisis among young people is not hidden by the good fortune of some of them; she must address the problems facing the others. Unfortunately, she did not get a mandate from the Government.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the cause of youth has suffered successive setbacks within the Government, particularly because of the insignificance of the role played in Cabinet by the Minister, a person who, in her professional career, was in the limelight, but has now been relegated in the Cabinet to a minor part.

I would like her, Mr. Speaker, to go see the Prime Minister and ask him for a real mandate and some powers to do the job she should normally be doing, and if the Prime Minister refuses to give priority to young people, she should have the courage to do the honourable thing and resign.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

• (1740)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it has been quite a day. One can sense the pleading for a return to a system that produced first and second class unemployed Canadians through encouraging politicians to hand out money, much greater amounts of money to ridings which were held by Liberals.

I would encourage the Government to continue the path it has chosen, which is fair and just and does not create first and second class citizens. One gets the feeling in speech after speech by the Liberals that they want to return to the good old days when they were the dispensers of pots of money to their friends and the heck with the rest of Canadians. This Government will not return to those days.

The thrust of the Hon. Member's speech was to make laudatory comments about the Liberal Party and its wisdom in creating the Ministry. If the Hon. Member looks at youth unemployment statistics, he will know that from the time of the defeat of the Conservative Government to 1982, the unemployment rate for youth went up to better than 22 per cent in a little more than a year. Why did it take his Government until 1984 to set up such a Ministry if youth are so important and the Government was so concerned about youth? Why did his Government wait until 1984 when those unemployment rates began to fall? Why did the Liberals not move when the problem was at its height in 1982?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I have heard the Hon. Member say that the Government intends to continue in the same direction. If they continue to do what they have been doing since September, they will do nothing at all. And I am sure that an Hon. Member of such high standing as he is would never accept to be part of a government that is doing nothing. For the time being, they are simply going with the tide. We know that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has announced nothing and done nothing, except hold consultations. We know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is holding consultations too. That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) is holding consultations and making petty arrangements. However, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that this Hon. Member with a social conscience would not let 500,000 young Canadians, or whatever the figure is, be without jobs. That is far too many! And it is in this direction that I should like the government to step in. If they really think that their private enterprise can solve the problem overnight or within six months, let it say so!

But, in the meantime, there are young people suffering. The ones on welfare are getting $140 per month.

And when I see the Hon. Member fiddling with the figures, I must tell him that he is doing it on the backs of the poor. Think in terms of human suffering and not in terms of statistics. There are things to be done, and it is not by doing nothing that you will provide assistance to young people who need it so much.

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment to make of course on the comments voiced by the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) and by the Liberals in general. As we would say back home, in Charlevoix, the speech made by the Hon. Member for Shefford does not sound like much and upon closer examination there is not much to it either, for in fact, Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege to be doing nothing. Their Government, and that Minister in particular, had every opportunity to do something for our youth, yet young Canadians voted Progressive Conservative on September 4th, and decided to support us. I feel that instead of making lengthy speeches on our youth's needs, we on this side are examining the situation and most of all acting.

Next week in my riding I will have the opportunity to announce two projects in which the Government of Canada is involved and which will create something like a hundred direct jobs. Of course we could spend our time in the House of Commons making lengthy speeches on the needs of our youth which are real. But I feel that instead of attacking the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) who is involved in a consultation process with the Provinces and all the groups concerned, we are getting at much more significant solutions than all your rhetorics ever did over the years.

And how many times during the election campaign did I hear young people complain that they were fed up with these small-time projects from which they could only eke out a meagre living. We are all looking for something else and, together, we will find it, in my own riding we will find a solution.

Your speech, this afternoon, was meaningless from beginning to end. It had no substance at all. In our case, we will take time for reflection. This is what we are doing and the Minister as well. And we will come forward with concrete proposals provided the cupboard is not entirely bare, which is the situation you left us in. We are now using the financial ressources available in the best interests of all Canadians, especially our youth. This is my concern and that of my Government. Therefore nobody is impressed when you are calling for someone's resignation. Besides, you are it seems in no position, according to the polls, to ask for anyone's resignation. If the elections were held today, you would get licked even worse than you were last September 4.

Mr. Lapierre: Talk about insignificance, Mr. Speaker, we have just been given an example. He is talking about a meaningless speech, but the Hon. Member has just shown us that his only claim to glory is to have won the September 4 election. Mr. Speaker, the Member ought to know that winning an election is one thing, but now he must act instead of limiting himself to studying. This is as good a time as any to tell him that if he keeps up that kind of performance he will prove that he does not even know what the Standing Orders are all about. He should beef up on the Standing Orders before making accusations against others. I might add that he will simply confirm that he was elected under false pretenses.

While he is considering and searching, young people in his riding are experiencing problems; they thought he would come up with practical solutions. Well, he does not have much to say to them right now. He keeps his fingers crossed, marking time in the hope that our economic woes will vanish in thin air. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member would be well advised to stop playing petty politics at the expense of young people and the Liberals, and he ought to be thankful that we raised the issue of youth in the House, something he has yet to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Any supplementary question? Does the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) have a question?

Mr. Malépart: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I believe he could not put a supplementary. He has made his first effort. And I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin). But it is a good thing, Mr. Speaker, if we succeeded to wake up a few backbenchers. I would like to ask my colleague whether conservative backbenchers are not supposed in their caucus to make sure that young people can have some work programs? Instead of hanging around the Minister and playing kids cameras, they should speak up in their caucus and help the Minister of State for Youth. As I know her, that Minister wants to have funds, but when times are hard, it falls upon you to help her get those funds. I would ask my colleague for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) whether he finds it curious when we have such an important debate concerning employment and youth, that the Minister for Youth and the Minister of Employment and Immigration are not in this House?

Is that not the proof that those ministers do not care about needy people but are only interested in multinational oil companies?

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, my colleague is perfectly right. We are discussing a matter which affects 35 per cent of Canadians and there are only a few Tory members. We did not hear a single backbencher speak of the condition of young people because the ministers muzzled them. And this is what is since the beginning of this Parliament, Mr. Speaker: the members have been denied the privilege to say to the House and to Canadians what their solutions would be.

I would like to hear the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) suggest solutions to the problems of youth. Instead of being under the thumb of his leader, he should rise to say how Wabasso or Melchers could be saved. Jobs of Quebeckers are involved, Mr. Speaker, and the Hon. Member remains silent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. I will recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon).

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am one of those few on this side who will challenge the handfuls on the other side because even though we are only a handful in this place, we still outnumber them six to one. It is because we were pretty good that we got 211 members elected. Our fellow citizens knew what they were doing. They made their choice, Mr. Speaker.

It came to me as a surprise that the Leader of the Opposition could boldly accuse the government of not having helped the young to secure meaningful and stimulating jobs. He apparently forgot—or may be he dared not to remember—that as recently as a few months ago, his own government had the responsibility to find those meaningful and stimulating jobs. Did that government do anything? Not much.

That government left us a sad legacy of programs not designed to meet the challenges in the workforce, an inconsistent policy that could not resolve past and present problems which have to be tackled in systematic way if we are to give our youth some kind of future. Work creation programs were to be short-term solutions to current problems which are still with us. The former Government knew very well that young Canadians were faced with an extremely high unemployment rate which was not going to disappear overnight. Instead of reaching an agreement with the provinces on the way to deal with the problems of training young people and creating employment, they prepared for us a very sad legacy: partial agreements, broken promises and no consideration whatsoever for any particular needs, to the point that no co-operation, at any level, seemed possible or even desirable.

The former Government did next to nothing in preparation for the International Youth Year and, to add insult to injury, the small tired group opposite claims that we are following in their footsteps. In their opinion, we are putting too much energy in worthless endeavours instead of dealing with real problems, looking for help from our economic partners and preparing solutions. The present Government has chosen to approach training and development for our youth in a coordinated way. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has just returned from a round of consultations with the provinces and the economic sectors. And she has stated clearly, Mr. Speaker, that the private sector whose views were not recognized by the previous administration expects the federal government and the provinces to prepare in co-operation a coherent national policy on training, retraining and job development. Instead of working in consultation with the provinces to find practical solutions, the previous government took pleasure in acting alone. Therefore federal and provincial programs conflicted with each other and they did not allow for the hope that young people could have one day their place in our country.

Young Canadians, in fact all Canadians, expected more from the federal government. In September, they expressed their total disillusion with that policy of confrontation, and they suggested that they wanted a government determined to co-operate with the provinces. This is what we are doing. Last week, the federal government and the provinces acknowledged the necessity to emphasize co-operation rather than confrontation. This promising start is a tremendous breakthrough as far as federal-provincial co-operation is concerned. The Canadian people hope to see more joint programs implemented and better harmonization of the programs, which could only be to their advantage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being six o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that proceedings on motion are expired in accordance with Standing Order 62(11).

Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, January 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and on the amendment of Mr. Gray (Windsor West) (p. 1302).

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, when I left off my participation in this debate two days ago, I had suggested that what we should be doing instead of opening our doors through Investment Canada is finding a new mechanism to ensure that investment money, whether Canadian based or from countries beyond our borders, can be used to the benefit of Canada and its people. In my remaining five minutes, I want to indicate how I see those funds being attracted to the investment needs of Canada.

One of the things we should be looking at is a greater intensity in trying to match the need. When I talk about the need, I mean people who have ideas, entrepreneurs who need capital to develop their ideas into fruitful enterprises which will create real jobs and therefore wealth. On the other hand, we have people in Canada who do have money and who want to invest in new enterprises to create additional wealth for themselves while at the same time setting up a new business that in itself will create wealth for the participants. We would be better off if Investment Canada were to become the vehicle to match investors with needs. Perhaps from time to time there will be no investors in Canada prepared to take the risk to develop new enterprises. Perhaps at times there will be ideas generated in other countries. Perhaps the originators of those ideas may want to bring them to Canada to assist us. We are not opposed to that. We want to make sure that whatever mechanism we establish will be for the benefit of Canadians.

We should also ensure that our mechanisms prevent the outright takeover of Canadian-based, Canadian-owned companies by foreign interests. That is not in the best interests of this country or its people. For example, if you have a functioning plant whose owner wants to retire and dispose of his assets, I think the Government of Canada has a responsibility to ensure every step is taken and every avenue explored to find a Canadian buyer. When it comes to looking for employees, the Government does not hesitate to say to an individual who wants to bring someone from abroad to work in his or her facility, whether a small or a large business, "Have you done a job search in Canada? Have you gone through Canada Manpower? And have you searched across the nation to find an out-of-work Canadian to fill this position?" Very clearly this was a policy of the old government and it is a policy of this Government. Why do we not use the same philosophy when it comes to investment? It is capital that is not working. It is unemployed capital that we are trying to put to use. As a Government and as a Parliament, we should be saying to people who have need for investment: "Have you fully searched throughout Canada? Here are some things we can do to help match you with an individual who has some out-of-work capital".

We would be much better off, Mr. Speaker, if we took that approach rather than saying that the doors are open, buy us out. I do not want to be bought out. I want Canadians to have full partnership in this country. I think the Government has a responsibility to ensure that people have every opportunity and it should assist and boost them along.

I am quite pleased to see the motion before us to delay this Bill so that the Government can have the six months it needs to rethink its rhetoric and to put in place something that is practical for our country.

• (1110)

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take part in the debate today, and I would like to ask the Government to consider our proposal to postpone adoption of this legislation for six months as an opportunity to reconsider and rethink this Bill.

It is clear that basically, the Government tabled this legislation on investment in Canada for the purpose of facilitating the entry into this country of investments that will create jobs. However, I feel that the Progressive Conservative Government made a very serious mistake in attempting to rewrite the history of the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

Naturally, a new Government will think it can do better than its predecessor and want to start from scratch and rewrite history. Nevertheless, the Minister should consider how the Foreign Investment Review Act has benefitted Canada. Granted, a number of administrative adjustments to the legislation were made in the course of its history. From time to time, the Agency was criticized for taking too long to respond to applications by prospective buyers of Canadian companies or prospective investors. However, it was a matter of administrative measures that could easily be dealt with, but to repeal the existing legislation which protects our Canadian economic interests, which is what the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion wants to do, is, I think, a very serious mistake. The Government's Bill will neither boost the economy nor create the expected jobs. And why will the Bill fail to live up to the Government's expectations? Because it gives foreign investors carte blanche. In fact, it allows them to come and buy whatever they want in Canada, with no consideration for the country's economic interests.

Over the years we have had regional development policies enabling the Government, whenever appropriate, to attract investment to a region with less industrial development and higher unemployment than other regions. Mr. Speaker, I maintain that this regional development policy has been beneficial to our country. I also believe that letting foreign investors invest only where they want to put their money and, as often happens, purchase a Canadian company with which they compete on the international market, will, in the long term, have a disastrous effect on the Canadian economy, despite the short-term financial gain. We already have a very high concentration of Canadian companies. Competition in Canada is already limited as it is. It is a fact that in many sectors of the economy, the market is dominated by only one or two companies, and this lack of free competition is not always to the advantage of the consumer. In fact, if the Canadian economy were more competitive, we would all be better off.

The policy this Government is proposing will be a blow to the free market system in Canada. I predict that foreign investors are going to buy Canadian companies to reduce competition on the Canadian market and that both in the short and long run, this will not be in the best interests of Canadians or of Canada's economy.

I think it is incredible that the new Government is getting involved in decontrol of investment in our country. This does not happen in any other industrialized country, and especially not in those countries that compete with us on the international market.

Mr. Speaker, just try and buy a Japanese company or a French company, just try to invest in countries that are our main competitors, in Japan and in the Common Market countries, and let me know whether they let you invest freely, without any constraints, and without making any commitment to promote the economic interests of the country concerned. It just does not happen! It doesn't happen in France, it doesn't happen in Germany, and it doesn't happen in Japan. And why should we let it happen in Canada? Because the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion wants to do some Americans a favor. Some of those big American corporations felt frustrated in the past because they could not take over certain Canadian companies and that was because at the time, we judged that the take-overs would not be in the best interests of this country.

I think it is very sad that one of the first actions of this new Government should be to bow to certain American economic interests. To do a few Americans a favour, we are risking our economic stability and our ability to compete freely on the Canadian market. I also predict that this kind of legislation will not create those hoped-for jobs.

I am particularly concerned about this offer the Minister made together with the introduction of his bill to sell a number of major Crown corporations which have played, are playing and should continue, in my view, to play an important economic role in this country. I am referring to such corporations as Canadair, from Montreal, and de Havilland, from Toronto, which are operating in a high technological industry with great job creating potential in Canada, and which the government might be tempted to sell off at bargain prices to foreign interests which will not protect the permanent job security given to many workers with these two aeronautics industries in the Montreal and Toronto areas.

For these reasons, we will fight against this bill as long as the government will not commit itself to imposing specific conditions on those who want to invest in Canada, in order to create jobs and protect existing ones in our country, so that the firms which might be sold to foreign interests may continue to operate and play a significant economic role in Canada. I suggest that the House should not adopt this bill, for it is much too dangerous.

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I too want to say a few words on Bill C-15 and argue in the House that we should be delaying this Bill for several months until the Government has a chance to reassess it once again.

There is a myth in this country that foreign ownership of our industries has made Canada a very prosperous country. I would like to make the argument that that is not the case. So much foreign ownership of our key resources has made us a poorer country and over the years has lost us many thousands of jobs.

[Translation]

In this country, Mr. Speaker, 26 per cent of our industries are controlled by foreigners, compared with 3 per cent in France and the United States, and only 1 per cent in Japan.

[English]

The contrast is really quite stark in terms of our country and their countries with regard to foreign ownership of our economy. If you look at it sector by sector, in 1980, 1981 and 1982 some 48 per cent of our manufacturing in Canada was foreign owned. Some 76 per cent of our rubber industry was foreign owned. In 1982, 19 of the 50 largest firms in this country were foreign controlled.

I think there are a number of consequences of foreign ownership for our economy that make this country much poorer than it could be when compared to other industrialized nations around the world. One of the consequences of foreign ownership is that our industrialized base becomes very fragmented because our economy tends to be a mini-version of the economy of the United States. It tends to mirror that of the United States. The United States has a much larger market than Canada. Its market is 10 times the size of Canada's. For example, if the United States has 10 firms in a particular industry, such as refrigeration, we in this country, because we are a mini-version of the United States, tend to have the same 10 firms in that same industry. We simply do not have the market to support that kind of industrial breakdown. Therefore, we have more unemployment and less efficiency than in the United States because of the varied sizes of our markets.

Even many efficient firms in Canada tend to close down because of decisions that are made in foreign boardrooms, particularly in the United States of America. I recall very vividly that a couple of years ago the Bowater plant in Newfoundland laid off some 700 employees despite the fact that it was making profits and paying dividends to its shareholders. In fact, it laid off 700 employees at a time when it paid some $40 million worth of dividends to foreign shareholders in the previous two years from 1980 to 1982. An efficient firm will also close down in this country because it is part of a multinational corporation if it is not in the interests of the corporation as a whole to keep that firm in operation in this country. This can happen because of plans made elsewhere in the world or in the United States of America. We have seen this happen time and time again.

When looking at industrial development in Canada, one sees that often the most efficient, stable or successful industries are those that are Canadian owned and not excessively fragmented. Examples of this can be seen in the steel industry, the breweries and the telecommunications industry, to name but a few.

Another consequence of foreign ownership in Canada that makes us poorer is that we tend to lose out on an awful lot of research and development. Members of the Conservative Party, when they were in opposition and during the election campaign, said: "Elect us and we will increase that percentage of money that goes into research and development". Yet we heard the mini-budget statement in November in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) cut back again on many research programs and particularly on funding for the National Research Council of Canada. Once again we are seeing a breach of a very important election promise and a breach of faith and understanding of the Canadian people about future industrialized development.

As I said, in 1981 we spent 1.2 per cent of our GNP on research and development. The United States spent 2.5 per cent of its GNP on research and development and Japan spent 2 per cent of its GNP on research and development. France spent 1.8 per cent of its GNP on research and development. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, we are behind almost every industrialized country in the world in terms of money that is spent on research and development. Our percentage of GNP spent on research and development is lower than many other countries such as Belgium, Norway and Yugoslavia. It is my understanding that we are on a par with countries such as Ireland and Egypt when it comes to money being spent on research and development.

Looking at the new and innovative fields of high technology, Canada is now importing around twice as much high technology as it exports. That of course means a loss of jobs for Canadians and particularly for young people. In 1980 our high-technology trade deficit was some $8 billion. In computer technology alone the estimates are that by the year 1990, only five years away, our trade deficit could hit some $10 billion. I do not see any reason in the world why we should have a trade deficit of some $10 billion in computer technology when we are moving into an era in which every child will have a computer on every desk in every classroom in our country. There is no reason at all why we cannot be producing those computers here at home, whether in Quebec, Ontario, the West or the Atlantic Provinces. There is no reason why we cannot be supplying our schools and hospitals with our own computers. There is no reason why we should not be supplying not only the government sector with our own computers but the private sector as well. If we had some imagination, that is the way it would go. One of the consequences of foreign ownership is that we do not do the research and development and forward planning we need because it is done for us in Dallas, Texas, New York, or any place which seats the headquarters of the firm.

Another consequence of foreign ownership is that there are often exports in Canada which are restricted because the parent companies make decisions about export policies in their branch plants around the world. If we look at the Gray report which came out ten or 12 years ago, it indicates that about 58 per cent of Canada's manufacturing subsidiaries operated under some kind of export restriction. It was over 50 per cent then, and the situation is almost as bad today.

In 1981 Statistics Canada provided a report which was quite controversial in Canada. The report indicated that foreign-owned firms imported about four times as much as domestic firms in the same field. That meant the loss of thousands of jobs for Canadians. Therefore, a foreign firm, because it is a subsidiary of a company which is based elsewhere, will tend to import four times as much as a Canadian firm. In addition, foreign ownership has made us a supplier of raw materials and an importer of manufactured goods. The deficit in manufacturing in 1981 alone was some $21 billion. That resulted in the loss of thousands and thousands of jobs in Canada each and every year.

We must also consider the outflow of capital in terms of dividends, interest payments and direct capital which amounts to billions of dollars. Between 1976 and 1981 it amounted to an outflow of some $38 billion of Canadian capital by foreign shareholders in terms of dividends, interest rates and direct profits to countries other than Canada.

These are but a few of the arguments which lead me to support the motion which is before the House and to call upon the Government to rethink the whole foreign investment strategy. The agency which is being replaced is FIRA. FIRA had most of its teeth pulled by the former Liberal Government. The former Government and this Government have been backing away, and I believe for the wrong kinds of reasons. I would argue before the House that the Government should accept the amendment, do some rethinking, and come up with a stronger Bill which will help Canadians take control of their own destiny and economy and build a society which is controlled by Canadians. If we do that we can start in the 1990s and the latter part of the 1980s to repatriate the Canadian economy, just as we did with the Constitution in 1982. If we do that, we are making some meaningful progress in terms of making Canada a country in which Canadians control their own destiny, a country which will have jobs for every Canadian, regardless of where they may live. However, we will not achieve that by trying to woo large multi-national corporations which will come into the country, set up subsidiaries, do little research and development, import components and parts from abroad, export little and create few jobs for Canadians. Foreign companies often set up in communities such as mining towns which become single-industry communities. When it is no longer possible to be in that community, they leave, destroying a town such as Schefferville in Quebec. It destroys the future for the people who live in those communities.

In closing, I would like to say that I come from the Province of Saskatchewan, which probably has more locally-owned and locally-controlled industries and businesses than any other province in Canada. That is a result of the tremendous power of the co-operative movement. The wheat pools which are owned by the farmers now sell 70 per cent of our wheat. Saskatchewan has a powerful credit union movement. There are credit unions in every town and village across the province. Saskatchewan has co-op stores, retail stores and all the businesses in which they are involved, such as the refining of petroleum. Saskatchewan also has a very powerful public sector, such as the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan, the gas and oil companies and the Saskatchewan Power Corporation. I believe that all of these developments have contributed to the fact that our province has one of the two lowest unemployment rates in Canada. If we had followed that kind of a lead, this country would be better for each and every one of us.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of history that one joins in the debate on Bill C-15. Indeed, Sir, this is part of an ancient debate which goes back to the time of Confederation and, in all probability, before that. When we talk about the movement of goods and capital between Canada and other countries, mainly the United States of America, there has always been a certain amount of discomfort on the part of Canadians because our neighbours to the south are so large in comparison to ourselves. We have never really known how to deal with this problem. When times have been good in Canada, we sometimes felt that we did not need the money coming across the border and legislation was passed, such as FIRA, which tried to keep it out. On the other hand, when times are not quite as good and we need more jobs in Canada, the tendency, as it is today, is to open up the doors, get rid of things like FIRA and invite some of that money into the country. I suspect, Sir, that this debate will continue to wax and wane over the next centuries as it has over the last.

What we see with Bill C-15 in comparison with the old FIRA is a difference in outlook towards life on the part of the Liberals and the socialists, on the one side, and the Conservatives on the other. If we examine what has been said during this debate by the Liberals and the New Democratic Party, we see that their view of life is very introspective. They tend to look inwards all the time. When there is any new development of any kind, their natural reaction is to be frightened. They tend to be reactionary. In their policies, they always tend to stress protection. They want to protect themselves from anything which might be happening. It seems, Sir, that the Liberals and the socialists are like so many snails. Whenever anything happens which comes close to them, they retreat back into their shells.

If we contrast this with the general views and principles espoused by the governing Party—which, I might add, represents the majority of Canadians who saw fit to elect this new Government with these new ideas with one of the largest majorities in Canadian history—we see that its views tend to be outward looking. We see opportunities and not threats when there are new developments in the world at large. We on this side of the House feel that Canadians can compete with anyone from any other country in the world. We have confidence in Canadians and in Canada.

In keeping with our views on the minimization of state interference and control in the lives of private citizens, what they can do with their own property, to whom they can sell, and so on, the legislation before us today was brought about. In Canada in the past we have tended to build walls around ourselves which have been so thick and so high that we ended up not being able to see over the top. We want to dismantle some of these walls and Bill C-15 is one of the ways in which we want to do that.

There is a new world out there. It is a new and exciting world and it is full of opportunities and challenge for Canadians. We feel that Canadians are up to that challenge and can take advantage of it. My plea, Sir, is that Canada gets plugged into the new world.

It is a simple fact, Mr. Speaker, that if we want a high standard of living in Canada—and that translates for most people into high wages—then we need capital investment in this country. If we want to be able to pay higher wages, it means that we have to have more machinery available to us so we can be more productive and that with the time which is put in by way of labour, we can extract more out and, as a consequence, can enjoy that higher standard of living. That means that capital investments are of the utmost importance to Canada and Canadians.

Under the previous administration in this country, although there was capital coming into Canada helping us develop our industries here, by the time that administration's stint was over and it had been thrown out by Canadians, that capital flow had reversed. Not only had that administration installed barriers to foreign capital coming into Canada, but it had also made it very difficult for Canadians to invest in their own country and Canadians were taking their capital abroad to the United States and other countries. Therefore, there was a net capital outflow from Canada, and that is one of the reasons we are saddled with so much unemployment today. It is a direct result of government policies in the past which have created this negative flow.

What we intend to do now and in the next few short years is to reverse that process so that we have a positive flow, so that Canadians will invest in their own country, because opportunities for profit making are here. We also must have money from abroad coming into Canada because we do not have enough in this country to provide all the jobs which we would like to see created in order to get the unemployment rate down. As a consequence of the reversal in capital flow, there will definitely be more employment. The horrendous figures for unemployment will get better and better as the years go by under the new Government and as this reversal is made possible. There will be increased business opportunities for Canadians whatever their line of business.

The principles contained in this Bill were expounded at length during the recent election campaign. They were a fundamental plank in the platform of the Progressive Conservative Party going into the election. These ideas received the overwhelming support of Canadians and, therefore, in my opinion it would be wise for the Opposition not to try to drag out debate for ever and ever by bringing in things like the six-month hoist which we are debating today, but rather accept the wishes of Canadians and help us constructively to make a better Bill. The Opposition should not object to the principle of the Bill and what Canadians want but should try to refine it and make it better. That, Sir, is my suggestion to opposition Members and I hope they will take heed of it.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Government to reconsider the Bill it calls Investment Canada. I think it should be called the foreign investment act because it does absolutely nothing for investment in this country. The only beneficiaries of this Bill will be foreign investors.

If the Government would only take the time to look at this Bill, it would see the fallacies which are contained within it. How can we expect a foreign company which owns a branch plant in Canada to maintain the research and development which is maintained by a Canadian-owned company? It is just not going to happen. The parent company in a country other than Canada, primarily the United States, is not going to let it happen. The politics of that country are not going to let it happen. How can branch plants export products the way Canadian-owned companies can? It just is not possible. It is not allowed by the parent company. Only a Canadian-owned company which has developed the product with state of the art technology can export it. A Canadian branch plant is just that, a store-front to sell an existing product in Canada. It is nothing more and will be nothing more. How can the Government say it is going to create more jobs with this Investment Canada Act? A branch plant is forced by its very nature to import more parts and equipment and technology than a Canadian-owned company would. Both statistics and common-sense tell us that, Mr. Speaker.

When there is a downturn in the economy, where will the jobs be lost? They will be lost faster and in greater numbers among foreign-owned companies because they will protect the operation in the country of origin. They are not going to be concerned about branch plants in Canada or unemployed Canadians. Canadians will be employed if the work is there but when a downturn comes, when difficult times arrive, it will be primarily Canadians who suffer and they will suffer first.

That is not to say this Party is against foreign investment; not at all. Foreign investment is extremely important. It has played a great role in the economy of this country. We invest in foreign countries as well so it would be extremely short-sighted to say we should not allow foreign investment in this country. However, that is not the question. The question is, if we completely destroy the existing framework which allows us to monitor and regulate foreign investment in this country, which gives us a window on our economy and our industries, we will be courting disaster. We will suffer economic reversals the like of which we have never suffered before.

You can say that FIRA has not worked. Certainly the Government says FIRA is too restrictive. My friend from Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) says that FIRA was not strict enough. Obviously the former Liberal Government was doing something right. So why not take this Act, as my colleague from Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) has said, and adjust it and see where the problems are? Certainly there were problems with FIRA. Application review took far too long and that is just one problem; but here we are dismantling a positive Act and agency which served this country and its economy very well.

The Government has said this Bill will be a boon for the economy. The Americans in turn have said they are not waiting at the Canadian border with bags of money. Do not expect a change in FIRA to bring American investors pouring into the country. The Americans are saying that they are not going to pour into this country and invest in great numbers, yet this is what the Government is basing its whole argument upon. It is willing to destroy completely the economic fabric of this country in order to take a flying chance that there will be additional investment in Canada. We need jobs now and if we cannot get them, for heaven's sake, let us be prepared to do everything we can to retain the jobs we have.

The Government has encouraged foreign investment in Canada. It wants that investment. The question is, what will happen with this framework? Any direct takeover worth less than $5 million will not be reveiwed under this Act. I say to the Government that nothing is going to be reviewed under this Act. You cannot tell me that, given the dialogue the Government has started in order to encourage this friendly attitude towards the U.S., it will now suddenly review the activities and investments of Americans in Canada. No, it is not going to do that. It was a fallacy to imagine that was going to happen.

This is particularly evident in the energy sector where the most damage is going to occur. Stock prices in the energy industry are depressed. There are multinationals who perhaps have the marketing capacity right now but they do not have the resource capacity and Canadian energy companies are ripe for takeover by foreign firms. The Government is going to turn a blind eye into this danger, yet the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has said that enhanced Canadian participation is one of the objectives of her Government. There is obviously a very large discrepancy in the policies advocated by two different Ministers of this Government.

A lot of the complaints about FIRA have naturally come from those people who are going to do business with the companies investing in Canada, such as lawyers and accountants. That is natural. But it is not the responsibility of those people to look after the economy of this country. The Government has to do that and the Government is sadly neglecting or completely abandoning its role. What will happen to small business? The Americans are not going to invest in new businesses, they are primarily going to take over existing Canadian businesses and this is where we will lose the jobs. What about the Government's promise to free up capital for small businesses and Canadian businesses in general? Instead, it is leaping into the path of least resistance and doing something which does not require and has not been given any thought. Canadians have paid for the Canadianization of the energy sector but the Government is turning the clock back to the beginning and giving over the energy sector and other sectors of the economy to foreign investment. It will be all completely done away with in a few short years.

The Government has fostered the belief that foreign investment will mean investment will occur all over the country. The have-not areas will have their big moment and foreign companies are just going to come pouring into their regions. Well, that is not true; it is not going to happen. Statistics indicate that if you lift the restraints on foreign investment, the foreign investors will all end up in the same area. They are like fast food outlets; they want to be on top of one another. How is this going to help one of the crying needs of this country, the need for regional development? Not only will it not help, it will exacerbate the problem and make it worse.

I think this is a travesty. The Government is not managing the economy, it is throwing it open helter-skelter and allowing foreign firms to come in and do whatever they want without regard to the Canadian economy itself. There is no consideration given to regional development or to where the economy is going and how jobs will be created. The Government is not prepared to give any thought to this. It only wishes to make friends on the other side of the border and it is doing so at the expense of the average Canadian. It is a travesty and I ask the Government to reconsider its position in this regard. It will be a very bad mistake if the Bill goes through in its present form.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on Bill C-15 which proposes an agency called Investment Canada. Its purpose is to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians.

The goals of this legislation have been set out as follows: one, to increase the entrepreneurial spirit in Canada; two, to increase research and development and the diffusion of new technologies; third, to expand Canada's economic and industrial base; four, to stimulate trade; and finally, to create jobs.

These goals I am sure are unexceptionable to all Members. Indeed, few Bills are introduced in the House to achieve more desirable goals than these. However, in measuring the value of this legislation surely we must examine whether the vehicle that it proposes is commensurate with the goals being sought, whether it reflects ideology or reality. I believe it reflects ideology, for the facts do not support the assumption that unencumbered foreign investment will achieve the economic benefits described.

Obviously, the biggest foreign investors are the Americans. To oppose this legislation is likely to evoke the usual allegations of anti-Americanism. Let me put that to rest. I am from Windsor and no Canadians are more familiar with Americans and less anti-American than we. Our jobs are unusually dependent upon the automobile industry, which is American owned and a classic example, through the auto pact, of what can be achieved through American or foreign investment when appropriate protections are implemented.

We are overwhelmed by the American print and broadcast media. We are Pistons fans, Lions fans, Tigers fans and Red Wings fans. Much of our entertainment and culture are pursued in Detroit. My wife and children are Americans. I obtained my doctorate in the United States.

We are not American but we do sometimes feel that our country has ceded us to the United States and that we must struggle against that, as we have with respect to the insensitive cuts applied to Windsor CBC. We struggle constantly to assert our Canadian identity. We are then not only admirers of Americans, we are more aware than most Canadians of their shortcomings and the dangers of American dominance. We know that the pursuit of their national or corporate goals are unencumbered by philanthropy or concern about Canadian economic or political independence. We must pursue those goals ourselves. Where we have done so, Windsor has benefited.

On the other hand, hundreds of Windsor workers can testify to the results of the failure to defend Canadian interests. Let us just cite a few examples: the 200 jobs at Canadian Motor Lamp, the 500 jobs at Bendix, the 500 jobs at Dall Specialties and the 500 jobs at Walker Metals. They are jobs lost because Canada's interest was not sufficiently protected.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) went to New York to speak to the Economic Club and promised Americans that Canada would have a new direction and new national purpose. That purpose was to enhance Canada's sovereignty and independence by declaring that Canada was now open for unencumbered American investment. The Americans were ecstatic. They reap profits and payments amounting to 61 per cent of all external remittances. U.S. subsidiaries in Canada account for a large share of American exports to Canada. As was discovered by the U.S. Senate and the Harvard Business School, investment in Canada generates jobs in all sectors of the American economy. American professionals, technologists, scientists and engineers occupy the top spots in American-owned subsidiaries in Canada.

What benefits will Investment Canada bring? Let us look at the Government's goals. The first is to increase the entrepreneurial spirit. This, of course, must be one of the more curious aspects of the Bill. The Government says that the purpose is to increase Canadian investment. Of course, that should be done but nowhere in the Bill do we find any direction on how that should be achieved. We will disregard the philosophical nonsense involved in increasing Canadian entrepreneurial spirit by encouraging American investment and profit taking.

Will Bill C-15 increase research and development? This Bill is almost absurd in its disregard for reality. The fact of the matter is that the sorry record of Canadian industry in research and development is attributable largely to the failure of American subsidiaries because Canadian-owned industry has invested 10 per cent of sales as compared to the American Subsidiary rate of 3 per cent. That 10 per cent is quite comparable to a reasonable average.

We are supposed to gain technological diffusion. This is usually measured in terms of productivity but, as the Science Council has reported, American subsidiaries have a very sorry record compared to Canadian-owned firms with respect to productivity improvement. Of course, technological diffusion will not be attained if we do not have recipients, and we do not have the scientific and engineering underpinning to receive such diffusion.

We are supposed to be expanding the economic and industrial base. That would assume technological diffusion and would be based on increased international markets, which are not attained. It depends upon reinvestment, which does not occur. It depends on foreign-owned subsidiaries buying supplies in Canada, which they do not do. Let me cite an example of what happens even under protective instances. Chrysler vans that are made in Windsor are composed 70 per cent to 80 per cent of out-sourced parts.

We are told that our trade will be stimulated but the record shows that foreign companies are geared only to Canadian markets. Indeed, apart from exports to parent companies which account for 90 per cent of those exports from this country, subsidiaries may be restricted by their parent companies and indeed may be subject to the extraterritorial application of U.S. restrictions.

Will jobs be created? Let us examine the record. In 1982, 50 per cent of all jobs lost in Canada were lost among those American-owned companies constituting a portion of the 50 largest companies in this country.

In considering this legislation, it is difficult to see what has motivated it. It is alleged that there is a discouragement of American investment, but in fact between 95 per cent and 98 per cent of the applications have been approved in the last couple of years. Only 50 per cent have been required to meet any job conditions and 15 per cent have involved no new jobs or any new investment. In fact, the Conference Board has pointed out that only 11 per cent of foreign investors were at all deterred by FIRA.

It may well be that prompter, more efficient processing of applications would help, but clearly if we wish to achieve what the Conservatives say we must achieve to increase trade, jobs, research and development and to expand our industrial base, then it should be provided for, as it is not in this legislation. Instead, the Government is offering up the country for sale. It is a garage sale in which the house and children are thrown in for good measure.

The fact is that the wreckage of FIRA is unlikely to achieve anything. As a matter of fact, when consulted on the matter, American bankers have said that if there is new investment it will probably be a decade before it occurs and most of it will go into primary industry, which is of no help to us at all. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has promised us a new direction and a new sense of national purpose. That is what is needed, but it will not be achieved by looking to the United States or elsewhere. No nation has pursued a national vision in a foreign territory. We must look to ourselves, to Canadian interests and investment opportunities, if we are to achieve those goals which this Bill seeks to achieve.

[Translation]

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, so many things have been said in this House in the discussion of Bill C-15, the Investment Canada Act, which would allow foreign countries to take control of our small and medium-sized businesses without having to meet any requirements whatsoever.

Since this is my second opportunity to take part in this debate, I will limit my remarks to the Bill as it relates to the situation of women in Canada. The number of women in the labour force is greater than ever. In 1981, 51.6 per cent of it were women. The Dodge report indicates that 10 years from now, women will account for 65 per cent of the labour force. The ever-increasing participation of women has mainly been confined to the service area. According to the latest figures published by the Department of Labour in February 1984, 61 per cent of all service employees in 1981 were women.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-15 is a threat to women workers in Canada, because they are employed in the service and administrative areas, and as we know this means in our small- and medium-sized businesses.

When one looks closer into the role of women in small- and medium-sized businesses, one realizes to what extent these are dependent on women. This legislation, as has been said repeatedly, is a threat to the integrity of our small businesses. It is a threat to the integrity of women employment in that sector. Most women remain confined to the traditional employment ghettoes, such as cashier, secretarial, sales jobs in stores, and so on and so forth. And it is precisely those jobs that are directly threatened by the advent of microtechnology. If we add the negative consequences of the Investment Canada Act to the jobs that will be suppressed by high technology, we see that women once more will be the victims of bad Government policies.

Moreover, there is a significant salary differential as between men and women for similar work. It is a fact that employers look for women workers for more routine-like, less stimulating and, above all, low-salary jobs.

In 1980, average women's earnings amounted to 58 per cent of men's earnings. The average salary is $15,000 for women, as against $29,000 for men. In the 25 to 34 age group, a man with a Grade 9 education earns $15,696, while a woman with an M.A. or even a P.h.D. degree earns less. Her average earnings are $15,527.

Many families depend on the financial contribution of outside working wives for an adequate family income. In 1980, more than 49 per cent of wives with salaried jobs were married to men earning less than $20,000 a year. Those women therefore were providing their families with much needed extra income. Without their participation in the labour force, many families would be living below the poverty line.

A number of reports and studies often referred to in parliamentary debates shed a spectacular light on the scope of the problem. And as I said, technological changes are a serious threat to the areas of employment that are traditionally reserved to women, at a time when they enter the labour force in ever-increasing numbers.

During the election campaign, the three main political parties made many policy statements on the necessity of implementing training and retraining schemes for women as well as affirmative action programs. For example, the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on the status of women shows that he seemed willing to provide new opportunities for women, and I quote:

> Nothing less than a retraining program of unprecedented generosity and ingenuity would be needed to face up to this new reality, when hundreds of thousands of women will suffer financially unless we make a national commitment to prevent such conditions.

I have closely scrutinized the measures taken by the government since it came into power on September 4, and I regret to say that all those fine words about women like many others were nothing but pious wishes.

Mr. Speaker, I am trying to show the part played by women in the Canadian economy. She is by far the mainstay of the economy. She is often compelled to accept menial jobs either because of family responsibilities or lack of opportunities. Some women who are heads of families have been forced to take two part-time jobs because they could not get job security.

When a working women is found in a small- or medium-size business, either she works with her husband or she is self-employed. Mr. Speaker, I have been made aware by my constituency office of the problems and discrimination experienced by women workers in their working environment, and today I must plead on their behalf.

The problem of employment for women has been raised on various occasions over the years. A policy in this field has yet to be developed. Past experience has shown that when a company is in financial straits, women are the first to be dismissed and are reduced to accepting part-time jobs, which condemns them to poverty in their old age. It is well known that low wages result in a small pension.

If Bill C-15 were passed in its present form, I think it would jeopardize all small- and medium-size businesses, which are the backbone of the Canadian economy. Moreover, the Investment Canada Bill does not guarantee in the least a strong economy and, still worse, it provides nothing at all to safeguard jobs in Canada. Mr. Speaker, I therefore hope that we will take all the time required in committee to make the necessary amendment to this bill.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few comments on this Bill. I have not had an opportunity to speak to this issue so far in the debate and I think it is an important debate. It is one to which more attention should be paid. In it we find articulated some of the serious differences that exist between the Government and the New Democratic Party, in particular with respect to how we view the Canadian economy and how we view the global economy.

I think I am being fair to the Government if I say that it regards the global economy and the investment decisions made by the international investment community as a series of neutral and independent decisions which we in Canada, particularly those in government, have to take into account as simple facts of life similar to the way in which we take the weather into account. Viewing as a simple fact of life that investment decisions are made according to certain criteria, the responsibility of government is then to create in Canada the context, or, as the Conservatives would call it, the investment climate, in which, given the rules of investment behaviour, investment will come to Canada and not go to other countries.

We have a different view of those kinds of decisions. To start with, we would like to see an international economic order in which those decisions are not made independently in the boardrooms of multi-national corporations, or global corporations, as they are more appropriately called in many instances. We would like to see an international economic order in which those decisions were accountable to the well-being of the global economy itself and the well-being of countries, not just the ones in which investments may or may not be made but other countries as well.

Of course, that brings into play the whole question of the North-South dialogue, et cetera, not in any charity-related way but in the way the Brandt Commission so well indicated—that the economic well-being of the North is related to the economic well-being of the South.

But I would like to return to the major point which I wanted to make concerning how we in the NDP regard investment decisions. We see the criteria by which these decisions are made not as something with which we simply have to live. In the name of the public interest, of the well-being of the Canadian economy and of common good, we would want to see, if we were in government, these investment decisions made in the interests of Canada. The interests of investors should not stand against and above the interests of the community, in this case the interests of the country. This is why in the past we supported and indeed initiated from this side of the House ideas such as the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

We were not happy with FIRA. We did not think it did its job as well as it could have. We did not think it was tough enough with respect to foreign investment. Despite the existence of FIRA, there were many cases where companies met its requirements but, after having been allowed to invest in Canada, behaved in a way contrary to what they said they would do, in ways contrary to the Canadian public interest.

This is an internally coherent measure on the part of the Government. It is not that the Government is contradicting itself. It has a view of investment with which this piece of legislation is quite consistent. Its view is that as a country we should simply capitulate to international realities, that we should simply capitulate to the world of international investors and say that we as a government are here for whatever those guys would like. "You do not want to invest unless we have the following climate and conditions—that is our job", says the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He says that it is their job as the Government to create the conditions in which investors feel good so that they will invest.

That is not the way we see it. We see it as not only acting against the interests of the Canadian economy but as acting against the future of the global economy and against the possibility of having a new, just and sustainable economic order in which one country is not played off against the other, in which workers and farmers in one country are not played off against workers and farmers in another, in which people generally are not played off against each other by those who decide where money will and will not be invested. I am referring to those who sit there and say: "Well, Canada likes to have certain environmental laws, it has a labour movement with which we have to contend and various other things. Unless it softens up and creates the right climate, perhaps we will invest somewhere else".

By acceding to this kind of attitude on the part of the investment community, the Government of Canada is not only acting against the interests of Canada but against the possibility of finally creating some day a global economy in which that kind of blackmail cannot occur. There is no other word for it. That is why corporations are in business, either domestically when they play one province off against another or internationally when they play one country off against another.

In this Bill we have a classic opportunity to see what are the differences between the New Democratic Party and the Government. Although we were always very unhappy with the tokenism involved in FIRA with respect to the Liberals, we see this as a step backward on the part of the Progressive Conservative Government. It is trying to abandon altogether any pretence of ensuring that foreign investors act in the interests of Canada. At least in that respect we might be able to say that the Government is being more honest. It is not interested in pretension; it is interested in coming clean about the way in which it views the world. Our objection is that we do not think the world operates that way. We do not think that the international investment community is a sort of innocent, well-meaning group of people who are asking themselves how they can benefit the world or how they can distribute goods and services in the most equitable way. We just do not fall for that line. We know that when they meet they have global profit strategies and do a lot of thinking about how they can play one country off against the other. We know that any country which takes the kind of supine, acquiescent role which the Government is now advocating for Canada will live to regret it.

Unfortunately it is not just the Government which will live to regret it. If it were only the Government, it would be all right because at least the Government would have brought it upon itself. Unfortunately all Canadians will come to regret the decision being taken by the Government in the form of this legislation. That is the unfortunate part.

I have nothing else to say with respect to this particular piece of legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Good.

Mr. Blaikie: I hear Hon. Members across the way saying "good". It always makes them uncomfortable when someone else can articulate their position better than they can. Nevertheless, it is useful to help them to understand how they in fact see the world so that they can see themselves clearly compared with what others are saying. They do not like a clear kind of debate where Canadians are presented with clear philosophical choices. A genuine, clear clash of ideas might threaten the efficiency of their rhetoric and the way in which they like to pretend other things.

I am sorry if I have caused the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) or any other Member over there a certain amount of discomfort by trying to paint more clearly what is going on here. I hope in future they will be more interested in a clear exchange of ideas, not feel so uncomfortable with that kind of exercise.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I consider it my duty to take part in the debate on Bill C-15 to create Investment Canada which, in my opinion, is a mistake that all Canadians will regret in the future.

If we look at the history of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, as many have done before me, we see that the Agency was created in 1974 and given the responsibility to apply certain criteria. One thing we have to remember is that the major purpose of this agency was to guarantee that any foreign investment would produce substantial benefits for Canada. This means benefits from every aspect, especially with regard to jobs and to prevent wealthy foreign investors from taking over some of our major industries and making them into subsidiaries of an American, British or Australian parent company which would eventually have meant fewer jobs in Canada than if the same industry had been Canadian owned. However, I believe that FIRA had a much loftier purpose, namely to canadianize our economy and make us proud to be Canadians. We often hear that it was because we were afraid of American investment. There might be some truth in this, Mr. Speaker, when we think of the enormous strength of the United States, a country with a population of over 225 million while we are just 26 million. We have to find means to assert our Canadian sovereignty and give us this pride which we lacked for many years, but which has emerged gradually because we are still a young country. I can give you examples of this pride: the Canadian flag is one. In passing, I can assure the House that our pride is still increasing because, just recently, the Canadian union of automobile workers severed its ties with the International union so that the Canadian workers and American workers would handle their business separately. This is a sign of canadianization and it shows the will for sovereignty and the pride of belonging to Canada.

We could also refer to history. It would have been very easy to let the Americans through in 1814 at Châteauguay, but a small handful of Canadians rose up against that notion for the simple reason that they were proud to be in their own country.

I said earlier that we had to give ourselves the tools to fight against foreign invasion, and that the investments we must fear most are naturally those from the United States since the Americans are so powerful. What saddens me the most about this change, which is simply a cosmetic change for appearances' sake, is that the new Investment Canada agency excludes 90 per cent of small businesses, which are responsible for creating the most jobs in Canada.

We have to recall also that, for all practical purposes, FIRA rejected only 3 per cent of all applications submitted to it. This goes to show, Mr. Speaker, that this agency created in 1974 was there to apply what I would call criteria of pride and to help Canada to progress independently, both at the economic and political levels, because if ever we lose our economic independence, we would quickly become politically dependent.

These are the reasons why I wanted to make my humble contribution to this debate, in an effort to increase the awareness of the Government because, even though it promised changes during the election campaign, it was simply a promise to add its own seasonings to the great banquet it would offer the Canadian people. That was its right, of course. But with this change that is basically radical, especially in the area of foreign investment, I think that viewed from the long term we are making a mistake.

I submit that with the Foreign Investment Review Agency, established a few years back, Canadians gave themselves something to be proud of. I referred to the flag. I could have referred to the national anthem. I could have referred to a number of other things. Those are landmarks, markers we set up from time to time along the road to free Canada from any investment that could be harmful to our national, political and especially to our economic unity.

Such is the contribution I wanted to make, because it is my feeling that in view of the data and figures which I brought up earlier, we are opening wide the door to foreign investment, and, as a result, to a loss of our political identity following the loss of our economy. If we look at the reason why FIRA was created in 1974, we find it was to safeguard the future, the jobs, the economy and the youth of this country. This is something that cannot be over-emphasized.

Recently, my good friend from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) brought up before this House a striking example indeed of why the Foreign Investment Review Agency was established, when he referred to the University of Ottawa bookstore. This bookstore, as I think the Hon. Member mentioned, is a very large employer. It was in the process of being taken over by American interests. Thanks to FIRA, this process was slowed down and today, although certain amount of American money is invested in it, the business is controlled by Canadians instead of foreigners.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I have had the privilege of making this humble contribution. Everything has been said or almost, the arguments are completed. But certainly it was absolutely necessary for all Members in this House to take part in the debate, and this is why I rose today. This is also the prime reason why my colleague from Windsor-West (Mr. Gray) has introduced an amendment to postpone the whole matter for another six months, in order that all Members may take part in this debate.

[English]

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this very important debate on Bill C-15. Before I begin, I would like to make several observations on the process of how this Bill came to the House of Commons. It is interesting to note that there was very little, if any, consultation with respect to Bill C-15. This is an extremely important piece of legislation with very serious ramifications from coast to coast in this country, yet in its wisdom the Government decided there would be very little if any, consultation. I understand there was no consultation with the provinces or with the various interest groups. They would have appreciated the opportunity to give their point of view with respect to Bill C-15. The Government promised that it would be an open, accessible and consultative Government. However, with this particular piece of legislation it decided not to go through the consultation process.

• (1230)

The other observation I would like to make is that this is the first major piece of legislation for the new Government. It is interesting to note the Government's priorities. One can assume that because it is its first major piece of legislation it is the Government's top priority at this point in time. It is strange that that should be its top priority when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is telling Canadians that the top priority is the economy and jobs. There are other more important pieces of legislation that should be coming forward.

In announcing Bill C-15, the Minister responsible for industry stated that this legislation heralds a new day for Canada. Indeed it heralds a new day but it is a sad new day for this country. By introducing this Bill, the Government is dashing any hope of having Canada ever gain control over its own economy. It is dashing any hope of our becoming masters in our own home. The lack of concern among Tories for Canadian independence and sovereignty, whether political or economic, should not come as a surprise.

The Tories have never quite been able to shake the master-slave mode of thinking. In the early years of this century, the Tories were determined to keep us bound to Britain. Arthur Meighen said "ready, aye ready" to Lloyd George during the Chanak crisis. Now we have "Branch-Plant Brian" saying "ready, aye ready" to Ronald Reagan and the captains of U.S. industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Nunziata: It is hardly a coincidence that the Government should make the announcement of FIRA's demise on the eve of the Prime Minister's cap-in-hand speech to the Economic Club of New York. I am sure he will make the corporate boys at the Iron Ore Company misty-eyed with pride.

The Minister responsible for industry in announcing this legislation stated that Canada is open for business. As my Leader has indicated, this country has always been open for business. It has never been closed to business. We have always welcomed foreign investment. We want foreign investment, but we want it on our terms. As my Leader quite eloquently put it, this country is not for sale. Yet the Government has put the "for sale" sign on Canada. It is prepared to sell out our cultural identity and our economic sovereignty.

The Minister is thoroughly misguided with respect to this particular Bill. It is a regressive piece of legislation and it is a tremendous step backward. This piece of legislation comes as no surprise, though. After all, it is the Conservative way of doing things. As far as the Conservative Party is concerned, what is good for General Motors is good for the country. Conservative Members have blind faith in the private sector. With this particular piece of legislation, they have blind faith that foreign investment will enter Canada and provide much needed jobs. After years of slowly and methodically gaining control over our economy, the Tories are prepared to sell our country to foreign interests.

With respect to this particular piece of legislation, the evidence will suggest that 90 per cent of foreign takeovers will go ahead without review. Why is there a need for Bill C-15? The Tories argue that this legislation will lure foreign investment and will create jobs. Yet they have no concrete evidence that that in fact will be the case. I will try to indicate why I believe the opposite may be true.

The Conservative Party also argues that FIRA was a barrier to foreign investment. The facts simply do not bear that out. FIRA was not a barrier to foreign investment. As we are all aware, since its inception in 1974 there were in excess of 6,000 applications. Of those 6,000 applications, 92.2 per cent were approved. In 1977 and again in 1982, certain amendments were made to the Act to streamline the review procedures. Since 1982, 97 per cent of the applications were approved. The Government says that FIRA was a barrier to foreign investment but the facts simply do not bear that out.

FIRA was good legislation. It was not perfect legislation but it was good legislation. That legislation provided that foreign investment was welcome in this country but it had to be of significant benefit to Canada. We in the Liberal Party recognize the benefits of foreign investment. There is good foreign investment and there is bad foreign investment. The Foreign Investment Review Act said to the world that Canada is open for business and wants foreign investment, but we want investment that will be of benefit to Canadians. If it is not of benefit to Canadians, then we are really not interested. Why, pray tell, would we want foreign investment that would not be beneficial to Canadians from coast to coast?

In my respectful submission, there are even limits to good foreign investment. For example, study after study has shown that foreign-controlled companies do less research and development than domestic companies. Studies also show that most foreign-controlled companies in Canada purchase most of their parts and components from other countries.

FIRA was set up as a review mechanism to ensure that Canada would not suffer as a result of foreign investment. We said that we wanted foreign investment but we insisted that there had to be significant benefit from it. As well, we wanted foreign investment on our terms. What is important is the fact that FIRA gave this country the opportunity to have a very strong negotiating tool with foreign companies which wished to enter the country to do business. We were able to say to these companies that if they wanted to come to Canada to do business, they would have to do it on our terms. They would have to create jobs in the country and would have to do other things that would be of benefit to our economy.

Legislation like FIRA is not unique to Canada. As Hon. Members are aware, there is similar legislation in the U.S., Australia and Japan. These places have extensive controls. For example, in the United States there are very strict controls over whole sectors of the U.S. economy and specifically in the shipping, broadcasting, air transportation and defence components of the economy.

FIRA had the effect it was intended to have. With respect to the recession years, foreign investment increased annually from 1974 onward. Between 1964 and 1973, foreign investment in this country averaged $690 million a year. Since 1974, foreign investment has averaged $1.4 billion each year. In the past four years the average has been $2 billion per year. In 1983 the capital inflow into Canada was $2.8 billion.

What will Investment Canada do? The Government argues that it will create jobs. However, there is no guarantee of more jobs. There is the distinct possibility that foreign companies may enter this country, purchase competitor companies and then close those companies down in order to secure the Canadian market. Is this the result the Government wants? It is inevitable and one must be cautious.

As a result of this new legislation, we will slowly lose control of our economy. There will be a tremendous loss of jobs. As I have already indicated, FIRA was good legislation. It allowed us to gain control over our economy. In every major sector of the economy there was a reduction in the amount of foreign ownership. One need only consult the figures for foreign control of Canadian industry from 1971 to 1981. Mining went from 62 per cent foreign control to 30 per cent. Oil and gas went from 90 per cent foreign control to 49 per cent. Primary metal manufacturing went from 41 per cent foreign control to 13 per cent.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that my time has expired. I simply wish to say in closing that we in the Liberal Party will fight this legislation every step of the way. In our view it is bad legislation. I would encourage Hon. Members opposite to take a good hard look at the possible serious and detrimental ramifications of Bill C-15.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I rise to speak in the debate this afternoon. In reflecting back on the nature of the Bill before us and the law we are considering this afternoon, I recalled an old story which I read in a magazine about the Liberals. It seems to me that the Liberals are really the ones who sold out Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skelly: I think they protest too much. The Liberals are already beginning to complain. In fact, my Conservative colleagues agree with me that the Liberals did sell out Canada. The Liberals have been in power for 63 years during this century! Who else could have sold the place out?

Mr. Gauthier: We put in the FIRA legislation. We thought about that.

Mr. Skelly: I am trying to be as constructive as I can. I can remember the Hon. Alastair Gillespie who was a former Liberal Minister of Industry. There was an instance when someone asked him what he would do about foreign ownership. Mr. Gillespie said that once in a while, if his secretary spotted something in a magazine or newspaper article, she would clip it out and call it to his attention. He was asked what he then would do about it and he said "Generally, nothing". He said that investment was good for Canada. The country was sold out with a bang by the Liberals over the years.

Mr. Gauthier: That's nonsense.

Mr. Skelly: That certainly is not nonsense. It is fact. The record stands and the Liberal Party and Liberal Governments sold out Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: The Liberals can rest assured that I will not let the Conservatives off the hook. Just relax.

It has been pointed out that the Liberals created what the previous speaker called good but not perfect legislation. I'll say it was not perfect? The Liberals, in order to prevent the selling out of Canada at the enormous rate which they were letting it happen, concocted the piece of legislation which established the Foreign Investment Review Agency. In their wisdom they always attempted to address a question. They usually placed good legislation before the House and then promptly gutted it before it came into play; just as they gutted the FIRA legislation. When the Liberals had finished with their jiggerypokery of that legislation, it was a more open door policy than that of Alastair Gillespie's secretary.

The previous speaker, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata), admitted that 92 per cent of the applications which were put before FIRA up to 1977 were approved. The only people who had the remotest bit of difficulty were the Mafia when they attempted to launder money in order to get it into Canada. The Liberals might have had some pangs of conscience in that instance, but I am not sure—

Mr. Gauthier: Careful!

Mr. Skelly: Okay, I will be nice.

Recognizing this dastardly record—that these companies would come in, buy out Canadian businesses and shut them down—it was called to the attention of the Liberal Government of the day. But they still allowed it to happen. They were not satisfied that it was enough. The previous speaker, knowing how abysmal the record was, had the nerve to stand up and say that improvements had to be made. What I think he wanted was maybe for the Mafia to be able to bring in investment money. Why let it go somewhere else? At any rate, from 1977 to 1982, 97 per cent of the applications were approved.

I think it is firmly established on the record that the Liberals did in fact sell out Canada. They knew when they did that that research and development was going to the United States. They knew that service costs from the United States against Canadian companies were enormous. They knew that the dividends paid to the United States were debilitating Canada. Canada has paid back 10,000 times more than the dollars we received in investments to the Americans at our own expense. Market arrangements for Canadian branch plants were often completely an end run done on the firms in Canada so that the American parent companies could receive the export benefits in the world market. The Liberals knew that.

One of my colleagues raised an interesting figure, which was that the cost Liberal Governments imposed on Canada cost us in the order of $2,170,000 per hour, every hour of the day, every day of the week. It was an enormous cost on Canadians. That was the product of the Liberal Government who put forward good legislation and then gutted it. It put together an open door agency. FIRA should have been called "Open door Canada".

The Liberals are not all bad.

Mr. Langdon: They are an endangered species.

Mr. Skelly: I think they are sincerely trying to repent after the disciplining that the people of Canada gave them.

Mrs. Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Too little, too late.

Mr. Skelly: The Hon. Member says "Too little, too late". She is right. Unfortunately, the Canadian people did not go far enough. Canadians did this because of the Liberals' failure to address properly the question of foreign investment in Canada.

That brings me to the amendment, which I feel we should support. Anything to delay this legislation in order to have a decent look at it—and now I am addressing my comments to my Conservative colleagues and appealling to their good nature and intellectual capability—

Ms. Mitchell: Don't count on that!

Mr. Skelly: Be nice. The Conservatives should consider this amendment. Their election promises to consult were worthwhile promises. Those promises were accepted as an honest attempt to clean up the Government of Canada and to make it more responsive to the people. I think it is fortunate that the Liberals have put forward this motion. They are not generally capable of good ideas; however, in this particular case there is a good idea before us and this Bill should be hoisted for six months.

The Liberals' record in foreign investment is dastardly. The House should be permitted the time to look at that record. Beyond that, the only thing that we have—

Mr. Nunziata: Have a look at the past.

Mr. Skelly: My hon. colleague says that we should have a look at the past. That is where Liberal heads are turned, back into the past to the glorious days of the Liberal empire in Canada. Well, it has collapsed and gone forever. Let's look ahead.

Mr. Nunziata: We are resting.

Mr. Skelly: They are resting! They are out to lunch is the truth.

Mr. Taylor: They are dead and won't lie down.

Mr. Skelly: My hon. colleague from Bow River (Mr. Taylor) says that they will not lay down. Let's string them up!

The concerns of the NDP have been expressed by many of my colleagues. We would certainly like to see the Bill suspended because it will create a worse situation than even the Liberals were capable of creating. One thing the Conservative Party can truly say for itself is that in the last election campaign it said: "Let us at the levers of power. We will do it better". I am afraid that by this Bill they are telling the Canadian people that they are prepared to sell out Canada faster than did the Liberals. They are prepared to sell us out faster than the rate of 92 per cent or 97 per cent of the applications. I am concerned that the Conservative Government, in its haste to acquiesce to the United States, is literally going to sell out Canada's opportunities.

We have stated the sins of foreign investment and the failure to establish Canadian control of our economy, as well as what happened during the Liberal regime—the loss of research and development in Canada. That will be accelerated. There is no doubt about it. There will be loss of jobs because of American parent companies shutting down Canadian branch plants. Once they have bought them out, they will simply eliminate competition to their domestic industries in the world market, even in the Canadian market. The purchase of parts and components will further drain money out of this country as well as the purchase of services from the United States, whether engineering, architectural, financial or accounting services, at inflated rates. That will continue to drain more and more money out of Canada.

• (1250)

Again, there is the question of dividends. If we allow foreign investment in, that investment, instead of coming to Canadians to reinvest in Canada, will certainly be sent back to the United States, which will represent substantial job losses for Canadians. We will be effectively following the pattern of the Liberals of destroying the attempt of Canadians to compete in export markets around the world. In fact, this Bill should certainly be hoisted for six months, if not withdrawn.

I see the time now, Mr. Speaker, and I wonder if I might call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not want to disappoint the Hon. Member but I do not think he will call it one o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I am not, as Hon. Members will know, a frequent speaker in the House, because I often think we can be more effective through our work in parliamentary committees, in caucus, and by travelling across the country to meet Canadians and listen to their major concerns.

My reasons for taking part in the debate today, however—and I will be brief, because our allotted time is very limited, only ten minutes to explain to Canadians what is happening. In other words, at this point we have had eight hours of debate on the main motion and we are now limited to ten minutes. Speed is therefore of the essence.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make several comments. First of all, I would like to talk about Canadian pride and what it means. Second, I would like to respond, without animosity, to my hon. colleague and friend from Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), who should, I think, read up on the history of Canada and the history of the Liberal Party. Third, I would like to explain how I see this Bill and the dangers I feel it contains.

I have no doubts as to the competence of the Minister sponsoring this legislation. In fact, I know him very well since he was a Member of the Standing Committee on External Affairs which I had the privilege of chairing for a number of years and of which I was a member for nearly twenty years.

The present Minister took an active part in the business of the House and that of the task force on Canada's relations with Latin America, chaired by my colleague from Labelle, Mr. Dupras, who is no longer a Member of the House, not because the voters decided it that way, but of his own volition.

I think it is basically a matter of pride. What does it mean to be Canadian? To be Canadian is not to be anti-American. To be Canadian is not to be anti-British. To be Canadian is not to be anti-French. I put it this way because these are concerns that are close to most Canadians. Our neighbours to the South, the Americans, are our friends, I say it and I say it again, but we do not have to be American! The countries by which this country was founded, France and England . . . England gave us its system of government, and I am very happy with it and I will always be ready to defend it because I think it is one of the best political systems in the world. I say it, and I am not afraid to say it, and I am not saying it in English, I am saying it in French, because I believe in the British system. So being pro-Canadian does not mean being anti-British or anti-French, as I said before. It means that every day, we want to help make our institutions truly Canadian.

You were not here, Mr. Speaker, and very few Members will remember the stormy debates we had, I think it will be twenty years ago next month, about the flag you see on your right. With respect, I may say that the word "right" is very appropriate in your case. The flag was to make us a little more Canadian. There were the traditionalists, and there were those who wanted to develop this idea of Canadianism for the benefit of the young people sitting in front of you, Mr. Speaker, and make Canada a place where our foreign friends, and they are our friends, will not take control of what is ours or undermine our pride in developing the economy of our country as we see fit.

My hon. colleague and friend from Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) put the blame on the Liberals, but he had his facts wrong.

The Liberals don't claim to be the best in the world. There probably are people in Canada who could do better, but they have yet to prove it. As for my friends in the New Democratic Party, they will never get the chance. What he did say however, and he said it very well . . . Actually, I know the Hon. Member from our frequent travels together. I am not so sure he said it in a spirit of friendship, but I do not think he has that much of a grudge against this great political Party that has presided over the destiny of our country and made it the world power it is today, but that is exactly what it means to be a Liberal.

I should perhaps lecture him on what it means to be a Liberal. I see the Hon. Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) smile pleasantly. She seems to agree. What does it mean to be a Liberal? I am going to hazard an opinion, Mr. Speaker, and say that it is a matter of balance. In this Bill, a Minister is saying: "Come to Canada, do what you want, and try to create jobs." We do not believe that this Bill will create jobs any more than it will promote research and development in Canada. We have to be very cautious in choosing between a door which is completely open and a door which our friends from the New Democratic Party would like to be completely closed. They refuse everything. They are suspicious of our neighbours to the South, our American friends. For many of them, and I respect them a lot because I have admittedly much in common with their Party, anything American is necessarily bad. I do not share this view. My Party, which has done a lot to make Canada what it is today, does not share this view, nor does it agree with many members of this Government who believe, something which I simply cannot understand, that they just have to say: "Come to Canada, FIRA is no more."

I believe that the mistake of the Liberals was perhaps not to explain well enough to foreign investors, including the Americans who seem to be the ones this Government wants to attract to Canada, what were the true intentions of the review agency we called FIRA. We should have told them that we would behave exactly as they did, our purpose being similar to theirs. As a matter of fact they protect themselves thanks to a very powerful Senate and a very powerful Congress which look carefully at every economic sector in the country for any thing that might harm their businesses. How can these people deny a country as proud as Canada, a country as faithful to its friends, whether it be on military, social or economic matters, as Canada has been to the United States, how can they refuse us what their Congress gives them so easily because of their incredibly powerful lobbies in every industry, including wood and steel?

Mr. Speaker, I am afraid of what will happen to our young people in whom we want to instil a sense of patriotism of which Mr. Reagan spoke so eloquently. I know Mr. Reagan. He came to this Parliament. I saw him. I do not know him well, but I have met him. I have a lot of respect for him because he was able to do something when he was re-elected. He was able to instil a sense of patriotism in his people. Is there anything wrong Mr. Speaker, with making our young people feel proud to be Canadians and with explaining what is in the best interests of Canada? I have two minutes left, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

INCOME TAX ACT

TAXATION OF WORKERS' COMPENSATION BENEFITS

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, for several months I have been inundated with letters and phone calls about provisions in the Income Tax Act relating to workmen's compensation and the Guaranteed Income Supplement. I have introduced a notice of motion advising the House to amend the Income Tax Act in order to eliminate the hardships brought about by previous amendments which now make workmen's compensation reportable as income for income tax purposes and GIS purposes.

As many of the Members present are aware, I have been fighting for this change to a law which has greatly affected the already meagre incomes of many of my constituents, particularly senior citizens. It is having far-reaching consequences for many Canadians suffering from economic adversity. Previously this was a special tax break given to our senior citizens. I would urge all Members of this House on all sides, in all political Parties, to consider repealing these provisions of the Act so that it can revert back to the way it was previously.

PUBLIC SERVICE

TRIBUTE TO OFFICIALS

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to your attention and that of this House a change in attitude which I have seen developing in the short time the Progressive Conservatives have formed the Government.

I have in my hand a copy of a letter sent to me by one of my constituents, a Mr. Mike Mallory, concerning a situation which arose in the course of his business. Mr. Mallory originally approached me last fall, concerned about an impending meeting with Canada Customs officials. I assured him that the meeting would be conducted in a most positive, business-like fashion, and I was hopeful his problems could be resolved. I am sure you will be as delighted as I am, Mr. Speaker, to learn that I have recently received a letter from my constituent praising the high level of professionalism and co-operation which he found. This occurred not only in dealing with people from Revenue Canada in the Customs and Excise Branch, but with all members of the Civil Service with whom he came in contact.

I think that all Canadians can be proud of and applaud the situation which has evolved a new spirit of co-operation between Government, the Civil Service, and private industry, one that will surely bode well for all Canadians in years to come.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

PURCHASE OF UNIFORMS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of the country the completely irrational plan of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) to buy new uniforms for the Armed Forces at a cost of $36 million. The Minister knows that the majority of people in the Armed Forces have never worn a uniform other than the one they have. He should know that members of all ranks are now criticizing this irrational plan to spend 36 million hard-to-find defence dollars on new and unnecessary uniforms.

I would point out to the Minister that one of the most pressing needs of Canadians from the Department of National Defence is not new coats of many colours, or new, high-tech star wars machines. What we need is more search and rescue helicopters on the West Coast, and the proper deployment of the five existing helicopters at Comox. The Minister knows that the cost of doing that would be only $10 million. Why is the Minister spending $36 million on new suits when $10 million would save lives?

FINANCE

TAXATION OF AIRLINE EMPLOYEE BENEFITS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, remember November 12, 1981? That was the day the Hon. Allan MacEachen promised equity in the tax system. The legacy of his disastrous Budget will haunt ordinary working Canadians forever. The unfair taxation of travel privileges of Canadian airline employees is just one example. Lost among regressive proposals like the revocation of tax deductions for Canadian pensioners and the attempt to tax Canadian workers on health plan contributions, the taxation of airline passes survives the massive public criticism which swamped the MacEachen Budget.

Here is how the tax measure was implemented. Any employee of a Canadian airline who receives a confirmed seat on a flight and who pays less than half of the regular economy fare would be taxed on the difference between the amount paid and 50 per cent of this fare.

This week Air Canada announced its new Red Tag fares. To travel from Toronto to Vancouver the new fare is $299 compared to the regular economy fare of $810, a reduction of more than 60 per cent. In the result, an ordinary Canadian travels for less than 40 per cent of the regular economy fare and pays no extra tax. An Air Canada employee paying the same fare is taxed on an alleged benefit of $106.

The former Liberal Minister of Finance has gone to his political reward, but airline employees will pay for his mistakes.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF UNITED NATIONS PROGRAM

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has placed great importance on Canada remaining silent, which can only be interpreted as support for star wars research and the escalating that will flow from it. The Minister believes in the theology that, once negotiations start, Canadian anxiety over star wars research should not be expressed for fear that our views would disrupt negotiations. He also believes that it is virtuous to resist pressures from home and refrain at any cost from conveying to the United States Government Canadian concerns on this very important issue.

This argument is spurious but, be that as it may, the Minister owes an explanation to this House and the country as to why, on the one hand, he is supportive of research programs in outer space which may one day destroy all of us, but fails to increase Canada's contribution to the United Nations environment program whose role is to find ways and means of protecting the environment on this planet and ultimately the protection of all of humanity.

If outer space research is to go on for the sake of negotiations, why does the Minister not at least ensure that environmental research at home and abroad, and through the UN environment program, is awarded the same support by the Government as it is now giving the star wars program?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM—PROTECTION OF JOBS

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, concerning the Department of National Defence let me say that with this Government a commitment made is a commitment kept. Some three years ago the Minister of National Defence of the day announced the stand-down of the operational squadron at Canadian Forces Base Chatham. That came like a bombshell because there was no other commitment, statement, or solution to the plight of hundreds of public servants who stood to lose their jobs. I believe the Minister's statement at the time was something to the effect that it was a wonderful opportunity for them to use their initiative. Well, they did, Mr. Speaker. For the first time in 42 years they turned out in record numbers to vote, and vote Conservative.

Just before Christmas our Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) kept faith with the people of New Brunswick, kept faith with the people of Miramichi, by announcing a military package that will ensure the jobs, livelihood, and future of these loyal public servants well into the next century. On their behalf I thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of National Defence for keeping the faith and for keeping a promise.

AIR CANADA

ACTIONS AFFECTING WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the anti-west bias continues under Conservatives.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: In spite of loud proclamations from the Conservative Party and its Leader before the election, and more since forming the Government, about a better deal for western Canada, this Government continues the ways of the old Liberal regime by allowing the removal of services from western cities, and by continuing the discriminatory actions of the previous Government.

The three latest slaps to western Canada are the removal of 43 Air Canada reservations employees from Regina and Saskatoon, some to Winnipeg and some to the unemployment line, and Air Canada's refusal to allow low-price seat sales in these same two cities. In addition, the Ministry of Transport intends to remove the RCMP security officers from Regina airport.

The Liberals denuded Regina of weather forecasters, air traffic controllers, customs and excise personnel, our income tax files, and now the Conservatives are continuing this discriminatory treatment. We call on the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to do his duty to his native west and use his powers to require Air Canada to retain its reservations offices in Regina and Saskatoon, offer seat sales in Saskatchewan, and maintain the RCMP officers on security duty at Regina airport, the city which is their home and the home of the RCMP.

The Tories promised us jobs. When are they going to deliver them, instead of getting rid of them?

STAR WARS

PURPOSE OF STAR WARS PROJECT

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to express my views on the new nuclear defence system proposed by President Regan.

The Star Wars project of the American President, which has the support of the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), is a revolutionary concept in defensive weaponry whose purpose in the long run is to make it possible to eradicate all nuclear missiles from the surface of the earth or at least to prevent their constant proliferation which has been worrying us for several years.

I am surprised that the Opposition should be so bitterly critical of a project which would allow us to reduce substantially the likelihood of a holocaust. This weapon system is much more moral than any other because its aim is to destroy enemy weapons and not people. Confrontation with our American neighbours has been the attitude of the opposition for many years. This program has unleashed many passions. Certain experts question the fact that the Americans and their allies will ever be able to develop this new technology. They say that the basic principle, which is to install in space a 100-meter mirror 36,000 kilometers from earth, is unworkable. Of course, the risks are great and often impossible to evaluate, but it is important to believe in our potential. We have to support a partner which is spending enormous amounts of money for our security.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the Canadian people will understand and support our position, which is realistic and basically humane, because where weapons are concerned morality is not to allow one's destruction by claiming one is a pacifist, but rather by choosing the lesser of two evils.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DISTRIBUTION OF INFORMATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government plans to create a super information agency in an effort tantamount to creating a Pravda Canada.

The year 1984 may be over, but the spirit of George Orwell's Nineteen Eighty-Four is alive, well, and living within the Conservative Government. The Tory Big Brother, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), has imposed his authoritarian presence in all Government Departments. Typically, he has done it in the same covert manner which marked previous Tory communications schemes, such as the Public Service gag order imposed last September.

The Conservative Government is also continuing its arrogant and cynical disregard for promises and commitments made to Canadians prior to the election. The Conservatives in opposition were vocally opposed to Information Canada a decade ago, and opposed to the Canadian Unity Information Office. In Government, they are creating a giant system which dwarfs the Canadian Unity Information Office. Instead of open government, the Conservatives are providing closed government, in which all information is to be carefully manipulated by central government, real Big Brother government.

The centralized information agency will also further the politicization of the Public Service by putting major government information programs in the hands of the private sector. A fitting name for the super agency would indeed be Pravda Canada.

AIRPORTS

CALL FOR INSTALLATION OF RADAR AT VICTORIA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, last week the Ministry of Transport issued a press release describing the impending improvements to double the passenger handling facilities over the next 18 months at Victoria International Airport. The announcement indicated that possibly radar would be installed as early as 1987 or 1988.

Victoria Airport serves the provincial capital. Greater Victoria is a tourist mecca. Victoria International Airport is as described, an international airport, and is an emergency or diversion airport for Vancouver. Victoria is one of the ten busiest airports in Canada.

Radar, an essential safety device, is long overdue and long promised. I urge most strenuously that the Government reconsider its timetable and install this most necessary equipment as soon as possible.

VIA RAIL

NEED FOR WINNIPEG REPAIR SHOP

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, one can only approve of recent announcements by the Minister of Transport pertaining to the reinstatement of passenger rail services that were cancelled by the Liberals, and one can only hope that the announced intention to upgrade, modernize, and expand passenger rail service will be followed up with real money and concrete action.

However, if such modernization and upgrading do take place, then sooner or later VIA must have a new repair facility in the West, and in Winnipeg in particular, if logic and common sense are to be heeded. I therefore regret that the VIA repair shop scheduled to be built in Winnipeg appears to be on indefinite hold, or even cancelled.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) ought not to make the same mistake made by the former Minister of Transport, the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and be tempted to allocate such facilities on a political basis. It was the selection of the Fort Rouge site in Winnipeg, which just happened to be in the riding of the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, over other potential sites, without consulting the city or the railways, that endangered the project in the first place. The City of Winnipeg then compounded the problem with delay, thereby giving the new Conservative Government the opportunity to play its own brand of politics with the project.

I call on the present Minister of Transport to rise above the politics of the issue, show the foresight that I know he is capable of, and ensure that Winnipeg is indeed the place for new VIA facilities in the West.

AIR CANADA

TENDERING PROCESS FOR EXPO PAVILION CONTRACT

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the House a matter concerning Air Canada. This was brought to my attention by a segment of the construction industry. Air Canada has used a method of select tendering for its Expo pavilion, which is perfectly legal and which it is free to do.

However, as a result of its selection process there has been the elimination of 10 to 12 companies that were interested in submitting a tender for the pavilion. The non union firms, of which there were two, were also not invited to submit a tender. I am suspicious of why the non union firms were excluded. Perhaps Air Canada feels that non union firms are incapable of building pavilions at Expo, even though a number of pavilions have already been awarded to non union firms. I fail to see how Air Canada's tender selection process can be the most cost effective if competition among firms is minimized.

CANADIAN UNITY

RENEGOTIATION OF CONSTITUTION WITH QUEBEC

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last December the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada made it clear that constitutional talks with Quebec were not a high priority for his Government.

This morning, the newspaper Le Devoir reported that apparently the Prime Minister was now prepared to start constitutional talks with Quebec and to accelerate the process.

My question to the Prime Minister is as follows: Since at its convention last weekend, the Parti Québécois decided that the issue of sovereignty or independence would not be part of its election program in the next provincial election, and since, according to Premier Lévesque, an election would be held in a matter of months, is it true that the Prime Minister of Canada is prepared to resume constitutional talks with Quebec with a view to reaching an agreement with the Quebec Government before the next election?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I said anything about encouraging the kind of proposals reported in Le Devoir or elsewhere.

I was asked yesterday whether I thought Mr. Lévesque had a mandate to negotiate. I said: Of course. He is the duly elected Premier of Quebec and he has a mandate to negotiate in constitutional as well as economic matters. The fact that he is nearing the end of his term does not in any way restrict, I would think, the scope of his mandate.

That being said, we have always stated that our concern was basically economic, but we certainly would not prevent the premier of a province from submitting proposals in another area.

This was in connection with a meeting we had with Mr. Lévesque, at which he indicated his priorities and said he might be submitting some constitutional proposals after Easter. I said at the time that I would be delighted, as the Prime Minister of Canada, to consider objectively such proposals.

I still believe that Quebec's concerns are basically economic, but I am nevertheless willing to meet with the Premier of Quebec at any time with a view to seeking a formula for bringing Quebec within a Canadian constitutional agreement.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister referred to Mr. Lévesque's mandate. He must be aware that in a motion passed by the National Assembly of Quebec on November 24, 1981, the Government of Quebec laid down its conditions for resumption of constitutional talks. Could the Prime Minister of Canada inform the House what his Government intends to put on the table to show its good faith, after the gesture made by the Parti Québécois, the Quebec Government, last weekend, in order to achieve a speedy integration of Quebec within the new constitutional framework created following patriation of the Canadian Constitution?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I think it may be somewhat premature and even undiplomatic on my part to submit any proposals when it is understood, as Mr. Lévesque said himself in Quebec City, that the ball is in his court. And he was right. It is true that a number of proposals were adopted by the National Assembly in the fall of 1981, which probably will be part of a constitutional discussion. I am aware of that, and after Easter I will be ready to consider the situation outlined by Mr. Lévesque, and see if the proposals are still the same, whether any minor or major changes have been made.

QUEBEC—CONSTITUTIONAL REVISION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's attitude does not seem to reflect the same enthusiasm as this morning's report. May I ask him whether he is prepared to put the issue of constitutional review for Quebec on the agenda of his meeting with the Provincial Premiers on February 14?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, because our priority remains the economy. The agenda for Regina was set with the unanimous consent of all provinces and all premiers. The problems to be discussed are economic ones, and that is what we are going to work on.

Mr. Lévesque said publicly that after Easter he would be ready and willing to submit specific constitutional proposals, and at that time I may start the negotiating or consultation process at the federal level.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM INDUSTRY DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, before the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources pushes that instant replay button on the benefits of consultation, or breaks her arm patting herself on the back—

Miss MacDonald: That is John Turner.

Mr. Johnston: —I want to tell her that we support her in pre-budget consultations—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: —the preceding Government having carried on the most significant and broadest pre-budget consultations in the history of Confederation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: We even went so far, Mr. Speaker, as to consult with the head of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Dennis McDermott.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: The Minister knows that there is a difference between that kind of consultation and secret negotiations and secret commitments given behind closed doors to a particular sector or interest group. Would the Minister confirm that any commitments given in those secret negotiations with the petroleum interests were no different from the public commitments given by spokesmen for her Party?

Mr. Deans: That is a home-run ball.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, it is a lob.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly tell the House that any commitments made were, as the Prime Minister said, commitments that we made in public during the election campaign. There were no commitments of any sort made at all to the oil industry or any other industry behind closed doors.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: I suppose we are left wondering why then negotiations took place behind closed doors if the only commitments were those made in public, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

IPAC PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources confirm, in response effectively to a question from the Leader of the Opposition yesterday, that officials or Ministers in the Government contacted the IPA yesterday to suggest that Mr. Morgan issue a new statement changing the position he had initially taken? Could that be confirmed?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first there are no negotiations taking place at all with the oil industry. As the Hon. Member does not understand, the only negotiations taking place are between myself and my provincial colleagues, and they are still in process.

In terms of the Hon. Member's other suggestion, it is just truly offensive.

Mr. Gauthier: You did not answer the question.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—COMPENSATION INQUIRY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. Press reports this week have suggested that the Government may be considering unilateral action on the matter of compensation to the Japanese-Canadian community for the injustice that community suffered during the Second World War. In the light of the comments of the Minister on leaving the Planning and Priorities Committee of the Cabinet this morning, could he confirm to the House that the Government has not yet made any decision to take any such arbitrary action on this matter?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, the Government is attempting to pursue what we consider and what we hope is a just and honourable course. I hope that the Hon. Member and his Party, and members of the Liberal Party, join us in what I believe is a very worth-while task and objective.

Mr. Deans: We are not involved yet.

Mr. Benjamin: It's been going on since 1942.

Mr. Murta: What I indicated to the press this morning is that the Government House Leader is in the process of having discussions with the opposition House Leaders. Until those discussions are completed, I am not in a position and I will not comment publicly on what may or may not transpire.

GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, given the complexity of the issues involved in this matter of appropriate redress to the Japanese-Canadian community, will the Minister assure the House that the Government will not take any action before it has arrived at an agreement with the National Association of Japanese Canadians?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, we have attempted to have as broad-ranging a discussion on this very important matter as is possible. As I indicated to the Hon. Member, certainly later today, and if not today, tomorrow, hopefully, the discussions can be concluded so that this House of Commons may proceed in some form at least to acknowledge what I think we all would agree has been something long overdue in this country.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Forty-three years.

DEADLINE INQUIRY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. Given the statement from his own Ministry in December that a process of negotiation had begun, and given that there have been only a couple of meetings since then which served to explore the parameters of various questions and came nowhere near to an agreement, will the Minister assure this House and the National Association of Japanese Canadians that he will not impose early deadlines as a way of forcing an agreement on something that is so important to national honour?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows, I believe, and so does the National Association of Japanese-Canadians, as do the Japanese-Canadians themselves, that what we entered into in December was a discussion with them, not a negotiation of any sort. They know that. The Hon. Member knows that. In my opinion we have had fruitful discussions. We have been able to set down both sides of the issues. As I said to the Hon. Member in my two previous answers, we hope that this matter will be dealt with in the House of Commons by all Members in a very appropriate and honourable way in the near future.

CANADIAN UNITY

MAIN CONDITION FOR QUEBEC ACCEPTANCE OF CONSTITUTIONAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and stems from an article published this morning in the Montreal daily Le Devoir. Could the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether he finds acceptable the first condition set by Quebec's Assemblée nationale as a prerequisite to signing the Constitutional agreement and which reads as follows: "It should be recognized that the two founding nations of Canada are basically equal and that Quebec forms within the Canadian federation a distinct society which has its own language, culture, and institutions, and which possesses all the attributes of a distinct national entity"? If he does not find it acceptable, what changes does he think should be made, so that Quebec might sign the Constitutional agreement as soon as possible?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that I cannot answer such a hypothetical question. I think that on such a vital issue as the Constitutional dialogue, we should avoid ambiguity at all costs. Elementary caution demands that I await, as agreed with Mr. Lévesque, the specific written proposals which Quebec is to submit after Easter. Once we have had the opportunity to study and analyse them thoughtfully, I shall tell my counterpart what I think of these proposals as a whole and not only on some isolated parameter.

Mr. Garneau: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The question which I have just directed to the Prime Minister is in no way a hypothetical question. It has to do with a specific motion that has been passed unanimously by the Assemblée nationale. I should like to ask the Prime Minister under what terms . . . I suggest that it is a thoroughly valid condition which could serve as an interesting basis for discussion. It seems to me that if the Prime Minister would indicate to the House and to the Canadian people under what terms his government is planning to negotiate—because for negotiations to happen both sides have to forward proposals—if he could give us some indication on such a simple matter, that could facilitate the forthcoming debate.

Mr. Mulroney: What we are trying to do, Mr. Speaker, is to restore a climate of confidence between the Federal government and the Quebec government, between all Quebecers and all other Canadians, and I suggest things are developing rather nicely. We are building bridges of trust and trying to bury the Liberal tradition of systematic mistrust which has existed far too long in Canada. That is what we are trying to do.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM COMPENSATION CHARGE—ACCOUNT DEFICIT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy who is becoming quite a patsy for the oil industry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Given that the Minister has committed herself to changing the PGRT to a profits based tax, resulting in more money for the oil industry, and that when the Government goes to world oil prices four large American controlled oil companies in Canada will make over $234 million as a windfall, will the Minister give a commitment to the Canadian consumer that the consumer will not have to pay the $1 billion deficit which is now running in the Petroleum Compensation Charge? Will the Minister give a commitment to the House and to the Canadian consumer that she will tax back that windfall to oil companies?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the $1 billion deficit in the petroleum account was left by the Liberal Government, with the full support and encouragement of the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The Canadian consumer who is now paying more than world prices—it is not more than world prices but he is paying a high, high price for oil—

Mr. Riis: You had it right the first time.

Miss Carney: —can thank the Hon. Member for the privilege.

REDUCTION OF DEFICIT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Minister that I do not care what the previous Liberal Government left behind. The Minister has a problem—from where will she get this money? She can smile, but she has a problem. How does she propose to pay for this $1 billion deficit in the Petroleum Compensation Charge? Will the Government absorb it, or will she take it from the industry? Will she get it from Premier Lougheed, or will she charge the Canadian consumer?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Hon. Member is addressing his question to the wrong Minister, because this is a budgetary matter and does not fall within energy. However, I could point out once again that the problems this energy industry faces, and the problems which are being experienced by consumers, are the direct legacy of the Liberal Government that was supported by the NDP.

IPAC PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. How can the Minister say that the federal Government has not coached Mr. Morgan in what he should say in reply to his statement on CBC radio yesterday, when Mr. Morgan in his own statement today says the Government is consulting with the fishing industry on fishing policy, and with farmers on agricultural policy, something over which—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLellan: Well, we have just heard from "Incompetence Overload". Would the Minister tell us how Mr. Morgan would have information on those negotiations, something that did not happen before the campaign, unless the federal Government put those questions in his ear?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLellan: What I would like to know from the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I have heard one question.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to assure the Hon. Member that possibly the reason Mr. Morgan is aware of the consultative process is that, unlike the Hon. Member, he reads the papers. It is no secret that my colleague from Vancouver has been consulting with the fishing industry. It is no secret that my other colleagues have been consulting with a whole range of interests in Canada. This is because we are a new Government, and we intend to bring in changes in consultation and in co-operation with Canadians.

CONSUMER INTEREST

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, what do those consultations have to do with what happened before the election? That was the point of contention. The only point which was not contained in Mr. Morgan's statement was the fact that the consumer has been forgotten. What will the Minister do to tell consumers what the actual conversation and vested interest were with the industry?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member follow the dictates of his leader to have caucus solidarity. We have already had one of his front-benchers say that he supports our consultative process.

For the record, let me quote Mr. Morgan's remarks after this dead horse had been flogged yesterday. He said:

> The unfortunate problem was that the story—the lead-in to the story created the impression that we had some sort of a special deal. Nothing could be further from the truth.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SENATE COMMITTEE REPORT—SPACE PROGRAM RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. He will have had time to read at least the recommendations in the report of the Special Senate Committee on Canadian Air Defence. In the report the Senate calls for Canada to develop its own national military space program. In view of the fact that the Minister, the Prime Minister, and their Government have failed to repudiate the U.S. star wars program, will the Minister tell the House that Canada has no intention of going ahead with its own star wars program?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we in this Party appreciate very much the excellent work done by the special defence committee of the other place. It was a most useful exercise which will be of value to our Party and to the people of Canada as we move forward in the discussion of a white paper to determine what defence priorities Canada should be looking at in the next five years, and maybe the next 15 years.

CONSIDERATION OF GREEN PAPER

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question. He did not say whether Canada would proceed with its own strategic defence initiative. The Minister has made a lot of fudgy statements both inside and outside the House. Will he tell the House today when the green paper is coming on for consideration, and when the special defence committee will be able to look at it so that we can clear the air which the Minister has sort or murked over.

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will be very specific to the Hon. Member. The green paper should be ready and available in early March. As soon as it is available, we will proceed to have the white paper discussion. I say again that the Senate committee report will be very helpful as part of the total discussion that will be held by Canadians.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PRODUCE PRICE GOUGING

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Recently, record low temperatures in Florida damaged citrus and vegetable crops. It was reported that Canadian consumers could expect higher produce prices as a result. As early as Monday of this week, grocery retailers in Canada were hit with wholesale produce price increases of as much as 100 per cent which will, of course, be passed on to Canadian consumers. This is existing stock, unaffected by Florida crops. What protection can the Minister offer Canadian shoppers against this blatant act of price gouging?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reassure the Hon. Member. Of course, we are concerned with food price increases. We are monitoring the situation very closely and we intend to made adequate representations to that effect in due course.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

NATO SECRETARY GENERAL'S SPEECH

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. As he knows, Lord Carrington, in a major speech in Toronto yesterday, said that the United States should consult Canada and its other allies when drawing up contingency plans for the deployment of nuclear weapons on their soil, and not leave consultation until times of crisis. The Minister of National Defence has already made it clear to this House and to all Canadians that he was uninformed about such proposals which dealt with Canada floating around the Pentagon. So much for in-depth briefings. Even though the Minister denied there are any such plans or proposals, will he give his absolute commitment to this House and to all Canadians that Canada will be involved in even the initial discussion stages of all such plans because, as Lord Carrington clearly states, it is too late to negotiate once a crisis exists?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I say to my colleague and friend that Lord Carrington is a very wise man. I am sure that our friends in the United States and our other NATO allies will pay very close attention to what he said here in Canada. We certainly will, and I am sure the people in the United States will as well.

CANADA-UNITED STATES CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, as usual the Minister was very evasive and took off on cloud nine instead of a CF-18. Because the Minister is so adamant about saying that Canadians will be consulted, and he said that before, will he explain to the House why he, as Minister of National Defence for Canada, was not even consulted or informed in any way about proposed Pentagon contingency discussions to deploy nuclear weapons in Canada when he had his in-depth meetings in Washington just a few weeks ago?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hopkins: Is he, or is he not, in favour of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I said last week, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs said last week, that we will be consulted, and that will be the case.

FORESTRY

CANADA-BRITISH COLUMBIA REFORESTATION AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry. I am sure most Members know that forestry is the largest industry in Canada. A full 50 per cent of the timber harvested comes from British Columbia. In light of that, will the Minister explain why he and his Cabinet colleagues are only prepared to put forward $30 million per year for the five year Canada-B.C. reforestation agreement, when the University of British Columbia has identified a need for $600 million a year, and his own officials have identified a need for $200 million a year? Why so little money for B.C.?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, it should be no secret to the Hon. Member that this Government at least supports the industry with the appointment of a Minister. We have been able to sign two agreements, one with Alberta and one with Ontario. The negotiations are in the final stages with the Province of British Columbia and the Province of Quebec. Hopefully we will be able to announce something in the near future.

SIZE OF FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and his Cabinet are now looking at the amount of money that goes to British Columbia. A study has been completed by the Canadian Forest Service which concludes that between 25 and 35 per cent of the forest industry will collapse if there is not a proper reforestation agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Fulton: Is the Prime Minister prepared to put forward the amount of money that has been identified as required by the federal Government, $200 million a year?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we recognize the vital importance of the forest products industry to Canada and, I suppose in a special way, to British Columbia. I want to tell my hon. friend—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: There is it is, Mr. Speaker; we are talking about trying to help British Columbia and the NDP are laughing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: There is a typical NDP stunt. Notwithstanding the frivolous attitude of the NDP, this Government will bring substantial help to the forest industry in British Columbia because we believe that it is vital to national economic renewal.

PARLIAMENT HILL

PRESENCE OF PEACE CAMP

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. I asked the Minister questions with respect to the Peace Camp earlier this session. He suggested that the Camp would likely go away with the cold weather. The weather got cold, it is getting warmer, and it will soon be spring. What action will the Government be taking with respect to this use of public property, or is the Government going to allow other protest groups to establish protest camps on the front lawn of Parliament?

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I feel inclined to say I am exercising as much patience as those people in the peace camp.

However, if my hon. colleague is concerned that other groups might want to set up camp on Parliament Hill, I would suggest that a decision might then be taken rapidly.

I said of course that I would wait and see. It seemed then that the peace camp would end before the holiday season but I will give every consideration to the representations made by my hon. colleague.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CYPRUS ANVIL MINE AT FARO, YUKON

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It concerns the future of the Cyprus Anvil mine and the people of Faro, Yukon. As the Minister knows, in 1983 the Liberal Government re-opened this mine and kept the town alive. The mine has again closed and all the Minister has done so far is to appoint a special adviser. His report has been delayed three times. Has the Minister heard from Mr. Lassonde? If so, has he anything to recommend concerning the future of this mine and the people of Faro?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, I appointed Mr. Pierre Lassonde to represent the Government in discussions with the parties who could effectively open the mine. That process for opening the mine has been going on since that appointment. I believe it is going reasonably well. I met with Mr. Lassonde a week ago. He gave me a preliminary report and asked for further instructions with respect to discussions with certain other parties. I gave him those instructions. I expect a report in the very near future and, when I reveive that report, I will advise the House and the Hon. Member.

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister if it is not time to be open and honest with the House and tell us clearly and unequivocally that, as a result of the Government's inaction, the Cyprus Anvil mine will not be opened and the Town of Faro has in fact been written off.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Hon. Member will know, I am always open and honest with the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: In that spirit, I hope he will not mind if I remind him that the mine was closed under the administration of the former Government. I am trying to open it. Further, I can assure him that as soon as I have the information that allows us to open that mine, I will hold nothing back and make sure that Members of the House understand it first.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LEGISLATION'S DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Minister has promised to bring in a Bill to end the discrimination against Indian women which is contained in the Indian Act. Because of the complexity of the question, it is important that the committee have adequate time to consider it, and it is also important that this Bill be passed before the Charter of Rights comes into play early in April. I would ask the Minister if he could tell the House when he will be tabling the Bill, and if he could tell us whether or not the Bill will contain provisions for the reinstatement of Indian women which are in line with the Edmonton consensus reached last spring between the Assembly of First Nations and the Native Women's Association of Canada?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member may know, the matter needs to be dealt with by the spring and, as a consequence, I expect to bring in the Bill within the next two or three weeks. I have been carrying on discussions with affected groups and parties across the country. I will conclude those discussions by the end of this week. Therefore, I think the Bill will be in place for the House to discuss within about three weeks.

AMENDING PROVISIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question as to whether or not the Bill would provide for reinstatement. I would like him to answer that question, and also to assure the House that there will be adequate financial provision in the Bill so that the full burden of 100 years of government-imposed sexism will not be placed upon Indian Bands or left with Indian women. Will the Minister assure us that there will be reinstatement and that there will be financial provisions?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member will want to wait until he sees the Bill. Suffice it to say that I have discussed with a number of people the provisions that are contained in the Edmonton consensus. I understand the significance of the success of the Bill. I can also indicate to him that when this Bill is before the House I think it will receive the unanimous support of all Members of the House, because it will deal with the matters that have been raised by the Hon. Member.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN PENSIONS

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. On two recent occasions the Minister of Finance told the veterans of Canada that they would receive increases in their pensions that would either reflect parity with the average income of five categories of public servants or the increase in the Consumer Price Index, whichever is the greater. Can the Minister explain why, effective January 1, 1985, veterans are receiving increases that reflect the lower of the two options?

Hon. Georges Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I am really touched.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question, unfortunately the funds available do not make it possible to pay this very generous and well deserved increase to our veterans retroactively. If it were possible, it would be done. There is a limit to funds, and the funds that are available will be used in the most effective manner on behalf of our very deserving veterans.

REQUEST FOR RETROACTIVITY—VETERAN'S PENSIONS

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary, I would ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether it would not be better to stop telling veterans that we are being so tremendously generous with those who served this country well. My question is this: Is it possible to bring in amendments providing that the better of the two solutions would apply, in order that there be some sort of retroactivity—even though the funds are increasing you already have $22 million as announced by the Minister of Finance—so that as of January 1st, 1985, veterans might enjoy what we have so often promised them?

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, last year, and for the last 12 years, despite the strong protests of veterans, the former Government insisted on making the increase in these pensions equal to the increase in the Consumer Price Index and not, as we are doing now, making the increase the larger of either the increase in the Consumer Price Index or the five categories of public servants' pay. That is what will be contained in the new legislation that will be presented. It will be part of a very generous and good package of legislation that will be introduced very soon. Last year alone, the refusal of the Government to give the veterans the benefit of whichever of those figures was the most generous, and its insistence on paying the increase according to the increase in the Consumer Price Index alone, cost each pensioner $611, money that they had to do without.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST SALMON TREATY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to point out that at this time British Columbia is not a happy place in which laughing goes on, but has the highest unemployment rate in the country created by his role-model, Bill Bennett, through the same kind of policies that he is putting in place.

My question deals with the West Coast salmon interception treaty. Would the Prime Minister assure the House that he is not preventing that treaty from being referred to the House of Commons and to the Fisheries Committee because he wants to have something to sign with Ronald Reagan when he meets with him in Quebec City in March? Could he give the House the assurance that he is not holding up that treaty that will affect every British Columbian who lives in a community on the coast of B.C.?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the contrary. The treaty was unsigned and in the negotiating process for some 15 or 16 years. We managed to conclude it. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is or very shortly will be on his way to British Columbia to sign the treaty so that we can begin the process of benefiting West Coast fishermen who desperately and genuinely need help. That is what it is all about.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, this treaty affects sovereignty, access to resources and the life of every British Columbian. If the Prime Minister would clarify the matter, everyone in the House would appreciate it. However, it is my understanding that the Government refuses to allow that treaty, which affects us all, to go to committee. Will the Prime Minister give us his assurance that he will halt the process of trying to get a show-piece for Quebec and refer the matter to committee?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a classic NDP situation: "Move, but go backward". That is exactly what the Hon. Member is saying.

This morning, Cabinet passed an Order in Council instructing the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to proceed as quickly as possible in the interests of British Columbia fishermen and in the interests of Canada.

Mr. Skelly: No consultations whatsoever.

Mr. Mulroney: This does not preclude any further discussion or consultation. However, we must move ahead in the interests of British Columbia and West Coast fishermen.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTRAL COMMUNICATIONS AGENCY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services concerning the super-duper communication agency, which would control everything from press releases to public opinion polls.

Last week, the people in the Minister's office denied having seen the document and stated that they could not comment on it. They thought it had been completed by over-zealous officials. Now that the Minister is better informed, can he appraise the House of his position, and tell us whether he intends or not to establish such a central communication agency within the Canadian Government?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, not only do we have no intentions of establishing any central, super, new Information Canada or CUIO, we have never had any intentions of doing that. Furthermore, the document in question never suggested that. In fact the whole thing is a figment of somebody's imagination.

REQUEST THAT DOCUMENT BE TABLED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, if such a thing is a figment of two different reporters' imaginations, would the Minister then undertake to table the document in the House so that all Members of the House, the media, and the public at large can be reassured that the Deputy Prime Minister is not attempting again to control the flow of information from the Government to the public of Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, what the Member is suggesting is that a discussion paper document which was drawn up by some public servants, and was never shown to the Minister, should be tabled in the House. The reality is, as the members of his Party and the Leader of the New Democratic Party have indicated, that advice to the Minister must be kept confidential. This advice which was supposedly being prepared for my attention. I have never received it. When the Cabinet makes a decision with regard to any changes, the Member, along with everybody else, will know. But I can assure the Member that Information Canada—the invention of the Liberal Party—will not be repeated by this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Citizens United for Safety and Justice believe that unrehabilitated sex and violent offenders should not be released into our communities. The undersigned 25,480 petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reinstate the death penalty for the killing of police officers and prison guards, premeditated murder and murder committed during forcible confinement and sexual assault.

CLOSURE OF CLEARWATER, B.C., MILL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of hundreds of people from the community of Clearwater, British Columbia. They are concerned about the closing of Clearwater Timber Products and ask the Parliament of Canada to apply what pressure it possibly can, through the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), to assist the corporation to obtain a federal Government loan or other financial support to enable the Clearwater Timber Products mill to reopen.

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations with the Opposition House Leaders, and I think you will find a predisposition to accept the following order of reference motion at this time by unanimous consent. The motion is as follows:

That the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture be empowered to study all aspects of copyright revision;

That the document entitled "From Gutenburg to Telidon, A White Paper on Copyright: Proposals for the Revision of the Canadian Copyright Act", tabled earlier this day, be referred to the Committee and that the Committee examine and report upon the proposals contained therein;

That the Committee be empowered to retain expert staff; and

That the Committee report its findings and recommendations no later than May 24, 1985.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Government House Leader have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader if he could give us the program for the business of the House for the ensuing week.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. House Leader of the Opposition will know, there have already been a number of discussions this week with respect to the business of the House and other matters. It is my intention to see what progress we make today and then consult again with the Opposition House Leaders.

As far as the beginning of next week is concerned, my inclination is that we will carry on with the order of business on Monday as it is today if progress is not made. I intend to discuss the matter on the basis of what happens with the legislation today. I intend to have a discussion tomorrow, and at that time I will possibly be more precise.

I should reiterate that tomorrow has been designated as an allotted day. Once we have a chance to meet, I will know whether I can give further indication of the House business for next week.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain) Mr. Speaker, on the question of House business, there may be a misinterpretation or misunderstanding in the House with regard to something called negotiations. I would like to have it made clear by the Government House Leader that we are not at this moment, nor have we ever been, negotiating the Japanese-Canadians Government agreement.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, if I offended the sensitivities of the Hon. House Leader of the New Democratic Party, I apologize. It was not my intention to misinterpret the position of the Party with respect to the issue. However, he will know that we have discussed different approaches and I have mentioned to him, in a tentative way, the fact that there are different approaches which might be taken with respect to the Japanese-Canadians issue. certainly, these negotiations have not called upon the Hon. Member to indicate a position. I did that purely and simply to keep him apprised of the Government's intentions, at the earliest possible date. I think I went further in indicating to him, without getting involved in presupposing decisions which would be made, some of the considerations which might be undertaken. Whether he wants to term that negotiations or discussions, I thought we were in the business of negotiating an agenda for House business.

Mr. Speaker: I am in some difficulty, because I think we are moving away from the normal tradition of asking questions and getting answers about the House business agenda into what is beginning to veer on some conversation that probably belongs somewhere else. However, I will accept a question from the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, it is simply that I want to assure the Hon. House Leader that I was not casting aspersions and neither was I offended. I simply did not want there to be a misunderstanding that we were in the process of negotiating the content of whatever the Government has discussed with the Japanese-Canadian community. To this point in time, all that has been done is that the matter has been raised.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I wish to confirm that in so far as there have been negotiations involving the Government House Leader, myself as Opposition House Leader and the House Leader for the NDP, they have pertained to how the House might deal with the Government's proposals for resolving the issue of the treatment of Japanese-Canadians. We have not been negotiating the content of any such proposal by the Government.

• (1510)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, all I want to say is that that is exactly what I said.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River have a question on House business?

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to have the House leader clarify that the Government has no intention this week of raising the matter of the west coast fishing treaty. Would he confirm that it is gone and is complete and that the Government has no intention of raising that matter this week, even though the Americans have not ratified and it will be appearing for consideration in the U.S. Senate? Could the House Leader give us any indication whether this matter will be referred to the House before it is written off? And will Canadians be given the same opportunity as U.S. citizens for some public input into this document?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I regard that as a third supplementary question to the two questions put by the Hon. Member in Question Period.

Mr. Speaker: On a separate matter of House business?

Mr. Skelly: Yes, it is on a matter of House business.

Mr. Speaker: No, on a separate matter of House business. Does the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River have another matter of House business he wishes to raise, a separate matter?

Mr. Skelly: I have a very important matter to raise.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 42, 45, 94 and 188.

[Text]

TREASURY BOARD—TEMPORARY ASSIGNMENT POOL

Question No. 42—Mr. Howie:

During the period (a) April 1, 1983 through November 30, 1983 (b) December 2, 1983 to date were any persons employed by the Treasury Board in a temporary assignment pool and, if so, how many and, in each case, what was the person's (i) salary level (ii) duties?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): The Temporary Assignment Program was established in 1974. The intention was to create a centrally managed pool of executives and other senior officers of demonstrated high levels of performance who could be loaned to departments on request, individually or in teams, for specific periods of time, to carry out policy reviews and similar activities without the need for, delay in, or cost associated with establishing continuing positions in those departments.

In the 10 years since its inception, participants in the program, which is managed on a cost recovery basis by Treasury Board Secretariat, have completed a total of 377 assignments in 54 departments.

(a) During the period from April 1, 1983 through November 30, 1983, the number of persons employed in the Temporary Assignment Program ranged from 37 to 41.

(b) From December 2, 1983 to November 30, 1984, there were from 33 to 40 persons employed in the Temporary Assignment Program.

Effective November 30, 1984, (i) the salary level and (ii) duties of TAP's participants were as follows:

(i) Three officials with salaries ranging from $68,870 to $80,970 (EX 4 level), thirteen officials with salaries ranging from $63,000 to 74,050 (EX 3 level), seven officials with salaries ranging from $58,050 to $68,500 (EX 2 level), five officials with salaries ranging from $53,210 to $62,530 (EX 1 level), seven officials with salaries ranging from $50,350 to $59,220 (SM level).

(ii) The duties of TAP officers comprise planning, directing, co-ordinating and implementing new or revised programs of major consequence to the Government of Departments, and carrying out program evaluations, policy analysis and planning of existing programs, particularly in areas where reorganizations are contemplated.

Typical assignments:

NHW, Chief Negotiator, Office for the 1988 Olympic Winter Games

CSC, Special Advisor, Conditions of Employment of the operational employees

DRIE, Advisor, Industrial Benefits Policy Program Implementation related to major Defence Procurements Project

SEC, Director General, Policy Coordination Management System and Analysis

RTP, Executive Director, Petroleum Industry Inquiry

PCO, Chairman, Indepartmental Working Group on Conflict of Interest

TAX, Special Advisor to Deputy Minister, Woods Gordon Review

DND, Task Force Co-ordinator, review of National Defence Activities

TBS, Director, Asset Management Study

EXT, Co-ordinator of the Management Plan Sector and Corporate Planning

NHW, Director General, Social Development

SEC, Director General, Promotion of Official Languages

CHR, Manager, amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act

SEC, Co-ordinator, Federal-Provincial-Territorial Ministerial Conference dealing with Canada's participation in the United Nations World program concerning Disabled Persons

TBS, Acting Director, Communications Division

STW, Group Chief, International Relations

EIC, Revitalization of the Employment Service

TBS, Special Advisor, Equal Pay for Work of Equal Value

CCA, Advisor to the Federal Co-ordinator on Urea Formaldehyde Foam Insulation

ACQUISITION OF NEW SHIPS

Question No. 45—Mr. Howie:

In 1984, does the Department of National Defence plan to place orders for the replacement or acquisition of new ships and, if so, how many?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): No.

Order Paper Questions

APPLICATIONS FOR LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Question No. 94—Mr. Redway:

How many applications were made by persons seeking landed immigrant status in (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 (d) 1982 (e) 1983 (f) 1984 to date and what is the average time required to process an application for landed immigrant status?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration):

	*Applications made overseas	Applications made from within Canada
(a) 1979	93,404	13,324
(b) 1980	94,873	13,255
(c) 1981	105,857	15,179
(d) 1982	96,522	15,891

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and on the amendment of Mr. Gray (Windsor West) (p. 1302).

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I welcome very much this opportunity to make a few comments with respect to Bill C-15. I am pleased to see my friend, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), the Hon. Member for York-Peel, in the House today.

This change of name from FIRA, Foreign Investment Review Agency, to Investment Canada, Mr. Speaker, is very much in keeping with the kind of approach which this Government has taken to date with respect to matters of government. Rhetoric, name changes, cosmetics rather than substance, seem really to be the order of the day when it comes to the policies or, I should say, lack thereof of the Tory Government since it assumed office on September 4. As Shakespeare said, a rose by any other name would smell as sweet, and I suggest that that is the underlying theme of what the Minister is trying to accomplish.

We were already told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), during the election campaign when he was Leader of the Opposition, that as soon as Knowlton Nash on television tells us the Tories have formed a majority Government, investment is going to flow into this country. I think in fact he actually believed that. However, Mr. Speaker, as you know from your experience in public life and as a Member of this House for some years, history has shown us how nervous capital can be. You can scare capital through rhetoric of the kind we heard from the Parti Quebecois. It is very easy to destroy confidence through rhetoric coming from responsible people in public life. It is much more difficult, however, Mr. Speaker, to instil confidence, to create an investment climate, simply through changing names and advancing rhetoric for consumption by Canadians and foreigners. We know that the warm Tory overtures to members of the business and investment communities have in fact produced nothing except warm expressions of appreciation.

I believe the Tories by this time should recognize that it requires more than name changes, rhetoric and dealing with Investment Canada; it involves dealing with a whole set of policies, none of which we have seen as yet. In fact, it is shameful when one considers that this Government assumed power in Canada on September 4 and we have to wait seven to eight months for a budget. We must wait that long for a budget from a Government which said: "When we arrive there, boy, are we going to do things". It has 211 elected Members to do those things. The Government was given a mandate by the Canadian people and it has refused to accept it.

As we in this House know, Mr. Speaker, and as Canadians soon will begin to recognize, I know this gang is not ready to govern Canada, but it is ready to offer us rhetoric, some tinkering around the edges, modifications and so on.

With respect to this particular Bill, Mr. Speaker, I attempted to actually read it in order to determine whether it really does what the accompanying literature says it does. I have come to the conclusion that perhaps it does but I cannot tell because it is so badly drafted. This document would give the Income Tax Act a run for its money, yet this is a document, Mr. Speaker, which is intended to simplify and streamline procedures and, we are told, to facilitate investment and create confidence.

I wanted to find out what the reviewable transactions really were so I turned to Clause 14, which provides:

(1) The following investments by non-Canadians are reviewable under this Part:

(a) an investment to acquire control of a Canadian business in any manner described in paragraph 28(1)(a), (b) or (c), where the limits set out in subsection (3) apply;

(b) an investment to acquire control of a Canadian business in the manner described in subparagraph 28(1)(d)(i), where the limits set out in subsection (3) apply;

(c) an investment to acquire control of a Canadian business in the manner described in subparagraph 28(1)(d)(ii), where the circumstances described in subsection (2) and the limits set out in subsection (3) apply; and

Finally we go on to another section where the limits set out as Subclause (4) apply, and the clause continues. My point is, Mr. Speaker, that this is a convoluted, complicated piece of legislation which in effect does nothing to simplify procedures.

I had an interesting conversation yesterday with a former colleague at the bar, who said his colleagues had been struggling to interpret sections of this new, simplified, streamlined Act which has been produced by the Conservative Government. We are told these initiatives are going to create jobs, and I can say to you, Mr. Speaker, that they are going to create a lot of jobs for the lawyers of this country who must once more educate themselves in the interpretation of this statute to determine whether or not it applies to the circumstances of their clients. This Government has indeed created jobs for Tories, for task forces, for consultants and now for lawyers. When the Prime Minister pats himself on the back with respect to all of the jobs which have been created, the 100,000 he refers to, he knows, you know, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues in caucus know, and those Hon. Members across the House and on either side know, that the reason those jobs are being created is because of the economic legacy left by the previous Government. More specifically, jobs are being created because of the rate of inflation which is driving down interest rates and encouraging investments. It has nothing whatsoever to do with anything this Government has done because in effect this Government has done nothing to date. However, this document will add thousands of man-hours of non-productive professional work simply to determine whether a particular investment is reviewable or not.

The Government would have us believe the whole operation is simpler. That is the rhetoric we hear. So far Canadians have given the Tories the benefit of the doubt. They have, if you like, been seeing things but not observing. They have been hearing things but they really have not been listening. They have not attempted to measure the performance of this Government against the rhetoric. If I were to characterize the attitude of the Canadian public today, they see but they do not listen. How else can we explain the widening gulf between the declarations of Government spokesmen on this Bill with what it in substance actually is? This has been happening since the Tories assumed power. It is nothing new.

Let me offer a few examples, if I may, just to underscore the point. The Tories heaped blame and ridicule on the previous Liberal Government because of what they called corporate bail-outs. Do you remember Massey-Ferguson, Mr. Speaker? Do you remember Chrysler? You know how they heaped blame and ridicule on us over that. Even after coming to power the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that throwing money at individual problems without treating or even examining the whole patient was surely unconscionable practice. The Government House Leader should listen to this; he is a member of Cabinet. When the first opportunity came to put this policy into action, what did the Government do? It succumbed to the temptation or solicitation of the Parti Québécois and pumped $15 million of taxpayers' money into Petromont. Shame!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We did not say we had no option.

Mr. Johnston: That was an investment which my Government refused to make even in the heat of an election campaign. Was there a public outcry? Where was Alberta during that particular period? You, Mr. Speaker, know where Alberta was. Where were all the other supporters of this Government? They were praying that this was an aberration in the performance they hoped to see from this Government. I fear it was not. I fear their prayers will go unanswered. That is certainly clear from this Bill.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate once more in this important debate. I think we have reached the stage where it is interesting to reflect on what has been taking place during this debate. I think at first there was a sense on the part of the Government that it would be able to whip this Bill very quickly through the House, get it into committee and passed. In fact, the Minister was even courageous enough at one point to say that he expected everything to be passed by the middle of March. I think, Mr. Speaker, that things are taking place in the country which make that prospect less and less likely.

As this debate has unfolded, Mr. Speaker, we have seen the Government first try to get across a very simple, indeed simplistic, message—that this Bill, simply through its introduction and the changes it makes, will give us an extra $1 billion in new investment in Canada. The Government has tried to tell us there would be many new jobs created and that those of us oppose the Bill are somehow out of step, old-fashioned nationalists who are leading with our hearts instead of our heads.

Our response has been, in a sense, equally simple. The response has been to say that foreign investment is not part of the solution to our economic problems, that indeed controlling foreign investment is part of the problem. Unrestricted foreign investment is part of the problem because of the way foreign-controlled firms import from the parent company instead of buying in Canada. It is part of the problem because of high capital outflows that foreign investment creates. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), indicated this morning that over $2 million leaves this country each and every hour of each and every day as a result of foreign investment. So we have stated our simple sloganistic response to the Government's slogan of Investment Canada, that Bill C-15 is about Warehouse Canada. It is about establishing a branch plant economy even more than in the past and that will badly damage the jobs we so desperately need.

As I reflect on this debate, Mr. Speaker, I have a sense that we are moving into a new phase in which the public are now starting to recognize what has been happening with this Bill. I have just come back from three days of listening to groups, individuals and communities throughout Atlantic Canada. I can tell this House that there is a concern, a sense of unease, in provinces like Newfoundland and places like Cape Breton which have experienced what unrestricted foreign private investment can do to a community. They have experienced the shutdown of mines and mills and they are concerned that this Government is once more taking the country in that direction.

One sign of that concern is that on February 9, just a few weeks away, a group of people who want to give new momentum to the old Canadians For An Independent Canada are once more meeting. They are going to re-establish that organization and use it in what will become an increasing public fight against this effort to take away our first line of defence against foreign control and the problems it can bring to our economy. The letters come in every day from the people I talk to in my constituency and others. They come in from Ontario, from Atlantic Canada, and express their concern and unease. I think we will see as this debate continues that more and more Canadians recognize that what this Government is trying to do with this Bill is not to give us more jobs. It is trying to give more favours to the foreign investors who have always supported it in the past to whom it feels it owes favours in return after its election victory.

● (1530)

As our New Democratic Party action group on jobs moves throughout the country, another impression that I have is that the pot of gold approach to economic planning for our country, as referred to by Richard Cashin of the Fishermen's Union in Newfoundland, no longer makes sense. The idea of opening ourselves up and giving the invitation to come in and use our resources and build on Canadian benefits as the answer to our problems is one that I do not believe Canadians are interested in. I do not believe that people are interested in that kind of imported solution to the problems we face.

Instead, what I see and hear as an increasing theme throughout the country is a desire for self-reliance. It is a desire for community based and directed efforts to build our economy.

In Newfoundland it takes the form of new co-ops that are building jobs and playing the role that private foreign investment has never historically been able to play in much of our country and will not be able to play. In Glace Bay it takes the form of an attempt to set up what they call incubator malls, which are small scale malls that give small businesses a chance to serve community and Canadian needs and provide Canadian solutions.

We have seen a rather different direction in which this country wants to move. It is a direction which is totally undermined by Bill C-15, and we will continue to fight to make sure that Bill C-15 is abandoned and that a new approach of self-reliance and community direction is increasingly adopted.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-15. The new Government is so interested in implementing its policies that the Minister is not even here for the debate. I recall that the Conservatives, during the last Parliament, continually accused the former Government of not having its Ministers here. This new Government had an attendance of 2.5 per cent of Cabinet Ministers in the House. The Conservatives have 5 per cent, and now one is about to leave.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member confirm that there are only two Members from his caucus in the House right now?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), has the floor.

Mr. Hopkins: Indeed, it is not a point of order but that does not surprise me, coming from one of the Ministers in that great new Cabinet. It seems to me that three out of 40 is a greater percentage than two out of 211.

I have much previous experience in dealing with the Department of DREE, the Department of DRIE, and in working with FIRA to encourage new industries to come to Canada. I never experienced this great, horrendous problem with FIRA about which we are hearing. It will be interesting to hear about the progress of Investment Canada.

In my constituency there is a Canadian-owned company called Magline. It is a small company which makes snowshoes and other items. It makes many snowshoes for the American and Canadian Armed Forces, and there are no problems with trade relations in this regard. In fact, that company makes such fine snowshoes that I will present a pair to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) seeing how he has been skating in this Parliament in recent days. His skates seemed to have worn out, and perhaps snowshoes would be more appropriate for him at this time.

The Government's elimination of Canagrex is another disturbing example. We have heard much about Canagrex giving competition to private enterprise as a reason for bringing about such programs as Investment Canada. However, Canada has many agricultural products to sell abroad and Canagrex provided the facilities not only for shipment but for storage in countries where there was no place to store our exports. One of the new Government's first actions was to cancel Canagrex, but it has yet to replace it with an alternative for Agriculture Canada. Canagrex was going to promote the sale of agriculture products, yet the Government has not even provided an agency for export sales.

At a time when the Government is forming Investment Canada, there are two Senators in the United States who are renewing the call for quotas on Canadian wood products going south of the border. Investment Canada will welcome foreign capital into Canada to buy up our Canadian industries at a time when other Governments will begin to take steps to block our products from entering their countries. In fact, those Senators would like to see a quota of 25 per cent of the market place demand placed on wood products coming from Canada.

We have another Canadian-owned industry in the Ottawa Valley called Haley Industries. It does much work with American companies. One of the major accomplishments of Haley Industries was to produce engine moulds and other products for aircraft. I was concerned about the appointment of the present Minister of regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) because I know how much sympathy he has for the less developed areas of Canada. He comes from the wealthy part of Ontario and has very little feeling for northern and eastern Ontario.

Miss Carney: Shame!

Mr. Hopkins: I know it is a shame. I agree with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney).

Miss Carney: Shame on you.

Mr. Hopkins: The Government says that it is trying to promote jobs. The Government is welcoming capital into Canada to buy industries. I have nothing against foreign capital coming into Canada. But I do not want to see foreign companies control many of our Canadian industries. They must remain under Canadian control. I know there are clauses in the Bill dealing with this, but it is a much looser situation that even existed with FIRA.

• (1540)

This Tory Government should look at history and look to the days of the Arrow aircraft and the plant I just mentioned, Haley Industries. It made parts for the Arrow aircraft. What happened? The Tory Government of the day scrapped the whole plan, and even took the moulds out of the foundry at Haley Industries. The moulds were taken out into the back yard and smashed so they would not be used again. That is the kind of progress we see in job-making and future technology from a Conservative Government. If that program had been allowed to go ahead, we would not be bringing foreign capital into Canada in large globs today and we would not be shipping out our cash to buy aircraft. Instead, we would be selling the Arrow aircraft, which was one of the best aircraft built in the world and it would still be modern in terms of any aircraft that exists today. But the last Conservative Government destroyed one of the best domestic industries we had going in this country, and today we are buying an aircraft from the United States at a cost of billions of dollars to the Canadian taxpayer. That is what the Tories call progress. Here we have a Bill before us today ironically a Bill called Investment Canada.

What has happened in the area of wood products, Mr. Speaker? In that great area of Algonquin Park in the upper Ottawa Valley and in areas of northern Ontario, we have had foreign companies come in and be given leases by the provincial Government. One particular company from the United States took up a large section of good woodland in that area that contained some of the best timber. The company was from Missouri. It sat on the timber. Local companies in Canada could not even buy timber and if they did, they not only had to pay the dues which went normally to the Ontario Government but they also had to pay dues to the foreign company in Missouri. That is hardly progress. That can hardly be called Investment Canada. But that was done under a Tory Government in the Province of Ontario. We have so much talk about the fact that we must build up our forests, but this is something that should have been talked about years ago.

Mr. Benjamin: We did and you Liberals wouldn't listen.

Mr. Hopkins: The management of forests is in the hands of provincial governments. They have been destroying them for years. They have been selling them off for foreign capital. They have not been encouraging local entrepreneurs to get involved in the secondary industrial process in the wood industry in this country.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are giving me a signal. I shall try to accommodate you. If we are going to have a Conservative Government in this country with 211 Members bringing in a Bill called Investment Canada, then let us have some better examples of progress in developing industry in Canada, developing industry for Canadians by Canadians, and let us see some of those tens of thousands of jobs that we were promised we would get the day after the election. Here we are back again after all the criticism about all the short-term programs and yet we have Canada Works about to be announced, a Liberal program. I would like to point out in closing that that was a Liberal program; it was a welcome one and I am glad that the Government sees a good thing.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives call this Bill Investment Canada. I call it Betrayal Canada. If ever there was a time to learn from history so as not to be condemned to repeat it, it is in the area of foreign investment in this country.

It is always desirable to have a measure of foreign investment. Canada historically has leaned over backwards to get foreign investment, to the extent that even the Liberals had to quit some of their supine acquiescence to foreign investments, particularly United States investments. We learned some bitter lessons in this country because of the amount of foreign ownership of our economy.

I believe a larger portion of foreign investment should be loan capital and a smaller portion of it should be equity or ownership capital. I give as an example what we did in my Province of Saskatchewan with a publicly owned power corporation. In almost ten years we increased massively our electrical generating capacity. We took electricity to every town and village in the province. We electrified 60,000 farms and borrowed something over $600 million in that time, most of it foreign money, but it was loan capital. The foreign investors who lent money to the Saskatchewan Power Corporation got a good and reasonable return on their investment. Those loans have been paid off and the people of Saskatchewan own their power corporation. Contrast that, Mr. Speaker, with other public-type utilities that are foreign-owned or foreign-controlled.

There is a lot of investment capital available here in Canada. I do not blame the U.S. corporations for the way they behave up here. We are to blame. Foreign investors need to know in advance what our ground rules are. We need firm ground rules that they know ahead of time. As long as they can make a reasonable return on their investment, they will live up to those ground rules. Taking the ground rules away just encourages more of what has occurred in the past.

Let me give an example of one of the experiences Canada had in the 1960s regarding foreign investment. Chrysler Corporation of Windsor, Ontario, had an opportunity to sell several hundred trucks to Cuba. The parent company, Chrysler of the United States, was told by the United States Government that it was not to allow its branch plant in Canada to sell trucks to Cuba. It was called Trading with the Enemy Act. There was the United States Government telling a corporation with its head office in the U.S. that Canadian workers and a Canadian plant could not produce and sell trucks to another country. That is a direct intrusion into our sovereignty and our independence. This type of thing has occurred countless times. The more we open up to foreign investment, as the Government proposes to do, the more we will have these occurrences.

There is lots of Canadian capital to be invested in Canada. Why do we not clean up our own house before starting to worry about how much foreign investment is coming in?

You may not be aware, Mr. Speaker, that there are some $35 billion of corporation tax deferrals lying on the books of the Government of Canada which will never be paid. We do not even collect interest on it. If one charged a modest 9 per cent or 10 per cent, the Government could do something more about medicare, hospitalization, housing and a few other things. What has happened with these corporate tax deferrals? Let me give you an illustration, Mr. Speaker.

Canadian capital has been taken out of Canada by the hundreds of millions of dollars for investment in other places. For example, Great Lakes Paper, a subsidiary of Canadian Pacific Limited, has something in the order of $150 million in corporate tax deferrals. It has received federal and provincial grants of $50 million to upgrade its plant production facilities in northwestern Ontario. What did it do? It invested $25 million in the United States to build a pulp and paper plant. Surely that is not good corporate behaviour or good corporate citizenship. Canadian jobs are being exported to the United States. Why? It is because Great Lakes Paper, a subsidiary of Canadian Pacific, wants to take the fullest advantage of our corporate tax laws, to the disadvantage of Canada. At least it should be made to give back the $50 million so that we can let someone else in Canada invest in a pulp and paper production facility here.

Canadian Pacific owes $1.5 billion in deferred corporation taxes. In theory, the corporation takes that money and invests it in fixing up its plant, in new equipment, more production, new technology and Canadian jobs. Well, that company invested it all right. All the years Canadian Pacific obtained corporate tax deferrals it was investing. It bought a pottery plant in Syracuse, New York for $20 million. It has parking lots, shopping centres and condominiums in California. It has mines in Central America and in other parts of the world. It does oil and gas exploration in other parts of the world. That is what it did with its benefits. That is not good corporate citizenship. That capital should have been invested in Canada. Corporations such as Canadian Pacific need to be told that they have to act as good Canadian corporate citizens and invest here where investments are needed.

We rely more than we need on foreign investment because of a system which allows corporations to act in such a manner in this country. International Nickel is another company which owes about $1.5 billion in corporate taxes. It has invested too. Where? It invested in Guatemala, Indonesia and Chile. It took the money and ran with it, money it was supposed to invest in its operations here.

As I said, I do not blame American corporations for acting in that manner. If an American parent company in the United States finds that it has too much production and that it has to shut down plants, it is perfectly natural for it not to shut down plants in its own country. It will shut down branch plants in other countries, namely in Canada. I do not blame those companies for that. Those are the ground rules. Naturally such corporations will take actions in the interests of their own country and their own parent company first, and the host company in which they invest gets second consideration. That has been endemic over the decades of our history. The first ones to get it in the neck are foreign-owned branch plants.

FIRA was weak enough. It was a toothless tiger. It allowed investments which should not have been allowed. It failed to work at getting more Canadian investment. I just sat back quietly while foreign investment came in that we neither wanted nor needed and that could have been filled by Canadian investment. It also cost us in the export of capital from the country by way of dividends and interest. I do not object to investors making a reasonable return on investment, but in many instances they have taken back to their home country three to four times as much as their original investment.

I noticed in an English language newspaper published in Mexico City a report of the experience of Mexico with $1.2 billion of American investment over a period of three years. American investors took $4.5 billion out of Mexico. It is a poor country. Most of its people are poor. That is the benefit it received from foreign investment.

The time is past when we should be laying out ground rules which are reasonable, fair and in the best interests of Canadian sovereignty, independence and jobs. Foreign investors, knowing the ground rules ahead of time, knowing they will receive fair and honest treatment, and knowing that they will be eligible for a reasonable return on investment, will be willing to invest loan capital or equity capital. To throw open the doors so that foreign investors can come and go as they please is surely not in the best interests of Canada's nationhood or of jobs for Canadian people. The instances which we have seen recently with Great Lakes Paper and other examples which could be cited show once again that this blind, irresponsible crawling on hands and knees to got foreign investment at the expense of our sovereignty and independence has to be stopped.

We hope the Government will reconsider this legislation and that it will not only maintain an investment review agency—I do not care what it is called—but will strengthen it and make it more effective than anything we have had before.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate on the Investment Canada Bill. At the outset I want to state that Hon. Members of the Opposition should feel pleased that the Government has at least acknowledged the value of having some form of foreign investment review. Without the evolution of both opposition Parties over the years, there would never have been public awareness of the need for a review of foreign investment in Canada.

I should like to refer to some of the background. Until roughly 1952 most of the foreign investment in Canada was in the form of portfolios, bonds and pension fund management. However, beginning in that year and going through a series of both Liberal and Conservative Governments, there was a growing awareness by Canadians of the importance and implications of having significant sectors of our economy dominated by foreign investment. For example, over the years from 1952 to roughly 1971, foreign ownership, largely American ownership, in some key sectors such as energy—not too much in financial institutions—and transportation made succeeding Governments become more aware of some of the bad side effects of foreign investment in our economy.

Some of the rhetoric from the government side would indicate that, since 1971 and because of the fact we began in 1972 with the Foreign Investment Review Agency, in fact there has been a decrease in the amount of foreign investment in Canada. With the exception of 1981, when the National Energy Program played a significant role in the net export of Canadian capital in order to have Canadian ownership of the energy field, foreign investment in Canada has continued to flow in despite the existence of FIRA. After listening to the government side one would think Canada was the only country in the western industrialized world which had at its disposal a tool such as FIRA.

For people who are following the debate, it is interesting to note that there are other countries in the western world which, over the years, have found it necessary to restrict foreign investment in key sectors of their economy for the purpose of protecting the national interests of those countries. In the United States, whole sectors of its economy, such as shipping, broadcasting, air transport and all defence production, are simply off limits to foreign control. Australia has a foreign investment review board which is very similar to FIRA. I need not remind Canadians that the Japanese have extensive controls and foreign investment. These were two examples which I wanted to cite.

Other countries have seen it to be in their best national interest to have some direct government control of the amount of foreign investment entering their borders. I want to point to the United States and get into some greater detail. In the United States, any foreign investment in shipping on the coastal and fresh water systems is strictly prohibited. The shipbuilding industry is barred from government benefits. I could go on and on. Television operators and nuclear power facilities are prohibited from foreign investment.

There are some very good reasons why national governments enact legislation in order to have some form of control over foreign investment within their boundaries. One would like to ask the question about the prospects for future foreign investment in Canada. In a speech which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made in New York some six weeks ago, he gave the impression that no foreign dollars flowed into Canada during the administration of Prime Minister Trudeau and Prime Minister Turner and that it is only since the election of the Conservative Government on September 4 that one can expect, because of the new open mat policy of the Conservative Government, that billions of dollars of foreign investment will flow into Canada as a result of the so-called changes in the Foreign Investment Review Agency, replacing it with the Investment Canada Act.

If that is the premise, one should look at what is expected in the United States between 1986 and 1990. If you look at the flow of investment originating in the United States for the past 30 years, you find that beginning in the mid-seventies the United States has changed from a net exporter of capital to a net importer of capital during those years. In fact, the international debt accumulated by the United States during the past few years will fully offset all international assets built up over the last 30 years.

Mr. Fennell: That will change.

Mr. Frith: The Member say that will change. One can have that optimism, but clearly the Conservative Government has embarked on a direction which it hopes will result in the creation of thousands upon thousands of jobs domestically in Canada as a result of the inflow of capital. From the standpoint of Canadians, I hope the Government's optimism will show in results as well as in rhetoric. If not, I remind Members opposite that there will be several Members on this side of the House who will kindly remind the Government about the promises it made during the last election campaign and the complete faith they have placed in the ability of foreign investment to come through on behalf of Canadian interests.

Some of that faith has been misplaced. I will review for the purposes of Members opposite some of the results of the way in which foreign subsidiaries have operated in Canada. The facts do not justify the faith they have placed in the ability of foreign investment to come through in terms of Canadian interests in this country. Time after time there have been cases in which research and development in the subsidiary has been cut back at the expense of Canadian jobs so that the home company, particularly in the United States, could maintain its research and development with respect to its home borders.

I need not go any further than to suggest the case of the Iron Ore Company of Canada. Decisions made in another country, namely the United States, adversely impacted on its subsidiary operations in Canada. I am not suggesting that the particular case of Iron Ore should be dealt with any differently than in other areas. However, I would suggest that the fact that Canadian-controlled firms have, to a large extent, protected Canadian self-interests in other than research and development and employment opportunities indicates to me that we should not place all our faith in the ability of parent firms lying outside our national borders to look after our best interests.

Lastly, one may wish to investigate some of the proposals which the Conservative Government has in its Investment Canada Bill which are significantly different from the Foreign Investment Review Agency which was created by past Liberal administrations. Evidently it will remove the requirement that we had previously to show significant Canadian content and reason for investing in Canadian firms. In addition to the mandate of the agency for the undertaking of investment performance reviews for foreign-controlled and Canadian firms and of policy development to increase the autonomy of Canadian subsidaries, there are things we proposed in the last election campaign that could have answered some of the problems which had developed over the years with respect to the performance of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. They would have been used to establish constructive self-interest for Canadians.

I said at the beginning that I am pleased that the Government has at least indicated that it wishes to keep the basic premises in the Foreign Investment Review Agency, with some changes. To Members on this side of the House, I suppose small news is good news. In essence, at the heart of the Investment Canada Bill are some extremely good features. What might happen during this debate is that the Government might listen to some of the proposals made here constructively by Members of the Opposition and incorporate them into the new Bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)—National Revenue—Taxation of death benefits; the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Budgetary cut-backs—Effect on Windsor television station. (b) Request for consultations.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and on the amendment of Mr. Gray (Windsor West) (p. 1302).

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the debate being resumed today is on the amendment proposed by one of my colleagues to have Parliament postpone consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, for a period of six months.

As a Member of this House and as a Canadian citizen who has worked for some time in other areas, including the private sector, I am very concerned about our country's economic future, the future of our children and the future of our workers, the future of the young and not so young. I want our colleagues on the Government side to understand the reasons for the position we have taken in this very important debate and the reason why we are asking for a six-month hoist.

Bill C-15 does not deal with the fundamental problems of the Canadian economy. Furthermore, the fifty or so clauses the Bill contains do not reflect the Bill's title, the "Investment Canada Act". In addition, as far as Bill C-15 is concerned, the premise that foreign investment is to be seen as a stimulus for creating additional economic wealth is ambiguous and uncertain to say the least. A number of statements by American and other foreign businessmen have confirmed this.

On the Government side they keep saying and there is some truth in this and I agree more or less with some of the things that have been said that economic recovery and job creation depends partly on the private sector's confidence in the economy and on increased investment by the private sector. To this I would like to add, for your consideration, that confidence cannot be generated unless the economic agents who make the decisions, that is, investors, managers, workers and consumers, are all aware of the rules of the game. Today, this applies both to Canadian citizens and to prospective foreign investors.

To ensure that everyone knows the rules, the Government must specify its policy on industries like the petrochemical industry, a very important one in the Montreal region where most of my riding is located, and also on the aerospace industry, which employs hundreds of thousands of people at Canadair in Ville-Saint-Laurent. The Government must also be specific about its policies on transportation facilities.

I am thinking, for instance, of the cuts at VIA Rail and the decision to scrap construction of a modern maintenance centre in Montreal that would have created about 3,000 jobs. This may mean that many workers currently employed by VIA Rail or the CN will be laid off, depending on what the Government decides to do.

There is also the telecommunications industry and the important textile sector. Can we consider allowing foreign investment in Canada in one of those sectors without knowing what specific policy the Conservative Government intends to formulate?

Another major industry in this country, especially in Quebec, is forestry. Can we consider letting foreign investors set up business in Quebec, under the provisions of Bill C-15, without knowing the Canadian Government's policy on the forestry industry, a policy we have been promised for some time?

In the same vein, the Government will also have to make it clear what it intends to do about the changes it has promised in matters relating to financial institutions.

In addition, we are still waiting for clarification, and this could have a major impact on potential foreign investments, about the conditions which the Conservative Government will set before accepting to sell certain public corporations. We do not know what the policy of the Government is.

As long as these policies are not made clearer, we should not be surprised if European and American brokers and bankers tell us, as some of us who follow the statements of certain New York businessmen saw in the newspapers recently, that Bill C-15, as introduced by the Conservative Government, will do nothing to increase foreign investments in Canada. I can understand quite well what these businessmen mean. I can understand why an American bank president or broker could not, in all honesty, advise his customers that, if adopted, Bill C-15 would make it more beneficial for them to invest in Canada.

Moreover, Bill C-15 in itself does not help Canadian businessmen to invest in Canada. Yet, many reports have confirmed that Canadian companies are under-capitalized compared with American companies. This problem is especially serious for small businesses. However, Bill C-15 contains nothing which would give any hope to small businessmen that passage of this legislation will be of some benefit to them. On the contrary, the only other Bill under consideration in this House, which is the Bill to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, will reduce the benefits provided to small businesses by lowering the ceiling of the guarantee which the Federal Government can provide for small businesses. In fact, representatives of small and independent businesses were quick to voice their disagreement about this initiative.

As I have already said, Canadian small businesses are under-capitalized. There is nothing in this Bill to solve this problem.

Some people will probably say that section 5(e) of Bill C-15 mentions the fact that the Minister will help to develop economic and industrial policies which will affect investments in Canada. However, neither this Bill nor any related proposal announced in the House by the Minister in his second reading speech have given any details about possible initiatives to increase investments by Canadians in Canada.

It is to allow the Government to take its responsibilities properly and to reflect before requesting passage of this Bill that Members on this side of the House have proposed a six-month hoist of Bill C-15.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is as follows. Mr. Stevens, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moved that Bill C-15, an Act respecting Investment Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development. Mr. Gray (Windsor West), seconded by Mr. Ouellet, moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-15, An Act respecting investment in Canada, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Gray (Windsor West)), which was negatived on the following division:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL REVENUE—TAXATION OF DEATH BENEFITS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question in connection with death benefits to the Hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty). The Minister advised that he would look into the matter. As well, I sent a letter to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in connection with the same matter. Today I want to speak further to the matter because during Question Period I could not give the details. I was referring to Section 56(1)(a)(B) of the Income Tax Act. The Department has advised that this Section permits the taxing of death benefits and it is this Section with which I would like to deal.

In my view, the death benefits which come from the Canada Pension Plan were not paid to the taxpayer in the two cases which I will cite. The benefits were paid to the estate of a young man who was killed in an accident in the first case, and in the second case the benefits were paid to the estate of a sister who died. Under the legislation, which has been in force over the last several years, the administration is now levying a tax against the parents of the young man and against the brother of the young lady. I want to deal with these cases from the viewpoint of the legislation.

I will quickly cite the two cases. A young man was killed in an accident. He was just over 20 years of age and had no estate. The parents, who could ill afford it, sacrificed and came up with enough money to bury their son. The Canada Pension Plan assisted with a grant of $1,500, which was payable as a death benefit to the young man who had paid into the plan. The funeral costs were well over $3,000, and the parents were very happy to receive this help. However, later they received a tax bill from the Department of National Revenue which taxed them on the $1,500 as if it had been income which went into their pockets. It did assist in the funeral expenses, but it was not income in any sense of the word.

In the second case, a young lady died. She had no parents. Her brother, out of the goodness of his heart, decided to pay the burial expenses. Again, a Canada Pension Plan payment was made to the estate. However, the brother later received a bill, as if the money had been paid to him.

I feel there is something wrong with this legislation. Surely we should not tax the dead and make the parents or other relatives pay, especially when, out of the goodness of their hearts, they pay the funeral expenses.

I would like to read into the record Section 56 of the Income Tax Act. It reads as follows:

(1) Amounts to be included in income for year.—Without restricting the generality of section 3, there shall be included in computing the income of a taxpayer for a taxation year,

(a) pension benefits, unemployment insurance benefits, etc.—any amount received by the taxpayer in the year as, on account or in lieu of payment of, or in satisfaction of,

● (1750)

In each case it is the taxpayer who is getting the money, and the taxpayer is dead so it goes into the estate. Surely, we are not going to make the people who are paying the bill the taxpayer. Let us go back to Section 3. Section 3 states, and I quote:

The income of a taxpayer for a taxation year for the purposes of this Part is his income for the year determined by the following rules:

(a) determine the aggregate of amounts each of which is the taxpayer's income for the year ... from a source inside or outside Canada, including, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, his income for the year from each office, employment, business and property;

Again, we are talking about the taxpayer. The taxpayers were the sister and the young man who were killed, but they are dead and they have no estate. The Department is now charging the $1,500 payment from the Canada pension against the parents and the brother who paid the funeral and all other expenses. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the death benefit was solely for the benefit of the deceased. The parents under this Act are not the taxpayer and the brother is not the taxpayer. I would like to see this legislation amended to be made much clearer.

This is a sample of much of the Liberal taxation policy which tried to squeeze every cent out of the people of this country, even taxing the dead. I would like to see it made very clear that when Canada pension is paid to an estate, the taxpayer's estate is the recipient, not the parents or the brother who pay the bill. I bring these points to the attention of the Government because I feel they do need to be clarified.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, when the Canada Pension Plan was introduced in 1966 provision was made to pay a benefit to the estate of a contributor on his death. The death benefit payable under the Canada Pension Plan is tied into the amount of pension to which the deceased individual would be entitled up to a maximum of 10 per cent of the yearly maximum pensionable earnings. In 1984 the maximum death benefit was $2,080. Any person who has contributed to the Canada Pension Plan for any three years qualifies for the death benefit.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, premiums paid under the Canada Pension Plan are deductible in computing income for tax purposes and, similar to other deductible amounts such as contributions to registered pension plans, registered retirement savings plans and unemployment insurance, the proceeds from the plan are included in computing income. This is a fundamental principle which facilitates compliance and ease of administration.

The Hon. Member has suggested that most people believe that the Canada Pension Plan death benefit is associated with funeral expenses. The amount of funeral costs is in many ways a reflection of personal choice—some spend much and others only a minimal amount. In view of the nature of such costs, it has always been considered as personal expenses for which no deduction from income for tax purposes has been allowed.

As I am sure the Hon. Member is aware, there are many individuals who are not eligible for death benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. To exempt Canada Pension Plan death benefits from tax under the premise that they serve to pay for funeral expenses would be unfair to those taxpayers who incur such costs but are not eligible for a death benefit under the Canada Pension Plan.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the benefit received as a lump sum from the Canada Pension Plan and paid to the estate or to a beneficiary is a final payment based on a set formula. As indicated the contributions a taxpayer makes during his or her lifetime are fully deductible and distributions received are included in income. This is in keeping with well established principles of taxation and provides for equitable treatment to all beneficiaries; that is those in high marginal tax brackets pay proportionately more tax on the benefits received whereas those in low tax brackets pay little or no tax on receipt.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—EFFECT ON WINDSOR TELEVISION STATION. (B) REQUEST FOR CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I rise in respect to a question which I directed to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) some time ago. It is apparently more timely to now pursue the issue raised than it was then because, when I posed the question in respect to cuts which were threatened to CBET and the other CBC stations in Windsor, we were informed by the Minister that it was too early to deal with such issues on the basis that those cuts were merely rumours.

It turns out, Mr. Speaker, that the cuts at Windsor were even more vicious and more serious than had been anticipated. While between 8 per cent and 10 per cent of staff and funding were cut at CBC stations across the country because of budget cuts, Windsor experienced cuts in both in the order of 25 per cent to 30 per cent.

We in the City of Windsor consider it a very serious matter. As I pointed out at that time, geographically, Windsor is almost surrounded by the United States because it is on a peninsula in the middle of Michigan, Ohio, and New York, at the periphery of the Great Lakes. It is a community in which some 12 American television stations can be easily received. Indeed, Windsor has been described—as I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary recognizes—as an area in which there is the highest density of broadcast reception in the world, the bulk of that being American.

However, it is not only the overwhelming influence of the broadcasting media which affects Windsor. The Parliamentary Secretary will also know that Windsorites are as likely to read the Detroit Free Press for the Detroit news. As I pointed out this morning, we are Detroit Tiger fans, Red Wing fans and Piston fans, and so on. At times it is difficult not to consider ourselves American, and this kind of attitude is not helped by the fact that the rest of Canada sometimes regards us, indeed, as being American and appears sometimes to cede us to the United States. Therefore, the issue of CBET in Windsor is a very serious one.

To be specific, some 63 jobs were lost and about 25 per cent of its budget shaved. There is deep concern that Windsor have access not only to Canadian programming generally, but that CBET fulfil its significant cultural function in presenting an opportunity not only for emphasis on local news and happenings but, as has been pointed out by the local musicians union and others, a significant opportunity for the exhibition of performing talents in the City of Windsor and the surrounding areas. As a result of those cuts that role has very seriously been affected and we are now left only with our evening news broadcast. We have lost our weekend news and virtually all local programming.

There is another aspect of Canadian broadcasting in the Windsor area of which we should not lose sight. As I pointed out previously, Windsor is a significant window to the United States. Indeed, Channel 4 as well as Channel 7 have now assumed the role of broadcasting material from the Windsor area which reflects an interest on the part of Americans as to what goes on, not only in Canada but in the local Windsor area. CBET has a prospective audience of some eight million people on the other side of the river and that is not without significance in terms of communicating what Canada is all about to the United States.

In raising the question, I sought a meeting with the Minister of Communications, which request was not responded to either when the question was posed in the House or when I subsequently communicated with him by letter. We have since met with Mr. Juneau and heard that the financial cuts to CBC were not simply applied to Windsor, a fact that we recognized, but seriously affected other communities which are isolated in peculiar ways across this country. To deal with the peculiar Windsor problems would only mean some other location would suffer, because there would not be any serious attempt to shift funds from the big centres such as Toronto and Montreal. So it seems unlikely that any profit is to be gained by talking to Mr. Juneau.

The people of Windsor still seek a meeting with the Minister and I would ask that such a meeting be arranged. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to advise the Minister of our interest and make every possible representation to ensure that we will have an opportunity to engage in that consultation. He can perhaps think about how those telefilm funds not presently being used may be given to CBC, as requested by other groups, and perhaps relieve the financial burden imposed on the CBC and open up a window to treat the situation in Windsor and other locations with respect to local production a little more leniently.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am more than pleased, now that I am on somewhat more familiar ground than in my previous intervention, to address the concerns of the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), from really two points of view. First of all, as a representative of the constituency of Hamilton-Wentworth I come from the same corner of the Province of Ontario as the Hon. Member. More importantly, I reported from the Parliamentary Press Gallery to CBET Windsor for a number of years before getting into my current profession. So I am very sensitive to his concerns with respect to maintaining the regional programming mandate of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

With specific reference to the CBC's programming mandate and the over-all cuts from the corporation's budget, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has requested the CBC to attempt to make budgetary reductions primarily in administrative areas. In this regard, the Minister was pleased to note that the corporation has managed the reductions so as to protect programming as much as possible. The Minister made this request so that the reductions would minimize the negative impact on Canadian producers and artists whose development the corporation and Government wanted to encourage. The objective is to ensure that public resources now devoted to the support of artistic and journalistic expression are employed in the most effective manner possible, and that budgetary restrictions do not jeopardize the federal Government's investment in the cultural development of the nation.

Regarding consultations, the Minister specified that they take place with due regard for the respective responsibilities of the Minister of Communications and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and not infringe on their respective mandates. While some reduction was announced in radio and television network expenditures as part of the corporation's reductions, the CBC has promised to do its best to maintain the basic volume of network programming, particularly as it affects regional programming. As well, it must include the needs of smaller and more isolated locations and the interests of minority language groups.

As an aside, Mr. Speaker, of interest to the Hon. Member, CBET Windsor has a bigger news staff than its Montreal counterpart in the corporation.

The corporation has, since last June, been conducting internal reviews to assist in revenue reductions. A number of erroneous reports and remours concerning regional programming and services may have come from that process. Given the complexity of the task and the inevitable review of different options for the CBC, any decision attributed to the CBC would of course not be official until formally announced by the Corporation.

In conclusion, I suggest that it is not up to the Government to determine where those cuts should take place. It is up to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.06 p.m., the House adjourned.

FISHERIES

FISHING VESSEL INSURANCE PLAN

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, with the recent announcement of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) that the fishing vessel insurance plan will be phased out between now and 1986, fishermen in my community, and indeed in all of Canada, will be devastated by this move.

The original reason for government intervention in the vessel insurance business was because the private sector was not meeting the needs of fishermen. Fishermen will now have to deal with private companies to insure their boats. As a rule, the few private companies in the business of vessel insurance will not insure small boats and engines, thus causing problems for those seeking loans. The Fisheries Loan Board, as many Hon. Members will know, has a requirement that there must be insurance on every boat and on every piece of equipment for which it issues a loan.

Because of the anticipated difficulties due to this announcement, on behalf of the fishermen of Canada I urge the Minister of Fisheries to reconsider this decision.

FORESTRY

IMPORTANCE OF INDUSTRY TO BRITISH COLUMBIA—GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, forestry is Canada's most important renewable resource. Nearly one million people are directly or indirectly dependent upon the forestry industry for employment. In British Columbia, one out of every four people rely on this vital industry.

Yesterday in the House the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) reiterated his real commitment to this important national industry. He told the House that a healthy forest industry is vital to our national economic renewal. More important, the Prime Minister assured British Columbians, and all Canadians, that the Government intends to bring substantial help to the forest industry in British Columbia.

For the first time in two decades the federal Government has brought forestry to the top of the list of economic priorities. A new era of federal-provincial co-operation has dawned, and new forestry agreements are being negotiated. The Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) and the Prime Minister will ensure that Canada's once vibrant forest industry is revitalized. We British Columbians welcome this new attitude and this new commitment.

Mr. Skelly: Some British Columbians.

Mr. St. Germain: We all look forward to a new federal-provincial forestry agreement with British Columbia, and to the thousands of jobs and new opportunities that a healthy forest industry will bring, for which the NDP have been screaming and will get.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

ALLOCATION OF CO-OPERATIVE AND NON-PROFIT UNITS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) asked me to give him the names of co-op and non-profit groups who met the criteria of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation on December 31, 1984, but were denied housing unit allocations when over 500 were given to one private developer linked to the DelZotto brothers. This was after two years during which the present and past Governments followed a policy of downgrading co-operatives and community-based non-profit corporations.

I am now sending the Minister the names and business addresses of four groups in Georgetown, Oakville, Vancouver, and Richmond, British Columbia, all of which I understand had, by December 31, satisfied CMHC as to land, zoning, drawings, and construction contract. I call upon the Minister to investigate and, if he finds that indeed they met CMHC criteria, to ensure that they will receive their allocations in time to build this spring, and to report on the matter to the House.

There are many other housing co-ops and non-profit groups which have worth-while projects nearly ready to go. I call upon the Minister to give these serious consideration rather than to give the preference to a phoney, non-profit corporation which is nothing but a front for a private developer who has used that means to dig in—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PLIGHT OF WOMEN AGED 50 TO 65 YEARS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, our Progressive Conservative Government has asked Hon. Members and the people of Canada to present alternatives designed to make our social programs more effective. At the present time a percentage of public money goes into the pockets of the wealthy. Even though some of it is taxed back, it is my personal view that there are ways to make our programs more effective.

The biggest gap in social programs today affects women between the ages of 50 and 65 who are in dire need and receive nothing except welfare. This group includes single women who spent their working years looking after aged parents or a crippled or a mentally retarded brother or sister. Divorcees, or women whose husbands died young, and those who scrubbed floors to keep their families together, never had the opportunity to pay into the Canada Pension Plan, and now they are unable to find work even if their health permits it.

I ask the Liberals and members of the NDP who are so insistent upon nothing being taken away from the wealthy: What do you tell these women who are existing on meagre welfare while the rich simply deposit the public money and thus become richer?

I commend the Government for looking into social programs. I present the needy women between the ages of 50 and 65 as a priority group who need help. Only the very greedy will criticize a social program which effectively helps the people who need help the most.

EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, federal-provincial government agreements on forestry were started under the former Liberal Government. I am glad to note that the present Tory Government is following another first-class Liberal policy.

Since taking over last September, the Conservative Government has mismanaged the country. I should like to refer to just a few examples. Unemployment—this Government which promised jobs, cancelled the Summer Canada Student Program, thus casting a huge shadow of uncertainty for tens of thousands of students who rely upon summer work for income to pay for the next term of school. In the environment, the Government has downgraded Canada's international role as world leader in tackling acid rain and in developing a coalition of like-minded nations willing to take action on a global basis.

The Government has cut deeply into the Canadian Wildlife Service. It has put into doubt the future of wildlife interpretation centres. It plans to reduce research on pesticides and their effect on certain species. The Government is eliminating the jobs of scientists, technicians, and other highly qualified and creative people working on long-term projects relating to the environment. Just like previous Tory Governments, it is driving talent from Canada.

In essence, what the Government is saying to them is: "Sorry, your jobs are cancelled as of March 31, 1985; try elsewhere"—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

• (1110)

THE ECONOMY

REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, since assuming office in September last, the new Government has worked diligently to bring down interest rates. Considerable success has been achieved, with the rates now being 2 to 3 per cent lower.

The high interest rate policy of the Liberal Party had a disastrous effect on the Canadian economy, with hundreds of thousands of people being sacrificed to unemployment in a vain attempt to cover up financial mismanagement by this ruse of ever increasing borrowing costs. The Conservative policy will continue to stress a downward trend in interest rates, thereby stimulating residential and commercial construction, and the manufacture of capital and consumer goods, not to mention agriculture and the resource industries.

The success of the Conservative lower interest rate policy is not only reflected in the many new jobs which have been created since the change, and the unprecedented popularity of the new Government throughout the country, but also by the fact that the combined Liberal/NDP opposition has failed to so much as mention interest rate policy on a single occasion since Parliament reconvened. One can only assume that they, too, are 100 per cent satisfied with the new Government's enlightened policies.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST SALMON TREATY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of the House and the people of Canada the matter of the Canada-U.S. treaty on west coast salmon interception. The Conservative Government made a commitment to open government and to consultation. This sacred trust was worth nothing.

Yesterday, behind closed doors, the Conservative Government approved the Canada-U.S. salmon interception treaty. This treaty has very serious consequences for Canadian sovereignty and the access of Canadians to fisheries on the West Coast. This treaty will have adverse effects on every individual and every community dependent upon the West Coast fisheries.

Mayors of major communities, associated Chambers of Commerce, fishermen's organizations, and even prominent Conservatives have made appeals to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser), and to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forests asking that the committee study and report to Parliament on the implications for Canadians. Instead, the Conservative Government chose to make this a throwaway. When the Prime Minister meets the President of the United States, the Prime Minister will sign away Canadian rights to Canadian fish on the West Coast in the hope of some favour from the President.

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT CONGRATULATED ON CONSULTATIVE PROCESS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to pay a compliment to the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It happens minute after minute, hour after hour.

Mr. Hawkes: Members will know that for five and a half years I have been standing in this House expressing my opinion that the consultative process lies at the heart of good public policies. This Government has attended to that process, in particular in the resource industries where we now have reason to be optimistic that we are going to have jobs and economic growth. In terms of my community, the oil and gas industry is feeling very optimistic about the consequences of that consultative process.

Members from central Canada will find jobs in their factories which flow from a consultative process that produces economic growth. I simply want to compliment the Government and to say, keep on the same track, keep consulting, and jobs will come. They will be good, long-term permanent jobs.

EXTERNAL AID

FOOD FOR ETHIOPIAN FAMINE VICTIMS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, between now and next spring, more than 1.5 million people will die of hunger in Ethiopia, a country with a population of 40 million and a territory about the size of the province of Ontario.

Early this week during a broadcast of "The Journal", a team of reporters told us about the results of an investigation made in the Eritrea and Tigre regions in northern Ethiopia. Apparently, the Ethiopian government, as part of its ideological war, is withholding food destined for famine victims in this area. According to the team of reporters, the people in these northern regions are rebels against the Communist government.

Mr. Speaker, I imagine Canadians were just as shocked as I was to hear this sad news, but I ask them to please keep sending their donations. These people are counting on us to help them survive these difficult times, and I know that despite these unfortunate incidents, we will do just that.

Consequently, I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to start a thorough investigation right away to check the accuracy of the charges being made against the Ethiopian government.

If the Minister agrees, will he review our aid policy to ensure that these people will continue to receive aid from Canadians?

FISHERIES

WEST COAST SALMON TREATY—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I might, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who is present in the House this morning. Yesterday it was my understanding that the Minister had the Cabinet approve the Canada-U.S. salmon treaty, and that the Minister has been instructed to meet with U.S. officials on Monday for an original signature. This action was taken despite the fact that not a single Member of Parliament sitting on the Standing Committee on Fisheries has had an opportunity to see, or view, the final text of the treaty, and despite the fact that yesterday all the Conservative members of the committee voted down an Opposition attempt to have the treaty and its text produced and examined before the Standing Committee.

Would the Minister be prepared to make available to the members of the Standing Committee on Fisheries the final text of the treaty, the background papers leading up to its final negotiation and signature, and the cost-benefit analysis to Canada, and would he allow his negotiators to appear before that committee so that Members of Parliament and witnesses from British Columbia could attend that committee, before the Prime Minister of the country formally signs the treaty in Quebec City with the President of the United States?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the right hon. gentleman is important for the country, and is important with respect to the relations between our country and the United States of America. I take his question seriously.

The answer to the question is that arrangements have been made within the last 24 hours to deliver the treaty and its annexes to members of the committee. I have studied the questions asked during Fisheries Committee meetings with respect to other documents and, to the degree that they are actually in existence, they will be made available to the committee.

I am completely in favour of presenting not only material but personnel who were on the negotiating team, before the committee, and to do so immediately. However, I know that the right hon. gentleman will understand that, under our system, the decision on whether or not a treaty is to be entered into is a Cabinet decision and is not a decision of a House Standing Committee.

REQUEST THAT PUBLIC MEETINGS BE HELD IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I might concede for the moment the constitutional argument made by the Minister. The problem is that the final text has not been made public, and Members of the House have had no opportunity to comment on it.

Now that the Minister has given the undertaking to let members of the committee view the treaty and its text, I wonder whether he would be prepared on his next early visit to British Columbia to hold public information meetings so that legitimate interest groups, and members of the public on the West Coast, affected by this treaty, could put questions to him and have his understanding of the treaty made clearly known to the people of British Columbia.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the request of the right hon. gentleman is a worthy one and I will do everything I can to fulfil that request. However, I would like to point out that since the treaty was first initialled I have met personally on several occasions with the members of the Sports Fishing Advisory Board in British Columbia who are showing the greatest amount of concern. Last night I had dinner with the Chairman of the Sports Fishing Advisory Board and another member of that board. We had a full and extensive discussion of this issue.

I agree with the right hon. gentleman that the terms of the treaty and its important implications must be fully explained to the people at home. I thank the right hon. gentleman for raising this matter because it is important, and I know that his interest is sincere and appropriate.

DATE OF FORMAL SIGNING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his comment. I will try to help him out, if I can, by putting a question to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister.

It is our understanding that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans received pressure from the Prime Minister and his office to accelerate the processing of the treaty in order that the Prime Minister could sign it formally with the President of the United States at the St. Patrick's Day meeting in Quebec City. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether—

• (1120)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How do you get your information?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In answer to the House Leader, this Government loves to choose symbolic dates. St. Patrick's Day, I understand, between two Irishmen.

Some Hon. Members: St. Valentine's Day.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This Government is going to participate, as I said earlier, in a St. Valentine's Day massacre in Regina, when it really tells the provinces what it is all about, I will tell you that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: September 4 is a good date, too.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Given the undertaking just made by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to allow the text to be inspected by members of the Committee, would the Deputy Prime Minister prevail upon the Leader, the Prime Minister of the country, to lift that arbitrary deadline of March 17 if serious flaws are found by members of the committee in the text of that treaty?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the question is important and it is understandable, but it is also very important that all Canadians understand that these negotiations have gone on for many, many years, and it was with great effort that we were able to bring both teams back to the negotiating table. I have to say to the right hon. gentleman that there is no way that that treaty can be reopened. I have had to take upon myself the responsibility of deciding that that treaty, as presently worded, is the best that we can get and it is in the public interest of this country to accept it. It is not an easy responsibility, but I have taken it.

TERMS OF TREATY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It is a bit surprising to hear the Minister, with great earnestness and sincerity, tell us he is willing to have us look at the document and to be consulted about it, but, no, the door is closed; he will not lift an arbitrary deadline. No matter what we discover, the treaty as presently drafted, before we have seen it, is cast in stone. That is a bit amazing, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Tobin: The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans knows that two years ago negotiators, in full consultation with both user groups of both countries, initialled an agreement and it was rejected by the U.S. administration because of Senator Stevens of Alaska. What concessions has the Minister made to the United States that it is now back willing to sign an agreement, not only willing but eager to sign an agreement, so much so that the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry in this Parliament has to this date not even seen the text of the treaty?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is not completely accurate to say that no one has seen the text of the treaty. Copies, not only of the text but of the annexes, were made quite freely available to the public and to interested groups. The Hon. Member is, I think, failing to recognize that the American system is quite different from ours. Under the American system, no matter what the administration wants, it is necessary to have Senate ratification of a treaty. That is not our system. Our system is the British parliamentary system, and it is a Cabinet decision. It is important to understand that. I am sure that the Hon. Member will help us explain to the public that that is the difference. That being so, as I said, I have taken the responsibility, and the treaty is going to proceed on the basis on which it is presently worded.

CONCESSIONS INQUIRY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's lecture but I am still wondering, and I ask again, what concessions he has made to the Americans, on behalf of the people of British Columbia, to accommodate the American political system? Why the rush? What concessions have been made since we signed an agreement two years ago which was initialled by both sides? What has the Minister now given up on behalf of the people of British Columbia that they had not given up two years ago, in order to accommodate the American political system and the Prime Minister's desire to play kissy-kissy with President Reagan in Quebec City in March? What is going on? Who is representing the people of British Columbia?

• (1125)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You just ruined a perfectly good question.

Mr. Axworthy: I want to know is it going to be a public meeting.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter. The Hon. Member is a worthy and dutiful Member on behalf of the fishing community, and I appreciate his question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Do you want a vote on that?

Mr. Fraser: The question is what concessions were made. Concessions were not made. Under the very good offices of a former distinguished member of the Hon. Member's Party, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, whom I asked to stay on the negotiating team after we became a Government because of the usefulness of his services, what has happened is that, as a consequence of his efforts and those of the negotiating teams on both sides, the misconceptions which prevented completion of the treaty two years ago have been cleared away.

He talks about concessions, Mr. Speaker. Let me put it this way. The agreement has been made by both countries that both sides are going to have to agree that, for a while, we will not be able to take fish as recklessly and irresponsibly as we were. We are setting a conservation regime in place to bring back the stocks. This is not a concession; this is called enhancement of the salmon resource.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make three statements as a preface to my question. First of all—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Skelly: To rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that this is a flawed document, that there is no public input, and that it basically appears to the Canadian people to be a throwaway for when the Prime Minister meets with the President of the United States.

In view of the fact that the Americans have an opportunity to provide input, would the Minister admit right now that before March 17 the Canadian people could, through the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, make known their concerns about this treaty which compromises Canadian sovereignty, limits access to our own fish resource, and effectively cuts us off from the fish of transboundary rivers? Would the Minister admit that by a stroke of the pen the Government could permit people to come before the committee and express their concerns about how this is going to affect them?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to be prepared to indicate that his Party does not agree with this treaty as it is worded. If that is the case, certainly he is entitled to say so. But he also seems to be confused about the difference between the American system and the Canadian system.

Mr. Keeper: Did you ever hear of parliamentary democracy?

Mr. Fraser: Someone asks if I have ever heard of parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Keeper: Yes.

Mr. Fraser: What I am talking about is British-Canadian parliamentary democracy, not American republican democracy. There is a difference. If the Hon. Member is asking me to put this treaty back in front of a committee or anyone else, to be renegotiated through the press and statements in the House, I have to tell him that that would be irresponsibility of the greatest order, and I will not do it.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC CONSULTATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the Americans permit their citizens to have input on these matters through the Senate. This Government could permit Canadians to have input before this agreement is signed. Will the Minister admit that he is prepared to have behind closed door meetings with special groups to make deals, rather than allow the groups who have serious concerns about the fishery problem to come before a committee? Would he also admit that there was no confusion in the minds of the Canadian people when the Government promised as a sacred trust that there would be openness of government and consultation? The Americans have it, and we could have it by a simple decision of this House. Would the Minister admit he is prepared to do this behind closed doors instead of in the public eye?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, this has not been a behind closed doors process.

Mr. Skelly: You just admitted it was, John.

Mr. Fraser: The Hon. Member comes from a riding on Vancouver Island and on the mainland which has, of course, a fishing constituency. People in his own riding have had their representatives on this negotiating team, not just for the last round of talks that finally led to agreement, but for many, many years, as the Hon. Member knows. This is not a hidden process. Anyone who is paying attention to the fishing community in the province of British Columbia, as I would have thought the Member would be, knows all of this. His questions are more rhetorical than they are for the purpose of finding facts which he, of course, already knows all about.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT ON AIR DEFENCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise another question dealing with the proposed amorous union between the President of the United States and our Prime Minister on March 17. This time it is in the very vital area of the proposed signing of a defence agreement that carries with it major implications for expenditures of billions upon billions of dollars on behalf of the Government of Canada. It also carries with it major implications of the placement of new air defence weapons in northern Canada, new fighter bases, and perhaps ground to air missiles.

With all of the major implications bearing upon the proposed signing of that agreement and those negotiations, are the Minister and the Government prepared to make that proposed agreement public in this Parliament before a parliamentary committee so that it can be properly examined by parliamentarians, and debated in the House, before we make a commitment of such major significance to the future of the country?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is no current or projected Canadian plan regarding replacement of the DEW Line or any other matter involving Canada in any aspect of United States strategic defence initiatives.

EXISTENCE OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has given us a fine reading of a prepared text. However, there are statements by U.S. officials and Canadian officials, and testimony before the Senate committee, that there are negotiations—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Members are getting longer and longer. May I ask the Member to please come to his supplementary.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to ask the question. Is the Minister saying that presently there are not negotiations and there is no intention to sign any new agreement under NORAD, or any new defence arrangement with the United States?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is evident that the systems built three decades ago in the mid 1950s are in need of replacement. Joint studies and plans began in the mid 1970s and they continue. The House will understand that I cannot report on negotiations still in progress.

Mr. Frith: He is reading it.

Mr. Coates: I am reading for a very real reason. This is a very serious matter and we certainly do not want Canadians mixed up between two specific matters that have no relationship.

Mr. Axworthy: Let's get it before Parliament and see.

PENTAGON PROPOSAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is reading his answers well to make sure, presumably, that he is sticking to the facts. I would like to ask him some questions on the same very important subject matter.

The report which came out last night said that there were discussions involving Canadians as well as Americans of a Pentagon proposal for major changes in the defence of the north of Canada. Would the Minister confirm whether those discussions are going on? Will he tell us the framework within which discussion is taking place?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I stated in my last answer, there have been discussions going on since 1970. Those discussions are continuing. The Hon. Member knows that until those discussions are concluded I cannot make a statement in the House in relation to them.

SUBJECT OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is one thing to tell the whole country and the whole world about the very specific details of defence matters. I understand what the Minister is saying in that regard. It is quite another thing for the Government of Canada to be involved in changes in strategic thinking that could take us in a whole new direction.

The news report indicated that what is being discussed is the deployment of a new anti-missile and anti-satellite system in the north of Canada. Is that being discussed? Does it involve discussions about the possibility of deployment of nuclear weapons in Canada as part of the missile system? Finally, is it connected with the star wars scheme of President Reagan?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I not only want to clarify the situation for that Hon. Member, but for all Hon. Members in the House. We are talking about negotiations in relation to a radar warning system. It has nothing to do with weapons systems.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister realizes that the matter is very clear. He is assuring us that what is being discussed is not connected with the star wars proposal of President Reagan. I would like him to confirm that. Would the Minister do what the Liberal Government never did, in spite of their questions now, that is, bring the broad framework for proposals before the House of Commons and a committee for a full discussion before agreement is entered into?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, when I answered the first question I very carefully read it because I did not want misconceptions. After having told the Hon. Member three times that we are talking about a warning system and not a weapons system, he is asking me to confirm it again. For the last time, Sir, we are talking about a radar warning system, and that is it.

Oral Questions

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—CONSULTATION PROCESS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. In the past several days it has been rather obvious that the Government is very anxious to proceed with a redress package for the Japanese Canadian community. However, the Minister surely knows that the community is tremendously disturbed at the government imposed timetable.

Rather than rushing this package through the House at this time, will the Minister not instead refer this back to the consultation process so that this process can be given a realistic chance to forge a mutual agreement between the Government and the Japanese Canadian community?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, there has never been a timetable as such set down. That has never been a consideration. I do not necessarily agree with the Hon. Member when he says that the community is terribly disturbed over what has taken place. There is concern, of course. Individuals who claim to represent a large segment of the community have indicated to the Government all along, and are now indicating in the press, that they would like to have an acknowledgement, and what they call a token settlement. Other people whom we have talked to have indicated that they would like to see something in the neighbourhood of a $50 million settlement. Individuals have indicated to us that they would like to see a $20 million settlement. The association itself has indicated that it would like to see a $300 million settlement.

In that context, Mr. Speaker, we as a Government were trying to have discussions with the community to learn whether we could agree on a set proposal and also take that to the House of Commons—

Mr. Speaker: In fairness, I cannot ask Hon. Members on this side to shorten their questions without asking Hon. Ministers to restrict themselves to answers. Statements by Ministers are made under Statements by Ministers. A supplementary question.

Mr. Marchi: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I think we must have the answers a little more forthright.

REQUEST THAT DISCUSSIONS BE REOPENED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Yesterday the Prime Minister said that the Cabinet has reached an agreement on the proposal, that is to say, that discussions are closed.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Marchi: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am coming to that.

Will the Minister display sensitivity, and make the process more genuine by continuing consultations?

The Government presents itself as being consultative, yet consultations with the Japanese community were closed as of yesterday. Will the Hon. Minister see fit to reopen those discussions to give the process an honest chance to fulfil what it was supposed to do?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the process of discussion with the Japanese community has been ongoing for some time. The last week of September was the first time I had discussions and meetings with the concerned parties. We are at the point now where we would like to see the matter dealt with as expeditiously as possible. We would also like to see a general agreement here in the House of Commons, and that is what the Government House Leader is preparing and hoping to achieve over the next few days.

REQUEST FOR FURTHER MEETING

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Multiculturalism). Given that there is still concern being expressed by those who are the leaders in the Jananese-Canadian community, and given that there is no great rush, would the Minister not consider one more time that it would be in the best interests of everyone that the Japanese community be satisfied that the process followed was a fair process, and arrange to meet with them again in order to try to get that kind of understanding?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I had discussions with some of the leaders of the Japanese community in Vancouver last weekend. My question to them was much along the lines of the Member's question to me. The community is not united on where it wants to go. That is nothing new, because most communities in this country are not.

There is a large segment of the Japanese-Canadian community that would like to see an acknowledgement by all Members and all Parties in this House. They would like to see redress based on a memorialization, or some other form of memorialization that could be extended to all communities in this country. We think that is the direction that will probably receive the greatest degree of acceptance throughout the community itself. As I said before, and to conclude my remarks, it will be up to the House Leaders of the three Parties to see if they can reach some agreement—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have already done this once. I do not like to have to do it again.

ASSOCIATION REQUEST

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has stated that there are divisions in the Japanese community. That is not surprising. Recognizing that that is true, and recognizing that the national association has said it would like to have further meetings, does the Minister not see that that kind of approach would result in a much more satisfactory conclusion to the discussions that took place, and would he simply accede to that request?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, certainly many members of the Japanese community would like to see this matter resolved over a reasonable period of time.

Mr. Deans: We will.

Mr. Murta: That is all we are asking the Opposition do do, to sit down with us to see whether we can come to an agreement here in the House of Commons and resolve that.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Do it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONTADORA GROUP—PEACE IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, last week the Secretary of State for External Affairs went to Mexico to talk about the Contadora Group and peace in Central America. Could the Minister inform the House of the results of his talks with Mexican officials?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, the Contadora process is seen by everyone as the best way to achieve peace in Central America. In view of Canada's expertise in peacekeeping matters, the Contadora countries asked us for some suggestions on improving the process and providing for a peacekeeping mission.

We submitted a detailed proposal to the Contadora countries, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs of Mexico, Mr. Sepulveda, thanked me when I was in Mexico for Canada's contribution. This is an indication of what Canada has been able to do. It is an area in which we have considerable experience. We have made our expertise available to the countries of Central America to help them find a solution to the problems in that area.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PAYMENT OF GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT TO PERSONS RECEIVING WORKERS COMPENSATION

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I ask my question sincerely. Does the Minister think it fair that the Government of Canada reduces payments under the guaranteed income supplement to those pensioners who are receiving workmen's compensation as a result of previous injury?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised this matter in previous Parliaments. I know he is sincere about it. I am putting forth to him that I am looking at the matter. I am not saying that to put the matter off. It has serious implications in other areas of pension eligibility, as the Member knows from previous discussions.

I know what his representation is and he has made it sincerely, as I say, in two Parliaments. I can say to him that it is an issue that is not out of my mind, but I have not come to a conclusion as yet.

REQUEST FOR AMENDING MEASURE

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Minister that members of his Party and members of my Party are supportive of changing the legislation back to the way it was. Would the Minister of National Health and Welfare consider producing a ways and means motion or make a recommendation to be contained in the forthcoming Budget?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the recommendation which the Hon. Member has made is along similar lines that have been mentioned earlier. We have looked at various options, and the Government will make its decision. I appreciate the representation which the Hon. Member has made.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the energy negotiations that are going on this week. I have a letter here submitted to the Conservative Caucus in which one of the Conservatives' own members expresses his great concerns about the recent increases in the price of gasoline at the pump.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister respond to these questions. I quote from the letter:

> I am starting to believe that we are being held hostage by these companies concerned only with personal profit and that the federal Government has indeed abandoned us.

In addition:

> Do we not have any alternative solutions or methods of controlling these large companies? Is it possible that we might have misplaced them since our victory of September 4 last?

How does the Deputy Prime Minister respond to one of his own backbenchers?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I will see to it that the letter is read by the Minister responsible, and perhaps when she returns she can reply to the Member's question.

Mr. Waddell: I bet you will.

PETROLEUM COMPENSATION ACCOUNT DEFICIT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Finance. In the light of the concerns expressed by one of her own Members echoing what we have been saying this week in the House, would the Minister now commit the Government to imposing a windfall tax on the oil companies, which companies will gain when we go to world prices? Will she also commit the Government not to charge consumers for that $1 billion deficit in the petroleum compensation account? Will she go on record committing herself to do that?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that we have the interests of the Canadian public at heart—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The oil companies.

Mrs. McDougall: —that we face considerable problems as a result of the energy policy of the former Government, and that we will resolve those issues in the interests of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: What is good enough for Imperial Oil is good enough for Canada.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TAX STATUS OF TUBE MILL PROJECT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Since last September the Department of National Revenue has been holding up making a decision and giving an advance ruling on a joint venture, a limited partnership, by Algoma Steel, which is really holding up the completion of a $350 million tube mill which will create many hundreds of jobs both in construction and in the operation of that tube mill. Is the Minister ready to indicate a favourable decision on that advance ruling this morning?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows Section 241 of the Income Tax Act prevents me from disclosing tax affairs of any taxpayer, including corporate taxpayers. The Hon. Member has been in touch with me from time to time with regard to the subject. Certainly his representations have been noted.

● (1150)

ADVANCE RULING POLICY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, since this matter is very important to a community which has suffered a great deal during the recession, will the Minister indicate when his Department will be making a decision on it? Also, could he say whether or not a policy of not giving advance rulings on joint ventures, or limited partnerships, which will create jobs and substantial economic development in the country, will be abolished, and whether the Government will revert to the previous policy where advance rulings were given?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, there are really two elements to the Hon. Member's question. The first deals with when a ruling, if one is to be given, will be given. Again I am precluded by Section 214 of the Act from giving any such indication whatsoever.

The other question was with regard to a much broader issue of policy, as to whether advance rulings on limited partnerships will be given in the future. As a result of the fact that there were approximately $2 billion worth of unused tax credits in the system which could have been sold through processees such as limited partnerships and others, last fall the Minister of Finance asked that a moratorium be placed upon new proposals for limited partnerships. However, there were grandfather procedures put in place to allow some consideration to be given in cases where proposals were already well advanced. In those cases we have looked at them on a case by case basis.

THE ADMINISTRATION

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF CERTAIN APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

In his book "Where I stand" and in the televised debates during the election campaign, the Prime Minister recommended that appointments by Order-in-Council of officials to key economic positions in the Government should be examined by a committee of the House of Commons.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain why, in the case of the appointments made on January 8—and I am referring to the appointment of Mrs. Sylvia Ostry as the Prime Minister's representative at the Economic Summit, Mr. Rob Richardson as Deputy Minister of External Trade and Mr. Paul Labbé as President of Investment Canada—these appointments were not referred to a committee of the House of Commons?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had been paying attention to the changes which this Government has brought about, he would know that the very distinguished Hon. Member for St. John's East has been designated to head a Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform. This is one of the very aspects upon which inquiries and judgment, I assume, will be concentrated by his Committee, and in due course recommendations will be put before the House.

COMMITTEE TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the terms of reference of the Committee do not cover the topic of the scrutiny of government appointments, and that the matter has not been discussed by the Committee at all, according to our representative on the Committee, is the Government committed to having parliamentary scrutiny of Order in Council and patronage appointments, or should we be calling the Prime Minister's book Where I Stood?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member has been here for a while, he will learn that the terms of reference granted by the House of Commons directing work of the standing committees are more honoured in the expansion than in the contraction. That particular Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform has already been considering matters beyond the scope of the reference, and I am sure that it won't overlook this one.

METRIC CONVERSION

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Practically half a year has gone by and we do not know yet whether the Government is coming or going, and whether it is doing it in metres or feet. The Minister has said that he does not want to proceed too rapidly, so as to make the most logical decision. This was in answer to a previous question which I asked him. I should like to ask him what he means by logical. Is what is logical for consumers, manufacturers, and school children, logical for the Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have said before, in answer to various questions, that the Department intends to look into all consultations relating to the metric system. A decision has been made, and we are determining the implementation procedures, which will be announced in due time, probably very shortly.

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says a decision has been made. The Minister of Public Works says one thing and he says another.

It seems to me that consumers and business—

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that what we need is a question.

Mr. Berger: Very well, Mr. Speaker.

Instead of confusing the issue for months, could the Minister inform the House when his decision will be forthcoming or let us know right now?

[English]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we will be making an announcement as to when the fine tuning of the modality of that decision will be finalized, and it should be pretty soon.

TRUST COMPANIES

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. What is happening with respect to the proposed new Trust Companies Act? When will the Bill on that subject likely be introduced in the House of Commons?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as I have stated in the House before, the matter of financial institutions is under review. Considerable progress is being made toward the paper we will be producing. I cannot give a time when the legislation will be produced. It will be following the issuance of a discussion paper, which I know will meet with the Hon. Member's pleasure.

MEDICAL CARE

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Many groups in Manitoba have expressed concern about whether the Province of Manitoba will be able to retain national standards of health with the $72 million reduction in equalization payments from the federal Government. With this in mind, has the Minister asked the Minister of Finance to restore that $72 million to the Province of Manitoba?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on that question, any discussions between the Minister of Finance and myself will be done in Cabinet.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Minister stand by his words on March 23, 1982, when he said in the House:

—I am questioning whether any government in Manitoba has the ability to provide the service for Manitobans.

He also said:

—on this issue the members of the NDP and the Progressive Conservatives from Manitoba are united.

Is he still united with us in insisting that that $72 million be restored to the Province of Manitoba?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, politically I am never united with that Hon. Member, as he knows. In terms of serious negotiations, and in terms of the wide range not only of health services but of post-secondary services and the funding of those programs, as well as any other program, the Minister of Finance is meeting with the province. I think that is the appropriate route.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF CANADIAN WILDLIFE SERVICE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It was reported in today's edition of The Citizen that the Minister admitted to her Alberta caucus that she had made a mistake in chopping funds from the Canadian Wildlife Service. Later she told reporters that it was a sound decision. The Minister cannot have it both ways. Will she now admit in the House that she has made an error? Will she give us an undertaking that she will fight in Cabinet to have those funds restored to the Canadian Wildlife Service?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am not in the habit of discussing in the House any exchange of information with my colleagues in the various caucuses. However, I admit that on occasion I have said that not being God, I am entitled to a few mistakes, and that it is possible that I shall make some like everyone else.

COMMUNICATIONS

CRTC HEARINGS ON YOUTH NETWORK

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Communications and his Parliamentary Secretary, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Point of Order—Mr. Waddell

Before authorizing proposals by federal departments such as Transport Canada and Environment Canada, the Government normally conducts an analysis of the social and economic impact of such measures on the quality of life of Canadians. In the case of the CRTC hearings on a Canadian youth channel, no analysis was made. Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House why this was not done?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making statements in the body of her preamble and question with which I am not only not familiar, but not expected to be familiar. I am certain, however, given the very methodical and management oriented approach that this Government is taking, that all of the impacts of decisions made by the Government are examined very carefully before decisions are reached.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) on Thursday, January 24, 1985, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

CLOSURE OF CLEARWATER, B.C. MILL

Mr. Speaker: The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on Thursday, January 24, 1985, does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST TO APPEND LETTER TO OFFICIAL REPORT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to seek the unanimous consent of the House to have appended to today's Hansard proceedings a letter from the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) dated January 15, 1985, subject: new gas prices increase in Quebec and Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is seeking unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-26, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Minister shall have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 17, 113, 144 and 175.

[Text]

LAWYERS EMPLOYED BY REVENUE CANADA

Question No. 17—Mr. Howie:

How many lawyers are employed by the Department of National Revenue?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): There are 14 lawyers assigned to the Department of National Revenue from the Department of Justice.

EFFECTS OF PESTICIDES ON WILDLIFE

Question No. 113—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Did the Department of the Environment undertake any studies to determine what effects the spraying of pesticides to control bud worm infestations has on the wildlife in the Province of New Brunswick and, if so, are further studies contemplated?

2. Did the Department eliminate seven jobs in Sackville and four jobs in Fredericton and, if so, does this mean that no further work is to be done in this area?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): 1. Yes; further studies are contemplated.

2. No. Studies to monitor the effects of forest pesticides in New Brunswick will be continued.

INTERNATIONAL YOUTH YEAR

Question No. 144—Mrs. Killens:

1. Does the Government intend to allot special funding for the International Year of the Youth and, if so, will the House be informed about such funding?

2. Will the Government provide a list of prerequisites for securing such funding and who is responsible for administering the funding?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): 1. Yes, special funding has been allocated for International Youth Year (IYY). On May 31, 1984 the federal Government announced its program for International Youth Year with a budget of $12 million over the fiscal years 1984-1985 and 1985-1986. From this amount, over $7.9 million has been set aside to fund special IYY projects under the IYY grants program. An additional $12 million is available to support the initiatives of other federal departments and agencies. A $2.6 million program to increase young Canadians' awareness of international issues during the Year will be launched shortly.

2. Yes, the criteria used for assessing IYY special projects are outlined in a brochure entitled "International Youth Year 1984 Grants for Special Projects" which is available to the general public free of charge.

These criteria have been amended to include costs for salaries as an expense eligible for funding. For national projects, an additional deadline of August 15, 1985 for submission of proposals has been set. These changes are being incorporated in the new brochure.

With respect to the IYY initiatives of other federal departments and agencies, the following criteria will be used to assess their proposals; activities should: relate to the themes and federal objectives for the year; impact on areas of interest to youth; provide an innovative response to youth needs through projects that produce tangible results; encourage self-reliance among youth through their participation in the proposed activity; and contribute to the department or agency's on-going mandate and activities.

The criteria for the program relating to increasing international awareness among Canadian youth have not yet been finalized.

The International Youth Year Secretariat, located within the Department of the Secretary of State, is responsible for administering the International Youth Year program under the direction of the Minister of State for Youth.

GRANT PER STUDENT PAID TO UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES

Question No. 175—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. In 1983, by province, what was the grant per student paid by the Government for distribution to universities and colleges?

2. What was the amount per capita?

3. In 1983, what was the grant per student actually received by church related universities and colleges?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): 1. The financial support for post-secondary education under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 is not provided on a per-student basis and cannot be so allocated.

2. The amount per capita transferred to provinces for post-secondary education in 1983-1984 was $159.62. This includes both cash and tax transfers.

3. Transfers to provinces for post-secondary education Established Programs Financing arrangements are not designated for specific purposes or institutions.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mrs. Landry: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would respectfully request that you call the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Speaker: I have to say to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) that I gave him a scare earlier that I might not agree to this request. I am fully prepared to agree to the request.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor) moved:

That this House recognizes the extreme urgency of the unemployment crisis in Atlantic Canada, and urges the government to move immediately on a major program of regional development based on:

1. proper resource management to rebuild the forestry, fishing and coal industries;

2. self-directed community programs to expand permanent jobs through co-operatives and small business;

3. affirmative action to remove job barriers faced by women; and

4. government led investment to expand and safeguard jobs in the steel industry through Devco (Cape Breton Development Corporation).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to you and to this House of Commons today with an extreme sense of urgency about the difficulties and dangers that face our country, as we have heard this past week, throughout Atlantic Canada. There has to be action now on the many problems of unemployment that have built up over the years and have reached a state of extreme urgency in this past period of increasingly heavy unemployment there.

I want to tell the Members of the House of Commons what groups like the St. Joseph's Parish unemployed group of Sydney told us. Young people are desperate for jobs—jobs for the long run, not the kind of short-run, make-work jobs which have too often characterized what has been taking place in Atlantic Canada. That group requested a Canada Works grant and was turned down. They report that in Cape Breton over 40 per cent of the potential workforce is out of work. In a town like Glace Bay, over 60 per cent is out of work.

I want to report what groups like the YMCA job corps in Newfoundland said to our action group, that the real unemployment rate in the Province of Newfoundland is between 39 and 45 per cent. Over 50 per cent of high school students are dropping out and finding themselves without a future in the workforce of that province. There is a despair that results for the people of that province, particularly the young people.

I want to report what we heard from the vice-president of the Newcastle-Chatham District Labour Council. Over 18,000 employable people exist in Miramichi, New Brunswick, 8,000 of whom are on UIC and 2,000 on social assistance. Over 50 per cent of the workforce in that part of New Brunswick is unemployed.

[Translation]

This young student at the University of Moncton told us: "It may be the International Year of Youth, but as far as the young people in Moncton are concerned, it must be International Unemployment Year".

[English]

I have to report what we heard from the Status of Women group in St. John's, Newfoundland. Over 45 per cent of women in that province are jobless. Those women face serious job barriers. For them it is a depression, not a recession. For them the time for polite words is past.

The problem is immense. Official statistics show that unemployment, despite some decrease nationally, is up significantly in Atlantic Canada. In Newfoundland it is up on seasonally adjusted rates from 19 per cent a year ago to over 21 per cent. In Prince Edward Island it is up two percentage points to 13.5 per cent from a year ago. In Nova Scotia it is not up quite as much but it is up. New Brunswick is virtually the same. The participation rates for the population throughout Atlantic Canada are significantly lower in the workforce than in the rest of this country. The rate in Canada for participation in the workforce is 65 per cent, but in Newfoundland it is only 53.5 per cent, 61 per cent in Nova Scotia and 55.7 per cent in New Brunswick.

These figures tell us that there are people who, if they lived in the rest of Canada, would be in the workforce but because they live in Atlantic Canada cannot find jobs. That is why the real rate of unemployment reported to us by people is actually 30 per cent to 45 per cent in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

It is a chronic problem. As the social justice network in Cape Breton Island told us, it is a problem that has existed for many years but is far, far worse as we begin 1985. As the Nova Scotia Federation of Labour said to us, if we had this level of unemployment throughout the entire country, there would be a revolution here. We must do something about this problem and we must move fast because its social effects are catastrophic.

Professors from the university in Moncton spoke to us about increased violence and suicides in New Brunswick. The health coalition in Cape Breton Island told us that referrals to hospitals for mental health problems have gone up by over 50 per cent in the last seven years.

Now there are new fears that people in Atlantic Canada feel as they look at the first steps taken by the new Government to try to deal with the regional development problems in that part of Canada. There is a sense of fear and concern that has been created by the cuts that have taken place and also, frankly, by some problems in the consultation process as it begins. I would like to relate publicly what I heard from people in Atlantic Canada. Some Ministers have made good starts on consultation but there have been some serious problems with other Ministers and a sense of unease hangs over the region. For instance, we heard from the New Brunswick Federation of Woodlot Owners, a group of small business people and farmers who produce almost 30 per cent of the wood output of the province yet have received only 16 per cent of the reforestation funding available through the federal-provincial agreement. We were told that that group met on December 15 with the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) who, after all, comes from New Brunswick. Yet in six weeks there has been no response from the Minister to the request that the formula dividing those funds for reforestation efforts be changed to give them a fair share. The group has asked for more fairness because that fairness could give an estimated 350 more jobs per year in New Brunswick. Yet no answer has been given by the Government.

The Cape Breton Council of Senior Citizens told us about its serious concerns regarding what will happen to people facing the possibility of early retirement in industry in order to open up jobs for young people. The UIC cuts proposed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) will have the effect of eliminating the possibility of receiving UIC during the first early retirement year as of the end of this year. Older people in Cape Breton Island are scared.

[Translation]

Students and professors at the University of Moncton talked about the CBC cutbacks in Moncton, but there have also been cuts in Gander and Cape Breton. The problems created by these cutbacks for the Francophone community of New Brunswick are very considerable.

[English]

Those kinds of cuts are scaring people in Atlantic Canada because they see their ability to speak for themselves through these important national media being cut away.

The Maritime Fishermen's Union, for example, told us they entered with a sense of responsibility and hope into negotiations about the division of fish quotas in the Cape Breton area between inshore fishermen and large-scale fishermen. They compromised and worked out an agreement. They felt that they had come to an agreement that was not perfect or exactly what they wanted.

However, they had reached an agreement which they felt they could live with. Yet the Minister, in the final agreement which was established, moved it in almost the opposite direction from the direction that had been negotiated. There is a sense of profound unease felt by those fishermen about the real meaning of consultation.

We heard about the fears of the people of Glace Bay who face a cut in the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program to 25 per cent of last year's allocation. That program is an important source of jobs in that community. We heard from the United Mine Workers and the Nova Scotia Federation of Labour about their concern over the remarks made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) who spoke about perhaps getting rid of Devco and privatizing the coal mines in Cape Breton Island. That suggestion may go down very well with her constituents in British Columbia but it scares people and communities in Altantic Canada.

As our action group spoke to 45 or 50 groups in the days we were there, we sensed a growing lack of confidence and a search for alternatives to the direction in which the Government seems to be heading. However, it is important to stress that we also sensed a feeling of hope and potential for communities in Atlantic Canada. Despite the problems that exist and despite how urgently action is needed, Atlantic Canada is not a basket case. People in that part of the country are tired of condescension from central Canada. They are tired of control by central Canada, whether it be control by large companies like Noranda in New Brunswick or Abitibi-Price in Newfoundland or control by bureaucrats from central Canada. They are tired of control by bureaucrats from an organization like Devco which, despite much of its contribution, has created a sense among the United Mine Workers and the steelworkers in Cape Breton that it is not prepared to consult honestly, openly and completely with the workers who will be so profoundly affected by Devco's decisions.

These people, Mr. Speaker, have given us some exciting ideas about the future. The motion which we have put before the House today tries to summarize, not in detail but with some particulars, the kinds of hopes which we heard and which we felt. There was hope first for resource development which will operate through small groups and organizations instead of just the large companies. For instance, Mr. Speaker, we were told that reforestation efforts in Newfoundland could give us a thousand extra jobs a year if this Government and the Government of that province would get together and move fast on just those kinds of initiatives. I have already mentioned the 350 jobs which the woodlot owners in New Brunswick are convinced could come from their being given more responsibility for reforestation.

The same thing is true in the fishing industry. The Newfoundland fishermen's union told us very clearly of its plans and hopes to build that industry in Newfoundland through community-owned fishing plants which would not have to rely on the large external companies which do not have the sensitivity of or roots in local communities.

I have to mention coal as well, Mr. Speaker. The United Mine Workers Union has come up with what I consider an imaginative, exciting plan for re-establishing and refurbishing the coal industry in Cape Breton. I am very pleased that the Minister who is responsible in this area has encouraged this plan. However, this hope must not be allowed to become a forlorn hope. It must be something which the Government comes through on and we, Mr. Speaker, will be pushing to see that that does happen.

It is not just resources. The resource base of Atlantic Canada is important to build on but we have to go beyond that. We must use the human resource in Atlantic Canada because that human resource is there. There is a sense all across the communities which we visited that people themselves, working together, acting in a self-reliant way, can build future jobs for themselves. They can work it through, as is happening in Glace Bay, small businesses set up in an incubator mall there which is going to provide a great many jobs. It is exactly the same kind of thing with co-operatives. However, as these jobs expand, as group after group told us, there must also be fairness for women. In the basic industries of that region as well there must be an emphasis on growth in shipbuilding and in steel.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would say that if this happens, if this hope is realized, we can turn around the extremely serious problems of that part of Canada and deal with the most urgent concern of unemployment which is so badly hitting the people of those communities.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? There being no questions or comments, I call on the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) for his motion. I say that because it gives me an opportunity to bring the House up to date on many of the initiatives which this Government has taken in regional development and small business encouragement over the past few months and, in particular, over the past few weeks. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, last evening when I first saw the motion I was so pleased with its contents, the setting out of the four points, that for a moment I thought it had probably been proposed by, say, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. O'Neil) or the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), both of whom, I think Hon. Members would agree, are very able advocates in the Government caucus of development at a regional level, especially in Atlantic Canada. However, upon checking I found that indeed the motion had been brought forward by our socialist friend who, after presenting the motion today and giving us an opportunity to hear his remarks, seems to have fallen into that pitfall which the socialists continually fall into, and that is their plaintive voice of despair. We have nothing to fear in this country and despair will only bring more despair.

As you are no doubt aware, Mr. Speaker, earlier this week, on Monday in fact, I met with my counterparts, the Ministers responsible for regional development at the provincial level and in the two territories, and I only wish that Hon. Members who are going to participate in this debate could have sat in and listened to the positive, co-operative and optimistic spirit which prevailed at that meeting with every provincial representative and every representative of the territories. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I have had literally a majority of those who attended either write to me or speak to me, saying that it has been the best meeting of a regional development nature that they have ever attended, certainly the best that they have attended in the last three and a half years. I say that because I believe we should bear in mind that the agenda which was worked out at that meeting was one which we now intend to put to the First Ministers' conference in Regina. We are hoping that many of the things which were agreed to at our meeting on Monday will be furthered and recommended by the First Ministers in Regina.

I can tell you that Atlantic Canada will be very pleased if some of the things which have been agreed to at our level are also agreed to at that First Ministers' conference. Having said that, I would like to remind Hon. Members that on the government side there are Ministers and Hon. Members who are determined to harness a team to take up the challenges of regional economic development, taking it out of whatever is its low point and turning it into a successful, dynamic development in the regions which need it most in this country.

What we are hearing from the opposition side are the cynical platitudes of those who only know how to ride this question as a hobby horse. The provincial Ministers with whom I have met know the difference. They are prepared to be part of our team approach. The provincial First Ministers will meet with our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) next month in Regina, as I have indicated, and they hopefully will also set the guidelines and directions for the team approach we are hoping to accomplish. We would welcome constructive ideas, of course, from all sides so I invite those on hobby horses to get down and join the real team which will do a real job for all parts of Canada.

As the House is aware, regional development is one of the four major topics with which those First Ministers in Regina will be dealing. It was put on the Regina agenda at Meech Lake. Of course, I cannot in good faith reveal the details of the discussions I have referred to that were conducted on Monday, but I can say that we had cordial and frank discussions and we have broken new ground in our deliberations.

● (1230)

In view of the lip service paid by the former Government to regional development, I am sure the House will be as surprised as I was to learn that the meeting last Monday was the first time there has been such a meeting of regional development Ministers in Canada throughout our entire history. Such a meeting has never been held before in our Confederation. I feel that coming out of this meeting there has been a new sense of direction established. There has been a reconfirmation that the day of unilateral federal regional development is over. In fact, there was a new commitment to the principle that we work together, we consult and, wherever possible, we co-ordinate our activities.

Coming out of this we agreed that there will be additional meetings soon. The actual timing of these meetings and their place we would hope would be one of the items again to be dealt with by the First Ministers in Regina.

Turning now to the specifics of regional development in Atlantic Canada, I suggest that our Prime Minister summed it up in Halifax last August when he stated, and let me quote his words:

> All of Canada has been the victim of 20 years of failed Liberal policies, but this failure has been most evident in Atlantic Canada. It is here where the Liberal legacy is most apparent, it is here where failed Liberal policies and broken promises have had their most damaging effects.

As the Minister now responsible for implementing many of the programs we put in place to address the problems of regional development, I realize that this failure was not as much a failure of the programs themselves as a failure to co-operate and co-ordinate programs with provincial initiatives and aims. As background to our deliberations and to set regional development in the Atlantic Provinces in a proper perspective, I would like to point out that major federal economic development commitments in the Atlantic provinces, including signed agreements with the provinces, total at the present time some $5 billion. To say the least, that is a handsome figure in any person's calculation. While many of these commitments extend into the 1990s, such as the Atlantic fisheries restructuring and the Atlantic region's share of the patrol frigate program, a large portion of these funds will be spent during the life of the Parliament we are now sitting in.

Let me now turn to the specifics raised and to point one in the resolution before us. It deals with the proper resource management to rebuild the forestry, fishing and coal industries in the Atlantic provinces. I hope Hon. Members are aware that this Department has now committed $23.5 million to the Maritime Forest Research Centre in New Brunswick, some $475 million to the Atlantic fisheries, and $493 million to the coal industry. In addition, under the economic and regional development agreements, the Government of Canada has committed $4 million to the pulp and paper industry in Newfoundland, $12.5 million to forestry resource development in Prince Edward Island, $12 million in Nova Scotia and $42.3 million in New Brunswick. As well as carrying out the Atlantic fisheries restructuring program and commitments resulting from the Kirby report, Fisheries and Oceans has committed an additional $67.5 million to Fisheries Departments in the Atlantic region.

While the legislation governing the economic and regional development agreements calls for consultation and subsequent adjustments as necessary on the anniversary date of signing, two Atlantic provinces, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, have indicated they want earlier meetings. I can assure Hon. Members we intend to meet that request by those two provinces. These anniversary meetings provide an excellent opportunity to review the work accomplished over the past year under the agreement, to make any necessary corrections, to develop new development thrusts as dictated by experience, and to meet the ever-changing conditions in the most effective manner. I am certain that these meetings will be held in the same atmosphere of mutual respect and co-operation that was so evident at our meeting on Monday.

Let me deal with the second point raised by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor. This Government has from the beginning made it clear that the road to prosperity in Canada rested on the private sector and, in particular, small business in Canada. Now, his motion refers to the self-directed community programs to expand permanent jobs through co-operative and small businesses. This Government has promised that it would create an atmosphere of confidence in the private sector so that it might carry out its task of getting Canadians back into the workforce. This, then, has been our major thrust in the small business sector. This does not mean that the federal Government is going to shirk its responsibilities in the field of regional development but, rather, that it will accomplish the over-all objectives of maximizing regional development through co-operation rather than confrontation.

That this policy is working out was emphasized this week by the release of a Conference Board of Canada survey which showed that Canadian companies planned to do more research and development in coming years. In its survey of 200 companies it found that these Canadian firms plan to increase R and D spending by about 7 per cent per year from now through until 1989. That level is well above the expected rate of inflation over those years and is a strong indication that business has decided to go for real-growth in home grown R and D. I would suggest that this is but one indication, and there are many others I could cite, that the private sector is indeed willing to do its share with new-found and well-founded confidence.

In coming months, very soon in fact, we will be making announcements concerning new activities, new things starting in Atlantic Canada, that I know all of those who get off that hobbyhorse of wanting to play it as a political dodge will welcome.

Since coming into office the Department has made changes to the Industrial and Regional Development Program which will have a profound effect on the processing of small business grant applications. As Members know in particular, the institution of automatic maximum sharing ratios for projects requiring less than $100,000 in Crown support ensures that this smaller type of assistance may be processed speedily, with certainty, and at the local level. That is exactly what we understand is wanted from the small business sector.

In a similar vein, the changes in the Investment Canada Bill tabled in this House and now in second reading will remove many of the aggravations inherent in the Foreign Investment Review Act. In particular, the raising of the threshold for consideration in effect removes most small businesses from the former long and sometimes tedious approval process. I find it startling, though, that when you are trying to do something as positive as we are trying to do with Investment Canada, something which is going to have a profound effect in starting new businesses in Atlantic Canada, it is the self same socialists and their allies, the official Liberal opposition, that are now blocking that legislation and denying future jobs for Canadians through their blockade in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1240)

Mr. Stevens: Another indication of our support for the small business sector came this week when I tabled amendments to the Small Businesses Loans Act which raise the loan ceiling in the aggregate by $300 million and raise the gross revenue of those businesses entitled to apply from $1.5 million to $2 million. We will have further announcements in this sector when the present consultative process with the small business community is completed.

Our Department has taken the affirmative action program initiated by Treasury Board for government employees and also encourages firms bidding on projects supported by the federal Government to adopt affirmative action programs. As a matter of record, we have just completed a study of our Department's hiring practices in order to assess any problems that may exist and remove any barriers that exist. This study will be forwarded to Treasury Board in the next few days. Affirmative action is a commitment of our Prime Minister which we are implementing with as much speed and fairness as is humanly possible.

With all due respect to the Hon. Member, I think he is perhaps a little confused when he refers to steel and Devco. Of course, as Hon. Members who are well acquainted with this area know, Devco is not in the steel business, it is in the coal business.

Over the years I think we should not forget that the federal Government has made an enormous financial commitment to Cape Breton through Devco. In the past five years it has provided over $.5 billion in direct funding. This year alone the Government will spend about $150 million on Devco which in turn employs some 3,400 people on the island. In support of our commitment to Cape Breton and Devco last year I made a tour of the island which included some of the mining projects and facilities to familiarize myself with the situation. I can assure Hon. Members that the Government is committed to strengthening the operations of Devco to ensure that the coal industry will continue to play an important economic role in the future of the Atlantic region. Positive announcements will be coming very soon with respect to that company.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like once again to thank the Member for Essex-Windsor for affording me this opportunity briefly to review the present Government's continuing commitment to regional development in Atlantic Canada. This commitment was appropriately summed up by our Prime Minister last year when he said:

We recognize that the kind of assistance that will be required to prepare for the economic opportunities of the 1980s and 1990s is not within the financial resources of the provincial and local Governments in the region, and that the federal Government has a responsibility, within the limit of its own resources, to fill that gap. We recognize too that the only way to ensure that appropriate policies are identified and tailored to match changing realities is to involve the people of Atlantic Canada as much as possible in planning the economic development of their own communities.

I will assure Hon. Members that this week's meeting of Ministers responsible for regional development throughout Canada is an important step in this process, not only for Atlantic Canada but for regional development in every region and area of this great country of ours that will once again boom under a new private enterprise-oriented Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Minister. He referred with a great deal of fierté or pride to the fact that the Government is moving very quickly on affirmative action. Can he tell the House today in a very definitive and precise way what the timetable is now for the Abella report? In Atlantic Canada we ran across many problems with women, young people and the disabled. They are very concerned about the Government's timetable for the Abella report which speaks very strongly about employment equity and affirmative action in the country. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has said that they are studying it and moving quickly. What is the timetable?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, one of the nice things about the Hon. Member is that often in asking a question he also answers it. He has referred to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who is responsible with respect to the Abella report. I suggest that the Hon. Member direct the question to that Minister.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister saying that he does not know what is going on?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I can reassure the Hon. Member that we as a Cabinet work together. We allow all of our Ministers to speak for themselves, and in no way do I intend to alter that course.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister very well knows, regional development has linkages with other government departments. We have heard negative speculation that the nautical institute which has been earmarked for Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, in the seat of my colleague from Cape Breton Highlands-Canso will not be honoured, but that that amount of money will be expended in the City of Halifax.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to make any comment on what the Hon. Member has referred to. I would remind him that as chairman of the Cabinet committee for economic and regional development I am in the happy position of being able to co-ordinate all of the various departments and Ministers that he refers to. I can assure him that a very high priority of that co-ordination is to ensure that there will be effective and early regional economic development.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that the Minister has acknowledged that there are linkages between various departments of government. I am happy that he is the chairman of the Cabinet committee. Would the Minister not think it only fair and appropriate, in view of the devastating economy in Atlantic Canada, that they review their expenditures within the envelope of housing so that RRAP, as we refer to it, could revert back to the expenditures of previous years? As the Minister knows, expenditures in that regard have a very good effect in the sense that the economic multiplier is greatest in the housing industry. Could he comment on that?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member is perhaps relatively new to the House, but I hope he would not fall into the tremendous trap that so many of his colleagues who are so chained to the past have fallen into. They can only think in terms of spending programs and governmental intervention and interference. We are into a new era. Come up and enjoy it in the 1980s and I think you will see prosperity, better housing and better accommodation. A better living standard for people will once again start to be the rule rather than the exception in Canada.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it has become clear that at least one resource that the Minister is committed to increasing with respect to Atlantic Canada is red herrings. A tremendous number of interesting points have been made to us that have very little to do with questions of regional development in Atlantic Canada. I am very pleased to hear about affirmative action programs in his own ministry, but I suggest, with respect, that there is a great deal more in direct terms which needs to be done for Atlantic Canada.

I have some specific questions for the Minister which deal with points that were raised with us during our action group's visit. If he is unable to answer these questions himself, perhaps he can get his colleagues to answer the people of Atlantic Canada.

• (1250)

First, will the Minister see to it that the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) gives a reply to the New Brunswick Federation of Woodlot Owners with respect to their request for a change in the sharing of facilities for reforestation under that federal-provincial agreement?

Second, will the Minister use the auspices of Devco or Sysco? As the Minister knows, Devco does coal industrial development as well as coal mining in Cape Breton.

Will he use those mechanisms to see to it that the United Steel Workers in Cape Breton get a response to their request about the second phase of the expansion of Sysco?

Third, will the Minister see to it that the status of women group in Newfoundland gets a response to its request that Canada Works programs be equitably shared between men and women in Newfoundland?

Fourth, will the Minister see to it that his Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) at least meets with those who are concerned with the cut-backs of the Cape Breton CBC service? A committee has been trying for months to get such a meeting.

Fifth, will the Minister finally respond to the concerns about which many in Atlantic Canada have asked concerning the UIC cuts which hit not just those facing early retirement options but a great many people who are worried about the possibility of tighter regulations in the future?

Can the Minister respond to those kinds of specifics on behalf of his Government?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, having thrown about five questions at me, it is absolutely impossible within our rules for me to respond fully to those five or six questions. I can assure the Hon. Member that if he would like to write to me and ask those questions, or if he wants to take it now as notice to me, he will get a full reply to all of his questions.

Mr. Heap: Why didn't you do it in the speech?

Mr. Stevens: He didn't ask them.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) went to New York and spoke to the Economic Club. He essentially said: "Come and buy out anything you want in Canada". Since we have this policy of no questions asked regardless of how many manufacturing concerns are going to be shut down or whatever, and since we are debating Atlantic Canada, I would be interested to know, as a result of this request by the Prime Minister and the glowing position that the Minister has indicated with his Investment Canada Bill, which some people have graciously called a "sell out Canada Bill", exactly how many additional applications he has received under the present FIRA legislation as a result of this new policy which the Minister says will bring thousands of new businesses to Canada?

I would be interested to know what the dollar value has been for Atlantic Canada. In addition, I would like to hear how many new applications there have been and what the increase in applications has been under present FIRA rules for new industries coming into Atlantic Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): May I respectfully remind the Minister that we have less than one minute left in this period.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I do not have more time because I would like to expand on my answer to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). There is one thing the Hon. Member is obviously forgetting. The Foreign Investment Review Act is still the law of the land. We would like to change it. There is no new law. We have to implement the same provisions that have been in place for the last ten years. When the Member asks is there a great flood or are there new applicants, I have to tell him that there is no change in the law. We are suggesting that there should be a change, that there should be a more positive approach. I would like the Hon. Member's support to put that more positive approach in place so we can allow these applications to start flooding in.

I can also assure you, Mr. Speaker, that even in anticipation of there being a healthier and more welcome climate in this country for foreign investment, we have had literally dozens of inquiries as to when the new act will be in place so people can be received in a more wholesome way.

If the Hon. Member is wanting any independent evidence as to how on a world-wide basis this country has made foreign capital unwelcome, I ask him to read the European Management Forum which now reports that out of 28 countries reviewed, Canada stands twenty-eighth in our hostility to foreign investment. Let me say to the Hon. Member: be proud of Canada, not frightened of the world!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: Just answer the question.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), for putting forward this motion today and for reporting back to the House on some of his travels in Atlantic Canada with regard to the problems with which people in that area are confronted.

I want to tell him, and particularly the Minister responsible for Regional Industrial Development (Mr. Stevens), that I believe the solutions to these problems are political ones. I believe the solutions rest with the Minister leading the way and seeking the co-operation of the private sector.

I would like very briefly before I have to terminate my remarks at one o'clock to read to the Minister a sentence of a report which was submitted to the Royal Commission on Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada. According to the Pictou County Research and Development Commission dated October 12, 1983, any new solutions to the unemployment problem must put jobs and incomes for disadvantaged communities at the beginning of the list of priorities. Without this strategy, existing disadvantaged communities will continue to be the victims of progress.

When you look at what this Conservative Government has done, Mr. Speaker, since taking office, you will see emphasis has been put on the words jobs, jobs for Canadians.

Mr. Stevens: It is jobs, jobs, jobs. Three jobs.

Mr. Dingwall: With this statement here, the Tories are certainly not following their own rhetoric or the rhetoric of others.

I would like to point out to the Minister, who is rarely in attendance but is here today—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: —that the economic and regional development envelope has had its budgetary expenditures slashed by the famous slasher by $1.1 billion, representing the single most reduced area of expenditure in the Treasury Board's fiscal plan. So much for assisting those communities in Atlantic Canada or elsewhere in Canada.

Adding the non-budgetary reductions and loans and investments to Crown corporations of $625 million, total cuts—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member has reflected on my attendance in this House. I would like him to name one day that I have been absent.

Mr. MacLellan: December 21.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): May I just make one comment before the Hon. Member intervenes. It is not permitted on the part of a Member, and I would like the attention of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) on this, to comment on the absence or presence of another Member of this House. It is wrong to do that.

Mr. Beatty: At least when he is here, he is all here.

Mr. Dingwall: I will accept the ruling of the Chair, Mr. Speaker, but I will continue and say that maybe he is here in body but certainly not in mind.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: In all, $2.2 billion was cut from the federal Government's budgetary expenditures, which means that spending—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I regret to inform the Member that having started his speech at 1255 hours he must continue after the luncheon adjournment.

It now being 1300 hours, I do now leave the chair until 1400 hours.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) had the floor.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue with my remarks. Approximately $2.2 billion was cut from federal Government's budgetary expenditures. This means that spending originally aimed at economic and regional development represents 80 per cent of the total federal budgetary cuts.

Atlantic Canada is a region which has traditionally relied upon and benefited from federal expenditures aimed at reducing regional disparities. Our future growth and survival are vitally linked with the federal regional development policy. It is evident that the Atlantic provinces have been designated as a low priority area by the Progressive Conservative Government, as is set out in this preview to their economic master plan.

Of the $625 million dropped in loans and investments to Crown corporations, a planned equity injection of $275 million to Petro-Canada has been cancelled. Being the leading exploration force in offshore development in the Atlantic region, this reduction in the spending power of Petro-Canada can only have ill effects on the economy of the region, particularly in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

We in the Atlantic provinces depend heavily upon resource-based industry with the support of regional economic policy and job-creation programs initiated and assisted by the Government of Canada. Four federal departments are particularly relevant and co-related to the economy of Atlantic Canada. These are the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of Employment and Immigration. Of the 21 departments affected by recent cuts, Energy, Mines and Resources received the highest cuts by far at $613 million; followed by Employment and Immigration at $432 million. The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion is fifth in line with $200 million slashed from its Industrial Incentives Program. Finally, a Department with a relatively small budget but one that is crucial to the development of Atlantic Canada is Fisheries and Oceans. It stands thirteenth on the list at $36.1 million, far exceeding the budgets of Justice and National Health and Welfare.

The cuts affect us in the forestry. Research cuts in forestry amount to $1.4 million. Research cuts in Fisheries and Oceans amount to another $1.5 million, In programs which assist the development of the fishing industry, the marketing of products and the development of the marine resources, again we see another cut of $11.7 million. There are cuts in ferry services, including a summer only service on the Yarmouth-Bar Harbour ferry, of $16 million. The CN budget reduction is $21 million. The Trans-Quebec and Maritime Gas Pipeline is now deferred, $8 million cut from that. Corner Brook, Newfoundland as the new location for the forest research centre has been deferred, another $3.5 million cut for Atlantic Canada. Capital expenditures for the fishing industry to manage fish stocks for hydrographic and oceanographic activities now eliminated, $18.1 million. The transfer of the Nova Scotia regional office for income security programs from Halifax to Sydney another cut of $2.1 million. Construction of a new office complex in Halifax, another cut of $14 million. Increases in berthage fees, port inspections and foreign licence fees, another $6.3 million effect on Atlantic Canada. It is clear that what we were told before the election about jobs, jobs, jobs has not materialized, notwithstanding the rhetoric of the Minister responsible nor the Government as a body.

We have seen massive cuts which have greatly affected the lives of Canadians in Atlantic Canada. I have some suggestions, continuing along the line of my friend from Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), for the Government. It is all well and good to talk of the private sector. We in this Party support the private sector. However, to suggest as the Conservative Party has done repeatedly, particularly today, that the private sector will pick up all of the slack to create the jobs and the wealth needed in Atlantic Canada is being less than honest. The brutal fact is that there is a need for government intervention in the economy so that the less fortunate areas of this country have the opportunity to make a meaningful contribution to the Canadian economy.

What better vehicle is there than the national Government taking its role seriously and honestly? The Constitution, the accord which was signed by the provinces, states very clearly that the Government of Canada will provide assistance to the disadvantaged areas of this country, but this Government is not doing that. It is doing the exact opposite. Forestry is down from a high of 70,000 jobs in August to 9,000 in December. If that is performance in Atlantic Canada, I would hate to see anything else interpreted in that way. Fishing employment in Atlantic Canada is down from 29,000 in July to 18,000 in December. The food and beverage industry has gone from a high of 54,000 to 31,000 in December.

What about the construction industry, which affects a great host of people in Atlantic Canada? Employment is down from 29,000 to 18,000 in December. The federal administration, which comes under the direct jurisdiction of the Government of Canada, is down from 40,000 to 33,000. This Government is not taking regional development seriously. If it were, it would not be zeroing in on the less fortunate areas of this country and making its most devastating and crucial cuts on the people in that area.

It has been echoed in places other than this Chamber what the Government of Canada ought to do. Members of Parliament are aware of the difficult plight of individuals in Cape Breton and what they are faced with at the present time. I suggested to the Minister that in the interim a special agreement be developed with the Province of Nova Scotia. They ought to live up to their responsibilities to provide the infrastructure. Whether the jurisdiction is federal or provincial, it ought to be a co-operative effort. A special subsidiary agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia is crucial.

With regard to the coal industry, an answer in terms of short-term economics, and more importantly in the long-term interests of Atlantic Canada and in encouraging the Canadian economy, is a pre-retirement plan. That has been suggested time and time again, whether it be in economic reports put out by various public bodies across this country, or by provincial Governments or the federal Government.

The provisions of the ILAP program ought to be increased. Other areas in this country ought to be designated. In particular, I cite the members of the United Mine Workers of America who have been pushing this Government for a pre-retirement plan in order to allow older workers to retire and to provide jobs for younger workers who succeed them.

With regard to the coal industry, the people of that area are awaiting the Minister's answer with regard to his commitments for a long-term project in the Town of Glace Bay. We have waited patiently. I listened to what the Minister said here earlier today. I hope he will live up to that and make an announcement forthwith, not four or six months down the road but within the next number of days. This project is absolutely essential.

The motion we are debating this afternoon calls for an injection of funds by the Government of Canada with a second phase toward the modernization of Sydney Steel. The Government has been sitting on this. That plan was not put forward by a Liberal Government but by a Tory provincial Government in the Province of Nova Scotia. It is high time that the Minister responsible and the Government of Canada lived up to the commitments of the previous Government and honoured the commitment of providing moneys for the second phase.

The forest industry is another important element of Atlantic Canada. There are approximately 148 sawmills in Atlantic Canada. Each in its own way affects various small communities. What, if anything, has this Government done to try and assist? I urge it to take its responsibility seriously. The Government ought to provide a safety net to protect laid off employees and to reduce fear of buying or constructing a home. Federal incentives for new home purchase should be a permanently instituted policy which would float as the market cycles prescribe. I urge the removal of the 5 per cent federal sales tax on lumber. Subsidies presently extended under the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Atlantic Freight Rates Assistance Act should be increased in order to reduce the market proximity problems confronting the maritime lumber industry.

A saw mill training institute should be established in Atlantic Canada to increase productivity, reduce training and apprenticeship costs, fill the need for skilled workers capable of operating new and highly sophisticated machinery and, most importantly, to fill the shoes of an alarmingly aging workforce.

I know my time is running close. In the fishing industry, the Government ought to inject some dollars, improving marketing and promotion through research. We know what the blue book as tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has done. This Government echoes sentiments about research, but what has it done? It has cut $1.5 million from the Fisheries and Oceans research budget, that is what it has done. It has to improve, through co-operative effort with the provinces and the international community, whether the agency be called Investment Canada, our international trade or external relations, in the export of fishery products. That is a serious undertaking that the Government ought to get on with forthwith.

There are many other matters that I could touch on, but I will conclude with this because it concerns my constituency. It has to do with an economic policy built on fact, not on hypothesis or words adopted from philosophy obtained south of the border. It is all well and good to talk of the private sector. I suggest to you seriously, Sir, that the private sector does not operate in those areas of Canada with high unemployment. It may operate in terms of small business and I think we ought to do everything we can to encourage small business. However, the reality is that the private sector in Atlantic Canada cannot pick up all the slack and create the thousands of new jobs which are needed there.

● (1420)

The Government of Canada has a responsibility under the Canadian Constitution to provide services to all areas of the country and to provide equal opportunities for Canadians wherever they live, whether it be in Manitoba, Quebec or indeed in the Atlantic area. I note that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) is laughing. She may laugh now but I would tell her that the smugness of the smiles, attitude and intellectual bankruptcy of members of the Conservative Party is beginning to show right across the country. That smugness and lack of concern for the people of Atlantic Canada is no more evident than in the statement with which I presume she had something to do, known as the economic statement of the Minister of Finance and the accompanying blue book.

There is a great deal that the Government can do if it takes its responsibility seriously. We in Atlantic Canada do not want to receive handouts time after time. However, the hard reality is that the unemployment rate in Atlantic Canada is overwhelming and the Government of Canada, out of a sense of fairness and justice to the mosaic of Canada, ought to inject sizeable sums of money to improve the economic plight of those people who live in that region.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask the Hon. Member before we move on to debate. I appreciate some of the comments that he has made about the unemployment situation in the Atlantic provinces, and of course, one of the reasons my Party raised this issue is our concern with unemployment, not just in the Atlantic provinces but across the country.

When the new Government took power, it pledged that its priority would be jobs, jobs, jobs. In fact, no discernible action by the new Government can be linked with any change in unemployment although the Government did happen to benefit from some changes in the American economic situation and the lowering of interest rates.

How does the Hon. Member defend the fact that the unemployment situation in his riding has gotten to the state it is now at when in fact it happened under almost 20 years of Liberal governing? The Liberal Party had the opportunity to create the sustained and self-sustaining employment that Atlantic Canada so badly needs.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member has asked this question. Although I have taken the substance of the motion quite seriously, I think one can see quite evidently that in moving this motion today, members of the New Democratic Party are trying without success to move into Atlantic Canada and profit from the misery with which those individuals in Atlantic Canada are faced.

The Hon. Member asked why there is such a high unemployment rate even though we had an administration that was in power for an extended period of time. I would like to take this a little further, Mr. Speaker. I was the Member of Parliament for my riding for only four years. Who was the Member of Parliament before me? Was it a Liberal? Was it a Tory? No, it was a member of the New Democratic Party. However, in four short years the Liberal Government provided to the Cape Breton Development Corporation in excess of $628 million in an attempt to assist Canadians in that area of the country.

To show the hypocrisy of the New Democratic Party and the Hon. Member who asked the question. I can indicate that members of the New Democratic Party realized their newfound concern for Atlantic Canada after taking four trips to Atlantic Canada. They took one trip to St. John's, one to Halifax, one to Sydney and one to Moncton. Apparently P.E.I. does not count. This shows that the hypocrisy of NDP Members, as stated by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), is such that they wish to profit from the misery of other areas of the country. I would say to that Member—not to other Members but to that Member—that he ought to be ashamed of his hypocritical stance and his—

Mr. Tobin: It didn't sell in Ontario.

Mr. Dingwall: It didn't sell in Ontario. He ought to be ashamed of his suggestion that other administrations prior to this one had no concern for that area of Canada.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member as well. I would like to preface my question by saying that the hypocrisy is on his part. In fact, northern Ontario, which is very similar to Atlantic Canada, has 12 federal seats in the House of Commons. Year after year, 11 out of those 12 seats were held by Liberals. Several of those Liberals were Cabinet Ministers. In fact, the seat that I now hold was previously held by a Cabinet Minister. Those Members had their hands on the levers of power. They could have reconstituted and restructured the economy of the country by eliminating single-industry communities and coming to grips with the very serious structural problems that exist. They never did. The Hon. Member has an awful lot of gall to be able to stand in the House now and accuse Members of the New Democratic Party, whose record of restructuring those economies and improving the employment situation in the western provinces in which they govern is second to none.

I would like the Hon. Member to come clean with the Canadian people and tell them how he can rise in the House after the Liberal Party has governed over the majority of the last 50 years and masquerade by indicating that he has any solutions to the problems. Perhaps he ought to look to members of the New Democratic Party for some new ideas.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, suffice it to say that I would be prepared at any time to stack the record of that Hon. Member against his predecessor's record of four years. Suffice it to say that that would be comparing eight years with four years.

In addition, I wish to say that there is one fatal flaw in the motion. The NDP has failed as a Party to bring up the issue of heavy water plants. Do you know why this is so, Mr. Speaker? Members of the New Democratic Party, unlike members of the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party, are against the nuclear industry in the country. They want the heavy water plants closed but they do not have the intestinal fortitude to go to Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, or to Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, and stand in a union hall and say: "Yes, we as a Party wish to close your heavy water plant". They will not go to Elliot Lake and tell that to the union people. Once and for all, this shows clearly to the House and to all Members that the people who profit most from misery in this country are those who sit to my left.

• (1430)

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), a question with respect to his comments on RRAP. He asked the Minister about RRAP and the Minister passed the question off very cavalierly without a great deal of concern for the need which exists there. It has been said by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) that 60 per cent of the people are unemployed in Glace Bay, which is in the Hon. Member's own constituency. How are the people in Glace Bay coping with the need to repair and renovate in order to be able to stay in their homes when they do not have any income from the workplace?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I believe he is very much aware of my concern for that part of Canada. I would think that moneys under the RRAP program in years gone by have provided a great deal in terms of energy efficiency and providing jobs, which has added to the building industry as a whole. However, as I said earlier, and I wish to reiterate it while the Minister is in the House, a program to include additional moneys for RRAP, for environment protection and for fisheries or marine protection, ought to be included in a provincial-federal subsidiary agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia.

I am certain that if the particular subject matter which is raised by my hon. colleague was put into an agreement, it could bring benefits not only for the short term, Mr. Speaker, but would provide benefits a long way down the road for those individuals who have older homes, who wish to reside in their homes, and who, through no fault of their own, do not have the required capital to make the necessary renovations.

I would urge, therefore, Mr. Speaker, in co-operation with my colleagues and in support of the question he raised, that the Minister responsible reflect upon that matter and again raise it with his colleague, the Minister responsible for housing, so that it might be included in any provincial-federal subsidiary agreement to alleviate the economic plight of individuals in Cape Breton.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): There is less than one minute left.

Mr. Taylor: I can say what I want to say in less than a minute, Mr. Speaker. I want to know if this is a private feud between the New Democratic Party and the Liberals, or can anyone join in? The two Hon. Members of the NDP and the Liberals are arguing with each other. It seems like their own people have not suffered enough. I suggest that both Hon. Members pull up their socks, because the next time there will be a PC Member in both constituencies and then they will get results.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) in closing.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a question which perhaps ought to be reflected upon by himself. I do not think anyone can fault the New Democratic Party for raising such an important issue on the floor of the House of Commons. Although I may take an entirely different view from what those Hon. Members say, I think it is important that the issue be raised. However, I would have hoped that Conservative Members of Parliament would rise in their place and ask intelligent questions and put forward solutions which they may think applicable to resolving the plight of people in that area of Canada.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would think that those Hon. Members would jump at the opportunity to participate in this debate. With the exception of those Hon. Members who always go back to the phrase that the private sector will take care of them, I would think that they would have ample solutions readily available which we could share with the people in that area. I would hope that they would contribute to the debate.

Mr. Waddell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Today is, of course, Robbie Burns Day which, traditionally, Scottish Canadians celebrate. I am wearing my kilt. I am a little unclear about the dress code in the House. I seek your permission, Sir, to be able to sit in the House while wearing the kilt. Considering that this country really was started by French Canadians and Scots, I think I should be allowed to do so.

Mrs. Finestone: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I will say that I have no objection as long as the Hon. Member is prepared to share with us the knowledge of what he is wearing under that kilt.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): May I just warn the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, may I reply to my hon. friend who, I might say, I respect and admire? She is a very articulate new Member of the House of Commons, and I do not say that in a Burnsian sense. I can only say to the Hon.

Member that nothing is worn under the kilt; it is all in perfect working order.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I just wonder if the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) would table it?

Mr. Taylor: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to say, Mr. Speaker, that a dead bird cannot fall from its nest.

Mr. Frith: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I just want the House to know that the Liberal Party does not want to nationalize it either.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Before resuming debate, I will inform the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway that this House today, I believe, will accept his dress code as long as he does not, of course, make a habit out of it.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I am almost afraid to speak in case I lower the high level of this debate.

I would like to make a few comments with regard to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). My constituency incorporates five municipalities in Atlantic Canada and is known as the hub of the Maritimes and the transportation centre of Atlantic Canada. I am going to keep my comments relatively short because I am anxious to get back to my constituency, although after listening to the comments of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor about the terrible plight of Atlantic Canada, I am not sure why I should want to do that. My constituency was fine when I left on Monday but I am not sure what his socialistic policies were able to do to the spirit of Atlantic Canadians while I was gone. However, I am going to go back and do the best I can to build up their faith and confidence in Canada and Atlantic Canada.

To listen to the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor one would get the impression that all of the people in Atlantic Canada are depressed, are running around in despair, that suicide is rampant, that violence permeates our every day and all of this is the fault of the Government. I would like to assure the Hon. Member, as a Member of Parliament for the constituency of Moncton in Atlantic Canada, that that is not the case. Atlantic Canadians are proud people. They are proud to be Canadians and to put their efforts forward on behalf of this country. They are optimistic, value life and enjoy living. They are hard working and diligent. The people in Atlantic Canada, yes, occasionally do need government assistance and legislation, but they do not want handouts. We do not want handouts which emanate from very quick legislation or patchwork efforts which try to take care of economic problems. People in Atlantic Canada want meaningful jobs, which are not created by special legislation or treatment but which are permanent, long lasting, productive and exist as a result of a strong economy assisted by a cost-conscious government.

I am anxious to see exactly how the NDP action committee is going to fulfil its mandate, because if Members of this House have to hear about every little foray which this action committee takes in the country, it is going to slow us down from dealing with the national issues which we must deal with in order to get this country back on the road. A motion that is moved as a result of going out and listening to comments of people will result in the same kind of piecemeal legislation we had in the past which tried to deal with the economic problems of Atlantic Canada and Canada. We know about those piecemeal resolutions which were acted upon quickly and as a result of being motivated politically.

I might suggest that that is the motivation behind this motion today and behind the NDP action committee. We have seen all too often in the past the patchwork efforts which are made as a result of political motivation, and I would like to speak briefly to one of those efforts made in an area outside of my constituency, a constituency held in the past by the present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser). I refer to a plant where the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion got involved on a piecemeal basis for strictly political purposes. They were trying to introduce high-tech in an area that was not yet ready for it.

There was an example of no consultation. There was a commitment by the federal Government and the province was not even consulted. Yet the only money committed and spent was spent by the Province of New Brunswick. They spent $5 million they could ill afford to create an overpass and extend water and sewer facilities to a plant which had no economic justification. There was no basis for DRIE funding at that time in that plant. There was no consultation either. There again we saw the piecemeal nature of the past Government in dealing with the problems of Canada, and we are seeing that same kind of thing in this motion. These piecemeal solutions are not effective in trying to deal with the problems of Atlantic Canadians. It is a seat of your pants kind of motion and we have seen too much of that kind of legislation.

When you look at it very quickly, Mr. Speaker, and luckily that is all I was able to do, the motion does not deal with many of the issues facing Atlantic Canadians. There is no reference to expanding our industrial base other than through small business and co-operatives. There is no reference to tourism. You can certainly see in Atlantic Canada a vibrant and healthy tourist industry which has been helped by this Government through the signing of an agreement in New Brunswick for $32 million and a similar agreement in Prince Edward Island. There is no reference to that in this sketchy motion put forward by our friends opposite. There is no mention of education or retraining.

One thing it has which is correct is the reference to an excellent human resource available in Atlantic Canada. That human resource wants to work towards getting this country on the move. But there is no mention of retraining the members of that human resource. There is no mention of higher education to provide those people with the technology necessary to compete in Atlantic Canada in this age of technological advancement. There is no mention of the transportation industry. Coming from the hub of the Maritimes and the transportation centre of Atlantic Canada, I am concerned about that. I want to be part of a government team which will work with all the provinces so that when we introduce legislation to help Atlantic Canada and the rest of this country we will deal with all the necessary components, such as transportation.

I was pleased to see members of the Liberal Party make reference to the Maritime Freight Assistance Program, Mr. Speaker. However, there was no reference at all to the freight rates assistance program to help Atlantic Canadian farmers become self-sufficient and supply our own markets as well as export. There is no reference to a lot of the problems in Atlantic Canada and their solution. That is the kind of piecemeal approach we have an obligation to fight because that is what has caused the situation to become as difficult as it is.

We in Atlantic Canada, like the rest of this country, need comprehensive policies. Sure, we need regional policies but we also need comprehensive national policies which are created to help the regions as opposed to pitting one region against the other.

It was interesting to watch the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond who now has all the answers. I do not know where he was when that Party formed the Government of this country. Where was he in caucus when he should have gotten up and said these things? I just cannot understand why he can have all the answers now but none before. Obviously he found all kinds of things that were not referred to in this motion so I will be watching with interest when the vote is taken to see if he can support a motion that he knows does not include a lot of the things needed to get Atlantic Canada back on its feet.

Mr. Nystrom: There is no vote. It is not a voting motion.

Mr. Cochrane: The national policies we see are good for Canada and also good for Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Tobin: Nonsense.

Mr. Cochrane: Atlantic Canada is concerned with debt reduction. We are concerned that the Government is aware that we cannot continue to spend sums of money vastly greater than what we take in. This Government is concerned with deficit reduction, which will in turn bring lower interest rates, as we have seen. That in turn will create confidence throughout this country, certainly in Atlantic Canada.

There are commitments being made on research and development. In fact, by Atlantic Canada time there is probably a commitment being made right now. Investment Canada is the kind of legislation we need to encourage investment in our country and in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: For K. C. Irving.

Mr. Cochrane: I should not be baited by that but I am going to be. It is a shame that that Party cannot recognize what private enterprise and a good private entrepreneur can do for a province such as New Brunswick. As a New Brunswicker I will never stand up here and criticize the Irving family and what they have done for our province.

Mr. Cassidy: Buy and sell the province.

Mr. Cochrane: I can assure you that that family has done more in Atlantic Canada, particularly in New Brunswick, than any number of NDP task forces will ever do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Frith: Get out the flag.

Mr. Cochrane: As the Minister mentioned this morning, we have seen incentives provided to the fishery. We saw the $23.5 million invested in the forestry research facility in Fredericton. We also see the considerable contribution this Government is making to linking Atlantic Canada to the rest of this country and the rest of the world, the important link of transportation. We saw a previous government which seemed to be committed, judging by its actions, to doing away with passenger train service. Now we see a government which has committed itself to the reintroduction of "The Atlantic" from Halifax to Montreal. We have seen the reintroduction of the rail liner from Moncton to Edmundston. We have seen this Government commit itself to providing new equipment instead of patching up the old.

Those are the kinds of incentives Atlantic Canada is going to need to cement our connections to the rest of this country and the rest of the world, so we can hope to take advantage of the opportunities this country can afford and the world can deliver to us.

Tourism was not referred to in this piecemeal motion, but the $32 million tourism package signed with New Brunswick offers a lot of encouragement to us. In my constituency alone some $5.4 million is going to be spent on developing the third largest natural tourist attraction in this country, Magnetic Hill. That will provide the infrastructure so the private sector can employ people and attract tourists to our area. That is the kind of process we need. But there is no reference to tourism in the motion.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, what we need is a government concerned about the economic climate. We are proud people in Atlantic Canada. We will find a way to take advantage of what is available. If we can get this country moving, instil some confidence in this country, the people of Atlantic Canada will work hard to put their intelligence to work and take advantage of every opportunity we can get. If we fail in that objective then we will perhaps need specific legislation. But give us a chance in a country that is on the move. Give us a chance in a country where inflation is not rampant and interest rates are at reasonable levels. Then let us take a serious look at the problems in Atlantic Canada and at what problems remain. But let us make sure that legislation we introduce deals with national problems and encourages Canadians of all regions to put their expertise and intelligence to work. Then we will go out and look at what we have to do in each specific area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the Hon. Member. He made some critical remarks about the NDP task force or group which spent several days in the Atlantic provinces. I was wondering if he would now concede that this is an exercise all political Parties have taken for a number of years.

Mr. Nystrom: Except for Liberals.

Mr. Benjamin: His own Party had task forces travelling around the country and reporting back—

Mr. Rodriguez: Ad nauseam.

Mr. Benjamin: —with motions in this House or in speeches. Some of this we supported him on, Mr. Speaker. Would he not recognize that that is a legitimate exercise for any and all political Parties to carry out?

• (1450)

We found out some interesting things during our task force tour in the Atlantic provinces. We are only reporting back what the people in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland told us. That resulted in today's motion. I hope the hon. gentleman will decide that he is glad we did this. No one has ever objected to any political Party doing what is their duty, which is finding out what is going on in each region of the country, what the people are saying and bringing it back to Parliament to deal with. What is he complaining about?

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, I think I discerned a question in that dialogue. There is certainly nothing wrong with Members coming to Atlantic Canada. In fact, we encourage them to come to our part of the country. I can certainly understand the necessity of the New Democratic Party reaching out to Atlantic Canada because they obviously could not put forth the policies which would encourage Atlantic Canadians to provide a seat for one of them in this forum.

I can assure Members that we in this Party are bringing back the message from Atlantic Canada. We are working in our constituencies. We are getting information and coming back to our caucus and ensuring that the message from Atlantic Canada is heard. As a result we are able to bring forward policies that will help that particular part of the country.

Mr. Benjamin: Is the Hon. Member not complaining about our reporting back what the people in Atlantic Canada told us? I presume he is not complaining about our reporting to the House of Commons what those people told us.

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, I am not complaining about them bringing it back. I guess I am complaining about the piecemeal manner in which we develop a national mosaic to deal with the problems in the country. If every time you go to one part of the country you bring back a motion to deal with that specific part, you lose sight of national policies and problems. We need a healthy national economy in order to take full advantage of that in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate the Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) on the evangelical zeal with which he brings his views to bear on the recent visit by members of the New Democratic Party to Atlantic Canada. I, for one, think that New Democratic Party tourism dollars are as good as any other tourism dollars. I hope they had some nice meals and enjoyed the great comradery, warmth and generosity of spirit of Atlantic Canadians. I do not know what the Member is panicked about.

The Member has some kind of religious conviction. He has received some kind of absolution since he came to Ottawa only three or four months ago. He has shown us the degree to which he has matured politically, perhaps hoping to catch a glint in the Prime Minister's eye for the front bench when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates) or someone else is shuffled out. He is telling us that he will only endorse policies for Atlantic Canada that are national policies. That makes him a big, grown-up, mature Member of Parliament on the mainland in Ottawa. That makes him a centralist, Mr. Speaker.

There are issues in this country which are unique to British Columbia. There are issues that are unique to western Canada such as the Crow rate and the cost of moving grain. In Quebec the language policy is a unique issue because of the recognition of the two great languages of this country. There are certain conditions which are unique to northern Ontario and national policy has been developed to reflect them. Do not apologize for what makes your region different. Do not apologize for asking for special policy to be developed in a national forum to fit the regional need.

I would advise the Member to talk to one of the most successful politicians from Atlantic Canada, the Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain). That Hon. Member has fought every day for all of the years he has been here for the particular regional interests of Atlantic Canada. That is what has made him successful. Stop apologizing. We have special needs and interests which are as important as those of any other region in the country. They are legitimate interests that must be recognized.

Is the Member saying that he accepts as legitimate the dramatic increase of 20 per cent to 30 per cent in freight rates which has been imposed on Atlantic Canada by CN, given that in P.E.I., Nova Scotia and Newfoundland it is, in many cases, the only way to move goods and people around? Is the Member telling us that he accepts a slash of $200 million from the regional development fund? Does he accept the notion of his Minister, who is sitting opposite and listening, that there will never again be policies in this country designed for industrial development to bring jobs to the least advantaged areas of the country? Does he accept that we will no longer target areas of high unemployment anywhere in Canada? Does he accept that?

If he accepts that notion this early in the game, then for the first six to nine months he should listen, contemplate and go back to his riding to talk to his constituents. When his finger is directly on the pulse of the real needs and concerns of his constituents I would like to hear him tell us that the only policies acceptable to the people of Moncton and northern New Brunswick who have serious employment problems, as does all of Atlantic Canada where unemployment has gone up in the last three months rather than down—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Please, be reasonable. The Hon. Member has only two minutes left to answer such a long question.

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, I just assumed, coming from a riding called Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe, that the Member is used to being long-winded. In case the Hon. Member missed it, as I think he did, I would like to reiterate that I am not against regional policies and I am not apologizing for Atlantic Canada. However, I am also not crying out that we need something much different from the rest of the country. We are saying that we have needs and interests but they are not responded to in that piece of legislation. Let us get this country back to work. Let us get the interest rate down. Let us get some incentives and innovation in this country.

Mr. Tobin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe rises on a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, there is a motion before the House, not a piece of legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane).

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, it is not addressed in this motion and therefore that is not the solution to the problems. I am not apologizing. I am asking for a chance in Atlantic Canada, in a country in which the interest rate is reasonable and the Government is aware that we cannot continue to spend vast amounts more than we make. If we cannot respond and help the economy that is enjoyed by this country, then come to us with some special legislation to deal with our specific problems which we are not able to handle.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, if there was an issue of national consensus on September 4 it was that jobs must be the most important issue in Parliament. That is one of the reasons we took the initiative of forming an action group within our Party.

While the Pope was touring our country just after the tremendous election victory of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Party, he made several statements on unemployment. An editorial in The Toronto Star of September 14 reads as follows:

> In blunt language, Pope Paul 11 has just urged that Canadians be put back to work again. Restructure the economy, the Pope pleaded in Flat Rock, Nfld., so that the blight of unemployment may be lifted from the land. The message confirms the wisdom of Canada's Roman Catholic bishops, who issued a similar appeal nearly two years ago. And it sets out a profound challenge for Prime Minister-elect Brian Mulroney and his incoming government.

I think that is the real challenge of this Parliament, Mr. Speaker. My two or three days in Altantic Canada have shown me that despite the poverty and unemployment there is still tremendous optimism in this country. There is still a tremendously positive spirit among Atlantic Canadians about the future and what can be done. I was really impressed by that. Coming from Saskatchewan where the unemployment rate is very low—it is around 5 per cent, 6 per cent, or 7 per cent in the riding—I was very shocked at the high unemployment rate and impressed that people are positive. They are looking for options, solutions, and alternatives.

• (1500)

[Translation]

As the House is aware, Mr. Speaker, the national unemployment rate in this country is now 10.8 per cent. The situation is quite different in the Atlantic provinces, however. According to the figures for December, in Newfoundland the official unemployment rate was 21.2 per cent. In December 1983, the unemployment rate was 19 per cent. This is an increase of two per cent over the last twelve months. We see the same thing happening in Prince Edward Island where unemployment also rose between 1983 and 1984. The situation is the same again in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker, jobs and the unemployment rate are very important issues in this country, but the problem is far worse in our four Atlantic provinces.

[English]

The action group that went to the Atlantic Provinces had three objectives when we started our tour. These objectives will continue across Canada as we visit 22 different centres in all ten provinces, including Prince Edward Island where we are going later on.

The first objective was to give ordinary Canadians a forum to speak out about the most important issue in this country, the issue of unemployment, and to try to provide us with ideas as to where to go in the future in building a new Canada and having a new vision in the years that lie ahead.

We were told a number of things by these ordinary Canadians. We were told in Newfoundland that in 1984 some 54 per cent of the people in that province were touched by unemployment at one time or another in the last calendar year. Some people worked for ten weeks and would then be on unemployment insurance, others would work 12 to 14 weeks and go on unemployment insurance. The majority of people in Newfoundland, according to what we were told, were touched last year by unemployment in a very direct and personal sense. We were also told that the number two producer of dollars in the Province of Newfoundland was unemployment insurance benefits, Mr. Speaker. The first producer of dollars in that province was moneys coming in to federal public servants, provincial public servants, and employees of Crown corporations, in other words, people on the public service payroll or the payrolls of government. The number two producer of income is unemployment insurance.

We spoke as well with a person very well known in this House, namely, Richard Cashin, a former Member of Parliament, who is now the head of the fishermen's union, and one of his colleagues, Mr. Earl McCurdy. They told us about the problems facing the fishing industry in Newfoundland and of the tremendous problems they have historically, the poverty, and the cycle of working for a few weeks and then being unemployed. They told us about the lack of a decent income, and how we in this country have to pay more attention to the fishing industry, just as we should be paying more attention to some of the farmers and their problems on the Prairies.

We were also told about young people. The unemployment rate in our country officially among the young is 16.7 per cent. I say "officially" because a lot of people, including young people, but particularly young people, have given up looking for work. They are discouraged and many of them are back home with their families. Some are on welfare. They have just dropped out of the labour market altogether. We were told that in many explicit ways by representatives of the YWCA in the Province of Newfoundland.

In Halifax we heard Father McKinnon give what I think was the most moving testimony we heard during our three days in the Atlantic Provinces. He told us of some of the problems facing the young people in Halifax. He runs a place called Hope Cottage, which is really a soup kitchen. He told us how in the last three or four years more and more people are totally and absolutely destitute and are coming to that soup kitchen because they have nowhere else to get food.

He told us that in 1981 they had handed out some 3,600 meals, in 1983 they handed out some 51,000 meals to people, and in 1984 some 61,000 meals were given to the poorest and most destitute people in the City of Halifax.

I think it is unfair that in our society so many poor people are living on the streets. It is very unfair that many of these people have to get their food from garbage cans. It is very unfair that some of these people are forced to steal or beg to get food to live from one day to the next. I think it is very unfair that in a city like Halifax with some of the highest rents in the country there are slum landlords charging people as much as possible and that there are many, many people living in a small room or apartment. It is very unfair that in a land of so much wealth and opportunity there is so much poverty in parts of Canada. It is very unfair that in Halifax, which has a very large black population, 75 per cent of young black people are without work. Only 20 young blacks graduated from high school in 1984. There is obviously something wrong when we have a society like the one we have which is so wealthy and so rich yet we have so many people living in absolute poverty.

We also heard from women, Mr. Speaker. We heard from the Status of Women group in Newfoundland. We heard from Beth Lacy and we heard from Dorothy Engels in the City of St. John's. They told us about discrimination in jobs when it comes to women. They told us that they estimate as a result of their work and research that around 45 per cent of the women in Newfoundland are unemployed. They also told us that in Newfoundland there are very few daycare centres for parents who want to leave their children in daycare while they go to work. They said that Newfoundland has by far the worst record in all of Canada in terms of spaces in daycare centres and in terms of the proportion of daycare centres for the population of that province. They also told us about the large number of women who want to work and cannot find full-time jobs, who are working at very low income and part-time jobs because of the tremendous recession and depression in the economy of Newfoundland.

We also spoke with a representative of disabled Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, his name was Shawn McCormick, from Halifax. He said that about 10 per cent of Canadians are disabled. This is something that I, and I think many people with me and many of my colleagues, tend to forget. He said that although the disabled represent 10 per cent of our population, federal spending for the disabled in this country has dropped in the last three or four years. He also said that although there is a great deal of unemployment among disabled Canadians, there is only one co-ordinator for the disabled in the four Atlantic provinces, only one for the province of Quebec and only one person co-ordinating programs for the disabled in Ontario, and there is only one person for the four remaining western provinces.

Mr. Speaker, it is not fair, in a country that has so much wealth and resources, to have——to have such a little money going to people who are disabled. That is one change we should be making. The Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) says we have had a lot of task forces. There was a parliamentary task force established about four years ago. Members of all Parties participated and dealt with the problems of disabled Canadians. My understanding, according to Mr. McCormick who appeared before us, is that they made 19 recommendations and only six of them have been acted upon by the Parliament of Canada. I suggest that it is time we got our act together collectively in terms of doing something for the disabled in Canada. We have, as was mentioned before, the recommendations of Judge Abella whose report came down in the latter part of November. She made recommendations about employment equity for disabled people. I suggest those recommendations be implemented as soon as possible.

[English]

• (1510)

The first objective of the action group on jobs was to give ordinary Canadians a forum in which to speak out and tell us about their problems, whether they be disabled, women, fishermen, loggers, miners, young people or whoever.

Our second objective as we went across the country was to try to discover some new ideas from the people of Canada. I genuinely feel that there are no experts in this regard. I do not feel that there are any experts in terms of creating jobs. The best experts are the ordinary people of Canada. They know their communities best. They live in them. They have a better idea than most of us as to what should be done. We came across many new ideas. I suppose if there was a theme, the theme was that in the past there have been too many centralist programs imposed by Ottawa or by St. John's, Newfoundland or by Halifax, Nova Scotia. There have been too many centralist programs devised by economists, too many theories about how to put people to work or about how to organize industry. We were told time and time again that they had too many such programs.

They said that they wanted a more decentralized approach based upon the self-reliance of various communities. They wanted small-scale development based upon local economies. They wanted more decentralization, not megaprojects and large spending programs as they have seen so often in the past. In fact, Michael Kay, a representative of the Social Action Committee of the Archdiocese of St. John's, said, "What we should have are employment strategies that are based on small scale industrial approaches throughout the Province of Newfoundland". He also said, "We need more worker-producer co-ops in the Province of Newfoundland".

We heard from students Gavin Will and Nina Patey from Memorial University who said that they needed more incentives and more help for small business in Newfoundland. They said that they needed more encouragement from the federal and provincial Governments for the co-operative movement which worked so successfully in the Province of Quebec—

[Translation]

—in the province of Quebec and in my own province of Saskatchewan, where the co-operative movement is very strong—

[English]

We have had a lot of success with it. We heard from Keith Davis from the Newfoundland Unemployment Action Committee, who said, "What we need are more community-based developments. We need local control. What we need is local initiative".

I think the message from these people is a very clear one. The direction in which we should go is helping people to help themselves. We should try to develop appropriate industries and businesses based upon local communities. We should take a serious look at trying to establish more assistance and set up co-operatives and at trying to help the co-operative movement.

Then we heard a couple of ideas about taxation which I think are interesting and at which I think we in the House should take a look. A university professor by the name of Bob Hill talked about the fact that most jobs in the country are created by small business. He made the point that we have a flat tax for corporations. Whether or not they make a large or a small profit, there is a flat tax for corporations. He suggested taking a look at changing it from a flat tax to a progressive tax for corporations. For example, a small company which was not making much money would pay a much lower corporate rate, and a larger company making a killing would have its tax rate rising very progressively in a similar way as now applies to individuals in Canada. I think that is an idea worth looking at. Perhaps it might be one way to help small businesses in Canada. It also might be a way of raising revenue from the large and wealthy corporations which are doing very well. He also said that we should take a look at special taxes when it comes to single-industry towns and communities. Often a big company will come into a community because the market internationally is very good. It makes a lot of money, a large profit, and then the market turns down, the mine closes, the company disappears and everyone is laid off. He suggested that we should look at the possibility of a special levy or a special tax when times are good placed on big companies in single-industry towns. He suggested that that tax should be turned over, not to the federal Government or the provincial Government for its plans and ideas, but to the local municipality, town, village or whatever in order to diversify the economy or the economic base of the particular community.

If such legislation had been in effect years ago, perhaps Schefferville would still exist as a fairly decent community within which to live, with a few opportunities for its people despite the fact that Iron Ore closed down that particular mine.

These were some of the ideas of ordinary people who appeared before the task force. After the first few days of setting up this action group on jobs. I knew there were many people out there who had many ideas. They have stories to tell about what we can do in their communities. The general theme was to look at appropriate, small-scale development, particularly in places like Newfoundland and Cape Breton where there are many small communities—perhaps a job here, five jobs there and ten jobs there, but jobs which will be permanent, long-term and relevant to their particular economies.

As I said, there were three objectives. The first was to give people a forum and the second was to get some new ideas. The third objective was to try, through this mechanism and others, to ensure that the job issue remained as the number one issue on the parliamentary agenda and to ensure that it was the most important issue addressed by the Government and indeed by all parliamentarians in the House of Commons. If we could use this mechanism to give people a forum in which to present new ideas and to put pressure upon us as Members of Parliament so that we deal with the issue, I think we are making a great contribution to the future of the country.

I feel very positive about our opportunities in Canada. I feel we can put the unemployed to work. I feel we can put young people to work. I feel we can be fair and just toward the women of the country in terms of providing them with good, decent-paying jobs and equal pay for work of equal value. I think we can do those things. We can become a nation of producers. We can own and control our own economy. We can do all those things, but we will only do it if this House of Commons, this Parliament, takes the leadership and tries to help people help themselves in the various communities from coast to coast as we try to build a new vision for the future of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, during the three days I spent in the Atlantic provinces, it became clear from the people we met and the way they spoke that there was an area with greater self-reliance than anywhere else in Canada. They mentioned a system for decentralization which we have here now, but they also spoke with a great deal of pride in referring to Newfoundland or Cape Breton or Halifax, and those people were very positive.

[English]

They are also very optimistic about the future. I think we in this country can have full employment. I think we can do very well.

I started by referring to remarks of the Pope when he was in Canada. I will conclude by quoting something else he said:

> Men and women are meant to contribute by their work to the building up of the human community, and so to realize their full human stature—

He also said:

> Prolonged failure to find meaningful employment represents an affront to the dignity of the individual, for which no social assistance can fully compensate.

I think we have a challenge which we are up to meeting, if the House collectively makes it the most important issue in the country. Rather than try to impose things upon people, we should work with people to solve the problems province by province, community by community, neighbourhood by neighbourhood.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, new-found religion is a wondrous thing. Like my colleague from Moncton, I congratulate the New Democratic Party for venturing into Atlantic Canada where it has no representation. I hope it will find the time and energy to visit other parts of the country where it does not have representation. It will discover that the misery and suffering is widespread in Canada, the result of 20 years of inept and inappropriate legislation which has driven the country to the verge of bankruptcy.

The only way that we will get things back on track is by comprehensive legislation, which I hope the New Democratic Party will see fit to support when my Party presents it over time. Running about with a box of band-aids will not solve the problems that we face. That is the mechanism the Liberals used over the years, and we have seen the results.

I cannot help but point out to the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) that over the years when my Party was attempting to focus the attention of Parliament on the problems of this country, every time the Liberals got in trouble it was the NDP that propped them up and kept them in office. It has to share the responsibility for the troubles we have in this country.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made a few interesting comments. He commented on the voting record of our Party in terms of the Liberal Government. He should check the record. He will find that his Party in opposition voted with the Government twice as often as our Party. If we are sleeping with the Liberals, I do not know what his Party was doing with them because it voted with the Liberals twice as often. It did not even hang onto its pyjama bottoms.

Mr. Frith: Were they wearing kilts?

Mr. Nystrom: They were not wearing kilts either.

The Hon. Member tried to be sarcastic. He said that at the present time we do not have any members of our caucus from Atlantic Canada. That kind of attitude cost the Liberals the last election. After several years, Canadians assumed they were insensitive to parts of Canada, that they were getting smug with Canadians. For reasons like that, they were thrown out of office. I am sure the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) will agree that this is a fairly objective analysis.

I say to the Member opposite that we may not have any federal representation at the present time, but since September 4 we won our first ever provincial by-election in Newfoundland. We won a by-election in Saint John as a result of a seat that was vacated by the Minister of Forestry. That riding had been held by the Conservatives since Confederation. We tripled the size of our caucus in the Nova Scotia election on November 6. Therefore, our Party is on the march in Atlantic Canada. If the Government is not more sensitive to the problems of this country, it will go the same way the Liberal Party went on September 4. We are not a country that can be governed centrally in terms of great monolithic plans. We must have a great deal of flexibility in the way we approach matters. We are a diverse country and I hope the Member opposite realizes that.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member on his speech. Following the remarks of the Conservative Member, I want to point out a couple of matters to the Hon. Member who made the speech. First, the reason why there are no daycare centres throughout Newfoundland is that that province never had an agreement with the federal Government for cost sharing under the Canada Pension Plan for a daycare centre network. There are two provinces in Canada which do not have agreements. The provincial Government there, which happens to be Tory, does not consider it a high enough priority to establish daycare centres in Newfoundland.

The intervention by the government Member was very interesting. In the New Direction for Canada, which was presented to the House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), he puts forward a very novel way of solving the problem of our primary industry in Newfoundland. He says there must be a rationalization of fish plants and workers will have to be relocated to other parts of Canada or into other occupations. In other words, he suggests closing down the very nature of the workforce.

A policy statement was forwarded by the Newfoundland Government to the new Conservative Government in Ottawa. Interestingly enough, it is entitled Discussion Paper on Major Bilateral Issues between Canada and Newfoundland. I do not see too much wrong with requests made by the Newfoundland Government for increases in amounts of money which go to the province for infrastructure. There are incredible infrastructure requests.

What I find interesting is the philosophy of the typical ultra-Conservative where the document states: "Productivity improvement universally recognized as an objective for the Newfoundland economy must also preoccupy our public and private discussions". Another part refers to Newfoundland's productivity problems. There are references to that throughout the document.

The point is that the primary resources are the principal employer in the Newfoundland economy. You cannot compare the productivity of a fish plant worker in a fish plant that makes fish into a frozen cod block to be exported to Massachusetts where it will be made into a final product with the productivity of the fish plant worker in Massachusetts. You cannot compare the productivity of both those fish plant workers, which is what every economist has done for the Newfoundland Government and the federal Government for as long as I can remember. This reflection in a document by the Tory Newfoundland Government is insulting, to say the least.

That is basically what is wrong with the Newfoundland economy. The document complains that the previous Government was preoccupied with secondary manufacturing and, therefore, there should not be grants for secondary manufacturing. The whole thing is out of kilter. It is unfortunate that there is not a discussion between Newfoundland and the new federal Government to tackle seriously the problem of having practically no final production in a primary industry.

It is unfortunate that that is not an issue in this document on bilateral issues. They say our productivity is low. They should ask why it is low. It is low because there is nothing for them to do but to export a raw product to another country to be made into a finished product. We would not have a person unemployed in Newfoundland today if that problem were seriously tackled. Not a person in Newfoundland would be unemployed today if the Government had any thought for the people and about what is being done in the primary industry in our province. Tory philosophy will not help either the provincial Government or the federal Government which stated in its "Future for Canada" that it will have to relocate people to jobs in other parts of Canada.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. He made an excellent speech and a very fruitful tour of eastern Canada. During his tour of eastern Canada, he must have met a lot of young people who are very concerned about summer employment. I am specifically referring to post-secondary students. He must have encountered concern being expressed by groups and individual students. Will the Hon. Member comment on the questions raised and concerns encountered?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I respectfully remind the Hon. Member that he has less than one minute remaining.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, we probably have more concern about youth unemployment than anything else. There are over 700,000 young people officially unemployed. It was raised time and again that these are the official figures but the real figures are probably much higher, particularly in places like Newfoundland where there are many people unemployed.

There was a great deal of concern about the cut-backs announced by the federal Government in November. There were cut-backs in government services, on the First Chance program, Summer Canada, programs that put young people to work. One concern with respect to Summer Canada was not just the fact that students would not have work this summer, but the effect this would have on the community.

Some of that money was used to organize day camps for young children. This not only affects the students who work on that program but the young children and the handicapped involved in that program. What will happen to them in July and August? These are some of the concerns we heard about.

Time and again we heard that the Atlantic Provinces do not have a big sector in terms of large companies. There was concern about the line of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance that the private sector would rescue us and it would be the generator of wealth and jobs in Canada. When they talk about the private sector, they talk about the large corporations, and yet we were told time and again that there are not many large private corporations in Atlantic Canada. What happens to them under this new philosophy? That is why we must move toward smaller scale and more appropriate development and toward more self-reliance. We must move toward co-operation, working together and building a new Canada in which everyone participates, not only the powerful and the rich.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The time is now over for questions and comments. Resuming debate.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with others who have given members of the NDP credit for their trip to Atlantic Canada. I think it is a worth-while exercise, as our Party found during its terms in Opposition. However, I think the next step is the proper interpretation of the requirements and an understanding of what has been done and what is planned to be done.

Let us take a look at some of the items which have been considered by this Government to date which were not considered by the Government which preceded us. I can list some of the agreements which have been signed, and they include the Canada-Prince Edward Island Subsidiary Agreement on Tourism, the New Brunswick Tourism Development Agreement, and the agreement with the Province of Newfoundland, which took place in spite of the fact that, according to the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), Newfoundland has received nothing. There is in fact an agreement with respect to pulp and paper modernization within that province. The list includes the Fisheries Subsidiary Agreement in the Province of Nova Scotia and the Canada-Nova Scotia Tourism Subsidiary Agreement. The first meeting of all the Ministers interested in the development of tourism was held in Moncton, New Brunswick. There was an awarding of a contract to Internav in Cape Breton regarding the frigate program. And the list goes on.

The Government's program is one of consultation and consideration. This program will continue, will be constructive and will produce results. However, let us not debate this motion as if the Government had been in power for 21 years like the preceding Government. Let us not land all the criticism and blame for all the problems which exist on the present Minister who spoke earlier this morning. That man needs time. Most of the criticism which has been directed at the present Government rests entirely and properly with the opposition Party on your left, Mr. Speaker.

We accept proper and constructive recommendations but we bemoan the fact that all these recommendations are made in criticism of this Government without any reflection upon the inheritance the Government has been handed by the electorate. It is an inheritance which we are quite prepared to accept, with which we are prepared to deal and which we must, in the long term, be held responsible for correcting. However, we must not be held accountable to criticism at this point in time.

For instance, I believe it was the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) or the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) who spoke about freight rates and their negative influence upon the economy of Atlantic Canada. I shall tell you, Mr. Speaker, about the freight rates on one agricultural processed product that apply today when it is shipped from a shipping point in Ontario. If one were to ship a case of 12-ounce cans of kernel corn from Ontario to New York City, it would cost 27 cents. If it were to be shipped to Newfoundland, it would cost $1.22. I say to those two gentlemen whom I mentioned earlier that that is what the Government inherited from the Liberal Government, yet those Members held seats in that Government and were silent on that subject.

If one were to ship a case of corn to Hamburg, Germany, it would cost 76 cents, but if it were to be shipped to Newfoundland, it would cost $1.22. We inherited a negligent system of Government by a Party now led by the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner). That corn could be shipped to Japan for 14 cents more than it costs to ship it to Newfoundland. That is what we inherited.

Those Hon. Members who are from British Columbia should be concerned about the fact that while a case of corn shipped to Japan costs $1.36 and probably goes through a western port, it costs $1.63 to ship it to Vancouver. Please note that it costs $1.36 to ship it to Japan and $1.63 to ship it to Vancouver.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that any criticism of the transportation policy or freight rates coming from members of the Liberal Opposition in this House is a criticism of their own behaviour. It explains the position in which we now find ourselves of trying to distribute Canadian products within Canada when it costs more to ship something to Vancouver than to Japan and more to ship something to Newfoundland than to Hamburg, Germany. That is not very fair treatment to Canadians and that is what we inherited.

In this debate, I have not heard members of any Party, except perhaps the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate, place any emphasis on the fishery. I would like to tell Hon. Members that there is forestry, agriculture and research; there is education, industry and health programs, all of which are being addressed in the consultative process which the former Liberal Government ignored, with the support of members of the NDP.

It is all right to complain about any reductions which may have been made without mentioning all of the agreements which have been signed to which I referred earlier. It is not proper or ethical let alone fair to sit on that side of the House and suggest to the nation that this Government is reneging on its responsibility when both Parties supported the health Bill introduced by the former Minister of Health who is now long gone which reduced in real dollars the amount of money going to Atlantic Canada for health and social welfare purposes. I am speaking of real dollars, not counted dollars. That Bill had the support of members of the NDP, unless my memory fails me completely. They are now being critical of any changes related to Atlantic Canada which they discern in the budget.

I would ask the public to judge. I will not use the adjectives which are applicable under these circumstances because they would not be polite. I will try to practise good manners. However, I have very great difficulty in keeping my thoughts innermost when it comes to this situation.

That is sort of like the question regarding the fishery which was raised in the House earlier today. The negotiations for the fisheries agreement as it relates to both the Atlantic Coast and the Pacific Coast were undertaken in total secret. There was no opportunity whatsoever for fishermen, processors or others involved in the industry on either coast to have meaningful input into those negotiations. The agreement has never been made available to the Fisheries Committee at any time, as you know, Mr. Speaker. We are speaking of the secrecy with which the last agreement was negotiated on the West Coast at a time when the fishermen and processors were present at the negotiations. They were part of the total structure, as pointed out by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Fraser) today, somewhat to the consternation of the Member who was questioning him. The Government is being open, consultative and is working in the interests of the whole of Canada as well as of Atlantic Canada. There has been a great deal of progress made in the understanding of the problems of Atlantic Canada.

How about the additional grant which was made to the Research and Productivity Council of New Brunswick? As we are being critical of the fisheries situation, how about the fact that the former Minister of Fisheries would not and did not sign a fisheries development agreement with the Province of New Brunswick? We could expand on that. However, I do not have the time to go into the rhetoric which would be required to detail the reasons why this occurred.

We cannot be expected nor can anyone be expected to have done in less than five months enough to correct all of the damage that was done since 1963 under Liberal management with the co-operation of the NDP. It cannot be done. It is my hope that we do not direct ourselves to the use of the public purse at large for all of the problems which exist in Canada, including Atlantic Canada. We must first create the economic climate which will encourage people to invest in Canada, including Atlantic Canada. If people cannot lift themselves by their own bootstraps, they must lift themselves by their own energies and resources. That is the goal we have established.

• (1540)

I would have to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that if some of the systems practised by this Government are as bad as they have been criticized in today's debate, why were they not changed? I ask the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate and the Hon. Member from Cape Breton, why were those things not changed? Why are they an inheritance? The great bulk of the criticism of this Government is in fact a criticism of the Government of which those Hon. Members were back-benchers some time ago, and things have not had time to change.

Mr. Frith: How has Mr. Hatfield been doing?

Mr. McCain: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Frith: How has Mr. Hatfield been doing in New Brunswick?

Mr. McCain: You know, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals are always looking for some devious way to distract and deflect from the issue, to pull red herrings across the trail. Let us keep it in the House of Commons where it belongs and let us not go boot licking and muckraking.

The frigate program was mentioned earlier today. I would like to say to the House that the frigate program was awarded to a firm in Saint John to the great consternation of other parts of Canada. It then became necessary to negotiate how much of that contract would be spun off to the rest of Canada. It took months of consultation and consideration to deflect that work from New Brunswick, but they did it pretty well, Mr. Speaker. The primary contractor is in the Province of New Brunswick, and it ended up that the Province of Quebec got 50 per cent more benefit than did the Province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Rossi: What have you got against Quebec?

Mr. McCain: I have nothing against Quebec. I am against robbery from New Brunswick.

Mr. Rossi: What have you got against Quebec?

Mr. McCain: I answered you. Pipe down, small change, before you get spent. I would have to say, Mr. Speaker, that fortunately most of the Hon. Members from Quebec have better manners than the Hon. Member who is interjecting at the moment.

Mr. Speaker, there has been some criticism of the program of this Government as it relates to Devco. Also, the difficulties in Stellarton, New Glasgow, Amherst and other places in Atlantic Canada were mentioned. Let us get down to that. When Devco became a public operation, financed federally and provincially, it became a subject matter for study, for procrastination, delay and underfinancing. A steel mill that was in a reasonable condition to produce when it became a public entity was underfinanced until it collapsed and became virtually incompetent in the world of steel today. Whether or not it can be resurrected, I do not know, but let us move now—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: Did I once interject during the remarks of any speaker in this House today? And I have been here all day. I only ask for the good manners which an Hon. Member should have in this House.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: There was a business in Stellarton in the Pictou-New Glasgow area—

Mr. Rossi: Don't touch Quebec.

Mr. McCain: —which was involved in the building of railroad rolling stock. It was sophisticated to the point that red hot ingots were moved from the steel mill in Cape Breton to the construction forging industry in the New Glasgow-Pictou-Stellarton area. At that time that was a very prosperous town, but I want to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the differences in policy. The last order which was publicized by CNR for rolling stock was, as I understood it, from the press, by government edict prior to September 4, to be distributed in a threefold way among other parts of Canada to the detriment of Devco and New Glasgow-Stellarton-Pictou. And why is the Hon. Member from Cape Breton, who is a member of the Party which did that to Nova Scotia, now complaining? Is that not rather inconsistent? Another example is the very important budding industry in the aeronautics field in the town of Amherst, the home of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Coates). It had great promise at the end of World War II. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to question the Liberal Members as to why that industry is not thriving today. It is because it was government policy that virtually every aeronautical order should be deflected to other parts of Canada, and so the industry no longer has the significance which it might well have had.

These are policies which we have inherited, along with the poverty which goes with them, and it cannot be corrected overnight. As the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe was so kind as to point out, I have worked for improvement and I will continue to work for it, as will this Government. We are not going to say to any part of Atlantic Canada, as did Ministers of the previous Government, supported by the New Democratic Party, "We won't sign a fisheries development agreement with the Province of New Brunswick unless it all goes our way". It was a prejudicial, political patronage proposition—not patronage to the individual but patronage to the Liberal system—which has put Atlantic Canada into the position in which it now finds itself.

Chatham was also mentioned and the unemployment in the Northumberland-Miramichi area, but, Mr. Speaker, we are not the ones who removed the major part of the Air Force activity in Chatham. We are the ones who put it back. And it will take time to overcome the damage which was done to the employment situation in the Northumberland-Miramichi. The intelligent voters of that constituency got on the right track. They elected a different person. I must say that that particular Liberal candidate was thrown to the wolves almost deliberately by the Liberal Party. I feel sort of sorry, although I know a politician has to run the risk of defeat, but that man was abused by his own Party to a degree which just shows the character of the Liberal Party and its occasional lack of loyalty to some people who were trying hard to serve their area.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, that with a combination of leadership, consultation and co-operation between Government, management and labour and between the Government of Canada, the provincial Governments and the municipalities, this Government can in fact stimulate—and I am confident it will in fact stimulate—a climate in all of Canada, including Atlantic Canada, which will be better. I am sure that that will in part at least, and automatically, address the problem of the unemployed and disadvantaged people of this land. It is difficult enough to find employment for the healthy, competent, capable and undisadvantaged people of this land. Certainly, as the whole problem is addressed, the problem of the disadvantaged will be addressed automatically. Emphasis is placed on the idea that everyone should, and we hope will, have an opportunity to work. That certainly is absolutely necessary.

I just want to say in closing, Mr. Speaker, that no group of people anywhere in the world has the capability in just over four months to turn around the mess and to correct the damage which has been done to an economy which should have suffered a much better fate since 1963 when it fell into bad hands on a persistent and continuing basis. The concern which is now expressed today in this debate contradicts, I believe, the sincerity of the same people when they were Hon. Members of this House and of the Government. The Hon. Member can shake his head in contradiction of that, but the fact remains that there was no forest ministry to look after the industry and had there been, it might not have been necessary in Newfoundland today for the Government of Canada and for Newfoundland to subsidize the modernization of the industry. There might not have been any need for that. There would have been planning in a major way which would have provided better leadership than we have experienced. I think these problems are being seriously addressed, and the benefits will soon begin to show themselves more obviously than we now see in the figures from StatsCan which indicate that unemployment in Canada is falling, that incomes—

• (1550)

Mr. Rossi: Who said?

Mr. McCain: StatsCan. No one else.

Mr. Rossi: That is not true. Those people are back on welfare.

Mr. McCain: StatsCan is back on welfare?

Mr. Rossi: No, the people on the unemployment—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. McCain: Your manners are not improving as the day grows longer. You are getting more testy.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I must say I am particularly intrigued to hear the suggestion that unemployment, according to StatsCan, is getting better in Atlantic Canada. I have in front of me the December labour force survey which indicates very clearly, on an adjusted or unadjusted basis, that in Atlantic Canada unemployment is significantly worse than it was a year ago.

My questions, however, are to the Hon. Member as a senior member of his caucus and a representative from New Brunswick who, I assume, is just as concerned as I was to hear about some of the realities in parts of his own province. I quoted earlier today some of the statistics from Miramichi which suggested that the real unemployment rate there was well over 50 per cent. Would the Member be prepared to make a commitment to the House and to the people of New Brunswick to take up some of the concerns expressed to our action group sitting in Moncton, as it met with people from across the province? One concern is the CBC cut-backs which have hit Moncton. This service is important for the francophone community in New Brunswick. Second, there is the concern of the New Brunswick Federation of Woodlot Owners. They indicated that six weeks ago they spoke with the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) and asked for a fair allocation of the money available for reforestation which they feel would give them 350 extra jobs. Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, and the House that this is not some kind of partisan exercise on our part. The goal is to give to groups who do not have powerful voices the chance to have input in what is taking place in our country.

Would the Hon. Member be prepared to follow up many of the questions raised with us about the negotiation process between Noranda and New Brunswick with respect to the zinc refinery in the province? A great deal of money was committed by the province, and yet Noranda failed to follow through. Finally, would he take up as well the concern expressed to us by the Newcastle and Chatham District Labour Council concerning UIC cuts planned by the Minister to start taking away at the beginning of April the ability of workers to receive severance pay and vacation pay without their being taken into account in calculating their UIC entitlement? I referred earlier today to the problem of early retirement.

As a senior member of his Party's caucus would he see to it that his Government responds to the serious concerns in New Brunswick of which we were informed when we were in Moncton?

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, the people of my constituency are extremely concerned about the fact that it takes almost $1 billion to run the CBC. In my constituency where American stations can be received directly, approximately 95 per cent of the viewing time is spent on American programming, directly or indirectly, or programs from Australia or England. People are not watching the programs produced by the CBC. Therefore they are somewhat critical of the CBC, and until such a time as the CBC justifies its mandate, in their opinion, well, I would then perhaps support a correction of that situation. But as long as 95 per cent of the television viewing is of programming other than the CBC, there is no support in my constituency for CBC and its productions. I think that addresses that question.

The next question concerned the Federation of Woodlot Owners. I think our policy will provide at least some of what the federation is asking for. I am quite confident that when the budget and the final plan for the new Ministry is in place, the Hon. Member will have a satisfactory answer or something approaching a satisfactory answer to that question. It was a very proper representation and I appreciate it.

There is one thing that neither you nor I can do, Mr. Speaker, and that is, to correct the world market for metals and minerals. Until such time as world prices have improved, I see very little likelihood that it is viable for New Brunswick, Noranda or the Government of Canada to proceed very much further with an expansion of that industry. Yes, I understand the hardship of unemployment. I have run around this world in my life with very empty pockets in my time. I understand that. Nevertheless, we on this side of the House or you on that side of the House cannot correct world prices for the products we produce. Unfortunately, that is the way it is.

Again, I urge the gentleman to await the budget. I think at that time both he and I will be in a better position to appraise those matters he has raised other than the three I answered directly. I want to wait and see the budget. I do not know what is in it any more than do Members to the left of the Speaker, and I shall not know until it is on the table. Then some of these things can be addressed directly and definitively.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say to the hon. gentleman opposite that as strongly as I disagree with a number of the observations he has made, I assure him that this Member, still with much to learn having been here not quite five years, holds him in the highest regard.

I want to say to him that to suggest that the current freight rate controversy occurring in Atlantic Canada is the result of the previous Government's policy is inaccurate, untrue, and I know it must have been an inadvertent comment on his part. He knows that the CTC has just ordered Terra-Transport to raise its rates by up to 39 per cent on 127 items, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has refused to intervene. I have a letter from a very large wholesale business in my riding in Corner Brook, Newfoundland. The gentleman said that in western Newfoundland they are currently getting the best service they have ever had. He strongly suggests that I intervene to see that they are not penalized merely to satisfy the desires of a company to make more money. That is a decision which has now been taken by this administration, one about which this Transport Minister has refused to intervene.

• (1600)

I have another telex from another large company operating in my riding. It says that rates presently being charged by Terra-Transport are consistent with inflationary trends going back over the years. This is again protesting the new rates that have been brought in under this administration. The hon. gentleman knows that the 15 to 20 per cent increase on CN Marine charges are—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry. I regret that the 10 minute period is now over. We will resume debate.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) for bringing this motion before the House today. I feel it is a very important and urgent question. I congratulate him for taking the initiative to bring this as an NDP opposition motion. I would particularly like to say how much I agree with his opening statement. He said that the House should recognize the extreme urgency of the unemployment crisis in Atlantic Canada. The Hon. Member toured Atlantic Canada for three days with other members of his Party. I also congratulate him for the initiative he took in that regard. I do not downplay the fact that he did not spend a longer period of time there. I realize the time constraints which he has as a Member of Parliament which did not make it possible for him to spend a great deal of time there.

As a Member of Parliament from that region I would like to say that what he saw and heard is only a small part of the depth and concern that exists in that part of Canada. We have all spoken in the House about how marginal are the pensions for senior citizens. I can tell Members of the House that I constantly meet with constituents who are living with three or four of their brothers or sisters or offspring as well as their parents. Three generations are living together. The income which is keeping that family alive is the pension or pensions of the grandparents or parents. That is the only income in that family, and that is not an exception. It is a very serious situation.

Although I do not disagree with the four points which the Hon. Member makes, I would not want the House to believe that these four points will put us well on the way to correcting the unemployment situation and the problem of regional disparity in our area, because they will not. As accurate as they are, they do not go nearly far enough to correct the situation. He says that we need proper resource management to rebuild the forestry, fishing and coal industries. There are other industries which are in dire straits, such as the agricultural and manufacturing industries. He says that we need self-directed community programs to expand permanent jobs through co-operatives and small business. This is very important. However, if you ask the employers in these communities, they will tell you that that in itself will not be enough. Co-operatives need direction, assistance, planning and financial infrastructure to work with them.

The greatest problem of small businesses is where to get capital. Who will invest in a business in a depressed area of high unemployment and regional disparity? Yet the Government is practically encouraging the Federal Business Development Bank to be a profitable corporation. Is that agency there to help areas of high unemployment with regional disparity, or is it there to make a profit? The Government must decide that.

In Sydney, Nova Scotia, whether or not you give a personal guarantee, you cannot get a commercial mortgage from a bank or a finance company. How can you have small business if the normal channels of commerce will not help you? The Government says that it can be done through the private sector. Mr. Speaker, the private sector has been tried and found wanting. What is going to be done?

The problem begins with the Government. You have only to look at the economic and fiscal statement to see which area of Canada was most affected. The Government has said that the Atlantic region is expendable in the next election if it cannot please all areas. You do not need it written out for you; you need only read the economic and fiscal statement.

Look at the attitude of the Minister. Members in his Party cannot tell me that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) is sympathetic to regional development. No one who has spoken to the Minister will have heard any indication that this is a concern of his. I am not saying this to be critical. I wish he were in the House now so that I could tell him this. The Minister is from Toronto and he may not have a feeling for it. I honestly hope that I am wrong or that he can develop that feeling for it. However, at the present time I sincerely do not think he has a feeling for regional development.

This is a serious matter because, as the Minister said this morning, he is also chairman of the caucus committee on economic and regional development in the Government. That is a tremendously important position. As he said, he co-ordinates all the Departments. Regional development is the co-ordination of the activity, finance and input of all Departments. Regional development is made up of transportation, trade and commerce, training and grants. It is all-encompassing. There is a total lack of understanding in this very important area.

The Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) asked what the Liberal Government had done. I agree that the Liberal Government has not provided all the answers. In fact, I still say that one of the worst mistakes it made was to disband DREE. I agree completely. The reason disbanding DREE was such a mistake is not the obvious one. It is because we brought DREE and Industry, Trade and Commerce together. The people in IT and C, who are not at all concerned with regional development, were able to overshadow and smother the voices of reason which existed within DREE. The thinking of IT and C completely took over and smothered the concept of regional development.

When this Government came to power there was one little problem which remained. In the areas of Canada where regional development was a major question and IT and C and DREE had joined, DREE was a larger agency, so its thinking was able to predominate. The Minister ignored them completely. If you went to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion now and asked a question, they would not answer, as was the case with the previous Liberal Government. They would not say that they were not allowed to comment because it had not been approved or passed. The Department will not tell you that. People there will say, "We don't know. We do not know what is going on. We are not involved in this". What you have, Mr. Speaker, in areas in this country are trained professionals in regional expansion and regional development who have absolutely no input into areas for which they are supposed to be responsible.

Let me come to the recent announcement about Pratt and Whitney, on which I congratulate the Government. It is an excellent decision and it will be good for Nova Scotia. I have one concern. I could not find out in Halifax, in Moncton, the regional office, nor in Ottawa what the federal input was. Nobody knew. I know that the Province of Nova Scotia is not going to finance the whole amount. I do not care whether the money comes from the federal Government or the provincial Government. Don't get me wrong, Mr. Speaker. My concern, and I said this to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), is the precedent that Members of Parliament, people and concerned individuals will not be able to find out exactly what is transpiring in the Province of Nova Scotia, in other provinces and in regions of this country in which they have a vested interest. My goodness, people who live in areas of regional disparity have more of a vested interest in their area than people in economically successful areas. They have been deprived. They lack things that people in other areas take for granted. They really have paid the price to be able to know what is going on.

I say again to the Minister of Defence (Mr. Coates) that the same thing is now going on with regard to the Sydney Steel Corporation. There is no written formal request from the Province of Nova Scotia to the federal Government requesting funding for the second phase of the Sydney Steel Corporation. There is no question about that. I know that the Minister, the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay), the Premier and the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) have had meetings. But there has been no formal request from the province, yet this is a provincial Crown corporation. Is it not reasonable to expect the Province of Nova Scotia to write formally to the federal Government and tell the federal Government what it wants? What is going on here? What kind of a shell game is this where the whole thing is shuffled, money will be doled out, but no one will know on what basis? No one will know the business plan used for the first stage or the funding on which the first phase was based. Was it based on the business plan that we requested? We wanted to make sure that the funding was going to be used in the interests and for the success of the industry and ultimately the success of the region. If we do not know on what it was based, we will not know whether it was applied properly. This is improper. This is not only bad government, but it is completely betraying the trust of the people whom this Government says it wants to benefit. This is incredible, Mr. Speaker.

This Government has said that Devco, the Cape Breton Development Corporation, had losses. Sure Devco had losses. But what has the Government done? It has gone to the other extreme completely. There is no knowledge of what is going on. The Minister says he is going to make important announcements, but nobody knows what those announcements are going to be. No one knows on what basis they are going to be made. The corporation has completely strangled all activity. It has two divisions, a coal division and an industrial development division. Nothing is being allowed to go on. At the first of last year a firm of consultants did a study as to what changes should be made in the corporation. The draft of that study was ready in August, but it has still not been released. People wonder where their jobs are. They cannot operate efficiently under a situation like that. It is very serious.

The Minister said this morning that money was just put away and thrown out. Every time people from Atlantic Canada say they are not getting anything, they are told they are making a political football of the area. There are people with no incomes other than pensions. Families consisting of four and five people are living on that. I am supposed to be afraid to comment on that because I would be making a political football out of it. What kind of callousness and inconsideration is that?

The Minister gave a speech this morning. It was uninformative and condescending. It just made a joke out of this very important question. It is not a joke. It is an extremely serious situation. I do not have to limit these comments to Altantic Canada. This Government is blind to a very real problem in the country. What is developing in this country is not only developing in Altantic Canada but, unfortunately, this is the only sector on which we have taken the lead.

In Toronto you see hopelessness. People have no hope for the future in this technological age. There is no way of being retrained. The Government does not want to retrain them. The most precious thing in this country is the life of each individual. This Government says that there is no hope for fulfillment or a chance to live this life to the fullest. What is developing? I cannot overemphasize that what is developing is a society within a society. The society we see officially is the upwardly mobile society with education and aspirations. What the Government wants to suppress is the society without hope, without jobs and incomes. But they want to be able to eat and live and to have things even in a small way that ordinary Canadians take for granted. I see people like that in my constituency. I see them all the time; included are young people who went to school and finished school. Many of them have one or two college degrees but they have nothing to look forward to. Yet when the jobs become available there will be a group who will graduate behind them and you will hear, "These students and young people have been unemployed for three years. Obviously they do not want to work". This is callousness of the highest order. It just will not wash.

The Government says it wants to develop regional development. But it does not know what regional development means. The Government says, and the Minister of National Defence can substantiate that, it that has allocated $8 million for the City of Sydney in a subsidiary agreement with the Province of Nova Scotia, which the province did not go into. That $8 million was passed by the Cabinet of the former Liberal Government and passed by Treasury Board. The subsidiary agreement was brought up, but where is the $8 million? If the Government is so concerned with regional disparity, why does it not at least put money that has been passed to work?

What about the income security office that was cancelled as a result of the economic and fiscal statement on November 8? This office was supposed to decentralize 85 jobs from Halifax to Sydney. The federal Government had already spent $1 million on decentralization. People had been trained. Perhaps they had opportunities for other jobs. Others had given up jobs in the hope they could have one of the positions in Sydney. But the Government cancelled the decentralization. Where did the $1 million go? This was a $2.1 million saving. One million dollars was wasted, of which $400,000 was to renovate a building that still stands unoccupied. This was an industry with a potential for employment. It had a potential for spinoffs that could develop with immunity and provide economic stimulation for an area that badly needed it.

If we are going to create regional development we have to do something with the communities. What if an oil company says it wants to locate in a certain place? Is the Government going to say that because it is going to give the company such and such a percentage of financing the company has to go to such and such a place? The oil company people will laugh. The oil company will go where it wants to. The oil industry and any industry will say to the Government, "We will go there, or we will go somewhere else, or we will not go at all". If Pratt and Whitney had said, "We are going to Halifax and that is it," what would the Government have said? Would the Government have said, "No, Pratt and Whitney, you are going somewhere else"? It is not that Pratt and Whitney would have said that, I am just using Pratt and Whitney as an example. This is a serious situation. It is not a situation that can be dealt with in simplicity. It takes work, but it also takes compassion and interest toward the people affected.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there any questions or comments? If not, we will resume debate.

• (1620)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I join with other Hon. Members of the House of Commons in thanking the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) who introduced the motion today. I was not a member of the task force which visited Atlantic Canada on behalf of the New Democratic Party. However, I have travelled there in the past as the co-ordinator of Atlantic issues in our caucus. As a result, I have had an opportunity to visit many of the communities visited by the task force over the last little while as well as some other communities. I am glad to see the Hon. Member for Annapoplis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) present in the House for the short time he has been with us today. I congratulate him upon having an NDP MLA elected in his riding. That will be of long-term benefit to the people of that riding.

Seriously speaking, the people of the Atlantic region have some very peculiar and special problems which have not been addressed by government over the last many years. Certainly Governments, both Conservatives and Liberal, both provincial and federal, have thrown money at various problems. Money has been thrown at Sysco. Money has been spent on Devco. Money has been spent on the fishing industry and on the forest industry. Money has been spent to keep this plant and that plant going. However, there has never been any concrete economic planning done with the people of the regions.

In travelling through that region I learned that basically governments do not listen to the people of the region. In the briefs which our force received over the last week in Atlantic Canada there were a number of different ideas presented by co-ops, unions, social action committees, community development associations and others concerned about what was happening in their community. I discovered that time after time local people were not listened to and that the people who worked in Sysco and in Devco were not listened to. For example, the people working in Sysco can tell us that the coke oven is falling apart or that some things have not been rehabilitated for 30 years or 40 years. They can tell us where the bottlenecks in the plant are. However, when decisions are made, they tend to be made by government officials or by company officials who have really not taken the time to understand the problems of the plant. Quite often that is more true when a government is running the operation. The reason I say this, although I am a socialist, is that because governments running operations, whether they be at Sysco or Devco, do not really believe that they can do a good job at managing the operations. It is not a priority of the Government of Nova Scotia to ensure that Sysco is doing well. It was not a priority of the previous federal Liberal Government to ensure that Devco was running well. That is the problem. If we do not have a commitment to make something work it will not work.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) talk about how sad he was to see that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was closed down and became incorporated as part of the new DRIE. He explained that obviously the people in Regional Economic Expansion lost influence, that they had less to do with actual decision making within the new Department and that the people running the new Department, including the Minister, were really not listening to the people in charge of Regional Economic Expansion. That is something which I said as former spokesman for the NDP caucus on regional economic expansion. I said that we needed a separate organization within government concerned about regional economic expansion out there working with the people and the companies to ensure that economic expansion was taking place within the regions. Unfortunately, Industry, Trade and Commerce has different priorities. In its plannings it reacts and acts upon its own priorities.

I believe that things can be done for Atlantic Canada. As was indicated in the motion, we can build our industries upon the resources of forestry, fishing and coal. We can listen to the people and work through community programs. We can have affirmative action to help women in high unemployment regions of the country. We can develop the steel industry through Crown corporations. However, we can only do that if the people in planning in government listen to the people affected and make the development of Crown corporations, community-based programs and businesses a strong priority.

The problem in part faced by Devco, Sysco and the fishing industry has been the lack of a real commitment by government or by the senior bureaucrats who advise government. The responsibility cannot rest only with senior advisers to government. Responsibility in a parliamentary democracy must rest with Cabinet Ministers. They are the ones who must ensure that their own advisers are working full out and giving direction to their own workforces to ensure, for example, that a roof at Sysco is not caving in. When I visited the Sysco operation three years ago, that was literally the case. As we walked through its plant we noticed that parts of the roof were slowly falling to the ground. That had been the case for years, and nothing was done about it. It was the same at Devco. More development had to take place there. No one was doing anything about it. The Cabinet Ministers of the Liberal Government at that time were not making anything happen. They were not ensuring that Departments were active or that the Cape Breton Development Corporation was developing the mine to its best capabilities.

I realize I do not have much time to speak on this motion. However, I should like to point out that when we listen to the people, we hear suggestions and ideas which will make a big difference. In the brief submitted to the task force by local 1064 of the United Steelworkers of America in Cape Breton, there were a number of suggestions about the development of Sydney Steel. They talked about the need to finish products in that operation. They pointed out that in the history of the Sysco operation at one time it was part of an integrated system for the development and finishing of steel. However, when Hawker Siddeley pulled out of Cape Breton, it left only part of an operation which was not integrated with the other aspects of the steel industry. Right from the beginning we had a Crown corporation which did not meet the needs of a modern integrated steel industry. Ever since that time, even though a lot of money was poured into Sydney Steel, there was never a development plan which would produce the finished products that Sydney Steel needed.

I do not have time to read it all, but it is interesting to read how the steel workers presented a number of suggestions in terms of developing wire rod products, light structural steel, by-products from coke. They went through the different means of modernizing the Sydney Steel plant which is so important to the community.

It was interesting listening to the spokesmen from the co-operative movements. The Cape Breton Co-Operative Council made a presentation to the task force. M. N. Cote, a great leader of the co-operative movement, was quoted. He talked about the necessity of having an attitude whereby we and others who are concerned can develop our ideas not just about profits and dividends, but about developing our community and having a different feeling about what it means to be in business. To be in business is not just to take money from the community. It must be a part of your whole self. You are part of the community, part of the greater world.

What was the basis of the strength of the co-operative movement in Cape Breton? That ideal is something that Government must consider more. It must consider the development of community businesses. They are not there just to make the dollar. There is nothing wrong with making a dollar. Obviously people are in business for a purpose, the same as people take a job for a purpose, but there has to be more to it than that.

A major problem is that federal and provincial Governments tend to look at the megaprojects. When I was spokesman for regional economic expansion, one year I received figures on what was happening with some DREE programs. It was interesting to note that when you broke down the money for industrial incentives, in one particular year $75 million went to what were considered large corporations. They produced 4,691 jobs. That same year, $25 million in federal government money went to small corporations and small operations, and they produced 4,681 jobs. The Government gave the large corporations an extra $50 million, three times as much as it gave to the small corporations, and they produced only 10 more jobs. It will be interesting to know how many of those large operations are in business today and producing the products which the federal Government paid to be produced.

That proves the bias that exists in too many government programs. The money is given to the large operators but they do not necessarily produce that many jobs. Many small manufacturing companies and industries produce long-term jobs in a particular community. The whole approach of Government in underdeveloped areas, such as Atlantic Canada with a number of small and medium sized communities with high unemployment rates, should be to look at the small fish plants, small lightbulk factories and other small operations which remain in a community and produce jobs for people in that area. It is important that the woodlot owners be considered in any forest industry program. That is something that the Government obviously is not doing.

I recognize that my time is almost up and that others wish to speak, so I will conclude with a few short words. I hope that in the next little while this House again develops the ability to look at expansion on a regional basis. The debate today, which basically focused on Atlantic Canada, has given us that opportunity. It was nice to hear a Liberal back-bencher who was previously the Parliament Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys, admit that a mistake was made. I hope the new Government will bring back the Department of Regional Economic Expansion so that there is a Department specifically working for development of the regions and sub-regions of this country. This is important and necessary. Under DRIE or the other Departments, the underdeveloped regions of this country will never be developed. The people in those regions will not be listened to and they will not know who is making the decisions that affect their lives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, not having the oratorical skills of the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), I will keep my comments brief. I draw the attention of the House to the part of the motion before us which reads "proper resource management to rebuild the forestry, fishing and coal industries". I was pleased to hear the New Democratic Party finally concede that the problems it helped create together with the Liberals leaves the rebuilding of our vital sectors to us, the only true national Party with the courage and the will to tackle the problems of Canada head on.

Had the New Democratic Party not cosied up to the Liberals throughout the years and had it shown some courage, we might not have inherited such grave problems from the previous Government. I point out that the people of Atlantic Canada twice made a decision in the past few months, on September 4 and again on November 6 in Nova Scotia, sending a message loud and clear throughout all of Canada.

The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) indicated that for too long short-term make-work programs have been the way to do things. I agree with the Hon. Member. I ask the Hon. Member to drop the Party's traditional ties with the Liberal Party and join us in solving the problems that face Atlantic Canada.

I was pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) chide the NDP for professing its new-found knowledge of the plight of Atlantic Canada. I would suggest they make a few more trips to Atlantic Canada before becoming the spokespersons for the people in that area. I invite them to spend more than three days in Atlantic Canada. As one Member said, we need the tourist dollars.

The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor talked about a student at the University of Moncton who did not have a job.

[Translation]

I hope he does not have a job right now because he is supposed to be taking his courses.

[English]

I say to the Hon. Member that these students are unemployed at the moment because they are in university. There might be another way at this time to help create job prospects in Nova Scotia.

• (1640)

I would like to draw attention to an article that appeared recently in the Chronicle-Herald of Nova Scotia. In that article, the Leader of the provincial New Democratic Party spoke after an announcement made by the Minister of Development in Nova Scotia of the first phase of the Pratt and Whitney proposal to build an aerotech business park in Nova Scotia. The article reads in part as follows:

The first phase will cost $124-million and employ 275 people when fully operational; the second and third phases, which are conditional on the first phase's success, are expected to create 1,000 jobs.

What does the Leader of the New Democratic Party in Nova Scotia have to say about this? She is skeptical about Pratt and Whitney and feels that it deserves opposition attention. According to the article, she said:

"I think it's our responsibility as an informed opposition party to really subject that job creation proposal to the closest of public scrutiny and analyze it in terms of our costs and benefits," she said.

I would suggest that the Party across the aisle might ask the Leader of the New Democratic Party in Nova Scotia to welcome this type of investment. I certainly welcome it. I do not believe that the people of Nova Scotia are against the creation of a thousand new jobs.

Before resuming my seat, I would like to comment on the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond that the private sector cannot take up the slack of creating jobs. I shall quote from a recent article in The Globe and Mail which reads as follows:

But few businessmen are complaining about the Conservative Government so far.

"A lot of the responsibility now will rely on people like ourselves who are running companies and employing people to generate work,"—

This was said by Mr. Rowe, the President of both IMP Group Ltd. of Halifax and the Halifax Board of Trade. He went on to say:

"Jobs may come particularly in the export fields, but it's up to the private sector to create those jobs . . . working closely with government."

I would like to relate a little conversation I had with a businessman from Halifax while on the airplane from Nova Scotia last week. This businessman said: "Thank God, Mr. Comeau, that you form the Government. We were starting to lose hope and confidence, and it was about time you people went in and started doing the kind of confidence building that you have been doing over the past few months. Keep up the good work, and if you want any further comments like this one, I will be glad to get many more business people to pass these kinds of comments on".

In closing, I would invite the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor to return to Atlantic Canada at any time in order to see what is happening down there. I think he will find that there are a lot of people with optimism who are happy about the way things are going. In echoing some of the comments made by the Hon. Member from Moncton earlier this afternoon, I would say, let us not create patchwork programs. Let us get on and rebuild all of the regions of Canada. Let us rebuild not only Atlantic Canada but Quebec, central Canada and the West as well. Let us bring it all in under one truly national Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take up this debate from the point at which it was left by the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau). I certainly appreciate his contribution to the debate. As he was concluding he said that he had been speaking with some business people from the Atlantic Provinces who said that they were beginning to lose hope and confidence and that that was why they were happy to see a change in government. While I was happy to see a change in government, I think that the Hon. Member for South West Nova and members of his Party should realize that there are a lot of unemployed Canadians in Atlantic Canada and across the country who have been losing hope and confidence because of the situation they face. They cannot see light at the end of the tunnel. They recognize now that it may be a fact that a recovery which does the private sector good may not in fact be a recovery that puts them back to work.

There have been two years of economic recovery in this country and yet the unemployment rate is still approaching 11 per cent. That is a modest improvement from a few months ago; nonetheless, it is a level of unemployment which would have been intolerable just a few short years ago.

When our task force on jobs went to Atlantic Canada, met with people and began to look at alternative policies, it began to recognize that Atlantic Canada has some particular problems caused by its dependence on resource-based industries and the fact that most parts of Atlantic Canada are distant from the major markets of Canada which are in Montreal, the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario and the West. Therefore, it faces heavy transportation costs and difficulties in terms of access to other parts of the domestic market here in Canada.

Atlantic Canada faces real problems, and one of the problems is that the private sector has shown a willingness to overlook Atlantic Canada in a pretty consistent fashion over the course of the last few years. Where the private sector has been prepared to come into Atlantic Canada, the conditions that multinational enterprises have set have been conditions that I for one and my Party in general find very difficult to tolerate.

I can recall, for example, the anti-labour bias of the Michelin Corporation which led to its having the Nova Scotia Government pass specific legislation that effectively gutted the labour laws of that province at a time when the workers of the two tire plants run by Michelin were on the verge of getting certification for their trade union. I can recall similarly the Newfoundland Government snapping to attention when it was asked to implement anti-labour legislation in connection with the pulp and paper mill in Corner Brook in the very recent past.

That kind of behaviour is what leads people in my Party to feel that a reliance on the private sector alone will not be enough to bring Atlantic Canadians back to a level of employment, prosperity and hope for the future that we believe they deserve. That is why we began this task force on jobs by going to Atlantic Canada, and why we will now continue looking at some of the same issues in other parts of the country in addition to returning to Atlantic Canada later on in the tour.

I recall that during the election campaign, members of the Progressive Conservative Party said that their platform was jobs, jobs, jobs. We found out on November 8 that that priority had changed and that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had decided that the priority was to overcome the deficit and, once the deficit had been overcome, then perhaps enough confidence would be reinstated in the private sector to somehow begin to create a resurgence of economic activity in the country.

My colleagues from British Columbia can tell the House that the resurgence of confidence in the business sector, if it has occurred, has certainly not had an impact on that province. If anything, the situation in that province is worse than it was just a few short months ago. There has not been a resurgence there and that province has had the dubious benefit of two and a half years of cuts and reductions in government spending and of the other kinds of nostrums or remedies which the Minister of Finance wishes to impose upon the country as a whole. If those remedies are imposed on the country as a whole, then I regret to say that we may see the consequences in Atlantic Canada which we are now seeing in British Columbia of a further increase in unemployment and less confidence and hope for the future than that which exists today.

My colleagues on the task force who visited Atlantic Canada, as was faithfully and warmly mirrored in the speeches made by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor and the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), found that despite all the adversity and problems, there is still a great deal of courage and hope for the future among the ordinary Canadians who came individually and in groups to speak to the task force in Nova Scotia and in Newfoundland. They found that people were prepared to seize opportunities but that they were looking for partnership, for open doors and for ways that they could rebuild and re-base the economy of Atlantic Canada using new techniques and alternatives.

One of the reasons why we have the task force to which the New Democratic Party has committed so many resources is our sense that it is time for all of us in this country and all of us in this Parliament from whatever Party not to look back in the past to the days of Adam Smith, as the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) seems to want to do. We should not be looking backwards to what happened in 1979 or 1980, as so many of the Conservatives seem to want to do when they rise and talk about our Party. We should not be looking backwards to some golden age of capitalism and free enterprise, but we should be looking forward with an appreciation of the economic problems and opportunities which we in this country face over the course of the next decade or two. I believe we must do this with a sense of urgency. That urgency is certainly reflected in the wording of the motion which was put forward by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). The fact is that 13 per cent or 14 per cent of the population of Atlantic Canada is unemployed now, and there are many more people in Atlantic Canada who have become so discouraged that they are not looking for a job at all. Among young people in Newfoundland the unemployment rate exceeds 20 per cent, and all that the Conservatives in Newfoundland can offer their Government is the fact that after six years in power a royal commission has been set up to see whether there are solutions which could be found. That is an answer, Mr. Speaker, which I certainly believe is totally inadequate.

When I say we must start to look for alternative solutions, I think, among other things, that this House and the Government of Canada should be aware of the kind of ferment which is taking place around us, both in Canada and in other countries around the world. I was struck when I was in England two years ago at the birth and growth of the co-operative enterprise there which has been created by trades people, young workers and other people because of the economic disaster which has been brought on by the Government of Margaret Thatcher. There are new kinds of enterprises which are growing there, Mr. Speaker, not to overcome the problems but at least as a response to the problems. Despite the adversity of the economic climate in Britain, some new things are happening in that country.

I was struck when I was in Minneapolis about three years ago that in that State there was a far more diverse range of different responses to economic problems than I had expected to find in my preconceived notion. There were all kinds of mixed enterprises and joint task forces and so on providing community services and community economic development. We have seen that in this country as well, Mr. Speaker. We have seen the growth of alternative industries and the birth and creation of new ways of doing work and organizing enterprises in the private sector, the co-operative sector and through joint operations in which perhaps provincial Governments, perhaps municipal Governments and private individuals have become involved. Those kinds of alternatives, it seems to be, should be encouraged and not discouraged.

That is one of the reasons I am disappointed in some of the early signs of a new Government which promised change when it came to power on September 4. The signs are that this Government does not appear to understand that at all. Just around Christmas, the Minister responsible for housing, his Department and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation took away 500 units of grants from co-operative and non-profit housing corporations and gave them to developers in the private sector. Perhaps that could be seen as a small step, Mr. Speaker, but it was a brutal blow to an important part of the housing industry and a part of the housing industry which I believe ought to be allowed to grow and not to die. One of the consequences of the November 8 cuts was that there was a cut of $16 million on an annual basis in the federal Government's program through the National Research Council of support for research and development in the alternative energy industries, including solar, wind, peat, hydrogen and conservation energy, a whole range of technologies which were being developed by a rapidly growing and very important new industry. This is an industry which I believe should be particularly important to Atlantic Canada because of its dependence right now on petroleum based energy. The fact is that until today there has not been the success we all had hoped to see in terms of actually delivering the petroleum and natural gas resources which appear to lie offshore in Atlantic Canada. Even when those petroleum resources are developed, Mr. Speaker, there will be important markets for them in the United States and in the rest of Canada. Conservation and alternative energies form an opportunity for new industries in the private sector in Atlantic Canada and for ways in which Atlantic Canada can overcome its chronic and long-standing energy deficits.

This resolution speaks about a revitalization of the coal industry in Cape Breton, which is another way of overcoming the region's energy related deficit. What is happening, Mr. Speaker, in that particular area, is that the National Research Council's division of energy has pulled the rug out from under a lot of the companies which were pioneering in this particular area just at a time when those technologies were becoming competitive with traditional forms of energy. I cite that as example because it seems to me that the new Government should be encouraging alternatives, new ideas and new approaches to doing things. That is what we are trying to do through the means of our task force. One of the things that we can do as an opposition Party is to go out and listen to Canadians.

The Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane), I believe, started to attack this Party for having a task force at all, apparently having forgotten the degree to which those task forces were used by his Party when those Hon. Members were sitting on this side of the House of Commons. I make no apology for this approach at all. It seems to me that that is one of the vital functions which we in an opposition Party can perform. But we need to do more than to listen to Canadians. We need action as well. That is why our task force is going to devote itself to finding plans for action and alternatives which can be practically implemented in order to ensure that jobs will be created for the people of Atlantic Canada and for the people in the rest of Canada as well.

One of the criticisms which is beginning to emerge of the desire for consultation on the part of the new Government is the fact that it seems to want to listen forever but does not do anything. It seems to have forgotten about the need to produce some of its plans in the form of white papers which would result in a more constructive form of consultation. There are some very serious problems there, Mr. Speaker, in terms of the fact that the Government does not understand that when one consults, one has to be committed to action as well, and that action is not forthcoming.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in listening to his comments, I noticed that the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) said the proposals made by the New Democratic Party were not far-reaching enough to respond to the economic crisis in the Atlantic provinces. I agree that the motion presented by the Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) could have been a bit longer and more detailed, but nevertheless, we tried to concentrate on the most important factors that would at least start the process of rebuilding the economy in the Atlantic provinces.

We, on our side, Mr. Speaker, are engaged in a participatory process consisting of discussions and meetings with people from the Maritimes and also from Quebec, Ontario and the Western provinces.

At this point, I would like to say a few words about the situation in the province of Quebec. I noticed that in his speech, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) made no reference to the situation in the St. Maurice area which is now suffering the effects of shutdowns at the Wabasso and Melchers plants.

Here we have an example of problems created by the private sector for which the private sector has no solution. A comprehensive policy requires a commitment on the part of the Government, not just speeches in praise of the private sector. It requires specific practical measures, measures that must relate to the skills of people, of small businesses and businessmen in the regions, if they are to create jobs.

Up to now, Mr. Speaker, we have seen that this Government has tended to go on about the importance of the private sector, while ignoring the problems facing Canadians in all regions of this country, a country where we unfortunately still have an unemployment rate of over 11 per cent, and now 12 per cent in the province of Quebec.

[English]

I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I am proud of the work our task force on jobs is doing. I intend to be with the task force when we visit Quebec, Chicoutimi, and the Lac Saint Jean area in the course of the next week or so. I hope and believe very strongly that we will have constructive alternatives to put forward over the life of this task force which will have real meaning to the people of Canada and which we expect to see acted upon by the Government if it is really committed to the change it promised during the election campaign.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. It being five o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that proceedings on motion are expired in accordance with Standing Order 62(11).

Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until Monday at eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned.

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, January 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, and Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Bill now before the House is a major piece of legislation. It provides the cornerstone for a very substantial part of our economy. Bill C-15 should be seen as a dynamic measure to promote and welcome the positive contribution that can be made by foreign investment, since the specific mandate of Investment Canada is to encourage investment in order to promote growth and increase employment. By being positive with investors and providing them with a good environment, not only will Canadian businesses remain in business, they will expand and hire more employees. However, to make this happen, it must be made clear that Canada is open for business. That is what Investment Canada wants to do, and it is vital to our economy.

In fact, I know very few business people who would want to invest in a plant that is apparently closing down. We must make it abundantly clear that we are in business for good and that investment is welcome. That is how we intend to keep Canada, this beautiful country of ours, from being sold for a song to foreign interests.

Mr. Speaker, people buy an old warehouse to tear it down, but they invest their money in a business that is doing well. We must revamp our economic image for the rest of the world. We must do what too many years of Liberal neglect have left undone, and that is exactly what this Bill intends to do.

Mr. Speaker, it is most unfortunate that despite the very real importance of the Bill now before the House, the quality of the debate on this legislation should be so poor. Up to now, more than fourteen hours of debate have been spent on Bill C-15. Thirty-one Liberals, 25 New Democratic Party Members and 13 of my own colleagues have taken the floor. Mr. Speaker, my point is that at this stage, the debate is lagging and languishing. The Opposition is repeating the same arguments over and over again. They are saying we want to sell out Canada at any price and that our country is going to become the fifty-first State. We have explained very clearly that the Bill contains the necessary guarantees that it will welcome foreign investors and stimulate Canadian investment while at the same time preserving our national identity.

They say it will create unemployment at a later stage. We have described the positive impact of the creation of new jobs and reduction of unemployment in the short term. I would think jobs are what Canada really needs now.

On the issue of research and development, they complain that Canada will not have its share. We have answered time and time again that although the legislation is not directly concerned with promoting research and development—the Government has other policies to that effect—the direct impact of clauses 5 and 20(c) will be to promote research and development in Canada.

The Liberals accuse us of breaking with a tradition established by Sir John A. Macdonald, a tradition that supported protectionism, especially where the United States was concerned. I would say that the Official Opposition, which today is taking an anti-American protectionist line, is the one that is breaking with a traditional position of its Party, a tradition adhered to more specifically by one of their leaders, Mackenzie King, who was Prime Minister in the 20th century, not the 19th century. Times have changed, Mr. Speaker, though not everyone seems to realize it.

Finally, and this was a real stroke of genius, they accused us last week of breaking our election promises and refusing to listen to the outcome of the consultations on this Bill. Mr. Speaker, there has been considerable proof to the contrary. First of all, from what we have been able to gather in our ridings and from letters from constituents, we can conclude, and they know it, that the majority of Canadians are in favour of the measures proposed in Bill C-15. In fact, I think the best way to prove this would be to immediately refer the Bill to committee where witnesses and intervenors can be heard.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the Liberal and New Democratic Party Members will support this motion if they are truly concerned, as they claimed last week they were, about helping us fulfil our election promises.

As one of their own, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) said, the real work on a Bill does not take place in the House. Let us therefore proceed and go to committee right away.

Mr. Speaker, at this stage in the debate, the Opposition has exhausted its arguments but continues to take the floor, one Member after another. It is clear from the repetitiveness of the Opposition's arguments and the fact that they have nothing more to say about the Bill. I may refer to the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), who, quite candidly, set the tone for the debate as the first Member to take the floor when the House reconvened last Monday. In concluding his speech, he said, and I quote:

I have not even been able to address the Bill since I began speaking at eleven o'clock.

That says it all, Mr. Speaker. Especially since we have had 56 speeches from the Opposition's 70 Members. It seems to me they cannot complain we are preventing them from speaking to this Bill.

• (1110)

Instead of wasting our allotted time, I suggest that we proceed immediately with the next stage. Canadians will thank us for doing so. If we do not know how to manage our time, how can we manage the country?

Mr. Speaker, I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine):

That the question now be put.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It may well be that I have misunderstood the rules and perhaps you could help me in this regard. However, it was my understanding that it required a Minister of the Crown to move such a motion. Perhaps you could clarify that for me, Mr. Speaker. I seem to recall that as being the case.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to find the rule in the Standing Orders that makes such a stipulation. All I find is Standing Order 56 which simply indicates that once the motion is put, it precludes all other amendments. That is all Standing Order 56 indicates. I am prepared to hear argument on the matter if the Hon. Member has some argument to make. However, I know of no such argument that would have its foundation in our Standing Orders.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, I was caught a little by surprise by the putting of the motion. I would have anticipated its having been put by a Minister. I assume you would allow me to make some argument on the matter after Question Period today in the event I am able between now and then to come up with what I believe to be the situation, which is that it would require a Minister to move such a motion. I would simply ask that you allow me the latitude of making such argument should I wish to after Question Period today.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The step taken by the Hon. Member is one that comes with some surprise and disappointment to members of that caucus because, as we all know, this Bill is a centrepiece of the entire economic strategy of the Government. Therefore, one would have thought that a member of the Ministry would have been responsible for the drastic action that has now been proposed. As a result, I think the motion should be held in abeyance until such time as we can marshal those arguments, because I think it is a very curious, strange and somewhat unorthodox move to have a Member of the Commons move this motion and to have Ministers of the Crown absolve themselves of all responsibility for such a diabolical and difficult initiative which closes off debate on such an important Bill.

Mr. Speaker: I am in some difficulty. I must say to Hon. Members that I cannot reserve on this matter. As a matter of public record, the last time this motion was moved was under the previous Government and it was moved by a Private Member on the back-bench. There is a clear procedural paper out on this matter for all Members to follow and there is no question in my mind from reading the rules that there is no restriction on the moving of this motion in terms of whether it be by a Minister of the Crown, a Parliamentary Secretary, or a Private Member.

In fact, as Hon. Members may know, the motion is usable during Private Members' Hour, which means by definition that it must be moveable by a Private Member. Therefore, I find that I have no reason to reserve and that the motion is properly before the House. For the record, as I am reminded, the motion is, of course, debatable. Debate.

• (1115)

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on the motion which was moved by the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif). I suppose it is only fitting that I speak to the motion, as the Hon. Member referred to me as having spoken for 20 minutes in the previous debate and remarked that at the end of that time I had not dealt with the subject matter of the Bill. In getting myself out of that quandary, I checked and discovered that the actual motion which we were debating was a motion for a six-month hoist. The reason for that motion was that the Government had not displayed in its policy, and had not shown in its legislation, that it was consistent with its stated purpose in bringing in the legislation.

The Hon. Member stated that all of the arguments had been presented, that the Opposition was holding up the Bill, and that there was nothing new to say on the subject. I am sure all Hon. Members of this House read Hansard. We can review Hansard to see some of the excellent speeches which were given, for example the speech which was given by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). That was one of the best speeches given this session on the Bill. One of the worst speeches was the speech of the Minister when he introduced the legislation. A very interesting speech was given by a member of the New Democratic Party; however he was continually interrupted by the Minister during his address.

In reaching my point, I would like to read into the record what the Minister said during his address to the House. He said:

> I remind him that when FIRA was put in place unemployment in the country was slightly over 5 per cent. Today it is over 11 per cent.

The Minister made these remarks on December 11, 1984. He went on to say, as reported at page 1094 of Hansard:

> That did not regain what we lost in 1981 and 1982. What about the money that left?

Presumably, the Minister was talking about the money which left the country. Later on in the debate the Minister disbelieved the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) when the Member pointed out that direct foreign investment in Canada was not as the Minister claimed, and that it had actually increased over the years since FIRA had been established. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor stated at page 1100 of Hansard:

> From a negative balance of $4.4 billion in 1981 we had a negative $900 million in 1982. In 1983 we were up to a positive $200 million and so far in 1984 we were up to a positive $1.3 billion.

Another Hon. Member in the House then asked: "What is your source?" The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor said that his source was Statistics Canada. Of course, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor was absolutely correct in the figures which he read into the record. What has been missed in the debate up to this point was why there was such an outflow of capital from Canada into the United States in 1981 and 1982. Was it really an outflow of cash?

If we look at the gross inflows of capital into Canada from the United States, we see that since FIRA was established in 1974 the gross inflows of capital from the United States had actually increased. The figure increased and reached its maximum in 1981. If we examine the gross outflows of investment capital from Canada into the United States, we find that that figure also peaked in 1981.

• (1120)

If we were to use the logic of the Minister in making the statements he did in his speech, as well as the logic used by Hon. Members in being questioned after their speeches, we could say that FIRA itself, since it was created, actually brought investment capital into Canada from the United States the like of which had never been seen before 1974. But that would be a bit dishonest. We could say as well, as the Minister claimed, that the gross outflow of capital from Canada into the United States which peaked in 1981 and 1982 was a loss to Canada, that we lost jobs in Canada because that money flowed into the United States. But the point of my argument, Mr. Speaker, is that when we examine cash outflows from any country, we have to look in effect at where that money went and for what purpose.

The fact is that Statistics Canada makes no distinction in their figures. When we examine the record and other figures we discover that that large investment in 1981 and 1982 went into buying branch plants in Canada which were owned by Americans. So the statistics showed really a net outflow from Canada for the years 1981 and 1982.

When we examine the figures for the United States, we would say that there was an incredible increase in the actual gross inflows into Canada from the United States from the point at which FIRA came into operation until 1981 and it still maintained a high level up to 1984. But we would also have to ask ourselves the question: What is the net U.S. direct investment? The Minister, when introducing the legislation, was very quick to point out that in 1981 and 1982 the net U.S. direct investment was a negative figure.

However, he failed to point out that there are two distinctions. The first is where that capital went. That capital went to buy branch plants located in Canada. The investment was made by Canadians but the money went to the United States. The Minister also did not point out that the largest growth in investment capital inflows into Canada from the United States happened since FIRA came into operation in 1974.

It is also interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that in introducing her motion the Hon. Member claimed that the Progressive Conservative Government was on the way and that jobs were already created in the private sector. That, Mr. Speaker, is like the argument used by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). But when did the greatest increase in private sector jobs happen? The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that it works out that in the three and a half months under this Government, 27,000 jobs per month were created. During the last three months of the Trudeau administration, 32,000 jobs a month were created in the private sector. During the Turner administration, 33,000 jobs per month were created in the private sector. No one, Mr. Speaker, goes back to find out how many jobs were created in the past. They use the figures with some kind of twisted logic to make it seem as if the Government is actually doing something.

By the same token, if we examine foreign investment in Canada from the United States and we match up the gross inflows with the gross outflows and come up with the net U.S. direct investment, we find that the largest amount of net investment which has come into Canada was during the first nine months of 1984. If you break it down further, by the month, you discover the greatest U.S. net direct investment came during the administration of the Turner Government. But to say that that was because of the actions of a government is really stretching the truth.

• (1125)

There were a lot of things missed in the debate so far on this particular legislation, Mr. Speaker, which should be brought before this House. For example, there was no comparison made of the impact of this legislation. There is a question to be asked—is my time running out, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It has just about run out.

Mr. Baker: I have not even gotten to the argument I wanted to present. However, I am sure there will be another opportunity to do that later in this session.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Government did not accept the opportunity put before it to take another six months and look at this whole area of foreign investment. This morning the Government effectively put closure on debate. That, I guess, is an indication of the kind of democracy we can expect from the 211 members of the Conservative Party who are Members of the House of Commons. They will not accept the idea of democracy being an opportunity for the Opposition to put all of its arguments before the House, as well as an opportunity for the people of Canada to see what their position is and where they are going. What the Government is now doing is limiting the amount of information which will go out to the people. It therefore becomes our responsibility to do it more directly.

One of the things which has not been brought before this House is the alternative the Government has in this whole area of foreign investment. There is no shortage of investment capital in Canada. In 1974 10 per cent of the country's gross income was put into savings. Between 1974 and 1982 it went from 10 per cent to almost 14 per cent, and it is my understanding that in 1984 and 1985 it increased further. As I said, there is lots of investment capital in Canada and we do not need to bring in foreign capital with no strings attached. The problem is an unwillingness on the part of business to invest in Canada. In light of that, the Government should be attempting to stimulate the economy so Canadians will invest. That should be the first step.

How can the Government do that? First of all, a point which has been made several times in this debate is that takeover investment is not good investment for Canada. We know foreign investment is not good investment for Canada and takeover investment has a tendency to eliminate jobs. Buying a new firm with available money does not create jobs because those jobs are already there. That is just using available capital to increase the portfolio of a particular company. Foreign capital is always suspect because it may help Canada in the beginning but at some time in the future that money is going to go back to its parent company and will not help Canada.

In some ways FIRA was not a very good operation. It did not work particularly well, but at least it was in place to define the parameters under which foreign investment could enter Canada. This Bill is attempting to take away those parameters which foreign corporations investing in Canada had to consider. Instead of allowing foreign capital to come in with no strings attached, we should be establishing criteria for the investment that is coming into Canada. After those criteria have been established, we should set up a monitoring agency. That is what FIRA was supposed to do. It did not do that well but it was there. We should be strengthening the monitoring powers of the corporation rather than eliminating them entirely.

What should the criteria for Canadian investment be? Since our biggest problem is unemployment, investment should be aimed at that. Takeover investment should be eliminated. The impact on the local community should be included in the criteria. The amount of effective development of skills which will make long-term jobs worthwhile and increase the standard of living of the affected people should be considered. The impact of investments on the balance of payments of the country should be controlled. The eventual impact of foreign investment is to increase the flow of money out of Canada. This adversely affects our balance of payments and forces us to increase interest rates to keep the money in Canada. The criteria should also take into consideration the social impact of the investment on the community and the country.

After establishing the criteria we should establish the objectives of investment. If the Government is going to have an effect on investment and the economy, part of its expenditures must be aimed at stimulating the economy. If business is unwilling and incapable of expanding, as seems to have happened in the last few years, both federal and provincial Governments should inject investment money into the economy to stimulate it. I could name a dozen or so areas that they should be investing in. We have plenty of resources and two million unemployed. We have a great need for housing. We have lots of lumber and other products necessary for the construction industry. We have many unemployed construction workers. Therefore, the Government should stimulate housing programs to help the economy.

Public expenditures in public transit, medical care facilities and education would help stimulate the economy. I find it very disturbing that in communities with several thousand people unemployed every teacher is teaching 30, 40 or even 50 students.

The tragedy of this closure motion to limit debate is that all of these points should be put before the people of Canada as well as the Government. We should eliminate cuts in public spending which affect people directly. We should lower interest rates. All of these are good ways to stimulate the economy which have not been put before the Government. We have not asked the Government to reply to those kinds of alternatives. Instead of that, closure has been moved in order to limit this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much having to rise to speak on the motion which has just been put which will prevent the House from giving this very important legislation the amount of consideration which it requires. Perhaps I could take a moment to deal with the procedural aspects of the motion.

By moving the motion which has just been put, the Government is attempting to prevent members of the Opposition from moving any other substantive motions that are appropriate at the time of second reading. Since the size of the Opposition is much smaller now than it was in some past Parliaments, this means that Parliament will be forced to vote on this legislation very shortly for the purpose of sending it on through the parliamentary process. That is an unprecedented activity and gesture by the Government in relation to the importance of these issues and the limited amount of time that has already been spent on this subject.

This legislation has only been before us since December. It has not been debated for very long in this House. It has not received too much attention in the country. Its name suggests that it does deal in one way or another with foreign investment. Foreign investment is one of the historically significant issues in Canadian public policy formation. The Government should not be attempting to get this Bill through before it comes to the attention of the vast majority of the Canadian people. The Government is attempting to prevent the Canadian public from finding out that very important changes are being made in the fundamental laws that protect the Canadian economy from the negative effects of foreign investment.

When I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announce that Canada was open for business, I was worried. It concerned me that by that he must have meant that the foreign investment rules in the country were going to be changed in some significant ways. I am not fully certain, and I do not think anyone who has studied the legislation is, what kind of basis there will be in the future, if any, for protecting Canada from the negative impact of foreign investment.

It is important to note that under the existing legislation which was introduced by the former Liberal Government, with which we have lived since the early 1970s, there was some basis, not for excluding foreign investment from Canada because that was never the goal of the former Government and is not the wish of the Canadian people, but for assuring that foreign investment coming into our country enters on the best possible terms for Canadian interests.

It is wrong to assume that foreign investment or any investment will be good investment. Those of us who practise law and have advised foreign interests from time to time are aware that they like to preserve a certain flexibility and not be bound to the commitment of creating jobs, providing research and development, investing a certain amount of capital and to assuring that the local service sector and its related professions will be used rather than the corresponding industries in the home country of their head office. They would prefer to be completely unfettered and be taken at good faith that they will operate in the Canadian interest. While many foreign investors intend and want to do so, unless we obtain the assurance that they will make their good faith concrete, it is possible that the maximum Canadian benefit will not be attained by that foreign investor in Canada. Therefore, the process that the foreign investment review legislation contemplated was very valuable to the enhancement and development of the Canadian economy and Canadian interests.

I am sure that all of us, even those who oppose any government role in relation to foreign investment, would like to see a Canadian economy that operates fully in the Canadian interest and that is autonomous and indigenous to the Canadian people. Although FIRA has been in effect for approximately a decade, our present economy is far from autonomous because when we first introduced policies to deal with foreign investment in Canada our economy was very much foreign controlled and foreign owned.

The very important Watkins report which was commissioned and delivered to my colleague, the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), when he was the Minister responsible, revealed the tremendous extent to which we were not in charge of our own economy. While we were achieving considerable benefits from foreign investment, we were also subject to considerable disadvantages which that foreign investment implied.

The question was how we should go about making our economy more autonomous and encouraging the Canadianization of it in a way that would continue to allow foreign investment to come and stay in Canada. At the same time that policy would have to assure that our Canadian economy would be Canadian-managed, owned and directed to the maximum extent possible.

At the time I recall spending much of my energy fighting for this legislation and explaining it to those who believe that the least government is the best government. I know there are still many members of the Conservative caucus and Cabinet who retain that unreconstructed Conservative attitude that does not recognize that government be a positive player and that the whole history of developing the Canadian economy has been one of using government to achieve objectives that cannot or have not been achieved otherwise.

I am not saying that in any way to criticize capitalism. I believe that Canadian or foreign entrepreneurs who can be encouraged to operate businesses in areas where profits can be earned can greatly serve the public interest by doing so. However, those entrepreneurs cannot be expected to take account of many of the objectives which are not those of free enterprise as such but very much objectives that it would be in our interest to have built into our economy. The creation of jobs itself is not a direct goal of free enterprise. The direct goal of free enterprise is to create profits, and if this can be done by reducing employment then it can be understood that businessmen will try to replace workers with machines that produce more efficiently.

Therefore, one must ask how that concern for employment in the economy is registered and by whom. Such reflection of the goals of business and the goals of Canadians in their economy show that there is much room for government to be active and to develop policies which do not deter the expansion of businesses but encourage and require them to take account of some of the other goals that Canadians expect their economy to deliver for them.

I am certainly prepared to concede that the foreign Investment Review Agency received bad reviews and was criticized in some places around the world. One reason for that is that it is a very up-front type of restraint. Although many countries have constraints on foreign investment, in most cases those constraints are less obvious. Even in the United States a foreign investor must actually visit the country and begin asking questions before discovering that there are a great many restrictions on free access by foreign businesses to the American market-place, which is perhaps the most free enterprise economy in the world.

I have seen the studies that were done for Watkins and more contemporary studies that show literally dozens of constraints in the United States. For example, there are restraints under the Jones Act, the regulations of vessels in domestic commerce, the Fishing Fleet Improvement Act and the Merchant Marine Act.

I see that my time has expired. I believe I have said enough to show that there needs to be more concern than is shown by this legislation for the negative side of foreign investment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the House certainly is not ready for the question.

Mr. Nickerson: Yes it is.

Mr. Keeper: Perhaps Hon. Members on that side of the House are ready for the question. It is sad that they should seek to limit debate in the House so early in their career as a government. We are learning that the Conservative Party operates differently in government from when it was in opposition. When in opposition, that Party espoused respect for parliamentary democracy, wanted to reform the House of Commons to give more authority to Private Members and make this place responsible for the public purse. Now that they are in office they limit debate.

This is travesty of the political process. During the election the Conservatives promised more open government. It is now closing the door on more information to Canadians with regard to investment policy. It is a sad moment for Canadians that the Government which promised so much is delivering so little.

The purpose of the Bill that the Government is supporting and at this time attempting to push down the throats of Canadians is to deregulate foreign investment. Deregulation represents the Holy Grail to the Government, a magic formula that is supposed to bring about a rejuvenation of the Canadian economy. It is an empty promise of prosperity for all. The Government has made many promises and has broken them. When it comes before the House with a piece of legislation which once again makes further promises, we have to look behind those promises. We have to ask ourselves what the Government is doing and why it is in such a hurry to push through this piece of legislation.

The aim of this legislation is to deregulate foreign investment and to give it a free hand. Another of its aims is to allow multinational companies to come into the country and do whatever they want without the representatives of the public being able to examine whether their actions are to the benefit of Canadians.

From past experience would we have any reason to want to examine what foreign investment does in Canada? Has foreign investment in the past always been so beneficial that we can assume that it would be done in the interests of Canadians? I should like to raise a couple of questions about the impact of foreign investment in Canada, questions which I think will lead to the conclusion that it is necessary to have some reasonable regulation of foreign investment.

Foreign investment has led to a Canadian economy which is largely dependent upon branch plants in the manufacturing area of the economy, like young children of parent companies in other countries. The branch plant economy in Canada is largely dependent upon its parent companies in the United States.

What happens with a branch plant economy? We are just coming out of the last recession. It is a recession in which we have not recovered from the loss of employment which Canadians are still suffering. There were massive losses of employment during that recession. One of the reasons we lost many jobs was that our economy was vulnerable to the downturn in international economic activity because of our branch plant economy. With the downturn in the economy, the branch plants returned jobs to their parent plants, largely in the United States. They let jobs go in Canada to preserve employment in the United States. It was not only a matter of individual decisions by individual companies; it was a matter of public policy in the United States. Obviously it is in the interests of the American Government to protect as much as possible the employment of its own people. How could one criticize a government which took action to protect the employment of its people?

The Government of Canada, and particularly the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), is a great admirer of the American Government and the American President. I wish the Prime Minister would learn from what that President has done in the area of investment. He has protected employment for his own people over employment in other countries. We need to learn from those actions rather than from the rhetoric of the American President. We need to understand that if we want to protect employment for Canadians, we must have appropriate government policy. We not only need activity in the private sector, we not only need entrepreneurs in Canada who have the courage to create investment and jobs; we also need appropriate government policy in order to ensure that we protect the jobs we already have and the Canadian economy. When the economy turns down and we are still based upon a branch plant economy, we tend to lose more jobs than we would lose if our economy was largely based upon Canadian enterprises.

Even when the economy picks up, as it is beginning to do now, one problem with an economy largely based upon foreign investment and therefore upon branch plants is that we do not receive the full benefit of investments or economic activity in the country. If a company produces a particular product here which can be sold in the Canadian market and buys the materials it needs to produce the product, it tends to buy the goods from its parent company in the United States. Therefore local Canadian firms, particularly small businesses, lose the market because of the way in which the economy is structured. That is crucial to employment for Canadians. We all know—even the Government knows from time to time—that the part of the economy which produces the most employment is small business. We should be doing everything we can to support small business in Canada.

I see Mr. Speaker indicating that I have only a couple of minutes remaining. One way to support small business in the country is to have an economy based upon Canadian enterprises more than branch plant enterprises, because those enterprises tend to buy more locally and support small business, which in turn creates the most employment possible.

In summary, it is sad and tragic that the Government has moved at this moment to limit debate on a Bill which seeks to deregulate foreign investment. It is a tragedy because it is important for Canadians to examine fully the impact of foreign investment in Canada. We need investment to create jobs, but we need investment which will be responsible. It is incumbent upon the Government to put in place the necessary policies to ensure responsible behaviour by investors in the country so that Canadians have secure jobs.

I ask the Government to open up debate on this question rather than close it down. I ask it to run an open government and make its first concern Canadians and their employment rather than some ideological notion that if it simply deregulates foreign investment, the economy in Canada will automatically improve. We need a serious examination of this legislation. I ask the Government to open up debate rather than close it down.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable that one of the first initiatives of the new Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif)—who has changed her seat but who is in this House where I am much more at ease to speak to her—What I want to say is that it is regrettable that the new Member for Charlesbourg has decided to impose closure on such an important debate in the House. I expected a more constructive approach on the part of the Hon. Member. Her constituents will surely be quite surprised to see her impatience, I would even say her arrogance and certainly, at the very least, her lack of democratic spirit. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, one has to read Standing Order 56 to appreciate the seriousness of the initiative taken by the Member for Charlesbourg. Here is Standing Order 56:

> The previous question, until it is decided, shall preclude all amendments of the main question, and shall be in the following words, "That this question be now put".

And here is Standing Order 56(2) which I quote for the benefit of new Members in this House, especially some of the new Progressive Conservative Members who may not have had an opportunity to read and fully understand the Standing Orders:

> If the previous question be resolved in the affirmative, the original question is to be put forthwith without any amendment or debate.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg has just moved closure this morning, nothing more, nothing less. With such an overwhelming majority, I would have thought that this government would have been very careful not to show exactly where it stands so early in this new Parliament, because what this means is that Members of the Opposition, Liberals and New Democrats alike, will no longer be able to debate this issue which, to my mind, underlies the Canadian economy. Why—and I am asking the question seriously—why did a Progressive Conservative Minister not have enough courage to do that dirty work himself? Why did they ask a backbencher to do what I call the dirty job of gagging the Opposition in the House of Commons?

I find that regrettable and unfortunate because the new younger Member seems to be quite charming, but someone has taken advantage of her naïveté or perhaps her lack of parliamentary experience, and I think it must have been the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). Where is that Minister?

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to you that since December 11, the day he introduced this Bill, the Minister responsible for this measure has seldom been seen in the House. You used to sit with him in the Opposition and you recall how the Minister, who was then on this side of the House, would take the government and Liberal Ministers to task for showing disrespect for the Canadian Parliament. Mr. Speaker, the current Minister would never have allowed consideration of such an important piece of legislation to proceed without the regular attendance of the Minister responsible. He did show up for a few minutes in this debate, but most of the time the Minister has been away from the House, as he is now.

The Progressive Conservatives have 40 ministers, but right now I can see only two of them in the House.

Mrs. Mailly: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member has just referred to another Member being absent from the House, and it seems to me that it is contrary to our Standing Orders to comment on the absence or presence of a Member.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): This is not a point of order. The Hon. Member should not reflect on who is in the House and who is not. I am sure the Hon. Member knows that.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I think the Canadian public should be told that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), who is responsible for this legislation, is not here this morning and that he has taken virtually no part in this most important debate that can substantially alter Canada's economic outlook.

Why do we Liberals so strongly oppose this Bill? Because it is our fundamental belief that in our Canadian context we should control our economy. With this legislation, the Tories are ready to sell out at any price, to anybody, at any time, and in this debate we will fight to the limit, even though with her underhand practices this morning the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) is attempting to muzzle us. The amazing part of it is that Bill C-15 would have us approve post haste a new concept for our Canadian economy. The legislation is presented by the Tory government as a means to create new jobs. We say outright, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation is wrong, and that far from creating new jobs, it will probably mean the loss of their jobs to hundreds of Canadians.

I am pleased to note the presence in the House of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté), who is responsible for competition in Canada. Since he has already been doing his homework, he is aware of the extent of large business concentration in Canada, he knows that in most major sectors of the Canadian economy there are only two or three corporations that control the Canadian economic market. Competition is exceedingly difficult to exercise in Canada, and the Canadian consumers are at the constant mercy of a few big corporations.

The first thing the Conservative Government did when coming to power was to bow to the big multinational oil corporations. We wanted to Canadianize the oil industry. We passed legislation to allow for and promote the Canadianization of that important industry, and we created Petro-Canada. But the Conservatives never accepted that. They always wanted to support the multinational corporations, those foreign corporations which control the Canadian oil industry and rip off the Canadian consumers.

I therefore say that Bill C-15 is a bad bill, because it will allow the big and the strong to meddle with the international economy and bully our small businessmen in Canada, because the Tory legislation now under consideration no longer contains the same requirements, the same important criteria as were provided in the measure we introduced in 1974, and under which the Foreign Investment Review Agency could prevail on new Canadian investors to give guarantees, not only to create new jobs, but at least to guarantee existing jobs, and especially to promote economic growth. This legislation would allow investors a free hand. Anybody may now invest in Canada without constraints, without any obligation to Canadians. This is what we are fighting against. It is not good enough and we are sorry that the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) should be attempting to use the guillotine so early in her political career. This is a bad omen indeed.

[English]

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I am very interested in contributing to this debate this morning, even though our time is limited to 10 minutes.

Before getting into the substance of my remarks, I wish to remind the House, particularly new Members, that for many years we fought very hard in this country to develop a national economy. In the 1950s this country was virtually owned by foreigners, both our natural resource industry and our manufacturing industry. When I was a younger man, and well into the 1960s, there was a great wave of nationalism spreading across the country. It was not a particularly healthy kind of nationalism. It was born out of a normal and understandable resentment which had developed, based largely on the fact that there was not only the impression in the country but the facts to back up that impression that successive Governments, particularly Liberal Governments, were selling out our country to foreign interests. That was happening in mining, smelting, the newsprint industry, the forest products industry and metal mining. It was happening in financial institutions and, primarily, in manufacturing. It created a very negative kind of thinking throughout the country. That was not healthy.

If we go ahead with Bill C-15 and set up Investment Canada, I suggest that not tomorrow or next year but in five or 10 years that unhealthy, negative nationalism will return as we see the manufacturing and resource sectors of our economy once again slipping out of our hands. I can recall a time when about 80 per cent of our natural resource industry in the country was either directly or indirectly controlled or owned outright by foreign interests. Not many years ago I can recall a time when about 60 per cent of the manufacturing sector was controlled or owned outright by foreign interests. It was not healthy.

I would like to impress upon Government Members as others already have that it is not always of benefit to sell out to a foreign company. It is not always a good thing for an American firm to buy out a Canadian firm. In fact, very often quite the opposite eventually happens. It may not happen overnight, in a few weeks or a few months, but eventually it does happen. Some of our Canadian industries become nothing more than warehouses or distribution points for goods manufactured offshore.

Foreign firms are not the best of employers. Although I do not have time in a ten-minute speech to go into it in detail, the record shows that this is so. We all know that the first companies to lay off employees in an economic recession are the foreign-owned ones. Obviously they want to look after their own employees at their own head offices wherever those head offices may be, whether in Des Moines, Iowa, West Germany, Sweden, or Japan.

In terms of research and development, the record speaks for itself. The plants with the best record in research and development in this country are Canadian-owned plants. Yet this Bill would put heavy competitive pressure on our Canadian-owned industries and would dampen that enthusiasm and desire to do research and development here in Canada because foreign-owned companies almost always do most of their R and D offshore. These days they do it in the countries with the best tax system, the lowest tax system, usually Third World countries. Of course, there is a dog's breakfast looming on the horizon there to which we will all have to face up very quickly. If they do not do their R and D in the Third World, they do it at the parent plant which is usually in the United States. As well, large percentages of profits, bonuses, dividends and the like are sucked back into the United States by American corporations, and again this puts some downward pressure on our dollar.

I admit that not all foreign companies in this country are operated as branch plants, but many of them are. Those that are operated as branch plants are very restricted in what they can do in terms of marketing. For example, they cannot compete with the mother industry back home so they tend to have very restricted markets. They sell only to the Canadian market. After all, the reason they came here in the first place was to jump the tariff barrier. They came to Canada to get over the tariff barrier by establishing a small plant in Canada to serve a limited Canadian market.

If a foreign-owned plant is operated as a branch plant, as many of them if not the majority of them are, then it has a very restricted market. In the domestic market it is restricted to Canadian sales but it is also restricted in terms of foreign sales. Again, in many cases these firms are told not in writing but by telephone at ten o'clock every morning where they can sell, how much they can sell, and what the price will be here in Canada. They are told not to compete with the mother company overseas because the mother company already has that market nicely sewn up.

I have spoken to a few managers of branch plants in my time. They will admit, if I promise never to quote them or name their companies, that they are frustrated with their lack of manoeuverability and lack of ability to apply creative talents to improving the industry. They are always being held back by their bosses offshore wherever the parent plant happens to be.

I would like to remind members of the Conservative Government to keep something in mind when trying to sell Canada to foreign corporations and particularly to American-owned corporations. I wonder what the reaction would be in the United States if the average American who had no interest whatsoever in the economy, big business or international trade and finance was on his way to a football game and was told that that country to the north called Canada controlled over half of all American manufacturing and perhaps 60 per cent of its natural resource industry. The Americans are great ones for saying that they want Japanese, British, French and Canadian capital in their country. However, how many people on the other side realize what the total picture is?

Less than 3 per cent of non-financial privately-owned commercial enterprise in the United States is actually controlled or owned outright by foreigners. Here we are in Canada desperately trying to hold on to a Canadian national economy, to compete in an international market-place as freely and unfettered as possible, and this Government wants to destroy the only instrument we had to reasonably and rationally control foreign investment in the country, the Foreign Investment Review Agency, an agency which the NDP forced the Liberals to bring in under a minority government.

Those people opposite want to destroy FIRA. They are not saying "Canada is open for business"; they are saying "Canada is open for exploitation, come up here and rape us". That is what those Members are saying to the big interests in the United States, Europe and throughout the world. I think that is a shame. If we lose our national economy, we will lose our national character, ethos and culture. Those too will go down the tubes and we will simply be a white mass sitting on top of the United States.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? Debate.

• (1220)

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to speak on Bill C-15 this morning, but I was certainly not expecting such a surprise move. I would never have thought that the new Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) would come in and propose a form of closure to bring to an end this debate as quickly as possible, in spite of its importance for the economic future of Canada.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), said a while ago that the Progressive Conservative Government had called on a newly elected Member to do its dirty work and impose closure. However, I think that he made a mistake in saying that this new Member is simply a private Member, because, if I am not mistaken, she is Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). The motion is therefore an official proposal of the Progressive Conservative Party. It is not simply a case of a backbencher making a mistake and thinking it would be a good idea to put an end to this debate. On the contrary! The Parliamentary Secretary represents her Minister quite well, and in fact, she really needs to do it because the Minister is never here during the debate. She has become the spokesperson of her party in proposing this despicable motion which reflects a Government decision and which is, I repeat, an obvious abuse, this early in this Parliament, of the enormous majority of 211 seats held by the Progressive Conservative Party.

The Government felt the need to impose closure to a very minimal opposition consisting of only 40 Liberals and 30 NDP Members. However, I am certain that the voters realize what is going on and that the Opposition will not be this weak for long. The voters will not let a government in whom they have put their confidence shabbily treat the minority in the House of Commons especially in view of the staggering majority won by the party opposite after making all kinds of promises which are quickly being broken one after the other. One of the promises which is being forgotten the most often was to have a continuous process of consultation. Here we now have a perfect example of a Government taking action in an important sector, that of foreign investment, without having consulted anyone.

The only one to speak on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party this morning, the same Parliamentary Secretary to whom I referred earlier, said that the Government did consult. "Every weekend, we go home to our constituencies, we meet our voters. We receive letters." This is the easy way out. I am well aware that when Members go back to their constituencies during the weekend, they see a few voters, not necessarily to speak about this matter but rather to solve particular problems and to discuss many other issues where the Progressive Conservative Government is having trouble. For instance, what are the Progressive Conservatives doing to help Quebec pork producers? I am certain that all PC Members who visited their constituencies and met with farmers did not discuss foreign investment and Bill C-15. What they heard was: "When are you going to give us the $13 millions you had promised" This is what the voters were saying last weekend and this is what we can read in the newspapers.

Therefore, there will not be any consultation. Let us put an end to the debate as soon as possible. The only consultation to have taken place is the debate we have been having in this House where Members can rise and say what they think about Bill C-15, an Act respecting foreign investment.

According to the rhetoric of the Progressive Conservative Party, the purpose of Bill C-15 is to attract foreign investment while protecting our national identity. I would like to spend a few minutes speaking about this aspect of the bill. In this regard, the Progressive Conservative Party is trying to step into the shoes of the Liberal Party. During the last few years, which party has attempted, while allowing foreign investment, to provide some protection to several sectors of the Canadian industry if not the Liberal Party? It was a Liberal policy which led to the creation of the Foreign Investment Review Agency better known as FIRA. And whatever the opinion of my NDP colleague who took the floor just before me, he may try to make us believe that it was the New Democratic Party that forced the Liberals to introduce legislation to establish FIRA, but anybody who has followed Canadian politics knows that the idea sprang from a Liberal convention held in Toronto in1972 when people in attendance, members of the Liberal Party of Canada, recommended to the then federal Liberal Government to create an agency so as to make sure that foreign investments would really benefit the Canadian economy and not jeopardize certain sectors of our economy.

Who decided to impose restrictions on foreign investments in specific sectors such as culture and finance, if not the Liberal Government, the previous administration of the country?

Who decided to approach the European Economic Community in an attempt to diversify the source of foreign investments, if not the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau himself when he was Canada's Prime Minister, because one of the great dangers we are facing is to have foreign investments coming mostly from a single source? That is how we can fall directly under legislation adopted by our neighbours to the south and likely to disrupt our economy.

Those protective measures against foreign investments have been implemented by the Liberals and I object to the fact that Progressive Conservative Party representatives now try to argue that the Progressive Conservative Government wants to attract foreign investors, while at the same time safeguarding our national identity. Their defensive approach with respect to our national identity is sheer nonsense, that is not what they are trying to do.

The major argument of the Progressive Conservatives with respect to job creation is now, and was during the election campaign: Let us allow capital to create jobs. That argument has continued to be translated into specific measures. Since business has resumed in the House of Commons, we have heard the Progressive Conservative Government endlessly repeating that we have to let private capital create jobs, and we have also seen that same Government shirk its major responsibility, and that is to create jobs.

We have seen this Government cancel job creation programs, although it keeps saying that creating jobs is its priority. A good example is the elimination of the Summer Canada Program: $75 million that was supposed to create jobs for young Canadians next summer. They have been saying: Let capital create jobs. The new 1985 rhetoric, however, is: Let foreign capital create jobs. An interesting but dangerous shift in Conservative rhetoric. The Government has abdicated its job creating function. It has said: Let Canadian capital create jobs. Now it is saying: Let foreign investment create jobs. This is one way for the Party in power to sympathize with people who are looking for jobs and give the impression that the Government is concerned about creating jobs. However, they are really showing they want to leave it up to foreign capital to create jobs in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, you know as well as I do that the danger here is that foreign companies setting up branches in Canada do so in their own interest. When they come to Canada to buy an existing company, this does not create new employment. What it does create is a situation in which existing jobs, under the new company, are controlled from outside Canada.

When times are hard and the company's market starts to shrink, what is it going to do? Is it going to shut down its Canadian branch and with it the jobs they are promising us today when they say: "Let foreign capital create jobs"? These are temporary jobs, Mr. Speaker. These jobs are liable to vanish into thin air, depending on the international economic situation and international markets.

The Progressive Conservative Party would do well to allow more time for debate in the House on Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada. We agree to letting foreign capital come into this country. However, as the Liberal Party of Canada, we want substantial guarantees that any foreign investment will be in the interests of Canadians, that it will create long-term and not temporary employment and that the most sensitive sectors of our economy will not be adversely affected.

That is what we are trying to do, Mr. Speaker, while we are considering Bill C-15. We are not trying to prolong debate unnecessarily, but we are trying to obtain a fair deal for Canadians who want to invest and for Canadians who are looking for jobs and are unable to find any.

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is striking, so quickly after the House has returned from the Christmas recess, that the Government is anxious to close debate on this extremely crucial subject. One would think that the debate had been dragging on for weeks. In fact, the Minister brought the Bill before the House before Christmas and there was a limited period of time in which to debate it. It seems a long time since the Bill was introduced, but that is because the Christmas recess was so long. Since the House reconvened a week ago, there have been two Opposition days and there has not been a great focus on the subject matter of the Bill.

I think the reason the closure motion has been brought before the House is that there was a certain amount of momentum, criticism and thrust to the debate which we in this Party and members of the Liberal Party managed to gain in the period before Christmas. The Government, frankly, is fearful that it will again be possible for us to build up this momentum and to develop a sense of critical analysis of this faulty piece of legislation before us.

I have a sense, and I believe perhaps the Government has as well—which is why it has moved this closure motion so quickly—that throughout this country there is now a growing sense of awareness that something is happening here in Ottawa which is dangerous to the future of the country and to our sense of independence. This is an unfortunate effort to ram something through the House which has not been subject to the kind of scrutiny and careful attention which something of such major importance should receive. We are after all, Mr. Speaker, dealing with something which has been at the heart of economic development concerns in Canada for well over 100 years.

I mentioned in past debate that it was in the 1870s that the first subsidiaries came to Canada. Since that period we have seen a careful and gradual development of public policy with respect to branch plants. Back in the 1870s and 1880s we believed, as this Government seems now to believe, that foreign investment of any kind would be good for the country. But, Mr. Speaker, we have come a long way since 1880. We have learned a great deal since those days. We have seen the problems which can develop in an economy when there is no sense of strategy vis-à-vis foreign investment. That is why we on this side of the House have been so concerned about the abdication of strategy and the absence of policy direction which this new Bill represents.

It is not just those of us who are critical of foreign investment who recognize the problem. Let me indicate to Hon. Members on the government side some of the recognition which is there from those who actually run foreign firms here in this country. For instance, the President of the Sarnia based Dow Chemical of Canada Limited, spoke to the press about drawing some Canadian capital, some Canadian shareholders, into his subsidiary. He said he was concerned about this because "we are the Canadian subsidiary of a multinational. We do not necessarily always operate to do the best we can for our local books. We are attempting to optimize the parent company's books".

What that means, Mr. Speaker, is that the concern with profitability and investment which can benefit this country is not at the heart of the business operations of that subsidiary. Instead, its first priority is to benefit the parent company. I quote the words of David Clark, the President of Campbell Soup Company Ltd., another major subsidiary which operates in southwestern Ontario. He said: "There is the danger of falling into the funny money syndrome of corporate management", the possibility of shifting money out of the country through transactions with the parent company.

For that reason, he and his company welcomed the possibility of having Canadian shareholders in his firm. That brings, as he puts it, "a heightened sense of financial responsibility. It brings you one step closer to reality". That is the kind of flimflam, the kind of internal corporate shifting of resources, which can take place if we have an economy which is dominated by foreign investment. That is why we need a sense of strategy, a sense of direction and the capacity to review and control the extremely large sector of our country which is controlled by foreign firms.

It is a source of particular concern to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister is moving, through his Parliamentary Secretary, for closure of this debate before he has presented to the House hiw own sense of direction with respect to a key part of Bill C-15, that is the part of the Bill which outlines a concern with key cultural parts of our economy.

The Minister indicated in his press conference when he introduced this Bill that he would clarify the kinds of sectors with which he expected that part of the Bill to deal and the mechanisms he would use to give the Bill that sense of specific impact. He has not come before the House to provide that sense of direction despite the fact that the Association of Canadian Publishers has gone before the Minister and told him that we need this sense of direction, not just because of a general concern but because of the very specific problem of the takeover of Prentice-Hall in the United States by Gulf and Western. Prentice-Hall is an extremely large American company with a great deal of investment in our cultural sector.

We believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister should present us with some sense of how he intends to proceed on this part of his Bill before the Bill receives approval to go to committee. The Association of Canadian Publishers has been very detailed in its comments on Prentice-Hall. It has indicated that there are Canadian buyers who are willing and able to make a purchase of the Canadian subsidiary of Prentice-Hall but the Minister has not provided direction as to how this is going to be possible under the new Bill.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, this motion is a premature move which we will oppose. We hope the Government will reconsider and withdraw this closure motion at this stage and allow full debate on this Bill.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I know Hon. Members of this House would not want to see this Tory closure motion imposed on the House today. It is obvious why the Government is moving closure today. It is because it knows that there is a very great unease in this country about the way in which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is handling the whole question of foreign ownership. He hies himself off to New York and essentially says to the economic community in New York: "Come and take whatever you want. It is up there. There are just no questions asked". There is a great deal of unease about that.

Clearly the Canadian people are concerned about jobs and they want to see Canadian industries prosper and move forward just as much as foreign companies. I believe that is why this Bill should be thoroughly discussed here today. I asked the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) last week how many applications had actually been received under FIRA since the Prime Minister went down to New York and told them to come and buy out whatever they want in Canada, no questions asked. He went into a great deal of flimflam and breast beating and all the rest of it, but he never did indicate the number of applications there have been since this Bill was introduced into the House and since the Cabinet said, to all intents and purposes, "You just have to apply to take over any Canadian company; there will be no questions asked". So I think there is a great deal of unease in the country regarding the Government's intentions.

We believe, Mr. Speaker, that businessmen from western Europe, Japan and the U.S. will invest in Canada when there is an opportunity. We believe we should welcome that investment provided it is beneficial to our country in terms of job creation, research and development and export development. There is no problem with that. That is why we think the existing rules and regulations of FIRA are desirable.

Some 97 per cent of foreign investment has been approved in the last couple of years, but that does not indicate how many companies were encouraged to do their R and D here or to dedicate a portion of their Canadian production capacity to the international market. Look at the tremendous spurt there has been to the Ontario economy this year. It has grown at a rate of 5 per cent, slightly higher than the national average. In fact, it pushed the national average up by perhaps 1 per cent. Most of that was due to the production of two vehicles, a Chevrolet automobile and a Chrysler mini-van. Some $8 billion worth of autos were produced last year and we will produce some $13 billion worth this year. That has been a tremendous spurt to automobile manufacturing, so to then give away our ability to negotiate with American or other foreign companies just does not seem very wise.

The other thing Tories are very concerned about in having this Bill debated for any length of time is that the Canadian people generally are going to become more familiar with the amount of progress we have made in Canadian ownership. The figures indicate that in mining and smelting Canadian ownership has risen from some 30 per cent in 1970 to something like 52 per cent in 1980. Pretty impressive figures. In 1975 research and development in this country amounted to something like $1 billion. In 1984 it was $5.3 billion. A lot of this is due to the fact we were able to negotiate with foreign investors the amount of research and development they would do.

The Tories are also concerned with the results of our effort to increase Canadian ownership in the oil and gas industry. During the first three years of the National Energy Program Canadian ownership in that industry has risen from 28 per cent to 40 per cent. Oil exploration has increased by 53 per cent from 1980 to 1984. Reserves of natural gas have risen to a record high of some 33 years' supply. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources projects that we will be self-sufficient in oil on a net basis right through to the end of the century. When the NEP was proposed to Parliament we had dared hope that we would be self-sufficient by 1990. Here we are only three years later and we are up to self-sufficiency on a net basis to the year 2000. So naturally the Tories want to bring in a motion to cut off debate because they are very concerned about people becoming knowledgeable about the Prime Minister's attitude towards foreign investment.

It is also very interesting to see how the Government co-ordinates its policies with those of the Ontario Government. The Premier of Ontario, who has just retired, brought in a 20 per cent land transfer tax many years ago which applied to the sale of land to non-residents. Of course, that completely destroyed part of the business of northern Ontario realtors who were selling cottage lots. Now that we have a Tory Government in Ottawa it will be interesting to see whether there will be negotiations with the provincial government to encourage that kind of investment in the country.

It is also interesting to note a headline in the Toronto Star of January 19 which indicated that the Nissan Corporation of Japan was not planning to make any further investment in Canada in spite of what the Prime Minister is doing with this Investment Canada legislation. He said these companies would be crawling all over themselves to invest in Canada. If we compare the lack of success of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) this fall with the Nissan Corporation, which incidentally is going to be investing in Great Britain, China, South East Asia and other countries, with the success of Mr. Lumley, the former Minister, last spring, then we see he is not being very successful. Over the course of a three or four month period Mr. Lumley was able to announce a $100 million Honda plant in Ontario resulting in some 350 jobs. He negotiated a new AMC/Renault plant, some $700 million and 7,000 jobs. There were two other GM plants involving 1,100 jobs and a capital investment of over $1.25 billion. If we compare the two, we see Mr. Lumley comes out looking very well because he got $2.1 billion of investment and 10,000 jobs. Obviously the present Government's policies are not working, Mr. Speaker.

● (1250)

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, an awful lot of people in the country must be sharing my disappointment. During the election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Party indicated that once accorded the robes of power they would look to a new Canadian agenda. The smiling, confidence-building visage from which such promising words issued must have filled the hearts of many Canadians with the idea that they would share in determining the destiny of this country in accord with the high-sounding phrases heard during the election. We heard then and have heard since that the process of government would change from one of confrontation to one of consultation. In particular it was said that the Opposition would be consulted on all matters to ensure that the House acted in the interests of the people of the country.

We expected that these pronouncements would reflect new year's resolutions for 1985. As one of the first acts of the Government we are faced with a motion to close debate on something of such fundamental importance to the Canadian people as this legislation called Investment Canada. It must be a rather strange spectacle to almost all people of the world to see a Canadian Prime Minister going to New York to announce that Canada's destiny will be built there.

Only a few days ago I spoke in London, Ontario and there encountered immigrants from Argentina and Chile. They said to me that it is too bad that the Canadian people are not as aware as they should be of the debate going on in the House of Commons these days. I wish it were possible for the Canadian people to understand the implications of the legislation before the House in terms of the experience of the people of South America. If we want to have control over our Government, economy and future, we must be careful to learn the lessons of South and Central America well. We know what kind of contribution unencumbered American investment and input will have on those three facets of our existence.

If it were not so serious, it would almost be laughable to recount the purposes outlined for Investment Canada. In the background is the assumption that Canadians, by wanting to control their own economy, are somehow a little perverted, that we are and have been discouraging investment through FIRA, and that if we eliminate FIRA the whole world is going to come in with truck loads of dollars to help us out. In fact there is every evidence in the world that foreign investment, and particularly American investment, has not been materially affected during the course of FIRA given the competition that we face from other potential sources for great profits for American investors.

No matter what analysis one may apply to the evidence for that statement, there is no indication that the adoption of Investment Canada is going to mean the great surge of investment from the United States that the Government would have us hope for. Even if it does occur, we are told quite clearly by the Americans that the only lucrative area for investment for them is in our primary resources. You can bet that that will not be on the basis of generating jobs for Canadians in Canada. Such investment will not be based on Canadian priorities.

Let us review this piece of legislation which the Government does not want to have debated in too much detail because the Canadian people may find out too much about it and the repercussions it has for Canada. If this motion were defeated and the debate allowed to continue, a level of duplicity that would astound Canadians would be revealed in terms of what this Bill says it is going to do and what it actually proposes to do.

It proposes to create more jobs but one can look at every detail and word in legislation and find not a single provision which would ensure new Canadian jobs. It proposes that it will increase exports for Canada. However, there is not a line or word in this legislation which would provide for increased exports. The Bill suggests that there will be increased research and development in Canada. One can study every line and detail an find no provision for increased research and development in Canada.

The Government says that by virtue of this legislation there will be increased technological diffusion. That is nonsensical, as indicated by the fact that no attempt has been made to provide for it in the legislation. A sorry piece of nonsense has been presented to the Canadian people and the House. I can understand that the Government wants to close debate as quickly as possible before the Canadian people discover what it is all about.

We do not want Canada to be sold to others. If one goes anywhere in Canada where there is forestry, mining, fishing or agriculture and asks the ordinary people who are not going to be blessed with the huge profits which come from productivity and innovation how they feel about selling Canada's future overseas, one soon learns that they are tired of losing control of their futures and their jobs and the resources that they would like to own in order to create jobs for themselves.

We must not doubt that the Americans are interested in their own priorities. Over the past weekend it was reported in newspapers across the country that two of the leading think tanks in the United States recommend against any action on the issue of acid rain. They recommend that the issue of acid rain be put on the backburner because there is only one reason for giving it priority; that is that it would be primarily in the interests of Canada and Canadians. That is a clear indication of the kind of judgments and priorities that would be applied in foreign lands with respect to our future.

We have made progress with respect to Canadian ownership. We have made progress with respect to controlling our own destinies. We have made progress with respect to making it possible for the creative Canadian population to have an opportunity to make this country one which can be a symbol to the entire world of what prosperity, based on social justice and peace, can accomplish. I we fail—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the government is taking credit for unemployment reduction but conveniently disregards an unusual reduction of activity in labour force participation, an indication that a great number of unemployed have lost all hope of finding a job and think that the promises of the Progressive Conservative Party are always without any substance.

After the Cabinet was sworn in, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mrs. MacDonald), Minister of Employment and Immigration, tried to explain the increase in unemployment by suggesting that more Canadians wanted to work because a Progressive Conservative government had been elected.

The Progressive Conservative should now be held responsible for the 105,000 unemployed who have lost all confidence in the government and have given up looking for a job as well as for the 81,000 jobs lost in November and December. The government should ask the unemployed what they think of those budgetary cuts!

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ELECTION OF MR. FRANK MILLER AS ONTARIO PREMIER DESIGNATE

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, Ontario's longstanding tradition of selecting superb Premiers has continued, in spades. It gives me the utmost pleasure to tell the House that Frank Miller, my provincial counterpart from Muskoka, is the province's new Premier designate.

I believe that the choice made by delegates on Saturday night shows insight and political savvy. Despite the strong opposition mounted by other candidates, Mr. Miller won the confidence of the Party.

He has gained a reputation for fairness and hard work as a Cabinet Minister in Ontario, with four different portfolios.

Mr. Miller was offered widespread support from the people who know him best, the folks from Parry Sound-Muskoka. He secured the confidence of all sectors of society throughout his political career.

With these congratulations to Frank Miller today, I must also express the Province of Ontario's indebtedness to Premier Bill Davis. The people of Ontario are indeed fortunate to have men such as these aspire to hold the position of Premier.

I declare without hesitation that I am most anxious to be a part of Miller's Ontario in the years to come. We have been ably led in Ontario's past, and now we may look forward to a bright and shining future. It's Miller time.

DISASTERS

DESTRUCTION BY FIRE OF FISH PLANT AT GLACE BAY, N.S.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the news this morning carried a story of yet another major economic blow being struck against Glace Bay in Cape Breton. A fire has destroyed a fish processing plant which was the last major employer in a community already suffering more than 50 per cent unemployment. Only last year the fire in No. 26 Colliery threw 1,200 people out of work.

While Glace Bay is a tragic example, it is only one example of the kind of unemployment facing people throughout Cape Breton. Unfortunately the new Conservative Government has reacted by cutting programs which would have reduced this unemployment. One of the first Conservative measures was to eliminate the transfer of its Income Security Branch from Halifax to Sydney.

The federal Government must involve itself in a program to deal with the tragic unemployment in Cape Breton. Sydney Steel's business plan must be implemented in consultation with the workers in order to guarantee that economic benefits are passed on to the people of that hard hit area. The situation is now critical, and we desperately require some tangible solutions.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

PENNER REPORT RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, with the exception of the Senate there is probably no other part or agency of Government that has been subjected to so many studies ad infinitum as has the Northern Canada Power Commission.

The previous Liberal Government always set up yet more studies instead of addressing the many real and outstanding problems. Northerners expect the new Government to take positive action. The principal recommendations of the Penner Report on NCPC should be implemented forthwith.

Jurisdiction over power supply in the Territories should be devolved from the federal to the territorial Governments. The territorial public utility boards should become the regulatory agencies rather than the National Energy Board favoured by the previous administration. Provision must be made for tying in the southern Territories to the existing Alberta power grid. The questions of rate rationalization and subsidization in remote diesel supplied areas must be properly resolved.

Yes, it is expected of the new Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) that he take action and not just avoid and set aside the problems as did his predecessor.

EMPLOYMENT

IMPORTANCE OF CADET SUMMER CAMP PROGRAM

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, last Monday the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) made some lofty pronouncements in connection with the beginning of International Youth Year. While 1985 will be important in terms of highlighting youth concerns, what young people in Canada want more than anything else is work and not words.

Some 80,000 young people who had jobs last summer under the Summer Canada Program have been left dangling while the Government fiddles, frets, and fools with the program that was working perfectly well.

One part of the Summer Canada Program that has been left high and dry by the cuts made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is the Cadet Summer Camp Program which was cut by nearly $1 million.

Working with Summer Canada funding, the Navy, Army and Air Cadets, in conjunction with the Department of National Defence, put together an extremely valuable and worthwhile endeavour for our youth. Cadet summer camps gave young people a better understanding of what it means to be a Canadian. It helped them develop their qualities of self reliance and leadership, and gave them the opportunity to meet other young Canadians from other parts of Canada. Cutting $85 million from Summer Canada without announcing a substitute program was un unusual, cruel, and insensitive move even for this Government.

I call on the Government to ensure that whatever new program is announced, the Cadet Summer Program will not be affected.

INCOME TAX ACT

TUITION FEE DEDUCTIBLE PROVISIONS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, significant numbers of Canadians attend courses at accredited universities in the United States. To accommodate working adults who cannot afford the luxury of taking off work for extended periods of time, some universities condense an entire semester of studies into a few short but very intensive weeks.

One of my constituents was able to complete the equivalent of one full semester in seven weeks of summer study at an American university. The tuition was some $2,000.

My constituent, Mr. Snell, was surprised to learn that these tuition fees were not income tax deductible because the classes attended in the United States were not of at least 13 weeks' duration.

In searching for the rationale behind such a restriction, one can only assume concerns on the part of Government that the taxpayers of Canada might be partially financing summer vacations outside the country. Such an assumption does a disservice to those Canadians who would wish to pursue their education legitimately and who, plainly and simply, cannot afford to leave their employment for 13 or more weeks.

I suggest changes to Section 60, the tuition fee deductibility provisions of the Income Tax Act to accommodate those Canadians attending legitimate credit courses of any duration at accredited educational institutions, whether these institutions be inside Canada our outside Canada.

S.O. 21

FISHERIES

WEST COAST VESSEL BUY-BACK PROPOSALS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) will be meeting with his ministerial advisory committee tomorrow in Vancouver to discuss a West Coast salmon vessel buy-back program.

• (1410)

It is my understanding that this will be involving the federal Government in a $100 million buy-back program for West Coast salmon fishing vessels. The federal Government expects to recover $40 million through the sale of these vessels. In addition, the federal Government intends to extract $200 million from West Coast salmon fishermen over the next 10 years by imposing a landing tax which could be as high as 13.5 per cent of the landed value of the catch.

Further, it is my understanding that in the final analysis the buy-back of vessels will be paid for by Pacific Coast salmon fishermen. Over all the federal Government, through the landing tax on fishing vessels, will earn a profit of $150 million from the program over 10 years. The real beneficiaries of this program will be the banks which are being bailed out. Fishermen will pay over $200 million in landing tax costs, and many thousands of British Columbians will lose their jobs as a result of the Government's buy-back program.

It would be useful if the Minister would confirm that he is meeting with his ministerial advisory committee this week, that he is discussing the proposals for the buy-back, and that he would, unlike the fishing treaty, provide Hon. Members of the House and of the standing committee with the documents related to the proposals for a buy-back program.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRIES IN SARNIA-LAMBTON

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, as spokesman for 6,000 or more people who are directly employed by the petrochemical industries in Sarnia-Lambton, and the 12,000 who indirectly owe their livelihood to the chemical valley, I should like to say that there is a positive attitude toward the Government's attention to the hydrocarbon energy sector.

However, there exists a disparity which requires our immediate action. Our major oil-based petrochemical companies, in direct competition with the American Gulf Coast concerns, have been hit hard by the recent drop in the price of west Texas crude oil, a feedstock which compares with our Canadian light crude. This drop in the American price has altered the framework of petrochemical pricing. This has our Canadian companies operating at a distinct disadvantage. While dialogue is ongoing between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), the provinces, and the private sector, on establishing a new oil energy policy, something toward an interim arrangement for the oil dependent petrochemical industry is imperative.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

HERRING GULL EGG PROGRAM

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, last December the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) told the people of Canada, particularly people in the area of Hamilton, that she would be reinstating the Herring Gull program in view of the environmental cuts which had been made. I indicated in the House last Tuesday that the program had in fact not been reinstated and that of the original six, including two biologists and a chemist who were working on the program, only one had been reinstated with instructions simply to collect the eggs, not to do any analysis of the gull deformities which were beginning to show up in terms of the testing.

In telling Canadians that she reinstated the program following pressure from this side of the House, as well as from environmentalists across Canada, the Minister has misled them. Not only has she misled Canadians, but when I raised the issue with her almost a week ago in the House of Commons, I received from her office a form letter which was sent out to Canadians inquiring about the seagull program that dealt with the issue of seagulls and their problems with airplanes.

The Minister has shown the people of Canada, as well as the House of Commons, that she is prepared to distort the truth in her own political interests. The only solution, in view not only of her refusal to reinstate the program in full but her misleading of Canadian people, is for the Minister to resign.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, the Tories are not what they used to be!

Actually, when the Conservative Government brought in that huge increase in the price of gas with their tax last fall, not one Progressive Conservative Member rose to oppose it, indeed, not even the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce). When they were the Opposition, the Conservative Party never let a day pass without clamouring for a lowering of the gasoline tax.

Recently, the oil corporations, so close to the heart of those same Progressive Conservatives, increased their prices, and to my great surprise the Conservative Members for Duvernay and Champlain (Mr. Della Noce and Mr. Champagne), who until then had never uttered a word, opposed that new price increase.

Surely, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will call those new Members to order, because attacking the oil multinationals is tantamount to attacking the Progressive Conservative Party itself. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, in order to help the press gallery discharge their duties, would the Hon. Member for Champlain rise and make himself known to all?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CROWN CORPORATIONS

TERMS OF SALES—JOB PROTECTION INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. The President of the Canadian Development Investment Corporation is reported to have said recently, in respect of the fire sale which he has been charged with conducting on behalf of the Government of Crown corporations within his mandate, that prospective purchasers of Canadair, de Havilland, Eldorado Nuclear, and Teleglobe are not required to give job guarantees.

Obviously no instructions have been given to Mr. Marshall as to the terms of reference under which he conducts the sale. Would the Prime Minister inform the House whether or not the jobs in question, the jobs of workers of these four federal Crown corporations, are being placed in jeopardy during the course of these negotiations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I don't believe anything has been placed in jeopardy. The Minister, in co-operation with the President of the Treasury Board, has been trying to establish objective criteria which, if met, would allow the Government to consider dispossessing itself of some of the assets which it presently holds, in some cases where, for example, the Crown is in direct competition with the private sector. Because of statements my right hon. friend has made, I know he finds that concept as odious as I do. If objective criteria can be agreed upon, they will follow normally.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the big question would be whether or not employees are going to be advised of what the Government has in store for them. My question is as follows: If in the course of negotiations, the Minister should agree to release the jobs of the employees of these four companies, can the Minister at least inform these employees of what is going to happen to them?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, my right hon. colleague is right. I agree that involving the unions and individual employees is a very important consideration. Indeed, as soon as any offers are received, this will be a major factor in the Government's considerations.

I can assure the Hon. Member that as far as we, the Minister and myself, are concerned, both union and individual involvement will be respected.

[English]

CONTROL OF CANADAIR AND DE HAVILLAND

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister and the Minister could at least inform Mr. Marshall as to the terms of reference of the sale. Mr. Marshall was also quoted to have said, to use his words: "We haven't discussed the foreign ownership thing". The Prime Minister knows that Canadian control of our aerospace industry is important to the country. Could he instruct his Minister to put some limitation on the terms of sale, particularly of Canadair and de Havilland, to ensure that the control of these two companies will remain in Canada for the protection of Canadian technology, and particularly the jobs which I mentioned in the first part of my exchange with him this afternoon?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I don't think I have to instruct the Minister. He is well aware of the importance of this fact and these factors. To the extent humanly possible, as he has already indicated in the House, he will attempt to accommodate them.

ENERGY

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS ON OIL AND GAS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. The Government has bragged about creating hundreds of thousands of jobs and making the energy sector an engine of the economy. As a result of the postponement over the weekend of an agreement on natural gas until the summer, and of the postponement of an agreement with the provinces on oil for two months, I am interested in knowing whether they will result in a postponement of the spring Budget beyond the April date, or whether the Government will go ahead with the Budget without having an energy agreement with the provinces, as it did in 1979.

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are hopeful of getting that kind of arrangement. I know my hon. friend will be pleased with the progress pursuant to meetings held on Sunday with the western producing provinces by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The signals that came out indicate that substantial progress is being made on a very complex and difficult dossier. Hopefully when the Minister returns to the House she will be able to fill the Hon. Member in on more of the details. I am satisfied that we are working toward an effective resolution of a difficult issue. I think that is good for western Canada and for all Canadians.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S SHARE OF REVENUES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister talked about an engine of growth. We thought in this spirit of Tory sweetness and light between the federal and provincial Governments that we would have had an agreement much sooner. How many postponements will there be until this energy engine of growth gets started? In the agreement that is being negotiated with the provinces, will the same proportion of about 17 per cent of the petroleum revenues which the Government got in 1984 be maintained, or will the federal Government's share be reduced in order to provide more incentive and create the hundreds of thousands of jobs which the Minister has bragged she will create in the energy sector? Will the Government be reducing that proportion of revenues below what the federal Government received in 1984?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister has been doing any bragging. She has been going about her challenging job and working very hard at it. I think she is meeting some strong indications of success both on the East Coast with Newfoundland and Labrador, and in western Canada. The object of the exercise is to pick up the private sector and the energy sector in western Canada which was left crippled, wounded, and bleeding to death by the Liberals. That is exactly what we are trying to do.

EMPLOYMENT

STUDENT SUMMER JOBS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who, for weeks, has been promising a vastly improved program for summer employment for young people to replace Canada Works. I have a document which describes a program called SELF, which is ideologically appropriate, to which the Minister has agreed. Does she deny that this program will create fewer jobs and involve less funds for student employment this summer than was supplied by Canada Works last summer?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I told the House last week, and I do not think the Hon. Member was present at the time, that I would be in a position to announce new summer programs within a two week period. I can assure him that that will be done.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Employment and Immigration deny that a document has been agreed to, that instead of allocating $200 million, $140 million will be allocated which will provide 65,000 rather than 85,000 jobs, as were supplied last year by Summer Canada Works?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that when programs are agreed to and announced, he will see that this Government has the concerns of young people at heart.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT CONSULTATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister avoided answering my question. Perhaps she will answer this direct question. It is a matter of great interest to the students of this country. Does she deny that she refused to meet with the largest student and youth organization in the country before looking at this program and agreeing to it?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, one thing that has characterized what the Government has been doing is its willingness to meet the people all across the country to determine what programs should be developed. I know that we have been under criticism from members of the opposition Parties for our willingness to consult, but that is the way that this Government will proceed. I believe the Canadian people will be satisfied as a result of that.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

FUTURE ROLE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last Friday in this House the Minister of National Defence was quite adamant that there are absolutely no negotiations going on with the United States concerning anything to do with a new air defence system in North America and that all we are talking about, purely and simply, are radar systems. Over the weekend the Minister indicated the need for new consultations. Perhaps he can be more forthcoming with this House and explain to us the contradictions to the statement of the Minister of National Defence and the statement of U.S. Secretary of Defense, Caspar Weinberger, who said that with the development of a new star wars system there will have to be a new North American defence system which could cost $50 billion a year.

Can the Minister also explain why he is contradicted by the major change going on in the role that NORAD is playing, so that NORAD is now becoming the source and responsibility for the antitracking satellite and the aerospace warfare system? Surely the Minister can explain why those changes are going on and why they are not being shared with the Canadian public. Will he also tell us why we would go ahead and sign an agreement with the Americans before we have an opportunity to debate it in this House?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are no contradictions to explain except perhaps those that are entirely internal to the Hon. Member. If he has a question, let him put it.

CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I did not believe that this Minister could be even more evasive than the Minister of National Defence. My questions are the following. The United States is planning major changes in the North American defence system. Are we discussing those changes with the United States? Is the Government prepared to share those changes with a parliamentary committee so that we may know what the changes are? Also, will he refuse to sign any agreement with the United States until the Canadian public and this Parliament have had an opportunity to know what those changes are, and to discuss and debate whether they are in the best interests of Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I guess it is sometimes important in this House of Commons to call the bluff of Hon. Members opposite. Let me make the point and remind the Hon. Member of some recent history. The question of the adequacy of the Pine Tree, DEW Line, and other radar warning systems in the north has been under discussion between Canada and the United States since at least the mid-1970s. The Hon. Member was a Minister of the Government of Canada during part of that time. He should not pretend that there is something new or surprising that is happening. What may be new and would not be surprising is that these discussions may now lead to some agreement that would be in the interests of Canada, in the interests of the United States, and in the interests of our common defence.

EMPLOYMENT

STUDENT SUMMER JOBS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. A few minutes ago my colleague from Windsor-Walkerville revealed the Government's Summer Canada student employment program. He asked the Minister whether the students were being put on ice with the incentives to career employment program and $140 million rather than the $200 million provided last year, and whether that will result in a reduction to 65,000 jobs. Is the Minister saying that my colleague is wrong, or is she simply refusing to come clean and answer the question?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville asked me about consultations. I can advise both Members that we have indeed carried out a considerable number of consultations and have had the benefit, I may tell the Hon. Member, of receiving proposals from a great many people, not only from individuals and organizations, but from other Departments of Government. They will result in the decisions that we finally announce.

• (1430)

PROGRAM FUNDING

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Could the Minister answer the question? Will the funding for the program be reduced from $200 million to $140 million—yes or no?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the decision as to what will happen with the Summer Canada program will be announced in due course. I advise the Hon. Member—

Mr. Rodriguez: But it's here!

Miss MacDonald: Rather than expiring in frustration at the moment, I would advise him to await the announcement.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES MONITORING PROGRAM

Hon. Chas L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Last December in a press release, the Minister announced that the detection and monitoring of toxic substances in the Great Lakes, an issue which could affect the health of millions of Canadians, would be maintained. Today we learn from the newspapers that the work that has so far been done by six people will be carried out by only one scientist. How does the Minister find the audacity to claim that this program has been reinstated when only one out of six scientists in charge of the program will now carry out this very important initiative?

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have said it before, and I say it again, that all research connected with monitoring the water quality of the Great Lakes will continue, and I am thinking more specifically of the work done by the National Water Research Institute in Burlington. All necessary research will continue to be done at this center, including, if necessary, the research on gull eggs samples of which are still being collected.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder who the Minister is trying to fool. It is simply common sense to realize that when the manpower of a program is reduced from six to one, the substance of the program is endangered. Again, I would ask the Minister how she can claim that she is reinstating this program that was implemented for the sake of the health of millions of Canadians and Americans who live around the Great Lakes, if only one person is expected to do the job of six?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think our procedures are more effective than those of the previous Government.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

NEWS REPORTS OF POSSIBLE INSTALLATIONS IN CANADIAN ARCTIC

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I believe the Minister knows that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the Department of National Defence are presently negotiating with the Reagan administration to install 39 new technology nuclear reactors in the Canadian Arctic for the operation of the northern warning system. Is the Minister aware that the Circumpolar Inuit Conference is on record as opposing the introduction of any of these nuclear technologies into the Arctic and, if so, does he intend to solicit or take into account its views in this matter?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should first clarify, to correct misleading news reports of this morning, that very tentative discussions between AECL and the United States Department of Energy are occurring now. These discussions are very much at the exploratory stage and are aimed at looking at the possibility of joint development of a nuclear power source for a range of needs. That is all that is being discussed. It is a highly technical discussion and one that is not likely to yield any results for a long time.

The Hon. Member's question dealt with consultation. I was not aware of that particular resolution. I give the Hon. Member my commitment that there will be consultation with that group before matters reach a point of decision.

ARCTIC NUCLEAR FREE ZONE PROPOSAL

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, this morning I had discussions with the President of AECL, Mr. Donnelly, and he confirms that the technical discussions are somewhat further evolved than the Minister might be aware, and in fact he thinks that the technology could be introduced by 1988. My supplementary question refers back to the Circumpolar Inuit Conference which is presently lobbying the United Nations to try to declare the Arctic around the world a nuclear technology free zone. Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Government support keeping the Canadian High Arctic nuclear free?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, just for the sake of the record I would like to make it clear that any discussions that are going on now between AECL and the U.S. Department of Defense have nothing to do with the modernization of the northern radar warning system, if I may refer to the question of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry. With regard to the Hon. Member's specific question, I think that the best, most honest, and most forthcoming answer I can give is to say that I will familiarize myself with the representations that have been made by that council and then come to a determination as to the implication on policy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Winegard: Is this true?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I await with some anticipation the second question. The answer to the first question is yes, that is true, and discussions will be proceeding between the Department and the universities to see exactly how that will impact against them.

MEETING OF NOVA SCOTIA COALITION ON FEDERAL CULTURAL POLICY

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, in Halifax yesterday, I had the honour of attending a gathering of over 1,000 highly concerned Canadians attending the Nova Scotia Coalition on Federal Cultural Policy. The Minister of Communications did not attend and therefore missed a golden opportunity to hear directly from writers, film makers, and musicians from the culturally rich Atlantic region. All those present are very concerned about the cuts announced.

My question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Can the Minister tell the House why he has rejected the commitments which were announced by his Party during the election campaign and which can be found in the September-October 1984 issue of the arts conference bulletin?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I would have been pleased indeed to attend the weekend meeting in Halifax, but earlier commitments in my electoral riding prevented me from going to that meeting. The next time I meet with my provincial colleague, the Minister of Cultural Affairs of Nova Scotia, I will have an opportunity to meet with the representatives of the group involved and to discuss those questions.

Second, the Government did not repudiate its election commitments. On the contrary, the moment the new government team took over, particularly through closer cooperation with the provinces and through sounder interdepartmental sharing of Canada's cultural funds, we can assure the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis that the Government will honour most of the election commitments made to the Canadian people.

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO PROVIDE JOBS

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister tell the House what he intends to do to find jobs for those thousands of people who have been or will be laid off as a result of those cutbacks made without consultation, as promised during the last election campaign?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had not written down his supplementary question in advance, he might have paid more attention to my reply.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Masse: In my explanation, Mr. Speaker, I said that the government, anxious to earmark additional funds for our cultural industries in general and the art world in particular, is in consultation with the provinces and government departments as a whole with a view to increasing those budgets through better coordination. In addition, the economic measures implemented by the Minister of Finance will enable us to improve Canada's economic situation. The budgets of the Government as a whole will be larger and, in that sense, we will live up to our commitments.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Does the Minister deny that the Director of Summer Canada, having sent out a document to the various managers and territorial directors, has indicated that the Minister has seen and approved the Summer Experience and Learning Fund program and that that program will result in a net reduction of funds available for summer programs directly from the Government, and in the reduction of the number of summer jobs for students?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do deny that.

DEPARTMENTAL MEMORANDUM

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister to check the files of Employment and Immigration Canada and read the memo dated January 9, which indicates that she has seen and agreed to one of the papers which is entitled Summer Experience and Learning Fund which will dramatically reduce the number of jobs that will be made available this summer through direct government funding to students in Canada?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of proposals made to the Government by a variety of individuals, organizations, and Departments. I can assure the Hon. member that no amount of loud speaking, yelling, or expressing his exasperation about this matter will make that decision come one minute sooner.

DISASTERS

DESTRUCTION BY FIRE OF FISH PLANT AT GLACE BAY, N.S.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister will know, there has been another tragic fire in Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, which has added another 350 people to the 1,200 people who lost their jobs less than a year ago in a fire at No. 26 Colliery. What is the Government going to do to create jobs for the unemployed miners and the people at the Highland Fisheries in Glace Bay? What will the Government do to rebuild the economic base of this town?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the community of Glace Bay has suffered a series of devastating blows to its economy, the latest being the fire which destroyed the fish plant over the weekend. I would advise the Hon. Member, and indeed the House, that I have spoken with Mayor Clark of Glace Bay this morning and assured him of the federal Government's willingness to be of whatever assistance possible. For instance, we have intimated to the Mayor and to the people of Glace Bay, should it be decided that the fish plant will be rebuilt, that the federal Government could provide assistance. There are other proposals which are being put forward by the Community Economic Council that are being considered at the present time.

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, who is meeting with town officials today, I would ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who is also from Cape Breton and knows the situation, please not to underestimate the crisis which exists. When will the Government come forward with a pre-retirement leave for older miners, and when it will come forward with a plan for the development of new coal resources in the town of Glace Bay?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is because I am originally from Cape Breton that I do not underestimate the difficulties which the community of Glace Bay is going through at the present time. I want to assure the Hon. Member that the Government is looking, from the point of view of regional economic expansion and from the point of view of other ministries, into all possible solutions which may by arrived at to assist that community.

HOG STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. On January 16 of this year the Minister wrote to me stating that the issue surrounding hog stabilization payments had been reviewed by him and that he was prepared to continue the 1983-84 policy which was established by the Liberals. Given the Government's acceptance of the Liberal way of doing things, how was it possible for the Conservative Lieutenant in Quebec, who is the current Minister of Public Works, to promise Quebec hog producers $13 million in stabilization payments?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member really understood the very serious situation in the hog industry, and particularly the investigation which is presently in progress with reference to Canadian hogs moving into the U.S., he would realize that it is a very inappropriate time to raise a question on stabilization.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN STATEMENT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Since it is clearly not the intention or policy of his Party to make the payments which were promised by his deputy in Quebec, the current Minister of Public Works, will he have that Minister issue an apology to the Quebec farmers for having so deliberately misled them during the federal election campaign?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have heard many comments which have been made, but I have not had an opportunity to examine the remarks of my colleague, the Minister of Public Works, on that issue.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

REQUEST FOR EARLY PAY-OUT TO FARMERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question deals with the Western Grain Stabilization Fund and I would like to direct it to the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the serious difficulties in which western farmers find themselves, and since it is obvious that there will be a pay-out under the fund this coming year, is it the intention of the Minister to introduce enabling legislation in order that an early pay-out can be made to western producers?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Certainly there is a very serious cash situation on the Prairies, particularly in the area which he represents, and that of the southern Prairies. We intend to introduce legislation very shortly which will amend the Act to allow for an interim payment. Might I also say that I appreciate the co-operation which has been indicated to me from both opposition Parties, that when the amendment is brought forward it will receive swift passage so that there will be an interim payment in producers' hands prior to spring seeding.

QUEBEC PORK PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the "sub-minister" of Agriculture.

On August 22, 1984, his colleague for Joliette made a formal commitment on behalf of his Party. He went as far as signing a token cheque for $13 million in favour of Quebec's pork producers, members of the Federation.

Is the Minister suggesting in his last answer that the commitment and the signature given by his colleague for Joliette no longer hold, and that he now intends to dump the latter's promise and signature given to Quebec's pork producers?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I must caution my hon. colleagues opposite of the danger in carrying out a discussion of this kind which makes reference to the negotiations that are ongoing between the U.S. and Canada, particularly on that issue.

I have been in the Province of Quebec, and on many occasions I have spoken with hog producers and the UPA. Indeed, those discussions are continuing. I was not there when an alleged symbolic cheque was presented. As I have indicated, I have held many conversations with many people in Quebec, and indeed with people in the industry. I cannot respond directly as to whether my hon. colleague responded in any way, shape, or form.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. On August 22, the Hon. Member for Joliette assured the producers in attendance that he had his Leader's support in doing that. Does the Prime Minister intend to endorse the rubber cheque made by his colleague for Joliette, or simply dump that commitment also?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this much I can say: in the area of unfulfilled promises, Quebecers will recognize the Liberals as the greatest all-time experts. It is because of the Liberal Party's broken promises that we are in the process of solving, thanks to UPA's help and the usual straightforward statements of my friend for Joliette, that we are in the process of slowly arriving at a solution in favour of Quebec's pork producers, rather than against them as has been the case under the Liberal Party.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ACTIVITIES OF CHEQUE CASHING COMPANIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He will know that there has been a dramatic increase in the activities of cheque cashing companies. Just before Christmas one of the companies in Winnipeg, Money Mart, was cashing post-dated welfare cheques and charging up to 21 per cent interest. Can the Minister tell the House whether the Government is investigating this type of activity, since the rake-off which is charged amounts to an annual interest rate of more than 2,500 per cent and it is a criminal offence to charge more than 60 per cent?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reassure the Hon. Member and say that we are closely monitoring the situation. There is no law forbidding such uses and we shall bring in appropriate solutions in due time.

And if the laws are not meeting the problems, will he consider whether the laws need to be revised and tightened?

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

COST OF DELIVERING ECONOMIC STATEMENT TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Finance. It concerns certain trips made by his six colleagues on board the sacred instruments of travel.

[Translation]

Can the Right Hon. Prime Minister tell the House the reason why he and his colleague, the Minister of Finance, sent six back-benchers of his party, I could call them postmen, to deliver some parcels to the ten Premiers, at a cost of $23,850, when these same parcels could have been delivered by Air Express at a cost of $105, which would have saved the Canadian taxpayers over $23,000?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we thought it was making good use of a government plane if the Premiers could have in their hands some important material which might have an impact on their province, at the very moment when the Minister of Finance was about to rise in this House to read a national document of great importance.

I can tell you that we are very cautious in this regard. However, I think that even if we tried we could never beat the record set by the Liberal Government, which used government planes as mere taxis.

TRANSMITTAL OF DOCUMENTS BY MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister in his reply stated that he wanted the provincial Premiers, of course, to have knowledge of these documents at the same time as the House of Commons. Can the Prime Minister then inform this House why it is that the six back-benchers of his Party, two of whom are not Parliamentary Secretaries, had these documents well ahead of this House? It is not an insult to this House that budgetary documents and motions affecting Ways and Means of this House were in fact given to people without them having sworn the traditional oath of secrecy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that the documents were sealed, just like the Hon. Member's mind.

ENERGY

OIL INDUSTRY PROFIT LEVELS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister and I am sure he will open up his mind in answering it. The Prime Minister must know that two of his own Conservative Members of Parliament have now said, with some courage, that his Government is acting like it is in the pockets of the oil industry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Who said?

Mr. Waddell: They said. I ask the Prime Minister if he is aware that the Government's own petroleum monitoring agency has said that the profits of the oil industry are up 40 per cent for the first six months of 1984, and in fact, the industry is back to the levels of 1979. If the Prime Minister is aware of that, why, then, does he propose to give the industry more money at the expense of the Canadian consumer?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think we are all aware of the fact that, given the alliance between the NDP and the Liberals, the oil and gas sector in this country was crippled for five years. We are trying to introduce policies and new attitudes in co-operation with the producing provinces which will permit the creation of a climate where that vital energy sector can flourish as an instrument of economic growth and national unity, and create jobs for all Canadians. That is what we are trying to do.

PETROLEUM COMPENSATION ACCOUNT DEFICIT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I know the Prime Minister travels in a limousine and he does not have to fill it up with gas, but maybe he should think about that before he gives us that stuff.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Look who is full of gas.

Mr. Waddell: Would the Prime Minister be prepared, given his great rhetoric on behalf of the industry, to give the Canadian consumer this one thing, for example, a commitment that he will not make the Canadian consumer at the pump pay for the $1 billion deficit which there is now in the petroleum compensation fund? Will he be prepared to give the House that commitment and follow the line which is quite properly taken, I think, by two of his Quebec members?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the Hon. Member is right. I do have a limousine. It is not as new as the limousine of the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: That's not fair, you know.

Mr. Mulroney: I can tell my hon. friend, as he knows, with regard to that charge and that account, we were left with a terrible financial burden because of the inaction of the previous Government which refused to take steps which ought to have been taken prior to the election, and this anomaly, which costs a lot of money, must be corrected. This is what we are trying to do in a spirit of fairness, recognizing at all times the importance of the consumer in this equation. We are trying to be fair.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is once again directed to the Minister of Environment.

The Minister will not tell the truth to the Canadian people and to the House of Commons and utter confusion prevails.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Environment has just stated to our Environment critic that the program implemented with the Canada Centre for Inland Waters will carry on with the collection of gull eggs. We know quite well... Can she confirm that two technicians, a chemist and two biologists are no longer working on the program due to her budgetary cuts?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in the first place, with respect to that study on gull eggs, several series of data have been compiled, and we will now continue to monitor the presence of various substances in gull eggs. That is all that can be said. If my colleague does not understand, I do not know how I could express my position in a different way.

And will they require the freight cars on such trains to be clearly identified when they are carrying such dangerous goods?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the regulations as announced will not apply to the regulation of speed. That is a matter which is regulated by the Canadian Transport Commission. [Text]

TAX EXPENDITURE ACCOUNT

Question No. 65—Mr. Nunziata:

1. Will the Department of Finance reintroduce the tax expenditure account to enable the public to determine how much of the benefit of a particular tax break went to individuals and to corporations and, if not, for what reason?

2. Will the Department of Revenue release the names of all the corporations receiving over $25,000 in tax breaks and incentives and the amounts involved?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): I am informed by the Departments of Finance and National Revenue as follows:

1. The first Government of Canada Tax Expenditure Account was released in 1979 under the Conservative Government. An update was provided in 1980. A new tax expenditure account is presently under development and analysis. It is important that the account accurately reflect benefits provided by the tax system, and so a number of issues are being reviewed. It is hoped that the Tax Expenditure Account will be completed and released in the near future.

2. No. Section 241 of the Income Tax Act prohibits communication of this information.

REDUCTION IN EXPENDITURES—FORESTRY

Question No. 156—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the Department of Forestry cut any projects in its science and technology programs in order to absorb the reduction in its expenditures required by the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance in the House on November 8, 1984 and, if so, what are they and what are the projected costs?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): No.

SECURITY AND INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

Question No. 190—Mr. Stackhouse:

What is the percentage of female employees in the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service and what percentage are employed in middle and upper management?

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and on the motion of Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg) (p. 1708).

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I find it regrettable that we should start this week in Parliament with a motion of closure for a debate as important as Bill C-15, legislation that may affect the very existence of a number of small Canadian businesses.

Mr. Speaker, opinion polls have indicated that 70 per cent of Canadians believe that our economic potential is severely threatened by this kind of foreign control.

After a consensus was reached on the need for ensuring that foreign investment would have a positive impact on the Canadian economy, the Liberal Government at the time created FIRA in the early seventies. As the Gray Report mentioned in 1972, when considering foreign investment one should bear in mind three potential dangers. First, distortion of the international market as a result of other governments intervening to serve their own interests. Second, the fact that multinational corporations are liable to ignore local interests and decide on the location of functions such as research and development and advanced processing without considering national economic objectives. Third, Mr. Speaker, the existence of a few international corporations that largely dominate certain sectors and do not react to market forces in the same way as much smaller businesses.

Investment Canada will have only 75 days to approve investment requests submitted for analysis. After 75 days approval is automatic. The Canadian Government is either being incredibly naive or has some perverse desire to sabotage its own program. Anyone who is remotly familiar with the ramifications of multinationals knows that it is impossible to finalize, with in so short a time, the kind of analysis required to approve an investment project. This Government wants to make Investment Canada a paper tiger with no efficiency whatsoever.

Another point is that where up to now, persons applying for foreign investment had to prove that the investment would be of significant benefit to Canada, from now on they merely have to prove that the investment will result in a net benefit. The Canadian Government is putting the financial wellbeing of thousands of small Canadian businesses in jeopardy. This policy of the Progressive Conservatives will considerably diminish the Government's ability to ensure that foreign investment is of benefit not only to the investors but also to the Canadian economy. Foreign investors tend to invest mainly in the small- and medium-sized business sector. In 1980, 40 per cent of investments went to the manufacturing sector, 12.7 per cent to the financial sector and 7.6 per cent to the retail industry. Investors are of course mainly interested in the most profitable sectors and those that rely on advanced technology. Does "Canada is open for business" mean to the Progressive Conservative Party that—

[English]

Our industries have to close their door to any hope of development?

[Translation]

Does that slogan mean: For the sake of a few tax dollars, let us stamp out the future of our small businesses, let us destroy the growth potential of our international markets, and let us set up a colonial system?

An area like that of high technology, generally consisting of small companies, could soon wind up in foreign hands. With the multinational corporations' policy of restricted mandates, our industries would be totally paralyzed with respect to advanced technology development. What would prevent a foreign corporation first from taking over a Canadian competitor, then from striking off its research and development budget, and restricting its export potential to promote the sale of the parent company's products on the international market?

The Progressive Conservative Government knows very well, Mr. Speaker, that the policy of restricted mandates is widespread and always kept secret by the corporation. Small and medium-sized businesses are the spearheads of our Canadian economy. They have generated 70 percent of all new private sector jobs during the last decade. The Progressive Conservative Government, which has always boasted about being the advocate of free enterprise, will in fact surrender our small businesses to investors whose prime interest often will be to prevent them from competing with the parent company's products.

Mr. Speaker, this House should take the time needed to debate this foreign investment issue, because the future of our small businesses, which are responsible for creating most jobs, could be endangered. They could fall into the hands of foreign investors.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for recognizing me. I am sorry you were not in the chair when I was wearing my kilt on Robbie Burns day. I know you would have had some brief comment on that. Perhaps it is better that you were not in the chair, now that I think about it.

I would like to speak on this motion. I have spoken on the previous amendment to this Bill and I would draw Your Honour's attention to the speech I made at that time. I would like to add a few things today. I understand that we are debating a motion of closure. Isn't it amazing, Mr. Speaker, how soon this Conservative Government has fallen into the pattern of the previous Liberal Government? This is an important matter which deals with the future of Canada, investment in Canada, the economic policy of Canada, and maybe even the independence of Canada. Yet we find that the Government wants to close off debate on this issue very quickly.

I can remember the days when the Conservatives on this side of the House stood up, one after the other, and spoke against closure. Right away we have a closure motion. There is an expression, "Plus ça change, plus c'est pareil". It means the more things change the more they stay the same. The same words were used in a letter by one of the Conservative Members complaining to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) about the Conservatives being in the lap of the oil industry and not having much of a policy for the consumer. He used those same words, as I do in this particular debate.

In my previous speech on this matter I pointed out that we should not be afraid of FIRA. All FIRA did was to apply a number of tests. Did this foreign investment mean that there were going to be Canadian jobs? Did it mean that the company was going to invest and buy in Canada? Did it mean that the company was going to do its research in Canada? Did it mean that there would be adequate opportunities for jobs for Canadians? It was in fact very practical legislation. If I do have any criticism of FIRA, it would be that it could have been administered better. The proceedings could have taken place more quickly for the businesses involved. However, you do not throw the baby out with the bath water; you reform FIRA. Instead we have Investment Canada.

In the very effective speech of the Member who spoke just before me, he said that Canada was open for business now under this new test. What does that mean? When Canada was open for business in the past our oil industry was suddenly taken over and controlled by foreigners. These foreign-controlled companies tended to do their research and development in their home country, mainly the United States. The dividends went out of our country and back to the parent country. Materials were bought from parent companies in another country. Canadians lost in research and development, in money flowing out of the country, and in jobs. We created a branch plant economy.

I grew up in Etobicoke, which I do not admit very often since I represent a riding in Vancouver. However, the truth is that I grew up in Etobicoke. I remember that the branch plant economy brought us prosperity for a number of years. However, there were problems with that kind of economy and when the recession came we began to suffer more than the United States. In times of financial difficulty the branch plants' production would simply go back to their head offices and the head offices would do all of the business rather than the branch plants.

I see a Member from Toronto on the other side who is one of the more attentive Members of the House. I know that he would be interested in this. The key debate in this country, other than on universality which is going on behind the scenes, will be on free trade in the future. The worst of all possible worlds that we could have in Canada is to have free trade with a branch plant economy. We could be in real trouble as an independent country.

That is why I object to this Investment Canada Bill. I believe it indicates that we have given up the attempt to have an independent Canadian industry. The New Democratic Party will not give that up in Canada. In the last few years the oil industry has moved from being 28 per cent Canadian controlled to being 40 per cent Canadian controlled. That is the type of thing we like to see. It does not have to be all public. It can be a mixture of public and private. That is the way we are doing things in Canada these days. We should not give up that thrust because it is the key to an independent country.

I would like to discuss an issue about which people probably do not know much. It has to do with the oil industry. Chevron or Standard Oil of California took over Gulf in the United States. There are companies in Canada called Gulf Canada and Chevron Canada. In fact, Chevron owns Gulf. Under the old legislation, which I believe still applies, Chevron will have to apply to FIRA, as I believe it has, to deal with the situation in Canada since there has been a takeover in the United States. I predict that we may see a reverse takeover. We may see Gulf taking over Chevron.

This is a very strange situation but it gives us a great opportunity. We should use the opportunity, as should the Government, to encourage Canadian individuals, co-operatives or governments to buy Gulf. In this way we could get much more Canadianization. However, the trend is all the other way. This is an opportunity to get Canadian entrepreneurs or the public sector to take over Gulf because of what has happened as a result of takeovers in the United States. Takeovers in the United States affect Canada. Remember that Gulf is involved in Hibernia on the East Coast, in the Beaufort Sea in the north, and vast land tracts and service stations throughout Canada. These issues have not been debated in Canada but should be.

When FIRA was set up its purpose was not to say no to foreign capital but to screen it and make it work for Canadians. Every country does that. It is not as though Canada is the odd person out. They have FIRA in the United States but they call it the American Congress. Takeovers in the United States are investigated by the American Congress, as are changes in taxation laws and so on. Right now in the American Congress a congressional committee is investigating the fact that Canadians own over 6 per cent of the natural gas industry. The Americans are concerned about that for the same reasons that we were concerned when we set up FIRA. They want to ensure that American interests are protected. When Norway or Germany consider these matters it is to ensure that their own interests are protected.

We have an open world. I am a westerner now and I have the religion. I believe in open trade. We need open trade and investment. We are going to get a lot of investment from South East Asia. It is already coming into my province of British Columbia. We must ensure that that investment is used for jobs for Canadians. It must not just come in, take over things and repatriate profits. It must not be allowed to do all its research and development and buying elsewhere. That will not develop our country or reduce our persistently high level of unemployment.

I am a Scot who came over to Canada at the age of five. That is the same age Sir John A. Macdonald was when he came over. I have always been a great fan of Sir John A. Macdonald. I think Sir John A. Macdonald would not think very much of this legislation. The more traditional Conservative policy was to try to develop an independent Canada in which we would rely on each other, our home investment and home markets, as much as possible. While it over-simplifies the situation somewhat, it would have been Sir John A. Macdonald's position.

Bill C-15 is a departure from the traditional Conservative policy. I have real fears that the passage of this Bill will jeopardize the future independence of our country. We will be a branch plant economy controlled by outsiders and we will have even less control over our economy than we have now.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, let me say that I consider this policy issue contained in Bill C-15 to be much too important to have closure imposed upon it so soon. The debate surrounding Bill C-15 is not whether there should or should not be a review process or whether there should be a means or method of reviewing foreign investment. The question is, will the remaining process after Bill C-15 goes into effect continue to be effective and be at all adequate in serving the national interest?

In introducing this Bill, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) said that we will retain a review process and a review of foreign investment. Strangely enough, he went on to say that by exempting new business and limiting review to larger acquisitions only, we will reduce by 90 per cent the number of transactions now subject to review. The Minister then argues that we must have a review mechanism and proceeds significantly to reduce even the little effectiveness which FIRA had.

In 1973 when the FIRA legislation was being debated in the House, I described it as being a cautious Bill. I looked back to those debates and I noticed that the Hon. Member for York-Simcoe at that time, the present Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, followed me in debate and agreed with me that it was indeed cautious. Everyone knows that FIRA rarely blocked any investment. In fact, between 1974 when the Bill came into effect and 1984, 92 per cent of all cases which needed a decision were allowed. We can conclude very quickly that foreign investors had nothing to fear from FIRA.

Why, then, did foreign investors object to FIRA? Why did they put pressure on the Conservative Party to do away with FIRA if they formed the Government? I think it is very simple. Foreign investors can sometimes be even more secretive than governments. A review process helps us know what foreign investors are doing and what they will do with the money they bring into Canada. Now, 90 per cent of all of the screening of FIRA will be eliminated by Bill C-15. More often than not, foreign investment means quite simply foreign ownership and control.

When the FIRA legislation was introduced in the late 1970's, Canadians knew that foreign ownership and control had a significant impact in all areas of our life, politically, economically and culturally. Much of that impact is negative.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recently said that under this legislation Canada is now open for business again. That called for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) to say, quite correctly, that we have always been open for business. Everyone knows that we have always been open for business. The real question is whether we are now going to be up for sale.

Let me refer Hon. Members to a very important report that was produced by the External Affairs Committee during that same period just prior to the FIRA legislation. It is known as the Wahn report named after Mr. Ian Wahn, who was a Member at that time. That report clearly pointed out a main thesis, that if we get ourselves into a position of economic dependency we lose our freedom to decide on political questions in our interest. That is what worries me so much about unlimited, uncontrolled and unreviewed foreign investment such as we will have with Bill C-15.

Mr. Dick: That is not true.

Mr. Penner: It is true and I will demonstrate why it is true. When we speak of foreign investment, we talk about foreign ownership and control. That must concern us.

We are not talking about the importation of capital. We are not talking about floating bond issues outside the country. That never was a matter of concern to FIRA and it is not a matter of concern now. We are talking about ownership and control of industries, resources and businesses in Canada. The existence of a foreign investment review business in this country simply means that we can weigh the negative and positive impacts against the national interest. The national interest includes jobs. Will there be jobs? Will there be new technology? Will some of the disadvantaged regions of this country experience more rapid development? I urge Members on the Government side carefully to consider the argument that the review process should not be weakened at this time in our history. This is the time to strengthen it.

Let us consider what is taking place in Australia. The Austrialians welcome foreign investment just as we do. However, they have a policy which seeks to ensure that there is Australian participation and control in industries and resources to an appropriate extent in each particular case. That is the function of their review process.

Bill C-15 goes in the opposite direction. It means, in answer to my hon. friend opposite, that the Canadian interest can be totally disregarded in 90 per cent of all cases. That is what the legislation says. If the Hon. Member can argue contrary to that, I am prepared to sit down and listen to those arguments. This is not a valid, enlightened or acceptable public policy position. Bill C-15 takes a modest, non-threatening review process and replaces it with a carte blanche. In 1977 and 1982 the Liberal Government made some moves to reduce the power of FIRA. Investment ceilings were raised so that there could be a shorter procedure rather than going through the full review process. I would have argued against that had I been in the Government, but the times seemed to dictate that that was the way we should proceed.

It is important to remember that the review process remained intact. I am not concerned about the Government changing the name. It can call it Investment Canada rather than FIRA; that is not relevant. However, there must be a mechanism in place by which we can review foreign investment. It is irresponsible not to have such a mechanism.

The Minister's statement on Bill C-15 is terribly misleading. He said: "We believe that Canada requires a means to safeguard its national interests". He goes on to say that there must be a review process and then, in another statement in the same document, he says that they will exempt new investment and anything except large acquisitions. This means that 90 per cent of foreign investment will not be reviewed at all. It means that the Government is doing away with the review process, so there is a clear contradiction in the Minister's own statement. He cannot have it both ways.

The doors of Canada are being thrown wide open. My concern is that we will not get the benefit that we expect. I do not believe that we will get the jobs and the new technologies that are referred to in the Minister's statement. We will not get the regional economic expansion and development. What will be the Government's next step when it comes to realize that? What further steps will it take to entice the flow of foreign investment into this country for more ownership and control? In the 1970s Canadians were deeply concerned about this question. At that time the Gallup polls indicated that there was concern about foreign economic domination of Canada. They said that the Government had done too little before the FIRA legislation was brought in and that more action was required. FIRA was part of that response, and I want to tell the House that it has worked. The percentage of foreign ownership in Canada has been reduced significantly.

• (1530)

Today the concern about foreign ownership and control is blunted. It is less of a concern to Canadians because their preoccupation, quite rightly so, is with high rates of unemployment. Surely the Government is not saying to Canadians today that Bill C-15 is their answer to the problem of unemployment. If so, they will be sadly disappointed. Bill C-15 will not create jobs. As 90 per cent of all foreign investment will not be reviewed, Canadians will be in the dark about whether the national interest will be served as a result of such investment, or whether there will be benefits to our country. When the dawn breaks we may realize that the price we paid has been too high and our independence may have been reduced to puppetry.

Economic nationalism does not mean being insular or defensive; it means taking positive steps to strengthen Canada's position at home and abroad. A foreign investment review process does that, but Bill C-15 does not. In its wild charge in its effort to shoot down Liberal policies of the past, I am afraid the Government is shooting itself in the foot.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, this is a sad day for the Canadian nation. Today the House of Commons debates, under the compulsion of not being able to place any more amendments on the resolution before it, a Bill in which the principles of building up the country so that it will be under our own control, as my colleagues in both caucuses have said, are being sacrificed. Indeed, this is a sad day for the Conservative Party. Over many years that Party, more often than not, has had a sense of national development. As the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) pointed out so well, under its first Leader under Confederation it worked toward national development with a variety of national policies. Much more recently and under the leadership of the late Right Hon. Member for Prince Albert, it attempted to develop policies of national development which gave nothing to the desire of others, whether they be in the United States or in Great Britain, to control the economic development of this country. Having introduced that heritage in our midst, I wonder how the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) feels as the House of Commons debates these measures.

The sense of a development of our resources and our economy in the interests of Canadians and the sense of a process which will be under the control of Canadian people have been abandoned. Instead we have a Party which is clearly dominated by the principles of neo-classic economics that were powerful in the post-war era, principles which in earlier years its members had the good sense to criticize, if not to reject. Those principles are now triumphant. In the Party which governs this country now, we have a Party of neo-colonialism. As is well understood in many parts of the world, it is a Party which does not think the economy, resources and opportunities of this country can be developed by Canadians in the interests of Canadians. Rather, it is a Party which thinks that this has to be done by others, and that it is all important to obtain, somehow or other, the capital which will make it possible for some people to find employment in the country. Given that conviction, it thinks that the only possibility of greater prosperity is to turn its back on the traditions of the past and throw the door wide open to capitalists from wherever to let them do what they will in this country. That kind of neo-classic economic thinking for many years has been regarded as being powerful in the Liberal Party. Today, incredibly, it is the policy of the Conservative Party of Canada.

Former colleagues of mine in the academic community have devoted a good deal of attention to the question of where these ideas were stronger. Given the inspiration of the late Professor Donald Creighton, those ideas were strong in the Liberal Party, and the Liberal Party sold out the country. The curious point about that notion as it was being developed in the seventies, according to the writings of John Hutcheson, was that the Liberal Party was moving very slowly and tentatively from one study and one report to another study and another report. Eventually it was recognized, albeit with the help of the New Democratic Party during those minority government days from 1972 to 1974, that some sort of control on foreign investment was essential. In those days the Liberal Government established the Foreign Review Investment Agency.

If one wondered whether by their actions they were belying the reputation which others had assigned to them, that it was the Conservative Party which actually deserved to be seen as the Party of international liberalism without any regard for national development being in our own hands, these days it becomes clear, as the Liberals stand with us in defending FIRA, that the Conservative Government, in pursuing its own misguided convictions, is setting out to sell out the country.

As a result, what are the prospects? We have a Government which is desperately convinced in its own mind that it is only the decisions of those with money or with capital to invest which hold out any hope for us. However, as those who have travelled to Wall Street in the last weeks have told us clearly, to change the Canadian law will not be enough. Capitalists will not be interested in us unless they see some really good opportunity from which to profit.

How will that happen? I suppose that one way to make Canada attractive would be to have wage levels which would undercut those of others. However, in a world in which Asian countries in particular are powerful competitors and in which the wage rates of many countries run lower than ours, is that the prospect which the Government holds out, that we drive down wages by one means or another until the country becomes tempting on the wage rate level? What other factors which might produce costs will we have to abandon? Will occupational health and safety go by the boards? Will the labour relations laws be dropped? These are the kinds of questions upon which my colleagues have focused. They have asked about the development of free economic zones in this country. They are immediately relevant. How, in fact, will we get back foreign capital to Canada which is supposed to provide employment? Surely it is by contemplating dire fates of that sort that we find any reason at all to think that it might arrive.

The prospect of investment in order to supply the Canadian market, particularly at the same time as the Government considers reductions in tariffs and freer and freer trade arrangements, seems to be very limited. It is particularly limited when we have a Government which does not have a wise sense of the need to build demand in Canada. It does not deal with the deficit by reducing tax expenditures which we considered last week in the House, tax expenditures which may well amount to more than the amount by which the budget is in deficit. If that were to be the case, it would be obvious that individual Canadian taxpayers would be grossly overtaxed. That would be one good reason, the soundest reason, for knowing that the Canadian market and the Canadian consumers do not have the means to sustain the demand which the country needs.

We can see on these matters of the economic situation in Canada that there is little reason to hope that the establishment of Investment Canada will solve our economic difficulties. We will end up with the same situation we experienced before. Capital may come in. The inevitable accompaniment of that is the increased technology of other people, reduced opportunity for research and development in this country, and less employment for engineers and scientists.

We will see less opportunity for employment of managers. There will be no possibility of rising to the top of these companies within the Canadian context. We will see particular distortions of trade patterns, excessive imports of manufactured goods, and buying from the parent rather than from Canadian manufacturers and other Canadian industries. There will be increased exports of raw materials without their being worked up in Canada. On both counts there will be less employment in this country. There will be capital outflows.

If there is no close consideration of the benefits to flow from foreign investment, why in God's name do we want to have the stuff? If we are going to let other people profit from it with very little spinoff for us, we face every possibility that the investment could take the form of buying out companies in this country, taking control of them and shutting them down. That could follow directly from the results of this Government's policies.

How can anyone regard what the Conservative Government has put before us in Bill C-15 as being conducive to the economic development of this country? The legislation is a disaster. It is to be profoundly regretted in the national interests that the Government faces us today with the closure of debate on this second reading.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) told a New York audience that Canada was open for business, some of us were greatly surprised. We wondered what on earth he could mean, because Canada had always been open for business.

The Bill before us contains a lot of puffery and a lot of general stuff. The only significant part seems to be that the name of the foreign investment agency is going to be changed. A large proportion of potential foreign investment in Canada will now be free of the necessity of any review. It is perhaps this that leads one to wonder what indeed is the hidden agenda of the Government, because there is no independent sovereign state that I know of that does not have some limitations or some screening of foreign investment to ensure that it meets national goals.

The much criticized Foreign Investment Review Agency allowed about 90 per cent of the applications. It was receptive to foreign investment in Canada as long as that investment was shown to be in the national interest. The language in the FIRA Bill was "of significant benefit to Canada". The Bill before us will require that the investment be of net benefit to Canada. We have not yet had a clear explanation of the reason for changing those words.

There are many issues of key importance in this legislation and that are worthy of serious discussion at second reading stage. I deplore the Government's decision to introduce closure at this stage. When the Opposition is so small in numbers, surely the Government could have refrained from using its massive majority and allowed these serious matters to be discussed in some depth.

High levels of foreign investment will certainly be crucial to Canada during the next few years. A Conference Board of Canada study highlighted that. It is something we all know. There is no evidence whatever that the Bill before us will attract new investment. With the current massive U.S. trade deficit and the great difficulties which many sectors in the U.S. economy face in modernizing their economy, there is no reason to think that we can expect a large flow of American capital here in the next few years. At best or at worst, depending on your point of view, we may find that some American investors will park their money here in a short-term way while looking for the best long term investment in their home country. This is being made very easy by this legislation which has no requirements, or at least a minimum of them, for the benefit of Canada. Certainly new investment is being excluded from screening, except in certain cases to which I will return.

The Conservative Party has always detested FIRA. However, let me give one example of a case where FIRA would have saved much heartache. A couple of years ago a proud man was in my office in tears. The firm for which he worked had been established in Canada prior to FIRA. It was an American branch plant. It suddenly closed its doors. When he went to work on a Monday, the firm had disappeared. It was a branch plant operation that we saw before FIRA where there was no R and D done in Canada, no attempt to upgrade the skills of employees, and marketing decisions were made in the United States.

When this firm decided it would be in its interests to move to one of the southern States where there are no unions and they could pay minimum wages, all they had to do was to close the doors and move everything out over a weekend. After 20 years, this man, with no marketable skills, found himself unemployed.

That kind of human tragedy was being repeated all across Ontario. It is the kind of thing that FIRA was meant to avoid. With FIRA there was a requirement and an insistence that the investor provide some research and development in Canada and create a situation where, if the firm left, the workers would have some skills and assets.

Another concern about this proposed Bill, which will take off most requirements for review, is the degree of autonomy in decision-making within subsidiaries. This question of absentee decision-making has been raised often in this House. I have given one example of it. There are many cases where decisions being made about the Canadian workplace by people outside Canada is fraught with potential difficulties.

FIRA approved 90 per cent of the applications before it. However, what went on before the approval was a negotiation process aimed at getting the best deal for Canada. The bottom line in this is still, where is the pay-off for Canadians? Is it consistent with Canada's long-term interests to open the door wide to investment without any requirement that that investment be in Canadian interests? The Bill does allow for review in certain cases, but these cases have not been sufficiently clarified in this very brief second reading debate. In my view, they should be clarified even before the matter goes to committee.

The Bill does allow for review when the investment affects Canada's cultural heritage and national identity, but that statement makes a very broad sweep. What issues does the Government propose to include in this and what control by regulation will exist? Will it include oil, gas, mining, and uranium? How often and in which situations will the Government use its reserved power?

What about the review process? As the Bill is written, it looks as though all power rests in the Minister's hands. Is this desirable? Should there not be other methods of review? These are questions to which our Party will be looking for very clear answers in committee and in the House when the Bill returns at report stage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? Debate.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, we are not quite ready for the question yet. It may well be that at some point we will be ready for the question but we will certainly let you know when that is so, Sir.

I just finished having a conversation with certain people in the lobby. I had a chat with one of the pages, in fact, and I said to her: "You have listened to this debate at some length. Is there anything you think I might raise on your behalf as you are one of the young people affected by the inadequate policies of the previous Government and equally or even more detrimentally affected by the inadequate policies of this Government?"

I found her response to be very interesting. She said that this was an important debate and that young people recognized the importance of this debate but that what they really wanted to know was where they were going to find summer jobs this year. They wanted to know where they were going to find employment for this coming summer that would enable them to continue at school as we would wish them to do. I thought that the relevance of that comment was clear. She was really saying, "Why are we doing this right now? Why are we not dealing with what is no doubt the major issue before the country? Why are we not dealing with the question of where the people who are now unemployed might find employment at this point in time?"

It makes absolutely no difference to the current status of the 1.5 million people who are now unemployed whether the Government does or does not have this legislation passed in this current session. I took from the comment of the page that while she could see the value of the debate on foreign investment and, in fact, encouraged further discussion and a more careful analysis of it, she was asking me if it were not possible to move on and deal with matters of immediate relevance. Do you know something, Mr. Speaker? There is a lot to be said for that point of view.

I believe you, Mr. Speaker, and most Members here have travelled in their constituencies recently and have found as I did that the single question that is uppermost in the minds of the overwhelming majority of the people with whom I spoke, and I suspect with whom other Members spoke as well, was the state of the unemployed. They wanted to know whether they would find jobs. If I understand the economic processes and the social programs of this country correctly, and I think I do, this legislation, important though the Minister in charge of it may think it is and relevant though the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) may feel it to be, does not begin to deal with what the Government identified as its main objective and thrust, jobs, jobs, and more jobs.

In fact, let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, why this legislation runs counter to the avowed intents of the Government. It runs counter—

Mr. Dick: In your mind.

Mr. Deans: No, not in my mind but in point of fact. It runs counter to what the Government has said.

You remember as I remember, Sir, that when the Prime Minister was first seeking the leadership of his Party and subsequently when he was seeking the office of the Prime Minister, he identified, quite justifiably and rightly so, that the main problem facing the country was jobs, jobs, and more jobs. I am not even paraphrasing him but am quoting him verbatim.

Let me draw to your attention, Sir, a situation that has arisen in the City of Hamilton that directly touches upon this legislation. I am sure all Hon. Members are familiar with the corporation known as United Technologies. United Technologies has a very bad habit which it developed over many years in many parts of the world. United Technologies acquires companies, then systematically moves to reduce their effectiveness and ultimately closes those companies. I am sure that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is familiar with what I am about to say.

Some years ago, United Technologies was able to purchase Otis Elevator. As a result of its program of closure, it has effectively reduced the opportunity for many hundreds of people from the City of Hamilton to hold down viable occupations.

Every day I come across people who are in their late forties and early fifties, and I am sure my colleague from Hamilton East does as well, who have worked all or most of their adult lives for Otis Elevator. These people did not want United Technologies to take them over. They did not expect that as a result of United Technologies having made substantial commitments, it would move to close the plant and disburse its operations around the world. They did not expect that it would undermine their security and ability to provide for their families. Yet that is exactly what happened.

This is an example of a major corporation moving into Canada with money to invest, purchasing a viable enterprise and then deciding to close it. This operation was closed not because it was not a working operation, not because it did not produce high technology products, not because the product was not recognized as a world leader in its field, but because that particular company decided, for whatever balance sheet reasons it may have had, that it would rather produce some if not all of its products either in the United States or in West Germany.

Is that the kind of investment Tory Members want? Is that what we are about to encourage? Is that an example of what we anticipate will be the great benefit we will derive from the investment that will flow into Canada when we eliminate the review process? If it is, I can cite chapter and verse of other similar situations that have arisen over the course of the last five or six years. These situations have occurred in spite of the review process.

I say that during its lifetime the review process was inadequate. Instead of eliminating it, we should be strengthening it. The review process should have required that certain commitments, once made, were lived up to. The review process should have required that if a corporation were allowed to take over a major part of Canada's economy, then the very least we could expect in return is that people in Canada would receive jobs. However, that did not happen.

Given that years ago this country was an open field in which one could buy whatever was desired with whatever currency from wherever one came and given that we found over a long period of time that that worked to our detriment and that we needed a process for protecting ourselves against unfair purchasing and closures of our major operations, I would have anticipated that this Government would have recognized that the road to prosperity lay not in returning to those days which resulted in FIRA but rather in looking at the FIRA operation, streamlining it in those areas which required streamlining and toughening its provisions in those areas which required toughening.

● (1600)

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) knows, as I know, that over the years, in spite of extracting promises from the majority of those who took over major operations in Canada, we were never able or willing to follow up and require that they performed according to how they said they would in their promises. That was the weakness of FIRA. That is where the process should have been changed.

As a young friend said to me, perhaps it would be more advantageous if we addressed ourselves to the question which is uppermost in the minds of 1.5 million or two million Canadians, that is, where they will find work this year, not five years or ten years from now. This Government certainly is not moving to provide any answer to that question.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy)—Research—Cancellation of proposed Winnipeg Manufacturing Research Centre. (b) Government policy on consultation; the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker)—Environmental Affairs—Proposed weather service information charge. (b) Method of implementation; the Hon.

Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps)—Status of Women—Government's position. (b) Election campaign statement.

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and on the motion of Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg) (p. 1708).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in the comments made not only by my colleagues of the Liberal Party, but also by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

After a few days of absence to attend the Ontario Progressive Conservative Leadership Convention, the result of which has made me extremely happy, I was surpprised to find out upon my return that this Government has introduced some kind of closure in a debate on a tremendously significant issue for the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party, I must say that I am extremely surprised that this Government, which, last September 4, succeeded in electing an unprecedented 211 Members to Parliament, cannot find in its ranks anyone ready to speak on foreign investments in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it is true the Liberal Party has been decimated. We now have 40 Members in this House and the NDP has 30. Nevertheless, to meet the needs of our constituents, Members of both parties have addressed the problems raised by the legislation introduced by this Government. As for the Government majority, its Members sit in silence.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the Conservatives have taken position for or against anything? They certainly have not taken position on the Bill respecting investment which was introduced by this Government.

Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Conservative Members from my region of Hamilton are not rising to speak about foreign investment in Canada. We all know that, in Hamilton, the iron ore industry as represented by the Steel Company and Dofasco is at the forefront of Canadian industries, which shows the Canadian people that we can be a world leader when we want.

Mr. Speaker, putting aside the question of foreign investment for a while, we can see that this Bill does not mention investments by Canadians. In this case, how can we help businesses like the Steel Company, how can we help Dominion Foundries so that everyone can benefit from their investments? Let us speak about investments by Canadians. We can compete with anyone. This is already happening in the steel industry. We know that we Canadians are the best in the world. This is why the Americans would like to freeze iron imports to the United States. Mr. Speaker, I really cannot understand why the Conservative Members of Parliament are not interested either in foreign investment in Canada or in Canadian investment abroad.

Mr. Speaker, we have at least four years before us in view of the unprecedented majority of the Government. Therefore, how can we consider too long two or three weeks of debate for a bill which the Government knows to be this important? I would have thought that every member of each party would rise to speak either to support, to defend or to oppose this legislation. But I see that they are not interested in investments and do not see it as the key which can open not only the doors of our Canadian economy, but also international markets for Canadians. Mr. Speaker, this is the question that this Parliament, this Government and this Minister should ask if they want new markets for Canadians, because it is certain that it is not by looking only at investments in Canada that we can improve our economy for Canadians. It is obvious that our main task is to increase Canadian markets abroad. Mr. Speaker, in this type of closure, and in this—

[English]

We have seen a cloak and closure operation with respect to the Investment Canada Bill. I wonder why we have not heard from government Members. I invite government Members from the Hamilton area to stand in the House and indicate if they are in favour of the Bill.

There are 40 Liberal Members. We sit on numerous committees. We are here to defend not only the rights of our constituents, but the rights of all Canadians on the major issues of the day. There were 211 Conservatives elected in an unprecedented majority last September, but the Government cannot muster the manpower to speak to a Bill which will affect the livelihoods, the jobs and the future of all Canadians.

Mr. Blenkarn: We have already spoken on that.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South says that Conservatives have already spoken on it. I would suggest that there has not been a Conservative in the Hamilton area who has spoken to this issue. I invite them to put their positions on the record. A closure motion introduced in the early stages of a Parliament—

Mr. Blenkarn: Let's vote.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the Hon. Member's eye is not the only thing that is closed today. The issue is not only one of a full and open discussion, including amendments to this Bill which I have named "Abandon Canada", but it is also one that requires the contribution of all Members of the House. An extremely dangerous precedent has been set by the Parliamentary Secretary who introduced a motion which effectively muzzles the few representatives which we have in Opposition preventing them from putting outlining, underlining and promoting the concerns and interests of Canadians.

I would have thought that with 211 government Members—many of whom are seeking opportunities to do something because they do not have a defined job in the Government as a Parliamentary Secretary or Minister—they would have looked for opportunities to defend the interests of their constituents. However, not only do governdment Members stand by, muzzled and mum, when they have the opportunity to speak on the issue of Investment Canada, but the Government, through the auspices of the Parliamentary Secretary, who presumably is acting with the full consent of the Prime Minister and the Cabinet, brings closure to a motion at the very earliest stage of this session of Parliament. That is a very dangerous precedent and one about which I should think the Canadian people must be concerned and, indeed, outraged.

• (1610)

We do not have great numbers here on the opposition side of the House. We know that with only 40 Hon. Members, we must cover committees and Private Members' Business and we must speak on a number of issues. But it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that given the small numbers on the opposition side of the House, and given the Government's large majority mandate, this Government does not need closure. It should give Hon. Members an opportunity to exercise their mental acuity and allow them to get up to speak to the people of Canada about what they think this Bill is going to do for the Canadian people. Putting their words on the record will hold those same Hon. Members accountable.

Mr. Blenkarn: What about jobs for people, for a change?

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South asks about jobs. As a matter of fact, if the pretended Minister, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, had his ears and eyes open, he would know that one of the glaring omissions in this particular Bill is the fact that there is nothing which addresses the issue of Canadian investment in the international market. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we have to open our eyes to the world and to the fact that the Canadian economy, in order to compete on an international basis, will have to take a lesson from the steel industry of Canada. That industry has competed all over the world and deserves not our derision, not our laughs and jokes in the House of Commons, but our full support in the way of legislation and the expansion of a Bill which would allow Canadians to compete in the international marketplace. We do not have to play second fiddle or take second place to the Americans, Mr. Speaker. We can compete and we will compete. It is about time the Government took the lid off this closure motion, allowed Hon. Members in the Opposition to make some amendments which would improve this Bill, and let the Canadian people, for once, flex their muscles in the economic market.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is with a sad heart that I stand to speak on the amendment which was introduced by an Hon. Member for whom I have had some respect since I have returned to this House, namely, the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif).

I have spent eight years here in the House of Commons, from 1972 to 1980, and when the Liberals were in government, there were many occasions on which they tried to muzzle the Opposition. At that time the Conservatives were sitting as the Official Opposition, and I can remember the cries of anger and pain and the accusations that the Government was attempting to muzzle Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Lo and behold, Mr. Speaker, now that those Hon. Members are sitting on the government side of the House, they are performing in exactly the same arrogant and fatuous manner as the Liberals did when they sat on the government side.

This amendment, which in effect closes off debate on this very important national issue of foreign investment, is certainly illogical. When I was speaking with the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg earlier, she asked me what exactly it is that the Opposition is opposed to. She said, "I would like to know what it is you oppose in Bill C-15".

Well, Mr. Speaker, what is the argument which the Government has put forward in defence of this Bill? The basic argument which the one-eyed Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), the cyclops of Mississauga South, has been braying about in the House, is jobs. In fact, Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence to show that in fact jobs would be created by eliminating any kind of review of foreign investment in Canada. Indeed, following the obeisance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in New York to the Wall Street barons, kissing their rings, their toes and any other part of their anatomy he could find, following that absolutely pornographic performance in New York, the bankers themselves said that they saw no capital for Canada, and I quote from an article in The Globe and Mail issue of December 20, 1984. In fact, those bankers said that people in Canada are going to have to be very patient, that investments will go up but not necessarily enough to do anything about unemployment. Those are the bankers themselves saying to Canadians, "Look, this is all smoke and mirrors". It is the same thing that Hon. Members opposite have been so famous for saying. It's all a sham. It's all a scam. In fact, there are no jobs going to be created by this haste to ensure that there are foreign investors. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the Minister himself said, in a statement on December 7 when he introduced this Bill in the House, that "perceptions play a vital role in the world of investment". That is the same sort of thing that the old shyster at the fair used to do with the pea under the shell. This Government is attempting to pull a scam on the Canadian people.

There are some jobs which have been created, and I found them.

Mr. Blenkarn: Here it comes.

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to quote the Prime Minister as reported in an article in The Toronto Star on December 15 for those of us who have been opposing Bill C-15. The headline reads, "The Prime Minister Scorns Nationalists Who Fear Foreign Money". The article goes on to quote the Prime Minister, "I come from a town, Baie Comeau, Quebec, where the paper mill was built by The Chicago Tribune. Thank God for the fire". The article continues, and this is important because we hear about the jobs, "Had it not been for that investment, I and all of my friends would not have had the opportunities that we have had". But we know, Mr. Speaker, that in fact the Prime Minister himself is a prime example of the kind of deletorious effect which foreign investment can have on the Canadian economy. One of the little strategies is always to employ a local manager. That is exactly what Hanna Mining Company did. It hired a local boy from Baie Comeau and made him President of the IronOre Company of Canada. We know what happened. As soon as the going got rough, IronOre simply closed up shop in Schefferville, picked up its marbles and ran away. The same thing happened to Hanna Mining in Capreol the little town I come from. As soon as the going got rough, the IronOre mine was closed up and they packed up and went to Minnesota.

When Canadian immigrants come to Canada, Mr. Speaker, we always ask, "How is your presence going to benefit Canada?", and I believe the same question can be asked of foreign investors. We certainly do not allow people to come in who the Government does not believe will make a contribution to Canada. I recall the last time I spoke on this Bill. I said how proud we Canadians were when we brought back our Constitution to Canada. In fact, we can amend our Constitution here in Canada and we do not have to depend on the Parliament of a foreign country to make those amendments for us. The only thing to extrapolate from that, Mr. Speaker, is that we should do exactly the same thing with our economy. There is a need to repatriate our economy. There is a need for those who are elected to govern this country to determine where the investment would go and the kind of employment to be created. Indeed, there is talk from the other side of the House, too, that foreign companies bring money to invest in Canada. Well, I recall there was a U.S. Senate hearing on foreign investment in the United States. One of the interesting facts which came out of that hearing was that the majority of companies who come in to Canada take over Canadian companies with Canadian money. In other words, they get a foot in the door, borrow from Canadian banks, Canadian savings, and buy out Canadian companies.

• (1620)

Mr. McCurdy: Buying us out with our own money.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) quite correctly says they are buying us with our own money. And this Government is saying: We love it, do it some more.

Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no way that the New Democratic Party can accept Bill C-15. We argued that FIRA was a roaring rabbit. It did not have the teeth it should have and we complained about that. One only has to look at the economic climate in Canada before FIRA came into being. Why did it come into being? It was a response to a real problem. Foreign investors came into this country, raped the country, and when the going got tough, they pulled out. Often times they forced their subsidiaries in Canada not to compete fairly with the parent companies' products in the world. The record is clear that they often enforced their own parent companies' countries' laws on the subsidiary even though it was on Canadian soil.

The last time I spoke I mentioned two examples. One was the forcing of Robin Hood not to sell flour to China back in the 1960s, and the other was not allowing Ford to sell cars to Cuba. No country worth its salt, no sovereign country, one which is master of its own economic destiny, would ever allow a foreign country to determine the direction in which it will develop. I think if the Tories would stop this businesses of getting into bed with foreign tycoons, Mr. Speaker, we would be much further ahead.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this further opportunity to discuss Bill C-15 now before the House, although I resent closure. This is in fact the first exercise in tyranny by the majority, Mr. Speaker. We find that a government with 211 members, historically the largest majority, when confronted with a hard-pressed Opposition, must now resort to a backbencher, what the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) could call a "deuce", to do its dirty work.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for the legislation did not even have the courage to be in the House to listen to the legitimate concerns of Members on this side of the House. Unfortunately, he cannot get very much advice from Government Members, because they have all been muzzled, Mr. Speaker. We have come to realize over the last few days, even the last few weeks, that this Bill gets no attention whatsoever from the Government. Following the example of the Minister responsible, they have suddenly lost all imagination, they have lost their right to speak, since we know they were warned not to speak in this debate. So we find ourselves in a situation where the Opposition is forced to use all available means at its disposal to try and put something into the Minister's head. It is not easy. I would almost say: mission impossible. We shall see after the committee reports back to the House, but I think, Mr. Speaker, you will agree that making use of a motion of closure at this stage is at the very least premature.

In a situation where the sovereignty of our Canadian economy is at stake, I find it appalling that just to do the Americans a favour, anyone should want to go over the head of the Parliament of Canada and report to President Reagan as if to say: We will go down our knees if we have to. The Prime Minister is using the Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) to stop a debate that is vital to the future of our country. Mr. Speaker, I thought that with all these new Members we have in Parliament, the Prime Minister would make good use of these people who have a lot of imagination and a thorough knowledge of their constituencies, and I am sure that the Member for Charlesbourg is acquainted with the problems of a foreign-controlled economy. I am sure she is concerned that our oil and gas industry is 49 per cent controlled by foreign interests, and I am sure she is pleased with our national energy policy, which over the last decade, from 1971 to 1981, managed to bring foreign control down from 90 per cent to 49 per cent. But this is still not enough, Mr. Speaker. We want the Members opposite to be as concerned as we are about Canadian ownership and less about selling their souls to the Americans and other foreign interests.

That is more or less the message we want to give them. We agree that Canada needs jobs, we agree that we need new investment, but they are the Government and they must realize that if a foreign company that intends to set up business in Canada is unable to prove to the Foreign Investment Review Agency that it intends to create jobs in Canada, it is not necessarily a good investment, Mr. Speaker.

If we are to have the assurance that jobs will be created, we must demand proof before the Agency. We know that regions like Trois-Rivières and other regions as well will need new investment. And I should say at this point that one thing they forgot to promote in the legislation now before the House is investment by Canadians. Why should we assume that capital has to come from outside Canada, Mr. Speaker, when we know that in Canada the level of savings is twice as high as it is in the United States. There is capital available across this country. There are people ready to invest and to purchase shares in Canadian companies. What does the Bill do for these people, Mr. Speaker? What does the Bill before the House do to create what is referred to in the Bill as Investment Canada? What does it do to help Canadians who want to invest? I wonder why the new Members from Quebec, who are familiar with the provincial program for investment in Quebec and Canadian companies, are not rising in the House today, to request amendments to the Bill to enable Canadians to invest in their own economy and in job creation, Mr. Speaker?

Those are the kinds of measures we in the Liberal Party are looking for, not just a smokescreen to please our American friends and the former bosses of the Prime Minister. Not necessarily former, some people might say. What we want to do, Mr. Speaker, is to ensure that a Bill like Investment Canada is not just for foreign investors. We would like the Progressive Conservatives to have enough faith in the ability of Canadians to assume control over their economy but, Mr. Speaker, we look upon this Bill C-15 as an open admission of failure on the part of the government. They had been talking about rebuilding a climate of confidence, but instead of trying to do just that in Canada, they would rather do so beyond our own borders. That is altogether unacceptable, and we have seen how this attempt has been unsuccessful.

The Member who spoke before me mentioned, among other things, the fact that American bankers who saw through this scheme have openly been laughing at the government and saying: It is not because you are planning to change the name that money will be flowing into Canada. Yet, during the election campaign, the Prime Minister kept saying: The day after I take office, money will indeed flow right into Canada. Mr. Speaker, tens of thousands of jobs were to be created in Canada. Well now, we have yet to see any evidence of that and there are no statistics to prove that investments have gone up. We still have one and a half million unemployed. That is why I am concerned when I see that Members opposite are not worried about the current situation in the transport industry, for instance, which happens to be 69 per cent under foreign control. Nothing here deals with Canadian ownership. What do they think about Canada's chemical industry, 75 per cent of which is dominated by foreign interests?

I think that this government, anxious to have something in the legislative mill, quite simply introduced this measure through the back door to please the Americans, without any concern about Canadian control of investments in Canada. That is why we intend to fight this Bill every inch of the way.

• (1630)

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign the people of Canada were told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), then the Leader of the Official Opposition, that the main issue facing the Canadian people was jobs, jobs, jobs. We were told that if we elected a Progressive Conservative Government, hundreds of thousands of jobs would appear on the scene almost immediately.

The Prime Minister was correct that jobs were the main concern of the Canadian people. A Gallup poll published just a couple of days ago showed that the main concern of well over 50 per cent of the people was jobs and unemployment. The jobs are not there, Mr. Speaker. All of the organizations, both public and private, which do research in the field of economics and study the probabilities with regard to employment, have agreed that for the foreseeable future there will not be a real reduction in the number of unemployed. There will continue to be close to 1.5 million unemployed, and the present 11 per cent unemployment rate is not likely to drop to less than 10 per cent in the next number of years.

That situation is even more grim and desperate for our young people. The rate of unemployment among young people is almost 20 per cent. I am sure there is not a Member of Parliament who, during the recent campaign, or in his office in recent weeks has not been visited by very well educated young people who have not been able to get a job in the field in which they have been educated. During the recent election campaign while I was canvassing I called on a house where there was a young man who had graduated from engineering more than two years ago. He had been able to find some temporary work, but has not had a single job, either temporary or permanent, which had any relationship to the field in which he had spent several years getting an education.

We are now meeting people who had stable jobs for 10, 15 or 20 years and the companies for which they worked are now closing up. A recent illustration of that is the Wabasso Company which operated in the textile industry in Ontario or Quebec. It employed 1,200 people and now is closing down. Over the weekend there was an announcement in my own city that Rayovac batteries, which has been in operation for 20 or 25 years in Winnipeg and employed 65 people, is closing down. I am speaking of people in their forties or fifties who have worked at the same job for many years and are now being thrown on the unemployment scrap heap. Where are the jobs for people in their forties and fifties? There simply are not any.

This is the situation, Mr. Speaker. The Government is telling us that we need only pass this legislation to get rid of big, bad FIRA and money will pour into Canada. It took years to get the former Liberal Government to pass the legislation establishing the Foreign Investment Review Agency. Under that legislation, well over 90 per cent of applications were approved. Agencies such as Statistics Canada which did studies indicated that FIRA had virtually no effect in creating disincentives for foreign capital to come into the country.

A number of non-partisan newspapers and magazines have looked into this question. I would like to quote a few sentences from a lengthy article which appeared in The Globe and Mail on December 20, 1984 written by Thomas Walkom, who is certainly not a flaming radical. Mr. Walkom said in part as follows:

> Brian Mulroney's new love affair with U.S. investors may be fine as far as it goes, but those waiting for job-producing foreign money to flood into Canada should not hold their breath.
> This is the message from the handful of people who exert considerable control over billions of dollars of U.S. capital—New York's investment bankers.

He goes on to say that this program can do nothing about the fundamental problems facing the country. He then gives the reasons. This article goes on:

> They point out, however, that foreign investors are a hard-nosed lot interested in making money. In Canada, that means mainly resource industries, and with the exception of oil and gas, resources are not considered good investments.

If the resource industries in which we have been so involved and which have employed so many hundreds of thousands of Canadian citizens are not considered good investments by U.S. bankers, where is the money which is going to flow into this country?

● (1640)

Another one of Mr. Walkom's bankers said:

> "Natural resources are under the gun worldwide," says another. "I don't know what's going to turn it around and I feel very sorry for Canada because it has built its whole existence on natural resources."

Another banker says, "FIRA itself was not the bogeyman that kept away foreign investment..", and "The NEP was a hell of a whipping horse," says another. "Canada would not have been in much different shape today if the NEP hadn't happened, in my mind. The real problem was world oil prices".

In the 1970s when we were talking about a major expansion in the production of new energy in Canada and about the use of the tar sands, it was assumed by the federal and provincial Governments that the price of oil would rise 15 per cent annually. This meant that when the tar sands plants came on stream, the world price of oil would be approximately $70 a barrel. This meant that it made sense to try to get the tar sands operational.

That did not happen. We know that the price of oil is going down rather than up. Therefore, to depend on that kind of program would not have produced the jobs and it will not produce the jobs now.

The traditional sectors in which Canadians have worked are forestry, mining, agriculture and fishery. All of these sectors are now depressed because of the world recession, increased competition from Third World countries, increased automation, computerization and increased efficiency. All of these sectors employ fever people than they did years ago, and to expect new foreign investment to flow in to these fields is to count on the impossible. That is why we oppose this Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I cannot but take the opportunity given me today to speak briefly on the motion now under consideration. I believe, indeed I am convinced, that the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) who is sitting opposite would have blamed me for not doing so. I also invite her, Mr. Speaker, to take part in this very important debate because I know that her constituents want industries that are Canadian and want us to be masters in our own house. That is what her constituents and mine want for Canada.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the government has decided to close the debate on this bill. We wonder why—

[English]

Why does the Government decide to place this guillotine motion at this time? Presumably it is because it believes that this issue has been debated sufficiently.

Mr. Blenkarn: It has.

Mr. Boudria: I am glad to hear the Hon. Member across the way believe that we have. Perhaps the reason is that the Government has a very long legislative agenda. Let us review the legislative agenda.

We will recall that during the election campaign the Government set forth a rather extensive legislative program for the people of this country. It had many commitments, as the Conservatives called them. I call them empty promises; 338 promises.

[Translation]

—all kinds of promises to Canadians. This is what the Government has done. Let me refer to a few—

[English]

We must close the debate immediately because, according to the Government, there is so much for us to do. This is what the Conservatives promised. They had 113 promises to spend more money and five promises to spend less. There were two promises to increase revenues and 26 promises to reduce revenues. There were 139 proposed actions to increase the deficit and seven actions to lower the deficit. These are promises which the Party opposite made during the campaign.

Let me cite a few specific promises, which presumably the Conservatives want us to discuss as soon as the closure motion is completed. According to its promises, the Government wanted to adopt a positive approach to productivity management through the development of incentives to meet objectives specified in any program placed before Cabinet or Parliament. However, what is the agenda? Although the Government was elected almost six months ago, it only has eight Bills on its agenda. It is now invoking closure because of the necessity to attend to other urgent business. There is nothing on the agenda, and we are told that the cupboard is bare. It is the Government's legislative and imaginative cupboard that is bare. It has nothing to propose to the people. If the Government had many promises to offer months ago, why is it not fulfilling some of those promises now?

With respect to private Members, it is interesting to note that there are only 14 private Members' motions coming from 211 Conservative Members. Indeed, the cupboard is bare. Less than 10 per cent of the government Members can provide the House of Commons with their input in terms of the legislative agenda. That is what they have to offer.

Let me give further examples of election promises the Government wants to implement now which have resulted in the closure debate today. It will ensure that Parliament performs a stronger role. How can Parliament do so when the Government invokes closure? This would not be the first time the Government has contradicted itself.

The Government talks about saving money, yet it spends $24,000 to deliver ten packages of mail across the country and spends $500,000 in one month to provide jet travel for Cabinet Ministers.

The Government is not delivering on its promises. In one of its promises, the Government said that it wants to reaffirm and strengthen the mandate of Treasury Board as over-all managers of Government resources. How does that promise conform with the Government's advertising contracts being given without tender?

Mr. Dick: Where is the Bill?

Mr. Boudria: We are not discussing the Bill, we are discussing the closure motion at this time. In case the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Dick) is unaware of what we are doing in the House at this time, perhaps I could bring that to his attention.

Mr. Dick: Talk about the Bill.

Mr. Boudria: He may talk about the Bill; I am talking about the closure motion.

Mr. Dick: It is not closure. That is Standing Order 37.

Mr. Boudria: One form of guillotine or another, it is still the same. The Government is cutting off the due process for debating issues in this Parliament so it can move on to other pressing business. However, the Government has no other pressing business because it is not doing its job. It is not proceeding with the legislative program which it promised the people during the election campaign. It has had ample time to do so. If in six months it cannot come up with a legislative program, its Members will find themselves turfed out after the next election. They will be back on this side of the House from where they came. That is what will happen to the Conservative Party if it does not wake up and provide Canada with the leadership it promised.

• (1650)

I did not make 338 promises during my election campaign. Like you, Mr. Speaker, I put up with those promises. I listened to them in disbelief, thinking that it was impossible to deliver them. I was right, it was not possible to deliver those promises.

Mr. Blenkarn: Let us get on to other things.

Mr. Boudria: The Government is not even trying. I hear the Hon. Member across the way. I ask him, what other things? There are only eight items on the legislative agenda of the Government.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is eight of them.

Mr. Boudria: If the Government is so concerned about providing us with what we need, let it introduce the youth employment programs we need right now. If the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) came into the House right now to announce a good youth employment program, I am sure there would be unanimous consent on the part of all Hon. Members to listen to an important announcement which would provide the young people of our country who do not have employment with at least some hope that what they voted for on September 4 had at least some semblance of reality.

We will not hear that from the Government this afternoon. The Minister of Employment and Immigration will not be here to make that statement because she does not have a program ready. Why does the Government not have a program ready? The answer to that question is simple.

Mr. Dick: Talk about this Bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: Talk about the Bill.

Mr. Boudria: I am talking about the decision of the Government to cut off debate. If Hon. Members opposite want to contribute to this particular debate, all of us would be most interested in hearing from them. They should tell us why they feel that this Investment Canada Bill is so necessary at this time.

I should like to refer to an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail on December 20. It was a very meaningful article written by Mr. Thomas Walkom. As my time is coming to a close, I will just refer to it very briefly. It indicated that Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Conservatives had blamed FIRA and the NEP for scaring away foreign and direct investment and that they had attempted to bolster their point by pointing to Statistics Canada figures on net U.S. direct investment in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I think one ought to be cautious in exhorting the Government to keep its promises. The Conservative Party made many promises during the election campaign which I hope it does not keep. There are some which I hope it does keep. This Bill happens to be the keeping of a promise to dismantle FIRA. To that extent the Conservative Party is being faithful to its political and ideological agenda. That is why we are opposing it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: At least on this issue, if not on others, the Conservatives have the courage of their convictions.

I realize that we are speaking to a motion which is a very mild form of time allocation or closure. It is not the more drastic measures which could be taken. I might have a word to say about that in a minute. However, I think we need to see this Bill in context, as part of a general erosion of Canadian independence which has taken place since the Government took office. I am thinking of how this jibes with what is happening with respect to foreign policy and the easy acquiescence which we see on the part of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) when it comes to American policy on star wars, nuclear arms talks, et cetera. We have to see this Bill as part of a larger package being introduced over time by the Progressive Conservative Government in which I believe there is a serious erosion of Canadian independence.

Also it concerns the total economic package by which the Government is trying to create what it calls a good investment climate and what I call not competition, but capitulation to factors against which we ought to be struggling instead of giving into. We have to see this move in terms of foreign investment as one of four or five measures which I regret.

First, we have the opening of the country to foreign investment without any meaningful criteria as to whether or not that investment ought to benefit Canadians. We need to see this along with changes in respect of environmental policy where the Government has declared, in the interests of bettering the investment climate and reducing the deficit, that it will not be as concerned as it used to be about what factories, plants and various other forms of economic activity are putting into our lakes, rivers, air, soil or whatever. This is another signal to the investment community that Canada is a good place in which to invest because it does not care as much about the environment as it used to.

Another signal concerns working conditions and labour. By postponing amendments to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code, they are sending out a message that we now have a Government which is not as concerned about working people as may have been the case before. There is one signal on foreign investment, one on the environment and one on labour. Another signal—and they all go together—is that the Government is more prepared to tinker with the social programs of the country than to embark upon serious tax reform. It is another signal to the investment community—"Don't worry about us, guys; if we have fiscal problems, we would much rather tamper with social programs than make you pay your share". They are being asked to come and invest here and are being told that they can count on us. We will be patsies, like the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) is a patsy for the oil companies. These are the kinds of signals which are being sent out. They are unfortunate.

It is a tragedy because I think many of these changes are well meant. They are part of an internally coherent package, but I say to all Members of the House of Commons that we will regret collectively as a nation the kinds of steps the Government is taking today and will take in days ahead in its naive attempt to create what it calls a good investment climate and what I call capitulation. It is all part of making Canada the banana republic which it has the possibility of becoming if we embark fully upon the kinds of views advocated by Progressive Conservatives in opposition and now in government.

With respect to the motion, as I said earlier it is a form of time allocation. I should like to take this opportunity to say to the Government that this raises the whole question of parliamentary reform and the allocation of parliamentary time. The House has before it the recommendations of the special task force on parliamentary reform which were recommended unanimously by two committees in a row. If Conservatives are half as serious about parliamentary reform as they constantly said they were in opposition, they had better take some action with respect to those recommendations. They now have the opportunity to make good on decades of rhetoric about parliamentary reform. If that committee is to continue doing its work, and if Members of Parliament are to feel that any kind of momentum is to be maintained coming out of the reforms made in the last Parliament, we had better see some action soon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

ADVISABILITY OF AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE PROPERTY RIGHTS

The House resumed from Thursday, December 6, 1984, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blenkarn:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should amend the Constitution Act 1982, to include property rights and, that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights so that it reads as follows:

"7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say first that I appreciate the commitment which the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has to the entrenchment of property rights in our Constitution. At the same time, I would argue strenuously that Private Members' Hour is not an appropriate forum for resolving matters of such constitutional, economic and social significance. We simply lack the time and the collective capacity to assess and deal with complex constitutional initiatives in the span of time available to us. Our debate does, however, enable us to touch on some of the issues and to get a better idea of what may be involved in entrenching property rights in the Constitution.

I would like to express my personal support in principle for the entrenchment of protection for property rights in the Constitution. Property rights are, in my opinion, fundamental to our way of life. Property rights are basic civil rights that enable us to carry on our lives without having to depend on the state for sustenance. They are the basis of our right to carry on and profit from business activities. They allow us to acquire all those things we need and want in our daily lives. The point of property rights, as with the other rights and freedoms which have received constitutional protection, is to afford us a measure of independence from government; some degree of protection against well-meant, but perhaps unnecessary, state interference.

The entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution would be a symbol to ordinary Canadians of the enduring importance of such rights in Canada. It would also be a symbol of their right to own and enjoy property without arbitrary or ill-considered interference by government. The importance of such symbols should not be underestimated. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, in addition to providing legal remedies for the violation of the rights and freedoms set out in the Charter, is a symbolic document. It is a symbol to Canadians, and it is a symbol that we can hold out to the world, especially to countries where these rights and freedoms and, in particular, property rights do not exist.

Many Canadians left their homes in other countries so that they could enjoy the rights and freedoms which we take for granted in Canada. They are vigilant about maintaining these rights and freedoms. They have worked hard to build families, homes and businesses, and to contribute to the development of Canada, and they rightfully expect that the things they have worked so hard for will be protected. They recognize that an important way of securing this protection is by entrenching property rights in the Constitution.

At the same time, I wish to acknowledge that there are important societal interests which require governments to enact laws that affect property rights. These interests must be taken into account. The provinces have acted to protect the interests of women arising out of family relationships. In recognition of the contribution of women in the family relationship, important family law reforms have been made to provide for the division of family assets, regardless of the apparent legal title, upon mariage breakdown.

The Supreme Court of Canada has, within the last few days, agreed to consider the rights of common law spouses, on the termination of a long-standing spousal relationship, in the Sorochan case. What would the entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution portend for the evolution of such a re-evaluation of common law property tenets by reference to changed societal standards? We simply do not know, and an abstract and unqualified entrenchment of property rights does not permit us to predict the outcome of this balancing of important societal values.

More generally, societal interests are reflected in the multitude of laws which in one way or another affect property rights. The provinces have sought assurances that their right to enact such laws will not be unreasonably restricted. We should note that only two provinces have passed resolutions supporting the entrenchment of property rights. No other provinces have passed such resolutions. They are concerned about the effect that constitutional protection for the enjoyment of property rights might have on their authority to enact a wide variety of regulatory laws. Provincial laws affecting property rights include such basic incidents of an orderly society as land use planning and municipal laws, laws concerning the acquisition and disposition of real and personal property, construction lien laws, environmental laws, and expropriation laws. This is by no means an exhaustive list. When one considers the scope and extent of existing provincial regulation of property, one can understand something of the apprehension which the provinces have with respect to entrenching the enjoyment of property rights.

The concerns of the provinces are reflected in a unanimous resolution of the Council of the Canadian Bar Association of Ontario. That resolution, as it was reported at page 1 of the June 1984 edition of "Briefly Speaking", the monthly newsletter of the Canadian Bar Association—Ontario, reads as follows:

Various provincial governments have indicated their intentions to seek entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution;

I take it that the authors of this resolution are referring to the resolutions of the Legislatures of British Columbia and New Brunswick in support of the entrenchment of property rights. The resolution continues:

And whereas property rights entrenchment may affect environmental, resource, land use planning, municipal and real property laws; And Whereas very limited study of how entrenchment may affect these laws has occurred; And whereas the federal Minister of Environment and Ontario Minister of the Environment have both requested that the CBA/CBAO undertake such a study; now therefore be it resolved that CBAO strike a committee to study how property rights entrenchment may affect matters including environmental, resource, land use planning, municipal and real property laws for a report to Council—

It is evident that the provinces have sincere concerns about the entrenchment of property rights. These concerns cannot be ignored, and it is clear that the substantive resolution of these issues is essential to the extension of constitutional protection for property rights.

The legitimacy of provincial concern is underlined by the fact that the Constitution gives the provinces a primary role in making laws in relation to property. Section 92(13) of the Constitution Act, 1867 provides that each province may exclusively make laws with respect to "Property and Civil Rights in the province". Other provisions of Section 92 further extend the powers of the provinces to enact laws affecting property rights. In the exercise of these powers the provinces have made laws which, as I noted earlier, affect property rights in many respects. The provinces have also, as they are entitled to do, delegated to municipal bodies the power to make such laws.

In the interests of community planning, and public health and safety, the provinces have enacted land use planning laws and have enabled municipalities to pass zoning laws, building codes and health and safety regulations. Land use planning and zoning laws may regulate or restrict the development and use of land to ensure that these serve the community interest. For example, residential areas may be protected from industries incompatible with residential use. Building codes ensure that our homes and offices are built to meet proper and safe engineering and design standards. Safety regulations ensure that buildings are adequately designed and equipped to allow us to deal with emergencies such as fire. Health regulations ensure that our public facilities are sanitary and ensure that public health conditions are consistent with human habitation.

Provincial laws have been enacted to protect the environment. They control industrial land uses which might create pollution through industrial wastes and emissions. Provincial laws protect our cultural heritage as well as our natural heritage. They do so by preserving historic sites and other precious assets of our cultural heritage.

In addition to regulating the use of property, the provinces also regulate the process of acquisition and disposition of real property such as land and personal property such as automobiles. In any given property, there may be several interests held by different people. For instance, with respect to a given piece of real estate there may be, for example, the interests of the registered owner, a first mortgagee and subsequent mortgagees and the holder of an easement. In addition, it is possible for creditors to obtain a lien against the land or to register a judgment against the land. The provinces have created laws for the orderly creation, transfer and disposition of these interests. These laws govern the interaction of all these interests and establish priorities. They also ensure that persons dealing with real property can ensure that they are getting that for which they contracted. Similar laws apply to personal property.

It is sometimes necessary when it is in the public interest to expropriate property for important public purposes. The law allows for the expropriation of land for public highways or public utilities with reasonable compensation to the landowners affected. The federal government, as much as the provinces, needs to preserve this power while recognizing the need for adequate safeguards for property owners.

As you can see by my examples, Mr. Speaker, there are a wide range of areas in which the provinces have made laws affecting property or the enjoyment of property. In these are reflected a variety of vital societal interests which the provinces protect in the public interest. They are concerned, however, that provincial laws will be vunerable to attack if property rights are entrenched in the Constitution. It is not that the provinces wish to insulate their legislation from standards of fairness, far from it.

The provinces have attempted to balance societal interests against individual property rights by providing built in protections for property rights. Many provincial laws which purport to affect some sort of property right provide procedural as well as substantive protections for such rights. In many cases, citizens have a right to a fair hearing, a right to present their side of the case, and a right to appeal. Many of these procedural protections are also provided at common law by the rules of natural justice. Substantive protections also exist in provincial laws. For example, expropriation laws generally allow the expropriation of property only for important public purposes where no alternative course is available and only with reasonable compensation.

The provinces do not appear to be concerned so much about the entrenchment of procedural protections for property rights as they are about any action which might allow the courts to become arbiters of what is or is not acceptable government policy for laws affecting property rights. The provinces wish to have the assurance that property rights guarantees will not be used to strike down laws protecting important societal interests.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we should be taking steps to allay as much as possible the concerns of the provinces and to seek a consensus, if possible, on the entrenchment of property rights. Our efforts would, of course, be premised on our support in principle for the entrenchment of property rights, subject to our commitment made during the election campaign that this could only be accomplished without prejudice to women's interests.

The provinces and other interested parties should be given a reasonable opportunity to give this matter their fullest consideration and to voice their views. A co-operative approach with respect to the entrenchment of property rights will avoid unnecessary obstacles and will smooth the road to constitutional change. Constitutional change is not a unilateral process. It requires, in this case, the support of at least seven provinces.

While I have so far focused on the concerns of the provinces, a property rights amendment would also have ramifications for the federal Government. The federal Government has also passed a multitude of laws affecting property rights. These include, for example, copyright laws, environmental laws, land use laws, and laws dealing with the exploitation of our natural resources. These laws, no less than provincial laws, serve important societal interests. We should be clear about the effect that the entrenchment of property rights would have on these laws.

Like most Canadians, I recognize that the pressing issues of the day are economic. The Government is committed to restoring the economy, to encouraging business and to putting Canadians back to work. These are, for Canadians, the top priorities. We understand that the process of constitutional change takes time and work but we know it will receive due consideration.

Our support for the entrenchment of property rights is no less firm for wanting to ensure that any constitutional amendment would not be prejudicial to the interests of women and to other important societal interests. The amendment of the Constitution, however, is not a matter that should be taken lightly. The potential consequences of an amendment must be carefully assessed because undesirable consequences cannot be easily remedied once the amendment has been made. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, the entrenchment of property rights deserves our careful and considered analysis.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? Debate.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to this motion today on behalf of the New Democratic Party. Any time that there is a motion to create our first amendment to the Constitution, it is a very serious business. The Government is being told that it would be a good idea to introduce an amendment to the Constitution. As has been stated by the Hon. Member who just spoke, a process for doing so is now in place and it is very straightforward. It simply requires the approval of seven provinces and the Government of Canada to make such a constitutional change which would in effect transfer the jurisdiction over the rights of property and their enforcement from the provincial to the federal level.

I realize that there is a Progressive Conservative Government at the federal level and that there are at least seven provinces in this country that are also run by Progressive Conservative Governments. I believe, therefore, that any such process would move along quickly and smoothly and that we would see a motion for such constitutional amendment before the House very soon.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the provinces and the federal Government must hold discussions to bring about such an agreement. They would make proposals to make constitutional change which, upon the agreement of the seven provinces and the federal Government, would then be presented to the House of Commons for discussion and debate. The whole process would then be transferred to a committee, at which time ordinary Canadians could have input. At that time, the provinces and the federal Government would already have had their discussions.

As I understand it, this matter did come up during the election and was apparently one of the planks of the Conservative Party platform. I am a little confused as to why it is necessary to keep reminding the Government of one of its promises by putting this motion before it.

Before we get too far into this process for change, I believe there are a number of questions that should be asked and a number of answers that should be provided. First, I would argue that property rights have been well taken care of within the provincial sphere, with perhaps a few exceptions which could be considered minor within the scheme of things. When I ask myself when property rights have been abused or not properly upheld on the part of Canadians, not very many instances come to mind. That is one of the first questions I ask myself when I talk about a constitutional amendment. I can think of a few examples of such abuse, one being the confiscation of the property of Japanese-Canadians during the last war. At about the same time, the padlock laws were instituted in Quebec and the Jehovah's Witnesses were not granted the right to use their halls and churches. However, I would point out that even with the Constitution and with the right of property being moved from federal to provincial jurisdiction, both of those circumstances would probably have occurred whether or not there were property rights in the federal Constitution. I contend that what we had in the case of Japanese-Canadians was a very emotionally charged period of time. We were at war with another racial group. What happened to the Japanese-Canadians had nothing to do with property, but probably had everything to do with the racial attitude toward those people at that time. I am from a Germanic background and our property was not confiscated during the First or Second World Wars. My grandparents, who were Canadian citizens well before the First World War, went to visit their parents inthe United States and were prohibited from returning in the fall of 1914 because of the outbreak of war. However, their property was not seized. They had to spend the next 4.5 years in the United States because the Canadian Government would not permit them to return, even though they were citizens. But their property was not seized. Therefore, I contend that the Japanese-Canadian situation would probably have happened whether or not there had been a guarantee of property rights.

Similarly but for different reasons, the Jehovah's Witnesses were locked out of their properties, essentially for religious reasons. Both racial and religious discrimination are now prohibited under the Constitution, but we have yet to discover whether that constitutional strength would be adequate to stop such things happening in the future. Perhaps we would be well advised not to rush into changing the constitutional responsibility from provincial to federal jurisdiction until it is discovered whether in fact the federal jurisdiction could be effective in dealing with these very real problems of racial and religious discrimination which occurred in the past.

There is some indication from the provinces that they are not in a hurry to make that change. The Province of Alberta has a property rights contract with its citizens, but it is still possible in Alberta, if the property is on the route to a pipeline, power line or telephone line, that the property can be just as easily seized as a right of way for public use, as it is in provinces which do not have guaranteed property rights. On the surface it is difficult to find an advantage in that particular province which has property rights. I would also remind the House that Alberta is one province which has been very vociferous in opposing any move to change property rights from provincial to federal jurisdiction. It would be an important necessity for that province to go along with such a change as it is one of the seven provinces which would be required to agree to such a constitutional change. Being from the same political stripe as the federal Government, one would think that Alberta would be among the first on the bandwagon to go along with this proposal.

There is some question as to the kind of rights which will be guaranteed. It is generally agreed by all that property is land. However, when we get beyond houses, factories, businesses, barns and that sort of thing, we get into a fuzzy area as to what is property. I believe there is general agreement that bonds and mortgages are forms of property, but the question arises in the case of a mortgage as to which property interest takes precedence. Will that be spelled out in the Constitution? If there is a disagreement as to whether the terms of a mortgage are being met, does the bank get precedence over the man or woman who is trying to make the payments?

We could look at contracts. Is an insurance policy property? If it is, is a labour contract not also a form of property? If that is the case, is it then possible for workers who have a labour contract with a factory to be put out of the factory either in the form of lock-out or lay-off? How many rights are included in the contract, if it is indeed property?

Whose property takes precedence? For example, we could talk about environmental concerns. Do we shrug off the pollution which our own generation is creating because it will not hurt us, but will put into jeopardy future generations by creating acid rain which kills our lakes, trees and soil? Does a property resolution change any of those questions? How would having property rights written into the Constitution provide guarantees for future generations for a usable environment, for land which will grow crops, for land which will produce trees and for lakes which will produce fish? I doubt if it makes any difference. I believe the inclusion of property rights in the Constitution makes no difference to the groups of people which I have mentioned.

We must recognize that the property rights which we have in Canada have come down to us through British common law and that those of us who have property hold it in right of fee simple from the Crown. The rights which we have are clearly stated in the title, as to the minerals above and below the ground, whether we must grant access to public utilities, or whether we must provide a road crossing in the property. The title also describes the liens and mortgages which exist against the property. However, the title also bears some responsibility. We must pay the taxes, and often it requires us to keep the property in good order, depending on the community in which it is found. If the property is in a farming community, the owner must guard against noxious weeds. The owner could be obligated to keep a building from going into disrepair. Factories cannot be built in residential areas. There are numerous things an owner cannot do with property because of community requirements. The rights which the owner has are only those rights which are allowed after consideration of the community and consideration of the requirements of the Crown.

We have got along with this system, Mr. Speaker, for quite a few hundred years. I have not heard anyone previously in this debate outline any large shortcomings in this system. So I ask Hon. Members of the House very simply and clearly, if there are no problems with the existing system, why should we change it? Why take the right of property away from the provinces and enshrine it under federal jurisdiction? Particularly when there are so many different kinds of interests at stake in different parts of the country, does it make sense to centralize this particular right? What does it do for the right of Prince Edward Island to decide that it should not have a large influx of foreign ownership of its prime recreation land? Is it so wrong that Prince Edward Island should make certain that people who have access to its lovely beaches are Islanders, or at least Canadians? Is that not infringing upon the right of the person, who has the money to pay for such a beach, to own it, whether he lives in Hong Kong or in Bonn? Those are some questions which have been dealt with in that particular province and it has said, "No, we have first right to those beaches".

Similarly, in British Columbia there is a question of what sort of policy should apply to the ownership of the very limited amount of farm land there. That province has determined that there should be some restrictions on who owns farm land. Only farmers may own farm land, and it must be used for agricultural purposes. If we had a guarantee of property rights in the Constitution, would British Columbia still have that right or would whoever had the money to buy that farm land be permitted to do whatever he chose with it? What would be the implications to future generations of British Columbians who were looking for agricultural production and found that they were not able to provide a lot of their own food themselves?

What about the land of the Indian and the Inuit in this kind of constitution amendment? As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Crown, on behalf of Canada, took over those lands through treaty. The Indians were not really aware of that fact but that is what the Crown did. Then, as I interpret it, the Crown transferred a great many of the rights to resources and jurisdiction over the property to the provinces, and now the Indian and Inuit are attempting to negotiate with the federal Government to make certain that with respect to the treaties, and in those areas where there are still no treaties, there is an understanding that there are some rights that the original people have, which are retained rights, even though a treaty has been signed. And we get into the question of whether game is property for the Inuit and the Indians. It is a very contentious question which has not been properly dealt with. Certainly, it has not been adequately answered by deciding to change property rights from provincial back to federal jurisdiction.

In closing, I would like to point out once again that the process is quite clear now that we have an amending formula for the Constitution. The Government in this case, if it is interested in initiating such a discussion, can and should initiate such a discussion with the provinces, then the words which have been agreed to can be brought to this House. We will then look at that agreement and decide whether to accept it or oppose it. It will go to the committee where all Canadians can have a chance to decide whether it is good or bad for them as Canadians. If the resolution passes, the amendment to the Constitution, some of the provinces would still have the option of opting out at five-year intervals. So we may see the very real possibility that even with an amendment, a great many if not all of the provinces would find themselves opting out.

My main point, Mr. Speaker, is that I have great difficulty in seeing an advantage to a radical change to the Constitution when there have been no reasons set forth as to what advantage there will be for us as Canadians. I have not seen any of that in this debate thus far. I hope that future speakers will point those things out, if they are really serious about amending the Constitution in such a manner.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my remarks by complimenting the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) for taking the initiative to put forward this motion which would urge the Government to protect property rights by a revision of the Constitution. As the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) said, it would go through a constitutional convention where seven out of the ten provinces would have to agree, as long as they comprised 50 per cent of the population. The Hon. Member asks why change something if there are no problems with the existing system—I think I quote him if not accurately, at least fairly—to which I would simply reply that we are in a transitional period. We are creatures who are accustomed to 200 years of common law, a system which has been very well entrenched. We are now moving into a different mode of constitutional law with the inclusion of a Charter of Rights.

I might add that the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre in his speech—and I listened very carefully and enjoyed what he had to say—raised some very pertinent questions with respect to the definition of property and all of those factors. However, his entire speech caused me to remember most of the constitutional debate, and I took careful note at that time to attend as much of the House proceedings as I could. I recall very clearly the process which was going on in the committee stage when the committee was meeting over in Room 200. I recall very graphically that one Thursday evening the Conservative Party had been pressing the Government for an addition or amendmment to the charter which would include the entrenchment of property rights. It so happened that the then Minister of Justice, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), did agree to that amendment to include property rights in the Constitution. Members of the New Democratic Party went home over the weekend and conferred with their colleagues, particularly those in the Province of Saskatchewan. Those Hon. Members came back after the weekend and said, "Look, if you entrench property rights in the Constitution, we will withdraw our support for the entire package". Considering the cozy arrangement which existed between the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party at that time, and more or less exists yet perhaps, and that it was very important to the Liberal Government of that day to have the support of the New Democratic Party, the former Minister of Justice withdrew his commitment to have property rights included in the Constitution.

• (1740)

So you have to ask yourself, why would the New Democratic Party, or any Party in the House, be opposed to property rights in the Constitution? The answer comes back very quickly. It is because of its attitude to property in the first place, its notion of the state and its ability to get into central planning and national goals, to all of which property rights are very important. In the socialist way of thinking you really cannot come to grips with national goals, national planning, a totally planned economy, if you do not own all the ingredients.

Mr. Althouse: In that case we would be in favour of putting it in the federal sphere.

Mr. Friesen: So that becomes very important to the socialist scheme of things. I do not fault them; at least they are consistent about that. But he hearkened back to why people are so concerned about it. I can tell you that there are at least two reasons why people are concerned about it. Since I come from British Columbia I can state the B.C. experience.

In the fall of 1972, the people of British Columbia elected a socialist Government under the leadership of Premier Dave Barrett. Now I think that, all in all, there are some things which Mr. Barrett did that were all right. But the single move he made during his regime which probably hurt him and the whole NDP concept in British Columbia most was that of freezing all property sales in B.C. I think the Hon. Member is correct that one of the problems we face in that province is the very restricted access we have to good agricultural land. Since 95 per cent of the province is mountainous, prime agricultural land is at a premium. We have a right to be very worried about how much of that is going to be destroyed by industrialization or poor planning. In that sense I do not fault Mr. Barrett for making that move. But he did what is intuitive to the socialist frame of mind. He did not simply freeze the sale of farm land, he froze every square inch of property in the entire province of British Columbia.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Now he works for the CBC.

Mr. Friesen: You see, it was not necessary to freeze someone's 33-foot lot in the heart of Vancouver. It was not necessary to freeze the industrial-commercial sections of any city. If he wanted to attack the problem, he could have done that very easily by addressing himself to a background study of what prime agricultural land we need to preserve if we are to provide an inheritance for our children. That was a legitimate concern on his part, and if he wanted to do that, he could have done it. But rather than that, he did the instinctive thing and moved in on the entire province.

What were the consequences, Mr. Speaker? Instead of preserving the land for our children, it had the effect of robbing the children of that inheritance. As soon as he froze land sales, it made land an item in short supply and in great demand. Overnight, property values mushroomed in value. Our children who wanted to buy property in the next few years could not afford it.

Mr. Althouse: In 1974 they mushroomed all over.

Mr. Friesen: So in a matter of years there was a shortage of land which could be developed because it was not properly planned, and the very people Mr. Barrett wanted to protect were robbed of that protection. So I say that the people of British Columbia have very good reason for wanting to see some kind of protection for their property rights in the Constitution.

It may well be, Mr. Speaker, that the nature of property has to be defined. There has to be a lot more thought given to it, as the Hon. Member suggests. It may be true that the definition of property rights should go far beyond the amount of land you may own. But the fact is that the people have a need for a sense of security, and if they feel that any government or corporation, but particularly government, can move in, then they have a feeling of insecurity, and that hurts the country.

The second experience we should draw on is that of the Member's own province. I cannot say that Mr. Blakeney's Government moved in the same way that Mr. Barrett's Government did. It took a different approach. It simply bought up the land. By the time he was moved out of office a couple of years ago, I believe the NDP Government of Saskatchewan had bought something like one million acres of land.

Mr. Althouse: Should they not have that right?

Mr. Friesen: Well, do they not have that right? You see—

Mr. Althouse: Should they not?

Mr. Friesen: When you are getting into people—

Mr. Althouse: Rights for whom?

Mr. Friesen: It is a matter of rights, but it is also a matter of power. The fellow who owns two quarter sections of land which he values very much has a hard time resisting an offer from a government which has a seemingly endless supply of money and can overprice the land and buy the property. The Government has power which citizens cannot always resist.

Mr. Althouse: Virtually all the government-bought land was below market.

Mr. Friesen: I am not saying that the Blakeney Government did anything illegal or wrong in a legal sense. All I am saying is that there is a nervousness among people who are accustomed to and feel the need to own property for an enduring sense of security when big government can, willy-nilly, move in and take over their property. I recall a statement by an eastern European living in Saskatchewan. He took part in some kind of an interview in that election campaign and he said, "look, when I came to Canada I didn't come because the Government promised me that it would provide land for me; I came because I could come here and make it". You see, it is the freedom of opportunity that is at stake.

The Hon. Member goes on to say that the one area of confiscation that stands out in the memories of all of us is the experience of the Japanese-Canadians. I would remind him that, as far as I know, and I stand to be corrected, but I do not think I need to be, those Japanese who lived beyond 100 miles from the coast did not lose their property. It was only those Japanese who lived along the coastal areas, if I am right, who lost their property. So it was a matter of security arrangements, right or wrong, that were made at the time. I think it was wrong the way they were treated and I am not absolving the Government of the day or any of the people involved. The point is that they did lose their property. The Hon. Member said that the German people did not. Well, not all the Japanese did either, I believe, Mr. Speaker. I want to point out to him that, according to testimony given before the Constitution Committee several years ago, the urgency behind the move to relocate those Japanese resulted from a request of the American Government. The American Government urged and pressured the Canadian Government to relocate those Japanese. That is why it was done. That makes me agree in part with the Hon. Member and makes me wonder why he should have supported the Constitution in the first place.

I think the Hon. Member has a point. The Charter of Rights in times of extreme emotion is not necessarily a guarantee that our rights are going to be protected. I would much rather have seen a Constitution that did nor have a Charter. I think we would have been much better protected under parliamentary common law and tradition than we are under a Charter which has enumerated rights. This is so for several reasons, one of which is that you never get to the end of the enumeration.

There is always another right which has to be added to the list. You never run out. The only people who profit as a result of that are lawyers. We are going to become a nation of litigants as a result of the Charter of Rights, and that is a tragedy. All of my lawyer friends, who used to be my friends, are reacting to what I say. We used to be able to solve a lot of our people problems through discussion, election campaigns, and mediation. Now we go to court and are protaganists. That is not a healthy sign for us. The list is going to grow. Every year there will be another right that people will want to have entrenched. They believe, falsely, that that will protect them.

• (1750)

The other reason that I think the Charter is not a protection is that it is written the wrong way. It is written from the wrong perspective. At least the U.S. Bill of Rights is written from the perspective of people limiting the power of government. The Canadian Charter of Rights is the government extending a list of rights to the people. That is wrong. It is an underlying weakness of our Charter.

I am saying to the Hon. Member that there are problems and that a charter is not necessarily going to protect us. Even though we include this in the Charter it will not necessarily protect us. However, we do have the Charter and we have to live with it. Therefore, let us take those realistic items that the Canadian people believe ought to be included and list them in that Charter. The Member says that there are no problems with the existing system. I have said already that the existing system is not the one we are accustomed to. We are in a transitional period from common law to constitutional law. We are moving into a new regime. We are in kind of amorphous state at this point.

We have historically been an agrarian nation with fairly small government. In the last couple of decades we have become more populated and certainly more cosmopolitan. We now have a Government that is growing and has grown for the last couple of decades. In my view the purpose of the Charter ought not to be so much to protect us from each other, but to protect us from the Government. That was the entire purpose of the U.S. Bill of Rights; to protect people from an ominous, overriding and bullying government. If the Charter is going to function in any logical and responsible way, that is what it ought to do for us. The Canadian Government is growing year by year. It certainly has done so in the last two decades. Canadian citizens need to feel that there is a limitation upon Government, that it cannot willy-nilly encroach upon the rights of citizens.

I think it is important that in the historical experience of western countries the freedom and right to own property is integrally involved with political freedom. It is not that way around the world. I know there are regimes where that is not the case. In Africa, for example, there is a communal system. In western countries it is pretty well unanimously true that when you have the right to own property you also have political freedom because you can always be independent and make it on your own. In those countries where property has been taken away from the people, there is no political freedom. That is a fairly uniform experience in western countries.

The way to make people insecure is to take away their ability to look after themselves. They have no guarantee of being able to look after themselves if they do not have their own property. That is certainly the case in the eastern European countries.

It is important that we urge the Government that the inalienable and undeniable right to own property be entrenched, not to protect us from each other, but to protect us from a Government that becomes insensitive, loses its touch with people, and thinks it has its own reason for being. I commend the Member for Mississauga South for bringing this motion forward. I hope that we will soon see the day when these rights will be entrenched in our Constitution.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) for the concern that he has expressed about the entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution. This is a matter in which many Canadians are interested. It is for that reason, however, that I must agree that Private Members' Hour is not the appropriate forum for resolving this matter.

I, no less than my colleagues, am sympathetic in principle to the entrenchment of property rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. These rights are deserving of the protection they can be afforded by entrenchment in the Constitution. By entrenching property rights in the Constitution we would do two things. First, we would be making a statement about the importance of property rights and the value they hold for ordinary Canadians. Second, we would at the same time be providing Canadians with legal rights enforceable in our courts of law. Because the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is the supreme law of the land, these rights will prevail over laws enacted by Government where these laws infringe upon the enjoyment of the rights. The importance of these rights should therefore not be underestimated.

We in the Progressive Conservative Party do not underestimate the importance of entrenching property rights. Hon. Members have heard my colleagues speak of the continuing support of the Progressive Conservative Party for the entrenchment of property rights. This support was reiterated during the recent election campaign. During the campaign, in response to questions about this matter, the Conservative Party provided the following answer:

> A Progressive Conservative Government will consult with the provinces with a view to amending the constitution to recognize property rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, while ensuring that any such amendment does not adversely affect other bona fide rights of individuals (for example, in family law). We believe that the exercise of this right has been instrumental in the building of Canada and is a principle valued by the great majority of Canadians. As you know, the right to enjoyment of property is recognized in the Canadian Bill of Rights. We believe it should be part of our constitution.

I think this statement is a good indication of the depth of our commitment to the entrenchment of property rights.

The historical importance of property rights in our society is clear. It can be traced back as far as the Magna Carta in 1215. The development of property rights is linked with the development of our democratic institutions. This link was noted by the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta, (Mr. Siddon), who is now the Minister of State for Science and Technology, on the occasion of a motion to entrench property rights in the Constitution which was brought forward by the Progressive Conservative Party in 1983. The Hon. Member said, as reported at page 24,999 of Hansard for April 29, 1983.

If we go back in history we find that not only the right to own and enjoy property is fundamental to Canadian history. As the Hon. Member for Provencher pointed out, it goes back to the time of King John, the Magna Carta and the constant struggle through history, which went hand in hand with the evolution of the parliamentary system and with the evolution of property rights and individual rights as a means of escape from monarchism, feudalism and the baronial entitlements, previous systems under which some citizens had many more rights, powers and privileges than others.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

RESEARCH—CANCELLATION OF PROPOSED WINNIPEG MANUFACTURING RESEARCH CENTRE. (B) GOVERNMENT POLICY ON CONSULTATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on the adjournment motion with respect to a question I raised in the House on November 14, but which has a currency that surpasses the elapse of time because it is a matter that is still of very important consequences for the economic development of this country and the economic growth of my own region of Manitoba.

Last week I had the opportunity to present a petition in the House which was signed by over 1,000 residents of the City of Winnipeg asking the federal Government once again to reconsider its decision to close and cut back the major development of the National Research Industrial Technology Laboratory in Winnipeg. I think that by this time the reasons for that are well known, but what is not so clear is the fact that this particular development met every single criteria that was put forward in the statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

What I could not determine during the Question Period is why a project that met the test of consultation, met the test of research and development, that met the test of new economic growth and development in fact was rejected by the Tory Government.

A brief history might just recall to members' minds what took place. The NRC laboratory was based upon consultation that had gone on for over four years between business, labour, universities, the provincial Government and the federal Government. The objective of that centre was to establish in western Canada an industrial technology laboratory that would provide a stimulus for new manufacturing technology for all of Canada. It would give us the capacity and ability to compete internationally to sell our products abroad and help in particular our small business people to develop new industrial techniques to meet overseas competition.

Furthermore, it was located in a western Canadian city to make sure that the benefits of high technology were not concentrated in just one or two regions of Canada, but in fact shared and distributed equally across Canada.

Furthermore, it was part and parcel of the major downtown development program that would bring new workers into that downtown area and therefore enhance the over-all economic growth of that region. The building was already under construction. The research people had been hired. They were already in Winnipeg undertaking research at the university.

What is more important, over four major companies, some of which were from California in the United States and other places, had decided to locate brand new manufacturing facilities in Winnipeg as a result of the decision to locate the laboratory in that city. This would have provided new jobs for Canada. It would have provided new manufacturing technology for Canada and would have provided a major stimulus for the growth of Manitoba. It would have given hope to young people coming out of our universities and training colleges that there was a place to go. Instead, the Government cancelled the project.

To the credit of people in Manitoba, they have not given up on that. They have not accepted that decision. A number of organizations, the university, the Chamber of Commerce and a coalition of citizens continue to make representations. As their Member of Parliament, I am here once again to make that representation and have the Government once again rethink the project, come to its senses and recognize that the cancellation of that project did nothing but hurt Manitoba, Winnipeg and the country.

I would suggest to members, as I have tried during Question Period, that, if the Government is so wedded to its notion that the federal Government should not be totally committed to paying for the National Research centre, it should at least accept the proposal that we establish research co-op. I suggest that we work out an arrangement whereby the universities, the business community and the governments would share responsibility for that lab and its development and projection and share responsibilty for developing an economic plan for that region growing out of the institute's research facility. On the basis of the Government's own argument for consultation and co-operation, surely it could at least accept the proposal which is being made by the broad community of the Province of Manitoba representing all sectors.

• (1805)

Time is of essence. The longer the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) drag out the decision and the longer they keep things hanging, the more we will lose those businesses which were planning to locate there, the more we will lose the scientists and engineers who came to Winnipeg to work in that laboratory, and the more we will lose the opportunity for young people to plan their careers in relation to the facilities which the laboratory would have stimulated.

Not only is my intervention at this time a plea for the Government to respond to the proposals for a research co-op, but to respond with a degree of clarity and quickness. If it simply holds out and continues with no answer to the requests and entreaties of members of that community, many of the benefits will be lost and the opportunity for the Province of Manitoba to meet and plan for a new economic future will also be lost. My intervention this evening is simply to say to the representative of the Minister that it is time to take some action and to make some decisions so that Manitoba can go ahead and do some decent planning for the future of its people.

Mr. Bernard Valcourt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the decision to end the ongoing funding of the Institute for Manufacturing Technology in Manitoba was not an easy one for the Government to take. As with many of the difficult decisions announced on November 8, the Government was merely confronting the unpleasant fact that in the presence of the growing national debt we cannot afford to do everything we would like to do.

The ongoing operating costs associated with the Institute of Manufacturing Technology would have been in excess of $20 million per year. It is clear that the previous Government had not adequately considered this expense when it approved the capital project.

Last November 14, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) asked about the impact of the decision affecting the institute. In response I would point out that it would be difficult for anyone to ascribe credibly a specific impact to the decision. I say this because those involved with the project are still struggling to define the type of research and the kinds of equipment the institute would have. As the Hon. Member will know, the previous Government was criticized by the Wright Task Force, the CMA, the Senate Committee on National Finance and others, for its policies with respect to technology centres, and IMT was often cited specifically as a concern.

It was in this context that the November 8 decision was taken. Nevertheless, the federal Government recognizes the importance of manufacturing technology. It acknowledges the efforts of many well-meaning people associated with IMT. Thus the Minister is pursuing a number of initiatives aimed at keeping manufacturing technology expertise at NRC.

In addition, construction contracts associated with the project will be honoured, and this will see the building substantially completed. As the Minister said in Winnipeg last November, the building offers considerable potential and the Government is determined to see it put to productive use, notwithstanding the financial constraints facing the country. In this regard the Minister has invited the private sector and the provincial Government to participate in the staffing and the operation of the facility.

This proposal holds tremendous promise. As I mentioned before, the task force on federal policies and programs for technology development, the Senate Committee on Science and Technology and other bodies have stressed the need to increase the linkage between government in-house research activity and the private sector applications of the fruits of this research. The Government believes that the private sector is more likely to take an interest in research and use it if it has a financial interest in the activity. It is for this reason that we are optimistic about the Minister's initiative in relation to the Winnipeg institute.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—PROPOSED WEATHER SERVICE INFORMATION CHARGE. (B) METHOD OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my reasons for requesting clarification of a question I asked in the House some time ago of the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) are quite simple. I blamed the cuts on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), but the Minister of the Environment was good enough to stand up in the House last week and say that it was not the Minister of Finance, but she who cut the programs in her Department. Therefore the Minister of the Environment is solely responsible for those cuts that did not make any sense at all.

The Minister announced that she was going to charge Canadians for picking up the telephone and dialing atmospheric environment; charge people for dialing the weather office. She announced at the same time that she would do away with guided tours in national parks. There are going to be self-guided tours, whatever they may be.

When I asked the Minister whether she was going to charge people for telephoning the weather office, she verified that. I then asked about the changing weather patterns in this country, and how they affect the farmers of western Canada, fishermen in eastern Canada, the travelling public on our highways in the north and in other parts of Canada. With our ever changing weather conditions they need frequent updates other than just those available from the media. The Minister said in cases of health and safety they will not be charged. In response to a direct question her words were that fishermen would not be charged.

The Minister was really on the spot then. How do you determine who is to be charged, and who will make that judgment? Bell Canada will not be a collection agency for the Government of Canada, collecting money for telephone calls, using some kind of a means test. Obviously the employees in the weather office cannot question every caller. If they did it would take time, and even then how could they verify the information. What is a legitimate call? Will they check the social insurance number of every caller to determine whether he is a fisherman, farmer of someone travelling on the highway? How can that be verified?

In announcing these ill-advised cuts the Minister reversed some of her decisions. For example, she reversed the decision on the study of the effect of toxic substances on Herring-gull eggs. That and various other programs in that area will now be continued. I do not want the Minister to reverse this decision the way she reversed that decision. She re-instituted a one person year to carry out the program of all of these people who were cut in the Canadian Wildlife Service. Let the Minister try and deny that. She cannot.

The Minister made a statement to the media today that she would phase in the program on the herring-gull eggs on April 1. That is rather confusing because the cuts were not supposed to take effect until April 1. I do not want the Minister to state here today that she is going to reverse the decision to charge people for telephoning the weather office in the way she made the reversals on the other cuts that she announced. That does not mean anything.

I want the Minister to explain how she will carry out this policy of charging Canadians for phoning the local weather office. How will the interpretation process of whether health and safety is involved be handled? I feel quite confident that she will stand and say they are really not going to charge for that, or that everybody who phones the weather office will be charged, thereby going back on the statement she made in the House during Question Period. It has to be one way or the other. It cannot be as she stated publicly in this House because that is unworkable. I am very interested to hear what the Minister has to say, and I am very pleased that she attends the late show. I look forward to her retracting that charge on the Canadian public.

[Translation]

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thank my obliging colleague for giving me this opportunity to outline in this House the measures we will be taking to get the funds that will help us complement our weather services. You have noticed that my colleague, who had very kind remarks for me before Christmas, has been all smiles when asking his question, even though his tone of voice was outrageously shocked. I remember only the smile.

Mr. Speaker, weather information provided to the general public and to special user groups such as farmers and fishermen is already available through the media, and especially the electronic press, that is radio, TV and cable television. Maritime weather forecasts for instance, including warnings, are available through the Canadian Coast Guard's marine bands which continuously broadcast them. Thus are categorized the various user groups.

Environment Canada has established radio stations which broadcast weather information 24 hours a day over a special frequency from the 13 most important centres in this country. In the four Atlantic Provinces, provincial governments cooperate financially with us in making this service available to a greater number of users through automatic answering service. This is to reassure my colleague and suggest to him that general weather information is available, through one or the other of those means, to the vast majority of Canadians.

But there are also people who sometimes want additional information, for instance statistics on past weather conditions, weather conditions in other areas of the country or abroad, more specific details on forecasts, or who simply find it more convenient to get such information over the telephone. Because of their limited or specialized scope, such services should not be paid by all Canadians, because they are now paid for out of public funds. People requesting such additional services from now on will have to pay a small fee to get them. This is only fair in my view. For the first year starting in 1985, we expect to collect $1.3 million in this way.

A task force has been set up within the Department to decide on program conditions and determine the services the Government will continue to provide to the media for distribution to the public, as has been done during the past 100 years. Special attention will be paid to maintaining the quality of the weather information services and the implementation of a system of fees that will be realistic, efficient and compensatory.

STATUS OF WOMEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) ELECTION CAMPAIGN STATEMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, if we are to believe the Minister of Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), the government's financial burden has hit Canada's environment the hardest. How incredible!

Mr. Speaker, I think I will go on to another issue and a question which I raised with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) almost two months ago. Hon. Members and Canadians generally are well aware of the promises made by our Prime Minister during the historic debate on women's issue which was seen by TV viewers in Quebec and in the rest of Canada, in fact all Canadian saw it. In the course of that debate with the three party leaders, our Prime Minister made some promises to Canadian women, promises which indeed had to do with the question of equal pay for equal work, and yet this Government, which has now been in office for about five months, has not done anything for Canadian women—all we have heard so far were the empty words uttered by the Prime Minister. He fancies himself as an actor or a comedian, a kind of Johnny Carson who does not really want to respond to the Canadian people, especially not to the women of Canada whose economic needs are so real.

When the issue of equal pay for equal work is raised, Mr. Speaker, one thinks immediately in terms of the 10 per cent of the Canadian labour force which comes under federal jurisdiction. A simple glance at the Canadian banking scene reveals that women workers, particularly at the federal and provincial levels, earn roughly 60 cents for every $1 earned by male workers.

The Government, the Minister and the Prime Minister did promise Canadian women that, the minute they got elected, they would do something right then and there to settle that problem.

● (1820)

[English]

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made promises to the women of Canada promises upon which the election campaign was built. He told the women of Canada that the moment he was elected tens upon thousands of jobs would be created for Canadians and that the women of Canada would see not only a fair application of equal pay for work of equal value, but that they would also see contract compliance at the federal level, and that people who wanted to do business with the Government would have to toe the line. During the debate last August he said, "J'irai plus loin".

We can see—as we saw in the white paper tabled today which considers the removal of universality of benefits to families who earn $28,000 or more a year—that it is just another shallow promise by a shallow Prime Minister and a shallow Government which have no intention of delivering on the promises made to the women of Canada.

All partisan politics aside, the women of Canada showed during the constitutional debate in 1982 that they would not take a second stage or a second seat to anyone. The women rallied on all political sides—Liberals, Conservatives, New Democrats and non-partisans—to ensure that the women of Canada were given equal rights under the Constitution, against the thrashings, groanings and moanings of the premiers of the Progressive Conservative persuasion in Canada. The women of Canada will not be silent. They are looking at this Government. They are judging the Prime Minister, not on the basis of his verbiage, of which there is plenty, but on the basis of his action.

If we look at the economic results which have occurred since September 4, the political results, and the unfulfilled promises made to the women of Canada, it is clear that this is a Government with a Prime Minister who had no intention of keeping the promises, who did not deserve the trust of Canadian women or the vote of the Canadian people, and who will be roundly chastised by the voters when they have an opportunity to return a Liberal Government. A Liberal Government will deliver on its promises in a way which the Conservatives have shown they are unable and unwilling to do. The women of Canada will wait four years and will continue to fight for the equality which has been denied them by the Government and the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister has not even bothered to show up in the House for this very important issue.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the question raised today by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is of critical importance, but I really wish she could raise it more calmly and less aggressively. If she did, we women could perhaps get better results.

It is a fact that the principle of equal pay for work of equal value is essential for women to gain economic equality. As the Hon. Member is aware, two departments and one agency—

Ms. Copps: I did not need to read my statement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should know, two departments and one government agency are responsible for applying the principle of equal pay for work of equal value within the Public Service. First of all, as the employer for the whole Public Service, the Treasury Board has the overall responsibility of determining rates of pay. The Department of Labour keeps employers informed about government policies and encourages them to recognize the problems which can exist in the workplace and to find mutually agreeable solutions. Finally, the Canadian Human Rights Commission receives the complaints lodged by employees coming under federal jurisdiction who were unable to obtain satisfaction from their employers.

I wish to emphasize that, to this date, four types of complaints laid by members of the Public Service have been settled to their satisfaction. The employees involved were able to obtain a satisfactory settlement in every case. It is only recently that one case had to be referred to a panel of the Human Rights Commission.

Legislation guaranteeing equal pay for work of equal value has existed since 1977. However, these measures by themselves are not enough. They have to be applied efficiently. In the Speech from the Throne we find a commitment by the new Government guaranteeing compliance with the principle or equal pay in all sectors under federal jurisdiction. The Minister responsible for the Status of Women has already written to his colleagues, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), with a view to initiating discussions to ensure that Canadian women will achieve economic equality in the workplace. This will happen eventually and as soon as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.26 p.m., the House adjourned.

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, January 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and on the motion of Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg) (p. 1708).

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to oppose the motion that was moved yesterday by the Government. The motion in question is intended to choke off debate at a most inappropriate time. Certainly when we are dealing with a measure of the importance claimed for the Bill to create Investment Canada, by the Government, I would submit that the measure would require the widest and deepest possible consideration, not only in committee but in the formal stages of debate here in the House.

Instead of allowing this debate to continue, instead of allowing Members of the House to have the fullest opportunity to express their views and concerns during the second reading stage, the Government has moved an amendment to have the previous question put, thereby shutting off the opportunity that would otherwise exist for Members of the House to offer reasoned amendments and to bring about a vote on second reading. I submit that this is most inappropriate and most untimely. This motion deserves to be rejected by the House.

Aside from the reason I have already stated, that the motion is designed to choke off debate on second reading before Members of the House feel they have had adequate time to express their views at this stage, another reason to oppose this motion is that the Bill itself has not been shown to be one worthy of the support of the House. The debate that has gone on over the past several weeks, rather than strengthening the case made for the Bill by the Government, has, in my view, done just the opposite.

In proposing to Parliament the Bill to create Investment Canada, the Government has given as a reason for it the notion that the creation of Investment Canada would in itself cause a massive flow into Canada of the kind of investment needed to create jobs and bring about economic growth. However, it is most interesting to note that after the Bill was presented to the House for second reading, a number of articles appeared in the press examining this very question. The articles all came to the conclusion that the Bill itself would not really do anything to bring to Canada the kind of investment we continue to need in order to create jobs and generally improve the economy.

The articles in question pointed out, as I did in an earlier speech in the House, that what brings investment to a country or community is the view of the potential investor that there are profits to be made and that there are markets to be filled. In other words, investment is brought to a community when there are demands for the products or services intended to be created by the investment, demands sufficient that these products or services can be sold at a profit. The Investment Canada Bill does nothing whatsoever to improve the prospects for investors of making a profit through investing in Canada, whether they are foreign or Canadian investors. This Bill does nothing to improve the conditions in the Canadian economy which would lead investors to believe that they have a reasonable chance to make a profit beyond the situation existing at present.

Let me outline some of these factors and try to relate them to the Bill. One of the factors is the extent of capacity utilization in the Canadian economy, that is to say, the extent to which there are factories which are not being used fully to produce goods and the extent to which there are facilities which are not being used fully to produce and distribute services in the Canadian economy. The facts are clear. There is a very high rate of unused industrial capacity in the country, and this Bill does nothing whatsoever to bring about the increased usage of the unused industrial capacity.

Another factor is the rate of profit which is already being earned, or expected to be earned, by business in Canada. There are many in the business community who feel that there has not been a sufficient recovery in profits from the lows which they reached during the recession to justify vastly increased new investments. There is nothing in the Bill to increase the rate of return, or the prospects of an improved rate of return, for business in Canada which would lead business to decide to make further investments in the Canadian economy.

In addition, one of the problems which business has been given for not being willing to increase investment in Canada is the high rate of debt that has been built up and which clutters the balance sheets of business in the country. It is a hangover from the last recession. Until business feels that there is a better ratio in its balance sheets between debt and assets, and until the debt situation is under better control, business will continue to be inhibited when it comes to investment decisions. I reiterate that the Investment Canada Bill does nothing to help the problem of excessive debt which still clutters the balance sheets of too many companies in Canada.

We do not simply want to see more investment from abroad; we want to see more investment by Canadians so that they will have the opportunity to benefit from the development of the resources, capacities and skills which are found in their country. Canadians have the wherewithal to invest more fully in Canada, if one looks at the very high level of savings as a percentage of the Gross National Product. Canada has a rate of savings which is somewhat greater than, and possibly double, that of the rate of savings in the United States. There is nothing in the Bill which would bring about increased opportunities for investment in the economy by Canadians. There is nothing in the Bill to encourage Canadians to use their high level of savings to invest in Canadian opportunities. Although the Bill gives some superficial lip service to the idea of encouraging investment, there is nothing in it to bring about that concrete result when it comes to investment by Canadians or investment by other people.

There has been no indication to the Opposition or to Canadians generally in the speeches of government Members in the debate on second reading thus far that this Bill will bring about the flow of investment which the Government says will result, the kind of investment which continues to be needed to create jobs and bring about an expansion of the Canadian economy. Spokesmen for business who were quoted in the press, including a recent article in the Financial Post, continue to confirm that the level of investment expected in this country will be weak compared to the level at which it was in past years under Liberal Governments.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment before this House should be rejected so that government Members will have a better opportunity to make their case as to what this Bill will accomplish for Canada, because they have not made that case as yet. In fact, they have not done anything to undermine the basic point which I and others have made, that is that this Investment Canada Bill, rather than bringing benefits to Canadians in terms of jobs, investment, research and development, will have just the opposite effect. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, until the Government can persuade us and the Canadian people in this second reading debate that this Bill deserves to go forward, it should not do so. The second reading debate should continue and this motion should be soundly rejected.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, what we are dealing with here is a Bill which has been fairly called "a Bill to sell our country out". It is no wonder that the Government is in such a hurry to end the debate with a gag motion. It would rather that Canadians do not hear that this Bill will in effect help foreign businessmen, especially from the major trading partner, the United States, to come in, buy up our businesses and then shut them down as was done at the Black and Decker plant.

We do not need this Bill. We do not need to weaken FIRA; we need to strengthen it and make it more like the anti-dumping tribunal. We need an opportunity for public representations to be made on the question of a takeover by the company which wants to do so, stating its position and reasons and what it will commit itself to do for the country from which it proposes to make a profit. We need statements from the workers and statements from the communities which will be affected. There would then be an opportunity for new commitments to be worked out or, at the least, an opportunity for the community to know what its future is.

However, this Bill does not propose anything of the sort. Instead, this Bill follows the line taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the fall and the Minister who moved it, "that Canada needs foreign cash", and there is the unspoken statement that, "we will do anything at all to get it on a short-term basis". The device which is being used now is to make the review more secret, more limited—in fact, limited to one man. That is not what we need, Mr. Speaker. That is how we got into our present trouble.

There has been a great rush of foreign investment into Canada ever since 1945, the end of World War II. I remember that when we came out of the Forces the slogan was "full employment". We all remembered the dirty thirties, we all remembered the hobos riding on the railway cars going east and going west, all of them looking for jobs which were not there. I remember our church collecting pots and pans for a desperate family who were going back to some piece of farm land in Manitoba that was so poor it was empty at the time. I remember my half brother, Bill, working in the Winnipeg soup kitchen. He thought he was lucky to have the opportunity to work the midnight shift as a cleaner, and talked about the men slashing their wrists. I remember my Dad saying to a neighbour, "If war was declared today, I guess you'd have a job tomorrow". In 1945 we did not want to go back to that. So the doors were opened wide to foreign investment which was supposed to be the solution to our problems. During that period, when foreign investment ruled, unemployment rose from less than 3 per cent to about 12 per cent. Unemployment quadrupled in this land during the four decades when foreign investment ruled. It was a short-range solution, or what some people have called a quick fix. It apparently worked for a few years, and now we are having the long-term pain for that short-term gain. Canada was mortgaged to the United States.

This massive increase of foreign investment meant that there was no commitment to keeping Canadian plants open. We had forgotten what happened in the 1930s when foreign owners shut down their plants in Canada, because for a few years Canada and the U.S. were almost the only countries in the world able to sell manufactured products after World War

II. Things looked easy. We did not understand what was coming until the late 1950s. Under the Diefenbaker Government, the last Tory Government which lasted for more than a few months, we had tight money, bankruptcies, and rising unemployment. Remember how immigrants were harassed in the name of unemployment? All the while the U.S. was taking over our industries, so that now they own or control 51 per cent of our manufacturing and we have lost hundreds of thousands of jobs in the last couple of years. They own 98 per cent of the rubber industry and 51 per cent of agriculture. When I grew up in Canada I understood that this was an agricultural country. One thing Canadians could do was to feed ourselves and others. Now we have lost control of 51 per cent of Canadian agriculture and there is nothing to say that we will not be in the position of some other countries some day when the food is grown here but exported while Canadians go hungry.

Some 92 per cent of transportation equipment, 70 per cent of electrical products and 71 per cent of chemicals are controlled by the U.S.

Therefore, the top 50 companies in Canada can be analysed this way. U.S.-owned companies lost twice as many jobs in Canada as Canadian-owned companies during 1982 and 1983. Why? Of firms with over 500 employees it has been found that the Canadian-owned firms spent ten times as big a proportion of their profits on research and development as the foreign-owned companies did. Graduates of the University of Toronto are hunting for jobs, and the reason for the cut-back in research jobs is that the foreign owned companies do not do their research in Canada. Yet the Minister proposes to open the way for more takeovers and he does not want the U of T graduates to know what he is doing in time to protest.

Foreign firms are pumping money out of Canada. The U.S. companies, which represent 36 per cent of all corporate assets here, account for 61 per cent of remittances abroad. In other words, when small business is looking for capital we are being starved by the foreign-owned industries. One third of the tax revenue which should have come to us from the computer manufacturing industry was diverted by companies which played the international pricing game between factories.

We are not, Mr. Speaker, getting what was promised to us in this American takeover of Canadian industries. They are not creating more jobs. For a few years after World War II it appeared to be so, but in fact it is not so, and that is why we have been in such severe trouble for the last three or four years. We do not need an increased takeover of our factories which, as the previous speaker pointed out, are not even operating at full capacity. A foreigner owner would be happy to shut them down completely, probably. What we need is greater protection of the Canadian worker and potential owner of industry who wants to develop industries which will work here in Canada and create jobs for Canadians.

The experience of other countries is just like that of Canada but more intensive. It has gone further because they were weaker to start with. Take a country like the Philippines. In 10 years of this kind of program, foreign control of investment capital and the import-export policies of their government, they have had their real wages cut in half. Workers with only half the money cannot pay the price for rice, which means that the price of rice going to the farmers was cut in half. The result in the Philippines was poverty, repression, assassination, and riots. We are not close to that in Canada yet. We have only growing poverty and some hints of repression through the secret service Bill of the last Government.

This has not been happening only in the Philippines. The same process was carried on in the same years in South Korea and in Central and South America under the rule of the International Monetary Fund. In all cases there were Governments in place which agreed to allow growing foreign takeovers of industries, either directly or through loans from the IMF and western banks. In all cases unemployment and poverty have grown to desperate proportions. In all cases they are looking at possible bankruptcies.

We do not need this gag motion to end this debate. We need to let the public know what is happening.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, Tuesday, December 11, 1984 will live as a day of infamy. On that day the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) introduced Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada to be read a second time and referred to committee. With those and many other words he set out to dismantle the progress that we have made over the decades to make this country a place where greater control is held by Canadian entrepreneurs and workers.

January 28, 1985, yesterday, will also be remembered as a day of betrayal. On that day the Government and the Tory Party undertook to invoke closure to prevent this debate from continuing so that we would not be able to discuss what was at stake with this most important issue. Some feel that this may challenge the very independence of Canada. Those of us in the Opposition know that it will threaten our independence as a nation and affect our sovereignty. Therefore, a great deal is at stake in this debate.

When the Tory Party was in opposition it was very jealous of its right to debate every Bill at great length. The members spoke of the importance of freedom of information, consultation and dialogue. We now see that that same Tory Party, which was on this side of the House such a short time ago, has already betrayed the promises it made to the electorate of Canada that it would form an open government ready to listen and debate. Unlike the Liberal Government, it was going to take its time and listen to people's opinions. Already, such a short time after the opening of the House of Commons, although we have passed quite a number of Bills, we see on this vital Bill impatience to choke off debate in the House of Commons. It is rather sad to see them try to silence the voice of a small Opposition which is trying to sound a note of caution and concern on behalf of a large number of Canadians who have supported this program for years with their votes and views. This is no unimportant matter and therefore does deserve the serious consideration of the House of Commons.

● (1130)

We now discover that we will be unable to carry on this debate. Unfortunately, in the Conservative's presentation on this important subject, they have been misrepresenting the facts about FIRA and the effects of the Foreign Investment Review Act on Canada. We believe that we have ample evidence to show that it has had a beneficial effect on Canada and a beneficial effect on Canadians.

Let us look at the facts as shown by the statistics. In the ten years prior to the inception of FIRA, from 1964 to 1973, new direct foreign investment in the form of takeovers and other transactions flowed into Canada at a rate of approximately $700 million per annum. Since FIRA has been in force, from 1974 to 1984, the average has been about $1.4 billion per year rather than $700 million. This represents a substantial increase in investments since the time FIRA came into effect.

Over the past four years, the new direct foreign investment figures averaged over $2 billion. In 1983 alone, interest rates were seen as being historically high in comparison to U.S. rates especially. As well, larger firms were retrenching and rationalizing and pulling back. There was a long-term net capital inflow into Canada of $2.8 billion in that difficult year. The facts just simply do not bear out this mythology that has been set forth by the Tory Party about the dangers of FIRA.

As a matter of fact, although the Conservatives often refer to $17 billion in equity capital that has left the country since the introduction of the National Energy Program, the truth of the matter is that over this period there was an aggregate net capital inflow to Canada of $21 billion.

Although it is true that there was an outflow of money from Canada as a result of the NEP, it is largely the result of successful takeover bids by Canadian firms for foreign-owned oil subsidiaries, which considerably increased Canadian ownership of the oil and gas industry. Those who are doubtful need only consider the fact that the Canadian ownership of the petroleum industry has increased considerably during that period for a relatively small outflow of funds.

It cost us money to buy back what we believe we deserve to own, and Canadians supported that buy-back as well as the idea that Canadians should exploit their own country and derive a major benefit from the resources that belong to Canada. We do not apologize at all for that reality.

Moreover, since 1974, the Foreign Investment Review Agency has approved 92 per cent of all applications. Procedures were streamlined in the June, 1982, budget and the approval rate is currently around 97 per cent. That can hardly be called a stringent discouragement to foreign investment.

FIRA exists to ensure that foreign investment will benefit Canada and Canadians and it achieves this by considering the potential investments in a number of dimensions, such as the effects of foreign investment on economic activity, the degree of participation by Canadians, and provincial needs and compatibility with national industrial policies.

All through FIRA's existence, the federal Government has consulted with the provinces on every foreign investment application. Rather than some arbitrary action, it has consulted with the provinces on every application. In the past nine years, the provinces have disagreed with the federal Government on less than 3 per cent of investment applications.

Although most countries do not have a centralized foreign investment review system, they certainly do not have an open door policy on foreign investment. Many countries, including the United States, review investment with legislative provisions and administrative procedures. Canada is one of the few countries in the world that openly outlines investment regulations.

A recent study by the Brooking Institution shows that 35 per cent of U.S. manufactured goods are protected by quotas and buy-American rules and other non-tariff restrictions. It also shows that this protection in the United States has risen by 15 per cent in the last three years of the Reagan rule. While our boy scouts in the Tory Government do their good deeds for the United States and open the door to the U.S. and foreign investors, the Government has had the door slammed in its face by U.S. protectionism.

We regard this kind of debate as vital to our independence, our sovereignty and the interests of our people. We are concerned about unemployment and the fact that foreign takeovers close plants in this country and throw people out of work overnight. We regard this debate as one that should continue and one in which the Government should explain why our anxieties are unfounded and prove to us what it will do to protect Canadians from these dangers. I am deeply disappointed that the Government sees fit to cut off this debate on one of the most important topics that the House of Commons could consider.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it is rather disillusioning to be taking part in a debate on an issue which Canadians believe their national Government began to address more than a decade ago with the establishment of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. At that time Canadians believed the federal Government was addressing the issue of domination of the Canadian economy, primarily by the United States.

If members of the Conservative Party believe that Canadians are no longer concerned about foreign domination of our economy as well as of other areas, they are entirely wrong. I cannot understand how the Conservatives could have gone through an election campaign without realizing that one of the most important assurances that young Canadians wanted was that Canada will remain an independent nation with its own salience on the international scene. Perhaps they view this Bill as salutory if they think there might be great economic opportunities for them in becoming totally integrated with the U.S. economy and becoming almost entirely a branch plant economy. However, they should also take into account the realization that a Bill such as this will not in fact provide them with the economic opportunities they seek. All our young people feel, and they are right in feeling, that they are in a horrific double-bind. There is no longer any pride in Canada and no longer any hope for jobs and economic opportunities.

• (1140)

When the Foreign Investment Review Agency was set up, there was a feeling that at last Canada would have, at least in theory, a mechanism to ensure that some benefit to Canadians was derived from the domination of our resource industries and our secondary and manufacturing industries by multinationals. It is unfortunate that FIRA was never very clear on how to hold foreign countries to commitments to Canadian economic development. In fact, foreign ownership that FIRA allowed did not, as we know from reading all the statistics, provide very much, if any, real new investment in Canada. It was the case time and time again of foreign multinationals buying out existing Canadian companies and not creating new investment. Often they bought them out with our money, money they borrowed from Canadian banks, and did not create any new investment or any new jobs.

We argued many times over the past several years that there must be a genuine commitment from a foreign company to create real new investment and new jobs before the company is allowed to enter Canada, and that the commitment should be closely monitored. At least with all its failings we did have, and Canadians were proud that we had, a review agency that did not simply say that Canada is totally up for sale to foreign interests. It is disheartening for us in the New Democratic Party to witness the dismantling of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, and it is even more disheartening for us to hear the Government, when it tries to justify this measure, which these days is not very often, do so on the grounds that the foreign investment this Bill hopes to attract will somehow, without any controls over its use, provide jobs for Canadians.

As I have said, we know from our own past experience that without any controls or commitments no new jobs are provided for Canadians. If you look at the comments of my colleagues in this party, Mr. Speaker, you will see that they have repeatedly pointed out that of the top 50 companies in Canada the greatest number of jobs lost over the past two years has been from U.S.-owned companies.

One would think that if the Conservatives wanted to put a new face on old economic policies and if they wanted not to be seen entirely as the captives of international capitalism, they would propose something like the joint venture schemes in which we see countries like Sweden, Italy, China, and many others engaged. In those countries very serious and very important controls are exercised over foreign capital. Foreign capital is joined by domestic capital, and the domestic firm usually retains ownership or a significant ownership of the company engaged in the joint venture. As far as I know, the Government has not examined the joint venture operations that now exist in countries like Sweden, Italy, China, and even the United States.

I was looking at developments in the last year in the U.S. auto industry. I found that a large number of U.S. firms have joined forces with Japanese firms to manufacture products and components in Japan. The reverse is also occurring. Honda is making cars in Ohio and Nissan is making trucks in Tennessee. Hundreds of Japanese high-tech companies are entering into supply contracts with U.S. companies, opening plants, building laboratories, and funding research in the United States. This trend is forcing even the U.S. Government to prod companies doing business in the U.S. to invest in complex production using American workers, ensuring minimum employment levels and retaining research and development facilities. Why don't the Conservatives at least look at that kind of operation, at that kind of control of the operations of multinationals in Canada rather than simply giving away the whole shop? The Conservatives could get commitment for real new investment and real new jobs, but there is nothing in this Bill that makes it possible for such commitments to be extracted from multinational companies. The government obviously continues to be a puppet of international capitalism, just as it is of Cold War diplomacy.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I was going to speak on Bill C-15 during the principal debate, but as a result of the closure motion that is not possible, and consequently I will make my remarks, although much briefer, on this closure motion.

Mr. Dick: It is not closure.

Mr. Allmand: It is interesting to note that this Bill is the only new significant measure tabled so far by the Conservative Government in this Parliament, and despite that, it is not willing to let the debate take its natural course. This is coming from a political Party that over the years in opposition decried not only the use of closure, but also the allocation of time. In this case we do not even have an allocation of time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Dick) rising on a point of order.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be drawn to the Hon. Member's attention, if he does not know the rules, that closure comes under Standing Order 37. This comes under Standing Order 57—

Mr. de Corneille: That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East has the floor.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of politics of rhetoric that we have been getting from this Government since Parliament began. I know what the rules say—

Mr. Dick: You don't.

Mr. Allmand: —but in fact the effect of this motion is to close debate. I know that there is another closure procedure under another Standing Order, but this one has the same effect. It does in effect close off a very important debate.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he went to New York after the tabling of this Bill announced that Canada was now open for business. Again, that is a lot of rhetoric. Anyone who looks at the statistics and the record over the last year or two will see that the volume of business between Canada and the United States has been enormous. As a matter of fact, the balance of trade in favour of Canada has been so high that the United States Government is very concerned. We have been selling very strongly into the U.S. market and making a lot of profits, and the Americans have been selling into our market as well. It is not a question of being open for business with the United States. It is, as many people have said and as our Leader has said, a question now of whether we are going to sell out the country to the United States and other foreign interests.

Many government people have tried to give the impression that FIRA, the Foreign Investment Review Agency, was against foreign investment, but that is not the case. The purpose of FIRA was to ensure by review that all investment in Canada was in the best interests of Canada and of the Canadian people.

● (1150)

Why was such legislation necessary a number of years ago? It was necessary because the pattern at that time had been that when foreign companies took over Canadian firms or invested in a substantial way in Canada, they were doing several things that were against our interests. In many cases they were closing down the research and development being carried out by Canadian firms. All that research and development went to their head offfices, whether they were in Chicago, New York or London, England.

I remind members of the Conservative Party from Montreal of the example of Ayerst McKenna, a long-time prominent pharmaceutical firm which was bought by a U.S. company. It went about gradually closing down the research and development area of Ayerst McKenna in Montreal, leaving many highly skilled scientists and researchers out of work. If it had not been for the actions of the federal Government and the Quebec Government last year in setting up research facilities under the reconstruction program, many of those scientists would have been obliged to go to the United States to find work. That is one reason.

Another reason was that many American-owned or other foreign-owned firms shut down the manufacturing element altogether in Canada and did the entire manufacturing in their plants in the foreign countries. They simply kept a sales agency in Canada to sell the U.S.-produced products.

There were many other negative effects. There was the siphoning off of profits into the United States and other foreign countries. The obligation was put on the Canadian subsidiary firms to follow U.S. national interests in politics. We had examples of that during the OPEC crisis and also with respect to our relations with Cuba.

In tabling this Bill, government Members have said that this Investment Canada Bill and the dismantling of FIRA will produce jobs. It will have the opposite effect. If there is no way of screening the foreign investment, no way to negotiate with the foreign investors in Canada and no way to oblige them to ensure that the investment is in the best interests of Canada, they will close down the research and development and the manufacturing and simply use the shell in Canada to sell their products. Therefore, there will be fewer jobs instead of more.

A good thing about FIRA was the way it operated to negotiate a better deal for Canada. As many debaters have pointed out, 92 per cent of the applications were approved. It was not that a large number of applications for investment were turned down. It does not show up in these statistics, but many of us know because we were part of the process over the years. Because FIRA was there, the investing company knew that its proposal had to contain elements which would be in the best interests of Canada. It was always conscious of the fact that it could not buy out a Canadian firm or invest in Canada without considering what was in the best interests of this country. There was a deterrent effect in the law which obliged it to consider those factors at all times.

If a foreign company did not do that, rather than turn down the investment proposal altogether, very often the Government would negotiate with the investment applicant and say, "We do not think your application does enough for Canada. We want some assurance that you will buy your supplies from Canadian suppliers. We want some assurance that you will keep research and development in Canada. We want some asssurance that you will maintain the manufacturing element". Very often through the negotiations they would make a commitment to do that, and the application would be approved. In the statistics on applications approved and rejected that was not always shown, but it was a very important element in the operations of FIRA which provided benefits for Canada and for Canadian jobs.

Bill C-15 is only one part of a Conservative government program to weaken considerably Canada's economic, political and cultural independence. When you look at the cut-backs with respect to the CBC and the cultural agencies and when you see how this Government has been kowtowing to the United States with respect to the defence and external affairs policy, simply going along with the star wars research and so on, you see that in the long run, this country is in for some great difficulty. We will not have the institutions or the laws to maintain those things that we as Canadians think are important.

Over a hundred years ago we decided to be a country on our own. We did not want to be American or British. We recently adopted a new Constitution. We want to be Canadians, despite the fact we are only 25 million spread along thousands of miles of border, next to a huge giant with over 200 million people. If we did not have special laws and institutions like the CBC, national railways, national airlines and FIRA, we would be completely taken over and submerged by the massive U.S. economy, political system, culture and so on. That is not what Canadians expect or want.

We do not have the numbers on this side to defeat or amend this Bill, but through debates such as this we hope to influence public opinion outside this House so that that public will approach the 211 Conservative Members of Parliament and tell them how they feel about Canadian sovereignty, economics, culture and politics and that they will put pressure on them. We also hope to stimulate Canadian groups, individuals, professors and writers to appear before the parliamentary committee once this Bill gets there and let us know what they think about this measure.

My time is up. This is a very short debate because of the closure motion. I urge the Government to reconsider many of the elements of this Bill and give heed to common sense in what is a very important matter.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise a second time on Bill C-15, the first time on the closure matter. I wish to mention some of the fundamental principles, not only of the New Democratic Party but also of business that I feel are being ignored and even violated in Bill C-15.

There is no inherent hostility or hostility per se on the part of the NDP toward the United States or U.S. capital. There is no inherent fundamental quarrel with some of the practices that American companies bring to this country, practices which have been successful in their country and within their business environment. There is no quarrel with U.S. methods of marketing, although I am sure that Members on both sides of the House have felt that techniques that were being imported, particularly as they relate to politics, were somewhat overstated and excessive, given the Canadian environment and our traditions of moderation and caution. Nevertheless, our neighbours to the south have, in general, produced things that work. When they find something that works, they stick with it.

I would emphasize and re-emphasize that we are not seeking in this debate today to present some sort of front or attitude of antipathy toward U.S. capital, corporations or management practices. We are seeking to affirm and re-affirm Canadian economic traditions. It is our belief that in proposing Bill C-15, the Government has been seduced by U.S. propaganda at both the political and the business levels. That propaganda is aimed—and here again we allege no great conspiracy, but merely a community of interests that did not need the specific mechanisms stated—at enabling our neighbours to the south to buy Canadian resources, companies and assets at a price more in their interest than in the interest of Canada. That, Mr. Speaker, is of course a familiar business technique. It is not one that is inherently, essentially or fundamentally immoral, but it is nevertheless a business technique and it is one which is being aided and abetted by the present Government.

• (1200)

We did not find that the Foreign Investment Review Agency was an unusual mechanism. If we look at the legislative structures and commercial regulations of such countries as Japan, for example, we find that there are mechanisms in place which provide for a much more extensive and thorough review and analysis of attempted foreign investments than did the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

One of my colleagues made a good point yesterday, and it is one that should have been taken to heart by the Government. He stated that the United States itself very definitely does have a foreign investment review agency which goes by the style and title of the American Congress. The American Congress is accustomed—and who would deny it the right to do so—to reviewing foreign presence in its economy, but not only foreign presence in the sense of foreign investment or foreign purchases of U.S. companies but also, and perhaps more insidiously, foreign presence in the matter of imports. Let there be no mistake. The commercial régime under which the United States operates is far more invidious in both a qualitative and quantitative fashion to the Canadian economy and Canadian business than the Foreign Investment Review Agency, the National Energy Program and the national policy ever were to U.S. interests operating in Canada.

In tabling this legislation, the Government is sending a message to the marketplace and it is a very unfortunate message. It is a message that is being sent in conjunction with the planned sale of Crown corporations. It was only partly with tongue in cheek that I characterized that planned sale in my maiden speech last week as an attempt to set up a fire sale of Canada. We saw the spectacle of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) snapping eagerly at an initial tentative approach made by the B.C. Resources Investment Corporation to take over a couple of Crown corporations that were on the block. I characterized that apparent interest by the B.C. Resources Investment Corporation as a logical step off a tall building. The proposed purchaser did not have the assets, the commercial background or the track record to take on the Crown corporations in which the Hon. Minister supposed it might be interested.

The Government has not given any assurance to the House that the Crown corporations that are put up for sale will be available only to Canadian investors or Canadian corporations. The absence of that assurance along with the legislation that has been put before us will, to my way of thinking, create an expectation in the United States that Americans can indeed bid on Canadian Crown corporations that are coming on the block and that they will be able to pick up those Crown corporations at a price which will serve their interests better than the interests of the Canadian taxpayers.

In tabling the Investment Canada Bill, the Government is discarding an honourable and historical tradition of Canadian economic nationalism in which the Progressive Conservative Party and its predecessors have indeed participated. Why is there today a railway that does run from sea to shining sea? Why was the last spike driven at Craigellachie in 1886? The railway exists and that last spike was driven in order to tie together a country. It happened because the predecessors of the present Government at least had the wisdom to believe and know that a government that did not control the economic links which held its country together was a government which would not be able to plan adequately for the economy and would not be able adequately to influence, guide, mould and direct the future economic development of its country.

I believe that the facts speak for themselves. We saw that the national policy was indeed a successful one. It is my belief that while the links of our economic fabric today may not be so obvious, tangible and concrete as was the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1886, those links nevertheless are of equal importance today as they were 100 years ago.

This tradition of economic nationalism was not established with blinkers on. It was not established for mere reasons of political expediency. It was not established for the sake of simply being different and using different mechanisms. It was established for very good reasons, reasons of Canadian nationhood and, yes, reasons of Canadian patriotism to which regionalism can contribute as well as operate against. It was established for legitimate reasons and deserves continuation for those same reasons.

The Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba and British Columbia all recognized that only through provincial control of its utilities could the provinces have a real say in the direction, support and development of provincial growth. That is why we have—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke on this Bill previously, I brought forward some concerns that had come from Atlantic Canada, specifically concerns in relation to the fishing industry. Since that time, those concerns have become even greater among those employed in the fishing industry. There are concerns over what effect this Bill may have on foreign takeovers, because most fish plant operations are tied to quota licences. In effect, those quotas could be taken over by foreign companies and they could be used in whatever fashion a foreign company decided. For instance, it could close down a plant if it was seen as being in competition with that in its own mother country, it could reduce the operations or indeed, I suppose, in some cases it could even expand the operations, and that would be good. However, that is not likely to be the case.

I have also expressed my concern regarding the management of Investment Canada. I have expressed my concern over the fact that one Minister is responsible for deciding what is good for Canada and what is not good for Canada. I have some very grave concerns about that process. Under FIRA, there was a representative Cabinet committee which made the final decisions. I think it is imperative that all regions of the country including Atlantic Canada, the Northwest Territories and western Canada, should have input into the decisions that are made, and particulary as to how any investment may affect those regions.

In the last few days, we have seen just how Government works. There is no recourse to the bilateral West Coast salmon agreement with the U.S. which the Minister was able to initial. It is very difficult to discuss that openly with the different parts of the industry which are involved. They have no input into that decision. I realize it is sometimes difficult in that governments are required to make decisions, but where is the appropriate consultation which would provide those sectors of the fishing industry—be it the sports fishery, the trawler associations or whatever—and the people who are directly affected with an opportunity to have an input into this agreement? There is a danger in having a one-man operation in government. I do not think we can sufficiently stress that danger.

If we look at the track record of foreign investors in Canada, we will find that it has not always been good. I believe that Canada has lost in research and development. Most research and development of foreign companies which operate in Canada is done outside of Canada. Research and development creates very important jobs in the Canadian economy. Those jobs benefit our university graduates. We cannot always ship our brains outside of Canada. There must be a way in which meaningful jobs can be created, not just the ordinary jobs which last six to eight weeks. We must encourage jobs of a high-paying nature.

Dangers in the high technology industries are posed with the Investment Canada Bill. I am not the only one who believes that. In the business section of The Toronto Star today, Mr. James Gillies, a professor of policy and director of the Max Bell program in business and government studies in the Faculty of Administrative Studies at York University, who was a long-time Progressive Conservative member of this House, said:

> Also contributing to the balance of payments problem has been the inflow of foreign capital. It is imperative that capital flowing into the country be used for productive purposes and not for the transfer of the ownership of assets which does nothing for the economy and simply contributes to the foreign exchange problem.

Mr. Gillies has pointed out very clearly that foreign capital has not always been beneficial to the country. He went on to say:

> Not all foreign investment is productive. It is naive to believe that any flow of capital into the country will move the economy forward. It depends entirely on what it is used for. If it is not invested in the production of new plant and equipment and does not lead to an increase in exports it can have serious negative economic consequences.
> Moreover, until the intractable balance of payments problem is solved we must try to limit the borrowing of capital from abroad. No government or government agency should borrow in foreign markets under current conditions. If a government has a function that it believes must be performed either directly or through a government agency, the capital should be raised domestically or the proposed operation should be postponed.

Mr. Gillies—and I am sure we all have a great respect for his views—is saying that this is not necessarily a good thing. However, the Party to which he used to belong is bulldozing this piece of legislation through the House.

It is one thing to create a job—and we want to create jobs in Canada—but we should not do that by sacrificing the jobs which are already in the economy. What is the benefit if foreign investment enters Canada and takes over a company which will put other companies out of business? That is what worries me about the structure of this Bill.

Again, with respect to the one-man operation of the Bill, how will it provide proper input for other businesses in order that this can have an idea of what is going on? It is similar to a closed shop. There should be an amendment which requires the decisions to be made public. Canadian investors virtually could be wiped out overnight by the decision of one person, a decision which is in direct competition with their operations.

I mentioned previously some of the problems in the fishery in the Atlantic provinces. The National Farmers Union is very concerned about Investment Canada because of the development of mock products and certainly the new products which are made from whey milk. It is very detrimental to the dairy industry of Canada. The same thing is happening in the fishery with the introduction of mock crabmeat.

I see that my time is running out. Ten minutes is not long enough to put forward our views on the Bill and the seriousness with which this Bill should be taken by the Government and by Members of Parliament.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I would like to explore the whole question of how we approach investment capital in Canada as it relates to foreign investment. If there is a company which requires human capital and that company wishes to go outside of Canada's borders to get that human capital—in other words a worker—this Government, as did the last, requires the company to do a job search. In other words, the company must search for that human capital from sea to sea to ensure that there is no out-of-work Canadian who could perform the task for which there is a vacancy. We should take the same approach when it comes to out-of-work capital. If we are in need of an infusion of capital into a business concern in Canada, whether it is partial or total, a capital search throughout Canada should be required. I believe the Government's role is to facilitate that.

I raised that idea with the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) in the finance committee meeting last night, in the context of whether or not that was the role of the Federal Business Development Bank. While he indicated that it was not its role to work with FIRA to search for capital, when FIRA receives a request from a Canadian firm to allow it to sell to a U.S. company or other foreign company, he thought it was a good idea that perhaps we should consider.

In order to highlight that, I would like to refer to the recent announcement of approvals which were made by the Foreign Investment Review Agency which appeared in The Globe and Mail issue of today. It was indicated there that 38 proposals were approved. The article gives some indication of the kind of things which we are allowing foreign money to be used for. We are allowing a company from Rockford, Illinois, to acquire control of a Canadian business which imports, distributes and services air compressors. Surely Canadians can do that. We do not have to have someone from Illinois come and do it for us. We do not need anyone from Hartford, Connecticut to acquire control of a Canadian business which imports and sells thread and mill rolling dies and machines. We can do that. We have the skills and the knowledge. Obviously, a Canadian company was already doing it and, for whatever reason, it found itself in need of capital whether because the owner was retiring and wanted to get out of the business or because its capital needs were beyond its capabilities. We should be going to that company and saying, "What can we do to help you? What can we do to ensure that your company can remain Canadian-owned?"

• (1220)

A company in Dallas, Texas, was given permission to acquire control of a business in western Canada which sells prescription eye glasses, contact lenses and related eye care products. A company from Portland, Oregon, was given permission to acquire a Canadian company which manufactures band saws for the wood products industry. The last thing we should do, Mr. Speaker, is to let another foreign interest get involved in our manufacturing sector. We have the skills and the capacity to produce our own machinery for the harvesting of our own wood and for the mining of our own ore. We do not have to go outside our borders to find capital. We should work within our borders.

We in this Party have freely admitted that from time to time there are needs for foreign capital to come in to start up new enterprises, because sometimes there are just no Canadians who are prepared to take the risk, for whatever reason. However, one case just boggles my mind. Can you believe, Mr. Speaker, that permission has been given to a company from San Antonio, Texas, to come into Canada and operate a cattle ranch? That is beyond reason. Surely there are Canadians who have the wherewithal to do this. We have been operating cattle ranches in western Canada for years. We do not need Texans coming in to do it for us. Perhaps that is an indication of the lack of support given to the farming and cattle raising communities.

The rationale, Mr. Speaker, is that we should not be opening our doors through Investment Canada and allowing foreign dollars to come in at will. We should be looking at our rules with regard to foreign investment and asking ourselves how we can ensure that Canadians are safeguarded, that there is no unnecessary acquisition, and that there will be no investment in areas where Canadians have the wherewithal and the financial ability to do it themselves. On the other hand, we should make sure that when there are investments, they do bring about real benefits, not just to the investor but to the workers and to the community. We must make sure there is some protection. I admit that FIRA was not the best of vehicles. It certainly was not put together the way we would have liked.

In my own riding and in the riding of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp), FIRA approved the acquisition by Canada Safeway (Ltd.,) I think it was, of Dominion Stores Limited, and one of the conditions was that the store in Thunder Bay must be closed. It is wrong for the Government to tell a business to rationalize, and the better way is not to do so through Investment Canada. We should not just throw the doors wide open. We have to ensure that there is control over our own destiny and that whatever dollars are spent are used for the benefit of Canadians.

The Federal Business Development Bank has an excellent program of equity investment which allows it to take shares in companies which are in need of some extra financing but are unable to deal with the burden of a loan situation. The Government is then allowed to sell the shares back to them. In fact, it is required over a period of time to sell the shares back to the company. So in that way the company is given some bridging, some time to get on its feet and become a profitable operation once again. I think that is what we should be doing, Mr. Speaker. We should be using tools like the FBDB to help Canadian entrepreneurs survive and develop so that we can grow as a country and make sure that our prosperity is our children's prosperity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Grand Bay-White Falls-Labrador.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, you came very close and I congratulate you. It is Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador. I know that was an inadvertent slip on your part.

I am pleased with having the opportunity to rise and speak on this Bill once more, Mr. Speaker, because I believe it is important to put on the record some of the same points and possibly a few more than I did last time. I feel that the people in my province should know that the legislation we are being asked to deal with now is not of paramount importance. It has no urgency, and we should be dealing with other far more meaningful legislation. The fact is that there is really no need for this Bill at this time. It is fluff, cotton candy, smoke and mirrors, public relations. FIRA, indeed, was working. If one checks The Globe and Mail one will find that over 90 per cent of the applications which came before Cabinet and before FIRA were approved. So we do not need this legislation in order to keep out or bring in United States capital. It is really not going to make any difference one way or the other.

But suppose this Bill did attract foreign capital to Canada? What is more important, it seems to me, is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) to tell us how he is going to target that capital, whether from outside or inside of Canada, to the various regions of the country. I feel that that is the greater challenge. How can we ensure that the East, the West and the North get this capital? That is what the Minister has not told us. Are there going to be tax incentives? The Minister has changed the DRIE program already. He said, for example, that the tourist industry will no longer be eligible for grants and loans under DRIE, the regional industrial development program. What incentives of any kind is the Minister going to bring before us to make sure that investment, whether foreign or Canadian, goes to the various underdeveloped regions of the country? That is not what is before us and that is what should be before us now.

The Minister should tell us how regional development is going to be carried out. What is his policy with regard to regional development? We only know so far from this Government that what it does want is for the private sector to replace the public sector. We have no quarrel with that. It is a laudable objective. But how do you ensure that it happens? The only thing my area of the country has received from this Government so far as proof of its good will and as proof of the effectiveness of its policy, is cut-backs in funds which we have depended on for years, for decades and possibly even for generations. I say that not out of pride but because it is realistic.

The whole thrust so far of government policy in the east has been to take away things we have. Let us look at what has been cut back. For example, there has been a reduction in expenditures in the fisheries infrastructure. There were wharves, breakwaters, haul-outs and facilities on land for fishermen in Newfoundland, in Labrador and in the Atlantic Provinces, which were supposed to go ahead but which did not? Spending has been reduced on the fisheries infrastructure.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a commitment to the forestry industry in Corner Brook during the election campaign. Yet that public sector spending has not gone ahead. Mr. Crosbie is suggesting that a minimum-medium security prison which was committed to central Newfoundland, in my own riding, may not go ahead. He says he cannot find the money for it although the money was there. Mr. Crosbie is now saying that possibly the Government will renege on that commitment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope that the Hon. Member, who used to be a Minister, would address his fellow colleague from Newfoundland by his title of Minister of Justice.

Mr. Rompkey: I will take that advice, Mr. Speaker, thank you. The point is, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) should be interested in justice. There is no justice in cutting out something we have had for years before putting something in its place. We do not put the cart before the horse. If the Minister of Justice were truly interested in justice, he would see that justice is done in my riding and in my province. That is the whole point.

● (1230)

We have not seen that justice has been done up until now. There have been cut-backs in the CBC, particularly in the northern areas. I said before and I say again that if the Government really wants to do something about our cultural heritage, it will see that those cut-backs are cancelled. Grants for pure research and applied research have been cut back. We are going to lose expert scientists from the only university we have in Newfoundland because of these cut-backs. There is no way that applied research can flourish unless pure research flourishes. The two go hand in hand, and these cut-backs are going to have an immediate effect on job creation. Even more, they will have a serious effect on long-term job creation because the new technology will not be there. There have been cut-backs in unemployment insurance at a time when unemployment is at its highest. That is the record so far and the only thing I have to go by.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, we know that ferry rates in the Atlantic area have been raised. Of course this has the effect of driving up all prices. Whether it is the producer or the consumer, there is an additional financial burden on people in the Atlantic area.

What is going to replace the public sector spending which has been cut? Is there going to be new private sector capital coming from Japan, the United States or Great Britain? We do not really care where it comes from. Is it going to the forest industry? The record so far of British capital in my area is a sorry one. British capital is letting plants go to ruin, not allowing them to keep up and be competitive. That is the record of British capital in Newfoundland. Are we going to see new capital in the fishery? We have not seen it so far. Indeed, the Government has had to step in and provide the needed capital. Have we seen it in mining? No, we have seen U.S. capital cutting back, retrenching, causing lay-offs in Labrador City and the whole of the Quebec north shore. There are colleagues of mine on the other side of the House as well as on this side, including the Prime Minister, who know that the record of U.S. capital has been one of retenchment, cutting back and the creation of unemployment. So the record is not good so far.

The Government's proposal, I presume, will be, in terms of my own province, that these new jobs will arrive as a result of the offshore agreement. The Government's response will probably be that it will create jobs in Newfoundland in that way. But we know too little about that because we do not know what is going to be in that offshore agreement. All we know is what the Prime Minister, when he was Leader of the Opposition, said in a letter to the Premier of Newfoundland. We have asked questions but we cannot get answers. We expect that there will probably be up front a development fund for Newfoundland of close to $500 million. A lot of money, but the question is: Will it be new money or simply recycled old money? That is the question I think we have to ask. Is it simply a redirection and recycling of the funds we along with the other Atlantic provinces have been used to receiving over the years as our fair share for regional industrial expansion. Every year P.E.I., for example, has received certain development funds from the Government of Canada, as has Newfoundland. But the point that should be made is that this money must be over and above that. I have asked the question but I have not got an answer.

How will this money be spent? Will it be spent on highways? Is this the money the Premier is going to use to wage his election in April when that offshore agreement is signed? Will there be an election and will this money be used for that? Will it build the highways? Will it be used to continue the trans-Labrador highway? These are the questions we have asked and to which we have not got answers. How much investment will there be in this offshore deal? Where will it come from? What will the return be to investors? What will the return be to the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland? Who will set the royalties for Newfoundland? Will it be the Government of Canada or the Government of Newfoundland? How much will those royalties be? Apart from the initial fund we are going to get of $500 million, how much money are we going to get in my province and how soon?

If you will just bear with me, Mr. Speaker, I want to finish these questions because I feel they are so important. Will concrete platforms be used? Will there be funds to train Newfoundlanders to take the jobs in the offshore?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the Hon. Member's time has expired. In fact, I have given him an extra 15 seconds.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I know the Chair will be as generous with me and that I will certainly be entitled to an additional 15 seconds, as will other Members of the House. The generosity of the present occupant of the Chair is well known in this House.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, it does give me some pleasure to get up this afternoon and outlines some of my concerns about this matter. I think probably this is the first situation in which the present Government has imposed that nefarious provision of time allocation in limiting debate, that harsh measure which prohibits the democratic process of debate in this House. Many, many times I have heard the Conservatives in opposition stand up and bemoan the indignity and insufferable contempt of the democratic process which the Liberal Government's frequent use of closure demonstrated to this House. Now we have the Conservative Party imposing the same thing, breaking its electoral promises, breaking its commitment to Parliament to allow openness and fairness in government. If this was the only time that the Government went back on its promises, then maybe we could understand it. Maybe there is something we have missed in this Bill. Maybe there is in it such a tremendous imperative to Canada and Canadian needs that it demands our being sold down the river to the Americans. Maybe we missed it, but I do not think so.

The Conservative Party has now learned that it does not want open government. It has its program, its agenda, and closure will be the order of the day. It would have been nice, Mr. Speaker, if we could have established some type of relationship where we could have discussed these matters even more informally outside the Chamber. But that is not the way of the Conservative Party or of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) and his team of apparatchiks who are setting the agenda. They have laid out the scheme for the next five years and it is a shame.

I recall an incident earlier this week in the House which illustrates the kind of thing I am talking about. The treaty on salmon intervention between Canada and the United States is an example of the kind of contempt for the House of Commons and the people of Canada that this Government has which is illustrated by the closure motion today. You will know, of course, that in former years there has been an attempt to gain an interception treaty with the United States. The Prime Minister and his Cabinet approved this treaty with an undignified haste, and it has to be pointed out that it was done so against the wishes of many people who live on the coast of British Columbia and earn a living from fishing. They approved this treaty before they gave anyone documents relating to this particular agreement. The people of Canada and their elected representatives in the House of Commons were given the document after the Cabinet had ratified it. When the overseer, the former Liberal Minister of Finance and the grey eminence of the Liberal Party, Mitchell Sharp, came before the committee, he said that he did not really think anyone should be talking about this particular treaty lest the Americans not buy it. Frankly, I think we have given the Americans such a deal that their tongues will be hanging out to buy this particular treaty.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, the way in which that treaty came into play makes me think that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) is just an errand boy for the Deputy Prime Minister and that team of apparatchiks that is running the Government, setting its priorities and issuing the marching orders. That treaty is not the kind of thing that the present Minister of Fisheries would be responsible for. That is not the kind of thing that he promised to the people of the area of this country whom he represents. The only way he would have done that is if the Deputy Prime Minister said, "You are going to do this because we have decided what is going to happen to the people in British Columbia". In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the priorities group were more interested in having something to give away to the President of the United States when he arrives in Quebec City than in protecting the interests of the people on the coast of British Columbia who depend on that fishing industry.

The Conservative Party formed a Government with probably the largest majority in Canadian history. It did so because of the many promises that the Prime Minister and the Members of the Party which is now governing the country made to people from one end of Canada to the other. It is ironic that many of the supporters of that Party who own tourist resorts in British Columbia are absolutely appalled at the treaty. They had been struggling to have meetings with the Minister and to have the issue brought before committee to have it studied before it was approved.

Many of those people have now been stabbed in the back by the Government. Enormous numbers of telegrams arrived on my desk yesterday and today from people concerned about what this will do to tourism in that area and to their businesses. They have had an example of this already. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is now saying, "I will take total responsibility for what happens. We are not going to re-open this treaty. This is a fait accompli. We want it, we are going to have it, and the Deputy Prime Minister has told me to do it". I think that is the case, Mr. Speaker.

The fishing industry is a good example of the contempt that is being demonstrated in the House today through this closure motion. When the present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans was supporting Conservative candidates along the coast of British Columbia, including the candidate in my riding, he talked about a fair buy-back program and about restructuring the fishing fleet in British Columbia in a meaningful way so as to respond to the traditional needs of the people in the industry and the small communities along the coast of British Columbia. Everyone recognized the need for restructuring and realigning that industry, but there were a lot of people who wanted the Government to recognize the traditional nature of that industry.

The documents that the Minister put before his advisory committee indicate that they are going to buy the banks' position. The banks will wind up being paid off. Everyone here recalls that the banks went through a period of lending enormous amounts of money to fishermen to buy new vessels and new technology to keep up with the industry on the West Coast. As the Government allowed interest rates to rise, many of these people found themselves in great financial difficulty. The banks found themselves with many loans which could not be paid off.

The present Minister intends to bail out those banks. Fishermen are going to lose their vessels. Communities along the coast of British Columbia are going to lose thousands of jobs. Many businesses such as ship repair operations in those communities are going to shut down. I think that even Members of the House of Commons will be directly affected by the way in which this industry is going to shrink on the coast of British Columbia because of the way in which the Minister is going to restructure this fleet and promote a buy-back program to bail out the banks. We are going to lose thousands of jobs and we are going to lose businesses. The traditional approach to fishing which people have enjoyed for many years is going to change dramatically on the coast of British Columbia.

This Minister has his marching orders from the Deputy Prime Minister and his apparatchiks who said, "Never mind what you or the Members of the Conservative Party who represent that area would like to do, we have the solution in mind to stop this problem". The present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is on the coast of British Columbia right now selling British Columbians down the river in order to bail out the banks. He is going to make fishermen pay $200 million to the federal Government to promote a $100 million buy-back program. The federal Government is going to sell $100 million worth of vessels for $40 million. In short, through this buy-back program, for which the fishermen must pay, the Government is going to make a neat profit of $160 million. It is going to bail out the banks, lose several thousand jobs on the coast of British Columbia, close down businesses, and change the traditional way of life along the coast. It is going to sell out the fishing industry to the Americans and put that business in serious difficulty.

I would like to thank you for your generosity in allowing me the time to speak an additional 15 seconds, Mr. Speaker. With your permission, I would like to call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, this is the third time I have had an opportunity to speak in the debate on Bill C-15, and at this point, we must ask ourselves why this Government decided to move the previous question in connection with this Bill, a motion that will have the effect of blocking any further motions by the Opposition on second reading, thus in fact closing the debate on second reading on Bill C-15.

The question is particularly relevant since there is nothing of any substance on the Order Paper of the House of Commons. There is no important legislation that this Parliament would have to consider after the debate on Bill C-15. Sometimes I wonder whether the Opposition is not doing a favour to this Government that has been in power in September 4 of last year. Parliament has been in session since last fall, and since then no important legislation has been tabled. This from a party that claimed, when it was campaigning in Quebec and across Canada, that it had the answers to all Canada's problems. On the subject of employment, they said they were going to create hundreds of thousands of jobs as soon as the Government was sworn in, and now we see that during the months they have been in power, there has been less job creation than during the first three months Prime Minister Trudeau was in office and, on a monthly basis, fewer jobs than during the two months when the present Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Prime Minister of this country.

We might expect a political party that has been in the opposition for a number of years to come to power with specific solutions and draft legislation and policies, but all we get is blue, yellow, green or white papers setting up endless consultations. This is a Government that had no policy and no specific programs to put before the Canadian people.

It is indeed surprising that with its comfortable majority of 211 to 70, this Government should impose closure. Its slogans are consultation and dialogue, but it will not let Opposition Members, even though their numbers are relatively small, debate the only worthwhile Bill before the House. One wonders why they want to put the previous question at this time and why they want to choke off debate on Bill C-15. There are a number of possibilities, but it is a fact that since last fall, the Progressive Conservative Government has tried to make Canadians believe that because of the Foreign Investment Review Act there have been no substantial trade relations between Canada and the United States. As this debate continues it is becoming increasingly clear that the Prime Minister's speech in New York was entirely out of touch with reality.

• (1250)

To prove this I would like to refer to a very interesting article by Michel Vastel in Actualité, which gives some revealing figures on the trade relations that exist between Canada and the United States and clearly demonstrates that the statements made by the Prime Minister of Canada in his New York speech did not reflect the actual situation. If we consider his statement that Canada is now open for business, I suggest we consider as well the figures quoted by Mr. Vastel in his article. He said that the Americans buy 72 per cent of our forestry products, 65 per cent of our petrochemical exports, 59 per cent of our metal production and nine-tenths of our energy exports including gas, oil and electric power. Conversely, Mr. Vastel goes on, Canadians purchase three-quarters of all their industrial imports from the United States. Thanks to the Automobile Pact, Americans provide 89 per cent of our car and spare parts imports, while 98 per cent of Canadian automobile production goes to the United States. Canada-U.S. trade is worth $35 billion more than trade between the United States and Japan. Mr. Vastel concludes that Canada is the United States' most important customer and that Ontario alone trades more intensively with the United States than does Japan. How could the Prime Minister of Canada say in his New York speech that now the Progressive Conservatives are in power, Canada is open for business, unless he was trying to deceive public opinion or send a message that went well beyond Bill C-15?

Mr. Speaker, in speaking to Bill C-15 on second reading, I have indicated these contradictions between the Government's rhetoric and the proposed Bill. I have the impression that this Government is putting the previous question because as Canadians are becoming better informed, they realize that Bill C-15 might have a disastrous effect on the Canadian economy and Canada's autonomy, not only vis-à-vis the United States but also internationally. They realize it may be wise to think twice before passing these measures. We on this side of the House intend to propose, at the committee stage, a number of significant amendments to this Bill to reflect these views. We would have preferred to propose a number of amendments to the principle of the Bill at the second reading stage, but the previous question, which has gagged the Opposition, has prevented us from doing so.

Mr. Speaker, were it not for the previous question, perhaps we would have had a chance to hear some of the backbenchers speak to this important legislation. I would very much like to know what some of the Members from Quebec think about this Bill. During the election campaign, they were making very emphatic speeches and asking their government to intervene to protect Canadian jobs, especially where the multinationals were concerned. I understand why some Hon. Members must be frustrated. On the other hand, I was not surprised to read letters in the newspapers, which referred to this Government as a "gouvernement de deux de pique", a term readily understood by those familiar with the French language, especially with expressions peculiar to certain regions in Quebec.

But instead of writing letters, those Members ought to take the floor in the House and say exactly what they think, for perhaps some jobs in their ridings are likely to disappear if there is no longer any review of new investments. These might be in direct competition with Canadian companies operating in the various regions and creating jobs. Those companies might find it impossible to stand up against unfair competition on the part of investors anxious to compete on their own turf.

The central issue here is nothing more than the old debate on the national policy of the founder of the Conservatives and that reference to Canada's national policy. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there is logic in everything. Here we have Bill C-15, this open invitation to the Americans, and we hear various remarks about free trade zones, even though the words have yet to be defined. I can hardly wait to see the contents of the document which the Minister for International Trade is expected to make public this afternoon. I would have liked the Minister to table it in the House, but apparently it will be made public outside the House. All those pieces are part of a puzzle, and the Government wants us to pass Bill C-15 without showing us the other pieces of the puzzle.

I see that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for your attention. I do hope that Government Members realize that the closure motion they are forcing upon us today flies in the face of every speech they made inside or outside the House.

[English]

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a few minutes before one o'clock and some time after Question Period to make some comments regarding the muzzling motion brought in by the Government. I presume that the Government does not want the Canadian public to know too much about Bill C-15.

Rather than talk about the problems created for Parliament as a result of closure motions such as this, I want to alert Canadians once again to the problems with Bill C-15 and why the Investment Canada Bill should be hoisted and sent back for redrafting. Although the Minister responsible for the Bill wants Canadians to think that this provides a new means for cutting red tape and eliminating the hindrances to the investment needed to create jobs in Canada, the facts are clear about what FIRA did. The Foreign Investment Review Act was a toothless monster and did not really do anything in the interest of Canada. I believe we should have a much tougher FIRA Bill than what the Government now proposes.

It is interesting to note that few government Members are getting up to applaud the benefits of Bill C-15. I believe that many of them, including yourself, Mr. Speaker, will probably notice that there are some tremendous flaws in Bill C-15.

Let me deal with some of the problems in terms of foreign investment coming to Canada to buy corporations or buy land and become involved in speculation. The first problem that was identified is that foreign-controlled companies do not spend nearly as much as Canadian-controlled companies on research and development, which is the key source of economic growth and productivity increase.

Let us look at some examples taken from studies by the Economic Council of Canada in 1983 and the Science Council of Canada in 1984. With respect to research and development, Canadian companies with less than 50 employees spent 11.2 per cent of their capital on R and D while foreign companies spent only 3.3 per cent. Canadian companies with 50 to 100 employees spent 10.1 per cent on R and D while foreign companies were still at only 4.3 per cent. Canadian firms with 100 to 200 employees dropped R and D spending to 9.1 per cent while such spending by foreign controlled companies plummetted down to 3.7 per cent. Of those corporations with more than 500 employees, Canadian companies spent 10.3 per cent on research and development while foreign companies spent a measly 2 per cent.

It becomes quite clear where the larger corporations, particularly foreign-owned corporations, conduct their research and development, which is one of the most important processes within our economy for the creation of new jobs. Those jobs occur outside the country, principally in the United States. I will expand on that at three o'clock, with your permission, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has seven minutes remaining after three o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[Translation]

SOCIAL SECURITY

UNIVERSALITY OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the proposals dealing with the universality of social programs announced yesterday by the government are entirely unacceptable. For example, the reduction in family allowances considerably affects two groups already facing financial problems: women at home as well as families with low and medium incomes.

I would like to state a few facts. Family allowance cheques are too often the only money paid to women at home. Families with low and medium incomes are affected by this government measure. Families with less than $10,000 a year receive less social benefits than those with $50,000 a year.

Where are the fine promises of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who wanted to tax bankers with $500,000 incomes? With such a reform, those people will still travel in a limousine paid with the money which in all fairness should be redistributed to the most needy.

[English]

CHILD TAX EXEMPTION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, tax reform can be just only if we distinguish between tax deductions and tax exemptions.

A tax deduction is something optional. It may be given or taken away according to government policy. A tax exemption is essentially different. It is not optional. It recognizes there are parts of a person's income that do not come under the authority of the state.

The child tax exemption is a good example. It should not be seen as a benefit conferred by the state. It should be respected as a right. If parents have a natural duty to support their children, parents have a natural right to the income they need to give that support. That income should be exempt from the tax collector by right.

I speak of this because it is one difference between a socialist philosophy of taxation and a conservative one. Socialists presuppose the state has a right to take whatever part of a person's income it chooses to take. Whatever a person is left to enjoy he has simply by a decision of the state. A conservative philosophy of taxation says: "No. There are parts of a person's life that belong to him or her", and a person has a right to say to the tax collector: "No trespassing. Keep out. This is mine".

ENERGY

OIL COMPANY PROFITS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Conservative Members, the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne), and the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), for joining me and the NDP in speaking out for the ordinary Canadian consumer of gasoline who, frankly, is being hosed by the big oil companies of this country and tax greedy provincial and federal Governments. There is lots of talk about having independent Members of Parliament and Members of Parliament speaking out. When they do that, I think the media and the public should support them.

I have two down and 209 to go, Mr. Speaker. I tell the other 209 Conservative Members of Parliament to look at the report today from Imperial Oil. It just announced its profits were up from $332 million to $533 million.

Paul Joseph from Burns Fry, energy consultants, expects Imperial's profit will be even higher in 1985. Imperial Oil is 69.5 per cent owned by Exxon of New York. What other country in the world would allow its major oil company to be foreign-owned, then give it tax breaks and so on to transfer money from ordinary Canadians at the pump to the oil company so it can buy more assets in Canada? Already the industry gets 52 per cent of the pie, or $11.6 billion, it wants more, and this Government is prepared to give more.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is more of the same.

[English]

It need not be that way. We once had a national dream, and we can have a dream again in which the ordinary Canadian consumer can have a break, and the big oil companies and tax-greedy provincial Governments will not benefit.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

FUNDING OF PRO-ABORTION FILM CONDEMNED

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of this House the concerns expressed to me by many of my constituents as a result of the recent propaganda film on abortion entitled "Abortion: Stories North and South".

The National Film Board provided funding for this film to pro-abortionist Gail Singer to present her one-sided view of this matter, which she had the audacity to call enlightening.

The only way to describe the misuse of public funds by the National Film Board to promote the pro-abortion view is outrageous. This abuse of public funds and trust cannot be tolerated.

I, as well as many other Canadians, believe that life begins at the moment of conception, and from this moment on the unborn are entitled to the same rights and privileges as we enjoy.

It is my opinion that we must stop using buzz words, such as "termination of pregnancy", and recognize abortion for what it really is, the murder of an unborn child.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my disappointment with respect to the proposed changes to the family allowances and the other child benefits provided to families.

The paper outlines two options which are in fact disguised as income tax increases for the middle class, without any substantial benefit for low income families. The Conservatives once said that they were aiming at the bank president, but they are hitting his janitor.

According to Option 1, families with an income lower than $10,000 would receive only 98 cents more per day, and families earning between $10,000 and $20,000, would have an increase of only 68 cents.

Option 2 is still worse. Families with an income lower than $10,000 would only get 48 cents more per day, and those earning between $10,000 and $20,000, 36 cents per day.

Moreover, the paper refers to family income, while in our Canadian tax system, the concept of family income is not recognized for general taxation purposes.

This means that if the Canadian government wants to implement either one of the two options outlined in the program tabled yesterday, surveys will have to be made covering a large number of families. After much dilly-dallying, this is all the Government could come up with. Quite simply, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has lost the battle he himself has started.

The Government is trying to hide the Minister of Finance's loss of credibility with some kind of cosmetic change that brings in significant tax increases for the middle class, but no substantial benefit for lower income families.

CITY OF MONTREAL—HORNER COMMITTEE—BOMBARDIER CORPORATION PROPOSALS

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, last week, the city of Montreal, COPEM, the Chambre de commerce and the Montreal Board of Trade endorsed and submitted to the Horner Committee the Bombardier Corporation proposals. I agree with them that Montreal should be a transportation centre of Canada and that the policy of governments should be to contract work out to the private sector rather than leaving this field of endeavour to the responsibility of the public sector. However, I do not understand how they could have overlooked other Montreal companies, such as versatile Vickers in my constituency, which has been in operation for 74 years, which built the first subway in Montreal and which already has, which is not the case of Bombardier, the facilities needed to build and repair passenger cars, its physical plant extending over 205,000 square feet with a working capacity for more than 500 workers. This company has the equipment, the expertise and the technology required.

I would therefore like to ask the City of Montreal to reconsider its position and the Horner Committee to take these facts into account. One of its members should not be favoured to the disadvantage of others, especially since Bombardier has joined with the Urban Transport Development Corporation to put in tenders for the contracts of the Federal Government and Ontario to build new trains for VIA Rail. Maintenance could perhaps be left to another company.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN BREAD PRICE WAR—IMPACT ON SMALL BAKERIES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, due to a price war on bread which is currently raging in Saskatchewan between the two major suppliers, Westons and McGavins, smaller bakeries across the province are being forced out of business. I have had appeals from many small bakeries requesting that action be taken on their behalf so that they will not go under as a result of excessive price cutting.

Their complaints are fully justified. These are important small business people who are major contributors to the well-being of local economies. If they do not survive this price war, the unemployment lines will continue to grow even longer, and bread prices will quickly rise to above the old price level as soon as the local bakeries are out of business.

Bread which has been sold at $1.05 a loaf retail will not remain at the 58-cent a loaf retail currently in place. Once the small bakeries are pushed out and McGavins and Westons take over, $1.05 will look cheap by comparison.

• (1410)

I urge the Government to take immediate action through the Combines Investigation Act so that these small businesses can continue to remain open. This will provide customers with a choice, and will allow local bakeries to continue to play an important role in their local economy. Surely a Government which claims to be open for business cannot stand idly by while giants in the bread industry shut down small bakeries in their bid for total control of the bread market.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORMATION OF INDO-CANADIAN ASSISTANCE SOCIETY

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, last year was a tragic one for India. We saw the assassination of Prime Minister Gandhi and large scale communal violence in the events leading up to and following her assassination. These and other events in India have seen Indian pitted against Indian, and sometimes members of one religion have attacked members of another religion solely because of religion. Other events, such as the recent tragedy in Bhopal, have cut across religions. These events have, to some extent, spilled over into Canada. Relations between Canadians with Indian backgrounds of different religions have sometimes become strained.

That is why last month, in Toronto, a group of Canadians, primarily of Indian background from the major religions in India, formed the Indo-Canadian Assistance Society. This non-profit society was formed to aid victims of communal violence in India regardless of religion, as well as to aid victims of the recent chemical accident in Bhopal. The president is Christin, the treasurer is Hindu, the secretary is Sikh, and the first vice-president is Moslem.

Already two Members in addition to myself, the Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner) and the Member for Edmonton Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), have agreed to become honorary presidents of the Society. Hopefully all of us can work together to bring aid to those suffering in India and, by working together in Canada, ensure that religious differences between Canadians are minimized.

GOVERNMENT INITIATIVES SOUGHT TO ASSIST GLACE BAY, N.S.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, as most Members are aware, the town of Glace Bay and the surrounding areas suffered another serious economic setback this past Saturday due to a fire which destroyed the Highland Fisheries fish plant, throwing another 350 persons out of work. This is the second economic blow within a year to a community which was devastated by the fire at the No. 26 Colliery, leaving 1,200 miners unemployed. The unemployment rate has now soared to 55 per cent.

As I was meeting with town officials and the owner of the fish plant yesterday to discuss the situation, I was unable to be present in the House yesterday, but was heartened by the assurance of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to assist the town with whatever the Government can do.

There are many initiatives which the Government can take. It is this Minister who has the responsibility to move on them. First, the Government could sign a federal-provincial subsidiary agreement on infrastructure projects for the town of Glace Bay. Second, it could initiate a pre-retirement plan for older miners, thus enabling the younger ones to obtain jobs and plan for the future. Third, it could make a firm commitment on new coal developments for the town of Glace Bay. I urge the Minister to take action forthwith.

FORESTRY

PULP AND PAPER MILLS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Montreal the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association inaugurated its 72nd annual meeting. The Canadian industry is feeling somewhat optimistic and is looking forward to increasing its production to 68 million tons by 1995. To achieve that goal, the industry is ready to invest from $3 to $5 billion per year to update its pulp and paper facilities to bring about an era of increased productivity, more competitive prices and wider profit margin. It should be emphasized that 1984 witnessed an increase of 6.2 per cent in production over the previous year.

Here is the case of a thriving industry, thanks to the consultations and agreements we have had with the provinces in the area of forest husbandry. We believe in the future of the forest industry in Canada in general and of the pulp and paper industry in particular, and we want to demonstrate our support and commitment to the industrial corporations and associations which are helping in the recovery of our country.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—CALL FOR REDUCTION IN AUTOMOBILE EMISSIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) has indicated that the approach of the Government with respect to acid rain from here on in will be to emphasize the bilateral nature of the problem as opposed to the international nature. I suggest to the Minister that while she should continue to emphasize the international aspect of it, with respect to the bilateral relationships on acid rain, and particularly with respect to the United States, she should do two things.

First, she should really restore the Herring Gull egg program to show that we are concerned about the environment. We could then be appropriately self-righteous with the United States when it comes to the environment. Second, she could ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to bring in reduced auto emissions immediately, which also have to do with acid rain. Then, when we approach the United States with respect to acid rain, we will have cleaned up our own back yard, first on the wider environmental issue of Great Lakes water quality and, second, with respect to auto emissions. The Minister of Transport should do something now about that.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT CONSULTATION PAPER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to direct this question to the Prime Minister since it affects his Government's policy on social programs. If I may, I will put it to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister's $500,000 a year bank president did not suffer too much under the document called a Consultation Paper yesterday, but a bank teller with two teenagers certainly did. After two months of provoking uncertainty and confusion as a result of conflicting ministerial and prime ministerial statements on the universality of our social programs, this document was supposed to have relieved that uncertainty.

On page 11 the Minister says that the options he put forward "do not constitute specific proposals for change endorsed by the Government". On page 15 he says they "are not intended as statements of preference". Why did the Government provoke and instigate this debate on the social programs of the country without knowing where it is going, and without having any concrete proposals? Why did the Government yesterday only compound the problem by adding to the confusion and the uncertainty for millions of Canadian families? When will the Government let us know where it stands on tax reform and on our social programs?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Right Hon. Member that what we have said from the beginning, and it came from the November 8 statement of the Minister of Finance, is that we intend to consult. Surely that is a valid approach. If we had not done that, he would have been the first to get up in this House and ask why we were not asking Canadians what they want in their social programs. That is exactly what we are doing.

MIDDLE-INCOME TAXPAYERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, after having provoked this debate, the Minister should be in a position to exercise with his Government some leadership on where he wants to take the country with respect to social programs. Let us look at one of his preferred options—apparently the preferred option. The second option would give 48 cents a day to poor families, a lousy 48 cents. At the same time this apparently preferred option would attack millions of modest-income families, and others. Take a family with two teenagers. The family allowance is cut, the taxes are raised, and there are no summer jobs. Why did the Minister of National Health and Welfare choose to attack modest-income families? Why is he attacking those making as little as $23,000 a year? Why do only middle-income taxpayers have to bear the burden of tax reform?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman made a number of statements which are not factual. For example, he referred to no summer programs. That is not the case. My colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, clearly said that in this House. If he wants the exact answer in terms of middle income—

Ms. Copps: It is a means program.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East again does what she does best. She does not listen, and does not think. She just squeaks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I say to the right hon. gentleman that in terms of the second option it is not a matter of a preference.

• (1420)

Regarding Option 1, in most cases people have put forward that the most regressive part of the system is the child tax exemption. As I am sure the Right Hon. Member knows as a former Finance Minister, in a progressive tax system the greatest benefit goes to those who have the greatest income.

In most cases people have indicated that that is the one area that should be re-examined, and that we should redirect some of those savings to the needy. We have done that. In fact, if the Right Hon. Member looks very carefully at the tables, he will find that even with middle-income earners the statement he makes does not stand up to the light of day.

PROVINCES' TAX SHARE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before putting the question I would like to suggest to the Minister that the real winners yesterday were the provinces. The real losers were modest-income families with children.

Under one option the provinces receive an increase in tax of about $330 million, and under the other option they receive an increase in tax of $150 million. Compared to that, the average poor family in the country receives 48 cents a day, and two million modest-income families must bear the burden of this tax grab in favour of the provinces.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the right hon. gentleman knows that the options that were put forward were consultation options. He might not like that, but that is the approach that is being taken by the Government.

The second point I would make to the Right Hon. Member is that those would be the savings, the federal Government having said that any savings would be redirected to those in greatest need. That is an accepted fact, and I am sure that the Right Hon. Member now accepts that that is the purpose of the federal Government.

Additionally, the present established programs financing arrangement, and the present equalization arrangement, and other fiscal arrangements between Ottawa and the provinces are arranged by consultation and agreement, and as a former Finance Minister he knows that. Unfortunately, it did not quite happen that way the last time. However, that has been the plan and the process in Canada. Under the present arrangements, that would be the result. The paper does not indicate in any way that those savings would automatically go to the provinces. Some of us believe that we can talk to the provinces.

TAX EXEMPTION FOR FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and is related to what he said this afternoon.

On December 20 of last year, I asked the Right Hon. Prime Minister the following question: Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether it is his Government's policy, or whether his Government intends to reduce gradually over the years the tax exemption for families with children? The answer given by the Prime Minister was as follows:

No, Mr. Speaker. That is not what the Government intends to do.

My question to the Minister is as follows: Why did the Prime Minister of Canada, from his seat in this House, inform us and all Canadians on December 20 of last year that he did not intend to reduce tax exemptions for families with children, while yesterday, the Minister tabled two options, the first being to eliminate tax exemptions entirely and the second to reduce them by two-thirds? Mr. Speaker, when are we to accept the answer given by a Prime Minister in the House of Commons as valid?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, yes, the Hon. Member should accept the Prime Minister's statements. He should also accept the Prime Minister's statement that universality would remain. The paper does that. He should also accept the Prime Minister's statement that there will be no means test. The paper addresses that. He should also accept the Prime Minister's statement that it would not be used for deficit reduction.

What he should now accept is that this is a consultation paper. These are some options. I am sure the Hon. Member has read the paper. It also says that there could be other options, or variations of those options, and I make that proposal to the Hon. Member as well.

[Translation]

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION TOWARD QUEBEC

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, throughout the debate during question period, this was the only specific answer the Prime Minister gave us, and now the Minister of National Health and Welfare has made a complete about face in his document.

My supplementary is as follows: Considering the fact that the Province of Quebec is the only province in Canada that provides provincial family allowances instead of these exemptions, how does the Minister of National Health and Welfare intend to compensate Quebec for the resulting loss of revenue?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member has asked that question. If he reads the paper very closely, he will find identified what has been seen by some as an $80 million federal saving. As I said yesterday, and as I have said right along, I do not want to fall into the same trap into which the former Liberal Government fell when it made changes to the family allowances and the social programs. The Liberal Government got into trouble with the Quebec Government at that time. Because there is no tax collection agreement with Quebec, that $80 million has obviously been identified for that purpose. I will not fall into the trap into which former Liberal Members in Quebec fell, and that is why that observation exists in the paper.

CHILD BENEFIT PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Before Chirstmas the Minister of Finance said for all of the country, save one gentleman, to hear, that the people of Canada could no longer afford social programs for middle-income Canadians. This was denied at the time by the Prime Minister.

Yesterday the Minister of National Health and Welfare brought forward a document that changes the priority emphasis of the Government completely by proposing, in two alternative models, reductions in income benefit programs related to children, for over one million middle-income Canadian families. Why is there this complete reversal in the priorities of the Government? What happened to the $500,000-a-year bank president as a serious target for social reform?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Member for Oshawa regarding the point he made about the bank president, that that option obviously remains for the Minister of Finance. I am saying to the Hon. Member that if he would return to the very comments he made during the Christmas break, he would find that he put forward an option which is basically Option 1. I am saying in the paper that Option 1 has some adverse effects. I am sure the Hon. Member thought these things through. I would just ask him to be consistent.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, there is no problem with this Party's consistency on social policy. I will be happy to send—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Conservative Members are obviously a little concerned by the hypocrisy of bringing in a program that whacks away at middle income Canadians to the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars, but leaves untouched thousands of Canadians earning $50,000 per year who do not pay a penny in taxes. That is why they are embarrassed.

FUNDING OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, why did the Minister put a ceiling on the amount of money the Government is prepared to put into social programs? One of the documents released with yesterday's paper, as the Minister knows, indicates that the Government is not prepared to spend any more money on the social program side of the ledger. If the Government is concerned about the poor and wants to leave our programs as they affect middle-income Canadians alone, why did it not say that it is prepared to allocate more money for the poor today, and get that money from the rich who are not paying their share of taxes?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, these are consultation options, and I repeat consultation options, including one not dissimilar to the one the Hon. Member put forward. If the Hon. Member for Oshawa were to look at the very argument he is putting forward, he would find that, in Option 1, 70 per cent of the money redistributed would come from Canadian families that earn $40,000 per year or more. In option 2 it goes up in fact to over 80 per cent redistribution from families that earn $40,000 per year and up. When the Hon. Member says that it is the middle class that is affected, he should analyse his statements very carefully before he gets himself into a situation which just does not bear out according to the facts.

• (1430)

FAMILIES EARNING BETWEEN $30,000 AND $50,000 ANNUALLY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I in turn would advise the Minister to treat with some care what he says. I listened to what the Minister just said and I want to ask the Minister if he will deny that the proposals, in either of the two options which he has put before the people of Canada, represent a major reduction in income for over one million middle-income families who are earning between $30,000 and $50,000 a year. Will the Minister confirm that the Government is prepared, in either of those options, to reduce the benefits for one million families in that income category, and that at the same time it is unwilling to change the tax system to ensure that those very wealthy Canadians who are not now paying taxes will pay their share? Will he admit that?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would first say to the Hon. Member for Oshawa that a number of the statements which he made are incorrect.

First, in terms of upper incomes, that option remains. He should be careful what he says about that. Second, if he takes a look at the incomes of $10,000 and less, Canadians get more. If he looks at the option of $20,000 and less, Canadians get more. This Government has also said—because he said we are going to freeze social spending—that above that we are going to do something for widows and widowers. If he puts that altogether, it is a good program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT OF OPTIONS ON GOVERNMENT REVENUES

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I must say that I am impressed he had the courage to come into the House. That is more courage than the Prime Minister has demonstrated. He is understandably embarrassed. Even the Deputy Prime Minister is flushed.

This document is pathetic. It is ludicrous in the extreme. Worse than that, it is a bad joke. Even worse than that, it is a massive tax grab at the expense of the social programs—this is my question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I am outraged. It is at the expense of the social programs and middle-income Canadians.

Will the Minister of Finance confirm that, under the first option, 58 per cent of the amount which is taken away from the programs is retained by Governments? Under the second option, will he confirm that 60 per cent of the amount which is taken away is retained by Governments? Will he confirm that, at the expense of the social programs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one thing clear. It says "Consultation Paper" on the front of the booklet. It is for consultation. They are not proposals. They have been presented to draw out comments from various people who are interested in this matter and who want to enter into the debate in a reasonable and responsive way. That is the approach we will take over the next few months, after which decisions will be made in the course of preparing the Budget.

USE OF SAVINGS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the Budget will have "consultation" marked on it as well. In any event, what I would like the Minister of Finance to do today is to guarantee to the House, and to Canadians, that every cent which might be taken away under either of the proposals will go back into supporting family benefit programs.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that matter is addressed quite clearly in the document. It says that the savings which will be made will be redirected into the social envelope.

EFFECT OF OPTIONS ON FAMILIES WITH $25,000 INCOME

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I would ask the Minister is it fair that a secretary who earns $15,000 a year, with an unemployed husband who perhaps brings in $10,000 in unemployment insurance, should lose benefits under the proposed options? Is it fair that the working poor, who are struggling to remain off welfare, should be penalized?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Hon. Member that the purpose of the exercise is to try to make the system more fair. I say to her in all frankness that, if we took a look at the child tax credit, obviously any Government, society, and people would like to see the very best benefits go to those who need them most. Obviously, one also has to be restricted to the financial ability of the country and its citizens to raise money.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Hon. Member for Oshawa may not understand that, but some of us do.

Mr. Broadbent: We understand it very well.

Mr. Deans: We understand it.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): So, what I am saying—

Mr. Deans: Tax the poor. That's always been your policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Hon. member is very familiar with the social policies of Canada. She will notice, for instance, the turning point in the child tax credit. It is at $26,330, after which the benefits diminish up to $41,000. One could argue that that figure could be higher. Right now it is not indexed. Obviously, year by year, even that turning point, in terms of real dollars and disposable income, is reduced. We could argue about levels. That is the purpose of consultation. But I would tell the Hon. Member one thing. When we look at these programs, we look at them not only at how they can best benefit Canadians, but also, realistically, that when we redistribute money, it is taxpayers' money and not the largess of the Canadian Government.

BANK PRESIDENT'S SITUATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am talking about human beings who are trying to raise kids at a time when the incomes of young families are going down and the costs are going up. Now their family benefits are being cut back, and even the family allowance in one option is being eroded, following the Liberal policy.

The Minister has called for objective discussion. How can people be objective about this when a bank president who earns $500,000 will be asked to give up only a paltry $345 a year, and will be able to keep all his tax shelters and loopholes, while a family which is struggling on $25,000 a year will lose $120 in family benefits? How can he possibly say this is fair and progressive social policy?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would agree that it is fair and socially progressive that families earning below $20,000 would get more money, under the options which have been put forward for consultation, than they would under the present system.

What she constantly forgets is that there can be more than one program in place than just this paper. Obviously the point which she has put forward is the terms of a budgetary item. Just for once I would like her to think about more than one thing at the same time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SINGLE-PARENT FAMILIES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Hon. the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In the document on social programs made public yesterday, the Government does seem to entertain misconceptions about the economic reality of Canadian families, particularly single-parent families, 65 per cent of which are the responsibility of women.

Considering the ever-rising cost of the grocery basket, housing, transportation and education, and knowing that the proposed increase ranges from 48 to 98 cents a day, would the Minister indicate to the House what he intends to do to bring genuine relief to those single-parent families, and particularly to those women for whom every day is a reminder of their precarious financial status?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has put forward a very valid point. If she takes a look at the paper she will know that with respect to single-parent families in the situation she raises—and obviously in a consultation paper I can only give examples—the benefits that go to those who are in greatest need are even greater when applied to single-parent families.

[Translation]

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, since the proposed increase does not even enable them to buy a litre of milk, I would like to know what kind of answer the Minister can give us to reassure those women who keep phoning us. What can we tell them to prove that the Government is indeed concerned about them?

● (1440)

[English]

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, what I would hope the Hon. Member would tell those women is exactly the answer I gave. Second, I would like to put it in the largest perspective. The Hon. Member knows social policy. I perhaps know a bit of social policy, and that is that the best social policy for the country is to get the economy going again so we can afford the programs. The worst social policy is always developed when you have bad economic policy. So we have to look both to good social policy and to rejuvenating the economy. When we do those two things, we will get the very benefits the Hon. Member looks for.

EMPLOYMENT

STUDENT SUMMER JOBS—DEPARTMENTAL DOCUMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question will be addressed quietly, and not in a loud voice which may be unsettling to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday in the House the Minister denied that she has seen and agreed to a program called SELF, which would supposedly supply jobs this summer for students, but fewer than last year. High level officials in the Minister's own Department have now confirmed the legitimacy of the document which I said yesterday she had seen. Someone surely is misleading the public. Someone surely is not telling the truth.

Mr. Speaker: Someone surely should put a question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCurdy: Is the Minister in a position today to repudiate the statements of her own officials?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when I finally had a chance to see the document to which the Hon. Member referred, I recognized it, Sir—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: Wait for it. I recognized it as a preliminary document to which I had agreed there should be given further consideration. That consideration was being given, along with a number of other proposals—

Mr. Broadbent: Another policy change in the works.

Miss MacDonald: —which had been put forward by my officials. I can tell the Hon. Member that that consideration is ongoing, and out of it will come the decisions which govern the Canada Student Summer Employment Program. I would hope that when the Hon. Member hears those decisions announced, he will stand up and applaud them.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I would look forward to applauding a good program but I hope it happens before the robins sing and the snow melts in Ottawa, and students are not completely frustrated about the unavailability of jobs.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Is the Minister going to assure this House, and the students and young people of this country, that she is going to bring in a program this week, because if it is delayed any longer than this week it is going to put thousands of students in a very difficult position this summer?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when I announced last fall that there would be new programs for the Canada Student Summer Employment Program, I had determined the Government's schedule for that. It was not determined by leaked documents, and it was not determined by the hysteria of the Hon. Member. It was determined by a planned approach to this very important issue. I would just like to tell the Hon. Member to stick around and he will be able to hear what is announced.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Will the Minister advise us if he anticipates any substantial or serious delays due to the management shakeup at the Saint John shipbuilding yard in Saint John, New Brunswick? Can the Minister also advise if he has any information why the company has decided to hire an American firm to assist in the construction of the frigate program?

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for indicating his concern about possible delays in the frigate program. I want to tell the Hon. Member that I met this morning with the Chairman and President of the Saint John shipyards. They are presently meeting with my officials. Discussions are under way, and I hope to be able to make a fuller report to the Hon. Member tomorrow in relation to the discussions which are going on at this present time.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CHILD TAX EXEMPTION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance is no doubt aware that the Prime Minister misled the people of Canada last December—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Ms. Copps: — when he said in this House that there would be no reduction of a tax exemption for families with children. Was the Prime Minister also misleading the people when he answered a question put by the Hon. Member for Sudbury, which is found at page 1198 of Hansard, and I quote:

> In light of the Minister of Finance's interview with La Presse yesterday, can the Prime Minister tell us whether Canadian families who earn $35,000 a year or more are to expect cuts in their old age security cheques and in their family allowances?

The answer of the Right Hon. Prime Minister was, "No, Mr. Speaker". Can the Minister of Finance expect the Canadian people to believe this kind of "bulroney"?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again I remind the Hon. Member that this is a consultation paper. We are looking for the reasonable observations which she and others might make as to the merit of the proposals which have been put forward.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I should remind the Hon. Member that under one of the options — it is very interesting, Mr. Speaker, how the people who have the least amount to say make the most noise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Under option 1 there will be no change in the cheques which are received by Canadians. That is clearly an option, and we welcome views on it.

Ms. Copps: I might say that in this Government it is the Minister of Finance who appears to have the least to say.

STRUCTURAL TAX REFORM INQUIRY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): In that light, I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. When his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, instead of defending the rights of middle-income Canadians, including families earning $23,000 or more a year, is instituting family tax grabs, why is the Minister of Finance not prepared to table a similar discussion paper this week in this House to deal with the kind of over-all structural reform we need in the tax system, to ensure that social policy is not going to pay the price, that it is not going to be the area—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —in which Canadians are expected to pay the price for our national economic situation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that I am very open to the suggestions of Hon. Members on changes which we might make to corporate taxation as well as to the taxation of individuals. I have demonstrated up until now that I am prepared to make changes, and I will continue to make changes. However, most of those matters will have to wait until the Budget. In the meantime, I will ask the Hon. Member to send her views to me.

ALTERNATIVE TAX MEASURES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Given that the Government since it came into power has already increased taxes on middle-income Canadian families by about $500 per family, and given that in addition to that it has indicated that, as a result of its new initiatives in social spending, it intends to establish a ceiling at or about the present level of expenditures in social programs, why did the Government not look at alternative ways of raising the money necessary to pay for the needs of those who are in need, by taxing those who are not now paying their fair share?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain that these are not initiatives. This is a consultation. I hope the Hon. Member can understand that. Second, the matter he raises in terms of taxation still remains open for the Minister of Finance.

TAXATION INQUIRY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will acknowledge, I am sure, that in the discussion documents the Government indicates that it intends to maintain the ceiling at or about the present level. Why, then, in the consultation document was there not a section referring to alternative ways of raising the money necessary to provide for the poor? Why was there no reference made to a discussion on whether or not we could, in fact, tax those who do not now pay their fair share, as an alternative to the measures presented in the document?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to make the point to the Hon. Member that, when he talks about a ceiling, we are talking about the envelope as against an individual. I think that is the first point which should be made.

Mr. Deans: That's okay. I understand that.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Fine, as long as we understand, because I don't want words out there that people do not understand.

Mr. Deans: They don't understand it anyway.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Well, possibly you would like to help—

Mr. Deans: We are trying.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —and not confuse the issue with things that are not correct.

● (1450)

I am saying to the Hon. Member that there are families, should the Government accept either option, or a variation, below a certain income who get more. That is the first point that was made. I have also mentioned the spouse's allowance.

The third point I make, and I hope he can understand it, is that I think every Member of this House, regardless of Party, would like to do more for Canadians at the lower end of the income scale. Obviously. Just a minute! The point I make is this. To be able to do that, the economy obviously has to generate that kind of growth, and that has to be our purpose.

Mr. Deans: You are not talking about that. You are not even referring to that.

FAMILY SECURITY

POLICY CONCERNING THE FAMILY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I assume everyone heard what the Prime Minister said about getting at bank presidents with salaries of $500,000 and up who were receiving family allowances, but I think the Minister will agree that after reading his pot-boiler, one is left with the impression that the bank's janitor and not the bank's president is going to suffer.

I would like to ask the Minister why he lacks the courage the Minister of Justice showed in defending the judges' salaries—poor souls, they only get $100,000 a year. Why did he lack the courage to defend this country's policy on the family and make it a priority for consultation purposes? Why are some more equal than others? The Minister of Justice does not consult anyone about the salaries he gives his judges, but the Minister feels he has to consult everyone about what he is going to give low-income families.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I say to the Hon. Member, with all the gentleness I can muster—

An Hon. Member: That is not much.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That might be your view. I say to him that, if either one of these options were adopted, families earning less than $25,000 would have more disposable income than under the Government of which he was a member.

Mr. Ouellet: Forty-six cents.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Why did he not defend them like we are?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I think he knows perfectly well this means an increase of forty cents a day. He knows what it costs to raise a family.

My supplementary is as follows: In the Throne Speech—I am not talking about election promises here, this was in the Throne Speech—the Government made a commitment to improve its social policy for families. Did it mean the Government was going to destroy its family policy?

[English]

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I say to the Hon. Member that, whatever the increase is, it is more than he offered, first of all. Secondly—I say to the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East to be careful because, when his Government brought in a program, it reduced the family allowance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Just be consistent. You reduced family benefits.

I am saying to the Hon. Member that if he has a better view I am willing to listen to him, but do it on the basis of what we can do to improve the situation rather than say that when they get more at the lower end that is somehow worse than what he was doing.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR REVISION OF SELF PROGRAM

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nicket Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In the light of the fact that the criterion of benefit to the community seems to have been minimized in the SELF program, could the Minister give the House the assurance that she will revise the program in such a way as to clearly include this criterion?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member does not expect me to give him the details of a program today which I will be announcing in due course. However, I can assure him that the program for summer students, when it is announced, will certainly be fair, equitable, and it will see that the students involved get meaningful jobs this summer.

EMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Minister talks about great consultation. Members of Parliament and others were never consulted and we were forced to make these representations in the House. Can she assure the House that the levels of employment in the Employment Development Branch in effect in 1984 will be held to when this program is announced for 1985?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the consultations were undertaken beginning—

Mr. Rodriguez: That is not for the summer program.

Miss MacDonald: —beginning in early December. I have been sitting here every day waiting for some words of wisdom to come to me—

Mr. Rodriguez: You just got them.

Miss MacDonald: —from the Hon. Member. I do not know why he has not been in touch with me, has not written me, has not sent them, but he has had two months to do so.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INTERPRETATION OF MEDICAL NEGLIGENCE

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Last December 14 I made a statement under Standing Order 21 regarding a problem a constituent of mine was having in getting an interpretation under the Pension Act. I ask the Minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, if this interpretation has been made and, if not, how soon can we expect to receive it?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Order Paper question.

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that question is under consideration at the moment and an answer is expected within the next few days.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Attaboy, George.

Mr. Speaker: Just for future reference, may I say that is coming awfully close to an Order Paper question.

SIZE OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and also refers to the consultation paper released yesterday. The second option in that paper would reduce by one third the family allowance paid to families with over $20,000 of family income. Does the Minister think that two working parents with a combined income of $20,000, and three children to support, can afford to lose any part of their family benefits at this time?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I agree with the Hon. Member that families in that circumstance cannot afford to lose any of their benefits. I say again it is a consultation option. If she takes a look at it, they would in fact have more disposable income. What I think we have to look at is that if there were a monthly reduction in the family allowance and an increase in the child tax credit, does that better meet the needs of families who need disposable income month by month? I will raise another matter, that of the child tax credit where the money comes to the mother, in most cases, at the end of the tax year. We then get involved with tax discounters. Those are the kinds of questions which are totally valid, and I look forward to her views on those things in consultation.

1981 CENSUS FIGURES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, according to the 1981 census, there were 7,900 families in my constituency with two to four dependent children and an average family income of $21,346. These families are hard working, thrifty, and good citizens. They buy homes and educate their children. I sincerely hope that the Minister can find some way of helping the poor without it being at the expense of these families.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is very responsible and I say to her that that is the point of the exercise. I have no intention, and this Government has no intention, of going after the families which she has described.

Mr. Axworthy: Read your paper.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Just a minute. What we are saying—

Mr. Axworthy: Doublespeak, that is what you are saying.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Read the document, Jake.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What we are saying in the paper is: Are some of these options or derivatives thereof a better way to help those in greatest need? That is the point we make.

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG PEOPLE AGED 40 TO 60 YEARS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration on taking such a challenging initiative and preparing new programs to create lasting jobs for unemployed youths, a new summer employment program. However, is the Minister considering appropriate mechanisms to help a group of unemployed whom I call "the forgotten people", those aged 40 to 60 who are left to fend for themselves? Will her Department soon have proposals to come to their assistance?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the interests of the Canadians mentioned by the Hon. Member, and I am convinced that the Government will meet their requirements.

PETITIONS

THE ALASKA BOUNDARY LINE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to table a petition on behalf of a large number of my constituents. Very briefly, the petition relates to the Alaska boundary dispute. On October 17, 1903 the Alaska Boundary Tribunal permanently established a line between the mouth of the Portland Canal, Cape Muzon and westward to serve as the international boundary between Canada and the United States.

The petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to enshrine the A-B line into legislation as soon as possible. I have listed the large number of communities that have signed the petition.

MEASURES TO COMBAT PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents in the Thessalon area, who are expressing their concern about the availability of hard core pornography. They are petitioning the House of Commons to tighten the security at the border to stop these publications from coming into Canada and to exercise a more strict control of the licensing of video tape production and distribution which have an adverse effect on the young people in this country.

OFFENCES COMMITTED WHILE PERSONS FREE ON BAIL

Question No. 170—Mr. Stackhouse:

In 1983, how many men and women were charged with offences said to have been commited while free on bail?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports: Data currently collected by Statistics Canada which provides information on individuals who are charged with offences, does not currently provide information at a level of detail which distinguishes between offences committed while free on bail and offences committed under other circumstances. This information is not available elsewhere.

AVERAGE ANNUAL INCOME

Question No. 178—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. In (a) 1982 (b) 1983, what was the average annual income for (i) families (ii) single-parent families?

2. How many families were headed by single parents and how many single parents were male?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

1. Average incomes for families and single parent families are not yet available for 1983. However, the following estimates are available for 1981 and 1982 from Statistics Canada's annual Survey of Consumer Finances:

	Average family income ($)
	1981	1982
Families	30,440	32,981
Single Parent Families	18,182	18,683

2. In 1982, it is estimated that there were approximately 664,000 single parent families. Of this number approximately 98,000 single parents were male.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary could indicate to the House exactly when the Government intends to respond to question No. 131 which stands in my name. It is a very short question involving political patronage. I see that those kinds of questions on the Order Paper seem to take a very long time to get answered by the Government. They are being ignored.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate that as of the thirty-fifth sitting day of this session we have answered 26.5 per cent of the questions, whereas—

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

PRACTICE CONCERNING BRIEFING OF MEMBERS ON DISCUSSION PAPERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is in the form of a question to the Government House Leader, if I may. It has to do with a procedure which has developed that I think would prove to be disruptive if not at least brought to the Government's attention. He may be aware, and I am sure that you, Sir, are not aware, of the fact that yesterday and today the Government chose to hold lockups and press conferences on matters of considerable importance to the public of Canada and the House of Commons during the Question Period. That effectively excluded Members of Parliament from participating in any briefing or any press conference that was held with regard to two vitally important matters.

I would ask the Government House Leader in a friendly way if he would look at that practice and direct, or attempt to direct, that Ministers of the Crown do those things in times other than during the Question Period, which is the time when most Members are required, out of necessity, to be in the House.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on the same point of order, if I may, on the practice that has now been adopted of presenting documents for consultation without any reference to Parliament. As part of the Government's own mandate it said that it was the great defender of Parliament and was going to use Parliament in a new, effective and broader way. Yet we see Ministers of the Crown presenting documents for consultation without any reference to the Commons or to committees and without any reference within the Chamber of the House.

We saw an example of that today when the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) said that Members of Parliament could consult on training, but we did not even have access to the papers. The policy was announced during the Christmas holiday when the House was not even in session. Could the House Leader indicate to us what the intention of the Government is with regard to referring those consultation papers to committees of this House?

Mr. Speaker: Would the Member please tell me what his point of order is, there not being a point of order with regard to the admissibility or inadmissibility or tabling of a document? We have a tradition that we use a point of order procedure, which we really call a question on the business of the House, to allow the House Leaders to have a small conversation in the House. I am not inclined to allow bootlegging on that issue for other issues that are in fact not points of order. I am therefore in some difficulty. If the Member has a point of order I would be glad to hear it.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the point of order is clearly based upon your own definition. The point of order has to deal with the business of the House. We are saying that the business of the House is being frustrated because reports are not being tabled in the House.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Axworthy: Well, I think you should redefine it then.

Mr. Speaker: The Speaker does not define what is a point of order. The rules of the House define what is a—

Mr. Axworthy: How do we get answers from these guys?

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Member is trying to obtain an answer from the Government House Leader with regard to a matter that concerns him. I suggest to the Hon. Member—

Mr. Axworthy: It concerns this House.

Mr. Speaker: May I say to some Members that it is bad enough when they do not listen to answers from people they put questions to, but when you put a question to the Speaker and do not listen to his answer, I find that very difficult.

Mr. Axworthy: We would like to get some answers.

Mr. Speaker: It is very difficult. I beg your pardon?

Mr. Axworthy: We would like to get some answers.

Mr. Speaker: I will give the Member the answer to the question he seeks, I take it. That is, if he has a question on House business, then he should put it to his House Leader, who in turn should put it to the Government House Leader. That is the tradition of the House. If the Member believes that the order of the House has been violated, then he can rise on a point of order in the House of Commons and put his point of order.

Mr. Axworthy: That's exactly what I did.

Mr. Speaker: I have not heard a point of order raised yet.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, if I may speak to the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: On what point of order does the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry rise?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order considering what I believe to be a violation of the orders of the House in the sense that major documents are not being referred to this House by Ministers of the Crown. We would like to know from the Government House Leader why and how he intends to change it.

Mr. Speaker: Could the Member quote to me please the rule or order that has been violated, the rule of the House of Commons, the order or the tradition?

Mr. Axworthy: The tradition of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Oh, no, the Member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Member wish to cite a rule of the House?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that perhaps you and your Clerk examine the traditions and procedures of this House considering the responsibility of Government to refer to the House major documents of Government policy and to refer them so that Members of Parliament, who are elected by their constituents do deal with such matters, have the opportunity—

● (1510)

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member to read the rules of the House of Commons. For the sake of the Hon. Member, I will read the citation that perhaps would be of interest to him. I quote from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 233(1). It reads:

> (1) Point of order are questions raised with the view of calling attention to any departure from the Standing Orders or the customary modes of proceeding in debate or in the conduct of legislative business and may be raised at virtually any time—

I am sorry that I have to educate the Hon. Member. I invite the Hon. Member, if he has a point of order at any future time, to raise a point of order.

Mr. Axworthy: I intend to.

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Member when he raises a point of order, and I respond, to listen. I ask him to do that out of courtesy to the Chair.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, on the same point raised by my colleague, I certainly do not wish to be disputatious with the Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a point of order? I have already indicated that the point raised was not a point of order.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On the basis of the plain rules of natural justice, I would hope that the Speaker would at least give me an opportunity to be heard before he makes premature judgments with regard to the business of the House.

First, I believe my colleague has raised an issue which is of concern to me and other members of this Party.

Mr. Parry: He already said it is not a point of order.

Mr. Dingwall: When we want to hear from the cattle, we will rattle your horn.

Mr. Speaker: Excuse me if I am being disputatious. May I ask the Hon. Member to come to whatever his point of order is, recognizing, with respect to the Hon. Member and to the Hon. Member who raised the point previously, that I have already indicated that the point raised by the Hon. Member who spoke previously is not a point of order. Does the Hon. Member have a separate point of order?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, you asked a specific question with regard to a section of the House orders. I tell you that I thought it was the custom and tradition within the House with regard to the publication of documents—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Member now having a conversation with the Speaker, or does he have a separate point of order? If he rises to make a representation to me on a separate matter that is a point of order, I will hear him. If he does not, I would ask him not to rise on the same point of order on which we have already ruled.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development: and on the motion of Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg) (p. 1708).

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to resume debate from before the lunch break with regard to the muzzling order that has been brought in by the Government with respect to the so-called Investment Canada Bill.

In resuming my remarks this afternoon, let me touch on the key points of which I think Canadians are aware but which they do not often think about in relation to the new legislation that was introduced by the Minister. Let me go through some of the features of the old Foreign Investment Review Act and cite questions which would be asked of major foreign takeovers, according to the Act.

The first question is if it will provide jobs for Canadians. I suggest that this is a very appropriate question to ask about foreign capital coming into Canada. One can only wonder why the new Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) would not want that test to apply.

Another question is, will it improve Canada's export performance? Again, one would assume that such a test is one that ought to apply to foreign capital coming into the country. Will it contribute to having more of Canada's raw material processed within our own borders? I suggest that that is a test spoken about frequently by all political Parties during federal elections but one which seems to have been bypassed by this new legislation.

Will the applicant provide new investment within Canada? I believe that question is inherent in any foreign investment, whether we are talking about the old Bill or the new Bill.

Will the applicant buy supplies in Canada, provided they are competitively priced? I intend to expand on that point in a few moments. A key consideration for a foreign enterprise coming into Canada is where it buys its inventory and raw materials. That is crucially important.

Will there be new opportunities for Canadians to be shareholders, directors and managers of the enterprise? That is a crucially important test in order to determine if Canadians will have an opportunity to give direction to a corporate entity without provincial or federal government involvement so that the enterprise will operate in the direction in which the country wants to go.

Will it improve Canada's access to new products and processes? One would hope that that kind of test could stay within the legislation, but again we see that the new Minister has removed it. Will it improve Canada's industrial productivity? One would hope that that test would be applied, but the Tories have decided that it is inappropriate.

Will it increase the level of competition? Surely one would hope that the opposite would not be the case and, therefore, one must ask why the Conservatives would want to remove such a test from a Bill related to foreign investment.

Is it compatible with the Government's industrial and economic policies? That seems to be a basic and fundamental test that is applied in every industrial country around the world, whether democratic or not. One would expect that test to be applied.

Let me expand on the shortcomings of this Bill. Even the Toronto Star on December 9, 1984, described the foreign investment proposals of the new Government as being "Stevens' shortsighted gamble". The article states:

> The danger in Stevens' approach, consequently, is that it risks long-term pain for short-term gain. If he does succeed in attracting an influx of new branch plant operations without any requirement that they operate in Canada's best interests, we may see some short-term increase in jobs—but what will our economy look like 10 years from now?
> The peril is that we could end up with an economy with an even higher degree of foreign ownership than at present, a diminished capacity both to export and to innovate and hence to make our own way in an increasingly competitive world—and therefore, in the long run, with fewer opportunities to create good jobs for Canadians.

I think a few facts are important in this debate even though we could spend the brief time that we have discussing why closure on this Bill is so inappropriate. I think it is important to raise some facts about why this legislation should be redrafted. Despite the FIRA approval rate over the past two years, which was up between 95 per cent and 98 per cent, less than one-half of those approved foreign takeovers intended to increase investment or provide any new jobs. Since the beginning of 1984, 15 per cent of those approved promised neither new jobs nor new investment. It was simply a case of a big fish eating a Canadian fish.

Second, Canada has more foreign ownership and control per capita than any other industrialized nation in the world and more than many developing countries.

Third, Canada imports more duty-free, finished manufacturing goods, even excluding automotive goods, than do the United States, Japan and the European Economic Community combined. That fact comes from the Science Council of Canada.

According to Canadian Business, of the top 50 companies in Canada, the greatest number of lost jobs over the past few years has been from U.S.-owned companies.

In 1983, Canada had a deficit of $9.4 billion in interest and dividend payments. Since the record was begun in 1926, Canada has been a net exporter of interest and dividend funds.

Foreign investors used Canadian found capital to further expand and take over inside Canada. That has been demonstrated time and again. Foreign capital comes in and acquires either a branch plant or a mine within Canada and then uses our money, banking and credit union system to buy up more and channel more dividends and profits to the foreign country.

Foreign corporations take resources home to create jobs in manufacturing in the parent country. I gave some statistics with respect to that this morning. The amount of resources that are distributed back out of Canada to the parent country is devastating. Seventy-two per cent of all imports into Canada were designated for foreign-controlled firms, which deteriorates our balance of payments. That fact comes from a Statistics Canada study in 1978.

Canada's trade deficit in end products was $14.9 billion in 1983 and, to the end of October, 1984, it stands at $15.5 billion.

According to the U.S. Senate committee, in 1981, "Much of our trade with foreign countries originates with orders placed by subsidiaries of U.S. companies located overseas. For example, 75 per cent of our exports to the 300 largest companies in Canada originates from the subsidiaries of U.S. firms".

I am pleased to have had a chance to say a few words on this Bill that is in dire need of redrafting.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the specific motion of closure. I believe as a Member of Parliament that I have a responsibility to indicate to my constituents who elected me on September 4 where I stand on issues. I believe it is the obligation of each and every Member of this House to do that so that their constituents may determine how a Member feels about issues of concern to the nation.

I note with respect to this particular Bill that very few government Members have spoken. There are 211 government Members, yet only a handful have deemed it necessary to express their points of view. It seems to me that either Members do not care, they have nothing to say, or they were instructed not to speak. I suspect the latter is the case. I suspect that the House Leader or the powers that be in the Conservative Party have advised Members not to speak on this Bill in order to have the Bill become law as quickly as possible.

It is interesting to note that a special parliamentary committee has been established to investigate the role of the back-bencher in order to advise Parliament and the Government on how the role of the back-bencher can be enhanced. It seems somewhat hypocritical of the Government to embark on this parliamentary investigation while, on the other hand, effectively muzzling Government Members from speaking.

I submit, your honour, that government Members as well as opposition Members do a very serious disservice to their constituents by not standing up to express their points of view and give Canadians some insight and information on why they support or do not support the particular piece of legislation before the House. I concede that it may be important for government Members to support the legislation because it is a government initiative, but that does not stop Members from standing up in this House to explain why they support a particular Bill. Once again, it is my respectful submission that constituents, and Canadians as a whole, have to know where a particular Member stands.

The Government talks about enhancing the role of the back-bencher. How hypocritical. One recognizes that the opportunities for a government back-bencher are somewhat limited. Opportunities to ask questions during Question Period are limited and, because of the sheer numbers, opportunities are limited with respect to Standing Order 21 statements, and with respect to contributions to deliberations of standing committees of this Parliament opportunities are limited. Yet here is an opportunity for government Members to stand up and say, "I support the Bill for the following reasons," or, "I do not support the Bill for the following reasons," or, "I am suggesting possible amendments or alternatives to this legislation".

I challenge government back-benchers to speak. By not doing so they are not doing an effective job. A farce is being made of this special parliamentary committee and its deliberations.

With respect to the motion before the House, I want to indicate my very serious concern and chagrin at the method by which this motion was introduced. As a result of parliamentary trickery, a Government back-bencher introduced this closure motion. It is my submission that the closure motion we are presently debating is an abuse. It is an absolute abuse of the majority which the Government holds in this House today.

Canadians were fearful after the reality of September 4 because of the lop-sided majority of this Parliament. Their fears are well founded, Mr. Speaker. In my view this is but the beginning of how this Government intends to abuse the overwhelming majority it has.

The Government, by introducing this motion, is effectively denying any further opportunity for any more substantive motions. It is unhealthy for a democratic system that the Government in its wisdom has decided to introduce this amendment. The Opposition, as is obvious, has some very serious concerns with respect to this legislation. It is a major piece of legislation. It is the Government's first major piece of legislation. It seems to me that it is incumbent upon the Government to ensure that a full and complete debate occurs on this legislation because it is serious and important and it will affect Canadians from coast to coast.

This is a marked departure from the policies of the previous administration. It is a departure from the way we deal with foreign investment. On that basis, the Government is obligated, not only by the huge majority it holds but also by respect for Parliament and respect for this House, to ensure that a full debate occurs.

This Government has decided to invoke this form of closure. I concede that the Opposition will have other opportunities to express its point of view on this Bill. The Bill will go to committee and the Opposition will have the opportunity to speak at committee and to introduce amendments considered necessary and advisable in the best interests of Canadians.

This Government has set a very dangerous precedent for the remainder of this Parliament by deciding to invoke closure. It is but the beginning. I pray that the Government recognizes the importance of respect for Parliament, for the right of the minority, the right of both minority Parties, to be heard. By invoking this drastic measure of closure, this Government, in my respectful opinion, has shown disrespect for this Parliament and disrespect for the traditions of Parliament.

It seems to me that nothing would be lost except a few precious weeks or months if the Government were to allow the Opposition to have a full debate. It appears that this Government is bent on ramming this legislation through without consideration. It claims that it is a consultative government. During Question Period today, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) indicated they wanted to consult with respect to social programs, that they wanted Canadians to have input with respect to these major changes. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, where was the input with respect to this piece of legislation? With whom did the Government consult other than the rich boys on Bay Street and the oil barons in Calgary? What about others? Were others consulted? Were options put forward as were the options concerning universality and social programs?

Were options given to Canadians? The answer is a simple no. The Government decided there would be no option.

• (1530)

I recognize that my time for speaking has expired. I simply wish to reiterate my very serious concern with respect to the Government's actions to effectively end debate. In my respectful opinion, it does not bode well for the future workings of this Parliament and democracy per se.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that I have to speak on what in effect is a closure motion. It was interesting to listen to the last speaker, the representative of the Liberal Party, talking about how a closure motion hurts Parliament and how it is undemocratic. In your many years in the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you remember that quite often various members of the Liberal Party introduced various forms of closure or motions to restrict the ability of the Opposition to debate and raise issues in the House of Commons. When the Liberals are on this side of the House they say one thing, but they say and do the exact opposite when they are in government.

The hypocrisy is not only to my right; it is also across the way. When you were in opposition, Mr. Speaker, you were joined by people who are now part of the Government Party who would rant and rave against motions of closure. For that matter, you probably remember an incident where the Conservative Members actually charged the Speaker on a matter of closure. I am not recommending that as a course of action to be taken, but it reminds us that when the Conservatives were on this side of the House they were completely opposed to any limitations on debate in the House of Commons.

I recognize that from time to time there is a need to limit debate in the House of Commons, but this is not one of those occasions. This Government came to power last fall. It did not introduce this Bill until December and it is now toward the end of January. We have had only a few days of debate on the Bill. Most of the country does not know what is in this legislation. One way that Members of the House of Commons have of getting information to the public is by making speeches in the House of Commons. The closure motion before us today means that within the next day or two debate will come to an end.

As a result of this legislation, we are again hearing about a group which had died two or three years ago, the Committee for an Independent Canada. As a result of the actions of this Government, this legislation in particular, that group is talking about re-emerging. Unfortunately, if we rush through the passage of the second reading of this legislation, send it to committee and the Government again forces closure at that stage, groups concerned about the economy and the ownership of the industries of our nation will not have a real opportunity to protest this legislation. That is a serious concern for all of us.

A number of speakers from the New Democratic Party stated that we in this nation have one of the highest percentages of industries owned by foreign people and corporations. Others from our caucus have pointed out that most of our natural resources are not owned by Canadians. Member after Member has given examples of where American owned firms have applied American law in their dealings rather than Canadian law.

I am glad to see the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in the Chamber. He will know that on occasion firms operating in Canada have not followed the policy of this Government. They have followed the policy of the American Government or their home nation. Jobs are lost in Canada not because of Canadian policy but because of American policy.

I spoke on this legislation last week. I did not read quotes from labour movements, socialists or Canadian nationals. I did read some quotes from the Science Council of Canada, a government agency headed by a former leader of the Liberal Party for Ontario, Dr. Stuart Smith. I referred to a study done by Frank Longo for the Science Council of Canada on the history of research and development by foreign-owned firms in Canada in comparison to Canadian-owned firms. Mr. Longo's study found that by and large foreign-owned firms did less research and development in this nation than Canadian-owned firms. On average, therefore, a foreign-owned firm will do less research and development in Canada. I repeat, that study was done by the Science Council of Canada.

Even with the weak legislation that exists at the present time, we do not get the same amount of research and development from foreign-owned firms that we get from Canadian firms. For the Government at this time to look at further weakening those very limited controls on foreign investment will result in our having less control and less say about our future.

Mr. Longo's study also looked at what happened with money supplied by the Canadian Government with regard to foreign investors. It is interesting to note that Canadian firms by and large, though not everyone, took the money they received from government grants and matched it dollar for dollar in order to do research and development in this nation. Not so with foreign-owned firms. There were exceptions and some foreign-owned firms did a good job of research and development in this country, but on average they did not match and only used the federal Government supplied money. Not only do we have less research and development done by foreign-owned firms, but they do not even match the money they receive from the federal Government in order to do research.

I referred that study to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). I have a letter here from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion in which he admits that he does not know what study I am talking about. I referred to the author and that it was done by the Science Council of Canada. If a Minister has a study that affects legislation before this House, he should read that study. That study was paid for by the taxpayers of Canada. It looked at how our economy can be developed and the Minister has not even considered it.

I recognize that as a result of the closure motion before us, I have only one more minute to speak. I plead with the government back-benchers, the silent majority in this House of Commons, to consider their role in the House of Commons. Consider what will happen to research and development, what it will do to the opportunities for our young people, our opportunities for economic development in the future, and vote against this legislation. Members have a duty. I ask them to please carry out that duty for the benefit of their constituents.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

• (1540)

[English]

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in participating in this debate. I must say at the outset that when I read the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif), I was quite surprised, particularly in view of the fact that the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) is present in the House. I can recall with great clarity that when he was on this side of the House, he vigorously opposed any limitations on debate which came before the floor of the House of Commons. I also recall, as I am sure you do, Mr. Speaker, that occasion one evening when Members of Parliament from the Conservative side rushed the Speaker's chair.

The limitations that are being put on the debate today, at a time when the whole substantive issue of foreign investment has not been thoroughly discussed by Members of Parliament in this Chamber, seems to me to be a bit unfair. It seems to me that the Government, very unwisely, is rushing its legislative timetable. When the Bill was initially tabled in the House of Commons, I thought it was a mistake. I would have thought that this Bill would have come forward after some consultation with the Canadian people and the Members of the House of Commons. After all, were we not told by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that consultation would be the key, operative word for the new Government? Instead, we saw two incidents. One was an arbitrary cutting of $4.2 billion from the Canadian economy; the other was an attempt to pass a piece of legislation dealing with foreign investment without any meaningful consultation with Canadians. That seems to fly in the face of the arguments made so eloquently by Conservative Members that there ought to be consultation. Nevertheless, this piece of legislation is now before us.

I am a bit saddened to see that government Members, for whatever reasons—I can only assume they are good reasons—do not wish to join one after the other in debating the substantive portions of this particular Bill. To try to perpetrate this piece of legislation on the Canadian people in a limited amount of time flies in the face of what members of the Conservative Party did while they were in opposition.

I think it is very distasteful that we as Members of Parliament, at a time when a committee has been appointed by the House to review the role of Members of Parliament, are now confronted with a piece of legislation which we must pass within a limited period of time. That is totally unacceptable, particularly if we are to change the way Parliament works and the way Parliament ought to work.

The substance of the Bill that is before us leaves a great deal to be desired both for Members of the House of Commons and, I am sure, for Members of the other place. Equally so, there are other legislatures across the country that have some grave concerns about the substantive parts of this Bill. I recall that the present Minister of Development for the Province of Nova Scotia, a member of the provincial Conservative Party, has expressed some serious doubts as to how far this Bill will go in terms of attracting investment, particularly to Nova Scotia. It is frustrating to see the Government trying to rush this Bill through very quickly, but it is even more frustrating to see that those of a different political stripe than I have legitimate concerns about this piece of legislation.

Second, Mr. Speaker, Canadians from all regions of the country are concerned that the lack of foreign investment review, which would be the pith and substance of the Bill, will allow for investment from abroad which has no regulatory control. I think Canadians in all regions of Canada are concerned about that. I would have thought that Members opposite would have wanted to have the opportunity to debate that matter on the floor of the House of Commons. Apparently the exact opposite is the case.

I was also disappointed that the Minister responsible, in speaking to the substance of this Bill, failed for whatever reasons to place before Parliament a document which would clearly spell out the jobs that he would anticipate as a result of the passing of this legislation. Members of Parliament were told that if this piece of legislation were to be passed, it would create wealth, jobs and prosperity. We were told it would open the doors and give our young people, women and minority groups an opportunity to have meaningful employment. I think all Members of Parliament would applaud that objective. However, the Government went a step farther: it indicated that that would happen forthwith.

All I have asked of the Minister and of his officials is to provide the documentation regarding jobs here on the floor of the House of Commons so that Members of Parliament who may have different ideologies, philosophies and approaches to the running of the economy can debate what those numbers mean. Unfortunately, the Minister responsible has not seen fit to comply with that very reasonable and objective request. I suggest that that would make one a little suspicious of the Government's intentions.

First we had a Government that talked about jobs, jobs, jobs. Then it talked about consultation, consultation, consultation. There have been no jobs. With regard to this piece of legislation, there has been no consultation and the Government is trying to slam it through. Time and time again, both in the House of Commons and through the news media, I have heard that the Government is concerned with creating confidence in the Canadian economy. The Government said that the way to do this was to consult with people from coast to coast. There has been no consultation on Bill C-15. I do not see any outpouring of confidence as a result of the tabling of this legislation. In fact, I find that what exist are fears, apprehensions and a suspicion of the Government's intention incoming forward with a document like Investment Canada so early in its mandate.

If one wished to be political, one would believe that there is a rift between the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), and that one is trying to outdo the other. Perhaps the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion really wants to be the Minister of Finance and that is why he has jumped the gun on his colleague, the Minister of Finance. I hope that is not true, but some have argued that that may be the case. I hope there is no disunity on the other side because those on the other side have a major mandate to carry out for the Canadian people.

The changing of the Foreign Investment Review Act, as we know it today, to Investment Canada is not supported by any evidence put forward by the Conservative Party that states unequivocally that jobs will be created in each of the provinces of Canada. Job guarantees are very important. I have had experience with foreign investment. We welcome foreign investment, but there must be some restrictions on where that foreign investment goes and how it will operate within the Canadian economy. I suggest that the Prime Minister went to Washington prematurely. He went to New York and to Washington and gave them all that they requested without attempting to obtain reciprocity with regard to the things which we were seeking in Canada. I think that is a pretty immature way of running the country and improving the Canadian economy.

• (1550)

I hope that other Members will join in this debate and express their thoughts as to how we should proceed from here.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

[English]

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to join in this debate which has imposed closure on Bill C-15. It is with sadness that I note it is the first motion of closure which has been introduced by the new Conservative Government. There is a little voice in the back of my head which suggests that it will not be the last which we will see. In fact, it is probably the first of many to come.

It is also sad that a Party which was so eloquent in opposition in denouncing the motions of closure which the former Liberal Government introduced, on numerous occasions and many times for no justifiable reason, now committing exactly the same sin. It is amazing to see, in the men and women who sit across the aisle, the type of conversion and mind change which has occurred. Indeed, power corrupts. What amazes me is how soon and how quickly power corrupts.

It is also somewhat discouraging that so few government Members have risen to explain and justify this legislation. We have heard some very simplistic statements and slogans which government Members like to put forth. This legislation is essentially based on simplistic premises, the major one being that the problem which exists in Canada today is that there is not enough foreign investment. They say it is because those naughty Liberals were really socialists and closed the door to foreign investment, and that that is why we have an unemployment rage which is so high in Canada. So all we need do is open up the gates and foreign investment will come in and create the jobs and prosperity needed to put Canada back on the road to economic recovery.

I appreciate that Members in the House—who after all are politicians—give political speeches, and that often those speeches contain simplistic notions. What concerns me is that this is not just speech material but the actual policy and thinking of the present Government. It scares me, because if this is the policy it is simplistic, and it will not bring about the desired solutions. However, it will create more problems in the future.

First, I would like to deal with the notion that FIRA and the former Liberal Government which introduced and administered FIRA were made up of a bunch of socialists who stopped the flood of foreign investment. We could not get further from the truth. If we consider that 95 per cent to 98 per cent of the applications in the last two years were approved by the Liberal Government, we begin to realize that FIRA was indeed a toothless tiger. It did not hold back foreign investment. If we consider that Canada has more foreign ownership and control per capita than any other industrialized nation, we begin to realize that most of this occurred under previous Liberal Governments. So to make the charge that it was FIRA and the Liberals which stopped the flood of foreign investment does not make sense.

Second, the simplistic notion which has been put forward is: Let's get rid of FIRA and foreign investment will come into Canada. I suggest that that will not happen because in the past FIRA has not been effective and there are no great globs of foreign investment waiting to come into Canada after this legislation is passed. The Globe and Mail did some background checking with investors and bankers in the United States—mainly in New York—which showed that very few had any expectations of new investment flowing into Canada. I think the Tories are suffering some disillusionment. They believe that because they were elected and because they are bringing in this legislation, all of a sudden foreign investment will come into Canada. Foreign investment occurs when there are certain economic and social conditions; mainly the condition that there is a profit in the investment. Investors already have enough investment in Canada and see no reason to open new branch plants. For the moment they have enough; there is no need for them to establish new centres of production in Canada.

Much of what we have heard during this debate is frivolous and has no basis in terms of reality. When we hear the odd Conservative spokesman say "Pass this legislation and new investment will come in", I believe it is a phoney statement. When we hear Liberal members stand up to proclaim the evils of foreign investment, that too is phoney. The fact that this country, on a per capita basis, is owned by more foreigners than any other developed country in the world is the result of the actions of Liberal Governments.

The simplistic idea that if we bring forth more foreign investment it will cure all our ills is dangerous. It can create on a short-term basis some jobs and development in Canada; there is no denying that. But people invest in something because they expect to get more out than they put in. Eventually, a day of reckoning must occur. The money going out, in terms of dividends and interest payments, is greater than the new investment money which is coming in.

The day of reckoning occurred in Canada some time ago. Canada has a greater outflow of capital in the form of dividend payments than it has in new capital coming in. Therefore, in order to cover our deficit in the balance of payments, we try to encourage more new capital to come in. It is like digging a hole in order to get the dirt to fill up the hole which was dug some time ago. But in the process a deeper hole has been dug. That means that the future must be mortgaged in order to service the debts of the present. The Conservatives have not given us a change in Canadian Government policy but a continuation of the policies which existed in previous Liberal Governments. It is an attempt to get more foreign capital to come into Canada in order to pay the deficit resulting from the flow of capital which is leaving the country. It is stupid economic policy and it will not work. We are only postponing serious problems with which future generations will be forced to deal.

There are numerous studies which show that foreign investment is not necessarily the solution to a country's problems. We have seen studies which suggest that research and development suffers when most of the country's major industries are branch plants of foreign multi-nationals. We have seen, in such an economy as we have in Canada, that the employment rate decreases when a vast majority of the plants are foreign-owned. We see that there is a negative outflow of capital funds. We see that the social, economic and political independence of a country gets eroded when a good hunk of its economy is foreign controlled.

• (1600)

Something I also find discouraging in the Government's economic policy is that it is one which is backward-looking. I had hoped that with the election of a new Government with new faces, some new outlooks would be introduced. We are moving into a new social and economic age. By all signs it seems that in this new age, production should be small scale, that there should be community, country and regional self-sufficiency, and that the new products coming on the market should be intensive in information and technology. It is customization versus mass production.

The indications are that this is the economy of the new age. The Bill which is in front of us ties us into an old age of mass production, world-wide mandates and into a type of economy which is owned by multi-nationals and controlled from outside our borders. The encouragement of this kind of economy is a sin.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson)—Canadian Wheat Board—Request for early pay-out to farmers; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Consumer Affairs—Activities of cheque cashing companies. (b) Request for investigation; the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey)—Banks and Banking—Chartered banks' refusal to cash welfare cheques. (b) Existence of cheque discounters.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development and on the motion of Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg) (p. 1708).

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I admit to being lucky to have this opportunity to conclude the remarks I began last week. As you recall, Mr. Speaker, last week I gave a few examples of the fact the rhetoric we hear from our colleagues opposite is far removed from what they actually do and the policies they advocate here in the House and elsewhere.

Among other things, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned the case of Petromont where the Government wasted about $15 million on a project which we had rejected in the election campaign. But that is only an example. As I explained to you and my colleagues in the House a few days ago, the same thing can be said about the Bill under consideration—more rhetoric, nothing concrete. They change the name, they do something else and invite foreigners to invest in this country. The same invitation is extended to Canadian investors. That is why I ask the question, Mr. Speaker: What for?

Incidentally, I have just read in two different papers today—Le Devoir and La Presse—the remarks made in Toronto yesterday by our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and I quote:

Shortage of investments—Wilson denounces businessmen

And again:

Private sector not fully behind economic recovery, Wilson claims.

And it goes on to say:

Federal Finance Minister Michael Wilson said Monday that certain businessmen do not seem to realize that they are just as responsible as the Government for the economic recovery.

So here is my next question, Mr. Speaker: Will he take a similar approach with our foreign friends? Will the Minister of Finance also denounce foreign businessmen because they are not here in Canada to invest? Simply more of the same rhetoric, Mr. Speaker. And again I stress the point: Canadians do not realize that the rhetoric we hear day in and day out in the House has precious little to do with what the Government actually does.

Here is another example, Mr. Speaker. Conservative spokesmen have always maintained that certainty in tax matters is altogether indispensible if we are to instil confidence among investors, create jobs in Canada, and what have you. I am sure no one will disagree, but, Mr. Speaker, one of the first measures taken by this Government with respect to fiscal policy was to stop the practice of handing down certain advance rulings. This particular measure has caused instability and uncertainty, while at the same time disrupting negotiations on major transactions. Where were the critics, Mr. Speaker? I ask you, where were the critics? Here in the House, among my Opposition colleagues but aside from the general public, hardly a critic to be found.

Another example, Mr. Speaker. When the Progressive Conservatives were in the opposition, they criticized the Minister of Finance's plan to raise the sales tax because according to them, it was the most repressive federal tax ever, collected by hypocrites, cynics, manipulators, rogues and slick operators.

I shall quote a few comments by some Progressive Conservative Party critics. They asked Mr. Lalonde, who was Minister of Finance at the time, to postpone or cancel this plan. Mr. Mulroney, then Leader of the Opposition and now our Prime Minister, had urged the Minister of Finance, Mr. Lalonde, my colleague at the time, to reconsider his decision to raise taxes, in order to, and I quote the Prime Minister:

In order to correct these appalling policies that have drained the country and the economy.

After these practically hysterical attacks against a one per cent increase in the sales tax, what did the present Government do when it got a chance, Mr. Speaker? What did it do? Did it reverse the previous Government's decision? It did not. It confirmed that decision. And this time the critics grumbled a little, but not much.

Another example, Mr. Speaker, again in the tax field, and you people opposite better listen, because this is what your Government is doing.

Some Hon. Members . . . Excuse me, Mr. Speaker.

Here are a few more examples I would like to mention, still in the same field. For a long time, Progressive Conservatives maintained that the Petroleum Compensation Charge was a considerable and costlyobstacle to economic growth. The critics said: Terrific, they are going to abolish this tax as soon as they come to power. That would make sense.

It would have made sense, but what did the Progressive Conservatives do? They made another about-face and decided to maintain the tax as a source of general revenue.

I could go on for the rest of the afternoon, Mr. Speaker, giving examples to prove that the credibility gap on the other side is widening every day. It is unbelievable!

Another example. The budgetary cutbacks announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his economic message, his so-called mini-budget of November 8, 1984, included a reduction of $150 million in funding for research and development, an activity essential to economic growth as the Progressive Conservatives have been saying for many years.

• (1610)

This is another obvious contradiction in policy between, on the one hand, the rhetoric we hear in this House and elsewhere, and on the other hand, the initiatives taken in fact by the government.

Finally, let us look at defence expenditures. Our friend from Winnipeg, who is in the House today, is very interested in this question.

Mr. Speaker, who in Canada does not believe that the Conservatives were planning on increasing defence expenditures? But what did they say during the campaign? Then in his economic statement, the Minister of Finance announced that he would cut the defence budget by $154 million.

The debate must continue so we can emphasize this point, Mr. Speaker, because I want to close by saying something.

Personally I think that this bill is extremely dangerous because we are giving the Minister of Industry the discretionary power to decide by himself whether a foreign investment should be accepted in Canada. Is this not a fact? How can we vote for such a bill which will place in the hands of a single Minister the power to make the final decision on such important investments for Canada?

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, it is shocking to give such discretionary powers to anyone. An amount of $500 million or $100 million could be involved. It could be any amount according to the legislation. A single Minister will still make that decision.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that, if we approve this bill, it will mean that the Cabinet has totally relinquished its responsibilities.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the Government's insistence on dismantling the Foreign Investment Review Agency is based on the premise that by doing so Canada would somehow manage to generate hundreds of thousands of jobs overnight, and that much of the problem of Canada's lack of productivity and high unemployment at present stems from the very fact of FIRAs existence. In my view, Mr. Speaker, the mismanagement of successive Liberal Governments is hardly a reason for blaming FIRA.

The experience of this country with FIRA is that it has not prevented foreign investment. The figures show quite the contrary. If FIRA can be blamed for anything, it is for perhaps being overly bureaucratic in its decision-making process and for unnecessarily delaying investment decisions by foreign investors. Certainly the figures clearly indicate that foreign investment in Canada has not declined to any degree at all since FIRA was established. I believe the figures show that 98 per cent of all applications to FIRA were approved. Therefore, to make an ideological argument that FIRA somehow destroys investment opportunities in Canada is seriously misleading the public.

If indeed the Government is making that kind of ideological decision because it does not like public agencies, that is something else, and the Government should come out and clearly say so. That would be better than saying that if we get rid of FIRA we can create all kinds of jobs overnight. I would like to see this Government come forward with some figures which would clearly indicate that. Perhaps if it did so Members of the Opposition might look more kindly up on what the Government is trying to do. However, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you from my own personal experience that FIRA, its decision-making process, and Government policy towards FIRA, have done nothing to protect Canadian workers or the Canadian market-place.

This is a serious situation, Mr. Speaker. For example, Canadian General Electric is a part of the branch plant economy and whether or not that corporation has provided a direct benefit to Canadians can be seriously questioned. In a plant in Toronto called the Radio Valve plant which later became the Canadian General Electric plant, the company was involved in production of vacuum tubes for televisions and radios. That plant was closed by CGE around 1969. The argument was that it was no longer a viable operation. In fact, the company closed that plant as part of an international rationalization program. They decided that plant was not profitable for the purpose of continuing to supply the Canadian market with vacuum tubes for television sets. Perhaps they may have had an argument there, but they moved production of that plant to a plant in the United States and continued to import exactly the same product into the Canadian market-place. In the process they threw 800 Canadians out of work. Some of those people had seniority with that company in excess of 40 years.

That, Mr. Speaker, is not the kind of investment that I or other Canadians want to see. Surely if we allow companies to come into Canada to exploit our market-place and Canadian workers in order to make a profit, then they have an obligation to prove they will make a significant contribution to Canada and Canadians. From my experience that has not taken place.

If you look at the major industries in our country, Mr. Speaker, you will find that most of them are dominated by foreign companies. I think it is also safe to say, and many people would agree with me because I have heard it expressed, that Canada is probably the only country in the world in the process of de-industrialization. Most countries are industrializing. One of the major reasons for that is the large degree of foreign control of investment in this country. We have no say at all about how that is controlled, and we had none even with FIRA. I predict it will be even worse once we get rid of FIRA and end up with this new agency the present Government wants to bring out.

I want to mention two other instances more current than that of Canadian General Electric which I spoke about. The first is the Black & Decker plant closure in Barrie, Ontario. That company received approval last year to buy into the CGE operation in Barrie, and less than a year after receiving approval they turned around and are now closing that plant to consolidate it with another operation of the company. They are now laying off some 500 workers, I believe.

That, too, is not the kind of investment we think this Government should be encouraging; or if it is going to encourage it, make sure that when that corporation establishes itself in the country it is not going to do the kind of things that Black & Decker is doing in Barrie, Ontario.

• (1620)

I would like to discuss, as another example, what is happening in Toronto between the Pepsi-Cola company and 7-Up. In that particular case Pepsi-Cola has taken over 7-Up's production in Montreal while 7-Up has taken over Pepsi's production in Toronto. More than half of the 260 employees at Pepsi's Weston plant in Toronto will lose their jobs when the plant closes, which is scheduled for next month. The union in that plant has been told that 7-Up will build a new plant in Malton, which is outside the union's bargaining territory, to handle the increased work, rather than taking over the existing facility in Toronto.

We do not need another American corporation coming into this country on a union-bashing spree either. If they want to come into Canada to exploit our markets and receive a fair return on their investment, which no reasonable person would argue against, we at least expect them to act like responsible corporate citizens rather than a bunch of hoodlums coming in to smash a union which has been in that particular facility for many years. They then turn around and destroy 260 jobs when many of the employees had up to 30 years of service with that corporation.

Surely while we are attracting investment to Canada we can at least take the responsible attitude of telling the corporations that we need to protect the jobs in this country. I do not believe that we do not have the investment funds in Canada, because most of these corporations use Canadian money in the first place to buy up Canadian corporations. Very few of them come into Canada to start a new enterprise. Then if the competition is too stiff, they close down their operation in order to exploit the Canadian market-place from their home base.

Mr. Speaker, I see my time is up. Thank you very much for your patience.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure, but also with a feeling of disappointment that I rise to speak on the amendment moved by a Member from Quebec who, as her first mission, is willing to do the dirty work that the Minister did not want to do himself. I do not think that the Hon. Member realizes that in doing so, she becomes the first one to introduce a motion aimed at muzzling the opposition, at shutting up those who should speak for the Canadian people. I am very disappointed that this should be done by someone from the same province as I am, someone who is satisfied with earning an extra $9,000 simply to carry the bag for the Minister and allow him to be somewhere else during this debate.

Mr. Speaker, we can see that the government ... If the Conservative backbenchers have anything to say, let them have the guts to speak up! Let them rise! Your colleague from Champlain (Mr. Champagne) was the one who said that the small fry should express their views and your colleague for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) was the one who said publicly that he does not understand his colleagues who are quite content to go on trips and nothing else. Those are not the words of Liberals, but of two Progressive Conservatives Members of Parliament speaking about their Quebec colleagues. If you have something to say ... Mr. Speaker, I invite them to speak up instead of remaining in their seats.

I was saying that the government has introduced a motion of closure. In the meantime, we have learned that, even if the bill is not approved, the Americans are certain that Canada now belongs to them. We only have to look at what is going on in the industry concerning the frigate program. We are going to have not only American investments, but also American workers. Not only will the Americans or people from other countries be able to invest in Canada, but at no time did the Minister or any other Conservative Member give evidence that this would create employment. If it did, I would agree with it. No one—

If the Hon. Member who just made a comment has anything to say, he can now rise and do so! He has not risen to speak in this House yet. In my opinion, the former Member for Lac-Saint-Jean had more guts than this one. He had some backbone. He was able to rise and speak.

Mrs. Mailly: That is why he was defeated.

Mr. Malépart: Therefore, Mr. Speaker ... You, the Member for Gatineau, just wait, it will not be long, your turn is coming!

Mr. Speaker, I can see this so-called Government which has developed two sets of policies, one for its own citizens and one for the oil corporations, boasting about consulting people. Then when the time comes for making decisions on gasoline price increases, this Government meets with oil company bosses to hear what their instructions are and complies with them immediately, without even consulting its own Members. That is not important. They are just porters, or so said the Hon. Members for Champlain and Duvernay (Mr. Champagne and Mr. Della Noce), both Progressive Conservative Members themselves.

Mr. Speaker ... You too, the other fellow from Lac Saint-Jean, when you have the guts to do so, you rise and make a speech!

Mr. Speaker, when the time comes to make decisions affecting all of our citizens, whether this has to do with humane provisions such as the spouse's allowance for single people between age 60 and age 64, when the time comes for reforms, so-called reforms to improve family policy in respect of family allowances, then it is something else. They bide their time. There is no hurry. And then they make all kinds of rules behind closed doors to try and get money back from middle- and low-income citizens.

Mr. Speaker, it was not I, it was the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) who said that Ottawa does not have much money to help the young. Do you understand that, young people? You were promised all that. But that is over. They knew of course. There was one minister of the Crown, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) who was quite outspoken during the election. He told the truth. But not the others, Mr. Speaker. I do not blame the Progressive Conservative backbenchers. I hear them howling. I know this hurts. I appreciate that you do not like to hear the truth. I see the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) who is supporting me on that.

So, Mr. Speaker, I know you are disappointed with your colleagues! I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that being humane as you are, if you were in Cabinet you would not tolerate the kind of things that are now going on on the Government side.

Mr. Speaker, what we find is that as soon as the Americans are involved . . . we may recall that the Prime Minister accepted to be the hatchet man for a multinational corporation named—

The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) is quite in a hurry to speak. Stand up!

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like to say to the Hon. Member that when the Speaker is in the Chair he is in a very neutral position. He is a referee or umpire. I just do not like the statement or inference that the Hon. Member made during his speech. I would hope that he would not imply that type of statement in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I always have much respect for the Chair, and especially for the present Speaker. You have shown your qualifications in all areas.

Mr. Speaker, if only Hon. Members would let me speak . . . As I was saying our Prime Minister agreed to act as a hatchet man for the Iron Ore. He accepted, and I think Quebecers will very well recall that. He agreed to quietly shut down an industry, and a town.

Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered that the Prime Minister, as soon as he was elected, went south of the border to meet with big finance in the United States and with the American President. Very early, he went to get instructions, and very soon he will be forced—

• (1630)

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, according to the rules of the House, it seems to me that speeches should be dealing with the subject being debated. Up till now, I have not heard a word that is related to the Bill.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not think that is a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has just shown her ignorance. We are not dealing now with the Bill, but with the amendment calling for closure. I suggest it is about time the Tory Members were briefed in their caucus and knew that the House is now dealing with the amendment moved by the Hon. Member and that it is a motion to close this debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please! The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: I think the Hon. Member is wrong, Mr. Speaker. I think also that we are dealing with the previous question, which is Bill C-15. Is it not so, Mr. Speaker?

I should like you to shed light on this matter. I think—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please! This is not a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the question is—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order! Just a minute, please.

Mr. Malépart: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The matter of closure. I can understand why Conservative members keep interrupting, since they do not want to hear the truth, even though they know exactly where they stand, as evidenced by their disappointment reported recently in the press.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will meet with Mr. Reagan, the President of the United States, and show that he has delivered the goods and carried out the orders.

I think that is why the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) has accepted this assignment—I admire this person who is both nice and competent—but I think she should not have accepted an assignment which is below her.

Mr. Speaker, we must realize that we will be faced again with a similar motion when the House is called upon to deal with the spouse allowance, which is an injustice with regard to 80,000 senior citizens in Canada, 85 per cent of whom are women who are excluded from this social program merely because they are single, separated or divorced.

The Government will again move a similar motion to end the debate.

Mr. Speaker, when the time comes for us to deal with such important issues as the amendments to family-oriented programs, I only hope it will not be another Quebec Member who will do the dirty work and move a motion to prevent Opposition Members from—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry—

[English]

I am sorry, the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, because the Government has moved a motion to terminate this debate, this is my last opportunity to speak on the Bill at this particular stage. My next opportunity would be at third reading stage if the Government is indeed so short-sighted as to pursue its initiative that far.

I believe that if the Government listens to the concerns of Canadians, and if they are able to appear before the committee, it will see the problems that it is creating for Canadians and our economy. Hopefully it will decide to stop pursuing this legislation at that point.

Let me remind the House of the roots of this particular legislation. As has already been stated, the old Foreign Investment Review Agency was essentially a toothless tiger. However, it was part of an over-all policy upon which the Government at that time was attempting to embark at the request of many people across the country some ten or fifteen years ago.

I am sure Members can recall the advice of the Committee for an Independent Canada and some of the work done by Mel Hurtig at that time. The results of the post-war decision to open up the country for investment by multi-national companies was clearly pointed out. By the middle 1960s we had essentially become a branch plant economy. While that is no longer so much the case, there is a branch plant economy still existing in some sectors. The implementation of the policy for investing in Canada forced a change in that existing attitude. Of course, that attitude was formed in part by the investment community and the manufacturing sector in Canada at that time.

I think one problem was that the existing institutions did not want to be threatened by other Canadian challenges. Therefore many companies did not issue shares for expansion purposes but chose to finance through banks, trust companies or insurance companies. As a result, there was a small club of the large investment community that was operating within itself. This prevented an opportunity for small investors to become a part of the over-all expansion of larger plants and industrial processes.

A recent example of this is Nova Corporation, which is essentially an Alberta-based corporation. That company came to Ottawa to explain its activities and talk about some government policies it had experienced in past years. I believe its comments are pertinent to this debate on the Investment Canada Bill as a result of which there will virtually be new rules regarding the importation of foreign capital into the country. Their comments also pertain to how the large investment community acts within itself.

Businessmen face difficulties when they attempt to build a company and attract investment by issuing new shares. This is the course which Nova Corporation chose to take but that company and others like it do so at some cost. If it issues new shares to accommodate the new investment, the value of its shares will remain relatively flat. It was competing in a market-place which chose to hold the same amount of shares and finance internally through the banks or trust companies rather than to issue new shares. Therefore the value of those shares would escalate quite quickly.

I remind the House that most of the investment funds in Canada are being held by insurance companies or trust companies. They tend to look for shares that have a history of increasing in value very rapidly on a consistent basis. That type of money is attracted to companies which are borrowing but not enlarging the shareholder base, not paying dividends or taxes. It is a combination of our tax policy and investment policy which has been determining the kind of new investment that takes place in the country.

• (1640)

A company like Nova Corporation which was attempting to expand by issuing new shares and new stock was at a distinct disadvantage. I think the activities of the Committee for an Independent Canada and other like-minded groups helped to draw attention to this sort of thing and I think to some extent were partly successful in getting some of our tax policies and some government policies beamed away from relying totally on that very powerful little clique of investors that have been guiding investment decisions in this country and not making the benefits of those decisions available to ordinary Canadians.

I mentioned the attempts that were successful by Nova Corporation which took advantage of the national energy policy to expand its corporation into a number of areas involving oil and gas. It had very good results, growing in size by three or four times in the course of a mere eight or nine years.

I would also like to bring to the attention of the House some of the options that were experimented with at the same time as those kinds of corporate experiments were going on. There were also experiments by some of the provinces to become involved in attempting to buy back control of their resources and to buy back some industries in control of foreign owners. One of the well-known experiences, at least well-known in my province, is that which Saskatchewan had in taking back control of the potash industry. About 50 per cent of the potash industry came back into Saskatchewan's hands as a result of a Crown corporation being set up with that particular mandate in mind.

What were some of the benefits of gaining that industry and having it held within the province? First, the head office was in the Province of Saskatchewan. It was not in Albuquerque or Chicago, it was in Saskatoon. This meant management decisions were made in Saskatoon. The second and third levels of management tended to be made up of Saskatchewan people and there was a clear decision on the part of the board of directors to attempt to operate that particular industry in a way that would be of benefit to Saskatchewan and create jobs for Saskatchewan residents.

I see, Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that I should come to the end of my remarks. I think these experiments have shown there are other methods of creating investment within the country and that they have clear advantages over relying on foreign investment. I wish the Government would look at some of those before pushing this legislation to the exclusion of these ideas.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Minister of State, Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn), is rising on a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have just had a meeting with the Opposition House Leaders. I thought it would be appropriate for me simply to indicate the business for tomorrow. We are making such great progress on this legislation that I think what we will try to do is to carry on with the same order of business tomorrow as we have today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and on the motion of Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg) (p. 1708).

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned before I honestly do not see why this Bill is called Investment Canada. It should be called the Foreign Investment Act. Canadian investors will not receive any benefit from this Bill. It will do nothing for investment in Canada. The benefit will go to the foreign investors. It will certainly not be of benefit to Canadian industry or Canadian employees. I fail to see how the Government can tell us that this Bill will be good for the economy or that it will create jobs and stimulate the economy.

What we are going to become more and more in this country is a branch plant economy. We are going to have more of our industry taken over by American corporations. The tendency will not be for Americans to invest in Canada. They have said they will not invest in Canada. Even following the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in New York they have said that they will not be increasing their investment in Canada at this time and for us not to expect American investors to be waiting at the border, as they call it, with bags of money to invest here.

In light of that, what can we expect? I maintain we can expect very little. In fact, there will be a negative result. For instance, if we have this branch plant economy that I predict, what will the future be for research and development in Canada? Corporations controlled in other countries will not maintain a high level of research and development in Canada in branch plants. They will reduce research and development in Canada. More and more what little research and development we have here will filter back to the head offices in the countries of origin of multi-national corporations.

What is the position with respect to exports, Mr. Speaker? If a company has a branch plant in Canada, that branch plant cannot export the product of the parent company. The parent company does the exporting. The branch plant sells the product in the country in which it is located, in this case Canada. What we will have is not only a branch plant but merely a store front where the product of a parent company will be sold in Canada without any avenue or vehicle whatsoever to export that product to other countries. If this Government would put some energy into developing Canadian industry, to fostering research and development to a much larger extent than it has, to fostering and developing Canadian products that we could export, we would be much, much further ahead.

What about the question of parts, machinery and equipment? If these branch plants are part of foreign corporations, then the obligation and the incentive will be to import parts, machinery and equipment from either the subsidiaries of a company in other countries or from the parent company itself.

What will be the situation if we have a downturn in the economy, Mr. Speaker? Which areas will be the first to suffer in the event this transpires? It will be the countries where the branch plants are located. The impetus is to maintain a strong parent company, to maintain the strength of the company in the country of origin where the principal activity is located. It will be the branch plants and the store fronts that will suffer. Here in Canada we will lose our employment and we will be the first to suffer as a result of any further downturns in the economy.

I am not saying all foreign investment is wrong. I do not maintain that in any sense. However, it has to be developed and monitored within a certain framework. The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) stated that the former Liberal Government was too lenient, that too many foreign companies were allowed to operate in Canada. The Government is saying that we were too strict, that we are rated among our trading partners in the western world as the most inhospitable to foreign investment.

Obviously, with those two polar positions we must have been doing something right. The position that the former Liberal Government took was the correct one and FIRA was the proper way to go. That is not to say FIRA operated perfectly. There were things that had to be modified and should have been modified. Decisions were too slow. There was a dialogue and a consideration that was just not pertinent to what was intended as far as the Canadian economy was concerned.

• (1650)

That is not to say that the vehicle itself did not work. It in fact did work. Even though the Foreign Investment Review Agency did not turn away that many investment prospects in the last few years, the agency was there and everyone knew what it stood for. Before an application was made, it was believed that there had to be some work and some attempt to meet the requirements of FIRA. This was done. By doing that, it provided a very useful service to this country.

Where I see a major problem arising and where the greatest difficulty may be is in the energy sector. At the present time we have very depressed stock prices in certain sectors of the energy industry. If a marketing multi-national or a major company in the marketing field needs a resource base, then we have Canadian companies that are ripe for takeover and purchase. That may be good, it may be not so good. That is not to say that we can disregard that possibility. This Government said it is projecting as a major objective of the Government's energy policy enhanced Canadian participation. If so, how can it reconcile this danger of takeover of Canadian ownership in the energy field? FIRA looked at this and all other possibilities.

The Minister says there will be no Government intervention, no review of takeovers of companies with assets of $5 million of less. I say that there will be no review, period, with this Government. This Government has gone to the United States and said that the door of investment in Canada is open. It said: "Come in, buy our industries, do what you want if you have the money. Just come in and we will look the other way". I fail to see how this Minister, with his attitude for foreign investment and disregard for Canadian ownership, will offer any kind of hindrance or review of the potential but major takeover of Canadian industries. I predict this will be a source of regret by this Government in the not too distant future.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Last week, Mr. Speaker, I made a few remarks in the House to say just how important we think this measure is. I must admit that I was rather pleased to have been quoted by the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) who, as you know, is Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister who introduced this Bill, the sponsor of the Bill. I knew that I would manage to draw some applause, at least from the Conservatives. She deserves my full admiration for the excellent speech she made. I do not know whether my admiration stems from the fact that she quoted me, but she did say, and I quote, Mr. Speaker:

> As one of their own, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), said, the real work on a Bill does not take place in the House. Let us therefore proceed and go to committee right away.

What I would like to stress, Mr. Speaker, is that I am wondering whether we have really been all that slow in the consideration of this Bill. In fact, as the Hon. Member was speaking, 31 Liberals, 25 New Democrats and 13 Conservatives—13 of her colleagues out of 211—I can appreciate just how impatient they are to proceed with the study of this Bill in committee. I admit that what I said is true: the real work is done in committee. But on the other hand, I am surprised that only 13 out of 211 members spoke on this important bill.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to stick to the bill because I do not want to annoy the assistant whip of the party, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) but I am going to deal with the bill and the motion because a double motion is involved. The Hon. Member for Charlesbourg introduced a motion raising the previous question under the Standing Orders. The previous question is a pleasant way to avoid the word closure because in effect it is exactly what this motion is all about ... and I am glancing at our advisers at the table who are impartial, to see if I am right or wrong. If I am wrong, I will stand corrected, but the previous question is equivalent to a motion of closure since we will be unable to continue to speak in this House, we will immediately have to vote on the bill and refer it to the committee for consideration.

I have said and still maintain that my NDP friends, and I do mean friends, are always suspicious of anything that happens in the United States, which is not the case where my Conservative friends are concerned. I now welcome the former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). I feel fortunate today because he is accompanied by his distinguished Minister of External Relations (Mrs. Vézina). Frankly I did not expect so much, but there will certainly be something special at five o'clock. I am sure that they are not in this House to hear the members discuss that bill. However I said that it was a motion of closure on a quite important bill.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that I still have four minutes left. I could be very partisan and say to the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg: You should have been here during the many years when the opposition, now the government in this House wasted so much time.

Remember that we also had to impose closure for a thing as simple as the setting up of a committee on Constitution. For the information of the older members as well as the younger ones who are now working in this House we had to deal during nine months with an issue as important as the Canadian flag. It is almost incredible but it is true.

Since we are discussing a bill which is so closely related to our Canadian identity, as I was saying last week, our young people and the Canadian public are entitled to know what will be its implications. My party whip and all those who have taken part in this debate are well aware that the implications of this bill are not yet known to the Canadian people. Anyone who knows the workings of Parliament realizes that, very often, it will take many days of debate before the Canadian public becomes aware of what is going on in the House of Commons.

If I may, and I say this without wanting to sound paternalistic, I would like to explain why a piece of legislation should sometimes be debated for a longer time in the House of Commons. It is, because, if a bill which is considered very important is debated only for a short time, it does not have a chance to reach the public which might then want to express its views. We may have been wrong. Obviously, the debate is drawing to a close. I do not think that the procedures of the House have been abused. I can even say that the debate is certainly coming to an end because of a lack of participants. It is probably ending. It will do so eventually, but not too quickly.

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE HULL IN NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

The House resumed from Friday, December 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Isabelle: That Bill C-207, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 (national capital of Canada), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) had the floor.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that I asked to be recognized in this debate because of some comments by the Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on the proposed legislation. The Hon. Member for Gatineau had given the Bill her approval in principle. I merely wish to comment briefly on the Bill and suggest that—

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I do not recall having given my approval in principle to this Bill, quite the contrary!

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, but the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has the floor. If the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) is willing to participate in this debate, perhaps she will have an opportunity.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I may not because I have already spoken to the Bill. However, I think that if the Hon. Member is making statements that do not reflect what was said, perhaps he should be called to order. I never approved the principle . . .

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is debate and if it comes to that point, I will call him to order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, in any case, it is not a point of order if the Hon. Member has a loss of memory. I intend to read exactly what she said as reported in Hansard at page 1032 later on, but the debate this evening is on Bill C-207, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 (national capital of Canada), tabled by my friend and colleague the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle).

Mr. Speaker, I suggested earlier in the course of this debate that since we practically had approval in principle of all Members of the House, it would probably be preferable to deal with the Bill by referring it to a Committee of the House for study and consideration.

In the course of her comments, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) said, as reported at page 1032 in Hansard of December 7, 1984:

> So, although we do approve in principle the Bill—

Those are her very words. I did not make them up.

> —presented by the Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), we do not think that it is well enough structured to initiate the very serious discussions—

And so on. So she did approve the Bill in principle, and that is what I said, nothing more.

Mr. Speaker, with the consent of my colleagues and considering we have already had one hour of debate on this Bill, I move, seconded by Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques), the following amendment:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
>
> Bill C-207, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 (national capital of Canada) be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), seconded by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), has moved a motion regarding the subject matter of this particular Bill. We are looking at the motion at this moment. At this time I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Constitution Act, 1867

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy to comment both on the motion that has been put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and also on the idea contained within this Bill. In fact, the proposal which the—

—by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) in December, to have the subject matter of the Bill referred to a Standing Committee of the House, without referring the Bill itself, is a proposal I accept and support as a Member from the National Capital Region. I could not agree to have the entire Bill with the specific proposals made by the Member for Hull-Aylmer referred to committee.

Since it was quite clear, for instance, from the tone of the comments by the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) that there are some reservations on the other side of the River and also since, in the course of my consultations today, I spoke with the Office of the Mayor of Ottawa and personally with the Mayor of Hull, and they both have serious reservations about this Bill and the way it was proposed, especially since apparently, the Member for Hull-Aylmer did not really consult with the municipal authorities and the two largest municipalities in the region, namely Hull and Ottawa—

[English]

In commenting on the proposal of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, the principle of referring of the idea that we should find some way of expanding the constitutional recognition of the capital of Canada to include Hull or the Quebec side of the national capital region is something of which I am in favour and at which I am prepared to look. However, I have very severe reservations about the Bill itself and the manner in which it has been put forward by the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle).

I believe the Bill reflects an evolutionary process which has been taking place for most of this century and particularly since the formation of the National Capital Commission some time after the War. De facto but not de jure, the national capital region of the country exists on both the Quebec and the Ontario side. The national capital region is as large or almost as large on the Quebec side as it is on the Ontario side. Substantial numbers of members of the Public Service of Canada and a number of important government departments have now moved to Les Terrasses de la Chaudière and the other government office buildings which have been built in the last 15 years in the centre of Hull. It is no longer the case that Hull is the poor relation while Ottawa has all of the priority as the capital of Canada. I welcome that.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think it is a good step forward that over the last 15 years, we have actually started recognizing de facto, the fact that the National Capital is not simply Ottawa, but Ottawa and the Hull area. There is an increasing recognition of the fact that we are a bilingual, a bicultural nation, and this is why we have a Capital that extends to both our largest provinces and that encompasses two cultures.

I spoke earlier today with the Mayor of Hull, Mr. Michel Légère. He told me about his hope that the City of Hull be seen, in his terms, as a showcase for the Quebec culture, the Francophone reality of our country, a complement to Ottawa, which would presumably be in his view a showcase for the culture, for the Anglophone and perhaps the multicultural reality of this country.

[English]

I certainly accept that, Mr. Speaker, but I have reservations. I support the idea of referring only the subject matter of the Bill because of the manner in which the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer put forward this particular Bill.

This Bill provoked a great deal of concern when it was debated in the House of Commons in December. I share those concerns because the intentions of the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer are in fact greater than those of the Bill itself. The Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer made no bones about his view that this Bill should be the first step toward the formation of a federal district for the national capital of Canada which would apparently be comparable to the federal district of Washington, the District of Columbia, in the United States. He said this quite explicitly. This was not a hidden agenda but an agenda that was very direct and overt. In debate on December 7, at page 1028 of Hansard, he said:

—it would be a first step towards the establishment of what many people wish to see, a federal district.

On page 1029, he went on to say:

Moreover, if we consider what some politicians have said during the years, the best way to administer the national capital region would be to establish a federal district.

Later on in debate he said:

—the Government must have the necessary tools in the decision-making process.

In other words, he was discussing a federal district which, I suppose, would be along the lines of that proposed by Mr. Douglas Fullerton in his report on the national capital of 1973 or 1974. In that particular report, Mr. Fullerton proposed that there should be some form of amalgamation of municipalities and that there should be a supra-national or supra-governmental authority that would take in the municipal officials, perhaps the provincial officials and the federal Government. That would provide government for close to a million people who are living in the national capital region. I do not know who all these people are.

• (1710)

[Translation]

Frankly, I do not know those people who so enthusiastically seek and promote the establishment of a federal district similar to Washington's Federal District in the United States. I do not know them. I have been a politician in this area for close to fifteen years yet, during all that time I do not think I have ever met one citizen in this area who supported the idea of a federal district, with the possible exception of Mr. Fullerton who is one of my constituents in Ottawa Centre.

[English]

On the other hand, I have heard a great deal against such a position. The negative opinions against a federal district have been voiced whenever the issue has surfaced. For example, that negative opinion surfaced in response to the proposal which Mr. Fullerton brought forward in the early 1970s. There was a parliamentary committee established to study the Fullerton report. The municipalities of the region either boycotted the committee or when representatives came forward they were not prepared to say anything constructive because they felt—and I think correctly—that it was wrong to deprive the people of this region of access to the kinds of government which they had had for decades upon decades, both the municipal and provincial authorities.

Many of my constituents in Ottawa Centre work in high-tech industries. Others work at Loblaws or the Bay. Others are trying to organize because they work at Eaton's. Some of them are consultants or people who have brought a business to Ontario because they like the ambiance of Ottawa. Those people may have nothing at all to do with the federal Government, except that they happen to live in the city where the federal Government has its headquarters. Many people who work for the federal Government share the views of those who have nothing to do with the federal Government. They do not want to incur the risks of losing provincial medicare, the system of law and the priorities which they have had for a long time through the creation of a federal district. They fear a form of government—a national capital commission or a group of commissioners appointed by the Cabinet or the Prime Minister—which would sit on a co-equal basis with the Mayor of Ottawa and the Mayor of Hull. Possibly there would not be a Mayor of Ottawa or a Mayor of Hull.

The people I have talked with about this issue over the course of many years have grave reservations about that kind of venture. They see it as something which is unknown. I believe they would also resent some of the comments which were made by the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) in his contribution to the debate. For example, he indicated that he was very disturbed by the municipal planning which had taken place. In his view it had the effect of blocking out the House of Commons. He said:

> Beauty is not the only issue but Parliament must be "at home", as they say, except that in this case the Ottawa municipality has control over it, which is a nonsense, if I may say so.

I think the Hon. Member ignored the fact that in the planning of the City of Ottawa, which came after the Greber report, and when the downtown area was planned in the early 1960s, specific regard was had in trying to recognize the pre-eminence of the Peace Tower and the House Commons. We, in our wisdom today, may judge that wrong, but nonetheless anyone who examines downtown Ottawa will discover that the height limits have the effect of creating a saucer, so that the House of Commons and the Peace Tower remain the pre-eminent buildings in this part of the downtown core. The buildings are only allowed to get higher as they get farther away from Wellington Street and the parliamentary precinct. Today that may be seen as naive planning, but it was clearly designed to take account of the fact that Parliament Hill is an important national symbol and should be given that pre-eminence.

The planning of the City of Ottawa in those days—and I was a member of the municipal council for part of that time—was carried out in close conjunction with the National Capital Commission. That remains the case to this day. I could cite the example of the location of the new courthouse which is being built in my riding at the corner of Laurier Avenue and Elgin Street. In that particular case the National Capital Commission played a very strong role. When the city said that the building should be oriented toward Elgin Street, the National Capital Commission, acting on behalf of the citizens of Canada, said no. The National Capital Commission felt that it was an important building and a symbol of the presence of the Province of Ontario in the national capital. They decreed that the building should be oriented toward the canal and the National Arts Centre rather than toward Elgin Street. The NCC won. So it is hardly the case that the control of the City of Ottawa is making a nonsense of the respect for this community, which is also the national capital.

What I am concerned about is that if one pursues the concept of the Bill, one must be aware of the kind of sensitivities which were reflected in the debate in December.

[Translation]

I have in mind for instance the comments made by the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). She said that the population of the City of Gatineau exceeds by 20,000 that of the City of Hull. Even if Hull is the core of the urban population on the Quebec side of the National Capital area, there is now a sort of competition between Gatineau and Hull and this must be recognized.

Frankly, I do not know how to react to that. Are we to establish a national capital to be called Ottawa-Hull-Gatineau or, since Nepean's population is almost similar to that of Gatineau, should it be Ottawa-Hull-Gatineau-Nepean, or are Gloucester or Cumberland going to have their day? I do not know.

Clearly there are problems and they can be studied if the matter is referred to a committee of this House. However, a referral of the Bill as such would do two things in my view, Mr. Speaker. On the one hand, it could give rise to reactions from certain people from both sides of the river who would suggest for instance, as we say in English:

[English]

"The capital of Canada was always meant to be Ottawa". They are rednecks who have not understood that this country has changed since Confederation. Perhaps at that time the Fathers of Confederation did not understand that our country should be joined together; two equal and kindly peoples who should come together. They were not prepared to recognize that. There is no question that in the capital of Canada les Québécois et les Hullois were junior partners for a long time. That has now changed.

To name Hull in a Bill and to send the Bill forward and attempt to bring it back to the House for third reading without having considered some of the alternatives seems to me a bit short-sighted. It would be very provocative as well if we were to send a Bill forward with the connotations which have been given it by the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer, and specifically his suggestion that this was the first step in the creation of a federal district. I would be extremely uneasy about that, and so would my constituents. I would also suggest that the constituents of the Hon. Member would be uneasy. I would place on the record the fact that in the election of 1980 the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer had a majority of 17,500, but his majority shrank to some 1,500 or 1,600 in the 1984 election. Perhaps that suggests that he does not have that many constituents who are keen on this particular suggestion, which he has put forward on numerous occasions, particularly in view of the lack of adequate consultation with a number of people—municipal leaders and others—who deserve to be consulted on this subject.

Mr. Dick: What about your majority?

Mr. Cassidy: I have a much smaller majority, but I was coming up, not going down.

In closing, I would remind Hon. Members that I believe the feeling was that the Fullerton report was dead letter, after the cool reception which it got from the Province of Quebec. Quebec is not prepared to surrender any territory. Regardless of what happened at the PQ convention a few weeks ago, I think any political leader or political party in Quebec would share that view. They are not prepared to give up territory. They want to add Labrador to the Province of Quebec. Certainly they do not want to give anything up, whether it is to a national capital district, the Province of Ontario or anything else.

• (1720)

That would be the view, Mr. Speaker, of the people of the Province of Ontario. In my riding we consider ourselves Ontarians, Ottawans and proud residents of the national capital. We have succeeded for a very long time in having those three concepts co-exist, and be proud Canadians as well. I do not think that can be changed—I do not think it should—by the kind of proposals or extensions to the proposals which are coming forward from the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer.

[Translation]

Therefore, for the above reasons, I would support the comments of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier): Let the subject matter be referred to a committee, but not the Bill.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I have examined the amendment and I find it in order. Therefore, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), seconded by the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault), moves in amendment thereto:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-207, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 (national capital of Canada) be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa West, I am pleased to rise to address both the motion and the Bill. I, in fact, am the only Hon. Member on this side of the House whose constituency is entirely within the boundaries of the City of Ottawa. I am therefore particularly pleased to participate in a debate which has become something of a tradition in this House, the debate initiated by the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), perhaps not every year but most years, on the subject of Canada's national capital. The Hon. Member has been introducing such a Bill on a regular basis since 1967, and if there have been years when he has not introduced such a Bill, he has compensated for that lack by offering it twice, as he did in 1984. In fact, one year ago this month, during the second session of the Thirty-Second Parliament, a not dissimilar Bill was introduced by the Hon. Member and it is a tribute to his consistency and resilience that he persists with his proposal.

The theme is always the same, Mr. Speaker, but contains, however, its variations. On this occasion we do not have a proposal to change the name of the capital of Canada from Ottawa to "the national capital region" or to some such anonymous equivalent but, as I understand it, it is proposed to call it "Ottawa-Hull" instead of "Ottawa".

This theme of renaming or reorganizing the national capital of Canada did not, of course, originate with the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer, although after 17 years I think he might be forgiven for thinking that he has acquired squatters' rights on the territory. The argument for creation of a federal district to serve the national capital has recurred on a regular basis for many years. One local observer wrote in 1962 that it was only a matter of time before such a district was created. He was quite sure, in fact, that it would be established before the centennial celebrations of 1967. That deadline having expired at the time the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer began his own introduction of motions and Bills on this matter in this House—perhaps as his own centennial project—the question now is whether such a district will be created before the centennial anniversary of the Hon. Member's efforts.

The arguments on this subject predate all of this, however. They go back to Confederation itself. Ottawa was not, contrary to a popular and inaccurate impression, chosen on a whim of Queen Victoria as the capital of Canada. Careful study was made of competing sites, such as Kingston, Toronto, Quebec City, Montreal and Ottawa, before a decision was made. Ottawa was chosen because it offered many advantages which it continues to offer today. Its people and its culture were a hybrid of our two founding peoples. It was located on the border of Upper Canada and Lower Canada. It had, and still has, of course, great natural beauty. Those Hon. Members who will be participating in tonight's parliamentary hockey game in connection with the Winterlude celebrations will attest to the fact that it has an exhilarating and bracing winter climate, which we all enjoy!

The debate on the location of Canada's capital was heated and continued for many years prior to Confederation. Debate has continued since, not, I am happy to say, on the location but on the administrative organization of our capital. The Bill of the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer is a continuation of a debate which is as old as our country. In 1872 one of the fathers of Confederation, John Hamilton Gray, had this to say on the issue:

> At the time of the convention, one mistake occurred: no provision was made for creating a federal district for the capital and withdrawing it from the exclusive control of the local legislature of any one of the provinces.
> That which was designed to be the capital of the Confederation might fairly rest its claim for support upon the people of the Dominion. Its order, well-being, sanitary arrangements, police regulations, adornments and improvements are essential to the comfort and security not only of the representatives who attend Parliament, but of all those who are compelled to resort to it as the capital of the country in the discharge of the various duties attendant upon the administration of public affairs.

In language reminiscent of that of the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer Mr. Gray went on to say:

> Its reputation should be national, not provincial. It belongs no more to Ontario than it does to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec or any of the provinces constituting the confederation.

He then went on to say, and it is something with which the residents of Ottawa would probably agree.

> The expenses incident to its civic control must necessarily be far greater than would evolve upon it if merely an ordinary municipality. It is no answer to say that increased value and property is sufficient consideration for the increased burden put upon its inhabitants.

Since then the debate has continued, Mr. Speaker, always with the same basic arguments; first, that the national capital should not be part of any one province and, second, that the capital itself would be better administered by eliminating the jurisdictional overlap which now exists between varying federal, provincial and municipal authorities in the national capital region.

The Hon. Member has not suggested, at least not in this particular Bill, that a federal district should be created. He just suggests that Hull be included in the national capital. However, I think I agree with my friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), that it is obvious that the creation of a federal district is what the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer has in mind. He has certainly supported this idea in the past. Last year, in fact, during a debate on a Bill in the last Parliament, he discussed the difficulties of administration in the national capital region, concluding, and I quote:

> This is why over the years I have always advocated a federal district, in order that the federal Government be at home here.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that after 117 years the federal Government has made itself quite at home in Ottawa. The arguments in favour of the creation of a federal district, particularly the administrative arguments, do have some merit and perhaps we should be studying such a proposal. But we have to ask ourselves—and I am sure the people of Canada would ask us this question—whether the creation of such a district would be worth the trouble it would take to do so. If we think we have jurisdictional problems now, they would be nothing compared to the problems we would have in trying to persuade the Governments of Ontario and Quebec to cede territory to a new federal district.

Is this, after all, the most important issue on the national agenda? Are constitutional questions at all of prime importance to the Canadian people at this point in time, particularly after years of acrimonious constitutional debate and at a time when questions of national and international economic problems, issues of famine and world peace might reasonably be expected to be on the minds of parliamentarians? And of all the possible constitutional questions which might be discussed, is the creation of a new administrative entity for the national capital something which should take priority? Should it take priority, for example, over the question of Quebec's participation in a constitutional accord? Should it take precedence over creation of new administrative arrangements for the people of the north who have been living, really, under a quasi-colonial administration for years? Is the question of administrative reorganization of the capital more important than resolving important constitutional issues and questions of human rights concerning the native peoples of this country?

I do not think we would find much support throughout this country if we were to devote much of our time to this issue right now. It would take time, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer and other Members of this House were involved some years ago in committee deliberations on this issue, deliberations which took months of work and the energy of many people. It is a complex issue which cannot be resolved by a quick debate in this House, not if we wish to do justice to it. It would again take deliberation and some delicate constitutional negotiations. The fact is, and I say this as someone who is not without sympathy for the efforts of the Hon. Member, and as someone who, having lived in Ottawa almost half of his life, is familiar with the problems of living here, that I think we are reasonably well off in this area.

The situation is not perfect; there are administrative overlaps. Jurisdictional issues can be confusing, as anyone who has dealt with three or four different police forces in a day can attest to. But things work. Life goes on. We manage to make this city, this whole region, work, and it works well enough to be considered a desirable residential area for many people. It could be improved and a federal district, properly structured, could be a positive change. But the return on our investment of energy and time would be insufficient to justify undertaking such a reform at this time.

How would the different legal systems of Quebec and Ontario be reconciled in one new territory? I assume that the Hon. Member would want Hull to be included in such a territory. What about local self-government, Mr. Speaker? We would not want to turn the capital into another domestic colony, disenfranchising the people of this area who, whatever the complications, at least now have many opportunities to vote for various elected bodies. We would not want to restrict the political activities of people residing here. A large proportion of our local population has already suffered that infringement on their political rights—public servants who are denied the right to speak out on important issues concerning their lives.

What political system would a new national capital have, Mr. Speaker? Would territorial councils be created to do the essential work now done by municipal councils on both sides of the river? Would there be one territorial council for the whole area or two? If there were only one, and it seems logical to have only one, if one of the arguments in favour of creating a federal district is to reduce jurisdictional confusion, then what protection would there be for the minority residing on the Quebec side of the Ottawa River?

How would federal and local interests be resolved under a new political system, Mr. Speaker? Presumably voters in the district would not be disenfranchised federally any more than they would at the municipal level and would continue to elect Members of Parliament. It is clear that a territorial legislature would not have the same independence as a province, because the whole raison d'être of this proposal is to remove the capital from a province and facilitate treatment of what are viewed as national concerns in the administration of the capital. Would federal representatives be appointed to a territorial council, and what balance would there be between elected and appointed officials?

The questions go on and on, Mr. Speaker, and resolving them would take years of negotiation beforehand, and years of conflict, compromise and adjustment during implementation. The fact is that no matter how simple a policy or plan may seem to be, it is never simple in implementation. This is one plan which would be complicated in its development, and undoubtedly acrimonious and unpredictable in implementation. In a perfect world, a federal district serving as the capital might be worth while; but in the real world, the world we live in, we look for the best workable solution. In an imperfect world, we establish priorities, weigh our resources, and apply them to the urgent problems before we deal with what is merely desirable. This type of administrative and political reform for the capital might be desirable, but it is certainly not urgent.

The Hon. Member might then say well, why not just proceed with his Bill today, as an interim measure, to amend the Constitution, and include Hull as part of the national capital? The Hon. Member's Bill would go further than that. It would permit Parliament also to prescribe in the Constitution other surrounding areas as part of the capital of Canada. And in fact, if the name of the capital is going to be changed to Ottawa-Hull, why not, after all, include Nepean, Gloucester, Vanier, Aylmer or Gatineau? What is the magic barrier, the invisible demarcation line which would prevent other areas from also being so included? The fact is, Mr. Speaker, the capital does draw its character from the people beyond the bounds of the City of Ottawa. Thousands of people who work for the Government of Canada reside in areas outside the City of Ottawa and, as the Hon. Member has noted in the past, many of the people who do reside in Ottawa work in government buildings in his constituency as they do in mine.

No one denies that there is interaction and that the interaction between Ottawa and the surrounding areas of the national capital region is important to the culture and character of the city. The interactions which form our characters as individuals, as groups, as cities, have virtually no limit. Today the capital of Canada is Ottawa. Tomorrow the capital would be Ottawa-Hull if the Hon. Member's wishes were realized. The day after, who knows? We might speak of the capital as Ottawa-Hull-Nepean-Gloucester-Vanier-Aylmer-Gatineau. The next move would be to return to the Hon. Member's earlier suggestion to rename the area "the national capital area", or something similar. Such a name would be easier on the ears than a hyphenated melange, but oh so gray, so soulless, so boring!

It would always be possible to substitute an Indian name for this bleak administrative title; Algonquin, perhaps? Asticou? How about that variation on the old Indian word, Ottawa? It has a certain ring to it, it has all of the historical connections, the roots and tradition of this country, that a national capital should have. It is not an imported name; it is a proud local name, recognized throughout this country and throughout the world as the home of our Parliament and the capital of Canada.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise this afternoon on behalf of the constituents of Nepean-Carleton to share their concern over the Bill before us and the amendment related thereto. I want to preface my remarks this afternoon by complimenting the two previous speakers and conveying to the House the fact that I endorse the concerns they presented to us in the course of this afternoon's debate.

National capitals around the world are governed in different ways. Many systems are in place in Washington, Canberra, Moscow, London and others. There are advantages and disadvantages to the different types of government which exist in the various nations around the world. However, the bottom line is that no perfect system has yet been identified for national capitals.

The Bill before us obviously has merit in many respects, but the thing that raised my real concern was when the sponsor of the Bill indicated that this was really a first step towards the creation of a national capital district. It is that aspect of it, Mr. Speaker, that concerns me more fundamentally than any other aspect. I agree with the Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), relative to the earlier studies into the creation of a national capital district for the capital of Canada, that there is no local support for this type of approach to national government. We have had this debate many times but most recently in the early 1970s when this community had a dramatic and heart-rending debate on the particular issue. The consensus that came out of that was that there was no heart, no desire, no will and few advantages to be gained by that type of a national government system for the nation's capital.

● (1740)

Ottawa, the nation's capital, is situated at the confluence of the Ottawa and Rideau Rivers. It is a sight that has tremendous natural beauty. The area is underlain by pre-Cambrian rocks which are a billion or more years old. Sitting on top of the pre-Cambrian terrain which extends for many hundreds of kilometers is a thin veneer of Ordovician rock, roughly 580 million years old. Those pre-Cambrian and Ordovician rocks are the basis of the local physiography of the area.

As the millenniums moved on this area was covered by a thick ice sheet 20,000, 30,000 and 40,000 years ago. We are unable to tell how thick this ice sheet was locally, but it was sufficiently thick and sufficiently heavy to cause the local area to be depressed as much as 180 to 260 feet. As this ice melted the rebound associated with it was very low and the area was inundated, 16,000 to 20,000 years ago, by what we now refer to as the Champlain Sea.

The invasion of the Champlain Sea was a god's blessing, if one can put it that way. The sediments that were deposited out of that sea, known as the Champlain sediments, have provided us, in the St. Lawrence and Ottawa River valleys, with the tremendously good agricultural lands which exist locally. If it was not for that invasion of the sea not so many years ago, this would be a barren pre-Cambrian terrain with no capability of food production.

Once the rebound was complete and the Champlain Sea withdrew 12,000 to 16,000 years ago, a tremendous forest developed locally. It was one of the prime pine timber forests that the world was ever to see. It was in that environment that the Algonquin and Iroquois families and communities developed and grew and fought with one another and others. In the course of time, in the early 1600s, Champlain moved through this terrain briefly, I believe in 1600 and 1602. The next white person to move through the community was Nicholas Gatineau Duplessis. He came down what is now the Gatineau River and named the area of that great valley.

Many, many years were to go by before there was much inluence on the Algonquin and Iroquois communities. It was not until 1798 and 1799 when a man by the name of Philemon Wright, who was then living in Woburn, Massachusetts, came on two exploration expeditions into what is now called the Ottawa valley. He was a farmer, a cattleman, a puritan in faith I am told, and Kentish in extraction. In the winter of 1800 and 1801 he moved with his family and five other families from Massachusetts into the Ottawa Valley and settled in what is now the City of Hull. He was the first of the timber barons and farmers to settle locally.

Perhaps the next highlight of our local history was the arrival of Colonel John By in 1827. He arrived on behalf of the Government of England to build the canal between Kingston and Ottawa. On his arrival the village on the south side of the river became known as Bytown, named after Colonel John By. In 1847 Bytown was incorporated as a town with a mayor and a council. Its first mayor was a man named John Scott. In the course of time he became a federal Member of Parliament for this particular area. It was not until 1854 that the name was changed from Bytown to Ottawa through an Act passed by the Legislative Assembly of United Canada. In this period Ottawa was chosen by Queen Victoria to become the seat of government for the new country of Canada.

In 1860 the Prince of Wales, then 17 years of age and perhaps better known as the Duke of Newcastle, visited Canada. During the course of his visit in 1860 he laid the cornerstone for the Parliament building of Canada. That is something we should be aware of. From that date forward what we now know as the parliamentary precinct in Ottawa has grown.

In the years that followed the National Capital Commission and the national capital district was formed. In 1969 we had superimposed on our local area a form of regional government which was created by the Province of Ontario. The Ottawa-Carleton regional Government was the first such system of regional government to be developed anywhere in Canada.

In the greater Ottawa community we have three tiers of government at the moment. We have that tier which relates to the activities of the National Capital Commission, we have that tier which relates to the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton and we have that tier which relates to the local municipalities such as the City of Nepean, the City of Ottawa or the Township of Rideau.

The National Capital Commission is responsible for many activities in the national capital district. We must make this distinction clear. It is responsible for certain aspects of planning. It is responsible for the development of parks, for certain national driveways, and for certain educational activities on the south side of the Ottawa River. It has other responsibilities which are partly different in the Province of Quebec. It is responsible, of course, for the well-being, planning and management of the parliamentary precinct in addition to the things I have just mentioned.

For a short but precious period in my life I had the privilege of being a councillor in the regional government to which all of the local municipalities belong. That regional level of government is responsible for all health care locally. It is responsible for sewer and water and for the upper level of planning. It is responsible for the regional road system, for public transit and for everything associated with the local welfare system. It is a reasonably democratic system of government. It is locally, awkwardly expensive. However, I believe the quality associated with what the region does is beneficial for the greater Ottawa community.

● (1750)

That has been its track record and involvement. Its activities are very long lasting. Many of us do not realize this locally, but we have incorporated in our sewer and water system in the regional municipality some of the most advanced technologies that exist anywhere in North America.

While some of us may debate this issue in the winter months, we have a splendid public transit system. Few of us realize that currently over 70 per cent of the work trips into the core of the Ottawa area are made by public transit. The goal of our local public transit is to have 80 per cent of the work trips into the core area by public transit. I am sure that with the creation of the new bus ways and related features, that goal will be accomplished.

The municipal system of government, such as those in the Cities of Ottawa, Nepean, Gloucester and Vanier and in the Townships of Osgoode, Rideau, Goulburn and the City of Kanata, was set up originally in 1851 and 1852 and amended at various times in the interim period. However, it involves the election of a mayor or reeve and a council to their respective corporations.

Within that local system of government to which people are now elected for three-year terms, one of the tremendous advantages is the ability of the ordinary citizen to interface with that level of government. It is possible to call one's local councillor this afternoon and tomorrow evening at the council meeting the matter can be resolved. Matters move very quickly. Many of the activities related to this lower tier of government is related to voluntarism. This is something that is very precious.

For instance, in the south end of my riding the fire protection service is provided by volunteer fire departments. They are people who are willing to give freely of their time at any hour of the day or night to respond to a local emergency. All of the recreation activities in those communities are provided on a volunteer basis. The library system is run on a volunteer basis. Most of the recreation is supervised and organized on a volunteer basis.

At the same time I think it is also fair to say that most of the planning is developed locally and on a volunteer basis. Therefore, it is a splendid system of government that we have, with volunteers and elected councillors working together in a community for the over-all benefit of its citizens.

Quite apart from this type of regional and municipal government that those of us who live locally find so valuable and precious is a tremendous educational system. In this instance it is associated with the Province of Ontario but that is not terribly important. Most of the local educational system has been developed by local input in which we have daycare centres, French immersion programs in primary and elementary schools and public and separate school systems. The community is integrated into one of the best educational systems which I believe exists anywhere in Canada. Perhaps few places around the world would excel in comparison to it.

The citizens of the greater Ottawa community have developed this tremendous system of local education with local input, pride and opportunities. In this milieu over the years we have had the creation and development of two great universities, the University of Ottawa and Carleton University, as well as Algonquin College. If we should proceed in the direction anticipated by this Bill, would these universities lose their local identity? Would they, by necessity, have to become the national universities of Canada? What would their relation be to the Province of Ontario? What would their relation be to their local community? How would they be governed and financed? As national universities, would their responsibilities be to the local community or to citizens from St. John's to Vancouver? One wonders about that.

As a local Member of Parliament and a person who has been involved in this community for approximately 25 years, there are many concerns associated with the potential creation of a national capital district and the government that would be associated with that. If we had a national district created here, one could imagine that the form of government which would be superimposed upon it would probably be identical to that in which the National Capital Commission is presently governed. There would be a chairperson who, while chosen because of their qualities, would probably also be chosen for political reasons. There would be councillors chosen for political reasons. According to the present constitution of the National Capital Commission, I believe only three or four of that group are from the local area.

In that system there is no way of influencing these people. They are not accountable to the local population in any way. They do not need to listen because they have no reason to. They have another master. There is nothing in the system that makes them accountable and keeps them attuned to the local needs. Naturally, as Canadians they would have pride in the national capital, but beyond that their interests would be much different from the ongoing interests of those of us who have the privilege of living in the lower regions of the Rideau valley and along the south shore of the Ottawa River.

While I am sure the intent of an alliance between Hull and Ottawa as part of a nation's capital is well intended and those of us who have come to learn the value and traditions of the two cultures locally could think of nothing but having the opportunity of strengthening those relationships, the animal that this Bill might lead us to is not the way that the residents of Nepean-Carleton want to go. Nor do I believe it is the direction in which the residents of Ottawa-Carleton want to go. I would urge Members of the House not to proceed with this Bill for the reasons I have given.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—ACTIVITIES OF CHEQUE CASHING COMPANIES. (B) REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I put two questions to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) arising out of a report in my own City of Winnipeg that one of the cheque cashing companies—not a small company, one with 20 branches across the country—on Christmas Eve charged a mother who was on welfare $76 to cash a cheque for $466. The cheque was dated December 28. The company charged this woman $76 to cash her cheque four days early that is, on December 24. The interest rate was 21 per cent. When one talks about interest rates, one talks about interest rates for a year. The annual rate, therefore, would have been 21 per cent. This company cashed the cheque on December 24 and was able to get the face value of the cheque, namely $466, four days later. That 21 per cent interest was in fact calculated on an annual basis, more than 2,500 per cent.

It is not Members of Parliament, doctors, lawyers, businessmen, or even skilled workers who have to go to one of these cheque cashing companies to get money a few days before the cheque is legally cashable, it is poor people, native people, and people on welfare. These companies are ripping off people who are in most desperate situations. These companies are victimizing people. What they are doing may be legal, and I shall come to that in a moment, but it is certainly highly immoral.

In the office of this money cashing organization is a sign which reads that it charges from 10 per cent to 21 per cent to cash post-dated cheques. There is a provision in the Small Loans Act which reads:

"criminal rate" means an effective annual rate of interest calculated in accordance with generally accepted actuarial practices and principles that exceeds sixty per cent—

That is 60 per cent a year, I presume.

I asked the Minister to investigate what happened. This was not an isolated case. If we believe this company to which I refer was breaking the law it should be prosecuted. If the company is not breaking the law, then there is something wrong with the law.

● (1805)

What we want the Department to do after investigation is to come back and bring legislation to the House. If legislation is not needed, it should tell the House what will be done to stop this kind of completely unacceptable rip-off. This is not the first time this matter has been brought to the attention of the Government. The National Anti-Poverty Organization brought the matter to the attention of the former Liberal Government. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) brought this to the attention of the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs last March, almost a year ago. At that time the then Minister said:

Unfortunately it is too late to do much this year, but I can assure the Hon. Member that a new system will be in place by the next taxation year.

The new system obviously is not in place. The present Minister said:

I would like to reassure the Hon. Member and say that we are closely monitoring the situation. There is no law forbidding such uses and we shall bring in appropriate solutions in due time.

I want the Minister and the Department to bring in those appropriate solutions now, or in a very short period of time, not at some time in the future. I urge the Minister to take action quickly on behalf of the poorest people who have to go to this kind of company.

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on January 28, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) asked two questions, the first regarding cheque cashing services offered by certain businesses, and the second regarding tax rebate discounting services. With respect to the Hon. Member's question on cheque cashing operations, I wish to advise the House that this matter is under consideration.

The Hon. Member has suggested that we investigate these businesses. He has raised this matter before, and I appreciate it being brought to the attention of the Ministry and this House. As he indicated, these companies been established quickly over the past few years. Then cash various types of cheques for a fee. I understand that the fees range from 2 to 10 per cent for most cheques, although they may range from 12 to 21 per cent for post-dated cheques. This fee takes into account that services are provided during non banking hours, usually from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., six days per week and sometimes on Sundays.

On reviewing the Act, it is not clear that the fee for these services can be interpreted as a rate of interest. If this were the case, it would be up to the Attorney General of each province to prosecute, if indeed there was a rate of interest charged that exceeded the maximum rate permitted under the Criminal Code. Currently under review is the rate of 12 to 21 per cent and whether it is a charge or a rate of interest. These businesses offer a service for which many Canadians are prepared to pay. Their reason for doing so may derive from such legitimate interests as greater convenience. As stated previously, the Department is aware of the Hon. Member's concerns and we appreciate him bringing them to our attention.

With respect to tax rebate discounting services, the Hon. Member can be assured that discounting transactions are monitored to ensure that they comply with the federal legislation. Indeed, there have been prosecutions under the Tax Rebate Discounting Act.

I wish to remind the House of the purpose of this Act. It is to protect the interests of taxpayers who give up the right to their anticipated tax refund in exchange for a minimun of 85 per cent of the value of the refunds in order to receive immediate cash. The statute was enacted in 1978 at the urging of provincial governments. The legislation appears to have successfully addressed the problems it was intended to remedy. New firms have entered this market and there are indications that competition is beginning to push rates down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Parliamentary Secretary that his time has expired.

• (1810)

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—REQUEST FOR EARLY PAY-OUT TO FARMERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, this question is further to my question yesterday which was erroneously listed under the heading of the Canadian Wheat Board, while it in fact related to the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

The difficulties in western agriculture are obvious, I believe. There is a very serious cash flow problem resulting from two factors, the first being the cost-price squeeze and the second being the credit squeeze. The cost-price aspect of it is evident. On the income side, the price of grain has dropped over the past few years and producers were making it on volume; they produced more and more grain. The 1984 drought and the consequent short crop has exacerbated the problem. On the expense side, fertilizer, chemicals, equipment and fuel costs and the cost of money or interest rates all continue to add to the farmers' burden.

In response to this, last July at Prince Albert the Progressive Conservative Party announced a number of commitments to western Canada, undertakings that were designed to emphasize the inclusion of western Canada as a partner in Confederation. After 20 years of exclusion, we in western Canada feel that we are now doing quite well.

Already a number of promises have been horoured. We are represented by some 13 Cabinet Ministers. We have reduced the price of fuel to producers, including western farmers, by some 28 cents a gallon. Interest rates have gone down some 2.5 points since election day. Some rail lines that were destined for abandonment have been restored and revitalized. Farm Credit Corporation loan interest rates have been reduced for a certain category of borrower.

I also recall that at Prince Albert, we indicated that we would amend legislation to permit quicker government reaction time on such legislation as the Western Grain Stabilization Act in order that it be more responsive to economic trends and to the immediate needs of the producers. There are clearly a number of reasons why this Government should follow through with its commitment to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act to allow for an interim payment this spring. I would like to elaborate on these reasons and to ask the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) to reply.

The overwhelming reason why an interim payment is needed stems from the drought which ravaged the prairies last summer. At least five million tonnes of grain were lost. With a potential value of $200 per tonne, that represents a direct loss of about $1 billion to Canadian farmers, and indirectly to all of the companies which provide input and services for them. In addition to the losses due to drought, many farmers in northeastern Saskatchewan and in central Manitoba suffered grain losses due to excessive moisture. These losses come on the heels of the losses of previous years.

Last year, western farmers spent some $1.4 billion on direct crop inputs including seed, fertilizer, pesticides and other supplies. Most of this was required in the spring. This year the costs will be even higher. Statistics Canada indicates a projected increase of about 5 per cent. What is more, the price of grain which was poor last year is expected to drop slightly in the coming year.

A considerable amount of publicity was generated by the announcement in December that Canadian farmers' realized net income rose by 14 per cent in 1984. That figure is quite misleading in view of the fact that realized net income, the cash that farmers actually receive, does not take into account inventory changes. The gain which amounted to 15 per cent on the prairies was only achieved through a very considerable reduction in inventory. Farmers delivered most of the grain they had in storage.

If one looks at real net income from last year's crop, one sees that it is down by over 50 per cent on the prairies. Saskatchewan's real net income was down by some $400 million, Alberta's by some $220 million and Manitoba, rebounding from an impossibly bad previous year, had a gain of only $140 million.

• (1815)

It would be foolish to suppose that the money paid out by the federal Government for crop insurance, stabilization, final Wheat Board payments and drought assistance will carry farmers through the planting season. In a great many cases, the money has already gone to creditors for last year's crop.

It is true that most of the young and beginning farmers are the ones who are most deeply in debt. These are also the people on whom we will need to count to produce our future food supplies. These young farmers have a heavy debt load as a result of land purchases which were made at high prices. Over the last couple of years, through rising expenses and falling grain prices, there has been a turnaround in land prices. Land prices have fallen dramatically and the lending institutions—the banks and the credit unions—have moved their attention away from asset values as a basis for lending, and now, quite properly, look at cashflow. I say, "quite properly" because without cashflow there cannot be repayment. One wishes that as much attention had been paid by borrower and lender alike to cashflow when land prices were rising as is being paid to them as the prices fall.

Many institutions which loaned money on the strength of fair market value of assets see their security eroding and consequently are calling in their loans. Many are now refusing operating credit to those producers who are in bad shape.

Those caught in this credit squeeze will have trouble borrowing operating funds for spring seeding. There is now a very urgent need for an interim payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Plan. I do not mean the kind of payment that the Liberals made. That was a cynical offering made in August, two weeks before the federal election. That was the kind of manipulation which we in the West came to expect and know so well. I am talking about a sincere and timely response to a western problem; the kind of response which was contemplated when the Prince Albert declaration was formulated. The Government should be looking at making an interim payment to help farmers meet the heavy financial commitment of spring seeding. I would ask the Minister to move swiftly to present amending legislation which would permit an interim payment in time for spring seeding.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member opposite for giving me a chance to respond to his concerns. I assure him that the Government shares many of the concerns he has expressed. We have taken some steps, not only on behalf of western farmers, but on behalf of all farmers in Canada.

In the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8, we significantly reduced the tax on farm fuels. Admittedly, there is still a considerable amount of tax on farm fuels, but the federal Government recognizes that there is a problem and it is taking steps to improve that. Last week the Government introduced legislation to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act. That will allow for a voluntary tripartite red meat stabilization program in Canada. Just before Christmas we announced for the first time the invoking of the meat import quotas under the provisions of a Bill which was passed by the previous Government.

I would like to mention another item which will benefit western farmers. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has frozen the seaway tolls, in response to the concerns of farmers over rising costs.

Let me directly address the question of the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson). We certainly anticipate being able to make an interim payment. We have legislation which will be introduced very shortly. As I said yesterday in response to his question, I very much appreciate the co-operation—as I am sure do western farmers—which has been indicated from both opposition parties in assuring us that they will pass the legislation very quickly.

The larger question is: What do we do with the Western Grain Stabilization Act? It has been roughly ten years since that legislation was implemented and I think that is a sufficient period of time to know how the Act works. There is good evidence that the Act should be reviewed. The Government will look at it as quickly as possible.

I have heard representations that the Government should take into account more individual records of producers, so that there will not have to be a major crop failure on the Prairies in order to trigger a payout. I have also heard concerns that there should be provisions in the Act which would allow people who grow and feed their own grain to contribute to the plan.

The Government will be acting very quickly to allow for an interim payment in time for the spring seeding. We fully recognize the cash shortage problem facing prairie farmers, and we also very much appreciate the contribution that they make to the national economy.

● (1820)

We will also be looking as quickly as we can at what can be done, and I have already had some input from some provincial Governments. We welcome input from other people on what we should do with the Act on a longer term basis to make it more responsive so we do not have to ask for legislation to make an interim payment. The Act will be there. It will be responsive, and we will not have to make amendments in order to make payments to producers who are in need of cash.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey).

BANKS AND BANKING—CHARTERED BANKS' REFUSAL TO CASH WELFARE CHEQUES. (B) EXISTENCE OF CHEQUE DISCOUNTERS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I congratulate you on your memory. I also congratulate those who are stage managing the late show because we are able to have a debate on what I consider to be a very important topic. I rise on the same topic as that put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), that is the disgraceful situation which is taking place in this country whereby low-income Canadians are being forced into the hands of loan sharks because the chartered banks in Canada are refusing to cash their cheques. These loan sharks charge horrendous rates of interest, rates which are way out of line and, I think, beyond the law. In any event, they are immoral, disgraceful and should not be allowed to continue. The banks are refusing to cash legitimate government cheques and those loan sharks are taking advantage of that particular situation.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North mentioned tonight the latest instance of this, a case where the interest rate may be as high as 2,500 per cent, if one projects the rates on a daily basis. This must not be allowed to continue, Mr. Speaker.

I raised the subject on December 3 and I was very disappointed to hear the Parliamentary Secretary say tonight that it is still under consideration. It has been under consideration for almost a year now because this Party, when we were the Government, undertook through the previous Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to do something about this situation. Still we find that nothing has been done.

What can be done? First, the Minister of Finance could use moral suasion on the Canadian Bankers' Association in Toronto. He could say to the bankers that what has been going on in their banks must not be allowed to continue. They must be told that they must cash government cheques and must allow people on welfare and low-income Canadians who receive these cheques to get them cashed for nothing.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) could also look at the law which came into being in Quebec in 1980. It states that no one can require fees from a consumer for cashing a cheque issued by the federal, provincial or municipal Governments. There have been some difficulties with that particular law in Quebec, but none, I feel, that cannot be overcome. Another possible solution, Mr. Speaker, is that government cheques could be directly deposited into people's accounts at the banks. In Great Britain there is another way of doing this whereby savings operations are attached to the Post Office and, therefore, anyone with a postal address has a savings account. Whatever course of action the Government chooses to take, this is a situation which cannot be allowed to continue.

The Parliamentary Secretary also said previously in answer that this situation arose quickly. Well, it has arisen over the past few years and that is hardly quickly. It is time now, I believe, for the Government to stop considering this matter and to take action so that these low-income Canadians can be treated fairly and justly as full Canadians in every sense of the word. The chartered banks of Canada are making good and healthy profits, Mr. Speaker, and it is not right, just or fair that these horrendous rates are charged to those who can least afford to pay that burden. It is a situation which should no longer continue to exist, and I call upon the Government, and upon the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to see that this situation is rectified right away.

• (1825)

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no existing legislation compels chartered banks to cash cheques issued by the Government of Canada. The only obligation of banks operating under the Bank Act is that they may not collect service charges for cashing Canadian Government cheques.

As a result of the ever-rising number of frauds, banks and other financial institutions are wary about cashing any kind of a cheque for non-clients. A few financial institutions do have mechanisms to help people who regularly receive payments from Governments or social agencies, but those mechanisms have not always given the expected results. Certain institutions have therefore specialized in cheque-cashing operations, but they may impose service charges since they do not come under the Bank Act.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) can understand why some of the financial institutions such as banks, trust companies and credit unions are hesitant to offer services to people who do not do business with them, and that is due to the prevalence of fraudulent transactions. However, he firmly believes that if the bearer of the cheque provides adequate identification and everything indicates that he or she is the legitimate owner of the cheque, then the financial institutions ought to honour the cheque, as they are required to do under their mandate.

The Minister will soon raise that important issue for poorer Canadians with spokesmen for banking institutions, and he will eventually recommend to the House or to the Government that appropriate steps be taken, as our colleague has just suggested, at least for moral if not legal considerations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.27 p.m., the House adjourned.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

AIR TRAVEL COSTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, while in opposition, Conservative Members criticized the Liberal Government for abusing air trips which were funded by taxpayers. The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) spoke in the House for hours on the subject. I would like to quote that Member. He said:

It is astounding that we have this kind of extravaganza from a Government preaching restraint.

That sounds familiar. We have yet to hear the Hon. Member, who now sits on the government side, complain about the fact that the Government has spent more than $496,000 in the last two months on air trips, and refuses to make public the reason for the use of these sacred instruments of travel.

This is the Government that, throughout the election campaign, misled Canadian people by promising that it would bring about changes; that it would not be abusive; that it would be an open Government, and that it would create jobs. There were 338 promises in total.

The Government has yet to prove to the people of this country that what it promised during the election campaign was not "bull roney". Happiness is never having to say you are Tory.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, the Cruise missile is tested in the Primose Lake Air Weapons Range which straddles the northwest corner of my constituency.

Recently I met with the Battlefords Association for Nuclear Disarmament. Members of that group told me they were opposed to Cruise missile testing; that they were opposed to involvement with the United States; that they were opposed to defence spending, and that they were opposed to NATO. One member of this group explained that he supported what he called the Soviet Union's "assistance" to Afghanistan.

It is my view that Canadians strive for a truly mutual, balanced and verifiable disarmament. Our Government pursues this goal by using a moderate, conciliatory approach through the channels of diplomacy. I believe that sensible and fair Canadians, the majority of our citizens, want an honest and common sense approach. Many who protest, talk about their highly moral position. Striving for peace, by any means, is moral. No side in this debate has the exclusive claim to morality.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SEARCH AND RESCUE

DEPLOYMENT OF HELICOPTERS ON WEST COAST

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of the House and to the people of Canada the matter of the opening of an inquest today in Port Hardy, British Columbia. The inquest is inquiring into the deaths of five fishermen and the matter of receiving inappropriate weather information on the coast of British Columbia.

It is with some pleasure that I note the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) has looked into the matter, but I would warn the Government that it is not simply a matter of weather warning improvement. The availability of search and rescue equipment on the coast of British Columbia is such that if fishermen, or indeed any people, get into difficulty, quite often in the wintertime, during daylight hours, helicopters cannot reach them because of inappropriate deployment along the coast of British Columbia. I would also point out that Sikorski and Boeing Vertol, manufacturers of helicopters, have indicated that the entire coast of British Columbia could be covered by helicopters within one hour's flying time, for a price of $10 million.

More must be done to ensure the safety of people at sea than simply tuning-up weather forecasting and weather broadcasting. The Government must show concern in many other ways by co-ordinating and improving the resources which we already have.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

INDUSTRY SITUATION—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that the current crisis in the textile and clothing industry continues and is growing worse. Thirty-four thousand jobs have been lost in that industry over the past ten years. It is a deplorable situation if we consider that it costs in excess of $250,000 to create a job a year in that sector. Many of my constituents have told me their concerns about this, and it is imperative that the Government implement policies designed to alleviate that situation.

In August 1984, there were 39,700 workers in the textile sector, and 48,100 in the clothing and hosiery sector in Quebec. Those industries account for one out of five jobs in Quebec's manufacturing industries, including several thousand in my riding of Drummond, which goes to show that those industries are a major component of our economy.

Textile and clothing imports into Canada have reached unprecedented levels in recent years. In 1983, imports rose by 25 per cent over the previous year. This unabated growth in imports means that more than 27,000 pieces of clothing come into Canada every hour, every day. This situation is the result of inaction on the part of the Liberals who were unable to adhere to the principles of their own policies.

To remedy that situation, Mr. Speaker, I would urge the Minister responsible—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his allotted time has expired. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

SOCIAL SECURITY

SPOUSE'S ALLOWANCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, Friday last the Minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) introduced Bill C-26. The purpose of that legislation is to extend to needy single persons, aged 60 to 64, one of the old age security benefits, the spouse's allowance. My first reaction is to say "Hurray"! But, unfortunately, the Government has decided to add a new criterion which unfairly discriminates against 80,000 people in Canada, most of whom are women.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure not one Member of this House, whatever his political stripe, will let the legislation pass as it is now worded. Otherwise it would be a shame. If the Bill becomes law as it now stands, every time a 62-year old lady calls at one of our constituency offices and says: "I have been turned down!", and, being asked why, she will answer: "Simply because one day I separated from my husband."

Mr. Speaker, I am counting greatly on the support of every member in this House to have the Prime Minister amend the legislation to render it accessible to all needy single persons, and I am convinced he will do so.

EMPLOYMENT

DEBATE ON INVESTMENT CANADA—OPPOSITION'S ATTITUDE

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, unemployment remains the first concern of our government. Unfortunately, our friends opposite do not seem as sensitive as we are to this issue. They continue to make speeches and prolong unduly the debate on the Investment Canada Bill which will enable our small businesses to expand and create jobs.

Mr. Speaker, a German industrialist told me recently that many of his fellow citizens were just waiting for more favourable Canadian legislation to be passed before coming to Canada to invest and to create some of the thousands of jobs which this country desperately needs.

Mr. Speaker, the Members opposite use the Standing Orders and the procedures of this House neither to make the debate any clearer nor to improve some of our bills intended to correct a situation which has become intolerable for Canadians, but simply to score political points with the media, perhaps to be named Official Opposition of the week, the month or the year!

ANTI-SEMITISM

FIRE BOMBING OF VANCOUVER SYNAGOGUE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it is with regret that I report to this House that early on Friday, January 25, the Temple Shalom on West 10th Avenue in Vancouver was fire bombed. The synagogue was gutted, and there was $400,000 damage. Later, on Monday night, again there was an attempted fire bomb at the Schara Tzedeck funeral chapel. I am sure all Hon. Members of this House will join with me in deploring these terrible attacks.

Rabbi Philip Bregman is quoted in The Globe and Mail as saying that:

—he has hired guards in the past to watch over services during this temple's high holy days in the fall. At various times during his four and a half years at the synagogue, rocks have shattered windows, his car was vandalized twice, red paint has been poured over the front doors and over the Star of David and there have been telephoned obscenities and bomb threats.

This is not Europe, Mr. Speaker; this is not Paris; this is Canada. We thought we did not have these kinds of things happen in Canada. We have been rather smug in the past. I think we should note that anti-semitism, when we think it is dead, always seems to rear its ugly head again. On the fortieth anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz, I would like to think that we Canadians, all Canadians, could liberate ourselves from this terrible problem of anti-semitism.

As long as Jews are singled out and persecuted, none of us in Canada are safe, and we should express our regrets about these terrible attacks in Vancouver.

ATLANTIC PROVINCES TROWEL TRADES COLLEGE

CALL FOR PUBLIC SUPPORT

Mr. Pat Binns (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, the Atlantic Provinces Trowel Trades College was recently established in Summerside, Prince Edward Island, as a training institution to encourage young people to take up the trowel trades and meet the needs of our Atlantic building industry.

The College came about because of the foresight and commitment of union leaders, civic officials, training institutions, and federal and provincial Governments. Some of these people are in the public gallery today, including Mr. Albert Vincent, Mr. Leo Rossiter, and Mr. Derek Key. They are here to meet with members of the Atlantic caucus. They seek the support of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and the Government of Canada, as well as of officials of provincial and municipal Governments, and union leaders, in order to continue their training courses. I urge continued public support be given for assistance to this college.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INTENTION TO CANCEL OUR NATIVE LAND RADIO PROGRAM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed of the intention of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to cancel its native affairs program Our Native Land. This one half hour show, which is heard nationally on Saturday evenings, is the only radio broadcast which focuses exclusively on issues which are of concern to Indian, Inuit, and Metis peoples. The approach is one of in-depth and concentration, and it is not duplicated elsewhere.

I recall, Mr. Speaker, when the CBC, under the previous Liberal administration, cut this program from one hour to one half hour. It was a disgraceful, shocking decision at that time, and I said so. Now, Our Native Land is to be cut entirely and replaced by three native news stories per week.

CBC has once again failed to carry out its mandate to reflect the culture of the peoples of Canada. I know that the CBC is responding to government directives to reduce its expenditures. There is a lot of fat in the CBC; that cannot be denied. But, please, let us get rid of one of those unneeded vice-presidents and keep Our Native Land.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: Our Native Land, Mr. Speaker, will celebrate its twenty-first year of broadcasting next month. I call upon the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to intercede and talk some sense into the CBC executives who sit in such splendid isolation in their corporate boardrooms.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

SOCIAL SECURITY

SOCIAL PROGRAMS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE BUDGET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

In the House yesterday, the Minister of National Health and Welfare seemed unable to confirm whether the options mentioned in the Government's consultation document were government policy or not. Forty-eight cents a day more for disadvantaged Canadians is almost an insult. There is uncertainty and confusion everywhere in this country, owing to a definite lack of leadership. For months, the obvious confusion in Cabinet has been causing much concern among low-income families, senior citizens and working mothers. Only a budget can put an end to the confusion.

Could the Prime Minister persuade his Minister of Finance to put an end to this confusion by bringing down a budget as soon as possible?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance will bring down a Budget towards the end of April, as agreed. I think this has already been announced. Concerning the confusion referred to by my right hon. friend, I think perhaps I should quote someone who is a bit more objective, Louise Dulude—

[English]

—of the Social Policy Reform Group who last night, on CTV, described the social benefits paper as a very good first step. I think that is what the consultation process is all about, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: That is a Tory group.

MATERNITY BENEFITS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. In December the Minister of Finance contributed to that confusion, indeed caused an uproar, by suggesting that we should end social programs for middle-income earners. Now the Minister has mused aloud in Toronto about tinkering with maternity benefits. Will the Prime Minister put an end to this confusion, because working women are now worried about the Minister's remarks? Are we going to have yet another confused consultation paper?

Mr. Crosbie: We have a confused Opposition.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that on November 8 I said exactly the same thing on page 78 of the agenda paper, at which time I drew attention to the fact that unemployment insurance premiums were high and having a retarding effect on the ability of small business to create jobs. I asked the question then, as I did earlier this week, whether it was more appropriate to take these programs out of the unemployment insurance program and have them financed by general government revenues. If the Right Hon. Member has any comments on that, I would be very pleased to receive them.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Finance, that agenda paper of November 8 seems to have been overridden on several occasions and we do not know whether we can rely on it any more.

FINANCE

TIMING OF BUDGET INTRODUCTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. As I said in my first question, only a Budget can end this confusion. I suspect that Budget is being delayed partly because of dissension in Cabinet—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): — and perhaps because of the recent undermining of the Minister of Finance by the Prime Minister. However, I want an answer to a third suggestion. Would the Prime Minister confirm that the Budget is being delayed, despite the confusion in the country, because his political allies in Regina, Queen's Park, and St. John's are contemplating elections and want to get them out of the way before what they foresee will be a disastrous Budget introduced by the Minister of Finance?

• (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: That is precisely what Frank Miller said.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I understand from a communiqué out of the Prime Minister's office this morning that he is going to see Mr. Miller, the Premier-designate in Ontario. Perhaps I could ask him, Mr. Speaker, whether Budget time is going to be Miller time.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hate to be unkind, but in the interests of national harmony, bring back the cue cards.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: It is curious that my right hon. friend invokes the word "dissension" the same day as the Hon. Member for Shawinigan returns to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Saint-Maurice.

Mr. Mulroney: I just want to tell—

Ms. Copps: Ask Champagne about party unity.

Mr. Mulroney: There's the decreasing influence of Queen's Park at it again. It's the melody in the voice that I love.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: It's clearly Wednesday.

Mr. Mulroney: In response to my right hon. friend, I want to say, with respect, that he can expect, at a time that was already indicated, an outstanding Budget brought forward by a truly outstanding Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MATERNITY BENEFITS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Government's message to Canadians this week is: "Don't have children". It is cutting the family allowances and the child tax exemption. It is going to eliminate maternity leave under the UIC, and it has done nothing about day care.

Is the Prime Minister's Government serious about eliminating maternity benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act? If so, how does he reconcile that with the promises he made in the televised women's debate before the election? Is he telling Canadians now that we cannot afford to support women when they leave work to have children? Is that what he is telling them?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): For someone who began with such promise in the Catholic Youth Organization only a few years ago—to be indulging in such distortion today! The answer is absolutely no. We are trying to do what we have tried to do in many other instances. I say this with affection for my hon. friend. He knows, as I do, that we are trying to help those most in need in our society.

SICKNESS AND RETIREMENT BENEFITS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, how does it benefit Canadians to muse in public about the elimination of one program when they do not know where they are going with the replacement? All it does is provide confusion and uncertainty.

The Minister of Finance mentioned the elimination of social programs. Are they also considering eliminating or changing the sickness and retirement benefits under the unemployment insurance program? Are they doing that as well?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me say, with the greatest sincerity and seriousness, that that sort of distortion is not becoming to the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I said very clearly that we were considering taking the financing of those programs out of the unemployment insurance scheme and putting them into general revenues of the federal Government. I never talked once about making any changes in the program.

● (1425)

As I said in a previous answer, the reason why we are doing it is to take the load off small business that is suffering from that high front-end tax, so that it can create more jobs. I should think that the Hon. Member should be encouraging us to do that.

TAX POLICY AFFECTING THE RICH

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the social spending plans of the Government. The only way to increase social spending for the poor without cutting back on programs for middle income Canadians is to increase the total going into social programs and obtain the additional revenue by changing tax policy to get more revenue from the rich. In the options proposed in the paper that was released on Monday, why was this important, specific option excluded?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Member for Oshawa that his question is very similar to those asked yesterday and to which the answer was given. The answer had two aspects. First, if we increase social spending, obviously we must get the economy producing more. I think all of us agree on that.

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That is obviously one point that has to be put forward. Any other options in terms of tax reform are budgetary, and remain with the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Broadbent: The memorizing of a precise answer does not constitute a rational reply to the question.

REDISTRIBUTION OF INCOME

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister since the Prime Minister is not dealing with the question. He has just said that the only way of getting more revenue for social programs is to have an upswing in the economy.

There are over 8,000 Canadians currently at income levels exceeding $50,000 a year—presumably working men and women—who do not pay any income tax whatsoever. There are additional thousands of upper income Canadians who, because of their high income level, had their taxes substantially reduced when others were not, a few years ago.

Why did the Government not include among its options the possibility of giving a tax increase to these people instead of middle-income families, and redistribute that income to the poor who badly need it?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I looked at the position put forward by the Hon. Member yesterday, that it was coming from middle-income Canadians. I said yesterday that, according to option one, 70 per cent of the money redistributed would be coming from families above $40,000, and it would be over 80 per cent from option two.

I studied it even further last night. For families earning over $50,000, sixty per cent of the redistributed money would come from them. That is the exact group that he says to tax more.

If he goes back to the bank janitor and the bank president, he would see that the bank janitor would gain money and the bank president would lose 65 per cent of his benefits.

MIDDLE-INCOME GROUP

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, once again the Minister did not deal with the question. He neglected to note in his reply that more than one million middle-income families, earning between $30,000 and $50,000—many of which are families with two-income sources—will be paying hundreds of thousands of dollars in lost benefits that they will get—

Mr. Speaker: With respect.

Mr. Broadbent: I will come to the question, Mr. Speaker. Why, in the expressed concern of some of the poor groups themselves, has the Minister embarked upon a program that will put the major part of the burden on middle-income Canadians and redistribute that to the poor, instead of going after those Canadians who can afford it, namely, the rich, by bringing in tax reforms now?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will give the Hon. Member the same answer.

He might not like the answer, but it is the correct answer. The other point I would make is that the option which he put forward has some of those very adverse effects, and now he is trying to reverse quickly and cover himself. Now he is attempting to talk about the rich.

I told him that the options provide for a 65 per cent redistribution to those at a lower income. I hope he understands when I tell him again that the options he puts forward in terms of tax reform are obviously a budgetary item.

SOCIAL SECURITY

NEEDY FAMILIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbaut (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is clear that middle-income families will have to pay as much as $571 million to provide an extra 48 cents a day—almost worse than nothing and not even enough to buy a quart of milk—for families who need it most. That is because this Government has decided to transfer more money to the Conservative provincial governments than to those families.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister how he can even consider transfering such considerable amounts to the provincial governments, instead of substantially increasing the meagre extra benefits he intends to provide for families who are in greatest need of them.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition brought forward the 48 cents a day option. I looked at that last night as well, and I want to put that into perspective today also.

The greatest benefit, if you take the three programs in the family benefits package together, is about $800, just over $2 a day. A 48 per cent increase for those who are poorest in our society would be a 25 per cent increase.

Mr. Deans: For goodness sake.

An Hon. Member: You can't even buy a litre of milk for that.

[Translation]

REASON FOR TRANSFER OF LARGE FUNDS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker, what an answer! The Minister informs us that 48 cents is enough. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how much money is going to the provinces. What kind of deal was the Minister able to make with the provincial governments, if he is now transferring such enormous amounts of money to the provinces? Is he trying to compensate for reductions the Minister of Finance is about to make in other transfer programs?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in the preface to the question of the Hon. Member I did not say what he attributed to me and it was a distortion of what I said. What I said and what I was pointing out concerned the benefit because the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was trying to point out yesterday, I take it, that it was insignificant.

Mr. Deans: It is.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What I am trying to point out, in terms of the benefit these people are receiving, is that obviously we would like to do more, but in view of the redistribution, taking a look at what we are getting and in terms of what the 48 cents means per day, or the yearly increase, that has to be put into perspective. I say to the Hon. Member not to distort what I am saying.

In terms of what the redistribution would be with the provinces, I said yesterday, and I repeat to the Hon. Member today, again, that obviously we want to sit down with the provinces in terms of their social programs and see what arrangements could be made if either of those options became government policy.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

INFRASTRUCTURE CONDITIONS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He will have had an opportunity to review the report presented to him over a week ago by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities which outlines the deteriorating condition of municipal infrastructure and calls on the federal Government to inject funds into the municipal sector.

Would the Minister not agree that such an investment in our municipalities creating, it is estimated, some 75,000 jobs a year, would be a wise use of public funds, and seeing as the federal Government has reduced its contribution at the municipal level to almost nothing, would the Minister now make a commitment to meet with representatives of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities to expedite an agreement which would allow work to begin this spring?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, I met for a full morning with the entire Council of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities and we had a very worth-while and productive meeting. They raised the question which the Hon. Member has just raised on the state of the infrastructure of the municipalities. I said it would be something we would be looking at closely to see whether there were some basis on which we could provide some support. However, I did caution the Federation that, because of the major financial requirements of the Government, and the difficulty of our financial position, it was not going to be easy to meet what the Council put in front of me.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Given the situation at the municipal level, and the fact that the federal Government has backed off on any kind of contribution over the last 10 or more years, and given that we do need jobs in this country, would the Minister not agree that it is urgent to give an indication to the municipalities that the Government will provide some funds and meet to negotiate the actual level, perhaps even with the provinces?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the concern of the Hon. Member and I appreciate very much the concern expressed to me by representatives of the municipalities. There are many pressing needs in our country today. They have one, and we will take that into account as we review the wide range of demands that are upon us right now.

TRADE

SECTORAL DIALOGUE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of External Trade. In the paper he made public yesterday, the Minister is soft-pedalling the sectoral approach at a time when two agencies are holding public hearings on the subject in the United States. What has the Canadian Government been doing since September to pursue the sectoral dialogue?

I would also like to know what the Minister has done about following up the commitment made by his leader when he said last year on April 18 in Toronto: We shall pursue talks already initiated with the United States with respect to certain sectors. What has the Minister done since September to keep this option open, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I would advise that sectoral trade discussions are not continuing with the United States at this time as we wish to discuss with the Canadian people the whole range of options that are available in our trade relationship with the United States. Once that discussion has been completed, then we will continue our discussions with them on the option that has been chosen.

I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that, in the meantime, discussions on day-to-day trade issues are continuing with the United States.

MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister referred to consultations, and I know that yesterday he announced to the media that he would be doing a series of letters on international trade. I therefore wish to ask the Minister, since all Canadians are concerned by international trade, whether he intends to have his paper examined by a committee of the House to ensure that an issue of such fundamental importance is considered by the Members of this House.

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the Hon. Member that we feel a referral to a committee of the House at this time would be premature.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelleher: I would point out to the Hon. Member that this is a discussion paper. We want to find out what the problems are in the Canadian sector—

Mr. Deans: You have studied it 50 times.

Mr. Kelleher: Once we have ascertained what those concerns are, we will be in a position to direct our discussions and perhaps return to Parliament and a committee at that time.

EMPLOYMENT

STUDENT SUMMER JOBS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am happy to be informed that she has now agreed to meet with the Canadian Federation of Students after all, to discuss her new program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: It is, of course, based on a wage subsidized career internship program and private sector initiatives. Does she not recognize that it is already too late to introduce a new program, of doubtful effectiveness, and that students are deeply concerned? In spite of its shortcomings, would the Minister consider using for this year the well-tested project oriented program which we know will achieve specified job-creation goals, and thus ensure that students will be in a position to know where they are going to be this summer, and then allow adequate consultation and preparation for the program that she plans to introduce next year—that she would be better off introducing next year.

● (1440)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure whether I followed that convoluted question. However, I should like to say to the Hon. Member that, in the last couple of months, I have had the benefit of meeting with students and with unemployed young people in Regina, in St. John's, Newfoundland, in Halifax, in Toronto—all across the country—so that I could have their input with regard to the summer programs which will be forthcoming. I can tell him that I do not consider it too late to be announcing the very substantial programs about which he will hear shortly.

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, summer is almost upon us.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: There must have been three fine caucuses this morning. The Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville on a supplementary question.

Mr. McCurdy: Summer is almost upon students who are worried about how they will pay their tuition next year. Will the Minister and the Government consider a more rationalized approach? Rather than this program which the Minister is obviously having difficulty putting together, would she not consider rationalized spending initiatives to provide both full-time jobs for the unemployed generally and summer jobs for students in economically useful, productive, and needed expenditures for municipal infrastructure reconstruction, reforestation, and to meet social needs—

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member consider allowing the Minister to reply?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in replying, I should like to tell the Hon. Member that when we cancelled the Liberal Government's $85 million—and remember, it was $85 million which it had in the budget for Summer Canada this year—we announced then that we would be coming forward with a program which would meet the real needs of young people. We gave that commitment. I want to tell the Hon. Member that I intend to meet that commitment.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is based upon answers which he gave today during Question Period to the Leader of the Opposition and to the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East. The Minister said that his intention now was to transfer part of the costs of the Unemployment Insurance Program on to general taxation. Is the Minister of Finance confirming, in total contradiction to commitments which he and the Prime Minister have made that there would not be a general tax increase, that the Government is considering a general tax increase to cover costs of the Unemployment Insurance Program, and God knows what else?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could pass this document over to the Hon. Member so that he could read it and understand, because he obviously cannot hear. I have very clearly said that there may be a part of the Unemployment Insurance Program which is not unemployment insurance in the true sense of the word "insurance". Should we consider moving those social programs to be financed under general revenues as opposed to an employment tax which small business has been telling us—and I believe the Hon. Member when he was on this side of the House—would retard its ability to create jobs? That is all that I said. Any extension of that is a distortion on the part of the Hon. Member.

REQUEST FOR SINGLE GOVERNMENT DOCUMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance says that it is a distortion. However, the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that he would take benefits away from the middle class and the Minister of Finance said that he had to cover unemployment insurance by general taxation. When will the Government get its act together and bring these proposals together in one document so that Canadians will know for what they will have to pay come next April?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, a number of the questions the Hon. Member is asking, he knows, can only be asked in the course of a Budget. However, let me point out that we are trying to have a look at some of the mess left us with the distortions in the policies of the previous Government, distortions which are causing more difficulty for small business, in particular, to create jobs.

Mr. Axworthy: Are you going to raise taxes or not?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Is the Hon. Member saying to us that he does not want us to help the small business community?

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

MONITORING OF FOOD RELIEF DISTRIBUTION IN ETHIOPIA

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of External Relations. In the 1984 report on the administration of CIDA under the previous Government, the Auditor General claimed that there was an inadequate monitoring of CIDA's food aid projects. Despite several inquiries at CIDA and at External Affairs in the past few days, I have been unable to learn that the Government now has any staff in Ethiopia exclusively assigned to monitoring the daily distribution of Canadian food relief. We know of short visits by government officials—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, is there a question? Statements are for earlier in the day.

Mr. Stackhouse: So that assurances can be given to Canadians that their gifts are helping people, will the Minister tell us what steps have been taken to monitor, day by day, distribution of Canadian food relief to the Ethiopian people?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker I want to thank the Hon. Member for asking this question as it gives me an opportunity to explain the present situation in Ethiopia.

Needless to say, our policy is dictated by humanitarian reasons first and not by political considerations and the information we have received from our embassy and from non-governmental organizations indicate that as much as possible food relief is being distributed to the hungry and that it is very difficult to reach the provinces of Eritrea and Tigre.

We are doing everything in our power to ensure that Canadian Food relief is distributed—

Mr. Speaker: I must, with great respect, invite the Minister to make a statement under Statements by Ministers.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—CONSULTATIONS WITH ARTS GROUPS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications, who met yesterday with the representatives of a new coalition established as a result of budget cut-backs in the cultural sector. The Minister has yet to meet with leading groups in that sector, such as the Canadian Conference of the Arts. Therefore, I should like to know whether the Minister intends to honour the commitment made by his party during the election campaign, namely to consult with artistic groups. I am not referring to Conservative culture Ministers, but to the groups themselves, the representatives of the cultural community. If so, when does he plan to hold such consultations?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did meet yesterday with some of the representatives of that group. I might reassure the Hon. Member by telling her that, several weeks ago, I went to the Canadian Conference of the Arts, the organization she has mentioned, for the official opening of its new facilities. I spoke with several Ministers, not only Conservative colleagues but also the Minister of Manitoba who, as far as I know, is of the same persuasion as the NDP Opposition Party.

We do have ongoing consultations with most of those who play a role within the cultural community. With that in mind and taking into consideration the fact that there will be a federal-provincial cultural conference in Vancouver at the end of the month, I intend to spend most of the month of February meeting with most of the groups to which you are referring.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

NATIVE PROGRAMMING—REQUEST FOR ADEQUATE FUNDING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. It concerns a more specific area regarding cut-backs and arises out of the cut-back of the program Our Native Land on CBC Radio. Would the Minister give us his commitment to native programming? Would he tell us what it is and how he will ensure that there is adequate funding so that there will be native programming?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well it is the responsibility of the CBC management to determine the corporation's programming and the directions it has to take in either of the areas mentioned. The Government has advised the corporation about the need to reduce the national deficit, and that accordingly all government agencies, departments and organizations must assume their share of the responsibility. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that I will pass on to the President of the CBC her concerns as expressed in this House.

INCOME TAX ACT

PROVISION AFFECTING LAND PURCHASES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Many taxpayers who have sold land and purchased replacement land are being reassessed under Section 44 of the Income Tax Act for failing to file an election. Since no election form is provided by Revenue Canada, will the Minister examine the matter of Section 44 deferrals, and will he consider the act of re-purchase as an effective election, thus providing relief to those taxpayers who face unfair treatment?

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue is now in Toronto announcing important changes to the Income Tax Act. I therefore take notice of the question and will refer it to the Minister.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN CODFISH

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, I would like to direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that the United States Department of Commerce has imposed an interim trade barrier against imports of Canadian dried salt cod. This will result in average duties of over 24 per cent against Canadian salt cod exporters. Since Canadian exporters and, indeed, ultimately the fishermen will have to bear the cost of this protectionist measure against them, what action is the federal Government taking to stop this anti-Canadian fish tariff imposed by the United States?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to answer a question about fisheries, since they will not ask any questions about justice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: That's because there's no justice in the country.

Mr. Deans: We didn't know what to ask you. We didn't know what you knew.

Mr. Crosbie: In fact, Mr. Speaker, they are not interested in the answers at all. They are howling and bawling like a bunch of banshees.

The Hon. Member will know that what the Department of Commerce released was a preliminary estimate of the dumping margin which could be imposed upon Canadian producers of skin-on dried whole salted cod. That salted cod has its skin on. That is more than I can say of most of the Members opposite.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: At least we're not salted in brine like you are. We don't want a pickled Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I could get into a lot of trouble here, but I wonder if the Hon. Member would like to "fin-ish" his question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR CANADIAN INTERVENTION

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the Minister of Justice would scale down his remarks just a little bit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Henderson: It is a very serious question and I am sure that the fishermen in eastern Canada would like a little justice to be served to them. Since the matter does relate to and affect the Prime Minister's own riding as much as any other riding, I would think that the Government would be very serious about trying to intervene with the Government of the United States. Considering the great relationship that the Prime Minister says he has with the United States Government, surely he would intervene on behalf of the good fishermen of eastern Canada and make sure that they do get justice in their marketplace.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, undoubtedly, if it becomes necessary, we can count on the Prime Minister to make strong representations. However, he cannot interfere in the quasi-judicial system of the United States.

The United States International Trade Commission has now to determine if there is injury to the domestic industry. The Department of Commerce has determined that we are selling codfish to the United States at below production costs. Unfortunately, that happens to be true, because the world price is below our cost of production. However, that is why the Canadian Saltfish Corporation exists. It exists to help those areas of Quebec, Labrador, Newfoundland, and southwest Nova Scotia. At the appropriate time, if and when it becomes necessary for influence to be exerted, the Prime Minister, because of his relationship with the President of the United States, will be able to be very effective.

ENERGY

EXPORT PRICE OF OIL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. After four Conservative Energy Ministers failed to reach an agreement on new oil and gas prices and taxation this weekend, she announced that Canadian oil producers could sell off more of our precious crude oil resources at even cheaper prices to American refiners. How can the Minister justify selling Canadian crude oil to Americans at prices lower than eastern Canadian refiners must pay for this oil on the world market?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think I could more properly ask the Hon. Member how he could justify his question since he is the one who, when debating the National Energy Program, said that that program is the only success of this Government, meaning the Liberal Government. The reason why we have a discrepancy in prices is because of the previous administration which was supported by the NDP. I would like to correct the Hon. Member because he knows perfectly well that, at the wellhead, the prices are the same for Canadian as well as export oil.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well that the NDP supported neither the National Energy Program nor the previous Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: I would like to ask a question of the present Minister because we must deal with the here and now. The Government seems to have a policy enunciated by the Minister that it will not sell natural gas to Americans for less than it sells it to Canadians at the Toronto citygate price. Why does the Government have a different policy for oil? Why is the Government not consistent on this matter, and why is it discriminating against Canadians?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the policy about which the Hon. Member is talking is the policy of the former administration and the policy supported by the NDP. It is this Government that is working closely with the provinces to go to de-regulation which will get rid of this false and malicious system which hurt western Canada so badly, and which is now hurting the consumers of Quebec and Ontario.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

HELICOPTER PROGRAM INVESTMENT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister will know that the country has invested, or is proposing to invest, $275 million with Bell Helicopter, and $100 million with Pratt & Whitney, to develop a twin-engine helicopter program. There has been a suggestion made that there is no market for this type of helicopter or that there is not a sufficient market to justify the investment. Has the Minister investigated those allegations? Will the Minister advise the House what he is doing about this suggestion?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, I would caution him about believing what he reads in the newspapers sometimes, and particularly about the report to which he has referred, which was based entirely on idle speculation and did not have much truth connected to it.

AGRICULTURE

AMOUNT OF FARM DEBT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and concerns the farm debt crisis which has become apparent in our country today. Farm bankruptcies are estimated to be up to 1,000 in the coming year. The Farm Credit Corporation has suggested that the default on farm loans will be over $2 billion in the next year or so. Is the Minister going to respond to the demands of the Opposition, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and the National Farmers Union, by bringing in an immediate program to forestall some of these bankruptcies?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the Hon. Member's question and his interest in this subject. Indeed, we have responded, and we have responded very quickly. The Hon. Member will know that we immediately put a moratorium on farm bankruptcies into place. Second, we put into place the Farm Credit Appeal Boards across the country. Third, we put into place a pilot project involving the banks, the federal Government, the provinces, and farm organizations in the Counties of Bruce and Grey in Ontario.

UNITED STATES PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the Minister will not take some effective action, like the United States Government has done. Over 8,000 United States farmers have been assisted, either with the lowering of interest rates to 7 per cent, or they have had set aside up to a quarter of their farm debt for a five-year period. Why will the Minister not bring forward a substantial and effective program, like the United States Government has done, which has been demonstrated to be so effective in only its first six weeks of operation?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member looked into the success of the U.S. program, he might not be quite so supportive of it.

Indeed, I do not know why the Hon. Member is so indignant. We made a commitment to lower interest rates during the election campaign, and we have done that. We have delivered a 4 per cent reduction in interest rates which provides a benefit to some 5,600 farmers in Canada. When the Party to which the Hon. Member belongs was in Government, that Government did not fund the special farm assistance program throughout 1984. Apparently, interest rates of 16.75 per cent were satisfactory to him when his Party was in Government. However, they were not to us, and that is why we have lowered them.

METRIC CONVERSION

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce to the House today the Government's policy on metric conversion. During the last few months we have had exhaustive consultations with retailers, various associations, consumers, business and many Canadians who wanted to express their views. We have reached a decision which, I believe, will satisfy the requirements and expectations of both business and individual Canadians, as well as current market requirements.

In the early seventies, as part of the planning for the conversion process, the economy was divided into more than 100 sectors. In each sector, conversion was initiated on a voluntary basis with the full co-operation of the industry and at the rate decided on by the industry. However, in the retail sectors, and more specifically with respect to gas and diesel fuel, home furnishings and individually weighed foods, it was decided to adopt regulations that would make the use of metric units compulsory and limit the use of imperial units. These regulations were adopted under the Weights and Measures Act.

[English]

Canadians feel, and we agree, that a compulsory "metric only" approach is both insensitive and heavy-handed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Therefore, the three regulations under the Weights and Measures Act covering fuels, home furnishings and individually-measured foods will be revoked. They will be replaced with new provisions allowing the use of metric only or the use of imperial units alongside metric units in the advertising, displaying and weighing, and measuring of these groups of products. In all other sectors the situation will remain unchanged.

This means that consumers who are unfamiliar with the metric system can continue to refer to imperial measures while buying products in these three retail sectors. However, metric will continue to be required in these sectors, to ensure that consumers can easily compare prices between stores and products. This will also guarantee fair and equitable competition among retailers.

[Translation]

For small retailers, Mr. Speaker, abiding by the new policy entails practical difficulties, harsh consequences and undue expenditures, so they will be exempt from provisions concerning weighing and measuring. In other words, they will be allowed to continue to use imperial scales. However, they will be expected to use the metric system alone or in conjunction with the imperial system in advertising, displays and labelling.

Our Government believes that this policy is in the best interests of all Canadians. The metric system is here to stay. Canadian industry and retailers have spent a lot of money to convert to the metric system. Today's young school graduates are familiar only with the metric system. We do know that the way the metric system has been forced upon retailers has been a source of problems for the many Canadians who find it difficult to use only the metric system.

The Government is committed to metrication, but the significant point is that it will achieve it through a more flexible and more humane process than has been the case so far. This new approach, which allows the use of both imperial and metric systems, takes into consideration the concerns expressed by our fellow citizens, yet it will eventually meet their basic requirements.

[English]

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my main concern today is that it took the Government so long to come forward with any policy at all.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: We have been saying to the Government since the House convened in November: "For goodness sake, do something". Today, what we have from the Minister—who will possibly be known in the future as "Mr. Half and Half"—in at least some sort of statement.

The most telling part of the Minister's statement was that metric is here to stay. Substantial investments have already been made by Canadian businesses and retailers. Children coming out of school today have been educated only in metric. That is to state the obvious.

Given that admission here today, why has it taken so many months to get any kind of policy out of the Government?

Mr. Dick: Consultation.

Mr. Rompkey: The reason it has taken so long is that during the election campaign that Party promised to do away with metric. That was very clear.

Mr. Dick: Never.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: As stated—and politically, let's give him his due—

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, I would like to hear the Hon. Member's statement and other Members might allow him to be heard, please.

Mr. Rompkey: The policy of the Party opposite during the election campaign was enunciated very clearly by the man who is now the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister. Indeed, until a few weeks ago that Parliamentary Secretary was saying that metric was dead. It is not dead, it is alive and well! That is the only policy that this Government can have. Why has it taken them so long? Because there are deep divisions in that Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: They are listening to the antediluvian forces. What we have seen today is a further flip-flop by the Government, a further lack of continuity. Its members are not keeping the promises they made during the election campaign. There is confusion in the ranks of Hon. Members on the other side, Mr. Speaker. I want to say to those Members of the Government that they were elected to govern, and whether the solution is simple or difficult they should take their responsibility seriously and get on with the job.

• (1510)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that in all my years in Parliament I have ever heard such a convoluted and confusing statement as I have heard made today by the Minister. After all, Mr. Speaker, when the program of metrication was brought in, it was criticized by Hon. Members of the Conservative Party as not going through fast enough. The process has now gone on, Mr. Speaker, for years, tens of millions of dollars have been spent, and the Government has been told by industry, retailers, the grain trade and by consumers' associations that the process has gone so far that it cannot be reversed. The Minister's statement agrees with that because the Minister says that metric is here to stay.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that when we have a chance to ask questions, and when the people concerned realize what the Minister has said, we will find in fact that there is no real change.

The Minister says in his statement that retailers in food stores, for example, can use both systems. Does that mean they will have to have two sets of scales? That doesn't make any sense at all. Can they use the imperial scales alone? The Minister says no. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, they are not going to go back to the old system. The Minister says that small retailers who still have the imperial scales can continue to use those scales but they must mark their products in both metric and imperial. But if they have not got the metric scales, how can they calculate what the metric costs are?

I believe, in fact, there is going to be very little change. The Minister knows that, but as indicated by my colleague, the Hon. Member from the Liberal Party, he had to give something to those Conservative Hon. Members who had advocated going back to the imperial system. Representatives of all the interest groups have told the Government and the Minister to get rid of the confusion, let us know what we are doing; let us keep metric.

There are many people, including older people, who still have difficulty with the metric system. We know that. But surely the stores have taken care of that because while they use the metric scales, most of them have cards indicating the price of products both in the metric and imperial measurements so that people can get by. It seems to me that the Government ought to stop this nonsense, talking out of both sides of its mouth, and admit the fact that we have metric and we are not going to go back to imperial.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: In view of the statement the Minister has just made, I would like to ask him how, in the case of gasoline, for instance, the owner of a small service station who wants to please both his consumers who prefer the metric system and those who prefer the imperial system, can technically offer two kinds of pumps at his station? Does the Minister intend to ask retailers to re-equip themselves with both kinds of pumps? Under the program just announced by the Minister, are we going to need a subsidy program so that the small butcher shop on the corner can re-equip himself with imperial scales since he no longer has the old ones? What does this mean for the corner stores whose customers will want both systems? Can the Minister tell us exactly what will be the impact of this decision on the retailers?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question asked by my hon. colleague, I wish to tell him that what we were asked to do after lengthy consultations was to provide a much more flexible system under which imperial measurements can be used without resulting in legal proceedings. It is in this context that we have announced a new policy today. What we are saying is that businesses will have the choice between metric only or both systems. However, the small retailers such as the corner stores mentioned by the Hon. Member will be able to get an exemption if they wish to continue using imperial measurements.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister is as follows: What assurance do the consumers have that the inspectors of his Department will continue to guarantee that Canadian weights and measures are controlled efficiently in the chaotic situation which the Minister has just created by allowing both the metric and imperial systems? What assurance will consumers have that the goods they purchase are weighed correctly? Are the inspectors getting from the Minister the necessary budget to inspect gas pumps and weigh scales used in the stores? Has the Minister received more money to allow his inspectors to do this?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think that with their usual keenness and the required instructions, the departmental inspectors will be in a position to enforce the regulations as clarified, and I expect no legal proceedings in that respect. Indeed, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that we have in our statute books the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act, which specifically allows the use of the metric system or both systems of units, and there has never been any problem nor any legal proceedings under that Act which has been in force for the past ten years.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in the Minister's statement he suggests that food stores will be permitted the use of metric only or the use of imperial along with metric. Is the Minister saying that stores will have to have two sets of scales, both in metric and imperial, or can they have either? In other words, can they have imperial scales only? If that is so, what protection does the consumer have?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Read the statement.

Mr. Orlikow: I have read the statement; that is the problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to my Hon. colleague that we are now announcing the following policy. In a grocery store, it is either metric or both systems and this means that in a place where you have for instance several units of measurements, we want the operator to keep on if he so wishes using metric only, but if he decided to use imperial measures, then he must have at all times a reasonable presence of metric units in order that the consumer may be able to compare these measures and make a better decision with regard to his or her purchase.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, that strikes me as a policy of sucking and blowing at the same time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Here is the expert!

Mr. Rodriguez: There were a great deal of problems when the previous Government said we were moving to metric and gas station operators were being prosecuted when they maintained a gallon reading on their pumps. With this system, are those who are selling gasoline by the gallon going to be required to carry a metric pump? Because if people have been raised under a metric system, they have a right to see the equivalent in metric, in litres, of the gasoline they purchase. Is the Government going to force its colleagues in the Conservative Party who own this gas station to carry a metric pump as well as the imperial?

Mr. King: They had it already.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. And my colleagues on this side of the House who, according to the Hon. Member, operate a gas station, will have to use or have metric measurements available if they want to go on using imperial units.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am in difficulty. The House knows that the tradition on these matters is that questions should take no longer in total than the sum of the speeches. I can allow, therefore, approximately two and a half minutes more.

(1520)

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am quite concerned about the Minister's decision and I would like to put the following question if I may.

Will the Minister admit that what is now being done will be an encouragement and a reward for those who have broken the law, and have avoided metrication? After all, they still have the old scales and the former equipment which could now be an advantage over their competitors?

I see a Conservative backbencher who applauds those who have broken the law. Is it the policy of the government to reward those who refuse to comply with the laws of the land?

If such is the case, I would also like the Minister to answer the following question: How will the retailer go from one system to the other if he has only metric or imperial scales? Will your inspectors also make sure that the conversion will be made in a specific manner? Are you going to inspect the equipment used in such conversion?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I would merely remind the Hon. Member that the previous policy prohibited imperial measures. Thus those who experienced problems in using only the metric system were liable to prosecution because of a system which they could hardly understand. According to our consultations, over three-quarters of Canadians think that they should not be punished or liable to prosecution for using a system which they find difficult.

I think that the policy now implemented is much more flexible and responsive to the needs of Canadians. The government has undertaken to proceed with metrication while showing a greater understanding for those who still want to use the imperial system as long as they can also use the metric system to allow a better comparison.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: In order not to confuse the House, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) says I have just made a ruling. I have not. I have merely reported to the House what has been the tradition of the House under previous Speakers, that the Speaker has full control and discretion over the length of this period of time. It is my judgment, for the purposes of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, that I will exercise my discretion in saying that we have used up almost all of our time, but in the interests of not causing offence to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), I will allow one more question.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, my question is quite simple but not important in my opinion. Would the Hon. Minister tell us, to the best of his knowledge today, whether it will cost anything at all for inspectors to re-equip themselves as a result of the statement he has just made today? At present the food inspectors' equipment is exclusively metric. Now, the Minister is stating that the metric system is first and foremost while the use of the other system also is allowed. Then could he tell us how much it will cost to re-equip our food inspectors so they will be able to inspect as well those who will see fit not to comply or to use both systems?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my honourable colleague, I would say that I do not have any exact figures for him today with respect to his question, but I will provide them as quickly as possible. However, I do not think we could say today that there will be any additional costs. We intend to show tolerance, understanding and flexibility with respect to the needs of Canadians. We are simply bringing forward a policy which is needed and requested by most consumers and retailers in those three industrial sectors.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, hundreds of farmers and other Canadians who were made foreigners in their own land by compulsory metric will now welcome this choice.

Mr. Speaker: No, petitions. Excuse me, we are now on petitions.

PETITIONS

CBC PROGRAM CUTS

Mr. Blaine A. QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 169 and 192.

[Text]

IMPAIRED DRIVING

Question No. 169—Mr. Stackhouse:

In 1983, how many individuals were (a) charged with (b) convicted with impaired driving?

2. In 1983, how many fatalities occurred on the roads and highways and, in each case, how many were (a) a result of an impaired driver (b) injured as a result of these accidents?

3. In 1983, how many individuals under the age of 21 were convicted of impaired driving?

4. In 1983, how many driving licences were suspended due to impaired driving?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

1. (a) In 1983, in Canada there were 135,701 charges of driving while impaired. This total consists of (i) driving while impaired through drugs or alcohol; and (ii) driving with more than 80 mgs of alcohol in 100 millilitres of their blood.

(b) This information is not available elsewhere.

2. (a) and (b) This information is not available elsewhere.

3. This information is not available elsewhere.

4. This information is not available elsewhere.

NUMBER OF MURDERS COMMITTED IN CANADA

Question No. 192—Mr. Stackhouse:

In (a) 1980 (b) 1981 (c) 1982 (d) 1983, how many murders were committed in Canada and how many were police officers or penitentiary guards on duty?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

The table below depicts the number of homicides and murders for Canada for 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983 and depicts the number of police officers and correctional officers who were murdered on duty.

Year	Total Homicides*	Total Murders	Police Officers Murdered on Duty	Correctional Officers Murdered
1983	682	625	1	1
1982	668	622	1	3
1981	648	601	5	0
1980	593	493	3	0

* Homicides comprise murders, manslaughters and infanticides.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, January 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and on the motion of Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg) (p. 1708).

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I know that I have only four minutes left and that other Members are waiting anxiously for the Committee on Management and Members' Services, which I have the honour to chair, to begin its meeting. It is in the interests of Hon. Members opposite that I should leave the House to chair this meeting, especially in view of the order of business for today. It concerns several of them.

The Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif), who is Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), did me the honour of quoting something that I had said. However after thanking her for this kindly gesture yesterday and upon reflection, I went back to the source, since I am a cautious man, and saw that she had not quoted me accurately.

• (1530)

The Hon. Member and Parliamentary Secretary said the following:

> As one of their own, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) said, the real work on a Bill does not take place in the House. Let us therefore proceed and go to committee right away.

I would not really have any objections to that going down in history as something I said, but this is only her interpretation of what I said. My comments were as follows, as reported on page 1636 of Hansard for January 24, 1985:

> I often think we can be more effective through our work in parliamentary committees, in caucus, and by travelling across the country—

I want to make it quite clear that I was not contradicting myself and did not say that we should proceed and go to committee right away since so few of the Hon. Member's colleagues had taken part in the debate.

Mr. Speaker, this is about all that I shall be able to say because we have this previous question hanging over our heads to muzzle us, but I think that, for us, parliamentarians, and also for yourself, Mr. Speaker, who are a distinguished parliamentarian and have been a Member for some time, it would have been interesting if those who have been sitting here for many years could have heard what the new Members, especially on the Government side, had to say about this bill, which they must consider essential since they want it to be passed immediately.

This is therefore an important bill. As for us, and I do not think that the Members opposite have any reason to question our sincerity, we do not believe that agreeing to it would be in the interests of Canada which is an independent country with the right to protect itself, as do our friends from Great Britain, from France, but especially from the United States. Mr. Speaker, it is on this point that I shall conclude before leaving the floor to my colleague from Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), if you want to recognize him, or else I could invite my colleagues from the Government to rise.

Mr. Speaker, it is not in the interests of Canada that the Americans believe that, under this new Government led by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), whom we respect, the door is now wide open in Canada, that all controls have been lifted, that we beg them to come here, to create jobs, to reduce jobs, and to keep research and technology in their own country. We have evidence of this. In Canadian companies with less than 50 employees, 11 per cent of the research is done in Canada and 3 per cent abroad. In companies with 50 to 100 employees, 10 per cent of the research is done in Canada, but when these companies are foreign-controlled, the figure is 4 per cent. In companies with 500 employees, 10 per cent of the research is done in Canada, but 2 per cent is done in—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time allotted to him has expired. The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien).

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to return to the House today. I see we are involved in a procedural wrangle in which the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) is using his young Parliamentary Secretary (Mrs. Tardif) to do his dirty work. Frankly, I can sympathize with the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg, because as the House may recall, I was once Minister of Finance in this House—

[English]

When I was Minister of Finance my critic was the Member who is Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) today. We had a debate in the House which lasted 15 weeks. He was still asking questions and complaining about when I would get up rather than asking my Parliamentary Secretary to get up and do a little job. I got up and said that that was enough, after 15 weeks we had to vote.

I was in the House all the time. We have not seen the Minister in the House. Where is he today? Is he closing factories in Quebec? Is he selling Canada out to the Americans? He prepared the speech that the Prime Minister will use to sing for the American bigshots in Baie Comeau. He went to New York to sing again a few weeks ago with a speech prepared by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. He is not in the House to do his job. Where is he today when the Government is imposing closure after 14 hours of debate? He is running away and asking a Member of Parliament to do his dirty job. Where are they on the other side?

[Translation]

Those Messrs. Muffler who when they were in the Opposition complained because we used closure once or twice after twenty weeks of debate . . . They are not complaining today. I will say this for the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne): He is not a Mr. Muffler. In fact, he said he was a "deux de pique", a two of spades, and I suppose his neighbour is the three of diamonds. Where are they, all those silent Conservative Members who were elected in Quebec? The Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif), who said herself that she was used by her Minister and was not familiar with the procedure. I found this so outrageous that I felt obliged to take the floor, Mr. Speaker.

And when you consider the policy of the Conservatives! Today we have seen once again the confusion about metric and non-metric. They said they were going to do away with FIRA and they created a new agency called Investment Canada. Americans may be obliged to file applications after all. They tell them they will not when they are in the United States, and then they table legislation in Parliament that will maintain the obligation to apply to a Government agency for permission to invest in Canada.

Of course we want foreign investment, but not at the cost of our national pride. It was humiliating for Canadians to see what happened in New York a few weeks ago, when the Prime Minister of Canada sang for his supper to entertain New York businessmen. But where is this investment today? Since the Progressive Conservatives came to power, in the Saint-Maurice area alone, which I represent, Melchers closed its doors in Berthier, Wabasso and Westinghouse closed down in Trois-Rivières and Wabasso, Le Carbure and C.I.L. in Shawinigan. These industries are Shawinigan's lifeblood. And I could mention many similar occurrences in the region, like the one that caused the Member for Champlain—good for him—to say that this region had become a disaster area since the Progressive Conservatives came to power. We had several plans for the Saint-Maurice area, including the electrochemical research center for Shawinigan, which was cancelled, the agricultural research center for the riding of Trois-Rivières, also cancelled, and the agricultural research center for Victoriaville, cancelled as well. And now what is happening? At least 2,000 jobs have been lost in central Quebec alone, since the Progressive Conservatives came to power. Where are last summer's demagogues who said we were doing nothing for Quebec? Where are the Members who were elected to bring investment to Quebec, and to create jobs for Quebecers? They are silent! They have been silenced, Mr. Speaker, as effectively as Mr. Muffler silences cars on TV.

The Minister is smiling, but we have not heard him say much about Quebec's economic problems. Not a word today, and we are paying the price for their silence. The only policy they have is to get on their knees and ask the Americans to come and invest in this country. They will come if there are any profits to be made in Canada. They are not going to come because we get down on our knees. If we are proud to be Canadians, we cannot go to the Americans as we are doing today and say: Come and take what you want in Canada, it is free. They will not respect us for it. They will come if they can make money. They are not going to come because they like the way we smile. And meanwhile, what is happening to this country?

I have just come back from a trip to the far East, and people are wondering whether there still is a Canada or whether we have become an extension of the United States. I asked this question the other day, and it is becoming increasingly clear that the only thing the Prime Minister of Canada wants is to try to please the Americans and become the first Governor of the State of Canada.

In any case, let us talk about external affairs. Last week, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) apparently forgot that last fall the House indicated quite clearly that we were against the American star wars policy. At that time, the Opposition agreed with the Government and the House was unanimous on that truly important international policy. But since Reagan told Mulroney: We want you on our side, everything changed and our contribution simply vanished. The various parties in the House of Commons had managed to reach a consensus concerning our position on the international peace policy, but the Americans in New York spoke to Mulroney and once again the issue is settled. Here we are today, after hardly fourteen hours of debate, Mr. Speaker, you have been in this House long enough—

• (1540)

Mrs. Mailly: Two things. First, on a point of order, I should think the Hon. Member ought to refer to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) rather than to Mulroney. Second, I am beginning to worry about the ears of our Members and I am wondering whether he could not speak so loudly in the House.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The former Minister should know that he should address the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Chrétien: The Right Hon. Governor of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I see that the Conservatives are touchy. I must say that it is shameful, because we are taking decisions about the future of Canada and I am really asking myself just what kind of economic policy we will have in this country. Who will decide for Canada when it comes to jobs, research and development? What is going on in the House? The scandalous aspect of all this is that the Minister has gone into hiding after asking his Parliamentary Secretary to put the previous question. This is unprecedented in the House, the Ministers do not take their responsibilities. It is unheard of, they impose closure after only fourteen hours of debate on an extremely important measure which has not been the subject of consultation throughout Canada. They have been saying all along:

[English]

"We will consult with everybody". I don't know who was consulted about the Bill. Not even Members of Parliament were consulted. The Conservatives consulted the business community in New York probably but not Canadian businessmen.

What effect will this Bill have on some parts of Canada? In the northern United States people are complaining because jobs are going from Michigan or New Hampshire down to the sun belt. What will happen to us when we are even farther north if there is no border and no capacity to make decisions to protect our own jobs in Canada? What has been the result of six months of free enterprise mentality? It has been an absolute disaster in the Province of Quebec. In the last three months one factory after another has been closing.

The Minister will not discuss options with anyone and will not intervene to save jobs. He will just let the Americans take over all of Canada. I believe that there is still a place in this land for this Parliament to express views about what the economic policy of this country should be instead of the businessmen of New York, deciding that.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, initially I would like to welcome the Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) back to the House from the corporate boardrooms of Toronto. It is a pleasure to see him putting in a guest appearance in the House and we certainly welcome him back after that kind of performance.

I am delighted to take part in the debate on this fundamental question. Again, it is with some interest that I have been listening to Liberal Members of Parliament, including the Member for Saint-Maurice, speak on this question. I recall very vividly when we on this side of the House in opposition, along with our Tory colleagues in opposition, rose time and again to question the Government about shutdowns of corporations right across this land. It was that Liberal Minister and that Liberal Government that said it was the market that was taking the role and they were responding to market forces. That kind of hypocrisy surely is not acceptable to the people of Canada.

The Liberals talk with ringing indignation about the fact that Canada must not take its orders from the boardrooms of New York, Hartford and elsewhere in the United States. If one looks at the foreign policy of that former Government and the decision with respect to the testing of the Cruise missile, for example, where are those great defenders of the autonomy of Canada today? Just a few months ago they were the ones who were defending the American economic policy, foreign policy and every other policy as well.

I remember questioning the former Minister of Regional Economic Expansion with respect to a company in my constituency that had shut down. It was one of the 98 per cent or 99 per cent of successful applications approved under the Foreign Investment Review Act of the previous Government. I had asked the Minister about the undertakings given by that company when it had received approval to take over this Canadian company. I was told that unfortunately those undertakings were not a matter of public record but were between the Government of Canada, FIRA, and the company. Even the 250 workers at that plant who lost their jobs were told that they had no right whatsoever to know the terms and conditions of that takeover.

Today, there is a Government which has come forward to say that it is effectively putting up the for sale sign. Canada is for sale to the highest bidder. If one examines the rather toothless wonder of FIRA and the very minimal conditions which were in effect, how can the Government possibly come before Parliament and suggest that it wants to destroy even the basic scrutiny that existed under the previous Government, inadequate though that may have been?

What were some of the questions which were asked of companies which sought to invest in Canada? The first question was whether this new investment would provide jobs for Canadians. I would have assumed that a foreign company coming to Canada would have been asked that as a basic question. Yet the Government, through this Bill, is saying that it does not care. If a company wants to come in and take over Canadian companies, the Government puts down the welcome mat. If the company decides to shut down that plant six months later because of its world product mandate, its desire to maximize profits globally and to open up where there is cheaper labour, no environmental or labour standards or no unions, the Government says that that is fair enough because that is free enterprise in action.

It is free enterprise in action but if we look at the record of foreign capital in this country, it has been a record that has resulted in the net loss of thousands of jobs. It has been one which has resulted in research and development in Canada being at one of the lowest levels of any industrialized country in the western world.

Of course, if there are foreign corporations in Canada they will not do R and D in Canada; they will conduct their research and development at their head office in the United States. Historically, Mr. Speaker, foreign companies have viewed Canada as a cheap source of raw materials and as a lucrative market for their goods and services.

• (1550)

The fundamental decisions which have been taken about investment, about employment, about research and development, about export, new technology and marketing, have not been taken here in Canada by Canadians in the interests of Canadians; they have been taken in foreign boardrooms not in the interests of Canadians but in the interest of the global profit picture, the bottom line, of a multinational corporation.

What this Conservative Government is doing in paying off its friends in the corporate boardroom is saying let's have more of the same. Let's sell out Canada. Let's sell out Canada even more than we have already sold it out. We in this Party say that is fundamentally unacceptable.

I see a Tory back-bencher who wants to speak, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that he might want to take the opportunity while this debate lasts to rise to his feet and defend the policies of this Government which is effectively throwing open the doors to foreign capital and ending any meaningful control by Canadians over investment in Canada. I suspect we will not hear very much from the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) aside from the bleating coming from the back-benchers. The word has gone out. This Government has been secretive, yet it purports to reflect the views expressed on parliamentary reform and a new era in Parliament. But what have the Tories done on one of the most important Bills to face the people of Canada? They have shut down debate. That is a shameful action and the people of Canada will remember the silence of Tory back-benchers when it comes to the next election.

There is no question that this debate is an historic debate because it touches upon the future and who will be making decisions about Canadian resources and Canadian jobs. We do not need more studies to show the level of destruction to our economy as a result of the fact that basically we are tenants in our own land. There has been lots of documentation about that. There was the Gordon Commission in the 1950s, the Watkins report in the 1960s, and the Gray report in the 1970s, all of which documented very clearly the problems that foreign investment creates in this country.

The question then must be asked, who is going to control the economic decision-making in this country? The answer which appears to be given by the Tories is—

Mr. Rodriguez: Wall Street.

Mr. Robinson: —that we do not care any more because ultimately wherever the bottom line reigns that will be where the Tory Party is prepared to accept foreign investment.

The Liberal approach to foreign ownership was not significantly better, but at least the Liberals did not propose to dismantle FIRA. Ed Lumley, a former Minister, said that Canada was one of the most open countries in the world. I cannot imagine another country that is more generous in its treatment of foreign investors. We in this House have seen hundreds of thousands of Canadians losing jobs as a result of throwing Canada open to foreign ownership by this Government and the previous Government. We have seen the contradiction in policy. On the one hand the Government talks about reducing the deficit, but in the next breath it brings in this Bill which will increase the deficit because it will result in a net outflow of dividends and interest payments. It is time that we in this country took control of our own economy for Canadians and by Canadians.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 64(1) I am honoured on behalf of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to lay upon the Table a notice of a Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act. I would ask that an Order of the Day be designated by you for consideration of this motion.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In order to interrupt Routine Proceedings or Orders of the Day, does the Minister not require unanimous consent to revert to motions or to revert to some other proceeding? Is the Minister not out of order?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) rises on a point of order. I would like to bring to his attention that on page 61 of the Standing Orders, Standing Order 64(1) reads:

64.(1) A notice of a Ways and Means motion may be laid upon the Table of the House at any time during a sitting by a Minister of the Crown—

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens, that Bill C-15, An Act respecting investment in Canada, be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and on the motion of Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg) (p. 1708).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it would be appropriate to identify what this debate is all about and remember that it is Standing Order 56(1) that is being referred to right now, and that it requires that the previous question be put.

As Hon. Members will remember, that motion was put by the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister. We regret that once more the Minister does not have the guts, the courage to do his own work in this House. We have very seldom seen him here since the debate started. And looking back at the Members who participated, I think the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) was right when he called the Government Members "mufflers", because they have not been very articulate in this debate that is most important to us.

Looking at Hansard, Mr. Speaker—and I would like to say this for the record—there were only a few hours of debate, three hours and 12 minutes to be more accurate, used by the Progressive Conservatives, as against 10 hours and 51 minutes for the Liberals, and 9 hours and 19 minutes for the New Democratic Party. I would not say that 22 hours of debate is something excessive for such an important piece of legislation, and certainly not a reason for the Government to impose closure. The Government has 211 Members, who say nothing because they have nothing to say. That conclusion is obvious because they have not spoken. But we have much to say on the Bill, and we insist that our democratic rights be respected in this House. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, we will oppose and vote against Government closure.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to being a muzzle, the Standing Order prevents any person, any Member from introducing amendments to the legislation. This second reading stage, is traditionally the stage for consideration of the principle of the legislation, that is when the House may discuss the principle of the Bill.

I had expected the Government to be interested in hearing the views of all Members, but as I said, such is not the case. Indeed, I am very much amazed that the Hon. Members from Ottawa-Carleton, my area, have not risen in this debate, except for one. And I thought the Hon. Members for Ottawa-West and Nepean-Carleton would speak up because in their constituencies, in the Ottawa area, there is a major high technology industry, an industry that has created many jobs.

Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered that the Hon. Member for York-Peel, when he introduced the Bill, said that the impact of Bill C-15 would be to create jobs.

But looking at the media, or at the comments made at the time by the Hon. Members, we realize it is not quite accurate to claim that this change or name substitution will mean any great contribution to job creation. I am thinking, among other things, about a report in the December 20, 1984, issue of The Globe and Mail in which it was suggested that the big American financiers would not be in any great hurry to come and invest here, and I would simply like to quote from that report in English:

[English]

—foreign investors are a hard-nosed lot interested in making money. In Canada, that means mainly resource industries, and, with the exception of oil and gas, resources are not considered good investments.

The world is producing too much of raw materials, such as copper, nickel, and certain kinds of lumber, which Canada traditionally has produced.

[Translation]

Concerning funds those Americans supposedly would invest in Canada, I am quoting once more from Mr. Thomas Walkom in The Globe and Mail:

• (1600)

[English]

"You don't get the idea that there are a lot of folks with money bags at the border, waiting to get into Canada", said a banker, smiling wryly.

"People in Canada are going to have to be very patient," . . . "Investment will be up, but not necessarily enough to do anything about unemployment."

[Translation]

I did not say that: an American banker, one of the Prime Minister's friends in New York did. Thus, we must not rely upon the United States to bring us money or jobs. I read also in the House of Commons Hansard a comment on clause 21 made by my friend from Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Barry Turner), in which he says about jobs and investments:

Capital resources in Canada are not sufficient to meet the needs of governments, whether federal, provincial or municipal, nor those of the private sector.

Therefore, we have on the one hand a statement saying we need money and on the other, American bankers who say: We have money but we may not be in as much of a hurry as you think.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) said when he rose in this House:

[English]

I would just like to point out that for three months our Party has been talking positively about an opportunity . . . for foreigners to invest in this country . . . unemployment has gone down. There were 100,000 new jobs started up.

To him I must say that one cannot be so naive as to think that sweet-talk can create 100,000 jobs. We all know that there is a six-month lag in economics and that jobs come after a certain time. The result, the jobs about which he bragged, were indeed created by policies of the former Liberal Government in months gone by. As a matter of fact, if we look at the statistics we find that the number of jobs created in the last few months is no greater than the jobs created in previous months.

A more interesting statement was made by a friend of the Tories, Mr. James Gillies, a former Member of this House. I refer to an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail in which Mr. Gillies talked about capital flow and job creation. I think this article is worth reading. It is enlightening in terms of foreign investment. In part it read:

Not all foreign investment is productive. It is naive to believe that any flow of capital into the country will move the economy forward. It depends entirely on what it is used for. If it is not invested in the production of new plant and equipment and does not lead to an increase in exports it can have serious negative economic consequences.

I am not the one who said that. It was Mr. James Gillies, an expert economist and a former Tory Member of the House. He continued:

Moreover, until the intractable balance of payments problem is solved we must try to limit the borrowing of capital from abroad. No government or government agency should borrow in foreign markets under current conditions. If a government has a function that it believes must be performed either directly or through a government agency, the capital should be raised domestically or the proposed operation should be postponed.

I thought that statement was rather interesting. It was published in a January, 1985 edition of The Globe and Mail.

The auctioneer of some of our assets in Canada—I am thinking about Canadair, de Havilland, Teleglobe and other companies of that nature—Mr. Paul Marshall, was given the job of trying to sell, if he could, these companies to prospective buyers. We were told by the media in a recent report in The Citizen that Mr. Paul Marshall, President of the Canada Development Corporation, made a statement to the effect that there were no job guarantees in these possible sales. As a matter of fact, to quote Mr. Marshall, he said: "There are no job guarantees at this point". One would wonder why the Government would want to get rid of some of our good Crown assets without some guarantee of job security for those employed by these companies. The Government has been giving us promises of jobs, but evidently it has not been carrying out its promises. At this time it is not preaching by example when it puts on the block companies which are Canadian and which are Canadian assets, in my view.

I will just end my remarks by saying that we oppose this motion and regret it immensely.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to talk about this Bill. I think it is a very poor and misguided one. I want to put my concerns on record on behalf of my constituents.

It has been said that Canadians do not care whether a company is foreign owned or Canadian owned so long as it gives them jobs. Rather, I think it is because Canadians care very much about jobs that they have to look at the issue whether the company is foreign owned or domestically owned. Foreign-owned corporations do not provide as much employment and indeed are responsible for many unemployment problems in the country. As a result of control by foreign head offices, decisions are made that result in jobs disappearing, research and development jobs not being created here, and spin-off jobs which come from the purchase of other Canadian goods and services not going to Canadians because of the number of imports.

The situation with which we were faced before Bill C-15, before this dismantling of FIRA, was not an adequate one. We do not have a strong FIRA. It is something of a token operation. We would like to see FIRA strengthened. It was not adequate as it was set up. Of course it has been declining in its operations. It has been almost rubber-stamping applications, not looking after the interest of Canadians in finding jobs.

Our response to the inadequacies of FIRA would not be in the direction of this Bill. It would be in precisely the opposite direction. FIRA has not been strong enough. It has not been doing enough. There have not been the other measures which the Government should be introducing to buck up FIRA and to provide a context within which Canadians could begin to regain control of their economy.

Recently I returned from visiting Atlantic Canada and Regina with the NDP caucus action group on jobs. We met with a very large number of community groups. They spoke to us about their concerns about high unemployment in the country. I did not hear one group, individual, expert or specialist ask us to get rid of FIRA, to dismantle it or to weaken it. However, I heard from many individuals, experts, economists, political scientists, people running co-ops, small-business people, people active in the economic life of their communities and unemployed people who want to be active in the economic life of their communities. They talked about greater control of the Canadian economy. They talked about co-ops and small businesses. They talked about job creation at home and manufacturing concerns which would buy goods and services in their communities and keep money in their communities. They talked about foreign corporations coming into their communities, making a bundle largely on the extraction of resources and then leaving. Of course, this is what foreign corporations can do. They talked about profits not being plowed back into their communities as a result of foreign ownership.

I heard quite an earful about the difficulties we already have with foreign investment and foreign control of our economy. People want less of it, not more. They want local control. They want the money to stay in their communities. They want jobs there. They want all the surrounding goods and services and the diversification which comes when companies operating in their communities are Canadian controlled, buy from their neighbours in the community and help keep the economy going.

We have a number of very fundamental problems. We have to look at the differences between foreign-controlled and Canadian-controlled corporations and at why foreign-controlled ones are not beneficial to our economy. First I point out that foreign-controlled firms import much more than Canadian-controlled ones. This reduces purchases in communities, jobs which go along with those purchases and spin-off benefits accruing from doing business within communities. This occurs particularly with the purchase of machinery and other high-level kinds of purchases.

Foreign companies imported 22 per cent of their sales, five times that of Canadian-controlled companies. In manufacturing, foreign-controlled companies imported 30 per cent of their sales, four times more than Canadian companies. Why do we want more of our economy controlled by corporations that will import more? It will simply mean job loss.

The second problem that arises with the differences between foreign-controlled and Canadian-controlled corporations concerns the disproportionate share of payments for non-merchandise items like interest payments, profits and service and management charges. The resources available for potential investment and job creation here in Canada are reduced by the outflow of interest payments, dividends, profits and so forth to head offices. This affects Canada's balance of payments and means that there will be less money available. The money is going out of the country to pay for management services which could well be provided by Canadians. That means that less money is left in the Canadian economy to be reinvested in an attempt to create more jobs.

Specifically, American-controlled firms holding 36 per cent of industrial assets in Canada accounted for 61 per cent of the external remittances. These remittances are going from foreign-controlled corporations and specifically American ones right across the border to the head offices. The Canadian corporations, to a much greater extent, are finding the management services and other services they need in Canada and they are paying out their interest payments, their profits and their dividends to other Canadians who will be reinvesting that money in the country.

The third structural problem that exists with foreign-controlled corporations is that they do not spend nearly as much as Canadian-controlled corporations on research and development. This reveals a great deal of hypocrisy on the part of the Government which has indicated that it wants more research and development. This is true of the previous Government as well. We certainly apprised that Government of the problem and it said that it was concerned about research and development. Of course, it did very little about it.

Any increase in foreign control of the economy will mean that less research and development will be taking place in Canada, and of course that means there will be fewer job opportunities for Canadians who are involved in research and development. There are many people with Ph.D.s in all kinds of specialties who are unemployed. People who are well trained in research fields are driving taxis or doing part-time jobs and not using the talents they developed because they cannot get jobs. Where are those jobs? The jobs are attached to head offices in another country. Canadians do not receive these very important jobs. Indeed, the investment we have made in educating these people and developing their skills is lost to the Canadian economy.

An analysis of research and development expenditures of different sized corporations has been done and it indicates that the very large corporations, the ones we would expect to be contributing the most to research and development, are actually contributing the least. The relationship of research and development over sales for Canadian corporations with more than 500 employees is 10.3 per cent. That same ratio for foreign-owned corporations is 2 per cent. In other words, there is roughly a five-fold difference. These are the companies to which we look particularly for doing research and development in Canada.

The next problem I would like to raise is that the high rate of foreign control of Canadian industry contributes to poor productivity performance by reducing competition. Foreign subsidiaries do not face competition from their parent firms. This is a fact of life in the branch plant system. Branch plants operating in Canada are not meant to compete with parent companies but are meant to purchase, often at inflated prices, the products of the parent company and other affiliates in the system. They are not meant to put other products for which they have done research and development which would compete with the parent corporation on the market because it is the profits of the parent corporation which count in the economic decision-making process, not the profits of the branch plant. A branch plant that could be innovative and could compete is not allowed to do so because that is not a part of the branch plant system.

Specifically, foreign-controlled companies account for 72 per cent of all merchandise imports to Canada. That is what foreign-controlled companies are supposed to do. They are supposed to be importing rather than exporting and competing. A great deal of economic analysis has been done about this by government departments, Statistics Canada, and of course by a large number of independent researchers who have made very, very clear this very important structural problem.

The last of the problems of a structural nature that I wish to raise is that the greater dependence of foreign-controlled firms on merchandise imports which are usually tied to the parent company at the exclusion of Canadian competitors has the effect of reducing jobs available to Canadians. Studies done by the United States Senate and the Harvard Business School have found that direct American investment in Canada produces a significant net creation of jobs for all sectors of the United States workforce. That is lovely for the United States workforce but what is this Parliament doing maximizing job opportunities for American workers at the expense of Canadian workers?

We must be concerned about the high unemployment rate in our own country. To be in favour of a measure that will increase unemployment for our own people is simply scandalous at this time of high unemployment. It means that workers of all kinds, from research and development specialists to blue collar workers, will lose job opportunities because of the structure of the branch plant system. It extracts resources from Canada. Branch plants do the hewing of wood and drawing of water in Canada and keep the manufacturing and research and development at head office.

Even as it exists today, FIRA has certainly not been a tough check on foreign investment in Canada. FIRA approval rates over the past two years have been in the order of 95 per cent to 98 per cent. It is not as if we can say that the current FIRA has been screening out a great deal of foreign investment. Less than half of those foreign takeover applications that were approved were intended to increase investment or provide any new jobs, and that is a very crucial point.

Corporations that received approval under the existing FIRA did not provide opportunities for job creation. They did not represent new investment or expansion and they certainly did not represent greater productivity and the possibility of exports, innovations, or anything of that sort. They were simply takeovers. In some cases these takeovers even reduced production in Canada. We know that that happens. A company takes over a Canadian plant and a year later, in spite of everything that has been said to FIRA by the corporation, closes down the plant and jobs are lost. There are plenty of instances of foreign corporations entering Canada without even pretending that they will help the Canadian economy.

The current FIRA has not been careful enough in seeing that foreign investment on balance does good things for the Canadian economy. It has not even acted according to its own current terms of reference. In the future we can expect Investment Canada to do an even worse job unless there are major amendments to this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but her time has expired.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-15 is the first major piece of government legislation that has been put before us. It provides Canadians very quickly with knowledge of the philosophical bent that handcuffs the Conservative Party.

The debate over FIRA versus Investment Canada is a classic example of something which distinguishes a Liberal Government from a Conservative Government. First, FIRA was an instrument of nation building. It was an instrument to safeguard and promote Canadians and Canadian economic sovereignty. Investment Canada will do neither.

Second, while foreign investment was viewed as an indispensable sector of the economic pie, FIRA was an initiative taken by Canadians to put Canadians first. It was an initiative that attempted to instil in Canada a sense of purpose, vitality and leadership. Investment Canada will merely perpetuate the often heard criticism that Canada lacks the drive and self-fortitude to make things happen.

Third, FIRA put Canada second to no one. It viewed Canada and the United States as co-tenants of the North American continent. Investment Canada views the United States as the owner and Canada as the subservient tenant.

● (1620)

In short, FIRA subscribed to the theory that the ability to control the economy makes a strong economy, and also defines the kind of country we are and indeed want to be. Through Investment Canada we will lose that sense of national will and purpose. The economic subservience theory which is espoused by the new Government will not ensure long-term economic growth; it will merely transfer it to other lands and other peoples. It will only help boost the value of the American buck, the Eurodollar and the Japanese yen. Canadians are asking: "What about us?"

In reality Bill C-15 is yet another example of government which is far more interested in the art of public relations than it is in actual substance. This Government is prepared to sacrifice long-term economic planning and economic sovereignty for short-term, image-making propaganda. The Minister who introduced the legislation late last year declared in his press statement:

> We are back in business. This legislation sends a message to the world that, once again, Canada welcomes investment.

Of what world does this Minister speak? This country has always been open for business and has always welcomed investment. If that were not the case, we would not be witnesses to what is a great, prosperous and thriving nation. In terms of economic investment, like any other country, under a Liberal Government, and specifically through FIRA, Canada wanted and stressed what was good for Canada and Canadians. Is that a negative attitude to take as a country? Is that not how a country attains a degree of respect in the international business community?

FIRA was an essential and calculated policy instrument which sought to ensure that foreign investment also included significant benefits to Canada. FIRA allowed Canadians to bargain and negotiate with a huge variety of multinational interests from a point of strength. The objective of FIRA was not to prevent or discourage foreign investment, but rather to cater to it and to the needs and aspirations of Canada.

It should be noted that since its inception in 1974 FIRA has approved, on average, 92 per cent of all applications. That figure clearly demonstrates that foreign investors not only wanted to and did invest heavily in Canada, but that they were willing to meet the criteria which were established by FIRA. In short, the investors realized and appreciated that more jobs for Canadians, more research and development for Canada and greater Canadian exports were parts of the investment deal. Why should it be any different today?

It is doubtful that FIRA discouraged in a significant way any foreign investor who was serious about investing his or her capital in Canada. In fact, the Conference Board of Canada performed a study last April which determined that FIRA provided a deterrent for only 11 per cent of foreign business. More important, Statistics Canada figures indicate that FIRA did not halt the flow of U.S. investment into Canada. In fact, the gross inflow of direct U.S. investment into Canada continued to expand during the time of FIRA. Gross inflows varied between $1 billion and $1.4 billion throughout most of the 1970s, before sky-rocketing during 1980 and 1981. If we took a quick analysis of the facts and figures, we would find that they effectively contradict the Government's blind portrayal that FIRA was the enemy of foreign investment and that the removal of FIRA, replaced by Investment Canada, would bring a new beginning.

As the Bill stands, direct acquisitions by non-Canadians of businesses in Canada with assets of less than $5 million are not subject to review; neither are indirect takeovers resulting from the acquisition of parent companies outside Canada when the Canadian subsidiary has assets of over $50 million. In my opinion, that is a grave concern for Canadian small businessmen, particularly in the increasingly competitive field of high technology. The Government will simply open the doors and allow the takeover of firms which are below these thresholds. What will Canada gain if these small enterprises are more prone to shutdowns? What will we gain if these Canadian jobs are not guaranteed? What steps will be available to the Canadian Government to prevent such economic hardships? What action can the Government take to guarantee benefits to Canada and to ensure jobs for all Canadians? Unfortunately the answer to those questions is that this Government wishes to wash its hands of its commitment to small businessmen.

Another case which illustrated FIRA's protection for small businessmen involved the terms which were negotiated when the Herald Company of Syracuse, New York, a publishing firm, took over Random House of Canada Limited. As a result of FIRA, the American buyer agreed to guarantee the jobs of all 85 Random House employees and to offer jobs to ten employees of another Canadian company which was closing its Mississauga plant. In addition, the Canadian employees of Random House were to be given a chance to buy a controlling interest in the company. Finally, the buyer agreed to print in Canada any book it published when Canadian sales were expected to exceed 10,000 copies. Those economic concessions will no longer be possible with Investment Canada. Many firms which are below the new thresholds may be small, but collectively they are the engine and the spirit behind the creation of new jobs in Canada.

To further compound the inequities of Investment Canada, the larger takeovers which will dictate the fate of thousands of workers and the interests of entire regions will now rest at the mercy of one Minister. Under FIRA those factors would be shared by the full Cabinet in order to incorporate and understand a variety of disciplines, interests and regional necessities. That perspective was much more encompassing. Now, a billion dollar decision in the hands of one Minister centralizes power in an unprecedented way. In doing so, it imposes horrendous limitations as it relates to the spectrum of interests.

Not only is the concept that FIRA discouraged foreign investment a fabricated myth perpetuated by the Tories, but that inaccuracy is also complemented by a mood that at the present time the U.S. is least likely to undergo active investment abroad. This growing view was echoed in a fascinating article in The Globe and Mail. I realize, Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that my time has ended. Perhaps, if this debate is extended, I could read that fascinating article to the House at another time.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, this is a day which should be marked and underlined with a red pencil in the annals of the new Mulroney Government. We are seeing the gagging of Parliament. We are seeing another form of retreat from those brave, bold words of July, which turned into shambles and tatters by the time we reached January. They are the great paragons of parliamentary rights.

Without a doubt, this is one of the most critical pieces of legislation which has been brought forward in many a year. After a limited debate of not more than 20 hours, this grand majority—those 211 Members—are putting their tails between their legs and retreating into the last refuge of scoundrels—the right to close off debate. Why? Because they are afraid of what they are hearing. Government Members do not like what is being said in this Parliament about the inadequacies and fallabilities of the Government's approach to the Investment Canada Bill.

We on this side are not surprised at that. The Government started out with a broken promise. I would like to quote from an interesting article from The Calgary Herald, which of course I read faithfully every day. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), who was then the Opposition critic, was asked what the Conservatives would do about the Foreign Investment Review Agency if elected. He said that he would not like to say what the changes would be but that there would be public hearings. He continued:

> Those public hearings will be held before a Tory government drafts new legislation—

Well, we were all waiting for the public hearings, but in the darkness of night the Minister sailed into the House, laid the legislation on the Table and we have not seen him since. The House has heard all this debate, but where has the Minister been? This Government that wants to consult and hear from people has discriminated against Members of Parliament. It does not want to hear from its own Members of Parliament or from us. The Minister has not bothered to show up, nor has the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). This Bill is the centre piece, the crown jewel of its economic program, and Ministers of the Government cannot be bothered to take a minute or two away from working with their chiefs of staff to come here and listen to the debate. Instead, they are going to close off the debate.

• (1630)

Of course, Mr. Speaker, they are closing it off because they realize and recognize that it is a faulty and flawed piece of legislation which does not do the job it is supposed to do. It has nothing to do with investment in Canada. It has to do with some punitive, vindictive response to what Government thought were the inadequacies of the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

The debate thus far has shown some very serious flaws in the Bill which the Canadian people are now beginning to recognize. When has there ever been a piece of legislation which has given such uncontrolled power to make discretionary decisions on major plant locations and economic development to one Minister without any recourse to Cabinet, to Parliament or to any committee? He has been set up as an economic czar and he does not have to answer to anyone. That is incredible power, and if I were a member of the Conservative Party I would be a little concerned because those Hon. Members will also suffer the same limitation of access as any other Canadian. We know how inaccessible the Minister is. He is never in the House, so I do not know when his colleagues see him. I can tell you one thing, Mr. Speaker, to provide one Minister with that kind of power is asking for trouble, and those Hon. Members opposite are going to find it in spades. On what basis will decisions be made: on who paid his Tory membership last month, or on who was talked to at the latest dinner for the old alumni of the Bank of Western Canada? Who is going to get the benefit of that particular kind of examination? We do not know, Mr. Speaker, and neither will any other Canadian.

We know very clearly, Mr. Speaker, that in this Bill there is power to make decisions which will affect regions. Nothing is more critical to economic development, and yet here we have a Minister who has shown time and time again his insensitivity to regional development. He does not understand the word. He can only see so far from when he sits on his horse farm somewhere north of Toronto. He has nothing to do with what is going on in Atlantic Canada because we see there the evisceration of all the regional development investments which made sense.

What is the reason for all this, Mr. Speaker? We know the price we will have to pay and we are still taking cap in hand, doffing it to our American friends and saying, "We are wide open for business". It is a doormat policy which we are encountering day after day in this House. We see it in every respect. We saw the Minister of National Defence (Mr.

Coates) selling out on the DEW line question, initialling agreements open to totally unintended consequences. We saw the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), that one-time red Tory, who is now turning an indescribable purplish shade, rising in his place to say, "Oh, I agree with star wars. That is one of the great advances towards world peace". So we are going to have a star wars philosophy because that is going to help and encourage negotiations. To spend $40 billion or $50 billion on a brand new weapons system in outer space somehow, in the logic of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, is going to help maintain world peace. I have more respect for that Minister than that. I suspect he has simply been given his orders by the Prime Minister not to disrupt those kind and cordial relations with the President of the United States, which the Prime Minister says he wants to establish in order to make sure we get a better economic deal.

But, Mr. Speaker, what have been the results of that sort of cap in hand, doormat approach which Government has taken? We just heard today in Question Period in the House of Commons that in return for our investment, in return for our so-called open hand, the Americans are going to increase substantially the tariffs on cod fish, which will only affect the entire economy of eastern Canada. In particular, the constituency of the Prime Minister is going to be one of those areas which will be affected in the most dire and drastic way. But it is all right that our American friends are going to increase the tariff by 25 per cent.

Last week we heard of the decision of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) to take off the export surcharge on gasoline or heavy oil to the United States. What will Canadians pay? They are going to pay $6 a barrel more. I believe this Government, Mr. Speaker, is headed toward a very thorny patch. What disturbs us, of course, is that it does not know what the consequences are. What we are seeing is a haphazard, ad hoc, confused approach to government. Those Ministers are making decisions when they get up on their feet, if then. They are contradicting one another and do not have any kind of clearly enunciated strategy about how we can develop the economy of this country. The Americans themselves, the Conference Board of Canada and the American Wall Street brokers, have all said that this legislation will not add one additional cent to the foreign investment coming into Canada. They say there are other kinds of problems. Last year under the old FIRA program $4.3 billion came into Canada. And there was, however, a difference, Mr. Speaker, we had the ability and capacity under that program to ensure that there would be benefits and jobs for Canadians, that there would be research and development in Canada, and that there would be good management. But this Government is giving up that right. It is giving up the power to bargain for a better deal for Canadians. Its so-called open window, open sesame approach is simply a way of saying—

Mr. Dick: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I think there is some kind of Irish conspiracy going on and we will have to trace it back to some sort of Fenian plot in the 19th century in order to explain the Mulroney-Reagan love-in affair, the amorous union that is taking place daily, which results in absolutely no form of protection for Canadians. That is the problem with which we are faced. We are getting into these new liaisons which result for Canadians in the loss of their birthright. We are losing our birthright. No economic development is going to take place. There is nothing in the Bill to encourage Canadian investors. There is nothing to provide for protection for our small businesses. We have nothing to bargain with. Now Parliament is being snuffed out, debate is gagged, and we are told there is no point in even looking at the issues anymore.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we happen to believe that there are still a lot of very important issues. I can say on behalf of my caucus that if we are not allowed the privileges and rights as parliamentarians to debate this Bill any longer in this Chamber, we will certainly make full, proper and effective use of that right when we get to committee. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, if the House Leader is within hearing distance of our words, that he had better not plan for an early summer vacation.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I find it somewhat amusing to sit and listen to Liberals making the same speeches about closure as I heard from Conservatives last year, the year before that and the year before that. If we have ever had evidence that there is really no difference between the Grits and Tories, we have had it today, and neither of the Parties had the courtesy to blush. I wish they would at least send their speeches back and forth across the way, then they could take turns making them every time we have closure in this House.

The issue is not whether we should have foreign investment. There is no argument that we need some foreign investment. What we need is more loan capital and less ownership or equity capital. I like the American people, all of us do. They are good neighbours and good friends. I like my own friends and relatives also, but I do not want them moving into my house so that I have to live in the garage. That is a quote from Tommy Douglas at the time we forced a minority Liberal Government to bring in foreign investment review. We ended up with a toothless tiger, but at least it was a beginning.

Canada is not alone in how it is treated by foreign investment. I had an opportunity to be in Mexico City and when I left I bought the Mexico City Daily News. On the financial page it says: "Foreign Firms Reaping Profits". Here is what happened in Mexico. Transnational companies operating in that country invested $273 million in the first six months of 1984. Those same companies sent out of Mexico $820 million in royalties, interest and profits during that same period, in other words, Mr. Speaker, almost quadruple their investment. And Mexico is a poor country. No one objects to foreign investors making a reasonable return, but any nation worthy of the name has to have some ground rules which put controls on the reinvestment of profits. These companies cannot just cut and run whenever they feel like it.
