Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, does the Deputy Prime Minister not think that, since the Solicitor General was aware of the investigation, it was incumbent upon him to inform Mr. Hatfield, when he was requested to meet with him, that it would be inappropriate for the Solicitor General even to discuss the charges, the circumstances surrounding the charges, or for that matter the circumstances surrounding the investigation, and that Mr. Hatfield ought to pursue his concerns in some other direction?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in all justice and fairness, I think we should put matters into perspective. The Hon. House Leader for the New Democratic Party does obliquely what the Hon. Member for York South-Weston did in a rather more despicable and direct fashion, and that is accuse the Solicitor General of improprieties. If that is the accusation that Hon. Members wish to make, then, as the Solicitor General said, let them be honest enough to make it.

Without an allegation or an accusation of impropriety, there was nothing at all wrong and everything right about a Minister of the Crown acceding to the request of a head of one of our provincial Governments to meet. There is everything right about it. In perspective, some two or three weeks after that meeting, charges were laid. Surely that in itself suggests no impropriety and no interference on the part of the Solicitor General.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: If charges had not been laid, the Hon. Member might have a point. Beyond that, the matter went through the normal judicial system, was tried by a duly constituted court of law, and the Premier was found not guilty. Surely in all fairness and justice, based upon the experience of the Hon. Member himself, the Hon. Member should not be attempting to re-try this matter in the House of Commons.

MINISTER'S JUDGMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister knows full well that I am not in any way trying to re-try the matter. What I am asking for is a clear understanding of what the Deputy Prime Minister expects from Cabinet Ministers in the way of judgment.

I would like to know if the Deputy Prime Minister does not at least agree that it was bad judgment on the part of the Solicitor General to agree to hold a meeting with a person, albeit a person in high office—in fact, it is perhaps even worse that he was in high office—who was under investigation by the police force over which the Solicitor General has jurisdiction. Does the Deputy Prime Minister not feel that that showed remarkably bad judgment?

● (1430)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in all of the circumstances I consider it not to be in bad judgment. Indeed, having regard to the consequences which eventually flowed—the laying of charges, the trial, the judgment of the court—

Mr. Kaplan: One charge.

Mr. Nielsen: —the charge—surely that, in itself, indicates that no impropriety occurred at that meeting.

INFORMATION GIVEN BY MINISTER TO RCMP COMMISSIONER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to questioning the Solicitor General. He does not seem to realize that, in fact, the law does give him the authority to give direction to the RCMP to close files, to lay charges, or not to lay charges. It is an authority which should be exercised in a very circumspect manner, as has been set out by a number of authorities on the subject. In that connection, and with those powers—and the meeting has possibilities which have been outlined by Members on this side of the House—before holding the meeting did the Solicitor General consult with his Deputy or with the Commissioner of the RCMP to inform them about the proposed meeting or to ask their advice?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend and I have a fundamental disagreement as to what precisely is my jurisdiction. We might have a discussion about that. Again, I maintain that it is not my discretionary authority to instruct the RCMP as to how it should proceed in a case such as this. Indeed, we have to look at all the circumstances, as well as the responsibilities of the Attorney General for the Province of New Brunswick.

I wonder what the Opposition would say had I refused the meeting? Would they now be saying that it was my responsibility, as the Minister responsible for the RCMP, to ensure that I had all the relevant information to assist me in ensuring that the force followed its policies and practices? Would they be saying that? I would say to my hon. friend that I fully informed the Commissioner of the RCMP about all of the circumstances which were involved. I hope the Hon. Member will decide—if he has the forthrightness to do so—, to tell us if he thinks I committed a breach of the law. If it is a question of whether or not it was proper, he has his opinion and I have mine.

TIMING OF INFORMATION GIVEN TO RCMP COMMISSIONER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to talk to the Minister about what is my understanding of his responsibilities. I ask him again, before that meeting took place, did he consult his Deputy and did he speak to the Commissioner of the RCMP about it? He has not answered those questions.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my hon. friend that I kept the Deputy and the RCMP Commissioner informed to the extent that I felt was proper. At this stage I will not get into a post-mortem or an analysis of the various circumstances, before or after the meeting.

PURPOSE OF MEETING

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the questions I have asked have not yet been answered. I would like to return to the question of what the meeting was about. What was the purpose of the meeting? What did he tell the Commissioner about it? Now that the Solicitor General has told us that he did tell the Commissioner about it, what did he tell the Commissioner?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. former Minister, as I have already indicated, that I have no intention of conducting a post-mortem over the particular details of the meeting.

Mr. Kaplan: Isn't that up to the House?

Mr. MacKay: It may be up to the House. But I am telling the Hon. Member that I conducted the meeting, and all the matters involved in that meeting, to the best of my judgment. If he does not want to accept that, I regret it.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—ROLE OF CORPORATIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and it has nothing to do with the Premier of New Brunswick. It deals with the meeting which she had last week, when she reported to the House that she had met with the senior representatives of eight large corporations in Canada. She said that those representatives stated that they would jointly create 10,000 jobs, and that those jobs would add to the number of jobs which would be available to young people this summer.

Over the weekend Noranda indicated that it could not guarantee its fair share. It said:

> The business we're in is in kind of bad shape these days.

Another representative from Noranda said: "You can't hire students when you're laying off mothers and fathers".

When the Minister told the House that she had those guarantees—

Miss MacDonald: I did not say guarantees.

Mr. Riis: When she said she had assurances that these individuals would deliver 10,000 jobs this summer for students, is that the case?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it should be of surprise to no one that the New Democratic Party chooses to knock the initiatives of eight corporate leaders in our country. It is a little surprising to me that the members of the New Democratic Party—who say from time to time that they have compassion for the unemployed—are now going after the initiatives which are being taken by people in the business sector. I would urge the Hon. Member to look at the fact that there are people in the business world—corporation leaders, individual small businesses, and people throughout the private sector—who are willing to do their best this summer to help young people. That is what the business leaders will do, and I would advise the Hon. Member to wait until the end of the summer before he levels his criticism at them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we are not questioning what the eight representatives of the eight corporations said; we are questioning what the Minister said in the House. The Minister suggested that she had assurances that students were supporting the program. She knows full well that the entire media over the weekend were taken up with student organizations and representatives who said that they did not believe what the Minister was saying.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister is this: Who is telling the truth? The Minister said that the private sector—in fact, the eight companies—would provide 10,000 jobs. But, those companies say that they cannot provide those 10,000 jobs this summer because they cannot provide jobs for the students' mothers and fathers. Who is telling the truth to the people of Canada?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would not be quite so selective in his quotes, he would read into the story that the people at the meeting informed me the number I could use—and they said "use"—was 10,000. I would like to inform the Hon. Member that he can go around second-guessing everybody and trying to run down this initiative, but this weekend in my constituency office I saw student group after student group who came in with proposals. They asked me how soon the proposals could be funded and how soon the jobs could get under way. I saw that in my riding; 211 Conservative Members saw it in their constituencies—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister concerning the answers given by the Solicitor General a few minutes ago.

Does he not feel that the Solicitor General's refusal to say clearly that he did not consult his Deputy Minister or the RCMP Commissioner before he met Mr. Hatfield is an error of judgment especially in the light of the decision delivered by the judge of the Superior Court of New Brunswick who said that the federal case began to deteriorate following interference by federal authorities?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding from the responses of the Solicitor General, and indeed from reports in the media, that the Solicitor General had conversations and briefings with the RCMP—I believe as far back as two days after the substance was found in the suitcase. But, here again, we are getting into the evidence of the trial and we are re-trying the matter here in the House of Commons. I repeat, if the Opposition has any point to make at all, it surely must be focused on the allegation of some impropriety on the part of the Solicitor General at that meeting.

• (1440)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: They say the meeting was improper; not at all. The meeting in itself does not constitute any impropriety.

Mr. Deans: Of course it does.

Mr. Nielsen: If there is an allegation of impropriety, which there must be to give any substance to the thrust which the Opposition are taking today, then it should be stated clearly, and forthrightly, and honestly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DORION INQUIRY REPORT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister about something he knows quite well. I would like to refer him to the inquiry of Mr. Justice Dorion. The judgment of the then Minister of Justice, Mr. Favreau, was questioned, not because he had made the wrong decision but because he had not consulted with his officials and had put himself in a difficult position. I would like to read to the Deputy Prime Minister what Mr. Justice Dorion said:

> It should not be forgotten that a Minister, as a Judge, all his competence notwithstanding—

Mr. Speaker: I know this is a very, very important matter, but I would ask the Hon. Member to come to his supplementary question as quickly as he possibly can.

Mr. Chrétien:

> —is always a human being and his view of a case may be unconsciously distorted by relations existing between himself and the person or persons concerned.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister not think at this time that when the Solicitor General received his friend, the Premier of New Brunswick, that he was doing exactly what Mr. Justice Dorion said in his judgment in 1965?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker, and I have cause to recall those proceedings very clearly. I can tell the Hon. Member that, as a Member of Parliament in those days, I caused the then Minister of Justice to be aware of the facts two, if not three days, before they were raised in the House of Commons.

Mr. Chrétien: He did the honourable thing, Favreau—he resigned.

Mr. Nielsen: I can tell the Hon. Member as well that, with respect to what Hon. Members opposite are trying to do today, when I rose in my place on that side of the House and attempted to do what those Hon. Members are doing today—

Mr. Chrétien: You asked for his resignation.

Mr. Nielsen: —I specified the Section of the Criminal Code and made the direct accusation that there was a breach of that Section of the Criminal Code. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I believe, was in the House on that occasion or just after.

Mr. Chrétien: And Favreau resigned. He was honourable.

Oral Questions

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of External Affairs and is in regard to his answer to me on January 28 in the House. He said, and I quote from Hansard at page 1726:

—any discussions that are going on now between AECL and the U.S. Department of Defense have nothing to do with the modernization of the northern radar warning system—

Does the Minister stand by the statement? If he does, would he explain, in light of his answer, President Reagan's budget which states clearly that AECL is the lead funding agency, along with the U.S. Air Force, for the construction of unattended nuclear reactors for the north warning system in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I stand by my statement but, naturally, I will read President Reagan's budget with the same obvious care as its supporters in the New Democratic Party. I will then come back to the House with any change in an answer, if that reading requires a change. The point I have made in the House of Commons is that the question of the renewal of the north warning system is a separate question from any negotiations which AECL might be carrying on with the U.S. Department of Defense.

REFERENCE TO MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I believe I can clear that up. Would the Minister explain why, at page 681 of the Congressional Budget Request, under the subtitle "North Warning Power Project. Defense. Nuclear energy programs", it states the intention to install unattended, untested nuclear power reactors in the Canadian Arctic in 1987, and that the memorandum of agreement on cost-sharing with AECL is in progress now?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, obviously what that means is that there has been a discussion between AECL and the U.S. Department of Defense having to do with the maintenance of any system which might be put in place in northern Canada. That matter has not been reviewed or cleared by the Cabinet. There has not been any approval to AECL to go ahead with that question, because the Hon. Member opposite raised to my attention the concerns of Inuit people and others in the North having to do with any kind of nuclear installation, even for heating or fuelling purposes.

The point I want to make clear is that it is of the utmost irresponsibility for Hon. Members in this House to suggest, whether deliberately or not, that there is any consideration being given to developments in northern Canada which would put nuclear weapons in Canada's North. There is no such intention.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC WORKS

OPTIMUM USE OF SPACE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Public Works.

In his last report, the Auditor General said that a maximum use of space would result in savings of $35 million a year.

Can the Minister tell us whether he intends to put on sale the buildings and lots representing 6 million square feet and costing the Government over $25 million in maintenance and contributions in lieu of taxes?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say to my colleague that we already have reduced by 30,000 square feet the unused space mentioned by the Auditor General and that an operation is under way in order to dispose, in an orderly fashion and with due consideration for private interests, of space that will be made surplus to our needs through that good management which is given great importance in the report.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—SOLICITOR GENERAL'S MEETING WITH PREMIER

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General should know that there is all the difference in the world in agreeing to meet with a provincial Premier under ordinary circumstances on a policy or administration matter and in agreeing to meet with a provincial Premier when he is under investigation for a criminal offence, with his lawyer present, in a secret place, a hotel, "a neutral place", according to his own words. The Minister should know that there is all the difference in the world in meeting under those two circumstances. Would the Minister be agreeable to meet any Canadian who is charged with a similar criminal offence in the same way he did with Premier Hatfield?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have already responded to that question. I am surprised that the former Solicitor General does not realize the difference between someone being charged and someone who is merely under investigation. I would say to him that in both cases the words of his Leader on November 30 have some relevance. There is a presumption of innocence, and for a provincial Premier to request a meeting in order to discuss or brief the Solicitor General about a matter of concern, I feel—obviously the former Solicitor General does not—that that is an acceptable thing to do.

SOLICITOR GENERAL'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, having spent four years as Solicitor General I am very aware of the long tradition in Britain, which is followed in Canada, that the Minister responsible for the police in Canada, the Solicitor General, should not intervene in any way while a criminal investigation is going on—

Miss MacDonald: He didn't.

Mr. Allmand: —with respect to individuals under investigation. The Minister himself said on January 30 on Atlantic Television: "It is not the function of the Solicitor General to get down, as the old law school saying used to be, out of the stands and get the dust of the arena in his eyes. It is not a good thing for me, nor a good thing for the process".

I would like to ask the Solicitor General again if he would do for any accused, as should be done under the Charter of Rights, what he did for the Premier of New Brunswick while that person was under investigation for a criminal offence? Would he do it?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Again Mr. Speaker, I come back to the former Solicitor General and make a point, which I believe is worth making, that is, there is a difference between a charge and being under investigation.

Mr. Allmand: I know that.

Mr. MacKay: There is also a difference—

Mr. Allmand: That is true, and you shouldn't do it while he is under investigation.

Mr. MacKay: Is the former Minister interested in my answer or not, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Allmand: It hasn't been very good so far.

Mr. MacKay: I am doing my best. Perhaps I have to contend with the type of question as well.

• (1450)

Mr. MacKay: I want to say to him that I agree it is wrong, as the old law school dictum says, to come down out of the seats and get the dust of the arena in your eyes. But I say to the former Minister that it is another thing to elicit information that any person wants to give to a Solicitor General if the circumstances are proper.

Mr. Axworthy: About what?

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT STATEMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have another question on this issue to pose to the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the public concerns which have been aired over the last few days concerning the events which have been debated or discussed in Parliament for several days, will the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House that when the Prime Minister returns there will be a statement by the Government concerning the propriety of all the actions and meetings which have taken place, both before and subsequent to the charges being laid against Premier Hatfield?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of any substantive allegation of impropriety, I am afraid I can give no such assurance.

Mr. Chrétien: The question is judgment.

Mr. Nielsen: We have had the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East, who should know better after having served four years in the portfolio, describe the actions of the Solicitor General at a meeting with the Premier of New Brunswick as an intervention in the process. From my understanding of his explanation, and what I have read in the media, nothing could be further from the truth.

Mr. Axworthy: What did they discuss?

Mr. Nielsen: If the Hon. Member believes that there has been an impropriety, any impropriety, during the conduct of that meeting, let him say so; then there might be some reason to go as far as he suggests.

Mr. Deans: It is appropriateness.

PROCEDURE FOLLOWED IN MARIJUANA CASES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that our judicial system is based on the principle of equality before the law, could the Deputy Prime Minister explain why it is that tens of thousands of people accused of marijuana related offences would not have a prayer of meeting with the Solicitor General during the period their alleged offences are under investigation? Why is it that one citizen who happens to be a Premier should stand above the law in that way, and is that not impropriety?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Stupid question.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I implore Hon. Members like the questioner, in the interests of fairness and justice, to put matters in more accurate perspective. The truth of the matter here is that subsequent to the meeting, which the Solicitor General has been very free in describing to us—he answered the first time he was asked the question outside this House—a charge was laid. That charge was tried in a duly constituted court of this country—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And he was found innocent.

Mr. Nielsen: —and a verdict was reached. Surely we should not be, if I am permitted the expression, in the interests of justice, rehashing this whole situation in the House of Commons.

MINISTERIAL DISCRETION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to get at this question. It is one thing to have the presumption of innocence before a court of law, when it is judiciously reviewed and there is a chance for examination and cross-examination. However, we are going to a separate question, that of the initiation of the proceedings and the discretion of whether or not to lay a charge. The Solicitor General knows there has been a lot of judicial and academic comment as to whether that process ought to be judicial as well. I ask the Solicitor General, did he not know he was interfering in the beginning of a prosecution and the discretion of whether or not to lay a charge, or what charge to lay? Why would he participate in a conversation when the investigation was already known and that could only have been the purpose of the meeting?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: The godfather.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He does not know the difference between the Attorney General and the Solicitor General.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You were not there.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am really astonished at the ignorance of a former Solicitor General who should know better—

Mr. Allmand: I would never do that.

Mr. Nielsen: —and a former Minister of Justice, who should know better—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): This is called reaping the whirlwind, Erik.

Mr. Nielsen: —when they publicly attempt to leave the impression that there is something less than an arm's length relationship that exists between the Solicitor General and the RCMP.

Mr. Allmand: What was agreed to?

Mr. Nielsen: That is precisely the relationship that exists. As a former Minister of Justice he knows, as does the former Solicitor General, that when the RCMP seek advice as to whether to lay charges or the nature of such charges to be laid, it is not the Solicitor General's advice that is sought; it is the advice of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Attorney General.

Mr. Lapierre: Why did he go there?

Mr. Nielsen: The Attorney General of Canada, my House Leader reminds me.

Mr. Axworthy: What was the meeting about?

Mr. Nielsen: That is the routine chain, and to leave any other impression is a distortion of the truth and not worthy of the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Chrétien: He can stop the investigation.

DISCUSSIONS INQUIRY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General and it is a very simple question. Could he tell the House exactly what he was told by Premier Hatfield and what was discussed at the meeting, and whom he reported to about what was discussed at that meeting in that hotel room?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. gentleman opposite, as I said before, that I have no intention of doing a post-mortem—

Mr. Nunziata: What are you hiding?

Mr. MacKay: —on what I consider to be a confidential meeting.

I can also assure him—

Mr. Fulton: You are digging your grave, Elmer.

Mr. MacKay: I can also assure him that I informed everyone who should have been informed, including the Commissioner of the RCMP.

Mr. Nystrom: And John Crosbie?

Mr. Chrétien: Before or after?

Mr. MacKay: And I can further assure him that I kept my counsel about this matter and did not discuss it with other Cabinet colleagues.

DISCUSSION WITH RCMP COMMISSIONER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like the Solicitor General to tell the House whether he discussed the matter with the Commissioner of the RCMP before or after his meeting with Premier Hatfield? Also, if this was a confidential meeting, why did he tell the Leader of the Opposition, earlier in Question Period, that it was not a secret meeting? He cannot have it both ways.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): I can tell my hon. friend that he cannot have it both ways either. The meeting was not in any way secret. The meeting was held in a neutral place—

Mr. Chrétien: Why neutral? Why not in your office?

Mr. MacKay: —and it was held in a convenient place. The former Minister of Justice says why not in my office? Because it was not convenient to have it in my office that evening.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: I suppose the next question may well be: Did I wear a necktie, or what else? I come back to the question from my hon. friend from Windsor and tell him this. I briefed the RCMP Commissioner and I have no intention of getting into timeframes and details.

Mr. Nunziata: What are you hiding?

Mr. MacKay: I am not—well, I remember them. The House will certainly know that the RCMP Commissioner is available if Members wish to ask him about it.

RAILWAYS

PROPOSAL TO ELIMINATE CABOOSES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to a matter affecting the safety of the public, employees of the railroads, and thousands of jobs. I ask the Minister of Transport what the Government's policy is on the matter of cabooseless trains. Specifically, what takes priority with the Government and his Department, public and employee safety, or the ability of the railroads to save money?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, this subject has been under intensive consideration by the Canadian Transport Commission. There have been hearings across Canada, namely, in Moncton, Vancouver, Winnipeg, and Ottawa. My understanding is that the CTC returned to Winnipeg for further hearings, and there will be further hearings here in Ottawa commencing this week, I believe. When the hearings are concluded and the recommendations are brought forth, we will then be in a position to determine whether the testing of the cabooseless train should take place. I think it is only proper that we allow the CTC to adjudicate the pros and cons of that particular issue.

TESTING AND REPORTING PROCEDURES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the proposed plan for testing calls for the railway officers to compile and submit reports. In order to avoid the coyote being in charge of the chicken coop, will the Minister assure the House that, if and when testing of cabooseless trains occurs, independent experts from his Department, the CTC, or anywhere else, will do the compiling and submitting of reports, rather than officers of the railroad?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to be in a position of prejudging the recommendations that will be brought down by the CTC. I think that the Hon. Member is posing a hypothetical scenario. I would rather wait until the recommendations come down. We will then look at them and act accordingly.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 63 and 143.

[Text]

FIRE DRILLS AT CBC WINNIPEG

Question No. 63—Mr. Skelly:

1. In the past 26 years, has the management of the main CBC building, 541 Portage Avenue, Winnipeg ever had a fire drill for their 300 employees?

2. Did the Federal Fire Commissioner inform the 300 employees that "Relax, you'll have one before your tootsies get cold"?

3. Will Labour Canada write an order requiring CBC management to hold a fire drill and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Departments of Labour and Public Works as follows:

1. Yes.

2. No.

3. Labour Canada central region has not issued a direction to CBC Winnipeg to hold fire evacuation drills. Our reason is that CBC local management are just completing their emergency measures plan. Fire wardens and floor wardens are designated and floor monitors are in the process of being appointed. A timeframe is being discussed with the CBC operating units and safety co-ordinator so that a fire department-supervised drill can be held soon, probably within the next few weeks to a month.

A fire evacuation drill was held for the CBC regional office staff in May, 1984.

A Labour Canada senior labour affairs officer is monitoring progress by attendance at the CBC safety committee meetings.

INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF THE CHILD

Question No. 143—Mrs. Killens:

Since the announcement by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on March 29, 1984, what is the status of the work of the Secretariat responsible for examining the progress made following the recommendations resulting from the 1979 International Year of the Child?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The status of the work of the Secretariat responsible for examining the progress made following the recommendations resulting from the 1979 International Year of the Child is as follows:

1. The Secretariat requested and has received responses from the 47 federal departments and agencies affected by the recommendations of the Canadian Commission for International Year of the Child.

2. The responses are being edited and prepared for publication early in 1985.

[Translation]

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered, shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I want to bring to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Dick) and to yourself, Sir, that question No. 131, dating from December 6, which I brought to the attention of the House on several occasions, has not yet been replied to. The same applies to question No. 148. Both of these questions involved patronage issues by the Government. The Government refuses to answer them.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will take notice of the point of order.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 30

CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION OF PREMIER OF NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Speaker: I have received notice under Standing Order 30 of an application from the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the refusal of the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) to give satisfactory answers, or indeed any answers, to some of the serious matters that were raised during Question Period today, pursuant to Standing Order 30 I move, seconded by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the adjournment of the House to discuss a matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the extraordinary interference by the Solicitor General in the criminal investigation of the Hon. Richard Hatfield and the admission of bias by the Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Crosbie) in the light of his responsibility to decide upon an appeal in this affair.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre indeed gave notice to myself of his application pursuant to Standing Order 30. On listening to the Hon. Member's statement in the House, I have to say that his application does cause me some concern in relation to the provisions and conditions of Standing Order 30 that must be met before an emergency debate takes place.

In the first instance, the Chair must take into account whether or not there will be some reasonable opportunity for the House to discuss the matter in some other way. On Friday last the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) did designate Tuesday of this week to be an allotted day and the Opposition will enjoy the privilege of controlling the subject matter of tomorrow's debate.

In the second instance, the Hon. Member's application cannot be reconciled with the condition of subsection (f) of Standing Order 30(16) which states:

the discussion under the motion must not raise any question which, according to the Standing Orders of the House, can only be debated on a distinct motion under notice.

It is a long-standing practice in our House that the conduct of an Hon. Member can be reviewed only by way of a substantive motion of which notice has been given and which will result in a decision of the House on the matter.

[Translation]

On Friday, June 19, 1959, Mr. Speaker Michener made a ruling which has often been quoted in such cases. Here is what he said:

—simple justice requires that no Hon. Member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the House or a committee until he has been charged with an offence.

That ruling by Mr. Michener also led to Citation 40 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, as follows:

In any case where the propriety of a Member's action is brought into question, a specific charge must be made.

[English]

The Twentieth Edition of Erskine May at page 378 further clarifies the matter. It reads:

Certain matters cannot be debated, except upon a substantive motion which admits of a distinct vote of the House. Amongst these are the conduct of the sovereign, the heir to the throne or other members of the Royal Family, a Governor-General of an independent territory, the Lord Chancellor, the Speaker, the Chairman of Ways and Means, Members of either House of Parliament and judges of the superior courts of the United Kingdom, including persons holding the position of a judge, such as a judge in a court of bankruptcy and a county court, or a recorder. These matters cannot, therefore, be raised by way of amendment, or upon any motion for adjournment. For the same reason, no charge of a personal character can be raised, save upon a direct and substantive motion to that effect.

If the Hon. Member's application were to be accepted, it would result simply in a debate on the adjournment of the House and not in a decision on the allegations relating to the conduct of a Member. All of the precedents are clear and require that when the conduct of a Member is the subject of a debate there must be an opportunity for the House to come to a decision.

I am, therefore, duty bound to refuse the application as it does not meet the requirements of either the Standing Orders or of our practice in such matters.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-26, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, before the House rose for lunch, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on second reading of Bill C-26, legislation that will extend eligibility for the spouse's allowance to all widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64, who are living on low incomes, regardless of the age of their spouse at death. Mr. Speaker, this measure will benefit 85,000 Canadians, and I am truly delighted, and you may be sure that I shall be voting in favour of this motion.

[English]

As a Member of the Liberal Party which founded the spousal allowance, I support the legislation before us which extends benefits to widows and widowers. Unfortunately, this support is qualified. I am very greatly disappointed in the impact of this Bill. There are 80,000 deserving Canadians who are separated, divorced, or have chosen not to marry, and who are excluded from this extended coverage. In our day-to-day work in our constituencies we meet many of these poor people, most of whom are women, who in my view are being discriminated against because they are poor, have never married, or are divorced or separated.

I listened to some of the debates this morning. In my view this Bill could have legal implications under the Charter of Rights which we adopted in 1982. Section 15 of the Charter which will become operative in April of this year states:

Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

The operative phrase here is "and, in particular". Since it does not mean that it is exclusive, I suggest that the Government is indeed including the extra condition of not being married as a measure of discrimination. I have been advised by some of my legal friends that indeed this could be in conflict and that we could possibly go back to Section 1 of the Charter which states that Canadians are subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

If this is not a legal discrimination then it is a moral discrimination. It is immoral to exclude 80,000 Canadians who have worked hard and happen to be poor through no fault of their own. The Conservative Government missed a golden opportunity for meaningful reform when it introduced Bill C-26. We know how the Government has wallowed in indecision since November 4 and the legislative progress made in the House speaks for itself. I suggest we have not accomplished much important legislative work and are having difficulty trying to improve this Bill.

The Conservatives have shown that they are genuinely concerned about the plight of those Canadians whom they believe are deserving and in need. I suggest to the Government that it should consider the other 80,000 Canadians who are excluded from this legislation because of their circumstances. The fact of the matter is that a 63-year old separated or divorced woman must pay the same rent as a 60-year old widow. She must pay the same food costs and the same utility bills. If she is poor she cannot cope with that situation. The Income Tax Department does not treat Canadians differently because they are widowed or separated or have never been married. The Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) gave us the example of nuns who have decided not to marry and will be discriminated against if, for some reason, they decide to leave the convent between the age of 60 and 64.

Despite my Party's support for the Bill as an incremental step toward the equitable application of our social programs, I regret that this legislation discriminates on the basis of marital status. There are many people in the riding of Ottawa-Vanier who are between the ages of 60 and 64 and, because of the nature of the city, were public servants. They worked for a salary which was next to the poverty level. I do not think it is fair to expect them to go on without being allowed to participate fully in our social programs.

The Liberals never said that our social programs were perfect. That is why when we made changes, we made real changes. We did not simply try to patch the program as the Conservatives are doing in this case. The programs have changed to meet the needs of Canadians. Now it is time to meet equally the needs of equal Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this social injustice takes me back to 1982, when I was defending in the House, before my own Government and against it, the principle of indexing pensions of public servants.

Then, the debate was on indexing pensions. Today, with Bill C-26, we are in many cases concerned with the sole income an individual can receive without having the feeling he or she is receiving charity.

Mr. Speaker, I was fighting against social injustice then and I am fighting against an even greater social injustice today.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) said last week on February 4. "However, we cannot and will not allow a very vulnerable segment of Canada's near elderly population to continue to suffer because of circumstances completely beyond their control". That is why we cannot ignore this other group of people between the ages of 60 and 64 who also have done a great deal for Canada.

To repeat the words of the Minister himself we simply cannot tell these people that the best we can do for them is to put them on welfare.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Government will reconsider, and I hope this Government will, either in committee or in the House, propose amendments to include the 80,000 Canadians who have been excluded from this legislation so that they too can enjoy the benefits of Bill C-26.

[English]

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by congratulating the Minister for taking this step to extend the old age security program. The step is welcome as far as it goes because it is estimated that approximately 85,000 people living in poor circumstances will be assisted, of whom 72,000 will be women.

However, as my colleague has just said, the Bill is discriminatory in that it does not apply to single people. There are probably another 80,000 to 85,000 single older Canadians living in the same kind of poverty.

The point has been made that single people have had a greater opportunity to be in the workforce and to have acquired Canada Pension and other benefits. However, these plans do not come into play until a person is 65. In view of the high unemployment we are seeing, a number of older workers are not called back once they are laid off. Indeed, there is a serious problem facing single people living in poverty who are perhaps five years short of eligibility for the old age security pension.

We recognize that this Bill is a useful first step. We hope that the Minister and his colleagues will also consider the extensive recommendations for pension reform that were made by the parliamentary task force, chaired by the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), following the publishing of the then Government's green paper on pensions which was entitled Better Pensions for Canadians.

For some 20 years in this country most Canadians have based their retirement financial planning on three tiers. The first tier is the universal old age security pension, with its two associate plans, the guaranteed income supplement and the spouse's allowance. The second tier is the Canada Pension Plan which, of course, is associated with labour force participation and does not provide for housewives or others who are outside of the labour force.

The third tier is private pension plans and other savings. This third tier has proved to be a very weak link in the chain. For instance, it does not recognize the mobility of Canadians. Most Canadians change jobs at least six times in a career. For many women the changes are greater because they move to accommodate their husband's careers or they leave the labour force in order to care for children. Most of the private pension plans have requirements in which vesting of the plan does not take place until the employee is 45 years old and has ten years' service with the company. It is a rather old-fashioned concept which regards the pension as a reward for long and faithful service rather than as deferred earnings, which in fact is what pension contributions are. Those involved with production of the green paper and later the Parliamentary Task Force did devote a good deal of time looking at private pension plans. There were very extensive consultations with actuaries and others in the industry who, it seems to me, are much more ready at this time than when I was elected ten years ago to move their plans into the present and to stop finding reasons against change.

However, whatever the defects of private pension plans, there is also the fact that in many cases they are non-existent. Smaller non-unionized businesses often do not have pension plans, and where plans do exist, part-time workers are almost entirely excluded. This particularly applies to women who often work part-time either because it is the only sensible way they can meet their family responsibilities or because it is the only work available to them.

The Parliamentary Task Force had some important recommendations about private pension plans at which I hope this Government will look. But it may be that the main instrument for improving pensions and providing a decent standard of living to retired Canadians is improving the Canada Pension Plan.

The green paper also had very extensive recommendations on this and as I said the people involved had very extensive consultations. In the past we have seen many people object to placing too much reliance on the Canada Pension Plan. Those in favour of placing greater reliance on the Canada Pension Plan point out that the plan is already universal, portable and vested immediately. Those opposed have traditionally been concerned about the economic implications of transferring large sums of money from the private sector to government.

Private plans are now worth more than $50 billion even though they cover fewer than half of Canadian workers. We have to keep coming back to this question of coverage with the private pension plans as a serious limitation.

A very extensive examination was done of ways to improve the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. My colleague the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), when he opened the discussion on this Bill, addressed himself to that. I do hope this Government will see its way to moving on those recommendations fairly soon. They have been extensively examined and there has been very extensive consultation.

We all know that to change the Canada Pension Plan requires the agreement of two-thirds of the provinces with two-thirds of the population, but since Ministers opposite keep telling us what excellent relations they have with their provincial counterparts, let us hope there will be no problem in getting this agreement.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I welcome the initiative of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) as far as it goes, but I do have a problem in that there is still no help for the older single person who is, in many cases, in at least as much need of assistance as the widow or widower aged between 60 and 64. I hope an amendment might be considered at the committee stage to broaden the scope of this Bill.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, there can certainly be no forceful arguments made against a piece of legislation which is designed to extend financial benefits to some 85,000 Canadians who are in need. But I must agree with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson): it is to be regretted that another large group of Canadians also in need but who were never married, or who are divorced or separated, will be excluded from receiving these new benefits.

As all Hon. Members in this House know, there are a great many more divorced and separated people today in Canada than ever before. We also know that the unemployment rate for women who are aged 60 to 64 is particularly high even in comparison with the high national unemployment rates that we have.

It is true that all widows and widowers age 60 to 65 who are in need are now going to receive the spouse's allowance. It will cost the federal treasury for a full year of these payments some $350 million. We already spend $820 million in extending this program to those who are married. To include the needy among the separated and divorced would cost the Government another $135 million. To include those persons who are in need but never married would cost the Government another $160 million.

Obviously this new Government has recognized need, and I commend it for that. But the Government has not recognized all need. The Government has been selective. The widows and widowers who qualify must wait until next September before they receive a single payment. I am not sure what that means. Perhaps the Government is saying that hardship can be better borne during the summer months. But the widows and widowers who are eligible should not just sit around expectantly waiting for this first cheque; there is a Canadian residency requirement of which they should be aware. They should also be aware that they should have little or no outside income in order to qualify. The largest single cheque that will go to any one of these needy persons—the largest amount; there will be lesser amounts, of course—will be $536 a month. It is not a handsome sum of money at all. We in Parliament should not be congratulating ourselves too much on our generosity and largesse. Of course, these payments will increase with the rising cost of living, the inflation rate, and that is to be expected.

The other point that should be remembered by widows and widowers who are eligible is that the cheque will not arrive automatically. They must apply for the money.

I have to emphasize again, Mr. Speaker, that to my mind it is just not fair to exclude needy persons on the basis of marital status. I am unable to accept that. In saying this I recognize full well, as my colleagues in the New Democratic Party will remind me and have already reminded us today, that it was the Liberal Government that began this program. I want to say that this new Government was elected on the promise of change. So far we only have promises to change and not very much in the way of definite action.

We in Canada are not doing a very good job of redistributing income. It will be recalled by some Hon. Members that the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, the OECD in Paris, gave Canada a rather poor grade for its social security program. We pride ourselves on being a very generous society, but in fact that is not so at all. We do not rate very well among most of the advanced industrialized countries. We do not target our programs at all well. The situation is not being improved by Bill C-26. We eliminate two groups of people among whom are many needy persons, people who are between the ages of 60 and 65 who are divorced or separated, the same age group as those who have never married.

This new Government has at least recognized the need for better targeting of our social benefits, but in Bill C-26 the Government does not carry out what it tells us it has recognized. The recent blue paper on social policy was no better. Imagine additional hundreds of millions of dollars under one of those options flowing into the coffers of the provincial Treasuries. We know how tight-fisted provincial Treasuries are about their welfare dollars. It would be shocking if some of the case histories were known in this house based on the administration of provincial welfare programs. They are going to flow hundreds of millions of dollars back to the provinces under one of the options. What will the needy families, those in genuine, real, desperate need get? They will get 48 cents a day.

Women between the ages of 60 and 65 who have never married or who are divorced may be just as much in need as those who are married or widowed. There is a very large number of single elderly women in this country who are poverty-stricken. There is a very high incidence among these people of low income or no income at all because of the unavailability of employment.

I want to repeat what my friend, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) said at the conclusion of her speech. This Bill must be amended in committee to make it just and fair. I know that will be more costly, and I have quoted the figures already, but we will have to do it. We will have to make our cuts somewhere else.

All Members of this House know that the deficit looms large and is threatening. There must be fiscal responsibility, but in restoring some measure of balance between revenues and expenditures, we must take the greatest of care not to hurt those who cannot defend themselves. We must take the greatest care to assist those in deep and painful need. Let us pass Bill C-26, but not as it is. Send it to committee, amend it and include the other two very needy groups of persons aged 60 to 65, those who never married and those who are divorced or separated and find themselves in equal need to those who are married and those who are divorced.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Epp (Provencher), seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-26, an Act to Amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Wealth and Social Affairs. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

An Hon. Member: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: On division!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried, on division.

[English]

Accordingly, the Bill stands referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, February 1, 1985, consideration of the motion of Mr. Masse that Bill C-20, an Act to Amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act, The Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have had a chance to look at this Bill. In the time available to me, and I believe we are now down to 10 minutes per speech, I will not be able to comment at length. However, there are couple of points certainly worth looking at.

While my Party supports the general principle of this Bill and while my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) emphatically stated her support of the initiative in this Bill with relation to the sexual stereotyping in broadcasting, we still have some concerns over the manner in which directives are to be given to the CRTC and the manner in which the Cabinet is now taking upon itself delegated power to deregulate according to the principles of Bill C-20.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. For the benefit of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, I believe the Table will confirm that we are still under the 20 minute rule for interventions in this debate at this stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is 20 minutes.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In that case, I will perhaps speak at some greater length. There is an important innovation here. I am not yet familiar with enough federal legislation to know to what extent this has been drawn from models elsewhere, but at least some effort has been given in this Bill to look at ways by which political responsibility can properly be taken where a Crown agency is concerned.

The situation which has prevailed until now with the CRTC has been that it has in fact been given, in my opinion and the opinion of my Party, too great a control over the telecommunications and broadcasting policy in this country in a way that effectively Parliament and the Government divested itself of powers that should be in the hands of Government. That does not mean that the CRTC cannot carry out a great deal of work in terms of looking at appeals and questions that come before it.

With respect to broadcasting policy, telecommunications policy and the kind of telephone system that we are to have, the issues are too important and touch too many Canadians for the matter to be simply delegated into the hands of a Crown agency, the chairman of which is quite often appointed as a favour by the Government of the day, somebody whose political credentials may in fact exceed his or her knowledge of what may be required in terms of communications policy. We must leave the matter until it is reconsidered once every five or six years. The Government has the opportunity to make enough new appointments to the Commission as possibly to influence some future direction in telecommunications policy.

Over the years there have been a good number of studies done on broadcasting policy in this country. The subject has troubled our country largely because of the fact that we have a tradition of public broadcasting in Canada and because it is a very difficult country in which to resolve the satisfactory environment of broadcasting, given the flood of broadcasting influence which comes from south of the border and which is accessible to almost all of us because so many of us in Canada live within easy transmission reach of the United States border.

The proposals in Bill C-20 which allow the Cabinet to issue directives on any matter but then require that the said directives be scrutinized by a parliamentary committee recognize at least an effort to have something of a balance of forces. I do not think that the Cabinet or the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) should be intervening on a constant basis. I hope that they will not interfere with trivial matters, that where directives are given these will be directives on matters of broad policy and not directives as to whether so and so who is a friend of Findlay MacDonald or someone like that should be given a broadcasting license rather than somebody who perhaps was a friend of the former Government. Were we to see the Government using its directive power in that way, it would quickly be seen to be improper. Hopefully, it will not embark on it, or if it embarked on it, it will stop it.

One of the controls on an improper use of the directive power is the fact that these matters are to lie on the table of the House of Commons, at least in a figurative way, for 30 days. During that time, there is to be a reference to an appropriate parliamentary committee of the action of the Government in issuing a directive or notice of directive if it is trying to save a bit of time. I would assume that, given the flexibility of this House and the interests of Members, a committee would then be able to hold hearings and question the Minister or possibly the Commission over why such a directive was in fact being issued. This would perhaps inhibit the Government from using its power of directive improperly while at the same time allows the Government the right to dictate in general terms what broadcasting policy should be.

I recognize there are some difficulties with this proposal. One difficulty is that the legislation, and I think properly, says that prior to issuing a directive, the Minister or the Government should consult with the CRTC. That could lead to a situation in which the CRTC would not need to be told what to do because it would be informed by the Minister that he or she is intending to take a particular action and a particular directive would be recommended. Then, to avoid the embarrassment of having a directive made public, the CRTC would do what it was going to be told to do and it would thereby, it would hope, retain certain room to manoeuvre. If it does what it is told without being told, then perhaps it would not be told what to do the next time. I do hope that you followed that, Mr. Speaker. In other words, the consultation procedure can be used as a means by which the CRTC would come under the constant direction of the Ministry and very seldom would those directives be a matter of public record. Therefore, very seldom would the Commons committee have input or insight into the nature of the policy directions that have taken place.

Perhaps I can broaden my argument for a moment, Mr. Speaker. The broader question relates to the relationship between the Government and Crown agencies and Crown corporations in general. It seems to me, as has been argued for a long time, that while there must be something of an arm's-length relationship between the two, that relationship cannot be totally arm's length. In the case of the Canada Development Investment Corporation, the body which controls Canadair and de Havilland, no one in particular was responsible for those Crown corporations before they were put under the Canada Development Investment Corporation. No one was responsible because the government appointees on the board of directors thought that the private-sector members of the board of directors were exercising due care to make sure that the shareholders' money was not being squandered by those two Crown corporations. The private-sector directors thought that since there were government directors on the board, the government directors were calling the shots since the Government was the sole shareholder. Therefore, they felt that they did not need to do their jobs. In the end, hundreds of millions of dollars were wasted by those two Crown corporations and a large part of the reason for that was that there had been no thinking through of the relationship between the Government as shareholder and the Crown corporations, which were established to do what in the opinion of the House of Commons of the day was an essential public function and at the same time were meant to operate to some extent in the private sector. To some extent, those two roles conflicted.

The CRTC is an agency which is entrusted with the carrying out of government policy rather than a commercial agency which is meant to either fulfil the public economic purpose or to make money. Nonetheless, the same kind of dilemma applies. Are full and part-time members who are appointed to the board of the CRTC to act in their own lights under what they think should be broadcasting policy, are they to act according to what they are told by the Government that appointed them two, three or five years before, or are they to listen to what the Minister of the day is saying and try to accord themselves with those particular opinions even if those opinions are not the opinions they themselves hold? It is a difficult situation.

In my opinion, no member of any independent agency would allow himself, after having been appointed, simply to listen to the wind and then blow with the wind depending on what the Government of the day seems to be thinking. I do not think he would give up his control to that extent. However, where there is a clearly mandated policy which is laid down by Parliament, then it seems to me to be appropriate for him to say, "Okay, that is the way the Government wants us to do it, that is the way we will do it". If someone in that situation fundamentally disagrees with what the Government has put forward as a directive, he or she can of course decide to resign and use his or her talents elsewhere.

I am suggesting that the mechanisms here may well be worth copying and emulating in the case of other Crown agencies and Crown corporations. I look forward to seeing that as perhaps a more desirable alternative to some of the ideologically inspired efforts of certain members of the government Party who seem to want simply to abolish Crown corporations holus-bolus on the grounds that they interfere with the free enterprise system, that it is wrong for them to exist, or for whatever other reasons they may be able to put forward.

This country has a public-enterprise history and a very proud one. We have a history of public involvement in the development of our country, which goes back prior to the creation of Crown corporations, with the public investment in the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Fathers of Confederation were quite ready to have public enterprise then and they began a very large private enterprise with government grants. Nonetheless, there has been a great deal of public involvement and we in this country are very different in our political culture from the United States where there are no public enterprises such as the ones we have here.

If we want our country to stay together, I do not think that we can do without public enterprise. However, I believe it is necessary to talk about an evolution in the way Crown agencies and Crown corporations work. What is before us within Bill C-20 may in fact represent that kind of evolution.

May I suggest, however, that there are some areas in which directives may be very desirable. I for one would like to see a greater sense of public responsibility on the part of the CTV network, the largest independent or private-sector network, to carry out its responsibilities as a Canadian broadcasting entity. I have no criticism about the way the CTV covers sports. I think it does a reasonably fine job when it comes to news coverage at 11 p.m. I have no problems with those things. My problem lies with the fact that that is just about where the CTV's initiative ends. Its efforts to foster Canadian culture and a greater understanding between different parts of the country, apart from the news and a small public affairs segment, are virtually negligible. If the Government were thinking of giving directives, and if it did not feel that it was biting the hand that fed it, it might think of giving some directives to the CRTC with respect to cracking down on the CTV to ensure that it does a better job as a national broadcasting entity than it is doing now.

I am told by friends within the CRTC that the Global Television Network is in fact doing more of that kind of Canadian broadcasting than it was doing before. It is claimed by people I know within the CRTC that that is partly because of pressures put by the CRTC. If the Global network is doing so much better than the CTV when it is a much younger network and has had far more commercial difficulties than the CTV, then why the devil can the same thing not be done with respect to the CTV?

I would like to suggest—dare I say it—that there is still a thought in my mind that broadcasting is a privilege and not a right, that a broadcasting licence should be treated as a privilege and not as a right, and that if a broadcaster fails to live up to the company's undertakings to the CRTC with respect to Canadian content and service, we should have no hesitation in withdrawing that privilege and putting it in the hands of some other group and perhaps even a co-operative or a consumer-owned radio or television station undertaking which will do the job in a way that the private enterprise did not.

Regrettably, in the past the CRTC has been prepared to allow owners of broadcasting undertakings to deal with those undertakings as if they were composed of shares in any other private enterprise without regard to the public responsibilities of broadcasting. The CRTC has ratified changes in ownership of broadcasting undertakings but rarely has it bothered to look to see whether or not those changes of ownership were in the public interest. The CRTC has bought the private-sector ethic and believes that if one owner wants to sell a broadcasting station to another owner, that is okay and they should effectively have the right to do so regardless of the principle on which the CRTC is founded, which is that the air waves are public property and not private property. I am speaking as a New Democrat and as a democratic socialist. I like to think that the air waves are one of the things which are still public property and for which there should be public responsibilities if people are given the right to use them.

Perhaps I can say one other thing to the CRTC and to the Government as well. I get concerned when friends of mine give me information about the services offered by Canadian cable companies in their efforts to gain cable franchises in the United States. You would be amazed, Mr. Speaker, by the depth and the variety of the community-sponsored television and public service channels which have been offered by these Canadian companies in attempting to get franchises in the United States. What is particularly interesting about that is that this country is cabled to the extent of 60 per cent to 65 per cent of television subscribers, but these same cable companies have been quite content with not offering those services here. They have their privileges. They are able to distribute their programs. They perform some public service broadcasting, but not nearly the amount they are offering to new franchises in the United States. If they can offer these services in the United States, why is the CRTC not insisting that those cable companies keep pace with technology in terms of the services which are offered here, in order to allow subscribers in Canada to have a much greater range of services which should and could become available?

I would like to say a bit about the CRTC's jurisdiction over telephones. It is an area in which I feel an important directive from Cabinet will be required very soon. I watched with great misgiving, when I was a member of the provincial Government, the manoeuvering, the finagling, the planning and the strategizing by Bell Canada and other telephone companies when they tried to abandon their responsibility to provide services at a modest cost to ordinary residential subscribers. Now they are at it again, and hearings are being held before the CRTC.

It has been argued that certain services are coming under competitive pressure and that therefore Bell Canada should be entitled to charge $20, $30 or $40 per month for residential telephone service. One of the reasons that we have had relatively good service in the past is that there has been a public service ethos in the Bell Canada system and other Canadian telephone systems, which are both privately and publicly operated. That does not mean that Bell Canada's profits might not have been excessive from time to time, but nonetheless there has been a public service ethos both in the granting of that monopoly and, I would maintain, to some extent in the carrying out of that responsibility in the Bell system. Bell is now trying to get away from that. Part of the public service ethos was that the service would be provided for $9 to $10 a month if people wanted a black telephone without fancy trimmings, and that therefore the service would be accessible to 95 per cent or 98 per cent of the population. Of all the countries we are among the most heavy users of the telephone. The reasons are weather, distance, and the nature of the country. I would not want to see that end.

It has been suggested that there are some bleeding hearts in the New Democratic Party who think, because there are 400,000 or 500,000 people being threatened with loss of service, that we should advocate subsidies. To continue to offer the services to people of modest means should be a reasonable trade-off, if a private sector telephone company is going to enjoy a monopoly and have access to every residential subscriber. The people who talk about the full cost being paid by residential subscribers should realize that the art of cost accounting is imperfect. There has been a costing study by the CRTC under way for six or seven years, in an attempt to determine whether or not Bell Canada is losing money on residential subscribers. The findings will be a matter of judgment. It cannot be brought down to specifics because it is a matter of how the costs are allocated in a system which is heavily capital-intensive. There are many cut-backs now taking place because of the impact of new technologies. For example, Bell has reduced its number of operators by more than half over the course of the last 10 or 12 years. I believe that some of the benefits of that should be made available to residential subscribers.

As far as residential subscribers are concerned, many of the capital-intensive improvements which have taken place in the telephone system are of little use. Maybe Aunt Minnie wants to talk to Aunt Ada, or Madame Dupont wants to call her doctor. The old system served those simple purposes just as well as the new system. Under those circumstances, to say that low-income residential subscribers must pay enormous charges in order to have a sophisticated system beyond what they require, is clearly unwarranted and unreasonable. Directives should be considered by the Cabinet which would tell the CRTC that it is the purpose of public policy in Canada to have a system whereby every Canadian is able to benefit at a very modest cost.

In conclusion I would like to say that Our Party is concerned about deregulation and the unilateral power of the Cabinet to determine if there is enough competition to deregulate. It could mean that the entire telephone system could be deregulated, subject only to review by a parliamentary committee which would be controlled by the government Party. That is not sufficient. When this Bill goes to committee, we will be pursuing that particular question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and, with the greatest respect, his speech was quite reasoned and very interesting. From what I understand, he generally agrees with the thrust of the Bill, but he feels there are few minor discrepancies.

He commented on what drives our nation's broadcasters. He spoke about Global-TV and CTV. There are many instances when, in fact, Global-TV and CTV surpass the efforts of the CBC. If it is agreed that profit does drive the nation's private broadcasters, what about the CBC? What would happen if we did not allow the CBC to take advertising dollars? Would that mean that there would be fewer reruns of Dallas and The A-Team and that we would have better programming in Canada if that were allowed?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very interesting question about broadcasting policy which I would like to see the House debate soon. There has been a lot of informed and concerned comment about the impact of the $75 million in cuts which were imposed on the CBC by the Government in the economic statement of November 8. Questions about the mandate of the CBC have been raised, including the one which was raised by the Hon. Member. He asked, do we really need the CBC to bring us Dallas, Dynasty and other programs? Far too often the CBC is hard to distinguish from the CTV, either in the frequency of commercials or in the nature of its programming. Frankly, I share that concern.

I spent some time in England during the Christmas recess. It was a sheer delight to watch commercial-free television. One must ask the question whether the CBC is flagellating itself for the sake of $180 million worth of advertising revenue per annum, when in fact it could be doing a better job and possibly save a lot of the money it spends in selling the advertising. In other words, the loss would not be $180 million if it was commercial-free or had fewer commercials than it does now.

I am not quite clear about the Hon. Member's comments in relation to the profit motive. I was suggesting that the CTV and Global-TV had a real privilege in having access to the air waves. As Canadian broadcasting undertakings, it could be said that they are not living up to what is reasonably expected of them, in terms of giving us a picture of ourselves as Canadians and contributing to Canadian culture and content.

Frankly, in the case of CTV, its efforts are almost negligible in that particular area.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, during the last Parliament there was a lot of discussion across the country about pornography. Some stations were applying to supply programs such as Playboy, which were very distasteful to the vast majority of Canadians. At that time, I sent representations to the then Minister of Communications. The answer I received every time was that the Minister generally agreed with what the people were saying, but that he had no authority. We had the situation in which an appointed board was overruling a Minister of the Crown. I thought it a very odd situation that an elected member of the Government would have to take orders from an appointed body. I would like to ask the Hon. Member, in a case where there is dispute over content, such as pornography, who should have the final say, the CRTC or the Minister representing the Government of Canada?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, again I think that is a good question and it is one which is difficult to answer. Of course, in our system the courts have the final say, if it is a matter of pornography, in the legal sense. I have some difficulty in answering where one goes beyond that. However, I believe that the Bill here would clearly empower the Government of the day to step in and, I would say hopefully, on a general rather than on a specific basis to decide that it is the wisdom of the Government of the day that the CRTC should get tougher on pornography and obscenity or, for that matter, it should loosen up the screws, because I think, really, things are becoming a bit ridiculous. I cannot help but remember the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) who came up with a statement today at two o'clock in order to deliver a paean of praise to profit and the profit motive. Of course, all that the people from Playboy would be guilty of, in his opinion, would be the fact that they were trying to make a profit. I am sure the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is in favour of that as well. One has to be careful because principles can conflict from time to time on issues such as this.

I do question whether a directive should go from the Government of the day to tell CTV not to run a particular show or to tell First Choice not to carry the Playboy channel, and so on, because I think with that kind of meddling we would get very quickly into a situation where in fact it would be the Government, not a commission at arm's length from Government, which would be making decisions which would affect the actual program content of particular TV stations. That kind of political interference with the media is something I would have to question seriously.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member really answered my question. In my view, where there is a dispute, surely the Government of the day should have the authority to settle it. The Government must take the responsibility, particularly with a Crown corporation. When we go outside of that, it may be a different problem.

I would also like to pose a question in connection with Canadian content. I have found that the cable company in part of my riding was subjected to severe criticism by CRTC for showing some American programs. However, the people of that area wanted those American programs. The only way the cable company could stay on the air was to give them the American programs. The same programs could be heard in Ottawa and Toronto and in all the big centres, but because it was a rural area, my constituents were being denied a chance to see the programs they wanted to see. I want to emphasize, along with what the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) said, that the people of the country should have some say in this. When the people of the country want certain programs then, surely, that should be the prime criterion. The people of the country are the ones we should be serving and when we have a majority of our people wanting certain programs and someone in CRTC or the Government says "No, no, we will tell you what's good for you. You can't have that at all", then we are getting pretty close to the type of government they have in Moscow, not the kind I want in Canada.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I find myself in agreement with the Hon. Member and in fundamental disagreement with him at the same time. His first argument was that his constituents should at least be able to get the same range of programming which is available in, say, Calgary, Edmonton, Toronto or Montreal. Given modern technology, that is feasible. The Hon. Member asked why on earth should they not have that rather than being confined to receiving CTV and CBC and not much else. That is a very reasonable request, and I agree with it.

However, the Hon. Member then proceeded to suggest that it is the duty of his Government to open the air waves in Canada to all kinds of trash from the United States, completely to submerge this country, which has stayed independent for about 124 years from our neighbour to the south, in such a bath of American pop culture and beyond that in fact any sense of Canadian identity would be completely submerged.

I cannot agree with that, Mr. Speaker, because I happen to be proud of being a Canadian and I happen to find that there are distinctive values and attributes to our life here in Canada which I want to see preserved. Our communication organizations and broadcasting networks are very important to me in maintaining a Canadian identity, and I would hate to see the Hon. Member getting together with members of his Party to do what he seems to want to do.

Perhaps I can say a final word. One of the problems of government these days is that governments have too much on their plate. That is one of the reasons why a Crown agency is set up. I would caution the Hon. Member against selling within his Party a doctrine that the Minister of Communications should second guess all decisions of the CRTC, because if the Minister of Communications and the Government decided to do that, they would never have time to do anything else.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is now over. We are resuming debate.

Mr. Taylor: I rise on a point of order then, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member mentioned things which I did not say. The people of my constituency are not asking for trash, and all the programming which comes from the United States is not trash. Some of the CBC programs are—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Taylor: I just wanted to correct that error.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I believe the Hon. Member for Bow River knows that that is a question of debate and not a point of order.

Before recognizing the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, I should draw the attention of the House to the procedure which applies in this situation. Standing Order 41 (2) and (3) makes it clear that a reply should be allowed to an Hon. Member who has moved a substantive motion and that in such cases, the Speaker shall inform the House that the reply of the mover of the original motion closes the debate. This rule has been extended to include the mover of the motion for the second reading of the Bill, and this can be verified by reference to Citation 305 (1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition.

Citation 305 (2) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition indicates that if a Member proposes a motion on behalf of another Member, a later speech by either will close the debate. This means that if a Minister moves the second reading of a Bill on behalf of another Minister, either Minister would have the right of reply. It might perhaps be logical to suppose that the Parliamentary Secretary in replying on behalf of his Minister, would enjoy the same right, but since the moving of a government Bill is reserved to a Minister of the Crown, we cannot take it for granted that a Parliamentary Secretary has the right to reply to the debate on a government Bill and that his speech will therefore close the debate.

We have among our precedents several instances where a Parliamentary Secretary has replied to a debate on behalf of his Minister. Having examined these precedents, some of which conflict with each other, I have come to the conclusion that the speech of the Parliamentary Secretary in such instances can close the debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. I would refer to a ruling of Mr. Speaker Michener on November 7, 1957.

He stated as follows:

> I recognize the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I must inform the House that if the minister were to speak now, as he was the mover of this motion, he would close the debate. I understand that the parliamentary assistant in the department is speaking in the minister's place with his authority. The rules do not appear to prescribe what consequence that has or whether it is permissible. However, I understand that the House previously has accepted the parliamentary assistant in similar circumstances and of course it is the privilege of the House to accept that position tonight.

After hearing the comments of two Hon. Members on this point of procedure, the Speaker added:

CRTC Act

> I raised the issue which has subsequently been spoken to by the two hon. members because I did not want to create a precedent which would necessarily be binding in the future. The House has accepted this practice in the past. There is one instance of it in the debates, at page 2918 of Hansard of April 18, 1955, where the parliamentary assistant rose on behalf of the minister and the Speaker informed the House that he would close the debate. I think it is preferable, as suggested by the hon. member for Macleod and the hon. member for Yorkton, that the House understand that the rule does not cover the matter exactly and that we proceed by leave of the House at this time and not by way of precedent.

In my view, Mr. Speaker Michener's interpretation of the procedure indicates the way we should proceed. The Parliamentary Secretary can wind up the debate with the unanimous consent of the House, otherwise, the Chair will be obliged to recognize any other Hon. Member who wishes to speak after the Parliamentary Secretary.

Now, as you may have noticed after my spontaneous ruling on this matter, it has been of some concern to the Chair as to whether at the beginning of this debate the Parliamentary Secretary may or may not wind up the debate for the Minister. This is the ruling of the Chair so everyone will understand. If the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Scott) is to speak to this Bill, he will be closing the debate. He can only do that with unanimous consent. Does the House give unanimous consent so the Parliamentary Secretary can resume debate?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, as I begin take two here, am I to understand that my intervention at this stage will not close the debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): That is correct.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Would the Speaker therefore like to inquire if any other Member wishes to intervene prior to my rising to speak on behalf of the Minister?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Does anyone else wish to resume debate on this Bill?

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the Hon. Member rising on a point of order or pursuing the debate?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I can see that the Parliamentary Secretary is asking you to rise and ask if any other Member wishes to speak and to give him the floor first. However, nothing in the Standing Orders provides that a Member must speak before another Member. There has not been unanimous consent for him to close the debate, but we can hear him out. Other Members in the House might wish to speak after him.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader rises on a point of order.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I think what is happening is that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister would like, if possible, to see himself as the last speaker as the Minister is not here. I understand there are a couple of other Members over on the other side who want to speak. He has not started in debate at this stage and I think that if anyone else wants to speak he or she might want to rise.

Mr. Orlikow: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Parliamentary Secretary cannot do what he seems to be trying to do. If he does not get up now and no other Member gets up, then the debate is concluded. However, you have made it very clear that he cannot be guaranteed that he is going to close the debate. I think the situation is as simple as that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Please let us have a clear understanding of what is going on. I have given my ruling concerning the conditions under which the Parliamentary Secretary may close the debate. It is only with unanimous consent, which I asked for, and which was not given. It is now up to the Parliamentary Secretary either to speak on the Bill or not to speak, and the matter is quite clear. If he wishes to close the debate later on, I presume that he may, as any other Member, ask once again for unanimous consent. But that is a matter that we will deal with at that time.

Does the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communicatons wish to resume debate?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No.

Mr. Dick: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. If I understand it correctly, when you recognized the Parliamentary Secretary earlier, it was on a point of order dealing with whether or not he would be able to close off debate. You have not recognized him, I believe, at this stage for debate because if you had, then of course he could not be recognized a second time at second reading stage. But if he has only been recognized for procedural reasons, then he can stay in his seat and rise in debate at a later stage if he likes.

Mr. Orlikow: If there is a debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I do not think it would be proper for us to get into a full debate on this, but may I point out once again that before the Parliamentary Secretary spoke I had clearly ruled that unanimous consent was necessary if he were to close the debate. I had recognized the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications. Unanimous consent was not given. Therefore, it is his right either to speak on the Bill or not. But one thing is clear: it will not close debate.

It was my duty at that time to advise the House of the consequences of the Parliamentary Secretary rising in debate. Unanimous consent was necessary, and the House has chosen not to permit the Parliamentary Secretary to close the debate.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, will the Parliamentary Secretary then have the right to rise later if he wants to do so in debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Yes.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand how he would have the right to rise later in debate when he has already been recognized for debate at the present time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Let us understand clearly that this ruling was prepared because we had foreseen this situation. The Chair intervened before the Parliamentary Secretary addressed this Bill to advise the House of the consequences of his speaking to the Bill and to ask for unanimous consent. The Chair having intervened, the Parliamentary Secretary has not addressed this Bill.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, that was indeed a very interesting interlude.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: For whom? Let me know when you are finished, Aideen, I will be right back.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You should be ashamed.

Miss Nicholson: I find that remark extremely offensive and unbecoming to the House Leader, who is normally very courteous.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was not intended that way; it was intended as a compliment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of factors covered in this CRTC Bill, but the one I want to comment on particularly is the increased direct control by the Government. There has been a long-standing policy in this country of trying to keep the cultural life of the country to some extent at arm's length from political decisions. This is a major change in policy which I think needs major examination, particularly when one looks at it in the context of the very deep cuts applied to the CBC and Canada Council which have had such an impact on the cultural life of our country as well as on the ability of young artists and technicians to earn a living.

We have all been receiving letters and briefs from cultural organizations and interested citizens. There is no need to repeat all of the arguments. One particularly cogent argument came in a copy of an open letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on public broadcasting from the Canadian Association for Adult Education. It reads in part: "Not since the CBC was first established by a Conservative Government more than 50 years ago has public broadcasting been more seriously threatened or been as essential in preserving the upper half of the North American continent as a proud and distinctive nation".

At the moment the CBC is facing a very bleak and uncertain future. Its radio and television budgets are being cut by $75 million. Special series will be shelved. Children's programming will be cut. This is extremely important to Canadians. We have heard a number of concerns in the House, and some of them have been raised by the Hon. Member from Newfoundland who is now chairing the special task force on parliamentary reform. He has been a very articulate and effective spokesman in the House for children's programming which is designed not to exploit children. It will be very sad if we start to lose control of that.

I represent a riding where a lot of young artists, musicians, actors and technicians live. The cuts in the CBC have essentially made them unemployable for the immediate future because their skills are not transferable. They cannot walk across the road and be hired by another radio or television station because this kind of hiring is not happening. Some of these young people are being forced out of the country. If a massive exodus of talent occurs, the whole country will be the poorer.

It is interesting to look at some of the statements which the Conservative Party made in its election platform. They are very different from what we are seeing at the moment. In August of 1984, the Canadian Conference of the Arts sent a questionnaire to the present Prime Minister. I will quote two statements which it was sent back. The first reads:

> We are committed to maintaining federal funding for the agencies and councils in line with inflation.

Another reply in the same questionnaire reads:

> We are committed to real growth in federal contributions to this sector.

In fact, the Government has neither maintained funding for agencies and councils in line with inflation, nor has it shown commitment to real growth in federal contributions. Instead, it has cut funding in the areas of arts, culture and communications to the extent of some $121 million. I can understand why the Parliamentary Secretary might prefer to speak at the end rather than during the course of this debate. He himself, when in opposition, vigorously defended the cultural communities. He must be somewhat embarrassed by the present situation.

Another response by the Conservative Party to the questionnaire of the Canadian Conference of the Arts reads as follows:

> Our commitment to improving the quality as well as the quantity of employment in the cultural sector is firm.

Yet, look at all the cuts we have seen and the people who have become unemployed recently. The cuts in the budget of CBC alone will result in 1,100 lay-offs. The present Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) said in the House that he would examine areas in which cuts are proposed to ensure that Canada's arts community is not exposed to cut-backs and that, on the contrary, funds allocated for creative work and production are increased. I hope that the Minister seriously meant that commitment which he made on November 29. If the Parliamentary Secretary does speak later on in this debate, I do hope that he will address that issue. This is a very serious matter for the cultural life of the country as well as for the individuals concerned and their ambitions and aspirations.

Another official response of the Conservative Party to the August, 1984 questionnaire of the Canadian Conference of the Arts was:

> We recognize the proven job creation capacity of the cultural sector and the training opportunities provided. We believe that federal programs such as those under the National Training Act have to be made accessible to this sector.

To the present we have not seen any job-training programs in the arts and cultural sector or any other sector. I look forward to hearing this issue as well addressed in the debate.

In December, 1984 the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) acknowledged the fact that the number of people occupied in artistic endeavours is growing faster than any other occupational group in the Canadian economy. Statistics in 1981 indicated that in the 10 years previous the number of people working in cultural occupations doubled, as compared with growth of some 30 per cent for all other occupations over the same period. It is rather puzzling that clearly some Ministers of the Government recognize that the artistic and cultural industries are growth industries, while the cuts give the impression, which I hope is misleading, that the Government regards cultural activities as a frill or luxury which can be dispensed with.

With regard to the arm's length relationship, a subject with which I started my comments, the response to the Canadian Conference of the Arts questionnaire of August 1984 reads as follows:

> We are committed without question to the arm's length principle and regard peer review as the most equitable and consistent mechanism for federal funding support to individuals, groups and institutions. The cultural agencies and councils are more able than politicians and bureaucrats to assess the need identified by the cultural sector . . .

It appears that there have been some changes in that position also since August 1984. We just heard one Conservative Member speak of the need for more direct ministerial control and management. Perhaps this could be explained to us as the debate continues.

In an interview with the Globe and Mail on November 29, 1984, the present Minister said that he wanted to rethink the arm's length principle. He said that his Government was moving rapidly to apply "a direct political hand" in the affairs of CBC. In the Bill before us we see a direct political hand being applied to the affairs of CRTC. There may be good reasons for this, but those reasons should be presented to us and should take into account the good reasons that existed in the past to do otherwise.

On November 19, the Prime Minister said in the House, "I am pleased to be able to confirm that the position of the federal Government in respect of the CBC and other groups will be to stay at arm's length at all times". One Conservative Member contributed to this debate by saying that the apparent contradiction was owing to different interpretations of arm's length. It is an important issue which needs to be clarified. There is too much at stake for it to remain fluid.

With respect to the question of consultation, one response to the questionnaire in August, 1984, was, "We will continue to consult with groups and individuals in the cultural sector on all aspects of policy development". However, the national Director of the Canada Council told reporters that the arts community was never consulted about budget reductions.

With regard to the CBC, three private sector consultants were hired by the Government and sent there to advise. Again, this is another fundamental change between August and December.

Let me return to the Parliamentary Secretary, who was quoted last June as saying that his Party wanted "to get away from the mentality of hand-outs symbolized by the Canada Council". Perhaps the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary was not quoted accurately, he will be able to explain that, but it is very puzzling that, on the one hand, there is a commitment to funding in the response to the questionnaire from the Canadian Conference of the Arts while, on the other hand, there is the statement that the Party is against "hand-outs".

In January of this year, a Conservative Member of Parliament asked the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) if it was correct to assume that one of the priorities for spending in the International Year of Youth would be cultural organizations. The Minister's reply was, "The Hon. Member would be mistaken in saying that it is a priority". Surely in the International Year of Youth, one must ask what is more important as an expression of youthful idealism and concern for the country than the cultural and artistic expressions of our youth? If such organizations are not a priority, how does that fit in with the election promises?

The previous Liberal Government sought to foster the cultural and artistic expression of Canadians and worked to ensure that this expression was transmitted to all Canadians. Since my own constituency is one where many people have low incomes, many of whom are struggling artists, I keep returning not only to the inherent value of cultural and artistic expression but also to the fact that many of the people involved are young and earn very little, even in good times and with considerable government support for the arts. In terms of people employed, the Canadian arts industry is the fourth largest in Canada, with 145,000 full-time employees. The arts industry is the sixth largest in Canada in terms of salaries and wages, which total approximately $2.5 billion.

In 1983, artistic revenues amounted to 2.4 per cent of the GNP. In the year 1983 to 1984, under a Liberal Government, the total appropriation for the cultural portfolio, exclusive of museum construction, was $1.2 billion. The estimated value of the cultural sector to the Gross National Product in 1981 was $11 billion. This is larger than textiles, chemicals and aviation combined.

The Liberal Government adopted recommendations of the Applebaum Committee, among others, into a framework for federal cultural policy, which included recognition that an appropriation role for the federal Government is the creation of a climate of creativity; that strong cultural industry be encouraged; and that this be accomplished through a partnership of effort with the creative community, other levels of government and the private sector.

In 1983 to 1984, several new policies were announced by the Liberal Government to promote further the cultural community in Canada. A broadcasting program production fund was created, which produced $250 million of federal funds to generate some $750 million worth of programs from the independent production sector over five years.

The CBC was to have 80 per cent Canadian programming and prime time programming by 1988, and 50 per cent of that program was to be purchased from independents. In May, 1984, a new role for the National Film Board was defined and a number of new forms of assistance for the marketing and promotion of Canadian films was announced.

In June, 1984, Revenue Canada announced acceptance of important recommendations made by a parliamentary committee regarding the application of tax law to artists and writers. The measures included making refunds to certain eligible artists and writers by limiting the effects of reassessments of their tax returns, allowing self-employed performing artists to deduct the cost of music, acting or other lessons to develop their talents.

Up to June, 1984, we saw consistent growth in the cultural industries in Canada, encouraged by successive Liberal Governments. Now we see the new Conservative Government making severe cuts in all of those programs, as well as introducing a Bill to amend the CRTC in such a way that it will allow for much more political direction.

These are very serious matters, particularly in view of high unemployment in this country. I hope that they will be addressed, and if the decisions have not been engraved in stone I hope the Minister will reconsider them as a result of this debate.

We have seen an interesting development in the last few weeks when, in an unprecedented show of unanimity, 21 organizations representing French and English Canada unveiled a collective statement urging the Minister of Communications to act swiftly in dealing with what they regard as a deepening crisis, which they say affects the very life and soul of Canada. In their statement, the group suggests that the future of Canadian programming with the CBC is in jeopardy. They have a number of very broad recommendations, many of which would return us to the situation that existed with the Liberal Government prior to the last election. They say that the central cultural organization in Canada is the CBC, which does not exist for itself but for all Canadians. "The institution is in crisis and thus the crisis touches us all". Their recommendation is that the Minister of Communications recommend that Parliament vote a special envelope of moneys of the CBC earmarked exclusively for independently-produced Canadian programming.

Whether or not Ministers find this particular solution attractive, it is my hope that they will consider very carefully the effect of the cuts in the cultural industries because allied to the proposed political control of the CRTC we are being presented with is a situation that has never existed in Canada before. The Government may have good reasons to justify such a very radical change but we have not yet heard them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): If there are no questions or comments, we will resume debate.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to make a few remarks on Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act and Radio Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry but I must interrupt the hon. gentleman because I have a matter of business to dispose of before five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45 to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Cultural affairs—Budgetary cut-backs. (b) Level of government funding; The Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud)—Tourism—Elimination of funding under Industrial and Regional Development Program. (b). Consultation with industry; The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre)—Post-Secondary Education—Youth—Budgetary cuts. (b) St. Valentine's Day conference—request that student representatives be permitted to attend.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATONS COMMISSION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Masse that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, we are in general support of this Bill but I do have a few comments on some of its provisions.

Part I gives the Minister the right to issue directives with regard to broad policy issues relating to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission. We support this. This part has a caveat which excludes anything to do with specific issuing or renewal of licences. We believe that is a very important exception. We think it is important that the Government should have the right to make these broad policy directives. It is also important that these directives are laid before the House of Commons and referred to a committee so they can be scrutinized in committee. This the Bill does. I think this is an important step and I want to recognize that.

There is one area in particular where our Party is concerned that the Government should be issuing a directive and that is in relation to the application by CNCP telecommunications to compete for long-distance services. This is not simply a specific, but a broad policy matter which I believe requires the attention of the Government. We want the Government to act on this because it affects the very important system of telephone use that we have built up in Canada where we have an extremely high number of Canadians who have access to telephones. For many Canadians the telephone is their lifeline. This is true for those who live in rural areas, for those who are handicapped in one way or another, and it is especially true for senior citizens.

We know that long-distance rates have been used to subsidize the operation of local phone services so they are available at reasonable rates. If we allow deregulation of long-distance rates, this will result in higher local rates and will mean that local phone service will in many cases be placed beyond the reach of many subscribers. This is an important area where the Government should be issuing a policy directive, and I hope we will be hearing from the Government very shortly. At the same time we are concerned about Clause 14.6 of the Bill which gives the Minister the power to exclude telephone and telegraph systems from regulations if, in the opinion of the Minister or the Commission, these services are already sufficiently competitive. We do not see this extension of the Minister's power as warranted or that it will serve the public interest.

We are in general agreement with the clause in Part II that attempts to regulate the use of satellite receivers. We see this as an important technological issue. The Government has been scrambling to catch up and to do some justice to individuals who have set up satellite receivers and at the same time not to open up the system so that the whole question of regulation of broadcasting would go by the board. Again, we would issue a plea to the Government to give every consideration to small and isolated communities which depend upon these satellite receivers for any kind of decent TV reception.

One of the areas in the Bill that is extremely important and that we in this Party are pleased to see is Clause 3 which adds the following paragraph to the Broadcasting Act. It reads:

the programming provided by the Canadian Broadcasting system should respect and promote the equality and dignity of all individuals, groups or classes of individuals regardless of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability;

We are glad to see that clause in the Bill because we know it is directly the result of the very strenuous work of the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who in the last Parliament was very active in bringing the whole question of broadcasting that was abusive to women and pornographic to the attention of Members of Parliament and the Canadian public in general. She was very active in pushing this issue and I am glad to see the Government is taking action, although, as the Member herself has said in commenting, it would be better if the wording read that the Canadian broadcasting system "must" respect and promote equality rather than "should".

In addition to these specific comments about the Bill, I have some broad concern about broadcasting in Canada, in particular the $85 million worth of cuts announced in the budget of the CBC, being a 9.5 per cent portion of its proposed budget. I hope all Members in the House would agree that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is very important to Canadian unity and to our sense of a Canadian identity. I am pleased to see that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Scott) agrees, and I hope he can bring other members of his Party on side because we face very strong cultural pressures from the United States. Some of these pressures are positive and some are negative. Regardless of whether they are positive or negative, it makes it very difficult for us to resist those pressures if we are dealing on a straight commercial basis. Profit motive has its place no doubt in such things as broadcasting and in the cultural area as in other areas of our society, but the profit motive is not in itself sufficient to protect Canadian unity and Canadian identity from the kinds of pressures we receive from our powerful neighbour to the south. It is important that we have a strong CBC.

It is interesting that while there have been some criticisms of the CBC for being inefficient, the last study that was conducted some seven years ago by McKinsey and Company came to the following principal conclusions:

1. Judging by hours produced in relation to expenditures and numbers of employees, the CBC is an efficient and productive organization compared to other public broadcasters.

It compares the CBC with public broadcasters in other parts of the world.

2. The corporation carries out its mandate with fewer resources than could the aggregate Canadian private sector as it is now constituted. Where the CBC incurs higher costs in individual program areas, it is generally due to the corporation's interpretations of its mandate responsibilities, rather than to inefficiency.

Quite apart from the question of economic efficiency, we need to recognize that the CBC cannot be judged entirely on the basis of the ratio between its costs and the size of the listening or viewing audience. It serves a wider and more important function in terms of Canadian society. My Party believes that the CBC serves a function that cannot be met by private outlet. For example, we can consider the question of what is news and how we determine what gets reported.

I heard a very interesting commentary over the CBC this morning by Barry Zwicker. He was talking about the Eaton strike and said that apart from The Toronto Star, The Globe and Mail and the CBC, there is a virtual blackout in the news media with respect to that strike against seven Eatons stores in Ontario. The facts of that strike are not getting out to the Canadian public.

While a lot of private publishing and broadcast corporations talk a great deal about freedom of expression, Mr. Zwicker pointed out that the Standard Broadcasting Company refused to carry Ontario Federation of Labour advertisements regarding the Eaton strike. This raises some serious questions about what freedom of the press really means when you have large corporations with interlocking directorates having power over broadcasting corporations. When we look at issues like that, it is important that we have a public broadcasting system such as the CBC.

If freedom of the press is going to mean anything, we need to have a strong and independent CBC. That does not mean that the CBC will be immune from criticism. I am very unhappy about some of the cuts it is making in programming, for example cutting the program Our Native Land. That is the one program that gives information about Indians, Metis and Inuit people on a regular basis to communities across Canada. Canadians should express their views about that very strongly. I hope the CBC administration will be responsive to that kind of representation. I believe at the same time that the CBC has to be independent.

With those comments, I will close by saying that we regard this Bill largely in a favourable light. There are some amendments that I am sure my colleagues will be moving in committee, but I thank you for this opportunity to speak.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Member before me speak on government action or government directives to bodies like the CRTC, stating that his Party was in favour of that sort of contact between the Government and the broadcasting bodies of this country. At the same time, he outlined with some degree of passion and sincerity the problems that we have witnessed in recent CBC cuts to the tune of $85 million. I am curious to know how the Member can speak to both those items. From where I sit, they seem to be in direct opposition. If we are to give this Government the direct mandate to dictate to a far greater degree than in the past, what assurances does the Member have that we will not see the same devastating cuts that we have been experiencing of late? What assurance does he have that this Government will protect the broadcasting and cultural agencies across this country?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question. I do not have any assurance that this Government is going to protect the independence of the CBC. The cultural cut-backs we have seen, not only to the CBC but to other cultural agencies, bother me a great deal. They say they are independent of the cuts they have received from the Government, but I am not too sure they are.

The first responsibility of the Government is to ensure that the CBC has adequate funding to carry out its mandate. Second, Members of Parliament have a responsibility to be vigilant in ensuring that the Government does not interfere in a ham-handed fashion with the CBC so that it is able to maintain its independent existence. At the same time, the Government has the responsibility for being able to issue broad policy directives to the CRTC.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief comment on my colleague's speech. He mentioned the plans of the CBC to cut the program Our Native Land. I wonder how a Government that claims to be interested in the people who are in greatest need in this country, which claims to be committed to consulting before taking action, can stand idly by while executives from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation slash a program that is crucial to the native community in this country. Native people are spread across this land in small populations. This program has been one way of developing a sense of national community among native people. It serves as a vital commission link for native people. I am glad my colleague mentioned that in his comments. I wish the Government would wake up and make clear its priorities and the fact that it will not stand for this kind of savage cutting of programs that people need.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to reinforce the comment of my colleague and underline the fact that if there are going to be these budget cuts, we will be seeing program cuts that are very detrimental to the Canadian public.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. Does he believe it is possible that the CRTC could retain its independence and at the same time have the Government establish a control over the kind of cuts that can be made in programming? If so, how would that be possible?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, we were very concerned about the way in which the Minister of Communications interfered with the CRTC in cutting some of the programs. He indicated the way in which he wanted the cuts to be implemented. The Government's responsibility is to provide adequate funding, as I said before, so that the CBC can carry out its mandate.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ADVISABILITY OF ENACTING CAR EMISSION CONTROLS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should proclaim for the 1987 car models, the same car emission controls already in place in the United States, and to educate consumers and the public in order to reduce nitrous oxide in gasoline by 1987.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your having called this Bill. As we all know, we have only one environment and it is one that we wish to preserve. We also realize that if we damage environment at the rate we are now going, there will be little left for us and for future generations to enjoy in the manner in which we have enjoyed the environment so far.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, acid rain is slowly but surely killing our lakes, rivers, forests, agricultural lands, structures and buildings and the very air that we breathe. Car emissions contribute to acid rain. Our economy depends so much on our natural resources. Therefore, our common goal must be to clean up this stuff that we emit into the air.

Pollution is not partisan; it affects every one of us. It affects the health of people we love; our wives and husbands, children and grandchildren. It affects the weak and the strong, the rich and the poor. It does not discriminate. For these reasons, I call on the Government to proclaim for the 1987 car models at least the same car emission controls already in place in the United States, and to generate support among consumers and the public in order to get their full co-operation in reducing nitrogen oxide emissions in cars sold and used in Canada as of the year 1987.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) must intervene in the present departmental squabble between four departments. Two of these departments would like to move fast, and these are the Department of the Environment and the Department of National Health and Welfare. Two are dragging their feet namely, the Department of Transport and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has been evasive and non-committal. The Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard), as we heard last Friday during Question Period, does not know about this important file. Both Minister seem to shift their responsibility for making a decision to that forlorn, uninspired Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) whose commitment to the environment matches that of a blind horse.

Consultations took place in 1984. Now it is up to the politicians to decide. There is a division of views, and it is up to the Prime Minister to keep his environmental promises. I submit, Sir, that he must act. If he wants to maintain his credibility, he must act decisively and boldly. This is why we on this side of the House urge him to set 1987 as the target year in which United States nitrogen oxide standards will apply to automobiles sold and used in Canada.

Nitrogen oxides are formed in the combustion process. In 1980, North American man-made nitrogen oxide emissions totalled some 21.3 million tonnes, 1.7 million tonnes of which were produced in Canada. Our nitrogen oxide emissions come primarily from the transportation sector. In Canada, automobile emissions account for some 21 per cent of all man-made nitrogen oxide emissions. Our nitrogen oxide emissions are small in comparison to those of the United States but they are a cause of concern.

Nitrogen oxide has several direct effects which I would like to outline for you today, Mr. Speaker. First, nitrogen oxides are capable of damaging human respiratory tissue. Although it is difficult to find direct evidence correlating the level of nitrogen oxides with health deterioration because it is a gradual process, there are acknowledged side effects such as increased appearances of bronchitis, asthma and other lung disorders. There is evidence as well that nitrogen oxide threatens the central nervous system and brain functions and causes hypertension, eye and skin irritations and can even induce skin cancer. Again, children are the most affected.

Nitrogen oxides and hydrocarbons reacting with sunlight form a substance called ozone, which in turn is a major component of smog. We know that ozone affects human health as it affects vegetation and man-made materials. We know that ozone aggravates lung problems. We know that children are more sensitive to ozone than adults and that people with respiratory problems are most sensitive to ozone. We know that correlations have been made between hospital admissions for respiratory problems and ozone concentrations in southwestern Ontario. I would like to refer you, Mr. Speaker, to a most excellent study just completed by Dr. Payne of British Columbia on the basis of charts and data he has compiled supplied to him by the Ontario hospital insurance services.

Second, in agriculture we find that nitrogen oxides in the form of ozone affect the growth and health of plants. Scientists are telling us that the damage to agriculture amounts to losses of approximately $2 billion a year, and in Ontario alone, the average annual loss is estimated at between $20 million and $50 million. The crops affected include corn, wheat, potatoes, soybeans, tomatoes, onions, cucumbers, lettuce, white beans and tobacco.

Third, nitrogen oxides find their way into acid rain, and these emissions contribute about 30 per cent to acid precipitation. During the winter months, they contribute up to 50 per cent. The sulphur dioxide emissions make up the balance of acid rain composition in Canada, but because the emissions of nitrogen oxide convert to nitrates in the atmosphere, they fall back to earth in the form of rain, snow or dust. During the summer months, these nitrates are absorbed by plants and trees. During the winter months, they accumulate in the snowpack. When the snow melts, the acid from nitrates and sulphates is released into our streams and eventually into our lakes. In spring when the life cycle of many aquatic species begins, this can kill the eggs of frogs, salamanders and fish.

An important step in reducing acid rain is further control over the emissions of cars by installing a three-way catalytic converter in each car. This has been done successfully in the United States. In Canada today, many cars already run with a three-way catalytic converter. In a front-page article in the Toronto Star which appeared a couple of days ago, it was reported that the cost of a catalytic converter to the consumer is assessed at about $200.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that in 1981, Environment Canada began assessing the effects of improved automobile emissions standards. In September, 1982, Environment Canada announced in The Canada Gazette that automobile emission standards would be examined. An inter-departmental project review group, which included officials from Transport Canada, Energy, Mines and Resources and Environment Canada, was formed to undertake work in this area. Public meetings were hosted and studies were completed. Reports have assessed the costs and benefits of introducing automobile emission standards. We are now waiting for a political decision to be made.

The President of the Canadian Motor Vehicle Manufacturers' Association is reported as saying that there is no evidence to show that further controls are necessary. Then the petroleum industry seems to be concerned of all things about the fact that the catalytic converter does not permit the use of leaded gasoline. What a pathetic duet! Why is it that industry fails all the time to take up the challenge implied in the fundamental principle that the environment, be it air, water, forest or soil, must be protected and that the cost to society is greater if action is postponed?

To understand the importance of using unleaded gasoline, we must also take into consideration health and the environment. If unleaded gasoline is used, the environment is protected because lead is not emitted. The pressure which has been put by the lead industry comes from people who have decided to ignore the adverse health effects of leaded gasoline. Medical research has found that children are the most at risk because of the lead which is found in their blood.

The symptoms of lead in blood include damage to kidneys, liver, the reproductive system, blood circulation and production, and the brain function. A study was prepared by the Office of Policy Analysis of the United States Environmental Protection Agency which showed that there is a direct link between lead in blood levels and lead in gasoline. It is for these health reasons that the use of lead in gasoline must be reduced.

Canadian consumers should be made aware of the cars which are not friendly to the environment, and thus to our health. It is unfortunate that certain car manufacturers promote the use of leaded gasoline. Imported car companies promote it and, until recently, Chrysler did as well. The imported cars which promote the use of leaded gasoline are: Honda, with 14 models; Hyundai, with five models; Nissan, with eight models; Porsche, with one model; Renault, with one model; Skoda, with three models; and Suzuki, with one model. It should be noted that these cars can run on unleaded gasoline. In fact, that has been the case since 1974. Manufacturers' marketing strategy is to sell cars, and obviously it is made easier if they can say it is cheaper to run cars on leaded gasoline.

The time has come for the environmentally-concerned consumer to make a choice. The choice is between using a car which pollutes the air with lead and nitrogen-oxide, thus contributing to health problems and acid rain, or using a less polluting car that uses only unleaded gasoline and is equipped with a three-way catalytic converter. The moment of truth has come for those who really want a cleaner environment. Canadian and foreign manufacturers would get the message from consumers if consumers shifted their preference to cars which use unleaded gasoline and are equipped with three-way catalytic converters. Yes, many people who want to buy a car must consider what they can buy with the money which is available. Yes, many of the smaller cars—the less expensive cars—run on leaded gasoline. But if one shops carefully, one can find a car model on the market today which fits the pocketbook and protects the environment.

Environmental groups, consumer groups, teachers, politicians, editorial writers and media people can be most helpful in getting this message across to the public at large. But first the Conservative Government must keep its promises on the environment. It is the responsibility of the Minister of Transport to announce the regulations which will better control Canada's automobile emissions. The Government must give leadership if it is to convince Canadian people that it is truly committed to reducing acid rain in Canada. Then the educational program can get under way so that the public too can help to reduce nitrogen-oxide emissions and lead poisoning.

In this joint effort, we must include the support of labour. We must reassure our workers that programs will be developed which will be geared toward their needs and aspirations. It should be explained that the jobs which could be lost in the lead manufacturing industry could be offset by an increase of jobs in the refining industry. In addition, jobs will also be created in the design and construction of additional refining facilities over the next three or four years. That will be necessary in order to produce and make unleaded gasoline available to the market.

Further, provincial Governments must do their share in preventing misfuelling. Reports have shown that there has been an increase in the use of leaded gasoline in vehicles designed to use unleaded gasoline. By way of misfuelling, the public should be made aware that it undermines the program to reduce lead. In Nova Scotia, legislation was introduced which prohibited the use of smaller nozzles on leaded gas pumps. In Ontario, legislation was introduced which made it illegal to operate a vehicle with catalytic equipment which was misfuelled with leaded gasoline.

It is clear in the Gallup polls, and in general conservation with the public, that Canadians want to protect the environment. Canadians are also willing to carry their share, economically and financially, in cleaning up the environment. Therefore, the additional cost for the installation of a three-way catalytic converter would be acceptable to the average car owner who is faced with a choice.

We must introduce regulations which will reduce pollution. Federal and provincial Governments must be firm in this respect. They have the support of the Public. The benefits will go to future generations of Canadians, because economic and environmental values go hand in hand.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in the debate this afternoon, and I believe we all welcome an early opportunity to deal with this sensitive question. I would like to reply to the motion of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) which, in effect, calls upon the Government to proclaim for 1987 car models the same automotive emission standards which are in place in the United States, and to eliminate the use of toxic additives in the mix.

I understand that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) have been grappling with this most important and vital issue for some time. I would remind the Hon. Member that the Minister of Transport has told the House that the matter is currently under active consideration by him and his Cabinet colleagues, and that we can expect an announcement of their decision in due course. Indeed, the Minister has used the phrase, "very soon".

It is not necessary to remind the Hon. Member of the fact that this issue is technically complex and touches such diverse interests that it requires very careful consideration. The technical reports, the work of consultants which have been contracted by the Department of the Environment, and the work of the Department's officials now form part of a growing, but to some degree not yet sophisticated, body of resource and research opinion. The preparation of those reports and the work which has led to them, on the other hand, Mr. Speaker, has taken considerably longer than, I am sure, was envisaged or expected by the Hon. Member for Davenport in his previous capacity. I think that is precisely because of the complexity of the issues, and we do not find fault with that. I believe the former Minister might have, in his own mind, wished it could have moved much faster, but in fact when he got into it, he discovered that it was, indeed, a very complex issue which was going to take considerably longer than he had earlier hoped. Indeed, the House subcommittee on acid raid noted in its last report in June of 1984 that the reports for the Department of the Environment itself were produced considerably behind schedule.

Then, as the Hon. Member no doubt recalls better than most of us, the previous Government belatedly recognized the diversity of the groups which were directly and indirectly concerned in this very vital question. The medical professions and private industry both had something to say on the issue and decided that their wishes should be heard. However, that Government's notion of consultation was rather radically different from that which has since been introduced by the present Government. The previous Minister of Transport planned for each group to present its views to a panel of officials behind closed doors. No group could hear the other's arguments, nor could they defend themselves. One of the most important of the groups, the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain, expressed its outrage at this mockery of the consultation process and refused even to attend the so-called hearings, although it had previously submitted significant amounts of basic information and comments.

One of the first actions of the present Minister of Transport was to move to rectify this problem, by inviting representations of interest groups at completely open and public hearings. These were duly held at the beginning of December last. Submissions were received from some 30 individuals and associations. The proceedings were open to the media and were transcribed verbatim. Such transcripts now form part of the public record. Many of those making submissions, particularly the associations representing concerned citizens, welcomed with enthusiasm this innovative injection of open consultation into the policy-making process.

An important part of any discussion, Mr. Speaker, about imposing more stringent limits on automotive exhaust emissions, is to understand the difference in regulatory authority for automobiles and fuels and the combustion process which occurs in the engines of cars. The Hon. Member for Davenport has touched on this in brief, and so will I. Gasoline produces heat and pressure on ignition in an internal combustion engine, as well as waste products such as unburned hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide and nitrogen oxides. The volumes of these waste products emitted by the engines depends, of course, on the efficiency of that very combustion process. The complete combustion in internal combustion engines, if it could be achieved economically, would reduce the exhaust products to relatively harmless carbon dioxide and water. State of the art emission control technology is now designed to control electronically the efficiency of the combustion process in the engine.

Transport Canada's road safety and motor vehicle regulation branch in Ottawa has prescribed exhaust emission standards. The Governor in Council, under the authority of the Clean Air Act, on advice from the Minister of the Environment, also can prescribe standards for fuels and regulate the maximum concentration of any fuel additives which may be injurious to personal health.

The emission standards imposed some 10 years ago, in January 1975, limit exhaust emissions of unburned hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide and nitrogen oxides. Since 1975, motor vehicle manufacturers have found that the most practical way of meeting Canadian emission standards has been through relatively simple catalytic converters in automotive exhaust systems. Provisions are made in catalytic converter equipped cars to ensure the vehicles use only lead-free gasoline. We all know that prolonged use of leaded gasoline will poison the catalysts themselves and render them somewhat useless. As new models of automobiles have been introduced in Canada over the years, an increasing number have burned unleaded fuel, and it is interesting to note that probably some time next year 90 per cent of the motor vehicles on our highways will in fact be burning unleaded fuels.

I would like to deal for a moment, Mr. Speaker, with those who made submissions at the public consultations and suggest that they represented all sides of this very complex issue. The diversity of their interests shows very clearly just how important the issue is and how strongly held are the opinions with respect to it. Submissions came from groups of citizens who are concerned about environmental pollution, such as STOP, an environmental organization based in Montreal; Friends of the Earth, a national and international organization; and, of course, the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain. Each of these groups raised their concerns about the health effects of automobile exhaust emissions, particularly in cities. The Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain also submitted its concerns about the contribution of those emissions to acid rain, and demonstrated the breadth of interest by collaborating in its coalition with individual submissions from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, Tourism Ontario, the United Auto Workers and the United Church of Canada.

Advice on the particular implications of the issue for the health of children was given by the Canadian Association for Children and Adults with Learning Disabilities, and by the Canadian Council on Children and Youth. Both of these bodies drew attention in their submissions to the vulnerability of children to health impairment from excessive exposure to exhaust gases and to residual lead from leaded gasoline.

Three Hon. Members of this House made personal representations at the hearing: the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), the Hon. Member for Davenport, and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). A municipal government representative, the Mayor of the District Municipality of Muskoka, brought to the hearings the opinions of her constituents in one of the areas of Canada most affected by the threat from acid rain. Two academic scientists, public-spirited atmospheric chemists, also presented evidence on their own behalf, attempting to offer the Government an impartial and independent assessment of some of the complex issue of the chemistry of air pollution and acid rain formation.

Finally, the interests of Canadians as consumers were also represented by the Canadian Automobile Association. That association brought to the hearings the very different perspective of the interests of Canadians as motorists, emphasizing the wishes of its members to minimize the cost of motoring. Its submission reminds us that our objectives of safeguarding the health of Canadians and reducing acid rain can only be met if we are really prepared to accept the personal cost in dollars and cents which is required, and we know it to be staggering.

There are also the interests of private industry which could be most directly affected by this decison. Those appearing at the hearings represented substantial segments of the industries important to Canada, the motor vehicle manufacturing industry and the oil refining industry. Once again, the transcripts of their submissions remind us of the complexity of the issues. As we all know, representatives of the motor vehicle industry would not welcome further major regulation of their activities and the costs they consider uncalled for, and they said so. But the opinions of the domestic motor vehicle manufacturers are not identical to those of the automobile importers as they would be affected differently. Officials of the oil refining industry, on the other hand, mainly represented at the hearings by an association, showed us in their submission that this industry also considers tightened standards unwarranted and unnecessarily expensive.

Again, an alternative viewpoint was also heard, this time from the Canadian Renewable Fuels Association. That is a coalition of companies involved in such fields as grain production, brewing and forestry, which foresees the possibility of the lucrative Canadian industry producing gasoline blended with alcohol which could in itself also significantly lower exhaust emissions.

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that the transcripts of the hearing, for anyone who wants to review them, show that the interests in this issue are many and varied. These hearings allowed them to be aired and allowed public questioning of the facts and interpretations used to support the various positions put forward. This was the final stage of gathering evidence, and innovative stage which I have suggested and which I endorse as, in all matters, being essential to the efficiency of the process.

The consultation produced a substantial debate on the scientific basis for any such decision, that is, on the extent of damage to health and the environment by exhaust gases and on the size of the contribution by exhaust emissions to acid rain. The reports prepared for the Department of the Environment also show clearly that these issues remain unresolved within the scientific community. Research into many of the important factors is apparently in its infancy, although we are doing much to correct that. The question raised in the scientific debate is whether the exhaust emissions at issue are in fact harmful in Canadian conditions. The consultant to the Department of the Environment attempted to summarize the extent of scientific evidence on the health effects in Canada but could not provide any estimates of the extent of impairment from current vehicle emissions. The effects are apparently quite subtle and have so far defied the attempts of Canadian scientists to reveal and define them adequately.

The debate about the ozone formation is particularly interesting. Here again we have an argument which says that if we reduce emissions, the ozone layer may increase. On the other hand, if we do not reduce emissions, the ozone eventually will have a serious effect on our life. Which body of thought is correct? I think those are some of the things that concern us.

Another important conflict in the scientific evidence is that of the extent of the contribution by motor vehicle exhaust emissions to acid rain. If the Hon. Member for Davenport bothered to re-read some of the submissions, he would find that there is a conflict in the scientific community about the impact of reduced emissions on the creation of ozone, but I will leave that to his own homework.

Mr. Caccia: Not in Canada. You talk like a Reagan official.

Mr. Forrestall: Apparently there is substantial agreement that the nitric acid component of acid rain is normally absorbed by the environment in Canada, which is largely nitrogen deficient. The problem arises, and I am no scientist, but as I read it, from the build-up of acids in the snowpack during our winters. This produces spring shock, the sudden release of acidity into our lakes and streams. This is harmful to all our fish and animal life, and nitric acid may be just as bad as sulphuric acid if it is dumped in this sudden shock method. What the scientific community disagrees about is the extent to which motor vehicle exhaust emissions contribute nitric acid in the sensitive areas of the country in such a way that it accumulates in the snowpack, and whether the nitric acid in the snowpack actually remains in the streams or is absorbed in the spring run-off by plants and fauna along the banks. Again, the research to date does not lead to an unequivocal finding that the effect is either large or small, and there are adherents to both points of view.

Mr. Caccia: You are way off the beam, for heaven's sake.

Mr. Forrestall: I could give many further examples of the conflicts in the scientific evidence, but I think the point is made.

Mr. Caccia: Who wrote that stuff?

Mr. Forrestall: The technical issues remain complex, indeed so complex the scientific community has not been able upon the nature, size and effects of automobile exhaust emissions or, indeed, on the improvements to be obtained from reducing them individually through tighter standards.

Mr. Caccia: That is not so.

Mr. Forrestall: That is a fact. The one thing scientists will agree upon is the necessity for further research to understand this phenomenon so that we might deal with it over time properly and adequately. Many of the groups who make submissions on this issue have strongly supported future research. We do as well.

Mr. Caccia: Those who want inaction, paid by the companies.

Mr. Forrestall: The Canadian Automobile Association urged the Department of the Environment to expand its work in monitoring air quality and its research into the effects of pollution. The Association also urged motor vehicle manufacturers to greater effort in the development of emission control systems.

Let me raise another point, Mr. Speaker. I would like to emphasize that this issue is not one for the federal Government to consider alone. The federal Government can control the performance of new motor vehicle designs as manufactured and imported, and we will. But those efforts must be supported by the provinces and indeed, all automobile owners, including ourselves, to ensure the proper operation of our cars. Each and every one of us must make sure that we maintain in good working order the built-in emission control systems.

Car owners have the responsibility to ensure the safe and effective operation of their vehicles. All provincial Governments have to ensure that mechanical staff in automobile service centres look after the proper replacement and maintenance of defective automobile and light truck emission controls. I concur with the Minister of Transport in his view that a decision on the need for more stringent emission standards needs careful study and evaluation of the costs and benefits.

Mr. Caccia: Shame. That would not be supported by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling).

Mr. Forrestall: The Ministries of Transport, Environment, Energy, Regional Industrial Expansion, and Health and Welfare are all dealing with this most crucial issue. I am confident they will be announcing an appropriate decision and one which the Hon. Member for Davenport, whose Bill is in front of us, will warmly accept. Thank you for allowing me to participate in your debate.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I will begin by saying that I support the proposal contained in the Private Member's Bill we are debating. I hope that very soon we will see an announcement by the Government in this area. However, I must say that some of the optimism I allowed myself in the last few weeks about an announcement by the Government concerning adopting auto emission standards at least equivalent to what pertains in the United States has seeped away, shall we say, as I listened to the kind of arguments put forward by the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

A week or so ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that if we wanted to bargain with the United States with respect to acid rain, we ought to have clean hands when we go to the bargaining table. That was a sentiment I had expressed in the House just about a week before the Prime Minister said that. I got up and encouraged the Government to proceed with an announcement on auto emission standards, among other things, so that when President Reagan met with the Prime Minister on March 17 and talked about acid rain, he would have something concrete to point to. The President of the United States would not be in a position to say that with respect to nitrous oxide emissions we have not even caught up with the United States. I still hope that we will have that kind of announcement from the Government before March 17, in spite of the tone of some of the arguments which were being advanced by the Hon. Member on the government side. It is important to show that we are willing to clean up our own back yard. That was a good sentiment expressed by the Prime Minister. I hope that in the near future he will show that he really means that by making an announcement on auto emission standards and by providing concrete funds with respect to the arrangement on acid rain made between the federal Government and the provinces. If the Prime Minister does that, we will know that this is not simply another public relations exercise on the eve of a presidential visit or just an attempt to placate the environmental concerns of Canadians.

I would like to comment on the statement made by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) that pollution is not partisan. Any truly important issue is not partisan to the extent that everyone must transcend his or her own particular self-interest and attempt to see the larger context. However, issues are partisan in the true sense of the word in that there are a number of different ways in which to solve any given problem. To the extent that we argue with one another here about the best approach to the solution, we are going to disagree with each other. I feel that it is needlessly pious to say that this is a non-partisan matter. There are some very serious economic, ideological and political questions involved in the issue of acid rain. To pretend that there are not is in fact political stance which is an attempt to avoid the difficult political questions which attend this issue as well as others.

The political stance of the Liberal Party is to avoid the difficult ideological and philosophical questions which attend the environmental issue in the same way as they successfully encourage Canadians to see the questions of security and disarmament in the same non-ideological and non-partisan way. Canadians want to believe that is the case. I understand that. However, I suggest to all Members that we do a disservice to the need for a good debate on these difficult topics when we fall for the illusion that there are not difficult political and ideological questions that must be faced in these issues.

Although it may seem strange, in a way I may actually prefer a Minister of the Environment who makes no pretence about being concerned about the environment. Every time she rises in her place to speak about the environment, she talks about the deficit and the economic strategies of the Government. She sees her role of Minister of the Environment as being instrumental to the Government's over-all economic strategy. She is very honest and upfront about that. I do not think Hon. Members should be upset about that, particularly the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), who has made a point of criticizing decisions made by the Minister of the Environment. Perhaps he would like me to dwell on that for a minute.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the Member is from Manitoba, he will know perfectly well that accuracy is important. He will know that my complaint was with respect to some information given to the Minister rather than about the Minister.

Mr. Blaikie: With all due respect, that is neither a point of order nor is it accurate. We know that the Hon. Member for Strathcona was complaining about certain judgments made by the Minister and certain information that she received. I did not want to dwell on that. If the Hon. Member wishes, we can spend some time discussing the deficiencies in the Government's wildlife program which he himself pointed out. I would rather talk about the fact that it may be preferable to have a Minister who indicates that she sees the decisions which she is making in her Department as relevant to a particular economic strategy which we disagree with, rather than to a long-term strategy for the environment. That may be preferable to the very high-sounding speeches on acid rain and a number of other topics that we so often got from the Liberals. Yet, whenever the crunch came, they were obedient to the same economic arguments, the same bureaucratic mentality, and the same limited view of the world to which the present Government appears to be obedient. There is a level of honesty over there which one can almost appreciate in a strange and ironic way.

Pollution is a political issue on two levels. The first, of course, is credibility. The personal concern for the environment of the Hon. Member for Davenport goes back to the days before he was Minister of the Environment. I remember reading his householders. He devoted a lot of time to that issue. I think the Hon. Member has some personal credibility on this issue. However, the Liberal Party, the Liberal Government, and this Member, is so far as he speaks for the Liberal Party, have no credibility in this area as far as I am concerned.

We now have a Private Member's Bill encouraging the Government to do something that the Member, as Minister of the Environment, could have done only months ago. We are not privy to the mysterious internal workings of the Liberal caucus, Cabinet and bureaucracy. It may be that the Member wanted to do that. Only when he has retired from politics and allows the archives to release his personal correspondence will we learn what he truly tried to do while he was Minister of the Environment. The record tells us that the Liberal Party did not do what it is now saying the present Government should do. The Government should do it now. It should show that it is different from the Liberals in this regard. I hope that that announcement will be forthcoming.

Pollution is also political to the extent that very difficult ideological questions are involved. We see here the limits to the small "l" liberal approach to politics. We are so used to politics, particularly in Canada and particularly through the agency of the Liberal Party, being the politics of brokerage and conflict solving. We have many groups that want different things. The role of Government is to manage that conflict and to ensure that every group gets a little piece of the action according to how much pressure it generates, how strong a lobby group it is, and various other elements of the political process as we have known it. There are limits to that kind of politics.

The acid rain issue does not belong to any identifiable group of people. We cannot point to a particular group of people that will be harmed if we do nothing about acid rain. These environmental questions apply to everyone. They apply to the health of society, the planet and the future as a whole. That is why I believe, with respect to this issue and others, that we are at the limits of liberal politics.

We can take another course, which is the one the Government has basically decided to take. Rather than try to manage the conflict, it is trying to subsume all of these issues under a larger and strictly economic context. While the Department of the Environment never was particularly strong, its role has become even more subservient to the fiscal strategies of the Government. As a result of the cut-backs to that Department, the environment is becoming simply a part of a larger economic package in which the right signals are being sent out to the private sector in order to create a certain investment climate.

I have spoken before about how that approach conforms with the larger package of signals that the Government is sending to the private sector, such as deregulation of the environment, postponement of Labour Code amendments and a willingness to cut social spending rather than strengthening tax reforms, as well as various other signals being sent out by the Government.

The Progressive Conservatives' approach to the environment is to make it subservient to the other economic goals and thereby postpone the inevitable day when the environmental questions will involve fundamental economic questions about what is at the root of our problems in this country with respect to productivity and profitability.

The Government is attempting to postpone that day of reckoning in the hope that it can entice the private sector to recreate the post-war economic boom and somehow recapture the fifties through the right economic signals. It is already clear that that will not happen.

I understand the Government's desire, but such an era has come and gone and will not return. We must begin to re-evaluate our views about the economy and the environment in such a way that they will finally come together.

One reason why I am a member of the New Democratic Party is that I do not believe that the questions of the environment can be solved within the context of the profit motive. I would not have anything to do with the Progressive Conservative Party because its world view does not permit it to deal with these kinds of problems.

It will be impossible to deal with these environmental questions as long as we are dominated by an economic philosophy that makes the intermediate and short-term profit needs of the corporate or any other sector the priority. We will never be able to address environmental questions if we are held to that particular view of the world.

Mr. Kilgour: That is not our view and you know it.

Mr. Blaikie: That is the view that the Progressive Conservative Party is in bondage to. I do not think anyone would argue with me about that—at least anybody who knows anything about the Progressive Conservative Party.

Eastern European countries, which do not have the profit motive, still have the idolization of production. It is the Communist equivalent of profit, since productivity is put over and above the well-being of the future and the environment. Whenever the objective of production or profit takes precedence over the well-being of the environment and our common future, it is necessary to reconsider how we address economic questions.

We are sitting on an environmental time bomb. This includes such issues as acid rain and the thousands of pesticides and insecticides and other chemicals that are polluting our environment or the quality of the Great Lakes water. Rather than addressing this critical situation and determining how to reverse this trend, we are talking about short-term economic goals of Governments and companies. It is that kind of blindness which will lead us to destruction if we do not smarten up.

Permit me to tell a story that I told in committee. The Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) will recall that I had an opportunity to tell this story at the International Conference on the Environment in Nairobi which we attended. Many of the environmental problems that we experience are of a geometric nature. They grow exponentially. The time is very short between small problems becoming very serious. I ask Hon. Members to imagine a lily pond. This pond takes 28 days to be covered with lily pads. It grows from one little pad exponentially by twos until the 27th day when half the lily pond is left uncovered. Something must be done before the whole pond is covered, but there are those who say that since half the lily pond is uncovered there is no rush. However, on the 28th day the whole pond will be covered. This situation is analogous to the environment. We do not know, with respect to the Great Lakes water quality, whether we are at the 25th, 26th or 27th day. We do not know the situation with respect to acid rain. But that is the nature of the problem, and it behooves every responsible Government to begin to act now.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to this motion which, I think, is well-meant. The motion concerns our environment and we are all grateful to the Hon. Member. It is one of the issues on which Canada's public opinion is focused.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, our Government has already shown leadership in this field, regardless of what many Members have said to the contrary.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should remind the House that our colleague the federal Minister of Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) recently signed with several provincial Ministers of the Environment an agreement which is aimed at reducing significantly various polluting emissions in our regions.

Like the previous speaker, others have made the environment issue into a political question. They wanted to make a political issue out of it. As several Members have pointed out, our society is obviously becoming ever more regulated. I think that incentive measures are a must. It is imperative that the Canadian people be made fully aware of the need to protect our environment. It happens to be one of our priorities and this debate gives us an opportunity to keep our constituents better informed. I come from a riding where the quality of life is absolutely—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The hour allotted for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS—BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS. (B) LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak today on a question of cut-backs in the field of arts and culture. One of the most disturbing aspects of these cut-backs that I have raised in a number of questions has been the surprise element, the betrayal, that the arts and cultural community has experienced.

The Conservatives while in Opposition, of course, said quite the contrary to what they are doing now. They were critical of the Liberal government for not being favourable enough and not giving enough support to arts and culture. During the election campaign the then Leader of the Opposition, now the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) replied to a letter sent to him on arts policy and spoke officially for the Party. This letter is dated August 21, 1984, addressed to Paul J. Reynolds of the Professional Association of Canadian Theatres. I want to read some of the promises which the Prime Minister, then Leader of the Opposition, made during the election campaign so we can look at the arts and culture cut-backs relative to the promises that were made. Part of this letter reads:

Our first order of business will be full consultation with the cultural sector on opportunities which should be pursued, and dangers which must be avoided. Opportunities, such as increased Canadian program production from live performance companies, have not been promoted by current federal policy ... Our commitment to stimulate growth, ensure federal support through arm's length agencies and councils, and encourage alternative developments in film and program development are directed toward reversing the current low priority of cultural policy.

That is absolutely preposterous when we see what the Conservatives have done since they became the Government. Let me continue this litany of false promises:

We will seek better means to stimulate investment in the film, program and theatrical industries, and will ensure recognition of research and development costs, training and employment capacity ... We will ensure that federal cultural agencies have the mandate and resources to assist the cultural sector in taking new initiatives.

Instead, what we have had is cut-backs in existing funding for the Canada Council and in existing programming for the CBC. I continue:

We believe, for example, that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation can play a stronger role in bringing Canadian performers, writers, designers, and companies both better employment opportunities and greater exposure.

Yes, the CBC could indeed be doing this, but it cannot if there are cut-backs. The CBC needs more funding. I agree the CBC needs a changed mandate and that there ought to be public input into that changed mandate. The CBC can hardly begin to do the kind of work in drama, entertainment, the kind of full programming that we want from it while it is experiencing these kinds of cut-backs.

Let me continue with the astonishing promises:

At the level of federal policy, however, there does not seem to be a sufficient understanding of the role of cultural growth to the social and economic future of Canada.

What did this Government proceed to do, Mr. Speaker? It has been quite ignorant of the economic contribution that the arts and culture industry has made. The letter continues:

In order to ensure that federal policy is better informed by the cultural sector, we will include in the Cultural Agencies legislation a guarantee that the Minister receives and responds to recommendations from the federal agencies which work most closely with the cultural sector. For the arm's length principle to have effect, advice to the Minister must be regular and accountable on both sides.

Yet the major arts agencies have not been able to get a meeting with the Minister, the groups who actually represent the artists who are doing the work in Canada. The major ones have not yet seen the Minister who manages to fly off to other countries, make speeches and spend a lot of taxpayers' money while he is preaching restraint here at home and has been absolutely unavailable to the community he is supposed to be serving.

I would like to point out the foolishness of these cut-backs in sheer economic terms. The arts industry makes an enormous contribution. It is the number 11 industry in Canada. It is about the same size as the electrical industry or the wood industry. More people are employed in arts than in manufacturing, and this is an industry that is growing.

Funding for the arts has enormous economic spin-offs. Let me give one example, Stratford. Stratford received a grant of $1.5 million. Its budget is $13 million, of which $8 million comes in through sales. It injects $35 million into the local economy. Stratford activities generated $9 million in provincial and federal tax revenues. In other words, Governments get back six times what they put in. Restaurants, motels and businesses in the tourist industry in the area receive an enormous amount from a very modest investment in terms of arts and culture expenditure.

To conclude, I want to stress the economic foolishness of the Government's cut-backs. This is what the arts and culture agencies and representative groups are stressing. I would like to see them argue the merits of the case in terms of the cultural contribution. Even on the Government's own stated criteria of helping the economy, these arts and culture cut-backs are foolishness indeed.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the three-pronged question by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) has generated what looks like a 30 minute written response from our departmental officials. I will get as much as I can into my three minutes, and hope my Hon. friend will understand if I can not cover all the points she raised.

Let me state one important aspect of her "promises promises", speech. These budget reductions to the Canada Council, the National Film Board, the CBC or any other cultural agencies in no way diminish the importance which this Government attaches to the development of cultural expression in Canada. I can assure all Hon. Members of the personal commitment of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), of my own personal commitment, and indeed the strongly held view of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) to the maintenance of support which is essential to Canada's artists and this country's arts organizations as we come through this difficult economic period.

It is, however, the view of this Government that its most urgent priority is to arrest the growth of our national debt and to reverse the debilitating effect which debt service has on our ability to act on other national concerns. The burden of implementing such reductions must be shared by all, including the cultural sector. We are convinced, however, that the impact of these measures on individual artists and arts organizations can be greatly minimized through reductions in administrative expenditures, the elimination of non-essential services, of fat, if you will, plus greater involvement of the private sector.

The budget reductions to the Canada Council were $3.5 million and reductions to the National Arts Centre were $1 million. In the case of the Canada Council, this represents 4.8 per cent of the current parliamentary appropriation of approximately $72.5 million and 4.2 per cent of the Canada Council's total operating budget, which totals almost $84 million. The reduction to the National Arts Centre represents 6.2 per cent of its anticipated parliamentary appropriation of $16.16 million and 3.4 per cent of its total operating budget of $29.1 million.

The budgetary cut experienced by the National Film Board does not amount to twice as much as the ones made to other federal areas. They are equitably shared among the cultural agencies. Far from being unworthy of Government support, as it was suggested by the Hon. Member, the Government of Canada has given this cultural agency more importance by recently approving a new, more focused and more effective role by becoming a world-class centre of excellence in film and video production and a national training centre for advanced research, development and training in the art and technology of film and video.

With specific reference to the CBC cuts, of which we have been hearing so much lately, the Minister requested the CBC to make its budgetary reductions primarily in administrative areas and to protect programming as much as possible. The Minister made this request so that the reductions would affect as little as possible Canadian producers, artists and performers whose development the Government intends to encourage. The Minister cannot tell the CBC which programs to cut and which to leave in. That is the decision of the President of the CBC and its board of directors.

TOURISM—ELIMINATION OF FUNDING UNDER INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—CONSULTATION WITH INDUSTRY

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to a question I put on December 3 last year to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, in the absence of the Minister of State for Tourism, concerning the fact that tourism projects had been cut from the Industrial and Regional Development Program.

First, however, I would like to extend my congratulations and best wishes to the Minister of State for Tourism.

Last year, the Liberals launched the IRDP, that is, the Industrial and Regional Development Program, under which $12.5 million were earmarked for tourism projects, considering the sector's needs and its economic potential. It should be understood that this program was in addition to the subsidiary agreements already signed with the provinces.

According to the new Minister at the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, the IRDP "is aimed at promoting regional industrial development by supporting private sector initiatives, and industries and techniques offering the best potential for economic viability, sustained growth and competitiveness on the international scene".

The Minister of State for Tourism will have to agree that our Canadian tourist industry has all those characteristics. It is an industry that generates major economic activity. I therefore find it strange that while the Government agrees that the tourist industry is important, it does nothing to help it. Worse, it has eliminated tourist projects from funding under federal programs.

I am quite aware that the Government has just signed a number of subsidiary agreements with several provinces—so much the better. But let us not be mistaken. First of all, these agreements were going to be signed in any case, and second, they now represent the federal government's only contributions to the tourist industry.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why the Government decided to cut the Industrial and Regional Development Program even before signing agreements with all the provinces and territories. While these agreements were being negotiated, did the Minister suggest any development programs to the tourist industry? None whatsoever. The only announcement we have had are a number of measures that are having a very unfortunate impact on the tourist industry, and I will mention a few: the price of gas which now costs more per litre, considering the fact that 85 per cent of Canadians travel by car; a 15 per cent increase in ferry rates; forthcoming increases in VIA Rail rates, with reduction in service; admission fees to our national parks have tripled and there again, services have been reduced; and the 100 per cent increase in airport taxes, the increase in taxes on alcoholic beverages and the increase in wharfage fees in federal ports.

Contrary to what the Minister said, I do not think the tourist industry agrees with these cuts. In its enthusiasm for consultation, the Government should not forget to consult with the most important group of all: the tourist industry.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should boost the confidence of our tourist industry by giving it the means to develop its economic potential. The Industrial and Regional Development Program was one of those means.

In concluding, I would like to remind the Minister that before cutting programs, perhaps he should consider the short- and medium-term consequences the cuts announced by his Government will have on the tourist industry.

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I rise to respond to questions put by the Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud) on December 3 concerning the Government's decision to render tourism projects ineligible for grants under the Industrial and Regional Development Program.

• (1815)

First of all, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his words of congratulations.

[English]

I want to assure Members of the House that the decision in no way changes the Government's view of the importance of tourism and its place in the over-all economy. In fact, it reflects our intention to reorient federal support for the tourism sector toward activities which would most benefit the national economy, while achieving better regional balance in our efforts.

As the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) stated in response to the relevant questions, we have determined that more effective and more regionally-sensitive tourism incentives can be delivered through tourism development sub-agreements with the various provinces and territories. In fact, we have agreements in place with Manitoba, the Northwest Territories, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario, Quebec and Saskatchewan. The last six agreements were put in place by the new PC Government in the 20 weeks since it has been sworn in.

The total value of the six agreements, which I signed, is $229 million. Most of that money will come from the federal Treasury. Indeed, I have signed more tourism agreements, worth more money, and with more provinces, than did the previous Liberal Government in the entire period it was in office. By contrast, in the entire period in which the tourism sector was eligible for IRDP grants,the previous Government spent less than $30 million on tourism IRD projects.

In conclusion, I would indicate that discussions with officials in other provinces and Yukon have begun, and we anticipate having agreements in place with every province and territory before the end of the fiscal year. I also want to assure Members that the Government is prepared to use additional federal-provincial or federal-territorial agreements and special programs to meet the specific industry development requirements in the regions.

With respect to the Hon. Member's question concerning prior consultation with the industry, I have been in continual contact with the industry representatives, including the board of the Tourism Industry Association of Canada and the executive committee of the Canadian Restaurant and Foodservices Association, as well as with many other provincial bodies. In each case, the new tourism agreements have been explained and warmly received.

Given the amount of money which the federal Government is spending on tourism—many millions of dollars more than was spent by the previous Government—through sub-agreements in preference the IRDP arrangements, I am sure the Hon. Member will be eager to come into the House again to salute myself, the Prime Minister and the Government.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION A) YOUTH—BUDGETARY CUTS. (B) VALENTINE'S DAY CONFERENCE—REQUEST THAT STUDENT REPRESENTATIVES BE PERMITTED TO ATTEND

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity for debate with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mrs. Landry). At the time I held the position she holds now, and in my riding and elsewhere, people were wondering what a Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State does, whether it involved shorthand or what, and I am sure that now that she holds this position, the Hon. Member realizes that the Department of the Secretary of State is a fascinating one and that a lot of interesting things happen there.

I am glad to see the Parliamentary Secretary this evening, because on November 15 last year, I directed a question to the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) who gave me a very unsatisfactory answer, and I am sure that his Parliamentary Secretary, with her customary verve and wit, will do a far better job than the Minister.

Mr. Speaker, on November 15 I asked the Secretary of State: Will young people be represented at the National Economic Summit, the Valentine's Day Conference which is to be held in Regina? Will the voice of young Canada be heard? I know, Mr. Speaker, that you yourself want the voice of Canada's youth to be heard. At the time, the Secretary of State, spouting his usual generalities, said: Yes, yes, yes. Do not worry, consultation is the hallmark of our Government!

Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State certainly did not act on what he said in the House, because when the time came to cut the Student Loans Program, among other things, he did not consult our students, he did not consult our young people. When the time came to announce the Flora '85 challenge, we all know that the real challenge to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) was to avoid youth representatives who wanted to talk about the Summer Canada program. We all know that.

The very day she held her press conference, students, the Canadian Federation of Students and young people across the country said: We were never consulted. During her press conference, the Minister of Employment and Immigration said: I consulted with large corporations and they promised me 10,000 jobs this summer. The Minister of Employment and Immigration must have let emotion or enthusiasm for her own program get the better of her, because today, in the press, business is reported as saying: We never said that.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that since its coming into power, this Government has done nothing to reach out to this multitude of lonely souls which make up our Canadian youth.

We know that the role of the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Champagne) has become incredibly insignificant. As I was saying recently, in her professional career, she always played major roles, but now she only plays two-bit parts. It is quite obvious since no issue has yet been addressed in important fields such as employment or post-secondary education. The Minister of State for Youth has no mandate.

As a responsible or senior Minister, the Secretary of State should ensure that the Minister of State for Youth can play her role fully. There will soon be an important conference, a national summit, attended supposedly by nearly 120 participants. As we speak Mr. Speaker, no representative of a youth group has yet been invited. This truly shows contempt for 30 per cent of our people, and I am certain that if the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State has not realized it already, she will immediately act to correct this situation. I am convinced that, with her sensitivity, she realizes that it is completely unfair to leave 30 per cent of the people out of this new consultation process.

Consequently, in the coming discussions . . . We realize that the Secretary of State is preparing something in secret. We can see that he is planning something unpleasant with provincial representatives with regard to established programs financing. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has announced that there will be cut-backs. However, we know how much our post-secondary education system is underfinanced right now. It is not the right time to announce cutbacks, and if the Government is determined to do so, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no more fat to cut. As you are very familiar with the financial state of the University of Sherbrooke, you must know that it would be impossible to reduce expenditures more than has already been done. Consequently, if the Minister of Finance has ordered the Secretary of State to prepare cut-backs for the next Budget, it is essential that those directly involved, the major users of these services, be consulted.

It is unfortunate, but ever since this Government took office, a significant segment of the population has been completely ignored, and I think it is utterly disappointing. "Consultation" is the latest buzz word we hear in every speech. Before election day, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) kept talking about generosity. Now the key word is consultation, and it does not take much probing to find out that it is not real consultation.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) told me in this House that she had had consultations on municipal job creation projects for youths with, among others, the mayor of Gander, when in fact she should have consulted the Canadian Federation of Municipalities. I would not know to what extent the municipality of Gander is representative of Canada as a whole, but my colleague from Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) called the mayor of his constituency and was told that no such program had ever been accepted.

Mr. Speaker, I am firmly convinced that, in the coming weeks and months, young Canadians will realize that this Government takes them for granted, ignores them altogether and makes them the victims of cutbacks, without consultations. I rest assured that the Parliamentary Secretary will be in a position to give us a definite answer as to whether young observers will be in Regina and whether young people will take an active part in the economic summit. That is what I expect from the Parliamentary Secretary, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure that, competent as she is, she will give us straight answers.

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to thank my hon. colleague from Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) for his kind words with reference to me. I suggest that having held the portfolio of Secretary of State he has had good training, and I hope in a few years to be able to speak as eloquently as he does.

With respect to my concern about the problems faced by my Minister, the Secretary of State, it is my view that since he came to office he has already shown great interest and concern about the situation of the young, as regards more especially post-secondary education in Canada.

Concerning the reference to consultation, perhaps the Opposition Members should get their act together. At times they say that we consult too much, and at other times that we do not consult enough.

To answer more specifically the Hon. Member's question, I think that on November 15, the question was addressed specifically to the Secretary of State concerning his alleged lack of interest, especially on that day, concerning a student delegation visiting on Parliament Hill.

I would first like at this point to describe the circumstances surrounding that demonstration, to show the Minister's interest. The demonstration was held, like so many others throughout the Province, in relation with the work then being done by the Bovey Commission. The Ontario students had chosen November 15 because on that date the commissioners had intended to submit their report to the Ontario Minister of Colleges and Universities, the Hon. Bette Stephenson.

The students wanted to show that they were aware of the issues, that they were interested in a report that could have a considerable impact on them, and that they were concerned about the decisions that might come out of it. It was therefore strictly an Ontario demonstration.

However, I would like to add that the student organizations were greatly interested in the Canadian Government's role in the field of post-secondary education.

In that context, the Secretary of State met with the representatives of the Canadian Federation of Students hardly a week before the demonstration to discuss with them federal support for post-secondary education.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot overemphasize the importance given to that consultation by the government and the Secretary of State. All ministers have agreed to consult regularly with the groups under their jurisdiction. Since his appointment in mid-September, the Secretary of State has already met a good number of representatives from the main user groups of his Department. I refer among others to the Canadian Federation of Students, the Canadian Association of University Professors and the Canadian Association of Universities and Colleges.

Moreover, the Secretary of State has already met twice the Canadian Council of Ministers of Education and another meeting is scheduled for the near future in Ottawa, more specifically at the end of March. The purpose of those meetings is to discuss a few very important matters dealing with assistance to education such as the financing of post-secondary education and the federal-provincial agreements on the use of official languages in education. In the opinion of Mr. McLean and his provincial colleagues, this is a useful dialogue, for it demonstrates the will of both levels of goverment to cooperate and consult, something which did not exist before.

Mr. Speaker, I have given these examples to show that the consultation process is definitely in motion. It should be emphasized that these exchanges of views are just starting, but that they will continue on a regular basis for the benefit of the Canadian people as a whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 6.29 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 62—JOB CREATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap) moved:

That this House commends the Government of Manitoba for its positive policies of job creation which have produced the lowest unemployment level in Canada, and calls upon the Government to adopt a similar course of economic expansion rather than the discredited policies of tax increases and spending cuts which it has pursued to date and which are largely responsible for the latest unemployment statistics, which show an alarming increase of 167,000 unemployed between December, 1984 and January, 1985.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to lead off for the New Democratic Party on its Opposition Day motion. In a sense, the motion identifies the number one issue which faces the country—unemployment.

If we look around at a variety of models, there are some areas of the world and, indeed, some areas of Canada that provide us with some guidance as to what the present federal Government ought to be using as it develops its plans for the Budget and the ways and means it will use to get the economy of Canada back on track.

As a youngster I was a fan of Robert Louis Stevenson. He wrote a book entitled The Wreckers. The fundamental theme in that book was that a group of rather unscrupulous people on a South Pacific island set up large bonfires in the evenings on certain parts of the beach. Those bonfires were to act as beacons to ships which were sailing past and to indicate to them that those were safe areas in which to anchor. However, there were hidden shoals and when the large ships sailed in they were shipwrecked. Then the unscrupulous island people would plunder the contents of the ships, and as a result people would lose their lives.

I was reminded of that story when thinking about the nature of this debate. The federal Government is saying: "Follow us". The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is saying: "Have faith in us. Just give us time, because we are providing guidance".

Human wreckage has resulted from that policy and that kind of direction. I do not have to go any further than my own constituency. Kamloops has an official unemployment rate of 20.3 per cent. In real terms, that means there are over 10,000 people in that region who are officially collecting unemployment insurance, over 5,500 people on welfare, and hundreds of others who do not qualify for unemployment insurance or welfare support. There are small-business people who do not qualify and fall through the social security net. There are 2,500 young people under the age of 25 who are jobless in that community. The Minister tells them not to worry because Canada Works will provide jobs. There are more than 15,000 who are unemployed and Canada Works may provide 200 jobs in the next few months. The Minister of Employment and Immigration tells us to have faith in the Government and to be patient because the private sector in Kamloops will provide thousands of jobs in the next little while.

Last weekend I was in my constituency and met with three business groups. The groups, which speak for small and medium-sized businesses, said that they were literally clinging to survival and that they were not thinking about expansion. They told me that the best scenario which could happen was that they would not go bankrupt. I also met with representatives of the ministerial association, pastors from a number of churches in the greater Kamloops area. They said that if things did not change dramatically over the next few months there would be violence, civil disobedience and bloodshed in the streets. That was told to me by pastors who are the heads of their congregations. These are people who have not only a compassion but an understanding of the realities on the main streets of Kamloops.

I see Hon. Members opposite laughing at that proposal. The heads of churches say that there will in fact be blood running and violence in these communities because of the economic policies being pursued by Governments in this country. Those are not my views necessarily. I am simply reflecting the views of the religious leaders in my community.

I received a letter this morning from a young man who has worked for the last 12 years but who lost his job a few months ago. He ran out of his unemployment insurance benefits. A few weeks ago he went down to the welfare office to apply for a subsidy and was told that they could not give him one at the time because his wife was working and earning $525 a month. This couple's rent for a very modest apartment is $375. They have just received a bill from B.C. Hydro for a two-month period in the amount of $148. That leaves them $2, Mr. Speaker, to live on for the month. That $2 will have to pay for their food and all the other incidentals which life demands.

This young husband is a proud man and he sees today no hope. He is told by Government services that he does not qualify for a subsidy but if he comes back in two or three months it might be able to find a $60 a month supplement for him. Some of us in this House should try living on $2 a month. What this means, of course, is that this proud individual will now have to go downtown and get in line at the food bank. If he is lucky he will get a hamper of food after standing in line for an hour or so because inevitably at the end of the day the food supply runs out and has to be replenished. This is a reality now in one of the richest parts of Canada traditionally. This is a reality in a province which is identified as a "have" province. It is recognized as a very prosperous province generally, but the Province of British Columbia, Mr. Speaker, is on its knees. It is an economic basket case.

For a moment, Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn our attention away from that part of Canada. We found out a few days ago that unemployment has soared, increasing more in one month than it has in any single month over the last five years. The increase in the number of people who are unemployed in Canada over the last month is the equivalent of the population of cities like Sudbury, Saskatoon, Chicoutimi, Oshawa, St. John's. In other words, the size of the entire population of a city was added to the unemployment rolls in one single month. But the Government still says "Be patient, folks; relax. We are consulting with various groups and so on. We will be bringing in a Budget some time in April or May". The Budget will take effect in terms of its policy in the fall or next winter some time, but the Government says "Just relax".

I suspect that the people of Canada are not prepared to relax much longer. There are one and a half million people in this country who are unemployed and that number is growing. That means one and a half million people are not playing their rightful role in Canadian society of building the Canadian economy. There are fewer houses under construction, fewer roads being built, fewer trees being planted and fewer consumer goods being produced, all because one and a half million people are idle.

On top of that there is the cost of nearly $1 billion a month for unemployment insurance benefits from the federal Government, plus hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars in welfare payments out of the federal Government's treasury in terms of transfer payments. We cannot afford these high levels of unemployment in the country, Mr. Speaker, because of what it does to the productive capacity in Canada and what it costs Canadians.

What has been the argument and the proposals of our Governments, Mr. Speaker? I believe we could distil the alternatives down to two. There is one school of thought which thinks the solution to unemployment is to unshackle the market-place; free enterprise, some would say. To these people, government bureaucracies are the root of all evil. If we reduce government, the private sector will enthusiastically come to life, spring into action and develop, expand and create those jobs, is the explanation we hear from the Conservatives.

John Kenneth Galbraith summed it up I think quite nicely when he said that these are the folks who believe that the rich are not working because they have too little money and the poor are not working because they have too much money.

These people want to take us back to an earlier time in the past when they believed government was less intrusive in the lives of individuals. How are they prepared to do that? They want to reduce the size of government. Their very first priority is to reduce expenditures on social programs and slash the deficit no matter what the consequences. This is what we have seen in the Province of British Columbia. This is the reality of the world of Bill Bennett.

In his statement on November 8 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) outlined the Government's priorities. At the top of the list was not job creation or economic development; at the top of the list was deficit reduction. The Minister's statements on November 8 sounded strangely similar to those statements of the Premier of British Columbia in his last two budgets.

Let me give a couple of examples. On November 8 the Minister of Finance said that controlling the deficit must be our priority for this year and each year of the Government's mandate. The B.C. budget of 1973 said that the Government's decision is clear—"We shall restrain expenditure and reduce the size of government". Again on November 8 the federal Minister of Finance said he believes that deficit reduction is the key to rebuilding confidence. The B.C. budget of 1983 said that the budget provides what is needed to contain the size and burden of government so the private sector, our major resource companies and all businesses large and small, will have the climate needed to ensure that our fragile recovery gains momentum.

Let us look at what happened in British Columbia. In 1983 they looked into the future and made some projections, as did the federal Minister of Finance. In B.C. they said that real provincial growth will occur in the 6 per cent range. Capital investment will increase by 15 per cent in 1984 and employment growth will increase nearly 4 per cent. That is what they thought was going to happen. That is what they wished was going to happen. It is a Peter Pan approach to economics; if you really believe it is going to happen, it will happen.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it did not happen. Real provincial growth was less than 1 per cent. In other words, it decreased. There was no economic growth in British Columbia. Capital investment fell by 5 per cent rather than increasing by 15 per cent. Employment growth fell. In other words, unemployment is increasing at a staggering rate month after month after month. What they projected simply did not occur.

While it is not surprising that opposition Members, particularly New Democrats from British Columbia, would have a rather jaundiced view of what has happened, we are not the only ones. I can quote the president of the Chartered Accountants' Association of British Columbia. On October 19, 1984 he said that B.C. is heading for hell in a hand-basket this winter. He said many of his members are telling their clients to flee British Columbia. In other words, if you are looking for opportunity, for growth and development, for investment opportunities, do not stay in British Columbia, go east to Manitoba.

That is what Michael Walker, the chief economist for the Fraser Institute, had to say to young people. They asked him what he would suggest they do in British Columbia and he said the best news he had for young people in British Columbia is not the old "Go west, young man"; it is "Go east, young man". He meant go east to Manitoba.

An Hon. Member: How do you know that?

Mr. Riis: That is where the jobs are. That is where the in-migration is taking place. There is none to British Columbia, believe me.

The Royal Bank of Canada came out with a report in Manitoba, 1984, which said that B.C.'s problems include severe government restraint measures, persistent labour disputes, depressed consumer and business confidence. The president of the Business Council of British Columbia said the economy has not recovered, it has not turned around, and that is what we were all led to believe.

One can go on and on, Mr. Speaker, and list spokesperson after spokesperson from economic and financial agencies, respected analysts in their field. When they are honest they all say that the future of British Columbia under the restraint policy and conservative ideology of the Social Credit Government is very depressing. Most of the money now raised on the Vancouver Stock Exchange is for investment outside of British Columbia. That says something about how the investors of British Columbia feel about the future of their province.

It would be useful to turn to another alternative now. I indicated that one alternative was this almost religious zeal which sees the unfettered market-place as the opportunity for our economic future. Another alternative is that which we see in the Province of Manitoba. Jobs are the first priority of the Manitoba Government. Its first priority is to get the people of Manitoba working in meaningful, long-term jobs. The Government of Manitoba assumes that unemployment erodes economic growth and investor and consumer confidence. It assumes that if people have jobs they can sustain the necessary economic activity and provide the consumer demand which is the real trigger to business confidence and investment.

The Conservatives feel it is necessary to bribe people to behave in certain economic ways. They want to lure and entice business to expand. They want to provide tax incentives. Business does not need to be bribed or to have incentives provided for it. If there is a market-place and a consuming public, businesses will expand. They will not expand if there is no one to purchase their goods and services. Any government which believes it works the other way around is sorely mistaken.

The Minister of Finance in the Province of Manitoba, Mr. Schroeder, has said: "It is vitally important that the provincial Government stimulus takes place now to protect our basic strengths and enhance our ability to promote the advancement of economic recovery when it comes". In December of 1982 he said: "Efforts to reduce deficits through large-scale tax increases or expenditure cuts will only aggravate current economic problems". Manitoba has taken some very concrete action which has reduced the level of unemployment in that province. The Province of Manitoba now has the lowest unemployment level in Canada. Manitoba is a have-not province. It is not usually identified as a prosperous province. The Government of Manitoba meant it when it said that job creation and development was its number one priority.

The Government of Manitoba took action on a variety of fronts. In 1983 it put together a jobs fund. It allocated $200 million for the creation of jobs. In 1983 alone it created 21,000 jobs. In the first half of 1984 it created 10,000 jobs. If the national Government provided an equal ratio of job creation stimulus it would be spending $5 billion on getting people back to work. However, the federal Government would rather spend $12 billion on UIC payments or hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars on welfare. It would much rather do as it did last month and spend $300 million buying up Canadian dollars. Week after week the Government spends hundreds of millions of dollars to buy its own dollars in order artificially to prop up the value of the Canadian dollar because Mr. Bouey has a passionate and committed position to maintain the dollar at 75 cents U.S. Therefore we will spend $300 million this month and perhaps another $200 million next month. Do I hear a single Conservative Member state in the House that that notion is wrong and should not be the way to spend taxpayers' money in this country? There is never a word from them.

Let me give some examples of programs that are funded under this jobs fund in the Province of Manitoba. There is the development of a technology resource centre in which major computer companies participated.

I see that my time is almost up.

Mr. Lewis: Good.

Mr. Riis: The Conservatives say "good" because it must be very hard on them when I point out that Manitoba is the one province in Canada where business investment is the highest per capita and where there is a migration of people into that province because that is where the opportunities exist in western Canada. Unemployment is the lowest in that province which just happens to have a New Democratic Party Government. Those are the facts.

In conclusion, if the Government is really committed to its election campaign that jobs was its number one priority, it can look at models on which to base its programs. It can look at the conservative Government in the Province of British Columbia which is ruining that economy, or at the Province of Manitoba that has developed one of the stronger economies in the country. Jobs are in fact being created on a daily basis. People are migrating there and government investment, consumer confidence and investor confidence are rising. Those are the two alternatives.

We in the New Democratic Party hope and pray that as the new Government devises its plans and discusses alternatives at the First Ministers' conference later this week, it will use Manitoba as a model for getting the country's economy back on track and allowing unemployed Canadians once again to participate in a meaningful way in Canadian society and the economy.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's speech. I have also read the motion. Given the Hon. Member's interest in the House and the fact that he has been here since 1980, does he recall there ever being an Opposition motion presented which was so subservient to the interests of a political party in a province?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think I understand the question. Let me preface my remarks by saying that not only have I been here for five years, but I have been an observer of the House of Commons for many more years. I have also been a concerned Canadian for 43 years. I believe we are at the most critical point in the future of our country. I do not believe there has been a Budget presented in the last three or four decades that has been more important than the upcoming Budget.

As a Member of Parliament from British Columbia, I see a particular political ideology at work in the economy. We can quote many people besides opposition politicians who describe that approach as being disastrous, one that simply leads to more unemployment and less confidence. It is a plan that results in a loss of hope for the future by older and younger Canadians in that province.

Last night I met with five businessmen from Vancouver. They are leaders in that economy and I asked them about their opinion of the economy for the next six months. They said that they saw absolutely no hope for the next six months and only wishful thinking after that.

That is why we felt it is important at this point, when we know that the Government is serious about finding a proper solution to get the economy of Canada back on track, to look to other models. The Government could look to Australia or Great Britain, but we felt that rather than looking at the international community it could look to Canada where there are two models to draw upon for information. That is why we selected the one real success story in Canada today as a model. The model just happens to be headed by a New Democratic Party Government. I suspect if it were headed by some other government, we would still identify Manitoba as an appropriate province.

Let us look at the successes, Mr. Speaker. Why do we look at failures for a model? This tells us a little bit about the Conservatives. They look around and say: "Listen, the economy of Great Britain is falling on its face, the economy of British Columbia is falling on its face; let us use these two areas as our models". We say let us use other countries as our models. Let us use as a model what is going on in Australia, where the unemployment rate is 8 per cent today. Perhaps we should look at Sweden or Norway where the unemployment rate is 3 per cent today. Let us look at West Germany where interest rates today are 5.5 per cent.

Many people have been caught up with the Tory rhetoric that this is it, that this is the reality, that there is no alternative. Our responsibility as a concerned and effective Opposition is to say there are other alternatives. The Province of Manitoba is one of those other alternatives.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, in view of the Hon. Member's concern about the creation of jobs and the availability of jobs that comes through Canada's capacity to compete in the great markets of the Department of Defence of the United States or in other markets covering anything from toothpicks to mattresses to computers to military equipment, and if it offsets our gain, would the Hon. Member support the creation of additional jobs in his riding or in the Province of British Columbia where Canadian businessmen can compete? Does the Hon. Member encourage and support that kind of activity?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I speak for my Party when I say that the kind of jobs and the kind of economic enterprise that we would like to see support for today is not necessarily the kind of enterprise that is associated with the build-up of the American arms industry.

The mayors of Canada came together and said: "You, the Government of Canada, we have billions and billions of needed urban infrastructure that must be built". It is not a question of should be built; it has to be built. I am talking about sewage treatment, water treatment facilities, senior citizens' housing, other kinds of social housing, roads, bridges. In other words, things that will be with us for decades and perhaps generations. How long does a tank last? How long does a bullet last? How long does any military technology last? It might be valid for a few weeks, a few months, at best a few years.

We are concerned that it is time now to develop the necessary supports to develop the processing, the secondary industry, the tertiary industry and the quaternary industry of this country. I do not see the present Government doing that. I see the present Government getting off on a tangent and, if you like, maintaining the status quo, saying to the large corporations: "We are going to rely on you to expand the economy". I hear a brilliant statement coming from a Conservative opposite. That is the kind of positive criticism that we can expect.

Mr. Wenman: What would you do with Bristol-Myers in Winnipeg?

Mr. Riis: In The Financial Post for today it is reported that the big oil companies' profits are up 50 per cent over last year. We read that corporate profits have returned to the levels they were back in 1980.

Mr. Wenman: Why don't you answer the question? Would you cancel 30,000 defence jobs in Canada?

Mr. Riis: I am suggesting that if we are going to develop the economy of Canada, we know what can be done within Canada. We know we have the resources within Canada to accomplish that; we have the will of the people, the expertise and the capital.

We in the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, have faith in the people of Canada. We do not have to look outside for alternatives. We do not have to look outside for our investment money. We do not have to look outside for our expertise. We have faith in the people of Canada and I wish the Conservative Government would have faith in the people of Canada and their abilities as well.

Mr. Wenman: The Hon. Member mentioned particularly a lot of interest in Manitoba. Is the Hon. Member recommending to the Government of Mr. Pawley that the contracts with Bristol-Myers and other major employers in that area should be cancelled, or should they be expanded when there is opportunity to expand? Will the Hon. Member support that expansion and those additional jobs, or does the Hon. Member want to do away with the 30,000 jobs in Canada involved with these industries? Does the Hon. Member support that industry or does he not?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point the Hon. Member is making. I have two responses for him. One, I am not going to suggest what any provincial Government should or should not do. Provincial Governments are quite capable of deciding on their own. I am suggesting some alternatives for our national Government.

I think it is appropriate, if we want to get a return on our investment of federal dollars, that we develop our educational system and our manufacturing industries. That is where the greatest return is. Take a look at our resource industries. Why do we not start processing some of those resources? In other words, we should do something new. We should initiate something new in terms of economic development. That is what the Government is elected to do. It was elected on a change of policy. It was not elected to perpetuate the same policy to which the Liberals introduced us for many, many years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over. We shall resume debate.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my understanding that in a debate such as this where the motion is an NDP motion the Government should respond. Unfortunately, I see no Minister here.

Mrs. McDougall: There are two.

Mr. Allmand: My understanding is that the Government responds to the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think this is a point of order. Does someone wish to speak on debate?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I understood that the second speaker was to be from the Liberal bench.

Mr. Allmand: It is up to you to respond. If you have no response, fine.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is not a point of order. I need someone to speak on debate.

Mr. Allmand: No one is responding.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to speak on debate?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, since the Party that is responsible for our current crisis chooses not to speak on the issue, I will be happy to speak on it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker I take part in this debate with considerable pride. I have roots in Manitoba through a great uncle who homesteaded there during a period when times were really tough in western Canada and it took a great sense of challenge and adventure to live there. I am very proud of the people in my family who are in Carman, Manitoba, and who have been proud supporters of my political Party and our political concepts.

I am pleased to take part in this debate because my hon. friend started off with a reference to two things that are of interest to me. One was to ships and harbours and I note that Manitoba is one of our provinces fronting on the ocean. I would also like to quote for my hon. friend his favourite author, Robert Louis Stevenson:

> You cannot run away from a weakness; you must some time fight it out or perish; and if that be so, why not now . . . ?
> Mankind was never so happily inspired as when it made a cathedral.

We are attempting to make this country once again a cathedral.

I am also pleased to take part in this debate because it raises some important economic and fiscal issues that we on this side of the House have been attempting to debate in an intelligent way. It is certainly nice to see members of the Opposition accepting our invitation to join in the national debate on the directions for change set up by this Government. It provides an opportunity to discuss issues in what I hope will be a rational and constructive way. Toward that end I will try and overlook the possibility that the motion is really more concerned with politics than it is with economics, or even with Robert Louis Stevenson.

I am pleased to commend any provincial government that puts forward positive policies for economic growth and job creation. To the extent that the Manitoba Government has done that, I say "well done" and I hope that Government keeps it up.

Since the motion cites Manitoba as a model, I want to take a moment to look at the facts of the case. First, the employment situation. Manitoba's unemployment rate at 8.5 per cent in January was equal to that of Saskatchewan as the lowest among the provinces, significantly below the national average of 11.2 per cent. Perhaps it was just an oversight that the drafters of the motion forgot to include Saskatchewan in the commendation. In any case I hope the omission has nothing to do with the fact that there is, after all, a Progressive Conservative Government in the Province of Saskatchewan.

Let us now look at the percentage increase in employment in Manitoba since the end of the recession. At 6.3 per cent, the increase is slightly above the national average of 6.1 per cent but below the range of 8 per cent or higher in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, Quebec and Ontario. Manitoba's loss of jobs during the recession at 4.3 per cent was below the national average of 5.2 per cent. In other words, its employment situation has been more stable but has shown less growth.

Since September when the Government took office, 64,000 jobs have been created in Canada and the unemployment rate has dropped. The rate of job creation in the past four months has been 1,200 per cent faster than in the same period a year earlier. I might also note, according to some recent information, that Manitoba's economic growth rate for this year is forecast at about the national average.

It is clear that attempts to draw sweeping conclusions about the success or otherwise of any given set of economic policies over relatively short periods are unconvincing, to put it mildly. They could be dismissed as harmless exercises if they did not illustrate, as the motion before the House clearly does, the continuing tendency to look for simplistic alternatives to the hard economic and fiscal challenges which are facing the nation. The Throne Speech, the economic statement, the First Ministers' conference and the national summit are all part of the renewal of the Canadian economy. These events and the consultation process are the essence of the consensus building necessary for a bright and prosperous future. We have made the renewal of the Canadian economy the top priority, with economic growth, economic opportunities and jobs our main concern.

It is simplistic, not to mention mischievous, to attribute the employment creation of provinces to provincial government policies while at the same time blaming the federal Government generally for unemployment across the country. That same federal Government's tax revenues in Manitoba have been considerably exceeded by federal spending in the province, spending in the form of federal employee wages, family allowances, unemployment insurance, old age pensions and federal-provincial transfers such as equalization, hospital insurance, medicare, post-secondary education and social assistance under the Canada Assistance Plan.

The federal Government has demonstrated its support for the well-being of Canadians. We remain fundamentally committed to that well-being, no matter where those Canadians may live in this great land. That is why the Government has come forward with the kinds of policies needed to renew the capacity of the economy of all Canada to grow and create lasting new jobs. I want to emphasize for the benefit of Hon. Members across the way the word "lasting", because it is crucial to the kind of economic process which the Government wants to build.

If I may be allowed one last look at the Manitoba situation—and this was the idea of Hon. Members across the way—we could indeed find evidence of significant public spending for job-creation purposes. About $200 million annually has been funnelled through the Manitoba jobs fund to small and medium-sized businesses in 1983-84, although I note that some economists have argued that the program does not represent new initiatives but a repackaging of existing programs. In any case, the new program has generated jobs lasting about 13 weeks on average.

As much as programs of this nature are needed, the hard fact remains that the real need is long-term jobs. Strong concern has been expressed in Manitoba over the lack of emphasis on private sector investment which leads to those opportunities. Also, the Manitoba budget last year indicated such a shift in its Government's approach to seeking longer term job opportunities.

We welcome the efforts of Governments in every province to deal with both short and long-term economic needs. We particularly welcome evidence and other Governments increasingly recognize the need for getting at the causes of economic weakness rather than merely suppressing the symptoms with more and more borrowed money. The fiscal situation of the Government of Canada, record high deficits and rapidly rising accumulated debt brought to us courtesy of the Liberal Party, is a legacy of just that kind of philosophy. This is why I fail to understand why the Liberal Party has chosen not to speak on this topic. It was a Government so fixated on treating the economic symptoms that its policies became part of the disease; it spent money as if there were no tomorrow. It was right but only in terms of its own political prospects. Unfortunately it bequeathed a lot of very expensive tomorrows for all Canadians.

We are trying to eliminate the cause of our economic weakness through an attack on the growing mountain of national debt. This is part of our comprehensive program to build a healthy and expanding economy which will create jobs and economic opportunity. Other speakers will have more time to address the fiscal situation which faces the Government. I will only say that we are at a point where the use of the kind of conventional fiscal stimulus suggested by the motion before the House would not be expansionary for the economy in any but the most fleeting and ephemeral senses. The damage to confidence would take its toll on private sector investment, and the Government's future fiscal capacity to assist in economic growth would be further eroded. In short, we cannot go on this way.

I remind Hon. Members opposite of an important maxim: we cannot cross a river in two strides. It takes time and many steps to brook a river to get us where we want to go. We have already started to take strides in the right direction. Putting the Government's fiscal house in order is therefore a crucial element in the agenda for economic renewal which the Government has placed before the country and before the House—first, for debate here and consultation with the country, and then for action.

Contrary to the motion before the House, the Government has begun the task of restraining government expenditures in a manner entirely compatible with the continued growth of the economy and the creation of new jobs. The notion of the props being pulled out from under the economy by government restraint is totally ludicrous. In fact, even after the effect of expenditure reductions and other measures brought forward in November, the projected deficit in the next fiscal year will represent an additional stimulus of some $7 billion over and above what the previous Government had projected. If we take the motion at its face value, it is telling us that the prospect of this extra $7 billion and all the higher than expected deficits of recent years are doing little or nothing to help the economy produce the real jobs which Canadians need. That is precisely the problem which the Government is addressing by facing the deficit and the debt head on. We want to solve the problem before it becomes a crisis.

In its agenda for action the Government has set out to redefine its role so that it can provide an effective framework for the growth and job creation we need. That means removing the obstacles to change and innovation to enable the private sector to keep up with competition from around the world. We intend to foster the necessary increases in investment in a climate favourable to the birth and growth of new enterprise. We will achieve those goals in a manner which is fair and open and with the basic sense of compassion and tolerance which are very much a part of the Canadian fabric and very much a part of this Party's record. However, government alone cannot bring about economic renewal. We have put forward our direction for change, for full national consultation. We want all elements in society to help us plan the future. We recognize that this consultative process is itself challenging, too challenging for all too many Members on the other side who cannot resist the temptation to substitute shrill opportunism for real discussion.

Nevertheless, the process is working. More and more groups and individuals are making their views known on the wide range of issues put forward. The Government of the Canadian people is listening because, unlike some Hon. Members opposite, we do not have all the answers! We are listening because we are committed to changing the way the Government goes about making those policies. We were elected to do that and we intend to carry it through.

I noted earlier that there is not much point in trying to prove that a few months' worth of government policies are directly responsible for all the good economic news or for all the bad economic news that could be dredged up to suit a particular debating proposal. That is the kind of game the motion before the House would have us play. However, we take a balanced look at how the economy is progressing and at the various indicators of consumer and business confidence. We find far more reasons for encouragement than for the kind of despair that so often emanates from across the floor. And, I might add, we are also a great deal more realistic about how long it will take for the country to overcome all the economic and fiscal problems that were allowed to accumulate.

We have embarked on a long, hard job of rebuilding the foundations for sustained economic growth. To succeed we will have to undo a lot of mistakes that were made in the past by the former Liberal Government. These were mistakes that have become part of the very policy framework that this Government inherited. I do not believe Canadians want another Government that simply moves in and redecorates by papering over the cracks in the walls, and certainly not another Government that uses borrowed money for wallpaper.

We have made a good start on the economic reconstruction that will get the economy growing and producing lasting new jobs for Canadians. The consultation process is in high gear and will remain there until just before the Budget. As well, there is still time for Members opposite to play a more positive role in this process. I hope they will be happy to accept that invitation. At the very least, however, I would ask them to look at all the evidence and come to a balanced view of the current situation on future prospects.

Look at how many new jobs have been created in the past few months and the fact that the unemployment rate is actually below what it was at the beginning of 1984. Look at the third quarter growth rate of 7.6 per cent for the economy. Look at the 1.2 per cent growth rate in real domestic product in November, an annual rate of 15.4 per cent. Look at the increase in manufacturers' shipments and new orders in November, both up by 8 per cent or more on a year-over-year basis. Look at retail sales which are up 10.4 per cent in the same month over a year earlier.

I could go on but my point is not to exhaust the reservoir of encouraging news any more than it is to pretend that every month or every quarter brings nothing but good news. We all know that the economy has serious problems that must be addressed in a serious, long-term way, and that is what the Government has done, is doing and will continue to do throughout its mandate.

While the motion before the House does not deserve to be taken seriously in some basic respects, it does raise some key issues for debate, a debate that we on this side of the House welcome and encourage. At the same time I must regret that the motion displays the same sort of mentality that helped create some of the basic obstacles, and those obstacles are now impeding the renewed growth in the economy and more effective job creation in the country. It is a mentality that attributes to government far more power than it has or should have to do what is best carried out in the private sector by individual Canadians. It is a mentality that, worst of all, would make the past failures of government into an excuse for more of the same old bankrupt Liberal policies of borrow and spend, borrow and spend. That is the policy that has discredited the present situation.

Because of past excesses, a perfectly valid use of government fiscal capacity to support economic growth and job creation has been severely damaged and will be crippled unless we act to restore fiscal responsibility, confidence and the growth of the private sector where the real jobs for Canadians will be created and sustained. That job is well started but there are no short cuts except those leading to more of the same kind of trouble embodied in the motion before the House.

Since the Hon. Member who moved the motion was not listening at the beginning of my remarks, perhaps I could repeat my quote from Robert Louis Stevenson. It reads as follows:

> You cannot run away from a weakness; you must some time fight it out or perish; and if that be so, why not now . . . ?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to put to the Hon. Minister but first I would like to make a comment. She does not seem to realize that the Opposition motion prepared by a Member of the NDP was directed to the Government. It called on the Government to do certain things and it is not my responsibility or the responsibility of the Liberal Party to respond to an Opposition motion. It is the Government's responsibility. We will participate in this debate but we will participate next. The Minister should be a little more humble while making her first appearance in the House in this debate and making ridiculous statements about who should respond to a motion directed to the Government. She finally did respond to the motion. For a while we did not know whether or not the Government had any response to make.

In her remarks the Minister said, among other things, that unemployment is a serious problem and that it takes two strides to cross a river, that it takes time to solve these problems. She also said that they do not have all of the answers and that they must consult. If that is the case, would she explain why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), on July 5 in Prince Albert during the election campaign, said: "You are going to see tens upon tens of thousands of jobs being created just as quickly as the new Government can be sworn in"? That is what his Party told the Canadian people during the election campaign. Then it was saying that it had the quick and easy answers. Today the Minister is saying that they must cross the river in two strides; they need time; they must consult. Today she is saying that the Government does not have the answers. It deceived the people during the election campaign. How can the Minister reconcile what she told the House this morning with what her Leader said in Prince Albert on July 5?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has not been listening to what we have been saying for the last few months. We have talked directly about jobs. We have talked about jobs throughout the campaign and we have been responsible for at least part of the jobs which have been created since the Government was sworn in. If the Liberal Party were in power, it would take full credit for every single job. We are more modest, Mr. Speaker. We think that there are people in the private sector and in the unions who do have some responsibility and should take some credit for the fact that they are working hard and creating jobs for Canadians.

Jobs have been created this fall. There will be more jobs created this winter, in the spring, on through 1985 and all the way through to 1988. Then in the second term of our mandate there will be more jobs.

I would like to point out that if government spending were the answer to the nation's problems, as the Hon. Member of the Liberal Party would have us understand, then why was unemployment and the deficit proceeding in lock-step toward all-time highs? That point has been made not only by myself but by many private sector economists who really viewed with a jaundiced eye what was happening in the country.

I might also point out that this country is taxed at a higher rate than most other countries and it is very difficult for people in the private sector who are paying these taxes to also create jobs, given the mountain of debt for which they are paying which was created by the former Government. This has been an ongoing problem in this country for 20 years and I think we are turning it around expeditiously.

The Canadian people as well think that we are turning it around expeditiously. The Canadian people have responded very positively. I myself have had 10 or 12 consultations with groups that have expressed faith in the economic agenda and in what we are trying to do. They have all indicated their support not just for what we are trying to do but for the fact that they intend to return to their role in the private sector and provide us with assistance.

I might also point out that in the Province of Newfoundland there have recently been very exciting developments that will lead to more jobs in that province. We all know that the former Government was not able to reach an agreement with that province and that everything was at a standstill. Newfoundland was a province that was discouraged and felt that its resources and challenges were not understood by the federal Government. Now we have a new approach of which we are all very proud. We are proud of the future the agreement will bring and the challenge that has been faced up to by the Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada. This was done in order to meet the challenge of the future and to create jobs in a province in which they are desperately needed. There is very little that I can add to what I said in my speech, to the government record in this connection and to the dismal failure by the Liberal Party to provide leadership in this area throughout the years before we took office.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister on her efforts, and for pointing out that Saskatchewan should have been mentioned in his motion because of that province's great economic upswing.

There are problems with this motion. The Opposition has spoken about the discredited policies of the Government and that it is opposed to tax increases. I would like to ask the Minister if she supports the payroll tax of the Manitoba Government. That tax is an unnecessary burden on business in Manitoba. Businesses in Manitoba are having a difficult time as it is without having additional taxes imposed on them. I do not understand the motion. The motion states that the New Democratic Party is against taxes, but it does not mention the tax in Manitoba.

When that tax was first introduced, higher interest rates were in effect and consumer purchasing was down. Therefore, businesses could not pass the 1.5 per cent payroll tax on to the consumer. I will speak on this tax in more detail this afternoon. The only thing that tax produced and stimulated was inflation and unemployment. Will the Minister give the assurance to the House that the new Government will not implement a payroll tax similar to the one in Manitoba, which has been detrimental to growth and has caused increased unemployment?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I would not in any way want to comment on the policies of the Manitoba Government in meeting its agenda. I am sure that Government understands, as does this Government, the difficulties which small and medium-sized businesses are having in meeting payroll taxes. Provincial, federal and municipal Governments all understand that.

Obviously, the Manitoba Government is making its own efforts to meet a difficult situation, as is this Government. The important point which I would like to make in that connection is that we would not dream of suggesting that the Manitoba Government should alter its policies to meet the agenda of this Government. We hope that Hon. Members will understand that the federal Government had a mandate given to it by the Canadian people to meet the challenge of providing jobs for the future. In providing those jobs, this Government expects the same respect from the provinces which it is giving to them. We know it is an important part of the process in Canada, which is a country made up of many strong regions which have different personalities and problems. Every Canadian is very proud of their own particular region or province. We are all trying to meet the same objective—a prosperous Canada which has jobs for all who want and need them.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has indicated that she is interested in real discussion. Three times during her address she compared the number of jobs which were created since the Conservatives took power to the number of jobs which were created last year. Does the Minister realize that on a month to month basis since the Conservatives took power there have been fewer jobs created in the country than were created during the Turner administration? Does she realize that this Government has created fewer jobs in the country than were created in the last three months of the Trudeau administration? It works out to 33,000 jobs per month under the Turner administration and 32,000 jobs per month in the last three months of the Trudeau administration. However, it works out to 27,000 per month under this administration.

If she is interested in real discussion, she should not compare the figures to those of last year or to those of the Sir John A. Macdonald years. She should be honest about it. Does the Minister realize the flaw in that argument? Will she advise her Cabinet colleagues—and in particular the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)—not to use that argument because it is a complete fallacy?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly aware of the figures which have been cited by the hon. Member. I might point out to him that the Turner administration consisted almost completely of an election campaign. Members on the opposite side of the House were out on the campaign trail, essentially leaving the country to do what it does best, which is to get on with its job in the economy. With the absence of the Liberal Party in Ottawa during the past summer, more jobs were created.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak in this debate on what is considered by Canadians to be the most serious problem in the country today. According to the Gallup poll which was published on January 28, 1985, 56 per cent of those polled said that unemployment was Canada's top problem.

I am not in a position to comment on the Manitoba situation, although I am sure that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) will do that this afternoon. It is my understanding that Manitoba has had success—as opposed to the Conservative provinces—because it took full advantage of several federal programs which were implemented in the last year or two.

While I am not in a position to comment on employment programs in Manitoba, I am in a position to comment on the policies of the present Government. Before and during the election campaign last summer, Conservative Members promised thousands and thousands of jobs. A few minutes ago I cited the statement which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made in Prince Albert on July 5. He said that tens upon tens of thousands of jobs would be created as soon as the new Government was sworn in.

If we compare the rhetoric of the election campaign, in relation to jobs, with the speech given today by the Minister—I admit that what the Minister said today was more reasonable—we would conclude that it was deceitful for that Party to make those promises during the election campaign because it gave a pretence to the Canadian people that it had some answers. The Government said that it had the answers, the blueprints and the means by which to solve the problem. Today the Minister quite rightly said that the Government does not have the answers and that it must consult. She said that it takes two strides to cross a river. When I asked her to reconcile her rhetoric today with the rhetoric of the election campaign, she spoke about all sorts of things but never answered the question. The Government does not have the answers. She admitted, as have many Ministers, that it will consult with everybody in the country and that hopefully a consensus will come forward. In other words, the Government will not lead, it will follow the common denominator of the country and do things on which it will receive a broad consensus, if it can ever do that at all. I say "at all" because we have seen where the consultation process has led so far.

Since the election, what has the Government done about unemployment? The only major thing which it did was reintroduce, immediately after the election, the Canada Works program for this winter. That was a program which was introduced by the Liberal Government. The Government says that it is opposed to direct employment and throwing money at problems, but it did introduce and claim credit for the fact that the Canada Works program was put back in place for the winter. That program is very much similar to the program which we had last winter and the winter before.

What else did the Government do? After two months of procrastination it announced a summer employment program. Most of the elements of that program are very similar to the Summer Canada program of last year, although it has less real dollars and a higher priority for student employment with big business. The Government consulted for two months and ended up with a program which was not very different from the previous program. The program has a different name, and the Government has mixed the elements of that program around a bit, but it put a bigger priority on big business, which is a serious change. It is detrimental to the program. Nevertheless, the Government did not come up with anything startling or new to solve the problem of summer employment. The Government has not put forward a specific or new plan to deal with the unemployment problem.

What has the Government done, Mr. Speaker? It has cut here and cut there. First, it cut the First Chance program which had not simply been promised but had received the approval of the Treasury Board to go ahead. That program would have trained 100,000 young Canadians a year for five years at a cost of $1 billion a year. That program was cut and replaced with a pilot project which would train 4,000 young people a year at a cost of $27 million. So the Government abandoned a program which would have dealt with the problem in a massive way. It still admits the problem is there because it has a pilot project in order to deal with it, but it is a piddling little program called the youth training option which deals with only 4,000 young people at $27 million a year.

Second, the Government cut $432.3 million from the budget of the Department of Employment and Immigration. It cut that money from the Department which is supposed to deal with these problems. Employment assistance and entitlement had $200 million cut; mobility programs had $2.8 million cut; employment services had $1.3 million cut; and general industrial training had $40 million cut. The Summer Canada program was cut and then the Government put it back under a different name with some slight changes. In addition, the Canada student loans program which helps students deal with training and education was cut by $5 million. The young workers' exchange was cut by $3 million. Environment 2000 which provided jobs in conservation, forest management and environment protection, had $22.8 million cut. The young entrepreneurs' program had $10 million cut. Katimavik, which was an excellent program for young Canadians, had $30 million cut, and Parks Canada had $19.5 million cut.

So in the short period the Conservatives have been in government they have not done one specific new thing at all to solve the unemployment problem. Canada Works, which was our employment program, was put back, but nothing else. Government has cut a lot of programs which were beneficial to the creation of employment. That is its record so far.

Mr. Foster: PC means "poor Canada".

Mr. Allmand: The Government has no policy, no plan, and it is searching for one now. It does, however, have a general philosophy which has been expressed time and time again by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald).

At this point, I must make one comment. We are having a debate on the problem of unemployment which 56 per cent of Canadians say is the most serious problem in the country, and I must say that I am extremely surprised that the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of Finance are not here. We have two Ministers of State present and I congratulate them for being here, but it shows the seriousness with which the Government is dealing with this most important problem.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Allmand: There is no one on the front-bench at all, and the Minister of State is here to answer the very serious charge—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) rises on a point of order which I foresee will be the fact that the Hon. Member should not refer to the absence or presence of specific Hon. Members.

Mr. Lewis: That is right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member should know that.

Mr. Lewis: It is acknowledged parliamentary decorum not to do that. I cannot remember any instance when we ever did it while we were in opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: There is always a need for a bit of levity in a serious debate, but I would be pleased to send over to the Hon. Member some quotes from Hansard which show that when those members of the Government were in opposition they used to raise this matter almost daily.

Mr. Lewis: I can't remember that.

Mr. Allmand: While the Conservative Government has no programs to deal with unemployment, no specific blueprints and plans, it has enunciated a general policy. That general policy has been that if the Government more or less withdraws from the picture, gets out of direct employment, stops throwing money at the problems, as the Government has put it, then the private sector will come along and create thousands and thousands of jobs. We are told that business will pick up in the areas where the Government pulls back.

Of course, Mrs. Thatcher in England has espoused that philosophy and I believe in England there is an unemployment rate of 13 per cent. I am not saying that that is the only reason for that high unemployment rate, I am sure there are other reasons as well; but to suggest that the answer to the unemployment problem is that sort of philosophical approach is wrong. In the United States it is true that the unemployment rate has come down, but it has come down on the basis of a very strong military and defence construction industry. The manufacturing of armaments in the United States is one area where budgets are being increased, which in turn is propping up employment in that country. But that is a situation where goods are being produced, the purpose of which is to wage war, and I don't believe that in the long run that is the way to solve economic or employment problems.

As a Liberal, I disagree with the basic philosophy being espoused by the Conservative Government. We are told that in time we will see that it will work. I doubt that we will ever see it working. I wanted to put this question to the Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) when she spoke: The Minister of Finance said on November 8 that unemployment will come down only as the United States interest rates fall and, at best, will average 9 per cent for the rest of the decade. What we have here is the Minister of Finance for the Conservative Party telling us that he really cannot do very much about the unemployment problem in Canada, that it will depend on the United States interest rates and, in any case, it is going to stay around 9 per cent for the rest of the decade. Is that the approach of the Conservative Government to unemployment? That is what its Minister of Finance said on November 8.

Mr. Hopkins: It's like everything else; it's a made in Washington policy.

Mr. Allmand: Exactly. I would like to point out to this House that the philosophy now being espoused by the Conservative Party is also at variance with the philosophy of the Conservative Party under the leadership of Mr. Clark and Mr. Diefenbaker. Those two Conservative Governments at least believed in direct employment programs. I believe Mr. Diefenbaker in the early 1960s started the winter works program, so he believed in direct employment. But we now have this new conservatism which is withdrawing from that sort of thing in the hope that the private sector will pick up the slack.

I would like to point out that in this country that will not work. The greatest periods of prosperity and job creation we have had in this country have been under what might be called mixed economy regimes. That is where Governments have intervened to sustain and promote employment and at the same time help the private sector to expand and to become more productive.

I should point out that during the election campaign the present Prime Minister promised that over the life of his first mandate 552,000 jobs would be created. That would be from the fall of 1984 to approximately the fall of 1988. In the first term of the Trudeau Government, from 1968 to 1972, 800,000 jobs were created. The Minister would say: "Sure, they were created but why should you take credit for that?" I agree with her. But the Conservative Government is now trying to take credit as well for every new job which is created. All we are saying is that if you compare the period from 1968 to 1972, which was Mr. Trudeau's first term in office, you find that 800,000 jobs were created.

Mr. Gormley: What went wrong after that?

Mr. Allmand: We still maintained a high record. I will give the facts on that and I hope you will still be as enthusiastic as you are now. Canada, even in the 1970s, had the highest record of job creation of all the western countries and there are OPEC figures to prove that.

Mr. Gormley: Why didn't you continue?

Mr. Allmand: We did continue. The situation was that the very good record of job creation was still not able to deal with the very serious problems in this country which are structural and market-oriented. There are many causes and many complex problems. The Minister today admitted they were complex problems.

It is very interesting to compare some of her statements today with what our Ministers were saying in the House last spring. Those statements are very similar, such as: "It takes time. It's a complex problem. There are many aspects to the unemployment situation in Canada". She is saying that now. However, she and her Party were not saying that during the election campaign.

In any case, to have prosperity in this country, economic growth, high productivity, we need the proper mix of government intervention and private initiative. The Hon. Member across the way from Manitoba can accuse me of being a socialist but I do not pay much attention to that because I know this has been a successful formula over the years. Even if the private sector does pick up and produce a lot of new jobs, and I hope they do, there are a lot of things that have to be done which will never be done by the private sector. There are services for people. The Canada Council on Social Development, appearing before the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration last spring, told us that they had identified in this country over 300,000 jobs which had to be done for Canadians in the area of social services that were not being done. The present chairman of the committee, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), I believe, was on the committee at that time. These jobs were not being done because the financing was not there to support them, things such as taking care of senior citizens, the illiterate, continuing education, rehabilitation programs for drug and alcohol abusers, slow learner education and programs for native peoples and so on. The private sector is never going to do those kinds of things so they have to be done by governments or agencies supported directly by government.

What can be done? Is it necessary that we in this country live with double-digit unemployment for the rest of this decade or even the 9 per cent that the Minister of Finance seems willing to live with? I do not think so. If we look at some other countries in the world—I know more about them than I do about Manitoba, I hate to admit—the unemployment rate in Austria in 1983 was 4.5 per cent with an inflation rate of 3.8 per cent. It is a relatively small country living next door to an economic giant, West Germany, yet it is able to maintain through a mixed economy system a relatively low rate of unemployment and inflation.

In Japan, a completely different type of country, the unemployment rate in 1983 was 2.7 per cent and inflation was 1.8 per cent. That is a very interesting situation because Japan is very much into new technology, robots and automation. Some Canadians argue that if we bring in new technology we are going to have a higher rate of unemployment. Well, here you have Japan, a leader in the world, with 2.7 per cent unemployment. In 1983 Norway had 3.3 per cent unemployment and Sweden 3.5 per cent. So it can be done.

In the short time I have left, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that I personally believe, as I have recommended in several other Budget debates in the last couple of years, that we should have a six and five program for unemployment. Make the same effort in unemployment that we made in inflation when we brought it down from 12 per cent or 13 per cent to what it is now, 4 per cent or 5 per cent. We made it the highest priority and put a lot of effort into it. I think we should do the same for unemployment and we can do it through a mixed program.

To begin with, Mr. Speaker, we help the private sector become as efficient and productive as possible, even if that means the loss of jobs in certain manufacturing sectors. By doing that we will keep those wealth producers in Canada. We will not lose them by maintaining an inefficient system. We help them adapt to the new technology so they can compete with these other countries. Then we put a lot more money into retraining and upgrading so that people displaced by this new approach and the changes in our industry and economy will be redirected into those new jobs and trained accordingly. That requires not pilot projects of $27 million, it requires programs of $1 billion a year. It requires a lot of money but it is an investment in the economy of the country.

In addition to that we also need changes in our work time schedules. Through a greater emphasis on education by way of student loans and government support for education, there would be a delayed entry of young people into the workforce if they were all getting the education they really require. We should also, through encouragement and incentive, allow people who want to retire early to do so so they can leave the workforce and young people can come in at the bottom and get some of those jobs. We know that under the new Charter of Rights it will be illegal or unconstitutional forcibly to put a man out of work just because he is 65 or 60, or whatever it is; but we can have incentive programs for early retirement. I know they are being studied now and they are very important to this whole subject.

We could also encourage part-time work which has all the benefits of full-time work so people who want to train for part of the week or take care of families can also work. If we properly supported part-time work it would also leave open some jobs for other people to work at. In addition, we should support the recommendations of the many reports relating to paid educational leave for skills upgrading and training.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe the problem can be solved. We can bring down unemployment because it has been done in the countries I referred to. But it will not be done if the Government continues to follow the philosophy it has been espousing so far. I say philosophy because I cannot criticize the Government for the programs it has put forward; there have been very few programs. However, I urge the Government to look at what is being done in other parts of the world and to listen to some of the comments being made.

There was a very interesting program last night on The Journal where a number of economists from Canada and the U.S. were discussing these very matters. Many of them were putting forward recommendations similar to what I am putting forward today. In any case, except for the man from McLeod, Young, Weir Limited, they did not agree with the philosophy that seems to be espoused by the Government. Therefore I urge the Government through this motion to take seriously the demands being made, that in its consultations it does not put on blinkers but looks at some of the things being done in places which have been successful in bringing down the unemployment rate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a very active Member and chairman of the Special Committee on Employment which went across this country a few years ago and produced an excellent report. I want his opinion on the program announced last week, the special Student Employment and Experience Development program. Does he think it is really going to be adequate, especially in rural areas of this country?

Under that program the Government allocated $165 million to offices only. If you are in a rural area like Algoma or Manitoulin, then the funds will be allocated perhaps to Sudbury or Sault Ste. Marie. The rural communities and businesses, Indian bands, municipalities and non-profit groups will really be in competition with much larger groups from half a dozen districts. In the past ridings like Algoma would have an allocation of, say, $968,000 and now they really have none. A similar allocation would provide about 100 projects and 500 jobs. Now there is really no allocation so there is really no guarantee that those rural municipalities and other groups will receive any amount of funding. I really wonder whether this is advantageous to rural municipalities.

The other problem that I see in rural areas, and I am sure the Hon. Member would have some advice on this, is that in slow growth areas of the country where the economy is not very strong I wonder whether the private sector will use that program because they have to put up half the funding. Instead of providing additional assistance for hard-pressed areas, those funds will flow into areas which are relatively better off and have more prosperous businesses that can take advantage of the program.

By the same token, in the past municipalities received 100 per cent of the funding. They now have to provide 25 per cent of the compulsory contributions and all of the equipment costs. In the past that was all provided: a small municipality could employ three or four people and get $7,000 to $10,000 in funding. They now receive only 75 per cent of the funding to assist in training students. I believe we will be short of funds in rural areas.

Under the old Summer Canada program there were a lot of funds available through the departmental stream for Indian bands. In my constituency there are about 12 bands with 7,000 or 8,000 status Indians. They will now have to compete with businessmen from big cities such as North Bay and Sudbury. In the past they were able to apply for funding through the Department of Indian Affairs. The Hon. Member has had a lot of experience in this. Does he really believe that this program will be fair in assisting the slow growth areas where unemployment has hit the hardest, such as in northern Ontario, certain areas of the Maritimes and northern Quebec? Is this funding going to be gobbled up by the rich municipalities and businesses in the faster moving and more economically sound areas of the country?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in the last Parliament there was the Task Force on Employment Opportunities for the '80s made up of seven Members of Parliament; four from the Government, two from the Conservative Party, and one from the NDP. We travelled extensively throughout the country and met with business organizations, unions, universities and community groups. We worked for over a year and then produced a report. It was made very clear in the report that direct employment programs were necessary. It was also made clear in our recommendations that there had to be a mix between government support for private sector employment and for community and municipal employment creation.

The Member makes a good point. In the announcement made the other day of $205 million for the summer employment program, there was no specific allocation of money for community organizations and municipalities as opposed to the private sector. As a matter of fact, the Minister said that there was a priority for summer employment with the private sector and, in particular, with big business in the private sector. There are many parts of Canada where the big business private sector is not strong. In some areas such as the Gaspé, parts of Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario and Quebec it is non-existent. Yesterday in the House I asked the Minister to reconsider and put aside a good percentage of that money for community groups and municipalities.

Let us look at the allocation made under that student summer employment program. Out of the $200 million provided last year, Newfoundland got $5.5 million; this year it will only get $5.1 million. Last year Nova Scotia got $6.2 million; this year it will only get $5.7 million. Prince Edward Island received $1.2 million last year; this year it will get $.7 million. Last year New Brunswick got $5.8 million; this year it will only get $4.9 million. Last year Quebec got $43.7 million; this year it will only get $41.9 million. Every province east of Ontario will receive less money this year. Due to equalization the poorer provinces of Canada, which need help the most, are getting less money. I do not know how that is justified.

Another interesting point is that right after the Minister announced her program, executives of several of the big companies which she had consulted with said that they could not make any commitment to hire the thousands of young people that they were expected to. They said that they would try. A Noranda official said: "You can't hire students when you are laying off their mothers and fathers. At worst, Noranda expects to hire 100 students more than the 1,300 they hired last year, but the number depends on business increases". Students will be ready for work around April 15. They are relying on jobs with the big corporations. I do not know what students will do in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and northern Ontario.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over. For resumption of debate, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, (Mr. McKenzie).

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on this NDP motion. They are criticizing policies of tax increases and spending cuts, but they fail to make any criticism of the NDP Government which implemented a regressive anti-labour tax in Manitoba. It is called the Manitoba payroll tax. It has even been severely criticized by some of the most left-wing journalists in Manitoba. In order to cope with this tax, businesses in Manitoba have had to lay off people to cover the cost of the payroll tax which they have to pay to the NDP Government. I visited businesses in Manitoba which are expanding. It was explained to me that they could hire more people in their plants if it were not for this regressive Manitoba payroll tax. This has discouraged businesses from investing in Manitoba. They preferred to go to provinces which did not have this payroll tax. Farmers have to pay this tax as well, as though they did not have enough problems to contend with.

I see the coalition is working today. There they are, huddling again, just like they did between 1972 and 1974. I am sure the Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) will remember what happened in those days.

Mr. Althouse: We are looking at the new Whip appointments.

Mr. Foster: You didn't make it, Dan. You're not going to be a Whip.

Mr. McKenzie: The NDP supported the Liberals 19 times in a row to bring about economic chaos in this country during that period. The NDP Government in Manitoba is removing the hydro rates freeze which was put in place by the previous Conservative Government. As a result hydro rates have increased. This increase in hydro rates was another shock for businesses and farmers since during the election campaign Premier Pawley promised that the freeze would not be lifted.

So much for NDP campaign promises. This regressive anti-labour tax forced Kimberley-Clark to leave the Province of Manitoba. It is now expanding in Ontario where there is no 1.5 per cent payroll tax. Shell Oil closed its plant in Manitoba because it is just too expensive to stay in business under the NDP Government in Manitoba.

Cut-backs are mentioned in this motion. However, nothing is said about the Finance Minister of Manitoba announcing that he would make cut-backs. If cut-backs have such a negative effect on employment, why is the NDP not criticizing their colleagues in Manitoba? This motion should condemn them for the cuts if they will cause unemployment.

• (1240)

In an announcement in November, the senior Cabinet Minister confirmed that the provincial Treasury Board had asked Cabinet Ministers to scrutinize certain expenditures and submit programs and services that could be cut back or limited. There is not much consistency in the motion. The NDP condemns taxes but condones provincial NDP increases in taxes in Manitoba. There is no comment about the Minister of Finance there who is introducing cut-backs.

I received a document today from the Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses. They realize that the uncontrolled spending must be brought under control. They state in their brief:

> Although CFIB suggestions for modifying the tax system are not costly in national terms, we suggest the following area where the small business community can and should contribute to the government's efforts to reduce the size of the federal deficit.

I commend that association for realizing that something must be done.

I am not in favour of commonly using the word "cut-back" because it is actually the elimination of waste, mismanagement and duplication. That is what we on this side are trying to do and it is something that was never done under successive Liberal Governments. One only needs to read the Auditor General's Report, which gets worse every year, to have evidence of uncontrolled spending. Now that the Liberals are in opposition they have an immediate answer for everything.

One of the most amusing scenes I have ever seen was during the Liberal leadership campaign last summer. During that leadership campaign one would think that the Liberals had been in opposition for 20 years because each candidate had a solution for everything. If that was the case I do not understand why we have unemployment and huge deficits today. The Liberals have been in power for 20 years with majorities during some of that time. If they had all the answers, why did they not implement all those policies in order to prevent unemployment and the high deficit?

Let us review how unemployment originally began. Between 1972 and 1975 when the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) was the Minister of Finance, the number of unemployed rose by 164,000 and youth unemployment climbed by 109,000. This became worse over the years until the number of unemployed at this time is 1.5 million. Where were all the brilliant policies and why were they not implemented at that time? Obviously the Liberals had the wrong policies.

In that twenty-ninth Parliament the NDP supported the Liberals in 19 consecutive non-confidence motions. During the election campaign I heard a very interesting comment on Radio Station CJOB in Winnipeg. A very prominent New Democrat said on the radio that the best governments are minority governments. Unemployment increased by 164,000 and youth unemployment climbed by 109,000 during a minority government. Is that what the NDP describe as good government?

While there are no quick fixes or instant solutions, we are certainly making great strides. The energy agreement in Newfoundland yesterday was certainly well received by the people of that province and it will create much employment. Furthermore, the economic conference and the First Ministers' conference will produce more plans with regard to creating employment. When the energy agreement is reached with the western provinces, more employment will be created at that time. We will not implement another disastrous energy policy which caused so many problems for all of Canada, particularly the west.

While we are being told about the prosperity in Manitoba, we are not hearing the same comments from the business community. Let me quote John Bulloch, President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, in an article in the Winnipeg Free Press:

> Manitoba's New Democratic Party government is the most anti-business regime in Canada, John Bulloch, president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, said yesterday.
> "It still hasn't dawned on this government that the new jobs and Manitoba's hopes for a better future depend largely on a revitalized small and medium-sized business sector," he told a news conference one day after the federation's annual meeting, held in Winnipeg this year.
> "The government of Manitoba clings to the lame philosophy that only it can solve all the problems and that only it can breathe new life into its sick economy."
> "Manitoba seems blind to the fact that its policies are doing just the opposite."

He said 60 per cent of the federation's members in Manitoba implemented pay cuts or pay freezes while the province increased the salaries of public servants by about 10 per cent.

Therefore, not everyone agrees that it is all milk and honey in Manitoba. I recall that in 1969 we had a balanced budget in Manitoba. There was stability in the country and there was steady growth. Subsequently, all Hades broke loose in that province in regard to the budget deficit that has been increasing and causing very serious problems there.

Furthermore, the NDP like to give the impression that they are the only ones interested in health care. That is not true. That Government's regressive payroll tax in Manitoba has even affected rural hospitals. An article in the Winnipeg Sun on December 10, 1982 states:

Municipal taxpayers may have to bail out rural hospitals that are being swamped with red ink because of the province's payroll tax.

Several hospital administrators said yesterday that the payroll tax is swelling their deficits and they don't know where they are going to get the money.

It is as if our hospitals don't have enough problems!

"The 1.5 per cent payroll tax is killing us," said one administrator who did not want to be identified. "Taxpayers aren't going to be happy about seeing a hospital tax."

Carman Memorial Hospital is typical of what is happening in many facilities across the province. The hospital pays $1,000 each month in payroll taxes and that only adds to the burden of a deficit hovering in the range of $50,000.

This additional $1,000 a month is being imposed on hospitals in small towns across the province. If that is not regressive and anti-labour, I don't know what is.

One of the strongest supporters of the New Democratic Party in Manitoba is Frances Russell, a columnist for the Winnipeg Free Press. She is a very strong left-wing socialist and certainly does not try to hide that fact. She recently stated in her column that "Pawley's payroll tax is no laughing matter. A regressive, anti-labour tax like this certainly is no laughing matter.

She states:

—the payroll tax is emerging as the new government's biggest embarrassment. It may even turn into a political disaster.

Let me tell the House that the Leader of the Opposition in Manitoba, the Hon. Gary Filmon, has stated that when he forms the next government, one of his first measures will be to remove this regressive anti-labour tax. We certainly hope that the NDP will summon enough courage to call an election in the near future so that we can remove this tax.

Frances Russell also states:

More importantly, the tax is proving to be a particularly bad move now that unemployment has become the number one political and economic issue in Canada. Manitoba's unemployment rate has risen 75 per cent in the past year—

About the second lowest increase in Canada.

During the last election campaign, as in previous electoral battles, the NDP has presented itself as the party that cares about the individual entrepreneur. Yet this tax bears most heavily on precisely that community, particularly in a recession when many small businesses are fighting to stave off bankruptcy.

● (1250)

That was a very regressive tax. The huge deficit in Manitoba was brought about entirely by the NDP because we had a balanced budget in 1969. This is hurting Manitoba's financial rating. Manitoba's financial position has deteriorated significantly over the last two years. A major New York ratings house stated yesterday that it had lowered the province's credit rating. Standard and Poor's dropped Manitoba's rating from AA to AA-minus. They also dropped the rating for Manitoba Hydro.

Talk about fancy bookkeeping, Mr. Speaker! We talk about the Auditor General's report here; it is not any better in Manitoba. Mr. Ziprick, Manitoba's Auditor General, has stated that the deficit in Manitoba is unreal. In an article in the Winnipeg Free Press we read:

The auditor also took issue with another of the government's accounting practices relating to the Crown-owned Manitoba Forestry Resources Ltd. in The Pas.

Ziprick said the province wrote off a $51.3 million liability Manfor owed to the government in November, 1983. The investment was initially made in 1973 after the province had taken over the old Churchill Forest Industries.

The $51.3 million should have been considered a government expenditure at the time instead of being carried on the books at all these years, Ziprick said—

The government's public accounts also show Manitoba spent almost $270 million last year on financial charges stemming from the province's total debt—

The province's net combined debt is almost $6 billion or about $6,000 for each man, woman and child.

We have nothing to learn from the NDP Government in Manitoba.

In closing, I want to point out to the people of Manitoba, who will want to remember this at the next provincial election, that the provincial debt is rising under the NDP in Manitoba by $81 every minute. That is a sad, sick record of a very sick, socialist government and we certainly will not be implementing anything it would recommend in our Budget.

Some Liberals mentioned that there was no funding going to municipalities in the cities, that they are all cut off.

Mr. Foster: That is right.

Mr. McKenzie: I just want to point out that on Friday of this week I shall be visiting four community groups in my riding to deliver cheques from the Conservative Government in Ottawa.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I was struck by the somewhat selective figures which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) used. He said that in 1969 the Manitoba Government was operating without deficits. That is a very interesting date because it was in 1969 that the first NDP Government under Mr. Schreyer was elected. That Government was in office until 1977. It was replaced by a Conservative Government led by Sterling Lyon. That Government talked about the same kind of objections to deficit financing that we have heard from this Member and this Government. That Government implemented very tough restrictive policies as far as government expenditures were concerned.

I would like the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine to tell us—if he knows, and he should know—what the situation was in the last two years of the Lyon Government. Did it not have quite substantial deficits in the last year or two before it was defeated? Were not those deficits created by the simple political fact that the Government realized that its restrictive policies were unpopular and it had better try to regain some of the support it lost because of its tough economic measures?

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, when a snowball starts rolling down a long steep hill, it grows and grows to a huge size. The Lyon Government inherited that from the Schreyer Government. There are no easy, quick solutions to eliminate any debt that was started by the Schreyer Government, any more than we are going to be able to stop this rolling snowball down here.

The Hon. Member said I used selective figures. I would like to have had at least an hour—

[Editor's Note: And an object having been thrown from the gallery]:

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) has just been attacked from the Gallery. Have we got security around here or what?

An Hon. Member: They have hustled him out.

Mr. McKenzie: That is somebody expressing—

Mr. Blaikie: If you think that is funny, Dan, you have another think coming.

Mr. Young: Shame on you, Dan.

Mr. Althouse: It is being spread now from all directions, Dan.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine may continue.

Mr. McKenzie: The Lyon Government was unable in four years to correct the huge deficit which was run up by the Schreyer Government and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) should know that. He has been around here long enough. I would like to read all the debt figures into the record today but we are limited to 20 minutes. I could have explained it to him in a lot more detail. We will have such a debt in this country unless we take some very positive steps because it will just get out of control. The New Democratic Party is about the only group that feels that we should do nothing about this huge deficit, but there is no way that the Lyon Government could correct eight years of Schreyer in four years.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, does not the Hon. Member realize that every Government in Canada, the federal Government and all the provincial Governments, are all operating with deficits; that the deficit is caused mainly by the fact that we have so much unemployment, that more than 11 per cent of the working population is not working, which means they are not earning money? They are not drawing wages or salary and, therefore, they are not paying income tax. As a result people are not purchasing goods and services which other people produce. Rather than adding to the economy, they are costing the economy through payments of welfare and unemployment insurance.

Does the Member not realize that if governments of whatever stripe were to attack the deficit by really cutting back expenditures at a time when the private sector is not providing the jobs that are required, we would have even more unemployment, tens of thousands, indeed hundreds of thousands of people either drawing unemployment insurance or welfare, and in this kind of economy no government whatever its political stripe can really do much about reducing the deficit?

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, we have proven beyond the shadow of a doubt in this country that this philosophy of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party that you solve all problems either by spending more money, borrowing more money, or going into debt has not worked. If that were the answer, we would not have 1.3 million people unemployed. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North is overlooking completely that the money has not been spent wisely. Billions and billions of dollars have been absolutely wasted. Billions of dollars have been thrown at different programs. These programs were not well thought out. There was no consultation.

This is one of the problems we have had in Canada under the Liberals. They governed by confrontation. They spent money without consultation with the private sector and the provinces. That is why we are being so well received by the business community and the provinces. They are saying that it is a refreshing change to be able to sit down and discuss these programs in advance instead of having the federal Government forcing issues. We have to exercise caution in regard to the size of the debt and the borrowing. The policies of the Liberal Government over the years have just driven billions of dollars of investment money out of the country.

This sort of thing has done the economy in places like Kentucky a lot of good. Kentucky advertises itself as the eleventh province because so much Canadian money has gone there. The same thing has happened in Florida, California and the Carolinas. More has been done for the economy in the States than in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EMPLOYEES' PARKING FEES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Government is perpetrating yet another vicious attack upon public servants in the National Capital Region. Not content with cutting thousands of jobs, sending everyone into a state of panic, and increasing unemployment, especially among women, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) is performing another raid upon the pocketbook of public servants by increasing parking fees for government employees from $42 to $75 and, in some cases, to $85 per month. This increase of 100 per cent and more is perpetrated in many cases upon people of modest means, sole support parents, and many others who cannot afford it.

The Government preaches restraint. Does the Minister of Public Works worry about public servants? No. Do Tory Members from Ottawa-Carleton, Ottawa West, Nepean-Carleton, Gatineau, and others worry? No, they do not. They have not said a word on this issue.

The Government is overcharging public servants and uses the money to pay for its extravagance and comfort, with 40 limousines, 40 chauffeurs, 40 political commissars, and a fleet of jets flying around delivering copies of speeches of Cabinet Ministers. This is Robin Hood in reverse. The Government is taking from the poor and giving to the rich—itself.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am most distressed at a comment appearing in the Saturday, February 9, edition of The Toronto Star and attributed to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). He is reported to have expressed the idea that Miller's Ontario is not the real Ontario because Mr. Miller's Conservative Government represents only one group of provincial voters—white Anglo-Saxon Protestants.

It is beyond the realm of possibility that the Right Hon. Member could have made such a racist statement. I know he is aware of the broad spectrum make-up of the Conservative Party. He is also familiar with the diverse ethnic and religious constituency represented by the Conservative Governments both in Ottawa and in the provinces. Persons of all races, creeds, and colours are welcome in the Conservative Party, as the Leader of the Opposition well knows.

I call for the Right Hon. Member to rise in his place at three o'clock today to confirm, correct, or deny this shameful statement.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE

EARLY RETIREMENT RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in 1977 the subcommittee on the penitentiary system in Canada made a very clear-cut recommendation which read as follows:

> Retirement at 55 years of age must be mandatory for all employees other than professional staff, with full pension after 25 years of service. Early voluntary retirement at age 50 after 20 years of service should be optional.

I am now calling upon the Government to recognize the exceptional pressures and stresses which are part of every day life for a penitentiary guard in a maximum security institution. The present pension structure for RCMP officers and Armed Forces personnel recognizes the extra stress of those jobs. The pension plan of air traffic controllers also recognizes a tension syndrome peculiar to that group.

The statistics on shorter life expectancy for the custodial service point to the need for immediate remedial measures. I call upon the Government to take the initiative where the Liberals failed, and to carry out the recommendation made years ago and agreed to by all three political Parties as late as last June. I call upon the Government to introduce immediately legislation to allow this group early retirement.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE—SUGGESTED FULLSCALE REVISION OF TAX SYSTEMS

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the premiums and bonuses being offered to consumers by the oil companies. I think they should lower the price of gas instead of giving away hamburgers, glasses, dishes and discounts on cigarettes. Consumers in Beauce and Quebec are fed up with constant increases in the price of gas. They want to pay less per litre, they don't want premiums.

Why should the Quebec consumer let himself be skinned by the multinationals and the tax system without demanding an explanation, especially since last week, Canadian oil companies announced record profits? Quebecers feel they are getting a raw deal and they want to know what is going on.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest an overall review of our tax systems.

In the United States, where taxation is not as severe and oil producers engage in healthy competition instead of conspiring to "skin" the consumer, the price of gas is dropping everywhere. At this very moment, even considering the value of the U.S. dollar and the fact that their gallon is not as big as ours, it still works out to about $1.65 per gallon. In other words, almost $1 less than over here.

Canadians may rest assured that Progressive Conservative Members will work hard to protect consumers, whether they live in Beauce, in Quebec or elsewhere in Canada. It is up to us to act, and I am confident that our Government will find a fair and equitable solution.

FISHERIES

CANCELLATION OF NEWFOUNDLAND CONFERENCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the fishermen of the great northern peninsula of Newfoundland and Labrador, and on behalf of the many development associations, fishermen's committees, and community councils, which spent a great deal of time, effort, and money to organize, on a very large scale, a conference to be held in the northern peninsula community of St. Anthony at the end of this month, to discuss the future of the Fisheries of that area.

The meeting had been arranged. People had committed themselves to travel hundreds of miles to be at the meeting. An agenda had been set. Everything was in place. Last week the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) and his officials advised the organizers of the meeting that they could not attend. Subsequently, the entire exercise had to be cancelled.

The fisheries of the northern peninsula of Newfoundland and Labrador are the most underdeveloped anywhere in the country. With the formation of a new federal-provincial fish company, it is now critical that special attention be paid to this area. The people on this coast, in the highest unemployment area anywhere in the nation, deserve the time and attention of the federal Minister of Fisheries. Furthermore, they deserve respect, especially for their efforts to organize the meeting. I plead with the Minister, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and Newfoundland's regional Minister to assure their attendance at the earliest possible—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '85—ENTHUSIASM IN TÉMISCAMINGUE OVER PROGRAM ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, last week on February 6, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) presented her student summer employment program called Challenge 85. This program, with a total budget of $205 million, is to create 95,000 jobs for next summer.

Mr. Speaker, this announcement certainly cooled off Members of the two Opposition parties who have been harrassing and criticizing our Minister for more than two months, despite patient insistence by the Minister of Employment and Immigration and our Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) that in due time, they would be bringing in a program that was better structured, better designed and especially better adapted to the needs of students and young people.

Mr. Speaker, this program is unique in that it appeals more particularly to the private sector and our municipalities to show their confidence in students by giving them a chance to acquire practical training.

Mr. Speaker, on the weekend I held a number of consultations in my riding. I met with businessmen, representatives of chambers of commerce and municipal authorities, all of whom were quite enthusiastic, and I can assure you that in Témiscamingue, we are ready to meet "Challenge 85".

ENERGY

FEDERAL-NEWFOUNDLAND AGREEMENT ON OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party, as do all reasonable Canadians, rejoice that finally there is an agreement between Canada and Newfoundland to pave the way for the development of the Hibernia oil field.

Yesterday I was in Corner Brook, watching the signing ceremony on television. A Newfoundlander next to me said: "Those boys are going to get sore arms from patting themselves on the back so much". Be that as it may, I am glad there has been an agreement.

I have three positive suggestions. First, we should consider a constitutional amendment to enshrine provincial control of offshore resources in the Constitution. As a western Canadian, I realize how important that is. Second, we have to be careful about the pace of development and about the creation of jobs. Energy, Mines and Resources officials told the energy committee this year that there would only be 6,000 jobs in the development of the field. Expectations are very high. Let us have some hearings by the energy committee to see if we can get more jobs, and to see whether we can get some jobs for western Newfoundland and Labrador which often feel left out of the development.

Finally, I would urge that the federal and provincial Governments not forget the traditional industries like fisheries and forestry where there really are jobs for the future. I am glad that there is a deal. Let us work on it and try to create more and better jobs. Let us not forget the fish and the forests as well.

FORESTRY

QUEBEC—SECTORAL AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, the Liberals in this House, who are Members of a Party that wasted public funds for fifteen years and who represent what remains of the previous Government's institutional arrogance, make it impossible for us to forget their legacy. Our forest industry, for instance, is in great difficulty, and I am therefore very pleased with the particular emphasis placed on this sector by the present government. In a matter of weeks, I think we can guarantee the people of Quebec, of whom 250,000 work in this sector, that the sectoral agreement will meet the forest industry's essential requirements relating to research, management and all forestry problems.

Mr. Speaker, it is therefore important to emphasize consultation, as our Government is doing now, and help 250,000 forestry workers in Quebec, who, just as our senior citizens and students, may be assured our Government will "deliver the goods".

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE—FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY MEETING

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to call attention to the 50th anniversary meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture which is taking place in Hull, here in the National Capital area. We welcome the delegates to the capital of our country and to Parliament this week.

The CFA represents the producers of many agricultural commodities and tens of thousands of farmers across the country. The contributions which the CFA has made over the last half century to Canadian agriculture have been very great. We pay tribute to its many members who have given so generously of their time.

The CFA has called on the Government to reinstate the Canadian Agriculture Export Corporation which has been so successful in its first few months of operation, selling $16 million worth of commodities and making arrangements for additional sales of $100 million. However, the Government has sold out to the multinational agriculture exporting corporations so it is destroying Canagrex, a company we designed to help farmers sell their commodities abroad.

Canagrex is especially important at a time when countries like the United States and others are more aggressively marketing their commodities abroad. I call on the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Government to start listening to the farmers and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and to stop listening to the powerful multinational agriculture trading companies which are only interested in their own profits, not in the farmers of Canada.

PUNCTUALITY

LACK OF OBSERVANCE IN OTTAWA

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, in Stormont-Dundas time is a very important commodity. When we have a meeting at three o'clock, we have a meeting at three o'clock. If the meeting starts before three, then the meeting starts early. If the meeting starts after three, then the meeting starts late. There is no confusion. Even my five-year old son Michael recognizes that when the little hand is at three and the big hand is at twelve, the time is three o'clock.

In Ottawa there appears to be some confusion about time, or possibly some lack of respect for time. Many meetings do not start when scheduled because participants habitually arrive late. If a meeting is called for three o'clock, the general attitude appears to be that the commencement time is not really three o'clock but perhaps 3.05, 3.10 or 3.20.

I can offer two solutions. We could consider that Ottawa be in a different time zone and agree that everyone would be 10 or 20 minutes late. There are some obvious problems with this concept. Perhaps we should consider the simplest solution. Everyone should agree that three o'clock means three o'clock, four o'clock means four o'clock, and so on. If we agree to meet at a certain time, then we have made a definite commitment and we should feel obligated to meet at that specific time.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

APPLICATION TO PERSONS AGED 16 AND 17 YEARS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, one of the great achievements of the last Parliament was the Young Offenders Act. On April 1, the Young Offenders Act is supposed to come into effect to include all 16 and 17-year olds across the country.

I learned this morning that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) intends, when he is in Regina, to announce that that law will not apply to 16 and 17-year olds. I know that he has had considerable pressure from some provincial Governments not to let the law apply to these young people but to continue dealing with those young people under the adult system. I would remind the Prime Minister that the setting of that age is a federal matter and that the Parliament of Canada acted unanimously. Members of the Conservative, NDP, and Liberal Parties all agreed that 16 and 17-year olds should fall under the juvenile justice system and that that system should be toughened up, and it was toughened up.

I would call on the Prime Minister not to take this step backward, and remind him that there is legal opinion to the effect that it would be unlawful to exclude 16 and 17-year olds from the Act in some parts of the country though they are included in others once the equality provisions of the Charter of Rights come into effect.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

NEWSPAPER REFERENCE TO MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I am very surprised that the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister are not in their seats because we have an extremely serious matter to discuss today. First there was the question involving the administration of justice, and now we have a new problem relating to national security.

I do not know to whom I can direct my question. With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I could wait until the Prime Minister is here. Can anyone tell the House of Commons if the Prime Minister will come here this afternoon?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I expect that the Prime Minister will be in the House. If the Hon. Member has any questions to direct to the Government, he can go ahead and direct them. If he is waiting for the Prime Minister, he will have to wait for a few minutes yet.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this is an unusual situation, and we have some extremely serious questions to ask. I do not know whether or not the Chair would like to recognize me later on when the Prime Minister will be here so I can ask him questions. I would ask other Hon. Members to ask questions now.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Government House Leader. Could he, in less than five minutes, be more precise as to the time of the arrival in the Chamber of the Prime Minister?

An Hon. Member: Here he is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have some extremely serious questions to ask of the Prime Minister. The Government is finding itself in a very messy situation at this time when one of the major newspapers of Canada is saying that the Solicitor General of Canada has acted with bad judgment in the execution of his functions, and now we read in a paper that the Minister of National Defence has put himself in a very embarrassing situation that could involve our national security. In light of this, when will the Prime Minister take these problems seriously, stop being a nice guy, and make the tough decisions that the Prime Minister is supposed to make?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as my hon. friend very inelegantly and inaccurately makes a reference to a statement in the papers, I should respond in regard to one serious matter that was mentioned and that, of course, is the question of national security, to use the term used by my hon. friend. When the allegations were first brought to my attention, I immediately, within moments, initiated a series of inquiries and assured myself that at no time and under no circumstances was the national security of Canada compromised in any way. Having said that, I want to tell the House that my hon. friend, the Minister of National Defence, will be making a statement in the House at three o'clock.

INFORMATION GIVEN TO PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the statement by the Minister, and I am happy that he will be in the House to make a statement, I think it would be in the public interest to know when the Prime Minister was informed of the incident and who informed him. Was it the Clerk of the Privy Council, the Chief of Staff, or was it any person from the NATO organization?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was informed by an appropriate official of the Government of Canada. I responded within minutes of that information being made available to me. I secured the assurances which I have just imparted to the House. I know that my hon. friend, in the interests of fairness, will want to wait for the statement of the Hon. Minister of National Defence.

ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING MINISTER

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, with respect, I would like to point out to the Right Hon. Prime Minister that the questions we are asking at this time are not directed to the Minister of National Defence. We want to know what the reaction was of the Prime Minister of Canada and the attitude he took, because this is a very important matter involving Canada's reputation with its NATO allies. I would therefore like to know whether it is correct that the Right Hon. Prime Minister was informed of these events in November or early December and why he has not acted until today.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the assurance I gave the House, the Hon. Member insists on insinuating that a matter of national security was not dealt with. I have already given the House the assurance that moments after the information or the allegations were brought to my attention, I acted immediately in order to be in a position to give the House and my colleagues the assurance that there was no national security problem of any kind whatsoever.

That being said, I know Hon. Members will want to hear the Minister's statement at three o'clock this afternoon.

[English]

TIMING OF INFORMATION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about the national security of Canada. It is a very serious question. What did Canada's Chief of Defence Staff report to the Prime Minister about the allegations which are outlined in today's Ottawa Citizen, and when did he tell the Prime Minister? What did the Clerk of the Privy Council report to the Prime Minister about the allegations which are outlined in today's press, and when did he tell the Prime Minister? Finally, did Lord Carrington, Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, during his visit to Canada in late January, or any other NATO official, tell the Prime Minister or any other Canadian official about these very serious national security allegations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague asked if Lord Carrington or any other NATO official brought this to my attention. The answer is in the negative in both cases. As I indicated to my hon. friend, the information was brought to my attention by an appropriate official of the Government of Canada, and I immediately acted upon it in regard to the question of national security.

PRIME MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. It is obvious that the Prime Minister has known about these allegations for some time. It is also obvious, from what he has said, that he has been informed about them. Why has it taken the Prime Minister weeks, or maybe two months, to react? Why did he not act prior to this particular moment when he is pressured into it by the media? Does the Prime Minister not realize that national security matters can affect our country's national security with our NATO partners, that he must act now, and that he should have acted previously?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend does the House a disservice. In response to a direct and important question, I indicated to my hon. friend that, immediately upon receipt of the information, I acted to assure myself and the Government that there had been no breach of security of any kind. That having been done, I think my hon. friend would also agree that it is important that individuals in this House, or elsewhere, not be tried—except in serious matters of national security—in regard to innuendo and unsubstantiated allegations. I can assure Members of the House that I acted with propriety and celerity to ensure that all information related to the suggestion of national security was dealt with properly.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—SOLICITOR GENERAL'S MEETING WITH PREMIER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on this very serious question, certainly we believe it to be appropriate to hear the statement of the Minister of National Defence at three o'clock, before responding to that statement.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister and it concerns the meeting which took place October last between the Solicitor General and the Premier of New Brunswick. I should make it clear that it is not our objective in any way to retry charges which have already been dealt with in the courts, or to engage in a trial in the House on the basis of allegations which were based on leaks, speculation, and innuendo.

Does the Prime Minister consider it appropriate that the Solicitor General, the Minister who is responsible for the RCMP, should meet with an individual, in this case the Premier of New Brunswick, when that individual is under investigation for a federal offence, before charges have been laid in connection with that offence?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Commissioner of the RCMP, who is a man of impeccable reputation, indicated today that at no time, directly or otherwise, was he influenced, nor was there any suggestion of influence, brought to bear by any member of the federal Cabinet or Government, including the Solicitor General. I believe that the best indication of the propriety of the conduct of the Solicitor General was the fact that sometime after that meeting a charge was laid against the Premier of New Brunswick.

SOLICITOR GENERAL'S CONDUCT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister could address himself to the question. It is very straightforward. Does the Prime Minister believe that it is appropriate that the Solicitor General of this country should meet with an individual who is under investigation for an offence, before charges are laid? Under what circumstances are such meetings to be considered appropriate in the future?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this matter was effectively aired yesterday, and I think the response was pretty clear cut. Any Hon. Member who feels that he has an allegation or a charge to make against the Solicitor General, let him make it, let him put his seat up for grabs, and we will see what happens.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the question is clear. Does the Prime Minister intend to leave Canadians unclear as to whether or not he, as the Prime Minister of Canada, believes it to be appropriate that the Solicitor General, responsible for the RCMP, should meet with an individual who is under investigation by the RCMP, before charges are laid, and subsequently communicate with the Commissioner of the RCMP that individual's side of the story? Is that really considered by the Prime Minister to be appropriate conduct by the Solicitor General?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Commissioner of the RCMP gave the response that any objective individual would accept, namely, that there had been no suggestion that he construed as being improper, and that there had been no improper conduct of any kind. I had hoped that that would satisfy my hon. friend, because everyone in this country knows, and I know my hon. friend knows, that the Solicitor General is a man of impeccable integrity and there should not be any suggestion to the contratry.

• (1430)

INQUIRY RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has asked that the charge be made. The charge is that an improper meeting took place which brought the administration of justice into disrepute.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Whose charge is that? Who is thinking that?

Mr. Kaplan: What the Prime Minister has had to say about the assurances of the Commissioner only goes so far as the activities for which the Commissioner of the RCMP is responsible. Nothing has been said about discussions with justice officials, with law officers of the Crown, or discussions with individuals in the Solicitor General's Department, whether these occurred or not.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Kaplan: All of these questions show the impropriety of the meeting. What I want to ask the Prime Minister is to confirm that he himself met with Mr. Hatfield during the course of the investigation before charges were laid, and to tell us whether the investigation was discussed.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that because I did not meet with Mr. Hatfield at any time, as my hon. friend suggests. And there was no communication to justify the insinuation of my hon. friend.

COMMUNICATIONS INQUIRY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, if I hear the Prime Minister saying that he did not meet with Mr. Hatfield from the time that the marijuana was found until the laying of the charges—which is what I take it he is saying—I want to ask whether he communicated with him in any other way, and whether his officials or staff met with or had discussions with officials or staff of Mr. Hatfield respecting this investigation.

An Hon. Member: He's fishing.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had no communication unless it was in the course of official business, and even on that I would have to look at notes. But I can assure my hon. friend that there were no communications between me and Mr. Hatfield at the time in question.

APPROPRIATENESS OF MEETING WITH PREMIER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I also would like to ask the Prime Minister a question about the meeting. I want to make it clear to the Prime Minister that no one is questioning the Solicitor General's integrity.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Frith: His judgment.

Mr. Chrétien: His ability to be a Minister.

Mr. Deans: What is being questioned is his judgment. Recognizing that what happened subsequent to the meeting between the Solicitor General and Mr. Hatfield is irrelevant, is it the judgment of the Prime Minister that it was appropriate for the Solicitor General to meet with anyone who in under investigation by the RCMP, over which the Solicitor General has jurisdiction? Is it appropriate for the Solicitor General to meet with a person who is actively under investigation—in advance of any charges being laid—to discuss the investigation or what is going on between the RCMP and that person?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): There is no evidence or suggestion, I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Solicitor General in any way influenced the course of the inquiry or the conduct of the case. Indeed, I would hope in fairness that my hon. friend would acknowledge the appropriateness of the remarks of the Commissioner of the RCMP, who said to the contrary. He said that he is completely satisfied that at no time was there any attempt, directly or otherwise, to influence the course of the investigation or the laying of charges. I think that the best proof of that is the fact that, some time after the meeting to which my hon. friend refers, charges against the Premier of New Brunswick were indeed laid. That confirms the integrity and the independence both of the RCMP and the Solicitor General.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Prime Minister is this. Is it appropriate for the Solicitor General of Canada to hold a private meeting with an individual who is under investigation by the RCMP while the investigation is going on, and in advance of charges being laid?

An Hon. Member: Yes or no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would suppose that in a perfect world, with absolutely perfect individuals, everything at all times would work according to totally perfect criteria. This is a country and place of human beings with judgment, and I made the determination and the decision to entrust the portfolio of Solicitor General to my hon. friend. I can assure the House Leader that the Solicitor General has done nothing which would cause me to lose faith or confidence in him in any respect.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF MARIJUANA DISCOVERY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I think it is becoming abundantly clear that the Government is stonewalling on this issue.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Question.

Mr. Nunziata: The Solicitor General refuses to disclose to this House the nature of the discussions at that private meeting.

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

Mr. Nunziata: The Prime Minister himself, when I asked him last Thursday when he first became aware of the fact that the marijuana was found and whether he or any members of his staff communicated directly or indirectly with Premier Hatfield—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Question.

Mr. Nunziata: —before charges were laid—the Prime Minister refused to answer. I would like to repeat my question today, and it is a very simple, straightforward question.

Mr. Crosbie: That's the first one, if that is the case.

Mr. Nunziata: And I hope we will get an answer from the Prime Minister. When did the Prime Minister first become aware that marijuana was found in the luggage of Premier Hatfield? And did he or any members of his staff communicate either directly or indirectly with Premier Hatfield in relation to the finding of the marijuana?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think—I hope, anyway—we fully answered the questions as set out last week by my hon. friend. At a given point of time, and I would have to check the date, the Minister of Justice, prior to a cabinet meeting or a meeting of Priority and Planning, took me aside to indicate that that afternoon, or the next morning, the RCMP was going to proceed to lay a charge in the case of the Queen and Mr. Hatfield. I believe that it was at that time and under those circumstances. As I have already indicated to my hon. friend, there were no communications by me and certainly none by the staff of which I would be aware at all.

PRIME MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF SOLICITOR GENERAL'S MEETING

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, it appears that the Prime Minister is shirking his responsibility.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What is the supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Nunziata: My question is straightforward.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It's a 20-minute speech.

Mr. Crosbie: Nunzirata.

Mr. Nunziata: I know, Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister found out that a charge would be laid. He indicated that to the House last Thursday. My question is when did he become aware that the marijuana was found in the luggage? Second, when did he first become aware of the secret private meeting, on neutral ground, between the Solicitor General and the Premier of New Brunswick? When did he first find out about those two situations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I first became aware of the meeting to which my hon. friend refers last Friday, when I heard about it for the first time.

Mr. Gauthier: What about the pot?

Mr. Mulroney: That apparently does not satisfy my hon. friends. Apparently the truth is not good enough for the Liberals who wouldn't recognize it if it was staring them in the face.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: It is character assassination. You are not after the truth. It is the assassination of character that you are looking for. We have stood up here and given you the full and complete answers, and it's not good enough for you.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: You want to assassinate reputations. That's what wrong with you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question on this very serious subject for the Prime Minister. My question is as follows: Does the Prime Minister consider it appropriate for the Solicitor General, who is responsible for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, to meet a person who is being investigated by the RCMP before that person's trial has taken place?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking the same question in French which his colleague asked in English, and the same answer applies.

[English]

SOLICITOR GENERAL'S CONDUCT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can put the question in English since the Prime Minister is refusing to answer it in French.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: Is it or is it not appropriate for the chief law officer of the Crown, responsible for the RCMP, to meet with a citizen of Canada who is under investigation for a criminal offence, prior to charges being laid in connection with that offence? Is that appropriate or not? Yes or no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The conduct of the chief law officer of the Crown was commented upon not by myself or my hon. friend, but by one of the most outstanding law enforcement people in this country, the Commissioner of the RCMP. He said there had been no improper suggestions of any kind, and I would hope that my hon. friend would accept that.

ENERGY

FEDERAL-NEWFOUNDLAND AGREEMENT ON OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista-Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was an historic day for the province of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnson: February 11, 1985, will be looked upon by the people of Newfoundland and Labrador as the first day that we became true Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnson: A Progressive Conservative Government fulfilled a promise.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate that this is still a new procedure for some Members, but I would ask the Hon. Member to come right to the question, please.

Mr. Johnson: My question is directed to the Minister of Energy. Yesterday the former Minister of Energy, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice, told Newfoundlanders that two years ago he offered a better deal than what was signed yesterday.

Mr. Chrétien: Right on.

Mr. Johnson: Would the Minister tell me, in her opinion—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I have not heard a question. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Johnson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister tell me in her opinion whether the statement made by the former Minister of Energy was true or not?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Foster: How long did it take you to write that one, Pat?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that if the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice had offered Premier Peckford a better deal, Premier Peckford would have taken it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: I can only assure the Member that, among the many unique advantages of the Atlantic Accord, the fundamental one was equality within Confederation. That is what Prime Minister Mulroney offered which the previous Government did not.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—LOCATION OF MEETING BETWEEN SOLICITOR GENERAL AND PREMIER

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the subject matter of the meeting between the Solicitor General and Premier Hatfield. I want to give the Solicitor General a chance to clear up some of the concerns which surround this serious matter.

He has said that the meeting was proper, and apparently the Prime Minister agrees. I think the question in the minds of the public, and I am sure of many people on all sides of the House, including Conservative Members—

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Johnston: —is, if the meeting was proper, why was the meeting held in secret? Why was the meeting not held in the Minister's office in the presence of officials of his Department, for example of Commissioner Simmonds, to whom the Prime Minister has made reference, and why was counsel not there from either his Department or the Department of Justice, instead of outside counsel, and why was there outside counsel?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the fact that the meeting was secret, as alleged, is not true. The meeting was a private meeting, and there was nothing secret about the meeting. The first time I was asked about the meeting I was glad to indicate that it had taken place. That is the first question.

Why was legal counsel there? Because I had confidence in a legal counsel that I have in connection with my duties as a Privy Councillor. The site of the meeting was simply a convenient site, and there was nothing sinister about its location or purpose. I think I dealt with most of these questions yesterday.

TOPICS OF DISCUSSION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, it is fairly clear that the Solicitor General feels the meeting was proper. In that case I suggest that all doubt could be eliminated if the contents of that meeting were to be made public. In particular, could he tell us whether at that meeting he may have discussed, even inadvertently, any evidentiary issues which could have affected the conduct of the trial? Will he also tell us whether he discussed the meeting, either prior thereto or subsequently, with his colleague, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): I can give my assurances to my hon. friend, who is a former Privy Councillor—

Some Hon. Members: Still is.

Mr. MacKay: —that there were no discussions with other Cabinet colleagues about the contents of the meeting. He surely must know, being a Privy Councillor, that the kinds of discussions that take place either between myself and heads of agencies, or my deputy, are confidential and privileged information.

THE ECONOMY

NATIONAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE—PARTICIPATION OF VISIBLE MINORITIES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. We have all received an announcement with respect to the National Economic Conference, and Session IV to be held on March 22. There is a workshop on improving access for women, youth, natives, and the disabled. Can the Prime Minister explain to the racial minorities of this country why they are excluded from consideration in view of the need demonstrated, first, by Equality Now, the Abella report, the investigation of workplace discrimination in Toronto, and the recent report of a 75 per cent unemployment rate among blacks in Preston, Nova Scotia?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am dismayed at the implication in the question and I want to try to correct the impression left by my hon. friend, no doubt inadvertently. I have had the occasion of meeting with Mr. Stanley Hartt, the organizer of this session, and his staff. I know it is their intention to try to put together a conference which is representative of all groups in society to the extent humanly possible.

As to those mentioned by my hon. friend, I thought, in any case, they were to have been included. It was my understanding that that is the case. But I would be happy to review it again with Mr. Hartt and come back to the House to give my hon. friend the assurance that, in my judgment, a conference held without the inclusion of the kinds of people to whom he refers would not be a successful or appropriate conference.

ASSURANCE OF PARTICIPATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the answer that was just given. I hope that the visible minorities will not be invisible in the final announcement. I will take the Prime Minister's answer to be an indication to about one million people in the country that he will direct those concerned to correct the significant omission.

● (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to do that, should that be the case, but I think my hon. friend may have been referring to an initial advisory panel which went on to be very substantially expanded. In any case, I want go give my hon. friend the assurance that indeed those very important groups of people in our society to which he refers will very much be members of the conference.

FINANCE

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister of State has carried the borrowing authority Bill through and will know that it has been somehow stalled and filibustered in the other place, to the extent that the country cannot raise long-term funds on the bond market and interest rates are likely to be seriously damaged in terms of the Government's cost of borrowing. Would the Minister tell the House what representations she has made to expedite the passage—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Skeena.

FORESTRY

REFORESTATION IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry. Would he confirm that the Canadian Forest Service has identified the need for expenditures of $200 million a year to replant the 600,000 acres of backlog in British Columbia? In light of this, would he explain why he is recommending to his Cabinet colleagues that only $30 million a year be spent, since he and his officials know that this is inadequate to deal with the crisis in British Columbia which constitutes 50 per cent of Canada's largest industry?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, that matter has been dealt with on several occasions in the House. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion have indicated that there would be an agreement signed The British Columbia Government has indicated that it is prepared to conclude the agreement. Those negotiations are ongoing, and when there is a figure to be announced we will announce it at the proper time.

NEGOTIATION OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Yesterday in British Columbia the provincial Minister of Forests, Mr. Waterland, stated that as far as he is concerned the negotiations are completed and that the agreement is being held up because "it is a matter of the federal Government finding funds to pay for their part". Is that correct?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, that is not correct. Perhaps the comment attributed to the official in British Columbia is simply a reflection of how the Senate is impeding the progress of the borrowing Bill. We were left, as Opposition Members certainly know, with huge borrowing requirements and, frankly, we need the cash.

Mr. Blaikie: Abolish the Senate.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—SOLICITOR GENERAL'S MEETING WITH PREMIER

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It is clear that the secret meeting held between himself and Mr. Hatfield in a hotel room in Ottawa without officials, was wrong. It is against the long standing practice in England and Canada. As indicated by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston), the only way to clear the air on this is to tell us what happened at that meeting. Even though a charge was laid later, was there anything discussed at that meeting which could have assisted the defence, which is another matter not relating to the prosecution? I want to know whether there was anything discussed at that meeting that could have helped the defence.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, unlike the other Solicitors General who questioned me yesterday, my hon. friend at least appears to know what a Solicitor General is supposed to do. May I assure him that there was nothing discussed at the meeting which was relevant to the defence or that in any way affected the subsequent results of the trial, as he knows.

I have answered all of the questions to the best of my ability as far as the background and meeting are concerned. Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition accused me of interfering in the case. The RCMP Commissioner on his own, without any suggestion from me, clearly refuted that. I hope that the Opposition would have the decency at least to withdraw that inference.

NON ATTENDANCE OF OFFICIALS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, if the meeting was a normal meeting in the ordinary course of events, even though Mr. Hatfield was under investigation by the RCMP, would the Solicitor General tell the House why he did not have departmental officials, either his Deputy Minister or other senior officials, with him at the meeting? Why did he not have legal counsel from the Department of Justice with him? Why did he not have the Commissioner of the RCMP or one of his deputies with him? Why did he not have those people present at the meeting if it was above board and normal?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I trust that the former Solicitor General is not suggesting that every time such a meeting occurs it is necessary to have departmental officials or police present. I hope he is not suggesting that. It was my decision to have the meeting. I took it because I thought it was appropriate. I did not involve others in it because I felt it was a meeting which was, by its nature, a private discussion. I took along a competent counsel. I took along a man of integrity, my chief of staff. Those are the circumstances.

CONDUCT OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to be able to ask questions of the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister. I do not know if they are available. Perhaps I could address a question relating to the problems of security to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

We have been engaged in a number of quite delicate and sensitive negotiations with allies in relation to the new radar system, NORAD agreements, and other matters pertaining to NATO. How long has the Secretary of State for External Affairs known about this matter? Did he inform our allies of the potential security problems pertaining to this matter? Were negotiations suspended during the time that this matter was under investigation?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there were no security implications so there was nothing about which we had to advise our allies.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we regret very much that that action was not taken because a statement in the manual of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, which deals with security in External Affairs, indicates clearly that there was a security problem involved. It is the responsibility of the Government. Why did the Secretary of State or the Prime Minister not exercise their responsibility and inform our allies that there was a problem here which had to be cleared up, while these negotiations were going on?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite is particularly difficult to get through to. There was no security problem. There was consequently no need to inform our allies.

TRUST COMPANIES

PIONEER TRUST COMPANY—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL ROLE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Crown Trust, Greymac, and Seaway in Ontario were assisted by the provincial and federal Governments through the CDIC in re-establishing themselves under new management, resulting in no loss to any depositor. Will the Minister negotiate a similar arrangement with her provincial counterparts in Saskatchewan regarding Pioneer Trust?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as I have stated previously, our first concern in the Pioneer Trust matter is for the insured depositors. We are proceeding as expeditiously as we can to ensure that they are looked after. We are exploring every possibility with regard to the final outcome of the situation regarding this trust company.

REQUEST THAT PUBLIC INQUIRY BE HELD

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in light of the serious questions in this affair concerning the actions of Pioneer's senior management and those of the Government of Saskatchewan, as well as CDIC officials, who knew of Pioneer's problems for most of last year, will the Minister assure the House and the people of Saskatchewan that a full public inquiry will be held into the collapse of Pioneer Trust?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have been in close contact with the CDIC, with officials of my Department, and with the Province of Saskatchewan. I see no need for a public inquiry at this time. I think that the behaviour in all cases has been appropriate. We are examining every aspect of the issue at this moment.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—APPEAL INQUIRY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Inasmuch as the time for the launching of an appeal of the decision in the Hatfield case has not expired, I would like to know what the position of the Minister of Justice is with regard to an appeal. I would like to know how he would be able to exercise his duties in the fair and balanced manner expected of him, after having said in this House on February 7 with regard to Mr. Hatfield,—"I know the man and am a friend of his, I am happy that he was found not guilty".

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman might be prepared to abandon his friends whenever he sees it to his convenience to do so. I don't happen to agree.

Mr. Nunziata: He is not the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Axworthy: Get serious. You're a Minister of Justice.

Mr. Crosbie: Do you want the answer? When this question first came up I told my Deputy Minister that I expected this case to be dealt with on the same principles that would be applied to any other similar case. They assured me that they would arrive at their conclusions on that basis, and I accepted their advice and their conclusions.

With respect to your question, on January 29 Premier Hatfield was acquitted and our prosecutor in New Brunswick advised against any appeal on January 29. Two days later, my advisers in the Department informed me that, after consultation with the prosecutor and other senior law officers, no appeal was being considered.

After that, the defence ordered a transcript of the evidence, and a copy of the evidence was sent to us. My Department then reported to me: "A review of the evidence and the judgment does not lead us to alter our earlier conclusion that no appeal should be pursued." So no appeal is going to be pursued because I have been advised by my Department, my Deputy Minister, and the prosecutor, that no appeal should be pursued. Therefore no appeal is going to be pursued in this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Short supplementary.

OFFICIALS' DECISION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, thank you for your courtesy in this regard. I would like to know how the officials in the Department of Justice could make a decision on an appeal before they had even received and reviewed the transcript?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman does not understand my version of English. I just said that the prosecutor who attended on the trial, who did the prosecuting, advised after the trial was over and the judge rendered his verdict that he did not recommend an appeal. Two days later my Deputy Minister and officials from the Department, following consultations with him, agreed. They did not need a transcript of the evidence to come to that conclusion.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: It is not in every case that you get a transcript of the evidence to decide whether or not to appeal. I don't believe the hon. gentleman is a lawyer, otherwise he would know that. The gentleman sitting next to him, whispering to him, doesn't know any more either, although he is a lawyer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: Tory justice is bad justice.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a statement before my peers and my Prime Minister. This afternoon I have tendered my resignation as Minister of National Defence to the Prime Minister.

An article published today in an Ottawa newspaper contains many inaccuracies and those inaccuracies are wrong, libellous and even suggest a breach of security. I have retained counsel and can give you the assurance, Mr. Speaker, that an action has been started against the paper in question.

I have assured the Prime Minister of my innocence and my conduct. I have served in the House for 28 years. I have served under three Prime Ministers. I have always respected the House, its membership and its traditions.

I also recognize the fundamental importance of my portfolio, one which is as sensitive as any in government. I am a man of honour who respects Parliament and I especially respect my Prime Minister. Accordingly, I have resigned as Minister of National Defence, effective today.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I am sorry the Hon. Member—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must put myself in the hands of the House. This is obviously a very emotional moment for everyone.

The Member is no longer a Minister. We are hearing statements by Ministers. I will hear the Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien). However, given the situation, it would be my suggestion that it may be inappropriate to hear statements in response at this time. I will recognize the Member for Saint-Maurice.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am a long-standing member of the House, and I am very sorry to hear the Minister's resignation. I believe he has done a very honourable thing today and has shown that he has the right values. Rather than cause a reflection on his duties, he has acted honourably in offering his resignation. I want to congratulate him for doing the right thing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

CLOSURE OF WILDLIFE CENTRE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition to the House on behalf of over 1,000 residents of the riding of Simcoe North and other ridings who request that the closing of the Wye Marsh Wildlife Interpretation Centre in Midland, Ontario, be reversed. This is in addition to the 1,700 names which I presented to the House on January 22, 1985.

PROTECTION OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting a petition from 69 people from the towns of Strathmore, Rockyford and elsewhere. These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to amend the Criminal Code so that unborn human beings are protected by law from abortion, save in that rare instance where the only alternative to the death of the child is that of his or her mother.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—JOB CREATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Riis:

That this House commends the Government of Manitoba for its positive policies of job creation which have produced the lowest unemployment level in Canada, and calls upon the Government to adopt a similar course of economic expansion rather than the discredited policies of tax increases and spending cuts which it has pursued to date and which are largely responsible for the latest unemployment statistics, which show an alarming increase of 167,000 unemployed between December, 1984 and January, 1985.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise to comment in reply to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) prior to lunch. He stated in the House that his Government had a very good employment policy. The Conservatives may feel that they have a good employment policy. I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it depends on whose employment you are talking about. I am reading the list of political appointments that have been made since the election on September 4. It is interesting that there seems to have been numerous opportunities for employment for people of a certain political persuasion.

I notice, for example, that nine Hon. Members of this House have just been appointed as Assistant Whips for the Progressive Conservative caucus.

Mr. Dick: Without pay.

Mr. Boudria: There definitely is a government make-work policy here. It works well for all Conservative Members. I am glad to hear the Parliamentary Secretary saying "without pay". I would like to know whether the former Tory Member of Parliament who was appointed the Ambassador for Disarmament was appointed without pay; whether Mr. Robert Byron who was given interim supervision of the advertising management group was also hired without pay; whether Mr. Paul Marshall and Mr. Lucien Bouchard were appointed without pay; whether Mr. Lawrence Hanigan was hired without pay.

There seems to be a very good employment strategy but I would like to argue that it is relatively selective. In other words, it seems that you have to be either a defeated Tory candidate or a former member of the Tory caucus in order to avail yourself of these employment opportunities. All this comes from a Government which has stated time and time again that it did not want to partake in partisan things, and that it wanted to have a parliamentary committee review political appointments.

Those are the comments I wanted to make in reply to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine. I disagree with what he said and I disagree totally with the remarks regarding the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner). I think the Member for Vancouver Quadra was one of the finest, if not the finest, Finance Ministers this country has ever had, and indeed in a very short time he will again be Prime Minister of this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now resume debate. The period for questions and comments has terminated.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate today on an Opposition motion concerning the disastrous unemployment situation in Canada. Considering the concern all Canadians have for this very serious problem, it is entirely appropriate that the Opposition, and I want to thank the Hon. Member who moved this motion, should draw the attention of the Government to the gravity of the unemployment situation in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I see to my dismay there are no Ministers in the House. I think there is a rule that there must be at least one Minister to take part in the debate. Mr. Speaker, if I were so inclined, I would even raise the question of whether we have a quorum, but I will refrain for the time being.

Mr. Speaker, before the election on September 4, the Progressive Conservative Party's slogan was: "Jobs, jobs, jobs". They bored us all summer with that kind of stuff, claiming that as soon as they were elected, tens of thousands of jobs would be created in Canada and that the unemployed would at last find lucrative and productive employment. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, since this Government was elected, the results have been sad in the extreme. During the initial months of their mandate, they took credit for the results of policies introduced by the previous Administration. The gradual drop in unemployment we experienced at the same time was certainly due to those policies, and they used those results to very good advantage. Now, however, after several months of Conservative Government, we can see what the unemployment trend is going to be. Between December 1984 and January 1985, 167,000 men, women and young people lost their jobs, and the unemployment rate rose from 10.9 to 11.2 per cent. Since then, we have not heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) quoting statistics or the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talking about job creation. We have not seen any backbenchers bragging as they were doing last fall when they took the credit for figures that were encouraging. Now that the situation is deteriorating they seem to have been struck dumb.

Last month, another 53,000 young Canadians lost their jobs—

Mr. Lapierre: —and this figure should be added to the 500,000 young people who are now jobless.

Meanwhile, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) was travelling across the country and telling people: Do not worry, things are going to change! What change, Mr. Speaker? She announced her much touted program with a two-month delay, supposedly for the sake of consultation. However, looking at each aspect of this program, we must conclude that she probably used those two months to fight her Cabinet colleagues who did not want to give her the funding. After all, she said she spent those two months on consultation.

However, representatives of the Canadian Federation of Students who were with the Minister on the platform when she made her announcement—and they are certainly by far the most representative of young Canadian students—told the media a few minutes later: We were never ever consulted about the program she just announced.

An important aspect of that program was municipal involvement. Here again, the Minister supposedly took two months to consult. I got in touch with the Canadian Federation of Municipalities, Mr. Speaker, and this is the answer I was given: We were never consulted at all. This despite the fact that the Minister was talking enthusiastically about a new consensus as a result of consultation. When I put the question to her in the House, she had the nerve to say she had consulted with the Mayor of Gander. My colleague from Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) called the Gander Municipal Council and said: Is it true that the Minister of Employment and Immigration called you and you said that municipal involvement in Challenge '85 was the answer to your prayers? What he answered was quite the contrary, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration is really trying to pull the wool over the eyes of the Canadian public. She would have our young people believe that this summer the outlook will be very encouraging for them. The fact of the matter is that the statistics we saw today, and I take the Member for Champlain (Mrs. Champagne) as my witness, I will bet anything, Mr. Speaker, that we "ain't seen nothing yet", indicate that there will be a lot more young people unemployed next summer and that the Minister's program will be no help at all in dealing with the situation.

Mr. Speaker, private sector involvement was also touted as a broad consensus, and the rest. The Minister of Employment and Immigration said at her press conference: I met with seven or eight big wheels who promised us 10,000 jobs. The next day, representatives of these big corporations said: We never guaranteed her 10,000 jobs. Mr. Speaker, we now see that on three counts the Minister of Employment and Immigration has not been clear, straightforward or accurate. And this has not met with any opposition from their backbenchers.

This summer, when young people in their ridings come to see them, the municipalities will have to tell them they do not have an extra 25 per cent nor an extra 15 per cent to spend on social benefits, because the Minister got her program out too late . . . In Quebec, all municipal budgets have been voted on; they could not know that the Minister of Employment and Immigration would impose a surcharge of 25 per cent for labour plus 15 per cent for social benefits and another 20 per cent for miscellaneous expenses.

I know that there are former mayors here, the Hon. Member for Champlain happens to be one of them. I am sure he was a good mayor and that he knows what a municipal budget is. He had a sharp pencil in those days and I suspect every cent was accounted for in his budgets. That is why he too knows what is going to happen. Most municipalities have already produced their budget, so they are not likely to be in a position to do much to create jobs for young people. I hope he will take the floor later on to urge that such expenditures be fully paid so as to relieve the small municipalities in our ridings. It is all very well to say that the private sector will take over but, Mr. Speaker, there are some 32 municipalities in my riding, including one with a service station and a corner store, so where is the private business that will hire young people this summer, Mr. Speaker? It is the same thing in all ridings—municipalities made up mostly of farmers. The private sector is simply not prepared to hire students.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced another initiative, the fall stage of Canada Works, but here we are in the middle of winter and there again, she was not clear, concise and definite.

Mr. Speaker, you will notice one thing about your allocation which is supposed to be more generous than or at least equal to that of your predecessor: the Minister of Employment and Immigration conveniently forgot to tell you that it has to be spread out over two years instead of only one, so you can imagine what will happen next year! I know that the Hon. Member for Québec-Est (Mr. Tremblay) has already spent that money. I am convinced that during . . . I forget the name of the riding of the Hon. Member on the other side—

Mr. Hudon: Beauharnois!

Mr. Lapierre: He too has already spent all the money set aside for his riding.

Mr. Allmand: So have I.

Mr. Lapierre: The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) says the same thing. You will have the surprise of your life, because the Minister of Employment and Immigration expects that money to last for two years. That is what her budget provides, Mr. Speaker; it covers two fiscal years. I am certain that our honourable colleagues will have to eat humble pie when they realize next year that the Minister of Employment and Immigration, instead of giving them the same budget as before, will give them in fact only half of it and say: "I am sorry, but you used all of it the first year, too bad!" But we shall watch her closely. If the Conservatives do not, you can rely on us, Mr. Speaker. We shall watch her because we know that she is trying to hide the truth from the unemployed, but the figures speak for themselves. There used to be all kinds of programs. We are now being told to forget about those programs because the private sector will take over. As far as private investments are concerned, it seems that up to now, our money was flowing to the States. Now foreign investments will solve our problems.

The Government destroyed FIRA. The Prime Minister went to New York on his hands and knees to make certain that the Americans would say: "We finally have a flunkey in Canada." What did we get? Except for the fact that the Prime Minister lost his dignity, what did the people in Champlain, the people in Beauharnois and the people in Shefford get? Mr. Speaker, here is what they got, absolutely nothing for now! Private investment in Canada has not increased, contrary to what the Prime Minister had forecast. Even worse, we have a serious unemployment problem. Yet, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who should show some understanding and compassion for the unemployed, not only is not helping them to find jobs, but has also decided to reduce their unemployment benefits. She is now hiring a special team, which is being called the "Flora Hit Squad", to try and persecute the poor unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, we can see what is going on in our constituencies. All the Members, especially those whose unemployment offices come under the Longueuil Data Processing Center, are well aware of what is now happening to a great number of unemployed.

I am convinced that, every week, in their riding offices, my colleagues see a good many unemployed workers who complain that they are still waiting for their cheques, that they have been given the run-around by the data centre, that they have been eligible for three months but have yet to get any money at all, that the only thing left in the refrigerator is the light bulb, and that the landlord is harassing them because the rent is three months late. I know such cases and so do my colleagues. But what is the Minister of Employment and Immigration doing? Eliminating jobs instead of improving services. That has me deeply worried because not only has the Government failed to keep its promise to create jobs, but they are treating unemployed people like dirt. It is on that particular point that our colleagues opposite should urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration to give an account of herself.

We have heard of typical cases of proceedings taken against various people, more evidence of the fact that they are openly insensitive towards men and women who have precious little. In the course of the coming weeks, I intend to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to stop prosecuting the unemployed and persecuting poor people. I will take my hat off to her if she can find jobs for them, but that is a far cry from reality.

After seeing some of the elements of the summer program, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to predict that her program will be a flop. I can tell you that it will not work out at the municipal level because most municipalities have already voted on their budget. I can tell you that the private sector program will not lead to a fair distribution of funds, particularly in the Province of Quebec, because cities and towns will take the lion's share to the detriment of rural communities. Since the allocations are not based on distribution by riding, there will not be fair and equitable distribution to take regional unemployment into account, and that has me worried.

Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in partisan politics, but I do want to make sure that the people . . . there is the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) laughing his head off, he knows very little besides partisan politics, of course, but we are used to that kind of attitude. There is one thing I want to tell the Hon. Member for Charlevoix: instead of laughing at the unemployed as he is now doing in the House, he should see to it that the jobless in his riding are properly treated, that they get their cheques on time, that UIC public servants treat them as people who have paid their premiums. He should make sure that budgets are not cut, something which his predecessor was much better at than he is. What has he done for his riding since he first came here, Mr. Speaker? I saw his householders. The important thing is to make sure that the fate of unemployed people does not become the subject of partisan political debates. I think that the backbenchers are fully aware of that. They know it is difficult to influence the Cabinet. Their letters, releases and words sometimes reflect the fact that there is not much they can do. But that is not good enough. Take the floor, say what you think, tell everybody what your constituents think. That is what counts. That is why you were elected to Parliament, not to crawl on your knees before the Cabinet. There may be an opening, but there are too many of you for that one job. That is not what you came here for, you have to speak up for your constituents.

Let us talk about those who claimed to have the ultimate solutions to the problems of unemployment. I am sure the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) promised during the election campaign that he would find new jobs for textile workers. However, the Chairman of OCRI, who is one of the officials, has just informed us that the 17,000 jobs lost in the textile-clothing-footwear industry were nothing, that it was only a beginning. What is being done to introduce adjustment measures? The Chairman, their own top official responsible for the three industries, has bluntly announced that those industries were bound to suffer from further job losses in the years to come. What action is being taken? What is being done in Trois-Rivières for Wabasso? What is being done in Cowansville for instance, for another industry, Tupperware, that is closing down, where the Hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) was heard to say: "That is really too bad!" Come now! None of that will address the problem of the 165 unemployed women. What concrete action is the Government intending to take?

The Parliamentary Secretary certainly has all the answers to that, Mr. Speaker. I ask him to go to Cowansville and meet the 165 women who are laid off because Tupperware is moving to Manitoba. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary will find out that those people have specific needs, that the early retirement program, for instance, could be extended to older people aged 50 to 65, with the 80 formula. Bill C-78 is an alternative for our poorer senior citizens who have reached a certain age, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to hear my colleagues opposite urge the Government to extend early retirement provisions to other areas, to other regions in Canada, especially to deeply affected regions as there are now in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, a lot could be said about the commitments that were made. And also a lot about the promises that were broken, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Most of them!

Mr. Lapierre: —most of them, and probably the only promise the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has honoured—

An Hon. Member: The uniforms!

Mr. Lapierre: —there was the promise of new uniforms. On that point, takers beware! There was also the promise to appoint friends. The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) says: As we had done. Yet, he was all for virtue and motherhood, a shining knight in armour during the elections. Yes, during the elections, those people said they would never do as the Liberals. Never! But now we realize they are doing worse. And this would be easy to prove. Do not worry, in the years to come, especially during the next elections, Mr. Speaker, the unemployed will remember those unfulfilled promises. And women also. Where is the legislation on the equality of women in the labour force? I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Champlain does not even remember the 1980 campaign. There was the debate of his own leader. Let us stop rehashing those events of 1980, they have been in power since 1984. What about it? Now he has influence. Instead of writing to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), he should write to the Prime Minister and ask him to honour his commitments.

Mr. Speaker, all this goes to say that I am surely disappointed with this Government's performance, disappointed with their lack of imagination, and the realization that this Government which had answers to all the problems has managed to make problems worse, instead of finding solutions. And we have seen them in action for some months already. Unfortunately, all we hear about is consultation. I urge them to bring forward those solutions they had, for the well-being of Canadians, especially unemployed women.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon) has a comment.

Mr. Hudon: I want to make a comment, Mr. Speaker. I can understand my honourable colleague being disappointed. He is disappointed because he says that this will not work next summer. There is no reason why it should not. My honourable colleague is right to say that the municipal budgets have been approved. It is true that the municipal budgets have been approved, and most of them provide for premiums or hiring programs for next summer. Municipalities have always done this. It is not the first time.

The Hon. Member should at least recognize that we keep our promises. What we had promised was some participation, but we said that we would place more emphasis on the private sector. We should give the private sector a chance to prove itself next summer. We have no reason not to. You have developped an insatiable society. Last year, you approved special budgets for church roofs, judo schools, and so on. You have created such appetites that, today, no repairs are made to city halls, community halls or church roofs without an application for assistance being submitted to the Federal Government.

You have built a society in which people say: Everything must be kept as it was in the past. From now on, tomorrow is like yesterday indexed. This is impossible. Let us give new ideas and new programs a chance to prove themselves. The private sector will join in and so will the municipalities and the community sector. There is not much difference as far as the community level is concerned. If we give a chance to this program, we shall see that it can work quite well.

Mr. Lapierre: I am very glad to have heard the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon). He has learned his lesson well. However, Mr. Speaker, if he is convinced he is right, why has the Minister for Employment and Immigration mentioned a commitment for 10,000 jobs? Something different was said the next day. Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary is not doing justice to his Minister. She also said that she had consulted the municipalities. We can see that it is not true. She said that she had consulted the young people. She called in three or four young Conservatives. Is this what you call nation-wide consultation? The Parliamentary Secretary, who certainly has a lot of potential, should widen his field of vision if he wants to replace his Minister one day. He should have more imagination than she does, because she has not achieved much since her appointment, unfortunately. As for me, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if a fellow like him stops learning his lessons by heart and reading the releases of his Minister and shows some imagination, he could eventually get noticed by the Prime Minister. However, if he continues to act in this way and to protect the Government like he is now doing, neither his constituents nor the Prime Minister will appreciate him.

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment of course on the marvelous speech made by the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre). Several times now, the numerous new Progressive Conservative members have been referred to as back-benchers. I would rather be . . . I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Shefford that, even if I sit on the front benches, I would rather be a good back-bencher than a former half-minister. For the information of the Hon. Member for Shefford, I have taken stock of our investments in the Charlevoix riding and they now reach over $5.5 million. I am very proud of that since it is far better than anything ever achieved by my predecessor, who was a senior minister in his government.

I feel of course that there is still much to be done in Canada, in Quebec, in my riding and probably in your own, my friend. We are now trying to draw up the best plans to create jobs and, if possible, permanent jobs. Some have been made available under the program recently announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald).

We are also working to provide other tools and we hope, Mr. Speaker, that we will find together the best means to reduce as quickly as possible the sky-high unemployment rates which in some areas of the country, especially in mine are nicely fluctuating—this is an euphemism—between 30 and 60 per cent. It was the same under my predecessor who held some important portfolios in the former government but who could not, as he admitted himself, find any cure-all. I am now actively co-operating with my constituents to find practical solutions to the unemployment problems. It is not easy. It is a difficult task and a constant challenge. Such was the proposal made by the minister. I am now trying to carry out the task and I hope for quick results.

Mr. Lapierre: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) missed the point. He has just indicated, in an effort to mislead Canadians, that the Minister had announced a permanent job creation program. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix is clearly off the track. We are dealing here with a temporary job creation program for students. And I am sure that when you check the blues, you will see that the Hon. Member for Charlevoix referred to a permanent program. He is all wrong. This program is meant to last a few weeks during the summer months. It will certainly not improve the 30 to 60 per cent unemployment situation in the Charlevoix riding. It will certainly not improve the unemployment situation in the Shefford riding either. That is the point I have been trying to impress on him, that this initiative is too little and too late. My hope is that he will be able to suggest new proposals to his colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Perhaps he will demonstrate more imagination than some of his colleagues, and he might be able to come forward with ideas for permanent solutions instead of merely temporary ones. I am aware that he sits on this side of the House as a part of the rump of the Progressive Conservative Party. I am sorry if I offended him when I referred to him as a back-bencher; perhaps I should have used the expression "front-bencher of the rump". Wherever he may sit, if he has some good ideas to put forward, let him rise in his place once in a while to express them, and we will be glad to listen to him, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre). I looked at the unemployment figures which were released a few days ago by Statistics Canada and I saw that for the month of January, 1985, there were 1,483,000 people unemployed. The Hon. Member criticized the Conservative Government because of that and said that its programs were not working. However, Statistics Canada figures for the months of January, 1984, when there was a Liberal Government, indicate that there were 1,473,000 people unemployed. In other words, there are only 10,000 fewer jobs this year. As a matter of fact, if one looks at the Member's Province of Quebec, in January of 1985 there were 427,000 people unemployed. Under the Liberal Government, the rate of unemployment in January, 1984 was 14.2 per cent. I wonder where the Hon. Member was in January, 1984, when the Liberal Government was completely unsuccessful in dealing with this major problem. It seems to me that the more things change between the Liberals and the Conservatives, the more they are the same. Neither of those Parties has any programs or intentions to deal with this very major problem which afflicts the people of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) has one minute at his disposal to reply.

[English]

Mr. Lapierre: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I want to tell him that a year ago I was not satisfied with the results and I proposed solutions to the Cabinet. I am not afraid of what I said in previous years and I will keep on pushing for solutions. I only hope that my colleagues in the Conservative Party will also push. I am not asking for miracles, I am asking them to push to ensure that the new solutions, which they promised to the Canadian public, become reality. I would like to know where those solutions will come from. I hope some of them come from the back benches. As I said to the Parliamentary Secretary earlier, I hope he has some imagination in that regard. However, we have not seen anything new. It was supposed to be time for a change. For God's sake, where is it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker) on debate.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take part in the debate on the motion which has been placed before the House by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). It states:

That this House commends the Government of Manitoba for its positive policies of job creation which have produced the lowest unemployment level in Canada, and calls upon the Government to adopt a similar course of economic expansion—

I will speak against the motion because of my history in Manitoba. Before I do that, however, I would like to take exception to what the Hon. Member said about Manitoba. He said that it was a have-not province. As far as I am concerned, Manitoba is not a have-not province. I am very proud to be a Manitoban, and particularly proud to represent a Manitoba seat in Parliament. I take exception to his calling Manitoba a have-not province. If he is referring to the fact that we are one of the five provinces which qualify for equalization payments, I would possibly accept that. But to call Manitoba a have-not province is not correct.

I sat in opposition in the provincial Legislature for four years during the time of the Ed Schreyer Government. I also sat in the Sterling Lyon Government as a government Member. I think that regardless of what government is in power—whether it is Liberal, NDP or Conservative—they are all concerned about unemployment. No one likes to see students, youth or others in this country unemployed. I want to make it clear that we are not condemning the NDP Government of Manitoba for trying to create employment. However, I would suggest that I do not agree with that Government's approach. Later on in the debate, I will cite some of the statistics about which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) questioned the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) this morning.

The motion before us contains two questions. One of those questions is: What is the right approach? Is it that Government should provide all the jobs and that Government should become bigger and bigger? Or do we take the approach which the Conservative Government believes is correct and put the finances of the Government into shape in order to create an economic confidence in the country so as to bring private investment back to create the long-term jobs which we are looking for at the present time?

What the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap said is not new to me. I heard it many time when I was in the provincial Legislature in Manitoba. We are talking about the different philosophies of two Parties. The NDP believes that we should have bigger and bigger government, which would create jobs and have more government-owned companies. That is not surprising. One of my colleagues in the provincial Legislature—I believe it was the Hon. Member for Morris—had a copy of the Regina Manifesto, which was the philosophy of the CCF Party when it was founded in 1934. When I hear NDP Members stand up in this House and in the provincial House, I reflect back to many of the resolutions which were in that Manifesto. It called for more government involvement, ownership and spending of taxpayers' money. Therefore, it is not surprising to me that NDP Members in this House talk against the Investment Canada Bill. Neither is it surprising that they support more government spending to create more jobs. That philosophy is not particularly agreeable to me, otherwise I would be sitting with those gentlemen. I think the correct approach to this problem would be to let the free enterprise system have the initiative, interest and confidence to go ahead with its work in our economy.

This morning the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap said that the Manitoba Government had created approximately 20,000 new jobs in 1983, and that in the first half of 1984 it created another 10,000 jobs. I felt it incumbent upon me to call Statistics Canada to obtain job figures for the past few years. I looked at the yearly average of those statistics. In other words, the yearly average of employment in StatsCan figures takes into account the valleys and the peaks, month by month, for a particular year, whether it be for employment, unemployment or the labour force. When the Conservative Government in Manitoba assumed power in 1977, there were 423,000 employed people in Manitoba. Those people were employed either by Governments, federal, provincial and municipal, or by private enterprise. When the Government left office in 1981, four years later, there were 453,000 people employed. StatsCan figures indicated that we had created 30,000 new jobs. I cannot agree with the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap because the Statistics Canada figures show that in 1982 there were 442,000 people employed, in 1983 it was 461,000 and in 1984 it was 465,000. So that the total increase in jobs over the last three years under the New Democratic Government in Manitoba amounts to 12,000 new jobs. Now where are all the jobs that Party is claiming are out there? In actual fact, if the Hon. Member wants to check this month's Statistics Canada report, he will find that the actual number of employed people in Manitoba for January, 1985 was 460,000.

What does this mean, Mr. Speaker? We have a Government in Manitoba which is taking the same basic approach as did the former Liberal Government. It is taking the approach of spend, spend, hire the people under government programs and leave the free enterprise system where it is. It is the kind of "We don't need free enterprise" approach. Yet that Government has created only something like 12,000 new jobs according to Statistics Canada. In 1981, when the New Democratic Government took over, the figure was 453,000. In 1984 it is 465,000. Yet the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap is claiming there were 21,000 new jobs created last year in 1983 and another 10,000 jobs in the first half of 1984. Somewhere someone is a little mixed up.

What these figures make very clear, Mr. Speaker, is that the government approach in Manitoba is for short-term jobs. The average statistics take into consideration the peaks and valleys, but at the end of the year the question is: At how many new jobs have we actually averaged out? That is why our Government does not believe in that kind of approach. We are looking for long-term jobs, not short-term jobs, which will perhaps qualify a person for unemployment insurance benefits after he or she has put in a period of part-time work. I have talked to the young people in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, and they have told me that they want a job which they know will be there a year from now. They do not like this idea of taking a job for six weeks or 12 weeks and not knowing whether, after the three months is over, they will have a job or whether they will have to go on unemployment insurance. They want long-term jobs.

I have an excerpt from the Winnipeg Free Press of May 12, 1984. I know I am not supposed to say this, but I wish some of the Liberals were in the House at this time because it pertains to the activities of the Liberal Party in Manitoba. It relates to how the Liberal Party in Manitoba tapped into the work job program. The article states that it was hoped that the job program would not be political, but the Liberal Party seemed to have tapped into it and it actually helps pay for office help in the provincial Liberal Party's office. I do not believe that these are the kinds of jobs we are looking for. We are looking for long-term jobs which are created by private enterprise.

I was advised that one of the priorities of the Manitoba Highways Department was to put up the job program signs. We have these all over Manitoba. They are white and green. They advertise how good the job program is in Manitoba. I do not think that that is the kind of jobs we are looking for, where the priority is putting up signs. We are looking for long-term programs.

If this program is so good, why did Manitoba have the slowest rate of employment growth of all the provinces between December, 1983 and December, 1984? That statistic is right out of Statistics Canada. It had the slowest rate of growth of employment compared to all other provinces. That Government has taken the same approach as the former Liberal Government, and obviously it is not working, Sir.

The other thing that is wrong with the Manitoba job fund is that it perpetuates the notion that the best way to create jobs is for Government to give someone the money to go out and hire someone. That does not work, Sir. There has to be a reason in the first place to hire someone other than that you receive x number of dollars from a level of Government. It does not matter how many dollars you have, there is not enough job fund money to spend in order to get those 40,000 people who are unemployed in Manitoba working again. We need that free enterprise system which acts as the engine of growth in our economy.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North asked this morning about the deficit. I believe, if I remember correctly, he said to my colleague that the former Conservative Government had deficits as well. I would like, through you, Mr. Speaker, to advise the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North that the Conservatives took over part way through 1977, in October of 1977, and at the end of that fiscal year there was a deficit of $191.3 million. When we took over at that time it was projected to be $270 million, but we were able to cut it back to $191 million in the first six months of our term. We will take credit for the following four years. Then, from 1978 to 1979 there was a $84.3 million deficit. In 1979-1980 there was a $44.3 million deficit. We will take credit for the last half of 1982. When we changed Governments in the fall, the deficit was $251 million. That makes a total of $429 million of deficit accumulated in four years under our Progressive Conservative Government.

I would like to advise the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre that in 1982-1983, under the New Democratic Government, there was a $435 million deficit. In 1983-1984 there was a $426.7 million deficit and in 1984-1985 it has been estimated that the deficit will be in the order of $488.7 million, for a total of $1.350 billion of accumulated deficit in three years. The Province of Manitoba in its first 112 years of operation accumulated a deficit of $1.344 billion. It has taken the new NDP Government in Manitoba just over three years to double that figure. Now in Manitoba, a family of four is looking at something like $619 per year in taxes just to cover the interest, Sir. Yet, even with all of that spending, which is the philosophy of the former Liberal Government and the present NDP Government in Manitoba, what are the employment statistics?

Employment in Manitoba in December of 1984 increased by only .9 per cent—that is less than 1 per cent—while in the rest of Canada, employment increased by 2.4 per cent. That tells me something, Mr. Speaker. It tells me that the rest of Canada believes that what the Conservative Government of Canada is doing is correct. But in our own Province of Manitoba, which is still under the influence of the NDP Government and its philosophy of "spend, spend, spend", employment has only increased by less than 1 per cent.

The NDP Government has done a number of things that I believe are discouraging economic expansion by the private sector. First, it introduced the one-and-a-half per cent payroll tax, which is a disincentive for people to hire in the first place, or even to create new jobs. The other thing which has happened is that under the NDP Government in Manitoba, spending by that Government has increased by 42 per cent while the economy has only grown by 24 per cent. Spending has outpaced the economic growth by some 18 per cent. The annual manufacturing investment, Mr. Speaker, has fallen off by 19.9 per cent over the last three years. Yet those Hon. Members talk about increased investment in our province. The NDP administration has gone even further. It has increased the sales tax to 6 per cent from 5 per cent. Hydro rates have increased by 22 per cent over the past three years. I was proud to be part of a Government which never increased taxes. We actually reduced the income tax and froze hydro rates. That had its effect, no question about it. We saw the results in our time as the Government when we had 30,000 new jobs. With the present NDP Government, StatsCan shows only 12,000 jobs.

I think it is very clear, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada do not want to see that happen again. They got rid of a Liberal Government which thought the answer was to spend, that money could cure all. The only firm basis for economic recovery is a restoration of confidence. A confident private sector will act to create jobs without the need of government interference and control. Jobs created that way are far more likely to last than jobs created by the injection of short-term borrowed money into the economy. This has been the chief cause of the lack of confidence we have experienced.

The task before us is enormous and the challenges are not going to be surmounted by throwing money at our problems in the hope they will solve themselves. They must be met with steady and consistent policies backed by a government with confidence and determination. We look to the private sector, labour, professional groups and the provinces to help our Government steer the course to economic recovery and job creation. Government cannot do it all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech? If not, we shall resume debate.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada remember that in the election campaign in the summer of 1984, it was the then Leader of the Opposition, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who defined the issue of the campaign: it was jobs, jobs, jobs. He promised that if a Conservative Government was elected, within days tens of millions of dollars would pour into this country in the form of new investment and thousands of jobs would be created. Well, we had four months in which the number of unemployed dropped each month marginally. I remind Hon. Members that it was the Prime Minister and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) who took credit each month for that reduction in unemployment. It was claimed that it was government policies and the new feeling of confidence in the investment community which led to this reduction in unemployment. Well, the figures have come out for unemployment in January. They were a shock to the people of Canada and should have been considered by the Government as a major disaster. In the month of January we had the largest number of unemployed in recent years, some 1,480,000. That was an increase in one month of 167,000.

What has happened, Mr. Speaker? Where are the tens of thousands of jobs promised by the Prime Minister? We are told by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that the programs and plans of the Government cannot be achieved overnight, that there is no quick fix for unemployment. But that is not what the present Prime Minister was telling the people of Canada before the election. We know that as bad as unemployment is, as reported, it is not the whole story because Statistics Canada only counts those people who are actively looking for work. We know about real unemployment in Newfoundland, in eastern Quebec, the Gaspé, and Northern Ontario. It is much greater than the official figures. In cities like Sudbury, the major employer has been steadily reducing its workforce. We know that among native people unemployment runs not at 11 per cent but at 60 per cent or 70 per cent or 80 per cent. For those people it is a disaster. I am sure there is not a Member of Parliament who has not been visited in his office or called on the telephone to be told by young people that despite the fact they had finished high school or university, despite the fact they had finished courses at community colleges in fields such as computers, they have not been able to get a job. I am sure every Member of Parliament has been visited by or heard from constituents who have worked for one or another company for anywhere from 10 to 20 years and the company has now shut down or cut back. These people in their forties or fifties are no longer working. People with a fine record of consistent and healthy employment cannot find jobs now.

What does the Government say to those people, Mr. Speaker? It says that the Government cannot do the whole job. Well, we have never questioned that. It says we have to leave it to the private sector, but at the same time it ties the hands of the private sector so it cannot improve its performance or become more efficient and cut costs. Governments of countries like Germany and Japan, countries with a mixed economy in which both the public and the private sectors are active, have realized that if they are going to find jobs for their people and keep them employed, they have to examine their material resources and human resources. They have to try to figure out where they have the advantage so they can produce efficiently and supply their own markets as well as be able to compete on the international market. That is something which we have not done.

I suggest to Members of the Conservative Party that they read a book now on the best sellers' list in the U.S. written by Lee Iacocca, the president of Chrysler. He took Chrysler, which was virtually bankrupt and which most people said should be closed down, and brought it back into a position of competing not only with foreign imports but with General Motors and Ford. I recommend that Members of the Conservative Party read Mr. Iacocca's description of why Japan has been so successful. Japan, which has a free enterprise system like ours and that in the U.S., has been successful because it has looked at its own situation and the world situation, it identified where the next generation of important industries will be, and it has gone into those industries. Japan went into the automobile industry and put all other automobile-producing countries under the gun. Now it has gone into the computer and electronic fields, and we understand that it is beginning to look at the next generation of winners, that of the field of ceramics.

Do we do that, Mr. Speaker? A large percentage of our people work in the forestry and wood products industry. A large number of people work in agriculture. A large number of our people earn their living in the fishing industry. The Government said we have a huge deficit and must cut back on government expenditures. It cut back some $4 billion. It cut back in the funding of research in precisely the fields in which most people work and in precisely the fields in which we will have even greater difficulties if we do not get our act together.

All the other industrialized countries in the western world, as well as Japan, are spending 2.5 per cent or more of their Gross National Product on research and development in the fields in which they feel jobs can be created. In Canada under the former Liberal Government and now under a Conservative Government we are spending much less than that. We are spending a little more than 1.5 per cent of GNP on research and development. In Canada our situation is much different from that in other countries because the bulk of research that was being done here was either done in government laboratories or at universities funded by Government. The Government cut back on funding of its laboratories. It is going to cut back on the funding of research at the universities. It is hoping that the slack will be picked up by the private sector.

I hope that the Government is right, Mr. Speaker, but on the basis of past experience, with all the attempts of the former Liberal Government by way of tax concessions, tax write-offs, grants and loans, the private sector did not pick up the slack. I am not saying that we do not want the private sector to do it, because of course we do. The fact is that the private sector did not concentrate any efforts on research and development. It is not likely to because the major economic corporations in the country are owned by foreign interests. The multinationals, whether American, German or British, usually ensure that their research and development is done in their home country. Unless we have an industrial strategy geared to encourage the use of our resources, we are simply not going to have the kind of development we need.

I would like to say a few words about the speech of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker). He suggested again and again that our Party is opposed to the private sector and that we believe the Government should do more and more. There is no truth in that, Mr. Speaker. The Member talked about the Regina Manifesto. Of course the Regina Manifesto talked about a great deal of public ownership because when it was drafted in 1933 the free enterprise system, as we knew it then, was dead in the water. I believe it would not be far wrong to say that 25 per cent or more of the people of Canada were unemployed at that time. The members of the CCF were not the only people who said that the free enterprise system was dead at that time. That was 50 years ago and a great deal has happened since. Germany, Spain, France, Holland, Belgium, Norway, Sweden and Denmark have had or now have social democratic Governments. All of those countries have a mixed economy. In all of those countries the Government runs and owns certain fields. The private sector owns and operates more than does the Government.

I am surprised at the Member for Winnipeg-St. James because he has not even studied the situation in Manitoba. Manitoba has a publicly owned telephone system. I was not extablished by some wild-eyed radical socialist. It was established in 1907 by a Conservative Government. The Premier at that time was Sir Rodney Roblin, who is the grandfather of the present Leader of the Conservative Party in the other Chamber. Manitoba has a publicly owned hydro electric system which was established by Liberal Governments. Nine of the ten provinces in Canada have publicly owned hydro electric systems. There has been no more successful a hydro electric system that that of the Province of Ontario. That publicly owned system was established by a Conservative Government . The Province of Ontario has had a Conservative Government for the last 40 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: Hon. Members applaud, Mr. Speaker. I ask them why a Conservative Government, which believes in a free enterprise system, continues to have a publicly owned system. It is because it is obvious that the publicly owned power system operates more effeciently and cheaply than would a private system. That is all that we have said and all that we will continue to say. There are certain fields in which a publicly owned operation is more efficient and brings more benefit to people than a private system would.

The Government of Manitoba has decided that if it must choose between putting people to work and having a larger deficit, or cutting back on the deficit and having more people unemployed, it prefers to have a large deficit. The Government of Manitoba has spent over $200 million on jobs programs. Of course some of those jobs are temporary. However, I suggest to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James that a temporary job is better than no job at all. The Government of Manitoba did not just throw money away. It has tried to develop projects in co-operation with municipalities and the private sector. Many of those jobs are temporary, but many of them have led or will lead to permanent jobs.

Look at the situation we are in, Mr. Speaker. We have 1.5 million unemployed. Last month there were 507,000 young people between the ages of 15 and 24 unemployed. I have been here longer than most Members and I remember when the rate of unemployment was much lower than it is now. Experts at the Economic Council and in the universities told us that the problem was that people had not been trained to fill the available jobs. We have never made greater efforts to train people, Mr. Speaker. We have never spent more money on education. We have developed our high school system. We have vocational schools and community colleges. Our universities are training people in fields for which they think there will be employment opportunities. Over one-half a million of our young peole are unemployed. That is a disgrace, and I suggest that we will have a lost generation because they will eventually give up looking for jobs.

Not only must we reduce unemployment to a level comparable to those in countries such as Japan and Germany, but we must concentrate on those groups in our society which cannot find employment even when times are good and the unemployment rate is half of what it is now. I am talking about the handicapped people, hardly any of whom work. Many are working in sheltered work shops at much below the minimum wage. I am also talking about our native communities where 70 per cent to 80 per cent of the people are unemployed. I am talking about regions in Newfoundland where over 50 per cent of the people are unemployed.

Not only must we reduce the number of unemployed, we must offer hope to Canadians. We must make a special effort to find ways to bring meaningful work to those segments of our society which have difficulty finding employment even in the best of times.

The Government today is telling us the same thing we have heard from Liberal Governments over the years. It is doing what it can and the rest must be left to the private sector. I am saying that that is not good enough and the Government must do much more because it has the responsibility of ensuring that every Canadian who wants and is willing to work can work at meaningful jobs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon) has a question.

Mr. Hudon: Just a comment, Mr. Speaker. We hear about the increasing number of businesses which are experiencing a great many problems, when they are not closing their operations outright.

It would be nice some day to hear about the increasing number of businesses which are contributing more and more to the rise in the GNP and which are doing fine. We hear only about the things which are going wrong. There are a number of things which are going well in our society and the private sector; there are a number of businesses which are experiencing rapid growth and will create the jobs Canada needs, as outlined in our policy.

My hon. colleague rightly said that there are a great many students who cannot find jobs in their particular field. In my previous occupation I have had to deal with a great number of young people who had been told that the labour market was soft and could not provide the necessary job opportunities, and that they would be at the mercy of the hiring individuals' whim. Would it not be advisable—and I put the question to my hon. colleague—to put in place a system whereby a young person would be confronted with the labour market during the course of his or her education, placing him or her in a position to make a difficult decision at the tender age of 18 instead of 27, thus sparing him or her 8 years of vainly seeking a first job? That person might make this difficult decision and change his or her study and career orientation.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member if he is suggesting that our educational system is wrong when people between the ages of 5 to 22 who go to school are finished with their education. I also agree with him if he is suggesting that in the future people will more likely be forced to change jobs.

I suggest to the Member from Quebec that he ought to be primarily concerned about what is happening in his province. The clothing and textile industry has been very important to the Province of Quebec in providing employment to many hundreds of thousands of people. Very often that industry is the only major employer in a city or town, and he should be concerned about the cut-backs in the clothing and textile industry which have made it unable to meet foreign competition.

I ask the Hon. Member whether it is not the responsibility of the Government to sit down with industry and labour to try to plan alternatives for those cities and towns where the major industry, such as the clothing and textile industry, is closing. Can that be left to the free enterprise system? I suggest to the Hon. Member that when a company closes down after many years, the plant and equipment have depreciated. The shareholders probably are not suffering, but those who suffer are the people who work in the plant, live in the town and have made their homes there. They are the ones without work. I ask the Hon. Member to think about that when considering the role of the private and public sectors.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, it does not scare me as much that the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) says what he says as that I think he believes what he says.

To follow his suggestion would set us on a treadmill that would crumble the pillars of our financial community. His prescription is to create jobs now, and he implies that this is the responsibility of the Government. Apart from the fact that Canada is nearly $200 billion in debt and that one out of every $3 is used purely to pay for the interest on our accumulated debt, the New Democratic Party and their Liberal Party friends introduced the National Energy Program. A spokesman for an oil company indicated in a western newspaper last weekend that that program shut down 300 jobs. Furthermore, the company re-established those jobs in another country. Those policies have not only eliminated jobs but they have created jobs in other countries.

Why did the NDP and the Liberals, through their National Energy Program, prevent two tar sands plants from being built? They should know that in 25 years a tar sands plant will create $108 billion of investment directly for the Province of Ontario and an additional $25 billion of direct investment for the Province of Quebec in order to acquire materials, iron and steel products and financing. Mr. Underhill came to this conclusion in a study he made on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce in Calgary.

The two opposition Parties talked about creating jobs now and said that the Government can do it. That would increase the debt, break the pillars of our economy, drive those sectors that were working into ruin and chase jobs out of the country. And they have the audacity to tell us that we should do something! We are taking action. We are going to rebuild the engine of the economy to get Canada working again. We will not do so by taking their approach, which obviously leads to debt and a crippling of the economy.

I want the Member for Winnipeg North to tell us why he chased all those jobs out of Canada when he supported the Liberals and the NDP?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) listened to my speech. I made it very clear that we are living in a mixed economy in which both the public and private sectors will have an important role to play in the future. I am sure I said that in the foreseeable future in our country, in the United States and in other countries of western Europe the private sector will provide more jobs than the public sector. The Member said that I said we believe everything should be done by the Government. He is dead wrong.

Let me say something about the tar sands plants. When the tar sands plants were being discussed and planned, we were in a period when the cost of energy, the world price of oil, was going up about 15 per cent a year. When the tar sands plants were being discussed—and they would have taken three or four years to complete—the price to produce a barrel of oil from the tar sands was being calculated as being in the neighbourhood of $60 to $70 a barrel. Since the world price of oil was supposed to go up about 15 per cent a year, by the time the tar sands oil was to come on the market, the world price would be $60 to $70 a barrel and tar sands oil would be competitive. I ask the Member, what has happened? Instead of the world price of oil going up, it has gone down. Oil costs somewhere between $27 or $28 a barrel.

Where would we be in Canada today if every tar sands plant that had been started was in production and producing oil at a cost of $70 a barrel, with the world price less than $30 a barrel? That is a question the Member and his Government should answer instead of continually criticizing the National Energy Program, which had many faults and we pointed them out at the time.

Mr. Baker: I want to remind the Hon. Member from Alberta that he should know that since the Tories became the Government, there is no talk about tar sands any more, it is "off the coast of Newfoundland".

Mr. Malone: You bet.

Mr. Baker: I have a question for the Hon. Member. He has been here many years. He has watched Governments bring in programs and Governments change their minds half way through programs. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) claims that she has the support of all Conservative Members of this House in charging all municipalities in Canada, if they want to have a student employment program, about 50 per cent of the total cost—25 per cent of wages, 25 per cent of benefits and 100 per cent of material costs. Since that is clearly unworkable and will not survive as a regulation, does the Hon. Member not think that the Minister will change that now or that she will change it in two weeks' time? Does he not believe that the Minister brought this measure knowing full well that it is not going to work and that she has to change it? Does the Hon. Member agree with that?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not know when the Minister will change her mind. I agree with the Hon. Member that she will have to change her mind.

We have a Government which has blind faith in what is called the free enterprise system, Mr. Speaker. The Government seems to believe that any job in the private sector is productive and worth-while and that every job in the public sector is somehow make-work and useless.

If you look at any city—and I will not talk about the rural areas because I do not know them as well as I know the cities in Canada—you will see that the infrastructure is running down: the sewer system, the water system, the mass transit system. All those things are not working as well as they did. They are not meeting the needs of the people because we are not investing the money to improve them or to keep them up to standard. The Government would have been much better off to have let the municipalities, all of which have long lists of necessary projects, be first in rather than last in on the Canada Works Program and the Summer Canada Program.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Riis:

That, this House commends the Government of Manitoba for its positive policies of job creation which have produced the lowest unemployment level in Canada, and calls upon the Government to adopt a similar course of economic expansion rather than the discredited policies of tax increases and spending cuts which it has pursued to date and which are largely responsible for the latest unemployment statistics, which show an alarming increase of 167,000 unemployed between December 1984 and January 1985.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity to enter into debate this afternoon on the motion introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I have listened to the debates in this House today. Very often these kinds of debates are philosophical. I think it important that this House of Commons, the House of representatives of the men and women of Canada, should spend time discussing and debating and having a discourse on the various philosophies of how economic and social development can occur.

We see in the Province of Manitoba an alternative model of development, different from what exists in all the other provinces, and certainly different from the policies and programs of our present federal Government. It is a policy based on the notion and the philosophy that there is a legitimate role of government, that government has a role to play in the economic well-being of the country. It is not just a passive role, Mr. Speaker. Government has a responsibility to play an active role in determining the well-being of our economy.

Many of our friends across the way would disagree with that. Many believe that what government does is necessarily wasteful, unproductive and an impediment toward sound economic recovery. If only we can clear government out of the way and allow the private system to do its thing, so to speak, then economic prosperity would descend upon all of us and it will be fine, thank you very much.

I think that is a relatively simplistic notion. It is a reactive, regressive notion. It is a notion that has been tried in the past and shown not to work. We are living in a society today that is very centralized and interdependent, one that depends upon a well functioning, efficient and active government, but for a government to sit back and allow the forces of the marketplace to determine the economic well-being, I think is foolish and will not work.

When we hear from our Conservative friends—and we heard this message from our Liberal friends when they were in government—that private enterprise must be a major vehicle for economic recovery, I am dismayed. We look at our present economic situation and we know we have had free enterprise government in this country since it was founded. We know we have the so-called free enterprise governments in nine of our provinces, and yet we are dealing with record high levels of unemployment and economic hardship. These same people say, "We have too much government and that is why we have these problems", but they are the ones who have been in power all this time. If there is any blame, surely the Tory and Liberal Governments have to be blamed because they have been in charge of our economy together with the captains of industry and finance who have made the economic decisions for us. Surely they are the ones we have to blame for record high levels of unemployment, for the deficits and for the economic mess in which we find ourselves.

Let there be no doubt about it; we are in an economic mess. Our country has a wealth of resources and a sparse population. We are young and much needs to be done. For us to end up with massive deficits and record high levels of unemployment surely leads any reasonable man or woman to say that something is wrong. Surely we have to blame the people who have been in charge of the economic destiny of the country, namely, large financial and industrial institutions as well as Liberal and Tory Governments. Their economic model has not worked and is not working.

In the Province of Manitoba there is another economic model which believes that people come first and disagrees with the comments which I heard just a few minutes ago made by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) who was concerned about the crumbling of the major financial pillars of the country. We are concerned about the financial pillars, but our first concern is the human pillars of the country. We are concerned because there are men and women who do not have enough food to put on their tables every night. We are concerned because thre are men and women who line up every day waiting for a bowl of soup or a sandwich, and that is their only sustenance. We are concerned about the pillar of basic human decency—people having the right to food and a secure roof over their heads. This is why the Government of Manitoba has put people first. If it means a deficit, unfortunately it means a deficit. However, it would rather have a deficit than large numbers of people declaring personal bankruptcy or large numbers of people going without a decent meal. I suppose it is a difference in priorities. There is no doubt, from the comments of Conservative speakers, that their priority is the financial pillar of the country. Our priority is the human pillar, as I said. We would rather have a deficit than see people starve. That is our priority, and that is the priority of the Government of Manitoba.

It is important to have alternatives, living as we do in a day and age of very rapid economic and social changes. I would be the first to admit that no one has a blueprint, no one has all the solutions. We are dealing with economic and social situations with which societies in the past have not had to deal. We are dealing with a technology which is rapidly expanding and wiping out jobs all over the place. Perhaps this means that the traditional notion of work and life's goals have to change. The traditional lifestyle of working five days a week for 30 or 40 years in pursuit of a career, retiring with a gold watch and in many cases dying of a heart attack after retirement, the traditional lifestyle which sustained our parents, grandparents and great-grandparents, was important in the development of the country. Perhaps much of it is no longer applicable, given the newer technologies and the types of changes that are being introduced in society. The whole notion of work and how men and women acquire income will have to be changed as we go into the 21st century.

New problems face governments and the men and women who represent their fellow citizens. There are difficult decisions to be made. There is no doubt that we are in a crisis, that there are tremendously large deficit and that the cost of servicing them are extremely high. While recognizing that, I wish members of the Conservative Party would also recognize the tremendous difficulties faced by ordinary men and women in their lives. I wish they would also show the same concern about starvation and malnutrition in this country as they show about deficits and the cost of servicing them. Surely honourable men and women would place people before deficits and financial statements in their list of priorities. I expect members of the Conservative Party to place to welfare of their fellow citizens before deficits, the largeness of them and the cost of servicing them.

Let me return to the point I was trying to make. There are no easy solutions. There are no blueprints, so to speak. All we know is the general directions in which society must go in order for us to begin to find some of the possible solutions to the economic, social and cultural problems we face in this day and age. One of the directions is surely one of co-operation. The different sectors in society—business, labour and government—must learn how to co-opperate. The days of confrontation must be over. There has to be give and take. This means that government is involved as an active partner, not a passive one. Many Conservative colleagues would attempt to suggest that government's role is to get the heck out of there and leave it up to the private sector. That type of thinking is old thinking and will not help us to attain the solutions we need. We must accept the fact that government has a role to play.

Mr. Malone: Why?

Mr. de Jong: I hear the Hon. Member for Crowfoot. It is sad when men and women who put themselves forward to govern do not even know why they should govern. Indeed I find it sad. If they do not know why they should be governing, they should get out of there and let people govern who know why they should be governing. If the Hon. Member for Crowfoot does not have the role of government in his head yet, I am afraid we are in a sadder situation than I previously thought. Maybe that is the reason the Hon. Member is not in Cabinet. I hope at least the cabinet Ministers know why they are governing and the role which government has to play.

There is no denying that in this day and age, in this very complex period in the history of the human race, government has an essential function to play. If the Hon. Member for Crowfoot and some of his colleagues do not understand that, indeed it is a sad day.

I could go on enumerating the many reasons we need government. I should like to give one simple example which is occurring back home with Pioneer Trust. Some of our Conservative colleagues believe that government should not be involved, that it should get out of it, that it should not even regulate trust industries. If that were to occur, we would see bandits in the field and people losing their deposits. People in Regina right now are losing their deposits and life savings, retired businessmen and farmers who sold their land and do not have any pensions but have $100,000 or $120,000 in Pioneer Trust. All at once they are discovering that half of their life savings have been wiped away because of the great engines of free enterprise.

Mr. Orlikow: They think the Government shouldn't do anything.

Mr. de Jong: On top of that, they believe that the Government should not do anything. These people are really crazy. It is scary and frightening, though it is understandable in some ways. When a society goes through very rapid change as we have over the past few decades, a reaction sets in. People become afraid of change. They seek some stability. They seek a way to return to the way things were before. We find attempts to return to the times of Doris Day, Dwight D. Eisenhower and apple pie. Just wishing that to happen will not make it happen. In fact, it is quite impossible to turn back the clock.

As these Hon. Members attempt to grapple with contemporary problems, I hope they realize that returning to the simple days of the 1940s and 1950s will not happen. I hope they will smarten up and begin to realize that they are living in the contemporary world, and I hope that they will begin to offer some contemporary solutions and introduce some contemporary thinking.

I am sure that it will take a while for that to happen to the Hon. Member for Crowfoot and to some of his colleagues. After all, he comes from dinosaur country, and the ghosts of the dinosaurs still wander about those lonely and bleak plains. We can understand that. However, I certainly hope that other Members, and particularly cabinet Ministers, will begin to realize why they are in Government. I hope they will begin to realize what their function is and to know the job they are supposed to do.

To return to the point I was making earlier, for us to begin to develop and evolve solutions to these contemporary problems, we need a co-operative model. We need co-operation between business, labour and government. We need to understand the important role that government also must play in the arrangement of things. We have to understand and appreciate as well the role that labour must play. We also have to appreciate the role that capital and business must play. However, we have seen that the new right-wing Tory solution is that Government should decrease its function, that labour should reduce its demands and its wages, and that—

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. de Jong: An Hon. Member said, right on. The Tory solution means that we should give greater benefits to the private sector and then somehow or other development and jobs will appear.

I am reminded of a statement made by the Alberta Minister of Employment who said at the beginning of the summer that unemployment was good because it kept wages down and it kept the workers more productive. It kept the workers frightened of losing their jobs and so they were less likely to make new demands.

In these hard economic times, we see that working people are supposed to lower their expectations. We find that people on unemployment insurance, pensioners or people on welfare are to expect less, that the people who are the captains of industry and finance are supposed to get more wealth, and that this in turn will somehow generate jobs.

Government members never talk about the responsibilities of capital. Has the Government ever asked the investment industry in the country to keep its money in Canada? No. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot criticized the National Energy Program. I as well criticized the National Energy Program and I too voted against it, though I suspect for different reasons from those of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot. I remember reading in the financial pages of The Globe and Mail that the oil industry in the country had a pretty good year last year. In fact, it had one of its record profit years. Companies like Exxon in the United States were not having all that great a year, but the oil companies in Canada were having a good year.

Mr. Riis: Up 50 per cent.

Mr. de Jong: Up 50 per cent. That is not bad. Is that money staying in this country?

Mr. Malone: Yes.

Mr. de Jong: Now we hear the Hon. Member for Crowfoot saying, yes. A few moments ago, he said that the National Energy Program was driving investment out of the country. Now he is saying that those profits are staying in the country. I would suggest that a great many of those profits are leaving this country.

International capital has no loyalty to any particular country. International capital is not loyal to this country even though its profits are made from the resources of this country. Much of that money will be laundered through dummy companies in the Bahamas so taxes will not be paid on it, and then it will get reinvested in other places. Hon. Members says that that is just smart accountaing practices. Of course, if one is in charge of an oil company, those are smart accounting practices. However, if Hon. Members suggest that smart accounting practices will create jobs for Canadian men and women, they are wrong. Indeed, they have their heads in the sand. Indeed, their prescription for the solution to the problems we are facing will create more disaster. Therefore, I believe we have put forward a good motion, a motion that lauds a provincial Government that is attempting to develop a different program that offers different solutions, solutions based on the notion that people come first.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are somewhat surprised that I would rise after that speech. However, I have noted the logic of the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). He is a person who would take the view that all ducks are good swimmers, Simon is a good swimmer and therefore Simon is a duck.

I listened to the Hon. Member's convoluted statement consisting of things that he threw up in the air that landed we know not where and that he claimed to be somehow logical, factual. Therefore, on the basis of what he has said, Canada should somehow accept that as a legitimate speech to be made in the House of commons. I could tell the Hon. Member that it was a testament as to why there are only about 30 members of the New Democratic Party.

The Hon. Member went on to say that we said that we did not need government after I had questioned him as to whether or not government could be as efficient in creating jobs as the private sector. He took that to mean that we felt that governments were bad. Surely he knows that the federal Government of Canada is Progressive Conservative and that six provincial Government are Progressive Conservative. Obviously it is not Party policy to believe that Government is no good. We are here; he is not.

The Hon. Member said that the new energy program must be good because the oil industry is expanding and growing. Of course it is growing. It is growing precisely because there is a Progressive Conservative Government in Canada. It was in the four previous years that the energy industry was chased into Venezuela, the United States, Australia and New Zealand, and not only the industry for the western sedimentary basin but for the industrial sector in Canada as well. Those jobs were chased out of Canada along with billions of dollars of investment capital.

The Hon. Member simply cannot say that the industry is making a comeback. I just came back from a meeting with IPAC. They are here today and investing today because there is an expectation of change in the direction of policy. Every time oil companies begin to drill new wells, there is a new sense of activity being felt. The Hon. Member for Regina East ought to know that because his province feels the impact when the oil industry begins to develop and grow.

When the Hon. Member says that the oil industry is up 50 per cent, he deludes himself. He knows very well that it is up 50 per cent following four of the most disastrous years in its history. He also knows that it is up 50 per cent because the industry believes that there will be a turnaround. I would ask him how he could possibly stand there and shout out these so-called facts and figures, which he knows do not really represent reality or truth, to try to make people believe that he is giving suggestions as to how Canada can get back to a solid bottom line economically and be competitive in the international market.

• (1700)

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has failed to convince me, and I believe many others as well, that his examples for development in the oil industry are what will solve our problems. I would suggest that part of the major reason there has been a downturn in the oil industry is that the price of oil has fallen on the world market. When he suggests—

Mr. Malone: Is it up or down?

Mr. de Jong: You are sitting down and I am standing up, so keep it easy.

We hear the Hon. Member for Crowfoot suggest that the decline in the oil industry is because of the National Energy Program, and that with a Conservative Government that program will be scrapped and the oil giants will have increased confidence. "Increased confidence" is another key slogan. Listening to the Tories reminds me of the Moonies. They have key phrases which get them all excited. Certain buttons get pushed. It is like mind training, and one of the key phrases is "increased confidence". It is as though they had jars of increased confidence which they hand out and sniff. They say that because a Tory Government was elected, increased confidence is occurring and money will be reinvested in oil development.

I would suggest that if the price of oil on the international market decreases, we will not have the increased confidence which will fuel activity in the oil industry. The only way to get increased activity in the oil industry is for the Government to give it further tax breaks and incentives until it makes sense for the oil companies to continue the economic activity.

It will be interesting to see how the Tory Government changes the National Energy Program. I would suggest that many of the oil companies, despite the rhetoric, have been able to live with it and have come to like it. I believe we will see opposition from oil industry people to the changes which will be made to the National Energy Program. Then we will see the Hon. Member for Crowfoot eating crow.

So much of the rhetoric has been to blame all the economic ills in western Canada on the National Energy Program. Once this excuse disappears, what excuse will be left? At some stage Tories will have to look at themselves and begin to accept some responsibility for what is happening, rather than pulling out a scapegoat everytime they want to make a boisterous speech which is full of sound and fury.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question for the Hon. Member. I listened intently to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who supported the motion which was presented by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). There was a Manitoban and a British Columbian who supported the motion, and now we have a Member from Saskatchewan adding his glorification to the motion.

He said that it was a "good motion" and one which "lauded a provincial Government", but he forgot to address himself to the pith and substance of it, which commends the Government of Manitoba for its policies. Three westerners have lauded a motion which inferentially condemns every other province of Canada and the people of those provinces.

I would point out to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) that in 1983-84 the Province of Nova Scotia had the highest rate of growth in Canada. That is quite an accomplishment for a small, disadvantaged province like Nova Scotia. The Government, the private sector and mainly the people of Nova Scotia caused that economy to grow. I think the people of Nova Scotia will resent the western clique in the New Democratic Party who are inferentially condemning the efforts of the people of Nova Scotia by way of lauding the Province of Manitoba for its policies. I think the same could be said of every province of Canada which has laboured diligently on behalf of its people to establish better economic conditions. It is a well known fact that if we praise one we can be guilty of condemning others. That is exactly what the NDP has done with this motion. I would like the Hon. Member for Regina East to answer that. What has he got to say that is good about the Province of Nova Scotia and the other provinces of Canada?

I would like to add one comment before he answers that question. I want him to know that the policies which gave rise to the economic superiority of Manitoba were policies established by Duff Roblin when he was Premier. He took the hard decision to establish hydro and other resources in that province, which fueled the growth in the Province of Manitoba. It has little, if anything, to do with the current Government of the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I was delighted to hear the Hon. Member, when talking about his home Province of Nova Scotia, mention that one of the important players was government. I salute him for being civilized and enlightened enough to recognize that government has a role to play. The Hon. Member has been here for some time and I think he does recognize that government has a role to play.

He also recognized that it was the Government of Mr. Roblin which helped to develop hydro and other resources in the Province of Manitoba. Again, he recognized that Government had a role to play. It was a Tory Government, and it knew it had to play an activist role, otherwise those resources would not have been developed. What frightens me is that other Members believe that Mr. Roblin was wrong, that the Government of Nova Scotia in helping to develop jobs is wrong, and that governments should not have a role to play. They believe that if we left private enterprise alone, it would solve all our problems, develop hydro, create jobs and so on. It is that simplistic notion that scares the daylights out of me.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, some very positive developments are taking place in the economy and our Government, although the motion before the House today seems to ignore entirely what has been happening during the last few months. I would like to point out, for instance, that during the third quarter, our economic growth has been remarkable, as much as 7.6 per cent. Mortgage rates have dropped at least 2 per cent since we took up our mandate, and this only since September 4. Canada's trade surplus is at a record high. Last year, inflation was at its lowest level since 1971, which will improve our competitive position abroad.

When we were brought to power on September 4, Canadians were clearly saying they wanted a fresh start. They had looked at past measures and realized that they had not been terribly effective. They saw there was too much confrontation between administrations, too much confrontation between the private and the public sector, too much confrontation between the Federal Government and the provinces. Canadians realized it was time the Government was involved in developing the answers, but involved in a sensible way instead of compounding the problem as had been the case before.

The message on September 4, Mr. Speaker, was loud and clear. Our immediate response was the strategy for economic renewal announced last November.

Canadians must, however, understand that the Government cannot manage this country's economy alone, controlling every little detail. That is not its mandate, Mr. Speaker. Its mandate is to administer the country in such a way that the economy progresses, but without undue intervention.

The Government does not dominate the economy, Mr. Speaker. It is part of the economy, one element of a living organism. It is a set of institutions and bodies that are involved in the production and consumer activities we call economic life.

Every healthy organism depends on the equilibrium of its components. If one of these components starts to grow excessively, the excessive demands it makes will weaken the organism. The Government's role is to maintain a correct balance in the economy between public and private interests. It must manage its own affairs to the best of its ability. It must provide for proper planning and avoid being forced into an excessively high deficit like the one we have today. It should also provide the economy with a general framework of policies, programs and regulations that will promote economic growth and create as much employment as possible. That is why we were elected.

To illustrate the importance of this notion of equilibrium, let us take inflation as an example. For many years this has been the economy's number one problem. Although Canadians have made tremendous progress in controlling inflation, the federal Government's structural and financial policies did not play the role they should have played in this struggle. In some cases, they made the fight against inflation even more difficult. One of the basic differences in what the Mulroney Government is doing is its more balanced approach to economic policy, an approach in which monetary, financial and structural policies are all oriented in the same direction. The main goal of this approach will be to sustain non-inflationary growth and to create jobs by bringing interest rates down as far as possible. This approach demands that Parliament reduce financial imbalances and correct a number of structural problems. That is the direction we started to take following last November's economic message, and it will guide our decisions in the future.

Last November, the theme was how to control and manage an ever-increasing deficit. We must continue to do so and do it carefully and sensibly. The nation cannot go on mortgaging its future and hope to sustain economic growth, as was the case before September 4, Mr. Speaker, which was what Canadians understood when they gave us a clear mandate.

The measures we have already taken, namely, the expenditure cuts and other initiatives announced in the economic message, should start having a positive effect on the deficit in the next fiscal year.

There are those who claim that wanting to manage the national debt is to be insensitive to people's needs. That is not true, Mr. Speaker. Canadians realize that only by putting our finances in order will we be able to avoid overwhelming problems for the people of Canada, problems that would bring about a rise in interest rates, loss of jobs and a drop in investment. The measures we have already taken are those that we think will benefit the majority of Canadians. The measures we will take in future will meet the same criterion, and that is this Government's primary concern.

The deficit is not the only obstacle, Mr. Speaker. We will also have to restructure Government policies, regulations and economic programs to allow the creative energies of Canadians to be exercised freely. We must give individuals and firms in the private sector enough room to manœuvre and make it possible for them to use their creativity and talents as productively and profitably as possible for the economy of this country. That is the challenge for 1985. That is why we have started one of the most thorough public policy reviews Canada has ever known. Our goal is a complete restructuring of Government policy over the next few years that will make our economy productive and, especially, make it more competitive.

Productive businesses must grow and create jobs, and make rational long-term plans. We have experienced in Canada a succession of arbitrary changes that created uncertainty and undermined confidence, both at home and abroad, especially where our small businesses are concerned. It is obvious that the recent experience has been harmful. Yet the status quo is no more acceptable. We are introducing changes, but in a consistent, reasoned way, and this is why this Government is involved in so much consultation.

There are many areas where action is needed. For instance, our new competition policy scheme would promote confidence. Government legislation has to be updated so that the production, distribution and treatment of information and computerization may contribute to our economic growth to a greater extent. Other statutes and regulations that affect the operation of businesses in Canada must also be streamlined, and above all modernized, Mr. Speaker. As we know, we have statutes that should have been amended long ago, but the previous Government did not attend to that. We also support a larger degree of flexibility and productivity in our economy, and the adaptation to modern technology.

Mr. Speaker, no one can contribute more to this renewal and to the providing of new opportunities than small businesses. While they have always been neglected, for a number of years already they have been creating most jobs in Canada. Not only that, they have the greatest job creation potential in new fields. If we really want to entrust our economic growth to the private sector, Mr. Speaker, we must ensure that the free enterprise spirit will be rewarded through and with the entrepreneur. The Government must do all it can to help the entrepreneur, and above all to promote entrepreneurship.

We have indicated that the Government could lead the way. It can create a favourable climate. Moreover, whatever measures the Government can take, cost nothing in many cases or almost nothing to the Public Treasury, but we should not delude ourselves about the implications of that process. We have set ourselves the task of establishing in the economy a better balance between the public and the private sectors. Within the new framework we are putting in place, Canadians will have to expect less from governments and more from the private sector.

One of the key areas in which the private sector can meet the challenge is that of investments. An increase in productive investments would benefit all segments of the economy. We must remember, Mr. Speaker, that investments result directly in job creation and production growth. Just as important, Mr. Speaker, investment decisions will have to be taken to cope with rapid technological changes and an evolving world market. We should support any future improvement in productivity and above all in competition, mainly in the private sector.

Canada does not hold its rightful place among industrialized nations. If we are to be truly competitive at the world level, if we are to really develop new markets, we have to go into research and development. An increased level of research and development requires a major effort for which the Government alone should not be relied upon. Canadian businesses must have the will to contribute to that effort.

Training and retraining are also essential ingredients of our economic growth. They do make it a lot easier for the business community to hire the qualified staff it needs to be competitive. Equally important, they help people be more flexible when facing an ever-changing market place or a new and different occupation. That has to be our national priority. Time has come for the private sector to wonder how it might play a more significant role so that training and upgrading will be tailored to its real needs.

Mr. Speaker, access to export markets is another major obstacle which stands between the business community and success. It is a major challenge as well, and if we manage to live up to it we will be able to create many jobs. However, we must be prepared to take the odd chance and be more dynamic on foreign markets, yet remain convinced that we can indeed be competitive. And the only way to be more competititive, Mr. Speaker, is to boost our productivity and modernize our facilities. Mr. Speaker, none of that is possible unless we change our attitude and our work methods. It simply cannot be achieved overnight. Since September 4, the Opposition keeps repeating nothing has been done, nothing has been done. They were in office for twenty years. Earlier this afternoon, I heard the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) talk about administrative decisions taken by the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, but he did not bother to say that the CIRB management was appointed by the Liberals, not by us, not by this Government. If the administrative decisions of the CIRB are not coming out fast enough for the Liberals, they should talk to the management, they put them there. There is no way they can be critical about what is going on right now. Besides, the Hon. Member ought to know that this board is not answerable to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

When we were elected last fall, Mr. Speaker, we examined the economic outlook and realized that it was not very promising. So we decided to draft an economic development plan, a plan to improve the economic outlook and to set up new structures more conducive to the expansion of the private sector. What we had in mind was to make significant progress in key sectors such as trade, research, development and investment. We know that by taking action in all these areas, we shall finally be able to have a healthy economy. That is what Canadians have been hoping for since September 4.

International figures are already showing that Canada has now gone ahead of a few other industrialized countries as far as industrial competition and standard of living are concerned.

The figures have been favourable since September 4 and the economic achievements I have just mentioned are encouraging. They should restore confidence and raise the level of expectations in Canada. However, we should not become too confident. We cannot forget that everything is not perfect in our country. Our economy is still held back by excessively high real interest rates and by progress made in the United States. Too much of our recent economic growth is the result of our enormous trade surplus, and business investment remains weak. The situation of our resource industries is still very precarious. Finally, our enormous annual deficit and increasing national debt threaten our prospects for lasting economic development and job creation.

Mr. Speaker, this brief examination of the recent ups and downs of our economic performance reminds us that we must continue to make level-headed and realistic judgments about our performance and economic prospects. It remains that we can do much more and that we are progressing daily. Canada still has unlimited opportunities, and while the Opposition may believe that there is nothing to do, Mr. Speaker, there is, in fact, much to do and this Government is committed to do it.

The business community still shows great confidence in the Government elected on September 4 and in the commitment necessary for economic renewal. That is what some favourable economic indicators are telling us. It is also what small businesses are saying. That is why foreign investors are more interested in Canada than before. As these new investments create job opportunities, Canadians will become less concerned about the future of their jobs, their family and their country. They will tend to consume more. This is why confidence is so important. I believe that we have every reason to be confident and optimistic. Obviously, if any country in the world has every chance to succeed, it is Canada. We should believe in the initiatives taken by the Government and support them. With the assistance of the private sector, private business and small businesses, with a special emphasis on entrepreneurship, and in spite of the motion of the New Democratic Party today, this is what we must do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the problems that increased interested rates would cause. If it is a choice between increasing rates or a softening of the Canadian dollar, would he go along with his Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in saying he would prefer the lower dollar?

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister have already made their views known in this regard and outlined exactly what will be the policy of this Government.

[English]

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on a very fine address. There is a point I have been wanting to clear up and I have not been able to be recognized until now. A number of speakers today, particularly in the opposition Parties, have been comparing the number of unemployed in the fall and winter with those in the spring and summer. We all know unemployment increases in the fall and winter in normal years. It is a normal procedure. To compare the number of jobs in the fall and winter with those in the spring and summer is like comparing apples with horses. There is just no comparison, and it creates the wrong impression entirely.

Would the Hon. Member agree that it is unfair to make this kind of comparison? It gives a false picture entirely, and I think all of us want to be accurate when we present a picture to the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that my honourable colleague is quite right. It is time to stop misleading the Canadian people into believing just about anything, as was done in the past. We know what Canada's economic conditions are and we know that certain things happen at the same time each year. Certain things occur in the fall, and others in the spring or in the summer. We know that. What the Hon. Member says is quite true. The Opposition always tries to show that it is not the same, that it is different and that it was always better before. If such was the case, Mr. Speaker, I wonder why they are still there. I am in complete agreement with my hon. colleague.

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with some interest to the debate this afternoon, and this is once again an opportunity for this House to discuss what is without question one of the most important and significant issues facing Canadians. That is why I would like to begin my remarks with a small plea to Members on both sides of the House to come at this issue without illusion, mythology or theology. We should try to demonstrate to the Canadian people that we are both learning from history and preparing for the future based on reality, not on fantasy.

I listened to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent). He had some interesting prepared comments and statistics about what has happened and what has not happened. I want to address my remarks to him as a new Member and other new Members and say that I think it would be a mistake if we were simply to pretend nothing good happened in the past and all that is happening now is perfect. That is simply not the case.

I was intrigued by his comments about interest rates. Let us be honest, the interest rate policy is in large part dictated by what happens in money markets in the United States. The U.S. is the largest financial market in the world. It determines the international flow of money. It determines the level of interest rates which all countries pay. Therefore, any Canadian Government of whatever stripe is always forced into the position of having at least to respond and be sensitive to that fact. We are not an island unto ourselves.

Mr. Riis: What about Austria?

Mr. Axworthy: It is not possible for us to isolate ourselves from a country with which we share a 5,000 kilometre border, a country with which we conduct 70 per cent of our trade. Large parts of our commercial exchange are affected by what happens in the U.S. Don't kid yourselves by saying that somehow it is going to change simply because you are here. That is not the key. The question is what kind of response is to be made.

The Hon. Member and others have talked about how to control inflation. We were the ones who controlled inflation. It did not happen on September 4. The inflation rate was down to 4 per cent before then and went down to 3.5 per cent after then. It had nothing to do with the election. We had to take very tough and strong measures, some of which were very unpleasant, to bring the inflation rate down. I hope the Conservative Government will accept the responsibility of keeping it that way. Let us not forget history. Let us not be like some Soviet revisionist historian and wipe out the past. There is an old cliché which says that those who will not learn from the past are bound to repeat it. We must realize that inflation is always a problem. We have to deal with the matter but we cannot deal with it through some theological answer.

I was interested to hear the Hon. Member talk about the way in which the Government is freeing up the forces of private enterprise and allowing more competition. Which Government brought in the major policy of deregulation? It was not the Conservative Government. A year ago the Liberal Government deregulated the airline industry and provided more competition. Conservative back-benchers had better ask some tough questions about the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) because he is stopping the program. He is putting the brakes on it. He is falling back into the trap of holding on to what the old vested interests had to say. Therefore, the airline industry is now getting a different set of signals. It was not the Conservatives who argued for the removal of excess regulations. It was the Liberal Government that did that.

That is an important truth, because the negotiations which we had with the provinces on deregulating the trucking industry have now been held up for six months. The agreement was on the table last September. The Conservative Government has stopped that agreement from going ahead. That agreement had been arrived at by all the nice words that Conservatives love to use: consultation, discussion, co-operation, and federal-provincial agreements. That had all been done. It was on the table and had been agreed upon. The Conservative Government stopped it. If Conservative Members are really concerned about that, they should do something about it. They should ask members of the Ministry why they are being trapped by functionaires and the old vested interests. The whole move to deregulation has been put on hold in the transportation industry. That is a very serious consequence because we were making progress. Without even examining the issue, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) said that they were not going to touch Air Canada. That issue was to have been discussed by way of public hearing in a House of Commons Transport Committee. The new Prime Minister of Canada put the stop to that. Why has the Prime Minister stopped that particular intervention?

My point is that government Members should not delude themselves.

Mr. Gormley: We are not.

Mr. Axworthy: Oh yes you are. I have listened to what you have said. There is a rank air of illusion in this Chamber every time a Conservative back-bencher rises to his feet with prepared notes from the Department of Finance.

An Hon. Member: You were not here.

Mr. Axworthy: I don't see any economic Ministers here either. They are so concerned about job creation that they have not found time to come to the Chamber for this very important debate.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it acceptable in debate for the Hon. Member to refer to the absence from the House of certain Members?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It has already been said by different Speakers, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) knows, that it is not acceptable for a Member to comment on the presence or absence of other Members in the House.

Mr. Frith: This must have been asked by a Tory of a Tory.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, in response to the point of order, it is obvious from observing who is in the Chamber at the present time that the Minister is not exactly committed to coming to grips with the issues which are being debated by Members of Parliament.

This is an important resolution because it does point to a very important model. I would like to talk about how growth can be created in the country. This is probably the most important issue that we face. What is the role of Government in that particular exercise? How do we begin to develop the intervention and activity which will help create growth in the private and public sectors?

Mr. Gormley: Not by spending money like you did.

Mr. Axworthy: I am going to answer that. It is clear how his comment that the Hon. Member does not know what he is talking about. I am here to educate him, and I am quite happy to do that. That is what the debate is for.

Mr. Gormley: I'm not the one who spent millions, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: I will come to that. In 1980, the Province of Manitoba had been ravaged by the Sterling Lyon Government. We had the highest rate of unemployment and the lowest rate of growth. Because of the lack of provincial Government activity in that province, we had the lowest rate of growth in Canada. There was nothing going on. There was no capital construction, no investment in the schools, and no private investment going on. That was the reality of Manitoba in 1980. By 1984, we had the highest rate of growth in Canada and one of the lowest rates of unemployment. Something happened in those four years which created a difference. What happened was a prime example of full co-operation between the federal Government, the provincial Government, municipal Governments and the private sector. That is where the resolution goes wrong. It only points to one level of partnership. The fact is that there was a partnership of all the major sectors in that economy. There was a different kind of federal involvement that went back to the grass-roots at the community level to help make policy and provide federal investment. What was important about the Manitoba experiment is that it was not simply a transfer of funds. It was a direct active involvement in regional economic development.

I will give one example. The federal Government initiated the core area initiative because we recognized that one of the best ways to generate growth in that province was through the City of Winnipeg, which represents the major economic engine in that province. The centre part of the city had been allowed to deteriorate. There was no investment going on and it was not an attractive area to which to bring private sector involvement. We proposed to the provincial and municipal Governments that we would each put up one-third of the funds to invest in incentives for private business, to provide for community redevelopment, and to provide for a major restructuring of the downtown area. Three levels of Government co-operated. We managed together. We sat down on a monthly basis with the Mayor of the City of Winnipeg, the provincial Minister and the regional Minister and talked about how we could join efforts to create development for the City of Winnipeg.

We are seeing the results now. Close to 50 new small businesses have started up in one warehouse district. This is not government intervention. They are new small businesses in the service sector, the manufacturing area, and the retail area. The Member for the Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) should go and look at that because an entire section of the city has been turned around. Private business, using the incentive grants, is sponsoring that.

We have also provided for close to 3,000 units of housing being either built or rehabilitated. That was the major source of private construction activity in that city. The Tories do not understand that kind of thing, but the private sector of Manitoba understands it because, for the first time, it was given the incentive to go back to work.

A third area of co-operation between the federal, provincial and municipal Governments was the provision of a major incentive for development in the north of Portage la Prairie. We put a package together to provide for capital infrastructure, a new investment, and then used that to attract major development into that area. The result has been that a major developer has announced that he will go into the northern part of Portage la Prairie to create 200,000 square feet of new commercial space. There are presently negotiations going on for another 300 or 400 units of needed rental housing.

That is co-operation as it should really happen. Government should not be afraid to work with the private sector or the provincial or municipal governments. They should work together to create growth.

The result in that area was that we were able to provide several thousand new jobs. Furthermore, not only was the actual core area initiative itself important, each level of Government could use it as a framework for development and be in a position to provide further investment to enhance and attract further activity.

Members have heard us in opposition complain mightily about the cancellation of a National Research Council Centre which was to be part of that downtown development program in Winnipeg. We complained about it because it was a way the federal Government could effectively help the Province of Manitoba acquire new capacity in high-tech research and development. The side benefit of that is that it was designed to attract a number of new high-tech manufacturing industries to the City of Winnipeg.

There were four major companies that were prepared to locate in Winnipeg and establish technology-oriented activities. They have now put their plans on hold because the federal Government cancelled the project. That is why it is important that the Government at the federal level recognize that it has an important and positive impact as an investor in communities, working in conjunction with other levels of government.

That is why we strongly object to the present plans of the Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) simply to transfer the funding. This means that the federal Government is denying itself the ability to provide further federal investment of this kind. It is removing itself from the planning and development activities in that region. It no longer has the capacity to determine how federal investments, whether in research or scientific development, capital structure or airports, are able to add to a growth business.

Let me give another example from Manitoba of tri-level co-operation. It was the signing of a major transportation agreement. After sitting down with the provincial Governments and discussing what would be the primary form of economic development, it was recognized that the Province of Manitoba was a major centre of transportation. Many of the facilities had been allowed to deteriorate over the years. We signed an agreement amounting to over $200 million to restore totally the Port of Churchill, repair the railway lines, and bring to Winnipeg for the first time the development, research and manufacturing of light grain cars that would be utilized in the entire grain network in western Canada as well as on the Churchill line. The agreement also included the expansion of the airport system and research and development.

I suggest to Hon. Members, who think they know so much, that this was done in conjunction with the private sector: thirty of the top business people in Winnipeg, many of whom were Conservative bagmen, financiers and campaign managers—I can name them—and I know the Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker) knows who I am talking about. They told me that they wanted to provide new investment at the University of Manitoba in management studies because they believed that that is the way of the future. They asked if the federal Government would help them. We worked with associates of that faculty and designed a management study program, transportation research centre because we recognized that new research was the way of the future. That was done with the province, the private sector and the universities, with the federal Government involving itself directly in economic development at the local level while using its investment funds to provide opportunities for new training, new research and new products.

That is an important model to be followed. It is very important that the Government not get itself so wrapped up in its theology that government should not play such a role that it withdraws from those potential investment opportunities to help the regions of Canada grow.

An Hon. Member: What about the people who said no? They said no to you.

Mr. Axworthy: Oh no, they didn't.

An Hon. Member: You are still in a dream.

Mr. Axworthy: I am talking about reality. I am talking about hard jobs. I am also talking about a reality in which there are a lot of people in Manitoba saying, "My God, I wish the other guys were back".

Mr. Gormley: Name one, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: I presented a petition in the House which contained 1,000 names of people who are objecting to the activity of the Government of Canada selling the National Research Council Centre. That was done in one weekend. We do not need much more help than that. There are thousands more who believe the same thing.

The Conservative Government never came to Manitoba to say that it will cancel the National Research Council Centre or the research grants. It was campaigning on a lie. The Conservatives did not say that they were going to cut back on those kinds of federal investments. They did not have a mandate to do it, and that is why Canadians have a serious mistrust of the Government. They can no longer believe the Government.

Not only did it not have a mandate to change that, it is now betraying that trust and losing the opportunities to create in Manitoba the high level technology job development that we began three years ago.

This is where the NDP resolution is wrong. The NDP should not only be taking credit for the Manitoba Government. While important and positive advances have been made in Manitoba, it has happened because there were several players and several partners. For all the talk we have heard from federal Conservative Members and Ministers about co-operation, consultation, negotiation and agreement, the NDP should look at the model of Manitoba to see how it works and how it turned that province around. Manitoba had the lowest rate of growth and one of the highest unemployment rates, but now it has a high rate of growth and it had some opportunities until the present Government began ripping those agreements apart and not taking its activities there.

The people of Manitoba are asking what happened to that co-operation and openness with respect to $72 million of equalization payments. Where is the co-operation when every level of government in that province and the private sector have asked for the restoration of that national research centre? Where is the co-operation with respect to the investment in such things as new training facilities in new community colleges?

The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières said that it is important to train people. Our Government put $1 billion into the training program in 1982. The Conservatives are not the first to think of this. Part of the $1 billion that we put into that program was designed to provide direct transfers to the community colleges run by the provinces and to the private sector to develop new training facilities.

Today, there is no longer any money for that skills growth fund. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has not contributed any money to provide for the new CAD-CAM centres and high-tech development centres. The ability to give assistance to provincial governments, native bands, women's groups and community corporations in order to develop new training facilities has been cut off.

The Government says that it believes in the investment in our human resources. I say to the Government, invest in them. Why did it cut the program off and stop funding the skills growth fund which is designed to help those provinces and expand the community colleges in every province in the country?

I believe there are lessons to be learned from the Manitoba example. They are lessons on co-operation and on how to work with the province to provide economic development. In order to accomplish this, it is necessary to have a federal Government that wants to participate as a partner and wants to invest.

Therefore, I would like to move an amendment to the motion, seconded by the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith): The amended motion would read:

That this House commends the Government of Manitoba and the former Liberal Government for their positive policies of job creation which have produced the lowest unemployment level in Canada, and calls upon the Government to adopt a similar course of economic expansion rather than the discredited policies of tax increases and spending cuts which it has pursued to date and which are largely responsible for the latest unemployment statistics, which show an alarming increase of 167,000 unemployed between December, 1984, and January, 1985.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment. I am very fortunate to represent the community of North Battleford, which is the birthplace of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). Let me say that the people there are able to contain the sadness at the fact that he is now living in Winnipeg. While I do not want to attack another Member personally, I suggest that what we have just heard is not only a sad example but a shameful defence of the kind of obscene waste of taxpayers' money to which the people of Canada quite resolutely said no on September 4.

We have heard these lame theories of economic development. I think the people of this country, and certainly their representatives in the House, acknowledge that there is definitely a role for government. I do not believe that any Member of our Government would disagree that there is a role for government, provincial governments, labour and all people to work together to promote a healthy and vibrant economy. It is not the role of government to waste untold millions of dollars on so-called economic development, as this Member from Winnipeg so shamefully claims when he says that that in some sense is economic development. That is wasting the taxpayers' money by simply giving vast quantities of money to projects that did not promote in the long run economic development and, what is more important, human dignity. I think perhaps this Member owes this House a clearer explanation of just what he did to this country in his capacity as the one who dispensed all of this money in the name of so-called economic development.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the opportunity to elaborate even further on the very constructive developments that took place in the Province of Manitoba. I want to register on behalf of that province a serious objection to the language he used in calling it shameful. Those projects were not federal waste. They were done in consultation with the Chambers of Commerce of that Province, with the City of Winnipeg, the Province of Manitoba, and a wide variety of community organizations. The Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake has just in effect insulted thousands of people in Manitoba who worked together on those projects. We are used to that kind of arrogance on the part of the Conservatives.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Who is calling the kettle black?

Mr. Axworthy: That is the sort of arrogance that says "we know what is best".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: The Hon. Member talks about dignity, Mr. Speaker. Let me talk to him about it. I would be glad to take him on a tour any time to talk to the thousands of people who lived in the core area of Winnipeg, people who had no jobs but who are now being trained and will get employment and have the dignity which work brings, all because of the expenditure of money by my Government. I would like to take the Member to the two or three thousand people who now hold housing units who did not have housing units before. He can tell them that they do not have dignity because of that investment. I would like the Hon. Member to talk to the students at the University of Manitoba who are now having an opportunity to be trained in new management studies and in new transportation research studies who are going on to new opportunities for jobs in a high technology world. The Member can tell them that they do not have dignity any more. I would like to take the Member and show him the opportunities for those kinds of investments that took place in a wide variety of neighbourhoods where people were able to start new businesses. I could take him to the warehouse district in Winnipeg where over 50 new businesses were started because of the core initiative. He can talk to the owners of those businesses and say, "You do not have dignity because the federal Liberal gave you an incentive grant to get your business started. We Tories would not do that. We would let you be without a business, without any ownership but with your dignity". That is basically what the Conservatives are talking about; they do not care about people. They do not care about a region like Manitoba. They simply believe in their theology that the best way to do things is to do nothing at all.

I say to the Hon. Member that if he wants to learn how to start developing an economy, the best place for him to come to is Winnipeg. He will learn an awful lot more there than listening to anybody else in his Government.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has indicated that our contracts and agreements are being ripped up along with the people in our cities and province. I would like that corrected because that is not the case. The Hon. Member implied that we as a Government are not honouring the commitments of the former Government with regard to agreements that were signed in the centre core area initiative—

Mr. Axworthy: How shameful and wasteful.

Mr. Minaker: —as well as with the former Minister of Transportation. These agreements to which the former Government committed itself are being honoured.

Mr. Axworthy: But they are shameful and wasteful.

Mr. Minaker: The Hon. Member implied that these commitments are not being carried out, but they are. The Member indicated that the National Research Council Centre is not being built, but it is being built. On the one hand the Member prides himself on the co-operation between the private entrepreneur, the free enterpriser, and his Government, but on the other hand he is firmly against the free enterprise system working with our Government to see that that National Research Council Centre is undertaken by private enterprise.

I sometimes find it difficult to understand the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry when he tries to imply that the contracts to which his Government had committed itself are not being honoured by this Government. They are. But if promises have been wildly made by individual Members that there is no history of commitment anywhere on paper, that is a different matter. I would think that we as a Government should not be committed to somebody's airy-fairy idea of certain projects that he throws around at certain times in an election campaign without any commitment from the government of which he was a part.

Mr. Axworthy: First, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker) should get together with his colleague in front of him who said that all these things are so shameful and wasteful, that the Conservatives cannot stand it, but who now is saying, "We are very proud to go ahead and continue them". Contradiction is probably the possession of small minds, and I think we have just seen an apt example of that today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: When we talk about what things have been ripped up, it was the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) where it was written in black and white that the Tories were cancelling the NRC Centre. They said it was cancelled. That was $50 million wiped out of the window—gone.

There has been a lot of pressure from other Members of Parliament, the private sector and universities to restore this centre. We all hope the Government here will have the good sense to respond. If it wants to set up a research co-op of some kind, we would want to do that. The fact is that the project was cancelled by the Minister of Finance, but there is now sufficient public and community pressure to bring it back.

We also had a major commitment to the establishment of the VIA Rail repair base in the City of Winnipeg, which has also just been cancelled by the Minister. This was designed to designate Winnipeg as the major terminal for rail passenger traffic in western Canada. That would have established and confirmed again that Winnipeg is a major transportation centre for the West. That was part of the transportation discussions with the Province of Manitoba. The Hon. Member said it was not ripped up. But it was cancelled. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has said so.

On the question of Churchill, we were in a committee hearing the other day. We asked the members of the Hudson's Bay Route Association, "Have you met with the Minister to talk about the work of Churchill?" We learned that no one had talked to them yet. We asked what was going on with the development of the light grain car at the Transcona shops. The answer was, "We do not know. No one is talking to us. The CNR has decided somehow to stow it. It is no longer happening. It is kind of held in abeyance, held in limbo".

If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James is saying that this Government will have the wisdom and good sense to continue the work that we started, then I would applaud him. But I have just heard from other Members that they did not like what we are doing, so we had to find out who is speaking for this Government. It may be that, as always, the backbenchers are beginning to sound like the Ministers. They are contradicting one another.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). In view of his experience in his former portfolio of employment and immigration, does he not think that the way in which Challenge '85 was conceived by the Tory Government that program discriminates against the less fortunate regions of this country, namely Atlantic Canada, parts of Manitoba, parts of western Canada, Quebec and Ontario? Does the Hon. Member not think—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The period for questions and comments is now over.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In light of the importance of this whole question to Winnipeg and the fact that nobody from my Party has been able to ask a question on the matter, since it is almost six o'clock, could the House allow a question from this Party?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): First, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North Centre (Mr. Keeper) asked for unanimous consent to allow him to ask a question. Obviously there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On the same point of order, I just wish to tell you that our Party would be very agreeable to giving unanimous consent provided that I am allowed to complete my question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has moved an amendment to the motion that is now before the House. We find the amendment to be in accordance with the rules.

• (1800)

Mr. Axworthy, seconded by Mr. Caccia—Mr. Frith not being in his assigned seat—moves, if I may phrase it in this manner, that after the word "Manitoba", the following words be added: "and the former Liberal Government".

We are now debating the amendment on the motion before the House.

Mr. Dingwall: On debate, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Six o'clock.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. It being six o'clock, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings on the motion before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 62(11).

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

TRUST COMPANIES—PIONEER TRUST COMPANY. (B) PROTECTION OF INVESTORS AND DEPOSITORS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this point concerning questions which I directed to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) on February 7, 1985. I asked the Minister to confirm whether Pioneer Trust of Regina, Saskatchewan, was in serious financial difficulties.

In my supplementary question I asked her to guarantee that there would be a public inquiry or that at least the results of any internal inquiry would be made public. The Minister was good enough to give a decent answer. She said:

> Mr. Speaker, I am sympathetic to the Hon. Member's question. I have already informed him that I will let him know of any further developments.

Further developments certainly occurred, in that two and a half hours later I was informed by the Minister's office that the Minister of Finance of the Province of Saskatchewan was at that moment making a public announcement, which in essence indicated that Pioneer Trust was closing its doors at four o'clock Regina time, that it would be placed in receivership, and that its assets would be taken over by Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation.

That evening I sent a letter by hand to the Minister, again making the request that a public inquiry be held into all matters pertaining to Pioneer Trust. I indicated that I believed it was in the public interest that there be an open inquiry into the reasons Pioneer Trust had to close its business and into the efforts that were made to keep it solvent. Also I indicated that depositors, shareholders in Pioneer Management Limited and the general public were entitled to a full accounting. I have requested on various occasions since then that a public inquiry be held, as there are many questions about Pioneer Trust which have been left unanswered.

Let me enumerate some of them. First, we are concerned whether the federal Government, particularly Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation, did everything possible to protect the interests of depositors. We feel that CDIC must have known of the problems which Pioneer had for most of 1984, if not before. Surely a cursory look at its financial statements over the last number of years would indicate that many of its assets were in real estate and that the value of those assets, particularly real estate assets in western Canada, particularly in British Columbia and Alberta, have declined in value.

Therefore, it is important to depositors in Pioneer Trust to know that the federal Government, through CDIC, did everything possible and reasonable to avert this disaster which has occurred and to make certain that Pioneer remained in a liquid and viable form and able to meet its obligations. That is one of the questions which I think a public inquiry should address. A public inquiry should look into the business practices of Pioneer Trust.

There is a great deal of uncertainty and many rumours floating around Regina and there is the feeling that perhaps improper loans were made and that a high enough interest rate was not charged on loans that were made. Did the company use sound business practices? Did it do the things it was supposed to do according to its charter of incorporation? These are all unanswered questions.

We would also like to know how much federal and provincial consultation occurred and when it occurred. Many of the events surrounding this past week seem to indicate that there might have been a breakdown in communications. I believe that members of the Minister's staff were genuinely surprised when they learned on February 7 that the Saskatchewan Government had decided not to proceed with insuring the $30-million share issue that Pioneer Trust was going to market. We wonder what type of communication did occur between the federal and provincial Governments.

We are also concerned about the type of decisions that the Provincial Government has made. Before Christmas, the provincial Government announced that it would guarantee that $30-million share issue. That created a sense of optimism and trust. It now turns out that that was a false sense of optimism and trust. We are wondering whether or not the provincial Government knew what it was doing.

In summation, there are a great many questions that deserve to be answered in a full and public inquiry. We urge the Government to consider seriously establishing a public inquiry.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I rise in response to the quite genuine concerns on the part of the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). I too have been concerned about this situation. I am happy to put on the record the steps that have been taken.

Senior management of Pioneer Trust Company made the decision to close the company's offices until further notice at the close of business on February 7, 1985. Management's decision came as a result of its inability to obtain support for a preferred share issue which Pioneer's shareholders had hoped to arrange. The proceeds of the preferred share issue would have been used in large part to replenish the capital base of the trust company. Given that this issue could not be successfully marketed, the continued operation of Pioneer no longer seemed viable and it therefore ceased operations.

On learning of management's decision and the proposed action, I in my capacity directed the federal Superintendent of Insurance to take control of Pioneer's assets so that the interests of the depositors would be best protected. Officers of the Department of Insurance were dispatched immediately to the company's offices and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation was informed. An application to have the company wound up pursuant to the provisions of the Winding-up Act has been filed in the Court of Queen's Bench of Saskatchewan.

Pioneer Trust has approximately $243 million of deposits, of which about 90 per cent are fully insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. Officials of CDIC are now in Regina working on arrangements so that depositors may receive their funds to the extent of the $60,000 limit as quickly as possible once the winding-up order is issued. I am hopeful that by tomorrow there will be an announcement made outlining the arrangements that depositors can make.

Pioneer's current financial problems result mainly from the large proportion of its mortgage portfolio which is in arrears and from the necessity to write down the values of certain of its real estate investments, particularly those in areas which have experienced market depression. As a result of these problems, the company experienced on the one hand a drain on its cash flow due to non-payment of mortgages and on the other a steady erosion of its capital base due to operating and capital losses. In the final analysis, the company became unable to meet the liquidity requirements imposed upon it by the Trust Companies Act and its borrowings exceeded those permitted by that statute.

On June 4, 1984, a hearing was held before the previous Minister of State for Finance which officials of the company attended. As a result of that hearing, limitations were placed on the company's licence with a view to restricting its investments to short-term high-quality debt securities, thereby bolstering its liquidity position and with a view to progressively reducing the company's borrowings by limitation of the interest rates offered by the company to depositors. The company's authorized borrowing multiple was also reduced, with the company being given until December 31, 1984 to comply.

The Hon. Member had two questions. One question dealt with the public inquiry, and I am satisfied that that is not necessary at this point. But I would like to reassure the House, with respect to other western trust companies, that I am not aware of any which are, as he has put it, on the brink of collapse.

PUBLIC SERVICE—AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—JOB CLASSIFICATIONS. (B) AGREEMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, during the Question Period last Friday, I had hoped to pursue an important matter with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). The matter dealt with the six issues which he is, by his own admission, currently discussing with Public Service staff associations.

All I wanted was some clarification, some precision, from the Minister as to whether in fact those six issues were: the master contract, political rights, a dental plan, adjustment procedures, amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act, and Public Service pensions.

Some clarification was and is certainly needed because, until the Minister mentioned the six issues in the House, no one else had, I had not, nor had the staff associations. As a matter of fact, the associations were stunned by the Minister's statement as they believed that the conversations they had with the Minister were in camera and, therefore, confidential.

Perhaps the Minister did not mean to mention the six issues. Perhaps they just popped into his head and on to the floor of the House when the Minister made a passing reference to the election promises which were made by his Party and by his Leader during the last election campaign.

The Minister's Leader and his Party made many promises during that campaign; in fact, hundreds of them. Fortunately, not all of them dealt with Public Service matters. In any case, my friend the Minister was not in the House last Friday and his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), undertook to answer in place of the President of the Treasury Board. The Minister of Finance either did not choose, or was not able to answer my question about which six issues precisely are being negotiated at this time. Instead, he told me how productive the discussions with the staff associations have been—at least that is the gospel according to the President of the Treasury Board—and how these discussions are expected to result in a great improvement in labour-management relations.

That is all very nice if it is true, but again the staff associations were somewhat mystified. They said last week that they had not yet had any hard input from the President of the Treasury Board on the positions which they had put forward to the Government for consideration. So it would seem to me that not only am I in the dark, and some of the participants in the Minister's discussions still in the dark, about the six issues that are under discussion, but so are the thousands of public servants in this country and the millions of Canadians who are most immediately concerned with the outcome of these negotiations.

I am hoping that this evening—

Mr. Lewis: Point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: —someone who can speak with authority on behalf of the Government will be able to tell us which six—

Mr. Lewis: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Please, may I say to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) that a point of order is not allowed during this period.

Mr. Lewis: I want to know exactly what questions he was asking and I want exact dates, because the matter of the questions which the Member asked of the President of the Treasury Board came up once before. This Member is now asking—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: I will fix this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Please, let the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier finish his question.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, maybe if the Hon. Member would sit down and listen to what is going on, he could fix his own time, get his work done and give us a reasonably good answer. I justs said that I was hoping I would get an answer to the question I asked last Friday.

Mr. Lewis: When did you ask the question?

• (1815)

Mr. Gauthier: On Friday, Sir. I also asked, Mr. Speaker, because of the interesting progress which the President of the Treasury Board says he is making, because of the very productive discussions that he tells his colleagues he is having, when we can expect a signed agreement on all of these six issues. But no one was able or cared to tell me, or the House, what was happening. In fact, the Minister of Finance, on a vital, urgent matters, such as this, only told me that he did not think it was helpful for him or me, "... to try to draw these discussions onto the floor of the House of Commons...".

I was surprised to hear that from the Minister of Finance. I know he qualified it slightly by referring to, and again I quote, "... a point when they..."—talking about the negotiations—"... are at a sensitive stage and are clearly resulting in an improvement in the tone of labour-management relations". We are all in favour of that. But we only have the Minister's word about any improvement, Mr. Speaker. There has been no hard input from the President of the Treasury Board on the association's proposals. There is no agreement signed. There is nothing to prove the Minister's statement. As far as "drawing" the discussions on to the floor of the House of Commons is concerned, it seems to me that that is a much more appropriate place than in the corridors of the House, which is where the President of the Treasury Board took them. It is far more legitimate, as far as I am concerned, to have the details given on the floor of the House, to Members of Parliament, than given to the media outside the House as was done last week.

My purpose, Mr. Speaker, has never been in any way to interfere with any discussions that might be under way or in any way to prejudice them, either on the floor of the House or anywhere else. My purpose has only been to obtain answers to questions which I have raised here in this House. They were legitimate questions, seriously asked. I hope that someone on the government side will be able to give me some answers.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that I am still waiting for an answer to a question I raised on February 4 which was specifically: when new contracts are negotiated with the Public Service Alliance or with Public Service unions in general, will job classification be made negotiable? The President of the Treasury Board answered that progress was to be expected and that, indeed, he was very happy with the progress being made on the six issues. I raise this question with the Parliamentary Secretary: where are we at this time?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is going to be quite a job, but I will try to enlighten the Hon. Member. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) said in the House on February 4, in response to a question raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), that he had had a number of meetings over the past few months with the Public Service union leaders and that progress was being made on the package of issues under discussion. Outside the House later that day, in response to reporters' questions, he reiterated that discussion to date had gone along quite well and added that he hoped to have an agreement on the package in a very short time.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier seek to disrupt any negotiations which the Government might be having with the union.

Mr. Gauthier: Nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: We are not about to let that happen, Mr. Speaker. It is unfortunate that the President's remarks have been interpreted in some quarters as an indication that the Government is near or has reached an agreement with the unions. Further discussions are required with the unions before the President of the Treasury Board is in a position to ask his colleagues to approve a course of action for the reasonable disposition of the issues. Unfortunately, the President had to cancel his last scheduled meeting with the unions on rather short notice but it is his firm intention to resume discussions with them at an early date with a view to having decisions taken on the issues within the time frame he has outlined to them in discussions.

When the parties last met, there was tacit agreement that while talks continued, they would refrain from staking out their positions publicly and would confine themselves to stating that there are a number of issues and solutions and that discussions are taking place on them. In contrast to the way the previous administration dealt with unions, we keep our word. It is evident, Mr. Speaker, from the discussions which have taken place that the union leaders share this Government's desire to improve union management relations in the Public Service. This is in direct contrast to the way relations deteriorated under the former Liberal Government.

I will not frustrate their desires, nor will I break the Party's confidences and jeopardize a mutually satisfactory outcome of the discussions. I wish to assure the Hon. Member, however, that the President of the Treasury Board intends to resume discussions with the unions on the issues at the earliest possible date and remains confident that an early agreement can be reached.

TRANSPORT—AUTOMOBILE EMISSION CONTROLS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, during Question Period, the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard) made the absurd and incorrect statement that the responsibility of replying to my question on car pollution controls rested with the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). The Department of Transport, as the Minister well knows, is the only Department responsible for introducing automobile emission controls. I do not know whether to ask myself whether the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bouchard) really knows what his Department is responsible for, or whether we should all view this incident as another example of a Government that does not know what it is doing. But one thing is obvious. We have two Ministers of Transport who share two different views on what their Department should be doing. One shirks his responsibility by shifting the onus of responsibility to the Minister of the Environment. The other, the senior Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), recognizes that automobile emission controls is a matter for which his Department has the responsibility, but he procrastinates. He would rather not decide. Meanwhile, we have a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who talks a good fight about the need for a cleaner environment. He wants to go to Quebec City next month for his meeting with President Reagan with "clean hands". But the Prime Minister should know that if he wants to be squeaky clean for the President of the United States, he should talk to his Ministers of Transport about announcing automobile emission controls very soon.

Of course, if he is really in a talkative mood, Mr. Speaker, he might remind the Minister of the Environment that she should also be concerned about automobile emission controls, because so far she has not demonstrated a great environmental concern. Of course, the Prime Minister may just have to face up to reality and come to grips with the fact that he has a Department of Transport headed by two Ministers, who either do not understand the importance of the meeting with President Reagan or who just do not care if an accord is reached on finding a joint solution to our common problem of acid rain.

The Prime Minister must decide which way he is going to lean. If he supports the Minister of Transport, who seems reluctant to make a decision on emission controls, he faces the problem of disregarding his own environmental problems. Let us hope the Prime Minister will be able to overcome the reticence of his recalcitrant Minister of Transport.

The battle on this important issue, Mr. Speaker, will take place behind the closed doors of Cabinet. Most likely it will centre on when rather than whether the new regulations will become effective. Who will win? Will it be the Prime Minister, so his hands will be clean for President Reagan? Will it be the Minister of Transport, who wants to take more time before he takes action? Or will it be the Minister of the Environment, who so far has indicated she is more concerned with industry than the environment? Let us hope, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will emerge as the winner. The bottom line question is, when will the car emission controls become effective? Will it be 1987, 1988, 1989 or 1990, or will it be later? From an environmental as well an economic point of view, the obvious answer is 1987.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am quite amused by the Hon. Member's comments. One has to ask oneself, where was the Hon. Member over the past few years? He mentioned procrastination. Where was he during the last Government?

Mr. Caccia: Laying the groundwork for you.

Mr. Lewis: He mentioned cabinet meetings. Where was he during these Cabinet meetings? He asks, what success did we have? Well, I ask the Hon. Member what success he had? Was he not holding the position of Minister of the Environment, or was he perhaps trying to fool the people?

Mr. Gauthier: Best Minister we ever had.

Mr. Lewis: There were a lot of rhetorical questions being asked by the Hon. Member when the fact of the matter was that he was the Minister of the Environment and watched all the delay and procrastination on the part of the previous Liberal Government. That is a shame, and the Hon. Member should know better than to bring it up.

I want the Hon. Member to know that for more than two years officials of the Departments of Transport, Environment, Health and Welfare, Energy, Mines and Resources, and Regional Industrial Expansion have been studying the effects of motor vehicle exhaust emission on the health of Canadians and on the environment through the formation of acid rain. That is probably the first time the Hon. Member ever heard that. These studies have also considered the potential impact of possible regulatory changes on the petroleum and automotive industries as well as on consumers. I want to tell the Hon. Member that there have been a large number of reports, all prepared under the previous administration. But the previous administration did nothing. I want the Hon. Member to know that in less than six months since we have been in office we have been able to arrange public hearings where all interested Parties could table data and express views. In addition, the present Government has managed the completion of all the analytical work. In contrast to the complete inaction when the Hon. Member was the Minister, the results are in and are presently being reviewed by the Ministers of Transport, the Environment, Health, Energy and Industry. I can assure the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) that in contrast to the years of inaction by the Liberal Party, there will be an appropriate announcement very shortly.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in light of the recent unemployment statistics it is clear that the plight of unemployed Canadians is no better since the Government promise to create "jobs, jobs, jobs". Indeed, there are 167,000 more Canadians out of work now than there were last month.

Atlantic Canadians were hit with the news from the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council that the growth of the Atlantic economy will slow down this year and that unemployment levels will remain rather frightening. In addition to this distressing news, we are advised by Statistics Canada that the number of full time jobs fell by 48,000; employment declined by an estimated 6,000 in Newfoundland, by 4,000 in Nova Scotia, and by 11,000 in Alberta; 23,000 jobs were lost in the construction industry, and 26,000 jobs were lost in the trade sector.

A glance at the unemployment rates for some of our major cities shows devastating increases; St. John's, Newfoundland 17.1; Sudbury, Ontario, 16.5; Hamilton, Ontario, 10.4; and, yes, Mr. Speaker, in my own riding, the town of Glace Bay, it is in excess of 55 per cent. I would urge the Government, Mr. Speaker, to take its responsibilities seriously and put into effect job-creation programs now which will affect and assist the unemployed in creating meaningful jobs.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SETTLEMENT OF CAN-CAR RAIL STRIKE AT THUNDER BAY, ONT.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, last evening members of the United Auto Workers Local 1075 ratified a collective agreement with Can-Car Rail of Thunder Bay, a subsidiary of the provincially owned Urban Transportation Development Corporation. The vote signalled an end to a 12-week strike which has been devastating for the workers and their families, and which was drawn out by the company's attempts to reduce the work force drastically through contracting-out provisions in the collective agreement.

I am happy to say that the workers were able to prevent such job losses, and were also able to win, among other things, improvements to their pensions. In a community with over 19 per cent unemployment, it is a relief to all of us to see an equitable settlement to this problem. It is now important that all levels of Government get behind the company and the workers to ensure a long-term future for the plant.

During negotiations, UTDC withdrew a $60-million contract to build equipment for the City of Boston. This means at least 100 jobs over the next two years for this company and its workers. I call on the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to contact the President of UTDC immediately to encourage it to re-award this contract to the Thunder Bay plant.

I also call on the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to meet with officials of UTDC to negotiate a sizable order for double decker rail cars as a replacement for VIA's ancient rolling stock. Can-Car is the only Canadian company with experience in the production of such cars.

PENITENTIARIES

ELBOW LAKE WORK CAMP IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, from time to time we read and hear about our correctional institutions. Two weeks ago I had the pleasure of accompanying the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) on a tour of the Elbow Lake work camp institution located in my constituency. I must say that I was very impressed with this institution's philosophy and physical lay-out. Elbow Lake is a minimum security S-2 institution, with a population of 50 inmates and 27 staff. It is located in the rural community area of Harrison Mills.

It seems that this institution's major philosophy is to instill a strong work ethic in the inmates. This is accomplished by allowing the inmates to participate in the institution's forestry program.

The forestry program which Elbow Lake employs is vertically integrated, in that every phase of logging, sawmilling, and stand treatment is involved to some degree. It is equipped to train men in the basic skills required in outside industry. An inmate should have readily marketable skills in tree stand treatment, logging, and sawmilling. Its client, the B.C. Forest Service, offers substantive employment to its inmates, creating a valuable contribution to the community, while maintaining the aims and objectives of the Correctional Service of Canada.

This institution enjoys a very good working relationship with the Citizens Advisory Committee, which is composed of prominent area residents who have adopted a position of advocacy on behalf of Elbow Lake with various agencies in the community. I think this is truly an admirable model for the Correctional Service to follow. As a prisoner from this institution said in his letter to me, and I quote: "A work camp like this one is a God-send. I will go back into society with none of the bitterness usually fostered on inmates in regular prisons".

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

UNEMPLOYMENT

ACCUSATION CONCERNING STATISTICS

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, my comments are directed to Hon. Members of the Liberal Opposition and concern the latest unemployment statistics and the charge that the present Government is responsible for them.

Mr. Speaker, may I remind opposition members that they are the ones that brought about the present situation, and as someone once said: Canada is like a patient—and I think most of my colleagues in this House will agree—who has been neglected, even worse, slowly poisoned for nearly twenty years. And who is responsible for this criminal negligence, if you will pardon the expression, with respect to the Canadian economy? None other than our Liberal friends who were in power for nearly twenty years.

Mr. Speaker, you will understand, and so will our Liberal friends if they are capable of doing so, that it is scientifically impossible and metaphysically unthinkable to rebuild in six months what this country has lost over the last twenty years. At the very least, the present Governnment has introduced policies and mechanisms that will need time to prove their effectiveness and put an end to the state of chronic financial anemia we inherited from our predecessors.

Mr. Speaker, with respect I would ask our Liberal neighbours to consider their own burden of guilt before pointing an accusing finger at the Progressive Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

OIL SHIPMENTS THROUGH NORTHWEST PASSAGE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) gave the go-ahead to Panarctic Oils Ltd. to proceed with its Bent Horn project. The Bent Horn field is located on Cameron Island in the Canadian High Arctic. While this is a small scale pilot project, it is significant and symbolic in that, for the first time, crude oil produced in the High Arctic will be shipped by tanker through the Northwest Passage to southern markets. This project will begin this summer, Mr. Speaker.

Of greater importance, however, is the standard of the ship which will be used to transport this oil. This House should be aware that the vessel scheduled to carry the oil south from Cameron Island this summer, the M.V. Arctic, does not meet the safety regulations of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. While conversion work will begin on the ship during the winter, it will not be brought up to standard in time for this summer's planned activity. The Government, therefore, will be breaking existing safety regulations if it permits the M.V. Arctic to carry oil south from Cameron Island this summer.

To get around this problem, the ship's operator, Canarctic, is in the process of applying to Transport Canada for an exemption from the regulations. I think the Government ought to clarify its intentions immediately. It must respect the existing legislation and regulations. There must not be a shipping free-for-all in the High Arctic.

UNITED CHURCH STATEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, two years ago the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops released a document entitled Ethical Reflections on the Economic Crisis. The controversy it generated over the moral implications of government economic policies which left 1.5 million Canadians unemployed goes on today. The Catholic bishops have today been joined by the United Church of Canada which, in a statement released in Regina yesterday, condemned government policies which do not give first priority to our number one problem, unemployment.

The United Church has proposed a five-point program to solve the moral crisis of the Canadian economy. First is a fairer tax system that would see an end to the free lunches given to many upper income Canadians and corporations who pay no income tax. They also propose increasing the levels of social assistance so that no Canadian lives below the poverty line. They propose the Government undertake a serious full employment program as Sweden, Norway, Austria, and the Province of Manitoba have done. They propose the Government reverse the policy of eliminating social programs to reduce the deficit. They also propose that we pursue a lower interest rate policy in Canada.

I am proud to say that each of these proposals has found a voice in this House through the New Democratic Party. Unless we heed these words of wisdom from the spiritual leaders of our country, our moral crisis will only worsen and Canada will become a less humane place in which to live.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

COURAGE OF HON. MEMBER FOR CUMBERLAND-COLCHESTER (MR. COATES)

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, twenty-four hours after the Minister of National Defence resigned, I can still hear the word resignation echoing in my junior politician's ears. I found February 12, 1985, the most difficult day of my short political career. I was deeply affected because Mr. Coates is indeed a man of honour. Whatever the circumstances, a decision of this kind requires a great deal of courage, and I could not but be impressed. That is why my admiration for the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates) remains unchanged, and I wish to inform the House that it was a great pleasure for me to work with the Minister in my capacity of Vice-Chairman of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

VIA RAIL

TRANSPORTATION OF STRANDED AIRLINE PASSENGERS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, congratulations to VIA Rail for coming to the rescue of hundreds of passengers unable to fly from Metro-Toronto to Ottawa yesterday because weather closed the airport. Personnel at these stations and on the trains looked after the extra numbers with confidence, concern, and courtesy. But I have to ask what can be done to make these extra numbers be regular numbers for the railway? Obviously VIA has to be faster and more frequent in its service to compete with the airlines, but that raises the question of what we can provide to help it do that.

We need to give rail passenger service between major population centres far more priority than we have been prepared to do in the past. Metro-Toronto could not have its high quality transit service without a large provincial subsidy. The universally acclaimed GO train service, serving commuters from Pickering to Hamilton, could not operate without provincial aid. Giving VIA the same priority, in the Montreal-Toronto-Ottawa triangle it serves, would help not only one out of every three people in Canada, it would also contribute positively to coping with the energy challenge of the future. That challenge does not confront us immediately because of the oil glut, but it will return and we now have to plan for that time and improve railway service between major population centres.

PUROLATOR COURIER SERVICE—APPLICATION TO LOCATE AT HAMILTON AIRPORT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Purolator Courier Service of Canada has announced its intention to locate its eastern Canada national and international sorting—

Some Hon. Members: Louder.

• (1415)

Ms. Copps: I realize, Mr. Speaker, that Members are hurting today. I wish they would listen to this because it involves jobs for Hamiltonians.

The company's plans call for immediate construction of a new facility for the sorting of millions of parcels, and a new Canada customs quarters to service the large volume of international traffic which is expected. In addition to the creation of dozens of new construction jobs, the plan calls for 70 permanent jobs in the Hamilton-Wentworth area. Future expansion will create many new jobs and bring new development to an area which is currently suffering an unemployment rate of more than 10 per cent. This plan has received the enthusiastic support of the people of Hamilton-Wentworth.

Unfortunately, the federal Ministry of Transport is blocking this application. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) will have an opportunity today to meet with the mayor of Hamilton and officials of the city who will be putting their case forward. I would urge the Minsiter to overturn the misguided decision of his officials denying Purolator Courier service the right to locate its service at the Hamilton International Civic Airport because this means jobs for Hamiltonians, and it may be a start of the fulfilment of some of the government promises which have yet to see fruition in Hamilton.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—STATEMENT ISSUED BY PREMIER HATFIELD

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that there is no excuse today for the absence of the Prime Minister and of the Deputy Prime Minister from the House.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Kaplan: In their absence I want to address my question to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where is Mr. Turner?

An Hon. Member: We want Joe Clark.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. Time belongs to Members. I rose because I could not hear the question of the Hon. Member because of the noise. May I ask eveyrone in the House to allow Members to put their questions, and Ministers to answer.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, for your benefit, I will repeat that—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Kaplan: —I consider it disgraceful that the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister are absent today. I want to direct my questions to the Minister of Justice.

My Party has been pointing to the evidence of special treatment of Premier Hatfield during the marijuana investigation which has been raised in the House. This morning Premier Hatfield himself informed his province that he has been the victim of an alleged conspiracy against him. One can only conclude that he sincerely believes that a member or members of the RCMP are out to get him and have lied under oath about informing Pat Ryan about the drug bust, and that Justice officials have violated their duties in the timing of laying charges and in the conduct of that aspect of the prosecution.

The Minister cannot tell the House that those allegations made by the Premier are wrong. I therefore ask him to do the only thing that can be done to clear the air in this case, that is, to announce that an open, judicial inquiry will be conducted into this whole affair.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will respond in the absence of the Prime Minister, who is on his way to Regina where a very important conference starts tomorrow—

Mr. Axworthy: Is he taking VIA Rail?

Mr. Crosbie: —and in the absence of the Leader of the Opposition, who is not here today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: As the Hon. Member mentioned, the Liberal Opposition has been alleging for weeks, untruly, that there has been bias displayed in connection with the Hatfield case in favour of Premier Hatfield. Today Premier Hatfield alleges that bias has been displayed against him, which shows conclusively how we have trod the right line so that everyone is blaming us of being biased against them. What more proof could we have?

• (1420)

With respect to the call for an inquiry, there is no reason to call for an inquiry simply because the Opposition wants to dream up spurious allegations in connection with this matter. There is nothing to be investigated. I am satisfied that proper procedures have been in effect all along the way.

An internal investigation is under way by the RCMP with reference to any possible leak which may have occurred in that Force. Everything is being done to ensure that the system of justice remains untarnished, except for the wild accusations of the gentlemen opposite.

NEW BRUNSWICK PREMIER'S ALLEGATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in that case I would like to know whether the Prime Minister rejects the allegations made by Premier Hatfield, allegations that concern not only the Royal Canadian Mounted Police—where an inquiry is indeed being held, but an internal inquiry—but also those allegations that concern the Minister's own officials.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have no information that any officials from the Department of Justice did anything improper in this matter. There was one official of the Department of Justice who, unwisely, took a phone call from a Liberal MP. The official was sandbagged by that MP, while treating him in an honourable fashion. He gave him no information that that Liberal Member of Parliament did not already have, and then saw his name in the press.

That is the only unwise action of which I am aware from the Department of Justice. However, if any evidence is supplied by Premier Hatfield, any concrete facts that show that somebody in the Department of Justice, or acting for the Department of Justice, leaked information, believe me that the full weight of the arm of the Minister of Justice will descend on the offender.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: We will look forward to that.

DECISION NOT TO APPEAL VERDICT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister about the way the question of appeal in the Hatfield case was decided. He told us yesterday that there would be no appeal in the Hatfield case and that he was acting strictly on the advice of the prosecutor in New Brunswick, and of his officials.

Today we read the prosecutor saying that the appeal was still under active consideration as currently as yesterday—yesterday, after the Minister's statement. The Minister muddied the waters in this case by telling us that he did not have an independent mind and that he could not make the decision about appeal.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Is that a direct quote?

Mr. Kaplan: How does the Minister explain this contradiction? Did he mislead the House about the question of how the appeal decision was made?

An Hon. Member: Cover up.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the information I gave to the House yesterday was based on information that was given to me by my officials—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Now he is blaming the officials.

Mr. Crosbie: —who, from the beginning, were instructed by me that they were to proceed as they would in every case of any Canadian that might be involved, forgetting that it was a premier or prominent politician. There would be no political interference, and there hasn't been.

Based on information that they gave me yesterday, I advised the House of what had happened with respect to the appeal, and what happened is exactly what I said yesterday.

On the day that the trial concluded there was a discussion between Mr. David Hughes, Q.C., to whom I have never spoken in my life, whom I do not know, and with whom I have never had a word on the telephone—

An Hon. Member: Whom you appointed.

Mr. Crosbie: —who was appointed by the Deputy Minister of Justice because I told him to find a lawyer, to make sure he was good, and that he was someone independent of politics. He was appointed by my officials without my interference.

After the trial was over and the case was dismissed, officials in my Department were advised by Mr. Hughes against any appeal. They agreed with him. Two days later they gave me a memorandum saying "No thought has been given to an appeal." This is all fact. After a transcript of the evidence was received, they gave me the same advice.

I now have a telex in my hand—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: I know that I am taking a bit of time, but there are serious allegations that I misinformed the House. Permit me to read this telex from C. David Hughes, Q.C., to the Deputy Minister of Justice.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gauthier: Table it.

Mr. Crosbie: If the sheep will stop bleating.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1425)

Mr. Crosbie: The telex reads:

This is to clarify any possible misunderstanding relating to the question of an appeal in the case of Richard B. Hatfield. It has been and remains my view that no appeal is warranted in the circumstances. An opinion to this effect was conveyed to the Assistant Deputy Attorney General on January 29, 1985, the day the trial concluded. My opinion remains unaltered notwithstanding a review of the trial transcript, prepared at the request of the defence which was made available to me last week.

The signature is C. David Hughes. That should put the matter in its proper context.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, statements made this morning by the Prime Minister about the resignation of the former Minister of National Defence are almost beyond belief. I wish he were here, but in his absence I will put my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Mr. Axworthy: Whoever that may be.

Mr. Hopkins: The Prime Minister said he first learned about the allegations on January 22. Why did the Prime Minister not act until yesterday after a press report, and what on earth does he mean when he said this morning in a quote from the Canadian Press that other "security inquiries of an on-going nature had been undertaken at his request". With what did those other inquiries deal? Were there more than one going on at the same time?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada made it abundantly clear that immediately upon being advised of rumours on January 22 he caused a security investigation to be undertaken, which had the result of proving conclusively that there was at no time any breach of Canadian security.

With regard to the Member's second question, he should know, and if he does not know, his leader, the former Prime Minister of Canada, will tell him, that it is the normal practice of Prime Ministers when they are appointing Ministers to Cabinet, or are contemplating other sensitive considerations, to ask for security checks and security clearances. That is a normal part of the practice of Canada carried out by this Prime Minister as by others.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Acting Prime Minister today is not telling us that the security checks were being taken months after the Minister had been appointed.

INVESTIGATION INQUIRIES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, in order to determine the depth of the investigation which the Prime Minister undertook regarding the allegations that appeared in the press, will he state what Canadian investigative authorities were involved, whether any investigative agencies among our allies were involved or made contributions to that investigation, and how much time passed from the time the Prime Minister initiated the investigation until he, in fact, had the final report in his hand?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the investigations were carried out as all these investigations are, by the Canadian authorities established for those purposes. They were carried out by Canadian authorities as is the normal case.

The Prime Minister first became aware of rumours on January 22. Within minutes he caused a security investigation to commence. There was a preliminary report that indicated there was no security risk to the country. The Prime Minister, not satisfied with that, asked for more intense security reports. Those were carried on. A final report came into his possession at mid-day yesterday.

Mr. Axworthy: Coincidence, sheer coincidence.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

UNITED STATES' DEPLOYMENT PLANS—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. On January 10, Canada's Chief of Defence Staff, General Theriault, learned for the first time of American plans to deploy nuclear weapons on Canadian soil. Last month a senior U.S. official, through our embassy in Washington, advised us that there are no current plans to deploy nuclear weapons in Canada. We learned today there are current plans. I would ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he would take this opportunity, through this House, to advise the United States that, under no circumstances, will we accept the deployment of U.S. nuclear weapons in Canada.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have made it clear on several occasions in this House, and I am pleased to make it clear again, that there are no plans which would involve the stationing of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil, and that any contingency plans that might be developed in the event of a crisis or an emergency could take effect only with the concurrence of Canada. I have made that abundantly clear before. I am pleased to do it again, and I am pleased to repeat, as I have in the past, that insofar as this Government is concerned, if there were a request to station nuclear arms here, we would clearly reserve the right to refuse the stationing of nuclear arms on Canadian soil.

REQUEST THAT UNITED STATES BE INFORMED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure the Acting Prime Minister understands the point I am making. On January 21 the former Minister of National Defence said in the House, and I quote, "there are no such plans" to place nuclear weapons in Canada. We have clearly been lied to by the United States in terms of the plans. It was made abundantly clear to our officials last month in Washington that there were no plans. We learn today that there are current plans in the United States to deploy nuclear weapons in Canada. Would the Acting Prime Minister take this opportunity to make it abundantly clear, first, that we are dismayed that the United States would lie to us about this and, second, that under no circumstances would U.S. nuclear weapons be deployed in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not been lied to by the United States. I want to stay strictly within the rules of Parliament in what I am about to say. I would hope that no Member of the House of Commons would attempt to mislead Canadians into fear about the possibility of nuclear weapons being stationed on Canadian soil. There are no plans of that kind. Any plans which might develop in the event of a crisis would allow the Government of Canada to refuse the stationing of nuclear weapons on this soil. This Government would exercise that option to refuse that stationing if we determined that that was in the Canadian interest. It is a Canadian decision, not an American decision. At least so far as this Party and this Government are concerned, it is Canadians who decide Canadian policy, not someone else.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF NUCLEAR INSTALLATIONS IN CANADA AND CANADIAN-AMERICAN RELATIONS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is acting for the Prime Minister today in the House. I would like to point out, as my colleague did earlier, that considering the problems being discussed in the House today, it is rather surprising and indeed extraordinary that the Prime Minister was not in the House Monday, is not in the House today and that he is not . . . I am sorry—

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: Maybe John Turner isn't your Leader.

Mr. Siddon: Who is your Leader over there?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Maybe Members now know why it is, in Beauchesne, regarded as an unparliamentary matter to refer to the presence or absence of any particular Member. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: The fact remains that there are a number of questions that should be answered at this time, either by the Prime Minister or even the Deputy Prime Minister, neither of whom are here. I therefore wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs on a subject other than the one I would have liked to raise, and that because of the absence of the Prime Minister.

I therefore wish to ask the Minister, in connection with the question raised by the Member for the New Democratic Party a few minutes ago, why, considering the supposedly good relations we have today with the Americans, we are seeing daily articles in the American press according to which the U.S. Defense Department and the U.S. Department of the Secretary of State are making plans regarding the installation of nuclear facilities in Canada, and why even today, before this House, the Minister maintains there is no plan although all U.S. journalists are aware of them. When is the Secretary of State for External Affairs going to find out what is going on in our international relations with the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the former Minister and former Liberal leadership candidate almost asked me why I am not informed on federal-provincial relations, and I can inform him that it is because we respect federal-provincial relations, and today, the Prime Minister of Canada is meeting with the provincial Premiers to fulfil our obligations as federalists.

Regarding the question he has just raised again in the House, I can inform the Hon. Member that he would be better off keeping up with Canadian developments by reading the Montreal Gazette instead of the New York Times, because the article published in the New York Times was identical to an article that appeared in the Montreal Gazette a month ago.

INQUIRY RESPECTING WHEN AMERICAN GOVERNMENT WILL BE INFORMED OF CANADIAN POSITION ON "STAR WARS"

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Federal-provincial relations have nothing to do with it. The meeting starts tomorrow. There are Government planes that can get you there fast, as the Conservatives well know.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to ask a question.

[Traduction]

Mr. Chrétien: I did not mention federal-provincial relations. The Minister did.

I would like to know when the Minister is going to inform the U.S. Government that only a few months ago, this House unanimously declared its opposition to "Star Wars" and that it has clearly said many times that we do not want any nuclear arms in Canada. The Americans better get our message pretty soon!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Hon. Member is much fiercer in the Opposition than he was as a Member of Cabinet.

For the information of the Hon. Member, the first meeting of the Prime Minister of Canada and the provincial Premiers will be held this afternoon in Regina, and that is why the Prime Minister is there.

As far as the second part of his question is concerned, I can inform the Hon. Member that I have indicated previously here in the House—and the opposition parties were able to respond—the Government of Canada's opposition to the so-called Star Wars project.

RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Acting Prime Minister. As I understand the Government's position with regard to the former Minister of National Defence, it is that he did nothing illegal and that whatever actions he undertook did not create a national security problem. Was it, then, a matter of his judgment with regard to the exercise of his responsibility that requested or demanded of the Prime Minister that he ask for his resignation?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, just so that the facts might be absolutely clear, the resignation of the former Minister of National Defence was offered by that Member of Parliament. If the Hon. Member will read the eloquent and honourable statement made in the House yesterday by my colleague, the former Minister of National Defence, he will know that the former Minister offered his resignation because he believed that public allegations impaired his ability to carry out his sensitive responsibilities in the extremely sensitive and important portfolio of Minister of National Defence, and because he believed those allegations impeded his freedom to pursue an action in the courts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO PMO EMPLOYEES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Acting Prime Minister realizes that everyone feels a great degree of sorrow over what happened.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is true.

Mr. Deans: It is true. It is true. But, nevertheless, it is necessary to understand the circumstances clearly. I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether in fact the statements attributed to employees in the Prime Minister's Office are incorrect, inasmuch as they indicated that the Prime Minister asked for the resignation of the Minister of National Defence.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will understand, that is a matter he will have to raise with the Prime Minister. It is my understanding that the resignation was offered by the Minister of National Defence and accepted by the Prime Minister.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—SOLICITOR GENERAL'S MEETING WITH PREMIER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister on another matter somewhat related, but different. Given that we have had a significant amount of exchange in the House of Commons over the meeting between the Solicitor General and a person—it is a question of judgment—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I have a feeling that this question is not at all supplementary. Does the Member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am asking about a matter of judgment, the judgment of Cabinet Ministers. Given that there has been a significant amount of exchange over the appropriateness of the meeting that took place between the present Solicitor General and an individual who was under investigation by the RCMP at the time of the meeting, and the purpose of the meeting was to discuss the investigation, does the Acting Prime Minister feel that the Government ought to set out clearly what its policy is with regard to meetings of that type being held, and with whom those meeting can be held in the future?

Mr. Speaker: With respect, the supplementary question is a long way away from the original purpose of supplementaries. May I use this occasion to say that I do not regard that question as a supplementary. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CANADA—UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Acting Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Acting Minister of National Defence, because the question involves all of those capacities. He just said that the Defence Minister resigned because he could not carry out his duties.

We now know that during the time when we were going through very delicate negotiations with the United States concerning the question of the deployment of U.S. nuclear weapons in Canada that it was the Defence Minister who was conducting those negotiations. Considering that much of the information given to the House at that time was not correct and that there are active contingency plans, would it not be the proper course of action for the Government to go back with the United States and undertake new negotiations concerning what are the conditions, if any, under which nuclear weapons would be used, and that we should follow Lord Carrington's advice and have a major ministerial meeting of NATO to determine what are the procedures and how we get involved in the planning of those contingency plans, not in their use during an emergency?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will try, and I am sure you will encourage me not to take the whole Question Period trying to unscramble and answer the several questions involved. Just quickly, the answer that I gave with regard to the former Minister of National Defence was that he felt that the public allegations impeded his ability. It was his view which led to his decision. Second, there are no active plans of the kind described by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry. Third, Lord Carrington suggested no such thing.

REQUEST FOR NEW DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is wrong. The fact is there are active contingency plans and they so state in today's New York Times—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I cannot help it if The New York Times has better information than the Government of Canada about what is going on in our country.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Member have a question?

Mr. Axworthy: I would again ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the Government is prepared to undertake new discussions and negotiations with the United States to determine under what circumstances they have plans to deploy nuclear weapons. Also, are there plans to use Canadian air force bases for SAC bombers during a time of emergency?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice approves of the Hon. Member for Fort Garry.

Mr. Chrétien: Right on.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is not surprising.

The position, as I have stated several times in this House of Commons, is that there is, as there was when the Hon. Member was a member of the Government of Canada, a protection for Canada against the stationing of nuclear arms, against the application of any contingency plans, in that we have the right to refuse those arms. I do not know what the Government of which he was a member would have done, presented with that situation, but I know that if this Government is presented with that situation, we reserve the right to say no to nuclear arms on Canadian soil. That is as clear as can be.

I have raised on earlier occasions, as has Lord Carrington, the value of finding some mechanism by which there can be a discussion of the parameters within which the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States might better define the circumstances of crisis or of emergency. We are actively pursuing those discussions.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM THE FRIENDLY GIANT BE REINSTATED

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a slightly more friendly question to address to the Minister of Communications. I recently spoke in this House on the cancellation of a truly wholesome, non-violent, indigenous Canadian children's program. Last Thursday the President of the CBC, in a good speech to the Canadian Club in Winnipeg, said "CBC English television is not Canadian enough". Why is the truly Canadian children's program The Friendly Giant being phased out, and will it be reinstated?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question, and I should be happy to raise the matter with the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, as soon as possible.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—CONDUCT OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General. With reference to the investigation and subsequent charging of the Premier of New Brunswick, the Attorney General indicated that he gave specific instructions that this matter was to be treated as if this were an ordinary citizen. He said: "Forget it is a Premier in your treatment of this matter." Does the Attorney General believe that that standard which he applied in his Ministry should be adopted and accepted by other Ministers, including the Solicitor General?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that everybody in this House would adopt the same course of conduct as I do.

CONDUCT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Solicitor General who has said he does not accept that standard. In view of the fact that hundreds of thousands of Canadians come under investigation each year by the RCMP for a variety of possible charges, does the Solicitor General intend to meet in the future with individuals who come under investigation by the RCMP, and under what circumstances does he intend to have such meetings?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can say to the Hon. Member that that question is in some respects manifestly absurd. I could not possibly meet with all the people to whom the Hon. Member refers. I would have to consider every matter very carefully, as I did the one to which he refers.

RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and Acting Prime Minister. I understood him to tell the House that the Minister of National Defence did not resign because of a breach of security. If that is the case, can he tell the House why the Minister of National Defence did not announce his resignation immediately after the Prime Minister said he learned of the matter three weeks ago and shortly after he informed the Prime Minister about his side of the story?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): First, Mr. Speaker, I presume that is a question that could only be answered by the former Minister of National Defence. I presume from reading the statement that was made by the Minister of National Defence yesterday that he believed that his ability to function in the very sensitive position of Minister of that portfolio was impeded by the public allegations, and that he also thought that his freedom to pursue an action in the courts was impeded by those public allegations.

NEWSPAPER REPORT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, can I take it from what the Acting Prime Minister said that the Minister of National Defence would never have resigned and he would still be a Minister if this matter had not been reported in The Citizen? What an admission.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what I am pleased to confirm is that there was no breach of security involved in the activities of the former Minister of National Defence. I think it is a reasonable interpretation that he felt that his ability to carry out his very sensitive responsibilities, and his ability to pursue actions in law as a result of that publication, were limited by the allegations made and publicized, not only in that newspaper but also picked up and caused to become a matter of current and constant debate in the House of Commons.

POSSIBLE CONDUCT OF CITY POLICE CHIEF

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General has just said that while he could not possibly meet with every person who was under investigation by the RCMP in the course of a year, that he would, however, consider the possibility of meeting with any individual very carefully. Therefore, he is saying that it is appropriate to meet with an individual who is under investigation, in certain circumstances.

My question is this. Would it be appropriate for the chief of police of a Canadian city to meet with a prominent citizen, such as the mayor of that city, if the mayor is under investigation for a criminal offence and wants to discuss the alleged offence?

Some Hon. Members: That's a hypothetical question.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member that a question like that, in my respectful opinion, is hypothetical, and, unlike the Department of National Revenue, I do not give advance rulings.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY DIRECTED TO ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Attorney General, who is the senior law officer for the Crown, and who is responsible for giving guidance with respect to the integrity of the justice system.

Suppose the mayor of a Canadian city, who was under investigation by police for a marijuana offence—

Some Hon. Members: Suppose!

Mr. Cassidy: —sought to meet with the Chief of police in that particular city to discuss—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I allowed the first question because I presumed that it might be all right. However, there is a very clear tradition in the House that hypothetical questions are not put.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—LAYING OF CHARGE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Hon. Member for Snakeville.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am having a great deal of trouble hearing Members who are asking questions. May I please be allowed to hear the question?

An Hon. Member: It's Wednesday.

Mr. Speaker: I know it is Wednesday. It is perfectly obvious that it is Wednesday. But, in fairness to the Hon. Member, I should be allowed, if that is all right, to hear his question.

Mr. Nunziata: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. What is at stake in the Richard Hatfield case is the integrity of our criminal justice system. What has happened over the last number of days tears at the very fabric of our criminal justice system.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: We in the Liberal Party want to ensure that in this particular case justice was served.

Last Thursday, on February 7, the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I did ask the House to allow me to hear the Member's question. Could the Member now ask it, so I can hear it?

Mr. Nunziata: On February 7 the Minister stated in the House:

> The RCMP was not instructed by the Department of Justice to do anything.

I have an affidavit which was sworn by Mr. Richard Waller, who is an inspector with the RCMP. In the affidavit, which was sworn on December 10, he stated:

> —that at a meeting held at the Justice Building in the City of Ottawa, Province of Ontario on the 24th day of October 1984, I was instructed to lay a charge against Richard B. Hatfield under Section 3(2) of the Narcotic Control Act;

I would like to ask the Minister of Justice who is being honest—He or Inspector Waller.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the integrity of the Canadian justice system is under attack today because of the hon. gentleman opposite and his spurious allegations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: As I said before, the RCMP, or any prosecuting people who are within federal jurisdiction, are entitled to ask Department of Justice legal officers for advice and guidance; which they did. When Inspector Waller says that he was instructed to lay a charge, presumably Department of Justice officials said yes, that a charge should be laid and that all the legal elements were there for a charge to be laid. So, Inspector Waller said that he was instructed.

But Commissioner Simmonds made it plain by his statements in the press today that the independence of the RCMP is so well established that the case would have continued even if the Solicitor General had tried to call them off; which he did not. The Hon. Member does not understand the relationship between the RCMP and the law officers of the Crown. We do not give the RCMP instructions, it asks for advice. No one instructed. Yes, they were advised that charges should be laid, in the legal opinion of the Department of Justice. So, justice was done. So, Premier Hatfield was not favoured. It is the direct opposite of all the nonsense the Hon. Member has been getting on with for the last two weeks.

WORDING OF CHARGE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, Inspector Waller swore under oath that not only was he instructed to lay a charge but, further, that the wording of the charge was prepared by lawyers in the Department of Justice. Why will the Minister of Justice not come clean with the House of Commons and tell the House the truth? Is he or is he not being dishonest with Canadians and the House of Commons?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I cannot get any more indignant than I have already. I am beyond indignation. Naturally, lawyers of the Department of Justice formulate charges. They are there to give independent legal advice when the police ask for it. It does not matter whether it concerns premiers, potentates, or whomever it is, as long as I am here they are going to lay the charges, and I will see that the charges are properly laid.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Caucuses today must have been absolutely fascinating. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville.

SOLICITOR GENERAL'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to hear.

I also would like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General said in the House a few minutes ago that under certain circumstances it would be appropriate for him to meet with people who are under investigation by the RCMP. My specific question to the Solicitor General is: Under what circumstances does he intend to meet with people who are under investigation by the RCMP?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can only say to the Hon. Member opposite that he appears, like a lot of other Members, to have absolutely no real understanding of what the role of the Solicitor General is. I will make my point by saying this. The former Solicitor General, the Hon. Member for York Centre, said on Global-TV the Solicitor General can say, "take that case—see if you can get the goods on this person, that can give directions like that"—he suggested that was the kind of Solicitor General who met with Premier Hatfield. I do not know what his idea is of what a Solicitor General does, but I can tell you that this Solicitor General does not have that perception.

MEETING WITH PREMIER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Solicitor General. Does he accept the position of the Minister of Justice, namely, that no special treatment should be accorded to a Premier? If he accepts that position, then what led him to have a meeting with Premier Hatfield?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I accept the position of my hon. colleague, the Minister of Justice. As I said earlier, I give every consideration to whatever situation arises in exercising my discretion as to what I should or should not do.

RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In listening to his answers, he told us that on January 22 the Prime Minister became aware of incidents which happened, according to the newspaper report, on November 29. Notwithstanding that delay, within minutes, if I may quote him, he "flew into action", to ask for an investigation of these events.

• (1500)

Would the Minister tell the House whether there are any other incidents of a security nature of which he is aware, or which may have been brought to his attention, either before or since he assumed his role as Acting Minister of National Defence, which might have caused the Prime Minister to act in such a fashion, other than incidents reported in the Ottawa Citizen yesterday?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member on his fishing expedition. The answer is a categoric no.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, February 12, 1985 meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

EXTERNAL AID

INTERIM REPORT ON AFRICAN FAMINE RELIEF

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise to give a brief interim report on the Canadian response to the crisis of famine in Africa. Since November, nearly 500,000 individual Canadians have personally contributed money to African famine relief. The average individual donation has been $65 per person which, Sir, is double the amount normally contributed to non-governmental organizations. We are witnessing an unprecedented humanitarian response which continues in intensity and is made more remarkable by the difficult economic conditions in our own country.

Acting in that spirit, with unanimous support of Parliament I announced a special $50 million fund for Africa in November. The Government committed part of that fund to match the money donated by Canadians. Originally, it was projected that the matching portion of the fund would be limited to between $15 million and $20 million. As a result of the overwhelming public response, I am announcing today the Government's decision to increase the limit on matching by providing an additional contribution to the fund for Africa of $15 million.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The system of matching was an important catalyst in mobilizing contributions by Canadian citizens and encouraging the co-operation of non-governmental organizations, and I am confident that a high level of contributions will continue, even though a firm limit has been now set on the matching portion of the fund for Africa.

The Hon. David MacDonald was appointed the Special Co-ordinator for the African Crisis. He will complete his original mandate on March 31 and is preparing a detailed report. That will be submitted in March to the Government and then to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. I have expressed to the Chairman of that Committee my hope that Mr. MacDonald's report could be considered as a high priority so the Government can have the recommendations of both the Committee and Mr. MacDonald when we consider any further special steps Canada might take in response to the crisis in Africa, including measures to encourage the continuing direct involvement of individual Canadians.

I want to advise the House of some of the initiatives Canada has taken so far.

[Translation]

Food products valued at $6.5 million have been shipped to Ethiopa through the World Food Program.

In the next few weeks, additional food shipments worth $11 million will be sent to the three Sahel countries—Mali, Niger and Chad.

Additional grants of $6 million have been given to the Canadian Food Grains Bank to finance the shipment of 30,000 tonnes of food to the region of the Horn of Africa—including Ethiopia—and Sahel.

[English]

A grant of $3 million for UNICEF is targeted specifically at health care for mothers and children and the development of long-term nutritional and sanitary service measures.

I want to stress that this is in addition to CIDA's regular Africa program which this year totals almost $300 million. Most of that money is directed to CIDA's programs that have longer-term objectives, aiming to assist African countries to become self-sustaining, particularly in agriculture. This is in keeping with the Canadian people's expectation that their generous contributions to African relief will be part of a lasting solution to these terrible recurrent tragedies that have been so wasteful of human life.

[Translation]

Keeping that objective in mind, I am pleased to announce that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has advised the president of the World Bank that, over the next four years, Canada will contribute $100 million to the World Bank's special voluntary contribution mechanism for sub-Saharan Africa. This new World Bank initiative will complement its regular program in Africa and is designed to help African countries make the necessary political and institutional reforms to boost their own production. To date, donor countries, including Canada, are committed to give about $1 billion in direct and additional contributions.

[English]

The heartening response by Canadians has been a lesson about sacrifice and generosity to all of us. This Parliament can be proud of its quick response to unparalleled suffering, but we should be more proud of and gratified with the response of thousands of individuals and groups across this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The suffering in Africa is far from over, and I look forward to continuing to work with other Hon. Members of this House in developing means to express our continuing concern and commitment to bring relief to that devastated region.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Minister for his speech.

When we discussed this problem in similar circumstances in the fall, I said that this was a situation that did not lend itself to political controversy, and that we would have to work together with the government authorities. I am very proud to see that Canadians have responded so generously to the appeal for a contribution from the private sector, and that their response was so overwhelming. I would like to join the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in congratulating Canadians on their generosity and their sense of duty. I am, however, a little disappointed that the Government was unable to meet the commitment made at the time to match contributions made by the private sector. I understand the problem, but it is still disappointing that the Government failed to keep its promise.

[English]

I would like to point out as well that we all agree that it is a very important situation, and I am proud that we work together this way in the House of Commons. I am pleased to see that the Minister has many times recognized that the previous administration was the best of all of the nations in the world in recognizing the danger in Ethiopia, and in relation to the GNP we were the largest contributor of funds and, in real terms, the second largest. I think we should all be proud of that.

On the other hand, despite the unanimity and agreement I am showing today, I would not like the public to be under the wrong impression. It is very nice to have money at this time, Mr. Speaker, but we have to keep in mind that CIDA's budget was cut by hundreds of millions of dollars by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) when he made his economic statement. To reinstate some of that money looks pretty good at this time, but we should not lose sight of the fact there were some cuts brought about at that time. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) will be able to persuade his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to restore the level of commitment we had before.

The goal of Canadians in foreign aid is to achieve as early as possible the 0.7 per cent of GNP Aid level. I think the Minister, in his policies, has postponed that goal and I do not know if we will ever reach it if we keep postponing it. I hope he will be as successful with the Minister of Finance as his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), who managed to keep universality, and as successful as the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), who has managed to bring back a limited program for student employment. Then it would not just be foreign aid which is cut by the Minister of Finance.

The Minister has travelled the world and so have I. Despite the problems we are having in Canada, we realize that we do not have problems here really. Sometimes we tend to exaggerate a bit the situation here, and that is normal in political debate; but we have to tell Canadians that we are a very fortunate nation and that foreign aid is not only a good thing to do, it is an obligation for fortunate nations like Canada. Canadians have responded with their money and I think the Minister should keep on fighting to restore the aid level which existed before. He will have in that endeavour the support of this critic who sometimes finds he is not criticizing enough. I receive hell from the Whip at times that I am not tough enough with you. It is a problem but I do not want to be political on that. I think this amount of money should be restored and that we have to match the generosity of Canadians. It is the desire of Canadians that we have to carry on our policies there.

I would like to go back to that point because I did not criticize the Minister last week when he named Roy McMurtry as High Commissioner to London. There is one man who was in this House for years talking about hunger in the world and food development around the world. I refer to the former Minister of Agriculture who I appointed to the FAO because he was the best and most knowledgeable person for the job. That was confirmed by documents tabled not long ago. It was not an idea of mine to find a cozy spot for my friend, Gene Whelan; it was because there is a need at the FAO for a strong hand.

Many of the problems that exist today exist because the FAO is not being managed well enough. A long time ago an official of the Department of External Affairs said we need somebody there who can have clout. I am telling you that you can change your mind and I will not blame you, but if you were to change your mind and put back Gene Whelan in the FAO, I think all Members of the House would recognize that there is a strong man there. He will go to these international bureaucrats who overlooked the Ethiopian situation when he was the Minister of Agriculture of the day and was telling them that Ethiopia was the area of crisis. If Gene Whelan were to go there with his green hat, these guys would listen and the best interests of Canada and the best interests of food management in the world will be well served. I advise the Minister to reconsider his decision on that appointment.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the statement by the Right Hon. Minister. First of all, we welcome the increase in the matching funds being made available. I think some clarifications are needed about the announcement and I want to ask a few questions.

Certainly Canadians have responded generously and I wonder why some arbitrary ceiling would be put on this generosity. It seems to me the Minister might consider that Canadians vote with their pocket-books. In so far as they are prepared to give, the Government ought to respond to that by removing this arbitrary ceiling.

I would like to ask very specifically about the $15 million. Is this a new $15 million which is being added, or is it being recycled from somewhere else? The previous speaker from the Liberal Party noted there were cut-backs in CIDA funding and IDRC funding. Is the Minister prepared to have those cuts restored? Some of those moneys taken out of one pocket and put into another pocket for emergency funding were otherwise destined to be spent in Africa on the very problem they have been diverted to. So it is not entirely new money, and if we want to talk about the generous response we are able to provide, we should be talking about new money, not just recycled money.

I would like to correct the impression given by the previous speaker that Canada has been the greatest per capita contributor. This is simply not the case. A number of western European countries have higher per capita donations, such countries as Holland, Norway and Sweden. I note with a certain amount of shame that Ethiopia was excluded from external aid by the previous Liberal Government for a number of years. This generosity is now making up for some neglect over a number of years.

Finally, I would like to ask the Minister to respond to the very precise list of needs compiled by Mr. Jansson, the UN co-ordinator for Ethiopia. Specifically, he asked for 1.3 million metric tonnes of food for this year. I suggest that a reasonable response for Canada would be in the order of 200,000 metric tonnes of grain. This is the area we have been asked to contribute to. There are other items on the list which Mr. Jansson has forwarded, but they can be provided by other countries. As a grain-growing country, this is certainly the contribution we ought to be making. I note that India last year provided 100,000 metric tonnes of grain, so when I suggest a figure of 200,000 tonnes it is not an unbelieveable figure. If a poor country which has experienced famine itself can be generous to the tune of 100,000 tonnes, why can we not afford 200,000? I would like to see a response in very precise terms on that, as well as on the question of restoring the funding which has been redirected to CIDA and IDRC.

Mr. Speaker: Questions?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity as well to comment on the interim report by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). I want to welcome, as other Members have, this announcement today of an additional $15 million to be used to provide relief to famine victims in Ethiopia. I assume that applies to famine victims in the sub-Sahel of Africa generally. I think the Minister, in appointing Mr. David MacDonald as his Canadian African famine co-ordinator, wisely put emphasis on the several dozen nations of Africa which are severely affected, not just on Ethiopia.

Some time ago in this House questions were raised as a result of a CBC documentary about the way in which Canadian aid or aid generally was being used in Ethiopia. I am sure the Minister noted it was not a persistent series of—

Mr. Dick: Question.

Mr. Tobin: I am coming to the question, Mr. Speaker. I thought, given the nature of the matter—I guess I was sadly mistaken—that this House was able to—

Mr. Speaker: With due respect, I will take no time out of this to explain the situation. I have several Members who wish to put questions. The purpose of this period is for questioning the Minister. The Hon. Member takes the subject seriously and I know he does. He may have a statement he wishes to make at the appropriate time tomorrow. That is his privilege. I have a number of Members waiting to ask questions so I presume he would like to come to his.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, Canada cut $180 million out of our CIDA program in the fiscal year 1985-86. The concern has been expressed by many of those involved in the aid business that nations of the western world make a serious mistake in simply channelling long-term development funds into short-term emergency assistance. In order to prevent further crises down the road in Ethiopia and many other nations, will the Minister undertake a restoration of the long-term aid dollars necessary to prevent the type of African famine we have seen to date? Will he undertake to make that representation to his Cabinet?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I will begin by thanking the Hon. Member for his consistent support for the efforts of Canada in this regard. He was one of the Members of Parliament who travelled with Mr. MacDonald to Africa. If I may say so, he made a signal and positive contribution to the activities of that commission.

I could enter into an argument with the Member and the Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) over who cut what from CIDA, because there were cuts in the summer of 1984 when the Member for Saint-Maurice was the Minister. There were also some changes in the CIDA budget announced in the statement by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I think that is really partisanship and is not appropriate to the approach we have taken to this question.

I believe, as he does, that we face two urgent requirements. One is to do what we can to help the starving. The other, which in the long run is far more important, is to put money and, perhaps more importantly than that, Canadian talent into helping several countries of Africa put their agriculture and economies on a sustaining basis. CIDA will be doing that. I hope that during the discussions when Mr. MacDonald appears before the standing committee there will be an opportunity to discuss concrete ways in which Canada can do that. I met yesterday with Mr. Brad Morse, the director of the United Nations special projects regarding Africa, to discuss how we can co-operate with the United Nations to do that.

I will continue my efforts to find and direct as much money as we can in our current economic circumstances to those purposes. I welcome the continuing support of the Hon. Member and his colleagues.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask five short questions of the Minister concerning his report. Would the Minister confirm that all the warehouse space in Ethiopia is being bought up by the Government and that that is creating problems in terms of slowing distribution and the possibility of diverting? Would the Minister confirm that the Government is not providing land support, that once food is dropped at the port there is no money to move it to distribution staging areas? As one example, it cost $5,000 to move 20 tonnes of food from port to distribution areas. There are no trucks and no infrastructure.

My third question is with regard to a Canadian organized airlift in which the East Germans, the Libyans and Interflug had to supply the aircraft. There is no Canadian aircraft there even though we have enormous expertise in this country. The food was moved from port to staging area a month ago and is still sitting in the staging area because there is no distribution.

Fourth, Canada's aid was channelled through a tripartite agreement between the United Nations High Commission on Refugees, the Relief and Rehabilitation Commission of Ethiopia and Canada, which was signed in Geneva many months ago. The United Nations Commission in Ethiopia has failed to deliver on the infrastructure to help Canadian organizations communicate and deliver their material.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I will get to the Hon. Member's fifth question if we have time. There are several Members who wish to ask questions. The Hon. Minister may wish to respond to the first four.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that I cannot answer in detail because I do not have the information at hand. It is precisely because I do not have that detailed information that I have made such a point of suggesting that Mr. MacDonald's report go to committee and that there be detailed discussion there.

I can confirm generally, as I have throughout, that the Government and authorities of Ethiopia have given us and the non-governmental organizations on the ground their undertaking to expedite delivery of aid to the starving as much as possible. Obviously, that will not happen perfectly. If there is something other than natural imperfection, in other words, if there is government policy in Ethiopia at issue, we would want to use such influence as we have to ensure that the Government of Ethiopia is doing what it can to deliver aid to those in need.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I asked a number of questions which have not been responded to by the Minister. I wonder if I could have answers to them. They are not technical questions.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I have made note of at least two of the questions. With regard to new funds, these are not new funds; some of the funds are transferred. I would like to be able to give the Member a precise breakdown of how much of the $15 million is new to our envelope but I cannot. I can say that in the neighbourhood of $6 million to $7 million, which is slightly less than half, is new to our envelope. The Hon. Member was concerned that some of the transfers may have been from other funds available to Africa. That is not the case. They have come from other aspects of the External Affairs envelope.

The Hon. Member suggested that there should be no limit on matching. In a perfect world I would agree that there should be no limit on matching. The Government is operating under very serious economic restraints. It is our judgment, which I believe is broadly concurred in by the non-governmental organizations, that the period of matching grants as a catalyst may well be past. We may well be in a situation in which Canadians are prepared to contribute without the catalyst of matching grants. That will mean that such money as the Government of Canada has available for these purposes will be available to be directed to other purposes, including longer range development.

With regard to the list of proposals by Mr. Jansson, I request that the Hon. Member direct that question to Mr. MacDonald when he appears before the standing committee. I am afraid I do not have the answer to that at hand.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, the questions which I would like to ask arise from the conference which the Minister was deeply involved in in January with respect to longer term development prospects for Africa after the crisis in Ethiopia has been resolved. I would like to raise two particular points that were important in the discussions at that conference.

The first has to do with the policy which the Canadian Government has followed. It has not considered certain African countries to be targets for concentrated aid. This was sometimes for political reasons, as was the case with Ethiopia during the 1978 to 1983 period. The country which was particularly stressed at that conference was Mozambique, which itself is facing—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Member have a question, please?

Mr. Langdon: Yes. In fact, the question—

Mr. Speaker: It is just like Question Period. Is there a question?

Mr. Langdon: Is the Government now able to announce that Mozambique specifically will be a possible recipient? Is the Government also prepared to announce that it is now going to move on another recommendation from that conference that, for an experimental period at least, we consider untying CIDA funds with respect to rural development projects within Africa? That tying has been a major impediment in the underlying building of infrastructure to try to help avoid these crises in the future.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I think it is worth drawing to the attention of the House that all of the Members who have asked questions today have been involved in one way or another very directly in the program of response to Ethiopia. Three of them have been in Africa as part of the Government's program. The Hon. Member who just put a question was a very active member of a very productive seminar at the beginning of the year. I am most interested in maintaining that multipartisan approach to this issue. It seems to me that one of the best instruments to do that is the standing committee.

I will not pretend that the only reason I am not in a position to answer the two questions put by the Hon. Member is because I want them to be considered by the standing committee. We have simply not been able to address some of the those questions in the department yet. I say absolutely sincerely that I look for guidance from the standing committee, once Mr. MacDonald's report is before it, as to what we should be doing.

There have been seminars which have been helpful. There have been visits which have been helpful. I think the lesson we have learned is that part of the reason for the unprecedented interest of Canadians in the response to this crisis is that it has not been affected by partisanship. I want to maintain that momentum and I think discussion of questions of the kind raised by the Hon. Member at the standing committee and then Government action on those recommendations is the best way to proceed.

Mr. Speaker: Last question, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie).

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). There are repeated news reports that the Marxist-Leninist Government that governs Ethiopia is armed to the teeth. Is the Marxist-Leninist Government buying these weapons or are they being provided free? What is the purpose of a country like Ethiopia being armed to the teeth?

If the Minister does not have all of the information, could the committee provide some information about that? I think the Canadian people would like to be informed about why that Marxist-Leninist Government in Ethiopia is so armed.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, there are arms in Ethiopia. There is a civil war in Ethiopia. That is part of the problem we are facing. I presume that some of the arms are purchased and that some come by other means.

If I may tell the House, my daughter was among the thousands of Canadians who agreed to the contribution of the family allowance cheque to which she has a claim to the funds of Ethiopia. She spent an evening with a great aunt of hers and came home the other day, accusing me that her money for Ethiopia had been sent to the market, by which the meant the Byward Market. She was very concerned about that. It turned out that she or her great aunt were confused between the market and the Marxist. I assured her that whatever difficulties may arise—I can offer this assurance to Canadians—the great majority of the contributions we are making are getting through to people in need in Ethiopia.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have a couple of brief questions for the Minister. I wonder if I may obtain the unanimous support of the House to put the questions to the Minister, because they are very pertinent.

Mr. Speaker: I fully respect that they are pertinent questions, but I am sorry, there are traditions about the length of the question period after a Minister's statement. The reason I rose earlier was to suggest to Members that their questions be shorter in order to accommodate more Members. In my judgment, I am afraid that the appropriate time has expired.

Mr. Foster: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: In my judgment, the appropriate time has expired.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would you clarify for me, as a Member, that another Member in the House cannot rise and ask for the unanimous consent of Members to do something?

Mr. Speaker: The Standing Orders are absolutely clear about when the question period after a Minister's statement ends. It ends when the Speaker deems that it ends.

Mr. Foster: I was asking for consent to put a question to the Minister.

Mr. Speaker: The Standing Orders say that the question period ends when the Speaker says that it ends. There is no point of order appeal from that decision.

Mr. Foster: We are really discriminated against.

Mr. Speaker: The Member says that I am discriminating. I recognized no one but Opposition questioners until the end, when I recognized the one Government Member. On two separate occasions I appealed to members of both Opposition Parties to be short so that more Members could ask questions.

With due respect to the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), I find the suggestion, sotto voce or not sotto voce, that I am discriminating is unfair. I must limit the time according to my judgment because the tradition has been very clearly—the Member has been here long enough to know it—that the collective period of time does not generally exceed the collective total amount of time taken for the statement, unless there is a very good reason. In fact, we have exceeded that time today because I knew Members wished to put questions. I went beyond the normal time, but at some point I must end it in order to get to the day's business. I have exercised that judgment from which there is no appeal.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, without disrespect to the Speaker, for future guidance—

Mr. Speaker: What is the point of order?

Mr. Skelly: The point of order is that in guiding the House—

Mr. Speaker: What is the point of order, please? I think I have been utterly clear on this matter.

Mr. Skelly: The point of order is that in a matter—

Mr. Speaker: What is the point of order?

Mr. Skelly: I will come to my point of order, Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me. I am asking that—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) on a point of order.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whether, in future cases concerning matters of high interest and serious non-partisan concern in the House, it is possible that the previous traditions would not be rigidly held so that there would be some flexibility on all parts, recognizing the pressing concern. I simply ask if that is a possibility.

Mr. Speaker: I accept that the Hon. Member's concern is serious. That is why I indicated that I went beyond what is normal in the House in this case. I granted more time and more questions than usual. That is precisely why I asked the Hon. Member to restrict himself from five to four in order to allow others to speak in the limited time that is available.

If there was enough time I would have come back to the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River so he could put more questions. However, given the number of people who wished to raise questions, I exercised my judgment in a way that I thought was appropriate. I thought the subject was important and I let the questions continue for longer than normal. I thought that was appropriate in the circumstances. Petitions.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege just to clarify the points made by the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: We are on petitions. The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) raised a question of privilege. I think he should have the floor before me.

[English]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not intervene very often with questions of privilege. I rise because of a statement that I want to be clarified. If I understood you correctly, you said that even with unanimous consent of the House you would not allow more questions. That affects my privilege because it is the House that can decide unanimously what to do.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the Speaker is required by the Standing Orders to make a judgment at some point as to when the appropriate question period is over. That is not appealable. There is no such thing as an appeal on that matter in the House.

The Member is attempting to resort to unanimous consent apparently to change the decision of the Speaker. It cannot be done. There is no provision to allow it. I must make a judgment at some point and that is what the Standing Order obligates me to do. With due respect, that is the end of it. The Hon. Member for Shefford.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CHEQUES

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their ancient and unchallenged right to present a common grievance, with the assurance that your honourable House will provide a remedy.

They humbly sheweth that:

The inordinate amount of time taken by payment centre officials to forward unemployment insurance cheques is unacceptable; and that the labour dispute between the Unemployment Insurance Commission and payment centre officials do not concern recipients who do not have the means or are not in a position to wait for their benefits for months on end.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly call upon Parliament to urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to intervene in this case so as to set things straight as soon as possible.

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PENITENTIARY

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition on behalf of approximately 5,000 citizens of my riding in central Newfoundland calling on the Government to establish immediately a minimum-medium security penitentiary in the Town of Windsor.

Whereas there is no such penitentiary in Newfoundland, and never has been, this petition calls on the Government now to keep the commitment of the former administration and establish that penitentiary in Windsor, Newfoundland.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 88, 93, 155 and 213.

[Text]

PARLIAMENT HILL PEACE CAMP

Question No. 88—Mr. Blenkarn:

Is the Minister of Public Works contemplating passing regulations with respect to those who would like to set up camps on Parliament Hill to protest government activity?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): All regulations concerning the use of all government-owned property in Canada are now under review.

PROTEST CAMPS ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Question No. 93—Mr. Blenkarn:

Will a fee be charged to those setting up protest camps on Parliament Hill and, if so, will the Government provide a schedule of these fees?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): The charging of fees to those setting up protest camps on Parliament Hill is not being considered at the present time.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY PROGRAMS—CUTS IN PROJECTS

Question No. 155—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the Department of Fisheries and Oceans cut any projects in its science and technology programs in order to absorb the reduction in its expenditures required by the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance in the House on November 8, 1984 and, if so, what are they and what are the projected costs?

Mr. Mel Gass (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Among the program changes within the Department resulting from the expenditure reductions announced on November 8, 1984, were certain activities of a scientific and technological nature. In deciding on these reductions, special importance was attached to maintaining the Department's scientific capacity. Consequently, these reductions were chosen so as not to hamper the Department in carrying out its mandate of improving our knowledge of the fisheries resource base, of providing information to ocean-based industries, or of studying long-term ocean-related science issues.

The specific program reductions are as follows:

Expenditure Reductions	$000 1985/86	1986/87	1987/88
OSS remote-sensing program (termination of program)	600	500	—
Terminate use of Coast Guard icebreakers for data collection	50	50	50
Arctic Biological Station—Ste. Anne de Bellevue (closure)	750	350	350
Technology Laboratory (Pacific) Vancouver (closure)	1,038	1,038	1,038
Ellerslie Fisheries Station (relocation of research section to the station at Miminegash)	40	40	40
Northern oil and gas action plan[1] (program reduction)	4,500	4,500	4,500
Office of Energy Research and Development[2] (program reduction)	1,794	1,794	1,794

DPW—CONTRACTS AWARDED

Question No. 213—Mr. Boudria:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 112, what are the names of the individuals or companies who were awarded four contracts by the Department of Public Works, originating in whole or in part, from the constituency of Manicouagan?

2. In each case what was the value of the contract?

Point of Order—Ms. Mitchell

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): 1 and 2. The names of the four contractors from the constituency of Manicouagan and the value of each contract awarded by Public Works Canada are as follows:

Name	Contract Amount
Entreprises C.V.S. Enr., Port-Cartier, Québec	$ 6,720
Construction G. Desrosiers, Sept-Îles, Québec	$23,302
M. Roland Doyle, Havre-St. Pierre, Québec	$11,799
Construction A. Parisée Inc., Sept-Îles, Québec	$58,670

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST TO TABLE DISCUSSION PAPER

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask for unanimous consent of the House to table a document entitled "Child Benefit Reform, a New Democratic Option" and to ask that this document be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs as part of the consultation process which the Government has requested.

I have written to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and also to the three House Leaders. I have also consulted with the Government House Leader about this matter. I hope that these documents could be tabled today.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that even by unanimous consent a Private Member may not table a document in the House of Commons. I am sure the Hon. Member did not know that when she rose to seek unanimous consent. With respect, it cannot be done.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, February 11, 1985, consideration of the motion of Mr. Masse that Bill C-20, an Act to Amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, as someone who grew up in the television and telecommunications age, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the very interesting subject before the House today.

Mr. Speaker, television has had a considerable influence on the lives of all Canadians, especially those who were born in the 50's and after. I know there are a few in the House, not many on the Government side but there are a few.

Mr. Speaker, it is also a fact that television is starting to influence the lives of all Canadians more and more. For instance, did you know that Canadians now spend half their leisure time watching television? This means twenty-three hours a week watching television. The average Canadian will spend a total of nine years and his or her life watching television. It is also a fact that television as an instrument of social policy is very important for Canada, especially, Mr. Speaker, because of our geographical location along the American border, and the fact that 75 per cent of the television programs we receive in Canada are American.

Even now, with our national CBC channel, we are in a situation where our national culture is threatened by the fact that every day, Canadians are confronted with 75 per cent American content on television.

Mr. Speaker, before passing this Bill, we must ask ourselves: Is television a right that belongs to the Canadian people or is it a right that belongs to government and especially the Government in power in this Parliament?

Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that television is not the property of any government, either the former Liberal Government or the present Conservative Government. We are not here to exercise control over television. Television belongs to all Canadians, and Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, quote a former Canadian Prime Minister, a Conservative Prime Minister, who said that public television was very important for Canada.

[English]

I would like to point out to the House that a former Prime Minister, one whom I am sure Members on the government side of the House will well remember, R. B. Bennett, when introducing the Broadcasting Act into the House of Commons, stated that this country must be assured of complete Canadian control of broadcasting from Canadian sources free from foreign interference or influence. He was unequivocal about the method. I think this is important in this new tone of private sector involvement which has come forth from this Government, and as well is the very real fear expressed by the Canadian people that if this particular motion is allowed to pass we may see public ownership of our public air waves being threatened as it never was before.

When Prime Minister Bennett introduced the Broadcasting Act, he told the Canadian people that no other scheme than that of public ownership can ensure to the people of this country, without regard to class or place, equal enjoyment of the benefits and pleasures of broadcasting. I do not think any government would be warranted in leaving the air to private exploitation instead of reserving it for the use of the people. That was the position taken by a former Conservative Government, and it was supported in later developments with respect to broadcasting when we heard from——the Hon. Lionel Chevrier who is well known, particularly in Quebec, and who said: The main reason for promoting public television in Canada is that we would like to have popular and cultural programs produced in Canada, by Canadians and about Canada. We have nothing against American programs, but we do not want them to be in a position to monopolize our broadcasting time.

[English]

Lionel Chevrier felt that public television was important enough that American programming should not be allowed to dominate the Canadian air waves. We see in 1985 a situation where 75 per cent of our television, of which the average Canadian will spend nine years of his or her life watching, happens to be non-Canadian; in fact, American programming.

Mr. de Jong: That is what happened under the Liberal Government.

Ms. Copps: It is clear that this motion before us to allow the Government to take control, indirectly or directly, over the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission will further exacerbate a situation which is already unacceptable and which has been further threatened by the Government's decision to cut back on funding to that instrument of national, cultural and public policy, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

We have in past governments, dating since the inception of television, made a commitment in this House and to the people of Canada that public broadcasting is an essential component, as integral and important as our railway system which links east to west. I had the opportunity of waking up Monday morning in Halifax to the tones of the same radio program which I would have had an opportunity to hear in Hamilton or out in Vancouver. It was radio programming by our public broadcasting corporation, CBC. It has been a link in Canadian lives across the country. The Government suggests that a cut-back of a few million here and there will not affect Canadian culture, which I think has been a bonus for all of us and has helped to fight in some small measure the onslaught of Americanism on our public air waves.

• (1550)

Another myth is that Canadians are not interested in watching Canadian broadcasting. I should like to look at some of the regular programs of the CBC. On a regular basis, 1.8 million Canadians watch The National; 1.6 million Canadians watch The Journal; over 1.5 million Canadians watch The Fifth Estate; and 1.6 million Canadians watch Fraggle Rock. We heard our friend on the government side of the House speaking about the benefits of The Friendly Giant. Fraggle Rock is being watched by 1.6 million Canadian adults and children across the country. What about The Tommy Hunter Show? I am sure my friends in the Maritimes would hate to see that go down the tubes; 1.5 million Canadians watch that variety program.

Mr. Angus: What about Don Messer's Jubilee?

Ms. Copps: Yes, what about Don Messer's Jubilee? It was a very good example of a variety program which really was a link across the country. Those of us who have had an opportunity to see theatre recently will know that Don Messer's Jubilee was a part of the times. When I grew up, it was my first link with the Maritimes. I would really hate to see The Tommy Hunter Show, The Beachcombers and Hockey Night in Canada go the way of Don Messer's Jubilee. Hockey Night in Canada is probably watched more by Liberals than by Conservatives because we happen to be the best hockey players in the House. The audience for Hockey Night in Canada amounts to between two million and three million Canadians. Approximately 1.25 million Canadians watch The Nature of Things.

There has been a suggestion by government Members that the cut-backs thrust upon the CBC will not affect the kind of Canadian culture and programming we have come to enjoy. However, I would suggest that programs like Chautauqua Girl, which in fact was watched by 2.6 million Canadians, would not have been produced under a Conservative regime imposing millions of dollars of cuts upon CBC. What about The Grey Fox, another great Canadian production? Over two million people watched it. Gentle Sinners drew 2.26 million viewers. We may find it hard to believe, in this new notion of privatization thrust upon us by the Government, that CBC television produces 90 per cent of Canadian television drama. The thrust of this particular Bill, as well as the thrust of the cut-backs which have been forced upon the CBC by the Government, tells Canadians that not only will the Government impose cuts on the CBC, not only does it want to take over direct control of the CRTC, but it has formed its own committee to tell CBC where in fact to make its cuts.

Canadians will have to ask themselves whether, when they voted for the Government in unprecedented numbers on September 4, they voted for the abolition of the one cultural link which has kept the country together. Did they vote for the abolishment of an instrument which is doing something, in its own small way, to battle the statistic that 75 per cent of television is American programming? Did Canadians vote to abolish Fraggle Rock and The Friendly Giant? Or did they expect that the Government would live up to its promise to ensure that these vehicles of cultural development would be part of the sacred trust about which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke?

Canadians supported the Government en masse, not to make cut-backs but because they actually believed the promises of the Prime Minister and his Government when they said that they were committed to universality and to the cultural heritage of organizations such as the CBC. Unlike Members on the government side of the House, the Liberal Party believes that Canadians believe in Canadian culture and in encouraging Canadian drama. In fact, public attitude to the arts reflects our position on this particular Bill. I should like to indicate that 82 per cent of Canadians feel it is important to encourage, promote and develop talent and artistic activities, that 78 per cent of Canadians believe that the Government should support distinctively Canadian films, and that 75 per cent of Canadians feel that the CRTC should concentrate on improving the quality of programming.

Another issue is that somehow, if we support publicly funded television and radio, a public vehicle for cultural appreciation across the country, it will cost Canadian jobs. There is a notion on the government side of the House that all things American lead to job creation when the facts show otherwise. In terms of government expenditures in the arts and in the arts as an industry, the arts is one of the top 20 manufacturing industries in Canada. The arts is a job-creation vehicle as well as a cultural link from coast to coast. It is the largest manufacturing industry in terms of employment in the country. It is the sixth largest in terms of salaries and wages. Artists are not living off the fat of the land. Even though they are the greatest in number, they are only the sixth largest in salaries. It is the eleventh largest vehicle in terms of revenues; that is, a revenue-producing manufacturing industry. The arts-related workforce comprises 4 per cent of the Canadian labour force. Approximately 414,000 individuals made their way in the arts in fiscal year 1982-83. Between 1971 and 1981, under a Liberal Government, the arts labour force increased by 74 per cent. It is fair to say that one of the reasons for that expansion was a clear commitment to Canadianize not only the content of our public air waves but to ensure that the arts and theatre had a very strong and leading role to play in society.

When we talk about attending a Canadian play or watching a Canadian movie, of every revenue dollar earned in other manufacturing industries, only 20 cents is spent on salaries and wages; but the arts happens to be one of the most labour-intensive industries in the country. For every dollar spent to see a Canadian production, play or film, 66 per cent goes to salaries and wages. Even given that figure, average wages in the performing arts are less than half those in other manufacturing industries. Artists are not making themselves rich at the expense of taxpayers; they are creating a very labour-intensive, revenue-producing industry which creates jobs for Canadians. In fact, these jobs would not otherwise be available if we sold off our public air waves, as is being suggested by the Government.

I think government Members should use this opportunity to clear up the confusion surrounding the actual role of CBC in 1985. Also they should clear up the undercurrent of concern which has been expressed not only at the level of the arts community but by the public at large. That concern is specifically directed toward discussions, concerns and rumours, certainly published rumours, that private companies are looking to put together a package to purchase organizations such as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It has gone beyond the realm of simply being the private fantasies of certain government Members because in fact we have seen published reports that private companies are developing plans and programs which could potentially look at something like the purchase of the CBC.

It is certainly the position of this Party, and I think it should be the reiterated position of the Government, that any private consortium or corporation, either with background in the broadcasting field or without, should keep its hands off the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation because the CBC and Radio-Canada have been instruments and tools through which all Canadians can voice some kind of a national identity.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian who was brought up with television, I think that a few members in this House remember very well the time when radio was our only link between the Atlantic and the Pacific. I belong to the generation of youngsters who saw the advent of television. A good many of you who have young children are aware that television has a growing influence on them.

Mr. Speaker, I wish the Government would, once and for all, give Canadians the assurance and guarantee that the CBC will never be affected or sold, never bought by any private companies, with or without experience in radio and TV broadcasting. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, our CBC network is much like our railways—it links all Canadians, and whether I am in Montreal, Hamilton or Vancouver, I will always be able to listen to the CBC news, I will always be able to watch the program Le point.

Mr. Speaker, as introduced by this Government, the Bill is a clear indication that TV broadcasting and communications will no longer be the prerogative and right of all Canadian men and women, but that they will depend on the political whim and power of the state.

I am not here as a Canadian only to uphold the rights of the Government, I am here to defend the right of all Canadians, men and women alike, to have ready access to our airwaves without interference from any political faction or any Government. We are now seeing the CRTC give up direct responsibility over our airwaves. In my opinion, considering that we are being inundated by American TV programs, the situation is becoming intolerable for all Canadians, especially those who would like to keep our Canadian culture.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments?

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make just a brief comment. I listened with great interest to the intervention of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). There are many points that she made with which I cannot disagree. However, I would not want the hon. lady to mislead the House, unintentionally, by suggesting that public television is in danger as a result of Bill C-20. I do not think we can let her get away with the remark that there is anything in this Bill that threatens the existence of public television. In fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made it very clear that the CBC is not for sale.

I for one stand up for the integrity of the CBC. Most if not all Members on this side of the House do the same. I would like the hon. lady to point out any section of the Bill which threatens public broadcasting.

If the Hon. Member is talking about the cut-backs that have recently been announced for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, that is not outlined in this Bill. It is true that many Hon. Members have bootlegged the CBC cut-backs as part of the debate on Bill C-20. I would also point out to the hon. lady from Hamilton East that this Bill is deeply rooted in Liberal Government thinking from the previous administration, as it was originally presented by the Hon. Francis Fox. This is basically the same Bill that we are asking to be sent to committee for detailed examination.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) for his intervention. I know of his long-standing history in the broadcasting business. Our great Channel 11 television station in Hamilton, although private, is good.

I am not sure whether the Hon. Member caught the whole gist of what I was trying to say. The comments I made were directed specifically to this Bill in the sense that the CRTC will now be giving up its ultimate authority, in terms of decision-making relating to both public and private broadcasting stations, to Parliament, specifically to the Cabinet of this Government. In that decision to move the power away from the CRTC, an independent, non-political, quasi-judicial body, and into the House of Commons, I feel that Canadian people are giving up the right to have the kind of independent control exclusive of Cabinet or political affiliation which existed under the previous legislation.

My comments relating to the CBC were to ask the Government to take this opportunity to clear up, not only rumours which have been circulating in the cultural community, but also published reports of private consortiums that are looking at putting together a package for the possible purchase of the CBC. It was my intention in the context of this Bill to allow the Government to clear up once and for all the confusion. Naturally Canadians are confused when they see that one of the first acts of this Government is the slicing of the CBC budget by millions of dollars.

I might add that, notwithstanding the alleged promise of the Prime Minister never to sell the CBC, the Prime Minister also said that he would never take away baby bonuses from families earning $35,000 a year. We know that is currently under consideration. The Prime Minister also said that he would never, either in the short term or long term, take away tax exemptions from families with children, and we know that is under consideration.

I do not believe we want to get into a debate on what the Prime Minister has said or has not said in the past or will say or will not say in the future. Believe me, that could become very convoluted. I hope the Government will use this opportunity to clear for the record, once and for all, the status, present and future, of the CBC, so that Canadians can rest assured that this tool of national unity for Canadians will remain preserved and will continue to flourish.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's comments. The suggestion has been made by some people regarding the removal of commercials from the CBC television network, much in the same way that commercials were removed from the CBC radio arm. Does the Hon. Member agree with that approach? Also, does she agree with the suggestion that all of the American programs should be dumped from CBC television in favour of rerunning a number of very good specials which she mentioned in her speech?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not a programming expert. I would not suggest that all American programming be dumped. Certainly, there is programming on both sides of the border that is worth keeping. I would not want to see an over-all, unanimous decision not to allow any kind of foreign programming on our Canadian Broadcasting Corporation airwaves. Certainly the radio broadcasting service has been extremely well served by having a non-commercial access to Canadians.

With respect to the actual television revenues, obviously when you are looking at the revenue statement of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation you have to take into account whether the Government is prepared to replace those lost revenues with further revenues. In light of the Government's decision to cut back on the budget, it might place the CBC in a very detrimental position if the Government were to impose a cut-back on commercials without a corresponding increase in revenues.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that even with the significant reduction of about $75 million from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation budget, the subsidy to the CBC is about $32 for every man, woman and child in this country. That cut was only about $3 for every man, woman and child in this country. Bearing in mind that the country is running at least a $35 billion deficit, does the Hon. Member not feel that there should be some paring back in some of our costs to the Government?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) missed the point of my intervention. The point was that the arts community is one of the top employers in the country. I realize that the Hon. Member can only look at things in terms of the blinded deficit reduction mentality which has characterized most of his interventions in the House. But I think that the arts community is the largest manufacturing employer in the country. I would not want to go back to my riding, which has over a 10 per cent unemployment rate, and tell the artists, who are barely scraping up a living wage above the poverty line, that their programming and their occupations are going to be reduced as a result of government cut-backs.

The Hon. Member does not seem to realize that the impact of the CBC cut-backs will be directly felt in terms of lost jobs for artists across Canada. There are 414,000 Canadians—4 per cent of the Canadian workforce—who are directly or indirectly working in arts-related fields. That $75 million cut-back will have a very direct effect on jobs, if we consider that 66 cents out of every dollar which is spent in the arts goes to salaries. I consider that cut-back a direct attack on jobs for Canadians. I understood when the Government was elected that its first priority was not deficit reduction but jobs.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, this subsidy addresses itself to one form of the cultural community. The Member was talking about the entire cultural community. Is it her belief that we are being fair to the cultural community in pouring the massive amount of money we do into one Crown corporation, and not perhaps treating sculpture and other forms of dramatic arts with anything like the generosity which is accorded to that corporation? If she is really interested in jobs, would it not be more sensible to assist the arts in general, rather than this one specific and rather large Crown corporation?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what kind of involvement the Hon. Member has with the arts community, but he should know that the CBC, certainly in terms of television arts and drama, has produced 90 per cent of the dramatic programming across the country. Therefore, it indirectly and directly employs thousands of those artists about whom he spoke.

I would also add that I find it somewhat confusing that the Member would suggest that moneys should be taken from the CBC and given to other members of the arts community, when he knows full well that in his own Government's financial statement the cut-backs were not restricted to the CBC. In fact, they were levied across the arts community at large. That is why there are people such as Pierre Burton, June Callwood and David Suzuki crying out against government cut-backs to the arts community in general. I do not think the Government can be very proud of its reputation with the arts community at large. Therefore, he should not suggest that we should take from one in order to give to the other because, in fact, the Government has taken from both in order to give transfer payments to provincial Governments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now expired. On debate, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the amendments to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act. I found myself agreeing wholeheartedly with the previous speaker, with the exception of one point. I am not sure that the people of Canada voted for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) because they thought he would keep his promises. I think the people of Canada voted for the Prime Minister in unprecedented numbers because he was not a Liberal.

With respect to the Bill, I suggest that sometimes we forget that communications is a service for which the Government has a responsibility. Therefore, if we consider that our responsibility as a Government, then we should provide a minimum service which would be available to all people. When we are talking about communications—radio, television and telephone services—we should ensure that those services are available to as many people as possible and, as well, that they should be affordable to the general population.

In our wisdom, or lack of it, we in Canada have allowed a large portion of the communications system to be privately owned and operated for a profit. Profit is the aim of the operation. We have found it necessary in the past, and I am sure we will in the future, to regulate the industry in order to ensure that the services are available to all people at a minimum cost.

One of the great uniting factors in Canada has been the CBC, as was stated by the previous speaker. Other national systems have also contributed in the areas of radio and television, as has our well integrated and developed telephone system. My concern, which is shared by many Canadians, is that with the trend toward deregulation and the projection of a profit motive in the industry, we will be reducing the number of Canadians who have access to some of the services which have previously been available to them.

If we approach these national services in the way which is being suggested by the Government—not necessarily in this Bill, but generally in its philosophy—we will be making the communications services available at a cost which will make the profit more important than the service.

I would like to deal with three services which have been reduced because of the policies of this Government and the previous Government. The first area deals with services to the hard of hearing and profoundly deaf. The second area deals with the use and licensing of satellite dishes for television reception in remote areas, and the third area deals with the suggested deregulation of long distance service with the introduction of CNCP into the market.

I would like to speak first on the hard of hearing and the profoundly deaf. Technology is in place for the hard of hearing to be able to use telephones. Telephone companies have suggested that it would be quite possible to make the required technology a part of every telephone in the country. That would make it possible for a person who is hard of hearing to use any telephone which is at their disposal. However, the CRTC decided that it would not make this technology available and that it would not force all producers of telephones in Canada to include it in the manufacturing of the instrument. We need to keep the kind of regulations in place which would ensure this kind of equality and allow hard of hearing people to be able to use the phone anywhere. Perhaps we should review this decision. Perhaps it should be looked at again.

Profoundly deaf people are able to use an instrument called the TDY to communicate over long distance, but it is a typing operation and is slower. It takes a lot more telephone time than an ordinary telephone call. Some telephone companies have recognized the extra burden of cost this would be to the profoundly deaf individual and have given these individuals a break in the area of cost, but others have not. The local telephone companies here in Ontario—although some low-cost break is given—do not provide the extra time for the profoundly deaf to use the telephone. Perhaps we should require that the telephone companies do that, but we can only do it by extended regulating by the CRTC.

I think we should recognize that in order to have a good communications service, it must be available to all people. For example, the areas of Canada which have been unable to access a lot of radio and TV programs are the remote areas of this country, the far north, parts of northern Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Alberta, northern British Columbia and northern Ontario. Because these radio and TV programs are not available to the people in those areas, many communities and individuals have sought to deal with this broadcasting disparity by purchasing and installing their own receiving equipment and rebroadcasting or otherwise distributing the signals on an unregulated basis. This seems like a very acceptable entrepreneurial solution to providing this service and I hope this Bill will seek to clarify the definition of such rebroadcasting facilities which are sometimes found in large apartment blocks and hotels. This Bill, I understand, will bring them all under the jurisdiction of the CRTC. However, for many communities in remote areas which have satellite reception and equipment and are not licensed, this legislation will cause problems.

Some Hon. Members of this House, including government Members, have made commitments to their communities that they would help these communities gain access to these television programs without intervention by the RCMP, as is happening now. In the case of remote areas and under-served communities, these problems are now being addressed—and I give the Government credit for this—by the task force on the distribution in under-served Canadian communities of satellite received broadcasting services. This task force was supposed to report on February 11.

We in this Party support this Bill on the understanding that the Government will act quickly on the recommendations of the task force and that options will be implemented for increasing the level of service and reducing the cost to these under-served communities. We feel that the extension of regulations is important in ensuring the viability of the Canadian broadcasting environment.

We would recommend that two or three basic principles be included. First is the guaranteeing of availability of Canadian information and cultural programming across the country. That should be a standard we do not move away from but should increase where it is presently deficient.

Second, we should ensure that new measures are found to fill the needs of those in remote areas who are now discriminated against. That is the approach I think we should take. I hope the Government, in giving these powers to the CRTC, will recognize that the Bill as it now reads will cause problems for those remote communities which are presently using satellites to receive services which they otherwise would not.

The third area of concern, Mr. Speaker, is the possible results of deregulation of long distance rates. The possibilities of what might happen if we deregulate the cost of long distance rates have been well documented across Canada. We have a living example in the States where the increases have been substantial. If CNCP Telecommunications services is allowed to compete freely, it will decrease the long distance cost somewhat for people using the service.

It will decrease the cost of long distance telephone service, but who uses the long distance telephone service? The large corporations, a few individuals and businesses across Canada are the major users of long distance services. The deregulation of rates will mostly affect the greatest number of users. These are people who use the phone daily for communication with their family and so on. Local service will be increased greatly by the deregulation of the long distance rate. This has been well documented and put before the CRTC. There are some of us who believe the CRTC has no right to rule in this particular area, but that is another matter.

Deregulation in Canada is estimated likely to raise the local rates for telephone service between 70 per cent and 125 per cent depending on which province you live in. Ninety-eight per cent of Canadian households have telephones. Of these people, 25 per cent to 30 per cent live at close to the poverty level or below the poverty line. That means, Mr. Speaker, if we proceed with deregulation as requested by CNCP Telecommunications, 20 per cent to 30 per cent of the persons presently using their telephones may not be able to continue to do so because they will not be able to afford it. That makes the communications system of Canada no longer a service. It then becomes a profit-oriented operation which is not available to everyone in the country because of cost. As I mentioned before, Mr. Speaker, there are many of us who are not at all sure that the CRTC has the right to make a decision on this issue.

My last and final area of concern is that although the CRTC is a responsible body, the responsible organization for regulation of the telephone and broadcasting services, this country does not have in place a really viable communications policy. Therefore, there is no doubt that Canada needs a clear and articulated communications policy established by government. The CRTC should operate within that policy and make sure the service is provided to all Canadians.

In the last number of years, because the communications industry has grown like topsy, the CRTC has been forced to make decisions in areas where it has not made decisions in the past. This was done in the absence of policy from the former Government. I hope this Government recognizes that and brings forward a comprehensive communications policy within which the regulatory body, the CRTC, can work. If these changes have a tendency to increase the Government's tendency to privatization, then I think policy should be stated in terms which will protect people in remote areas and the lower level of income earners. These policies that I suggest the Government should place before this House should be made in light of fairness and service to all Canadians. We could support the Government in that kind of change in policy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech? Debate.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to speak on Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act. Over the past month I have received many calls of concern on the issues which fall under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse). Some of these issues are dealt with in the Bill, others I hope will be dealt with in the very near future. The Department of Communications has certainly been receiving more than its usual share of attention in the past few months. Of course, the cut-backs to the CBC and to Canada Council are of great concern to the people of Canada and certainly to the people of Prince Edward Island. I feel certain that the Minister of Communications will continue to receive representations on this matter from the people of Canada in the months to come.

With reference to the Bill before us, I received representations from cable operators concerned about the effect unauthorized foreign satellite signals originating from unlicenced operators will have on their operations which are licenced by the CRTC. These companies cannot compete with these signals without breaking the terms of their agreement. Few communities in my riding have access to cable services. In the more remote areas, satellite receivers are becoming a very popular item as more and more Prince Edward Islanders attempt to bring a wider variety of entertainment into their homes. Of course, I do not want to see that privilege taken away from them, but at the same time I have some concerns over the quality of programming coming across on some of those unauthorized signals. In the interests of the future of our cable companies and the quality of programming received by satellite receiver owners, I am happy to see that this legislation is introduced once again to the House of Commons.

As I mentioned before, there are areas of my riding which are somewhat remote, there are very few sources of entertainment locally, so television and radio are very important to the people of my riding. There are farmers and fishermen who rely heavily on television and radio for their communications because of the local farm and fishing broadcasts which keep them up to date on weather conditions, market prices and general happenings in their industries. The CBC is one of the most important sources of this information in both television and radio formats. Basically, all the homes in Prince Edward Island listen to the Radio Noon program. It brings them reports on the prices of produce, fish, on research and development in those industries, and reports on developments which may affect their livelihood. Radio Noon is one of the major sources of information for these people, one that cannot easily be replaced. The local noon program in Prince Edward Island was eliminated with the Radio Noon broadcast from Halifax being substituted. Years ago we used to receive Halifax Radio Noon broadcast, but ratings in P.E.I. showed that only 5 per cent of the population listened to that program. However, when the program was moved to Charlottetown, ratings rose to 30 per cent. I was talking to some CBC employees just today on that very program and they say that in the last year or so the ratings have been up more than that. So I think the Islanders want to hear about their own industry and local events. It is difficult, of course, to get all the information locally, but Radio Noon, when it is returned to Halifax on April 1, will mean that a very valuable information source for all Prince Edward Islanders will be gone.

Window on Resources is of course another local television program covering the Island's primary industries, and that was eliminated in December. The primary industries of agriculture and the fishery are the very backbone of the P.E.I. economy. They deserve good local coverage. Soundings, which provides information to the fishing industry, has an uncertain future. Since part of the program is heard on Radio Noon, I am concerned about whether this program will report in the future.

Last weekend I had the opportunity to meet with one of the major farmers' organizations in the Province of P.E.I., the National Farmers' Union. Its members presented a brief on a number of issues pertaining to the agricultural community in P.E.I. The first item on the agenda was the cut-backs in programming and how it affected them. They made the point that these programs have done so much for their agricultural community. The Prince Edward Island Women's Institute is concerned about it because that was a vehicle for programming to get their message across. They were able to show what activities the Institute is carrying out on its own. Organizations such as the Maritime Fishermen's Union used that as an information vehicle to get sound advice to the rural people. Mr. Wayne Easter, President of the National Farmers Union noted in this brief that nationally the CBC cuts will not be felt as greatly by farmers as they will be in the Atlantic region, and especially in Prince Edward Island. He pointed out that the amount of $75 million was a political decision. We must understand that it was within the Government's jurisdiction to make that decision. The CBC must decide how the cuts are to be exercised.

Other speakers here today mentioned some of the artistic programs that are involved, such as The Tommy Hunter Show and Don Messer's Jubilee which originated from Prince Edward Island. Those shows are part of our Canadian heritage. Almost every home in Atlantic Canada was taking full advantage of those shows. Another program which will go by the wayside is called Sounds of the Island. That is a winter program which is on once a week and which features local talent. There is nothing more attractive to rural Canadians than seeing someone from their own community perform. They feel good about that. They believe, and rightly so, that there is a lot of good quality entertainment which needs exposure through local programming.

When pay-television was introduced to Prince Edward Island, I received hundreds of letters from Islanders who were concerned about the quality of programming that could come into their homes and the effect it could have on their children and on all of society. Over the years, television programs have become more and more violent and more sexually explicit. With satellite dishes, cable television, and video recorders, television is becoming a centre of family life. Television has become a tool of education, and the characters portrayed on television have become role models to Canadians. When young people watch Hockey Night in Canada, they watch for the Wayne Gretzkys of hockey. When they watch Canadian football, they watch for the stars. In many cases young people pattern their lives after the so-called stars. In Canada we have some excellent sports figures. Every superstar, no matter what facet of life they represent or what occupation they pursue, becomes an idol to someone.

I am happy to see that this Bill addresses, to some degree, the quality of programming. The Bill states that:

—the programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system should respect and promote the equality and dignity of all individuals, groups or classes of individuals regardless of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability;

I am uncertain of how all of this will be achieved. I hope that Canadian programming will be maintained at a high standard without undue or unwarranted censorship. There is a very fine line between outright censorship and the protection that is outlined in this Bill. Further study of issues such as this will be required in committee in order to ensure that the rights of Canadians are not interfered with.

There is a significant Acadian population in my riding. I have received many letters from individuals and organizations who are very concerned about the effect that a 20 per cent reduction in CBC's French operating budget will have on the future of French programming. It is difficult to maintain a minority language in a culture without significant support from communications sources such as radio and television. In the Acadian regions of my riding the French services provided by the CBC are the only French broadcasting services available. Any reductions in these services will have a very detrimental effect on the future of the French language and culture in Prince Edward Island.

On the local FM CBC station, La Marée de l'Île provides an hour and a half of Prince Edward Island-directed programming five days a week. This program is relatively new and only came about because of pressures from the local francophone organizations, which have a great interest in the future of the French language and culture in Prince Edward Island. I hope to see programming such as this increased rather than eliminated.

I have received letters from individuals and groups concerned about the cut-backs to the Canada Council. These cut-backs will affect the future of culture in Prince Edward Island as well as in the rest of Canada. They will also affect the employment of a great many Canadians. The Canada Council is closing its regional office in Moncton, which is the only office in the Atlantic provinces. The cancellation of the toll free telephone line to the Canada Council office will further affect the contact that the East Coast will have with the Canada Council and with other writers and artists across the country. Artists will lose their access to free financing and marketing advice. The Arts Advisory Board, which consists of representatives from all regions of the country, has been abolished. The loss of programs such as this threatens the direction of the arts community in Canada. It is important that arts be maintained as an alternative source of entertainment and employment for Canadians. The arts is a very important industry in Canada.

Mr. McDermid: Does the private sector support the arts?

Mr. Henderson: The private sector supports it in some way.

Mr. McDermid: Should it not support it more?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We will come to questions and comments a little later.

Mr. Henderson: I will talk about the private sector in communications and the arts. As the Hon. Member across the way has mentioned, it may well support the arts in some regions. In areas of the country where there is not a great private sector and the business communities are small, it is not able to support the arts. As an example, there is some private funding involved in the Confederation Centre of the Arts in Charlottetown. However, it relied heavily on financing from the Government of Canada and the provincial government of Prince Edward Island. If the private sector had been charged with the total responsibility of financing the Confederation Centre of the Arts in Charlottetown, it would have been closed long ago. We all know the great service which the Centre of the Arts does for the arts community. The play Anne of Green Gables is very attractive to Canadians as well as many other people around the world. The Japanese are very interested in the story of Anne of Green Gables. It brings many tourists to Prince Edward Island. I have talked to people who have seen that play as often as five times. It is certainly renowned throughout Canada. Some of the musicals that are staged at Confederation Centre are very important. It is incumbent upon government to support those artistic performances in our country.

The Hon. Member may be correct in stating that the private sector may be able to contribute more than it is to the artistic endeavours in central Canada, but this means that if extra funding is available it could be given to rural regions of the country rather than to those areas which have a so-called private sector base.

Canadians rely heavily on services provided under the authority of the Minister of Communications. I hope the Minister will take steps to protect the CBC programming that is directed at children, our primary producers or the francophone community outside of Quebec, and to ensure the quality and Canadian content in that broadcasting. I believe we will benefit from greater Canadian content as we are already subject to much programming from the United States. I have visited the United States and watched their programs, some that come to Canada. I believe that those programs are not of the same quality as those produced by the CTV, the CBC, our radio and print news media. I believe we should protect and maintain the quality of our weekly journals and daily newspapers throughout the country because they understand and reflect the fabric of Canada. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Hon. Member's speech, I realized that his area is very similar to northern Ontario. Both are removed from the gigantic metropolitan areas of the country.

The Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has made a drastic cut of some $75 million and an additional $10 million in technological advances for the CBC. I share many of the Hon. Member's views about the CBC.

A few years ago there was an extended coverage program in Canada that was designed to bring CBC Radio to approximately 98 per cent or 99 per cent of Canadians. That additional funding, which is a small percentage of those cuts which have taken place this year, has in fact extended the broadcasting to all areas of northern Ontario and many areas in the high Arctic, either through FM stations or low power relay transmitters. I believe this coverage is important to those areas in order to get greater information. While our locally owned and operated radio stations are important, I believe that national broadcasting corporation in our vast and diverse country is essential. The local stations tend to concentrate on local news as the CBC obviously has a distinct advantage in broadcasting international and national news. I believe that CBC news coverage is important, especially to smaller remote communities like those in the Maritimes, the North and northern Ontario.

Let me comment on the public affairs and information programs. Since I live in a part of Ontario that is close to the United States, we receive public broadcasting information programs from that source. While they are valuable programs, I do not believe that they compare at all to the information explosion we get from CBC programs like Radio Noon, which is very important for resources, and This Country in the Morning, which ties the entire country together. There are other programs such as Fresh Air—

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that this is a period in which we can ask questions of the previous speaker and make comments. The Hon. Member sounds as if he were making a full-fledged speech. Some of us want to ask questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure that the Hon. Member is coming to his question.

Mr. Foster: I was just getting to that, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the Hon. Member who comes from Prince Edward Island shares many of my views that the CBC plays a paramount role in providing a national network for national and international news. This is especially true for people in the smaller communities. The cuts being made are inappropriate and will be harmful if they begin to eliminate these major resource and information programs. I would be interested to hear the Hon. Member's comments about that.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I agree with some of the Hon. Member's comments. As I said in my remarks, one of the major farm organizations and the Federation of Agriculture in P.E.I. are also extremely concerned about cuts in local programming as it affects their industries. I am sure that this applies to the Hon. Member's area as well.

Many of the programs originated locally. I recall some of these programs which began years ago. I remember a documentary program about oyster culture. The commentators went to the source in that documentary film and spoke about the artificial breeding of oysters, including the rearing of larvae that were suspended in water tanks and the culture of flagellates and diatoms for the food chain. They showed the whole process, which is an extremely interesting process to those who are involved in the fishery. They showed the rearing of oysters in the rivers and estuaries, the harvesting of oysters, the cultivation in all aspects, the marketing, and how oysters are properly packaged. That is how those industries have grown over the years, Mr. Speaker. That is how the shell fish industry in Prince Edward Island has grown. It was as a result of the dissemination of information of great interest to the fishermen and to those involved in fish farming and aquaculture.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, first I enjoyed the talk given by the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson). I always enjoy listening to his speeches in the House. The cuts that are being made in the CBC, I think the Hon. Member will agree, are the decision of the president and the Board of Directors of the CBC and not of the Government.

Second, over the Christmas break I had the opportunity to watch CBC almost exclusively. It has some excellent programs and I agree with the Hon. Member about that. One program I want to mention especially entitled The Tin Flute was broadcast over three evenings. During those three evenings the only time I saw any commercials was on the Friday night. On Wednesday and Thursday nights there was promo after promo after promo for the same programs. These promos were shown until you were so sick of seeing them that you wanted to throw up.

Does the Hon. Member not think that the CBC could be more aggressive in marketing its very excellent products, such as The Tin Flute and seeking commercials? I am told that CBC salesmen sit on their butts. They wait for orders instead of aggressively seeking commercials for the excellent and widely-watched programs.

I am a former broadcaster. I have broadcast for a CBC affiliate and for the private sector. The private sector is very aggressive and gets commercials. This is not so for the CBC. Does the Hon. Member not think that the difference made in cuts of public expenditures could be made up by aggressive salesmanship for commercial programs?

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot honestly say whether they can or cannot. I would hate to see the CBC become too commercialized. That is one of the problems you see south of the border with the independent networks. You get an awful lot of commercials. Whether there are ways for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to raise funds without ruining the intent of the program I do not know. I presume there are. If there are, why do we not ensure that that revenue is generated before making the cuts? The Hon. Member is correct. The Government made the $75 million cut. The administration of CBC and the program cuts are done within the CBC. No one is quarreling with that. I have difficulty with the decision made by the CBC because it is saying, when it makes those cuts, that the Government forced the CBC to make the cuts by cutting the budget. How that works out, I do not know.

Mr. McDermid: What about cuts in salary?

Mr. Henderson: That is the Hon. Member's suggestion. Everyone is entitled to suggestions. I am extremely concerned about the kinds of programming that the ordinary rural Canadian wants and needs to benefit not only his own personal entertainment but the kind of informational services that help small business. Cuts should not be made there.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have no argument with what the Hon. Member is saying. In this country we have a money-squeeze problem. One cannot go on spending $100 billion while taking in only $70 billion or $75 billion. Everybody has to pay his or her fair share. This is the fair share for the CBC. If the CBC wants to make up the difference, it has the avenue to do so and should do so. The CBC has excellent programming. One prime time television we watch the same stupid promos over and over and over again. They are shown every five or six minutes and do not bring in one cent of revenue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) has about 30 seconds for his question.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Hon. Member, I think his point is well made. This is the CRTC Bill. What we are looking for is some recourse to CBC cuts, such as the discontinuance of CBG Gander. We thought there would be a monitoring agency when the Minister announced the three-man committee and that it would monitor the cuts of the CBC. We are anxiously awaiting to hear the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Scott) who will be speaking in a few moments. We hope he will respond to these criticisms, and especially the closure of CBG in Gander, of particular interest to me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) have a short question?

Mr. Taylor: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have two quick points. The Hon. Member mentioned the difficulty of audibility in certain areas of his province. I have a similar problem in the Lake Louise area, which is not in the far North but in the mountains. People have been trying and trying to get CBC to give them a signal that they can enjoy.

Does the Hon. Member have some way of contacting the CBC in which a government station or a station financed mostly by government money could be getting into those areas which private industry cannot reach?

One other point. When the Hon. Member talks about the CBC holding Canada together, one should remember that some of the one-sided programs the CBC has put out have hurt Confederation and will hurt it greatly if continued.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure the Hon. Member will be able to discuss the matter with the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) after six o'clock this evening. We shall now resume debate.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my intervention in this debate will be short. There are a few points, however, that I wish to put on the record.

First, it has dismayed me for some time how technological change forces governments to react. The legislation we have in front of us is a reaction. It was originally in most of its form introduced by the Liberals. That Bill was never passed, but now with some changes it has been reintroduced by the Conservative Government.

I am reminded of a committee meeting I attended around 1980. I was the critic for my Party on cultural events. I was relatively new to the ways of the House at that time. Illegal dishes were very much on everyone's mind. The then Minister in charge, Mr. Francis Fox, was threatening legal action. In this general setting, the committee met. I suggested to Minister Fox that technological changes were occurring that would greatly force changes in the objectives of our broadcasting legislation and the Broadcasting Act and that in no way was it possible for the Government to hold back and attempt to legislate technological change and innovation. I remember the Minister at the time pooh-poohed me. I suppose he was looking down at me who was then a new Member. He suggested that I did not know what I was talking about, that dishes were selling for around $100,000, were of a cumbersome size, and that outside of a few instances where they were being used, he saw no immediate danger of their being used on a massive scale. In fact, he suggested that it would take several decades before we would have to look at that problem. It has been less than five years and the size of dishes has indeed come down. They are much more attractive now. They are much smaller. The price of dishes is also coming down. I suggest that in the next number of years their size will further decrease, there will be greater mass production of them, and they will become cheaper and accessible to more and more people.

There are changes in technology. This is what broadcasting is all about or what was envisaged in broadcasting by the men and women who originally drafted the Broadcasting Act. It now gives Canadians access to channels from all over the world. The original intent of the Broadcasting Act to preserve a Canadian broadcasting system in order to maintain a Canadian cultural identity is now being threatened, not by any ideology or act of Parliament but by the technology which is becoming available. Unfortunately in this situation, as well as in many others, we have a technological imperative, which is that all governments do essentially is to react—they allow the change to occur, the crisis to be created, and then they try to fill up the holes with pieces of legislation.

When I was a new Member sitting for the first time on the committee dealing with communications and cultural events, I suggested that we really needed a new Broadcasting Act, that we had to rethink our whole notion of what is broadcasting, that we had to begin to anticipate the newer technologies which were being invented and innovated, and that we had to sit down with our political agenda to maintain a Canadian cultural identity in terms of what it meant, given the new technologies. I believe that what I called for in 1980 at that committee meeting is still very valid today. We need a new Broadcasting Act. We need some new definitions of what is broadcasting. The present legislation does not really cover it. All we have are CRTC decisions, which in essence have become policy decisions because there is a legislative vacuum and we have legislation which is inappropriate to contemporary realities.

I wish to reaffirm—and I believe most Members of the House feel the same way—that in order to maintain a unique Canadian identity, Parliament has a responsibility. First, it is in the national interest, as well as in our economic, social and cultural interests, to maintain a Canadian identity. We should not be swallowed up in the mass broadcasting cultural milieu which is being created south of the border. In order to withstand that very powerful magnetism, we need collective action as a nation. We need clear and distinct government policies which ensure a Canadian cultural identity supported by the arts and institutions such as the Canadian Arts Council and the CBC. These are essential instruments in maintaining our cultural identity.

Of course there will be a price to pay for this. There is no doubt about it. Some of the decisions the Government and Parliament will have to make are: How much are we prepared to pay, or how important is it for us to maintain that cultural identity? I believe that it is very important. Without a cultural identity we will eventually begin to lose our political and economic identity, as well as our economic and political freedoms. Cultural identity is just as important as economic and political freedoms. I am prepared to pay a price for that, whether it be $35, $40 or $50 a year because it is that important to me.

I agree with many government Members who were quick to point out some of the shortcomings within the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The CBC needs a bit of a shake-up. It has become like an old mother hen. There are folks in there whose creative energies have long gone. It needs some new excitement, some innovation and some new creative impulses. That Corporation needs some new blood, but cutting is not injecting new blood; it is just bleeding. We have to inject new blood. This does not mean that we should take blood out, because that weakens an important instrument which maintains our Canadian cultural identity. I do not believe the Government knows what it is doing. It has to sit down and rethink the nature of broadcasting and the meaning of technological change. It should rethink how it can best act in these changes to ensure the maintenance of the Canadian cultural identity and what it can do to change the CBC to make it more effective and attractive to the Canadian viewing audience so that it can maintain its audiences, not lose them to American programming.

These are not easy questions to answer. I am not saying that they are. This is why I reacted with horror to the simplistic solution of the Government to hack away at the CBC and somehow or other it would be able to set its house in order. That is irresponsible behaviour.

I am hoping for some wisdom on the part of the Government and some realization that CBC is important as a cultural institution, that the Canadian cultural identity is important, and that these matters should be handled with care and great consideration.

I do not dispute that our scarce resources, especially taxpayers' money, should be husbanded and managed carefully. I was as horrified as members of the Conservative Party when we saw the waste of previous Liberal Governments, but I find the Tory solution just as repugnant. Husbanding and preserving means that things should be done with a lot of consideration and care. I think what we have seen is blind chopping away rather than careful husbanding and preserving.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member dwelt for some time on the way in which the CBC was created. Could he tell us whether some of the cuts he mentioned in his speech will affect regional programming or jobs in the area which he represents?

• (1720)

Mr. de Jong: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. We in western Canada have always fought to have more regional broadcasting in Saskatchewan. That occurred under the Liberal administration as well. There was a tremendous push toward greater centralization out of the major offices in Toronto and Montreal. I know people in Regina within the CBC who had to fight tooth and nail to preserve some of the turf, so to speak, in western Canada.

They have had to cut programs. Some of those cuts were occurring because of the policies of the previous administration. The Tories have made a bad situation even worse. We are going to have even less local and regional broadcasting and programs than before.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to consult my colleague for his opinion on the effect of these cut-backs. He knows that investigative journalism within the CBC was cut with the encouragement of the previous administration, and, I presume, the management of the CBC. Investigative journalism groups, especially in CBC Radio, were instrumental in changing the face of Canada to some degree. A small group attached to CBC Sunday Morning was able to get spruce bud worm spraying cut in half in New Brunswick after doing detailed research into it. This investigative journalism research presented on CBC Sunday Morning over a period of three years won a battle for the atomic veterans of Canada. It is now understood that most of this money—and maybe my colleague can verify this—for investigative journalism within the CBC was drawn off into that big toothy grin of the program The Journal. Many of the programs have suffered. Now the whole CBC will be called into question. It is probably one of the finest organizations in Canada. The cut-backs will gut that organization to the bottom.

I know the Hon. Member is from a rural area. In many areas of this country, there is still no television. The only sort of intellectual stimulation and quality programming comes from CBC Radio. In my area, we receive radio signals from the United States such as Los Angeles much better than we do the CBC. Is it fair that the Conservative Government should encourage these kinds of deep cut-backs that would destroy the kind of quality produced by the CBC, especially the loss of investigative journalism as one example, and the failure to provide decent radio communication, in particular in the rural areas of Canada?

Mr. de Jong: Yes, Mr. Speaker, indeed. I deeply regret the cuts, particularly in the area of investigative journalism. The CBC in Saskatchewan has played an important role, as part of the fifth estate, of being able to develop stories, develop issues and do the important job that good investigative journalism is all about. The CBC in Saskatchewan has also had its scoops, so to speak, and has contributed to the well-being of the public as a whole in doing so.

As well, the cuts will affect rural areas, particularly areas in northern Saskatchewan. Native programming and northern programs are all under the axe. These are areas that are on the fringe, at least geographically, of mainstream Canadian society. These are the areas that really constitute the vast majority, in terms of geography, of this country. If we want to keep this country together, one of the essential threads in keeping that fabric together is the CBC.

When you start cutting out that thread, what you do is to increase the sense of isolation and the sense of alienation the different geographical sectors of this country will feel. Instead of helping to create a quilt of the many different parts that constitute Canada, you will loosen those ties which contribute to the sense of cohesion that we need in Canada in order to survive as a country and as a national entity.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have some comments on the very perceptive observations of the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). He points out quite rightly that legislation lags behind technology. He points to the day when you will be able to buy for $25 a little instrument about the size of a cigarette package that you can stick on your windowsill which will enable you to tune in to any one of 250 satellites.

What this is going to bring to Canadians is freedom of choice. The Government in its wisdom, or lack thereof, will no longer be able to say, "There are four broadcasters operating in this area. We will insist that you carry so much Canadian content. We will tell you which programs you can broadcast and which ones you cannot". At that time, and the circumstances apply very much today in many areas, people will be able to turn off or tune in to whatever they want.

This will bring freedom of choice to Canadians. It means that the Government will not be able to dictate what people listen to or look at over television. If the Government or the people of Canada think it is important that there be Canadian content, the only way that will be possible will be to have programs that the people themselves want to listen to or watch.

I wonder whether there is a better way of ensuring that this happens than by putting a billion dollars or thereabout of public funds into the CBC to produce a broadcasting system which people very often choose not to listen to or look at. In the city I come from, the CBC spends a lot of money. The little local broadcasting station will pick up about 85 per cent of the listening audience on CBC. Might it not be possible to reallocate some of that billion dollars of public funds into some other mechanism whereby programs can be picked up by private broadcasters, the public funds can be used better, and proper Canadian content is ensured?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I generally have no objection to the comments and suggestions made by the Hon. Member. I think we need new and creative approaches. I entirely agree that making it illegal to receive signals from all over the world just will not work. It is like King Canute telling the ocean waves to stand back. You can do that until doomsday, but it just will not happen.

We have to create programs that people want to watch. That means many new approaches. For example, some things prevented the CBC from airing National Film Board films. That was stupid. Some of the private production houses in this country have produced some really good material.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Questions and comments have now terminated.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to stand in my place today and take this opportunity to address myself to Bill C-20. I will begin by telling the Hon. Member who sat down just a few moments ago that I appreciated very much his comments with respect to this matter, as indeed I have taken a great deal of interest in the comments of many Members in this House.

When one separates the wheat from the chaff in the discussion that has occurred in this debate and separates the partisan comments where Members find themselves in the position of either defending or denouncing government measures and cut-backs, one discovers that throughout the debate in the comments of every Member of Parliament who has spoken there is an abiding appreciation of the important place that the CBC, the National Film Board, the Canadian film and Video Certification Offices, the Canada Council and many other cultural organizations and mass media organizations play—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If hon. gentlemen would like to carry on a conversation, they can go behind the curtain or into the lobby. I would like to hear the speech of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, one has no trouble realizing that the role which these various institutions play within Canada is appreciated by all Members of the House. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) indicated to two Members of the House that he wants to ensure that Canadians have freedom of choice. He wants to see an end to the day when the Minister of Communications, or another Minister of the Government of Canada, can dictate to Canadians what they should watch. I think it is fair to say that 85 per cent of the population of this country has complete freedom of choice, or as much freedom as can reasonably be expected, with respect to viewing television channels or listening to radio stations.

I am a bit worried, if the Hon. Member is suggesting that cutting back the CBC, funds to the National Film Board or the National Arts Centre to make those institutions more competitive and having the CBC compete against other networks will somehow improve the means of communication in Canada. In a very large chunk of the country, including the area which I represent—the west coast of Newfoundland and the great northern peninsula of Newfoudland and the western Arctic from which the Hon. Member hails as well as parts of western Canada, the citizens in many communities have no other communication option but the CBC. When we talk about the billion dollar budget of the CBC and make comparisons between the CBC needs for that money to provide the nation with a national network and CTV or Global-TV being able to do it for less, we are forgetting that there is only one communications network in the country that has a mandate, responsibility and obligation to provide television in every community which has over 500 people from one end of Canada to the other. CBC is also the only radio network that has the obligation and responsibility to provide programming from one end of Canada to the other.

It is a bit short-sighted and nefarious to say that, because the CBC is approaching a billion dollars in spending, it must necessarily be fat. The CTV is not providing programming in the great northern peninsula of Newfoundland, the Port au Port Peninsula of Newfoundland, the south coast of Newfoundland or the Bay of Islands of Newfoundland. In fact, a large number of rural regions in Canada do not receive programming from CTV, Global-TV or private radio networks. The reason is simple. The private networks are licensed and regulated by the CRTC, but they are quite rightly in the business of making a buck. If there are not advertising dollars to justify providing television signals across 500 miles of rugged coastline on the northern peninsula to 30,000 people, then those networks will not be there. But the CBC, with its so-called fat budget, is there because it has to be there. It does not make money providing a signal to Labrador, to the great northern peninsula, the Port au Port Peninsula, the Gaspé, northern New Brunswick or the western Arctic. But it is there. It is the only network in the country which ensures that Canadians, no matter where they live, can be assured of a basic service. Therefore, it is a fundamental mistake to stand in the House and talk about the CBC in terms of its efficiency versus that of the private networks. It is in a totally different business.

I have had the pleasure and the honour of working for both the CTV and the CBC networks. There is no question that in some regions CBC is better outfitted, that its equipment is more modern and its facilities are up to date. However, when I worked for CTV in the Province of Newfoundland, with the budget we had, we tried to put on the best news casts we could provide. We were not concerned about whether or not St. Anthony had a reporter or whether any of the reporters ever saw St. Anthony, Newfoundland. In fact, the CTV network today, in a province as rural as Newfoundland, including Labrador, has one team of reporters in the capital city of St. John's. By contrast, CBC has stations in St. John's, Grand Falls, Corner Brook, Labrador City and Goose Bay. Members may not appreciate that, but I am attempting to point out that on a per capita basis CBC spends much more money in providing the service to the people of Newfoundland. Everybody in Newfoundland receives equal service, which is not the case when a private network is involved.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic suggested that if CBC wants to maintain its share of the market it must compete on an entertainment basis and that it must provide an equal entertainment value for people to make a choice. When Canadians are given the choice between Canadian-produced programs and American produced programs, they respond dramatically and watch the Canadian-produced programs. The national news reaches 1.8 million people in the country on most week nights. The Journal reaches 4 million Canadians per week, with almost 1.6 million people watching every night. The Fifth Estate reaches 1.5 million people. Fraggle Rock reaches 1,600,000 Canadians. Canadians are responding to Canadian-produced programs. But if we think that we are going to change CBC, the Canadian film industry or the National Film Board, or enhance Canadian culture without first doing an analysis of what is required within the industry, and understanding the ramifications of cutting dollars to the Canadian film industry and how those dollars ripple down through what is still a very fragile industry, then I am sorry because that is not the way to do it.

We should not forget that we share a border with a fascinating neighbour to the south which has a population of 250 million people. The United States has very well established and well oiled broadcasting film and entertainment industries. In Canada we have only begun to make headway in recent years. If we think that by cutting back we will make the Canadian industry more competitive, then I am sorry. I share with Members opposite the concern that we must ensure that we get a better bang for our buck with respect to the current budget of the CBC. I also share the belief that we can get much better value for our dollars from the CBC. I believe as well that it is not being irresponsible to suggest that there is fat within the CBC to be cut, particularly on the administration side, but I do not think that having the Minister, one month after the election, start by arbitrarily picking $85 million out of the air and having a panic reaction as to where cuts should be made within the organization, is doing any kind of service to the people of our country.

My riding has a population of 90,000 people. My constituency has 500 miles of coastline, and over 50 per cent of its communities have a population of under 1,000 people. It is difficult enough to try to service that area and ensure that those Canadians living along the 500 miles of coastline have their right to be heard, and have not only their problems aired but their aspirations reported, not only in their own home province but across this nation. The CBC has one station in the City of Corner Brook. But when these cut-backs were announced, arbitrarily and without proper consultation, what happened, Mr. Speaker? We were told that that station will have five personnel wiped out. If the 90,000 people in my riding lived in four city blocks, I would not be upset, but they do not, they live along 500 miles of coastline. That one station is now left with a handful of reporters who are trying to give decent coverage and representation to people who live all the way from Burgeo on the south coast to St. Anthony and southern Labrador in the northern peninsula. That is an impossible task, Mr. Speaker. For most Canadians who live in urban settings and high-density population areas, access to media can be had as quickly as it takes to make a telephone call or to call a press conference. That is not the case for the people on the great northern peninsula, whose aspirations and problems are as legitimate as the aspirations and problems of someone living in Toronto, Vancouver or St. John's, Newfoundland. For my constituents to take advantage of their broadcasting system and their right to be heard, it requires making an appointment. In other words, if someone lives in St. Anthony, and if a newsworthy event happens, it gets reported a week later. If someone is anticipating something newsworthy occurring, an appointment has to be made with the CBC. That kind of situation can only worsen.

When I tell this kind of story about the CBC's mandate and the incredible cost of providing coverage to those areas, I am not speaking just about Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe or just about Newfoundland. The same is true in northern British Columbia, the northern provinces of western Canada and, indeed, in some parts of northern Ontario and Quebec. Canadians who live in my part of the country and resign themselves nightly to only one choice when watching television, namely the CBC, very often engage in a favourite pastime. It is called "cursing the CBC" My friend, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic smiles. But it needs to be said, Mr. Speaker, that even though they must watch the same programs night after night, the CBC is there providing the signal. The other private networks are not. Although these people get tired of watching the same channel, the programming nature of the CBC, whether it be regionally developed entertainment or news programs, at least makes it possible to see a reflection of themselves, their communities, their aspirations and, indeed, the problems they confront on a day-to-day basis. There is a very deep and abiding appreciation of the value of having the CBC, be it radio or television, in the northern areas.

When we look at the breakdown of the $85 million cuts being proposed for the CBC, we find the figures rather interesting. We see $30 million being cut from administration. I cannot comment on that. I do not think anyone in this House can properly comment on that. It seems a good area at which to target a cut-back because there has not been a proper debate or an impartial investigation. The Minister appointed loggers, axemen, to decide where the cut-backs are to be made. We see $15.5 million being cut from network programming, Mr. Speaker. What does that mean? It means that in the areas where Canadians can avail themselves of a dozen TV channels, there is a $15.5 million cut across the board. We see a $10.4 million cut from regional programming. What does that mean? It means that in those parts of this country where people cannot avail themselves of a dozen or two dozen different stations or channels, in those parts of the country where the only available network is CBC Radio or television, $10.4 million is slashed.

In the case of the riding of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), it does not mean that they are going to lose two or three jobs at CBG Gander; it means CBG Gander is closing outright. It means that the people who live in the great community of Gander in the area of Notre Dame Bay, the fishermen who depend upon the CBC to be heard, to get weather forecasts, cannot do so any longer. On the northeast coast of Newfoundland, the great historic fishing area of Newfoundland, the people no longer have access, except by long distance telephone, to any means of communication with people outside of their own rural—and I emphasize "isolated"—communities. That is what it means, Mr. Speaker. The $10.4 million cut means that for the people of Labrador West in the Towns of Labrador City and Wabush, where the Iron Ore Co. of Canada is located—which used to be run by a gentleman who has now gained a new distinction in this country—jobs have been lost. The towns are flat on their back and the local economy has been crushed. It means they have not only lost the Iron Ore Co. of Canada they have not only seen a devastating blow struck at Wabush Mines, they have not only lost their jobs and their hope and dignity, but they cannot tell anyone about it anymore. And I am talking about the area where the former President of IOCC, Mr. Mulroney, used to—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Order.

Mr. Tobin: The present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) used to manage affairs, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Copps: He didn't manage them.

Mr. Tobin: Mismanaged or managed affairs, Mr. Speaker. But these people can no longer be heard. I do not want to be partisan, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: You wouldn't know how to be partisan.

Mr. Tobin: I really think those Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker, should stop and appreciate the fact that in a province of 500,000 souls, a province about to embark on new prosperity—as the Prime Minister and the Premier told us a few days ago—and which is about to explode into the 20th century, into the mainstream of Canadian society, we in Newfoundland have seen dramatic cut-backs in regional programming, dramatic cut-backs in our ability to express ourselves to our fellow Canadians, and we are concerned that we may not be able to share the message, the dream and the success story which is about to unfold—if we believe the Premier of Newfoundland, God forbid. These cut-backs should not go ahead without proper consultation, without proper consideration here in the richness of Parliament Hill and the splendour of the House of Commons, without knowing how the cut-backs will impact on the loneliest fisherman on the bill of Cape St. George on the Port-au-Port Peninsula.

• (1750)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, as all Members know, certainly we on this side of the House have no intention of being partisan in the questions we ask. The Hon. Member has outlined very succinctly the difficulties with respect to the isolation faced by the fishermen of Newfoundland and how important it is for them to get signals from the outside. However, as an Ontarian who has often enjoyed the political commentary that we hear from Newfoundland on CBC Radio, I wonder if the Hon. Member could elaborate on what role the CBC has played, not only in getting information to Newfoundland but in getting the message of Newfoundland politicians out to the country at large.

I have often enjoyed the turn of phrase which has been utilized by my hon. colleague here today. I think this is a hallmark of debate and discussion in the legislature in Newfoundland. Certainly having had the pleasure in the past of hearing one of the great orators of all time in the person of Joey Smallwood, I think that kind of message has been disseminated largely through the radio programs of the CBC. Could the Hon. Member comment on whether he feels the CBC has played any role in getting Newfoundland's message out to other Canadians?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for her questions. They are most appropriate. There are two stories to be told. Not only has the CBC allowed Newfoundlanders the opportunity, which opportunity they have of course taken advantage of, to ensure that the threads which make up the Canadian mosaic include Newfoundland threads, but it has also allowed us to provide our own unique and distinctive flavour to this mosaic. As well, Newfoundlanders, because of the CBC facilities, have had a chance to communicate with each other on the Island. I think we often forget that until 1965 the people of Newfoundland were not even connected by highway. Until 15 years ago there were still large parts of the northeastern coast which had no road connections. In my own riding, the great northern peninsula has been accessible by road only in the last 15 years. So the role of the CBC has been important in terms of sharing our thoughts and views with our fellow Canadians, as well as those other things which make us distinct and unique and, I hope, interesting.

The CBC has also provided Newfoundlanders with the chance to talk to each other. Some great and very popular cultural organizations have grown out of the facilities provided by the CBC. I think of the wonderful Grand Band in Newfoundland and some theatre groups like Codco and Rising Tide Theatre, one of which was here just a few years ago with the play Joey which sold out at the National Arts Centre. Incidentally, this is another organization subjected to severe cut-backs as outlined by the current Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse).

I said earlier that as a Newfoundlander I am not inward looking about the effects of these cut-backs on my province only. I know the story which can be told about the cut-backs in Newfoundland, the effect on fishermen and people in the forest industry, as well as the thousands of fishermen on boats at sea who depend upon the fishermen's broadcast every night to stay in touch with their families, receive messages and find out what the weather is going to be. I know that story can be told all across this country and I do not think we have taken a sufficiently serious and hard look at what the impact will be before we rush ahead with simply cutting dollars. We have also wrongly been comparing CBC service with that being provided by private networks. The private networks are wonderful, God bless them, but they are not in St. Anthony, not on the bill of Cape St. George, and they are not in the Western Arctic. CBC has that mandate and it is expensive programming to provide.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I also wish the Hon. Member, our communications critic, would elaborate on the role of the CBC. During the debate on the Constitution, and the decision by Nova Scotia, and the support given by the former Prime Minister . . . Newfoundland's decision and the support shown by the former Liberal Minister . . . and I think we should remember here in the House that it was always the Progressive Conservative Party that was against Newfoundland joining Confederation.

Could the Hon. Member be more specific and say whether the CBC has played a role since Newfoundland decided to join Confederation with the support of our former Premier, Mr. Smallwood and the Liberal Party in Newfoundland? Was the CBC instrumental in enhancing the feeling of the people of Newfoundland that they are still part of Canada, this great country of ours? And will this feeling be affected by the Conservative Government's decision to make cuts in the CBC's budget?

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that the CBC has been there with respect to any historical event. It has provided as wide and diverse news coverage as possible. The CBC has served as a vehicle for national unity in this country, and in fact within provincial boundaries. However, I would not want to give the impression, because I have been the defender of the CBC today, that I have always been happy with the CBC. It would have been an amazing thing to have applied to my arm two or three days before the last federal election something to check my blood pressure while I was watching the CBC polls being broadcast across this country. As a Liberal candidate in the great riding of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe, it is a very disconcerting thing to see your demise forecast even before the grand event took place. I would not want to suggest in any way, shape or form that I am a blind advocate of everything the CBC has ever said or done and that they have always been right. Of course they have been wrong on occasion and I am here to prove it.

Unlike the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), Mr. Speaker, whose only interest in the CBC seems to be to save the jobs of highly paid management people—at least that was one of the messages I took from his comments a few minutes ago—I am more concerned about the real benefits—

Mr. Skelly: A point of order. Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member's remarks are not only inaccurate and completely outrageous but he has misled the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that that is not a point of order, it is debate. The Hon. Member has 30 seconds in which to complete his comments.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I hope the time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I gave you that in the 30 seconds.

Mr. Tobin: No, one minute. I started—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McDermid: Are you questioning the Speaker?

Mr. Tobin: No, I am not questioning—I have the greatest respect for this particular Speaker. In fact, there is no gentleman I respect more.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would just like to say the Hon. Member has 15 seconds.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, if I only have 15 seconds, let me say that another reason for the existence of the CBC and a benefit of the CBC is that it can show all Canadians the fairness, great eloquence and articulation of one of the finest men who ever sat in the Chair in this House of Commons, namely, Mr. Speaker!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the time for questions and comments has been terminated. It is now debate and I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud).

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker . . . First of all, could I have the Chair's attention? Mr. Speaker—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like the Hon. Member to realize that according to the Standing Orders all speeches will now be of 10 minutes' duration.

Would the House like to call it six o'clock?

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, am I to understand that, whenever the Government decides to call Bill C-20 again, the Hon. Member will have the floor first and he will be allowed a full 10 minutes, since he has not spoken yet?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, the Hon. Member is correct.

It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, February 13, 1985, consideration of the motion of Mr. Masse that Bill C-20, an Act to Amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act.

I must say I find it interesting and most gratifying to speak to a Bill initially tabled and introduced in the House of Commons by the Liberal Government in the spring of 1984. The Government at the time and its Minister had worked very hard to promote the development of our communications industry and its specific role in serving Canadians.

Its role is, of course, to promote the development of Canadian culture across the country while considering, and this is very important, Canada's cultural diversity.

On the basis of this experience, the Liberals proposed in Bill C-20 that the Governor in Council have the right to issue certain directives to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission. This is in fact repeated by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) in clause 14.1. However, the difference, and there is a vast difference between the former and the present Governments, is that the previous Government had won the confidence of the industry and the CRTC by initiating legislation and bills aimed at expanding communications in Canada. The problem is that today, the Party opposite does not have that expertise in communications, nor does it have the confidence of the communications industry.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is very difficult to win the confidence of the industry when the Government has announced an unconscionable number of cutbacks, and nothing else. I am thinking of the budgetary cutbacks affecting cultural agencies such as the National Film Board, the CRTC, the National Arts Centre and the Canada Council.

As far as the Canada Council is concerned, the Minister of Communications has decided to close the Council's Atlantic office located in Moncton, New Brunswick. I am sure the Minister must have received, as I did, a number of letters from the Conseil de promotion et de diffusion de la culture in New Brunswick, expressing their dissatisfaction. Mr. Speaker, I must explain that this organization regroups 14 associations directly involved in promoting and disseminating culture. I would add that our part of the country is relatively sparsely populated and our culture, the Acadian culture, is that of a minority. If we did not have those cultural organizations we would lose contact with other groups in Canada and we would be unable to make our culture known in other parts of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister realized that by closing the office in Moncton, he was in fact cutting off artists in Atlantic Canada from those in the rest of the country. If our Atlantic artists are to make a career in the arts, they must go outside the Atlantic provinces and make a name for themselves in the rest of Canada. By closing the Canada Council office, the Minister is compounding the isolation of the Maritimes and their people. Mr. Speaker, if we consider that the key role of the Department of Communications is to promote Canadian culture across the country, let me tell you that the Government is not going in the right direction.

That is not all, however, since the Minister has decided to proceed with further, equally disastrous, cutbacks. For instance, the new Government slashed $7 million off budgets to promote cultural projects. And, of course, they keep chanting: Hurrah for Canadian culture! Next, we will be asking: What Canadian culture? At the rate it is being stifled, we will soon be hard-pressed to maintain our own culture throughout the country.

As a matter of fact, I am afraid I denote a growing trend towards the isolation of the various cultures. This comment is strengthened by the fact that the party in office has pared the budget of the Crown corporation whose original mandate was to upgrade Canadian culture throughout the country. I wonder how the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will be able to live up to its mandate now that its operations have been curtailed by $85 million. One cannot talk about reduced funding without mentioning lay-offs in the same breath. Most lays-offs involved the main centres, but the fact remains that back home, in the Maritimes, quite a few employees of the Crown corporation lost their job. Need I emphasize that reduced staff in administration and especially in programming has a direct impact on the overall operations of the Crown corporation.

In a region such as ours, the Acadian region, it is essential that a corporation such as the CBC be in a position to operate without restraints. First, to us the CBC means a Canadian or national presence but, more than that, it maintains the French fact and the French culture in the Maritimes through its French network, Radio-Canada. We do have other francophone media in the region, Mr. Speaker, but not as many as we would wish. The CBC cutbacks gave rise to immediate reaction from organizations such as the Fédération des francophones hors Québec and Nova Scotia's Fédération des Acadiens. Quite rightly, those associations spoke up against the cutbacks.

People have always praised the CBC for its contribution to cultural minorities. It was Radio-Canada that opened the first francophone TV stations in the Maritimes and, to this day, there are still no private television stations broadcasting French programs in the Maritimes—only Radio-Canada does. Most local programs and productions originate from Radio-Canada.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about consultation. They used to say that there would be no cutbacks without consultation first, but I must point out that again those were empty words.

In concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, still on the issue of consultation, I happen to have here an interesting note about—

[English]

The National Director of the Canada Council, Brian Anthony, told reporters that the arts community was never consulted about the budget reductions.

[Translation]

And finally, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the fact that the party across the floor is still busy making further cutbacks in the field of communications, again without consulting the groups involved. I can only decry this unilateral approach and I am firmly convinced that leaders in the communications industry will never have confidence in a Government which shows so little concern for their industry.

• (1115)

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I was anxious to speak in the House today because in my riding Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, we have a very specific problem that concerns the CRTC. About three years ago, a community group came to my office with a community radio project called Radio communautaire du nord de Montréal. In a big city like Montreal, people who stay home like to hear local news. It is like a local newspaper. In my riding there are four local newspapers, and I know my constituents would rather read these papers than the big Montreal dailies.

With this in mind, I agreed to support the community project I mentioned earlier because it covers about five or six ridings in Montreal North, not just my own. I gave the group a "Canada Works 1983-84" of $17,292. I gave them a "Summer Canada 1984-85" of $6,424. They also received a grant from the Department of the Secretary of State in 1984, for $5,700. I also obtained a "Section 38" for the fall of 1984, for $11,000. Mr. Speaker, the point I am trying to make is that it is particularly important to my riding that this project be approved by the CRTC.

Radio communautaire du nord de Montréal has held several neighbourhood meetings. It launched a leadership campaign and received many programming requests. It has concluded its viability study and sent its application to the CRTC. They were ready to submit their brief to the CRTC last fall, but, not surprisingly, considering what happened on September 4 last year, everything was postponed. Last week, I met Mr. Guy Jolicœur, the project's promoter, who informed me he was very disappointed after receiving a letter from the CRTC advising him that his appointment for submitting his brief had been postponed for one year. This kind of delay is intolerable.

Mr. Speaker, my riding has 10 homes for the elderly, and 12.1 per cent of these people are over 65, while 23.4 per cent are between 45 and 64. I also have disabled people in my riding. Among the 10 per cent that are disabled, many are blind. It is a wellknown fact that people with this kind of disability listen to the radio all day and all evening, since they cannot watch television and few are able to read braille.

When I look at the cuts announced in the paper issued last November by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), I find that $75 million have been taken away from the CBC's communications department; $7.5 million from the cultural agencies; $7 million from cultural projects, and $10 million from the CBC's high technology equipment budget. Finally, and this affects my own community project, $22 million have been taken away from the broadcasting licensing department.

I have attempted to give a concrete example of the frustration and aggravation experienced by a small community which had already given clear indication of its needs. I hope the Government will reconsider its decision, Mr. Speaker, because I am sure quite a number of other small communities across Canada are just as disappointed as I am.

I feel I have a responsibility to speak for the handicapped who will be severely affected by Government cutbacks in the communications area.

I was on the task force which considered the needs of the handicapped during the 32nd Parliament. At that time we had hearings in 18 cities all across Canada; we received 600 briefs and produced the "Obstacle" Report, in which we brought forward 130 recommendations. The fourth chapter dealt with information and communications and contained 14 recommendations having to do with the needs of the handicapped in the area of communications.

Mr. Speaker, one out of ten Canadians is handicapped, and that means 2.4 million Canadians. It would be urgent for the Government to develop a national policy on their needs in the area of communications. One of the recommendations was that community radio stations should allocate time for the broadcasting of regional and local news. This is something altogether different from national news.

Recommendation 54 was that the CRTC should develop programs with subtitles, provided of course that a broadcasting permit be obtained within a reasonable time. Licensing would be conditional on the addition of subtitles.

Will the $10 million cutback in the CBC's high technology equipment allocation hinder the development of the new subtitling system? Present day technology now allows cable viewers using a special decoding device to watch information on the screen.

The spokesmen for the handicapped consider that method of communications as being essential to cope with a wide range of needs of the hard of hearing in the area of information and leisure. We should keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, that all statistics point to the fact that we will have to serve an aging population in the future, and that means an increasing number of persons with hearing problems, our older people being more numerous. In 1985, the average age is said to be 72 for men and 74 for women.

Another recommendation affecting the daily life of all our people with hearing problems is the prohibitive cost of long-distance calls. Because the method for receiving the message is slow, due to the fact that the message must be typed and received on a small screen, the Government should ask provincial governments and telephone companies as a priority to apply a rate reduction as soon as possible. I must say that Bell Canada has already accepted this, but the country is served by other smaller telephone companies.

I should like to touch on the question of the CBC regional service. In 1977, less than 10 years ago, the CBC was allowed to set up facilities in a city of the Lower St. Lawrence called Rimouski. How surprising! The entire population had to get involved beginning with Mrs. Éva Côté, then president of the Liberal Association and former Member for the constituency of Rimouski. She worked in close co-operation with Jeanne Sauvé, then Minister of Communications. Some eight years later, the CJBR station in Rimouski is facing cuts and lay-offs. With 45,000 residents, Rimouski is an important city. Indeed, it is considered as the economic center of the Lower St. Lawrence.

One has to wonder whether the Government opposite is not moving backwards. I could go on and on but the Speaker is now indicating that I should very soon put an end to my remarks.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention that I am concerned about our Canadian artists. They are also affected by this legislation. Without programs such as Les beaux dimanches, there would have been no opportunity to appreciate the works of Marcel Dubé, hear Maureen Forester, or see Karen Kain dance. Some people such as Toller Cranston, Louise Marleau, Anne Murray and many others would be known only abroad. Some 20 years ago, all our Quebec artists had to go into exile in France to launch their career. I will not speak of Rich Little nor of Paul Anka and all the others who went to the United States to become famous. We are pleased and very proud to say that all those people are Canadians. They belong to our culture. I think that it is a good reason enough to oppose that Bill.

• (1125)

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment if I may.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately, comments are not allowed at this stage of the debate on the Bill.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-20 relating to the CRTC. It will do a number of things. In particular, it will give the Government the power to direct the CRTC to implement government policy. As we are living in a very rapidly changing world in telecommunications, especially as it relates to satellite communications, to the changing role of cable television and of direct broadcast, the Government really needs this power.

When we look at many rural areas in the country, we see a situation developing where local television broadcasting stations have a very difficult time being financially successful. Often they are owned by the local cable network which carries 10 or 12 other channels—American ones, other Canadian ones and so on. Naturally the viewers want to watch these channels. Without a cable fee each month to subscribers, the local television station broadcasting off air would have a very difficult time making it financially. We have to have policies, and the Government has to be in the position to make policies so that we can maintain local television stations and ensure that they have the power to raise money through cable systems.

In the outlying areas of the country we see a twin stick operation in many cases, where local television stations carry CBC and CTV network broadcasting; for example, we see that in Sault Ste. Marie and in places like Sudbury. It took a few years for the CRTC to recognize the necessity for the cable and local television broadcasting facilities being tied together.

In a sense we have that situation because without it local television stations could not be viable economically.

Some people would say that carrying CBC, CTV, Global and the other networks does not matter. However, I think it matters for us to have locally produced programs. They increase Canadian content. They give us local information about the area or district which they serve. It is very important for the Government to continue to adopt policies which ensure strong local broadcasting capacities for our stations.

One of the great concerns of many Hon. Members, at least on this side of the House, is just what policies the Government will adopt. In the recent economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), we find serious cut-backs in all manner of the arts. With the new power being provided in this Bill, we have to wonder just what policies the Government will announce. We have already seen the following cut-backs: $75 million in the CBC, $1.5 million in the National Film Board, $1.5 million in the CRTC, $1 million in the NAC, $7.5 million in the Canada Council and $7 million in the communications department.

I am especially conscious of these cut-backs because I had the opportunity to work in the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee last spring on C-24, the Crown Corporations Bill. At that time the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) was the critic for culture and the arts. We heard very strong speeches in favour of the arts and in favour of arm's length activity with the arts. We were able to design that Bill so that in the end the independence of the artistic community and the grants to the Canada Council were maintained. However, we have to worry about the strong statements made during the election campaign with regard to arm's length dealings with the arts and with the strong financial support to the arts when we reconcile them with the speeches of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) here in November and the interviews he has given, as well as the cut-backs which took place in the artistic community announced in the economic statement of early November. For example, in August, in response to a question from the Canadian Conference of the Arts, the PC Government replied:

> We are committed to maintaning federal funding for the agencies and councils in line with inflation.

It does not say anything about the $75 million cut-back that came about three months later for the CBC, the cut-backs to the National Film Board and National Arts Centre. We wonder what happened between August, 1984 and November, 1984.

In reply to another questionnaire, the PC Government replied:

> We are committed to real growth in federal contributions to this sector.

A few months later we saw massive cut-backs taking place in the artistic community totalling $121 million. In response to another Canadian Conference of the Arts questionnaire in August, 1984, the Government stated:

> Our commitment to improving the quality as well as the quantity of employment in the cultural sector is firm.

After the economic statement of November 8, we found that the CBC was forced to lay off 1,100 people Therefore, we have to wonder whether these commitments mean anything.

We were very impressed with the interventions of the Hon. Member for Rosedale at the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee meetings last year in support of the arts and its independence. How that had changed by November of this year! In an interview with The Globe and Mail on November 29, the Minister of Communications said that he wanted to rethink the arm's length principle and that his Government was moving rapidly to apply direct political hands in the affairs of the CBC.

It is interesting that when the plans were being made for cuts in the CBC of some $75 million, that was not done by the CBC alone. Three outside consultants were hired to decide the fate of the CBC. We are very concerned about where the Government's policy is now compared to before it came to power.

The CBC provides a unique service, not only to the country at large but to various regions. The CBC broadcast out of Sudbury covers all the communities in north-eastern Ontario. Even though those communities are all considered to be in one geographical area, they have very little ties except through the CBC. They receive feeds from the Canadian Press, Broadcast News or whatever, but the CBC is the only organization which ties all of these communities together in a regular CBC radio broadcast mechanism.

I hope the Government will take these concerns into account and develop policies for the future, not undercut and slash the artistic communities and essential services like the CBC as was done in November last.

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, Bill C-20 will help us to make things better.

Hon. Members opposite criticize the Progressive Conservative Party for the cut-backs of $75 million at the CBC, but we must point out, and all Canadians should know this, the rationale for these cut-backs was to put an end to the shameful waste of money at the CBC. This is the truth, Mr. Speaker. We should not be afraid to say so.

People today want to defend the artists. I have been a member of the Union des artistes for over 25 years, Mr. Speaker, and I can tell those who want to defend the artists today that these people have been penalized for over 20 years by the CBC. This corporation helps about 40 people. All Canadians watch television! Where are our young musicians? Where are our young dancers? Where are our great Canadian singers? They have to leave Canada to earn a living.

They now say that they want to defend the great Canadian culture. Shame on them! Shame on the Members opposite who weakened this great culture for 20 years to help their friends, who have always been the same people. You also watch television, Mr. Speaker. You will agree with me that it resembles a game of musical chairs. The programs may change, but the people remain the same. Our old actors are no longer working, Mr. Speaker. It is always the same guy, who is given a wig and told: You will play this old man. At the same time, our old actors, who have a lot of experience, are completely forgotten. And what about the young musicians coming out of our academies of music, Mr. Speaker? What will they do? They will do what they have been doing for the last 20 years: They will play their instruments in their own kitchens.

Such is the result of the former administration under the Liberal Party.

Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party is in charge now and we want to correct the situation and recognize the true worth of our artists. We also want to give them a chance to really come out and to develop and promote our great Canadian culture in this country. This is the truth, Mr. Speaker. We have seen many strange things in the past. Some people today for the sake of a cause are describing the Progressive Conservative Party as terrible and sleazy because CBC's budget was cut by $75 million. However, the truth must come out. We have no jurisdiction over the CBC. You know that, Mr. Speaker. There is a man at the helm called Mr. Juneau and he is the one who decided to snap off radio antennas across Canada. He asked no one for permission. He does not want to follow instructions. He was told to stop wasting money. There are people at the CBC who have been there for 20 years. They have never produced anything and they have five or six people working for them. They are producers who have never produced anything. It is in such instances that we have asked that expenses be trimmed by $75 million.

I can give you another example. At one time, it was decided to produce a program called La course au bonheur at a cost of $1.5 million but this program was never shown. Strangely enough, Mr. Juneau made a statement and said: Well, we were wrong, we made a mistake; it was a miscalculation. We shall try to improve the situation.

Even the Auditor General of Canada has said that CBC had the worst management. This is a fact, and I think that it is important to support legislation such as Bill C-20 to correct the situation and to restore, in the interests of our Canadian artists and all the Canadian people, the true cultural role of the CBC.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Considering the enthusiasm shown by my colleague the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers), Mr. Speaker, I could not keep silent; I should like, therefore, to deal for a few minutes with Bill C-20.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill C-20 is essentially the same as the one the Hon. Francis Fox, the previous Minister of Communications, had introduced on February 8, 1984. At the time, Mr. Francis Fox, the previous Minister stated, and I quote: "This bill would provide more definite guidelines for the regulations the CRTC might implement in order to ensure that the broadcasting system contributes to an affirmative representation of women and other groups".

I have no major objections to the measure which the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has introduced, and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister will come forward at a later date with the other measures which were part of Hon. Francis Fox' Bill C-20.

I warn the Minister that he must keep his promise of holding consultations. He should really hold consultations, not merely announce them ... We hear the Chairman of the Canada Council is experiencing much difficulty trying to set up a meeting with the Minister.

My colleague the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve has launched an attack against the CBC and its Chairman, but he has forgotten a very important thing, namely, that the Hon. Minister of Communications had appointed a troika to carry out a study and investigate the affairs of the CBC, and that it was that troika which suggested or decided not to make cutbacks. I think Mr. Juneau has administered the CBC well and it is thanks to the CBC if some groups are well represented in the French Canadian culture.

In a modern society such as ours, communications are of utmost importance. The impact of a televised broadcast can be assessed. Very positive programs have a positive impact. As evidence of this, I should like to refer to the visit John Paul II paid to Canada. All those who wanted to see the Holy Father were able to do so, just as they were able to see Her Majesty the Queen and witness major events. I will never forget Prince Charles and Lady Diana's televised wedding; it was a major event indeed, the like of which we could only expect to see in movies. Yet, it was for real. The impact of such great events is positive. But disturbing events can have a major impact too. In that context, Mr. Speaker, control over our system of communications becomes all the more important. My colleague who acts as critic for the Liberal Party in the field of communications has already pledged our support for this Bill, but we hope that in future the Government will continue the work already begun by the Liberal Party. Mr. Speaker, I thank you for letting me say a few words at the last minute.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Scott)?

Mr. Prud'homme: We will have more speakers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I know the Parliamentary Secretary is aware of the fact that he could speak and close the debate. Is that what he wishes? If so, he would have to have the unanimous consent of the House. If not, I will recognize other speakers after his speech.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, there does not seem to be general agreement to give unanimous consent—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: Please!

[English]

Mr. Dick: There is on this side. Trying to stall again?

Mr. Prud'homme: May I kindly remind my counterpart that the Bill would have passed last night if it had not been for the rudeness of some of his colleagues. May I put that on the record?

Mr. Dick: You broke an agreement.

Mr. Prud'homme: I want to be on record to say that the Bill would have passed last night if it had not been for the rudeness of some of his colleagues. I am speaking to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Scott) and he knows about what I am saying. I am not naming names but the Hon. Member knows to whom I refer.

Mr. Dick: But the Liberals broke an agreement.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. If the Hon. Member says that we broke an agreement, may I remind him that we put up as many speakers as—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Mr. Prud'homme: I just want to say in response to the question that you asked, Mr. Speaker, that the debate has been very pleasant this morning. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is about to speak. If the Hon. Member would have listened, he would have heard that I asked that the question be put. It seems to me that he does not follow the debate.

Mr. Dick: I heard that and he wanted to speak.

Mr. Prud'homme: He was not in the House so what do you want us to do? Do you want another speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Prud'homme: Now that the Hon. Member has returned, we will listen to him. If he will make the kind of speech that we expect, then that will be the end.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I understand that there is no unanimous consent for closing debate. Therefore, I recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications, I rise to support the Minister's overview of Bill C-20. At the outset, I would like to thank Hon. Members on all sides of the House for the quality of debate that has ensued in recent days on second reading of Bill C-20. To the Minister, myself and my colleagues on this side of the House, the contributions made in the debate up to this point in time have been very useful and valuable and will contribute significantly to the committee stage to which I think all Members of the House would like to see this Bill referred as quickly as possible. As you know, Mr. Speaker, this Bill covers and awful lot of ground and there is much detail to be covered in the committee stage as Members assess the impact of Bill C-20.

The Bill proposes to reduce the regulatory burden in communications. It proposes to allow the Government to set policy directions for the CRTC and telecommunications and broadcasting policy while maintaining necessary procedural safeguards.

With regard to the Broadcasting Act, the Bill proposes to create policy objectives that give the CRTC a mandate to deal with abusive programming, and I will return to that in a moment. The Bill proposes to reduce the burden of the broadcasting regulations on the private sector. We in this House have raised a number of questions about Bill C-20. I want to assure the House that at the earliest possible moment we will get this Bill into committee and review all of the questions which have been posed by Hon. Members. In just ten minutes I do not have time to deal with all of them. One feels something like a mosquito in a nudist colony; there is so much ground to cover, one has no idea where to begin.

I will try, Mr. Speaker, to make three quick points on behalf of my Minister. Bill C-20, as I pointed out yesterday to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), is deeply rooted in the thinking of the previous Liberal administration. That is to say, the Lambert Royal Commission and a special parliamentary committee on regulatory reform became an integral part of the previous Government's broadcasting strategy as it affected directions to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission. So in effect we are doing a rerun of our predecessor's policy.

The second point is that it is about time that Parliament dealt with the whole area of sexually abusive broadcasting, indeed, abusive broadcasting of any kind. This matter was the subject of a special subcommittee during the previous Parliament, the result of which was a unanimous all-Party series of recommendations. At this stage, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for her passionate dedication to that particular subcommittee. The untiring energy and effort she put into that subcommittee, of which I was the only Conservative Member at the time, will go a long way to making some very important changes in the whole area of abusive programming. This is one area which Bill C-20 intends to deal with head on.

The third thrust, or the theme, which I could suggest to my colleagues is that Bill C-20 is indeed complex in terms of its impact on the CRTC and on the entire broadcasting industry. As a broadcast journalist by profession, I am the first to admit that the nature of this legislation does raise questions as to the role of the Government in terms of what we Canadians can see and hear. We must come to grips with the most fundamental question of all in a free and democratic society. How far is the Government prepared to go in determining what we Canadians can see and hear? Where must Governments stop if our citizens cry interference in their right to watch and hear anything they want?

When people talk "open skies", they mean deregulation and the right to pick out of the air anything they want. How realistic is it, Mr. Speaker, for Parliamentarians to try to regulate the clouds? If "open skies" means the erosion or destruction of the Canadian broadcasting system as we know it, and ultimately a Canadian cultural identity as we treasure it, then where and when does the Government step in? To what extent can or should the Government, this Progressive Conservative Government or any Government, tell Canadians what they should or should not watch or hear?

These are very big questions, Mr. Speaker, and it is up to us as Parliamentarians to try to answer them. We cannot do so in ten minutes here or even in this second reading debate, but again, with luck, when we get Hon. Members and witnesses before the committee on Bill C-20, we will be able to address the concerns about the role of the federal Government in communications policy in that committee.

There are a couple of matters with which I want to deal very quickly in the time remaining. I was impressed by the intervention during the second reading debate by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) regarding the CBC's treatment of Newfoundland's second oldest radio station, CBG Gander. Both the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate and our colleague on this side of the House, the Hon. Member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Johnson), while remarkably temperate in their remarks, are vigorously supported by their colleagues on the government side. It is a very important matter to the whole of northeastern Newfoundland.

Other Hon. Members have raised comments about the effect of CBC cut-backs on their various areas, but at this time I will only refer to this particular case. I find the CBG Gander situation to be of real concern when I learn that for a savings of $75,000 a year, as the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate pointed out, CBG Gander will be cut off from the people of northeastern Newfoundland. The CBC in the meantime has spent at least $99,500 to redecorate and recarpet the tenth floor of its executive offices on Dorchester Avenue in Montreal. I think those kinds of situations need to be looked at a little more carefully and I intend to raise more fully in committee my concerns along those lines. I thank the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate for pointing out this discrepancy.

I would like to deal just briefly with the sexually abusive and abusive broadcasting segment because this is a matter which is dear to my heart. There are some advantages to spending some time on the opposition side of the House because one gets the chance to deal with issues and make strong recommendations in committees and subcommittees. I believe one of the most important issues I have ever dealt with since being elected to Parliament is the question of sexually abusive broadcasting and violence in broadcasting.

I believe this is something that the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture has to come to grips with in terms of a new broadcasting policy under this Government. I am one of the first to go along with suggestions made by Hon. Members such as the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood, who pointed out that, notwithstanding the provisions of Section 3, we should be talking about the dignity and the quality of all people. It is a good suggestion, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that the Hon. Member will raise it before the Standing Committee. I have already drawn it to my Minister's attention.

Again, may I thank Hon. Members on behalf of the Minister of Communications for their worth-while and valuable contributions to this second reading debate on Bill C-20. I believe there is a feeling in the House of Commons now that we would like to see this Bill referred to the Standing Committee as quickly as possible and, Mr. Speaker, I will be there along with my colleagues to deal in a very meaningful and responsive way with the new broadcasting legislation in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Like so many of my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to have taken part in this interesting debate. At the request of our party critic, I will make a few remarks, first to tell the Parliamentary Secretary that we have just heard positive comments. We commend him, his criticism is constructive. Let us hope that the mood of the other Government Members will be just as encouraging for us. In a spirit of co-operation and good will, we end the debate and let the consideration of Bill C-20 follow its normal course.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Masse, seconded by Mr. Scott, moved that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Radio Act, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

PENSION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that Bill C-28, an Act to amend the Pension Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time on a point of order inasmuch as I have had consultations with the Opposition House Leaders concerning the dealings by the House with this particularly important piece of legislation.

As Your Honour will understand by reading the Bill, this legislation, and the benefits payable under the provisions of the Bill, are effective upon passage. Accordingly, there have been preliminary indications of all-Party support for the general principles of this Bill. In fairness, Sir, I have received the agreement of the New Democratic Party to allow the Bill to pass through all stages with one speaker. I was to get a response from the Liberal Party. I understood that they were receptive and that it was a question of dealing with their critic. I was wondering if it would be possible to have agreement to deal with this Bill through all stages so the matter can be referred to the Senate today.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, in a spirit of co-operation, it is the intention of the Liberal Party to let the Bill go through all stages today in the expectation that, as soon as the Bill is passed, the payments will go ahead immediately thereafter.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to confirm what my House Leader has already indicated to the Government House Leader, that my Party is extremely desirous of seeing this Bill go through the House today and be referred to the Senate, possibly by one o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Am I to understand, therefore, that there is unanimous consent for the Government House Leader's proposal?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commence by thanking the opposition Parties for agreeing to pass this Bill through all stages today. We all agree this Bill will do a great deal for veterans who deserve this kind of treatment, and putting it through today will enable it to become effective very quickly. I know the veterans of this country will appreciate the attitude expressed by all Members of the House in their willingness to see this Bill pass quickly. I thank the two Members who have spoken on behalf of their Party for their generous and co-operative attitude which has been expressed today.

The proposed legislation, Mr. Speaker, which I have the honour to present to the House contains five amendments to the Pension Act which will be of benefit to veterans and their dependants. The first amendment deals with the annual increase in the basic rate of pension. It has been increased each year by the percentage increase of the Consumer Price Index. This amendment will provide that in future the rate of pension will be increased each year by whichever is greater, the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index or the percentage increase of the average wage of five selected categories of public servants. This change will remedy a situation which for years has been very unfair to veterans because the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index has often lagged behind the percentage increase gained by these public servants. In 1984 this difference amounted to $611. This change will benefit 90,000 pensioners plus 51,000 spouses, children and orphans.

The second amendment will continue a disability pension at the married rate for 12 months following the death of a pensioner. The reduction to the single rate now begins at the end of the month in which the pensioner dies. This change will remove the shock of an immediately reduced income at a time when the spouse is under the emotional stress of such a grievous personal loss. This change is in line with a provision of the War Veterans Allowance Act which has been in place for years. Some 6,000 widows and widowers are expected to benefit from this change. The third amendment will extend the same right to survivors of pensioners who had been receiving attendance and/or exceptional incapacity allowance. Three hundred widows and widowers will benefit from this change which can only be described as very generous.

The fourth amendment deals with the Pension Review Board, the final stop in the pension process and which is currently facing an eight-month backlog of cases. The legislation will provide for the appointment of up to four additional members to the Board. The appointments will be for six months' duration and as required. This provision will guarantee to our veterans and to the Board that the Department will be equipped to meet the challenge of speeding up our examination processes in every possible way.

The fifth amendment will permit pension entitlement boards to be composed of two or three commissioners, as opposed to the present necessity of having three. This should allow these boards to process a third more cases each year. More importantly, this change opens up the whole question of what happens on a split decision. Past practice has been to turn down the veteran's application whenever a split decision occurred. Once the legislation is passed, every split decision will go in favour of the veteran.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of this legislation. Every amendment is good news for veterans and their families. Almost as importantly, these very long overdue changes have come about within five months of our taking office. They demonstrate the Government's commitment to those who served our country so well, and they demonstrate this Government's determination to help those Canadians who need our assistance.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, as the Official Opposition critic for veterans affairs, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-28, a Bill introduced by the responsible Minister and containing amendments to the Pension Act.

Mr. Speaker, first of all I am very glad that the amendments reflect a generous measure of compassion for those who served their country during the last three armed conflicts, in 1914-18, 1939-45 and the Korean War. During these three wars, many Canadians were killed on the battlefield; 66,000 in 1914-18, 44,000 in 1939-45 and 576 during the Korean conflict. They all left behind dependents and families, and many came back physically disabled as a result of wounds received in action.

Perhaps I may recall the words spoken by Sir Winston Churchill in a message to his countrymen during the last war, and I quote:

"Never have so many owed so much to so few".

These words are particularly appropriate today, because that small band of valiant soldiers who defended the principle of freedom so well over the entire world is becoming increasingly smaller today. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am particularly happy with the amendments to the Pension Act made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) for the benefit of those who deserve to receive far more from their country.

The Bill is another in a series of measures brought in to amend the Pension Act, since 1969 and 1970, especially, and continuing, annually, up to 1984. Mr. Speaker, these reforms were made mainly following recommendations by the Woods Report, which I think provided the stimulus for bringing about amendments to the Pension Act with respect to allowances or pensions paid to veterans and their dependents, so much so that it was said, and I quote:

• (1210)

[English]

The years since 1970 have been the most important ones in the history of pension legislation. During this period sweeping changes were made to the Pension Act to provide Canadian veterans and their dependants with benefits that are not exceeded by any other country in the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this explains very well that the eight amendments to Bill C-28 complement the work already started with the Woods Report, and also reflect the implementation of some of the recommendations of the Marin Committee. Although that Committee has not been allowed to complete its mandate for reasons of timing, this nonetheless allowed the Chairman of that Committee, at the express request of the present Minister, to submit a tentative report dealing with 62 major points which Mr. Justice Marin has decided to consider before giving his answers.

Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, part of those answers are included in Bill C-28, and I hope that the other, unresolved questions will be considered more in depth by the Department in order to bring further remedies eventually.

We should keep in mind the work done by the predecessors of the present Minister. One name comes to my mind, that of the former Minister, the Hon. Dan McDonald, who was seriously wounded overseas during the war. His memory is recalled in the Hall of Honour of the federal building named after him to house the Department of Veterans Affairs in Charlottetown. To keep the memory of that worthy son of Prince Edward Island, his battle dress jacket is permanently exhibited. The material on the left side, next to the heart area, was burnt by a stray bullet which went through and glanced off the prayer book he kept in his left breast pocket. This is what saved his life, Mr. Speaker. Mr. McDonald did a lot for war veterans.

Mr. Speaker, if the present Minister of Veterans Affairs has not reached the summit of his excellent political career in other portfolios he held in a distant past on in those he was responsible for a few years ago, he can now boast of having reached it in the position he now holds. I would like to commend him for maintaining continuity in the policy of compassion developed by his predecessors, especially the late Dan McDonald.

[English]

Let us take a quick look at the historical background of the Department of Veterans Affairs. I will briefly summarize major developments and legislative changes in veterans' affairs since 1969. Prior to World War I Canada's veterans consisted of a comparatively small number who had fought in the Fenian Raids, the Northwest Rebellion, the Nile expedition in 1885, and the South African War. No particular government agency was formed specifically to take care of the needs of these veterans.

Early in World War I the Canadian Government was asked to move all its seriously wounded soldiers back to this country. In order to satisfy this demand, extensive hospital accommodation and professional and other staff were required. The Military Hospitals Commission was set up by Parliament in 1915 to react to this situation. In 1916 Parliament decided that disabled veterans should be entitled to training for a trade or profession for which they would not be handicapped. The vocational training division was organized to administer this project.

By 1918 the volume of rehabilitation work had increased to the extent that the Department of Soldiers Civil re-establishment was formed to take over the administration of disability pensions, hospital care, training, and placing in employment. Under the Soldiers' Settlement Board many veterans received government loans to establish themselves as farmers in Canada.

As the rehabilitation work lessened it was combined with that of the Department of Health and a new Department of Pensions and National Health was formed in 1928. This Department continued to administer veterans' matters until toward the close of World War II, it became evident that an expanded rehabilitation organization would be required. Consequently, in 1944 the duties of the Department of Pensions and National Health were divided. Those that affected veterans were taken over by a new Department which is the Department of Veterans Affairs.

With regard to pensions, up to June, 1916 all military pensions were administered by the Pension and Claims Board of the Department of Militia and Defence under the Pension Act. In 1919 the responsibility for pensions was given to the Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada, then responsible to the Minister of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment. The administration of pensions has remained under that Board, the name of which was changed to the Canadian Pension Commission. Since 1944 the responsible Minister has been the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Under the 1971 amendments of the Pension Act the Pension Review Board was established to deal with appeals from entitlement and quantum award under the Act. The Board is also authorized to interpret the Pension Act. The 1971 amendments also established the Bureau of Pensions Advocates as a separate organization reporting directly to the Minister. The Bureau is an independent agency established for the sole purpose of providing free legal aid to pension applicants in the preparation and presentation of their claims to the Canadian Pension Commission Entitlement Board and Pension Review Board.

With regard to allowances, the War Veterans Allowance Act was passed in 1930 to provide assistance to Canadian veterans who were suffering economic distress and who, because of the rigours of active service in World War I, were considered to be pre-aged or otherwise permanently unemployable or incapable of self-maintenance. Subsequently the benefits of the Act were extended to others, including veterans of other wars in which Canada had participated, to British and allied veterans, and to widows, orphans, and dependent children, and in 1962, through Part XI of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, to certain categories of civilians who had served in wartime.

The War Veterans Allowance Board was established in 1936 to replace the War Veterans Allowance Committee which had been established in 1930. The Board acts as a court of appeal for applicants and recipients who are grieved by any decision of a military authority.

I will review the major veterans' affairs developments and legislative changes since 1969. In February, 1970 changes were made to the total disability provisions of the group life insurance contract between the director, the Veterans' Land Administration and the Imperial Assurance Company of Canada, permitting a greater number of seriously disabled veterans to take advantage of the plan. Previously a benefit clause that provided for premiums to be waived in the event of total disability for a period of at least six months had caused underwriters to screen them out of the loan insurance plan. At the above date, the disability benefit was declared optional and many who previously could not obtain coverage could then do so.

In March, 1971, there was a major change that included a 10 per cent increase in disability pensions and a 15 per cent increase in war veterans' allowance rates, and amendments granting special pension status to former prisoners of war of the Japanese.

The new legislation also created, first, the Pension Review Board, an appellant body for the appeals of veterans who are dissatisfied with the decision of an entitlement board; second, the Bureau of Pension Advocates which provides free legal assistance to any applicant or pensioner under the Pension Act.

There were some other amendments as well. In March, 1972 amendments to the war veterans allowance and the civilian war allowance legislation included the exemption as income of cost of living increases of old age security and the guaranteed income supplement.

Again in 1972, cost of living adjustments in pensions and allowances paid to the veterans and their dependants provided for review of pensions and allowances each September and adjustment upward at the beginning of the following year by the increase in the consumer cost of living index during the preceding 12 months.

In February, 1973 amendments to the veterans' treatment regulations doubled travel allowances and accommodation rates for veterans reporting for medical examinations or treatment. In 1973 an amendment to the Pension Act raised the basic rate by 24 per cent and, for the first time, based the basic rate on the average compensate salary of five categories of unskilled employees in the Public Service. The amendment also provided an established relationship between the basic pension and the pension of dependants so that in future years the rates of these dependants will be adjusted in accordance with the established percentages.

In October, 1974 there were other amendments. Previously no allowance was paid for dependent children. The amendment provided for $50 a month for each child less the amount of the family allowance paid on behalf of a child of a widow or widower, or an allowance received and stipulated that the additional allowance paid to an orphan, may be continued to age 25 as long as the child continues his education.

New legislation in 1975 provided equality of status and rights for male and female pensioners. That is, a female pensioner would now be eligible to receive additional pension for husband and children. In 1976 amended legislation provided compensation on a sliding scale tied to the period of time spent as prisoners of war to those who were prisoners of the Germans, Italians and North Koreans. In addition, compensation for those who had been prisoners of war of the Japanese was improved.

Also, on October 28, 1976 approval in principle was given to relocate the Department of Veterans Affairs and related agencies from Ottawa to Charlottetown. It was estimated that the transfer would take four to five years. Agencies and programs to be transferred included the Canadian Pension Commission, the Pension Review Board, the War Veterans Allowance Board, the Bureau of Pensions Advocates and the administration services of the Department.

[Translation]

I know this move has caused much discussion and I wonder today whether history will not be a better judge and acknowledge that such a change, the Department's relocation, has served war veterans and the public service well.

[English]

In January, 1977 benefits payable under the Pension Act, War Veterans Allowance Act, Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act and Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act were increased. Disability, widows and orphans pensions were increased 8.6 per cent in line with the rise in the Consumer Price Index. There were further benefits each year until 1984. It is not necessary to cite all the amendments to improve these benefits for the Canadian veterans.

Mr. Speaker, as Honourable Members will realize, this brief summary reflects a gradual evolution and a constant improvement of the pensions, allowances and services provided to veterans, their wives, their survivors and dependants.

Bill C-28 introduced today will improve even more the living standards of these veterans who are the pride of our nation. The eight amendments it contains are necessary to provide a better service in processing or reviewing applications made by Canadian veterans. All have complained with reason about the prolonged delays caused by the Pension Review Board, which represents the last stage in the pension application process.

To speed up the operation of the Review Board, four new or additional members will be appointed, which should indeed reduce the deplorable delays in the waiting period, that have sometimes reached from eight to ten months.

Another provision of the Bill states that the Entitlement Boards can be made up of two or three members of the Commission, instead of requiring that three be included as is now the case, to bring some flexibility into the process and to simplify the hearing of such cases.

Another amendment would guarantee the same benefits for the survivors of pensioners who received the attendance allowance or the exceptional incapacity allowance or both. It is estimated that 300 widows and a few widowers will benefit from this amendment.

Pension Act

Another important amendment will provide that the invalidity pension at the rate of a married pensioner will be maintained for 12 months after the death of a pensioner. At the present time, the pension is brought down to the rate of a single pensioner one month after the death of the pensioner. I would describe this change as a compassionate amendment, Mr. Speaker, as it will reach 6,000 widows who will certainly find it beneficial.

Mr. Speaker, another very important change, in my opinion, is that a situation which has been quite unfair for veterans for many years will be corrected, as increases were based on the cost of living index. It should be noted that these increases were often lower than those given to the five categories of non-specialized Federal public servants. The difference for 1984 amounted to $611.

Thanks to these new amendments, the basic pension rate will now be increased automatically each year on the basis of the highest of either the consumer price index or the average wages of the five categories of non-specialized Federal Government workers. Formerly, the basic pension rate was increased automatically on September 30 on the basis of the consumer price index for the last twelve months and the rate was adjusted on the following January 1, as was done this year.

In addition, when a ruling on a veterans' pension application is not unanimous, the benefit of the doubt will be given to the veteran and the ruling of the Board will always be in his favour.

● (1230)

[English]

And finally, at present the Canadian Pension Commission is authorized to pay the cost of the attendance of the applicant and his or her witnesses at Entitlement Board hearings. No such provision is provided for attendance at Assessment Board hearings. Bill C-28 will authorize the CPC to pay the cost of attendance at Assessment Board hearings.

[Translation]

In short, Mr. Speaker, that is the scope of Bill C-28. As I said at the outset of my remarks, I would also like to draw the Minister's attention to the health of veterans who were exposed to atomic radiations in the fifties. Apparently, some of them are seriously ill because for years they were exposed to atomic radiations at Chalk River, in the Nevada desert or in the deserts of Australia.

I hope that the Government will accept the request of those veterans who would like to have medical examinations as soon as possible so that, like their colleagues, they will be granted a pension or a disability allowance, should the Canadian Pension Commission so decide.

Before concluding, I would like to mention the beneficial effects of the Aging Veterans Program. It is a dynamic program which enables a good many veterans to continue to enjoy the comfort of a family home instead of being isolated in rest homes. Still on a trial basis, I understand that this program has been highly praised by those who were able to take advantage of it. This is a comprehensive and generous program, and I hope that the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Minister will take every opportunity to publicize this outstanding program which should be readily accessible to all qualified applicants.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I extend my congratulations to all organizations, voluntary or otherwise, and to all people who directly or indirectly have for so many years been advising veterans and looking after their well-being and health. Our veterans rightfully expect a lot from us, but unfortunately we have not always given due consideration to their legitimate claims.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier today my Party, the New Democratic Party, wishes to see this Bill proceed through all stages as quickly as possible, hopefully one o'clock, and thus have this measure referred to the Senate.

At the outset I want to say that I do not want to speak for too long, but I do want to take the opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) for bringing forward this legislation. If anything, I think the Minister was a bit too modest in his remarks to the House. I have been around here since 1980 and I have been a member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. Various groups, such as the Canadian Veterans Association in Canada, the Canadian Legion and others, have appeared before that committee attempting to impress upon the committee the need for changes in legislation. For the first time since I have been on that committee we have a Minister who has actually met nearly ever major proposal ever presented to that committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: To give you some background into what I meant about the Minister being too modest, Mr. Speaker, some of these proposals have been made to that committee since 1919. One of the major proposals which the Minister has presented to the House concerns the basic rate of pensions, which will finally be increased to reflect parity with the average take-home pay of selected categories of public servants. This proposal was presented in 1972 by a joint Government-veterans' organization committee. It is quite significant that the calculations on this new formula are to be made on the basis of parity as of September 30, 1984, and the adjustment is to be made on the first day of the second month following the month in which Royal Assent is given. This is one of the reasons we are extremely anxious to have this Bill passed through the House today, so that veterans and dependants can receive the increase as soon as possible.

I could talk about the legislation but I think the Minister has adequately expressed to the House its intent and the previous speaker from the Official Opposition has given us a rather lengthy briefing on the history of veterans' pensions and the legislation affecting veterans over the years. I certainly have no intention of repeating much of that.

However, it is incumbent upon me to express some concern. I hope the concern does not last too long. The Minister knows that he will have my full co-operation in attempting to correct some of the real inadequacies in the existing legislation. For example, it completely escapes me why Canadian veterans who served overseas during wars and who subsequently elected, for one reason or another, to remain overseas are denied some aspects of veterans' pensions. They are in fact required under the Pension Act to return to Canada to reside in this country for 12 months. They would then be eligible for veterans' allowances. Many of these veterans of the day are getting older. Many are suffering financial hardship and have families, particularly in the United Kingdom and the United States. These people do not have the financial resources, or their family circumstances do not allow them, to return to Canada for 12 months.

I think that situation is absolutely ridiculous and I know the Minister is concerned about it as well. I would like to see that aspect of the legislation changed. We are not talking about a large number of people or large amounts of money, but those veterans who put their lives on the line for this country deserve better treatment than they have been receiving.

There is also much concern about the Dieppe prisoners of war who in many cases suffered severe hardship as a result of capture in that disastrous raid. These individuals should be given the kind of consideration to which they are entitled.

Most of the serious problems under the legislation are corrected by this measure brought forward by the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Many of the problems we have had in the past, and I have no intention of enumerating them at this time, have been administrative problems, attitudes on the part of the Department of Veterans Affairs, and I do not mean this unkindly. With the legislation that has been in place there has been a question of how policy was being interpreted and applied to those veterans. Unfortunately, the way it has been applied has created untold suffering for many veterans and their families. I am hopeful that the measure before us, which is innovative in my view, will clear up many of these administrative problems.

I notice this legislation states that the Minister will appoint additional commissioners for a six-month period. We will see how that works. The Minister is prepared to review that matter, and if it does not work we will try to do something else to make it work even better.

That concludes my remarks, Mr. Speaker. I congratulate the Minister. He knows the Veterans Affairs Committee attempts to work in a non-partisan way. Every member of the Committee is concerned about the interests and worries of our veterans. I hope we will continue to work together in the best interests of all of us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Hees, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-28, an Act to amend the Pension Act, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

● (1240)

Motion agreed to Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-28, an Act to amend the Pension Act. Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 2—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the Minister, but first of all I thank him for this Bill and I can tell him that we will support it.

Some military personnel were allegedly subjected to radiation during certain tests in Australia, in Chalk River, which is not very far from Ottawa, and in the Nevada desert. I think the Minister mentioned some time ago in a public speech that these people would be examined by medical staff of the Department of National Health and Welfare and, consequently, if it is proven that they suffered injury, they could be covered under the Pension Act. Does the Minister have any intention of bringing in that sort of amendment soon? Perhaps it could be done in committee. Also, will he tell us whether it will be retroactive to January 1, 1985?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad the Hon. Member asked that question, as I have been working on this matter for quite some time. We have contacted as many of these veterans as we possibly could. We are still trying to contact more of the veterans who were subjected to radiation at Chalk River, in the Nevada desert or in the Australian desert. These veterans are now being examined, by doctors of the Department of National Health and Welfare. The Minister of National Health and Welfare very graciously and generously agreed to do this job for me. These veterans are being examined and, as I have said, if the doctors indicate that any serious illness which these veterans have developed in intervening years could have been caused by their being subjected to radiation, I will recommend very strongly that these veterans be very seriously considered for pensions. I think I can assure the hon. Member that if such a recommendation goes forward, a great deal of attention will be paid to it.

Mr. Gauthier: I should just like to pursue the matter with the Minister because he did not answer my last question. Would such an amendment be retroactive to January 1, 1985, if indeed some people were found to suffer radiation illness?

Mr. Hees: I do not think it will be possible. It might. I really have not thought about that very much. First we have to find out at the time of the examinations whether the doctors consider that any serious illness they might have contracted could—and I underline the word "could"—have been caused by radiation. We are giving the absolute maximum benefit of the doubt to the veteran in this case. If the doctor says: "Well, I don't know for sure but the illness of that veteran could have been caused by radiation", that is all I need; I will recommend very strongly—and I think the Hon. Member knows that a ministerial recommendation is quite a strong one—that that veteran be very seriously considered for a very generous pension.

I think that is the quickest way to get this matter dealt with. As soon as we get that kind of an indication, that recommendation will go forward. I assure the Hon. Member that that case will be heard very quickly indeed. I have great sympathy for people who could have contracted a serious illness due to carrying out their military duty in this way.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 3—When payments to cease

Mr. Shields: Mr. Chairman, I, too, would like to compliment the Minister of Veterans Affairs on a very forward-looking and what could only be described as a very thoughtful piece of legislation. It not only recognizes the contributions of our veterans to the country, but it looks after them in the style in which they should be looked after.

I should like to ask two questions, if I may. First, how soon in the Minister's view will the backlog of pension applications be completed? I understand that there is quite a backlog awaiting decision. How long does the Minister feel, with this new legislation, it will take for them to be completed?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I have great hopes that by the end of June—that is the target date which we set, as I have told my Department—these backlogs will be cut to an absolute minimum. I assure the Hon. Member and the Committee that the Department is working very hard and bringing in a number of innovations to speed up the processes and to cut out the loss of time which has been present in the past in dealing with these matters. We are working very hard at the present time. I have set that target date. They agree that it is a reasonable one. By the end of June these backlogs in all sections of the Department in these processes should be brought down to a very reasonable level. That is something which I check very carefully with the Department each time I go to Charlottetown. I am confident that very great progress will be made by that target date.

Mr. Shields: I have one further quick question. Having not been able to glean out of the Bill just exactly what I wanted to know, I should like to ask the Minister a very specific question. I have a constituent who is newly widowed but was never married to the veteran pensioner. In other words, they lived in a common law relationship. Will she be considered a widow in every sense of the word? Is that covered in the Bill, or is that left to the Minister's discretion?

Mr. Hees: That is left to my discretion, and it is my intention that people in such situations should be considered as having been married to the pensioners. I would consider them in the same category.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to ask my question when Clause 1 was before the Committee; however, I join with the official critic in congratulating the Minister of Veterans Affairs for bringing forward such an advanced, forward-looking Bill with so many benefits for veterans.

I was very impressed last November 8 when the economic statement was brought down. At that time I looked across the aisle and the only Minister smiling was the Minister of Veterans Affairs. He is to be congratulated on his ability to get money for veterans at a very difficult time, some $22 million, I understand.

Is any consideration being given to raising the amount of income which veterans can earn? I think there is a limit. I have received a number of representations indicating something like $940 per month. A number of veterans' associations have asked whether that limit could be raised to $1,500 per month. I think this would be under War Veterans Allowance Act benefits and associated regulations. Is the Minister giving any consideration to that? I wrote to him back in December on the issue. When putting through such an advanced and forward-looking Bill, not only providing the basic rate and improved benefits under the war veterans allowance, but a program to resolve the backlog of cases as well as the procedures of the Canadian Pension Commission, has any more consideration been given to the allowable limits that veterans can earn?

● (1250)

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I have certainly taken the Hon. Member's letter to me on this matter very seriously. It is something that in the future I would like to see accomplished. As the Hon. Member well knows, in order to do these things we must have the money. As he has pointed out very generously, the Department has been treated very well in that regard. When it is apparent that more money will be available, I can assure him that this question will receive active consideration.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 4 to 12 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 13—Where split decision

Mr. Gauthier: I would like the Minister to confirm on Clause 13 that, in the event of a split decision by the commissioners, the decision in favour of the veteran will prevail. Is my understanding correct?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is exactly how it will prevail. In making the move that has been made in this regard, that was one of the important considerations given to it. It will not only speed up the consideration process considerably, but it will make it possible without any shadow of a doubt that the benefit of the doubt always goes to the veteran. That is a key part of our new policy. In every case the pensioner must be given the benefit of the doubt.

In my talks with veterans' associations and Members of Parliament who represent pensioners when I took over the portfolio, I received the very definite impression from a great many of those who spoke to me that it appeared that those examining veterans' pension applications seemed to be trying to find ways of not giving the pension to the applicant. That has now been changed. We now look for every possible way that we can give the pension to the applicant.

I think we all agree that we are dealing with a very special group of people in this country today. Not only are they wonderful people because they are Canadians, but they all went overseas, took a chance at being killed, and a great many of them were. A great many came back badly wounded, maimed, unable to live the happy life that the rest of us are privileged to live. Therefore, I know that every Member of this House will want to do anything they can to make life more enjoyable for them. I know that all Members, because many have expressed the view to me, are in complete agreement with this policy.

While I am on my feet, I appreciate the fact that Members are allowing this Bill to pass very quickly. I want to congratulate those who have spoken this afternoon. In particular, I want to congratulate the official critics of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties this afternoon for their far too generous remarks about my efforts in this regard. They are much appreciated.

I have been in this House for 35 years. I have never seen a more generous reception given by the Members of the Opposition to a Government Bill than I have on this occasion. I can hardly believe my good luck. I am going to be on a cloud for quite a while. I just want to thank all Members for making that cloud possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I just want to add to the Minister's joy. As he knows, today is Valentine's Day and we thought he would enjoy having this.

Mr. Mantha: Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the Minister of Veterans Affairs on his handling of the Bill and the passage of it. I also want to compliment the Minister on a case that I brought forward to him. This case has been around since 1976. The man in question is being operated on today. I want to thank the Minister of Veterans Affairs for his assistance and for allowing the pension.

MULTICULTURALISM

ECONOMIC EQUALITY AND OPPORTUNITY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in a major speech to his Party's multicultural conference last June, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) outlined five personal priorities for a multicultural policy in Canada. One of these priorities was economic equality and opportunity.

Next month the Government will be hosting a national economic conference at which time participants from all sectors will have an opportunity to share their own economic agendas. Despite many assurances, the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, the only national body representing ethnocultural communities, has not been invited as a participant. The Council has been asking the Government for months for a seat at this conference. Last year I wrote to the Ministers of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) regarding this very subject and thus far my representations have gone unanswered.

It is time that the Government had the courage and decency to place some much needed action behind its great words of promise. Ethnocultural leaders and organizations are becoming quite agitated at the Government's empty sing-song performance.

The Canadian Ethnocultural Council rightfully deserves to be a participant in this conference and I urge the Government immediately to ensure its involvement and contribution. For the Government to deny the Council this opportunity would be for the Government to ghettoize what is an important Canadian reality.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

PLANNED PARENTHOOD ORGANIZATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the hysteria regarding access to abortions should be cooled. It is time the Government supported sound family planning to prevent unwanted pregnancies, to eliminate the need for making very difficult decisions on the question of abortion, and to provide choices for women.

Planned Parenthood provides information on family planning and on safe contraceptive methods, an issue of growing concern to women. It provides sex education programs and counselling. It helps families as well as individuals. Its aim is to encourage family planning so that children will be wanted and loved, and parents will be able to provide the care that children need. It helps young people to understand their sexuality and the importance of preventing unwanted pregnancies.

Pregnant women can receive the information and help they need to make the choice that is best for them and their families. Teenage mothers may be referred to support groups for schooling and housing, or a young girl may decide not to have a child and may be referred to a doctor to discuss a legal, safe, medical abortion.

We urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to support funding for Planned Parenthood and to encourage research into safe methods of contraception. Unwanted pregnancy should be prevented. Women should not be the victims of street battles.

SPORTS

EXPRESSION OF GOOD WISHES TO GAÉTAN BOUCHER AT WORLD SPEED SKATING CHAMPIONSHIPS AT HEERENVEEN, HOLLAND

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, a year ago, at the last Winter Olympics, Canadians saw how one of its athletes won three Olympic medals, a first for Canada. This unique achievement has been an inspiration to all Canadians and especially to our athletes and aspiring athletes. Another positive result has undoubtedly been the involvement of private enterprise in subsidizing training expenses. Mr. Speaker, thanks to the initiative of the private sector, an example being the Dairy Bureau of Canada, our top athletes can continue their training and thus be in a position to represent Canada at international competitions.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore invite all Canadians to join the Dairy Bureau of Canada, the people of the riding of Chambly and the Members of this House in offering our best wishes for success to our own Gaétan Boucher, who on February 23 and 24 will be taking part in the World Speed Skating Championship at Heerenveen in The Netherlands.

CITIZENSHIP

CANADIANS OF GERMAN ORIGIN

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the Government has an obligation to assure the civilized world that Canada does not harbour war criminals, but the Government also has an obligation not to suggest in its search for war criminals that those Canadians of German descent who fought for their country during World War I and World War II are war criminals. We honour these people as citizens who have done a great deal to develop the strength, character, and expertise of this nation.

Unfortunately, in an effort to try to assure the world that we do not harbour war criminals, it has seemed to some that the Government is out to castigate the German people. This must not be the appearance of what we are doing. World War II has long passed. All wars are a tragedy. Families and persons involved are injured, and bear the scars of those injuries. However, inquiries should not be used to fan racial prejudice, to stir up old hatreds, or to settle old scores.

Old scores should be long buried. This is Canada. This is a new country, and the old scores of the old world do not belong in Canada. While we should look for war criminals, justice is not advanced for any by the revival of memories of torture, injustice, and old bitterness.

MARITIME FEED FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I met with the Maritime Farmers Council to discuss a serious issue dealing with the maritime livestock industry. Since 1940, the pork and feathers industries have more than doubled. Unfortunately, as a result of the Feed Freight Assistance Program introduced in 1941, under which 90 per cent of the cost of transporting grain from the Lakehead to eastern Canada was paid, there has been little if any research, technical development, or interest in grain production in the three provinces.

From 1967 to 1976 the level of feed freight assistance was allowed to slip to 59 per cent of transportation costs. In 1976 the area to be equalized was moved to Montreal, thus eroding the maritime position.

The Maritime Farmers Council has developed a feed cost equalization proposal which it feels will greatly assist the feed, dairy, beef and pork industries. It is approaching the Government for a short-term emergency initiative to maintain the livestock industry and to develop feed self-sufficiency in the Maritimes.

The farmers in the maritime provinces do not want subsidies. Equally so, they do not want to be treated as second-class citizens. They need this financial assistance now in order to get them over a very difficult period. I would hope that all Members of this House from the maritime provinces would support the Maritime Farmers Council.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—SOLICITOR GENERAL'S MEETING WITH PREMIER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, yesterday it was reported that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated that the former Minister of National Defence was at worst guilty of an error in judgment, an error which we are assured in no way influenced his ability to perform his ministerial responsibilities.

Without questioning the integrity of the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay), I would say that we are of the opinion that he, too, is guilty of a serious error in judgment, the main difference between the two being that his error did in fact take place while carrying out his ministerial responsibilities. The fact that the Solicitor General decided to hold a meeting with a person under investigation by the RCMP, in advance of that investigation being concluded, for the purpose of hearing what that individual had to say about that investigation was, in our opinion, as serious an error in judgment as the error in judgment committed by the former Minister of National Defence. We would like to ask why this double standard exists.

TOURISM

MONT-TREMBLANT TOURIST RESORT

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the House to a very disputed question of significance to the constituency of Labelle. It concerns the Mont-Tremblant resort, and the state of this matter over the years has had serious implications for a population deriving a major part of its income from the tourist industry.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Mont-Tremblant area has now become famous as a major international tourist center, and this is the reason why several men and women in the area, who are aware of that advantage and are anxious to keep it, have been increasingly involved in the prospect of regaining control over their economy and applying a sense of entrepreneurship of great benefit to them.

Mr. Speaker, we, the residents of the constituency of Labelle, are confident that this Government, with its open mind and its current guidance, because of its will to co-operate and work at all levels, will finally resolve that legal and administrative imbroglio, and give the people in the area all the assistance they deserve.

Mr. Speaker, it is already assured that thanks to the co-operation of the various departments involved, at both the federal and the provincial levels, and within the spirit and letter of the general agreement and the subsidiary agreement dealing with tourism, a satisfactory solution will be found to the Mont-Tremblant issue and the residents of my constituency will remain proud of the choice they made on September 4, 1984.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

NEED FOR INCREASED SECURITY MEASURES

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, following the embarrassing incident which occurred in the House the day before yesterday, I readily admit that I was dismayed and surprised to see how easy it is for anybody to come in with almost anything in this House. Instead of what the lady hurled on the floor of this House, it could have been a dangerous or life threatening object. We are told that there is an electronic security system which would allow to intercept the individual who would try to conceal fire-arms before coming in this House, but he could not be stopped if he came running in. You will note, Mr. Speaker, that the doors, either the main door downstairs, the entrances through the anterooms and to the public galleries are not locked or equipped with an electronic device. The access is therefore too easy.

Why should we not have such a security system? We could also have a glass partition, something that can apparently be found on the market. The security officers who are admittedly exceptionally devoted and kind would certainly have recommendations to make.

We would thus recognize, Mr. Speaker, that we are living in a period of increased terrorism—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that the time allotted to him has expired.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF REACTION TO CHALLENGE '85 PROGRAM

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, according to an article published in the Le Droit of February 7, students are not quite ecstatic about the Challenge '85 Program. The Canadian Federation of Students has stated emphatically that it does not feel this will prove such an extraordinary program for Canadian students. The Montreal Gazette of February 11 reported under the heading "Industry can't promise 10,000 jobs for students" that the officials of at least eight major corporations are unable to guarantee that they would crease their share of the 10,000 new jobs announced by the Minister. Finally, the president of the Canadian Employment and Immigration union has sent us a news release dated February 12 describing the situation, and I quote: "The Challenge '85 Program is intended for students who, through their studies, have acquired the qualifications for positions that are in great demand. Which means that the students without the proper qualifications and training are likely to be unemployed once more this summer. It appears ill-advised in that it will find jobs for those who need it the least, while ignoring those who need it the most". He stated further: "This summer, there are Canadian communities which might be deprived of services for the handicapped, senior citizens and children from low income families".

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to explain to the House these various reactions to her Challenge '85 Program.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT CITIZENS OF JONQUIÈRE RESPOND TO CHALLENGE '85 PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I am now rising in this House on behalf of my constituents of Jonquière, and it is to them that I wish to address my comments today.

I am asking my constituents, our business people, our big business managers, and I am thinking of companies such as Alcan and the pulp and paper industries, as well as our students to take up the challenge our Government has put before them. I am referring to the program Challenge '85, which will create 95,000 jobs for students throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that my constituency can derive considerable benefit from the amounts which will be available under this budget item of $205 million. A single day does not pass that I do not stand up for my constituency and do not fight to get Jonquière its fair share under the various programs proposed by the Government. However, this time, it is up to you, citizens of the Jonquière constituency, to take up the challenge! It is up to you, businessmen, municipalities, students, non-profit organizations, to take up the challenge! The funds are there. They are available for all the regions. If you do not take up the challenge, the money will go elsewhere.

While Jonquière has had record unemployment rates, I am asking you that it now have the record for job applications this summer to provide employment for our students.

ENERGY

FEDERAL-NEWFOUNDLAND AGREEMENT

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the Atlantic Accord which was signed just recently by the federal Government and the Newfoundland Government Clause 54 states, and I quote: "Hydrocarbons will be made available to Newfoundland and Labrador to meet the feedstock requirements of industrial facilities in place on the day that legislation implementing this accord is proclaimed, and for new industrial facilities in Newfoundland and Labrador"— —provided such feedstock is excess to feedstock required to meet the demand of presently existing industrial capacity in eastern Canada.

In other words, Petromont is all right in Montreal. Quebec is all right for under utilized refineries and petrochemical industries, and New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. But by law under this Clause, no such industries can be constructed in Newfoundland using that offshore oil.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Baker: This is a rip-off of the Newfoundland people and a sell-out by both these Governments. When the legislation is introduced in this Chamber, I would strongly advise the Government to amend Clause 54 of this agreement.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—SOLICITOR GENERAL'S MEETING WITH PREMIER

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister indicated yesterday that he had to ask or accept the resignation of the former Minister of National Defence because of "a momentary lapse of judgment", can the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that it was, on the part of the Solicitor General, at the very least a momentary lapse of judgment to have a secret meeting with Mr. Hatfield, not in his office, but in a hotel room, with a lawyer present who was not a departmental official? Does the Deputy Prime Minister not recognise that the Prime Minister has a set of standards of conduct for the former Minister of National Defence and another set of standards for the Solicitor General who gave him his seat in Central Nova a year and a half ago?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I resent the implications inherent in the tail-end of the question put by the Hon. Member. It is not really worthy of him. I also resent the Hon. Member's distortion of the remarks of the Prime Minister in response to a question put by a journalist. I have a transcript of that exchange during which the journalist asked the question whether the Prime Minister felt it was appropriate "for a Minister of the Crown to be in a bar that has a reputation like that?" The Prime Minister's response was, and I quote:

As I said yesterday, I suppose if you are in a foreign country and you have never been to that place before it is probably an error in judgment—

That is with respect to the appropriateness of the location of the establishment. He went on to say:

—that you or I or any other imperfect human being could make.

That was the Prime Minister's specific response in reply to a question as to whether or not the Prime Minister felt it was appropriate for the Minister to be in such an establishment.

INQUIRY WHETHER COMMISSION WILL INVESTIGATE PREMIER HATFIELD'S ACCUSATIONS AGAINST RCMP

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister.

In the light of the extraordinary request made twice yesterday by Mr. Dalton Camp for a public and independent inquiry, and the extremely serious charge made by Mr. Hatfield that the RCMP had acted unlawfully in order to discredit him, does the Government intend to finally accede to requests by the two opposition Parties, by Canadian newspapers across the country and by Mr. Camp to set up a commission of inquiry that would either confirm Mr. Hatfield's statements and censure the RCMP or exhonerate the RCMP and repudiate the serious charges made by Mr. Hatfield?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, again that is a distortion, which I am afraid is becoming a habit over there, and not unexpectedly, of course. I watched and listened to the statement of Premier Hatfield yesterday and nowhere in that statement was there a direct accusation with respect to the conduct of the RCMP—or indirect, I might add—in my viewing and in my listening to that statement.

● (1420)

With respect to a judicial inquiry, that has been responded to by my colleague, the Minister of Justice, yesterday. I need not read his response into the record. It is to be found at page 2305 of Hansard, and it is quite complete. As the Member knows, there is an internal review now being conducted in the RCMP with respect to all aspects of the process as it was applied in this particular case. When that review is complete, it will be considered, and perhaps questions answered at that time.

REQUEST THAT SOLICITOR GENERAL RESIGN

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Solicitor General. If the Government does not want at this time to have a public inquiry, will the Solicitor General adopt the same standard of behaviour of his fellow MP from Nova Scotia, the former Minister of National Defence, and do the right and honourable thing by either requesting a public inquiry to vindicate his own judgment, or resigning?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, may I say to my hon. friend from Saint-Maurice that, as the Deputy Prime Minister has indicated, there is a comprehensive internal review on now into this matter. In having my meeting with Premier Hatfield I exercised the judgment I thought was appropriate—

Mr. Frith: No one else does.

Mr. MacKay: —to listen to his concerns. If the Hon. Member cannot distinguish between the circumstances involved, then I am afraid I cannot help him very much.

RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister, dealing with the resignation of the Minister of National Defence. The Prime Minister on Tuesday, and the Acting Prime Minister yesterday, indicated to the House that all information related to the question of national security was dealt with properly. How can the Prime Minister claim that a thorough investigation was undertaken when news reports today tell us that the people in the club concerned were never interviewed, that the Base commander at Lahr knew nothing about an investigation, and NATO officials deny ever being consulted?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I'll bet you know all those people in the bar; you could have asked them the questions.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Very funny, Ray.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You're a bunch of jokes.

Mr. Nielsen: —in response to the rather vague question put by the Hon. Member, I can see no inconsistency whatsoever with respect to the statement of the Prime Minister that he caused a very comprehensive and thorough inquiry to be made into the security aspects of this matter. Indeed, that was his very first concern, and I can assure the House that the Prime Minister did indeed, as he stated, cause very thorough inquiries to be made and remade and rechecked. The final report was made, as indicated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, at noon yesterday.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I will ignore the cheap remarks of the Government House Leader.

Mr. Rossi: The joke is on your side.

Mr. Hopkins: I understand that is the new standard of civility in the House.

RESIGNATION OF MINISTERIAL ADVISER

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I am impressed by Canada's ability to carry out international investigations without our allies' participation. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell this House if the widely reported resignation of Mr. Duncan Edmonds, senior adviser to the former Minister of Defence, on January 18, and his departure on the same day for points south, had anything whatsoever to do with the allegations raised by the Ottawa Citizen and the Minister's subsequent resignation?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): No, Sir.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—SOLICITOR GENERAL'S MEETING WITH PREMIER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Today, for the first time, the Premier of New Brunswick has given information with respect to the meeting which took place between himself and the Solicitor General. Will the Solicitor General confirm, as has been indicated by the Premier of New Brunswick, that the Premier was seeking a speed-up of the investigation by the RCMP? In particular, will he confirm that the Solicitor General invited the Premier of New Brunswick to his home for that meeting despite his earlier assurances that this meeting should be held on neutral ground?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): I can say in reply to my hon. friend the Premier is wrong in his recollection that I invited him to my home. But I can confirm that the Premier, as I said before, wanted me to meet him on an urgent basis because of some concerns he had with respect to the practices and procedures. I have nothing further to say about that conversation other than that I still regard it as being a confidential and privileged conversation.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, it may have been confidential, but clearly the meeting was improper in the circumstances.

REQUEST THAT SOLICITOR GENERAL RESIGN

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the standard set by the Prime Minister with respect to judgment in this matter, and in view of the fact that clearly there is at least a difference of opinion between the Premier of New Brunswick and the Solicitor General, and in view of this error in judgment which should not be repeated, does the Deputy Prime Minister not recognize that the appropriate course is for the Solicitor General to step down, at least pending an investigation?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): No, Sir, I do not—

Mr. Waddell: Then why did Coates step down?

Mr. Nielsen: —in general. The Hon. Member will have an opportunity to ask the specific question which I will be happy to answer if he gets that opportunity.

With respect to this specific question, I would refer the Hon. Member to the responses made by the Prime Minister on February 12 to be found at pages 2260 and 2261 of Hansard.

DISCUSSIONS INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. As you are aware, the Solicitor General has steadfastly refused to disclose the details of that secret meeting at the Chateau Laurier, and steadfastly maintained that that particular meeting was proper and above board. One can only conclude that the Solicitor General is hiding something and merely clinging to power.

Mr. Dalton Camp, a close friend and adviser of Premier Hatfield, and the Premier himself, have now disclosed details of that particular meeting.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Nunziata: In fact Premier Hatfield himself has said that the Solicitor General should disclose particulars of that meeting. Will the Solicitor General finally come clean with the Canadian public and this House and tell us exactly what was discussed at that particular meeting, and finally do the honourable thing and admit that that bloody meeting was wrong?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston talks about doing the honourable thing. This is a man who obtained confidential—

Some Hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. MacKay: This is a man who obtained confidential information from the Department of Justice, which could not be used in open court for very good procedural reasons. Then he came into the House of Commons and used it, and betrayed his source in the meantime. I think someone on that side of the House should tell the Hon. Member that that is not the way you do things in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: He talks about doing the honourable and equitable thing. I presume he got through law school, although I am not certain given the way he handled the affidavit yesterday, but he should remember the old legal maxim that he who seeks equity should come with clean hands. He certainly has not in this matter.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I certainly did not wiretap my own office. What the Canadian people want is answers, not insults.

PREMIER'S REFERENCE TO RCMP

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, Premier Hatfield has made some extremely serious allegations about the conduct of the RCMP. He is actually accusing them of being party to a conspiracy to have him removed from office. The Acting Justice Minister from New Brunswick suggested that the RCMP has, as one of its goals, the downfall of the provincial Government in New Brunswick. Therefore, does the Solicitor General intend to stand idly by while the integrity and reputation of the RCMP are brought into question by the Premier of New Brunswick and the Acting Justice Minister of New Brunswick? In the alternative, will the Solicitor General come to the defence of the RCMP and ensure that the integrity of the RCMP is maintained by calling for a judicial inquiry to clear his name and the good name of the RCMP?

● (1430)

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I see that the Hon. Member is as confused as ever. On the one hand he wants me to be an interventionist, and on the other hand he claims that I have been too active.

I can assure the Hon. Member and the House that the RCMP have an exemplary reputation built up over many decades. They are a police force which has inspired great confidence. They themselves requested an internal review. This internal review was promised in November and is now under way. If it is decided that changes are required in the practices and procedures of the RCMP when the review is finished, they will be announced in due course.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister on a somewhat different matter. Interest rates have gone up again today. I can recall when the Deputy Prime Minister was the House Leader of the Official Opposition not many months ago. The Official Opposition at that time claimed to stand against the Liberal policy of ever increasing high interest rates. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us why the Government is now following the exact same policies established by the previous Liberal administration and allowing high interest rates to become the order of the day?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. House Leader knows that interest rates in the country have been reflecting actions in exchange markets. The monetary policy has been a moderating influence in the interest rate market. We are proceeding with responsible financial management.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am positive that you can remember hearing that same answer from the previous Minister of Finance in the Liberal administration.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Can the Minister tell us why the Government cannot come up with a set of policies consistent with the view expressed by the Prime Minister that, if faced with the choice between high interest rates or a lower dollar, he would choose not to pursue the line of high interest rates?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, our financial management policy would be considerably enhanced if it were not for the blockage in the other place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you that we have never appointed anyone to the Senate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Nor will you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT BANK OF CANADA GOVERNOR BE REPLACED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Sympathetic though I may be with the Government in this matter, I would like to direct another question to the Acting Minister, or the Secretary of State for Finance, or whatever. I recognize you, but I can't remember who you are.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Deans: Don't be silly.

I would like to ask the Minister who is answering for the Government how many people in Canada have to lose their homes, their farms, or their small businesses, before the Government will be true to the policies that it claimed it believed in, and will take the necessary action to fire the Governor of the Bank of Canada and replace him with someone who cares about Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is very clear to the Canadian people that the policies of the Government are to ensure that Canadians cannot only continue to own their own homes, but that they will be able to buy homes and to have jobs. That is what the Government is working for, and I think the Hon. Member knows it.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to address a question to the Minister of State for Finance, concerning interest rates. As we know, interest rates went up once again today and we have had a larger increase in interest rates in the last two weeks than we had in the entire last year. That creates a high level of instability in the market.

It is equally disturbing that at the meetings in Regina the Premiers are asking for a response, and the federal Government has absolutely no position on interest rates. Can the Minister of State for Finance indicate whether the Government of Canada indends to put forward, in the very near future, a clear position on its policy relating to the increased interest rates which are now being experienced in Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, interest rates are still considerably below what they were when the other Party was in power. We have made a very strong commitment to lower interest rates. Throughout the early months interest rates did come down, and they will be coming down again.

INTEREST RATES ISSUE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I think the House deserves a correction by the Minister of State for Finance. At the time of the last First Ministers' conference on the economy real interest rates were 4.5 per cent. Today they are 7 per cent. That is the fact. That is the reason the level of investment is down.

The Government has repudiated the position it took during the election. When will the Government put forward a position so that investors and all those in the financial community will know where the Government stands in relation to the critical issue of interest rates?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Government has made its position on interest rates very clear. We are working very hard to bring down the deficit accumulated by the Liberals when they were in office so that we can have lower interest rates.

EFFECT OF INCREASED RATES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister suggests that the Government has made its position on interest rates clear. The Prime Minister stood before the House and committed himself to lowering interest rates. Now, with weakness in the dollar, the Government has reversed itself and is raising interest rates. Can the Minister explain why this damage is being done to our economy and to the 1.5 million people out of work?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have an open financial system in Canada, and interest rates respond to market forces. I think some basic economics may be in order for other Members of the Chamber. Our interest rate policy is geared toward bringing down rates by bringing some controls onto the deficit through good financial management, which we are currently being denied.

SIZE OF INCREASE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, as a professor of economics I can tell the Hon. Minister that her economics are right out to lunch. Interest rates in this country are set by the Government. They are not set by the market.

How do the Minister and the Government justify the damage to the economy, small businesses, home buyers, the construction industry, and farmers, that will be and is being created by this kind of unconscionable increase in interest rates?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there has not been an unconscionable increase in interest rates as the Hon. Member, a former professor of economics, should know. Interest rates have been rising in response to money market conditions. They have risen very modestly. Our commitment to lower interest rates, jobs, and good financial management, is clear.

MARINE INDUSTRIES LIMITED—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF AID APPLICATION

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. I would like to know whether a decision has been made concerning a company in my riding which during the election campaign was obliged to lay off 700 workers and which was, of course, the second lowest bidder for repairs to the ships at Marine Industries Limited. I would therefore like to know whether a decision has been made and when a reply will be forthcoming.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member is referring to the refit of the Saguenay which, regrettably, we have had to withdraw from Marine Industries because of the strike and the necessity for the Department of Defence to have the ship by next November. We are in the midst of examining the question and a decision will be made by my Department very quickly, quite possibly later this afternoon, or tomorrow.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

MINISTER'S SPEECH TO THE CANADIAN CLUB

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In his address to The Canadian Club yesterday, he said that it had been necessary to freeze expenditures in order to curb the enthusiasm of Ministers developing new programs. Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us which Ministers have had their programs put on hold?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the report—if the Hon. Member was reading from a report—

An Hon. Member: It's your speech.

Mr. Deans: Why didn't you get a transcript?

Mr. Axworthy: You are supposed to listen to what you say, Erik.

Mr. Nielsen: —but I can tell her that her preamble and her question are a distortion of the wording of my speech. If she will take the time to read it carefully, she will find—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: You should take the time to read it.

Mr. Nielsen: Obviously, they don't want the answer. I simply commend that very excellent speech to Hon. Members. Read it, and read it carefully.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TASK FORCE REVIEW OF PROGRAMS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is also quoted as saying that he hoped his cost-cutting task force would be helpful to the Minister of Finance. If the Deputy Prime Minister admits that that quotation is accurate—

Mr. Nielsen: It isn't.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): —are we to understand that there is a split in the Cabinet between the Minister of Finance and those Ministers who wish to develop programs in such areas as job training?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I challenge the Hon. Member to find anywhere in that speech the phrase "cost-cutting exercise". It is not there, and those were not the words that I used.

Again, I urge her to read the speech carefully and she will see that it deals with a monumental and unique task of program review across the wide range of over 1,000 government programs.

If you read it carefully you will see that what we are after is a restoration of some kind of economic order in our pursuit of economic renewal in this country; some sort of restoration of management practices which entirely disappeared under those whom she supported in past years.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I watched the First Ministers' conference today where one First Minister after the other rose to say that they wanted lower interest rates to stimulate economic growth.

The Minister said a few moments ago in the House that the Government's policy was to bring down the deficit so that Canadians can have lower interest rates. Is it the opinion of the Government and the Minister that the Government must first tackle the deficit and bring it down before the Government will take any action at all on interest rates?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is not just a case of lowering interest rates because of the deficit and then bringing down the deficit, as the Hon. Member should well know. Our policies one geared to lowering interest rates at the same time as we are bringing the deficit down.

Mr. Waddell: Now it is at the same time.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES—MORATORIUM INQUIRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister. His Toronto speech is quoted in the Ottawa Citizen, which also contains a particularly flattering picture of him. He talks about a moratorium, in his words, on spending on business services, job creation, agriculture, Indian property management, and regulatory.

The Deputy Prime Minister has talked about a nine-month moratorium on spending, and apparently there does not seem to be any action on interest rates. Could he explain to Canadians why they elected that Government which was supposed to bring about some change? Why is it a do-nothing Government? Why bother going to a First Ministers' conference if it is just going to be for show and the Government of Canada does not intend to take any action on spending or interest rates?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member is guilty of distorting what I said.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: He holds up what appears to be a xerox copy of an article in the Ottawa Citizen. I would suggest to him that he would serve his quest for accuracy a great deal more satisfactorily if he read the speech himself. It says nothing about a nine-month moratorium whatsoever. The speech makes that clear.

It is a moratorium on new expenditure initiatives so that the first priority areas identified in program review will have the opportunity of not only being completed but, hopefully, being of some assistance in the budgetary planning process.

SPORTS

HOSTING OF 1987 CANADA WINTER GAMES IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. In recent weeks considerable concern has arisen in Nova Scotia about plans for the 1987 Canada Winter Games to be held in Cape Breton. Would the Minister explain the delay in executing an agreement with the host society, and what he is doing to resolve the matter?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that fiscal and other responsibilities were not defined when the games were accepted by the previous Government some years ago. It is for that reason that I initiated an in-depth review into the matter which resulted in an agreement between the Province of Nova Scotia and the federal Government on January 31. Since then we have been trying to accommodate the host society in the county of Cape Breton. In fact I am going to Sydney, Nova Scotia, on Monday, with the hope of signing an agreement with the county, the host society, and the province.

TRADE

LUMBER EXPORTS—THREAT POSED BY PROPOSED UNITED STATES LEGISLATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the interest of reducing the possibility of being accused of making distorted statements, I will not direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister but to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The Minister knows that after an unsuccessful attempt in 1983 to impose countervailing duties on the Canadian softwood lumber industry, a number of U.S. Congressmen have now laid before the U.S. Congress a bill entitled "Canadian Softwood Lumber Import Control Act". If passed, it will limit the export of Canadian softwood lumber to the United States to 25 per cent. Furthermore, the Minister knows that literally thousands of Canadian jobs and several hundred million dollars in sales are at stake.

Will the Minister assure the House that at their upcoming meeting with the President of the United States, both he and the Prime Minister will seek a commitment from the President that he will announce his intention to veto that Bill if, by some accident, it passes the U.S. Congress?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope I am not distorting things by saying that there was relatively pallid applause for the Hon. Member from his colleagues.

We are not waiting for the meeting on March 17 to make representations with regard to that legislation. We are acting now to try to protect the Canadian interest. If I may say so, it would be very helpful if Members on all sides of the House did what they could in relations between individual Members of Parliament and individual members of Congress in the United States to ensure that actions were not taken which would be harmful to the Canadian interest.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that they are acting now. He has not said what they are doing. Wishful thinking is not enough.

REQUEST THAT REPRESENTATIONS BE MADE TO UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am asking the question now so that the highest level of representation can be made. Furthermore, the Prime Minister made the statement that Canada is open for business, but the U.S. is attempting to close its borders to Canadian products. His statement should be rationalized in view of these actions. Will he make the highest level contact with the President of the United States, and will he seek assurance from the President that he will veto, and announce that he will veto, any such Bill should it pass the Congress of the United States? That is what we are asking.

• (1450)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, just as I would not welcome the President of the United States telling the Prime Minister of Canada what the Prime Minister has to do, for example, about nuclear arms—

Mr. Axworthy: He should tell him.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —neither do I believe that it would be welcomed in the United States for us to instruct the President as to how he should use his veto.

I give this undertaking. If the matter is not resolved by the time of the March 17 meeting between the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States, it will be raised by the Prime Minister with the President.

THE ECONOMY

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. During the First Ministers' Conference this morning, Conservative Premiers from all corners of Canada have been sounding like opposition Leaders in urging the Government to bring down interest rates because of their concern about the effect of rising interest rates on housing, investment, and jobs. When the Government was in opposition it kept on pressing the Government of the day to bring down interest rates because of the impact of high interest rates on investment, housing, and jobs. Has the Government changed its policy now and is it abandoning its Conservative friends at the provincial level because it is now in power?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): No, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of State for Finance, since she chose to answer on behalf of the Government, say just what is the policy of the Government on interest rates? When the Government was in opposition it said "bring down interest rates". Now the Government says that interest rates are rising because of market forces. You cannot have it both ways. Which is the Government's policy?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I cannot seem to make it obvious to the other side of the House that we have made our policy very clear to bring down interest rates for the sake of jobs, for the sake of housing, and for the sake of all Canadians. We are doing that by attempting to bring down the deficit which was accumulated by the former Government. We are attempting to bring good financial management to this Government. Our policy remains a policy of lower interest rates.

Mr. Deans: Notwithstanding evidence to the contrary.

REVIEW OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In announcing the Agriculture Task Force for program review in Toronto yesterday, whose main job will be to slash as much as $1.5 billion worth of programs of assistance to Canadian farmers, would the Deputy Prime Minister say why there are no representatives from western Canada, eastern Canada, and why there are no representatives from farm organizations, or any farmers on this program review? All we have are civil servants from Ottawa, bankers, and food processors from big multinational groups in Toronto and Montreal, on this task force. Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain why there are no representatives of farmers and farm producers on this jury which he has constituted to bring in the death sentence on many farm programs that help farmers?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I sadly note that that is not only a distortion—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —of the speech and the terms of reference which were attached as appendices to the speech, but it also lacks any truth because the Member fails to distinguish between the ministerial Task Force comprised of myself and my colleagues, the Minister of Finance, the President of the Treasury Board, and the Minister of Justice, and the Private Sector Advisory Committee which is broadly representative of all regions of this country, business and labour. He also fails to distinguish between that function and the functions of the study teams going into the various Departments. I can assure him that the untrue allegations he makes as a preamble to this question are not the purpose of the task force at all.

AGENDA OF FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I must point out that the review team on agriculture does not contain any of those representatives from agriculture, no one from eastern Canada nor from western Canada. It really seems that the Minister of Agriculture has completely abandoned farmers this week because he announced that the Government could not really assist farmers who are facing bankruptcy and high interest rates.

More important, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why, when the First Ministers of this country are meeting in Regina, in the middle of the Prairies, there is no item on agriculture on the agenda of the First Ministers' meeting. Surely this is completely abandoning the agricultural industry of the Prairies and of Canada?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know from where the Hon. Member is getting his information. It is certain that I did not give any indication this week, last week, or the week before, nor will I give any indication in any future weeks, that I will abandon farmers' problems or that this Government will abandon farmers' problems. I think the Hon. Member had better check the record, Mr. Speaker. When he checks the record of the last few months we have been in office I am certain he will agree that that record will match any record given double the time in which the Liberal Government was in office.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF AMERICAN FISHING GUIDES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, without commenting on the presence or the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, but in view of her evident inability to answwer this question I will direct it to the Minister of National Revenue.

An Hon. Member: Isn't that cute.

Mr. Parry: In previous years hundreds of American fishing guides have been allowed into Canada to work, often at the request of American owners of Canadian resorts. Campers, frequently American themselves, have asked whether there are any Canadian guides available. There are. Would the Minister look into this matter to see why this situation exists?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration is currently at the First Minister's conference in Regina where she is making a vital contribution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: I will be pleased on her behalf to take notice of the question. I am sure she will be anxious to give it her full attention upon her return.

Mr. Parry: I, for one, do not doubt the vitally of the Minister's contribution, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Will the Minister enquire whether the Government allows this practice to continue, or whether it will take the necessary steps to make sure that Canadian guides will henceforth be hired on a priority basis?

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, once again. I will be pleased to take notice of the question on behalf of the Minister. Obviously she is concerned about any instance where Canadian national interests are at stake, and I am sure she will take any appropriate action.

Mr. Deans: How do you know for sure?

FINANCE

CONTROL OF INTEREST RATES INCREASE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance and it has to do with rising interest rates. In her answers, the Minister seemed to try to minimize the steady but nonetheless regular increase in interest rates. In fact, she suggested earlier that the way to control interest rates is to cut the deficit, yet the Prime Minister has already rejected that option, to the obvious despair of the Minister of Finance. Would she tell us exactly what the Government is going to do to control rising interest rates?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps in response to the Hon. Member's question I could quote the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry when he said in this House on February 12:

> I was intrigued by his comments about interest rates. Let us be honest, the interest rate policy is in large part dictated by what happens in money markets in the United States—any Canadian Government of whatever stripe is always forced into the position of having at least to respond and be sensitive to that fact.

Mr. Axworthy: Be responsive and sensitive.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—INQUIRY WHY DEFICIT NOT ON AGENDA

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister.

Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether the Minister might not be practically admitting that her senior colleague, the Minister of Finance, has just lost a third battle with his Cabinet colleagues. Can she tell me why the deficit is not on the agenda of the Regina conference, claiming as she does that a lower deficit is the way to prevent Canadian interest rates from rising?

● (1500)

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this Government is always talking and thinking about the deficit. I find it hard to believe that in two days of the First Ministers' conference it would not come up.

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

FIVE-YEAR FUNDING

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. What is the Minister proposing to do to make certain that Medical Research Council funding, which in the past ten years has been very erratic, will not be erratic in the future? I am especially concerned with the past habits of the federal Government to fund the Council's five-year long-term plans with no clear commitments for years three, four, and five.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question. It is true that it creates difficulties when five-year plans are established and only two-year plans for funding are put into place. As I have said to the Hon. Member and to the House generally, I would like to see an increase in medical research funding, not only from the public side but also the private side. As we look at this entire question, I think we have to amalgamate the two. That does not remove the obligation from the public side.

Ms. Copps: Ministerial statement.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I assure the Hon. Member, and those in the House who are interested in this topic, that we are looking carefully at how we can meet the objectives not only of increased medical funding but also in terms of how best to do it in co-operation with the private and public sectors.

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) on Wednesday, February 13, 1985, does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PENITENTIARY

Mr. Speaker: I also have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) on Wednesday, February 13, 1985, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

MOTION OF REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am rising in my place to ask the usual business question of the Government House Leader.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of the Deputy House Leader of the Official Opposition. In responding to the Hon. Member's question, I should like to advise the House that there have been discussions between the Parties. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if you were to seek unanimous consent of the House to put the following motion, that consent would be forthcoming. The order is as follows:

That the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates be empowered to examine and report on the advisibility of

(a) Canada issuing a circulating dollar coin;

(b) the raising of funds for the 1988 Calgary Olympics through assigning the seigniorage from the first issue of such coins to the Calgary Olympics; and

(c) the size, shape, and composition of any such dollar coin if it were to be issued;

That the Committee have the power to retain the services of expert, professional, technical and clerical staff as may be deemed necessary;

That the Committee submit an estimate of expenses to be incurred in the exercise of its authority to hire to the House of Commons for concurrence prior to proceeding with its inquiry; and

That the Committee report back to the House not later than June 14, 1985.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Government House Leader have the unanimous consent necessary to introduce the motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that we were consulted and that the proposal to refer the matter concerning the coins to the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates met with our approval.

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I also want to confirm that the consultation process went extremely well. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) would like me to inquire of the Government House Leader whether he would consider asking the committee to go to Sudbury in order to hold some hearings, given the need for economic stimulus.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, although I would not normally give a nickel for any suggestion made by the House Leader, I will give that one the most serious attention, especially since it comes from his hon. colleague.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, before giving consent, I should like to ask for some explanation. Usually the Government House Leader has these motions printed on the Order Paper—

[Translation]

Why was the House not given prior notice, on the Order Paper, of the motions the Government wishes to present?

[English]

Mr. Rossi: The Deputy Prime Minister just gave him the answer.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) in leaving simply said how much he admired the Whip of the Liberal Party. However, the answer to that question is very simple. As far as we are concerned, the practice has been to consult fully in advance, prior to unilaterally putting on a motion which may not meet the pleasure of all Members of the House. Accordingly it seemed to me to be a saving of money and a more effective way. By first consulting and making sure that all the terms were agreeable and then presenting it for unanimous consent, there is not the cost of printing and carrying that motion for a long period of time. I do that from the point of view of ensuring full consultation with all Parties and providing them, sometimes days and weeks in advance, with these motions so that there is an opportunity for input and to make changes where changes are appropriate.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on this question—

Mr. Speaker: Now I am in real difficulty. I simply asked the House whether the Government House Leader had unanimous consent for the putting of the motion. Does the Government House Leader have unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Malépart: No.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) says no. There is no unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion.

Mr. Dick: The Liberals are at it again.

Mr. Speaker: I am perfectly prepared to allow questions once the motion is on the floor. Should I try to seek unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion one more time?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Yes, please do.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is the House interested in adopting it?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Government House Leader has another motion.

FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

MOTION TO PERMIT STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, there has been even more consultation on this issue. I can assure the House that this particular item was dealt with over a period of weeks and under the most amicable circumstances in my office.

I simply suggest that there is an agreement with respect to a request of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry to travel to the great Province of British Columbia. Therefore, I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to present this motion and to have it accepted. The order is as follows:

Business of the House

That the members of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to travel to British Columbia between March 23 and April 3, 1985, for the purpose of holding public hearings on the west coast fishing industry, and that the necessary staff do accompany the Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Government House Leader have unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we were indeed consulted on this matter, and my Party's House Leader gave his consent to the Government House Leader. We therefore agree and will give our unanimous consent. However, I do not think we should make a habit of having these committees travel across the country. In the case of this particular committee, it is necessary because our oceans are at opposite ends of the country. Generally speaking, however, it is our Party's view that committees should normally not be travelling, since the work should be done here at the House of Commons.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Does the Government House Leader have unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT

MOTION TO PERMIT STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, finally, I again seek unanimous consent of the House for the following motion:

That the members of the Standing Committee on Transport be authorized to travel to British Columbia prior to the month of April, 1985, for the purpose of holding public hearings and to visit transportation facilities in relation to their order of reference dated April 12, 1984, and that the necessary staff do accompany the Committee.

Mr. Speaker: I rise with trepidation to find out whether the Hon. Government House Leader has unanimous consent for the introduction of his motion.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Leader a question with respect to his last motion. I would like to know whether the House Leader is acting as a travel agent to give his Members a change of scenery.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, after having dealt so expeditiously with those items, I want to carry on with the business for the coming days, I am pleased to see that we are making progress today.

I have an undertaking on the part of the Opposition House Leaders to deal with Bill C-22, an Act to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development, at all stages this afternoon. That agreement was given by both House Leaders, the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party. As previously announced, when the House concludes consideration of Bill C-22, it will proceed to Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

As far as tomorrow is concerned, the first order of business will be Bill C-29, an Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act. I spoke to both Opposition House Leaders prior to their caucuses in order to get approval from them regarding this Bill, which gives more flexibility to that Act and allows the payment to western grain producers which is so desperately needed before seeding this spring. I have received an indication from the New Democratic Party that they are prepared to deal with it at all stages tomorrow. I hope the Official Opposition will be in a position, so that we can pass it at all stages, to allow the payment to be made before seeding. Should Bill C-29 be passed before the end of the day tomorrow, we will return to the consideration of Bill C-23.

As you are possibly aware, Mr. Speaker, pursuant to our Standing Orders we will not be sitting next week. When Members return on February 25, the first order of business, if we do not dispose of it tomorrow, will be Bill C-23, followed by the commencement of debate on Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act and the Canadian Home Insulation Program.

I have just one other item. It has to do with a motion I have also discussed with the Opposition House Leaders relating to the matter of agricultural taxation. I have discussed these Bills with the Opposition House Leaders and I have the approval of the New Democratic Party to have this motion go forward for immediate consideration by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on the matter relating to agricultural taxation. I understand that the matter is under consideration by the Official Opposition. I am anxious to have some indication from the Official Opposition to go ahead with that particular revision.

The purpose of the reference is so that there will be a full opportunity for consultation with the agricultural industry. I know that the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), who has a great interest in the matter and is the critic for agriculture, will be interested in having this matter referred immediately to this committee. We want to have this done before the Budget comes down.

It is absolutely essential that farmers are able to have input to the House of Commons committee. I urge the Official Opposition to please let me have their approval so that the matter can go forward and we can have the committee receive petitions and information from farmers across this country, as well as from other interested parties, on this most important question of taxation in terms of the agricultural sector of Canada.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with our commitment to the House Leader, we have no objection to dealing with all stages of the Ocean Development Bill, C-22, today. We may have a few speakers who want to express their points of view.

With regard to passing all stages tomorrow of the Grain Stabilization Bill, I believe I will have time to get back to the Hon. House Leader on that. I want to check the outcome of negotiations between my House Leader and the Government House Leader. The same is true with regard to agricultural taxation. We will get back to him some time before tomorrow.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Government House Leader now that the House has given the Fisheries Committee leave to travel. It is well known that there is legislation before Cabinet that pertains to the west coast fishing industry. This is needed very quickly to straighten out the chaos there. Can I get assurance at this point from the Government House Leader that we will not have that legislation brought into the House while the committee is travelling? It would certainly negate the whole exercise.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my information would be the opposite. If we were able to have that legislation brought forward and dealt with on the floor of the House and given second reading at an early stage, that is, prior to the committee proceeding on its visit to British Columbia, it may then be possible for the committee, as well as carrying out the responsibilities it now has under its order with respect to the whole question, to be able to deal in a very effective way with any legislation that may be brought forward.

I hope we will be able to look at facilitating the consideration of that legislation in order to allow that committee, when it goes to British Columbia, to have an idea of the intentions of the Government. Of course, it depends very much on whether we can make progress and on the progress being made within Cabinet.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, there are two separate problems, one being the constitutional and legal problem the Department has on the west coast. If legislation were dealing with that, it might be easier to come to an agreement. If, on the other hand, the Government intended to push through—

Mr. Speaker: I allowed the Hon. Member to put his question because I understood it to be important to him. The longer we get into these things, the more the House business question becomes a matter for debate and I will be forced not to allow House business at some point. I must say to the Hon. Member that he may want to make his representations through his House Leader, which is the practice we have tried to follow in the House. Does the Hon. Member have another question now that I have just said that? What is the Member's question?

Mr. Skelly: The question is as follows: Can the Government House Leader tell us whether it deals with the one problem of the constitutional and legal dilemma, or does it deal with the complete restructuring?

Mr. Speaker: That does not have anything to do with House business.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Government House Leader. In the last Parliament, debate was adjourned on the redistribution question. I wonder when the House Leader is going to call that item so that the debate can be completed and that material can be passed on to the representation commissioners and the various commissions across the country. Can the House Leader advise us of that?

Mr. Speaker: I am in some difficulty. I know it is an important question. It is important to me. However, it is a question period question, not a House business question. I suggest, therefore, that the Member give these matters, as he should, to his House Leader. The House Leader will raise the matter with the Government House Leader in the consultations that go on. That is the normal practice in these matters.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, since this discussion on the business of the House started, I have been wondering why the Government House Leader cannot provide us with a more orderly procedure for debate in this House. Lately, we have been spending two days on a Bill for the elderly, and then another two days on small business. Why does the Government House Leader not present a Bill in the House and let us consider it until we have exhausted our allotted time, instead of this untidy business of spending two days on one subject and the next on two other issues?

● (1520)

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I was going to respond by saying "the devil makes me do it," but the real response is that the Opposition House Leaders make me do it. I consult with them. Unless they have any strong objections, I call the business after I consult with them as to what would be appropriate for the House on any given day.

One of the reasons for this is that from time to time the Hon. Member, as a critic of his Party, will not be available to represent his Party on the floor of the House. I have always made a point of trying to accommodate the Opposition Parties whenever something of that nature occurs. I would not want to embarrass either the Hon. Member or his Party on any occasion. I love them!

Mr. Gauthier: Valentine's Day got to you?

PRIVILEGE

REMARKS OF MR. HNATYSHYN IN QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. During Question Period when I was posing a question to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) made certain derogatory remarks that not only reflected on me personally but on my character in general. I have not had an opportunity to see those remarks in print but all reports that I have heard from others indicate that I have a very definite question of privilege arising from his remarks. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that you did in fact hear those remarks.

At this time I would like to ask that the Government House Leader rise in his seat and in a gentlemanlike way display the conduct that is normal for this House by withdrawing those remarks categorically from the record. Otherwise, I would like to reserve the right to raise this question of privilege tomorrow after I have seen those comments in print. I will leave myself in your hands, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Member is rising on a mixed point of order and question of privilege. Is he making the case that unparliamentary language was used in the House or that he may have a question of privilege arising out of the language? I take it he is making the latter point?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I am stating that I have a question of privilege relating to the comments made by the Government House Leader which, if the comments that relate to me were true, would reflect not only on me as a person but on my character in general. I would ask that the Hon. Member withdraw them.

Mr. Speaker: The reason I am asking the question is that if the Hon. Member is claiming that another Member used unparliamentary language or language that an Hon. Member may not use in this House, then that becomes a question of order with which I must deal immediately. The Hon. Member is not making such a claim. He is indicating to me that he believes that he may have a question of privilege. Do I now understand him correctly?

Mr. Hopkins: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: He now has no obligation whatsoever to give me notice. He has every right to read the "blues" and to give me the proper written notice as he will find it specified in the rules, if he believes he has a question of privilege, and that will be his right once he has received the written record of today.

PETITIONS

CALL FOR SENIOR CITIZEN'S HOME

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by one thousand residents of the parish of Saint-René-Goupil in my riding of Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic. Most petitioners are elderly people concerned about the fact that there is no retirement home in that part of the riding of Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic and that it is far removed from all public services. That situation does considerable harm to my constituents.

Therefore, the petitioners urge Parliament to direct that the necessary steps be taken to make that retirement home available so that those elderly people not be taken away from their familiar surroundings.

I present this petition and strongly urge the Government to give it full consideration.

MAIL SERVICE IN LONGUEUIL, QUE.

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition.

For many years now, the residents of Saint-Benoît Street in Longueuil have not been getting their mail. I have here a petition signed by 37 people who do not get mail delivery, and they humbly call on the House to direct Canada Post to deliver their mail, as it does for all other residents of Longueuil.

STUDIES RELATING TO MARIJUANA

Question No. 37—Mr. Howie:

In 1983 to date, were any studies conducted by the Department of National Health and Welfare related to marijuana and, if so, at what cost?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, from 1983 to date, the Department of National Health and Welfare has conducted three studies on the use and attitudes toward marijuana as well as contributing to two ongoing studies related to cannabis by the Department of Transport (Defence and Civil Institute of Environmental Medicine at Downsview, Ontario) and the Traffic Injuries Research Foundation.

The Health Promotion Directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare carried out a study in the form of a survey of use and attitudes toward marijuana, alcohol and tobacco among Canadian young people, about one-third of which was devoted to questions on marijuana. The total cost of the survey was $73,000. The study was completed in March, 1983, and was conducted under contract by the Canadian Gallup Poll Ltd.

A second study similar to the first, but conducted one year later in January/February, 1984 was carried out wherein a few questions were addressed to parents of teenagers to determine their awareness of the Health Promotion Directorate's Cannabis Information Program. This survey was also carried out by the Canadian Gallup Poll Ltd. at a cost of $83,000 and it was completed in March, 1984.

A study was carried out to assess the effectiveness of Stay Real—a pamphlet on cannabis distributed by the Health Promotion Directorate. This survey was carried out by Currie, Coopers and Lybrand at a cost of $15,000 and was completed in October, 1984.

The Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare, through the Bureau of Tobacco Control and Biometrics is currently contributing to two ongoing studies related to cannabis. Both studies concern possible hazards due to driving under the influence of either cannabis alone or cannabis and alcohol. The first of these is being undertaken by the federal Department of Transport (Defence and Civil Institute of Environmental Medicine at Downsview, Ontario), in which the driving skills of volunteer subjects who have ingested measured amounts of alcohol and cannabis under controlled, bu naturalistic conditions, are evaluated over a closed driving course.

NH&W contribution: FY 1982-83—$10,000, FY 1983-84—$49,686.88.

The second of these studies is undertaken by the Traffic Injuries Research Foundation who are under contract to conduct analyses of body tissues of fatally injured drivers and pedestrians in Ontario to determine the presence of alcohol, cannabis or related metabolics (in blood). The study is being carried out with the co-operation of the Office of the Chief Coroner of Ontario and data collection was completed in 1984. Analysis is expected to be completed in 1985.

NH&W contribution: FY 1981-82—$48,108.21, FY 1982-83—$61,464.34, FY 1983-84—$64,287.51, FY 1984-85—$22,139.94.

RCMP RECRUITMENT POLICY

Question No. 110—Mr. Skelly:

1. Did the Government or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police implement a recruitment policy that new recruits must be bilingual?

2. Does the RCMP have a list of applicants awaiting call up for recruitment, ranked on their ability and suitability and, if so, does the RCMP select only those who are bilingual?

3. Is it the policy of regional RCMP recruiting officers to accept new applications and then drop further action on them or refuse to update them if the applicant is not bilingual?

4. In (a) 1983 (b) 1984 to date, how many new members have been recruited by the RCMP and what are their provinces of origin?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): 1. No.

2. The RCMP has such list but does not select only those who are bilingual.

3. Applications are initially accepted from all individuals who meet the basic requirements of the Force, however, only those who fall into one of the preferred categories, i.e., females, university graduates, indigenous people and bilingual people will be processed at this time.

4. The detailed statistical information is provided below.

VIA RAIL

Question No. 124—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Was VIA Rail's budget cut by $93 million and, if so (a) who was consulted (b) were alternatives proposed to the Government and, if so, what were they?

2. Will the Province of New Brunswick have additional rail links between its various cities and, if so, how many and which cities?

3. Are the Edmonton-Jasper-Vancouver routes to be repaired in 1984 and, if so (a) will the Government undertake such repairs (b) on what date (c) with what funds?

4. Will a study be commissioned in order to explain delays in VIA Rail's services and, if so (a) where will it be made (b) what will be its time frame?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) VIA Rail's budgeted expenditures for 1985-86 were reduced by $93 million. The Ministry consulted VIA Rail and other Ministries on these reductions in expenditures.

(b) All this Ministry's programs were reviewed to identify where economies could be made and ways and means of achieving those economies, in response to the over-all government objective of deficit reduction. That review process formed part of advice to Cabinet and is privy to Ministers.

2. A three-member Rail Passenger Action Force was recently established to implement policies to enhance our rail passenger system. As part of its mandate, it is to define a basic national rail passenger network including those necessary services to be restored and to review all current services.

Services for New Brunswick were examined in this context with the result, as announced on January 15, 1985, that the decision has been made to restore service between Montreal and Halifax through Sherbrooke and Saint John, the "Atlantic" transcontinental train. Information on changes to other services through or within New Brunswick were contained in a press release package issued on January 15, 1985.

3. (a) Some infrastructure repairs and other types of improvements are required and will be carried out for the restoration of the Edmonton-Jasper-Vancouver rail passenger service which was also announced on January 15, 1985.

(b) The upgrading will be carried out before the service is restored on June 1, 1985.

(c) The Government is financing the required upgrading through VIA's capital budget at a currently estimated cost of $8 million.

4. A study of delays in VIA Rail services has been carried out. The Canadian Transport Commission (CTC) has released a comprehensive report on the subject entitled Report of the Inquiry into the On-Time Performance of VIA Rail Canada Inc. The CTC study commenced in February, 1984 and concluded with the release of the report in October, 1984. It is not planned to commission further studies at this time. However, the findings and recommendations of the CTC report will be pursued through the work of the Rail Passenger Action Force, to which reference was made in response No. 2.

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR OCEAN DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that Bill C-22, an Act to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development and to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation thereto, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister be making a statement regarding this Bill? I would like to be recognized but—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McInnes) is prepared to make a statement in connection with the motion.

Mr. Speaker: My apologies. I did not see him rise. I now recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade.

• (1530)

Mr. Stewart McInnes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this Bill concerns the establishment of the International Centre for Ocean Development, which is commonly known as ICOD. I should like to make a few remarks to clarify this Bill.

We believe that the International Centre for Ocean Development will add an important new dimension to our efforts to assist less fortunate nations. Canada, a great maritime centre, will use this Centre to share its long experience and expertise in marine resource management. As we are all aware, the ocean is a potential major source of food that needs to be developed as soon as possible.

Recently we saw the generosity of all Canadians as manifested in the Ethiopian effort. This, of course, was a short-term action and it is important that we add credibility to our effort by providing long-term solutions in aid of developing and Third World countries. Therefore, we wish to take further initiatives.

Through the efforts of the Canadian International Development Agency, the International Development Research Centre and the many Canadian non-governmental organizations active in the development field, Canada is assisting numerous countries in Africa, Asia, and, closer to home, in Latin America and the Caribbean to improve their standards of living and develop their resources. ICOD will support and further enhance these particular efforts.

The abundance of our ocean resources was recognized some time ago and in December, 1982 representatives of 119 nations, including Canada, signed the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. Individual nations now lay claim to 40 per cent of the world ocean resources through the 200-mile zones adjoining their coastlines.

I wish now, Mr. Speaker, to provide some background for my proposal today to establish ICOD through legislation in Parliament. At the 1981 Commonwealth meeting in Melbourne, Australia, Canada announced its intention to establish an international centre for ocean development to help Third World nations develop their marine assets, particularly as a source of food. In November of 1983, ICOD was incorporated on the initiative of the Government of the day as a non-governmental organization under Part II of the Canada Corporations Act. Its funding was to come from CIDA. But before making a firm commitment regarding this funding, the present Government reviewed ICOD's mandate and institutional structure. This review led to the conclusion that ICOD could indeed play an important role in helping Canada to achieve its development assistance objectives. However, we are convinced that ICOD's status as a non-governmental organization is not in keeping with its genesis or its source of funding. We believe that, since ICOD was established at the instigation of the Government and is government funded, Parliament should have the right to review its activities, its performance and its budgetary submissions.

I wish to underline, however, that since the funds for ICOD will be taken from the existing foreign aid budget, no additional expenditure will be required. It is a question, rather, of ensuring that ICOD's status is a reflection of reality, that it was created by the Government, and that it relies on the public purse for its financial support. I would like to note here that this conclusion echoes the recommendations made by the original consultants who were hired to study and evaluate the various operational possibilities with respect to the establishment of ICOD.

The legislation before us makes only minor changes to ICOD's present structure and makes no changes to its objectives.

The affairs of the new centre will be managed by a chairman, a president and 12 other directors appointed by the Governor-in-Council. I would like to point out here that all of the Canadians sitting on the present board of directors have agreed to resign. The Government will appoint 12 new directors and, at the option of the Government, five of these directors can be non-Canadians. This is a tradition which is consistent with other programs. We think it beneficial to have the views of other leaders and representatives of other nations so that they can properly indicate to us the proper course of action so that the programs which we are offering are indeed of assistance to their countries. ICOD will continue to direct its operations from its head office in Halifax, Nova Scotia. Indeed, this may be one of the highlights of this particular piece of legislation as it is further testimony to the expertise and momentum of the Maritime Provinces as a whole in the area of marine resources and development.

Why should we establish such a centre, Mr. Speaker? The answer is simple. As a major maritime nation, Canada has established a reputation in the scientific, technical and managerial aspects of ocean management, both in the public and in the private sector. Many Canadian training and research centres have already established links with foreign institutions and international development projects. In establishing ICOD, Canada will take advantage of this experience and its bilingual capacity to provide this urgently required expertise to the Third World. Many international agencies have already responded to ICOD's preliminary contact in a positive manner and have indicated their willingness to work jointly in these endeavours. I am thinking in particular of the United Nations development program, the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization, and the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Co-operation.

I would like to outline briefly ICOD's specific objectives. ICOD will encourage co-operation between the peoples of Canada and the developing countries in the field of ocean resources development in the following ways: First, by initiating and supporting programs in participating developing countries to improve management and utilization of ocean resources, particularly—but not restricted to—as a source of food. Second, it will encourage the development of indigenous institutions in this field. Third, it will provide training, technical assistance and advisory services. Fourth, it will ensure the distribution of information and sponsor research that is consistent with ICOD's terms of reference. In working toward these objectives, ICOD will draw on all the academic and technological resources of Canada and other countries.

Of course, ICOD will offer programs of assistance in response to the specific national objectives of developing countries but it will, at the same time, encourage a pattern of ocean resource exploitation that makes sense for all. By bringing people from developing countries to undertake practical training in Canada, we will gradually build up a group of professionals who are familiar with Canadian techniques and skills. They will form an international network of experts who have links with Canada, automatically creating new openings for Canadian business to trade with the Third World.

The gap that exists between the ocean's known potential and the present poor rate of return is a clear indication of the need for rational management of these resources. Its initial and most obvious benefits would be the opportunity to supplement food resources and increase employment. Industries such as tourism, energy, marine culture, mining and transportation will also benefit. ICOD will increase Canada's ability to make realistic and innovative proposals in a field whose importance was recognized globally during the negotiations which culminated in the signing of the Convention on the Law of the Sea. This legislation reflects the concerns of Canadians for the future of less favourred nations and reaffirms our Government's intentions of actively assisting in their development.

I am sure that my colleagues in this House will want to proceed as quickly as possible with this Bill and, accordingly, I commend it to them for their consideration and approval.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I must say that I am happy to speak today on Bill C-22, an Act which will establish the International Centre for Ocean Development. I am happy as well, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservative Government has recognized that the Centre exists, because it has been in operation, of course, since May of 1984.

In spite of the place where, as the Bill states, JCOD will be established, I would like to assure the good people of Halifax, the people of Atlantic Canada, in fact, Canadians in general, of my interest in the objectives of the Centre. The news of the establishment of ICOD has been conveyed to most countries and international maritime institutions in the world, and there has been significant interest in its operation. Indeed, there have been almost 50 requests received so far from the South Pacific, the Caribbean, Asia and Africa.

ICOD was created with the encouragement of our former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, and the former Secretary of State for External Affairs and now Senator, the Hon. Allan MacEachen. Its Halifax location was certainly supported with great enthusiasm by the Hon. Gerald Regan. Of course, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) supported the concept. I am sure we would all have liked to have had it located in our own riding, but we had to look first to the proper site for such a facility.

The founders and first three members of the Centre's board of governors are, first of all, Brian Fleming, the Chairman, who is a prominent lawyer in Halifax and a recognized authority on the law of the sea and maritime law, David Hopper, Vice-president of the World Bank and former President of the International Development Research Centre, and Georges Léger, Vice-president of Petro-Canada—there is a good company—International Assistance Corporation, and former Canadian delegate to the Law of the Sea Conference.

• (1540)

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What about the others?

Mr. Henderson: That is one of the things that concerns me about this Bill when the Hon. Member says he is going to appoint a completely new group of directors.

On November 7, 1983, Mr. Fleming announced that ICOD would be incorporated as an international, non-governmental, non-profit organization to assist developing countries in obtaining maximum benefit from their extended zones of maritime jurisdiction through the enhancement of their capacity to develop, manage and utilize the ocean resources off their coasts. The resources of the world's oceans are an obvious source of food, minerals and other things for developing nations. The ability of developing countries to use those resources is uncertain, and this point was brought forward during the 1981 Commonwealth Conference in Melbourne, Australia, when Prime Minister Trudeau released a statement which announced that it was Canada's intention to create an international centre for ocean development as part of a three-point training program aimed at increasing Third World production. That news release stated that the Centre would focus on research, training and technical co-operation to help poor countries increase food production from the sea and take advantage of new harvesting rights expected to be gained under the Law of the Sea negotiations.

In December, 1983, the Speech from the Throne which opened the second session of the Thirty-Second Parliament included the following statement:

> Economic progress is a crucial contributor to peace and stability. Recognizing the urgent needs of developing countries, the Government will maintain its commitment to overseas development aid. Canada will achieve aid goals of 0.5 per cent of the Gross National Product by 1985, and 0.7 per cent of the GNP by the end of this decade. Increased involvement of voluntary organizations and the co-operative movement will be sought in the delivery of this aid. Particular attention will continue to be given to the growing world food crisis, through existing programs, and the new International Centre for Ocean Development.

When Prime Minister Trudeau announced the objectives of ICOD he stated, and I quote:

> With an operational budget of approximately $20 million over a period of five years, the International Centre for Ocean Development would seek to help developing countries get optimal return from their recently expanded marine resources with a major focus being the oceans as a source of food.

A lot of work has gone into establishing this new Centre. The previous speaker for the Government outlined some aspects. ICOD classifies the ocean resources in three general categories. We have mentioned living resources, mineral resources and other resources such as ocean energy, transportation, recreation and tourism. They are all very important. Canada has established a reputation in the scientific, technical and managerial aspects of ocean development. Many Canadian training and research centres already have strong links with foreign institutions and international development projects. ICOD was set up to take advantage of this experience and provide a base to complement the work of other national and international organizations involved in ocean development.

Over the years Canada has developed an outstanding program in the provision of food and technology to developing countries. The fisheries industry has become more important over the years, especially with the development of the 200-mile limit which gave maritime developing countries exclusive access to the riches that the ocean environment provides. The world food catch is about 75 million tonnes, of which about 70 per cent or 52.5 million tonnes is consumed by humans. The remainder is reduced to oil or meal for animal feed. So there is a tremendous opportunity for developing countries to take advantage of the resources of the sea.

Canada is not only a major producer and exporter of fish, but it is also one of the most knowledgeable of fishing nations. It is important that our specialists in both the private and public sector share this knowledge with developing nations in order that these countries may manage and use their resources more successfully.

ICOD will certainly contribute to international development, as the previous speaker mentioned. But there have been other fisheries-related programs supported through other federal departments. The International Development Research Centre has supported fisheries projects with objectives to reduce waste and expand productivity in the world fishery. In 1983-84, IDRC was allocated $2.5 million in fisheries projects. CIDA was the main channel for Canadian assistance to fisheries projects in developing countries, although other departments have played and are playing a major role in the development of some of the poorer nations, the so-called Third World countries. Non-governmental organizations also play a very important role in fisheries development. With support from the federal Government, these organizations work on projects affecting 28 countries.

Canada also continues to provide direct food aid in the form of salt and canned fish in situations of acute food shortages. That has a very beneficial effect not only on our international relations, but in some cases it has the effect of creating and strengthening the market for fish products within our own country. I think of things such as canned mackerel. That is a very difficult species of fish to process because it arrives in large quantities over a very short period of time. It is therefore very difficult for some of our processing operations to handle these quantities. One of the easiest ways to process mackerel is canning. Therefore, there are times when we have large inventories of canned mackerel, a very good food product, one that is certainly needed by some Third World countries. Over the past number of years we have contributed great amounts of canned mackerel and salt cod, as well as some more expensive fish products.

So, Mr. Speaker, obviously we have a great number of programs aimed at helping Third World countries and therefore I hope that we on this side will see this Bill go through quickly. We have probably one or two more speakers on this side who would like to make some comments on this Bill this afternoon. We hope that the Bill will go through. We would not want to hold it up in any way because we recognize the importance of the Centre. We realize that this legislation must be passed on a timely basis in order to get the funding in place. The Centre is presently operating under the broad wing of CIDA.

It is important that the Centre continue to be located in Halifax. There are several important fishery institutions in that area, such as the Bedford Institution of Oceanography. Dalhousie University has an excellent program in marine biology. In my own riding, we have Holland College in Summerside, which is a fisheries related training centre. There are several others in Nova Scotia which contribute in large measure to the research and effort in the fishing industry within the country and in our foreign endeavours. Halifax is a good location for that reason. It is very important that a centre of this magnitude be near such sources of information. It is equally important that these institutions be in close contact with the Centre in order to maintain their own international dimensions.

The Halifax location may be a little more expensive than some others. If the Government's commitment of only $3.3 million is an indication of support for the Centre, it may be lost. It is crucial to get more funds for it. The Centre is presently a non profit, non-governmental organization. Because of the great importance of flexibility and quick reaction in times of developmental need, I hope that the change in status to a Crown corporation will not impede the Centre's objective. I am concerned about that. I hope that the Centre will be able to continue to take advantage of other sources of funding as well without reductions in federal funding. It may be able to get contributions from private sources. I would not want those contributions to be substracted from the Government funding. Funding should be maintained to promote growth rather than be impeded or levelled off to the status quo.

I hope that the people who worked so hard to create the Centre can sit back now with pride in their accomplishments, assured that the federal Government will continue to support the Centre in its objective. I was involved with the Centre a year ago. I have always had a personal interest in fisheries-related research projects. I feel that through the Centre Canada can help Third World countries. Many countries simply throw money into foreign aid. I have always been of the view that it is not good enough to simply throw money. You must increase the knowledge and expertise in Third World countries to enable them to continue to provide their own food. Those countries need better education to develop and become as productive as the more affluent countries.

I would like to wish the new Centre well. I hope that it will be run on a scientific basis and that the Government will not influence or destroy it by not getting well qualified people to direct the corporation. I hope the Government will realize that it is important to stay away from the daily operations of the program.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak in support of Bill C-22, an Act to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development. The Centre is already in some form of operation. It was inaugurated in 1983 by a decision of the previous Government, a decision which we supported at the time. I would like to speak in approval of the principles of the institution, but I will raise some questions about the trends in development we have been seeing in recent years under the previous Government and, more recently, in recent months under the current Government.

The objectives of the organization are quite obvious.

[Translation]

They are both obvious and praiseworthy. I quote from the Bill:

> The objectives of the Centre are to initiate, encourage and support co-operation between Canada and developing countries in the field of ocean resource development by

Ocean Development Centre

(a) initiating and supporting programs in developing countries for the improved management and utilization of ocean resources, particularly as a source of food;

(b) supporting the development of indigenous expertise and institutions in developing countries in order to increase the capacities of developing countries in integrated ocean use management;

(c) enlisting the expertise of people and institutions in Canada, developing countries and elsewhere;

[English]

—and furthermore to organize and support the collection of information which would result from these activities and to organize the necessary services in relation to that.

These objectives are fine. Canada does have expertise in oceans and has a contribution to make in development. However, I am concerned that we make this a genuine contribution to development. I noticed that it was the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of International Trade (Mr. McInnes) who introduced this Bill in the House. We need to be a little suspicious of the motives of Canada in having this treated as a trade matter rather than an aid matter. The International Centre for Ocean Development acknowledges that when it stated:

"Canada has been a major beneficiary of the Law of the Sea. Throughout the protracted negotiations, this country has found common cause with developing coastal states and has, in turn, benefitted from their support. As a recognized leader in technology relevant to the oceans and as a donor country whose motives are not open to suspicion by recipients, Canada shares an exclusive niche with few other developed countries.

This is all very nice in theory, but how true is it? We have certainly benefited from the Law of the Sea Conference, the extension of our boundary by 200 miles.

However, the trends in development work on land and in the sea also give us cause for concern. Some countries are becoming quite suspicious of our motives because Canada is increasingly tying its development aid to trade. Canada is supporting large scale, technically advanced development projects opposed to small scale community projects with appropriate technology. These large scale projects essentially turn out to be an expensive export subsidy program for a small group of Canadian industries. Some of these industries are subsidiaries whose profits go to the foreign head office in any event. We fear that the trade emphasis is becoming even more pronounced under the new Conservative Government than it was under the Liberals. Certainly, the trend began under the previous Government and we opposed it then.

Non-development criteria are being tied to development criteria. Specifically, CIDA has imposed a requirement that 80 per cent of all bilateral aid be spent on the purchase of goods and services in Canada and that two-thirds of the value of such merchandise be added in Canada. That is excellent for Canadian business and there is no reason why Canadian businesses should not take advantage of trade opportunities that arise through development work. Obviously there are advantages through genuine expertise as well as economic spinoffs through this type of work.

However, it is completely unfair to tie aid to these requirements to make countries buy from Canada. Those countries may not get the best deal because they could be producing the goods and services locally. This is also preventing them from developing industries from which we could be buying goods and services to help them develop.

This is occurring in spite of our own government studies showing that the tied provision increases the cost of Canadian aid to recipient countries by almost 20 per cent. Those countries are forced to spend one-fifth more for the goods that they require for a particular project. In short, it is costing them money to receive aid from Canada. This policy perpetuates underdevelopment in the Third World while providing an artificial stimulus to Canadian trade.

It is our sincere hope that the International Centre for Ocean Development will not fall prey to the trend that we have already seen in other forms of aid. Canada's non-governmental organizations, which are very active in development, could supply valuable advice and expertise. That non-governmental community strongly supports separating the ties between aid and trade, and has very much endorsed small scale community projects for the benefit of the country in order to promote their independence and productivity and emphasize their objectives.

I also note that the Centre's brochure gives some emphasis to the development of tourism as an industry, which is cause for some concern. If an adequate structure for tourism is not in place, that industry could actually contribute to underdevelopment.

Let me refer to a study conducted by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in 1976 by P. F. Wickenden. It states:

—money spent by tourists can have up to 90 per cent leakage. Most of the tourist dollar goes to foreign owned hotels, food importers, liquor importers and is drained right back out of the country—

This does not lead to development. Therefore, we are somewhat skeptical about tourist development because it is not appropriate for all countries.

I also want to make some observations about the sexist language in the Bill and the sexist bias in the creation of the board of governors. since there will be new directors, I hope their appointment will show some change.

The language of the Bill is sexist. We are approaching April 17, 1985, when women are supposed to become equal with men in Canadian society. However, that is not the case when one reads a Bill or an Act of Parliament. It is time that such Bills contained language which includes women and men.

I do not raise this as purely an academic point. The board of directors has a chairman and a president. All the directors who have been appointed up to now are men. The literature is entirely masculine in its orientation. Yet there are women who are active in fisheries and ocean research. I cannot believe that there are no women qualified to be on this board of directors of the Centre. Half of the new directors to be appointed will be non-Canadians. Let us ensure that a reasonable proportion of those directors, both Canadian and non-Canadian, are women. Women have a contribution to make to development.

Let me point out that at the Copenhagen Conference on Women in 1980, Canada recommended that women be included in decision-making roles in their own Governments, and in international agencies, including the United Nations. Canada, together with women from Third World countries, stressed the importance of the involvement of women themselves in development and in decision-making.

While we espouse this view at international conferences, are we living up to it here? It has not happened yet and I hope the Government will take notice.

With respect to the extent of development aid, my Party has encouraged increased development aid up to 0.7 per cent of GNP per year. We have recommended that this take place now. This figure has been discussed and accepted as an objective, only to be postponed. The cuts in development aid in the last year represented a further step back from this extremely modest goal for international development. The cuts in CIDA and IDRC are absolutely unjustified. I suggest it is rather hypocritical to establish a new institute as an independent agency with a modest $20 million in funding over the next five years while, at the same time, the Government is taking money out of development.

We want to see a genuine improvement in development aid, because there is a great need for such improvement. It is true that Canada has economic problems and high unemployment. However, our economic problems are not as great as those in Third World countries. We cannot use that as an excuse for not being generous at this time. Other countries are suffering enormously and hunger in the world is severe. This new institution provides us with an opportunity to increase food production from the oceans. The Government should not be hypocritical by contributing to this institution on the one hand while cutting back on other aid projects on the other.

While we support the spirit of the institute and its creation, and hope that it will be able to help developing countries become self-sufficient in food production, we do not want this to happen at the expense of other development programs that are already in place.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) in speaking to this legislation today. I am pleased that the Government has seen fit to place this Bill before Parliament and that it has the support of all three political Parties.

Through the introduction of this legislation, the Government has acknowledged the efforts of the previous administration, particularly the interest and action taken by the former Prime Minister and the former Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso, who is presently in the other House. I suggest it would be remiss on our part if we did not acknowledge the work of those two individuals. Were it not, in particular, for the initiative of the former Secretary of State for External Affairs, the International Centre for Ocean Development would not be established in Canada, let alone Nova Scotia.

I am pleased to see that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of International Trade (Mr. McInnes) has brought the Bill to the floor of the House of Commons. Unfortunately, I do not share the same views as my colleagues in the NDP. I do not see anything sinister about the Member from Halifax introducing this legislation. I happen to know through a number of good sources that he is very supportive of this particular Centre, not because it is in his riding—he is not parochial—and it will create jobs or that he will have an opportunity to make recommendations with regard to who sits on the board of directors, he is not that way, Mr. Speaker. I think he is like other Members of Parliament in this Chamber. They acknowledge the concept of this entity. It will bring benefits not only to the maritime region but to all of Canada. I think Members of Parliament would do themselves well to acknowledge that and to say to the Government, which introduced this legislation to legalize it, that it ought to be commended.

All too often, we as Members of Parliament stand in the House and criticize. I am taking this opportunity to congratulate the Government. It so happens that the history of this institution was developed, conceived, if you will, by a Liberal administration. I do not find anything wrong in giving the present Member for Halifax some credit for his initiative in getting this Bill into the House of Commons.

I am concerned with the amount of money which has been budgeted for the International Centre for Ocean Development, commonly referred to as ICOD. Twenty million dollars over five years was a good start, but I am a little concerned in view of the recent actions which the Government of Canada has taken in terms of cut-backs in other departments. We have seen an about-face by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) with regard to Canada's international commitments. It was a massive reduction in terms of percentages. I am worried that this $20 million that we have earmarked for ICOD may too come under the chopping block of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I think, in all fairness, it would be an utter shame with regard to those individuals who conceived the International Centre for Ocean Development, to the Canadian community and to Canada's reputation abroad if the moneys allocated to the Centre were decreased.

I hope the Hon. Member for Halifax and his Party will live up to the commitment that we put into this institution on a previous occasion, because it is important that these people have an opportunity to carry out their mandate.

I know the Hon. Member who spoke for the New Democratic Party spoke about the sexism of the Bill, tht we have a chairman and a president who are men. I want to tell the Hon. Member that she may be right. In fact, she is right. But it remains a fact that probably one of the most qualified individuals presently employed with the International Centre for Ocean Development is a lady, in the first sense a lady, by the name of Evelyne Meltzer. She is eminently qualified and makes a tremendous contribution carrying out the goals and objectives as contained in Bill C-22. I do not want Members of Parliament to leave this Chamber today thinking that this particular Centre, as referred to by my hon. colleague, has no women involved. There are women involved and very substantially so.

I hope that the Government, in reviewing applicants to sit on the board of directors, will not only look at women as possible candidates but will look at other qualified Canadians, particularly labour representatives. I think it important that the board have a good mix of competent individuals, who I am sure will serve not only the institution but Canada both domestically and abroad and serve it in its best interests. I hope the Government will accede to my suggestion by having quality people on the board.

I am not going to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether the Minister has requested the resignations of the present board. Perhaps not. I hope the Minister would not be political for the sake of being political. I hope the Government will seek out qualified, competent individuals to be placed on that board to serve the best interests of the International Centre for Ocean Development.

I wish the Hon. Member over there would have the courtesy to hear my summation and perhaps we can have an opportunity to debate whatever area of the Bill he finds overly frustrating. I realize that as a member of a caucus of 212, and as he sits in the back benches, he must be very frustrated.

An Hon. Member: There are 211.

Mr. Dingwall: There are 212, I told you. I do not know why you dispute that.

Mr. Shields: It is 211.

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) obviously is a member of the Tory team. He gets a car. He is treated with kid gloves.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What about your Leader? He gets a car.

Mr. Dingwall: I hope we can put that to rest. There are 212 members.

The former Prime Minister, Mr. trudeau, said in Melbourne at the Commonwealth heads of Government meeting in 1981:

> With an operational budget of approximately 20 million Canadian dollars over five years, the International Centre for Ocean Development (ICOD) would seek to help developing countries get an optimal return from their recently expanded marine resources, with a major focus being the oceans as a source of food. The Centre would provide information, research, training and advisory services and would be a vehicle to ensure that developing countries receive a tangible return on the jurisdictional gains which they have made at the Third U.N. Conference on the Law of the Sea.

I think that statement tells it all. If this institution is to achieve the objectives we all want it to achieve, the Government of the day, and the subsequent government, which will be formed by our Party after the next election—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: —must live up to that commitment of $20 million, and in no way should it squelch on that commitment.

Mr. Dick: How do you spell "squelch"?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: Hon. Members opposite do not like to hear that they have made substantial cuts to international organizations and agencies. As a Nova Scotian I come from the province where this institution will be set up, and I want to put the Government on notice that all Members from Nova Scotia and all Members from the Maritimes, regardless of their political affiliations, will fight tooth and nail to maintain that $20 million commitment. If anything, Mr. Speaker, the amount probably should be increased.

The Hon. Member on the other side laughs and talks to himself. But the Government has made substantial cut-backs in foreign aid and in the CBC. The amount is $4.2 billion. That cannot and ought not to happen.

Mr. O'Neil: Cut back the Opposition first.

Mr. Dingwall: I urge government Members to make certain that they live up to the previous Liberal commitment of $20 million and do it forthwith, so that this Centre can carry on with the activities that we all hope to be proud of as Canadians.

Ms. McDonald: The previous speaker said he was concerned that not only women should be appointed to this board but that other qualified individuals, such as trade unions, should be appointed as well. Is he assuming that there are no women trade unionists or no qualified women trade unionists?

• (1620)

Mr. Shields: Of course he is, he is a chauvinist.

Ms. McDonald: I would like an answer to my question.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): He threw you, didn't he?

Ms. McDonald: I would like an answer to my question about women and men, qualified and non-qualified trade unionists.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, there are many qualified women in the labour field. There is no question about that, for the benefit of anyone who would dispute it, whether it be the Hon. Member or other members of her Party. I cannot see why she would draw the conclusion that there are no qualified women in the labour movement.

Ms. McDonald: It was from your remarks.

Mr. Dingwall: There is no question about it. With regard to appointments to the board, I would hope that we could have qualified women, qualified labour leaders. If they happen to be women, fine. If they happen to be men, fine. That is all I am saying. There are many qualified individuals out there. I would hope they would not limit it to a select group.

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, I should first like to acknowledge and thank Hon. Members from all Parties who commented on the merits of the Bill and have been very supportive. I do not think there is very much in the way of disagreement, but I wanted to indicate to the last speaker that not only does the Government intend to maintain the $20 million funding, which was the original allotment indicated by the Government in 1981, but its present intention is to make available funding at that level. In 1985 dollar terms, it will be $27 million. That is an indication of the commitment, support and interest of the Government. I hope the Hon. Member will be reassured.

As for members of the board of directors, I indicated that present board members offered their resignations. Those resignations have not been acted upon as yet. The credentials and expertise of the members presently sitting will be reviewed. Undoubtedly some will withdraw and some may be maintained. However, it is certainly the Government's intention to draw upon Canadians from all parts of Canada and, as I indicated originally, from other parts of the world, to ensure that the strength of the board is not diluted and that its integrity, because it is dealing with other countries, is fully maintained.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's intervention. I welcome his comment with regard to the financial commitment which the Government of Canada is projecting for 1985-86. I hope it will continue well into the 1990s, for many years.

With regard to board members and the selection process, I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will convene board meetings very quickly. We do not want this to run on for an indefinite period of time. I hope the appointments to the board will be made fairly soon. Depending upon what present members do, whether or not their resignations are accepted, I hope the Government will not leave board appointments vacant for an extended period of time.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR OCEAN DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-22, an Act to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development and to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation thereto, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to spoil what appears to be unanimity among all three political Parties so far as this Bill is concerned. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) who was so instrumental a couple of years ago in getting this particular institution under way in the Province of Nova Scotia, even if it was in Halifax and outside this riding.

I listened to the speeches of Members today. When I looked at the Bill I realized that it talked about improved management and utilization of ocean resources, particularly as a source of food, ocean resource development, and supporting research related to ocean resource development. Also it referred to the fact that the Centre may carry on its activities throughout Canada. Today in the House Hon. Members talked about the great expertise and great knowledge of ocean resources which exist in Canada. When I sat and listened to the debate, I thought about the fishermen and the fish plants which I represent. If we are looking for waste in the oceans or mismanagement of an ocean resource, we need look no further than at Canada itself.

We talk about our great expertise and the fact that we will pass on our expertise to another country. I wonder whether or not in that expertise we would suggest that any country in the world should permit 60 per cent of its capelin to be thrown overboard after it is caught because the only utilization for it is to sell it to the Japanese. In fact, we can only sell female capelin to the Japanese. It is absolute dumping, absolute waste.

In the months of July and August on the East Coast of Canada we see the most incredible dumping of codfish. The excuse is always given that it is the glut season and we must have dumping. If we look at the absolute waste in the herring fishery, we realize that the main utilization of that resource is for bait. In fact, it has been encouraged over the years as bait. An Hon. Member mentioned mackerel. I can tell the House that we have incredible dumping in the mackerel fishery in the country. I cannot see any end to it. Also I could mention squid. An Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party mentioned women as far as development, resource management and expertise are concerned. There are thousands of women involved in the squid fishery in eastern Canada. There always have been. It was their main source of employment before the Japanese decided not to buy any more dried squid. Of course the resource itself diminished somewhat.

When I look at our resources and our expertise I sometimes wonder why we never implement our own suggestions to developing countries. Also I wonder how long all fish in our oceans can be managed by two separate administrations. One manages them on the land and the other manages them in the water. In other words, everything in the ocean is managed by the federal Government. However, what happens to the fish when they come ashore? They are managed by provincial Governments. That is the way it has always been and that is the way it will always be. This is why we have seen over the years—and we will continue to see it—the Government of Canada having to bail out fish companies.

The reason I say this is that the only utilization of our ocean resource in this country has been by local private enterprise family-related businesses. That is a fact. When we look at the problems in our ocean-related industries, that is problems in our food supply, we see that they were restricted to our exports of fish products going to another nation to be made into a finished product. That is a very interesting statement. It is interesting that those who got into trouble were the people who took the food resource from the ocean and froze it into a gigantic cod block to be exported to the United States or to another country. There it was thawed, an occupation employing thousands of people, and put into the final package. It was then sent back to us as a final product to be placed on our food shelves.

Are we going to suggest that to a developing country in another part of the world? Of course we are not. We in this country are tied into a system of divisions of authority and divisions of regulations. What happens in the fishery does not depend solely on the federal Government. What happens in the fishery and the utilization of a food resource does not depend solely on the provincial Government.

I stated a moment ago that we have one of the most serious problems of any country in the world as far as the fishing resource is concerned. In order to substantiate that, I want to read from A New Direction for Canada, An Agenda for Economic Renewal, put out by the present Government. It reads:

> —the major problems lie with over-capacity in the processing sector and low and unstable incomes in the inshore fisheries . . . New approaches are required . . . Consolidation of employment in the sector would have to be complemented by public and private initiatives to promote job opportunities in other sectors of the economy, as well as fair and generous adjustment programs for workers in the sector.

I suppose that is the reality of the Canadian fishery today. In effect, what the Government is saying is what every economic expert who has looked at the Canadian fishery has said for years, that is, that workers have to be displaced and that plants have to close. If we were to manage our fishing resource as we are suggesting to foreign nations today it should be managed, there would be no closures and no lay-offs. If we were to utilize the products that come out of the ocean the way that the Soviet Union does, for example, there would be no unemployment in certain regions of this country where there is chronic unemployment today.

It is not good enough in 1984 and 1985 to have massive dumping of fish in this country day after day in the months of July and August. It is not good enough either to say to a full-time fisherman that he can only sell his fish on Tuesday and Thursday to a fish plant on the East Coast of Canada. That is not good enough because the technology utilized in the inshore fishery covers some 20,000 full-time fishermen in this country. What is utilized is commonly called a gill-net. A gill-net drowns and kills the fish on the bottom of the ocean. You cannot leave that fish dead on the bottom of the ocean for three days. What do the fishermen do? They simply have to clean out their nets and throw the fish overboard.

We have systems operating in this country and regulations concerning licences. Even at this very minute there are people fishing for crab 30, 40 or 50 miles off the coast of this country. These people have a stable income. In the spring, the full-time fisherman who fishes groundfish catches crab in his gill-nets. He has to take that over the side of the boat, kill it and throw it overboard because he is not allowed to sell that crab. In the last four or five months, we have seen changes in regulations in restricted licences. We have seen lobster licences, for example, sold to individuals for a price under the table because there was a carte blanche policy initiated by the Government to allow transfers of restricted licences.

When you talk about utilizing an ocean resource, particularly as a source of food, and talk about supporting research related to ocean resource development, go to the small communities in eastern Canada and tell the fisherman that you are going to tell the foreign countries how to do it. He will look up at you, laugh in your face, and say, "That is just too bad because I have to dump my fish in the ocean every single summer".

There is a final point I want to make. There appears to be in this Chamber an attitude toward people who draw unemployment insurance. If that attitude is allowed to prevail as it relates to primary producers who fish the ocean resources of our country, I am afraid that we are going to have half of our inshore fishermen in this country not involved in the fishery in years to come.

We have a basic problem. It involves a system of almost guaranteed income. We have utilized employment opportunities and we have utilized almost a wage subsidy program called unemployment insurance. It was never intended to be a wage subsidy program or a guaranteed annual income, but it is. It is the only one available.

Another part of this Bill talks about the employment utilization of the food resource in the ocean. The danger exists in across-the-board changes in the unemployment insurance system proposed by the present Government that will virtually starve the self-employed person who draws unemployment insurance. Some may say that a self-employed person cannot draw unemployment insurance, but that is wrong—fishermen can. I pass that caution to the Government.

When cuts are announced, we must think about the food resources of the ocean as a food supply. When the Government brings in cuts, it must consider how that affects a person who is so important to this economy, who contributes perhaps more than Members of Parliament, lawyers or doctors to the economy of this country, that is, those who utilize the resources of the ocean, our fishermen.

This Bill contains some 100 cases of increases of charges to our primary producers in order to assist foreign nations. There are 100 instances where fishermen will face increased charges. These have to be looked at by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) in the spirit of assisting fishermen. I am referring to all kinds of things, from the increased price of the chart that the fisherman needs to find where he is going, to the little matter of telephoning the weather office and having to pay for it. There is also the cancellation of the fishing vessel insurance program, which will undoubtedly put a lot of fishermen into bankruptcy. I would say that 50 per cent of the fishermen in Newfoundland would be put into bankruptcy. They would lose their boats because it does not match with the regulations made by the provincial Government which has loans outstanding on their vessels.

In conclusion, the reason for my intervention was quite simple. Resources of the ocean are not being utilized in Canada today. Where they are being utilized, they are being underutilized. We are tied into a system in which governments and economists say that we are guilty of low productivity in the sector that relates to a food resource of the ocean. They say that we have a problem of low productivity in the fishing industry, not realizing that you cannot compare apples and oranges. You cannot compare people who half finish a product with people who finish a product, working in the same type of industry in a different country.

They also blame our problem of having no finished product on the tariff rate. They say that Britain has a 10 per cent tariff and the United States has a 7 per cent tariff. These experts, the economists in our country, some of them supported by corporations and organizations of the federal and provincial Governments, have been saying that since the mid-seventies when our dollar was at par with the United States. They have been saying that and they still say it today when there is a 15-cent difference on the dollar and there is only a 10 per cent tariff.

I admire the Government for doing this and I admire the previous Government for instituting this institution. However, it is very difficult for some of us in this Chamber who represent poorer sections of the country, for those of us who represent people who are trying to live on unemployment insurance payments averaging $122 a week to support a family, to realize that these people have to dump most of the food products they take out of the ocean every single summer. I apologize to Hon. Members for such an intervention, but I think it is an important one. I think it is an important one for me to make if I am to represent the people who I am supposed to represent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) has brought to us an astounding revelation. I believe he said that 50 per cent of fish products caught in his part of the world are thrown overboard and wasted. One of the reasons he attributed for this waste was the split jurisdiction, fish being the responsibility of the federal Government while the shore is the responsibility of the provincial Government. Presumably, in the Hon. Member's mind, the way to help alleviate this problem would be to put fish under one jurisdiction, either federal or provincial. I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell us, in his opinion and possibly the opinion of his Party, which level of Government should take over jurisdiction from the other level of Government.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I will express my own opinion on this matter. I would say that I would not care where the benevolent dictator came from. It is probably a benevolent dictator who would be needed to straighten out the problems in the fishing industry.

Of course, there are also other problems relating to the dual jurisdictions. There is also a problem of attitude and of monetary connections between countries. We also have a problem of attitude in this country. It is interesting to hear the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) question me on this subject because I forgot to mention something that was very dear to his heart, and that is, the absolutely outrageous waste in the Arctic of seals. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, fishermen today are killing seals for the meat and throwing away the pelts.

Mrs. Killens: Why?

Mr. Baker: Why? Because they cannot sell the pelts. The pelts are discarded. The meat is kept. I am sure the Hon. Member will agree with me that in most parts of the country, the meat normally sells for about $30 per carcass. In my district, that meat is canned. In my riding, there is an industry that employs 100 people and is canning seal meat right at this very moment. Not very many people know about that. However, the absolute disgrace to those who object to the seal hunt is that the seal pelt is thrown away. That is incredible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Hnatyshyn (for the Secretary of State for External Affairs), seconded by Mr. Hees, moves that

Bill C-22, an Act to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development and to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation thereto be now read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 24 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, February 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bissonnette that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I want to wish all of my colleagues on all sides of the House a happy Valentine's Day.

● (1650)

First of all I would like to thank my hon. colleague, our business critic, for giving us a heart, which is something I have never found yet among the Conservatives. Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to continue my participation in the debate on this Bill. With respect to the problems that will be generated by a Bill that will increase the cost of loans for people working in small businesses, all Liberal Members have pointed out to the Government that the problem is already with us. Today we have seen that interest rates are rising. We have seen that it is already a problem to find investment capital, and especially for small businesses. What is happening is that the Government is saying it will no longer guarantee 100 per cent of the loans given by Canadian banks. As soon as this Bill is passed, Mr. Speaker, it will become increasingly difficult for small businesses to obtain loans. That I am absolutely sure of.

Anyone who has worked in a small business knows that the two main problems are cash flow and obtaining capital, especially venture capital. I fail to understand why a Government that made so many promises during the election campaign, saying that it would increase assistance to small businesses, reduce the burden of excessive reporting regulations on small businesses . . . Mr. Speaker, there is a big difference between these promises and what is really happening.

I was shocked when this Bill was introduced, shocked at the fact that the Conservative Government of Canada was not prepared to guarantee the fees to be charged to small businesses. Mr. Speaker, big corporations like Dome Petroleum will always be able to get more capital, whether or not at the expense of small businesses. In fact it will always be at the expense of small businesses. With this new legislation it will be even more difficult for the people who elected this Government and who were promised relief from the excessive regulatory burden on small businesses.

[English]

I frankly cannot understand how, in good conscience, this Government, a Government which allegedly promised small business that it would make the load easier, that it would in fact reduce the kind of excessive bureaucracy with which small businesses are faced, would introduced a piece of legislation which will, with certainty, increase the difficulty in borrowing for small businesses and, in particular, small businesses which are entering into the market-place in the high technology fields. They are the ones who are in need of the kind of venture capital which we know is going to be necessary to bring this country into the 1990s. The Government introduces programs like Abandon Canada or Investment Canada, saying, "We will open our doors wide. Canada is not only open for business but it is up for sale". At the same time, it is tightening the screws on private enterprise which has actually made this country run. Because the Government has refused to guarantee to 100 per cent the kinds of loans which are currently being administered by our banks, we are certain there will not be the kind of availability of venture capital which exists even now. Those of us who have worked in small business will know that the situation is already tight.

If the Government, in its naivety, expects that the banks are going to tell small business that they will absorb that 10 per cent differential between what the Government is now prepared to guarantee and what a small business needs to expand and improve its business, it is wrong. If the Government believes that the banks are going to tell the small business people, "No problem. We'll cover you for the 10 per cent", then the Government has no idea of the kind of difficulty which is currently being faced in the money market by the small business sector.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that by introducing this particular Bill, the Government has abandoned its commitment to the small business sector and has abandoned the 300 promises it made. A dozen of these promises related strictly to the small business sector, and we see that this sector, like the widows and senior citizens who happen to be single or divorced, is being abandoned by this Government because its quest for power does not take into account the delivery of the promises it made before September 4.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have just a very short comment. I have been listening to the debate on this Bill since the Bill was introduced. There seems to be some misunderstanding when the statement is made that the loan should be 100 per cent of the total cost of the project. There is no such federal guarantee. In other words, Mr. Speaker, under all of these programs the person applying for the loan has to put up a certain percentage of the total cost. In certain ventures under the Small Businesses Loans Act, he has to put up 20 per cent, and in other ventures, 10 per cent. There is no such thing as a total 100 per cent. It is 100 per cent of the loan which is given by the bank for the remainder.

The two organizations who appeared before the Finance Committee recently claimed that the fee which is introduced by this legislation should not be imposed on the bank but should be imposed on the individual businessman who is getting the loan. By some strange logic they think that that is the proper way of imposing the fee. The fee would still have to be paid. I would like to ask the Hon. Member what she thinks of imposing the fee—as the Federation of Small Business claims—prior to the loan on the individual who is borrowing and not the bank.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) for his question. He has aptly pointed out the difficulty caused not only by the Government cutting back on its particular commitment to guarantee the loan portion which is not assumed by the borrower, but the difficulty which any business person is going to have when faced with this added increase in cost imposed, whether it be directly to the business person himself or herself or to the banks. I would agree with the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate and disagree with those who would say that the banks should pass along this cost directly to the borrower in the form of an increased surcharge. I think the small businesses of this country have had enough surcharges and they do not need another surcharge.

I would also suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the bank is going to be passing along this surcharge, not only to the borrower directly, but also to any others who are doing business on a surcharge basis. Whether the increase is directed specifically to the small business or indirectly through the bank in its own levying charges, the Government is in fact, through another inflationary mechanism, adding to the cost of doing business in this country.

I suspect that the best solution for small business people, and in the interests of keeping the kinds of promises which were made during the election campaign, is for the Government to respond to the criticism from this side of the House by withdrawing the Bill. I was frankly surprised earlier to hear the comments of the members of the third Party who support the Government in saying that it should not have to guarantee to 100 per cent the small business loan portion which is not being assumed by the small business person. From the point of view of the Liberal Party, I disagree absolutely and totally with the position which is being taken by the Conservatives and the New Democratic Party. We believe that small business people have a hard enough time getting venture capital in the first place and they should not be further impeded by the kind of surcharges which were mentioned by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate, and the other kinds of punitive charges which are currently being considered in this particular Bill.

INCOME TAX ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT RESPECTING WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION BENEFITS

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act, in order to eliminate the hardships brought about by previous amendments, which now make workmen's compensation reportable as "income" for Guaranteed Income Supplement purposes.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am taking the liberty of introducing this motion today in the hope that I can count on the assistance of all Members of Parliament regarding the amendments I am seeking. I wish to point out that this situation is having a devastating effect on a great number of Canadians, particularly senior citizens. The situation prior to Bill C-139 being passed in the previous Parliament was that individuals completing applications for the Guaranteed Income Supplement were asked about other forms of income they may have. One form of income which was excluded from reporting at that time was workmen's compensation payments. However, that practice, which was in effect for about 15 or 20 years, was changed under Bill C-139. The contents of that Bill were not readily noticed by Members in this Chamber on either side of the House. In fact, I think it was the labour unions who brought it to our attention. I raised the matter in the previous Parliament to try to seek an amendment. Other Members from other Parties, Conservatives as well as New Democrats, also sought changes. There was some meaningful discussion in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs when Members of Parliament got together and made an oral submission to the then Minister of National Health and Welfare in an attempt to rectify what we believe was a wrong.

I want to point out very clearly that I fought against that change, as did other Members of Parliament from the Conservative Party and the NDP. I thought we were very close to reaching a decision on changing the law back to the way it was. Well, that is history now. The election came along and most of those Members of Parliament are gone, except for those on the Conservative side.

Mr. Dick: Some went to the other place.

Mr. Dingwall: That is right, some of them did. Quite seriously, Mr. Speaker, the amendments that I seek here today relate to Sections 81, 56 and 110. With those amendments we would have in effect the old legislation back in force. Because of the amendments which went into effect with the passing of Bill C-139, workmen's compensation payments are reportable for purposes of determining the GIS. As a result, senior citizens in Canada are finding a substantial reduction in income. Not only that, in some instances it has disrupted their lives.

Certain provincial Governments have programs available to recipients of the GIS. Now that workmen's compensation payments are included for the purposes of the GIS, there has been a reduction, and indeed some people have lost their GIS. We are not talking about Canadians who are making a lot of money. We are talking about Canadians who live below the poverty line, maybe just on the poverty line or just above it. These people have been in the workforce for a considerable period of time but, through no fault of their own, have received an injury. I might add that the money they receive from workmen's compensation is not 100 per cent of their wages. Not at all. It is something less than 100 per cent. In 99.99 per cent of the cases it is not through choice that these people are on workmen's compensation; it is because they sustained an injury and were unable to return to work, and they are now in their retirement years. This has had a devastating effect on those Canadians who are receiving both the GIS and workmen's compensation because the payments have been lowered.

What has been the extent of those reductions, Mr. Speaker? Has it been much? Well, When you do not earn a lot of money, a reduction of $5 is a lot. For some of my constituents the reduction has been $160 a month, or $58 or $134 or $25 or $191. When you are on a fixed income and energy costs are going through the roof, when the price of food increases—and it does not go down—for a government to come along with legislation to take that benefit away is wrong, Mr. Speaker. It is utterly wrong. My Government was wrong. The then Minister of Finance was wrong in putting that legislation through. Well, now we have an opportunity to right that wrong.

I have here a copy of Hansard which shows those other Members of Parliament who agree with me that we ought to change this provision of the Income Tax Act. I hope my friend, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), will say a few words in support of this measure. It is important. The reductions have been susbtantial. It is not as if an individual is making $100,000 a year and you are slicing off $200 a month. That is not the case. The case is that it is less than $10,000 a year and you are being slashed by $200 a month. It hurts and we ought to change that. God knows, we have made many changes for the rich, so what is wrong with our senior citizens and those hovering around the poverty line receiving an advantage? The bureaucrats will argue that, conceptually, it has to be calculated as income for the purposes of the GIS. I say, shame on the bureaucrats. We in this country have given many tax advantages to the rich and the more fortunate, to various regions of the country, so why can our senior citizens not enjoy a privilege they had for 15 or 20 yeras?

As I said, there is support for this amendment. The former Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence was supportive. The Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) stood in this House on February 22, 1984, to support this change. The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), a Conservative Member, stood in his place on June 1, 1984 and denounced this situation, as I have done, and said he wants it changed. The then Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni, Ted Miller, a New Democrat, supported that amendment because he knew that these people are living from hand to mouth and it is difficult enough in these very turbulent times to get by.

There was support then and it is here today, but what about support outside this Chamber? The Ontario Federation of Labour, The Nova Scotia Federation of Labour and the senior citizens of this country, when they came together in convention, supported this change. The United Mine Workers of America agree that there ought to be a change. The senior citizens clubs in Glace Bay, New Waterford and Reserve Mines agree on this. Mr. Guy Brown, a Liberal MLA in Nova Scotia is supportive of this change. The Nova Scotia MLA for Cape Breton Nova is supportive of this change. He represents the labour party in my riding. There is great support for this in Nova Scotia as well as across the country.

On previous occasions Conservative Members of Parliament have echoed the statements which I am making today. This is not fair or just. It is all well and good to condemn the previous Government, as I did when I was in government. However, that does not help the senior citizens. Members of Parliament must take their responsibility seriously and demonstrate to the Canadian people the will of all Parties to right this wrong. All sorts of bureaucrats can give the legal opinion that conceptually it ought to be reported for the purposes of calculating the Guaranteed Income Supplement. We give advantages to other groups in society. Why can we not restore a benefit to senior citizens in the country?

I am hopeful that Members opposite will take this opportunity to join with me in attempting to have that wrong righted. I am not asking Members of Parliament to be entirely political. However, if they wish to be political and condemn the previous Government, that is fine. However, let us change this provision for the benefit of senior citizens. Canadians across the country want this change. Unfortunately, they do not belong to a national organization which is well-heeled like a chamber of commerce that can come to Ottawa and give articulate presentations and documentations. They do not have that advantage, but they do have Members of Parliament. I believe that it is the duty of a Member of Parliament to represent his constituents. That may sometimes fly in the face of what the Government is attempting to do. I said then and I say now that the Government was wrong to do what it did. Let us change the provision for the benefit of the senior citizens in the country.

There would be no shame for the Government to introduce an amendment. The Minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) can do that through a Ways and Means motion. He can change it in the budget, if he wishes.

I sincerely request members of the Conservative Party to amend this Act to enable thousands of senior citizens to have an extra $191 or $25 a month. This is an opportunity for Members of Parliament to ensure that this Parliament is constructive. Surely to God we can bestow upon two million Canadians a benefit which they had for 20 years. Surely the wrong that was committed can be righted. We have the means to do it.

I suggest that there is some political will within this Chamber, Mr. Speaker. I will not mind what is said by Members who rise to speak on this issue. However, I will mind what they do. It is a serious matter when you live at the poverty level and the big hand of government takes a small amount of money away from you. To those individuals it is a significant amount and it hurts. The Prime Minister talked about civility before he entered this Chamber and shortly thereafter. I hope that civility will prevail in this Chamber on this issue. I hope that government Members in particular, as well as those in the New Democratic Party, will support me in this.

The Government will reap benefits if this change is made because people will respond favourably to it. I will applaud the Government for making it. I very sincerely ask all Members of Parliament to change this provision so that workmen's compensation will not be included for the purposes of calculating the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

Mr. Dick: I have a question, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no questions or comments on this.

Mr. Dick: If you sought unanimous consent could I ask a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No, this is Private Member's Hour.

Mr. Dick: It has been done before.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Deputy Government House Leader should know that everyone wants to speak on this. By the time we get to six o'clock I will get flak from three or four sides from Members asking why they cannot speak on this particular Private Members' motion. Therefore, I will recognize now the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Gurbin).

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) has put his arguments forward in such an eloquent and compassionate way that no one who has listened can doubt his sincerity or his very real concern for the people who have been affected by this change. We should all compliment the Member for raising a matter which has caused members of all Parties considerable concern, particularly in the last Parliament. I know from the tone of the Hon. Member's comments that he does not view this in a political manner. He is not making this a partisan issue. He has appealed to us not to make it a partisan issue either, but to put it forward for serious consideration.

My own position on this matter is equally non-partisan. On matters of tax and social policy all Members would prefer to consider things from a non-partisan point of view.

• (1720)

I would like to take this time to express the concern, not only of the Hon. Member but of all Members, for senior citizens throughout Canada who have been affected in a number of ways by various pieces of legislation. I suggest that a review of the situation will explain the purpose of these provisions and why it would be inappropriate at this time to support the Hon. Member's motion. Let me emphasize that I do share the fundamental concern for the welfare of our senior citizens that I know is felt by the Hon. Member.

My concerns about his motion arise from a strong concern of my own about the concept of equity and fairness to all Canadians which must surely underlie all that we do.

As Hon. Members are aware, the Income Tax Act amendments in question were first raised in the Budget presented in November of 1981. I know that the Hon. Member has freely criticized those amendments which were introduced by his Government. I do not think I could match his condemnation of the changes that were introduced in that Budget. None of us who were there at the time can forget that there were a number of other measures included in that Budget which had disastrous effects on other groups of Canadians throughout the country. The question we must ask is whether or not the Hon. Member supported that Budget when it came before the House. I would assume that he supported it and its measures, including the one under discussion today.

If I may refer to documents issued at that time to explain the proposal, it is clear that the amendments were intended to put all similar programs on the same basis with respect to the calculation of eligibility for payments under the Guaranteed Income Supplement and Child Tax Credit provisions.

Specifically, the then Government wanted to deal with cases where some recipients of GIS were already in receipt of substantial income from workmen's compensation, and yet were placed on a par with those who had no other income. It wanted also to clear up a problem in a more general area of taxation. Previously, a person claiming the dependant deduction did not have to take into account any income from workmen's compensation which his dependant might have. But would it be right to allow eligibility as a full dependant someone in receipt of as much as $20,000 in some cases?

It is important to note that the change proposed was implemented in such a way as not to affect an individual's tax payable, as it was recognized that such a change would indeed mean hardship for a number of those receiving workmen's compensation and other payments.

Let me also emphasize a very important point with respect to this issue. The changes did not alter the special status of workmen's compensation payments, whereby they are not subject to tax themselves. We are talking about the effect of including income which is already granted special treatment.

In 1984, a number of Hon. Members, including the Hon. Member from Cape Breton, raised the matter in the House when it became clear that one effect of the change was to reduce GIS payments for certain persons. The matter was also raised by some columnists in the press. The Hon. Member also pointed out comments made by other individuals. In the debate on Bill C-40 in the second session of the last Parliament, both in the House and in the standing committee, the issue was thoroughly considered.

The committee consideration of the question now being raised was most interesting and the basic rules underlying the debate emerged from it with some clarity. One very important point was with respect to the GIS program itself; another related to the Income Tax Act and its approach to the sources from which taxable income is derived. Then there was the question of how workmen's compensation payments are viewed, whether as replacement for income or as payment for the injury itself.

Finally, the testimony of the then Minister of National Health and Welfare pointed to the question of the amount of work needed to deal with the problem, which she admitted had not been anticipated by her or her officials. I think it is worth-while to look at each of these points.

My concern in taking the time to deal with them is that I do not want the House to rush into correcting something that may be regretted by some Members, when hasty action may in fact cause greater problems or raise issues which are best left for more careful study in a more appropriate way. It would be most inappropriate to consider just one small matter without considering how it fits into the general policies being followed by the Government.

Because the motion deals in effect with the Guaranteed Income Supplement, I would first like to consider that program. It is important to remember that the GIS is a program directed to the poorest of our senior citizens, those whose income would otherwise consist solely of payments from the Old Age Security program and possibly small amounts of other income. It is addressed to those people who are not able to provide for themselves in their later years and who would otherwise be left in a very depressed state economically.

Because the Government does not want to penalize those who have small additional income, there is a threshold below which benefits are not reduced by added income. Above that threshold, GIS entitlement decreases gradually by 50 cents for every dollar of income until benefits are completely eliminated. Surely this demonstrates that the GIS is not and never was intended to be anything other than a program directed to low income members of our society. Even the requirement that persons in receipt of the GIS must apply each year is evidence that the authors of the program recognized that changing circumstances might raise an individual's income and so reduce the need for the GIS.

Let me take a moment to point out that in the current year, the threshold above which GIS is not paid is over $11,000 for a single person and over $16,500 for a couple. Obviously, those at this level are not well off and they have my sympathy and that of the Government. But there are many who are worse off. Should we be considering a change which would put those in receipt of workmen's compensation benefits in a superior position to those who have no income other than OAS and GIS?

Another important principle which comes into play in this debate is one of the basic foundations of the Income Tax Act. This Act attempts to deal with all income and to treat it fairly across the whole range of sources. No one is going to claim that the Act is perfect and that there are no possible improvements. However, we ought to be careful before we support a move which may reduce the equity of certain provisions of the Act.

It would be difficult to argue that some sources of income, such as workmen's compensation payments, should be treated differently from other types of compensation. This was the situation prior to the 1981 Budget. Other disability payments have always had to be declared as income for the purpose of eligibility under the GIS, and it is not clear why workmen's compensation ought to be different.

I know that it is urged that compensation payments are different in kind from most other sources of income. Some view them exclusively as compensation for injury in the sense that a cane is some measure of compensation for an injured leg. Surely, however, workmen's compensation is not that, at least not that in its main thrust.

Many members of the standing committee made it clear last June that they accept that workmen's compensation payments are intended to replace in whole or in part the income which an individual would otherwise have earned and on which that person would of course be liable to pay tax or to be assessed for the purpose of GIS eligibility. The fact that compensation payments vary in duration as well as in amount reflects the fact that the awarding boards realize that income replacement during a period of deprivation is a significant function. How can we state categorically that compensation payments are different in kind from other types of payment when they are not viewed as being different in kind by the very bodies which decide on their duration and amount?

I recognize with the Hon. Member who moved this motion that individuals who may have received deductions in GIS payments unexpectedly were, not unreasonably, unhappy when that happened. Equally however, I must look at the broader picture in which some people who receive quite large incomes from workmen's compensation awards, such as up to $20,000 as I noted earlier, would still have been in receipt of the entire GIS payments. I do not think that those people whose only source of income is the OAS and GIS would view as fair changes to allow some other people with substantial other sources of income to be placed on the same basis as themselves.

We should also take note of the comments of the then Minister of National Health and Welfare who told the standing committee in June of 1984 that she and the then Minister of Finance decided that to take any positive action in response to the Members' concerns would not be appropriate. They saw clearly that the implications of undertaking this action would be very far-reaching.

The current Minister of a National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has announced that his officials are carrying out a comprehensive review of which sources of income should be included for GIS purposes. This—and I think this is a very major point in my response—is an appropriate way to consider the type of proposal which the Hon. Member has made in his proposal, namely, that the Government is looking at this issue very seriously and that changes may be made, but those changes should be done in the context of the entire review and not on a piece-meal basis.

An additional complication, which might result from an ill-judged amendment along the lines of the motion before us today, concerns the implications for the provinces. Hon. Members may be aware that prior to the changes we have been discussing today, it was necessary to pass remission orders every year to ensure that certain maintenance payments made by provincial Governments were not to be viewed as income for the purposes of GIS eligibility. The changes made in the 1981 Budget in this area ensured that there was a greater uniformity of treatment for all similar payments, whether federal or provincial in origin, and did away with the necessity for repeated remission orders. Again, however, I do not want to seem to be unfeeling toward those who were affected adversely by this measure. But I have to take into account that any legislation, and perhaps especially the Income Tax Act, has to deal as much as possible with general provisions.

I take special note here of the Member's comment regarding the bureaucratic mind-set. I think that is an interesting point that has evolved over a number of years and has been shown to be unfortunate in a number of cases. It is one of the things of which I and other Members on this side are mindful and to which we pay significant attention. On the other hand, I do not want to denigrate the activities and the necessity for proper political direction for a proper response.

From one point of view it would be nice to have an Act which could be applied specifically to every individual's situation—but such an Act would be many times as long as the present one. Surely we are coming to realize that what is needed is not more complication but less, so that basic equity can be preserved as easily as possible and as few persons as possible see fairness denied by an Act which is too complicated to understand or administer equitably.

We have to take certain facts into account as well when we are considering what action it is appropriate for us to take in response to this motion. It calls for certain actions to be taken by this House to respond to what I think we would all recognize is a difficult situation for some Canadians. The amount of money involved is probably not large when compared with the current level of spending on the GIS program. This level of spending is $2.5 billion a year. I am informed, however, that although 39,000 Canadians over 65 are currently in receipt of workmen's compensation payments, all but about 2,000 of these people are considered to have 60 per cent or less disability and only about 800 are permanently and totally disabled and receiving the maximum amount. We are therefore not talking about a lot of money, but we are also therefore not talking about a problem which, on the broad scale, is as large as many others we face today.

We should remember that the people affected adversely by the sections of the Income Tax Act before us do in fact have as much income as many others, or more. Like other disabled persons they continue to have access to other provisions of the Income Tax Act, such as those which assist the disabled and other programs which recognize the special needs of the disabled in general. Finally, I would point out that even within the group of 39,000 persons who receive workmen's compensation payments and are over 65, many if not the large majority are in any case disqualified from receiving the GIS, as other pensions and personal revenue raise their income levels to above the threshold.

Let me return in closing to the comments which I made at the outset of my remarks this afternoon. I hope that I have made clear that my own feelings about the motion before us are not based on simple partisan politics. I know that the Hon. Member who moved the motion raised this question in the last Parliament and in different political circumstances than today's. I appreciate that Members from both sides of this Chamber agree that the problem he raises is one that is real for those affected and that does not need to be viewed in a purely partisan way.

I hope I have also made it clear that it is not a matter of seeing a need and responding to it in a simple way. There are questions of equity under the law which are raised by it. Do those who support this motion really intend that this one source of income should be set apart and not considered in the administration of one of our major social programs? For it must be remembered that although this motion refers to changing certain provisions of the Income Tax Act, and therefore raises the question of equity and fairness under that Act, the program which is affected is the Guaranteed Income

Supplement. The mechanism which has been suggested as a means of dealing with a specific situation involves general issues of taxation and income under one Act, but the meat of the question, the substantive issue, is one which underlies the GIS program and our approach to those citizens who have little else to support them.

I think no one can doubt the sincerity, the honesty and the real concern that the Hon. Member who put forward this motion has expressed. I know all Members are interested in this subject. It is not easy, even if there is only one Canadian affected, to see a reduction in income, particularly when that income is seen to be necessary for that Canadian. We are looking at it in a broad context, and I know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare are open to changes which are constructive and progressive. I hope that in the future the Hon. Member will be able to support them.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in the debate on this motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). As the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Gurbin) has said, no one can doubt his sincerity. He comes from a place and represents a riding that is very much like my own, predominantly a mining community. He really speaks with sincerity and sensitivity about the problems which his constituents are facing because those are exactly the same sort of problems that my constituents face with respect to GIS and having to declare workmen's compensation payments as income.

I think a red herring was drawn across the path of the debate. I do not know anyone in my riding who collects $20,000 a year in workmen's compensation payments. The word compensate means an indemnity. It means "to make up for", and invariably, in 99.99 per cent of cases, in all of the cases, to collect workmen's compensation one has to incur an injury on the job. Oftentimes it is a disabling injury which limits the ability of the individual to earn income to support himself and his family in some dignity. The compensation payment is not only a replacement for potential income, but it is a recognition that there is a handicap. From my experience, the disability results in an incapacitation and a handicap, and there is a cost involved in maintaining the person who is on workmen's compensation. To turn around and say the workmen's compensation payment has to be declared as income seems to me to fly in the face of any sort of fairness.

It was never used prior to the change in Bill C-139. I am really impressed with the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond who correctly castigated the former Liberal Government, his Government, for its chintzy and cheap approach to the Guaranteed Income Supplement. I know he did it publicly, in committee and through letters to the former Minister of National Health and Welfare, Monique Bégin.

The argument I heard from the government side is that there is a fairness. The reverse argument is that other people receiving GIS will look at someone who is on workmen's compensation and receiving GIS and say that that is not fair. I am quite sure the person on workmen's compensation would prefer not to receive any workmen's compensation payments; I am sure he would prefer to be healthy, to pursue his career and to receive an income from his labour. I am sure a person on workmen's compensation would much prefer that than to have an accident and go through the strenuous procedure to obtain workmen's compensation. Indeed, in Ontario, it is one of the most serious problems faced by workers with injuries on the job. The whole question of establishing that the injury took place on the job and the extent of the injury has created a jurisdictional jungle. To argue that a poor person on GIS would look to someone on GIS and receiving workmen's compensation and say that it was not fair, is to reduce the income of the person on workmen's compensation to the lowest common denominator. Instead of saying that we should raise the supplement for the poor person, they are saying that we should knock down the person from the other end of the scale or bring him down to the lowest common denominator. It seems to me that that is inequitable and unfair.

There is another question which I think bears some elucidation. As a matter of fact, it was debated in a committee of the House in the last Parliament. It was debated before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs of the Thirty-second Parliament in 1984. The exact date was Thursday, June 7, 1984. The former Minister of National Health and Welfare, Monique Bégin, was the witness. I often see buck passing going on, and we saw it with Monique Bégin. She passed the buck to the former Minister of Finance. We must remember that health and welfare came under her jurisdiction. However, in response to the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), she said:

> There is an equity problem behind it. That is not easy to face. I understand very well the way the reasoning was made to me. I have it—I do not know through how many letters from Dave Dingwall himself, for example, and from members of other parties—that any additional benefit for a good cause, a disability, a special situation, is something we should protect and should not treat equally with other incomes. Right now the Canadian income tax system has never been made like that.

She concluded by saying:

> In a way, that should be discussed with the Minister of Finance, not with me. I am not the Minister in charge of that, period.

The Minister of Health said that that was not her problem, that is was the problem of the then Minister of Finance. Nevertheless, it was made without enough debate or discussion of the matter. Now the Government of the day says that it would like to change it, but that it cannot just make changes because it might create an inequitable situation. Then it talks about the $20,000 per year person who is on workmen's compensation payments. It could be compared to the case of the bank president who makes $500,000 and therefore should not get family allowance. There are only 15 bank presidents in the country. I do not know if there are 15 people on workmen's compensation who collect $20,000 a year.

Also the Minister of National Health and Welfare in the previous Government is reported to have said in a debate in the House of Commons:

—that to ignore income from sources such as workmen's compensation would result in inequitably higher benefits for pensioners who have such sources of income than for pensioners without such sources.

Again we hear the argument of inequitability. How can we talk about inequitability when we are talking about couples earning $16,000 per year or about single persons earning $11,000 per year? How can we talk about inequitability in giving them a few hundred more dollars per year? This is something I do not understand.

In the last Parliament the special committee on the handicapped made no less than 11 recommendations with respect to recognizing that a person on a fixed income with a disability has certain additional expenses which able-bodied persons on fixed incomes do not have. In fact, workmen's compensation payments beyond age 65 become very important in terms of assisting disabled persons to live with some dignity the rest of their days.

The motion of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond is quite appropriate. It seems to me that we can make a change. The Hon. Member said that we were not talking about a lot of money. In fact, it is a lot of money for people living in areas such as Cape Breton and Nickel Belt. When they finally come to fill out application forms—and it is a means test—they have to declare workmen's compensation payments.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment has said that they do not pay any income tax on workmen's compensation payments. That is in fact the way it was worked out. They only receive 50, 60 or 70 per cent of their wages. This is because of the fact that there is no tax on it. If they received 100 per cent, of course they would pay income tax.

We on this side of the House in the New Democratic Party support the motion of the Hon. Member. We urge the Government to correct the mistake of the previous Liberal Government. I know that many Members on the government side in the last Parliament argued against removing this particular provision. I suggest that they should now come out of the closet and stand with us and urge the Minister to return to the way it was before.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am really happy to have been able to second the motion of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). I have had many years of experience; in fact one of the first things which brought me into politics was the question of injured workers in the Province of Ontario. When I came to the federal House I was asked by a reporter what was the one thing I would like to do in my term in Parliament. I said that one concrete thing I would like to do would be to assist in encouraging the Government to effect a change to the Income Tax Act, specifically as it related to the punitive measures taken in the previous Budget against injured workers.

Although I was not a Member of the federal House at the time I became aware of the discriminatory provisions with respect to injured workers in the Budget of 1983, I immediately contacted the then Minister of Finance as well as the then Minister of National Health and Welfare in order to put on the record my objection and the objection of my constituents to a particular piece of legislation which, while claiming to bring equity into the system, was extremely punitive toward those in our society who can least afford it.

I should like to trace a few misconceptions on the part of some Members who have spoken to the Bill, that is, the notion that somehow compensation should be considered as any other income. If we trace the history of the introduction of compensation in provinces across the country, we will know that compensation in the workplace was introduced in an effort to improve or speed-up the process faced by a worker injured on the job and in an effort to introduce an over-all scheme to cover workers. Each worker in the country has given up his or her right to sue for a safe workplace.

We see from the litigation that occurs in the United States that not many companies will want to revert to the system that we had prior to the introduction of workmen's compensation in the 1930s where each individual was forced to take his or her company to task in a direct lawsuit when it dealt with a case of injury on the job. They gave up the right to sue, which in the 1980s could result in settlements of literally thousands if not millions of dollars.

In my constituency, a worker was blinded while in the employ of Westinghouse. As a result of that incident, he will remain disabled for the rest of his life. That person does not have the right to sue. He will receive a full disability from the Workmen's Compensation Board. He has had great difficulty and a change in his life as a young man as a result of that incident. This points to the need for compensation to be more than simply a retirement or pension plan scheme.

Compensation is more than that. It recognizes the fact that the workers have given up the right to sue. It recognizes the difficulty—I am really sorry if the Members of the Government are not interested in this issue. It happens to be an issue about which I feel strongly. I am sure many hundreds if not thousands of their constituents are concerned about it.

When you talk about injured workers, you are talking about many people whose income is less than $10,000 a year. These people are living below the poverty line, according to Senate statistics and any other statistics that have been furnished. These people are not living in the lap of luxury.

When the amendment was introduced into the Income Tax Act, it further punished workers who had already been deprived of the right to a quality of life which was similar to what they had experienced before their injury. By one stroke of the income tax pen, those workers not only lost their dignity and the quality of life, which had already suffered as a result of their injuries, but they were being further punished financially. I do not believe that the equity argument is being compromised in the amendment suggested by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond. If the Government sees fit to introduce this amendment, it will receive the full support of all Members of the House. It certainly speaks to the very reasons that we are here in Parliament. As the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond said so aptly, in many respects we are here to speak for those who cannot speak for themselves.

The Government spokesman suggests that most people who are on workmen's compensation are being compensated for only 20, 30 or 40 per cent. I have seen literally thousands of workers who demonstrated before the Legislature of Ontario. Those same workers—

Mr. Paproski: Order, please. I would like to hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: Those same workers on the 20 and 30 per cent pensions are surviving on provincial welfare benefits. That is the level to which they have been reduced as a result of work injuries and a lack or responsiveness of the Government in recognizing that when an iron worker breaks his arm, he is not 5, 10 or 15 per cent disabled, as suggested by the current compensation system of the Province of Ontario, but is totally disabled.

Let us take the case of a factory worker in my riding. If a woman in a textile mill hurts her back, she cannot sit at a sewing machine for eight or nine hours a day. She is laid off. The Compensation Board tells her to find another job. She does not speak English, she has Grade 3 education, and she has virtually no other employment opportunities. She is pensioned off at the rate of 15 per cent. These are the people who are being hurt by this particular income tax provision.

[Translation]

—I am convinced that if the Government decides to support the Bill as proposed by the Hon. Member whom I have the honour of supporting myself because if there is one thing I can accomplish during my four or five years here in Parliament it will be to change this provision to have a little more justice for our workers and a little more dignity, and to restore some of the quality of life a worker loses when he or she is hurt on the job. It is a major problem for our workers, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that Members on all sides of the House will support this Bill.

I would like to go on speaking to this proposal, but since we only have five minutes left, I would like to have a chance to vote on the Bill because it is so very important for all Canadian workers.

I remain at your disposal, Mr. Speaker, but I would invite all Hon. Members, especially those on the Government side, to support the Bill as presented by my hon. colleague.

[English]

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I am happy indeed to have the opportunity to speak to this motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). I am also pleased to see so many of my colleagues across the way with their shiny noses and smiling faces. I am sure they have paid a good deal of attention to this debate because, as the Hon. Member said, it is an important debate. I agree very much with the contents of this motion.

All Parties in this House have shown their interest in this amendment. In the last several years, they have supported many changes in the Old Age Security Act. They are very concerned with the financial needs of pensioners. Special attention has been given in this House and by my Government to income-tested benefits provided under the Act because we all recognize that these benefits have been targeted to those who need help the most.

My Government has moved in this direction by moving the spousal allowance down to ages 60 to 64. That Bill is now before the committee. My Government recognizes that we are dealing with limited resources. The idea in the 1950, 1960s and 1970s that there was no limit to the amount of money that we could provide has now disappeared. There is not a nation in the western industrialized world that has not had to either cut back on social benefits or to increase the contributions of those who receive the benefits. The demands for education and medical care have to be offset by the demands for pensions.

My Government recognizes that the great question in the 1980s is to ensure that we achieve a rational pension system which will ensure that no one retires without sufficient means to lead a decent life. In that sense, pensions have to be targeted. I believe everyone recognizes that.

The previous Government introduced a measure which has caused a great deal of difficulty for one group of Canadians. That, of course, is the subject of the motion before us today. It was an amendment to the Income Tax Act which was passed during 1983. It made the compensation benefits of workers accountable as income, but not subject to tax.

The main effect of that change, which received some publicity at the time and some opposition from Members on all sides of the House, is that the recipients of the GIS, spousal allowance and OAS had to begin declaring any workmen's compensation benefits as income. In some cases this reduced or eliminated supplements for many pensioners. That is a good example of bringing in quick changes in legislation without assessing the side effect it may have on other legislation and other programs. That is the reason why my Government is examining the whole question very carefully and cannot go along with this isolated change.

The Minister in charge will do a complete review of how income for GIS recipients will be assessed and what has to be done in this regard. This is an important issue which the Hon. Member has raised. It is a valid concern. Members may have had as much concern about the way it was done as about the actual change itself. Workmen's compensation is now counted for the purpose of income tax. I am sure that in the future, we will see some changes in this area and that we might see many changes. I note that it is now six o'clock. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION—SUSPENSION OF CALGARY CABLE STATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on December 14 last, based on the decision of the CRTC to disallow a Christian program heard in Calgary and surrounding area, I asked the Acting Minister of Communications in the House of Commons on December 14, 1984, if the Minister would look into the said suspension and ascertain why the CRTC is so opposed to Christian programs and Christian music. The Acting Minister, the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean), took the question as notice and advised the House that he would personally raise this matter with the Minister as he had a special interest in the subject.

On January 16, 1985, I received a reply to a letter I had sent to the CRTC in which I deplored the said suspension. This letter indicated that the Christian program that had been suspended would now be allowed. So the people won and the program may once again be heard in Calgary and area.

The second part of my question about the reason why the CRTC is so opposed to Christian programs and Christian music, has gone unanswered so far. I am very concerned about the attitude and the actions of the CRTC regarding Christian programs and Christian music. Let us look at how the CRTC handled an application made by Canadian Family Radio Limited of Vancouver.

At the original hearing in October, 1978, the CRTC questioned the applicant extensively on its religious program with the proposed concept of family programming. The CRTC was informed that like other applicants, the proposed station was a commercial venture totally dependent on its revenue from the sale of advertising and thus would have to appeal to a broad audience and that no religious group or organization would control the station.

In February, 1979, nine commissioners of the CRTC gave unanimous approval in principle to the application. However, four months later the CRTC changed its mind and called a second hearing which was held on February 12, 1980. The applicant was then kept waiting for five more months even though the Commission had knowledge of the mounting financial outlay of the applicant.

On July 9, 1980, a full 15 months after nine members of the CRTC had given the application unanimous approval in principle, the CRTC denied the application. The CRTC considered that there was too much religious content. Has the CRTC become a censor board?

I should mention that some commissioners of the CRTC did submit a minority report, part of which stated emphatically that the conditions that the CRTC had imposed on the applicant could not reasonably be met. Again, during the second hearing four months after nine commissioners of the CRTC had given approval in principle, the CRTC pulled a fast one by having six members present, two of whom were new, while five members who were on the panel when the approval was given were not in attendance. Even with this substantial change, there was still a minority report. The CRTC's handling of this application destroyed a lot of its credibility and, in my view, the Canadian Family Radio people were treated shabbily. That is why I ask why the CRTC is so opposed to Christian programs and Christian music. The CRTC was so determined to reject this application that even when the applicant finally offered to comply with whatever the CRTC required, the CRTC simply ignored the offer.

Time will not permit an exhaustive review of legislation, but I must refer to Section 3 of the Broadcasting Act which clearly states that all persons licensed to carry on broadcasting undertakings have a responsibility for programs they broadcast but that the right to freedom of expression and the right of persons to receive programs, subject only to generally applicable statutes and regulations, is unquestioned.

Furthermore, the CRTC's anti-Christian and anti-religious policy infringes on Sections 1(c) and 1(d) of the Canadian Bill of Rights which recognize freedom of religion and freedom of speech, and Sections 2(a) and 2(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which guarantee the freedom of conscience and religion and freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including of the press and other media of information.

In the United States there is no bar to Christian or religious programs. If the people like what they hear, they listen and support the station. If they do not want to listen they turn it off, and the company will not stay in business very long if there is no support for the station. But in Canada, at least until now, the people have no such choice. An appointed board says in effect, "We will not license a station that specializes in Christian programs and Christian music". How much longer will the people tolerate this bureaucratic discrimination that is contrary to the Broadcasting Act and contrary to the Canadian Bill of Rights and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his very persuasive comments. I know that he was pleased to learn that the CRTC took action on December 21, 1984, in Public Notice 1984-318, in which it indicated it is now prepared to allow the continued carriage of religious U.S. FM stations.

The CRTC's non-renewal of the Calgary cable system's authority to carry U.S. religious radio station KMBI as a cable audio service had been the result of a policy announced by the Commission in May, 1984 that it would not renew existing authorities for the carriage of U.S. religious radio stations. This had an impact on cable systems across Canada and in British Columbia, Alberta and Kingston, Ontario, in particular. Both the Department of Communications and the CRTC received numerous complaints from cable subscribers who found themselves suddenly deprived of U.S. Christian radio stations which they had, until then, been able to receive on their cable audio service. But as I have said at the outset of my remarks, this situation has now been corrected and the continued carriage of religious U.S. FM stations will be allowed.

I should like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to point out that the CRTC has also approved the concept of a Canadian national interfaith religious television programming service delivered by satellite to cable systems. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, an application from the Canadian Interfaith Network to provide such a service is currently with the Commission.

This application from the network was received in response to an invitation from the CRTC to all interested parties to file applications to provide a predominantly Canadian interfaith religious programming service that would be varied and comprehensive, reflecting equitably the religious practices and beliefs of Canadians. It would be delivered by satellite to cable systems across Canada. The CRTC also asked applicants to give consideration to the manner in which regional or local religious programming might be included to supplement the over-all program schedule of the national service.

The Canadian Interfaith Network, CIN, or Réseau Inter-Religieux Canadien as it is known in our other official language, was the only organization to submit an application in response to the CRTC's call, but it represents several religious groups in Canada. At a public hearing on November 27, 1984, the network appeared before the CRTC to report progress on the development of its membership structure and on other questions related to its application. Speaking at that hearing, as a representative of the network, the Hon. David MacDonald noted:

> It is fundamentally important for the commission to realize that the network is not merely a collection of individuals with an interest in religious broadcasting. Rather, it is an entity which has grown out of a time consuming and difficult process of due consideration by the governing bodies of the various religious communities, amounting to a direct and formal commitment by these bodies. This fact, in itself, sets the network apart from any application the commission has ever received—or is likely to see again.

The Hon. Member will know that our former colleague, the Hon. David MacDonald, is a former and distinguished Minister of Communications. He is a man of the cloth and a man who knows full well the importance of interfaith and religious broadcasting.

POLITICAL PARTIES—TORONTO ELECTION CAMPAIGNS—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF FINANCE. (B) REQUEST FOR APOLOGY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am pleased to participate in the adjournment debate this evening and specifically to readdress the question I asked of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on December 14. I had referred to some statements that were made in a Canadian Press interview with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He was quoted as saying that, "The election campaigns we fight in downtown Toronto are 'don't vote for the Tories or they are going to send you back to Italy. That is what is at the door. That is the politics that people will play. It is the politics of fear'."

At that time, Mr. Speaker, I and many others from the Italian community, in fact Canadians from different communities, took offence at those statements. When I asked the question of the Prime Minister and followed it up in correspondence, it was sad to see the patronizing attitude taken by the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I will quote part of his answer:

> —I thank my hon. friend for his observation. For my part and that of my Party, we have been honoured by the support that we have received from the Italian community in Canada—

There are two things wrong with that. First, it is a patronizing, off-base attitude which did not address or acknowledge the statements made by his Minister of Finance. Second, the statement is not true. They did not get support from the Canadian-Italian community. If one looks at the electoral statistics, one will quickly realize that is not the case.

These statements are wrong, Mr. Speaker, and derogatory for two essential reasons. First, he is saying that my Party, including myself, as well as the NDP, fought a campaign in Toronto based on fear. He is saying we went to the doors of Canadians of Italian extraction and said that if they do not vote for us but vote for the Tories, they are going to be sent back to Italy. That was not the case, Mr. Speaker. Neither I nor any member of my Party conducted that sort of campaign. I challenge the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance to come forward with evidence to justify those very serious allegations. They should not make those statements without bringing forward proof. If they do make them, as they did, they should be prepared to retract them and apologize for the shortsightedness of the statements.

The second thing wrong with that statement is that if those two other political Parties conducted such campaigns, which they did not, the Minister of Finance attributes low intelligence to Canadians of Italian background. It is interesting to see that in that same interview the Minister of Finance said that Canadians are not given credit for their intelligence on the issue of social programs. He then finished his interview with the derogatory statement I read into the record earlier. Is the Minister suggesting there are two types of Canadians? Perhaps there are, on the one hand, Canadians who do understand the system and the mechanisms, and, on the other hand, those new Canadians who are more gullible. Well, that is not the case either, and that was perhaps the greater offence.

This is a community that has come and worked here and it understands and appreciates the Canadian political spectrum. They participate in the Canadian mainstream and the political process. They also come from a country which gave us Machiavelli, so I do not think we have to be lectured by any Minister of the Crown to the effect that one particular Canadian community is gullible enough to believe that if you vote for the Tories the political fall-out will be deportation.

We live in 1985, Mr. Speaker, and I thought those kinds of comments were passé. Obviously they are not, and so I sought from the Prime Minister an acknowledgement that the statements were erroneous, uncalled for, and that he should send the right signals to those communities to the effect that they are a well respected part of this country. I believe that the injustice that has been done is that the Minister and the Prime Minister have failed to grasp the opportunity to send those signals to those communities and to admit that those statements were in fact unfortunate and unsubstantiated.

In subsequent press articles, the Minister of Finance said that he saw no reason to retract those statements. The Prime Minister answered the letter by saying that the Italian community gave them even greater support in the last election. That is the type of patronizing attitude that will not instil a sense of confidence in the communities of new Canadians. It will not instil a sense of confidence in the promises and commitments that he and his Government made to the multicultural communities of the country and to the multicultural policy. If we are to give credit and weight to these commitments and promises, the statements made by the Minister of Finance should be taken off the record. It should be admitted that they were a mistake. If those statements go uncorrected, members of the Italian Canadian community will not look to the Government with such grace. I hope we will receive a correction and retraction of those statements in the answer given by the Parliamentary Secretary this evening. I am looking forward to hearing from the Hon. Member at this time.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Signor Presìdente, sone honorata di rispondere a nomme del mio colléga l'onorevole Michael Wilson. I am very pleased to be here responding to this question because I am angered by the opportunism which has been shown by the Hon. Member opposite. I am very proud that in my riding there are 7,000 Italo-Canadians. That is not patronizing, Mr. Speaker. Those people are my friends, as are people from the German, Anglo, French and Hungarian communities in my riding. Some of the warmest memories I have of the campaign are of visiting with people in the Italian community in my riding, many of whom were my friends before I ran for public office and have been welcomed in my home. I resent the implication that the Hon. Member has left in his remarks throughout this discussion that somehow this is patronizing.

The very second stamp in the first passport I ever had as a Canadian was from Italy. I spent a month in the birthplace of western culture. I have been back and intend to return again, because Italian Canadians are among the people who I am proud to call my friends. I do not regard it patronizing to say so, and neither do they.

I would like to point out to the House that our Party is committed to representing all communities in Canada. I would like to emphasize that the Party of Mazankowski, Hnatyshyn, Della Noce, Jelinek and Mitges objects strongly to such allegations. Canada's cultural communities voted in overwhelming numbers for this Party on September 4. I see no reason that we should not be proud of that. This is a record of which we are proud and a record on which we will build in the future.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has also stated:

> I want to be able to say that our country is one where all citizens have an equal opportunity to achieve their full potential; a society which strives for equality in all aspsects of life, where people applaud ingenuity and daring and reward creativity and excellence.

I am very proud to belong to a Party which stands for that kind of philosophy. I am only sorry that the Hon. Member opposite has chosen to use this as an opportunistic political topic.

AGRICULTURE—MARITIME FEED GRAIN COSTS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, the occasion for my speaking this evening in the House is as a result of a question that I put to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) some weeks ago. It was with regard to whether he would favourably consider a proposal by the Maritime Farmers Council to enhance the Feed Freight Assistance Program which has been in place since 1941 to assist farmers in feeding their livestock and being competitive in the market-place.

• (1820)

In 1984 the agricultural community recorded record bankruptcies. Approximately 551 farmers went bankrupt. When the Minister was addressing the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, he stated that the Government had to pay attention to the 39,000 farmers who are in severe to moderate financial distress but who have a chance to survive. A substantial number of those farmers, plus a number who went bankrupt in 1984, and a substantial number who will go bankrupt if the Government does not take positive action, live and make their living in the maritime provinces.

They are facing this crisis because they are not competitive and cannot obtain a decent return for the fruit of their labours. Many of them are not competitive because of the differential in the feed grain price between the maritime provinces and western Canada, Ontario and Quebec.

The feather industry in the maritime provinces is in trouble. It currently pays a differential in excess of $60 per tonne for feed grains that are imported into the Maritimes to raise their stock. The dairy industry has seen a decrease in the amount of fluid milk demand as a result of $47 and more per tonne that it must pay in excess of its brothers in Ontario, Quebec and western Canada. The beef industry is also in trouble.

The pork industry is in serious trouble because of the excess $37 it must pay per feed grain tonne to import it to the maritime provinces.

In 1941, the Feed Freight Assistance Program was brought into effect by the Government of the day. At that time it covered approximately 90 per cent of the cost of transportation of grain from the Lakehead to eastern Canada. Over the years that price eroded to the point where, between 1967 and 1976, it was approximately 59.3 per cent of the total cost of transportation.

Today, farmers are being compensated to the tune of approximately 19 per cent to 28 per cent for the importation of Ontario corn and 26 per cent to 33 per cent for western grain. Our farmers cannot bear that type of depletion in their incomes.

For example, the hog producers in Ontario are receiving approximately $13.99 per market hog sold, plus an average payment of $4.90 covered under the Agriculture Stabilization Act. The average return of a market hog sold is $18.89. His brother in the maritime provinces is receiving a net farm income per hog sold of 14 cents, compared to the $18.89.

What we are looking for in the maritime provinces is the ultimate goal of self-sufficiency in the production of feed grains. In the meantime, only 45 per cent of that land available to us is under production. We have the potential for substantially more land production, but it is going to take a few years to get it into production. There is a plan in place. We expect by the year 2000, if that plan is implemented, that we can be self-sufficient in the maritime provinces. In the meantime, we ask the Government to do what it has done for Canadian farmers in the West, what it has done for the Crow rate, and what it has done through the Stabilization Act for farmers here in Ontario and Quebec, to provide farmers in the maritime provinces with only what it is providing for those other farmers in the rest of Canada, that is, the same type of assistance. What it amounts to is an immediate infusion of $13.3 million in new money which would be added to the $7.2 million already identified as dollars that would be injected into the Feed Freight Assistance Program, for a total of $20.5 million. As our agricultural land is put into production to make us self-sufficient in the growth of grain products, the amount will reduce each year, naturally. As more land comes into production, the more self-sufficient we become, the amount will lessen, and by the yeawr 2000 it will have been eliminated.

The key words are short-term. It is for the short-term period. The food and agricultural sector in the maritime provinces is vital to our economy and to our survival.

I ask this Government to approach this serious plight positively. The nearly bankrupt farmers in the maritime provinces are dependent upon feed grain importation. I ask the Government to give them every serious consideration.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his representation on a very serious topic, one about which he is extremely concerned and one on which I know he has worked hard in the past and will do so again in the future.

I would say at the outset that this Government is committed to the survival and prosperity of the livestock and poultry industry throughout Canada. In the case of the Maritimes, we believe that the long-run prosperity of the livestock and poultry industry would be well served by increased local feed production. Indeed, the Maritime Farmers' Council has stressed this very point. To that end, two actions have been taken.

First, under the agreements with the provincial Governments, about $74 million will be spent on agricultural development over five years. Part of this money will be spent on research to develop improved varieties and cultural practices suited to the maritime conditions. Part may also be spent on improving the dissemination of information aimed at improving grain producers' efficiency and also on improving the grain marketing structure.

Second, locally produced grain was made eligible for feed freight assistance payments. This was done to ensure that maritime grain producers were not disadvantaged by the feed freight assistance payments made to assist local livestock and poultry producers.

Feed freight assistance is of course an important means of ensuring the competitive position of the maritime livestock and poultry sector. In 1983-1984, $4.8 million was paid on shipments to the Maritimes. Moreover, in the last 10 years the proportion of feed freight assistance expenditures paid for shipment in the Maritimes has increased from 17 per cent to 30 per cent.

As the Hon. Member has indicated, the Maritime Farmers' Council has proposed increasing feed freight assistance payments to cover 50 per cent of transportation costs from western and central Canada. As my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) indicated in the House of Commons on December 18, 1984, we would, of course, be willing to consider the merits of this proposal. I would, however, add a note of caution. Given the difficult budgetary position we have inherited from the previous Government, it would be necessary to identify financial resources which could be used for such a project.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O.21

[English]

DISASTERS

ANNIVERSARY OF OCEAN RANGER SINKING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, today marks the third anniversary of the sinking of the Ocean Ranger. This tragedy, which occurred on February 15, 1982, shocked our nation and brought great grief to the people of Canada, and more directly to the families of the 84 men lost at sea. The suffering of the relatives and friends of the dead, and the continuing trauma of the survivors, bring to mind the price paid by working people.

It is worth remembering, especially during the afterglow of the recently signed Atlantic Accord, that the lives of our workers must be considered before we rush into any activity. The health and safety of the riggers and seamen are as much the responsibility of our Government as the negotiating of transfer payments and energy revenues.

Let us remember the 84 men who lost their lives on February 15, 1982, when we rise to discuss labour code amendments and changes to our legislation. It is through our actions in the House and actions by the Government that future tragedies such as the Ocean Ranger can be avoided.

THE CANADIAN FLAG

A MEMORABLE DATE—FEBRUARY 15, 1965

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, at 1:30 a.m. on December 15, 1964, with 163 in favour and 78 against, Canada was given its own distinctive flag. We owe this to the courage and determination of a great Canadian, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, Leader of the Liberal Party and Prime Minister of Canada from 1963 to 1968.

On February 15, 1965, twenty years ago today—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, I am prepared to let the Member finish his statement. I am not prepared to allow displays in the House of Commons because it is against the rules.

Mr. Gauthier: You have a flag.

Mr. Speaker: I am not prepared to allow the displays. I apologize. It is against the rules. I am prepared to let the Member finish his statement.

Mr. Prud'homme: You will understand why I am so proud, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

On February 15, 1965, twenty years ago today, this symbol of Canadian unity and pride was raised above all federal buildings and property, and elsewhere across Canada. The resistance of certain politicians was swept away by the enthusiasm of Canadians for their own distinctive flag.

In fact, Mr. Maxime Guitard, one of the clerks at the Table who was committee clerk at the time, could give us the exact details of this story. Nine Members sitting in the House of Commons at the time are still sitting in the House today.

I take particular pride in recalling this event because it was the most important day in my twenty-one years in politics. Five of the nine who voted in favour were Liberals, and they were Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), Mr. Gray (Windsor-West) and Mr. Chrétien, and my good friend Ms. Pauline Jewett, who was a Liberal at the time, and myself. Four of the nine who are still sitting today voted against and belong to the Progressive Conservative Party. They included, I am sorry to say, the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Nielsen).

For us, Mr. Speaker, as it is for all Canadians, for our young people and for all new Canadians, this is one of the most memorable days of our lives.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

BUDGETARY CUTBACKS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the arts community and our cultural organizations have been forced to concentrate their efforts on defending themselves against the Government's budget-cutting attacks. As a result, they have not had a chance to develop proposals for improving cultural life in Canada.

S.O. 21

Major problems remain in addition to those caused by the cut-backs, Mr. Speaker. There are problems of distribution and access to cultural products and to performances. There are particular problems with regard to films, books, magazines, and theatrical performances. Distribution systems must be improved. Governments now subsidize the production of many products and performances that do not get to be seen by many Canadians. These subsidies would not have to be as important numerically if there were more purchases. In short, Governments ought to be purchasing books and magazines for schools, libraries, and other institutions. Such a measure would require federal and provincial co-operation.

We will be having a meeting of federal and provincial Ministers of Culture. I hope that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) will bring forward imaginative proposals to improve access to cultural products and performances in Canada, and will discuss these things with his provincial counterparts. More money is needed in this area, but certainly it is important—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Member that her time has expired.

THE ADMINISTRATION

IMPROVEMENT IN CANADA-QUEBEC RELATIONS

Mrs. Anne Blouin (Montmorency-Orléans): Mr. Speaker, my constituents of Montmorency-Orléans and their fellow Quebecers are delighted to see the climate of confidence that now reigns in negotiations between the Canadian Government and the Government of Quebec. This is very much to the liking of many Quebecers, at a time when a federal-provincial conference is being held in Regina.

The Canada-Quebec agreements signed to date are impressive both in number and in scope. On December 14 last year, the federal Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and the Quebec Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs signed the new economic and regional development agreement. Under this agreement, the federal Government will be contributing $1 billion over the next five years.

On January 22, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced the introduction of a program for technological innovation assistance in Quebec, also spread over five years. On February 1, the federal Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) and the Quebec Minister of Communications concluded an agreement aiming at promoting the development of the communications industry in Quebec.

Finally, the Government of Canada and the Government of Quebec will be spending $100 million on the tourist industry within the next few years.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on in this vein, but I would prefer to emphasize the incredible improvement in Canada-Quebec relations since the present Government came to power and decided to promote the interests of Quebec.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF UNITED NATIVE NATIONS ORGANIZATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the United Native Nations represents non status Indians and some off-reserve Indians in British Columbia. Last year the Secretary of State cut their core funding in order to provide funding for the Louis Riel Métis Association of B.C. The Métis Association certainly required the funding, but it should not have been taken from the United Native Nations. This kind of government action makes it very difficult for different aboriginal peoples to achieve unity.

In a similar manner, United Native Nations applied for Indian Affairs funding to hold workshops on proposed changes to the Indian Act which would affect their membership. However, all available funding went to the B.C. Indian Homemakers Association. The homemakers needed this funding and are holding workshops throughout the province. But again we must ask why one legitimate organization was funded at the expense of another equally legitimate organization.

British Columbia Métis and non status people favour the one window concept for Canada employment programs. The single project officer cuts down on red tape and makes it easier for native people to gain access. But they feel that they are not adequately represented on district advisory boards and as a result do not get approval for a fair share of their projects.

I call on the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), to look into these concerns and ensure that non status people are not subject to double discrimination.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Member that his time has expired.

ETHNIC AFFAIRS

UKRAINIAN CANADIAN COMMUNITY

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, on February 7, 1985, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General (Mr. Crosbie) announced the establishment of a commission of inquiry on war criminals to be conducted by Mr. Justice Jules Deschênes of the Superior Court of Quebec.

I commend the Government on its efforts to take all responsible steps to ensure any war criminals in Canada are brought to justice, whatever their racial origin. However, Mr. Speaker, we must ensure that while we are seeking out those who have perpetrated crimes against humanity we do not allow such action to reflect poorly on entire ethnic groups. Canada is a society rich in the wealth of ethnic diversity and has benefited enormously from the contribution of our citizens who have emigrated to Canada and raised their families here.

One such ethnic group with which I am familiar is the Ukrainian Canadian community of some 600,000 people, 90 per cent of whom are Canadian born. Many of these Ukrainian Canadians, indeed, fought in the Canadian Armed Forces during the Second World War against the Nazis. Some of them fought in their country to liberate it from Russian and Nazi oppression.

Should individuals of a particular ethnic group be accused of atrocities, it is imperative that the group as a whole not be treated in a manner which ignores its vital involvement in and contribution to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FREEDOM ASPIRATIONS OF BALTIC STATES

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, we Canadians need to be reminded that on February 16, 1918, Lithuania was restored to independence and flourished as a free democratic state for 20 years, along with its neighbours Latvia and Estonia.

In June, 1940, all three were subjugated once again when the Soviet Union signed the Ribbentrop-Molotov Non-Aggression Pact, and marched in and annexed them.

We take for granted the freedoms that the Lithuanian people are denied, but they are still continuing the struggle for liberation. The refusal of Canada to recognize de jure the incorporation of Lithuania into the Soviet Union, and the welcome of the consuls of the Governments in exile of the Baltic states, constitute important acts which help to keep alive the hopes and aspirations of these valiant peoples, many of whose citizens are now our fellow Canadians.

I would ask that Members of the House associate themselves with these sentiments on this sixty-seventh anniversary, so that these courageous peoples know that we have not forgotten them.

AIR CANADA

SOUTHERN HEMISPHERE ROUTES—SERVING OF CANADIAN WINES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian flag is now flying proudly into eight countries of the Pacific Rim. Air Canada is now circling the globe in three-week, 30,000 mile tours of the southern hemisphere.

This event signifies much more than a first for the airline. It is a major step in opening up the world to Canadian trade and commerce. Canadian products will become known to people of Hawaii, Fiji, Australia, Indonesia, Singapore, and Rio de Janeiro. There will be new demands for Canadian goods. Trade barriers will be lifted and new markets will be open to us.

It would be fitting for the flight attendants on these flights to serve a popular Canadian product. I refer, of course, to our fine quality Canadian wines. This will be a great introduction to our "buy-Canadian" promotion. Passengers who are given the opportunity to try these Canadian products will soon adopt our favourite slogan, "Hooray! It's Canadian!"

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PREMIER'S TRIAL—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I have further questions with respect to the Hatfield case. We have on the one hand Premier Hatfield continuing to make charges against certain members of the RCMP, that they leaked information and that they made an extraordinary effort to build a case against him. On the other hand, we have growing information that Premier Hatfield might have been helped in his defence. We have the secret meeting, and even yesterday he admitted that he was tipped off with respect to certain Crown evidence.

In order to ensure the integrity of the criminal justice system, and considering everything I have said just now to the Deputy Prime Minister, will he now agree that, in order to ensure that integrity, we should have a full, public, independent inquiry into this case?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that question was responded to by the Minister of Justice as well as by the Solicitor General on more than one occasion this week. As the Hon. Member knows, there is an internal review now being conducted with respect to this matter. If he or any other Member of Parliament, or indeed any other citizen, has any evidence which would warrant consideration with respect to that internal review, and whatever decision may be made as a result thereof, I would urge them to bring it forward.

Oral Questions

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PREMIER

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, since yesterday the Premier of New Brunswick has made further statements which further confuse this case. For example, he said, in relation to the secret meeting of October 7 with the Solicitor General:

I wanted to make the point to the new Solicitor General, 'get the investigation over with because, if it drags on like the former one did, it's going to result in encumbering me from doing my job'.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that this request by the Premier of New Brunswick to the Solicitor General constitutes tampering with the administration of justice in that he wanted to speed up the investigation? Does he not agree that that kind of request brings into disrepute equality before the law in our criminal justice system? There is new evidence and new damaging evidence every day, and it is time for an inquiry.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member believes that there is new evidence available, I urge him to make it available. It is my observation that the only injection of confusing factors in this matter is interventions such as his—

Mr. Axworthy: Stonewalling and covering up.

Mr. Nielsen: —and those of the Official Opposition and of the NDP. If there is any evidence the Hon. Member wishes to bring forward for consideration by the internal review now under way, I wish he would do just that.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, if there were not the statements by the Premier of New Brunswick, and if there had not been a secret meeting, we would not be raising these questions.

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week one Minister resigned claiming he did no wrong. The Prime Minister said there was no breach of national or NATO security, yet he accepted the resignation. We have another Minister who clearly broke a long-standing practice in the United Kingdom and in Canada, by having a secret meeting with a person under investigation, and he has not resigned. Why the double standard, Mr. Speaker? Will the Government now request the resignation of the Solicitor General, and hold a full, public, independent inquiry into this case?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the last part of the question has already been answered.

Mr. Allmand: That is stonewalling.

Mr. Nielsen: It is not stonewalling at all.

Mr. Allmand: Darn right it is.

Mr. Nielsen: It is not stonewalling at all. Let me repeat what the Acting Prime Minister of the day, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, said in this House last Wednesday.

An Hon. Member: We know that.

Mr. Nielsen: He said:

—the former Minister offered his resignation because he believed that public allegations—

—which appeared in the noon edition of The Citizen of that day—

—impaired his ability to carry out his sensitive responsibilities in the extremely sensitive and important portfolio of Minister of National Defence, and because he believed those allegations impeded his freedom to pursue an action in the courts.

● (1120)

Those were the reasons for the resignation.

Mr. Allmand: Double standard.

Mr. Nielsen: There is no double standard which appeals to my sense of reason and my logic, which seem to be entirely lacking on the part of the Hon. Member putting the question.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

DEPLOYMENT OF WEAPONS—ALLEGED REQUEST BY UNITED STATES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Over the past several weeks we have directed several questions to the Minister concerning United States' plans for nuclear deployment in this country, and have always received assurances that Canada would exercise its independent decision and not receive such weapons.

We now have reports that the United States State Department has sent communiques to the Government insisting that Canada must accept nuclear weapons on our soil. This not only contradicts the Minister's own statements but is a clear case of nuclear colonialism. We would like to know what in fact is in that telegram and, more particularly, when did the Minister receive it? Finally, will the Minister today issue a statement totally rejecting the American request and saying that it is outrageous that they should suggest anything to an independent country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as is usually the case in my responses to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, I would say that his facts are completely wrong. There was no such request by the Government of the United States to the Government of Canada. There was, so far as I know, no suggestion by the Government of the United States to anyone that Canada should accept nuclear arms. There was, so far as I know, an instruction by the Department of State of the United States to their ambassador here in Ottawa to be in touch with us expressing concern about the degree to which countries with which the United States has treaty arrangements were going to honour those arrangements.

The question of nuclear arms on Canadian soil did not arise, because the position of the Government of Canada on the question of nuclear arms on Canadian soil is abundantly clear. We do not allow nuclear arms to be stationed on Canadian soil. In the event of any contingency plan which might call for the stationing of nuclear arms here, this Government retains its right to refuse nuclear arms on Canadian soil, and this Government would be prepared to exercise our option to refuse nuclear arms on Canadian soil if we believed that to be in the interests of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, with great respect to the Minister.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. We have already seen how the United States has taken retaliatory action against New Zealand over the rejection of the placement of naval bases in that country.

Some Hon. Members: Placement!

Mr. Axworthy: The visit of naval forces.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Are Members opposite interested in the sovereignty of this country or not? Do they want to hear the question?

An Hon. Member: We are interested in the facts.

Mr. Axworthy: We would like to know exactly what communication was issued by the U.S. ambassador to this country. Also, is it not time that this country took the initiative and asked for a full ministerial meeting of NATO Ministers to discuss how and in which ways all those countries which are allies of the United States would participate in both the planning and development of that deployment strategy, so that we would be assured that we have the independence and sovereignty to make that decision, and not have it imposed upon us, as the report now says it must?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have told the Hon. Member and the House on several occasions that we are looking at ways in which we can expand the parameters of definition of emergency so that there might be a greater opportunity for countries that are involved to have more lead time in making decisions. I repeat the point that this country, under this Government, would retain the right to refuse nuclear weapons on Canadian soil.

Let me come to Canadian sovereignty. This Government actively defends Canadian sovereignty. That is why, as I said yesterday in committee, this Government wants to proceed with the north warning system which will protect and assert Canadian sovereignty, whereas the Hon. Member in his questions as recently as yesterday indicates that he wants to leave open gaps in the radar warning system now, gaps which threaten Canadian sovereignty and threaten Canadian security.

NEW YORK TIMES REPORT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs knows, there is a report today in The New York Times which says that indeed an agreement exists between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States, and it would permit the locating of nuclear weaponry in Canada under certain circumstances. I would ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether there is such an agreement in existence between Canada and the United States. If so, does that agreement contain the veto right of Canada, that is, the right to say no? Third, since the right to say no would also entail the right to say yes, will the Minister use the occasion to convey to the United States that, under no circumstances, will we permit the locating of nuclear weaponry on Canadian soil?

● (1125)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will deal with those matters in order. There is no such agreement. Second, there is, as the Hon. Member probably knows, a NATO decision from the NATO summit meeting in December, 1957, when it was decided that NATO should establish stocks of nuclear weapons which would be available to the alliance in case of emergency. Heads of government agreed in 1957, it stands, and I quote:

> The deployment of these stocks and missiles and arrangements for their use, will accordingly be decided in conformity with NATO defence plans and in agreement with the states directly concerned.

That is paragraph 21 of the Paris heads of government communique. That is the authority on which I have been answering questions. That is the authority on which I have said, and repeat categorically now, that this country retains the right to refuse nuclear weapons on Canadian soil in any emergency.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to what the Minister had to say. He did not reply to the crucial third part of that question. Since the right to say no also logically entails the possibility of saying yes, and since Canadians have made it abundantly clear in every part of this land that under no circumstances do we want nuclear weaponry located, deployed, parked, or in any way put on Canadian soil, will the Minister now make it clear to the people of Canada, and soon to the United States, that under no circumstances will we accept nuclear weapons in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, who follows these questions carefully, takes them seriously, and does not try to mislead Canadians about their implications, will know that there have been discussions in the House for some time on the so-called contingency plan in the United States. There are no such plans now. In the event that contingency plans were developed, the contingency of which they would take account would be a circumstance to attack. In that circumstance, Canada has the right to say yes or no to nuclear arms. I am not in a position at this time to be able to say how we would respond, not knowing the conditions of attack that might prevail.

The Hon. Member will understand the conditions of attack, which we all devoutly hope will never occur, are conditions which are almost impossible for any of us to conceive in detail in advance. I do say to him that this Government retains, and so long as I am here the Government would exercise, the right to say no to nuclear arms, even in those circumstances, if we believe that to be in the Canadian interest, and it would be Canadians, not anyone else, who would make that decision of Canadian interest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBLE FUTURE CIRCUMSTANCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the use of nuclear weaponry at any point, according to all the literature that I have read and I imagine the Minister has read, would be an act of complete and utter folly. If one agrees with that as the premise, will the Minister agree that what follows from that is that no circumstance, a real emergency, an alleged emergency, or any other circumstance down the road, should lead us to the conclusion that we could ever accept nuclear weapons, because the use of them under any circumstances will mean mutual suicide involving the United States and the Soviet Union? If that should happen, so far as it is possible, we do not want to be any part of that process. Therefore, will he now say that under no circumstances will we have nuclear weapons in Canada?

• (1130)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I agree that nuclear conflict would be folly for the world. I believe that everyone in the House shares the view that it would be folly for the world. I think we all hope that that folly will never arise. Indeed, one of the reasons why this Government is pursuing as vigorously as it is the establishment of the northern warning system, and the modernization of our radar system, is that that is a part of the deterrence system which for so long has prevented that folly from occurring.

What the Hon. Member is asking me to do is to predict how we would act in the event of an attack which all of us hope does not occur. It is impossible to give that answer before those circumstances, which we hope never arise, do arise.

I repeat my assurance. The Government of Canada has insisted on retaining in Canadian hands the right to make the decision on how we would react even in that most extreme of circumstances. Even at that height of folly, it will be a Canadian decision and not a decision of anyone else.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—PREMIERS' RECOMMENDATIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Finance. The First Ministers' love-in threatened to turn sour yesterday when the Premiers attacked rising interest rates. They were told by the Prime Minister that the Government does not intend to change its interest rate policy. Surely for a Government which prides itself on consultation and consensus making, and which promised lower interest rates in its election platform, that is not the final response. Will the Minister tell the House what consideration the Government is giving to the recommendations put forward by the Premiers?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to answer on behalf of the Minister of Finance who has done a very capable job in Regina on behalf of the people of Canada. I should point out to the Hon. Member that the Government has no specific target in terms of exchange rates and interest rates. We would like to have a Canadian dollar that is strong. We would like to have interest rates which are as low as conceivably possible. Government policy will be set in such a way as to encourage that.

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier of Alberta argued strongly that the Bank of Canada be given new instructions, and the Minister of Finance was quoted in The Gazette today as saying that the Premier's recommendation is under study. Does this mean that we are to have yet another discussion paper while uncertainty grows about investments, economic development, and jobs?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): No, Mr. Speaker.

DEPLOYMENT OF WEAPONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We now understand that he is prepared to accept a U.S. definition of crisis that will be decided by the U.S. military and the White House, and that he has reserved his right to say yes in terms of the stationing of nuclear weapons, in British Columbia and Nova Scotia at least. As the Minister knows, today nuclear vessels can enter the harbours of Vancouver, Halifax, and other ports in Canada with live U.S. nuclear weapons on board.

Let us not split hairs. The Minister is telling the people of Canada right now that he is prepared to accept the placement of nuclear weapons in Canada as long as they are simply tied by a rope to a wharf in the major cities of Vancouver and Halifax.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Is there a question?

Mr. Fulton: That is right. Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs accept that?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I am at your direction. When you detect a question, I will try to answer it.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that today the policy of the Government is that U.S. warships and submarines, with live—

Mr. Speaker: I am in some difficulty. Does the Hon. Member have a question? I have yet to hear one.

Mr. Fulton: Is it the Minister's view that it is acceptable today for the United States to continue to bring live nuclear weapons into the hearts of Canada's major cities of Halifax and Vancouver?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, first let me say, just to assure the Hon. Member, that if I do not agree with the definition of emergency or of crisis that might be given by the Americans in the case of some perceived emergency, then obviously our answer to the American request will be no.

Regarding the specific question that has been asked, there has been a long-standing arrangement dealing with the necessity for submarines carrying nuclear weapons to visit ports, and those submarines are occasionally given the opportunity to dock at Canadian ports. That policy has not changed nor does that policy affect the position that I have taken, and the position that Mr. Trudeau before me took, that there would be no stationing of nuclear arms on Canadian soil.

SITUATION IN NEW ZEALAND

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, if a U.S. nuclear submarine is to tie up in Vancouver at the foot of Granville Street, or in Halifax, is the Minister prepared to show the same kind of backbone that New Zealand has shown, say no to the U.S. now, and tell them that no more nuclear warships and weapons will be allowed in the major ports of Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to comment particularly on the New Zealand situation except to say that there is a degree to which their situation is parallel to our own. In an election campaign in New Zealand a particular position was taken by the now Government of New Zealand, and it is trying to implement that position. In the election campaign of September 4, in which the people of Canada made an overwhelming judgment, this Party made it very clear that we intended to stand up to and honour our obligations to NATO, to NORAD, and to our allies. We intend to keep our word on this issue as on other issues.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. We seem to have an amazing number of convenient coincidences occurring in the Prime Minister's office lately. The Prime Minister has stated that he first learned about the allegations of risk to national security on January 22, which was the same day on which he met with Lord Carrington, the Secretary General of NATO, and only four days after the resignation of the former Minister of National Defence's senior policy adviser. The Prime Minister has also stated that he received the final in-depth report concerning this incident at noon on February 12, the same time that the allegations became public, eventually being followed by the resignation of the former Minister.

Did Lord Carrington, the Secretary General of NATO, at any time discuss with the Prime Minister, any other government member, or any officer of the Government of Canada, the appropriateness or inappropriateness of the actions of any of the Government's Ministers?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member, in all reason, would not expect me to be in a position to be able to answer questions with respect to discussions that took place to which I was not privy. I have been present here in the House and I have read responses made by the Prime Minister outside the House assuring Members and Canadians that he acted at once in order to deal with any possible breach of national security. He did that in a very careful and thorough way. That has been his explanation to the House of Commons, and one which I think should be accepted not only by the Hon. Member but by all Hon. Members of the House.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the issue. It is interesting to note how changes occur when going from one side of the House to another. The issue at which I am getting today is not the—

Mr. Speaker: With due respect, the Hon. Member had a very long preamble to his first question. Would he now come immediately to a question, please?

Mr. Hopkins: The issue is the Prime Minister's handling of the event.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Scarborough West.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP AND FUNDING

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the upheaval in the membership of UNESCO, with several nations withdrawing or having given notice to withdraw, and other nations increasing their funding of UNESCO, what review, if any, is the Canadian Government giving to our membership in UNESCO? In particular, are we contemplating any reduction or increase in our funding of that organization?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. He will know that the Government of France has just announced an increased contribution to certain of the activities of UNESCO. It is not the intention of the Government of Canada to follow that example.

• (1140)

Earlier this week I had the opportunity to meet with the executive of the Canadian Commission to UNESCO, and at that time I expressed our very grave concern about the state of that organization. I made it clear that our intention was not to make a decision until the meeting in the fall with regard to UNESCO. I also told them that we were not satisfied with the present pace of reform. I indicated that there was an overwhelming concern in Canada for the strength of international institutions and the strength of the United Nations system, and that that was the basis upon which I was urging reform in UNESCO.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

POLICY REVIEW

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications, who has instituted a policy review of the CBC. Would he now undertake to make this a public review and allow public hearings on the subject? If not, how many more protests, demonstrations, assemblies, and advertisements in newspapers will it take before he realizes that the Canadian public is extremely dissatisfied with his conduct of the Department and wants some input into the CBC review?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is talking about two separate issues which she, either for political reasons or out of ignorance, has a tendency to confuse. There are two entirely different problems here.

First of all, we have the statement by the Minister of Finance prescribing budgetary cutbacks in all Government envelopes. As part of these cutbacks, the CBC has been asked to make a contribution that seemed and still does seem to us entirely fair and proportionate.

Second, the Government has made a commitment to review Canada's broadcasting industry, which includes the CBC. This decision was announced last fall, and in the weeks to come we shall be in a position to make a full statement on the mechanisms we intend to introduce to ensure the participation of Canadians in the future of broadcasting in Canada.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Minister began by answering a question which I put to him a couple of weeks ago. I was not asking about cut-backs. I was asking about the policy review and when the Canadian public will be able to have some input into it. Is it normal that the Canadian public has to place advertisements in newspapers to get through to the Minister? He refuses to meet with groups. When will he listen to them? When will he let the public talk about what they want their public broadcasting system to do?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question I said that in due time, that is, within a few weeks, the Government will be announcing to Canadians and to the House how those who are interested in the future of broadcasting in Canada, and especially that of the CBC, can make their views known within the consultation process.

IMMIGRATION

ENCOURAGEMENT OF ENTREPRENEURS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Employment and Immigration. In the 1984 Annual Report on Future Immigration Levels the Minister gave top priority to encouraging business immigration to Canada. Given the fact that this kind of immigration benefits our economy immensely because of the jobs it creates, can the Minister tell the House what specific measures have been taken, or will be taken, to encourage and promote entrepreneur immigration to Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for her question.

I can inform her that we intend to maintain the immigration program for entrepreneurs and that we have given special training to thirty-five visa officers in order to respond more effectively and extend a more cordial invitation to prospective immigrants.

We also have a working group that includes the Employment and Immigration Commission, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and External Affairs, and whose role is to find effective ways of getting more entrepreneurs to come to this country and give us the benefit of their expertise and talents, in order to generate jobs and improve our quality of life.

EMPLOYMENT

FUNDING OF JOB CREATION AND TRAINING

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of last week's statistics which showed that there were an additional 167,000 Canadians unemployed, that interest rates were rising, and because the Minister of Finance has refused to give us a specific date for a Budget, can the Deputy Prime Minister explain why in yesterday's announcement by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, there was such a serious reduction in the moneys which are allocated for job creation and job training? Can he explain the reduction? Is it part of the restraint program?

Some Hon. Members: $300 million less.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I heard the comment about $300 million less, but that is not the way I heard the Minister of Employment and Immigration on The National, and that is not the way I read her statement. If the Hon. Member wishes, I will send it to him so that he and his colleagues can cease distorting what was presented by the Minister at the First Ministers' conference in Regina. That is not helpful in solving the problem of unemployment. This is.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I remind the Deputy Prime Minister that the unemployed want jobs. They do not want pious platitudes from him, the Prime Minister, or the provincial Premiers. Will the Deputy Prime Minister exercise his responsibilites and tell the House how many jobs will be created by that program, when those jobs will come into effect, and how many lasting jobs will be created? Will he exercise his responsibilities and tell the House?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in my judgment we are exercising our responsibilities in a much more positive way than that which was displayed by the Party which he supported, when it was in power.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I do not know why he should be so exercised by our exercising our responsibilities, when every single Premier at the First Ministers' conference welcomed, with open arms and eagerness, the statement of the Minister of Employment and Immigration yesterday with respect to our very challenging employment program laid out by her.

CANADA COUNCIL

FILLING OF VACANCIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The Canada Council is a crucial agency which was established to build our cultural independence and assist our artists in maintaining their livelihoods. Therefore great care and non-partisan responsibility should be exercised when making appointments to it.

Will the Minister assure the House that the six vacant positions on the Council will be filled on a non-partisan basis by people with extended experience in the arts and culture area, after close consultation with cultural associations?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that any future appointments will be made with a view to ensuring a competent presence on the Canada Council.

[English]

ARTISTS' REPRESENTATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, competence is always to be preferred. Will the Minister assure the House that we will not see more appointments of which the chief claim to fame is ties to the Prime Minister or his constituency? Will the Minister assure the House that at least a majority of the existing six vacant positions will go to artists?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that all appointments will be made in accordance with the Act.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

DEPLOYMENT OF WEAPONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the Deputy Prime Minister is in a blue funk today because he happens to be one of those few left in the House who voted against the Canadian flag. It must gall him to see it on its twentieth anniversary today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Notwithstanding that, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his statement today—

Some Hon. Members: Louder!

Ms. Copps: Excuse me. For those government Members who are not interested in a nuclear holocaust which may be facing this country—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1150)

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs commented today on the agreements and accords made with NATO. This Conservative nuclear attitude in lock-step with the United States flies in the face of that very NATO agreement. Why is the Minister blaming New Zealand's position on so-called election campaign promises when in fact the NATO agreement he cites states that deployment of weapons, stocks, and missiles, and arrangements for their use, will be decided in conformity with NATO defence plans and in agreement with the states directly concerned? Why is he not prepared to follow the example of New Zealand and develop an independent nuclear policy for this country?

Mr. Andre: How long has New Zealand been in NATO?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the practice was in the Ontario Legislature, but when Members direct an insult at a Minister of the Crown and then refuse to put the question to the Minister, we here in the House of Commons call that offence hit and run.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The best answer I can give to the Hon. Member is that, unless there was some agreement concluded by the Ontario Legislature of which I am not aware, New Zealand is not a member of NATO.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the reason for my hit and run is because the Deputy Prime Minister has been stalled in neutral all week.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Member have a question, please?

CANADIAN POLICY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Secretary of State did not understand the question. My question is: why is this country not prepared to develop an independent policy such as was agreed to in the 1957 NATO accords, which he cites as the very reason for this country joining the nuclear movement in lock-step with the United States of America?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Among the elements of the sovereign policy which has been in place in Canada for some time, but was not pursued sufficiently actively by the Liberal Government, of which the Hon. Member is a supporter, is first of all making it clear that there will be no stationing of nuclear arms on Canadian soil without the agreement of the Government of Canada. That is a principle which I have repeated and referred to frequently in this House.

A second element is the determination to stop our northern radar system from breaking down, creating gaps which threaten our security and sovereignty. It might have been good enough for the Liberals to have Canadian security and sovereignty threatened by the holes in the northern warning system, but it is not good enough for us. We are here to protect and advance Canadian sovereignty and security.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PRODUCTION OF CANADIAN PROGRAMMING

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it may be kind of silly to try to get an answer again out of the Minister of Communications, but I will try with an easy question.

Because of budget cut-backs at CBC it has withdrawn from Telefilm and, as a result, about one-third of the 100 or so independent Canadian film producers are in jeopardy. This is a severe threat to Canadian content in broadcasting. The Minister promised a review of the criteria for Telefilm, I think last December, to be completed early this year. It is getting late. Will the Minister respond to the proposal by 17 French and English production associations made in January for a special allocation of $35 million for the production of Canadian programming?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, since the end of last December, when I announced that the Government was going to review some of the criteria for Telefilm, we have had a number of consultations with interested groups.

The Department has received an initial report on these consultations. There have been a number of meetings of officials, and at some time in the future we will be able to announce new criteria for Telefilm.

[English]

MINISTER'S REPLY TO PROPOSAL

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, maybe I came close. Can we be assured at least that the answer with respect to that proposal will not come any later than April 1?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, my experience in politics has taught me one thing: never give a firm date!

ENERGY

OFFSHORE DRILLING—SAFETY CONSIDERATIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, today marks the third anniversary of the tragic Ocean Ranger disaster, a day on which 84 lives were lost at sea. Two of those men were my constituents. I ask my question of the Acting Minister of Defence in the hope that we will soon be able to say we have done everything humanly possible to prevent such tragedies in the future.

The most dangerous part of the winter drilling season is fast approaching, and adequate launching systems and life rafts for rigs off the East Coast are still not available. In light of that, is the Minister prepared to accept the recommendation of the Ocean Ranger's Families' Foundation that a joint research and development fund be established by the federal and provincial Governments, and industry, to develop in Canada, for East Coast offshore conditions, launching systems and life rafts, in order to prevent further loss of life in the offshore?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is my third day as Acting Minister, and I think the Hon. Member will understand if I have to take that very important question as notice. I will get back to him with an answer just as soon as I can.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister should know that the last line of defence, the government policy currently is that we have upgraded fixed wing aircraft, and therefore the situation is getting better. But he should know—and I am coming to my question—the last line of defence is an escape system, and we do not have an adequate one. I want to tell him—I will ask the Minister, Mr. Speaker, it is an important question in my province. There are hundreds of people at sea.

Some Hon. Members: Ask the question.

Mr. Tobin: In light of the fact—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Tobin: I am asking the question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

SPORTS

WINTER OLYMPICS INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport.

Mr. Tobin: Can I ask my question?

Mr. Hawkes: I am not sure that he is still in the House.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker's attitude reflects the Government's on offshore safety.

Ms. Copps: That's right.

Mr. Hawkes: Perhaps another Minister could answer for him. I was interested in the degree to which there is federal involvement in the Winter Olympics regarding the Festival of Arts, whether the federal Government is involved, whether there is some problem in that regard, and what we can anticipate in the future for that part of the Winter Olympics?

An Hon. Member: Put it on the Order Paper.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member recognizes that the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport has been dealing with the Canadian Olympic Committee and the various agencies associated with it. I will relay the question to the Minister.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs whose interest in environmental matters is well known. Would the Minister use his good offices to ensure that at the mid-March meeting scheduled between the Prime Minister and President Reagan the matter of the Niagara River and the long-term safety of drinking water in the Great Lakes is put on the agenda for discussion, considering the fact that the presence of toxic chemicals in that river is a source of great concern to millions of Canadians, and therefore to members of each Party represented in this House?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. No one need add to the established reputation he has of interest in and action on these questions.

I raised that matter with Secretary Shultz during my first meeting with him in the fall of last year. If the matter is not on the agenda of President Reagan and the Prime Minister at the March 17 meeting, I assure the Hon. Member I will raise it when I meet that weekend with Secretary Shultz. If he requests, I will report to the House on the response of the Americans to the raising of that question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—CONDUCT OF CANADIAN COMPANIES—GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This morning's Globe and Mail detailed the Bata Shoe Company's non-compliance with the voluntary code of conduct for Canadian firms operating in South Africa. They have engaged in union busting, they pay wages 50 per cent below the poverty line, and they have refused to report to the Canadian Government because they say this would offend South African authorities.

Since 29 out of 30 companies have refused to report, or do not report, to the Canadian Government, is he prepared to admit that the voluntary guidelines are a farce? Will the Government at least take the small step of bringing in anti-discrimination contract compliance provisions for all government contracts, including a provision disqualifying any Canadian company operating in South Africa that does not comply with the guidelines?

● (1200)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with the active encouragement of the Prime Minister I have been undertaking, within my Department, for the last several months, a complete review of Canadian policy as it affects South Africa. That review is based upon the well established Canadian abhorrence of the system of apartheid and our determination to do what we can to bring a change to that system. We are examining the range of our relations with South Africa and hope to be in a position to make some recommendations to the House.

With regard to reports concerning particular companies, the best way to judge their performance as employers would be for the companies concerned to issue public reports, as called for by our present code of conduct. If there are to be changes in that code of conduct, that will be announced in the House of Commons. That matter, among others respecting South Africa, is under active investigation by myself, the Prime Minister, and other of my colleagues.

VISIT OF APARTHEID APOLOGIST

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs how the proposed visit, arranged by his Department, of Gaza Butelezi, Chief of the South Afican Bantustan and an apologist for the apartheid policy of the Botha Government, fits in with the professed abhorrence of apartheid? Does the Minister have any plans to meet with—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Let the Minister answer that part. We are running out of time.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as part of my review I am encouraging members of my Department and some of my colleagues in government to consult extensively with people whose information we think might be of use to the Government of Canada. The Leader of the Government in the other place has just returned from a very productive participation in a conference in southern Africa. The Canadian permanent representative to the United Nations, ambassador Steven Lewis, has been very much interested in these questions as he is involved in the development of the appropriate Canadian policy to South Africa.

PRIVILEGE

REMARKS OF MR. HNATYSHYN IN QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In order to lay the basis for this question of privilege, I will refer you to Citation 48 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which clearly establishes such reflections upon the character of Members as being or constituting a breach of privilege. This is supported by Erskine May's Twentieth Edition, page 159.

The record of yesterday's Hansard clearly shows that the Government House Leader and Minister of State (Mr. Hnatyshyn) made remarks in the House which were a reflection upon my character. These remarks can be found on page 2349 of Hansard dated February 14, 1985. There the Government House Leader is recorded as saying: "I'll bet you know all those people in the bar; you could have asked them the questions".

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that the suggestion by the Government House Leader that he bets that I know all those people in the bar must obviously be a reflection on my character if, indeed, the Prime Minister considered that going there was grounds for the firing of the Minister of National Defence.

In view of this totally inaccurate comment, I feel that this matter should be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to determine how the House should deal with this breach of privilege. I wish the House Leader were here today, Mr. Speaker. However, I understand that if I do not raise this matter today I lose my privilege of doing so. Therefore, if you find a prima facie breach of privilege, I would be prepared to move that the words of the Government House Leader, which I quoted from page 2349 of the House of Commons Debates of February 14, 1985 be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections in the interest of the best civility of the House.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, normally a question of privilege of this nature, particularly when it concerns another Hon. Member, is raised in the presence of that Hon. Member.

Ms. Copps: He did yesterday.

Mr. Nielsen: That would be the first available occasion upon which to raise it.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Nonetheless—

Mr. Prud'homme: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: Nonetheless—

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I have a point of order. You have to listen before saying no.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not the practice. Nonetheless—

Ms. Copps: Who are you, the Speaker?

Mr. Nielsen: Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, I will personally draw the attention of the submission of breach of privilege by the Hon. Member to the attention of the Government House Leader. I am sure that he would want to respond personally at the earliest opportunity—

Ms. Copps: He had a chance yesterday and he refused.

Mr. Nielsen: —which I expect would be when the House resumes after the break.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister knows that the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke raised this matter before the House yesterday at the end of Question Period. He indicated—

Mr. Prud'homme: That's right. You were not here.

Mr. Speaker: He indicated that he would be consulting the "blues" and raising the matter today if he could. Under the circumstances, while I have a preliminary view on the matter, given that the Hon. Government House Leader is not present, I think I will reserve any further judgment on the matter at this time.

PETITIONS

CBC PROGRAM CUT-BACKS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my apologies for my hoarseness. I am trying to imitate the absent Prime Minister, I fear.

I wish to present a petition from approximately 2,500 of my constituents in Essex-Windsor dealing with the cut-backs to CBC service and particularly local programming within Windsor. In this petition they express strong concern about the Government's plans and the management of the CBC in the way those cuts have been implemented. They have asked me to convey to the House, with the petition, their strong sense of commitment to the CBC. I do so with submission of this petition.

Mr. Speaker: I congratulate the Member on the creativity of his opening, if not on its being in order.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa-Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition by a group of students from Laval University, expressing their concern about unemployment among those with specialized training and about the situation for young people in this country. They are asking for a national program to train or specialize young unemployed workers for high technology jobs.

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) raised a matter which I understand had been the subject matter of discussions with House Leaders of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party. These discussions concerned a reference to committee of Section 31, tax issues in agriculture. I understand that a draft order has been provided to the Opposition House Leader and, indeed, the Deputy House Leader of the Official Opposition said yesterday, as reported at page 2359 of Hansard, that he would have to take the matter under advisement.

• (1210)

I am asked by the Government House Leader today to put the matter once again, that this reference be made with unanimous consent so that the Standing Committee on Agriculture could be seized of this matter and the needs of western farmers, indeed farmers everywhere, might be dealt with in a mode where they have total input into the formulation of agricultural policy.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I would like to comment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I have to seek unanimous consent so the Hon. Member can comment.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Can I speak? No.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Deputy House Leader have some comment prior to the seeking of unanimous consent? There is a procedural difficulty in doing that.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): It is easy to say no.

Mr. Speaker: There being no unanimous consent, the motion is not before the House.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Teach this guy.

DOT—EMPLOYMENT OF MR. FRED VON VEH

Question No. 150—Mr. de Jong:

1. Is Mr. Fred von Veh employed by the Department of Transport or in the Minister of Transport's office and, if so, what is his designation?

2. Is he on the Minister's exempt staff and, if so, what is his salary?

3. Is he under contract to the Department or the Minister's office and, if so, what are the terms and conditions of the contract?

4. Is he or will he receive any other emoluments further to his salary?

5. What was his previous occupation and with whom was he employed?

6. Was he employed by any other Department or by any Minister at any time?

7. Did he or the firm he may have been associated with ever represent or been counsel to any car rental agency?

8. Is he currently in the employ of any firm, legal or otherwise, which represents any car rental agency?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): 1. Mr. von Veh's services as legal advisor were retained by the Minister, in order to advise him from time to time on matters relating to the administration of the various laws under the responsibility of the Minister.

2. No. Mr. von Veh is a member of the legal firm of Stikemen Elliott.

3. Mr. von Veh's services were secured on a retainer basis. The terms and conditions of the contract as of this date have yet to be finalized. No fees have been invoiced or paid to date.

4. No.

5. Mr. von Veh is and was a member of the legal firm of Stikemen Elliott.

6. We understand that his services were retained on certain matters by the office of the Solicitor General.

7. This question should be properly addressed to the legal firm of Stikemen Elliott.

8. See 7 above.

EXPENDITURES ON HOSPITALITY AT CANADIAN EMBASSIES

Question No. 187—Mr. Stackhouse:

In (a) 1982 (b) 1983, how much was spent by Canadian embassies and other diplomatic missions on hospitality?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) In 1982-83: $8,292,898; (b) in 1983-84: $8,391,451.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question with respect to starred question No. 212 which was put on the Order Paper on January 21.

Mr. Forrestall: We remember those.

Mr. Hopkins: I want the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) to know that I support him strongly for the next Defence Minister over the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre). He would do a much better job.

Western Grain Stabilization Act

Starred question No. 212 has been on the Order Paper since January 21. It is a very simple question that only involves a number of names. It should be picked up within 24 hours. When will this question be replied to?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I can honestly answer the Hon. Member that in accordance with the practices set down by the previous Government, we will answer the questions soon.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I thought this Government had promised to do better than the previous Government.

I therefore wish to ask the following question on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps): When does the Government intend to answer Question No. 9? Can we expect the Parliamentary Secretary will soon give us an answer to this very simple question which is dated November 7?

[English]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I should point out that so far we have answered 39.3 per cent of all questions put to this time which, as of the 53rd sitting day—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Dick: —is much better than all preceding Parliaments.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I would point out to the Parliamentary Secretary that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Wenman) found this question so important—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hopkins: —that he came across the day I put it on the Order Paper to find out what I wanted to know.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John Wise (for the Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)) moved that Bill C-29, to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation to the House Leader of my Party (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for recognizing the need to proceed on this piece of legislation as soon as possible. I know that my House Leader, my Leader and indeed the entire caucus of our Party recognize the importance of this piece of legislation.

Second, they also recognize that, in order for western farmers to receive benefits as early as possible, it would be necessary for us to take early action on this piece of legislation. This Bill is before the House today as a result of that understanding and appreciation of the difficulties which exist in western Canadian agriculture.

We have sought and received unanimous consent to proceed with Bill C-29 through all stages in the House today. I want to acknowledge that co-operation and the co-operation that has been extended to us by the House Leader of the Official Opposition, the House Leader and agriculture critic for the NDP.

For that reason I hesitate to express my extreme concern about what I just witnessed a few moments ago in the exchange between the Deputy Prime Minister and the official spokesperson for the Official Opposition. His Party is denying us consent to refer to committee three very major tax items which have been made known to us in representations over the years by people in the agriculture industry. They are to study and hopefully act on the issue of capital gains, the problems associated with Section 31, and to further study the issue of agri-bonds. It dumbfounds me to witness this continuing reluctance on behalf of the Official Opposition to give us an opportunity to refer these three items to an appropriate standing committee. These items could then be studied and agricultural organizations in this country could have an opportunity to have the input for which they have been asking for many years.

I think that is a very serious matter. Although I appreciate the co-operation that we have received from both Opposition Parties with respect to this Bill, I could not let this opportunity pass without registering my very deep concern about the continuing reluctance on behalf of the Official Opposition to refer these matters to a standing committee.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I resent the allegations by the Minister. Yesterday I made a commitment to get back to the Government House Leader.

Mr. Dick: You have had two weeks.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Yesterday I made a commitment. Today I was not permitted by the Speaker to have the floor to speak on this. I ask the Minister to keep a lid on it and don't start spreading innuendos.

Mr. Dick: You have had two weeks.

Mr. Gauthier: Put it on the Order Paper then.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of bending the rules or doing anything of that nature. However, offers have been forthcoming from our House Leader. The record from as late as a few moments ago will show that there was no attempt to bend the rules, by any stretch of the imagination. I am sure Canaian farmers will recognize the situation. As of today we, the Government, and the New Democratic Party are prepared to refer these matters to the appropriate standing committee, but the Official Opposition is not prepared as of today to do that.

● (1220)

I do want to make mention of the fact that this Bill would have been introduced and perhaps this speech might well have been made by my colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), but because the First Ministers' conference is still in progress in Regina, Saskatchewan, and the Minister of State for the Wheat Board is attending that conference, I am acting on his behalf on this legislation.

It is with serious concern for western Canada's grain producers that I wish to speak on the proposed amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. This is a critical time for grain farmers. Thousands of them are caught in a tight cost-price squeeze. It is important that they receive help, and it is important that they receive help as soon as possible. Spring seeding time is less than three months away, and somehow between now and then grain producers have to come up with a lot of cash or credit, enough to buy seed, fertilizer, pesticides, fuel and maybe even machinery. For a lot of producers, that will be difficult. The drought took a large toll among prairie grain crops last summer. In some areas, hail and even flooding reduced crop yields. For many farmers it was the second bad year in a row. According to the most recent Statistics Canada figures, 1984 wheat production fell by 21 per cent from the previous year. Total grain production in western Canada was down by an estimated 6 per cent from 1983 and 16 per cent from the previous five-year average. On top of that, operating and depreciation charges had increased and are expected to go up again in the coming year.

Planting time is the most expensive time of the year for grain producers. It is estimated that in 1984 prairie grain farmers spent over $1.4 billion on direct crop inputs, seed, fertilizer and pesticides. We can figure that fuel, machinery and labour costs were also in the 10-digit bracket. For 1985, Statistics Canada predicts a slight increase in operating and depreciation charges. Obviously, the capital requirements to plant a new crop are substantial.

On January 11 the Canadian Wheat Board announced that western grain farmers would receive $688 million in final payments for grain they delivered during the 1983-84 crop year. That brings to $5.037 billion the total amount of money they received for grain sold through the Wheat Board last year. While that may sound like a lot a money, I would point out that it is $261 million less than prairie grain producers received through the Wheat Board the year before.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is this: with less grain to deliver over the next few months, many western producers will be hard-pressed to meet their interest payments and come up with the cash or credit they need to put this year's crops in the ground. Obviously, our western grain producers need all the help they can get, and they need it soon. That is why I am introducing for second reading Bill C-29, a Bill to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

The main intent of this legislation is to amend the Act so that interim payments could be issued during the crop year, and even before spring seeding. Such payments could be authorized as long as they are made without risk of overpayment. I have discussed producers' severe need for cash flow this spring, and the probability of a large pay-out for the 1984-85 crop year. This amendment would allow for a substantial payment to be made early this spring and before seeding.

The second amendment involves a small housekeeping matter. It would retroactively deem all previous Orders in Council raising the maximum level of grain sale proceeds eligible for levy payments under the Act to have been passed, registered and published in the Canada Gazette in accordance with the Statutory Instruments Act. This is a matter which was left outstanding by the previous Government when the Act was amended in 1984.

The Western Grain Stabilization Plan is a voluntary program designed to provide farmers with funds during years of low income. Participating producers currently contribute 1.5 per cent of grain sales to the fund, and the federal Government puts in nearly 3.5 per cent, or roughly $2.30 for every dollar contributed by farmers. Whenever net cash flow falls below the previous five-year average, the fund makes a pay-out.

For the 1983-84 crop year, the Western Grain Stabilization Plan paid out $223 million to prairie farmers, $100 million in August and $123 million in November. Because of amendments to the Act last June, the pay-out was triggered under a new formula for calculating net cash flow on a per tonne basis. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that it was a welcome payment, but it would have been appreciated even more if it had been in the hands of western farmers earlier. If the amendments that I am proposing today had been in place last spring, the first $100 million of the 1983-84 payment could have been in farmers' hands sooner.

Since its inception in 1976, the Western Grain Stabilization Plan has made pay-outs in 1977, 1978 and 1984. As of this date, an individual farmer contributing at the maximum allowable rate has paid a total of $6,825 in levies and received stabilization payments totalling $10,750. Because of poor prospects for grain farmers in the current year, a substantial pay-out for 1984-85 is projected. This is based largely on the reduced volume of marketings.

Farmers, by the very nature of their business, must take risks. They have to gamble on the weather, the markets, and on interest rates, so most farmers will use every available means to protect their incomes. The Western Grain Stabilization Program is a very worth-while income assurance program, and producers have recognized it as such. The number of grain farmers participating in the Western Grain Stabilization Plan has increased, not significantly but it has increased year by year. In 1976, the year the program started, 74 per cent of all grain producers enrolled. Today the program has over 77 per cent enrolment.

For the remainder of this crop year, the outlook for grain sales is not spectacular. Producer marketings of the major grains to date are ahead of marketings for this period last year, but exports are lower due to the decline in production last summer. For the remainder of this crop year and next, exports are expected to remain below the level of the previous two years.

However, we can expect to feel market effects of a 13 per cent increase in 1984-85 in world oilseed production and larger wheat supplies in many countries. The latest estimates indicate a six million to seven million tonne decline in marketings of the seven major grains in 1985. Estimating average receipts at $160 per tonne, that represents a significant shortfall in farm income, even with the $668 million in the 1983-84 final Wheat Board payment.

For these reasons there is a strong possibility that a pay-out will be triggered for the 1984-85 crop year extending from last August 1 to this coming July 31. Knowing that, I believe we have a responsibility to see that it gets into the hands of producers as quickly as possible. No matter how large or how small the payment might be, timing is a crucial factor. It makes a lot of sense to put as much as possible into the hands of producers as early as possible and thereby save them some extra interest rate costs.

Moreover, experience has shown that when farmers have more cash available in the spring, they use higher levels of fertilizers and pesticides and in the end result receive higher yields. As a farmer, as a Member of Parliament and as Minister of Agriculture, I have supported the Western Grain Stabilization Plan. However, I realized from the beginning that it was not sensitive enough to the real cash flow needs of farmers. I have always maintained that the legislation was not flexible enough. That is why last June when the Act was being amended to allow for a one-time only interim payment, I said that the amendments did not go far enough. I complained about the fact that we were not given more time in the standing committee to make more improvements to the Bill. I pointed out that because the legislation was still flawed, indeed it would require further improvements. I stated then, as I have said today, that the Western Grain Stabilization Act should be amended to permit payments in any year that a pay-out is likely to be triggered. Had this matter been dealt with last June, of course this Bill and its amendments would not be necessary now.

On behalf of grain producers in western Canada, I urge all Hon. Members of the House to give their support to Bill C-29. By passing the proposed amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act, we will be assisting a major component at a time when that component certainly is in need of assistance and help. It is a very important component in the total Canadian agricultural industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) that, as we have previously indicated, we are prepared to support this Bill and give it quick dispatch through the House, hopefully within the period allotted to it during this day's sitting. We do so because we recognzie, as does everyone, that there is a serious cash flow problem and that it is important to try to provide a major interim payment. Furthermore, a major plank in our own agricultural program last summer was that we would bring in amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act allowing for interim payments as the first piece of legislation.

I notice that this is not the first piece of legislation the Government has brought in, but it is close enough that we will not quibble over the timing. However, we feel that probably quicker action could have been taken on it in the sense that many farmers, now that we are into the second week of February, have been somewhat confused or uncertain about what their cash flow would be without knowing the direction. Even with the quick and speedy passage of the Bill through the House today, it will take several weeks to work out the formula for the interim payment. Therefore, many farmers will not know what to expect perhaps until early March and, as the Minister of Agriculture knows, that is getting close to seeding time. However, at least Members of Parliament can do their part and give the Bill quick and easy support during this day's debate.

I wish the Government had been equally as co-operative as we are trying to be in the notice of motion it put forward relating to the reference it wanted to the agricultural committee. It is important to make clear that our objection was not about the reference itself but about the way in which it was done. No notice was put on the Order Paper, no notice of motion whatsoever was provided by the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Yesterday we were simply presented with a fait accompli, with a request on which we had not been given any notice. Our House Leader was not in the Chamber. We did not have an opportunity to discuss it in caucus or to discuss it with our House Leader, nor did we have an opportunity today to comment upon our problem because we were not recognized.

I want to make it very clear that we are not opposed to the reference itself. We simply suggest that perhaps the Minister of Agriculture could take the matter up with his House Leader and indicate that for future reference it would help if the Government House Leader gave proper notification to the Official Opposition about the Government's intention. Then we would co-operate and respond in like kind.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know the Hon. Member would not want an error in fact left on the record. This matter was referred to the House Leader of the Official Opposition at least 10 days ago. My suggested committee members have been struck for at least 10 days. I am just waiting to hear. We were told that they would get back to us after going to caucus. I think there have been two caucus meetings since he was first given notice of the reference of these three tax matters to the finance subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. We are anxious to get going, that is all.

Mr. Axworthy: I will not take the time of the House to deal with it. However, I was saying that there was no notice of motion.

Mr. Dick: You don't do that.

Mr. Axworthy: Then I suggest that the Parliamentary Secretary should discuss it and that the Government should be following the proper procedures of the House by giving us a notice of motion.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It has been explained in the House that there are a number of procedures, one of which was arbitrary and adopted by the previous Government and one which is by way of consultation. By giving notice 10 days ago verbally, not on the Order Paper, we were trying to consult so that we could change the notice if the wording had to be changed after consultation with other Parties. We think it would be a way of leading to more co-operation than just arbitrarily setting down in stone what the wording would be, as the previous Government always did.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the same point of order, and you will hear me—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have no objection to giving you the floor, but please remove your flag first. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. Yesterday, the Government came with three motions. We gave our consent. From what the Hon. Member just said they now have another proposal. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that if he goes on playing partisan politics this way, we are going to insist that we have a right to see these motions published in the Order Paper, as they should be so that Hon. Members can take note of them before the subject is raised in the House.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I advise the Hon. Member that this time will not be taken off his speech.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, now that we have somewhat cleared the question of procedure, I will return to the short debate. In endorsing the proposal of the Government to bring about a quick interim payment, I am pleased to note—I believe I can take this meaning from the Minister's words—that the position taken by many Conservative Members of Parliament last year during the course of the debate amending the Western Grain Stabilization Act, that they in fact thought that that Act should be abolished, is no longer the position of that Party. I recall many times during that debate members of that Party bringing forward the case that it was time to abolish the Western Grain Stabilization Act because it was not useful, not effective, had no purpose or support and that it was about time to sit down.

At that time, as Minister responsible in the House of Commons for the Canadian Wheat Board, I was somewhat surprised by those comments. I was particularly surprised because they came from western Members of Parliament from the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. We are pleased to note that at least that particular faction or point of view which was previously expressed has not been accepted by the Government. We would hope that one of the purposes of this amendment is to substantiate the endorsement of the Conservative Government on the value of the Western Grain Stabilization Act. I am pleased to hear the Minister add his own personal words of support. We can now proceed with some assurance in the future that this Act will not be abolished.

The press release put out by the Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) indicated that there might be further amendments. Frankly, that gave us some cause for concern. We believe it might reflect the fact that the opinion so loudly and frequently expressed by Conservative Members of Parliament last June will not now be the case.

We all appreciate that the peculiar conditions caused by the weather in western Canada this year will have a serious impact upon western farmers. It is also important to note that there is a continuing concern, particularly in the case of grain farmers, about the problems to be faced this summer, such as locust and insect infestation. I believe it is important at this time for the Government to indicate what contingency plans it may have in response to that.

We have certain mechanisms available such as the Western Grain Stabilization Act. We would obviously like to pursue those. There may be other questions. That is why I want to express one very deep concern on behalf of our Party. There was no mention on the agenda of the First Ministers' conference of agriculture and the problems that it faces. It was particularly ironic that the meeting is being held in Regina, which is the centre of the grain-growing area of western Canada, yet there was nothing on the agenda that would deal specifically with the problems of agriculture, although we know how serious those problems are.

That issue has been somewhat bootlegged into those discussions by the discussion brought forward on interest rates. We all know that is one matter that is affecting the agricultural community severely. During the time that we have in committee, the Minister might avail himself of some opinion as to why, at such an important First Ministers' meeting, agriculture and other productive questions, such as fisheries, were not on the agenda. There seemed to be an avoidance of dealing with those issues of natural resources and resource production which are so essential to our economy. They received virtually no attention whatsoever.

The lumber, fishing and agriculture industries are areas where there is great concern about international markets, financing, investment and the level of cash flow which those key industries face. We are surprised and we are concerned. We hope there might be an opportunity to discuss this. Perhaps I can make a suggestion. As a follow up to the First Minister's conference, a second similar high-level meeting of First Ministers might be called to deal with questions concerning the resource industries, agriculture, fishing, mining and lumber, the basket of issues dealing with productive renewable resources in this country and how we intend to go about financing them.

I want to raise another concern and I would welcome very much the response of the Minister. He was not in the House last week when we had an Opposition Day dealing with agricultural problems.

Mr. Wise: I was here.

Mr. Axworthy: I do not think he was here when I spoke. Perhaps he was behind the curtain or on some other major activity. It is not that I necessarily feel that he had to be a party to my eloquence, but there was one important issue that was raised and I have not heard any response from the Canadian Government on this. I refer to the way in which we intend to cope with the very substantial, almost radical change being proposed by the United States in its agricultural programs. As he knows, Secretary of Agriculture Block and the budget proposals by President Reagan propose a major elimination of their subsidy programs. The solution put forward by the United States Secretary of Agriculture—I apologize to the House if this is out of order—is that they will market the hell out of their products in order to keep up the cash flow of U.S. farmers. That represents a very major and serious question. We know the incredible international market power of U.S. commodities. We also know that they can depress a market, bring it down or dominate a market.

If in fact the United States Government is moving toward what might be called even more aggressive marketing strategies than they already have in order to provide compensation for their farmers due to losses in farming subsidies, that obviously puts our own grain business in very serious jeopardy and causes serious potential problems. We now have problems with the European Common Market. There appears to be a major problem looming on the horizon by a change in U.S. policy. That is something that should not be simply left to circumstance or after-the-fact policy. It is something we should be looking at now.

We would encourage and request from the Minister of Agriculture that this Government address its own levels of concerns to the Secretary of Agriculture. I believe he has had meetings with him. We know that there is a summit meeting between the President and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) coming up in March. We hope that will be a matter on that agenda and that we will ensure that any attempts by the United States to change its grain policies and subsidies programs will not work to the detriment of our own grain-marketing position.

We have seen, and the Minister properly drew this to the attention of the House, that the Wheat Board this year has performed in a remarkable fashion, not with great prices but with respectable prices and, more important, is continuing to secure our markets. We also know that there are storm clouds in that respect. The Chinese, for example, for three years have had very successful crops. They have been a major buyer of Canadian grains. I do not think anyone would want to be critical of the achievements of the Chinese in developing major grain production. Changes in their own philosophy are a major reason for that.

It does raise, however, questions about our own marketing strategy and the fact that one of our very good customers may now be reaching a point of self-sufficiency. In fact, it may even become an exporter of grain over the next year or two. That, again, will have a major impact upon the western farmer. It comes back to the point I want to make. We are coming to a crunch point or crisis point in the area of international grain marketing and the need for looking at forms of agreement that may be arrived at.

I would hope, and again this is by way of recommendation, that one of the initiatives of this Government will be a very positive, aggressive attempt to rework and rearrange international grain agreements with our partners. I know it is difficult. I am not downplaying the barriers or handicaps, but it is necessary.

I want to express a note of regret. In reading very carefully the trade paper put forward by the colleague of the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher), there is virtually no mention of commodities. There is virtually no mention of what the trade strategy or policy would be of this Government in relation to those commodity markets. I was surprised at that absence. When you consider the amount of money that the grain trade makes for this country, it should be considered almost number one in the trade strategy; but it was not mentioned at all.

I again urge this Government to provide an addendum or supplementary trade paper, prepared in concert with the Wheat Board and the Department of Agriculture, on a grain trade strategy or commodity trade strategy so that we can have proper consultation and know where we want to go. It is time we looked at the horizon we are facing, at what is happening in the United States and with some of our market partners. We should realize we are into some turbulence in the international market area and, therefore, need a very clear response.

With those questions being raised, all done in a spirit of trying to provide some constructive criticism, we would simply say again to the Minister that we will support this Bill. We hope we can have full passage today and that we can get on with the business. As I say, we don't mind, when we have a good idea, if the Government copies it.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is our understanding that the amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act will go through all stages here in the House today. I hope that is true because we really want to make it possible for the Government to get the payments out to farmers as early as possible.

First, I would like to congratulate the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) for having this Bill put before the House, albeit a bit later than he had hoped. I also want to congratulate the Minister on getting the support of Liberal Members for this Bill. Liberal Members would not accept this very amendment as late as June 27, 1984, so I congratulate the Minister on getting the support of members of the Liberal Party for this amendment.

I hope that the Government will be more efficient than the previous administration in getting the money out to the farmers. If this Bill passes and there is a pay-out this year, hopefully the farmers will receive it before seeding because that is one of their major requirements. We all know that and there is no reason why we should spend a great deal of time belabouring it.

I do want to talk about a number of concerns that we in the New Democratic Party have about the whole approach to agriculture and the solutions which exist for its problems. The Minister spent a considerable amount of time listing the woes of the farmers and the problems faced by agriculture. Since he knows and is able to articulate these problems so well, hopefully he is also ready to put before the House what he believes are the solutions. We appreciate the fact that, as far as financing is concerned, the Government has decided to have one of the Standing Committees discuss the tax and financing structure of agriculture. We will co-operate with that because we think that that is one, but only one, of the real problems facing agriculture.

We recognize, like the Government, the provincial Governments and certainly the farmers, that there is a real problem facing agriculture. The problem consists not only of financing but of input costs, interest rates and financing methods. These are things about which we must do something. The farmers, the provincial Governments and the federal Government together will have to take a global look at agriculture to identify the problems and find their solution, and this must be done if farming is to survive.

Members of each of the Parties in this House have committed themselves over and over again to supporting the family farm. However, it is the small family farm that is being devastated by the situation in which agriculture finds itself. We cannot blame this situation on one little factor, like not having stabilization or having high interest rates. We must look at all of these factors. I think it is time the Government, the provincial Governments, farm groups and the farmers take a look at the global problems of agriculture and try to come up with some solutions.

There are a number of small solutions to be found. There is stabilization for a number of products and there is supply management for some of the commodities that we sell in the market. There are marketing boards which operate very effectively. As well, there are insurance plans that cover portions of the structure of agriculture but we still find ourselves in the position of having a large number of farms going under. However, we must begin looking at agriculture globally and making all of the decisions for change in the light of the projects and the marketing and stabilization plans that are presently in place. Let us look at agriculture globally to see if there is not something that can be done.

We all recognize, of course, that the obvious and very simple answer to the problems of agriculture is to pay for the commodity what it costs the farmer to produce it. That is a very simple and easy answer but one which is a little more difficult than that to put into place since we do exist within a world market. However, that solution is one at which we should look. Simple as it seems, we have over the years been unable to grapple with that particular approach. Therefore, we must look at it again.

We have needed to implement these many plans because the approach of the previous Government and of many of the provincial Governments has been do deal with a problem when it arises rather than to take a look at the reasons for the problem. Insurance plans or stabilization plans have been put into place so that apple producers and cheese producers could survive for one more year. That is exactly what we are doing by putting this particular plan in place.

We are hoping that the Western Grain Stabilization Plan will help the grain farmers or some of them survive for one more year. I think we are kidding ourselves by believing that this kind of solution will be the only solution. As much as we appreciate the fact that this is one method of getting money into the hands of grain farmers right now, it will not solve the problems of agriculture.

Since it is unlikely that the Government will come up with a global solution, one which would put in place the kind of income security to which we think farmers are entitled, we are now dealing only with the problems of grain farmers in particular. For a considerable amount of time, members of the New Democratic Party have been proposing to amalgamate the insurance plan for grain that we have in western Canada with the Grain Stabilization Plan. This particular approach has been put before the Government of Canada by several groups throughout the country. The Canada grains group, a branch of the Minister's own Department, has on a number of occasions made representations suggesting that we should amalgamate insurance with stabilization so that all grain growers or those who wish to participate can insure themselves against both the market and the weather. It would be a voluntary and contributory plan which would be actuarially sound. The grain growers, the federal Government and the provincial Governments would contribute.

If I could call it one o'clock, I will continue after the lunch recess.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) had the floor.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, when we broke for lunch I was discussing the possibility of amalgamating the existing insurance plan in western Canada with the Western Grain Stabilization Plan in order to have an over-all plan which would be much more effective and valuable. The existing insurance plan provides a structure which covers most of the Prairies. The provincial Governments provide the administration, the federal Government provides a portion of the funds and the farmers also make a contribution to the plan. If that approach were tailored to the needs of every farmer, they would be better off in the end. It would allow the stabilization plan to be tailored for each farmer, region and crop. If the Government intends to amend the Act later in the year to look at this type of approach, we would be happy to exchange a more comprehensive plan for the present Western Grain Stabilization Plan.

I do not think the Government has made a commitment, nor do I think it is prepared to make the kind of commitment, which would provide income security to grain farmers. However, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board indicated an interest in having a full review of the Act. We would commend that action. There are a number of areas in the Act which need to be reviewed.

When the Act was passed in 1978, a number of Members in the House suggested that certain amendments should be made. Since that time the Act has been amended several times and members of the NDP have reiterated the fact that there are weaknesses in the Act which should be corrected. We would congratulate the Minister if it is his intention to amend the Act. We hope that it is done very quickly. After this amendment is passed and the pay-out is made, the Act could be brought before the House to remedy some of its shortcomings.

Over the years members of the New Democratic Party have suggested four or five policy changes with respect to the Act. If we are unable to get an agricultural income security program or a grain producers' income insurance plan, we will not be able to look at it on a total basis as far as the Prairies are concerned. The Act should be changed so that it will be more effective in the future.

I know many government Members share our concerns, because when the House was debating the Act last year they mentioned approaches which are similar to those which I will suggest today.

First, we believe that the plan should be more producer-specific. There should be a factor which allows a better definition of individual problems. For example, many of the farmers who are going under today are good farmers, but because they are beginning their farms, because of their debt load and because of high interest rates they are unable to meet their payments and continue having a good cash flow. A guaranteed cash flow would be worthwhile to them. However, we are not able to target money for that group. In our wisdom, if we looked at it we might decide that that is not an area where our concern should be targeted.

Second, we believe that the pay-out should be on a regional basis. I think there are very good examples for this which the Government has made some movement toward alleviating. For example, with respect to the western drought, and specifically the drought in southern Saskatchewan, if the rest of the provinces had a good crop and the prices were fairly high, southern Saskatchewan would not be able to get any money from the fund. Therefore we believe that we should be able to make those payments on a regional basis.

Another example would be the frost which on occasion has devastated crops in the Peace River area. Northeast Saskatchewan has had a considerable amount of flood damage in the past few years. Again, that area could have been targeted as a region which should have received money. If the majority of regions in the Praries have a good crop, there is no reason that a region which is hit by poor weather and therefore has a poor crop should not be able to get funds from the plan. That is why the plan is there.

Third, we believe that the plan should be more grain-specific. It should be grain specific because more and more of the farm population are specializing. Most of their crop will be peas, lentils or canola, barley or flax. Most have established some kind of rotation which is better for the land, but we still have those people who specialize in one or two grains. What happens if one crop fails? Maybe only one farmer in ten is affected by that failure, but if all of his land is in canola and there is no crop or the bottom drops out of the market, he is affected. Should he not have more of a call on stabilization in those kinds of circumstances? We think we should look at that.

The plan should be more oriented to the cost of production. That has been talked about on all sides of the House and there is a provision in the present formula, but we still have to recognize that at present the pay-out of stabilization payments is related more to cash income than the cost of production.

There is no real provision for labour, management or cost of investment, or even poor delivery opportunities. Perhaps that is one of the major factors. Right now we do not have too much trouble getting our grain to market because we have so little of it out in the west due to the drought. But there have been many years where we had poor delivery possibilities. In some cases we had two years of grain in the bin. Those kinds of situations occur so the plan should be related more to farm income.

The Wheat Pool has made a suggestion which I think is worth looking at. They have suggested that farmers who grow their own feed grains should have an opportunity to pay the levy on that grain so that if they have a poor crop they will qualify for stabilization payments. It might be a little difficult to establish but it would be fair and worthwhile for those farmers who raise their own cattle and hog feed.

I am glad to say that this particular amendment takes care of one more shortcoming existing in the Act, the fact that farmers might have to wait for two or three months after the crop year before they got payment. This amendment makes it possible for the Minister to take action quickly when he knows there will be a pay-out and has some idea of the amount. I congratulate the Minister for that. The first step in this direction was taken last year by the Official Opposition and the New Democrats when we tried to have this amendment put in the Bill, but it was not accepted by the Government. So I congratulate the Minister on getting it done now. It is a short and quick method of getting the money out if it is available.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say that we hope we can get this Bill through the next two stages this afternoon and the Government can then start working on establishing a formula to get money to the farmers by spring seeding.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) on a point of order.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, it is not a point of order, but I think the rules of the House provide me with an opportunity to respond briefly to some questions that were raised both by the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would just like to inform the House that if the Minister replies, that will have the effect of closing debate. Is that the wish of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well. The Hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I declined to utilize my opportunity earlier today to respond to some of the very legitimate questions raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) in order to allow the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) an opportunity to commence his remarks before the one o'clock break. On reflection, I am pleased I did so because many of the questions raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry were also raised by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert. I indicated in a conversation I had with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry that I would utilize this opportunity to respond to his questions. I appreciate the offer because I think there is an understanding that this legislation can be moved through all stages of the House today. I believe it requires an amendment to the motion because the motion refers the Bill to the standing committee. Therefore, I have forwarded a motion to the Chair and I hope the Chair finds it in order so we can proceed with this Bill in all stages today. If that is the case, then we will not take very much of the time of the House. I feel somewhat guilty in taking the time I am going to take at the moment, but I do feel a responsibility to respond to some of the very legitimate questions raised.

Both Members raised the question whether or not it would be the position of this Government to open up the Bill for further study at a later date. I can give them that assurance. Indeed, if we had more time we would be quite prepared to open up the Bill for study and the amendment we brought forward today would be the result of those studies which could have taken place. But as both Hon. Members know, and as we have been cautioned by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, time is short. We recognized that fact and that is the prime reason we brought the Bill forward, simply to allow an interim payment to be made as soon as possible.

My colleague, the Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), has said publicly in the past that there are other matters we will want to consider. Indeed, some of these matters were flagged for us and raised in the speech of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert. We recognize there is a need. There have been requests for regional payments and we think it is a legitimate area to be looked at.

As well, the question of producer-specific has been raised before, perhaps by the Hon. Member, certainly by other grain farmers in western Canada, and we think it may indeed have some merit. I just want to acknowledge those as legitimate concerns which we share. If we had additional time we would study these matters which the Hon. Member raises.

● (1420)

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry raised questions about damage to grain crops in western Canada which may be caused by pest infiltration in 1985. Some people may take that subject lightly. Those of us who have a better understanding of what this means in terms of crop and dollar losses to western farmers do not take the subject of grasshoppers lightly. I can assure Hon. Members that we are very concerned about it for a couple of reasons. One is that there are some early indications of a possibility of a larger infestation of grasshoppers in the crop year of 1985 than in that of last year. It will, of course, depend on weather conditions. If we happen to have an early and dry spring and a dry growing season, larger infestations of grasshoppers will be encouraged.

We are looking at this very closely. We are working closely with the provincial Governments. We have formed a federal-provincial committee of research scientists across western Canada. They are putting together a system to give a weekly update on the situation. Farmers in western Canada will have a contact point where they can obtain the latest update on grasshopper numbers. In Canada we have 10 licensed effective chemicals which can be used. We are watching the situation very closely. We hope that the early indicators will not materialize.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry raised some questions which I do not think are legitimate. He asked why the subject of agriculture is not front row and centre at the First Ministers' conference which is about to conclude in Regina. A First Ministers' conference has not been held in this country since 1982. The main focus of the conference is the financial climate and economy of the country as well as interest rates and job creation. The problems in the agricultural industry and the importance of the industry in terms of the general economy and of job creation have been raised, as we would expect they would be, by provincial Premiers attending the meeting. To a large extent the agricultural industry depends on the general state of the economy.

There was some complaint that agriculture was only mentioned once in the Throne Speech. It was not a shopping basket approach. There were two very definite and strong commitments by the Government to the agricultural industry in the Throne Speech. The Government is fulfilling the commitments it made to the agricultural industry during the campaign in a very rapid fashion.

There have been concerns about what may happen to the Canadian farm economy as a result of certain actions which may or may not be taken by the U.S. Government through its farm Bill. Due to my responsibilities, I feel I should be the first to indicate that that matter concerns me very much. I doubt very much whether the U.S. Government will be able to carry out some of the indications which are flowing out of that country. There are large stockpiles of commodities in the U.S. If the financial support now in place is withdrawn, it will create very severe ramifications in the international marketplace. It is obvious that will have detrimental effects on the Canadian agricultural economy. I doubt very much whether some of these predictions will materialize to the extent that we think they might at the moment. There is no doubt, however, that they will follow more aggressive export sales promotion programs in the international market. We must be prepared to provide the same types of effective, aggressive and successful export programs to compete in the international market-place.

I can assure the Hon. Member that officials of my Department and officials of the U.S.D.A. are in contact with each other on almost a daily basis. I have had a number of conversations with U.S. Secretary John Block. My colleague, the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Kelleher), has had discussions with his counterpart in the U.S. We all know that our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has met the President of the United States and will meet him again next month. I am satisfied that these matters will be discussed on those forums. I hope that we can continue to compete on a fair and equitable basis in the international market.

I have perhaps not addressed all of the issues, Mr. Speaker. I am as anxious as anyone else to utilize the time of the House to the greatest advantage. I hope that we have the support of Hon. Members to move this Bill through the House. If there is a technical problem, I hope the motion which I have forwarded to the Chair will be sufficient to allow us to pass this Bill through all stages in order to utilize the earliest opportunity to provide an interim payment to western farmers. If that is the case, as I assume it is, I would like to express my appreciation for the co-operation we have received from all quarters of the House on this legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that the House agrees with the suggestion of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) that this Bill be referred to Committee of the Whole instead of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. Is that correct?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Wise, for Mr. Mayer, seconded by Mr. Nielsen, moves that Bill C-29, an Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

● (1430)

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-29, an Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, this is the time to direct questions to the Minister if we desire to have this particular clause explained. Since the Bill does not indicate a percentage, is it the Minister's intention to provide approximately 50 per cent of the estimated pay-out? I assume that some preliminary calculations have been made. Approximately what would be the expected pay-out?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, that is a very legitimate question. I am not in a position at the moment to give the Hon. Member a definite answer.

Mr. Benjamin: Give us a guess.

Mr. Wise: Thank you for the invitation. I can make a guess. The safeguard is so that we will obtain as much information as possible. To avoid risking making an overpayment, we will take that information back to Cabinet where the actual assessment and decision will be made. We are told that we will be supplied with a fair amount of information which should be sufficiently reliable to make an intelligent decision, so we can make a reasonable payment but with the assurance that it would not potentially be an overpayment.

Mr. Althouse: Would the Minister state whether the advisory board to the stabilization group would be consulted to determine the size of the pay-out? I recognize that the Act is not written in quite the same way as the Wheat Board Act, according to which the Wheat Board itself makes a recommendation to the Minister. The Minister takes this recommendation to Cabinet and with Cabinet approval the Government then accepts responsibility in the event that the initial pay-out for grains is too high.

I do not believe there is any such guarantee in this legislation. Will the advisory committee be utilized? Are there any guarantees against bad guesses so that the fund itself will not bear the burden of a bad guess? How is that approached?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I expect that the advisory committee would indeed be the likely body with which consultations would take place. Indeed, it is there for a variety of reasons and should be very capable of advising the Minister as to what appropriate action could be taken. I would expect that it would be one of many groups that would be consulted. It would have an opportunity to give its input.

It is difficult to come up with an appropriate mechanism that would allow for an appropriate payment and, second, to be required to provide a safeguard whereby an overpayment would not take place.

In the absence of some suitable mechanism at the moment, we felt that the information that would come from the industry and would be available through statistics which are gathered by Agriculture Canada would be sufficient for the Cabinet to assume its responsibilities and make a reasonable and intelligent decision.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, does the Minister have a guideline at this point by which he could give us a range of the initial pay-out? Will it be 20 per cent, 50 per cent or 80 per cent of the final pay-out? Are you trying to give half of the pay-out before seeding and the rest when the final calculations are made, or, because of the circumstances this year and the great need for cash, are you looking at an 80 per cent pay-out?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the legitimate reasons behind the Hon. Member's question. At this point I think it would be irresponsible for me to indicate what that particular target would be. There is a rather large amount of money in the fund. Second, there is a very tight cash situation in western Canada. If I mentioned a percentage, I am afraid that it would automatically become a minimum or benchmark. A benchmark for 1985 might not be appropriate for succeeding years.

I have some personal views about this, as does the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. The final decision will be made by Cabinet but it has not been made yet.

I appreciate the information which the Hon. Member seeks and I wish I were in the position to provide it to him at the moment. However, I think it is somewhat premature for me to respond.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I realize from his previous answers that the Minister is somewhat loth to make firm commitments. We have heard the Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board say that it is his intention to have the cheques in the hands of the farmers before seeding. Since it is apparent that the Minister will not tell me a particular date by which he hopes to deliver the cheques, could he be somewhat circumspect and state when he thinks we will start seeding this year?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I think there might be more of a degree of accuracy if the Hon. Member suggested to me the exact seeding date in all regions of western Canada.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Chairman, my question may also concern other clauses. The Minister will remember that many of us in the Opposition last year accused the previous Government of juggling the formula to fit the amount it decided to pay. Is there a specific formula or does one have to be calculated for each payment?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I do not have the exact formula with me. I made reference to it in general terms in my speech. It is my understanding that the formula is in place. I do not think there is any juggling or any intention to juggle a formula in future years unless the recommendations flow from the western grain farmers and those recommendations have a great deal of merit and legitimacy.

● (1440)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, the Minister can correct me if I am wrong, but if my memory serves me rightly the income is calculated on the previous three crop years. If income is below 90 per cent of that three-year average in the current crop year, that figure is the payment. Does the Minister have the figures for the average income for the previous three crop years and what would be the projected income for the current crop year?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I might have that information if I have a little more time to go through my notes. I will be happy to share that information with the Hon. Member if I can find it and it is here.

Mr. Benjamin: Agreed, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, my question follows from one asked by a Member from the NDP, namely that we have promised a pay-out before seeding. Sometimes in southern Alberta when people are seeding they are still plowing snow in northern Alberta. When it is springtime in the Rockies, sometimes people are still cleaning snow off their sidewalks 100 miles east of the Rockies. Different crops require different seeding times. It is difficult to say that we will do it all before May 24. We used to take as a rule of thumb that we have to have our potatoes and our wheat in by May 24. The varieties of wheat have changed and the varieties of potatoes have changed and that rule of thumb is not applicable now, but there is a deadline.

Let us try to get the pay-out ahead of any seeding, well ahead of time because it is not simply the buying of the seed or the fuel, et cetera; there is machine repair and lots of preparation. Farmers require that money very badly this year. Many of our farmers are living from hand to mouth at the present time. Many people think farmers are really well off but farmers are going through a difficult and critical time in their history. We should make an effort to keep all of our good farmers. The ones having difficulties are mostly the young ones. Let us keep our good young farmers on the land. They will be essential to Canada, especially in the future.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I want to place on the record that I never argue with representations made by the Hon. Member for Bow River.

Mr. Hovdebo: I want to come back to the calculations again, Mr. Chairman. I understand the regulations are viewed with the cost production factor in the formula. They have been changed or they were changed in the last calculations that were done in June, or after June.

Would it be possible for the Minister to provide us with the formula and the regulations by which the cost of production is reached so we can have some insight into the process by which the Government is going to reach that level or the level that will be decided upon?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have any objection to that at all when I have the information available to me. There was some reference in an earlier question to the fact that the formula was based on the net cash flow for the previous three years. The information I have is that through stabilization payments they protect the net cash flow from the sale of seven major grains in western Canada—and we know what grains they are—from falling below the average net cash flow for the immediate preceding five-year period.

Mr. Benjamin: Do you have those figures?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, we have heard some questions now about the pay-out side. I would like to ask the Minister some questions relating to the input side. My own information indicates that at the end of 1983 there was about $884 million in the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. This last year there was a pay-out somewhere in excess of $223 million which would bring the fund to the level of less than $600 million. The normal levies on federal participation and producer participation add another $130 million a year. In the Minister's opening statement, he indicated that he felt that the total pay-out by July could amount to some $800 million. I believe that was the figure he was using. In any event, it was pretty close to that.

Would the Minister tell us what the current state of the fund is? What would be the levies provided to the producers and what would be the federal contribution to that? What would be the estimated state of the fund at the end of the pay-out period next summer?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I can provide the Hon. Member with accurate information on that without some additional time. I believe the fund is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $900 million. I am not certain whether that $900 million was before the final payment of $123 million. The fund earns interest, of course. The information I have is that as of December 31, 1984, the balance was about $900 million. As a result of the drought on the Prairies last summer, producer marketings were expected to be down to six or seven million tonnes this crop year; thus a substantial western grain stabilization payment is expected to be triggered in the 1984-85 crop year under the total net cash flow calculation. Producers who had poor crops in 1984 require additional cash flows to enable them to seed their crops in the spring.

I do not believe the actual levy has changed where the contribution is 1.5 per cent of grain sales. If you look at the total picture, Mr. Chairman, the contribution is $1 for a producer and a $2 contribution by the federal Government.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I recognize the Minister may have some problem providing the immediate figures. The point of the question concerns the state of the fund at the end of the pay-out period. It has an implication for the producers in terms of the amount of the levy. Again we are potentially caught in the squeeze between putting out on the one side and having to take on the other. Because of the substantially lower crop and sales expectation, the amount paid into the fund is on a smaller base and therefore may require a higher levy.

Part of the question is whether there would be consideration in the form of a moratorium on the level of payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Fund at this point in time so that we are not taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another in the same period, and therefore not giving that much benefit back to farmers at this time when the squeeze is on.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member raises a very legitimate question and one which has occupied a fair amount of discussion to this point in time. We recognize it is public knowledge that the fund is fairly sizeable. It is recognized that we have a responsibility because we have had numerous requests for us to make an interim payment by grain producers who have contributed to that fund. At the same time we recognize that we would want to be responsible in making that decision in such a way that a reasonable payment could be made to the farmers so as to put as much cash in their hands as early as possible and also to signal a greater degree of confidence. If cash was not placed in their hands, perhaps a greater measure of credit could be extended to them. We want to do it in a balanced way so that the actual fund is properly utilized, we do not run the risk of overpayment or of depleting the fund and we do not run the risk of having to increase levies.

● (1450)

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Chairman, I have one final question in this respect. I have had some experience in the past with Finance Ministers who were very touchy about the question of cash flows and relative levels of financing of different projects. I want to raise with the Minister what could be a difficult equation. Perhaps he will be faced with it. I should like to seek some assurances.

We in the House have heard that the Government is intending to bring forward a Budget in April or May, depending upon whose version of events one listens to. Let us say that the Budget will be brought forward this spring. We are now engaged in passing authority for interim payments. The final calculation will not take place until July 31. Therefore, we are in a position where, in a sense, the fiscal framework and allocations will be set in the Budget in the spring, before the calculation on the Western Grain Stabilization Fund has been set. There is a potential shortfall, certainly in terms of the actual federal contributions out of consolidated revenues.

Would the Minister assure us in terms of the budgetary process and the fiscal framework that sufficient funds will be set aside to ensure that full payments will be made, that the fund is considered stable, that it will maintain liquidity at the same time and that it will not affect the rate of levy to producers? The rate of levy to producers could be affected if the opposite happened; that is, if the Minister of Finance put forward a Budget, set the fiscal framework and then had the fund do its final calculations for July 31, realizing that higher levels of payment were required and therefore requiring a draw on more funds. This is a fairly important question, and we really need the assurance of the Minister in that respect.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, let me utilize this opportunity to correct the record. I think I referred to a two and one breakdown as far as contributions were concerned. I have been advised that this indeed was the case commencing January 1, 1984. Since then it has been 1.5 per cent for producers and the Government's contribution has been increased to 2.5 per cent.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry challenges us. Actually that is the challenge we face. There is somewhat of a risk if we want to provide an interim payment. I can assure him and other Hon. Members of the House that every precautionary step which can be taken will be taken to prevent us from getting into that situation. However, as a Government and because of our interest in the agricultural industry, if we find ourselves in a position where we have to accept our responsibilities as a result of some miscalculation, misjudgment or something of that nature, we will be as prepared to accept our responsibilities under those conditions, which we hope do not happen, as we are today.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a series of informational questions. If the Minister does not have the information, perhaps he could forward it to me or give it to the House in the future. That would be acceptable.

Could he tell us how much is in the fund right now, the balance? How much interest are we collecting on that fund from the Government?

Mr. Benjamin: The rate.

Mr. Hovdebo: The rate of interest, yes. The levy was lowered for farmers about three years ago. I am just wondering about the process. Is it lowered by recommendation of the committee, or how is that decision reached? For instance, if we are getting short, is there a chance that it will be raised again? Finally, with the smaller crop this year, what is the expected amount of the levy pay-in?

Mr. Wise: I do not have all that information available to me at the moment, but I have no hesitation in providing it to the Hon. Member at a later date.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, February 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bissonnette that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly glad to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C-23. Even though a 10-minute period for speeches is provided now, there are a number of things I want to say.

First, I support the Bill wholeheartedly because it will continue to be a boon to small-businessmen. Second, the situation faced by small-businessmen in Canada indicates that the Bill is badly needed.

We have heard some Hon. Members of the Liberal Party say that the Bill should be withdrawn, divided or thrown out. That would be a real slap in the face, to put it colloquially, for small-businessmen in Canada. They need this Bill. The fact that the money has already run out indicates that we need additional legislative authority to continue until March 31.

Every Member of the House who wants small business to progress should be in favour of moving this Bill forward as quickly as possible in line with full debate. If the Bill is delayed unduly, it means that some businessmen will not receive loans as there is no money left in the fund and it has to be supplemented by the $300 thousand which was mentioned by the Hon. Minister.

Some Hon. Members indicated that it was much better in 1981-82 and in 1983-84. I cannot see how this is so. Certainly it did a reasonably good job but there were defaults and deficiencies which should now be corrected. I believe this Bill will correct some of the things which have been discovered. The number of small businesses which went bankrupt in 1981 amounted to 8,005—8,005 businesses went out of business and into receivership or bankruptcy. In 1982, 10,765 businesses went into bankruptcy. In 1983, there were 10,260. When Liberal Members say that this Act should be withdrawn, in light of that experience I do not think we would be assisting the small businessman.

No one on this side of the House thinks we should be giving hand-outs to small or large businesses, but there is a place for government money in order to keep businesses going such as seed money and other supplementary money. That enables a businessman to continue. Otherwise he may have gone into bankruptcy or receivership. During the last three or four years, that money often was not available because there were too many restrictions on getting the money.

Let us look at the small business bond, for example. When the Clark Government was in power, the small business bond was welcomed by the people with open arms. When the Liberal Government took over, people had to be in dire straits before they could get the money. That put the kibosh on that wonderful program.

There was a provision in the Act which said that loans could be made up to $500,000. I know a businessman who did not want to borrow any more than he had to. He borrowed $250,000. Due to rising prices and interest rates, which rose to the maximum during that period, he found he could not operate. When he returned for another loan, he was told, "We cannot do it". He was only permitted one loan. Even though he only borrowed half the amount, they would not loan the balance.

I went to the then Minister, the Hon. Allan MacEachen, and pointed that out. He said he would fix that. He agreed that the man should get the $500,000. I pointed out that he may want only another $100,000. He said he would look after this, but the departmental officials did not do that. I had the Minister's word verbally and by letter saying that he would arrange for the balance of that money, but he did not do it. What happened? Over 20 people lost their jobs. The business is now like a ghost. There are empty sheds.

I want to deal with one or two other points. Ten minutes is just not enough time. Are you signalling me that I have one minute remaining, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has 20 minutes in which to speak.

Mr. Taylor: You were pointing one finger and that made me nervous.

I want to deal with another item that was raised by a number of Liberal Members. I hope we can put their fears to rest. Some objected to the banks being responsible for any part of the losses. I do not follow that. All the losses would then be borne by the people, not by the banks. We would have a situation where the banks make the profit, maybe not as much as with normal loans because this has to be prime plus, and did all the arranging, and if there was any loss, the people of the country had to pay, that is, the government.

When the banks make a profit, they should be responsible for some of the loss. That is very reasonable. I would like to see it go beyond what this Bill says. It will not be changed in this fiscal year. After April 1, 10 per cent of the losses will be paid by the banks. Why should that not be? They make the profit, why not be responsible for some of the loss? They made the contract. They might then make a more careful examination when making loans.

It is not right to say that people must pay the whole loss and the banks make all the profit. I do not go for that at all. I support this Bill which says the Government will pay 90 per cent and the banks 10 per cent. That is going the second mile, having the banks going for 10 per cent. I suppose the idea is to encourage the banks to make the loans, to look after needy cases. We will have to see how it works out. Certainly the other method did not work very well.

Let us look at the facts. In 1977, $96 million was lent and there were losses of $600,000. That was not too bad. However, let us look at 1984 when $900 million was lent and there was a loss of $43 million. The people had to pay that $43 million loss. Not only were the businesses lost, but the people lost $43 million and the banks lost nothing. They had their profit. I do not think that is a good record. No wonder the present Government says the banks should pay for part of the loss. That is right. I support it fully.

Another new feature in this Bill is that if the banks are going to make all the profit, they should pay a fee. If I were to go hunting and have the pleasure of hunting, I would have to pay for a licence. Nobody would give me the licence. I would pay for it. If I buy a car, I have to pay for a licence before I can operate it. Here the bank has the privilege of lending the money, with the Government picking up any losses and the bank paying absolutely nothing. We now say there will be a 1 per cent fee.

I suppose there is the danger of that fee being passed on to the borrower, but the Act will look after that. The banks cannot pass that 1 per cent fee on to the borrower. It will come out of the profits of the banks. It is about time the banks started paying some of these things instead of just taking all the time. I do not see anything wrong with the 1 per cent of the amount of the loan being charged, especially when it cannot be passed on. That will bring in revenue, which will compensate for some of the losses the people are taking. That is right and proper. Therefore, I support the Bill with regard to those points.

I would now like to deal with the effect this will have on jobs. That is a very important item. Everything we do should consider those who are not receiving a pay cheque at the end of the week or the end of the month. The wife and children are under stress and strain because there is no pay cheque coming in. They may receive UIC, but that is only temporary. They cannot live a normal life. It is a tremendous help, but when that closes off, what do they have? All they are left with is welfare. That varies almost from municipality to municipality and certainly in every province. In some places it is reasonably good and in other places it is bad and the people barely exist.

An elderly citizen told me that for the last three days of the month he has soup and bread, and that sometimes he has to go without the soup and just have dry bread. In this country there should be a reasonable floor for our people. Whether you live in New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec, Ontario, Alberta, British Columbia, or the Northwest Territories, you are a Canadian. The standard of living should at least be at a certain level. Whether you work or cannot work, whether you are on compensation of welfare, there should be a reasonable level, one that entitles you at least to live.

The truth is that most people want to work. They want to be independent. Many people would like to work but cannot find jobs, and this is particularly so for those in small communities who cannot commute to the cities in which some jobs are available. Therefore, we would like to see some jobs created through this Bill as well.

In my view, keeping our small businesses viable is one of the best ways of creating jobs in this country. I like the idea of small business. I like the idea of a proprietor, his wife and his family making the decisions. There are no boards of directors, large corporation lawyers or chartered accountants. It is only the man, his wife and his children who make the decisions, and if they make wrong decisions, they take the flak. Most times, their decisions are right because they are made in light of all the factors in that particular community.

One of the great highlights of free enterprise is that the proprietors make the decisions themselves rather than the Government and the chartered accountants. The man who has the money invested in that business makes his decisions, and he makes them in the best interests of his family and his community because he must live in the community and he must look after his family.

Every successful loan we make under this Act will provide jobs for more Canadians, including young people, women and men. There are small businesses in every community across the country right from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Newfoundland to Victoria, from the 49th parallel to the Arctic Circle. There are people in those communities who need jobs. We are getting right down to the grass roots where the money is being utilized in the area in which the people live. There is a place for big businesses which can hire as many as 2,000 people. That is fine, but we still need the small businesses to look after employment in our communities throughout the country. Therefore, this Act is a job-creating Act.

A businessman who does not need the money will not borrow it. He will not pay prime plus 1 per cent when he does not need the money. If he has enough capital to keep going, then he keeps going. It is the man who is on the verge of failure or the man who wants to expand his successful business, provide more jobs, make more money and contribute to the nation who needs help.

I spoke to a man who lives in Black Diamond. He told me that he owned the empty lot that sat right beside the business he operates. He said, "I would like to build another building on that lot. It would provide another eight or 10 jobs during construction and another three or four permanent jobs in this community. However, I am not going to do it". I asked him why this was so. He said, "Well, in the first place, no provision is made for a man of my capacity, a small businessman, to borrow money. I have to go to the bank and borrow at a high rate". He did not know about the Small Businesses Loans Act. It would have fit right into his plans. He went on to say, "Another reason for this is that I will work my fingers to the bone for my wife and my children but I will not work my fingers to the bone and then pay it all out in capital gains taxes when I pass away or retire".

Another thing we must do is to set the capital gains tax at a sensible level—nil. It is killing initiative today and is keeping businesses from expanding. It is stopping those who want to retire on the nest-egg they have built over the last 50 years from retiring because the Government will grab a percentage of half of it leaving them without enough to continue. Well, that is another Act, Mr. Speaker. However, it shows what small business can do if it is given the proper incentive.

That brings me to the last point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, and that is that I think the Government has a responsibility to create a climate that will encourage people to invest. People say that Canadians have more money in the banks than any other people on the face of the earth. I do not know whether it is true or not, but if it is true or only partly true, then that money could be invested in ways that would pay bigger returns than bank interest rates or Canada savings bonds and people would be investing their money. When we invest money, we provide jobs. When we invest money, we increase the productivity of the country so that we can implement a good welfare program.

This tremendous economy of ours is all wrapped up together. We have a country with tremendous resources. We live in a country with tremendous people. All we need to do is put our resources and our people together, give them the wherewithal to convince the small businesses across this nation to invest, and we will make a big dent in the number of unemployed.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I once again have the pleasure of rising to participate in debate on a Friday afternoon. I am pleased to do so when we are discussing a Bill that is as important to the small business community as this one.

I was quite taken aback and almost struck speechless by the opening comments of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), an Hon. Member to whom I have listened on many occasions. In his opening elocution, he indicated that he was in favour of government doing something for the private sector on some occasions. That was such an incredible reversal and radical turnaround from the multitude of statements and comments I have heard the Hon. Member make over the years that I thought that it may have been caused by something he ate for lunch. Perhaps he had a conversion on the road to Tarsus. However, I could not believe my ears. He was actually saying that the Government itself, that nasty, horrible, evil engine of destruction, would do something positive and constructive. I do not know whether that was a momentary lapse or whether he got carried away with his enthusiasm for supporting a mechanism of small businesses loans administration that was brought in and amended over the years by various Liberal Governments which saw the wisdom of having a program that would support small businesses in this country. I was glad to see that by the end of his speech, he had reverted to form and was once again using his powers of erudition to flagellate government and extol the private sector.

I think the key question we are facing in this debate is whether or not the amendments proposed by the Government will assist small business. I have not heard anyone argue against helping small business. The key question in this regard is whether or not the specific amendments being discussed in the House provide for the necessary changes. Obviously the extension of the loan guarantees are an improvement and one to which I look forward. However, when I look at the other two components of the Bill, I find myself scratching my head.

I have heard that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is off in Regina on his "grope and tell" session with the Premiers and they are all extolling the benefits of small business. However, we have in front of us an Act which, in very simple terms, will make it more difficult for small business to receive loans from the banks, chartered companies and trust companies. The question is, why is the Government doing that? Why would it deliberately go out of its way to make a change in the Act that will make it more difficult for small business to obtain loans? That opinion is held not only by members of the Opposition but has been widely expressed by members of the Federation of Small Business and by others in business. They simply say that by reducing the loan guarantee to 90 per cent and by charging a fee, the Bill makes it far less attractive for the lending institutions to provide the loans that are necessary. Surely that is a mystery. It is a conundrum. The Conservative Government, which believes, in the very depths of its theological soul, that private business is important, is putting additional barriers in the way of small business achieving its purpose. Frankly, I have no one who can give a plausible explanation for that other than the Hon. Member for Bow River who said that it is up to the banks to share in whatever losses may occur.

● (1520)

There may be some justice in the banks sharing the burden, but surely that is not the point of the Small Businesses Loans Act. The Act is to help small business invest, expand, and modernize to produce more and create more jobs. Contrary to every public statement, when it comes down to action, the Conservative Government is more dominated by a cost-cutting chartered accountant's view of the world than it is by a growth philosophy which would give small business a change. It only makes sense. If the Government is going to make it available to the banks at prime rate—and that would be the result of charging the 1 per cent user fee—then the banks will not give that kind of privileged opportunity to small business. The banks will not give small business the advantage which was previously offered by the Act.

It is interesting that John Bulloch and Members of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business are saying that if the user fee is going to be charged, then it could be passed on to the borrower. That is a possibility which the Government should have examined. A strange mentality has taken hold of the Government. It must show a better balance on its own accounting sheets, as opposed to the larger question of national accounts, in terms of the over-all economic performance which involves jobs, growth, expansion and development. It is the primary responsibility of every Government to measure the economy by the total number of indicators and not only use what shows up in the calculations of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It is that curious finance mentality that the Government somehow thinks it is doing something useful if it shows that it has reduced the costs on the outlays when the Estimates are tabled. It does not matter that it will reduce small business growth, expansion and job creation. That does not seem to be important. What is important to the Government is an impression that somehow it has taken action and reduced deficits or cut back on the Estimates. It does not matter what damage it has done, what negative impact it has created, or the fact that growth has been retarded. That is a very dangerous precedent. It is a very serious problem, because if that is the mentality which drives and motivates members of the Ministry—and I am not talking about the back-benchers because they have said that they believe in small business—we are going to have a very difficult time over the next four years until a new Government assumes power. That Government will have a more positive point of view. This Government is putting anchors on the legs and wheels of small business.

I would like to talk about some interesting comparisons which have been made between small business growth in the United States and Canada. Several surveys and studies were done by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion a year ago which indicated that Canada has approximately the same rate of small business creation as does the United States. However, there is one very major difference. In the United States, when a small business reaches a certain level of development, it has a much easier time becoming a medium or a large business. Small businesses in the United States have a take-off point. They are able to expand their markets, activities and, in particular, they are able to provide more jobs. In Canada, small business hits a dead zone. Canada has a much lower rate of small business upgrading, improving and expanding. Canadian small businesses tend to hit a level whereby they are no longer able to expand their activities. If we asked why, it comes down to the greater difficulty small business in Canada has in achieving venture capital for expansion and development. Canada has a more rigid financial market and less flexibility in the operation of capital markets as they apply to small business.

That is particularly true in western Canada which does not have many large corporations. I would say it is also shared in the Atlantic provinces. Small business forms the business community there and it is what drives the economy in the West.

A recent survey was done by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business in the western region, and the major complaint of small business was the reduction in the financial system, especially with respect to the chartered banks. I have argued previously in the House that one of the most important initiatives we could take is a form of deregulation of the financial institutions to provide more opportunity for the caisses populaires, credit unions and the smaller financial institutions which are locally based to expand their lending power and capacity. For example, small business in western Canada has indicated that the chartered bank system, with its rigid insistence on high levels of collateral, has become a frustration and a deterrent to small business development. There is a very clear and compelling argument that we must reorganize our financial system to allow for a much broader and more flexible flow of capital into small business for a wide variety of purposes. It is also important in the range of financial instruments which are offered by federal and provincial Governments.

A major problem—and it is a complaint which has been registered in previous lending practices, and particularly now under the new program of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion—is that the service sector is totally ignored. The Economic Council of Canada in its 1984 report entitled Western Transition, indicated that one of the potential areas of real growth in the West was in the service sector. Yet that sector finds it far more difficult to receive financial backing and support from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, the IRDP, the FBDB, and other institutions which provide financial assistance. It is clearly the time for a major reform of both the private financial institutions and the federal and provincial lending institutions to deregulate, expand and make more flexible their offerings.

Over the past five or six months we have seen several actions which have contradicted that approach. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) radically changed IRDP. That is the major grant program for business. He has basically wiped out the opportunity for small business to get loans because the tier 1 allocation was removed. All small businesses in the major cities of Canada as well as in many other areas, were wiped out. Assistance is no longer available for expansion, modernization or renovation. Federal assistance to tourism has been removed. Tourism is a major service sector which provides incredibly labour-intensive job activity. The federal Government has withdrawn from that area. In that one act, the Government, which says it believes in small business, has eliminated a major area of support to small business. The Government will not tell us the reason and we are now seeing a major disparity between promises and action.

In addition, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion brought in the Investment Canada Bill. That Bill established thresholds, and the Government put the small business community into a real danger of being taken over by foreign investors. You do not have to take my word for it. Two days ago we had the Conference Board of Canada, which represents the business community, saying the very same thing in committee. The question was asked: Do the present screening requirements under Investment Canada represent a threat to small business in the form of takeovers? They said, yes, and it should be amended to change that. The same Minister has, in his Investment Canada Bill, a further barrier to the expansion and development of small business. Now we have these amendments by the same Minister to the Small Businesses Loans Act which again puts up barriers. If you go back to the biblical injunction of being known by your actions, not by your words, then we have to say that this Government, because of its actions, clearly does not believe it should be giving assistance to small business. Never mind the rhetoric, the fine speeches, look at the actions. It has eliminated IRDP loans and assistance for small businesses on tier one. It has eliminated grants for tourism. It has changed the Investment Canada procedures so that small businesses are now threatened by takeovers without screening or review. Then we have the imposition, under this Act, of user-fee requirements and a change in the loan guarantee provision, which means that private lenders will find it more difficult to give loans to small business. Logic and argument indicate we can only conclude that this is a Government which thinks that by smoke-screening, public relations, fine rhetoric and the spinning of homey phrases it can convince people of one thing, but the harsh reality as indicated by its actions in this House is that the Government is not a friend of small business. Certainly the Minister is not because every single thing he has done has worked against their interests.

I think this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, we have come to a very profound realization. The Conservative Government and the platforms upon which the Conservatives built, and the thousands of chamber of commerce speeches they have made, cannot be trusted. The Government does not live up to its promises. Furthermore, the small business community is being hoodwinked. In fact, what is far more dominant is this mythology and mentality that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of Finance are showing neater calculations on their cost accounting sheets. That is what their objective is, not to create growth, opportunity or development.

The Hon. Member for Bow River asks why several Members of Parliament are saying that the Bill should be withdrawn. The reason is that it does not do what it should do, that is, to provide assistance and encouragement to our small business community to expand and provide job creation. It is bad legislation. Surely the Conservative back-benchers at their next caucus meeting should take the Minister off into a corner and whisper some words of wisdom in his ear. Not that he is going to listen very much. They should tell him that they are getting tired of this business. They are the ones who are exposed. They are making speeches in favour of small business, but they are going to be exposed as hypocrites because their Government is betraying them. Every single thing they do works in contradiction to the interests of the small business community.

Mr. Kilgour: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Axworthy: Now we have them concerned, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know very well that the word "hypocrite" has been ruled as being an unparliamentary word. I ask that he withdraw that word from the record.

An Hon. Member: It is not.

Mr. Kilgour: The word "hypocrite" Sir, is unparliamentary.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would defer to the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) and—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair rules that the words mentioned by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) are parliamentary, therefore he may continue.

Mr. Kilgour: Are parliamentary?

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, they are.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can check Beauchesne, and in the meantime I will finish my speech.

Whether it is hypocritical or not, the fact remains that Conservative Members of Parliament are in danger of having their intentions subjected to some degree of skepticism because I believe their Government is betraying them. I say that with all my sympathy and with the intent to provide constructive encouragement and advice. They should change that Bill because no one in the small business community is going to thank them for having supported legislation which works against what they are trying to achieve. That is the hard reality they will have to face. All the brave promises that were made before September 4 are now being dashed to dust in the ground. This is a Government of big business, and that is the hard reality. All this consultation has not taken into account what the small business community is really saying. If this is a Government which really believed in consultation and in following advice, then why does it not change the Bill as small business has asked them to do? It is very simple. They said the user-fee will have a very serious deterrent effect on the provision of loans.

All we in opposition can do is to point out the fallacies and foibles and fumblings before us. We do not have the power to change them. That is why we are here this afternoon saying to those members of the government Party that they should take a hard look at this legislation and realize that they are doing no good. They are not providing any assistance or encouragement to small business. Therefore, the small business community will not be able to take advantage of opportunities to get the kind of capital it needs in order to expand and grow. That is really the message in this Bill. However, I hope that in this debate we will be able to ensure that by the time it gets to committee, the Minister will have come to his senses, will listen to some of the good advice, and will make the amendments that are absolutely necessary to make this a good Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) did not want to mislead the House or anyone who may have been listening to his comments. He talked about the user-fee and putting impediments in the way of the small business development bond. He would recognize, and I am sure admit, that the small business development bond, when it was first introduced, was just that, a bond to help small business develop. When his Government got hold of it over the past four years, it became a rescue bond. It was no longer used for small business development, but, rather, as a bail-out bond, particularly over the last few years. It was a survival mechanism. The Government said it was not going to use it as a development bond any more. As a result, losses on the bonds became extremely high because we took away from the banks the discretionary use of the bond, as should be the case with good and normal planning practices in businesses.

What we are doing is putting some of the onus back on the banks. We are saying to them that they are going to lend the money and we are going to guarantee it, but there is a chance for a 10 per cent loss if they make a bad judgment. We no longer want to use this as a bail-out bond; we want to use it as a development bond. Surely the Hon. Member would understand that, would he not?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, let me provide the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) with two different kinds of answers, both of which I know he will find satisfactory. First, his description of the use of the Small Businesses Loans Act is not accurate.

If he goes back to the latest figures of the uses made of the money, he will find that in the year ending December 31, 1983, $70 million was used for fixed equipment, $408 million for moveable equipment, $76 million for improvement of premises, $35 million for construction of buildings, $85 million for purchase of buildings, and $14 million for the purchase of land. None of that is for bail-outs. It is for improvement, expansion, modernization and development. The basic purpose of the Small Businesses Loans Act is to give a small business entrepreneur, who sees an opportunity for a new business development, the necessary capital to make those choices. Those figures are in the small business loans report.

Mr. John Bulloch, who is known as a good friend of the Conservative Party and is the President of the Canadian Federation of Business, said that the Government would be crazy to make the banks pay the fee. We are trying to make that same point. He said that if we want to pass the user-fee on to the borrower we should examine that possibility. He said that taking the 1 per cent user-fee reduces the bank return to prime and, therefore, they will not make the loans. If the Government wants to recapture its fee and put it on the level of the borrower, as Mr. Bulloch seems to be suggesting, it should look at that option. However, do not introduce an instrument into the Bill which will make it more difficult for a small business person to get a loan. The loan is the important thing. If the banks cannot get a return they will not provide the capital. They would prefer to make convertible loans or provide for a take-over or acquisition under the new Investment Canada Bill, or make some equally questionable use of the money.

It is the actual prescription of the Bill which is at fault. That is where the change should be made. That is why it is important to continue this debate. If Members on both sides of the House can be convinced of this by the time we get to committee, there may be a willingness to make that change.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, for the life of me I cannot understand why the Liberal Party is sticking up for the banks rather than for small businessmen. If the banks were doing their job a Bill such as this would not be necessary. They would be lending the money to worth-while small businesses. In this Bill we are telling the banks that we will pick up 90 per cent of the losses and that they can have all the profit and pay nothing. I do not think the banks are such poor corporate citizens that they will not make loans. It is in their interest to make loans. They will make the profit, not the Government. The Government will take up 90 per cent of the loss. The Government is the people. Surely a bank will not refuse to lend money for a sound investment because it will have to pay a 1 per cent fee. If banks are that bad, we should change the Bank Act. Part of the business of banks is to provide capital for business. This Act is a supplement. Surely they can pay 1 per cent on the loans when they are making prime plus 1 per cent.

I do not think the Hon. Member will get much support from businessmen in small towns by making such statements as he has here. You will find that the banks will be anxious to lend money. If I was in the business and could make 12.1 per cent, I would gladly pay a fee of 1 per cent. That would be wonderful. I might as well go into that kind of business. I disagree entirely.

The only parliamentary response that I cam make to the Hon. Member's suggestion that the Government is betraying the small businessman is to say, baloney. Small businessmen elected 211 Members on this side because they lost faith in what the Liberals were doing. They have confidence in the Government. We are building a climate in which they can invest their money and make a dollar. I will stand anywhere and support this Bill. The people are supporting it too. If the Liberal Party is trying to build up from the grass roots, it had better get some policies that appeal to the common people rather than only to the bankers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, we have just now seen another prime example of Tory delusion. They love to use these words of rhetoric. They love to say that they believe in all these fine upstanding things. However, we are talking about action. I suggest that the Hon. Member for Bow River read his own legislation. He should look at what the Government has proposed. He says that it is what the people want. I would suggest that he go back to his office and read the report of statements by the Canadian Federation of Small Business. It is opposed to that position in the Bill. John Bulloch, the President of the Federation, says that the banks, which have a number of competing demands upon their capital, need an incentive because small business does not offer the same degree of security.

The Hon. Member was obviously not paying much attention to my speech, although he should have been. I said that if the Government wants to be bold, it should introduce major programs to deregulate the financial system. It should give a lot more opportunity and flexibility because the chartered banks do have too much power. I have been arguing that for two years. I was the person who deregulated the airlines, which brought a lot more competition to that industry. I believe in that.

Do not tell me that this Bill will somehow help the small business community. It simply means that it will not have the necessary capital. If you are simply waiting for a major reform of the banking system, that is fine, but do not put a handicap in the way of small business in the meantime. That is exactly what the Government is doing. I suggest that before speaking, Hon. Members should read their own legislation.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of this Bill because, although it is not perfect, I think it is better to pass it and get on to other legislation. The objections which I have heard do not carry much weight in light of recent years. I will explain that point further. I would like to make a couple of other points first.

I take it that this Bill is being slightly updated to take inflation into account. The total insurable amount is being raised by $300 million, which I hope will make it more widely used. It probably just keeps up with inflation. The maximum size of a business to be considered a small business is raised from $1.5 million to $2 million. That again is to keep up with inflation. It is a necessary housekeeping amendment.

The extension of the length of loans to five years will give some people a better opportunity to plan than when decisions must be made in a one-year period. The issue of the user-fee and the 90 per cent insurance by the Government with 10 per cent left to the banks has caused a great deal of heat on the part of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), who got so heated up he just evaporated. I can understand his heat because the Government which he represented in past years followed a different policy. Its policy was to give as much as possible to the banks. The banks would then say that they would treat the public well with that money because they are so kind. That did not work. The banks have been shipping their money out of the country by the billions of dollars. They have been taking the largesse given to them by the previous Liberal Governments through the tax system and sending it anywhere but Canada. This money has been used by them to finance companies like Cadillac-Fairview and Trisac that are now shipping their fortunes to the United States.

The legislation which has provided the banks with 100 per cent insurance and a free agency at the expense of the Government has not helped small business or job creation in Canada. All the benefits have gone to the banks themselves, and small businesses in Spadina have complained that this legislation has not allowed them to get loans from the banks.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry suggests that small businessmen will not be able to get loans from the banks if these changes are made. I suggest that there is no difference because it is only people who have changed sides of the House. The banks' performance will likely be no worse under this legislation than it was under the previous legislation. It will be interesting to see the results because I believe the user-fee is worth trying as an experiment. I suggest it is proper to call it a user-fee by the banks rather than by small business people. It is irrelevant whether the banks will pass it on to the borrower since they have already been doing so with the blessing of both this Government and the previous Government by jacking the rates up as high as the market would bear with absolutely no relation to cost.

The banks do not provide loans on the basis of cost; they do so on the basis of how much the market can bear. Therefore, I suggest that this legislation will not make any difference to the prime rate of interest, which it does not affect at all, or to the availability of loans. While it is suggested that it may increase the loans, the amount of money insurable for loans may increase but it remains to be seen if that will increase the amount of loans that the banks make. The banks' record in this respect has been very poor in the past.

The small business sector makes up a substantial part of our economy and provides over 40 per cent of all business employment. It provides a quarter of the Gross National Product and is almost 100 per cent Canadian-owned. It deserves more attention from the banks than it gets, and the fact is that the banks cause the most problems for small business.

Those businessmen to whom I talk in Spadina tell me that high interest rates and the difficulty of getting a loan when they need it, even with high interest rates, are their main problems. The banks cannot be bothered with processing a loan to small businesses; they prefer to lend to the big corporations. That has not made Canada stronger.

Let me give an example. Approximately six years ago, MacMillan Bloedel took over a section of the Continental Can corrugated box operation where I used to work. It shut down the plant where I had worked for 18 years. Some workers had put 10, 20 and 30 years of their lives into that plant and now they are still walking the streets looking for work. That takeover by MacMillan Bloedel did not create jobs, it destroyed jobs. Eventually MacMillan Bloedel had its own financial crisis and was itself taken over. In other words, this is an example of how the bloating of companies as a result of loans from the big banks is not healthy for Canada. The banking money would be far better directed to the small business community.

Why have past Governments favoured the banks in the tax system and disfavoured the manufacturers where many of the small businesses are to be found? It appears to me that the present Government will follow the same policy. Why must manufacturers pay more than a third of their profits in tax while the banks generally pay less than a quarter of their profits in tax? This is essentially making the small and big manufacturers subsidize the banks.

In fact, in 1982, a couple of banks made $200 million or $300 million each in profits but paid no tax as a result of the generous taxing arrangements of the Government. Not only did they pay no tax, they received $20 million or $30 million in tax rebates.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member indicated at the beginning of his speech that he supported the passage of this Bill at second reading today. Would he consider sitting down, with no one else rising, so that this can happen?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of this Bill being passed so that we can move to other legislation. I will not raise objections to the Bill, but there are others who wish to speak on it after today. I do not intend to support a move to terminate debate on the Bill today. I do intend to make some points that must be made because it is not perfect.

Mr. Dick: Let's do it in committee.

Mr. Heap: The point I am making is that the situation is like that of the Irishman who does not like to be kicked with his own boot. The manufacturers in my riding, particularly in the garment and printing industries, do not like their taxes being given to the banks from which they must borrow it back at extortionist rates of interest. The Bill fails to address that issue or even to provide that a certain proportion of the banks' profits be made available by law to small business. Therefore, it is a defective Bill.

Mr. Shields: Let us get it into committee.

Mr. Heap: Rather than delay it by objecting at this point, I simply want to put certain points on the record. I realize that Members opposite do not want to hear any objections because they favour the banks. However, I believe certain points must be made. The interest payments as a proportion of our economy have been growing like a cancer. During one 16-year period, interest rates grew from 6 per cent to 15 per cent of the Gross National Product. The previous Government refused to consider that problem, but it is one which the present Government should take seriously.

I support the passage of this Bill but I ask that the Government consider some of the effects which I have pointed out. I hope that it will be wiling to consider some amendments similar to what I have suggested when the Bill goes to committee.

Mr. Shields: We will.

Mr. Heap: I am glad there is some willingness to reconsider this Bill with regard to its defects. I hope Hon. Members intend to allow a full debate on the Bill during second reading, which is the only time when most Members can contribute on general questions of principle.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to Order No. 27?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ADVISABILITY OF PROMOTING INDIAN SELF-GOVERNMENT

The House resumed, from January 22, 1985, consideration of the motion of Mr. Penner:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of promoting Indian self-government by:

1. Announcing support for an affirmative policy of constitutional recognition of aboriginal self-government;

2. Pursuing actively, a bilateral process of discussion with representatives of first nations on such issues as self-government, natives claims and the elimination of the extinguishment policy; and

3. Introducing legislation to recognize first nations self-government which should be developed by means of a joint process and utilization of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak on the issue of Indian self-government. As the House will recall, on December 4 the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) moved this motion in the House. It was discussed again on January 22, and it is a pleasure to continue the discussion today.

I should like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior for the dedication which he has shown in pursuit of the interests of the Indians of the country. Over the years I, too, have had the opportunity of working with native people on issues relating to their economic and social development, both in Alberta and in the Northwest Territories. This has provided me with an opportunity to understand their concerns and aspirations.

I now have the honour to represent the people of the Squamish Indian band in my riding of Capilano. Over the past months I have had the opportunity on a number of occasions to have discussions with their representatives on issues relating to economic development and Indian self-government as they would apply to that band. I am pleased to advise the House, as it may well know, that the Squamish Indian band is perhaps a model for Indian self-government. The people of that band have shown their ability and commitment to provide for economic betterment and to play an active role in national native politics. They are able to take control and encourage their members to attain economic self-sufficiency while retaining their cultural values and sense of identity.

Obviously things are not perfect and there is much to be done. However that band, like many other bands in the country, deserves increased recognition and responsibilities for its land and its future. I look forward over the coming months and years to discussions about the best way this can be accomplished, understanding that there is differentiation among native bands across the country and each may need to work toward self-government at a different rate and in a different way.

I should like to spend a few minutes today providing some of the context for Indian self-government and to talk a bit about some of the economic issues. Indian self-government, as I understand it, was intended, first, to correct historic wrongs perpetrated by past Governments against the aboriginal peoples of this land. Second, it was intended to help establish a new economic basis from which Indian people could develop in the future. The historical view of this land held by aboriginal peoples is that prior to European exploration and colonization Canada was inhabited by many different indigeneous peoples, organized into political entities and groupings based on common language, culture and history. The Royal Proclamation of 1763 confirmed this view with its reference to "the several nations or tribes of Indians with whom we are connected".

Over the years, however, differing views of history developed. Indian people saw treaties as reaffirmations of their sovereignty and rights or as agreements to allow settlement in certain areas. Non-Indians regarded treaties as an extinguishment of rights, as an acceptance of the supremacy of the Crown or as a gift of land so that Indians might have land of their own. In more recent years there has been a wider acceptance of the aboriginal acceptance of history. Partly it was as a result of court decisions such as that of the Supreme Court of Canada in Calder v. The Attorney General of British Columbia. This 1973 case involved a title claim by the Nishga to an area in northwestern British Columbia. A more recent decision, again in British Columbia, of the Supreme Court in Guerin v. The Queen pointed out the fiduciary duty of the Crown to Indian bands.

Our view of history has also changed as a result of the articulate arguments of aboriginal people on their position at many constitutional meetings and other forums over the last few years, and also as a result of the all-Party Special Committee on Indian Self-government, led by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior, which in its hearings and in its report set out the reasoning for the aboriginal position.

I think the views of Canadians on aboriginal issues are changing for other reasons as well. Past efforts, explicit or implicit, have failed to bring about assimilation. Native groups have continued traditional practices and take pride in their culture. I think we as Canadians now recognize that and are ready to show our full appreciation of it. Also it is very evident that the past approaches to economic development for our native people have failed quite miserably.

I should like to provide some background information on that. For instance, the statistics from 1981 and other recent sources point out the failure of past economic approaches. The educational levels of native peoples are much lower than those non-native. Fifteen per cent of the native population over 15 years of age have less than grade five education, compared with 5 per cent of the rest of the population. Fortunately there are signs of hope in this area. Only 3 per cent of young natives aged 15 to 29 have not gone past grade five, compared with 57 per cent of natives 65 years and older. Changes are taking place. Again I can point to the band in my own riding where there is an increased emphasis upon education and an increased awareness among the parents of the importance of education for young people. There is also a desire that they have some role in that educational process and that part of that process include consideration of their culture and their values.

The incomes of status Indians on reserves are just over half or 54 per cent of those of the non-native population. In 1980 the average income of natives on reserves was $7,100, compared with $13,100 for the non-native population. Incomes for native people as a whole are little better. They are two-thirds of the non-native average.

The employment rates of natives, particularly for those living on reserves, are much lower than for the rest of Canadians. In 1981, half the adult native population was in the labour force, compared with two-thirds of non-natives. For those on reserves, only 42 per cent of the men and 22 per cent of the women were employed.

We all know the circumstance with respect to housing. The housing of native people is often poor. I recall that being the case in some of the areas of Alberta where I worked and in Ontario as well. The 1981 census found that the proportion of homes needing major repair on Indian reserves was nearly one in four compared with one in fifteen for non-native homes. Half the homes on reserves lacked central heating, compared with 9 per cent of non-native homes. Bathrooms were lacking in 30 per cent of on-reserve housing, but in less than 1 per cent of non-native homes. One in three homes on reserves was crowded, compared with one in 43 non-native homes.

When we reflect upon those figures we see some of the difficult social conditions under which many native people on reserves live. They are conducive to some of the problems they experience. Changes in the economic prospects of aboriginal people will not come about easily. They will not come about as mere hand-outs by federal or provincial Governments. They will not come about overnight, but I am pleased to say that steps are being taken now by the Government.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) has announced that he is exploring a means of introducing new funding arrangements for Indian bands and tribal councils. Such funding arrangements would enable the bands and councils to decide how best to meet their people's needs, to set their own priorities and to make their own policies within the limitations of current legislation. Thus it is hoped that changes in line with self-government can be implemented soon.

• (1610)

The need for other changes is fully recognized. We need to fund an improved community infrastructure, we need to end the duplication of programs on reserves which result in wasted dollars, and we need to examine the introduction of a system of direct transfer payments. This is now being examined.

As has been said before, we must find a way, in these times of restraint and fiscal responsibility, to provide a level of funding sufficient so that First Nation Governments can provide levels of service on a par with others in Canada, which will allow them to become healthy and productive communities. This can be done only when funds can be expended in accord with their own values and under their own control.

We know the priorities of this Government. The economic revitalization of this country is a major goal of this Government. We have heard what has gone on in Regina over the last two days and how we are looking toward a new harmonization of federal and provincial goals. This revitalization is clearly needed for our aboriginal people as well as for our other citizens. For this reason, the Speech from the Throne which opened this Parliament called on native peoples to be part of the process of building a national economic consensus.

Plans are well under way for the participation of native peoples in the national economic conference scheduled for March 1985. Of course, the next First Ministers' conference on aboriginal constitutional matters will take place in April, 1985.

There is much that will be happening in the future to further our concerns and initiative toward Indian self-government. Hon. Members may be assured that our Government is looking for new approaches to replace the policies which have failed in the past. We are talking to native people and we are seeking their views. We believe that in this spirit of reconciliation, the spirit of harmonization, we will be able to do better. The native people of this country can look forward to a better economic future, a future which takes fully into account their own aspirations.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us is to study very thoroughly the question of Indian self-government. It tends to set out general approval for such a move. I was quite moved by the speech we just heard by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) concerning the Government's intention to reconcile the Canadian people and the various competing interests. She spoke very warmly of the harmonizing of this new approach that is being adopted by this new Government. Given the good feelings and indication from the government Member, now would be a very suitable time for us to send this particular motion to the Standing Committee on Indians Affairs to be acted upon. I will not hold up the House any further. I simply hope that we will pass this on to the appropriate committee at this time.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, as usual it is a pleasure to speak to the House on a Friday afternoon. People have completed their week's work and they are especially attentive to the thoughts that are expressed here. The topic today is one of interest to Members of the House, perhaps of more interest to us who have had the privilege of serving on the joint committee which examined the Canadian Constitution. There are many reasons for those of us who had that privilege why that experience will last in our memories for a long time. The work was important. It proceeded at a fairly rapid pace with a lot of long days and long hours.

Canadians probably remember the work of that committee in a way that is different from the work of all other House of Commons committees because the proceedings were televised. That is the only opportunity Canadians have ever had to watch a joint committee, House committee or Senate committee in action. Many of my constituents told me over the years that they would like to see that experience repeated because they found it educational. They learned a great deal. I spoke to many constituents who used to spend their weekends watching the reruns. Of the literally hundreds of witnesses and hundreds of briefs that we received, it was the native people who perhaps had the greatest impact on the Canadian psyche, both because of the quality of their presentations and, to some extent, the frequency of their presentations.

Those short three or four months back in 1980 and early 1981 accomplished a great deal in raising the awareness level of the average Canadian about native people in this country, what their strengths are and could be and what are some of the difficulties that they face. Those were the early days of the serious lobbying done on behalf of the Indian people for a concept that they referred to at that time as Indian self-government.

As a member of the committee, I shared something with the other members of that committee in that we had a great deal of difficulty in understanding what that meant and what the repercussions would be for the Indian people and for the nation as a whole. It speaks to the level of understanding that developed in the committee members that that difficulty which existed for the committee members at the beginning has remained at the end. It was truly a reflection of the difficulty that Indian people were having themselves in understanding what the words meant and what the repercussions would be for them personally and for their place in Canadian society.

I stand here today in the early part of 1985 with the knowledge that the concept has been refined, developed and probably is becoming clearer to a great many Canadians, including the Indian people themselves. I also know that the definition is not complete. It is not a fully defined concept. It is not one that would have instant universal recognition and agreement as to its meaning.

When I look at the motion which we are debating today I find there is a kind of intuitive positive reaction toward its wisdom and the fact that it is probably a good idea. That is the initial reaction. Then we must stand back from it and think it through a second time. We must wonder whether or not it really deals with the right set of words and with the right process. For instance, is a parliamentary standing committee the best body before which such a complex concept may be examined?

• (1620)

Changes in society that are of fundamental importance, and I think constitutional revision is always the kind of change that is of fundamental importance, should never be entered into lightly and should probably not be entered into quickly. Once something is placed in a constitution, then it is difficult to change, so it may be that the quicker it is done, the less likely we are to spot most if not all of the unintended consequences. I think it behooves us as elected Members to be very careful about movements we make in that regard. Any piece of legislation is serious and has repercussions. We should always be careful, but when we move into the constitutional area, we must be especially careful.

In early 1981, the constitutional committee reported back to Parliament. In its report to Parliament, it recommended major changes to the Canadian Constitution as it affected aboriginal peoples. Standing here today, I realize that there has not been sufficient time for all of those changes to work their magic, good or bad, on the situation. In other words, I do not think that Members of Parliament, the Canadian people or the Indian people really understand the long-range implications of that change in the constitutional position.

At the heart of this motion lies an effort to enshrine one more principle in the Canadian Constitution, the principle of Indian self-government. The motion leads us toward that. Yet nowhere do I see a very thorough analysis of what that right might do to the rights which were enshrined when we recently made those constitutional changes. We enshrined the concept of aboriginal rights.

Perhaps I could read into the record those parts of the Act affecting Indian people which came into effect when the Constitution Act was proclaimed in 1982. In section 25, we see that the following was the will of that Parliament and those bodies which signed that Constitution:

> The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including
> (a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and
> (b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

Section 35 goes on to say:

> (1) The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.
> (2) In this Act, "aboriginal peoples of Canada" includes the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.

We went further by requiring that a constitutional conference be held within one year. It was the wisdom of Parliament, acting on the advice of a special joint committee which had laboured long and hard and sometimes under very difficult circumstances, to arrive at sets of words and principles that would lock in place something that the aboriginal people indicated to us was important to them and that they wanted. It also set in place a process.

I would like to take a moment or two to examine the process that was set in place. The conference that was required was held in March 1983. It was a First Ministers' conference attended by the two levels of Government that are recognized in the Canadian Constitution, namely, the federal and the provincial. The subject matter was the rights of aboriginal peoples, and they were represented at the table. The federal Government, the provincial Governments and the aboriginal peoples reached some accord and, perhaps more significantly, one of the items on which they agreed was to have a minimum of two further constitutional meetings before April 1987 for the purposes of identifying and defining the rights of aboriginal peoples.

In March 1984, the first of those conferences was held. It was another First Ministers' conference on the rights of aboriginal peoples, and no agreement was reached at that conference last March. The conference dealt with four items: equality rights; aboriginal title and aboriginal rights treaties and treaty rights; land and resources; and aboriginal self-government.

The Hon. Member who moved the motion that is before us today asked us to pursue actively a bilateral process. I suppose those words really twigged me. Because of our desire in the early part of the 1980s to change the Constitution and to enhance the position of aboriginal people in our society, we said that some things were possible and other things must come about through proper process. We decided on the proper process at that time and it involved the federal Government, the provincial Governments and the aboriginal peoples. It was a tripartite process. That tripartite process in the early part of 1985 has not produced the kind of final results that we as members of that committee envisioned back in 1981-82. I do not think I can go the second step and conclude that it will not produce those results. In fact, I believe that it is the most likely kind of process to produce the kind of results that we will be able to support, believe in and make happen in a consensus fashion.

I see this matter as being analogous to so many things that we have in our society. When all of the bodies that are truly and significantly affected by an issue are given the time, the proper atmosphere and the meeting space, though the process is a little sloppy and a little long, it does tend to produce decisions that have a great many more positive aspects than negative ones. It tends to produce the kinds of decisions that do not have unintended side-effects which we do not value and cannot support.

It is the notion of process with which I most violently disagree in the approach which was recommended to us by the Hon. Member who moved this motion. After the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) has travelled the country and met with aboriginal groups and when he goes to the conference table and represents the federal perspective, I think that by the time of the next conference there will be a better understanding. If the Government continues in a wide range of activities to act the way that it has, with the sense that this is a Confederation and that the consultation process is important and fundamental, then at the next conference on the issue which is of concern to us today there may be a change in attitude on the part of some of the provinces. That process may produce the kind of understanding which lies at the heart of positive and solid solutions.

For that reason I would urge Members not to be premature in starting a side process which would detract from the process which our best wisdom told us some time ago was the kind of process required to resolve the situation and advance the cause of aboriginal people. That is the goal. We want to improve the situation for aboriginal people in Canada. Most of us in the Chamber believe that the concept of self-government is at the heart of the solution. We might not all agree on exactly what that means, but we know that it is important for the people in local communities to have control over many aspects of their lives. When the provinces created municipalities, cities and so on, they gave democratic powers to people to elect representatives who would make the by-laws, to have their own police force, et cetera. The belief is that the people of the community know best how to run their community.

For decades aboriginal peoples have been denied that right. They were denied the right to vote for far too long. We are progressing to the point where it is essential to negotiate the concept of Indian self-government. I will tell Members that in those negotiations aboriginal people must be at the table, the federal Government must be at the table and the provinces must be at the table. If we are to change government and governmental arrangements in the country, all parties which are affected must be at the table. Then and only then will we obtain the correct solution, the most desirable solution and the solution which will endure and enable aboriginal people to prosper.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to address this particular issue. As this is the first time I have addressed this House, I would like to begin by telling you a bit about myself.

I was born and grew up in Manitoba, which all Members know is the heart of this continent. My father was an immigrant who came to Canada in 1928 and established a farm. We are very proud of our achievements as farmers in Manitoba. My father achieved success at farming through hard work. It has always been the philosophy of our family that if one wants to succeed, one needs dedication and hard work. I suppose that is how I got here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Holtmann: My interest in this subject stems from the fact that I was always involved in agriculture and that I developed a business at one time which exported Canadian agricultural products around the world, particularly purebred hogs and cattle. I entered the field of exporting products to Mexico, which also has many natives who have problems. Mexico does not have a welfare system, or very many social assistance programs, but it has a good number of people who are at a poverty level far lower than what is known to people in Canada. However, Mexico managed to devise some programs which were absolutely fundamental in improving the standard of living for some tribes of Indians who live in the remote regions. They sat and collectively put together economic units with the help of the Government so that food and shelter would be provided. I was amazed at how effective that process was.

Over the course of the years, the Canadian Government has tried, but in many instances failed, to achieve the things it wanted because it did not consult with the Indians of Canada. In the last few months I visited all the communities in my riding, as well as many others, with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie). All too often people told us that it was always the Canadian Government people who told them what they were going to get but they had never been consulted. I guess that has been the case over the last 100, 200 or 300 years. Not being there when it first began, I think the time has come when we have to sit, listen and discuss these issues with these people. They are just as important a part of our community and our country as any one of us. We should never forget that.

I think the meaning of the words self-determination and self-government have become very confusing to many people in this country. Many, many people will ask if this means we are going to give the Indians their own country. Are we going to have borders and they will have their own passports? People really do not understand what we are trying to achieve or what the natives of this country would like. I think it is up to us as Canadians to show them that what we are trying to do with the Indian reserves is to give them the same things we have in our municipalities. They should have the right, in a democratic way, to decide where they would like to put a ditch or new roads or what kind of development they want. Those things which we take for granted every day are the things that have been denied many of these individuals.

It is not a perfect world, Mr. Speaker. As these people come to my office, as I am sure they do to your office, to talk about their concerns, they tell us that the welfare system is hurting their people. I am often amazed that when these individuals come in they say "my people". Do you ever go home and say about your community, "these are my people"? I am sure the only people you say are your people are the ones in your own house, and beyond that you do not care. But when they come to my office, they describe their community as "my people". I think that is absolutely wonderful.

Mr. Manly: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that the Hon. Member would not want to insinuate that other Hon. Members do not care for their constituents. We often refer to them as "my people", and I am sure he would agree with that point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what problems the Hon. Member has, but I would like to continue if I may.

I would like to advise all Members of this House that if they do have Indians and natives in their area, they should invite them over to their offices and visit their reserves. There is a message out there for them. We have to work together to bring the needs of this group of people to a satisfactory conclusion so that they have the honour and respect they deserve.

Over the years, Mr. Speaker, we have instigated different ways to help through legislation. Yet when you talk to the particular bands, you find that all too often they are totally frustrated with the system. They have no way of finding out things which will benefit them without having to engage consulting firms. Representatives of one individual band came to me just to build a basic elementary school or upgrade the one they had. They had to come to Ottawa at least six times over the course of a year and go to the regional office in Winnipeg about 20 times and almost beg on their knees to get some funding for a school, which we back home take for granted. I want everybody to think about that. If you had to do that in your community, I am sure you would take up arms, and I would not blame you. But we expect them to work under that system. The bureaucratic system we have developed for those bands to achieve some economy is the most frustrating thing they have to deal with every day of their lives. That is what we have to change. We have to bring about some real stability in this particular area which I think has been lacking for too long.

Consider the fact that many Indian bands have 90 per cent unemployment, Mr. Speaker. Put the other way, only 10 per cent have jobs. Realistically there may not always be an opportunity for those bands to obtain an economic base which would allow them to achieve 100 per cent employment. We cannot put a parts factory or a lumber yard in an area where natural resources do not exist. Their past livelihood revolving around hunting or trapping is no longer available because the animals no longer exist. There is no realistic form of economic growth we could even dream up. Those are the realities. How we are to help them achieve an economic base is going to take the collective wisdom of everyone in this House.

I have taken my job very seriously in this area, Mr. Speaker. I have taken seriously the approach that was set out by our Hon. Minister, who has worked at least 14 to 16 hours every day to try to seek their guidance and consultation in trying to find a solution to some of these very serious problems. I believe the Minister's desire to make some significant changes during the mandate of this particular administration, and the one I will be a part of next time, is very honourable and the most dynamic piece of legislation to deal with the reserves which has ever come to Parliament. It is together with my friends in both Parties in opposition that we will work diligently to achieve this type of legislation. The most important point I would like to make is that we should consult with the individuals and their leaders from coast to coast so that their input is used to bring about policies which will help them in the future.

I do not know how much time I have left but I would like to indicate that the whole economy of Canada is a vital element in our attempts to carry out the many programs we would like to carry out in this Government. By getting our economy going we can obtain the funds we need to help these special interest groups. I do not see how we can continue to run a deficit, because the people we help will end up having to live with the deficit and find ways and means of paying it back. That is the situation we are in. Our desire is to bring Canada into the 21st century, to make it a dynamic and exciting place to live. But over the last four months I have sat here and listened to nothing but criticism from the opposition Parties. They never demonstrated a single way to stimulate the economy. The only way they want to stimulate the economy is to reach into someone else's pocket in some other country, bring some money in and keep it rolling at least temporarily.

Mr. Heap: That is what Mulroney wants to do.

Mr. Keeper: What about low interest rates?

Mr. Holtmann: There they are, Mr. Speaker. They did not notice when interest rates came down from 22 per cent to 13 per cent. Not one of them was excited about that. But it went up one half of a per cent and they are all crying and gyrating around the House.

• (1650)

Not too long ago I heard some of my hon. colleagues in the New Democratic Party saying that their policy is to use Canadian funds which are invested in banks to develop the country. Every six months the Premier of Manitoba would whip over to Japan and pull in $70 million. Then he would whip back over to Switzerland and haul some more in. However, that is not their policy. It just did not make sense. On the one hand they believed in one thing and on the other hand they believed in another. They do not know what they believe in but they will criticize anything we do. Let us get together on a policy like the one we were discussing before to get the economy going. I was surprised to see that they supported it.

Those are my real concerns in this regard. This particular resolution was not even necessary because the things indicated in it are happening. We have a Minister who is determined to make the necessary changes. He is on the right track. He has the consultation attitude which we never had in the 22 years of Liberal rule. This Government gives everyone an opportunity to discuss. I suppose that is a wonderment to the NDP, which also sat in opposition in the Liberal administration. The NDP must notice the difference with our open attitude.

I have enjoyed speaking in the House for the first time, Mr. Speaker. I have got the shakes out of my feet now so you will see me rising to speak more often. I look forward to debating many subjects in the coming months.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, that is a tough act to follow. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate my colleague on his maiden speech in the House. It was delivered with eloquence and compassion on a subject which is obviously important to him and to his constituents. I recall his telling me a week ago about his trip to the North with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) visiting Indian bands. I represent an urban riding in the City of Ottawa where there are no Indian bands and relatively few native people. In fact, the 100 or 200 who are there are probably employees of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Despite that, I am glad to have an opportunity to take part in this debate on an important national issue.

The Hon. Member's motion says that the Government should consider the advisability of promoting Indian self-government. As the previous speaker made clear, that is one of the prime concerns of the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and of the Government.

An all-Party special committee of the House, chaired by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), examined the issue of Indian self-government some time ago. This committee was unique in that it included an ex-officio member from the Assembly of First Nations and two liaison members from other native organizations. The special committee played a very important role. It clearly articulated the concerns, needs and desires of Indian people for self-government. It raised the awareness of Candians about Indian seelf-government.

The committee travelled widely in Canada as well as in the United States. It heard the views and experiences of many groups and individuals. The special committee's report was tabled on November 3, 1983, less than a year after the creation of the committee. It contained 58 recommendations concerning Indian self-government on a broad range of matters, some of which I will mention.

First, the principle of the constitutional entrenchment of self-government by which the federal Government would seek to establish a new relationship with Indian First Nations and confirm that relationship by means of a constitutional amendment.

Second, legislation as an interim measure to provide for recognition of Indian First Nations as well as to accommodate the full range of governmental arrangements sought by Indian First Nations.

Third, membership for Indian Governments and the process by which this would be determined.

Fourth, the federal responsibility for those people eligible for Indian programs but who are not members of Indian Governments, as well as responsibility to respect the rights and aspirations of all Indian people.

Fifth, the process for recognition of Indian First Nation Governments.

Sixth, the scope of powers for Indian Government, including legislative and policy making powers, control over territory and resources within Indian lands, with the exact scope of jurisdiction to be negotiated by individual Indian First Nations.

Economic foundations for Indian self-government were also included in the recommendations, including adequate land and resource base, settlement of claims and funding. Another recommendation was fiscal arrangements to support Indian First Nation Governments. Also included were lands and resources for Indian Governments, the extent of control, and the various means to achieve full control of Indian lands and resources. Another recommendation was the resolution of claims, including the principle for a new claims process. A further recommendation was the trust relationship between the federal Government and Indian First Nations and the need for it to be renewed and enhanced through constitutional amendment, legislation, and other means. One final recommendation that I will mention was the idea of trust accounts for Indian First Nations and the means by which they should be transferred from departmental authority. There were many other recommendations but those were the most important, Mr. Speaker.

A response to that special committee report was tabled on March 15, 1984. It responded only in a very general way to the recommendations. Moreover, the general framework legislation on self-government for Indian nations, which was proposed in the response and which was introduced in the final days of the previous Parliament, left many issues still not resolved to the satisfaction of Indian peoples.

Key issues surrounding the process of recognition or the type of powers for Indian Governments were not simply or directly handled. The economic foundation and lands and resources relating to self-government were not addressed comprehensively but were left for future work.

This piece of legislation has been harshly criticized by members of the previous Government who called it "an inadequate flawed Bill . . . totally unacceptable". There are many issues on self-government which need to be considered, Mr. Speaker, which were not fully dealt with in the previous response to the report of the special committee. These issues were not fully dealt with in this proposed legislation. It now rests with the Government and this Parliament to consider these issues more fully.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, February 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bissonnette that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to contribute to this debate regarding the Small Businesses Loans Act. I want to indicate the negative impact that this Bill will have as it relates to high unemployment areas in Canada.

In order to facilitate loans to businesses, whether it be a Government program or strictly a bank program, one must realize that various areas of Canada have different needs. When considering the Federal Business Development Bank or the Small Businesses Loans Act, one must realize that there are certain areas of Canada that need that legislation in place in order for them to deal with the banks or with the federal bank itself. While it may be feasible to discontinue the operation of the Federal Business Development Bank in certain parts of Canada—there appears to be an opinion in the Chamber that the bank may have outlived its usefulness in certain parts of this country—I can assure the House that that is not the case in the high unemployment areas of this country. Due to the attitude prevalent among the banks and private lending institutions in those areas, it is very difficult for a businessman to obtain loans at various times for various businesses.

The same is true of the Small Businesses Loans Act. I believe it is a step backward for the House to pass legislation that imposes restrictions on the granting of those loans and the cost of those loans to a small businessman. I refer specifically to the provisions of this Bill which will impose a fee on the bank to pay the federal Government for issuing the loan.

The representations made to the standing committee by both associations that represent small business in this country have suggested that that mechanism be transferred to the lender. I believe this suggestion goes back to associations that look at business on a national scale, that average it out across the country, whether or not the area is rich or poor, whether or not business opportunities exist, and more importantly, what the attitude of the lending institutions is in that particular area of the country.

According to this Bill, the Government will no longer allow a 100 per cent guarantee on the loan issued by the bank. Instead, there will be a retraction to 90 per cent of the total value of the loan. Again, this presents a flaw for the business community in eastern Canada, specifically in Atlantic Canada.

We should remember that when a businessman obtains a loan under the Small Businesses Loans Act or from the Federal Business Development Bank, it is only for a portion of the total amount needed for that business. I am not aware of any loan program that is guaranteed 90 per cent, 100 per cent or even 75 per cent by any Government agency in this country. In other words, even under the Small Businesses Loans Act the businessman must contribute a portion of the total cost depending on the type of business he is expanding or setting up. It can vary from 10 per cent to 20 per cent according to the Small Businesses Loans Act.

The small businessman has an investment that he must protect. It is not, as the two organizations representing small business in this country have improperly stated, a give-away to the businessman at all because he is taking the risk and if he does not pay up he will lose his investment and perhaps his entire life savings to that business expansion or creation. We should remember that when dealing with this legislation.

The two main aspects of this Bill include the fee which is imposed on the bank in order to utilize the Small Businesses Loans Act and the reduction of the Government guarantee from 100 per cent to 90 per cent. There is a third factor to this Bill that I do not believe has been referred to by parliamentarians so far. It is that the regulations under this Act as they relate to the fee and to the very mechanism of the Small Businesses Loans Act can now be changed by the Minister through Order in Council, through regulations. That should be a primary consideration for Members of the House when this Bill goes to committee in attempting to determine whether or not it is beneficial for the Minister to have ultimate power with respect to future changes to this legislation.

When you look at a Bill such as this one before the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, you tend to think that perhaps the Government is doing something for business in all areas of this country. That brings to mind the fact that there are regions that are different. There are businesses present in certain areas and in certain provinces that are not present in other areas. I give as an example the Atlantic Provinces. Sometimes the presence and encouragement of small business is not paramount in the minds of Governments when they make decisions, and it should be. For instance, I was very pleased recently to see an agreement signed between the federal Government and the Government of Newfoundland regarding offshore resources. I was pleased to see that because it brought to an end years of wrangling, years of political argument—and I say political because it was more politics than anything else. I did not really become involved in this political argument up until now because I did not really believe it would have any great impact on my district on the northeast coast of Newfoundland. I believed it to be more politics than anything else.

When I looked at the Atlantic Accord—and it is interesting that it is called the Atlantic Accord and not the Newfoundland Accord—which was signed by the two Governments, I noticed that the one grave error in the agreement was that it neglected to recognize the importance of business being established in the Province of Newfoundland as a result of the utilization of that natural resource. That is a tragic error, Mr. Speaker. It is an error which I believe in 20 years' time will probably be seen to be the greatest error in Newfoundland's history.

I have a reason for saying that. Section 54 of that Agreement says that that natural resource, offshore oil, will be treated as if the natural resource were on land. But then Section 54 says that that resource must go first to existing industries in eastern Canada that utilize oil. Then it says that in excess of that a new industry will be allowed to be established in the Province of Newfoundland. It goes on to say in the agreement that Newfoundland will receive x number of dollars into the provincial treasury, which is a good thing for the operations of the Newfoundland Government and in providing services to the people of Newfoundland. That is what all the hoopla was about. That is what all the press conferences were about. That is why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), the Premier of Newfoundland and the Government of Newfoundland were so happy.

But hidden in that Accord was that one clause that discriminated against business. It discriminated against business and it discriminated against future small business that could be established in the Province of Newfoundland. I say it is an error because no matter how much money you give to a Government it all boils down to how much money is in circulation with business in that province; because that is what determines the prosperity of that province in jobs. I say that because when I look at the Province of Alberta, the Province of Saskatchewan or the Province of Ontario, one can see how a natural resource then leads to the establishment of small and big business relating to that resource if it is utilized in the proper way. I am referring specifically to the petrochemical industry and to the chemical industries which are primarily offshoots of oil refineries in the country. This is where we see the jobs. This is where we see small businesses and big businesses setting up.

• (1115)

The Minister of Energy says that after eastern Canada is taken care of we will have businesses operating in the Province of Newfoundland and utilizing that offshore resource. Then I read in the statement that there was perhaps a billion barrels of oil in eastern Canada off the coast of Newfoundland. That sounds like a lot. That sounds like businesses could establish in Newfoundland. However, a billion barrels of oil is only a thousand million barrels of oil; that is all it is. When we look at the production in Alberta and at Canadian production, which runs over 300,000 cubic metres per day, and we multiply that by 365 days, and when we look at approximately 1.3 million barrels per day being consumed in the country, we quickly realize that at best, so experts claim, with the one billion barrels of oil we can take care of Canadian needs for about 2.2 years or 2.4 years, no matter how we look at it.

Then if we examine eastern Canadian consumption in the refineries in the petrochemical industry in the Province of Quebec—and I am thinking about Petromont which is in the area represented by the Hon. Speaker who is in the chair today—somehow we believe that under this agreement we were more concerned as a national Government about the future of Petromont than we were about the establishment of new business in Newfoundland.

There is a reason for saying this. I should like to deal with capacity in eastern Canada because that is the only thing to which Hon. Members can relate as far as refineries are concerned. When we look at the capacity, it works out to about a third of the total capacity for all Canada.

Mr. Dick: Small Businesses Loans Act!

Mr. Baker: I hear the Hon. Member. I am developing an argument here that the Government should pay more attention to the establishment of business than to its own coffers and the collection of money from the Small Businesses Loans Act.

When we look at the total consumption, a third of Canadian production, we see that Hibernia will last for about six years if we use the total consumption. That is not counting the petrochemical industries to which I referred earlier in the Speaker's riding. That is not referring to the 16 petrochemical plants in the Province of Quebec. That is not referring to the refineries which have been moth-balled in Montreal and in Point Tupper, Nova Scotia. At a very conservative estimate, for six to eight years we would just maintain the consumption capacity of refineries in eastern Canada. If we suppose they operated at 50 per cent capacity, then we would be looking at 12 or 14 years to support eastern Canadian oil refineries. As I said, that does not take into account Petromont or the other 16 petrochemical plants in Quebec. It does not take into account their consumption or the consumption of moth-balled refineries in eastern Canada. When we add it all up, it comes to a bad deal.

Perhaps I am the only politician from Newfoundland who would say that it is a bad deal. In fact, in discussing the Small Businesses Loans Act, I would have to say that it is probably the biggest rip-off in the history of Newfoundland. In dealing with the Newfoundland offshore resources, you cannot lay down in the Accord to be passed in legislation in this Chamber and in the Newfoundland legislature that for all time you are not allowed by law to have a business operate in the Province of Newfoundland utilizing the resource from offshore Newfoundland. That is Section 54 of that Agreement, in case the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is listening or is at all interested in what I am talking about.

Section 54 of that Accord has to be changed. If the Government of Canada is really interested in business, that section will be changed. I do not believe it will be though, because the Accord has received general support in the Province of Newfoundland and from the Newfoundland Government. When you look at actions of Government that support and encourage the establishment of a small business, perhaps you should look at the actual impact of large decisions made by this Government concerning agreements reached with provincial governments.

Supposing a law were passed in this Parliament forbidding the Province of Alberta from developing any more oil refineries or petro-chemical industries using its own oil. There would be an outrage; it would not be allowed by the Alberta Members of this Chamber. But that is exactly what has happened in Newfoundland. I notice that you indicate I have only a minute left, Mr. Speaker. I have not yet got around to actually discussing the Bill.

In conclusion, the Bill before us today is a concoction of a national mind that is centred somewhere in a rich province in this country or was judged on the national average of the needs of small businesses. I do not doubt that it is good for certain provinces, but it is not good for the provinces of eastern Canada. The banks will now have to pay a fee to the federal Government when granting a loan. The loan guarantee will be reduced from 100 per cent to 90 per cent of what the bank loans to the businessman, which is not the total value of the loan. The regulations and basic changes to the Small Businesses Loans Act will now be made by the Minister without having to come to this Chamber. I encourage the Government to realize that there are various regions in this country and that the regulations concerning those three points should be changed when the Bill gets to committee.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). The statistics on small business loans show a large increase in use since 1978 with the more appealing interest rate following the change from fixed to prime plus 1 per cent. Can the Hon. Member comment on the proposed change of a 1 per cent user-fee and also the change to the 90 per cent guarantee? Will those proposals have the same good effect that they had in 1978 or will it be the opposite?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, obviously it would have a detrimental effect on those people who are seeking loans from the banks. It will certainly be a hindrance in the area of Canada that I represent.

• (1125)

It has just come to my mind, Mr. Speaker, since I really did not have time to deal with the Bill, that under the Small Businesses Loans Act and other legislation concerning the Federal Business Development Bank it is quite unfortunate that there is really no provision to help a small business over a rough time. A business could be a sound business during the summer months. We can think of many businesses like that. Then along comes the wintertime and perhaps business drops. The businessman gets into trouble, perhaps because of another problem he has, in the month of January or February.

That is where these loan programs fall down. For businessmen looking for operating capital, there is no legislation on the books to really help them in that kind of a tight situation. That is indeed unfortunate when one considers that this man has put his life savings into this business as the 20 per cent investment he must make according to the Act.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question for the Hon. Member. In his address this morning to the House, and also last week, he has criticized the Accord reached between the Province of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada. He knows more than any of us the difficulties which have occurred in the development of offshore resources in Newfoundland over the years because of the inability of the previous Government of Canada to reach an agreement with the Province of Newfoundland.

In his criticism the Hon. Member keeps harping on one particular clause, being Clause 54. He evidences again the attitude of friction created between Newfoundland and the previous federal Liberal Government. The Hon. Member should consider the need for recognition of the fact that in all of these matters there must be balance. That is to say, we have to balance the national interest with that of the provincial. In this Accord we have seen that balance reached to the satisfaction of both parties.

Therefore I ask the Member whether he, in the interests of the one provision of the Accord which he finds offensive, would destroy the whole agreement reached between the Government of Canada and the Province of Newfoundland? Would he put the province and people of Newfoundland in the position they were in for so many years under the federal Liberal Government of not knowing how or when their resources were going to be developed, at a great loss to the people of Newfoundland in terms of jobs and economic development of all kinds? I would hope he would see the light now that the Accord is in place. I would hope that he would look at it with a positive frame of mind, try to determine how it can be improved, and not reject it because of one provision to which he has some minor objection.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, it is rather interesting to listen to the Member who represents Nova Scotia. I would say he represents Nova Scotia before he represents any other place in this country. He knows full well that that very clause is in the Nova Scotia Agreement. But the difference between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, the difference between New Brunswick and Newfoundland, Quebec and Newfoundland, is that Newfoundland does not have an operative refinery at this moment. Nova Scotia has in Dartmouth and Halifax. The refinery in the general area the Hon. Member represents is undergoing extensive renovations and upgrading and expansion, waiting for the offshore oil from Newfoundland. There is a refinery in Port Tupper which was moth-balled in 1980.

It is fine for that kind of a clause to be in an agreement with Nova Scotia or Quebec or New Brunswick, or any of the other provinces with refineries or petrochemical industries. The Hon. Member even has Esso Canada and a petrochemical industry located in Halifax. But Newfoundland is signing an agreement with nothing in place it can take advantage of. I would like to have two hours to explain why it is an incredible error.

• (1130)

The point is that we do have two refineries. The refinery at Holyrood was dismantled by Ultramar. It was a small operation of 1,900 cubic metres per day. The other refinery, in Come-By-Chance, is owned by Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada wants to dismantle that refinery. Perhaps the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources can save some face by telling Petro-Canada to reopen the refinery in Come-By-Chance. She should tell them to reopen the refinery to get at least some spin-off from offshore oil.

To answer the question of the Hon. Member, the point is that if I were in his boots and represented Nova Scotia I would say that clause was marvellous. He knows that in Halifax, Dartmouth and Point Tupper there is enough capacity to take all the offshore oil in the Province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) on debate.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it is too bad the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) mixed a few rotten apples in the barrel of his otherwise relevant speech as it related to Atlantic Canada. I have certain points in common with him, and we have often found ourselves supporting the same idea. However, during the last ten years the Hon. Member has not spoken with the same strength and conviction, on behalf of Atlantic Canada, which was found in his remarks today and in other remarks which he has recently made. Whether the remarks were related to fishery, small business or the general economy of Atlantic Canada, often ideas which were not productive or helpful to Atlantic Canada slipped through without the negative comments which were made today.

No matter what may be said about the Bill, at least it recognizes that the Act was outdated, and the definition of small business was not relevant to today's needs. Those problems have been addressed. However, there was no recognition of the good points of the Bill by the Hon. Member, nor of the oil agreement in Newfoundland.

Prior to the oil agreement which was made by this Government there was no hope or opportunity for Newfoundland in obtaining any reasonable benefit from the extended 200-mile limit. We must recognize the value of good things and not be totally negative, as the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate was in his remarks. It is not typical of him. However, he might have changed his ideas because he is now sitting on the other side of the House.

Small business in Atlantic Canada is the lifeblood of that economy. No matter where we may be in Canada, in the main we depend upon the natural resources of the area—the fish, the forest and the farm. Small business, as it was and as it is defined, may not have a high enough limit with the $2 million limit in sales. I can think of one company which employs 16 or 18 people and probably has $2 million in sales. How are those sales to be measured? Are the sales to be measured as part of the increased value which is added by the assembly of parts, or are the sales to be estimated by the total sales going through the door of the business, including the prepared components which were assembled into the sales unit? If it is the total components of the sale, then too many small businesses will find themselves in a very disadvantaged position. I sincerely hope that the regulations under this Bill will enable the $2 million to be value-added rather than the total sale of the components which are purchased and resold by small business operations.

I am very disappointed in the attention which the former Government paid to tourism. I hope the small business people of Atlantic Canada will have the benefit of promotion by the Government of Canada to enable them to utilize the present value of the dollar. When the dollar dropped to the 80-cent level, it was seen by most Canadians as deplorable and a reflection of the economic health of the nation. At that time tourism in Canada should have been a competitive and attractive market for foreigners travelling to Canada. There was a time when it was rumoured that the Liberal Government, over the past 15 years, did not choose to advertise Canada as having a cheap dollar and that tourism should have expanded as a result of that dollar. Therefore, the brochures and the publicity which were distributed by Canada made no effort to exploit the value of the Canadian dollar versus the U.S. dollar.

The biggest potential source of business for Canada is in the United States. There are other important sources, one of which was choked off from Japan by the elimination of certain VIA Rail routes. That was a major choke on the tourist industry in western Canada. However, the U.S. dollar, which at present will cost Canadians approximately $1.35, puts Canada in a position of attracting people for vacations, whether in summer or winter. We are not giving enough promotion to the small businessmen in the tourist industry. However, I wish to compliment the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan) who has made it clear that he will go to the world market to attract people to Canada. Small business can be addressed. Perhaps this Bill will be helpful to those people in the tourism industry.

I am concerned about the attitude which has been taken by the Federal Business Development Bank. The policy of the FBDB has not changed as much as I had hoped. I see the bank as one which should be prepared to take some risk. It should be a bank which is available to borrowers in order that they can expand their businesses. For example, I know of a gentleman who approached the FBDB having been recommended by a credible accountant and the development council of his community. He also had the support of the Province of New Brunswick, which indicated that if the bank would give him the loan it would support the loan with a grant. Before the election last summer, after encouraging the man, the bank virtually said that he would get the loan. Now the bank has refused the loan and has refused to meet with the accountant, the applicant and the representative of the industrial development structure in the provincial Government. The opinion was that the risk was too high, yet that gentleman would have employed 20 people in an area where employment is virtually unavailable to the category of people whom he would employ.

I think the FBDB must be channelled in a direction in which there will be more risk taken. Of course, it requires an element of skill and supervision capability. In other words, it should keep an eye on the business to which it lends the money to determine whether the borrower is in fact operating efficiently, effectively and exploiting the market opportunities which are available to the business. We require more competence in that regard.

There are a good many small-businessmen in my community, Mr. Speaker, which rely on the forest. I am probably repeating what I have said more than once over the last 12 years in this House, but I must say that one of the small business groups which is in the most serious trouble is that small guy who may have a woodlot and earns his living cutting wood for market. This small-businessman is being put out of business because of an inadequate policy on forest protection in this land. That does not only apply to Atlantic Canada but across the board.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I feel that if this small business development structure is to be pursued, the protection of our primary industry must be addressed. Every province in Canada needs the highest possible competence and capability in the protection of our forest industry, an industry in which so many of the people of Atlantic Canada are employed. One-third of all new employment in New Brunswick is reputed to be attributed directly or indirectly to the forest industry. Yet we are going into the woodlots and Crown lands of New Brunswick and instead of preserving them green, we are trying to salvage what we can of dying or dead forests. This is something which every Government must address in a proper way. I have every respect for the environment of this country and I believe, Sir, that the multitude of products which science has developed should be evaluated to determine what is the safe way to go about forest protection as it relates to the budworm and other insects.

I am concerned about the farmer. While he has limited access to small-business loans, he does not have adequate borrowing capability in order to make his operation a success and the interest rates on his loans are absolutely killing him, particularly old mortgage loans which have not been renegotiated and are excessive in their costs to the farmer.

This problem was addressed by the former Government by saying that these small-businessmen should be paying their own way on a user-pay basis. We are now looking again, I understand, at the possibility of agricultural inspection fees, food inspection fees being assessed on a user-pay basis. This is an industry which has already had a declining net income, has had that problem nearly every year for the last five years, and the imposition of a user-pay structure is not in the best interests of those small business people. Perhaps it cannot be addressed in this Bill but it is a subject matter which at some time has to be addressed.

The productivity of the people of Canada does not compare with that of other nations. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we must do what can be done to encourage increased productivity at all levels. I was very concerned when I read in The Financial Times of Canada this morning that our productivity was not going forward because at this moment in time we do not have the upsurge in the economy which would encourage expansion which, in turn, would encourage increased productivity. While I am quite prepared to say that foreign economies do have an impact on Canada, I am not prepared to say that foreign economies should be considered to have the impact upon our productivity which would not allow it to go forward as it should. This is something which I feel we have to address.

The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate addressed the plight of Atlantic Canada. Atlantic Canada was very pleased when the frigate program was awarded to the Saint John Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. Ltd; it appeared to be a great bonus for Atlantic Canada. But after the award was made, it was then that the nitty-gritty negotiations began to take place, and even though the prime contractor is located in Saint John, New Brunswick, we find that only 28 per cent of the man-days which will be required in the construction of those frigates will remain in the Province of New Brunswick. The former Government found every possible way to spin off every possible advantage to other sectors and other provinces in the Canadian economy. I say to the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate that, while he may not like the oil deal, there are certainly a lot of Atlantic Canadians who are very disappointed in the situation we now find ourselves in as it relates to the building of the frigates for the Canadian Armed Forces.

I would like to read part of a letter I received which I think indicates both the ability of small business to take advantage of the legislation which we are now discussing, and as it has been in place historically. I think it also places a very major emphasis on the need for this new legislation and perhaps a reconsideration of some of its aspects. The letter was written by a gentleman from Hartland, New Brunswick, Mr. Gary Foster, who is a member of a family which has developed a very important employment structure in our province and who has at the same time succeeded as a small-businessman in a very major and admirable way. I quote just one paragraph:

As you are aware, I have had considerable success in the operation of a linehaul truck brokerage company. Much of the success of this corporation has resulted from its ability to utilize the small business deduction and a conservative dividend policy which permitted reinvestment in the business. The profits kept in the Corporation created employment, and increased the over-all economic well-being of Carleton County. The tax incentive created by the small business deduction has worked optimally both in theory and in practice in the development of my business.

That man, Mr. Speaker, led by his father initially, has made as much progress in the trucking business as anyone could ever hope to make. He is employing well over 100 people in the County of Carleton and its surrounding areas. The importance of this Bill, its expansion and the change in its regulations, are of very major concern to our community. I think we have to give more incentive to small business because small businesses in Atlantic Canada are, in the main, of the family and local type. With the exception of the large pulp and paper companies and perhaps the Irving Oil structures, the vast bulk of business in Atlantic Canada has been created by family-operated businesses, whether it be the Ganong Brothers in St. Stephen with their chocolate product, the McCain Brothers in Florenceville with their food processing industry, or any number of others I could mention. It has been the family operation which has created business and employment and which has been the initiator of all the main and important business in our area. But they can only go forward if there is an element of tax advantage.

Something else these people need is a complete knowledge of the marketing of the product which they produce. It is unfortunate that the small business guy does not know where his market may lie or what its potential might be. I would like to see the circulation of information on our market capability so that we could reach a point at which a manufacturer of a particular product can be listed and all of the producers in Canada could in fact be circularized as to what is the potential market for that product. I am absolutely convinced that we do have the imagination, the investment capability,—the workforce and the productivity potential in Altantic Canada to be an important contributor to the small business sector of Canada. However, the small business sector does need leadership. It does need this legislation which expands the opportunity to keep the profits in the company so that the company in turn can expand.

● (1150)

Three things are needed. The first is the circulation of information to small businessmen to enable them to understand the market potential outside the community. The second is for this Act to receive quick passage. The third is for the Government to study the capacity of the Federal Business Development Bank making more credit available. The Canadian banking system today does not lend itself to recognition of the potential and capability of the small businessman. Hundreds of millions of dollars, or maybe even a billion dollars, will be lent to an organization such as Dome. However, $50,000 for a small businessman in rural Atlantic Canada is considered excessive.

Let us establish a credit line. Let us establish the small business structure under this Act. Let us attempt to feed them the market capabilities as well as giving them a credit line to enable them to get the business in the first place.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the speech of the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain). Over the past number of years I have served on Fisheries committees with the Hon. Member. On many occasions I found that we shared some of the same problems, as we both come from Atlantic Canada. I know of the interest of the Hon. Member in the areas of agriculture, fisheries and forestry.

The small business sector in my constituency is possibly even smaller than that of the Hon. Member. However, we do have an agricultural community. I am sure the Hon. Member would agree that there are tremendous problems in the agricultural industry today. Prices in the potato industry were extremely depressed again this year. Producers tell me that they are selling potatoes at more than one cent a pound below the cost of production. There are severe problems in the pork industry. The only sector of agriculture which is doing reasonably well is the milk industry.

The Hon. Member mentioned user-pay on inspection. From what farmers tell me I believe that the user fee for potato inspection will be extremely detrimental to the industry at this time. Producers believe, and I agree, that inspection is a protection to the consumer and should be paid for out of general revenue. Would the Hon. Member like to comment on that? It is a problem which is very serious for potato farmers in Prince Edward Island and is probably equally as serious for the potato producers of New Brunswick. Would the Member comment on whether he and other members of his caucus from Atlantic Canada feel that there should be any kind of inspection fee imposed on the potato industry?

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I share the concern expressed by the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson). Considering the evolution of government and policies over the years, I am very concerned about the change of priorities which has taken place in government expenditure during my lifetime. There was a point when there was no consideration given to the idea of user-pay for government services. The Government of Canada felt that was its responsibility for the protection of consumer and producer as related to food. Even in the 1930s when money was scarce there was no charge for potato seed inspection. There may have been a registration fee for the applicant, but that was minimal. There was no charge for meat inspection in the abattoirs.

I ask all Members of the House what has happened to our priorities in this country. We have moved ourselves so far in our field of expenditures that we can no longer treat the citizens of Canada in the primary fields of production, and particularly in the area of food, with the same protection for the same fee that was applied in the 1930s. As a matter of fact, it was not until 1968 that our budget expenditures got so out of control that in total desperation the economists, the Cabinet, and the Department of Finance as a whole, began to look for ways to raise money to operate the oligopoly of government which is so huge that it is no longer in control.

I am very concerned about the charges which were imposed before 1984 and are still under consideration in 1985. In some way or another the thinking of government and its finances has lost sight of the services which were basically assumed, whether the repair of small craft harbours, the supervision of budworm spray, or the inspection fees for food products in all of Canada in all its spheres. We seem to have lost sight of the capability that we had to extend services at a reasonable fee. We seem to have lost control of our expenditures to the point where we are desperate. We were desperate before September 4, 1984, and there are signs of desperation in 1985. It is a chronic problem. How do you get the balance of expenditures into place in order that the proper services can be rendered?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member in relation to his reference to me at the beginning of his address. Aside from yourself, Mr. Speaker, and the Member for Halifax (Mr. McInnes), the third person in the Chamber who would be very happy about the offshore agreement and the possibility of guaranteed oil supply for years to come would be the Hon. Member who just spoke. The largest oil refinery in this country is not to be found in Alberta or Saskatchewan. The largest oil refinery in the country, with a capacity of 37,000 cubic metres or 220,000 barrels a day, is in Saint John, New Brunswick. The hon. gentleman made reference to it in his speech. I can see why he is very pleased with the offshore agreement, although I am not.

The hon. gentleman made another statement concerning the fact that I now appear to be outspoken. He intimated that I previously was not. The most outspoken person in this Chamber for the past six to eight years on forestry policy is the hon. gentleman who just spoke. He was at complete odds with government policy as it related to budworm spraying and the forest industry. Does he still hold those views as firmly as he did when he was in opposition? Has he seen the light and changed his mind?

● (1200)

I completely disagree with him on the method of his forestry policy. Is he opposed to the present Minister of State (Forestry) (Mr. Merrithew) or is it too early for him to take a public position on the question of spraying with Matacil and Fenitrothion and other chemicals?

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I have not changed my position at all. The Hon. Member can speak to the Minister responsible for forestry and other Ministers if he doubts that.

My position was that North America could not feed itself from its agriculture without the chemical advances that have been made. Canada and particularly Atlantic Canada cannot provide employment and a viable economy without a productive and viable forest. We are very dependent on that sector. The Hon. Member's constituency is no different from mine and may even be more dependent on forestry than my constituency.

There is a safe way to protect the forests and we should find it, because if we wait much longer there would be a 10 per cent reduction in employment in that area of New Brunswick along with a very rapid escalation of unemployment as a result of improperly nurtured, sprayed and harvested forests across Canada. I have not changed my position and I will continue to pursue it as much as I have in the past.

Finally, the largest refinery in Canada is operating at a very low percentage of its production capability because the Liberal Government pictured Canada as an unreliable source of energy. Its markets on the eastern seaboard of Canada were cut off, as they were for Come-By-Chance—

Mr. Hopkins: That is absolute nonsense.

Mr. McCain: It is not nonsense. There is no question that the Come-By-Chance refinery was built to export oil to the United States. The Hon. Member will not argue with that. But the market was lost, as it was lost to the refinery in Saint John.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise today with no great sense of enthusiasm or moment as regards the contents of Bill C-23.

An Hon. Member: Why did you get up at all?

Mr. Parry: My hon. friend asks me why I bother to get up at all. Let me tell him that at least I will be able to set a standard of relevance better than the 5 per cent that was voluntarily confessed to by my friend to my right. I trust that he will not unduly embarrass his colleagues by keeping such a high standard of relevance in his future contributions in this Chamber.

I believe that the proceedings we have witnessed this morning indicate what I believe to be a major flaw in Bill C-23. Although I support the Bill in principle, the debate we have heard not only from the Official Opposition but from the Government clearly indicates to me that Hon. Members would much rather be discussing substantive questions of economic development and concerns for the future of this country's energy industries than discussing a Bill which merely papers over cracks, tinkers, embellishes and makes minor changes to the substance of long-standing legislation.

While I intend to discuss the merits of the Bill, its very presence in this Chamber indicates a certain lack of initiative and commitment on the part of the Government to introduce legislation that would seriously address the problems facing our country.

My Party can support the majority of changes made by this Bill in the existing regime of small business development assistance in this country. I have had some first-hand experience with that assistance regime and I must say that I find it inadequate. After six years as a small business proprietor and another two years as a partner in a small business enterprise, I can say that the assistance that was offered left much to be desired. This was also the impression of my clients and my colleagues in the small business sector with whom I dealt.

The election campaign of last summer and the rhetoric we have heard resounding across the floor constituted the million dollar wind-up. Indeed, Bill C-23 is the 10-cent pitch. Let us never forget that the small business sector in this country employs more workers than large corporations and more workers than governments at every level. Unlike many large corporations, 98 per cent of the small businesses in this country are Canadian owned and the profits, by and large, are used for new investment and job creation in Canada.

The last four or five years of unlamented maladministration by my colleagues to my right took a serious toll on Canada's small businesses. In 1981 and 1982 over 20,000 of Canada's small businesses went bankrupt, with an estimated loss to the Canadian economy of approximately $3.5 billion. Of course, nearly all thé businesses that went bankrupt were small businesses. In the case of small farm businesses, bankruptcies continued at record levels through 1983.

We have an image of a sector that is under siege. Does the Government do anything to lift that siege as a result of this Bill? I think not. Rather, I believe the Government has taken the existing Liberal program and has chosen to make minor amendments to the details. Of course, we do not know if the blood on the floor after the execution of "Erik the Red" will include the blood of small business.

The small business sector is one which has potential and vitality and has contributed enormously to Canada's development in the past. It is always said that the railroads built Canada, but we should remember who built the railroads. While the CPR and the precursors and predecessors of the Canadian National railroad built Canada to a point, let us not forget that small contractors logged off the right-of-way, contractors brought in the labour, often with a tragic toll due to accidents and disease. They built the roadbed, sometimes with contracts for a mile at a time. Entrepreneurs undertook the blasting, crushing and cutting of ties and indeed the haulage of many of the commodities that served the construction of the railroad. We should also remember the supply chains that were set up on a private basis to build those railroads that tied our country together.

While that participation has obviously changed form, we must ask to what extent that participation has been recognized by the Government as we debate this legislation. The recognition has been scanty indeed. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) shed a "tier". He shed tier one of the IRD program. He cut off a large number of small businesses that could have used that program for further development. Let us simply hope that the Minister has no more "tiers" left to shed.

Let me review the deficiencies as well as the substance of the Bill. We have an additional $300 million granted to the total amount of loans permissible, and that we can all applaud. We have a new lending period and new limits established with the administrative facility to amend those without bringing them back to the House. We have a fee of 1 per cent of the value of the loans imposed. That is certainly something of questionable merit which must be debated at the committee stage. On the one hand it is the recognition of the $43 million lost over the last financial period and the Government's need to ensure that the banks are simply not giving out the Government's money without any recourse or comeback under the Bank Act.

We also have the proposal to change the underwriting from 100 per cent to 90 per cent. I think that is something reasonable and supportable. After all, the current experience surely indicates that some money has been going out of this program to projects which the banks would not be caught dead looking at if they were looking at them with a view to lending their own money.

The definition of small business is adjusted routinely to account for inflation. The other amendments, after all, are largely of an administrative and detailed nature.

The benefits of this program we feel do indeed outweigh the costs. Let us look at some of the benefits which the Government could be giving to small business if it were prepared to make a serious effort to support the small business sector of this country and to give it the support that would reinforce its strength and enable it to grow further.

Let us look at the possibility of providing stable interest rates. I was practising as an accountant and small business consultant in the years of the last depression, 1980 through 1983.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): "Recession."

Mr. Parry: Depression. My hon. colleague says recession. I am sad to hear him defending the Liberal Government's record like that. It was a depression. If it was't in his riding, it certainly was in mine.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am sorry.

Mr. Parry: Apology accepted. I would have to say that there was no single cause of difficulty, no single cause of small businesses going out of business in that period, other than the cause of the instability of interest rates which left small businessmen in a state of shell-shock in many cases. They saw interest rates rise in a matter of months from perhaps 15 per cent of their total overhead, below the top-line expenses, to 30 per cent. They saw their profits, their capital available for reinvestment, swallowed up by the increase in interest rates. This really did not affect large business to anything like the same extent. Large businesses were financed generally much more on a long-term basis, using fixed interest rates. Some were spectacularly over-financed, in collusion with and with the assistance of the Government, and did indeed get into trouble. It was trouble they should have been able to foresee. They certainly had the resources to do so.

Let us look at what the Government could have done had it been fully committed to the support of small business in terms of ensuring that credit was available to small business on an equal basis. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) mentioned many programs in other countries. I will not take the time of the House to reiterate them other than to say the stipulations in the United States of America that a certain percentage of lending must be to small businesses I think is one that merits examination. We should look at that very hard to see if it would benefit Canada as I believe it would.

Small business procurement is another matter on which we should seek initiative and action from the Government to ensure that a certain percentage of all Government acquisitions, procurements, purchases and contracts go to the support of the small business sector. My own experience indicates that the Government could do a lot more with the chartered banks to improve small business financing. My own experience indicates that programs are generally inadequately advertised, that banks have very little initiative or incentive to promote those programs other than to lend their own money. My belief is that in many ways small business, though perhaps not large, is as well served through the American system of community, town, and statewide banking than it is through the oligopoly which Canada's chartered banks have in our country.

Mr. Nickerson: You want to socialize the banks.

Mr. Parry: I am sorry I used a word that my hon. friend cannot understand, but oligopoly does, after all, refer to the control of a business sector by only a few players.

Let us have the Government examine that lack of advertising and ensure the banks are used as a point of sale for the sort of assistance the Government can and should provide under an enhanced regime of assistance to small businesses.

Let us look at the failure of these programs to serve women. Let us not forget that a very high proportion of new businesses in Canada today are started by women. Let us remember that women should and must, if we are to express a commitment to an equal society, have equal access to programs designed to help people get started in business and to help them continue and make a success in business.

Let us have the Government bring forward some sort of measure to provide stability and predictability in interest rates that small businesses must pay instead of continuing to follow the line of the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the trends of our massively strong neighbour to the south in setting those interest rates which are so central to determining the future of small businesses in this country.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry). I would like him to clarify one point and I shall predict what his answer will be before he gives it.

Mr. Parry: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baker: Is the Hon. Member in support of the provision in the Bill that imposes a fee on the lender to be paid to the federal Government for lending the money? Is the Hon. Member in support of the reduction from 100 per cent to 90 per cent of the guarantee on the loan which the businessman is going to get, given the fact that the imposition of the fee on the bank will be passed on to the customer? Do you think the bank, Mr. Speaker, will just assimilate that loss? No, it will be passed on to the customer.

I would like the hon. gentleman to answer yes or no. Is he in support of those two provisions, the two anti-small business provisions, in this particular legislation?

• (1220)

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, when I heard the Hon. Member say that he would predict my response, I awaited with some eagerness. This is why I attempted to rise on a point of order, though of course I know enough that it would not be accepted as such. However, since he is both directing a question to me and then suggesting that he could answer it but declining to do so, I am left in some doubt as to what are his intentions. Is the idea that he would elicit some response from me or simply try to confuse me by indeed misrepresenting one of the segments of the Bill?

Had he read it—I do not doubt that he has dipped into it, because of course one must know something about the Bill to take one whole minute out of the 20 allocated to him—he would have seen that the fee is in fact imposed upon the bank. After all, I do not believe, like the Hon. Member, that the bank will take that fee and clutch it fondly to its bosom and let it percolate through to the bottom line.

We know that banks have profit centre accounting and that they are very readily able through their information system to determine the level of those fees over a particular year or a given fiscal period. It is my belief that banks, by virtue of this fee, will become somewhat more careful in the way in which they use small business lending provisions.

I will give the Hon. Member an example of that so that he will know I am not merely trifling with his intervention. My experience was that banks would seek to channel loans through the provisions of the Small Businesses Loans Act which they were not only quite capable of financing on their own account but in many cases should have financed on their own account. My experience was that clients for whom time indeed was of the essence, as in remote and seasonal economies it very often is, were kept waiting with proposals that, if they had access to better sources, or to more than one source in many cases, they would have taken elsewhere because of the desire of banks to have a particular loan guaranteed through the small businesses loans process.

Therefore I say to the Hon. Member that my belief is that this amendment would indeed have a beneficial effect. I do not pretend that it will completely have a beneficial effect for small business, nor do I pretend that small business will not end up bearing some of the costs of that 1 per cent commitment fee. Because the bank will have to pay the fee and because the bank will be undertaking 10 per cent of the responsibility for any losses itself, it will indeed ensure that some loans which the bank should finance directly get financed directly and are therefore handled in a much more expeditious and timely fashion.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I will complete my first comment. I knew he would say that he agreed with those provisions of the Bill. I should like to put a follow-up question to him. He claims that banks want to take advantage of the loans of the federal Government when they should have been granting those loans under their normal banking program and therefore we have a fee on the backs of the banks. The hon. gentleman is also saying that now they will grant loans under their normal lending program.

There is nothing in the Bill which makes banks give loans to anybody. That is where the fallacy of his argument falls down completely. What has happened is that the New Democratic Party has taken a position on the Bill, as stated by its spokesman, which it now knows is wrong. Now it has to try to justify it; but it cannot be justified with that kind of argument.

Again I ask the hon. gentleman where in the Bill it says that banks have to loan that same money to small-businessmen, which he claims in some cases was a give-away, was not really a good loan, and should have been administered under their normal lending program. How does it now protect businessmen who would normally have received the loan but probably now will not receive it under the normal banks' programs?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I believe that question is answerable. I am glad the Hon. Member said that my fallacy fell down. The Liberal tendency with fallacies is, of course, to erect them into principles.

What I am talking about is the higher grade of loan applications which bank managers encounter. Under the old regime of 100 per cent responsibility on the part of the federal Government, the tendency was that the banker took in an application which looked pretty solid but said, bankers going on conservatism as they do, that maybe he would write the loan under the Small Businesses Loans Act and cover a portion of his anatomy with his head office, his regional office. Therefore, as I said, many loans were written under the Small Businesses Loans Act which in a system that perhaps had a little more initiative and daring would have been written on the bank's own loan portfolio.

If those loans go from the Small Businesses Loans Act portfolio into the bank's general portfolio, of course there is room created within the fund's limits for the consideration of other loans which might be of a riskier, more speculative nature. Therefore bank managers can spend their time on, and regional offices can give their consideration to, other proposals which may indeed have merit.

There seems to be an assumption on the part of my hon. friend that once an application has been condemned as speculative it is of no further use; but it may have merit and could be assessed under this type of financing and, if found viable, financed.

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise and speak on Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act. It is very fitting that it is on this Bill that I am making my so-called maiden speech as a Member of the House representing the constituency of Mississauga North.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: There exists within the Bill far-reaching benefits. It will bring a better future for both Mississauga North and Canada. It has often been said in the House and elsewhere that business, particularly small business, is the engine of the Canadian economy. Nowhere is this more true then in the riding of Mississauga North. A Bill such as this one will do much to improve the environment in which these very important firms thrive and prosper. It will bring great benefits to all Canadians.

I wish to inform the House as to why I see so many benefits forthcoming, not only from the Bill but also from that which it represents—a new attitude, a new direction by government in the country. The riding I represent is very much like this great country of ours. Mississauga North is a young riding. Like Canada, its greatest days lie ahead. The energy and enthusiasm of youth is evident everywhere. Our role as a Government is to ensure that our future remains bright.

Growth is the byword to describe Canada, a relatively young country which has leaped into the forefront as one of the leading nations of the world. Sometimes for better, sometimes for worse, we have experienced tremendous growth. Mississauga North epitomizes that growth. Having only come into existence in 1976, my riding has already exploded to the point where at the next election its population will exceed 300,000 people. The huge potential that exists for both Mississauga North and Canada is truly the key to realizing our goals. We must learn to live together and to work together so that we can achieve our great potential to the benefit of all Canadians.

Mississauga North consists of people from all corners of the globe, and they have found a way to live together in harmony that benefits all. In the short time that I have been in office serving the people of Mississauga North, we have had over 2,000 new Canadians welcomed into our community. I, for one, take great pleasure in meeting these new Canadians, in talking with them, and hearing of their dreams and goals for the future.

New Canadians perhaps most clearly reflect that which is so promising about our great nation. They wear on their sleeves the dreams of a better life for themselves and their children. I know that the potential for a better life exists in Mississauga and I know that it exists in Canada. I am sure that with the introduction of legislation such as Bill C-23 and with the direction that the new Canadian Government has shown, these people will be able to fulfil their dreams and reach their goals.

I would like, if I may, to talk for one minute about the reasons why the riding I represent has experienced such phenomenal growth of late and why it is one of the most successful communities in our country. As I said earlier, Mississauga North is relatively new. In fact, the City of Mississauga has only recently celebrated its tenth birthday. It has, however, taken advantage of the opportunities presented to it. With great energy, coupled with co-operation, consultation and consensus, people came together and planned a community that would turn rapid growth to advantage.

In my riding there are over 6,800 small businesses that fall under the definition laid out by Bill C-23. These small businesses are the backbone of our community. Small businesses are also the backbone of Canada. We in the federal Government must create the environment that encourages Canadians to start their own businesses. People who have dreams and ideas must have an environment that is friendly, an environment that is co-operative and a Government that wants them to succeed. We must give them the opportunity to pursue their dreams. I know that, given that opportunity, they will succeed and Canada will grow with them.

I, as a small businessman who started out in Mississauga some 20 years ago, have seen a tremendous, exciting growth and I have been fortunate enough to benefit from it, to benefit from an enlightened local government that strives to help businesses in whatever way it can. Just as in small business, the most important ingredients of a successful government are good planning, co-operation and employing the consensus approach to take advantage of the opportunities that arise.

I see the new Canadian Government following this plan and I am pleased, as I know my constituents are. People in Mississauga North know through experience that good government is a government that listens. I am pleased to see a program of consultation being undertaken by the Canadian Government to learn what the people want, to learn where the people want to go, to learn how we can best help them reach their goals.

The comparisons between Canada and Mississauga North are many. Mississauga, like Canada, is young with tremendous potential and resources, a bright light that attracts people. Often I feel that we who live in Canada forget how great our country is. Luckily our new Canadians can remind us that there still exists the potential for all our people to pursue their dreams and reach their goals.

In the community of Mississauga government has played its part. There has been a need to design a framework. They have, with consultation and consensus, done so. They have provided the structure so that the citizens can work to achieve their goals. I am proud to be able to say about the community in which I live that local government has been there to lend a helping hand, but it has never let that hand lie too heavily on the shoulders of its citizens.

I come from one of the few communities in this country that faces a substantial surplus in its treasury. This position has been achieved while the members of the community have benefited from some of the finest social services and community facilities that are available anywhere in this country.

How, we may ask, has a community that is so young been able to achieve such remarkable results? The key lies in its ability to understand the needs of its people, to work in unison with the factors of growth and to harness in a constructive way the tremendous energy of a booming small business base. The people of Mississauga North have learned that the way to get the most from their engine of growth is not to drive it but to ride along with it, to be there, to offer help and guidance when required but to keep their hands off it so it is given the freedom it requires to reach its maximum potential.

The proposed amendments in this Bill, which I want to go quickly through, will do much in a very real sense to improve the operating capacities of small businesses in this country, while at the same time ensuring that the partners involved in the loans are all responsible. The increase from $1.5 million to $2 million for the upper eligibility limit to qualify a firm as a small business under the definition as laid out by the Act makes complete common sense. With high inflation under the last Government, many companies that are still of a relatively small nature exceeded the $1.5 million ceiling. This increase to a $2 million limit is very necessary.

The new liability loss-sharing ratio of 90 per cent to 10 per cent is a step in the right direction so far as the responsibility aspects of lending are concerned. It is essential that the business involved in the loan transaction be responsible for at least part of the liability under the loan. This Act is to enhance and encourage the establishment of a small successful business. It is not meant to be a vehicle to give away money at the taxpayers' expense to businesses that cannot accept some responsibility for their own funding.

Another amendment within this legislation is the fee to be paid by the lender in the amount of 1 per cent of the total loan. Again it only makes sense that the banks, which to date had been profiting in a no-loss situation, should have to contribute so that the Canadian public is not left to shoulder all the responsibilities. In our conversations with banking institutions they expressed a willingness to share in this 1 per cent fee, especially when you consider that they will generally get all other loans from the same firm as it grows in size and success in the years after the initial Small Businesses Act loan was extended. These major amendments are all steps in the right direction so far as placing responsibility and safeguards for public funds hand in hand with encouraging the entrepreneurial spirit.

It is essential we understand that for people to be truly successful and for businesses to be successful, there must also exist the possibility for them to fail. If we spend all of our time legislating, controlling and directing our small businesses, then they will spend all of their time responding solely to us, channelling their creative energies away from growth into activities that merely deal with an overwhelming bureaucracy. We must be there to help them when the idea has been sparked, but we cannot expect small business to be successful if we continually insist on dictating the directions they should take.

The people of Mississauga North know this, and that is why my riding has one of the highest standards of living in this country. That is why my riding, although it has people from many backgrounds with many ideas and beliefs, is relatively strife-free. That is why unemployment and violence are both extremely low and that is why the family unit and community spirit are so alive.

I suppose it would hardly be fitting as the Member for Mississauga North if in my maiden speech I did not make mention of our infamous train derailment. Perhaps I can use it to illustrate the true character of my community. My own business is located within walking distance of where that train derailed so I, as so many of my fellow residents in Mississauga, was deeply involved in the evacuation of our city. The evacuation was conducted and co-ordinated by various levels of government and is considered the world over a model of how evacuations of this size should properly be undertaken. This success was possible because there has always existed in Mississauga that co-operation between private citizens, businesses, governments and all involved organizations in our community. The doors have always been open in Mississauga to better understand what each of our residents wants, and because of open communication we have been able to grow together in such a successful way.

• (1240)

I want to parallel that to Canada itself, for I feel that the New Conservative Government is demonstrating, through legislation such as Bill C-23, that it wants to work together with Canadians. It does not want to burden them. I know that Canada too can experience the success that comes through consultation and co-operation.

I am pleased that so many of the residents of Mississauga applaud the new Government's decision to work together with all sectors of our society. I am proud to represent Mississauga North in this House and in this Government. I will continue to work in the spirit of co-operation exemplified not only by Bill C-23 but also by all of the activities of our new Government to date so that all Canadians can achieve their dreams and goals.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no questions or comments, we shall continue with debate.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join in the debate on Bill C-23 because it relates to the Small Businesses Loans Act, and the small business sector is obviously one of the most important sectors of our economy today. However, before I do I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) on his maiden speech this afternoon. It is obviously a very intimidating experience for any new Member and he acquitted himself very well. I compliment him on the speech he has made here, not only for emphasizing the importance of this legislation, but also for telling us a little bit more about his own constituency. Members of this House are always interested to learn about various parts of our country, all of which fit together to make up the 282 seats of this Chamber.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, does some very good things in that it extends the Act for another five years. I think everyone in the House would agree with that. It also increases the total lending ceiling from $1.5 billion to $1.8 billion, which will allow that many more loans to be made. The Government is to be commended for bringing in this kind of legislation at this time because I know of hardly any small businessmen who are not looking for a lower rate of interest such as is made available under this Act, when and if it is possible to get a loan under this legislation.

I am less impressed, Mr. Speaker, with the fact that the limit on individual loans is being raised from $1.5 million to $2 million. There may be instances where that is valuable, but in looking through the history of the Act, in most cases loans are of the order of $25,000. So it does not strike me that there is a great need for this increase, although it certainly falls in line with the increased needs of business due to inflation.

I think the real concern we have about this legislation, and the greatest problem with the Small Businesses Loans Act, is that the banks seldom want to make the loan. In 1984 there were some 31,000 loans under this Act, which was a record. Going back to, say, 1977 there were only 4,800 loans under the Act. If you divide that into 282 constituencies, and of course it is not divided up that way, there have been very few loans made.

My constituency covers some 13,000 square miles and I suppose there are 50 or 60 bank branches serving the area. But in the average town or community there are practically no small business loans available. You really have to know your banker very well; you really have to fit into the area he wants to look after. A lot of the loan decisions are made in Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver, the regional centres in the country, and these loans tend to be to preferred customers.

I fear, Mr. Speaker, that there are two provisions in this legislation which reduce the effectiveness of the Act to what it was in 1977 when there were only about 4,000 loans made across the country under the Act. The legislation requires that the bank assume 10 per cent of any loss. Given that, certainly the availability of loans will drop dramatically when what we want to do is encourage the banking institutions to provide more small business loans, not less.

Often I have people come to me and say that they are starting a new business or expanding their existing business and they ask what is available in the way of financing. I tell them there is the Federal Business Development Bank, but they say no, interest rates are very high there and they have to be turned down by at least two banks and so on. Then I suggest the small businesses loans program, but their response is that the bank is not giving any of those loans in their area. It is a good program with interest rates at 1 per cent above prime, but the banks will not give them out.

When you look at the figure of 31,000 loans across the country, you have a sneaking suspicion that a lot of those loans are going to areas like Mississauga North which are rapidly expanding. There is tremendous growth and there has been for the last 30 or 40 years. But if you get out into the rural communities of Algoma or the Manitoulin district, or the Sudbury district where there is slow economic growth, the small business loans just are not available. If they were not available many times in the past, then how much more are they going to be available when the banks have to assume 10 per cent of the loss? I am not saying banks should not assume 10 per cent of the loss; it is just that banks make these loans as a sort of favour to their best customers. They give out very few of them and I am afraid that with this provision the result will be that few loans will be available and we will go back to pre-1978 days when there was only a smattering of 4,000 or 5,000 loans made across the country.

As well, as I read the legislation, the Bill provides for a 1 per cent fee charged to the bank or credit union by the federal Government on the loan. That happens to be the same percentage as the 1 per cent above prime that the bank is earning. That is a further disincentive to the banks in granting loans. The incentive of expanding the program, with the new ceiling of $300 million in additional funding to small local businesses and industries, is in fact a disincentive for the banks to grant loans. I hope that when the Bill goes to committee we either do away with the 1 per cent fee or the 10 per cent pick-up charge that the banks will have to absorb, or that the chartered banks will be required to provide a specified amount of funding across the country so that loans which are beneficial to small business will be made more available.

Essentially the Bill provides a blank cheque for the Government. By Order in Council the Government will be able to change the charge which will be imposed on the banks. That will further deter banks from making loans available.

The other aspect of the Bill which I would like the Government to consider in committee is the extension of the program from a 10-year repayment period to a 15-year repayment period. When I was in my constituency last week I spoke with a young couple who were interested in buying a motel business. The Manitoulin district of my riding has one of the best tourist industries in Ontario. However, the couple who wanted to purchase the motel were unable to convince the owners to take back a mortgage and, therefore, they wanted to borrow money. There was some pressure for the business to be purchased and one or two banks were willing to give the couple a mortgage under the Small Businesses Loans Act. The couple had approximately 40 per cent of the equity, so it was a very healthy situation.

The problem is that the tourism industry tends to be seasonal. Although the summer months are very profitable, the winter months tend to be lean. Because of that, the couple could not cope with the charges over a 10-year period. If the Act could be amended to provide for a 15-year pay-back period, the couple would be able to cope with that loan and the bank would be willing to give it. However, under the present provisions of the Act, the couple will not be able to purchase the motel business. I suggest to the Minister that when the Bill goes to committee serious consideration should be given to extending the loan period from 10 to 15 years. It will be much more advantageous to small businesses, especially in the rural areas of Canada.

We should make the legislation more applicable to the vast rural areas of Canada. Decisions which are of any magnitude in the banking business in the Ontario region are made in Toronto. Possibly decisions for eastern Ontario are made in Ottawa, but I am not certain of that. Clearly, for 88 per cent of the land mass of the Province of Ontario, banking decisions are made in Toronto. I am concerned that the over-all approach of the Government is to enrich and reward the more populous, powerful and rapidly expanding parts of the country, and not provide as much to the rural and far-flung frontier areas.

Over the last ten years the loans have been rapidly expanding under this program. In 1977, 4,894 loans were granted and that number increased to approximately 31,000 in the 1984-85 fiscal year. The program has been filling a tremendous need. Therefore, I would like the Government to consider removing the 1 per cent service charge and the 10 per cent pick-up charge.

There will be a loss to the Government, however, if that is not done. I feel that the program, which has been going in the right direction over the last seven years because of the number and size of the loans, will suddenly dry up. Instead of having a program which will benefit small business, a program which has been doing a great job with expanded funds, we will have a program with restrictions which will result in the money not being available, especially in the rural parts of Canada.

The Liberal critic is very conscious of the provisions of the Bill and he will be proposing amendments in committee. I hope the Government will seriously consider the proposed amendments, especially as they relate to small businesses in the outlying areas and providing longer term loans which can be extended to a 15-year period.

Obviously, the Bill has several advantageous provisions. For example, the increase in the over-all ceiling from $1.5 billion to $1.8 billion. I understand that provision is required because of the large number of loans which were made in the 1984-85 fiscal year. That is an important provision. I am less impressed by the need for the maximum loan to be increased from $1.5 million to $2 million. If we look at the basis for the $1.5 million and at the inflation which has taken place since that figure was put in place, it is probably justified. However, I am concerned about the average loan of $25,000, $50,000 or $100,000 which allows small-businessmen to start businesses, expand existing businesses and, most importantly, provide jobs. Small business has been providing the greatest growth in jobs for Canada over the last several years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would advise the Hon. Member that there is one minute remaining in his time for debate.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSURE OF NATIONAL POSTAL MUSEUM

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Post Corporation announced not long ago that the National Post Museum will be closed. This decision is not only regrettable, it is also unacceptable. Every postal administration worthy of the name has its postal museum. It is difficult to understand why the Museum should close its doors on March 1, while it could continue to occupy the premises in the Wellington Building until the first of July. The Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation has a responsibility to philatelists and collectors of Canadian stamps. With a minimum of goodwill on his part and on the part of the Minister of Public Works, other premises could be found in downtown Ottawa—perhaps even on Wellington Street—to house the National Postal Museum.

I therefore urge the Minister to take immediate action and make it clear to Canada Post that it has no right to close the National Postal Museum and that it cannot do so.

THE SENATE

DELAY IN PASSING FINANCIAL LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that the message given by the Canadian people to the previous administration on September 4, 1984, has not registered with the Liberal camp followers and former bagmen who now occupy the Red Chamber.

Led by the infamous former Minister of Finance, Allan J. MacEachen, whose Budget of November, 1981, was one of the most divisive and detrimental ever foisted on the Canadian people, and followed eagerly by others who would not dare to seek a seat in the elected House, these Liberal Senators have, for the past month, been holding up the business of the Government of Canada.

It is a well known fact that the Liberal Party had pork-barrelling and patronage down to a fine tuned art, but the action of these Senators has hit a new high of arrogance, even for Liberals. Clearly these appointments made by Mr. Trudeau were his final insult to the Canadian people—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gottselig: —and in view of the fact the Liberal leader has no control over this bunch of political hacks, I call upon all elected Members of this honourable House to join—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I am interrupting the Hon. Member's statement here because the Hon. Member is new enough that he may not know the tradition of making no such aspersions with regard to the other place. I will simply end it at that.

Mr. McKenzie: Well done, Bill.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

OBLIGATION TO CONSULT WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): It is time to puncture another Tory myth, Mr. Speaker. We all know the one about how Canada had to test the Cruise missile to prove we are loyal to NATO. That myth was laid to rest when Australia withdrew its support for MX missile testing. The American Secretary of State then pointed out that missile testing had nothing to do with its military alliance. Now we have the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) saying that Canada should support the American Strategic Defence Initiative. He says star wars is only prudent research to keep up with the Soviet Union. That's nonsense.

The U.S. Undersecretary of Defence Policy now admits that star wars is "the very core of our long-term policy. It's central," he says. In the face of this revelation, the Secretary of State for External Affairs doesn't lose his head. He keeps it firmly planted in the sand. Meanwhile, Canada is getting sucked deeper and deeper into defensive weapons. This new strategy is reshaping our northern defences. The Minister says we are only talking about a warning system.

Military experts say star wars weapons would have to be based in Canada. The Minister says: "We'll wait and see". Canada's Chief of Defence Research says star wars would be controlled by NORAD. The Minister says: "We'll wait and see". What are we waiting for? The Minister has the right and the obligation to consult with the Americans about future activities of NORAD. That duty is explicit in the 1981 NORAD renewal agreement. The Minister is ignoring that responsibility to the Canadian people.

THE SENATE

CALL FOR EARLY REFORM

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, the events of the past few weeks have taken many of us back to our basic political texts, such as Corry and Hodgett's Democratic Government and Politics, to reflect on what role the Senate should play in our system of Canadian government. As we met with our constituents last week, we heard of the bewilderment and annoyance of the Canadian public with a system which allows a group of non-elected men and women to frustrate the will of a Government which received an overwhelming mandate from across the country for change and renewal.

I can assure this House that the people of British Columbia are deeply concerned and are asking: "When are you going to do something?" We have had many studies about how changes can be made to provide for a more responsible and representative Upper House which could play a valuable role in reviewing and originating ideas and legislation. We have had a lot of talk, but little action.

The events of the last week show that a process of real reform must be started as soon as possible. I hope other Members of this House will join with me in support of calling a constitutional conference on Senate reform as soon as possible. Only then can the federal and provincial Governments, working together, put in place the constitutional amendments which are long over due and badly required in order to ensure that representative and responsible democracy continues to flourish—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CRITICISMS CONCERNING APPLICANTS FOR REFUGEE STATUS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks there has been considerable criticism of the detention centres for applicants for refugee status. These centres are used for people who claimed refugee status but have been denied such status by officers of the Department of Employment and Immigration at one of Canada's points of entry. Pending a final decision on their case, these people are sent to detention centres.

In Toronto, refugee status applicants were not informed about the existence of volunteer, church and humanitarian organizations that would be prepared to provide legal aid. Sometimes they are given the Yellow Pages. A number of applicants were questioned by RCMP officers without being given access to a lawyer. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms is being violated, but officials of the Department of Employment and Immigration have stated that the Charter does not apply since the claimants are not Canadian citizens. There is a double standard being used here, one for Canadians and one for non-Canadians. We must not forget that this, too, is racism.

Conditions are sometimes worse than they are in prison. For instance, the UN rule of one inmate to a cell is not always observed. Canada is very far from living up to its humanitarian reputation. I think an investigation is urgently required with a view to remedying—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

THE ECONOMY

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—TRIBUTE TO WORK OF PARTICIPANTS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of attending the First Ministers' Conference on the Economy in my home province of Saskatchewan as an official observer. Today I wish to share with the House some of my observations.

It was the beginning of a new era of First Ministers' conferences. The conference sessions were conducted in a positive atmosphere of co-operation, a refreshing change from the past. Moreover, this harmonious atmosphere extended beyond the reach of the cameras and microphones; it also characterized the working relations between the federal and provincial officials.

At a time of scarce financial resources it was apparent that all First Ministers were prepared to rise to the challenge of sharing their expertise and experiences, in trying to avoid the wasteful duplication of the past. Co-operation and consultation are fundamental to this Government's mandate and were clearly apparent in the conference initiatives and discussions. Employment, trade, investment, and interest rates were discussed objectively and without bitterness. For the first time we saw 11 First Ministers of all political persuasions working toward a goal of economic recovery.

We cannot expect that all the intergovernmental differences will be solved in one two-day session. We can and should expect continued joint efforts by all First Ministers in resolving differences in order to achieve the best solutions for all Canadians. That takes genuine trust and mutual respect, and I observed both among all the participants in Regina. I heartily applaud the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for initiating a new era—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CANADIAN POST CORPORATION

NEED FOR EFFORTS TO MAINTAIN NATIONAL POSTAL MUSEUM

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of February, Canada Post announced that the National Postal Museum would be closed as of March 1 and sent notices of termination of employment to the Museum's employees. Although Canada Post has known for over two years that the Museum's lease in the Wellington Building was a temporary one, and that the Museum would have to move as of June 30, it did nothing to find other suitable premises that would be available before that date.

S.O. 21

Mr. Speaker, last week I attended a meeting with the President of Canada Post, my colleague from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), Shirley Carr of the Canadian Labour Congress and councillor Marlene Carterill of the City of Ottawa. We suggested that Canada Post postpone closing the National Postal Museum and join an action group that would try to keep the Museum in its present premises or find other suitable accommodation.

I am sorry to inform the House that Canada Post refused outright to participate in such efforts. I would appeal to the Government to have Canada Post join an action group to ensure the Museum remains in existence instead of letting it disappear, for all practical purposes, for a period of three years or more.

THE SENATE

DELAYING TACTICS USED BY THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, like all Canadians, the people of the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean are very disappointed, and I would even go so far as to say that they are disgusted with the systematic obstruction being indulged in by the Opposition in the Senate which is refusing to approve a Bill that was adopted unanimously in this House. Mr. Speaker, this is being done by individuals who did not even have the courage to run in the last election and who are living off the largesse of previous prime ministers. In addition to causing considerable harm to the operations of the present Government, these Members are damaging the reputation of a Senate that is already—

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED LACK OF RESPONSE TO LETTERS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this item is about unanswered letters. In Edmonton and Toronto last week a large number of individuals and organizations advised me of their frustrations at not receiving replies to letters they had written to the federal Minister of the Environment (Ms. Blais-Grenier).

This lack of response by the Minister of the Environment is in sharp contrast to the promises of an open Government and of good communications with the public, made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) last summer. I bring this matter to your attention, Mr. Speaker, with the knowledge that Canadians and environmental groups across the country would really appreciate receiving a reply to their letters when they write to the Minister of the Environment.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

IMPACT OF CN DOUBLE TRACKING PLANS ON BRITISH COLUMBIA RESERVES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of 36 Indian bands whose reserves will be seriously affected by CN's twin tracking program in central British Columbia, I urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), along with the Transport Committee Chairman and the Chairman of the Fisheries and Forestry Committee to do whatever is necessary to stop CN from proceeding with its present double tracking plans along the sensitive Fraser-Thompson River corridor.

Since the Committee plans to hold hearings into the twin tracking program in mid-March, the Minister should postpone approval of the project at Mile 59-69 of the Ashcroft sub-division, considering that CN plans to begin dumping ballast into the Thompson River on or about March 1. The Native Alliance on CN Double Tracking believes that a one-year delay is needed to assess many unresolved environmental, social, and economic issues relating to the program properly, as well as time to determine whether the project is required by the western Canadian transport system, and to determine why the two railways cannot co-operate in this area and obtain a twin tracking option as a result.

While approval of the project is likely in the best interests of the CN corporation, it is certainly not in the best interest of the native people who live along the tracks in this area, and of the West Coast salmon fishery. The Government surely has a responsibility to put the needs of native people and a major fishery before a Crown corporation. Postponing this project would demonstrate its correct priority.

THE SENATE

CONDEMNATION OF CONDUCT

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, for the past 118 years Canada's Senate has evolved to meet the needs and wishes of the Canadian people. The Senate has acted as a supporting body, complementing, but not competing with, the popularly elected House of Commons. Canadians believe in a parliamentary democracy where the will of the people rules rather than the will of a select few.

Last September Canadians elected a Government to act in their interest and to respond to their concerns. As elected representatives we must recognize this fact and govern accordingly. The same follows for those in the other place. They too must recognize the fact that the Canadian people spoke last September and chose a Government.

When the work of the House is unduly obstructed or delayed by the other place, the will of the people is not served, and neither is the will of democracy. In short, when a popularly elected Government cannot properly carry out its duties, I say that democracy has been shunned.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In the last 10 days before the weekend the Canadian dollar dropped dramatically from 74.6 cents U.S. to 72 cents U.S. At one-thirty this afternoon it apparently stood at 71.35 cents U.S. Mr. Speaker, 80 per cent of the money that moved across our border against the Canadian dollar was moved by corporations doing business in this country. That reflects the confidence that the business community has in the Canadian economy.

The Wall Street Journal, which reflects the trends of the Prime Minister, says that the "Conservative Government has shown little resolve in dealing with Canada's financial problems". This is a matter which deals with confidence, Mr. Speaker.

In order to make the Minister's answer more relevant, I would like to recite words which the Government usually loves to hear, words of the Prime Minister. These words appear in an article in Fortune magazine which hit the stands this afternoon. This shows why there is little confidence in this country when the Prime Minister himself has no confidence in the Canadian business community. He said:

> We do not have a very good track record. Our products have not been of the highest quality. Our deliveries have been lacking in reliability. Our expertise has been in large measure borrowed. Our technology has been purchased. What the hell makes us so special?

This is the Prime Minister of our country, in an American magazine, lauding the Canadian business community.

My question for the Minister of Finance is—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I thought, since the Prime Minister was absent on business, they would like to hear his words in absentia, words which the Canadian people are going to learn to treasure.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): This is a four-minute question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have followed the length of the answers in this Chamber since Parliament assembled and I have not pressed that.

Would the Minister of Finance describe the conversations he has had recently with the Governor of the Bank of Canada relating to the situation of the dollar crisis? What is the position of the Bank? Is it trying to support the dollar? Has it made a decision that the dollar should fall? What is the position of the Bank as conveyed to the Minister?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I see by the clock that that was a four-minute question. I assume I have four minutes to answer it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would like to respond to some of the matters which the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out. First, I would like to draw his attention to the facts to which the Prime Minister was responding in the Fortune article. He was setting out a litany of the problems that the business community had been encountering and had been responding to under 15 or 20 years of Liberal rule. It is those matters that we are trying to turn around. We made a first step on that on November 8, a very good first step according to the commentary that I have been reading. It is that new economic policy which is designed to stabilize the situation in the exchange markets and give lead to a period of longer term strength in the performance of the Canadian dollar. It is a performance that has dropped from 103 to the current level during most of the time that the previous Government was in power.

• (1420)

Let me respond specifically to the question that the Leader of the Opposition posed about my discussions with the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I have regular discussions with the Governor, as I am sure the Leader of the Opposition did when he was the Finance Minister. Surely he should understand that those discussions between the Governor of the Bank and myself are confidential. I have stated the policy of the bank previously outside the House. We are in an international situation—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Members on the other side are laughing. Surely they understand—

Mr. Chrétien: Read back what you said last year about the same thing.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If they are interested in hearing the answer I will tell them that we are in a situation that is world-wide in its implications. All currencies are suffering a period of weakness against an extremely strong U.S. dollar.

If we were talking about a bilateral relationship it might be a different situation, but we have the situation in which a number of currencies are extremely weak against the dollar. We are trying to moderate those changes, both in the exchange markets and in the interest rate markets, to introduce a degree of stability and rebuild confidence in the Canadian dollar. That is the policy of the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY BANK OF CANADA GOVERNOR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): A great deal of the Minister's problem is that the confidence of the business community in the Government has been slipping radically, affecting the Canadian dollar.

In his next conversation with the Governor of the Bank of Canada, would the Minister ask him to make an early statement on the role of the Bank in intervening in the foreign exchange and whether the Bank is deliberately letting the dollar fall in an attempt to stabilize the interest rate structure in this country? Would the Minister ensure that the Governor make that statement, either before the committee or publicly?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me respond to the preamble to the question about less confidence here. Let us review what has happened to the level of the Canadian dollar in the last few months. The U.S. dollar has appreciated against the Canadian dollar by 7.4 per cent since September 4. The Deutschmark has depreciated by 17 per cent against the U.S. dollar, the pound sterling 20.9 per cent, and the French franc 16.5 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Surely there is not a degree of weakness in the Canadian dollar. Surely the Leader of the Opposition should see that there is a significant degree of strength against the U.S. dollar when compared to these other currencies.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Thank you. Supplementary.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If 71.35 cents is strong, then we are in for trouble under this Government.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): If the hon. gentleman is not willing to persuade the Governor of the Bank of Canada to make a statement, and since he obviously will not bring in an early Budget, for extraneous reasons that I won't mention again, will he make an early statement to the House about the Government's position on the exchange, on interest rates, and the effect this is having on unemployment and the loss of jobs? Will he make that statement in order to restore some confidence to the foreign markets, as they affect our currency?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one reason why we found ourselves with a weaker Canadian dollar over the past seven or eight years is the size of the federal government deficit, which the Leader of the Opposition should understand. He was the father, and the Member for Saint-Maurice was a contributing member in that little fraternity of Liberal Finance Ministers who were increasing the size of the deficit.

I have made the policy of the Government and the Bank of Canada quite clear in dealing with this international phenomenon, the unprecedented strength of the United States dollar. It is to try to moderate those changes both in interest rates and the exchange rate.

I would welcome sitting down with the Hon. Member at his convenience to get the benefit of his great experience—

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —to hear any points of view he would like to give me and contribute to the discussion.

FINANCE

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I think the Minister will have to admit that during the election campaign, his Party proposed solutions to the problems we were facing. Today, our dollar is at its lowest level ever, and interest rates have increased by 130 percentiles within two weeks. My question is therefore quite simple: What is happening? Has the business community lost confidence in the Government or does the Minister of Finance perhaps not agree with a statement made last June by his colleague, the Minister of Justice, who said:

[English]

"A lower dollar will not help the economy despite its beneficial effect on exports. We cannot afford to have a dollar that is continually sinking."

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the suggestion by the Hon. Member and his Leader that the business community has lost faith in this Government is totally ridiculous. I believe that the business community, according to the comments that I have received from it, is delighted that there is a Progressive Conservative Government in office today dealing with the very severe financial and economic problems that were left to us by previous Government.

Mr. Chrétien: You are losing too often, Mike.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I suggest to the Hon. Member that he should look around him to see who is losing.

I have made the policy of the Government quite clear, and I would also welcome any suggestions from the Hon. Member as well.

[Translation]

OPPORTUNITY TO DEFINE GOVERNMENT'S BUDGETARY POLICY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the business community may have confidence in the Government, but it was responsible for 80 per cent of the trading of Canadian for U.S. dollars last Friday. I do not know whether that can be called confidence. Considering the fact that the Canadian economy is losing on two fronts, namely interest rates are rising and the dollar is dropping, does the Minister of Finance not think it would be appropriate to define his budget policy as soon as possible by bringing down a budget very shortly?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I take a minute to explain to the Hon. Member why the Canadian dollar is falling? When there is this significant pressure from the world-wide strength of the U.S. dollar, investors will back away from the weaker currency. The investors will push up interest rates. The Bank of Canada has been trying to moderate those interest rates by following a very delicate balance which it has been undertaking over recent weeks.

I can say to the Hon. Member that interest rates would be higher today had it not been for the policies that have been followed by the Bank of Canada and the Government in the past two or three weeks.

THE SENATE

BLOCKAGE OF FINANCIAL LEGISLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, now that we have passed the period for Statements on Motions, I will ask the Deputy Prime Minister a question. He is aware that the Senate is blocking passage of a Bill that has already been passed by the House of Commons. Considering that this action, by an undemocratic body that is responsible to no one, is costing Canadians millions of dollars, will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us what the Government plans to do about this deplorable situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will allow the question, but before the Deputy Prime Minister answers I would remind Members of the traditions of not commenting upon and discussing matters that are before the other place. I will allow the question and one answer, but I am watching the questions very carefully.

● (1430)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, the Report on Senate Reform was published just prior to the recess last summer. My latest information is that the action of the other place in considering the borrowing legislation that passed this House unanimously has already cost the taxpayer some $9 million in increased commitments, as a result of a rather silly action.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nielsen: It seems to me that the Leader of the New Democratic Party makes a good point. Perhaps the Senate would be fulfilling a far more fruitful role if it examined and acted upon the report of the Senate Committee on Reform rather than holding up the legislation as the Senate is doing now on the borrowing measure passed by this House.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT ON ABOLITION OF SENATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, without reference to anything that is now before the Senate, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, considering what this happy hunting home for former Liberal hacks—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —is likely to do next month, two months, or six months from now, and is now doing, to frustrate the will of the democracy, will the Government do the correct, democratic thing, and bring in steps that will lead to the early abolition of this abominable institution?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, once in a while we very much appreciate suggestions made by members of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I will take it back.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Let me say I appreciate also the standing ovation I received from members of his caucus when I stood up to answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I can only say to the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party that it seems to me, when the will of the House of Commons is being thwarted by Liberal members of the Senate, and the Leader of the Opposition has been called upon by correspondence, from myself and from the Prime Minister, to take a position of leadership in this country and not let himself be run by the Liberal majority in the Senate—

Mr. Speaker: No. With due respect—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —it is time he acted.

Mr. Speaker: Precisely because I was worried about certain comments being made, I indicated these questions are on slippery ground, and I rose. I say again to the Members, that just as Members in this House are entitled to respect so are members in the other place.

REQUEST THAT NO FUTURE APPOINTMENTS BE MADE TO SENATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question concerns constitutional reform affecting the other body.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The question I have for the Government House Leader is simply this. Since he seems to be in accord with the view held by some that the other institution, with which we are associated from time to time, is something less than totally desirable—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —would he agree that a Senate dominated by Conservative appointees will be no better in the future than one dominated by Liberals now?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: If so, will he promise the House and, more important, the people of Canada, that the Conservatives will not appoint any more Senators and will bring in major reform soon?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party as a Privy Councillor knows full well that the appointment of Senators falls within the exclusive prerogative of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Unfortunately.

Mr. Nielsen: I reiterate that it would produce far more fruitful results if the Senate, instead of engaging in its present exercise, would get down to reviewing the Report on Senate Reform so it can look into that as well as several other questions that will come to mind immediately upon reviewing that report.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF NORWEGIAN PARLIAMENT'S COMMITTEE ON DEFENCE

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the proceedings to advise the House of the presence in our gallery today of the Norwegian Parliament's Defence Committee led by its Chairman, Mr. Knut Olav Frydenlund.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

MANUFACTURING SECTOR—EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Economic growth in Canada will be severely hampered if the present combination of decreasing dollar values and increasing interest rates continues, especially if our manufacturers continue their present reliance on imported components. Does the Minister of Finance have any plans to protect Canada's competitive position so that no further jobs are lost in the manufacturing sector?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker—Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Through you to Madam Member—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: It must be the beard.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I thought your back was turned, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me respond to the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker. the question of higher interest rates is not something that we on this side of the House like to see. As I explained in response to one of the previous questions, it is something that is not totally within the control of the Government. Investors are backing away from the weaker currency. That in turn is pushing interest rates up. The Bank of Canada is trying to moderate that increase in interest rates, and has done so in recent weeks.

The question of the exchange rate is a mixed blessing. Some industries are very pleased to see the lower level of the dollar because they are able to export more, at greater profit to them. Others which are importers are obviously adversely affected. The balance there is a difficult one to judge as to which way we are better off. I think it is a decision that individual investors are going to be making.

I point out to the Hon. Member that the direction of the November 8 statement is designed to improve the competitive position of Canadian industry. I would hope that Hon. Members would give more support to that economic statement, because that is a clear sense of direction—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

CREATION OF JOBS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Government was quick to take credit for the 100,000 jobs created in the early part of its mandate, but the Minister does not seem to be prepared to take any responsibility for the 170,000 jobs lost more recently. I repeat, since this Government promised jobs, jobs, jobs, based on increased business confidence, when are we going to see the jobs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the direction of the Government is totally unchanged in that regard.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have set out very clearly the policies in the November 8 statement, which observers right across Canada say will result in a stronger economy, a more competitive economy, and more jobs being created.

I do not like the increase in interest rates, as I said in my previous answer. Once we have achieved some stability in the current situation in the exchange markets, I hope that we will see those interest rates decline.

THE SENATE

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF REFORM MEASURES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It involves a subject raised by our Leader. We want to know whether the Government is going to introduce reform of the other house, the place with the largest Liberal caucus in this country, or are we going to continue to be one of the few nations in the world where an unelected body can thwart the will of the majority?

● (1440)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I believe, Sir, I have already answered that question. Perhaps the Hon. Member is not aware or has not read the report of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform, which was published just prior to our summer break last June. In it there are several worth-while recommendations which should be considered. I have suggested that a good place to start that consideration would be in the other place itself, but then the Leader of the Opposition there is not overly known for his reformist characteristics.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I refuse to enter into a dialogue over whether or not the body which has to reform itself should do the investigation, but I would say that if the Government is willing to introduce legislation to abolish the Senate, this Party will reverse its position on capital punishment in order to expedite that action.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: Will the Government introduce legislation itself, or will it leave it up to the Senate to reform itself?

Mr. Axworthy: A Party of great principle, that is what it is.

Mr. Chrétien: You are on the ropes.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An Hon. Member: Is he speaking for his Party?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I take it Hon. Members are ready to return to the House of Commons.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I think I can answer that question with a sense of dispassion that only a son of a Senator can address in this particular instance. However, I assure the Hon. Member that, notwithstanding my heritage, and the fact that at one time I was employed in that august institution, when the initiative of the Government in this regard is taken, and if that initiative will be taken—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —the matter will be discussed with Opposition House Leaders. I can only tell the Hon. Member that actions by the Hon. Senators at this time are lending themselves to a groundswell with respect to the whole question of Senate reform.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PREMIER'S TRIAL—SOLICITOR GENERAL'S MEETING WITH PREMIER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and it concerns the fairness of our criminal justice system. Last Thursday the Minister of Justice finally saw the light. He joined with us and every major newspaper in the country in condemning the Solicitor General for his abysmally poor judgment in meeting with Premier Hatfield on October 7 at the Chateau Laurier. The Minister of Justice said, and I quote: "if I was in opposition, I would have asked for his immediate resignation". He went on to say that it was politically unwise of the Solicitor General to meet with Premier Hatfield.

I should like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he agrees with his Minister of Justice that it was politically unwise to meet with Premier Hatfield at the Chateau Laurier, and consequently that a resignation should be forthcoming.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, without in any way accepting the hidden premises in the preamble to the Hon. Member's question, and answering the general thrust of the question, that has been done by me on several occasions in the past three weeks. The answers have been recorded in Hansard. I have no reason now to alter the views I have expressed and which are of record.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT MEETING

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I find it somewhat difficult to get answers out of the Government on this particular issue. I should like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister about a particular incident. On October 23 it was reported that Premier Hatfield was in Ottawa, and in view of the fact that there was a high level—

Mr. Speaker: With due respect, I would like a question, please.

Mr. Nunziata: In view of the fact that there was a high level meeting at the Justice Department on October 24, and at that meeting it was decided—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It concerns the Eastman Commission of Inquiry on the Pharmaceutical Industry. Could the Minister tell the House the progress of that inquiry and whether the Commission will be reporting to Parliament this week?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for her question. I can assure her that the Eastman Commission's report is expected by February 28, and unless we are otherwise notified, we are still expecting the report on that date.

INCOME TAX

FARMERS' INCOME—TAX CALCULATION BASE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance whose recent white paper on farm tax matters is being interpreted by the press as having indicated that farmers earn twice as much as average Canadians and that they pay only a quarter as much income tax as average Canadians. Since this conclusion was based upon the assumption that inflated land values should be imputed as taxable income, could the Minister assure the House that it is not his intention to move off taxing on a cash basis and to an imputed value basis of income?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have read the media reports to which the Hon. Member referred, and I would say that there has been some misinterpretation of those media reports. We set out, in the tax discussion paper, a series of statistics which were the latest ones we had. We were anxious to get the whole report into committee—and I am hopeful that that will happen in a very short period of time—so that individuals in the farming community could come forward and give us the current state of the farming industry. We are very much aware of the downturn in the farming economy, but before I make the judgments which will be necessary for a Budget, I want to get up to date information from the farming community.

NET INCOME LEVELS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has talked about up to date information, would he supply the committee, when it is struck, with the information on 1984 returns, where I understand net income will turn out to be very similar to 1974 net income, yet there is a loss in land value approaching $4.5 billion? Will he bring that up to date for the committee?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question. We do not have those statistics in a compiled form. There has been some work done by the Farm Credit Corporation, and there has been some work done by the banking industry, on the current state of the farming community. We want to get that information before the committee, again to provide me with the information on which to make the judgments in a Budget. However, I would hope that when the reference comes forward—and I gather it will come forward today—Hon. Members opposite will support a quick reference of it to committee so that we can get on with the job.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—RCMP INTERNAL REVIEW

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I have given him notice of it in the hope of getting a real answer to the question. Weeks ago the Commissioner of the RCMP ordered an internal investigation of the Hatfield affair. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister when that report will be completed and whether he will agree now to make the substance of that report public, whether or not it serves the political interests of the Solicitor General?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Hon. Member for informing my office that he intended to raise the subject this afternoon. This has given me the opportunity of discussing the matter with the Commissioner of the RCMP who informs me that the internal review now under way, is being pursued vigorously, and the expectation is that it will be completed very shortly, perhaps as early as this week. With respect to the second part of his question, I am sure he would not expect me to say that a report will be made public before it is even completed let alone read.

● (1450)

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would remind him of the practice in the past of announcing in advance when a report would be made public. I have a supplementary question. Knowing how the reputation of the RCMP has been damaged by the allegations of a provincial Premier—the Mounties are out to get them, they lied in court, they are out to bring down a provincial Government—and that these allegations are contradicted before the internal report is even completed by the Minister of Justice, does the Acting Prime Minister not realize the importance, with that background, of having a full, independent public inquiry into this entire mess?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have said before in response to similar questions that any consideration of a public inquiry now would be premature until such time as the internal review has been completed and the Government is seized of it. With respect to the reputation of the RCMP, we on this side need take no lessons whatsoever from those over there who made it almost a life's work to denigrate and destroy the reputation of the Force.

FORESTRY

REFORESTATION IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry. On Thursday, in Vancouver, the federal Minister of State for Science and Technology stated that, rather than use federal dollars to replant trees in British Columbia, those same federal dollars should be diverted and used to develop new products and to improve productivity. Is that now the view of the Minister of State for Forestry and of the new Government?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing wrong. We made the statement collectively before that there is a need to develop higher value added products in the industry. There is nothing wrong with saying that. There will be some dollars allocated for just that kind of thing in research and development. What is important is that at this time planting trees, silvaculture, and forest management, are the priority of the Government.

NEGOTIATION OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, now that we know that the Minister of Science and Technology does not know what he is talking about, I would like to ask the Minister of State for Forestry a simple question. Last year his officials were negotiating with British Columbia for $60 million a year for the Canada-B.C. reforestation agreement. It is now $30 million. Why the 50 per cent cut to British Columbia?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, obviously the premise is wrong. Nobody has ever suggested a figure of $30 million per year. It has been mentioned in this House on several occasions by the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, that an agreement will be signed. It will be a very good agreement, certainly a lot better than that which was signed by the previous Government.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES—QUOTA INQUIRY

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. The current quota program against the importation of Japanese automobiles ends next month. The whole of Canada's automobile industry, manufacturers, parts suppliers, and labour, say that thousands of Canadian jobs are at risk if the import quotas are not continued. My question to the Minister is simply this: Will the import quotas be continued?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): In reply to the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, I would advise him that we are aware of the expiry date. We have had discussions with the various officials in the Ministries involved. The matter is under review. We hope to announce what our policy will be before March 31.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

REASON FOR GOVERNMENT'S REFUSAL OF $100 MILLION GRANT TO DOMTAR

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary.

Taking advantage of the fact that Parliament was not in session, the Minister announced last week that the Government has decided to turn down a $100 million grant for Domtar. Since this Government has emphasized many times the importance of proper forest management and of our exports, what are the reasons behind this decision which may cause Quebec's economy to lose as many as 4,000 jobs?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister, who is out of the country on government business, I might tell the Hon. Member that the company which has made the application is essentially sound, as is the application itself. The Government, however, in its wisdom, has thought it important to decline money at this time on the grounds that to fund the application would be disruptive of the market. There are five other major companies waiting in line with similar submissions. To give the money that is requested to Domtar would be to place the Government in an almost impossible position to decline the requests of the other companies. I might say that the company in question has already received some $20 million from the Government under different auspices, and at different times. The final consideration, which the Hon. Member might also want to take into account, is the possibility that the Government of the United States would consider any subvention from us for this purpose a contravention of GATT type agreements.

INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC GOVERNMENT CONSULTED

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister inform the House whether the Government consulted with the Government of Quebec which has already paid out $85 million, and does the Government realize that without its contribution, this project may have to be cancelled?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, the Government did deliberate very carefully on the application. The Government viewed the plans of the company in question as sound, and recognized the contribution that would be made to the relevant province and to the economy as a whole should the project go ahead. However, after a lot of consideration, it thought it not desirable to approve the application and the funds in connection with it. Instead, it recommended very strongly that the company might wish to seek other sources of funds available in the private sector.

CANADIAN COMPANY'S INVESTMENT IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same Minister. In his response the Minister mentioned the Government of the United States and the possible reaction by that body to an investment by the Canadian Government in the Domtar Mill. Last December, Great Lakes Forest Products of Thunder Bay announced that it was building a major pulp and paper mill in Washington State to compete directly with paper mills in British Columbia. Can the Minister advise this House how, on one hand, the Government is prepared to allow a Canadian company, which has received a lot of money from the taxpayers, to invest in the United States to take away our jobs, and is not prepared to support a company in Canada to build in Canada to protect existing jobs?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I think the premise of the question is wrong, as is the conclusion. This Government has been more generous in funding legitimate applications in a short period of time, something like 25 weeks in office, than the previous Government was in any comparable period. We have considered each application on its own merits. In the case of Domtar we found it inadvisable that the Government of Canada should spend the kind of funds that were requested, given the market conditions that prevailed both in Canada and abroad.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, on one hand a number of pulp and paper companies in Canada have received those kinds of grants in the past. There is no question that help was not needed because of the way the Liberals wanted to deal with things. Will the Minister advise the House whether he will now reconsider the Domtar application and look at the Great Lakes Forest Products investment in the United States and tell that company to bring its money back to Canada?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member will appreciate that circumstances in the marketplace change. At a time when the Government of Canada, including the previous administration, looked kindly on certain applications, market conditions were very different from those that prevail now. The Domtar application was viewed in light of circumstances now, not in light of circumstances that prevailed two or three years ago.

RAILWAYS

DERAILMENT AT PETAWAWA, ONT.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. The 27 cars of a freight train derailed at Petawawa yesterday morning has once again focused the serious attention of Canadians on the transportation of dangerous goods. While local police, the fire department, and ambulance services were on the job and efficient, I ask the Minister how many more accidents will have to take place before he vigorously applies the regulations of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act passed in the last Parliament?

● (1500)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to receive the representations of the Hon. Member. He will know that the regulations for the transportation of dangerous goods have just been promulgated and they will take effect in stages over a period of time. There has been some resistance within the transportation sector, but I am pleased that the Hon. Member, and I assume he is speaking on behalf of his Party, will support that.

With respect to the specific accident in question, I am pleased to advise the House that the CTC is investigating the situation and I expect a report will be handed down in due course.

RAIL INSPECTIONS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, why has the Minister allowed a shoddy standard of maintenance on the railways such that a broken rail caused 27 cars, three of which burned, to go off the rails on the CP main line?

Mr. Deans: Since September, why have you allowed this?

Mr. Hopkins: Will the Minister give a personal undertaking to see to it that all the rails are thoroughly inspected at all times and special emphasis is placed on the inspection of bridges during flood conditions such as these?

Mr. Deans: Up until September it was maintained thoroughly.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Members would agree that it would be rather presumptuous for me to accept the findings of the Hon. Member unless he has been monitoring the track during this period of time. If he has been, he should have reported such to the CTC.

I will certainly await the report of the CTC. I think they are perfectly qualified to conduct the investigation, and, whatever corrective action is required, this Minister will take such action.

PRIVILEGE

REMARKS OF MR. HNATYSHYN IN QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Speaker: When the House last adjourned a question of privilege had been raised by the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins). I am prepared to hear the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on the same question of privilege.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I understand that on February 15 the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke rose on a question of privilege with respect to remarks attributed to me at page 2349 of Hansard of the previous day. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to cast any reflection on the Hon. Member, who is an honourable Member. I take this opportunity to unequivocally and absolutely rescind, revoke and expunge from the record any attribution with respect to the character of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker: I presume that ends the matter.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to compliment the Government House Leader on his retraction. That is the way this House should act and I thank him.

PETITIONS

CLOSURE OF NATIONAL POSTAL MUSEUM

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a substantial number of concerned Canadians with respect to Canada's National Postal Museum being scheduled to close on March 4 of this year. The petitioners ask the House of Commons to use its legislative authority to assure that Canada's National Postal Museum will not be closed as scheduled, and that a permanent site be found where these postal artifacts will continue to be available for the enjoyment of the Canadian public and international visitors.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS-FREE ZONE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of Project Plowsharks signed by many people from the Kamloops-Shuswap area commending the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and encouraging him to continue with his Government's policy of no nuclear weapons stationed on Canadian soil, and of having no plan, current, pending or anticipated, that would have the Government of Canada involved in any way with the Star Wars scheme.

NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I also have the opportunity to present another petition on behalf of a substantial number of individuals from the Kamloops area, protesting Canada's continuing participation in the arms race, particularly its support of the Star Wars proposal of the American Government. They suggest that the Cruise missile in fact is not a defensive weapon by its very nature. They encourage the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to follow the words of John Paul II when he said: "Do not follow leaders who train you in the ways of death; love life, respect life, in yourself and in others". They call upon their fellow citizens of Canada to hear these words and for their political leaders—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the Hon. Member is going a little longer than one should go in the presentation of a petition.

CNCP TELEPHONE SERVICE APPLICATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of members of the Federal Superannuates National Association expressing concern at the entry of CNCP into the long-distance telephone business because of its potential impact on a comprehensive and moderately priced telephone service for all Canadians, particularly retirees. They petition Parliament to deny CNCP's application to permit its entry into the long-distance telephone business.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF DISCUSSION PAPER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations with the Opposition House Leaders and with the agriculture critics of the respective Parties. I think you will find an inclination to accept a draft order which I will now read for presentation as the first item an Orders of the Day following Routine Proceedings. I think this would be the correct procedure to follow, although I will accept your advice. I believe there are some Members who want to address this particular motion before it is passed. There is an agreement to pass this discussion paper to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and my understanding is that there will be no more than two speakers from the Liberal Party, one speaker from the New Democratic Party, and we will possibly have one speaker in reply.

Mr. Speaker: If I can interrupt the proceedings, I take it the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is seeking unanimous consent for the introduction of a motion and, in effect, a unanimous House order that the matter be scheduled as the first item for debate. I must now, I think, treat it as a Government Notice of Motion for today, in effect, but introduced by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Can we now have the motion and I think I know what to do with it then.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The draft order is as follows:

That the discussion paper entitled Tax Issues in Agriculture, tabled January 31, 1985; be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs;

That the Committee examine and report on the proposals contained therein and, in particular:

(i) the need for limitations on the deductibility of farm losses against non-farm income for part-time farmers and the appropriateness of the current limitations under Section 31 of the Income Tax Act;

(ii) the appropriateness and consequences of relieving the farm community of the general requirement to include one-half of capital gains on the sale of farm land in income for tax purposes; and

(iii) the appropriateness of using the tax system to provide assistance through an agri-bond mechanism and the implications related thereto; and

That the Committee report its findings no later than April 1, 1985.

Mr. Speaker: There being unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion, the motion is thereby introduced and transferred to Government Orders for debate under Orders of the Day.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to make my reply today, as there are some 15 questions which are being answered.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: It will bring it up to 46.2 per cent of the questions which have been asked to date. That is 15 per cent more than the last Parliament.

LOTO CANADA INC.

Question No. 57—Mr. Howie:

What are the (a) names (b) positions of the persons who occupy positions on the Executive and Board of Directors of Loto Canada Inc. and, in each case, what amount was he/she paid in respect of that position in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1984?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): During fiscal year 83/84, and until December 31, 1983, the members of the Board of Directors of Loto Canada Inc. were: Ms. Danielle Desbiens, Mrs. Dorothy Pratt and Mr. Gordon Kritsch. Mrs. Pratt and Ms. Desbiens each received an amount of $250 per day for attendance at board meetings. As a public servant, Mr. Kritsch received no stipend. During that period, there were a total of seven one-day meetings. As a result, Mrs. Pratt and Ms. Desbiens received a total of $1,750. The general manager of the Corporation during this period was Mr. Gordon Kritsch, who was on loan from the Department of Labour and thus not paid by Loto Canada Inc. In December, 1983, Mr. John Gow and Mr. André F. Lizotte were appointed directors of Loto Canada Inc. As these individuals were also directors of the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation, they received no stipend from Loto Canada Inc. for attendance at meetings. In November, 1983, Mr. Kritsch became an employee of the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation but continued to act as general manager of Loto Canada Inc. without compensation from that corporation.

OFFENDERS ON MANDATORY SUPERVISION

Question No. 70—Mr. Nunziata:

1. Within the correctional system, how many offenders are currently on (a) mandatory supervision (b) temporary release (c) parole?

2. For each of the categories in part I, how many were originally convicted for crimes of violence?

3. (a) As of April 1, 1984, how many institutions within the correctional system were equipped to accommodate conjugal visits and what are their locations (b) for the fiscal year 1984-85, what is the total forecasted cost of each (c) how often are they used?

4. What is the average age and level of education of correctional officers at (a) Archambault Penitentiary (b) Millhaven Penitentiary (c) Saskatchewan Penitentiary?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): 1. (a) 2090. (b) The following information on temporary release is for unescorted temporary absences only. At the present time the offender information system does not store actual release data on day parole releases. On November 13, 1984, there were 34 inmates under unescorted temporary absences into the community. (c) 4111.

2. (a) 1064. (b) Of these, 19 had a major offence of violence. (c) 2365.

3. (a) and (b) As of April 1, 1984, 22 family visiting units were in use at 17 institutions.

* The costs provided are for the units and their installation. Details on operation and maintenance costs are not retrievable since they are merged with general institutional expenses such as heat, hydro and laundry.

Please note that the variance in the initial cost of certain units depended on whether part or all of the work was done by contract, casual labour or inmates: whether the project was designed by consultants or by Public Works Canada; the distance required to bring in essential sanitary and water services, whether, in the case of a family visiting trailer, it had to be hoisted over the institution's fence or wall; the length of fencing required; and, the quality of furniture, accessories and amenities provided.

(c) Each family visiting unit is used on a regular basis except for one day during the week when it is closed for maintenance purposes and in the case where a cancellation occurs.

Normally, approved inmates are allowed visits of up to 72 hours at S3-S5 (medium security) institutions and up to 48 hours at S6 (maximum security) institutions. The Warden may grant a longer visit if warranted by exceptional circumstances. Until October, 1984, an inmate was limited to one family visit every three months. Now, if the number of participating inmates and the facilities permit, a private family visit may take place every two months.

The national utilization rate, derived from the number of days that available units are actually in use, was 70.59 per cent during the third quarter of 1984. Regionally, however, the figures vary considerably. A number of factors, including the ease and frequency with which visitors can reach institutions, affect the utilization rate in different areas.

CBC—CUTS IN PROGRAMMING IN MONCTON

Question No. 120—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Will the $75 million cuts in the CBC budget affect the Moncton area and, if so, in what way?

2. Will they affect French programming and, if so (a) who is responsible for allocating cuts throughout the network (b) what will be the percentage of cuts in the Moncton area (c) will French culture in New Brunswick be affected and, if so, are alternatives planned for Acadians?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Yes. In Moncton, the Corporation operates French radio and television and English radio facilities. The $75 million budget cuts have meant that the total CBC establishment in Moncton will be reduced by eight positions out of 172.

2. A few regional French radio and television programs will be affected. In television, the Monday to Friday 5-minute newscast at 1.05 p.m. and Au gré des vents will be cancelled. No immediate changes are planned in local radio programming. In both radio and television, programs that may be vulnerable have been identified, but the full impact of the cuts will not be known for some months.

(a) The Board and the President on the recommendation of the appropriate officers of the Corporation.

(b) The reduction is 5 per cent of the Moncton French services budget.

(c) Every effort will be made to minimize the effects of the budgetary reductions.

TOURISM ADVERTISING PLAN

Question No. 121—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Did the Ministry of State for Tourism establish an advertising plan in order to promote Canada's arts and various cultures (a) in Canada (b) abroad and, if so (i) what is it (ii) at what cost?

2. Was the contract awarded to an advertising firm and, if so (a) to whom (b) on what date will the ads appear?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): 1. No. 2. Not applicable.

SUMMER CANADA PROGRAM

Question No. 122—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Did the Department of Employment and Immigration abolish the Summer Canada Program and were there any consultations and, if so (a) with which individuals or organizations (b) on what dates?

2. How many (a) young persons were employed through the program (b) work weeks were allocated to the program?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. As part of the expenditure reductions announced in the November 8, 1984, economic statement, the Summer Canada program was terminated, with the exception of Canada Employment Centres for Students. Consultations did not form part of the Government's decision to terminate Summer Canada. (a) Not applicable. (b) Not applicable.

2. (a) Approximately 85,000 students were employed under Summer Canada 1984. (b) Approximately 930,648 work-weeks were created by Summer Canada 1984.

PROHIBITION OF IMPORTATION OF PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIAL

Question No. 139—Mrs. Pépin:

Did the Government ever prohibit the import of pornographic material and, if so (a) how many times (b) were legal proceedings taken and was the Government successful?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Yes, the Department of National Revenue has prohibited the importation of pornographic material.

(a) Totally accurate statistics are not available. Approximately 4,083 seizures and detentions of prohibited pornographic materials were made by National Revenue—Customs and Excise in fiscal year 1983-84.

(b) Section 50 of the Customs Act allows for an importer to appeal a Deputy Minister's decision to a court for a re-determination. Over the past three years, National Revenue—Customs and Excise has been involved in 23 court proceedings. Nine were abandoned by the appellant. Five are still outstanding. Of the remaining nine, five were rejected and four were found in favour of the appellant.

APPLICANTS FOR REFUGEE STATUS

Question No. 140—Mrs. Pépin:

1. Did the Minister of Employment and Immigration take action on the grievances of the Bangladesh Refugee Action Committee concerning hundreds of persons who applied for refugee status and who live in the Montreal area and, if not, does she intend to make a decision concerning some 20 to 25 applicants who have been ordered deported and, if so, on what date?

2. Will the Minister wait for Rabbi Gauther Plaut's document before taking action?

3. Did a Sikh applicant for refugee status submit his case to the Supreme Court and, if so (a) what is the status of the case (b) pursuant to what clause of the Canadian Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms was the case submitted?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. No. The essence of the "grievances" raised by some citizens of Bangladesh and members of the community who support their requests is that approximately 1,000 of them who are here without legal status should be allowed to remain in Canada even if their claims to refugee status are determined to be unfounded by the Minister of Immigration and the Immigration Appeal Board.

The Minister has considered this request and has advised all who have approached her office on this subject that blanket exceptions to immigration law and regulations are not justified. Those persons who have valid reason to fear persecution were they to return to their country will be protected in Canada. Those who do not will be expected to leave.

No. There is no provision in the Immigration Act for the Minister to intervene in cases once a removal order has been issued.

2. No.

3. The Supreme Court of Canada granted leave to appeal in seven cases (involving six Indians of Sikh origin and one Guyanese), which cases were argued in late April and early May, 1984. The appellants argued s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The court in December asked the lawyer for the appellants for additional representations with respect to the Canadian Bill of Rights, which it is now awaiting.

TEMPORARY ABSENCES—INMATES OF FEDERAL INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 171—Mr. Stackhouse:

In 1983, how many inmates of federal penal institutions were allowed to be temporarily absent on a regular basis and, of these, how many had been (a) parole violators (b) convicted of (i) murder (ii) manslaughter (iii) armed robbery?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Information provided for unescorted temporary absences only. At the present time the offender information system does not store actual data on day parole.

In 1983, 3,116 inmates received unescorted temporary absences. (a) 220. (b) (i) 122, (ii) 124, (iii) 427.

DIVORCE

Question No. 173—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. In (a) 1980 (b) 1981 (c) 1982 (d) 1983, how many divorces were granted and how many couples had been married less than (i) two years (ii) five years?

2. For the same years, how many individuals (a) were awarded maintenance and child custody and how many had to have court enforcement of these orders (b) do not receive maintenance payments because their former spouse moved out of the province?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): I am informed by the Department of Justice and Statistics Canada as follows:

1. The following table displays the number of divorces granted in 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983, how many of these couples had been married less than two years and how many less than five years.

Number of Divorces by Duration of Marriage, Canada, 1980 to 1983

	1980		1981		1982		1983
Duration of Marriage	Number	Percent of Total	Number	Percent of Total	Number	Percent of Total	Number	Percent of Total
Married less than 2 years	1,276	(2.1)	1,445	(2.1)	1,598	(2.3)	1,468	(2. 1)
Married less than 5 years	11,024	(17.8)	11,645	(17.2)	12,102	(17.2)	11,629	(17.0)
Total Divorces	62,019		67,671		70,436		68,567

2. (a) and (b) It is not possible to provide an accurate response to this question on a national or provincial basis because the necessary statistical information is not available.

However, the Final Report of the Federal-Provincial Committee of Enforcement of Maintenance and Custody Orders in Canada describes the types of statistics that are gathered by province. Copies of this report can be obtained by contacting Margo Haug, Department of Justice, at 993-5139.

VICTIMS OF CRIME

Question No. 174—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. In 1983, how many victims of crime claimed compensation from the Ontario Criminal Injuries Compensation Board?

2. What amount of compensation was awarded in total?

3. What is the government's present contribution to the Board?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice): 1 and 2. The subject matter of these parts falls within the administrative responsibility of the Province of Ontario.

3. The federal contribution to the Board in 1983-84 was $881,590.

DAY CARE PROGRAM

Question No. 177—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. In 1983, what government assistance was given to day care programs?

2. What is the (a) current cost of day care (b) total amount of federal-provincial funding of day care facilities?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Under the Canada Assistance Plan, which is administered by the Department of National Health and Welfare, the federal Government shares 50 per cent of eligible costs incurred by provinces and their municipalities in providing day care programs. Canada Assistance Plan expenditures in support of day care services totalled an estimated $75 million in 1983-84.

Through the National Day Care Information Centre, the Department of National Health and Welfare also provides consultation and information services to interested individuals and groups.

2. (a) Only a rough estimate is available which suggests that the cost of day care in Canada is approximately $400 million.

(b) In 1982-83, the latest year where figures are available, total provincial and municipal expenditures for day care approximated $214 million. Of this amount for 1982-83, $70 million was reimbursed by the federal Government through the Canada Assistance Plan. Federal sharing is less than 50 per cent because the Canada Assistance Plan does not provide for sharing of all types of costs nor does it share on behalf of all users of day care programs.

TRAINING PROGRAMS AT FEDERAL PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 189—Mr. Stackhouse:

In 1983, what types of training programs were offered by federal penitentiaries and what was the cost?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Training programs consisting of basic literacy, life skills, elementary, secondary (vocational and academic), accredited vocational and college level courses and university courses were offered to federal inmates in 27 institutions ranging from minimum security (S-2) to maximum security (S-7). Native inmates also benefited from such specialized courses as native language and native cultures, and inmates at the Prison for Women were allowed access to academic/vocational programs offered at Bath Institution.

The total cost for education and training in fiscal year 1983/84 was $22,175,420. This included staff and contract teachers' salaries, operating costs and inmate pay.

ACID RAIN

Question No. 199—Mr. Stackhouse:

What percentage of Canadian lakes (a) have been affected by acid rain (b) are nominally dead due to acid rain?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): At present, research is concentrated on the phenomenon of acid rain in eastern Canada where acidic precipitation is having its greatest effects:

(a) Estimates of the number of lakes in eastern Canada highly sensitive to acid rain and likely to be affected by current acid rain levels, are as follows: Ontario, 27 per cent; Quebec, 37 per cent; New Brunswick, 42 per cent; Nova Scotia, 47 per cent; and Newfoundland, 54 per cent.

(b) Estimates of acidified lakes which no longer support a fish population are as follows: Ontario, 5 per cent; Quebec, 15 per cent; New Brunswick, 6 per cent; Nova Scotia, 40 per cent; Newfoundland, 0 per cent.

NUMBER OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Question No. 226—Mr. Howie:

In 1984 (a) how many female workers were employed by the government, excluding Crown corporations (b) what was the total number of persons employed by the Government?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): The following table shows the total employment and the number of females employed in that part of the Public Service for which the Treasury Board is the employer (PSSRA 1, 1) for 1984:

	Total employees*	Females
December, 1984	236,185	98,703

* These numbers do not include Crown corporations, agencies with separate employer status (such as National Research Council, National Film Board), RCMP or military personnel.

These data reflect simply a count of the number of employees at one point in time. The Treasury Board controls the size of the Public Service by means of person-years, which represents one full-time person for 12 months or any equivalent such as 12 persons for one month.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker if question No. 81 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 81 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

AVERAGE ADMINISTRATIVE COST OF DELIVERY OF SUPPORT INCOME

Question No. 81—Mr. Angus:

For the past ten years, what was the total average administrative cost for the delivery of $100 of income support for each program administered, in whole or in part, by the government, including but not restricted to, such programs as provincial welfare, municipal welfare, Canada Pension Plan, CPP disability, old age pension, guaranteed Income Supplement, spouse's allowance, veteran's pensions, family allowance, unemployment insurance, manpower training allowance?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has responded to the questions which have been enumerated and entered his political asides.

Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF DISCUSSION PAPER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)) moved:

That the discussion paper entitled Tax Issues in Agriculture, tabled January 31, 1985, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs;

That the Committee examine and report on the proposals contained therein and, in particular:

(i) the need for limitations on the deductibility of farm losses against non-farm income for part-time farmers and the appropriateness of the current limitations under Section 31 of the Income Tax Act;

(ii) the appropriateness and consequences of relieving the farm community of the general requirement to include one-half of capital gains on the sale of farm land in income for tax purposes; and

(iii) the appropriateness of using the tax system to provide assistance through an agri-bond mechanism and the implications related thereto; and

That the Committee report its findings no later than April 1, 1985.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has finally put this matter before the House for debate. I believe the agriculture paper which was tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) three or four weeks ago is a very important document. I assume that the motion which the Government House Leader read to the House is the same motion as that which was in the preliminary draft which he gave to our House Leader a few days before the recess. At that time our House Leader indicated that we wanted a short debate with one or two speakers from our Party. Therefore, I appreciate that I have been provided with that opportunity this afternoon. However, in the future I wish that a motion such as this would be put on the Order Paper as that is the proper parliamentary procedure. If that is done, unanimous consent will not have to be sought as it was this afternoon, although that procedure works fine as long as everyone agrees.

The paper which was tabled by the Minister of Finance has raised a great deal of concern in the agricultural community. If we look at the press reports about the paper we would realize the reason for the concern. The press report of The Gazette on January 14 outlined the commitment which the Conservative Party made during the election campaign, which was to "establish an agri-bond program to provide loans at reduced interest rates to agricultural producers".

A tax exemption for earned income on these bonds will be provided to attract investment capital to this program.

The Conservative Party during the election campaign also indicated:

—tax rules for part-time farmers would be changed "to reflect the principles of equity, neutrality, simplicity and certainty" and arbitrary actions by the Revenue Department will be abolished.

The discussion paper which is now before the House makes no reference to the campaign commitments. It makes one wonder whether the campaign commitments have been totally forgotten by the Government. It is disturbing that the paper went on to point out that farmers pay some 4 per cent of their total farm income in income taxes. The paper goes on to suggest:

> The proposed changes in the taxation of capital gains and the agri-bond concept raise questions about unfair competition, the potential for upward pressure on farm land prices and fairness vis-à-vis other taxpayers.

It continues:

> Changing the $5,000 limit on farm losses a part-time farmer now can claim could jeopardize the position of full-time farmers—

That press report was of some concern to farmers across the country, but the press report of The Globe and Mail on February 23 gave them greater concern. The headline of the The Globe and Mail article read: "Study shows farmers earn twice as much as average Canadian". The Globe and Mail article outlined the white paper, which suggests that farmers are well off, that they have special tax concessions and that they do not pay their fair share of taxes.

I believe the allegations which were made in the newspaper reports and in the white paper are completely false and will not stand up to a close examination of the facts which exist in the agricultural community today. I would be surprised if the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), who unfortunately is not with us this afternoon, would want to adopt this paper as it now stands. If he does, it will be apparent that he has lost the battle in Cabinet on this paper to the Minister of Finance and the Department of Finance. The paper obviously reflects the view of the Department of Finance more than the view of the Minister of Agriculture and certainly of the agricultural community across the country. We could compare it with the battle which was waged at Meech Lake over the consultation paper that the Government drafted on social policy. In that case the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) clearly won the day and the Minister of Finance lost. If we looked at this paper we would see that the Minister of Finance and his Department controlled the battle which took place over the drafting and writing of the white paper on farm taxation issues. The paper does not reflect the true financial difficulties which farmers face today.

If we looked at the income situation for farmers over the last 10 years, from 1974 to 1984, we would see that net farm incomes in 1974 were almost $3.6 billion. Ten years later, in 1984, the net realized farm income is $5.8 billion. For a document which has the Minister of Finance's name on it, and which is supposedly supported by the Minister of Agriculture and the Tory caucus, to suggest that farmers earn twice as much as other taxpayers and have an exceptionally good position in the income scale of the country does not square with the facts which are evident in the agricultural community. We have only to look back at the Farm Credit Corporation report of last fall. It indicated that 39,000 farmers were in serious financial difficulty. That does not mean that those farmers are having trouble buying a new car. We are talking about people with equity which is less than 15 per cent. That is the criterion of the study. They are paying over 40 per cent of their gross income to meet their debt payments. They were borrowing more than they were investing in capital expenditures.

This paper does not really reflect the tough financial situation about which many farmers complain. As a matter of fact, when one looks through the paper one sees that the calculation of income is based on capital gain. How can a farmer take a capital gain which might exist on his property and go out and buy seed, fuel or fertilizer? That is just ridiculous. If there were a sharp capital gain during the mid-1970s, there certainly has been a dramatic, precipitous and disastrous capital loss in the last two or three years, and that is reflected in the Farm Credit Corporation report which was published in November of this year.

Therefore, I would point out to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture that this report really does not accurately reflect the income or the tax position of many farmers. For instance, it is pointed out that the income of full-time farmers in 1982 was $16,000 and the income of all non-farm tax filers was $16,732. On the previous page it points out that the average farmer in Canada has an equity investment of $416,000. When there is an equity capital investment of that amount and the farmer works 16 hours a day along with his wife and family, and he ends up with a net income of $16,000, he really is not even getting a decent return on his investment. He gets nothing for his labour, his wife's labour, and in many cases the labour of family members. So I feel that this report of the Minister of Finance is most unfair and does not accurately represent the financial situation of the farm community.

I talked to several farm families over the weekend who are really appalled at the way the Government has presented the position of farm families in this country. The report indicates the return on investment, including debt, in the years 1977 to 1983 varied between 2.4 per cent and 0 per cent. This provides practically nothing for wages and very little for the investment which the average farm producer has made.

I feel that we will need to have a very good discussion in the standing committee. We will want to know what kind of a tax expenditure the Minister of Finance is willing to commit to Canadian agriculture under an agri-bond system. We will want to know whether the Government really wants to keep its campaign commitment to abolish capital gains on farm land which continues to be used for agricultural purposes. But this document, at first blush, appears to be trying to do one of two things, or perhaps both; either it is a way to start the ball rolling for the Government to welsh on the three commitments it made during the election campaign, or else it is trying to present a rosy picture of the agricultural scene today in order to try to cover up the Government's lack of action on the farm debt crisis.

Clearly, one cannot read the Farm Credit Corporation report on the financial debt crisis of this country without coming to the conclusion that it is a very serious problem.

Farm properties have dropped anywhere from 25 per cent to 50 per cent in value. In many areas like northern Ontario or Timiskaming there has been a serious drop in farm value. This is not something which has just happened in this country. The United States is facing the same kind of problems. The only difference is that the United States has taken action and put in place various programs for their farmers where 25 per cent of a farmer's debt is set aside for a period of up to five years. Farm interest rates have been written down to 7 per cent or 5 per cent, and providing that puts the young farmer into a positive cash flow position, these benefits will be extended. But the United States has even gone beyond that in providing a loan guarantee system for finances which will assist its farmers.

I believe this paper is really designed to do one of two things; either to start in train a process so that the Government will be able to welsh on its campaign commitments relating to these three items, or to cover up as a smoke and mirrors show its lack of action for the serious financial debt crisis which is facing much of Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions and comments on the Hon. Member's speech? If not, we will resume debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on a motion to refer the report on tax issues in agriculture, published by the Government in January 1985, to the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, having listened to and read the speech made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) in this House more than a week ago, on February 15, I feel some trepidation with respect to the Minister's attitude. The Minister, in this very House, accused Opposition Members of not wanting to refer this paper to the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and I quote from Hansard at page 2402, Mr. Speaker:

> It dumbfounds me to witness this continuing reluctance on behalf of the Official Opposition to give us an opportunity to refer these three items to an appropriate standing committee.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, and we know the Chair does not take sides in the House, the Minister misled us, probably involuntarily, but just the same, we must admit the Minister was not being entirely frank, not quite honest when he told the House that it was the Opposition's fault if this Government was refusing to go ahead and help farmers, because the exact opposite is true.

Mr. Speaker, the discussion paper was not published until January 1985. I think this is rather strange, considering the fact that last summer, in July and August, the Government seemed to be willing to help farmers at any level.

[English]

I would just like to remind you, Mr. Speaker, of some of the campaign promises which the Tories made last summer. No doubt like us Liberal Members, Mr. Speaker, you have had to listen to that litany of campaign promises which bored you as much as it bored us, I am afraid. However, you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that there were specific promises made at that time to abolish the capital gains tax on the sale of farm property. There was no question then of issuing a document which would attempt to do the opposite or which would at least suggest that abolishing the capital gains tax would be difficult if not impossible.

The Tories also promised to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to offer agri-bonds. I have read this document, Mr. Speaker, and I can tell you that I am not convinced that the Government wants an issue of agri-bonds at all. I wonder why the Conservative Government during the election campaign could not have prepared a document which looked at the possibility of offering a program before they promised it to the public. It should have done that instead of offering the program and then going back to the electors of this country some four or five months later and accusing the Opposition of dragging its feet. It is the Conservatives who took four months to issue a document which they apparently were ready for in the month of August of last year, and in that same document they attempt to welsh on their promises.

This Government cannot have it that way, Mr. Speaker. Either it makes promises and intends to live with them, or just maybe those Hon. Members should stand up in this House and apologize to the Canadian public and tell the people of Canada: "We are sorry; we made 338 promises but we can only live with about four or five of them. Perhaps we didn't think about them properly". Maybe they should admit the mistakes they made last summer. They should not stand in the House intent on accusing the Opposition of dragging its feet and take five or six months to issue a consultation document when they claimed they were ready to implement a document of consultation last summer as well as to proceed with the legislation. This leads me to believe that when the Conservative Party was in opposition it thought that governing this country was a far easier job than it now finds it to be. That is probably because the Government did not think through its promises before making them.

• (1530)

The people of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell do not agree with the government reports we have been seeing in the last few weeks that farmers are in as good as or better a financial situation than others in the country. Our experience in Glengarry-Prescott-Russell has been quite the opposite. We have read in documents that the income of the average farmer is somewhat higher than that of people in business. The documents indicate that this is so as regards a full-time farmer versus people in business. They do not even specify whether the people in business are full-time or part-time. It could very well be that the people in full-time business of any kind make more than those who are not full-time. That still does not mean that the agricultural sector does not have a problem. The agricultural sector of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell has very serious problems.

[Translation]

Let me name just a few. Hog producers, in the riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell have suffered serious losses in recent years. In one community in my riding, twelve hog producers went out of business because of bankruptcy. Their production represented 8,000 slaughter hogs per year. Six more producers went out of business voluntarily, as opposed to going bankrupt, representing a total production of 2,000 slaughter hogs per year. Add to this several fires during the last four or five years as a result of which we lost five more producers who had an annual production of 2,400 slaughter hogs.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear that the position of farmers in Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is not that good. On behalf of my constituents, I want to say that we are waiting for the Progressive Conservative Party to come through with the promises it made during the last election campaign.

[English]

During the last election campaign the present Government, which was then the Opposition, proposed that it was going to extend and expand the Farm Credit Corporation special interest rate subsidy, that it would revise Section 31 of the Income Tax Act and do a variety of things for the farmers of the country. The people of my riding may not have voted Tory, but the day after the election they still expected the Government which had been elected to live up to the campaign promises it had made. But the Government did little or nothing. It only cut back. It made a series of cuts in agricultural programs. It has increased charges to the farmers of the country. The farmers of the country have been treated with very little respect.

One example of this lack of respect is that the Government has appointed a committee. In his speech to the Canadian Club of Toronto on February 13, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) announced the names of certain individuals who would be part of a study team on the agricultural program review. It is very important to outline this because it describes the attitude of the Government toward agriculture. I could not believe my eyes when I saw the list of the nine people appointed to this study team. None of them were farmers. None of the members were from western Canada. None of them were from the Maritimes. There were no women members and only one francophone. That is the type of committee the Government was in the process of establishing to review agricultural programs in the country. If those are the kind of people who are preparing Government programs, it is small wonder that they think everything is all right and that nothing needs to be improved. However, that is not the attitude of the farmers of the country. They require assistance from the Government.

It is our hope that sending this document to committee will persuade the Government to listen to the people of Canada. We hope the Government will listen to the farmers when they send delegations to appear before the committee to tell the Government that its campaign promises should be respected. The farmers of the country need assistance. They need agri-bonds. If the Government did not intend to deliver on its promise of agri-bonds maybe it should not have made that promise.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to agree with this motion to strike a committee in the Department of Finance to study the question of capital gains tax, agri-bonds, and Section 31 of the Income Tax Act as they affect farmers. We are somewhat curious as to why it has taken three or four months from the time the Minister announced such a decision and what the reason for the delay was. Apparently the Minister would like an answer very quickly in order that some of the recommendations can be incorporated into his Budget. I am not sure that that will be possible.

If that is the Government's intention, I think it is regrettable that the basis of the discussion in the finance committee will be this white paper prepared by the Department of Finance. I say it is regrettable, Mr. Speaker, because while the methodology of the study is reasonable in part, the Government did not take a very broad look at the issue. The data that it uses is from 1971 to 1981. It is a fact that it takes much longer than 10 years to understand agriculture. Some of the numbers generated in that particular period of time will be highly skewed in a particular direction.

I hope that this study will not be viewed as the Bible on the issue by those members of the committee who make the final decision. I hope they will recognize that some of the land value figures that are used start in 1971, which was one of the most depressed periods of time for agriculture, and end in 1981, which was the time when the peak in agriculture was just coming to an end. I hope the committee will remember that in 1984 preliminary figures show that rather than there being an augmentation in the value of farm assets, we lost between $4 billion and $4.5 billion worth of assets in the value of land and building of Canadian farms. This is because land values are now beginning to taper off. It is estimated that land prices dropped by 16 per cent last year. That was the first year in which we had such a tremendous downturn. It is expected that the downturn in land values will continue in 1985. If the committee makes recommendations based on some of the assumptions in this white paper, which indicates that farm incomes are very good if one takes into account the value of farm assets, the committee will be operating on some very questionable assumptions and will obviously make some wrong recommendations.

However, the data generated some interesting questions. I am sure that it has already been noted that according to the Statistics Canada census there are some 318,000 farms in this country. However, since Section 31 permits farm losses to hobby farmers or those trying to begin a farm operation, when it comes time to file income tax with Revenue Canada suddenly there are 450,000 Canadians who claim to be farmers, which is an extra 132,000 farmers recognized as such for income tax purposes. I believe the committee should conduct more research to determine who these farmers are, because the only information we have is from Table 13 of the white paper. It gives us an idea of the type of farmers some of these people are. For example, Table 13 from the white paper points out that 105 of these so called farmers have an average net off-farm income in excess of $400,000. Their farms must be moderate in size because they generate approximately $120,000 in sales. While these farmers with large incomes generate an average amount of farm sales it is particularly interesting to note the amount of their average farm loss. In this particular category it is $187,000 as opposed to the $120,000 worth of goods that they produce.

According to Table 13, there are some 1,643 taxpayers who are operating farms essentially to dispose of some of their off-farm incomes. They have off-farm incomes in excess of $100,000 and their farms produce approximately $22,000 worth of gross sales. These farms lose $32,000 each.

It is only when we see the figures for relatively low off-farm incomes that we get to the category in which the farm is earning more than it is losing. I suggest the committee should review carefully the figures for these farm incomes and farm losses.

The farms of those whose farm incomes are between $25,000 and $35,000 are the farms with greater sales than losses. These are usually young people who are beginning a farming operation. These farms are not being used simply to generate a big loss and avoid income tax. However, it is apparent from the manner in which Revenue Canada has been assessing part-time farmers that it is that lower income group that has given the most trouble. There does not seem to be any problem with so-called farmers whose average off-farm income is in excess of $400,000 but who show a farm-loss of $187,000 on a farm that produces approximately $120,000 of income. Presumably one can obtain a very good accountant with $400,000 of off-farm income in order to continue to write off those losses.

I raise this concern now, even before the committee begins its work, because I do not see any intention on the part of the Government to consider those people with large farm incomes. The Conservatives' campaign promise was to eliminate Section 31, which essentially legitimizes those very large non-farm incomes and permits those operations to take place without any restrictions. Those operations seem to take place in spite of Section 31. It is only those who earn below $35,000 in off-farm incomes who are affected by Section 31.

The question of capital gains tax has been debated in the House a number of times. The study paper rienforces some of the comments I made about the capital gains tax. Let me review those points very quickly. The current capital gains tax regime which permits an in family roll-over enables the very large farms to roll over within the family on a corporate or non corporate basis. These very large farms are able to generate enough farm income to allow the parents to retire without taking back their farm investment. That investment can simply be rolled over to the next generation.

Small and middle-income farmers can only retire upon recovering their lifetime investment in order to buy a retirement house and have enough income on which to retire comfortably. Therefore they must get money from the sale of their farm and subject themselves to some form of capital gains tax. The current tax system is inequitable because it has the effect of permitting some classes of farmers to avoid capital gains tax while taxing lower and middle income farmers, just as Section 31 does.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has asked the committee to make some recommendations as soon as four weeks from now. I have grave reservations about its ability to deal adequately with this particular problem in that time, and I merely raise it now so that government Members who will dominate that committee are aware of the present inequities as well as of those that will be created by adopting the white paper recommendation or eliminating the restrictions altogether, according to their campaign promises.

These would have a negative effect on lower and middle-income farmers. I hope the committee will be very sensitive to the special needs of Canada's 318,000 legitimate farmers. We should clearly identify the loopholes which have attracted the approximately 132,000 people who claim to be farmers when it comes time to file income tax.

I think the tax system has failed miserably to carry out the mandate it was given back in 1917 when the then Minister of Finance, Thomas White, said that he hoped the Tax Act would always take account of the difference between what he called "real" farmers who tried to make money and the "fancy" farmers who tried to lose it. I hope that the committee will pay special attention to the 8,200 farms which, for tax purposes, lose vast quantities of money, according to Table 13. Those losses are losses from the pockets of other taxpayers, some of whom are farmers. I hope that those anomalies will be corrected and a proper study can be generated in the few weeks we have to do so.

I am not optimistic that four weeks is enough time. I hope the committee will recommend to the Minister that more time is needed, otherwise farmers will be short-changed. They will have a quick-fix solution similar to what was offered during the campaign, and that quick-fix solution will affect negatively small and medium-sized farmers who are trying to make a living farming instead of going into farming to show losses so they can avoid tax on their off-farm income.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate this afternoon. I am very happy to see that this Order will now be referred to committee. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) made a good point when he said that he wondered why it had taken so long. No doubt a lot of us would have liked to have seen this issue in committee sooner. Had it not been for the Official Opposition, the Order would have been referred to committee a week ago last Friday and it would have been under way a little sooner. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre makes a good point in that more time is needed. I am sure his comments will be listened to. When we get to committee with the Order, that will be the time to make those comments known.

Let me address briefly some of the concerns raised by the three speakers. First, the official spokesman for the Opposition, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) raises some points to which I would like to respond. He wonders about the position of the Government on this matter. If he looks at the paper put out by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) entitled "A Discussion Paper", on page 1 he will find that it states, "This paper provides information and analysis to assist in consultation on these issues". The three issues are the ones referred to, namely, capital gains, Section 31, and agri-bonds. This paper is exactly what it says, a discussion paper. It is there to provide information and analysis to assist in consultation on these issues. It is nothing more than that. A lot of people would take issue with some of the points raised in the discussion paper. A lot of people would agree with people who take issue with some of the points in the discussion paper. It points out to me, that this Government recognizes that there are some concerns in agriculture and that we are willing to address them.

To be fair about this, we have been in office not quite six months but a number of things have been done. Let me name a few. Two weeks ago we had an Opposition Day on agriculture and many other things were referred to.

Let me outline what has been done. FCC rates were lowered for people in the unfortunate position of having interest on loans as high as 16.75 per cent. Tobacco legislation was put through to allow the tobacco industry, if it chooses, to move a marketing board situation which may help them with problems in marketing. The FCC has set up appeal boards on an experimental basis. They are under way. Very quickly the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) moved to provide drought assistance to livestock producers in the areas in the prairie provinces affected by drought.

Flood agreements were signed with Quebec, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. The Minister of Finance reduced the tax on farm fuels. Again, a week ago Friday—and I have to thank all the Parties involved—we passed amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act that are very useful. For a Member to stand up and say that this Government has not done anything or does not recognize the problems associated with agriculture, certainly belies the record of this Government so far on agriculture.

Mr. Thacker: Contrast that with the Liberals. They did nothing for years.

Mr. Mayer: The Member from Algoma said, and I think I quote him accurately, that some of these reports are "completely false and won't stand up to the facts". If that is the case, then we need to have this discussion paper at committee so that the farmers themselves can point out if in fact what the Hon. Member for Algoma says is true. He went on to say that the position as laid out in the discussion paper does not accurately represent the situation. Again, if that is the case, Mr. Speaker, let us hear about it. Let us hear from the farmers, the farm organizations and the groups involved.

It is unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) had to be so strident in some of the comments he was making. It is too bad the Member was not around when the previous Government was in office. He would know, when he is talking about capital gains tax, that it was a Liberal Government in the first place that was responsible for bringing in capital gains tax in 1972.

Mr. Gottselig: Absolutely right.

Mr. Mayer: It is too bad the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is not around now to hear what is going on. I can point out that we do not need to take any lessons on the farming community from the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell when the Liberal Party does not have one farmer in its caucus. We have a tremendous number of farmers in our caucus. We understand and we will be able to deal as best we can with the problems facing agriculture. I have already pointed out that the Minister of Agriculture has dealt with many of them already. As I said, it was a Liberal Government that brought in capital gains tax in 1972. The Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell would also know that in 1981, after the disastrous Budget of Mr. MacEachen, who is now reposing in another confine in this building, that Government abolished what we call the interest averaging annuity accounts. They were brought in to recognize some of the problems that capital gains tax made in the first place. That was replaced with what was called forward averaging, something no one could understand. Some reasonably knowledgeable mathematicians said that that was one of the most complicated taxation schemes ever designed by man, one that nobody could figure out. This Government's record in five months in terms of what we have done for agriculture should be compared to what the previous Government did, especially regarding capital gains, and I think it is a very unfortunate position for the Member to put himself into.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: When you look back at the last 15, 16, or 17 years of virtually unending Liberal rule, Mr. Speaker, you realize what a disaster that was on the economy. One of the reasons we have so many part-time farmers in Canada who come under Section 31 is the disastrous state of the farm economy which came about as a result of what the previous Government did.

I would say, in referring to the Hon. Member and his comments, that he should at least give us credit for recognizing the problems in the first few months in office and being prepared to deal with them at committee.

The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre pointed out that the current system of taxation is inequitable. A lot of people would agree with him. If there are some inequities in the taxation system, and he raised an important one today in Question Period concerning the possibilities of farmers going from a cash system to an accrual system, then let us get this issue to committee and get those things aired and aired by the people who have to live with them every day.

Let me close by making reference to the whole consultation process. One of the reasons so many people in the country are concerned about the consultation process is that they think about it in terms of the previous Government. Whenever they heard anything as a suggestion or a possibility, they always feared the worst because usually that is what they got. They got things without any kind of previous consultation. They got things which they did not necessarily want. They got them without having any input into them. When they see a discussion paper with figures in it which many people do not believe reflect the actual situation, they should take it for what it is—a consultation paper to start the discussion. This does not mean that everything in the paper will end up being part of the recommendation coming from the committee; it simply means that it is a consultation process.

• (1600)

If we think about referring this matter to committee in terms of genuinely trying to hear from the people who will be affected in order to obtain their points of view and to come up with the best possible solution, it is a very useful and helpful way to think about consultation. That is exactly what it is intended to do.

Again I refer to something which was said by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre. There is no doubt that the Government will have the vast majority of Members on the committee. He should take some solace from the fact that many Members on the committee will be either farmers like himself or will have a genuine and very thorough knowledge of the farming industry. That is what we should look at in terms of what comes out of the committee. Those are the people who will be looking at the recommendations. I hope—and at least I can speak for Hon. Members on our side—that the committee will work in a very non-partisan way. For a long time the tradition in this House—and I think it still exists—has been that the agricultural committee functions as one of the most non-partisan committees. It is genuinely interested in the well-being of Canadian agriculture. That committee recognizes how important agriculture is to the whole economy of the country. The best of that showed up a week ago Friday when we put through amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act in one day. That was very much appreciated. It sends out a very healthy, stable and worth-while signal to the farming community in western Canada that there will be an interim payment prior to spring seeding.

There are no legislative impediments. I am assuming that there will be no hold-ups as far as the Senate is concerned. Surely to goodness the occupants of the room for sober second thought over there will not see anything wrong with the Western Grain Stabilization Act. I am assuming that they will pass that legislation, but the main point is that it was dealt with very quickly in the House on a non-partisan basis. I appreciate that, as does everyone in the House and the entire farming community in western Canada.

If we can look at referring this discussion paper to the finance committee on that kind of a basis, with the idea that we will do something in the best interests of Canadian farmers from coast to coast on those three issues, it is the proper way to proceed. If more time is needed and that argument is made in committee, I am sure the Minister of Finance will have an open ear. If we deal with it on that basis, not on the basis we heard from the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), many of us in the House will be much better off and will be able to look forward to some worth-while recommendations from that committee to the Minister of Finance.

In conclusion, I thank Hon. Members for referring the matter to the finance committee. I wish them well in their deliberations and my hope is for speedy recommendation to be made to the Minister of Finance so that he will be in a position to deal with some of them in the coming Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). The response of the House on many Bills has been one of co-operation. For example, I could refer to the National Farm Products Marketing Act relating to tobacco and to the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

The motion before the House was first presented to the Official Opposition about three days before the mid-winter break. Reference was first made to it in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 7 or November 8. At that time the House Leader of the Official Opposition told the Government House Leader that we wanted to have a brief debate in the House. We waited for 10 or 11 days, and we still do not have a motion on the Order Paper. We have the motion before us and the matter is under Orders of the Day by unanimous consent, but does the Minister think that dealing with a matter like that and expecting the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to come up with a report in a month is realistic? He is portraying it as if we did not normally put motions on the Order Paper. If we want to make a reference to committee, the proper parliamentary procedure is to place it on the Order Paper. That still has not been done to date. Does he really think that that is co-operation on the part of the Government?

In view of the wording of the motion, is the Government really committed to the campaign promises of abolition of the capital gains tax, of the implementation of a system of agri-bonds, and of lower interest rates and long-term funding for agriculture? When one reads the white paper, the press reports on it and the motion, one cannot but think that there is a negative attitude toward these issues. The Minister says that he is keen to hear from farm groups. If my sounding of farm groups is representative of the representations which we will hear from them in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, they will not be very laudatory of this particular white paper.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first comment of the Hon. Member for Algoma, he talked about motions on the Order Paper. What he said is strictly true. Everyone appreciates that by unanimous consent we can virtually do almost anything in the House. Perhaps notice on the Order Paper, as far as the Hon. Member is concerned, would have been more appropriate. However, the important point is that we have it done today. Many times I have had discussions with him in the past on the Western Grain Stabilization Act. As long as there is an attitude and a willingness to co-operate, the most important thing is to get the job done. With regard to whether there is enough time, basically we have five weeks. Certainly more time would be useful and helpful. I do not think anyone would disagree with that, but it is better for us to have five weeks prior to April 1 than no time at all. As I said in reply to the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre, if the committee feels that it needs more time, that would be the point at which to decide it and make such views known. Certainly five weeks in terms of hearing the concerns is better than no time at all.

With regard to the third part of his question as to whether we are committed to the three areas—Section 31, capital gains and agri-bonds—the mere fact that we are referring them to committee gives an indication of the Government's intention. To be fair about it, there are also farm groups which are concerned about the removal of capital gains tax and what it can do to the price of farm land. I am not saying whether I agree or disagree with them. However, the point is that there is not unanimity in the farming community. They are concerned, just to make the case which I understand they make, that if we remove capital gains tax we allow people to come in who want to speculate on land and hold it against inflation. That in fact causes problems for people who want to buy land and want to farm it. There are points of view. It is worthwhile during committee stage to take a look at those various concerns. This is exactly what I hope will happen in committee. We will certainly be looking at those three issues in committee.

In conclusion, if we look at some of the things the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) has been doing in terms of the way Section 31 has been administered, I think he is making some strides in having his Department better understand exactly what makes a farmer or what constitutes a genuine farmer and what does not. In my constituency, I know of cases that have been sorted out since the Minister of National Revenue has been there. That has gone a long way, or at least a partial way, in addressing some of the concerns that we have over Section 31.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. Can we expect a certain amount of backup in the form of research? For example, 175,000 Canadian farmers are classified as part-time farmers. They lost $619 million, one-third more than the 48,000 full-time farmers. That kind of information is very important. The farmers who are classified in these areas constitute very important information. It is not the kind of information that we as committee members can get.

Can the Minister indicate what kind of research backup we can expect? Could someone from Revenue Canada give us an analysis of that particular issue under Section 31 as to who those farmers are? Do we want to find ourselves in the position of the United States where a section comparable to Section 31 was removed? That resulted in wealthy investors making it a way of losing or getting rid of some of their money for tax purposes. Can we expect considerable assistance?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) raises a very valid point. When we go to committee, many of us feel sometimes as if we were captives of the people who are there because we do not have the same kind of background and knowledge. I cannot in good conscience answer the question and say what the committee will or will not be able to do. As the Hon. Member can understand, basically committees are master of their own direction. If we look at the powers available to committees, committees in this House are able to do a lot more things that they are generally believed able to do. There are powers there that committees do not make use of.

In this case, one of the first things the committee will want to do when it convenes is to invite the Hon. Member to put those questions and make those concerns known. I would suspect that he would get a very favourable response. If the committee is going to do a proper and a thorough job, one of the basic things it has to work with is information, particularly the background and the raw data used to compile the discussion paper. I would encourage him to raise this issue at the committee. Based on my knowledge of being in committee and having sat on the committee that looked at the reform of Standing Orders and Procedures in this House, and having some knowledge of the power the committees have and can exercise if they decide to do so, I do not think he would have any problem getting his hands on the information which he refers to in his question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is as follows:

That the discussion paper entitled "Tax Issues in Agriculture", tabled January 31, 1985; be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs;

That the Committee examine and report on the proposals contained therein and, in particular:

(i) the need for limitations on the deductibility of farm losses against non-farm income for part-time farmers and the appropriateness of the current limitations under Section 31 of the Income Tax Act;

(ii) the appropriateness and consequences of relieving the farm community of the general requirement to include one-half of capital gains on the sale of farm land in income for tax purposes; and

(iii) the appropriateness of using the tax system to provide assistance through an agribond mechanism and the implications related thereto; and

That the Committee report its findings no later than April 1, 1985.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn) agreed to.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bissonnette that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I understand that when we talked about the Small Businesses Loans Act this morning my time had almost expired. I just want to emphasize the problem that I see, especially with regard to outlying areas in this country, under Bill C-23. It will impose an additional service fee on the banks, which will ultimately be reflected in the value of the loan. More important, it will probably reduce the availability of loans for small businesses. I hope the Government will take action to ensure that adequate funding is made available.

No one quarrels much with the interest rates of the small businesses loans, but people do quarrel with the fact that all too often the loans are just not available to small businessmen. I hope the Government does not adopt a policy which will result in a reduction of the amount of loans available. There certainly seem to be two deterrents in the Bill which move in that direction, namely the loan fee and the 10 per cent of the loan guaranteed by the bank. It is very important that the Government take action to ensure that that adverse effect, which we on this side of the House believe will happen, does not happen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments on the Hon. Member's speech? If not, we will resume debate.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the Hon. Member's speech. I want to assure him that in proposing this legislation this Government has cleared the question of availability of money with the banking institutions. I think the Hon. Member will find in committee that the banking institutions are quite prepared to accept the situation whereby the banks are only guaranteed to the extent of 90 per cent of the loan at a rate of 1 per cent over prime.

In that regard, it is important to put on the record some of the advantages of the Small Businesses Loans Act and how it has progressed over the many years. The House will be aware that this Act was first put forward by the Government led by the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker in 1960. The first year of operation of the Act was in 1961. The Act has been used by business considerably over the past years, particularly since 1978 when amendments were made to the Act to allow banks to charge 1 per cent over prime.

Last year, the amount of money lent was very close to $1 billion in over 30,000 small businesses loans. Comparing that activity to the activity of the Federal Business Development Bank, Members will note that activity under the Small Businesses Loans Act in terms of numbers of loans was 15 times the activity of the Federal Business Development Bank. This Act and the procedure to finance small business capital requirements has been most successful. The average loan is in the neighbourhood of $25,000, so we are getting at the relatively small, new, starting businesses in this country.

What we are doing under this statute is making it possible for people right across Canada to borrow money to start a business and to buy some equipment. This is not an Act to help large businesses, although the Act does change the situation and allows businesses which have a volume of up to $2 million to take advantage of the statute.

There have been some losses in past years, but they are similar to the losses the banks have suffered generally because we have had problems in the economy, problems with interest rates, problems with insolvencies and so on. We can expect periods like that. In speaking to the small business community, I have found that it is prepared to shoulder its responsibility in terms of paying for the cost of the insurance. Small businessmen can take advantage of a government-insured loan. The small businessmen who cannot get a loan otherwise, are able under this statute to get a loan to buy equipment. We have probably the best system of financing for small business available in any part of the country.

While I think this is an important statute, I am a bit disappointed in the Act as presented. Under the current Act, there is an over-all loan guarantee limit of $1.5 billion, and we have already reached that limit. Indeed, right now it is pretty hard to get a loan under this Act because the limits have been reached. This Bill extends that limit only to $1.8 billion, which I think is too little. I think that is a bit of a failure on the part of the drafters of the Bill. I hope that through discussions in committee the Government will be persuaded to extend that limit. The Government must realize that this has been the most successful form of financing small business.

Members of the committee will obviously take heed of the discussion paper produced by the Minister responsible for small business with respect to financing and the like. Perhaps that discussion paper might be put before the committee.

• (1620)

Sir, this Bill extends the Small Businesses Loans Act for five years. In the past we have had one and two-year extensions, but it seems to me there should be no time limit on the Act. If it should happen that the Act no longer serves the purpose of small business, then it can be terminated. But it seems to me rather ridiculous to continue to put time limits on this Act. It is time we started realizing that small business is probably going to need some type of long-term financing guarantee now and into the indefinite future. So I recommend to the committee that it seriously consider this question. The Government, influenced by the committee's decisions, might bring forward amendments to alter that portion of the Bill.

As I mentioned already, the total loan guarantee limit of $1.5 billion has now been used up. Therefore, it is important that this debate be terminated and the Bill sent to committee, because we have to make sure that entrepreneurs in this country who want to buy equipment for their businesses are not hamstrung by the fact that this House of Commons cannot get its work done. We have already seen how one portion of Parliament has held up the Government of the country in getting its work done. We have seen that in the borrowing authority Bill. There is no reason why that same thing should happen in this Chamber. Therefore, I say to you, Sir, it is important that this House vote on the Bill and get it into committee where the necessary amendments can be made.

There was a suggestion that the banks should pick up the cost of the guarantee. I suggest to you that a rate of 1 per cent over prime is a very favourable rate. Remember, we are dealing with relatively small loans. The average loan size is about $25,000 up to a maximum of $100,000. All small loans require the same administrative detail as large loans. If a bank lends you $1 million, it does not need any more clerks than it does for a $15,000 or a $20,000 loan. The result is that the overhead on the small loan has to be borne by someone, and I think it is wrong to suggest that, in addition to the 1 per cent margin, the bank be required to pay a 1 per cent insurance fee out of its end. I think small borrowers would be quite prepared to pay a placement fee on a capital loan of this nature, particularly in view of the fact that such fees are common in the industry. If you want to place a long-term loan in the normal course without insurance, you often have to pay a placement fee. A fee of 1 per cent to cover the guarantee is not at all out of line and should be borne by the borrower.

Sir, this Act is working so well that we have used up the maximum amount available. It is working so well that this Parliament should get the Bill before committee so it can be passed and made into law.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know from the Hon. Member whether, in his constituency, he does not find that the problem with this Act is that there are just not enough loans available. Unless you are a very good friend of the banker, or unless you fit in some pre-selected mould that the banks or credit unions have for their individual customers, there are just not enough loans available. I would be very interested to hear his views on whether, by imposing a 1 per cent charge on the bank, combined with the 10 per cent loss guarantee, the banks will make progress in granting loans.

Clearly, from 1977 to 1984, under the guidance of a strong Liberal Government in Ottawa, except for nine hiccupping months, the number of loans made under this Act went up from 4,800 a year to some 31,000 a year. Given these two additional conditions, does he really believe that we are going to have as many bankers agreeing to make these loans? Clearly, the Hon. Member has some concerns about his Party's position on the length of this program and he wants to extend it indefinitely. I understood his Party's policy was always to have sunset laws in all Bills, but in any event there is a fibe-year sunset law here and he wants to see it extended indefinitely.

My concern is for the less affluent areas of the country, areas less affluent than the one which the Hon. Member represents and has represented for a number of years. Does he think there is really going to be a large number of loans available under this Act when you impose a 1 per cent fee on the bank as well as require them to assume 10 per cent of all losses under the program?

• (1630)

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that before this Bill was introduced, conversations were held with the major banks in connection with the lending policy with respect to the 90 per cent guarantee instead of the floating 100 per cent guarantee. As the Hon. Member will know, the present guarantee situation is that the banks will not have a 100 per cent guarantee unless the ratio of bank losses is such that it will give them a 100 per cent guarantee. The present system is rather convoluted with respect to guarantees. This legislation has simplified the system so that each loan will be guaranteed to 90 per cent instead of providing a 90 per cent guarantee on a portfolio. I understand that has been discussed with the bankers and that they are quite delighted with it.

With respect to the question of fees, there is some concern which has been expressed by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the Canadian Organization of Small Business. Both of those organizations have consulted extensively with the banking community. Both are convinced that borrowers should pay a placement charge rather than the placement charge being taken out of bank revenues, in view of the narrow revenue which the bank receives. I believe that if that evidence is brought to committee the regulations might well be altered. The regulations must be altered to make that provision.

There is amazing growth in this program. Since the banks were allowed to charge 1 per cent over prime on a floating basis rather than a fixed base, this program Act has grown dramatically. Indeed, this year it amounts to almost $1 billion. The figures in the annual report are quite astounding. The amount of money which has been lent and the number of loans which have been made have grown dramatically.

The Hon. Member said that in some areas small-business people cannot get a loan. I would suggest to him that a loan could be obtained a lot more easily from the banks under the Small Businesses Loans Act than could be obtained from the Government of Canada through the Federal Business Development Bank. The number of loans indicates that the loans are very widespread. Indeed, if the Hon. Member would look at the tables and the financial statements, he would realize how much the loans are spread across the country and how various banks and institutions have taken advantage of the Act in making loans to their customers. There is no reason to believe that this change will affect that situation. However, it will mean that the Government will only be involved as an insurer. The Government is taking an insurance premium to guarantee a loan, the same as the Government takes an insurance premium to guarantee a mortgage under the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. There is no reason for business to have a free ride. Indeed, the day of the free lunch is over. Business can afford to pay its cost. The Government is here to assist as an insurer. That is the way it should be. The banks are taking 10 per cent of the risk and the Government is guaranteeing 90 per cent. It will mean that the loans will have to be supervised by the bank in the same way as if it were lending its own money. Because the loans are guaranteed to 90 per cent, we know the banking community will do things that it would not do normally. Certainly, it will lend at a lower rate of interest than it would normally lend, which in this case would be 1 per cent over prime.

I say to the Hon. Member that this is a good statute. It should not be held up by Parliament. It should move to committee as quickly as possible. There are a number of amendments which should be made and I suggest that they can be made as evidence is brought before committee. That is where the legislation should be.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). We support this Bill because we consider it to be a small step in the right direction. However, what will happen if interest rates substantially increase as they did a few years ago? What will be the effect on small business? The loans are being made at 1 per cent over prime, but prime has increased 1.5 per cent in the last few weeks and it is likely that it will increase further in the next few weeks.

In the early 1980s when interest rates were at 18 per cent and 20 per cent, there was a tremendous increase in the number of bankruptcies. The large corporations did not go bankrupt because the banks could not afford to let them go bankrupt. Therefore, the large number of bankruptcies were primarily in the small business sector. What will happen if the prime rate of interest—and therefore the rate of interest which business will have to pay—increases substantially?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) will realize that the prime rate has increased by half a per cent in the past week. That is unfortunate, but it has not increased anything like the underlying rates of interest in Treasury bills, both here in Canada and in the United States. Obviously, we cannot guarantee everyone happiness and prosperity forever. When we realize that Parliament cannot make those guarantees, we will start legislating more for the sensible needs of the country.

It would be nice if we could guarantee fixed-rate lending, but the banking system does not work that way. Depositors will not invest their money for long periods of time at a fixed rate. They want the current rate on deposit. Therefore, borrowers must pay the current rate on their borrowings. There is no way around it. One per cent over prime is a pretty good rate. I know long-term money can be found. It can be found in the mortgage market at 14 per cent or 14.5 per cent, which is 3 per cent over prime. I suspect we could find long-term business money at 3 per cent or 4 per cent over prime. But businessmen want to borrow money as cheaply as possible. This legislation will let them borrow money at a floating rate as 1 per cent over prime. Whether the Government should guarantee long-term rates on a fixed rate is another matter of consideration. I do not know how we could write the Bill to provide for fixed rate margins, because fixed rate margins are always dramatically higher than floating rate margins.

This legislation is working at 1 per cent over prime. Obviously businessmen like it. The number of dollars which have been borrowed and the number of loans which have been made has escalated dramatically. We ought to support the Bill, get it immediately into committee and, if necessary, make amendments so that it will work even better.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is over.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand)—Employment—Student summer jobs—Program announcement. (b) Scope of program; the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Agriculture—Review of programs. (b) Agenda of First Ministers' conference; and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—Parliament Hill—Request that Peace Camp be removed.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bissonnette that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues have already indicated, we support the Bill because it is a small step in the right direction. We recognize the fact that there are close to one million small businesses in Canada. These businesses are 100 per cent Canadian-owned. They almost always buy from other Canadians and sell to other Canadians. Because they are Canadian, they are interested in seeing their community, their city and their province develop. They are not, like many of the large corporations, particularly the multinational corporations, so determined to make a profit that they will move their business from their community, their city, their province and even from their country in order to receive a substantial increase in profits. In recent years more than two-thirds of all the jobs which have been created in this country have been created by the small business sector.

• (1640)

So it is for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that we support this Bill. We recognize that this Bill will make it easier for small business people to get needed funding. While we support the Bill for that reason, we realize that, like other federal legislation which assist farmers and fishermen, this assistance is largely directed toward capital improvements. In effect, it allows small businesses to get into deeper debt in order to continue to operate. It does not necessarily mean they will prosper because they often must compete with far larger corporations with much better access to capital and better tax treatment. Small business people, like the consumers they serve, are largely price takers of the goods and services they require. They do not have the market power to force their own purchase prices on suppliers as do, for example, the large food chains which demand their own volume rebate, which often leaves the farmer in a very bad situation. Instead, these small business people usually pay the going rate and even after they get the kind of credit they need because of this Bill, they will still get hit by inflationary costs. We saw that happen in the early 1980s when interest rates escalated very sharply. Tens of thousands of small businesses were forced into bankruptcy because the premise on which they had based their borrowing and the premise upon which they made arrangements to get loans from the bank, was that much lower interest rates would prevail than those they had to pay two or three years later. So we saw tens of thousands of small business people forced into receivership by the banks as a result of huge increases in interest rates.

It was interesting but sad, to put it mildly, to see the difference in the way the banks treated large corporations as compared to small businesses. There were in past years, Mr. Speaker, and still are today, outstanding, unpaid loans to the bank. These loans are called non-performing loans, that is, loans on which the borrowers pay neither the interest nor the principal, and which today total over $8 billion. Those loans were made almost exclusively to large corporations which borrowed money for takeovers. This added nothing to our productive capacity and created nothing in the way of jobs. Those loans are still outstanding and in many cases are not even being serviced. Those corporations are not paying interest and are not paying anything on the principal. The reason that the banks are carrying those loans, Mr. Speaker, is that they cannot afford to call those loans in. If those borrowers were required to meet their obligations the financial situation of the banks would be very adversely affected. The banks not only treated the large corporations differently, but they increased the interest rates which the small companies had to pay on their loans. The banks were imposing the kinds of rules on the small companies which frequently forced them into bankruptcy. Banks not only increased the interest rates which small business had to pay but also increased the banks' service charges. In fact, bank charges for the services which they provide have doubled in recent years despite the fact that they have automated and computerized so many of their operations. Banks have recently subjected their smaller accounts to profitability analysis in order to ensure that they make sufficient profit, which will take the form of higher fees or higher service charges.

The Consumers' Association has argued, and, I say, correctly, that these fees should only cover the cost of inducing the consumer to make use of them and that other overheads which are built in should be covered by the spread between the loan and savings deposits rates. Since these charges are often waived at the discretion of the bank, certainly those with the biggest account will wind up getting the best deal. The banks have increased these charges despite the fact that our major domestic banks have operated at profit levels of $1.5 billion or higher in each of the last four years. They have increased these charges despite the fact that other business people have suffered through recessions which have not affected the banks.

We find it interesting that the provisions of this Bill, and other Bills and programs of the Government, bring relatively little benefit to the small business community, certainly as compared to the large corporations of this country. Large corporations have too many friends in important places: the Government, the banks, even public opinion which is manipulated through mass media reporting. For example, in recent years we have seen the Government of Canada ensure that the Chrysler Corporation survived with Government assistance. I am not saying that the Chrysler Corporation should not have been helped, but the fact is that many Chrysler dealerships in that period when the auto industry was in trouble were forced into bankruptcy by the banks. We have seen the Government and the banks carry Massey-Ferguson. I am not suggesing for a moment that the Government should not help important companies which employ large groups of Canadians and which produce products which are needed by Canadians. I am not saying that companies like Massey-Ferguson should not have been helped, but the fact is that Massey-Ferguson dealerships, small business operations, were forced into bankruptcy while the company itself was helped to survive by the banks and the Canadian Government.

We believe that small business needs the same kind of support and assistance from Governments which is given to the large corporations, but they do not get that. We have seen large corporations not only receive special assistance, special loans and guarantees—and I am thinking of companies like Dome Petroleum—but we have seen large corporations benefit from a tax system which provides for overly generous deferred corporate taxes. Many corporations in fact pay no real tax at all. Indeed, I believe it was an official of Domtar who, when asked when he thought Domtar would actually pay corporate taxes, replied very simply, "Never". That company is always involved in expanding and improving its facilities, so it pays no corporation taxes. So are small business people, but they are not able to benefit from the deferred corporation tax system we have in this country under which almost exclusively large corporations have now benefited to the extent of $30 billion in deferred taxes which have not been paid.

Similarly, we have permitted a system under which thousands of people with incomes of $50,000 a year or more have simply paid no taxes at all. Indeed, there are more than 250 Canadians with incomes of $250,000 a year who pay no income tax at all. When one compares that with the almost one million small business people who are attempting to get established in a viable small business, we can see the way in which the tax system has been skewed to benefit those who have rather than those who are just beginning.

While we support this legislation, Mr. Speaker, we recognize that of the 900,000 businesses in this country only 25,000 have been or will be helped by this legislation. While this legislation is helpful, it will be seen by some not to provide too much assistance for small business. We are concerned because we believe that this kind of loan system was not really help small business people. Rather, it will make things worse for them if, as happened in the early 1980s, the interest rates on the loans taken escalate very quickly. In that situation those people will be worse off than if they had not received the loan at all.

We have long advocated that the banks of Canada owe it to those who are the source of their profits, to a large extent the small business people of the country, to lend the money at affordable interest rates. That is an interest rate below the prime rate rather than the prime rate plus 1 per cent as provided for in this Bill. That is not a pie-in-the-sky proposal. That is the way in which small businesses are treated in countries such as New Zealand, Denmark and Japan, to mention only a few. In those countries small businesses are able to borrow money at less than the prime rate. They are able to do that for a number of years, particularly in the start up years when they are working the hardest to establish themselves.

We believe that the Bank Act should be amended to force the chartered banks to lend money to small businesses at rates comparable to those offered to big corporate borrowers. We believe that there should be more real risk and venture capital provided for small business people. We believe that the Federal Business Development Bank should provide more money to small businesses at lower interest rates. We believe that there should be a more aggressive buy Canadian program. Government tendering practices have to be reformed. The Government of Canada and the provincial Governments are among the biggest purchasers of goods and services in the country. Their system of purchasing should be changed to encourage small businesses to participate in supplying the needs of governments. If that were done, if we had a real buy Canadian program and encouraged small business to participate in that program, a big part of the ability of small business people to survive and grow would be realized.

We believe that the corporate tax system should be reformed so that small businesses will not be forced to pay a higher effective tax rate than large corporations, which they are now required to do. We believe that small business people cannot survive and grow in this country unless we have an independant Canadian interest rate policy. That policy would dramatically cut the cost of borrowing for the average small business person by ensuring that the Bank of Canada rate is no more than 1 per cent above the rate of inflation. We pride ourselves on the fact that the interest rate is down dramatically. It is not at 20 per cent or more as it was a few years ago. However, if one looks at the spread between the rate of inflation and the interest rate, we see that the real interest rate is almost as high as when it was at 20 per cent plus.

We believe that we must protect the Canadian dollar from the kind of swings which are taking place right now, fueled in part by speculators. We need to protect the Canadian dollar by coupling an independent interest rate policy with a tax on speculative capital leaving the country. That speculative capital is not leaving the country because small business people are involved in that kind of speculation. They are too interested in just surviving to get involved in that kind of thing.

We need more than just this Bill which we are discussing today, Mr. Speaker. We need to work for changes in the Bank Act which will require the banks to lend a fixed percentage of their money to homeowners, farmers, and small business people at the same rate as that enjoyed by big corporate borrowers. We are going to support this Bill, but we think it goes only a small way to meeting the needs of the small business community. We believe that unless the Government can divorce itself from American fiscal policies, and unless we can get a lower and stable interest rate, small business people will not get real benefits from this Bill but will, rather, suffer all the evil consequences they suffered in recent years when interest rates were very high and swinging up and down very quickly.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, one of the clauses in the Bill imposes a user fee on the small business borrowing with the guarantee of the Small Businesses Loans Act. Would the Hon. Member comment on that particular clause? Does he think it is worth-while, or should we be attempting to remove it at committee stage?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I think the important question which must be resolved is whether the user fee is going to inhibit the borrower or the banks from extending the loans which are required. I think we must hear representations from the small business community and the banks before we make a final decision as to what we should do about that user fee.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to indicate that the business of the House for tomorrow will be the Bill that we are now considering. When we complete consideration of this Bill tomorrow, we can move on to Bill C-24 dealing with CHIP and cost programs. As I announced prior to the recess, the business for tomorrow will be in the same sequence as was the business for today.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to Item No. 136?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRAIRIE FARMERS REHABILITATION ACT

ADVISABILITY OF EXPANDING THE ACT

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Agriculture be empowered to study and report on the advisability of amending the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, to allow expansion of the Act into a National Farm and Forest Rehabilitation Act which would administer co-ordination of national action with respect to both wet and dry-land management; and making the Minister responsible for the consideration and implementation of the best methods to be adopted to secure the rehabilitation of farm and forest areas throughout Canada; and bring new technology into the hands of individual farmers and foresters and to coordinate national action with respect to drought/water/soil management as well as conservation, wet-lands management (including wildlife preservation), and the general enhancement of the quality of our rural heritage; and that the Administration of the National Farm and Forest Rehabilitation Act be granted the power to make, administer and supervise farm and forest loans to help operators recover from natural disaster conditions and that such loans be granted at reduced rates of interest for short periods of time to ensure rapid restoration of the operations in question.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to see so many Members in the House today. I have been a Member in the House for some 13 years and it is because I have such a high regard for Private Members' motions that I have put forward this motion. As well, I have such high regard for the good work that the standing committees have been able to do that rather than recommend that the Government take this motion into consideration, I have recommended that the Standing Committee on Agriculture take into consideration the revision of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act.

This organization has been in place for almost 50 years and has served the prairie farmers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta honourably over those years. It has built an excellent reputation among the rural communities of the Prairies.

When it began in the 1930s, it dealt with drought and soil erosion. It moved on to provide guidance on irrigation, shelter belts and new farm practices that have served the rural communities in the Prairies very well.

It is my intention that the standing committee look at this organization after 50 years of service to see whether now is the time to expand it so that its expertise can be used in other regions in the country.

Soil erosion is not just common to the Prairies. The Senate committee has pointed out that soil erosion is now a problem in the whole country and something about which we should be concerned. As well, it has the ability to study wet-land management, as this organization has been involved in the drainage of areas and the establishment of shelter belts to encourage wildlife sustenance in the prairie region.

I have been advised that the expertise could also be used in the management of small woodlots and shelter belts across the country. It is my intention, and I hope that of the House, that we pass this motion to the Agriculture Committee for study and recommendation to the Government for action.

Let me elaborate on some areas that I think the committee should study. The Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act should be changed to reflect the national perspective. I suggest that it be called the National Farm and Forest Rehabilitation Act. Its mandate should be expanded to include water management and conservation throughout Canada and soil conservation and management. Soil deterioration and degradation is still a very serious problem in this country and is costing us hundreds of millions of dollars.

The present Act should be expanded to include forest management specifically concerned with the preservation of small woodlots such as the maple sugar woodlots that are operated by small entrepreneurs. It would not in any interfere with the management of our large forests for which the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) is responsible.

This organization, which is already working in co-operation with Ducks Unlimited, should become involved in wet-lands management, including wildlife and particularly waterfowl management. It should revive the cultural aspects of rural life that it was originally set up to include. I suggest that policies that are established to enhance rural life be part of the work of this organization, along with soil and water management. The PFRA allowed that aspect to diminish as it dealt more with the research aspect of agriculture. However, Agriculture Canada has allowed that aspect to slip as well as a result of its concentration on new crops and crop management over the years. I think it is important to revive the cultural aspect of the Act.

I hope that the PFRA can be expanded to administer farm and small woodlot loans to help operators recover from natural disasters by obtaining low interest loans. We experienced such a disaster in the Prairies this year. Although the Governments of the provinces and the federal Government responded reasonably quickly, I believe it is important to have an organization of Government that can respond immediately to a natural disaster, no matter how large or small. I hope that an organization such as the one that is proposed could have that opportunity.

It is important that we do not leave the impression that by moving this motion we are taking anything away from the Prairies. The prairie provinces are very proud of this institution and do not want to have its importance in that region of the country diminished. Therefore, I believe that it is important to have the support for this suggestion of the Departments of Agriculture in the Prairies and of the prairie Premiers. It is my opinion, after talking to the staff in PFRA, that they would welcome this new challenge and welcome the new guidelines to take them into the next 50 years of operation.

I believe there are available the co-operation and ability necessary to permit this organization to expand into regions other than the Prairies if those regions wish to use that expertise. It would only be done on that basis so that we do not in any way encourage the centralization of this organization. If there is a need for this expertise, it should be expanded on a regional basis so that we in no way diminish the importance of the organization that was built up to which there was such good response on the Prairies.

This organization presently has a trained and capable staff. I believe that it would not be necessary to have a large increase in staff since it already has the potential to expand its work load and provide that expertise. In fact, some expertise could be borrowed from other government Departments to meet certain requirements at particular times, with the exception of the natural disaster aspect of the program. It would not require a large increase in staff. We now have existing in this organization a silviculture operation at Indian Head, Saskatchewan. It has been very successful in dispersing trees capable of lining property lines, enhancing the farm, homestead, or the farmstead of an entrepreneur. This program and the people who have been part of establishing this program are in place. This expertise is available not only to the Prairies but it could be made available to other areas.

I anticipate the maritime region of Canada and British Columbia would be very interested in having assistance from this organization. As I said before, the PFRA has not in the strictest sense been involved in wet-land management in the past. It has been involved directly in drainage programs and in taking farm land out of production which should ever have been in production in the first place and re-establishing it into community pastures or back to its natural state. I believe this is an area into which PFRA could expand, to assist in the preservation of wildlife with the co-operation that is in place with Ducks Unlimited. They have the experience in establishing dug-outs and in establishing shelter belts. This kind of management is very important to the natural wildlife of many regions, particularly the Prairies. There is a natural ability to expand in these areas if we find a need.

I believe this program should be studied intensively. I believe the Standing Committee on Agriculture has the ability to do that. We are not suggesting that it be passed and implemented tomorrow but that we look at the positive aspects of making this a national organization. I anticipate that we should take some time to do that and we should not rush into establishing a new mandate for an organization that has operated very well in the past.

As far as the natural disaster aspect of the proposal is concerned I believe a dire need exists in Canada today. If we look at our neighbour to the south, the United States of America, we find that it has had in place for some time an organization called the Farmers Home Administration. It has the ability to lend funds for a short period of time to farmers who find themselves the victims of natural disasters. These loans are only for emergencies. Farmers can receive loans at interest rates of 5 per cent on the first $100,000 and 8 per cent on the remainder. Loans are limited to $500,000. They must be repaid as quickly as possible or turned back into the established credit arrangements as quickly as possible. This allows the farmer to secure cash quickly at low rates in order to recover from a natural disaster. I would like to see the same kind of assistance offered to our farmers in rural communities who may find themselves victims of such things as tornadoes.

We never had such things as tornadoes in Canada at one time but we have had three or four in my constituency in the last five years. Weather patterns are changing and natural devastation is a possibility. We have lived with drought for many years. This is the reason for this organization to be established. As a Member of this House I suggest we seriously look at increasing the mandate of this excellent organization that has been successfully established on the Prairies for 50 years. We should expand its mandate to the entire country and allow the expertise that has been built up to be used by Canadians no matter where they are participating in rural life.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) in speaking on his motion this afternoon. It relates to a proposal to amend the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for the ideas behind his motion. Of all the issues facing agriculture in the long term, the whole issue of conservation and soil degradation, will perhaps be the most important in the future. That is not in any way to discount the short-term problems of marketing, of the debt crisis, and so on. Soil degradation and conservation is a very important topic.

In that regard I want to refer briefly to the report put out by the Senate committee last year. This was a report put out by the Standing Committee on Agriculture Fisheries and Forestry chaired by Senator Sparrow. That report, which is one of the first national reports that I have seen, really pinpoints the tremendous costs to our country in terms of production of crops, of maintaining our future resources and our capacity to produce as an agricultural nation. It is all outlined here in this report entitled Soil at Risk, Canada's Eroding Future. I think the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin follows the Senate report very well. The Government and the New Democratic Party are quick to criticize the other place, but I have not heard anyone criticize that report Soil at Risk because it highlights in a very factual way the problems we face in soil degradation and conservation.

The motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin would change the name of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act to the National Farm and Forestry Rehabilitation Act. I think that name is one that might be chosen. When I look at other services that we have, such as the Canadian Forestry Service, the Canadian Fisheries Service, and so on, I wonder whether the Canadian Conservation Service might not be a more appropriate name. I am sure the name is the least important aspect of this whole topic. The most important thing is that we put in place a program, a structure, that will better co-ordinate the activities of conservation in Canada.

In the Senate report entitled Soil at Risk, the Senate committee talks about the need for co-ordination of national action on soil conservation. It states that all levels of government must evaluate policies and priorities and work together. There is widespread concern regarding the lack of co-ordination in the devlopment and delivery of conservation policies, programs and services. It mentions that conservation was hampered by a lack of over-all government commitment and a comprehensive policy. I believe that is what the Hon. Member is proposing in the motion today. In the report of the Senate committee it was suggested that program delivery should use agencies which are already in place and can effectively deliver assistance to farmers and others in need.

In that regard I see the service as outlined by the Hon. Member to be not so much that of a new agency implementing a conservation program across the entire country but of utilizing existing facilities. For instance, we have an excellent series of Canadian forestry laboratories across Canada. I am sure that the mandate of institutions such as the Great Lakes Forestry Research Centre at Sault Ste. Marie could be expanded to cover not only forestry but conservation. We now have an excellent relationship wherein the Minister of Natural Resources of the Province of Ontario deals with the day to day operation, ownership and management of our forestry resources. Nevertheless, institutions such as the Great Lakes Forest Research Centre do much of the technical and research back-up, which makes it possible for the Ministry of Natural Resources to carry out its mandate. I am thinking of the jackpine budworm infestation in northern Ontario right now. Clearly that program, if it is put into effect, will be carried out by the Minister of Natural Resources. However, the federal Department of Agriculture does the licensing of pesticides and the Great Lakes Forest Research Centre does the actual egg counts on trees and so on to determine exactly what should be done. They are really working in harmony. If the capacity of that laboratory were expanded to conduct conservation research in co-operation with provincial Governments, Ministers of Natural Resources, conservation authorities and the Department of Agriculture, we would have a much better co-ordinated resource and research back-up which is needed to do a good job.

The motion talks about technological transfer and the implementation of new technology. Obviously there is a tremendous opportunity in terms of a national or Canadian conservation service. The Hon. Member mentioned as well the United States soil conservation service which has been very effective in that country in providing service in that area. Also he mentioned the idea of additional funding through a national forestry and farm rehabilitation agency. He mentioned the United States Farmer's Home Administration Program in that regard. I would want to be identified with those remarks because I think Farmer's Home Administration has done a good job in dealing with natural disasters and has certainly gone in a direction which is beneficial to communities facing natural disasters. In the December statement of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), he actually indicated that in future natural disasters in agricultural areas, such as the flood damage in northeastern Saskatchewan or the drought in Alberta and southern Saskatchewan last summer, the federal Government will be looking to farmers paying for them through crop insurance and that in fact the provinces will no longer have any responsibility. I question the approach of the Government in that regard. Surely property and civil rights are the responsibility of the provinces under the Constitution, yet here we see the provinces getting off scot-free and the federal Government and agricultural producers having the responsibility for the cost of natural disasters. I hope the Hon. Member's view of a national agency such as the one proposed would be beneficial in those circumstances. If we look at the way in which Farmer's Home Administration in the United States is assisting its agricultural producers with rescheduling loans and providing set-asides for farmers facing farm debt crises, we see that it is certainly providing tremendous additional assistance. This is not being provided to our farmers who are facing the same kind of situation.

The Senate committee report contained some important observations on the financing of conservation measures. In the present economic environment many farmers cannot afford the cost or risk of conservation measures. It indicated that there was a major concern on the part of farmers about the immediate and considerable cost of conservation measures and that financial benefits may take several years to accrue. Also it mentioned that the utilization of conservation practices by the majority of farmers could be encouraged by the availability of more funds through programs which are seen to be fair and non-restrictive. Cost-sharing programs, tax credits and capital cost allowances were the most frequently proposed incentives in the hearings the committee held across the country, while it was suggested that other financial assistance measures should be carefully studied.

What we have to consider in the motion today is whether or not we really have a Government which is prepared to provide that kind of financial assistance, in view of the response to the debt crisis facing some 17 per cent to 20 per cent of our farmers and the move to put half the cost of disaster funding on to the agricultural producers of the country, while not requiring the provinces to make any commitment at all. What we are really asking is whether there is the political will to implement a program such as the one the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin has put before us. If there is, obviously the exercise of a committee report would be very beneficial from that point of view. We should move ahead with it and see it go to committee. Those of us who represent rural areas know that the rural farm population represents only 4 per cent or 5 per cent of the total population. Obviously it is not a very loud voice in the over-all spectre of political power, yet this issue is very fundamental to the long-term benefits of the rural areas of Canada.

During the years I worked as a veterinarian in western Canada and then in northern Ontario and for the past 16 years as a Member of Parliament working in the rural areas of the Algoma, Manitoulin and Sudbury districts of northern Ontario, I have certainly had a chance to see the very serious problems facing agriculture. There is a need to impress upon the Government the fact that there should be a commitment to rural areas. I would like to see as part of the Hon. Member's motion mention of the quality of life, general development and a commitment to rural areas.

In the Senate committee report Soil at Risk, one of the main items was that there be on the agenda of the meeting of First Ministers' soil conservation and soil degradation. A First Ministers' conference was held in Regina a week or so ago. Clearly that item was not there. That does not mean that we should not move ahead as a committee of the House to try to deal with this motion to see if a national program can be fashioned to meet the needs recognized in the Senate committee report and determine whether there is a commitment by the Government to implement such a policy. Clearly there is a need.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to participate in this debate to discuss the proposal put forward by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) to refer to the Standing Committee on Agriculture the power to study the amendments to the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. He has a number of proposals that that administration might carry on as part of its expanded mandate. During the course of my remarks, I would like to add to such an expanded mandate one or two other items that I think might be legitimate.

It is an extremely important topic both for Canadians and other residents of North America and we should address this problem now. With its advent in the 1930s, the PFRA showed that it was able to bring back some land that had gone beyond use. Some of the lands that were brought back into production were, granted, as grass-lands and pasture lands. They had degenerated to the point where they were little more than sand dunes. The activities of PFRA brought those back.

Vast areas of the Prairies that were devoid of any water, through the actions of PFRA had small dams and drainage systems installed. Fair amounts of water were trapped for the use of the human population, the livestock and waterfowl that passed through that region. It may not be well known in the rest of Canada, but most prairie people know that approximately 50 per cent of the waterfowl that exists in North American migrate through the prairie region. Approximately 50 per cent of that waterfowl are hatched, grow up and become usable as birds for the hunt in that part of the country.

I have noted a number of disturbing things that are happening to the wet-lands, woodlots and farm-lands of our country. The problems have not been adequately addressed, in part because of our Constitution where the responsibility lies with both the federal and provincial jurisdictions. The genius of PFRA was the fact that it succeeded in getting provincial and federal co-operation and that it channelled the job that needed to be done through that particular administration.

The Hon. Member who introduced this motion is absolutely right. We need to have an expanded and new mandate for either PFRA or some new administration which would have both federal and provincial co-operation and financing. It could be mandated by both federal and provincial governments. We should not rule out the possibility of financing from our neighbours to the south since a great deal of the benefits from the wildlife, and certainly from the water and fisheries, shifts to them.

If we properly manage our forest lands so that the silt from the mountains stops washing into the rivers, the salmon beds will be clean. We can again have salmon using the rivers and hatching. We will again get to the point where we will have full utilization of all the fishboats on both our coasts. We will not have the continuing argument and litigation between our two countries as to who is fishing how many salmon and who is responsible for dividing the salmon. We have allowed our forests to deteriorate to the point where our spawning grounds for those salmon are no longer capable of supporting fish.

I alluded briefly to the role that the Prairies play in supplying waterfowl for both nations. We sometimes forget the problems in attempting to save our waterfowl, forests, fisheries or the land over-all. It is a very complex question. Our farmers and foresters look after the land as they see fit by the rules that they have to work by. Sometimes, while they may be doing things that are considered to be very good management for their particular industry, the long-term effect may be very expensive for the rest of us. We always have the question as to who will pay the cost of conservation. We can get general agreement that conservation is good for this and future generations, but when it comes to who will lay out the money or who will put up with the problems that accrue when you try to conserve natural resources, that is something we have not be able to address properly. In part, that is because of the split jurisdiction. There are other problems, some of which I will allude to.

As an example, I will take my own area. Most of us are most comfortable talking about our own area. Where I live in Saskatchewan, the land was originally covered by fairly heavy forests, poplar and spruce. Underneath the good forest was some very good farm land. Otherwise, it would not have produced good forest. For three generations, farmers in my corner of the country have considered themselves successful if at the end of the year they could say they have cleared so many acres. We fought the forest, got rid of it and have now turned it into farm land. That is considered a measure of success.

We have reached the point now where most of the farm land is clear. A lot of fencelines were left, growing up into tall trees, which slowed down the winds both in summer and winter and provided habitat for some of the smaller wildlife, including deer. As farmers began to use larger and larger equipment and were pressed economically, they began to look at those fencelines as if they were enemies rather than friends.

The farmers began to pull out the fencelines. It does not cost much to knock down a mile or a mile and a half of fenceline. They found that they could get on their fields two or three days earlier than their neighbours who had left the fencelines up. They had no birds and no wildlife. However, they were a couple of days earlier and they avoided the frost. It did not take long for the neighbours to see that the "successful farmer" did not keep tree lines. So my part of the country, which was once verdant with trees, is now laid bare, and you can see a distance of five or six miles just as though you were on the Prairies. Of course, the winds blow through and the snow does not stop in the middle of the fields and we are having attendant problems with water in the spring. The snow melts very quickly, creating erosion as it goes. Some farmers consider that erosion helpful because it clears out the water courses and allows the water to escape even more quickly so that they can get their crop in a few days earlier. But in the longer term the next generation in that part of the country may find themselves faced with a shortage of water. We know from experience on the Prairies during the 1930s that once you dry out the land too much, the rains stop coming. We may be having some influence on the weather patterns in that part of the world. In the long term it may be a very costly exercise of these very efficient farmers to have made the best economic use of their resources.

We know from observing monoculture, not only in our region but in other regions, that the results can be quite hazardous in a period of only 10 or 15 years. Sometimes it takes as long as one or two generations, but the result is always quite visible. I know from having visited the single-crop potato area of New Brunswick that erosion is a much larger problem there than it is even on the Prairies. The water courses wash great gouges in the soil each spring. They are filled in, planted over, no fibre is put back into the soil and the process continues again the next year. We have no way of saying to farmers that these water courses should be seeded with grass to hold them in place. We have no agency which could point out the advantages of keeping trees as part of the ecology of our farm areas. We have no one selling the advantages of trees except for some people who are now getting old, having started out back in the thirties. They did a good job of explaining why we needed tree-lines and trees on the Prairies, but the message did not sink in, not in those areas where there were trees to begin with, and we now seem to be doomed to making the errors that our prairie farmers made.

In his motion, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin has set out to have the new farm and forest rehabilitation agency co-ordinate national action with respect to both wet and dry-land management. He wants new technology placed in the hands of individual farmers and foresters, and I think some environmentalists and wildlife managers as well. Along with that—and perhaps this agency is the one to do it—there has to be an organization to do genuinely innovative research, an organization that would investigate quite new ideas, some which might be considered to be whacky, but which might have an impact on the over-all environment.

To give you one example of that, Mr. Speaker, most Members of the House will realize that there is a big salinity problem in a lot of prairie soils. We do not have anyone who has done anything more than just determine that if you keep plants growing on those saline spots, the problem gets somewhat better. Farmers have noticed that if you just abandon those areas in some parts of the Prairies to the kochia weed, gradually the area seems to shrink in size and again become available for agricultural production. The suspicion is that this weed may have some ability to reduce the amount of salt in those areas, but there is no one doing research to identify that.

I know, for instance, that there has been research in similar areas which has arrived at surprising results. The National Research Council had a research centre in Saskatchewan some six or eight years ago, when I was on the Science Council of that province, that had done some research with cattails and bullrushes. They found that those particular shallow-water plants had the uncanny ability to take heavy metals out of sewage and sludge, both in the water and in the soil, and seemingly get rid of it from the environment. At the same time, they produced a plant which was usable for livestock feed. I think that that researcher should be tracked down and he should do some similar work on the kochia weed, which seem to be able to absorb some salt from the saline spots which are a growing problem on prairie soils.

Another proposal is to have a research unit do truly innovative research which our plant breeders and agriculturalists cannot get the money to do. This would have an effect on the over-all ecology of our country and would improve the management of our wildlife.

I should not have to remind the House, but some may have forgotten, that our fur industry, which started this country, is still a very important industry. It is considered a sideline perhaps more than it should be. Approximately $900 million worth of furs are taken by trappers and farmers and they provide a sizeable addition to the income of people who live in forested areas. There is, as well, the management of our water resources in order to assist in the growth of migratory wet-land birds. That should be part of the authority as well, because it contributes markedly not only by way of meat for native hunters, but it is also a very large draw to the tourist industry and it can be one of the larger industries in the more remote parts of our country.

I think the idea is a good one and its scope could be extended beyond the very broad terms of reference that the Hon. Member has presented to us. I would be quite pleased to see this idea go to committee for further study, and our Party will support it.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, in the report prepared by the Senate entitled "Soil at Risk", the authors described the state of agricultural soil across Canada. They point out that soil degradation is a serious problem throughout the country. Although there are some similarities, there are enough differences from region to region to require specific corrective action.

Soil management must deal with the problems of erosion and compaction caused by potato farming in the Maritimes, with floods and erosion by water in Quebec and Ontario, with salinization and erosion by water and wind in the Prairies and water erosion and river sedimentation in British Columbia. Widely differing problems require as many different solutions.

The time has come for the Government of Canada to review its activities with respect to soil, forests, waterways and wet lands, and the preservation of our rural heritage. It is clear that the end of the eighties and the beginning of the nineties mark the beginning of an era when developing the land and nothing more will no longer be acceptable. We will have to manage the resources we have to ensure our economic and general well-being.

● (1750)

Our water resources are unevenly distributed among the various regions. Ontario and Quebec often suffer from problems caused by spring floods or torrential rains. Soil erosion is one of the most serious problems, and the increase in row crops such as corn makes a serious situation even worse. In some areas, it costs between $100 and $600 per hectare to correct these conditions.

Another example, and I am still referring to central Canada, is that wind erosion is getting worse on sandy soil because of a movement away from cover crops to single crop culture.

And what about soil compaction as a result of repeated plowing in wet soil? This could be just as damaging as flooding and erosion, depending on the area.

Urban expansion in Ontario has meant that agriculture is losing its best arable land. The same phenomenon exists, to a lesser degree, in the Maritimes. In Quebec, strict zoning laws applied since the end of the seventies have helped stop excessive urban expansion, but good farmland remains a rare and high-priced commodity. In the Prairies, water is a particularly unreliable resource, and it has always been difficult to remedy this problem.

Canada's economic development depends on control and effective use of our water resources. Increased use puts greater pressure on our water supply and increases the probability of pollution. Only through effective management and use can we ensure long term availability of our water supply.

When we travel across this country of ours, we can see the incredible diversity of our forests and how they contribute to the well-being of local communities: woodlots and maple bush in the East, the pulp and paper industry in Quebec and Northern Ontario, and British Columbia's vast forest resources. Over the years, we have developed forest resources across this country. Our forests must provide sustained production if we want them to continue to contribute to our prosperity and wellbeing. We should develop and implement a new technology aimed at encouraging conservation, developing reforestation and promoting a more effective management.

Wetlands also play a major role. Compared with the economic roles of our agriculture and forests, that of wetlands is more germane to our environment, way of life, culture and heritage. These areas contribute to the maintenance and enhancement of water quality, the preservation of wildlife habitat, as well as the development of tourism through outdoor activities such as hunting, fishing and nature interpretation centres. They attract those who are eager to educate themselves and contribute to the ecological diversity of our landscapes. They play a part in flood control by holding back the water in times of heavy rainfalls and allowing it to flow during the following months. And they are the depositories of a great many renewable resources such as fur animals and wild rice.

Many wetlands have been drained or greatly modified through the development of up-stream basins. Canadians are becoming increasingly more aware of the extensive damage resulting from the interference with the ecosystems within wetlands. These must be preserved, given the part they play in the use of lands.

Soils, forests, water, humid zones and people are all part and parcel of our rural heritage. The agricultural community has found ways to protect and improve the environment, be it through upgrading farms by tree-planting, maintaining ecosystems to protect wildlife, or furthering its cultural charateristics to make rural life more rewarding. Communities are part of that heritage and the quality of their social life must be improved.

What is the common link between those natural resources? The provinces look after their development because it is their constitutional responsibility.

Besides, the federal Government has a direct interest in those fields. Soils and forests do contribute to our international trade. Agriculture accounts for one-sixth of all Canadian economic activities. Last year, retail sales of food products were worth nearly $60 billion. In 1983, agricultural exports were valued at $10 billion and boosted our trade surplus by $4.3 billion. This industry directly employs 1.4 million Canadians and creates 3 million jobs all told.

The forest industry ranks first in export trade since it brings in over $11 billion each year. It directly employs more than 300,000 Canadians and indirectly about 700,000 additional workers in related industries.

The federal Government has every interest in making sure that those resources are properly administered since they stand as a guarantee of economic stability and jobs for future generations. The provinces as well as all men and women who use those resources share the same interest. We have seen to what extent the quality of such resources can vary from one region to the next, and that explains why each provincial Government has developed its own management strategy in those fields.

In the past, the federal Government has launched a variety of programs. Research has always been a priority with respect to soils, forests and water. Now and again, it has also involved the provinces through short-term financing programs under the Agricultural and Rural Development Act, through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion or again, more recently, through regional and economic development agreements. In addition, the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration (PFRA) plays an active role in Western Canada as a federal body which provides direct services.

It is imperative that we foresee our needs for 1990 and years beyond, decide what must be done and how to do it. So far, we have been acting as we saw fit, but time has come to make sure that our resources produce sustained yields through more effective administration.

Mr. Speaker, I am looking at the clock and I feel that Hon. Members are getting nervous. We have very little time left and we do want this motion to be adopted, convinced as we are that action must be taken in those fields. We support the motion to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. We are anxious to hear its recommendations and, if need be, to make the right decisions and take the appropriate steps.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

[English]

It has been moved by Mr. Schellenberger, seconded by Mr. Nickerson:

That the Standing Committee on Agriculture be empowered to study and report on the advisability of amending the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, to allow expansion of the Act into a National Farm and Forest Rehabilitation Act which would administer co-ordination of national action with respect to both wet and dry-land management; and making the Minister responsible for the consideration and implementation of the best methods to be adopted to secure the rehabilitation of farm and forest areas throughout Canada; and bring new technology into the hands of individual farmers and foresters and to co-ordinate national action with respect to drought/water/soil management as well as conservation, wet-lands management (including wildlife preservation), and the general enhancement of the quality of our rural heritage; and that the Administration of the National Farm and Forest Rehabilitation Act be granted the power to make, administer and supervise farm and forest loans to help operators recover from natural disaster conditions and that such loans be granted at reduced rates of interest for short periods of time to ensure rapid restoration of the operations in question.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

EMPLOYMENT—STUDENT SUMMER JOBS—PROGRAM ANNOUNCEMENT. (B) SCOPE OF PROGRAM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on February 5, for the third time in this House, I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) when she would announce the summer employment program. I asked that question in December, in January and also in committee. I pointed out to the Minister that it was customary to announce the summer employment program in December in order to give enough lead time to potential employers and applicants so that they could put together worth-while programs to hire students in the summer.

When I asked the Minister a third time on February 5, she said that the program would be announced the next day. In fact, the program was announced on February 6.

● (1800)

I might say that the two-month delay in announcing the program did not give justice to the program because, while it was worth $205 million, as a result of the rate of inflation it would be worth less real money than in the previous year, and it had no specific allocation for community services. It also had a different name, I suppose because the Conservative Party, after delaying for two months, wanted to put its own stamp on it. Instead of calling it "Summer Canada", it was called "Challenge '85".

When the Minister announced the program on February 6, she gave the impression that the program was ready to proceed. I am raising this matter again today because she misled the House on that date. When the Minister announced the program on February 6 she gave a certain number of details, and we had the impression on that date that finally the program was ready to go ahead. However, as of last week—two and a half weeks after the announcement—the program was still not ready.

It had not been decided by many of the provinces whether the program would be a joint program, or that there would be two separate programs, federal and provincial. As well, the provincial insert sheets for the application forms were not ready for potential applicants. Furthermore, the deadlines and the selection processes were not clear. For example, last Friday I was told by one of the officials of the Department of Employment and Immigration in Montreal that the program would be constituency based. But another official from another office told me that it was going to be regionally based.

This is another example of Conservative incompetence, Mr. Speaker. The Government cancelled the Summer Canada Program on November 8. It bumbled and fumbled for three months. Finally it announced a program on February 6 even though it was not ready, and it was not ready because the details had still not been worked out. I presume that the announcement of February 6 was simply to put off people like myself and other Hon. Members who have been asking the question over and over again, "When are you going to announce that program?" I called again today and I was told that finally the application forms are being sent out to the people in the Montreal area. I don't know what the experience is in other parts of the country but I am told that in Toronto last week they still did not have the Ontario insert forms for the application forms. It is regrettable, Mr. Speaker, that the Government, having played politics with this matter, now leaves students holding the bag.

I must say that my complaint is not so much against the program but against the process, against the administration. During the election campaign the Conservative Party gave the impression that it had all of the answers to unemployment in this country and that if the Conservatives were elected those problems would be solved. Once the election was over, the Conservatives announced that they were going to consult with that group, or this group, with the provinces, with labour, with big business, with little business and with community groups and so on. It then became fairly evident that they were looking for a program. If the Conservatives had said that in the first place, before the election, we would have accepted that as reasonable. But, no, they gave the impression that they had the answers and then started looking for the answers; in effect, trying to reinvent the wheel.

In a statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8 cancellation of Summer Canada was announced. It was later announced that the Government was going to look for a new program, or consult on a new program. The new program was finally announced on February 6, two months late. It would have been bad enough had the program started from that date but, as I pointed out, it is just now getting ready. I feel that is a terrible condemnation of the Government on its approach to the very serious problem of unemployment among our students.

Let us hope, Mr. Speaker, that despite these unpardonable delays, the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary, and those who support the Government, will listen to these pleas, not only from the Opposition, as we are only 70 in number, but from the many student groups and community groups across the country. The government should finally get this summer program fully under way as soon as possible to make sure that students are working by at least May 1, 1984 in order that they can earn enough money to pay for their tuition and other expenses next year.

• (1805)

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), I would like to respond to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) in this House on February 5, 1985, concerning the announcement made by the Government of its summer employment program for the young, and to his request for information on the nature of those initiatives.

On February 6, 1985, the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of State (Youth), (Mrs. Champagne) announced the program Challenge '85, a summer employment program for students, with a $205 million funding. That program should not only give students an opportunity to earn money to pay for their tuition fees, but also create jobs that will promote their career goals and a better preparation for their future participation in the labour market.

The Hon. Member is under the impression that the delay in announcing the program is a serious insult to the Canadian students. On behalf of the Minister, I would point out that any program hastily introduced, without specific planning, without input from the regions and without taking the time needed to obtain a commitment from our economic partners, including the Provinces, the private sector and others, would be a still more serious insult.

Challenge '85 is a totally new approach to job creation for students. Instead of offering students pre-organized federal projects that would simply give them an opportunity to earn money to pay for their tuition fees, we in the Government are challenging our economic partners to work with us for the creation of meaningful jobs that will enable students to optimize their contribution both to the Canadian society of today and that in which they will be living in the years to come.

Challenge '85, a multisided initiative, illustrates the Government's conviction that the students of Canada and our economic partners have the ingenuity, the desire and the will needed to carry on a successful program, and that they can very well at the same time play their rightful role in rebuilding a healthy Canadian economy.

Challenge '85 will provide $163 million for the Summer Employment/Work Experience component. With respect to that component, the federal participation will take the form of wage subsidies for jobs not only in the private sector but also in municipal goverments and community service organizations.

In all these sectors, priority will be given to applicants offering jobs to students while giving them the opportunity to acquire more knowledge, job experience and training in a future career. Mr. Speaker, this should alleviate the fears of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East that groups such as community non-profit organizations will be left out next summer. Our second priority will be for jobs where students will be able to acquire some work experience.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government in co-operation with the provinces is willing to make $30 million available in the form of loan guarantees and loans for those wishing to go into business.

The Minister sent out an invitation to large corporations and business organizations, which have already suggested that they would gladly promote student hiring in the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to mention that, with this program and the involvement of the provinces and the private sector, the Government is confident that Challenge '85, an inspired and audacious new approach to student hiring, will be of great help to thousands of students both next Summer and in the near future when they will enter the labour market for good.

AGRICULTURE—REVIEW OF PROGRAMS. (B) AGENDA OF FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on February 14 I put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) who had made a very grand presentation to the Canadian Club of Toronto about two days before that. On that occasion in his speech entitled "Agenda for Change", he outlined study teams in the various sectors of the Canadian economy whose job it was to cut out, eliminate, reduce and consolidate programs. I asked him why there was no representation on the study team on agricultural programs from the agricultural community itself, that is agricultural producers and farmers. I asked him why there was no representation from eastern or western Canada. I asked why was there no representation from rural Canada, and why was there no representation from women involved in the agriculture industry?

• (1810)

When you look at the study team you will see that most of its members are from multinational corporations, banking institutions or the federal Government. The team leader is a past president of St. Lawrence Sugar. The private sector people come from the large multinational corporations or banks. The other five come from the Public Service. Surely it would have been reasonable to expect that there would be representation from western Canada on a study team that will be reviewing some 90 Government programs relating to agriculture, programs which involve some 14,000 jobs and an expenditure of $1.5 billion. Surely there should be some such representation.

The response from the Deputy Prime Minister was that the private sector advisory committee members are broadly representative of all regions of this country, business and labour. That is totally wrong. It is questionable whether the Deputy Prime Minister read his own speech. When he was replying to a question by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) he did not seem to know what he said in his speech. It is as if he just read the speech without really understanding what he was saying.

I fear for the agricultural community. Let us look through the list of programs. It seems to me that on the committee studying livestock and farm input supply there could have been a livestock producer from western Canada or eastern Canada. Having regard to programs such as the Seed Potato Export Promotion Program, one might consider having a representative from New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island on the committee.

Rather than having this collection of people from Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa consider programs under the Agricultural Products Co-Operative Marketing Act, it seems to me there should have been members from co-ops in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or elsewhere on the committee. That would be more sensible than having a few former presidents of big multinational corporations and some civil servants deciding which Government programs will be maintained.

It is most disturbing to find upon reading the published documentation that the committee has already made its report. The interim report apparently was made on February 15, two days after the Deputy Prime Minister made his fateful speech to the Canadian Club in Toronto. It would have been interesting if he had made that speech to the Canadian Club in Winnipeg. I have a press clipping from Manitoba which is highly critical of the Deputy Prime Minister. Not only was there no representative from Manitoba on the study committee on agricultural programs, there was no such representation on any of the approximately 12 committees the Deputy Prime Minister set up. I am sure that in response to every program that gets chopped, not only in Agriculture but Transportation and Health and Welfare, the people in Manitoba will ask what is happening.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) comes from Westmount, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) come from Bay Street. It appears that they, along with civil servants from Ottawa, are the only ones who will have representation on the committees. The sad part is that this has been done secretly and behind closed doors. Apparently the recommendations are in now. When the Budget comes down we will find that various programs, in agriculture and other aspects of our economy, have been wiped out without there having been representation from the private sector in any part of our country, with the exception of those from Toronto, Montreal, and the civil servants in Ottawa, who make all these decisions behind closed doors.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member asking the question not only has his facts wrong, but has drawn wrong conclusions from those facts that he had available in front of him.

The Ministerial Task Force on Program Review is examining all the programs of the federal government to achieve better service to the public, less red tape and greater efficiency. Programs in support of the agricultural sector are one of the priority areas for review, to ensure that they are truly contributing to the stability, growth and competitiveness of the agri-food sector.

In this field of joint federal and provincial jurisdiction it is important to examine potential areas of duplication in federal and provincial programs. A study team comprised of private sector individuals and public servants has been formed to examine the results of federal programs. These people are consulting with groups benefiting from the programs. They are trying to determine whether there are any clear overlaps.

The study team has met with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). Members of the study team have met with the Deputy Minister of Agriculture and all senior officers of the Department to understand their view on the effectiveness and efficiency of their programs.

The team is also meeting with knowledgeable people in the private sector in both western and eastern Canada who can give first-hand knowledge and advice on areas of duplication or overlap, or where programs simply do not contribute to the strength of a dynamic agri-food sector which is so important to Canada's future economic prospects.

The study team indicates that it has received the fullest co-operation from all those contacted, from Ministers to officials to private individuals. Clearly all of them are enthusiastic about the future growth prospects of the agri-food sector, and want to see federal programs playing the most productive role possible to bring about that future.

Adjournment Debate

PARLIAMENT HILL—REQUEST THAT PEACE CAMP BE REMOVED

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on November 13, five days after this House commenced, I asked the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) a question with respect to the peace camp that he has located on Parliament Hill. The Minister replied:

> I have the impression that my colleague is asking me to do in a few weeks something which the previous government failed to do in 18 months.

That was a few weeks then, Mr. Speaker; but that was November 13 and we have seen December 13, January 13, February 13, and soon it will be March 13. The Minister does nothing. This is a trespass on the lawns of Parliament Hill. Here we have the property of the people of Canada being used in a fashion that is not complimentary to this cherished place, the House of Parliament here in Ottawa.

Not only has this Minister refused to do something about that which is his responsibility to guard, the efficacy of this Parliament, but he refuses to come to grips with the problem. He says "Oh, they will move away when winter comes". That was on November 13. Winter has come and winter has just about gone and the peace camp still has not moved away. It has been here now for nearly two years. It will soon be past its second anniversary, yet the matter stays the way it is.

In a question I placed on the Order Paper I asked the Minister whether he intended to set up fees for those who would like to establish further protest camps on Parliament Hill. The Minister responded that the Government had no intention of setting out a new fee schedule. Presumably it is the intention of the Government to allow anybody—everybody and sundry—who wishes to protest to set up a camp on the lawns of Parliament.

Where is this Government going with respect to its responsibilities to guard Parliament? I say seriously that the Government has an obligation to bring forward a Bill, if necessary, in order to charge the users of the front lawns of Parliament Hill with trespass and move these trespassers from the front lawns of the Parliament Buildings. In spite of everything which has been done to bring the matter to the attention of the Government, nothing has happened.

I have been approached by not only citizens generally, but by people who work in the House who are concerned about the way the House is being denigrated by the existence of that camp on the front lawn. If something is not done very soon, other groups around the country will be setting up tents. Is it the intention of the Government to continue to allow this? If that is the intention, to continue to allow protests on Parliament Hill—something which does not exist in any other civilized country in the world—then let the Government say so, and let us have a debate in the House with respect to such camps. Surely somewhere along the line Parliament Hill has to be given some degree of respect. This camp is a disrespect of Parliament, and a disrespect of the democratic process.

I do not know what reply the Ministry has given to the Parliamentary Secretary, but I certainly would not want to be in his position. There are all sorts of questions which could be asked with respect to the camp, but it must come down to this; if we are to continue to allow this type of thing to take place, Parliament will lose the respect the people should have for this institution. It is high time that the Government and the Minister faced their responsibilities in this regard.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, before getting into my formal reply, I should like to suggest that the Minister has in no way located the peace camp on Parliament Hill, as the Hon. Member unintentionally implied in his remarks.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) has replied to questions both oral and written on the subject of the peace camp, and the Minister does not intend to legislate the peace camp off the grounds of Parliament. This remains the policy of the present Government of Canada. Hon. Members on all sides of the House and the people of Canada support the notion of peace and those efforts made in the pursuit of an enduring peace throughout the world. This Government is committed to that goal.

What the Hon. Member raises is a question of a totally different nature. The Government and the citizens of the country must ask themselves whether the peace camp is setting a precedent which may be followed by other groups, and to what extend this should be allowed when in fact this action may impede access by all Canadians to the grounds and institutions of this Parliament which rightfully belong to them. There have been editorials and letters in newspapers across the country which have either applauded or denounced the presence of the peace camp on Parliament Hill. What is most unfortunate is that the physical presence now becomes the issue rather than the quest for peace. We are focusing on this physical presence rather than the moral presence.

Our responsibility as a Government is to maintain Parliament Hill for all Canadians, as a space for all Canadians to enjoy—Canadians from every region and with different political viewpoints who wish to visit Parliament Hill. We as a Government wonder at what point the peace camp people will understand that they have made their points, and that by remaining there they will not change this Government's resolve to work hard for global harmony. What its physical presence does is spark a controversy over the physical presence rather than drawing attention to the point they want to make.

The Hon. Member has referred to the possibility of other groups setting up. We suggest that would be an unfortunate scenario, because that would really begin to hinder the ability of all Canadians and people from other countries to enjoy Parliament Hill. The grounds have long been of social pride for all Canadians and for people from other countries. They are a focal point of this nation's capital. We intend to see that they remain so.

In closing, I am informed that the Minister is continuing to study this issue and will make a statement in future weeks.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, February 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bissonnette that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for giving me this opportunity to take part in the debate on the Small Businesses Loans Act. Having owned two small businesses myself, I believe I am in a position to appreciate the concerns of this sector.

However, I fail to understand the position the present Government seems to be taking with respect to small- and medium-sized businesses. It seems to me there are many contradictions between what I have heard from our Conservative colleagues and what I have read in Bill C-23, and I shall, if I may, Mr. Speaker, touch on a few that are particularly revealing.

First of all, the Hon. Members opposite have been very expansive about their desire to consult with the groups in question so as to better respond to their needs. This is an entirely worthy attitude, but I do not think the Conservatives are particularly innovative in this respect. Otherwise, small- and medium-sized businesses would not, as they do today, represent nearly 30 per cent of the Gross National Product. But let us be generous. Let us give them the benefit of the doubt and believe they are sincere in their desire for consultation. If they are, then how do the Minister of State and his colleagues propose to explain the fact that the vice-president of the Canadian Federation of Small Business and the president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business have both protested against the provisions of the Bill concerning the 1 per cent fee to be paid by lenders to the Government? If these organizations had been consulted, this fee would not have been included in the Bill, unless the present Government, with all its consultations, has been ignoring the views of the groups concerned. Not necessarily on purpose—I would not want to believe that.

Mr. Speaker, I can only hope the Government will make good use of these consultations it has been making so much of. In fact, when I was looking at the recent consultation paper on small business presented by the Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), I noticed some very major paradoxes in the Conservative approach.

The first page of this document refers to some of the goals the federal Government has set for itself. One of these I found particularly interesting, and I quote:

"—to adopt policies that will lead to increased investment, further and more intense innovation, improving our international competitive position and establishing a climate favourable to creating and developing new enterprises."

A little further it says that job creation is a fundamental priority for the present Government and that Canada must strengthen this growth model and promote the start-up of new businesses.

Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the Party opposite has yet to come up with something new. It is as plain as the nose on anyone's face that small- and medium-sized businesses are the motor of any economy. I do not see why it took them six months to realize this.

Even worse, in Bill C-23, the Conservatives have neglected to observe these primordial goals by proposing incoherent policies and amendments.

I say incoherent, Mr. Speaker, because clause 2 of the Bill provides that from now on, liability for losses sustained on loans will be shared by the Government with the lending institutions, the latter to be liable for 10 per cent.

While the Small Businesses Loans Act is aimed at encouraging lenders to make loans to small businesses, the amendments proposed by the present Government will have the opposite effect. It is not at all unlikely that lenders will be reluctant to make loans if they are liable for 10 per cent of the losses sustained on such loans. Lenders will tend to exercise extreme caution and draw up more restrictive regulations, and one could hardly blame them for doing so.

However, this attitude will also make lenders less inclined to make loans to small businesses, which will certainly have an adverse effect on the emergence of new small businesses. The contradiction here is very obvious. On the one hand, the Government wants to make things easier for small- and medium-sized businesses and promote the establishment and growth of such businesses, but on the other hand, it is obliging lenders to endorse 10 per cent of losses sustained on loans, which will force lenders to be more selective or to make fewer loans or fewer large loans. What the party opposite is urging is that we cripple a piece of legislation which has been the mainstay of Canadian small business for 23 years.

Our colleagues across the aisle openly brag about stimulating private investment and the Canadian economy, but they fail to take the proper approach—in fact, they throw cold water on businessmen and lenders who are anxious to participate in our economic growth. I hope they realize the disastrous consequences of the fresh approach they want to take with respect to small business. It is essential that you grasp the full implications of such measures. Perhaps I might be of some help.

Still referring to this consultation paper, I read that entrepreneurship and risk-taking are not sufficiently promoted. I fail to see how the provisions of this piece of legislation will enable you to promote and spur risk-taking by small business and lenders. You know as well as I do that no businessman or businesswoman will invest unless the chances of failure are extremely remote. Canadians are not risk-takers, and they should not be unless the economic climate and conditions are altogether favourable. To be frank, I am convinced that your proposition will never create the conditions conducive to and required for risk-taking. The more your Government will force lending institutions to pay for a high percentage of losses incurred on outstanding loans, the fewer loans those institutions will make, the less small business will take advantage of those loans and the less new businesses will want to set up shop.

Furthermore, I can read in this famous consultation paper—and, of course, you had no idea how many inconsistencies this paper would contain—that "small business considers that Governments and most financial institutions have an approach which favours the requirements of big business".

Then again, section 2 on loss sharing by the Government and lenders will do precious little to encourage the latter to make loans to small business. One might even suggest that this measure will be a boon to big business since the market will not be crowded by small business, and lenders will be more inclined to offer better conditions to big business. Hypothetical though it may be, this suggestion is not all that far-fetched.

It is a fact that the Progressive Conservative Government spent the first six months worrying about big business, foreign multinationals and the need to attract them to Canada. This Government has been concerned about making room for big rather than small business. What will be the impact of uncontrolled foreign investments in this country?

The answer is simple: they will corner the Canadian market. That being so, is it still possible to talk about promoting small business in Canada? I hardly think so. I would suggest that the Government will indeed be well advised to reconsider—as they so aptly put it—the regulations and policies that might hinder small business financing, including venture capital.

● (1115)

This is a priority, Mr. Speaker. It is a priority because the legislation contains so many nefarious provisions that will only hinder SMB financing. Among other things, their Conservative Minister will require lenders to pay a fee of 1 per cent of the amount loaned under the Act. This means that on each and every loan, the lender will have to pay 1 per cent to the Government as a guarantee. Assuming that total loans remain at the current level of $900 million a year, lenders will be paying out $9 million to the government to account for that 1 per cent fee. Those $9 million that will go the public Treasury will reduce by $9 million the amount of loans available to small businesses. This is one way for the Government to fill its coffers at the expense of lenders and especially of small businesses. We cannot be consistent and support such a measure. The Minister of State himself is entertaining doubts as to the true efficiency of such a policy. As he stated in this House last week, and I quote:

> The total impact on the yield to lenders over that period or over the term will be minimal. Therefore, the volume of loans should not decline significantly.

Despite the weak-kneed phrases used by the Minister, clearly when he said "minimal impact" and "should not decline significantly" he meant that in fact, there will be negative results and the volume of loans will go down. The Minister is admitting therefore that his proposal implies a negative impact. When he says "not significantly" and "minimal", it is only to reassure those who are concerned and distract the attention of the people involved.

In fact his statement was conditional and this is therefore extremely hypothetical. His comments are fraught with uncertainty. "The volume of loans should not . . .", meaning that it could decline significantly. If we are to rely on assumptions, mine is just as valid as the Minister's. But I for one know very well that the odds are in favour of lenders reacting unfavourably. Who will be happy to pay out $9 million rather than investing the money?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, what the Government wants to achieve with Bill C-23 is to significantly reduce access to the Small Business Loans Act by lenders, and in turn by small businesses. In other words, they are limiting access to financial sources that are absolutely vital and that have in the past enabled a number of small businesses, small Canadian firms to start in business and prosper in this country.

Anybody who claims to support small businesses and view them as our society's economic locomotive must reject the Government's proposals because they are inconsistent and unacceptable. This is a serious issue and so is our duty.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, in New Brunswick in 1980 there were 17,000 small- and medium-sized businesses with a sales volume of less than $2 million a year. There were 17,000 in 1980, and now there are many more. In 1983, with the Small Business Loans Act, 745 new small businesses obtained loans for a total amount of $22 million. You know also, Mr. Speaker, that in my province of New Brunswick, small businesses are essential. They provide most of the jobs and they also are vital to our people. The citizens in my province are born workers whose ability to earn a living is aleatory, greatly dependent as it is on the climatic conditions under which they operate. I refer for instance to our people involved in the fishing, farming and tourist industries.

• (1120)

As they operate already under difficult and uncontrollable conditions, the last thing we should do is to create new obstacles for them. On the contrary, we should try and find ways and means to alleviate these natural impediments. These ways and means are already at our disposal, Mr. Speaker. The party opposite preaches that Canadians should be encouraged to invest. But "preaching" is just not good enough. It should take action. What is more, it should take appropriate action.

So far, the new government has covered the first two stages. As to the third, I suggest that its first appropriate action should be to withdraw the provisions about the 90-10 per cent sharing of losses and the 1 per cent loan fee which lenders would have to pay on each loan to the government.

If the party opposite really wants to help small businesses, it should fulfill its promise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any question or comment on the Hon. Member's speech? If not, we will resume debate. The Hon. Member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes (Mrs. Landry) has the floor.

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to take part in the debate on second reading of Bill C-23 to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act. The fact that I have decided to make my maiden speech in the House on this Bill shows how vital I consider the contribution of small businesses to be for the Canadian economy.

I also want to take this opportunity to thank my constituents of Blainville-Deux-Montagnes. Last September 4, the residents of Blainville-Deux-Montagnes showed unequivocally that they wanted a change in direction. The Progressive Conservative Government, under the leadership of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has understood this crystal clear message. Anxious to meet the aspirations of Canadians, our Government has firmly committed itself to renewal, as evidenced in the Speech from the Throne and the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Speaker, let me remind Hon. Members that the Blainville-Deux-Montagnes constituency, located to the north of the Rivière des Mille-îles and the Lac des Deux-Montagnes and to the south of Mirabel airport, includes ten municipalities. This federal district extends over 287 square kilometres in the greater Montreal area. At the 1981 census, it had a population of 112,000, of which 86 per cent were francophones, 12 per cent anglophones and 2 per cent belonged to other ethnic groups. In addition, the population of Blainville-Deux-Montagnes continues to increase at a rate which reached 22 per cent during the period from 1976 to 1981. This population increase reflects the attraction my constituency holds for many Quebecers.

The economy of this mostly urban constituency revolves around the manufacturing sector, commodity trade and socio-cultural, business and personal services. Our primary industries are largely made up of family-type farming businesses. On the other hand, according to a survey conducted by a Department of Employment and Immigration economist, the importance of service industries in the community reflects the suburban character of the region.

The major employer is undoubtedly the Boisbriand General Motors plant, which has a manpower of about 3,500. Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize the importance of the auto industry for our local economy. Many subcontractors owe their survival to GM.

• (1125)

Last November, I learned with regret about the decision of GM not to invest $700 million in the upgrading and robotization of its Boisbriand plant. This unfortunate decision caused great concern to local businessmen who had contributed a lot of energy and effort to welcome the General Motors plant to Boisbriand. Prompted by Mr. Michel Gagné, Chairman of the Laurentian Development Regional Council and mayor of Boisbriand, a regional committee was formed to assess the impact of the cancellation by GM of its investment project. I was more than willing to join this committee which has already met twice. While its function is to examine the direction GM wants to give its Boisbriand plant, the committee fervently wishes for other auto industries to locate in the region, thus attacting more subcontracting business.

The contribution of the General Motors Plant to the economy of my riding is of great significance Mr. Speaker, and I trust that this company will continue to play a major role and will very soon go forward with its ambitious investment project. General Motors facilities in Quebec should be on an equal footing with those in southern Ontario.

In addition to the General Motors plant, the Blainville-Deux-Montagnes constituency has numerous small and medium-size businesses which provide stable employment to a considerable number of residents. Similarly Mr. Speaker, it should be pointed out that this constituency has major assets which allow it to face the future with great confidence. Indeed, because of its very advantageous strategic position it would be the envy of many Canadian constituencies. Located near two international airports and the Port of Montreal, Blainville-Deux-Montagnes has undoubtedly what it takes to become a major industrial centre.

Those few brief socio-economic data demonstrate very clearly, Mr. Speaker, that the bill amending the Small Businesses Loans Act is most important for many small businesses in my constituency.

I would now like to go beyond those strictly local considerations and deal with the importance of the private sector in Canada.

Our government hopes to create a favourable climate for investments, and it has realized that private enterprise had to be allowed to play its proper role as a full economic partner. The entrepreneurship shown by Canadian businessmen has substantially contributed to promote economic development in Canada.

We have to recognize, Mr. Speaker, that some 750,000 small businesses provide 26 per cent of jobs in Canada. Moreover, thanks to their vitality, those small businesses created 90 per cent of the new jobs in Canada during the past five years.

I would like to refer to the case of a small business operating in my constituency. In 1982, two local businessmen decided to set up Electromed International Limited whose aim was to establish a structure for the design and manufacture of high technology products and their marketing in Canada, in the United States and in France. In two short years, that young business has now increased its staff from 20 to 35. Within three years, it expects to have 70 employees. That company was recently awarded by the Quebec government the Stimulexport Price for its vitality. I take this opportunity to congratulate those business leaders. This short digression on a small business in my constituency is a vivid example of the economic impact of small businesses. If that kind of success was experienced at the Canadian level, our unusually high unemployment rate would be drastically reduced.

This government has realized that it should cooperate with small businesses to enable them to make a larger contribution to the economic recovery in Canada.

I am pleased that my colleague the Hon. André Bissonnette is undertaking this week a Canadian tour to consult businessmen, groups, financial institutions, labour, educational institutions and provincial governments. Our government knows quite well that our policies cannot be developed in isolation but that they should take into account the proposals put forward by those directly involved.

Through public meetings, our government will gather information, constructive criticisms and suggestions which will help us to meet the needs of Canadian businessmen.

In the same spirit, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note to what extent the federal-provincial relations have improved during the past six months. As evidenced by the results of the First Ministers' Economic Conference which was held in Regina, both levels of government are determined to work in a spirit of full cooperation. By avoiding the pointless federal-provincial bickering which had unfortunately become our predecessors' trademark of sort, the Progressive Conservative government will significantly contribute to fostering confidence among private investors. These sterile federal-provincial quarrels have certainly played their part in destroying the confidence of Quebec businessmen. Our government has realized that reestablishing a climate favourable to new investments is a sine qua non for our continued economic recovery.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize that Bill C-23 should be perceived as part of a series of measures aimed at encouraging entrepreneurship within the private sector.

Over the past few years, small business representatives have made countless representations in their efforts to obtain a streamlining of government regulations. Our government recognizes that small businesses have been the victims of "over-regulation". So, we intend to simplify a good many regulations which have very often inhibited the extension of small businesses and the entrepreneurship of our businessmen. In my humble opinion, thanks to measures such as these, the lot of small businesses can only improve. The state must provide the private enterprise with more latitude to operate.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that this long preamble on the importance of the private sector was necessary before I dealt more specifically with Bill C-23.

Mr. Speaker, I consider this bill of utmost importance for many small businesses, and that is why I support it unreservedly. In the province of Quebec, for instance, for the year ending December 31, 1983, 9,908 small businesses representing some 38 per cent of the total for Canada have availed themselves of the Small Businesses Loans Act. Such a figure proves better than any theoretical demonstration the need for such a legislation. Let us not forget that these 9,908 Quebec businesses which have availed themselves of the provisions of this legislation have created within their communities thousands of jobs. Moreover, they have had locally, more often than not, a multiplier effect by increasing the demand for goods and services.

Together with my colleague Hon. André Bissonnette, I do not feel it would be indicated to rise the $100,000 ceiling for these loans. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the average loan granted in 1984 amounted to only $28,888. This $100,000 ceiling for these loans clearly seems to satisfy those who are directly concerned.

Mr. Speaker, there is a second aspect of the Bill that deserves further consideration, and that is the provision that losses will be shared between the Government and the lending institutions. Under the present legislation, the Government is liable for the full amount of losses sustained on loans. This is a situation which, in my view, is very unfair and should be corrected. In the Bill before the House today, the lending institutions will have to share the liability with the Government, that is, they will be liable for 10 per cent of losses sustained on loans to small businesses. The Federal Government will continue to pay the lion's share, since it will be liable for 90 per cent of such losses.

I do not think this puts any undue burden on the lending institutions, and I feel such a measure is entirely justified. I also think it makes very good sense to charge lenders a single fee which amounts to 1 per cent of a loan made under the Act. In this way, the Government will be able to recover part of the losses sustained on these loans.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would advise Members opposite not to delay unduly the passage of this legislation. The Small Businesses Loans Act can be said to have passed the test of time, and now, Hon. Members must act quickly to respond to the increasing number of applications under the Small Businesses Loans Act. As the Member for Blainville-Deux-Montagnes and former owner of a small business, I realize how important this legislation is to many local small businesses.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech?

[English]

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my concerns about Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, is not so much its contents but what is not contained in the bill. The small business sector of our economy certainly has the potential to create jobs but I suggest that it is facing severe difficulties in Canada.

Under, the Small Businesses Loans Act in my province, only 101 loans were submitted in 1983. The total amount of money that was borrowed was $2.4 billion and the average loan in P.E.I. in 1983 was approximately $23,000. That is down significantly from the national average loan of approximately $28,000. The problem related to national programs for small business is the geographic difference and population difference in various parts of the country.

There are three main industries in Prince Edward Island: agriculture, which is the primary industry, the fishery industry, which is basically the inshore fishery; and tourism.

● (1140)

If we look at tourism, Mr. Speaker—I listened to my friend from Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) yesterday, and I see him coming in now—he made the point that with the lower dollar we should see more tourists in the Atlantic Provinces, certainly in Canada in general. This is an area that Canada can certainly continue to develop, but in Atlantic Canada we find that while there may be one aspect of an industry or program which is helpful, we run into all kinds of other things that work in the opposite direction. In the tourism sector I think it is mainly high gasoline prices which will have a very serious effect. The increase in ferry rates to my province is also going to take away from any benefit we may have gained by a cheaper dollar.

Small business is faced with many, many problems. High interest rates affect small business in a very detrimental way. With the fall of the dollar it is likely that we will see another round of high interest rates which would have a serious effect on small business, including our tourist operators.

In Prince Edward Island, as in Atlantic Canada generally, we have only a three-month tourist season because of climatic conditions. In my province we have high operating costs because of high energy and transportation costs. This will certainly make people who come to my province look twice. Most of the tourists that we get come from either the New England States, Quebec or Ontario. Therefore, transportation adds to their costs. If they have x number of dollars to spend, if most of them are blue collar workers, and it is going to cost them more at their vacation site, they will shorten their stay by a day or so. Therefore there will be no net benefit.

If we look at agriculture in Canada today, Mr. Speaker, it is in serious trouble. In my province the main agricultural product is potatoes. We are noted for potatoes, as my friend across the way knows. Yesterday we discussed briefly the contemplated increase in inspection fees and what effect that will have on our farmers in Atlantic Canada. As well, hog and dairy producers are affected by high freight rates which are reflected in the price of feed grain in Atlantic Canada. The picture is not bright for the agricultural and tourist communities.

How are we going to create the jobs which all Members from Atlantic Canada believe are going to be necessary in our part of the country over the next few years? It seems as though every time we see a break coming, there is something else that the bureaucracy or the Government bring in to offset that slight advantage. That concerns me a great deal. Look at the fishing industry. In my province it is mainly an inshore fishing industry. Here is an opportunity for some sort of expansion in that industry for value-added products, and research into value-added products, but there is a tremendous problem with the small fishing industry today as it relates to processing.

I have in my riding a very, very good fishing operation called Acadian Fishermen's Co-Op. I think I used this as an example of how small business is having some real difficulties. This Co-Op was formed many years ago, expanded in the early 1970s with great anticipation of the advent of the 200-mile zone, and they thought they could take full advantage of a lucrative fishery and processing in the 1970s. That company, like all other fish processing companies, got into some very serious difficulties through over-capitalization, and high interest rates put a tremendous squeeze on them. As well, they were in competition with some of the larger processing companies in Atlantic Canada and elsewhere.

One of the problems which small business has is cash flow. In many cases they buy a raw product, process it, and then it has to sit in warehouses for many weeks, sometimes as much as a year, before it is actually sold on the market. Of course, when that happens we sometimes get panic selling by those companies. That tends to bring the price down on world markets to a point below the cost of production. You must remember that holding on to a large inventory of goods means high costs. Even if the company is in fairly good financial shape, it has to bear the burden of those dollars tied up over long periods of time. That puts these companies at a tremendous disadvantage if they cannot recover the cost at the other end, in the market-place. Of course, it is then mostly larger companies which get into these problems of high inventory and they start dumping at the wholesale and retail levels. No small business can cope with that sort of situation for very long. Where do they turn to? This legislation does very little for them, because if you have to borrow money at high interest rates, it does not do you an awful lot of good. I think we have not addressed the interest rate situation.

Getting back to the Bill specifically, local credit unions are usually the financial institutions that loan money to small business in my area. They have not used this Act in the past because it has simply no profit margin for them, and being a small financial institution, they cannot bear the cost. It presents some great problems to certain areas of our country. It may not have the same effect in what I call the Golden Triangle of Montreal-Toronto-Ottawa, or in areas that are very close to American markets or markets within our country.

Then we take a look at some other areas of potential growth. We look at a company or a business operator, someone with a good idea who wants to put that idea in the form of a business. I went through this myself a number of years ago in the shellfish industry. I set up Canada's first commercial oyster factory. This was a totally new and innovative idea. It was the first in Canada. I had worked on the research stages with the Fisheries Research Board of Canada. We had the theory worked out in the lab stages in what I called the beaker stages. You bring oysters into holding tanks at a certain water temperature. You take the oysters and you spawn them artificially. You put them in tanks, rear the larvae, and have the larvae set on culch, as they call it. Then you take them from there and put them in the natural environment. You then raise them through to maturity, which takes about five years. In nature that would be a 12-year process.

One of the problems I had in setting up the business was that I needed buildings, tanks and equipment. In some cases I needed very innovative equipment, equipment that had to be designed specifically. That is quite a capital outlay. Then one needs staff and technicians. In the long run you have to wait five to ten years to get any amount of money back from your investment. But what happens in the interim? Like most people, you find yourself with a cash flow problem.

Where do you turn? When you are setting up the new business today you may be able to get help. In most cases Governments do have vehicles, grants systems, that will help you with your capital infrastructure. But that is only part of the problem of operating a business. The real problem is to be able to operate and carry on in the interval between the time you develop a product, sell it and have cash coming in. That is one of the problems. The Government today and Governments in the past have not had the proper financial mechanism in place for that to take place. Research and development is an area which should be taken full advantage of. We are not doing enough research and development which is needed to create jobs. It will have to be done in the future if we are to create the kinds of jobs that are necessary.

Just last week I talked to a man who is into fox farming. Many years ago Prince Edward Island was noted for its silver fox. Prices back in the early 1900s were as high as $250,000 for a pair of fox-breeding stock. For many years that industry was flat. In the last number of years it has started to come back to a point where there is a profit in it.

For a person interested in fox farming today once again there is a tremendous capital outlay required to start. First, you have to have your ranch in place, which costs a good amount of money. You have to set yourself up with breeding stock. It takes a while to get into the business, three or four years. Those involved with it who understand the genetics of raising foxes, and one thing or another, sometimes are not the ones to benefit. You will find that corporations exploit that kind of an industry, which should be left to those who can do it best, those who understand the industry. Understanding and being able to operate a business is no good unless you have access to the dollars to carry on the business.

These are some examples of how small business is having great difficulty today. Some of our small contractors in rural areas have a tremendous impact on job creation. Once again, they have difficulty getting the required dollars. Contractors do two or three jobs and they have five or six people working for them in the summer months, sometimes year round. They are, however, restrained. They could get lots more business if they had the cash flow, the dollars to tide them over. This is very difficult and this piece of legislation is not doing much for it.

Let me come back to the agricultural industry. Certain areas of small business have to have some support from government. I am speaking about infrastructure. What if you grow potatoes and you do not have the transportation to take those potatoes from the farm to the market? You would find yourself in great difficulty. In my own area we ship about 80 per cent of the potatoes from Prince Edward Island. We were looking for a deep water berth which amounted to $3.5 million to $4 million contract, which was approved. I am now told that is being held up. Governments have to take a look at providing the infrastructure to our industries so that small business can provide the jobs that this Government and I am sure every Member of Parliament would want to see provided.

We can no longer carry on with the welfare state. We have to make sure the dollars we spend in government are spent properly. We should ensure that things are helpful to business and not a hindrance. I come from the business world. There is so much red tape about. Every time you turn around something is in the mail which has to be filled out. I hope the Government would seriously consider what is happening out there. I hope the Government keeps its ears to the ground to do something to help the people of this country rather than hinder them.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your indulgence. Those are just a few suggestions I wanted to make to add to this debate today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

• (1200)

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis), for questions or comments.

Mrs. Duplessis: For comments, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Please proceed.

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, I was quite disappointed in the speech made by the Hon. Member opposite. He obviously does not seem to understand what is happening today to small businesses. I do not know whether he is satisfied with the so-called climate of trust the previous Government tried to create with respect to small- and medium-sized businesses when it was in power, but that is not what this Government intends to do. Just so he will understand, allow me to explain to him what I think of the main features of this Bill and tell him to what extent the Government is anxious to continue to play its role of catalyst with respect to the initiatives of small business in the private sector. I will not insist on what I feel is an administrative re-arrangement of the basic and lasting purposes of the legislation, namely the additional $300 million provided under this measure.

However, the new definition of small business in the Bill is finally geared to the economic situation which has changed radically since 1977. True, the new $2 million ceiling no longer jibes with the definition given by Statistics Canada and the Small Business Secretariat, as the Minister of State (Small Businesses) pointed out. On the other hand, this amendment calls for a broadminded approach in the sense that our Government readily acknowledges that the sales of a small business are expected to grow along with its activities and that the inflationary trend in recent years has put a damper on sales figures, with the result that some businesses which need financial support had been left out in the cold.

Mr. Speaker, is there need to point out that the sales of most Canadian small businesses are in line with the standards advocated in the Bill? When I say most businesses, I mean that more than 95 per cent of Canadian companies account for at least 30 per cent of the GNP, as the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) reminded us on behalf of his Party. Our colleague may have been carried away by his own oratorical flight, so I can appreciate why he forgot to mention that the Bill finally reflects the reality of our economy.

Without a doubt, job creation has to be the most significant contributive role of those economic components. According to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, all new jobs in Canada between 1980 and 1982 were created by small businesses with fewer than 50 employees, including 18 per cent by companies less than two years old.

It is further evidence that we do need those entrepreneurs, and we will encourage them through this Bill. We must encourage them, not take their place. Let me explain. Last February 6, Gulf Canada President John L. Stoick addressed the Greater Barrie Chamber of Commerce and stated—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the comments in question should be very brief. I think his comments are now verging on a speech. Would he complete them and then ask a question, please?

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, far from making a speech, I was just commenting on the red tape for which the Hon. Member opposite was reproaching us. I should like to follow my point to the end, in order to provide explanations and directly respond to his speech. I continue.

The President said this: The various governments should not forget that what the people with entrepreneurship and owners of small businesses desire is a more discreet presence of the state in their endeavours, and not an increased participation.

It is this more discreet presence that must be provided to these businessmen, and the purpose of this bill is to encourage them to act without, however, the government taking the initiative in their places. So, the difficulties small- and medium-size businesses meet when trying to secure financing are among the major problems they face when they reach their full development. That is why I like the provisions dealing with amalgamated borrowers and the possibility for them to obtain loans under the new program. Indeed, under the new program, increased loans may be obtained through an amalgamation. The amendment which the Hon. Minister has proposed ensures to the corporations the reimbursement of the loans made under the program—

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker, this sounds much more like a prepared speech than questions and comments.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): I think the point of order is well taken. The Hon. Member has now spoken for five minutes. I would suggest that you put your question, if you have one. We will give you 30 seconds to finish your comments. Is that satisfactory?

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: I hope, therefore, that Hon. Members opposite will support this bill which could create new jobs and ensure our economic recovery, for it is well known that small businesses are the engine of the economy.

[English]

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I certainly did not hear a question in the Hon. Member's comments, so it is very difficult for me to reply. I have to give her some credit because it looked like she had a prepared text which was typed out while I was speaking; I do not know where the secretary was.

However, I think the Hon. Member has missed the point because there was no correlation whatsoever between what she said and what I said. She is supporting this Bill. I mentioned earlier that I am not so much against what is in the Bill but what is not in it for small business. Anyway, this Bill has a regressive aspect to it inasmuch as there is a 1 per cent charge on loans to banks. I have talked with representatives of financial institutions in my riding. I hope the Hon. Member has talked with her financial institution representatives in order to obtain their feelings on it. I challenge her to visit my riding and discuss it with the managers of banks, credit unions and other lending institutions. They will tell her that this 1 per cent stipulation will not work for them. Therefore they will not be very co-operative as far as lending money to those who really need the dollars is concerned.

That is the point I am trying to make. I certainly respect the Hon. Member's comments and views, but in the real world out there it is extremely difficult for small business. It is extremely difficult for them, unless the business was inherited from a family member or from someone closely related, or some government came along with a substantial grant. Even with a government grant, provincial and/or federal, they require operating capital. This is where many small businesses fall down. It is the fact that they do not have the capital with which to operate after they have established themselves. That problem is not dealt with in the Bill. I hope the Government takes a look at it in committee to see if it could bring in some program which would be of real assistance to small business.

[Translation]

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for giving me my first opportunity to speak to this honourable House. My reason for making my maiden speech as the Member for Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup at this particular time is that the Bill before the House today is an excellent one and is worthy of the set of measures the Progressive Conservative Government is proposing to restore the health of our economy. It is therefore an honour and indeed a duty for me to express today the concerns of the people of Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup with respect to Canada's economic future, because it is my sincere conviction that if we are to restore this nation's economy, we must start with the regions. They must have a say in the matter. The fact that I am speaking today to the Parliament of Canada on their behalf is the most precious gift I could ever offer my constituents and is also the measure of the thanks I wish to extend to a team of workers and representatives in my constituency, because in Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup, we also live by the words: "Co-operation, co-ordination and collaboration", a motto that honours this Government of which I am proud to be a Member and which reflects honourably on all Canadians.

But, Mr. Speaker, what do the people of Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup want? They want jobs, and they want food on the table. The Bill before the House today is concerned with exactly that, because if we stop to think for a minute, we will realize how important small business is to our economy.

In fact, it is very easy to understand. We only have to ask: What sector generate the greatest number of jobs? The answer is easy: small business!

Over the period 1978-1982, at the height of the recent depression, they generated almost all of the new jobs that were created. Today, they account for 30 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product in the private sector. Numbering over three quarters of a million, they make up 96 per cent of Canadian businesses and are managed by a class of entrepreneurs who reflect both this country's economic vitality and the image of our changing society. Their average age is 35 to 45, with women on the increase. Their number has increased threefold between 1964 and 1980. And people under 30, anxious to take risks and confident of investing in this country are now twice as numerous as they were 15 years ago.

But for the SMBs to fully exercise their role as the locomotive of our Canadian economy, they must have the means to do so. In order for a business to create jobs, it must operate. And in order to operate at a fair rate, it must provide for a minimum of competition, which means that it must improve, modernize and adjust itself. And in order to do that, the owner of that industry must have access to the funds that are available.

Already, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Government has taken a major step towards the promotion of financing for Canadian SMBs by creating Investment Canada, which will build a climate of confidence liable to attract foreign capital and to strengthen the backbone of our economy. All our regions will benefit.

In the case of the Province of Quebec especially, an ancillary agreement under the Canada-Quebec RDA has been signed in order to foster among other things the setting up in our areas of industrial infrastructures. This is another initiative put forward by this Government to encourage industrial expansion and promote SMBs.

All those measures taken in a relaxed and harmonious atmosphere have had a most beneficial impact on our economy and what I might call the "troups' morale".

I spent all of last week in my constituency, where I had the chance to take the pulse of the people, not only of industrialists and workers, but also of all those men and women who on the surface are very remotely involved in that sector. The response was unanimous. The feeling is the same everywhere. Now they can relax! Now, they see the light at the end of the tunnel. But those initiatives, Mr. Speaker, are but a first step. With the legislation now before us, we are taking another step along the road to the summits of excellence which Canada has every right and every duty to look forward to.

That goal is apparently being lost from sight. Too many years of mediocrity, too many years of unhappy results have made us forget that Canada can have its place in the sun. Not in the shadow of another country, but in the full light of day, side by side with our partners from around the world—the Americans, the Japanese or the Europeans. Too many years of neglect under a Liberal administration have led us to forget that we must look far ahead and set our sights high. Such are the secrets, such is the recipe for success. Still, we have let them gather dust.

However, the clean-up has started, and times have changed. With the help of measures like Bill C-23, we have rediscovered the recipe and we can once more aim at those summits. Because with a legislation such as this, our economy can not only tap the international resources to strengthen itself, but it can also turn directly to our national heritage.

I am indeed a bit surprised that our Liberal colleagues would oppose this Bill which promotes Canadian participation in our economic recovery, as this is precisely what they were asking so vehemently a few days ago when Bill C-15 was under consideration.

However, we should not be too upset, Mr. Speaker, because it is not the first time that the Official Opposition contradicts itself. We can see this contradiction in statements like those of the Liberal critic for regional industrial expansion about the 1 per cent fee being charged. He seemed to be suggesting that this fee would be charged every year. This is false, Mr. Speaker, and I fail to understand why the Official Opposition would want to put such doubts in the minds of Canadian men and women. This fee will be charged only the first year and it only affects the return by 0.25 per cent over the average term of a loan, which will do nothing to discourage lending institutions from taking part in the program.

As for the allegations by one of the more vocal Members of the Opposition that the banks will not agree to share 10 per cent of the losses incurred for guaranteed loans, I wonder how the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) can presume such a thing when we know from experience that the losses have been relatively low in the past. The risk taken by the banks is therefore minimal compared to the benefits.

However, these trivialities brought up by Hon. Members opposite make me digress. Let me come back to what I was saying.

Bill C-23 will be an excellent tool to help our national economy which is now on the rise. We must not follow the example of Sisyphus and let the stone roll back down the hill. We would then have to start all over again. This is exactly what would happen if we did not approve this Bill immediately. We would have to start all over again. One of the main purposes of this Bill is to provide supplementary funds to allow the banks to continue to administer the program until March 31. Is it our fault if lenders and borrowers have confidence in this program, which meets a real need, and if they make use of it?

Interrupting this program, even only for six weeks, even only for one week, even only for one day, would be enough to destroy all the confidence which surrounds it and which is the main reason for the success of a service which has amply proven its usefulness since its implementation 24 years ago by the Conservative Government led by the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. Mr. Speaker, any interruption in this program would undermine the efforts made by people throughout the country to promote economic recovery.

Indeed, why dillydally? Why not pass this bill immediately? In addition to the sense of continuity I have just described, a clear evidence of the trust we have in the business sector, the other aspects of the Bill only show plain common sense. This bill does not radically alter the current program but only makes it more consistent with the economic realities of 1985. It simply recognizes the role of each economic sector. Thanks to a deeper involvement, the banks will feel more comfortable while relying on a firm government support.

In addition, the bill will enable small businesses to expand and to diversify into research and development, which is so essential for the growth of our economy and its adjustment to world markets.

Through the comprehensive measures advocated by our government, Canadian businesses will now have the means to devote part of their energy to research and development. This sector has been neglected for too long. In 1968, Canada allotted 1.3 per cent of the its Gross National Product to R&D. Fifteen years later, that percentage has remained unchanged while our economic partners throughout the world doubled or tripled their investments in that sector. During that period, strangely enough, Canada has known stagnation. We have spent less per capita for research and development than any other industrialized nation except Iceland and Ireland. The time has come to change that. Through its actions, among which Bill C-23 which I wholeheartedly support, the Progressive Conservative government intends to set a new direction.

However, we do not want to act unilaterally nor impose our views. We leave that to others I need not name. This desire to consult and meet the needs and demands of people, especially in the industrial sector, has been warmly welcomed as shown by businessmen's statements reported in the great Toronto daily, The Globe and Mail:

[English]

Small business groups say they like the sound of the Government's word.

[Translation]

Does this not prove beyond doubt that Canadian businessmen are receptive to the various initiatives taken by the Mulroney Government?

And if it is true for the whole country, it is also true for my constituents.

Some will say that the economy of my riding is primarily based on agriculture. Some might even suggest that a Member from such a riding has no need to be concerned with the problems of small business.

They are wrong, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I must say that I have great respect for people living of the land. As a matter of fact, there are many in my riding and they have special problems. I am well aware of that and throughout my campaign, I made representations on their behalf and demanded policies geared to their needs. Since my election, I did everything in my power to carry out the plans of action developed jointly by farmers and myself.

So, this group is very important, but it is not alone. There is too often a tendency to forget the offshoots of small business located on the fringe of large centres like Montreal and Quebec City.

It is about time our regional industries had their say and a place in the sun as well. As I have been all my life in small business at every level, from the position of clerk to that of chief executive officer, I certainly speak from experience rather than in the abstract.

Mr. Speaker, small business is certainly as important for regional economies as for larger centres, but it is wrong to suggest that the problem should be dealt with in the same manner.

It would therefore be illusive to think that megaprojects are a must before a region can be put on the map, for what is needed is presence and visibility. We must not be afraid to show dynamism in strong regions. I would point out that the provinces were not the only victims of the centralizing mentality which the Liberals made us endure for nearly twenty years—centralization was so powerful that its impact was felt even in the regions.

For too long now, Mr. Speaker, people have forgotten that we cannot have a strong economic country unless the regions are strong as well—there is no way the whole can be strong if the parts are weak. It is unthinkable and illogical, and that is something the team to which I belong has long since recognized. As evidence of that, take the agreements signed with the provinces—including the Atlantic Accord—or again the spirit of open-mindedness and co-operation that prevailed at the Regina conference hardly a few days ago.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, national prosperity can come only through sound regional development policies. The regions have no need for gigantic projects and white elephants, but there are other options available.

We can pave the way for regional development by encouraging small business, particularly with respect to natural resources. We have to look around us and exploit what we do have. What is the point in trying to get and develop a resource which abound in the next region? Let us make an inventory of the resources around us. Let us develop them, so that we will have strong regions.

In Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup, for instance, we do have several promising resources which are often neglected—fishing, and particularly eel fishing. How is it that eel fishermen have only one outlet for their product, which is to ship it to Montreal from where it is exported to Europe? How is it that we have this resource back home, yet its economic fallouts can barely be felt?

The same goes for peat. Why not start up small businesses to process that nearly inexhaustible resource, while peat bags from Rivière-Ouelle, Rivière-du-Loup or elsewhere are for sale on Toronto, Winnipeg or Vancouver markets?

What about our forests? There again the response is unsatisfactory at the economic level. Some industries are leaders in that field, but they can never be really competitive because they are often short of cash. We are strangling them instead of lending them a hand. That practice has to stop. In terms of tourism, my region is nothing more than a throughway between Quebec City and the Gaspé area. What are we waiting for before we develop that tourist industry, that natural and cultural wealth which lies idle along that throughway? The resource is there all right, but it is left unused.

As far as farming is concerned, unfortunately we lack SMBs to process foodstuffs in our area. We have a few which we often look upon as economic pillars for the region, but there are too few of them considering the potential we have.

Also needed are economic development agencies in the area itself. Agencies such as the Corporation de développement économique de La Pocatière, which is in charge of industrial promotion for the whole of the Kamouraska County Regional Municipality. This is a Quebec first in that field, and my area is proud of it. Other projects may follow such for Les Basques and Rivière-du-Loup, and this goes to show the positive spin-offs of a healthy decentralization.

There is another kind of agency that could have quite an influence. I am thinking of job creation agencies which cause the most productive interaction, the almost ideal form of co-operation between the private and the public sectors. Being aimed at providing venture capital to the SMBs of a CRM, the key companies can easily become a vital element for the economic survival of a region. The areas of La Pocatière, Les Basques and Témiscouata are waiting for the setting up of such agencies that would complement the work done by other agencies while responding to the real needs of CRMs. Those companies are proving to be a first rate effort in regions that have been neglected up till now as far as economic development is concerned.

Finally, one has to rely on the vitality of the regions and in ours just as elsewhere in Canada people have rediscovered on September 4 a climate of confidence, conducive to innovation and progress. To illustrate that, we are organizing a seminar on subcontracting which has been labelled a major economic event in Eastern Quebec. The purpose of that seminar is to publicize the region and get entrepreneurs and potential investors to consider our area—

• (1230)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Looking at our area from the business location point of view, it is inconceivable that a number of our own industries, such as Bombardier for instance, cannot farm out more of its operation in the region itself, for lack of adequate industrial resources.

As I said, the time for centralizing imperialism is over. As reported in "La Presse," more than 60 percent of Quebec's SMBs are located in Montreal. What is left for the regions? Tidbits only. Enough of that! We must think out another formula, a winning formula this time. Such is the purpose of that seminar on subcontracting at which the public sector and private entrepreneurs will be able to meet, to explore new markets, to strike out good deals. That seminar fills a gap and also reflects the economic enrichment that can be generated through consultation between all parties concerned in a given region. In our area, it is the first time that such an exercise is attempted. It was about time, and it is to be expected that its results will be quite beneficial.

Mr. Speaker, as we have been saying, it is our firm belief that the private sector is the power supply of the economy. But the private sector alone cannot do everything. This is why the various levels of government must also play their roles. The current government, Mr. Speaker, is leaving to the private sector the free hand it needed to provide a healthy leadership. But the Government will also be there when the time comes to help the private sector by means of efficient and positive incentives. And among those incentives we have Bill C-23, now before us.

This Bill is clear, simple, farsighted and logical. It meets the needs of the business community by guaranteeing initial loans for industrial expansion. It meets the needs of the people because it will foster job creation.

I therefore support this legislation and I urge all Hon. Members to do likewise.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): Are there any questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member? On debate, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan).

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to be able to speak on this Bill today. I noticed the remarks of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) in his press release on January 25, which stated:

> This initiative demonstrates the federal Government's recognition that small business is the engine of economic growth.

He seems to be in conflict with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), who says that energy is the engine of economic growth. It now seems that we have two engines in the country which do not work. The people of Canada are counting on those two engines for economic stimulation, growth and jobs. It is a tragedy. What the Bill does is ruin the benefits which the Small Businesses Loans Act has been providing over the last number of years.

The Government has indicated that small businesses are creating about 80 per cent of net new employment and that is the reason the Bill is important. I agree with that statement and I believe there is general agreement with it. This Bill is important. Small business is extremely important for Canada. If we do not have a healthy small business sector, we cannot hope to develop the economic headway which we want. This Bill does the exact opposite. It ruins the benefits that the Small Businesses Loans Act has been providing to small business.

The Government says that small business plays an important role in generating activity in the lesser developed regions. Potentially, that is true, but it is not happening. Anyone who looks at the statistics will realize that small businesses are going bankrupt in areas where the economy is not healthy. There is a growing gap between the economically successful regions of Canada and the areas which are undergoing regional disparity. It is a tragedy. There is no longer a common denominator in Canada. Certainly, the Government, in saying this, is misleading Canadians because it is not true and it is becoming less true every day.

I would like to read into the record two of the goals that the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion has set forward for small business. One goal states:

To support the development of an economic climate that promotes the small business sector's strong sense of competitiveness, entrepreneurship, creativity and risk taking.

Another goal states:

To encourage and support the important role of small business in economic and regional development.

If anything could be further from the truth, it is the role and the activity of this Government in using small business to generate activity in the area of regional development. It is a travesty. It is tragic because we are losing valuable time.

Any Member of the House could tell us that small businesses are closing down across the country. During the recession a great many small businesses were forced to close. The small businesses which we have today are hanging on by their fingernails. If interest rates increase, those businesses will not be able to withstand a second assault on their sphere of interest and they will close in large numbers.

What happens every time a small business closes in an area which does not have sufficient economic growth? What happens in an area where there is not a large population base which does not have convenient modes of transportation for the shipment of goods? What happens when that area does not have a market nearby? When a small business closes in those regions, in most cases the business does not return. If that business is to open again, it will open in a larger centre. That small business will be lost to the community and it will not return. That is a tragedy.

How is this Bill supposed to help small business? First, the funds to March 31, 1985 were originally $1.5 billion. That figure was increased by $300 million to $1.8 billion. That is a good decision on the part of the Government and I congratulate it on that decision. However, by saying that only $1 billion will be available from April 1, 1985 to March 31, 1990, we are sending a signal to the small business community that we are losing interest and that there is not a commitment to help small business. That signal will be readily grasped by the small business community in Canada.

The Government has said that we must be careful. Yes, we do want to help small business, but we do not want to help it that much, because in 1984 $43 million was lost. That is really something. That amount of money is important. However, on the one hand the Government is saying that it wants to help small business, and on the other hand it is keeping a score-card on small business. Which will it be? Does the Government want to help small business or not? The Government does not want to lose money on this program. It wants to provide guaranteed loans for small business, but it does not want to have to pay for it.

● (1240)

Where is small business really going to get the assistance it so badly needs? The Federal Business Development Bank's fiscal requirements are almost as bad as the chartered banks and other financial institutions. It is worried it is going to lose money. The Government says it has to help small business financially but it gives with one hand and takes away with the other, and that is wrong. Clause 2 of Bill C-23 relates to Section 3 of the Small Businesses Loans Act. There is a very pertinent subsection in this Bill. I quote Subsection 3(2)(c). This relates, Mr. Speaker, to how a bank can get reimbursed for any losses under the Small Businesses Loans Act. One of the requirements is that the bank has to be able to say, through a responsible officer of the bank, that it certifies, I quote:

—a responsible officer of the bank certified that he had scrutinized and checked the application for the loan and the statements contained therein with the care required of him by the bank in the conduct of its ordinary business;

That is a section which puts an onus on the bank. It was one thing when the banks were reimbursed 100 per cent for losses under the Small Businesses Loans Act, but what the Government is now saying is that it is only going to reimburse the banks 90 per cent. I can see that perhaps the Government does not want to be overly generous with the chartered banks, but the present and preceding Governments have put the chartered banks in the position where they have complete say over where the money goes. The Government only requires that the banks tell them when loans are made and when loans are defaulted upon.

This Bill puts the chartered banks in the position of social institutions by giving them control over loans to small businesses through the vehicle of the federal Government, and the federal Government is saying that the banks will get back 90 per cent. The banks got back 100 per cent before this and they are not philanthropic. No one can ever say that about them. So what initiatives are the banks going to show? I believe it is going to mean less and less of a concentration upon and concern with areas of this country which have economic difficulties. I would challenge any Hon. Member of this House, or indeed anyone, to check with the financial institutions in areas of regional disparity in this country and find out how much money the banks have allowed under this particular Act for those particular regions in the past four or five years.

I know that under the Small Businesses Loans Act in my area of industrial Cape Breton—which now has an unemployment rate of 40 per cent—not one cent has been received in recent years under the Small Businesses Loans Act. The banks are not prepared to take a chance on these areas. On what basis are they providing nothing? It is only because they had to account to the federal Government that they acted in a business-like way. They couldn't be bothered. They said: "Let's give this money to regions of the country where we don't have to give that accounting; where the presumption that we might help someone or show a little consideration, kindness or leeway to a particular industry which needs help would not be there".

The schedule of provincial distribution which was given to us by the Government shows that Nova Scotia received 1.8 per cent of the money; Prince Edward Island received .3 per cent of the money and Newfoundland received 1.3 per cent of the money. This is ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. This is not helping the areas which need help. Quebec received the highest amount, 38.4 per cent. I defy anyone to go into the Province of Quebec and break that down into regions to find out where that money went. I would say without any hesitation that the money went to the more successful economic regions in the Province of Quebec. I am just using the Province of Quebec as an example to show what is happening.

The banks now have to pay 10 per cent. The banks are going to say thank you very much. They will consider this Bill interesting reading and will file it, and if they happen to get a client who is perhaps a little marginal but who would have received the loan anyway because he's not a bad guy and they have to keep up some kind of facade, they don't have to take much of a chance. The Government is guaranteeing 90 per cent of the loan. That's the difference in emphasis. The Act is going to be less and less useful to the small business which really needs that money.

In Bill C-23 there is a very interesting concept. I quote from Section 3(4)(b):

> the bank has, at the time the loan is submitted for registration or at such other time as is prescribed, paid to the Minister a fee of one per cent of the amount of the loan or such other fee as is prescribed or calculated in the manner prescribed.

Not only are the banks going to get 90 per cent instead of 100 per cent, but they are now paying a fee of 1 per cent. The banks are anything but a social institution or a philanthropic group. We know they are not going to be bothered with this. What kind of nonsense is it? The Government is saying it wants to help small business but it does not want to lose any money. Second, it is saying it wants to help small business, it does not want to lose money, but it wants to make 1 per cent from the banks before it even starts on those loans. What kind of convoluted reasoning is this?

The small-businessman is lost in the Government's mumbo-jumbo and smoke and mirrors in this small Bill. It is just not going to work at all. So who loses? The small-businessman, of course. The banks will not lose, we can be sure of that. They will make sure of that. They are not going to take a chance on losing money by lending it to Canadians. If it were a multi-billion dollar firm like Dome, I suppose the banks would take a chance, or if the loan was to a foreign country. But they will not take a chance on the small-businessman and the average citizen in this country. They will foreclose on them at the first opportunity. It is the ordinary citizen and the small-businessman who are picking up the cost of the losses on these loans to large corporations and foreign countries. I am telling the Government that this is not only not going to work but it is a regressive step in helping small business in this country.

What about the other problems of the small-businessman? He is absolutely smothered with regulatory requirements. There is a paper burden on the small-businessman which needs some relief. He spends nights and weekends filling out forms which could be compressed into one form or which may not even be needed at all. When we look at this Bill which is supposedly a vehicle of appreciation of what the small-businessmen are doing for this country, we wonder why they would want to bother being in business for themselves at all.

I ask the Government to reconsider this Bill. It is retrogresive. I am sure all Hon. Members of the House want to do something for small-businessmen. Let's not make their situation worse than it was before. This Bill is not going to work and the Government is going to suffer as a result of it. The banks are not going to put themselves out and the small-businessman once again is going to suffer.

• (1250)

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that a lot of the problems which he saw, the excesive number of forms, problems in dealing with the banks and the federal Government, are not things which occurred strictly after September 4. They have developed over many, many years, and the Liberals formed the Government for most of that time. It is not my purpose to get up and defend the record of the Conservative Government; I suspect there may be a few Members left in the House who might do that. But to be intellectually honest, I think we must recognize that a lot of the blame must be placed at the feet of those who served in the last Government, and the Hon. Member was part of that team.

I think he raised some good issues, Mr. Speaker. In dealing with the banks small businesses do not have much clout. We need a legislative proposal which will give those small businessmen and women the opportunity to say there is legislation that provides that the banks should be supporting small business.

I also hope the federal Government, in looking at other problem areas, would not just do what I am afraid is happening at the present time with the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre), who is putting on a huge ad campaign indicating how much this Government supports small business. I would rather that there actually be a program in front of this House showing that the Government is going to support small business; but we do not have that. The legislation in front of us is really not much different from what we have had in the past from the Liberal Government. If this Conservative Government is going to be true to its call for change, which is the basic reason it was elected, then we should be seeing new legislation to help small business.

Perhaps in responding to my comments the Hon. Member could indicate some of the things he would like to see done which his Party, when it was in government, did not do.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comments because they give me a chance to deliver a commercial. I was a member of the Task Force on Regulatory Reform in the last Parliament. We came forward with a report which we felt very strongly about. I agree that the former Government did not act upon that report to the extent we would have liked. I will accept that. But it was not only a question of the former Liberal Government. This problem of regulatory reform exists in all the provinces of this country, provinces with Progressive Conservative Governments and one province, Manitoba, with an NDP Government. It is not just a problem of the federal Government. But it is getting out of hand.

I am afraid that all Governments are afraid to tackle this problem. I honestly do not think that government feels it can get a handle on the problem of regulatory reform. It is not an exciting thing. As good as the report is, I do not think Hon. Members will take it home and read it before they go to bed. But it is a tremendously important subject which has to be dealt with. It is needlessly costing this country millions of dollars and it is getting worse and worse every year. I would recommend that the Government read the report on regulatory reform which the task force prepared in the Thirty-second Parliament.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the speech by the Hon. Member was most passionate. I can well understand why it should be since he comes from an area of the country where things are not as well as they might be and there is a need for stimulus of business of all types, large and small. It was a great pleasure to listen to him because I sat in this House for some five years and I do not think I heard him speak on more than one or two occasions. A turn in opposition loosens the tongue; I found that myself. But after listening to his passionate speech I was unable to determine whether or not it is his intention to vote for or against the Bill. I wonder if he could advise us what his intention is, Sir?

Mr. MacLellan: Yes, I have no difficulty with that, Mr. Speaker. I am against the Bill for the most part. I think it is regressive. My only concern is, will the Government use this money for small businessmen starting April 1 as a carrot to get the Bill passed? I know that as insufficient an amount as this is over the next five-year period, it is tremendously important that some money be made available to small business rather than none at all.

Mr. Nickerson: Which way are you going to vote?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. Does he not realize that in the early 1980s, when interest rates went up very dramatically, many small businesses which had borrowed money to permit them to operate and expand and become more efficient were really forced out of business and put into bankruptcy because they could not live with the very high and rapidly fluctuating interest rates? That happened under a Liberal Government and we are seeing the beginnings of a repeat of that situation in all likelihood happening again. Interest rates are going up and are likely to continue going up.

While this Bill may help a little, what is really needed for small business people is stable and low interest rates through programs which are in effect in other countries but which we have not put into effect in this country.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member. Certainly interest rates are going to have a very large role in the success of a large number of small businesses in this country. Not only is there a question of high interest rates, but you have a lot of small businessmen who are just recovering and holding on from the high interest rates of the early 1980s, as the Hon. Member said.

He mentioned that the former Liberal Government allowed high interest rates. Well, the former Liberal Government was in power at the time, but all Governments in the western world allowed these high interest rates. Certainly it hurt, and it is one thing to allow it at that time, but if it is allowed again it will be a lot like the fellow who lost $5 in the hockey game and then lost another $5 on the instant replay. This Government will be losing $5 on an instant replay and that, I think, would be an incredible situation. So I ask Members opposite to monitor and consider this very serious problem very carefully.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the speech by the Hon. Member here today. He mentioned something about how sometimes government programs work in opposite directions. I know that in Glace Bay a fish plant was burned to the ground, creating even more havoc in that area, where employment is concerned, than was caused by the downturn in steel production and mining. But at the same time the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his statement dropped the generic promotion of fish products in the United States. This once again is a prime example of how government programs work in a direction opposite to one another. In other words, they take away from one area and give a little bit to another area. As a result there is no net growth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): I regret to advise the Hon. Member that the time for questions and comments has expired.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

THE ADMINISTRATION

POLITICAL APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, last summer during the election campaign Members opposite were promising the Canadian people that, if elected, they would become miracle workers, they would create jobs, reduce interest rates, increase the value of the dollar, along with 336 other promises. The people of Canada now realize that this was just a lot of "bulroney". The Government's biggest accomplishment so far has not been to the benefit of Canadians but to the benefit of its Tory friends.

The Tory Leader who was to reform patronage has been playing Santa Claus on almost a daily basis, by handing out gifts to his friends, such as advertising contracts, plum appointments, and so on. Even there the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) showed his typical way of messing things up by forgetting to advise the people he appoints, who usually find out about their appointments through the media.

He goes on further by appointing people who openly admit that they have no qualifications whatsoever to undertake their tasks and have no idea why they were chosen in the first place. This is the Tory job-creation program. Successful applicants must be Tories, and qualifications are irrelevant.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

TRIBUTE TO PERSONNEL OF TRENTON RESCUE CO-ORDINATION CENTRE

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, shortly after dark on February 8, a 22-year old pilot from Edmonton South took off from the border airport of Massena, New York, in a single engine Cherokee Arrow, on a three stage flight to La Guardia. Twenty minutes out, he radioed back to the tower that he had encountered a blinding snowstorm and that he was turning back. He was not heard from again.

Young Bruce Squair's dream was to become a commercial pilot. He needed to build up his hours, and, with the aid of a small inheritance, he rented a white aircraft with a red tail from the Edmonton Flying Club, and set off around North America. On the leg out of Massena he wore a down-filled flight jacket, a flight suite, and sneakers. He carried with him no food, and only a can of diet drink.

By dawn Saturday, units of the U.S. Civil Air Patrol and the Canadian Forces were in the air, flying a search pattern. Mr. Speaker, I met with young Bruce's parents the next day on a flight from Edmonton to Ottawa. Bruce had then not been heard from for over 36 hours and, while they were praying for his safety and survival, they knew it didn't look good.

I am happy to report that Bruce Squair is back home in Edmonton today with just a fractured cheekbone and a black eye. The Cherokee aircraft is a write-off. But the personnel of the Trenton Rescue Co-ordination Centre not only spotted Bruce's last flare and rescued him, throughout they maintained a friendly, helpful and positive posture with his anxious parents. They were honest but positive, and their sensibility respecting the family's concern and worry was constructive and assuring.

CO-OPERATIVES

EMPLOYMENT CO-OPERATIVES' POTENTIAL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of Members of the House a conference which will be getting under way this evening in Saskatoon. It is a conference on employment co-operatives, and I want to take a few moments to indicate the vital role that such institutions can play over the next few years.

Day in and day out in the House we search for ways and means to resurrect our economy, to create new employment and enhance job security for those who are still working, as well as to promote regional development and increase productivity.

Given time, and a supportive legislative environment, employment co-operatives can fulfil all of these functions. I not only believe they can, I also believe that they will.

Throughout the country Canadians are demanding a new approach to our economic problems. They are tired of quick fix promises. They no longer have faith in the ability of government and they are suspicious, with good reason, of the motives of big business. They are demanding control over their own affairs. Employment co-operatives can satisfy this demand. They are institutions which arise from the grassroots, by the initiative of individual Canadians, not from government or the corporate sector.

It is incumbent upon Governments to follow the lead of their people to create an environment in which employment co-operatives can develop and prosper.

The New Democratic Party was founded on a belief in economic democracy, that people should have control over their own economic destiny. We believe strongly in the potential of employment co-ops, and will do everything in our power to help this important third sector.

THE SENATE

DELAY IN ADOPTION OF BILL C-11—BORROWING AUTHORITY

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, in view of the delayed passage of Bill C-11 resulting in additional expenditures, a situation due to the fact that the second chamber is unelected, I wish to say on behalf of all Canadians that the government should consider the reform of the second House.

I regret, as many Canadians do, that the leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) did not keep his word and willfully contributes to the predicament in which the government is at present.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Official Opposition has lost the confidence of Canadians and that the New Democratic Party seems to be the real official opposition. Therefore, I demand the immediate resignation of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner).

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—ATTITUDE OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, last week, on February 21, President Reagan and Secretary Shultz once again escalated their allegations and threats against the Government and people of Nicaragua. In making these threats, the U.S. Government is ignoring the most basic principles of international law and the United Nations Charter. If the United States, a country of 250 million people, is free to bully a small sovereign country of 2.5 million like Nicaragua, then any larger country, including the Soviet Union, can justify bullying smaller, neighbouring countries.

How can the United States condemn the Soviet interventions in Afghanistan and Poland when it is attempting similar tactics in Nicaragua? While Nicaragua may have adopted social and economic policies that are different from the United States, this does not mean that it is a puppet of the U.S.S.R. or a closet member of the Warsaw Pact.

I would urge our Government, which supports the Contadora peace process, to recommend a similar commitment to the United States when our leaders meet in Quebec on March 17. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) might recommend that President Reagan should visit Nicaragua, like many of us have done. If the President spoke to the people and examined many of their successful development programs, he might change his mind and support Nicaragua, rather than trying to crush this small, besieged country.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I recently had the privilege to represent the electors of the constituency of Ottawa-Carleton during a trip to British Columbia and both northern territories. I accompanied the dynamic Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie).

[English]

We met with government leaders of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, with Indian, Dene, Métis, and Inuit leaders, and we participated in the impressive opening of the Tenth Legislative Assembly in Yellowknife. We learned a tremendous amount about the frustrations, concerns, and aspirations of northerners and our aboriginal peoples.

There are no simple solutions to their very complex concerns of land claims, Indian status, control of resources, constitutional rights, and many more. I urge the Government, however, to keep trying.

Just as important, however, I participated in the historic First Ministers' Conference on the economy in Regina. I am proud to say that the new spirit of co-operation, harmony, and confidence referred to by all Premiers will generate a renewed strength in the fabric of our federation. Premier René Lévesque and Premier Howard Pawley both spoke of the positive benefits for the whole of Canada.

A cynical opposition Member was heard to say at the conference that the Tories were just patting each other on the back for two days. It sure beats kicking each other in the teeth.

[Translation]

The economic conference was good for Regina, for Saskatchewan, for all provinces, but still more important it was good for the people throughout our great country. Long live the new government and its leader!

LABOUR RELATIONS

TREATMENT OF BRITISH UNION EMPLOYEES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to recent actions of Bell Canada International in its acquisition of companies in Great Britain and its intention to eliminate the union representing the employees of Cable and Wireless U.K. Services as a precondition for purchasing the company.

I draw to the attention of the House that such an action is illegal under Canadian law, which gives employees the right to belong to unions, and it is contrary to any accepted practice in Great Britain.

Bell Canada has had a privileged monopoly position for developing in Canada, and is now using the power and wealth derived from that position to coerce British citizens who belong to a recognized trade union. This action has created a black eye for Canada in international labour circles. The Government should be aware that Bell's action has not gone unnoticed.

Until such time as Bell meets the legitimate wishes of its employees in Great Britain, by recognizing the trade union of their choice, I call upon the Government to delay any consideration of Bill C-19, now before the House, which permits the reorganization of publicly fostered Bell Canada holdings.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATES

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): On January 21, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced a reduction in the interest rates on loans provided by the Farm Credit Corporation. This initiative will affect over 5,600 farm producers who had obtained loans with interest rates ranging from 14 per cent to 16.75 per cent. Thanks to this initiative, these interest rates will be brought down to 12.75 per cent. This represents for these producers a reduction of their total burden of some $16 million.

Mr. Speaker, this decision will affect directly or indirectly the whole of the Canadian economy. Young farmers will consider with increased optimism the possibility of taking over the family farm. It will reduce the number of farm bankruptcies which are caused in part by the usurious interest rates accepted by the previous government. It especially announces the coming of better days for our farm producers.

I should like to remind our hon. friends opposite that this decision is the accomplishment of an election promise our party had made and is the mark of a government which is both responsible and concerned about the future.

Mr. Speaker, you may rest assured that our government, through its Minister of Agriculture, will continue its consultations with the various representatives of the agricultural industry, in order to offer Canadian producers concrete solutions.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

DOMTAR—MINISTER'S DECISION

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, the decision concerning the Domtar Corporation's $1.2 billion investment project in Windsor, Quebec, demonstrates unequivocally the complete weakness, inertia and indifference of the Quebec wing of the Progressive Conservative caucus as far as the major economic projects within our province are concerned.

Although the real strong men of the Progressive Conservative Party in Quebec are the non-elected personal friends of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Montreal, Quebecers can rightfully wonder why Quebec members of the Progressive Conservative Party caucus have accepted such a decision.

This morning's issue of La Presse provided part of the answer. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) and the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) both learned about it through the media. The Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette) and the chairman of the Quebec caucus of the Progressive Conservative Party were unaware of the issue. And, of course, the Prime Minister is holidaying in Florida.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that Quebec members of the Progressive Conservative Party are not getting any information about the major issues. For that matter, they are not seeking information about them either. This political decision is altogether unacceptable, and I hope that the silent majority, in this case the Quebec caucus of the Progressive Conservative Party, will put an end to its idleness and demand that the Minister either reverse his decision or resign.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

MEDIA TREATMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am not the only one who is disgusted with the character assassination of two Hon. Members of this House by some of the Liberals and segments of the media. Here are some extracts from a letter that I have received:

> Some of us back here in the riding have been wondering at some of the goings on in Ottawa and thought you could explain it to us . . . .It is true that an Ottawa newspaper and a television media spent thousands of dollars sending reporters and a camera crew over to Germany to discover that one of our Ministers, on his own time, took a drink at a night club? I can tell you that doesn't raise any eyebrows back here—we are more concerned about the price of pigs . . . I'm pretty sure they could take a tour around Ottawa or Hull any night of the week and they could find Ministers and Liberals and even the press boozing it up. Wouldn't that be a lot cheaper? Is this what they call new journalism? Or yellow journalism? Or is it just muck-raking?—
> And that there security investigation . . . .Is it right that the media and Liberals want to know who they talked to and what they said? If the Government told them, there wouldn't be any more security, would there? . . . I wish those Liberals would shut their traps so the Government we elected could send us our stabilization cheques—

I conclude that if the Liberals are serious about rebuilding their Party, they would be well advised to build it on truth and justice, not on innuendoes and character assassination veering on persecution of honourable men.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Clark) says Canada, as an ally, has to support the American Strategic Defence Initiative because it brought the Soviets back to the bargaining table.

But now it is the United States that risks splitting the alliance and wrecking any chance of peace.

The Americans now say that star wars is the core of their long-term strategy. It is not just research to keep up with the Soviets.

They refuse to give it up. They say SDI is not a bargaining chip. But it seem likely that the Soviets will offer cuts in intermediate-range and strategic nuclear missiles in return for a ban on space weapons.

Those cuts are precisely what the West has been pursuing for years, but the American precondition will prevent us from realizing that goal.

And yesterday the Norwegian Defence Committee told us they feared this American position could damage the alliance and ruin the hope of reducing the threat of nuclear war.

It is in the interests of Canada, of Norway, and of all mankind, to achieve real cuts in offensive nuclear weapons and so bring the world back from the brink of nuclear war. These cuts, and not the development of defensive space weaponry, should remain the primary goal of the West.

The Minister of National Defence should make it clear that this is the position of the Government of Canada. He should tell the Americans that they, not Canada nor the European states, risk splitting the western alliance with their illogical obsession with the development of star wars technology.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The current crisis in the Canadian dollar is being aggravated by lack of precision on the part of the Government and the Minister of Finance regarding his intentions as to the future monetary policy of the Government. Yesterday, to reporters he declared that there was no change in the policy of the Government. Yet in the House earlier yesterday afternoon he told my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides:

—that interest rates would be higher today had it not been for the policies that have been followed by the Bank of Canada and the Government in the past two or three weeks.

If special policies have been taken in the last two or three weeks, what were those special policies? Do they constitute a difference or not? Has the Minister come to the conclusion that he is prepared to devalue the Canadian dollar in order to stabilize Canadian interest rates?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition says that certain things are aggravating the situation with the level of the Canadian dollar today.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Like you.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I can tell the Leader of the Opposition that there is one thing that definitely is aggravating the level of the Canadian dollar, and that is the action of members of his Party in the other place which is costing upwards of $10 million.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I read here that the Leader of the Opposition is backing the Senators in blocking that Bill—

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —causing uncertainty which is costing taxpayers $10 million or more. He should call off that sort of irresponsible action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MONETARY POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that remark was absolute nonsense. The Minister does not know whether, having had to borrow on the short rate, he will do better in the long run than having had to borrow on the long rate. He may have saved $10 or $15 million. He does not know. He has been absolutely irregular before the House in that respect.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister stated before the House that his policy was aimed at stabilizing the foreign exchange market. However, in view of the confusion which still exists some clarification about his intentions seems to be in order. If he does not bring down a budget in the near future, would he reverse his decision and make an official statement in the House about the monetary policy of the Government or could he convince his colleague, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, to make such a statement himself?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition the facts are there. Based on the level of interest rates today compared to the amounts of money that could have been raised about two or three weeks ago, and were not raised because of the actions in the other place, the cost to taxpayers has been at least $10 million. Those are the facts, and I ask him to reconsider his position.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Why don't you abolish the place?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In relation to the specific question which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has just asked, I have made quite clear what the response of the Bank of Canada is. It is to moderate the movements in the exchange rate and also to moderate the movements in interest rates.

I ask Hon. Members to consider what has happened today. The Canadian dollar hit a low at about 71.13 cents U.S. earlier today. It was up to 71.97 cents just before lunch. We are in a very volatile situation, Mr. Speaker. We are trying to moderate those swings in the exchange rates to introduce a greater degree of stability and confidence so we can get back to a more normal situation.

POLICY INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister takes some encouragement from the dollar rising in value up this afternoon, but I want to recall to his attention that the dollar reached a new low this morning.

● (1420)

I recall his words to a former Minister of Finance, Mr. MacEachen, when he said, "Does he not realize"—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This was the Minister of Finance when he was finance critic, putting a question to Mr. MacEachen: "Does he not realize that every time the level of the dollar reaches a record low, his credibility reaches a record low as well?"

[Translation]

I repeat to the Minister that his contradictions and the fact that he did not have a clear policy are making the dollar crisis even worse.

He told the press yesterday that his policy had not changed, but he also said to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, that as a result of his policies of the last two weeks interest rates had remained stable.

Can he tell us whether or not he believes that a devaluation of our Canadian dollar would stabilize interest rates? Would he reassure the Canadian people by making an official statement immediately?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has quoted his oracle, Mr. MacEachen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: He quoted you.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would suggest to the Hon. Leader that he might search for another place for questions to ask in the House.

Let us address the situation which we have today, what the causes of the problem are. It is not a weak Canadian dollar. It is a very, very strong and very volatile United States dollar. In terms of the United States dollar against the pound sterling today, sterling hit a low of $1.03 and it is back up to $1.07. The swing in the Deutschmark is between $3.47 and $3.39. It is not just a question of what the Canadian dollar is doing against the U.S. dollar in this very, very volatile international situation, so the comments he has made are simply without foundation.

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has expressed concern about irresponsible action. If he is that concerned, doesn't he realize that the profane and inaccurate comments made by the Prime Minister in his current Fortune magazine interview are contributing to the weakness of the Canadian dollar and a loss of confidence in the Canadian economy? If he really wants to do something about irresponsible statements, will he not insist that the Prime Minister retract those inaccurate and profane statements, and thereby restore confidence to the dollar and to the Canadian private sector?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the comments which the Prime Minister made to the people in Fortune were related to the problems this country has been encountering over the last 10 or 15 years and the situation we are facing today. However, the point of the comments by the Prime Minister was simply to point out that we in Canada are living in a very competitive international world, that we cannot expect, just because we have the products, that they will be sold, and that we have to work hard and get our costs very competitive with the international market-place. That is the substance of the Prime Minister's comments.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance overlooks the fact that the Prime Minister was speaking in the present tense, and that he and his Government have been in place since last September. I want to remind the Minister of Finance that in 1982, when the dollar was under pressure, but far less than today, he said: "There have been many times in the past when the Canadian dollar and the U.S. dollar were strong against other currencies, but why is the Canadian dollar weak and the U.S. dollar strong today? It is because the Canadian Government is not following sound policies". Will the Minister of Finance not realize and admit that what he said in 1982 is even more true today? Why won't he take action to restore confidence in the Canadian dollar and in the Canadian economy? Why is he dithering? Why won't he act now?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to think back to November 8 when we set in train a series of policies which were designed to strengthen the economy of Canada and lead, over a period of time, to a much stronger situation in the country.

The situation back in 1982 was entirely different. It was weakness between Canada and the United States. Surely the Hon. Member can understand the fact that this is not just a Canada -U.S. problem with which we are faced today. It is an international problem encompassing every major industrial currency. I would expect that he would use a little more broadminded point of view and take that into account.

Mr. Deans: Shades of Marc Lalonde.

Oral Questions

LEVEL OF BUSINESS CONFIDENCE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask about confidence. The Minister of Finance will recall that just prior to the last election he, his Leader, and others in the Conservative Party, indicated that if the country would elect a Conservative majority a renewed business and investment confidence would take hold in Canada almost immediately. I want to ask the Minister of Finance whether the most recent increases in interest rates, together with the decrease in the value of the dollar, are a clear indication of this renewed business confidence.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have spent since November 8 meeting with a number of groups, business, labour, and others, across the country. I can tell the Hon. Member, as well as other Hon. Members, that there is a distinct change, a distinct improvement in business confidence throughout the country because of the policies which we introduced on November 8. I can also tell them that I spent the last two days of last week in New York talking with members of the international financial community who said exactly the same thing with regard to their attitude toward Canada. That change in business confidence is coming, and it is coming fast.

MORTGAGE RATE INCREASES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Are the recently announced mortgage interest rate increases, together with the highest one-month increase in unemployment in the last five years, indications of a new increased confidence, both in the business and investment sectors?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday that I am not happy with the increase in interest rates. I made it quite clear why I believe interest rates have increased. I have also said that the policy of the Bank of Canada has been to moderate the increase in interest rates. I would hope that, once we get some degree of stability back into the market-place from the very unusual times we are encountering today, we would see some decline in interest rates, and that should follow through in the mortgage rates as well.

FORECAST OF ECONOMIC GROWTH

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister attribute the recent forecasts by Wood Gundy of a real GNP increase of 2.9 per cent, or almost 3 per cent for 1985, over and against the increase of 4.4 per cent which took place in 1984, to be an indicator of this renewed business and investment confidence which he promised to the people of Canada would take place immediately after the Conservatives were elected? Are these the indicators on which the people of Canada are supposed to rely?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, last November, if the Hon. Member will recall, I estimated that the real growth in the Canadian economy in 1985 was going to be about 2.4 per cent. Subsequently I have revised that projection upwards.

An Hon. Member: It is down from 1984.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am not happy with the drop in the rate of growth from 1984, but we are moving in the right direction. We are getting the expectations for 1985 up, and I would expect—

Mr. Deans: Higher interest rates, lower dollar, higher unemployment!

• (1430)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would listen to the answer, he might learn something. What I am saying to the Hon. Member is that all economists throughout the economy are increasing their projections for 1985 from what they were last fall. That is a very good sign of progress.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

CANADA-U.S. RELATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. In the last few days, we have seen how the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has tried to stab Quebec in the back, especially in the case of Domtar and Windsor, and we have heard the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion say that one of the reasons why he jeopardized an investment of $1.3 billion was his fear of American retaliation. However, American spokesmen said this morning, that the Minister is confusing apples and oranges because sacrificing jobs in the fine paper industry has no effect on the lumber sector.

Can the Minister tell the House how his Government can reconcile having cancelled a project in the fine paper sector to try to improve Canada-United States relations with the situation of the lumber industry?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend, I am not sure whether he is confused or not. If he is attributing ministerial statements on this to me, I suggest he is incorrect. All I can tell him is that, under existing U.S. legislation, if grants are in fact given to Canadian companies, there is the possibility of countervail by the American Government against us with respect to those grants.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR DECISION—DOMTAR

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems to have come out of a popcorn box. This is an issue which has been discussed by all Canadian media and which concerns the possibility of retaliation by the American Government against an investment in Canada by his own Government. I understand that the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion have settled this issue in secret, but I would like the Minister for International Trade to tell us whether, as Minister responsible for foreign trade, he is now telling us that the Domtar subsidy was jeopardizing the lumber negotiations. He does not know the answer!

An Hon. Member: Of course not!

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, since the question relates to the portfolio of my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, I will answer in his stead as Acting Minister, especially since it relates to something that I said yesterday, about which I am now being misquoted.

I said in the House, and outside the Chamber, that there were several problems that weighed heavily on the minds of the Minister and his colleagues, among whom I include myself, in connection with the refusal of the Government to fund the relevant application, only one of which related to the possibility of countervail in the United States. The major consideration that was taken into account by the Government of Canada was the fact that a subvention of the size that was being contemplated and applied for would have disruptive influence in the domestic market-place. There are several other major companies waiting in line for a similar subsidy. If we were to give it to Domtar, we would have to give it to the others too.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The Minister will certainly appreciate how fragile is the recovery these days. I notice people watching the continual falling of the dollar very carefully. More important, people are concerned about interest rates. We saw what the Liberal Government did when it was in power in terms of interest rate policy—up, up, up. Canadians tossed them out because they wanted a real change. In the last little while, what has become clear to the people of Canada is that that change might not be taking place with the new Minister of Finance.

Will the Minister of Finance give a very clear signal to the investment community and consumers across the country that he has the courage to say that interest rates are not going to be going up any longer, that they have reached their height and they will be coming down from this point on? Will he send that very clear signal out to people, rather than the usual waffling around we have been getting in the last little while?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should understand that neither the Minister of Finance nor the Bank of Canada pull a big lever and say that is what interest rates are going to be. Interest rates are decided by the individual decisions of many thousands of investors. The Bank of Canada can lean against that movement in interest rates, and it has been doing that. As I said in the House yesterday, interest rates would have been higher had it not been for the action of the bank over the past two or three weeks. I am not happy with interest rates going up. I would like to see interest rates going down. However, until we can get some degree of stability back into the exchange markets, that will not happen. That is the direction that the Government is taking to try to re-inject that confidence and stability in the exchange markets through the stabilizing process.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL STATEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I remember hearing Marc Lalonde and Allan MacEachen repeat that same line month after month after month, saying there was nothing they could do.

There is a great deal of questioning by the public as to whether the Minister is leading the Government in terms of financial policy. Is the Minister going to send a very clear signal, a powerful signal, that he is, in fact, the Minister of Finance, that he will be making some hard decisions, making a decision on interest rates and telling the people of Canada that they will not be going up, that they will be coming down? Will he say that to the people of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this type of rhetoric on the part of the Hon. Member does not prove anything to anyone. What is going to be the proof is what came out in the November statement which I gave in this House, as well as what is in the Budget. There we are sending some very clear signals as to the directions we feel the country should be going in order to re-introduce a greater degree of growth and job creation.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): And look what happened.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member would listen, he might learn something from the answer. The November 8 statement, and the Budget that is to follow, will send out the very clear signal that what we are trying to achieve here is a more competitive economy, a lower level of interest rates, and a greater sense of competitiveness in the economy that will create those jobs.

THE SENATE

COST OF DELAY IN ADOPTION OF BILL C-11—BORROWING AUTHORITY

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

Have no fear, today I am not going after the other place again. Two days in a row is too much!

First, we are well off here. Luckily for us a Member can be there two three days in a row answering questions without having to take a day off.

Here is my question: Can the Hon. Minister tell us, Mr. Speaker, how much the taxpayers will have to pay for the delay in passing Bill C-11, the borrowing authority legislation?

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have said on a number of occasions that the irresponsible actions of the people in the other place, supported—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Members of Parliament are Members of Parliament wherever they sit, in this Chamber or in another Chamber, and they are to be treated with respect.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

DOMTAR—JOBS IN EASTERN TOWNSHIPS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the Domtar issue and I will put it to the only minister who seems to be authorized to answer it. Mr. Minister, since the workers at Domtar and in related industries, and I am referring to the lumber industry, the manufacturing industry and all the small and medium businessmen who depend on the operations of that company do not accept the reasons given by the Minister for refusing to grant the $100 million subsidy, I ask you: What do you intend to do exactly over the next few days to protect and confirm those thousands of jobs in the Eastern Townships?

● (1440)

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it very clear that I share the concerns that were expressed by the Hon. Member on behalf of his constituents. We on this side of the House understand that the Hon. Member has an obligation to voice the concerns of his constituents. He has a constituency to represent, but we on this side of the House have a constituency as well, and that is the national constituency. From time to time, the interests of a local constituency will not be in the interests of the national constituency, and it is the obligation of the national Government to reconcile those interests where possible.

We will, therefore, do our best to work with the company, the union, and the Hon. Member, to see whether there is not a possible source of alternative funding for the company's planned expansion.

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Minister that my constituents are not concerned here. What is concerned is the whole area of the Eastern Townships and a major segment of Quebec's economy. I would also remind the Minister that, when the Prime Minister was Leader of the Opposition, during a visit in the Eastern Townships, he said: "A Conservative Government will not taunt you. Ottawa will support you." I therefore ask this House, what do you intend to do to save those jobs? Those people want jobs for tomorrow and for next year. And I am asking you what you will be doing, keeping in mind that this is a vital matter for Quebec's economy.

[English]

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will appreciate that we are concerned about the 700 jobs that are at stake in that particular town, just as we are concerned about the jobs that are at stake in other mill towns. We have been assured by officials, by experts whom we have consulted, by Members of Parliament, and by the Minister's colleagues in Cabinet, that to give the requested subvention would be to place in jeopardy some five or six competing companies in the same sector within Canada. This would jeopardize jobs not only in Windsor but also right across the country. We do not want to see that happen.

AIR CANADA

PART-TIME JOBS—EFFECT ON WOMEN EMPLOYEES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Transport aware that Air Canada is negotiating unlimited part-time jobs which will force women employees in particular out of full-time work and into part-time jobs, with inadequate pay and benefits, little job security, and fewer career options? Does the Minister support this policy of Air Canada which flies in the face of employment equity?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether or not the Hon. Member is referring to the CALEA negotiations that are now going on. I understand that they are before conciliation at the present time and it would be inappropriate for me to comment further.

EMPLOYEE EQUITY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I think it is perfectly clear that, on the question of part-time work in general, women need to eat full time, and many women are raising children. They do not want to be forced into taking part-time jobs.

I would like to ask the Minister about government policy in general. Does he believe that this policy is appropriate? Will the Minister intervene in this dangerous precedent to make sure that employee equity, which the Government apparently supports, becomes reality for women?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take notice of the question and make sure that the representations of the Hon. Member are passed directly to Air Canada officials.

TRADE

LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Government has thrown Domtar and hundreds of Canadian workers like crumbs to the wolves south of the border. Now at the request of the United States, the Government will throw thousands more Canadians onto the UIC rolls by making a secret deal on the Canadian export of lumber into U.S. markets. Will the Minister for International Trade tell the House whether or not there have been any representations from his U.S. counterparts requesting that the Canadian Government assist in establishing voluntary Canadian quotas on the export of Canadian softwood lumber into the U.S. market?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to answer the question of the Hon. Member. It just so happens that representatives from my Ministry and from Mr. Brock's Department met this morning in Ottawa. We have fully and thoroughly discussed the problem between the two countries at this time, and I can advise the Hon. Member that at no time were the matters of voluntary restraint arrangements or agreements raised, nor were any requested.

FORTHCOMING MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who indicated some weeks ago that, if this matter was not resolved quickly, he would put it on the agenda for the March 17 meeting. The matter has not been resolved. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the House whether or not both countries have agreed to put the question of Canadian softwood lumber exports to the U.S. on the agenda of the March 17 meeting? Will he further confirm that it is the position of the Canadian Government that neither voluntary controls nor externally imposed controls restricting exports of Canadian lumber are acceptable to this country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the support of the Hon. Member for the summit meeting of the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States. I must say it is rather surprising for me to hear support for any positive action taken by Canada and the United States, coming from members of the Liberal Party. Perhaps with their change in leadership and reassertion of Mr. MacEachen, that is one of the changes we will be seeing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I confirm the undertaking I gave in the House some weeks ago that, if the matter is not resolved, it will be on either the agenda of the President and the Prime Minister or the agenda of Secretary Shultz and myself in Quebec City.

AIR CANADA

CLOSURE OF REGINA OFFICES—TREATMENT OF WOMEN EMPLOYEES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and deals with Air Canada's treatment of women workers. Is the Minister aware that in a confidential file entitled "Operation Saskatchewan", which dealt with the closing of the Air Canada offices in Regina, Air Canada deliberately moved to make sure that its married women employees could not move to Winnipeg, and is he aware that, in doing research into the closure of those offices, Air Canada compiled information on each of its employees according to age, marital status, and sex?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the assertion made by the Hon. Member. I will certainly take it upon myself to look into the matter.

POLICY AFFECTING MARRIED WOMEN

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, if in his research the Minister finds that it is a deliberate policy of Air Canada to make decisions based on age, marital status, and sex, will he see that the policy of making sure that married women no longer have full-time jobs is not adhered to in the negotiations referred to by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East? Will the Government give a policy direction to Air Canada instructing it to make sure that married women are entitled to full-time work, with decent salaries?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to the colleague of the Hon. Member that I would look into this matter and report back to the House. As well, it is my understanding that there is an interdepartmental committee composed of the various Departments of Government that is undertaking to look at, and examine thoroughly, the question of part-time work.

HEALTH

USE OF ALACHLOR HERBICIDE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the public is very alarmed by the fact that officials in the Minister's Department have failed to convince the Minister of Agriculture of the necessity of banning Alachlor, a herbicide used for crop spraying, which, as a result of updated research, has been considered as having the potential to cause cancer in human beings. Will the Minister fulfil his mandate by speaking to the Minister of Agriculture and having him reverse that decision in order to protect the health of Canadians from this very dangerous substance?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for conveying to me his intention of asking this question, and the seriousness with which he takes it. The Hon. Member is possibly aware that this product was initially tested by a firm which came under a very deep cloud of suspicion in terms of its findings. He also knows that Alachlor is used extensively in the agriculture industry.

The Hon. Member asked me whether or not I would speak to my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture. I would like to tell him that that has been done. Also, the various positions have been exchanged with my colleague, and he has given the examples of methods for 1985 on how the safety factors could be maintained. That is still not finalized between the two Departments, but it is the state of the matter at the moment.

● (1450)

RESPONSIBILITY FOR DECISION MAKING

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister undertake to ensure that his Department, not the Department of Agriculture, will be the Department that makes the final decision on the approval or banning of herbicides and pesticides, for the sake of public health?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, having been in Cabinet before, the Hon. Member knows that the research is done in the Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare, and then the decision is made by Agriculture Canada. In terms of the protection of the health of Canadians, not only do I have the responsibility, but the Minister of Agriculture also takes that matter very seriously. If there are alternate plans—and the Hon. Member also knows there are other products which might be available—that matter is under advisement.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance or the President of the Treasury Board. I would like to know what instructions will be issued by the Minister or Ministers concerning the greatest Liberal scandal in the history of Canada. Some time ago, the Auditor General of Canada presented his report and I would like to know what the Minister, Ministers or the Government will do about it.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly assure my colleague that serious consideration has been given to many of the recommendations made by the Auditor General concerning a fair number of management practices. Already the new Government has taken steps about, for instance, cash management and real estate management, and other such measures will be announced in the near future with a view to making an attempt to upgrade the management of Canadian public affairs.

VIA RAIL

STATUS OF CN WORKERS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Does the Minister know that the decision of the Canadian Government to allow VIA Rail to do its own car repair and maintenance has been a source of concern for some 3,000 rail workers? Can the Minister assure the House that no one directly or indirectly working for VIA Rail will be affected by this new Government directive and that no worker will be laid off?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of VIA Rail to undertake to take over the operations of all the maintenance. There will be a transfer of employees from CN to VIA Rail. Those negotiations are ongoing, and I understand that they are proceeding very smoothly and satisfactorily.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Minister of Transport cannot evade the responsibility of making sure that workers will enjoy job security, because it was a Government decision to let VIA Rail assume responsibilities it did not have before.

First, can the Minister assure us that CN workers anxious to go on working for the company will be able to do so and, second, that those who will invoke the seniority clause to practice what is commonly known as bumping will make it possible for others who have been bumped to expect employment with VIA Rail?

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, as I previously indicated, the negotiations are taking place very smoothly between VIA Rail and the respective unions. I can assure the Hon. Member that a deal will be resolved which will be satisfactory to both parties concerned.

RAILWAYS

USEFULNESS OF CONDUCTORS ON FREIGHT TRAINS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport regarding technological change in the transportation industry, which relates to another CPR wreck in Petawawa of a train that was carrying sulphuric acid and sulphur nitrate. It was due to the fact that a conductor was in the caboose at the rear of the train that the fire-fighting organizations were immediately informed of the contents and how they could fight the spills. Does the Minister require further evidence of the value of conductors who are located at the rear of the freight trains, especially those trains which are carrying hazardous goods? Will he enunciate a policy that technology will be used only as additional tools for employees to do their jobs more effectively?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that the issue of the testing of the cabooseless train is currently a matter which is before the Canadian Transport Commission, and that it is about to render a decision. Surely he would not want the Minister of Transport to interfere with the decision-making process of the CTC.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, this is the seventh Minister of Transport I have been through. They all want someone else to make their policies for them. They always want the CTC, or someone else, to do it.

In another area of the Minister's Department, would he assure the House that he will come up with a policy which will provide technological change in the marine industry, of his Department—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid I find it hard, on a supplementary question, to mix rail and water. The Hon. Member for Athabasca.

PENSIONS

VESTING AND PORTABILITY OF PRIVATE PENSIONS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I wonder if the Minister could inform the House how the negotiations are proceeding with the provinces as they relate to the vesting and portability of private pensions?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member, as he will recall, that the Ministers of Finance have held a meeting with regard to the Canada Pension Plan. In terms of the meetings with the provinces on the two issues which he has raised, those meetings have not yet been scheduled nor have they taken place.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Regina West have a supplementary question with regard to rail policy?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, my questions to the Minister of Transport were on technological change in the transportation industry. One dealt with rail, and one dealt with marine.

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Member does not have another question with regard to rail policy. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

THE ADMINISTRATION

TEXTILE AND CLOTHING BOARD APPOINTMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. When interviewed by the Ottawa Citizen on February 16 concerning his appointment to the Textile and Clothing Board, Tory fundraiser, William Hawkins, is quoted as having said that he had no idea that he had been appointed to the Board, that he did not feel qualified, and that he knew nothing about textiles. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us how he can reconcile this appointment with the pledge which was made on July 16 by the Prime Minister, when he said:

> We are going to bring in a brand new dimension of objectivity and representation and fairness for all Canadians.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that this is nothing more than "a fraud, a deceit and a sham", to use words that have previously been said?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not well versed on the textile industry. However, I am quite certain that all of the appointments which are made, are made with respect to men and women of quality, honesty, and integrity, and that these men and women will fulfil their responsibilities in the very highest traditions of Canada.

POLITICAL APPOINTMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, considering that, in response to my question of February 5, the Right Hon. the Prime Minister announced that the House committee on parliamentary reform would review political appointments, is the Deputy Prime Minister in a position to assure the House that there will be a moratorium on all important political appointments until the recommendations of the committee have been tabled in the House?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have answered part of that question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What part did you answer?

Mr. Nielsen: I answered the first part on a previous occasion. With respect to a moratorium, I am afraid that—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That's what the Senate is doing.

Mr. Nielsen: —it would be the heighth of irresponsibility to bring the business of the country to a grinding halt in order to satisfy the whim of the Hon. Member.

We certainly would not want to do in this House what the Liberal Party is doing in the other place.

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 26th day of February, at 4.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière,
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1985-86

A message from Her Excellency the Governor General transmitting Estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1986, was presented by the Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): I would like to move, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 63:

That the Main Estimates, 1985-86, tabled this day, be referred to the several standing committees of the House as follows:

Since the list is naturally rather lengthy, and there is a detailed allocation of the Estimates to committees, if it is agreeable to the House, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the list be printed in Hansard as if it had been read. I have sent my colleague House Leaders of each of the Parties a copy of this particular motion and the references to committee so that all Parties are aware of the specific reference. Perhaps the list can be printed as if read.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Is the suggestion agreeable?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: List referred to above is as follows:]

That the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1986, laid upon the Table earlier this day, be referred to the several Standing Committees of the House as follows:

To the Standing Committee on Agriculture:

PARLIAMENT OF CANADA

ADDRESS OF SECRETARY GENERAL OF UNITED NATIONS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could just move two further items with unanimous consent? There have been consultations with the Opposition House Leaders. The first motion has to do with the state visit to Canada of His Excellency Javier Perez de Cuellar, the Secretary General of the United Nations. I believe if you were to ask for leave of the House, Mr. Speaker, you would find unanimous consent that the following motion be adopted:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, when the House adjourns on March 6, 1985, it shall stand adjourned 11 a.m., March 8, 1985;

That the address of the Secretary General of the United Nations, to be delivered in the House Chamber on March 7, 1985, before Members of the Senate and the House of Commons, together with all introductory and related speeches, be printed as an appendix to the House of Commons Debates of that day and form part of the records of this House; and

That the aforementioned proceedings be made available to the media for transmission in the usual way by the House of Commons broadcast system.

Mr. Speaker: The Government House Leader is seeking unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition, I am certainly prepared to grant consent to that motion. However, I want to suggest to my hon. friend that consideration might well be given to working on another approach in respect to hearing from distinguished visitors. When we have a special sitting of the nature covered in this motion, it means that we do not have a Question Period, nor any other House business. I suggest that my hon. friend and other Hon. Members of this House may want to examine the practice in Westminster where distinguished visitors are invited to address Members of the United Kingdom Parliament in a special room for that purpose so that the ordinary business of Parliament is not interrupted. I hope that this will be taken under consideration.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like as well to indicate our acceptance in the granting of unanimous consent for the change. I believe, Mr. Speaker, you are probably aware that for some time I have been concerned about the practice which has developed of leaders speaking to the joint session of the Commons and Senate and the disruption which that causes, not only to the business of the House.

I want to suggest that perhaps the committee on procedure might be an appropriate group to ask for some guidance as to a procedure we could use to try to accommodate both the desires of important international leaders to speak to Canada and to its Parliaments, while at the same time recognizing that there has to be some way to avoid the potential embarrassment of perhaps denying someone who does not find favour at that particular point in time with the Government of the day from being able to address the Parliament of Canada as perhaps his or her predecessors had been permitted to do.

Therefore, I would like simply to say that we are happy to give the consent. We look forward to hearing the address of the Secretary General of the United Nations, but we would certainly ask the Government to consider a reference to the committee to look at some different type of procedure.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I appreciate the observation which has been made by both of my colleague House Leaders with respect to other Parties in this House. They will understand, and I think fully agree, this being the fortieth anniversary of the creation of the United Nations, that we will look forward to the visit of the Secretary General with great enthusiasm in this country. The points which have been raised will certainly be matters of ongoing discussion. I know we have worked well together in the past and I look forward to working on this arrangement in the future for many years ahead.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. House Leader have unanimous consent for the introduction of his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1985-86

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to table in support of the Estimates, Part I, the Government expenditure plan. In addition, I have tabled with the Clerk of the House on behalf of my colleagues Part III of the Estimates, consisting of 71 department expenditure plans. These documents will be distributed to members of the Standing Committees to assist in their consideration of the spending authorities sought in Part II of the Estimates.

[Translation]

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table in the House today the Main Estimates for 1984-85. The total estimate of expenditures is $103.6 billion, an increase of 7.3 per cent over last year's Main Estimates. This represents the latest Government expenditures forecast for the coming fiscal year and conforms in every respect to the level of expenditures announced by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his economic message last November.

[English]

Those planned spending levels for 1985-86, which include the Main Estimates, the reserves and a provision for the lapse, will total $105.4 billion and represent only a 4.7 per cent increase over the current forecast for 1984-85. I am pleased to announce that there has not been a lower rate of growth in 17 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: If we focus on program outlays, that is excluding public debt charges, the growth in spending levels amounts to just over 2 per cent, well below the rate of inflation.

[Translation]

This low rate of increase in expenditures demonstrates our commitment to limiting expenditures, even though we had to meet commitments made well before this Government came to power. However, I can assure Hon. Members that the increase would have been much higher if the Government had not acted as it did last November to reduce Government spending.

Before elaborating on certain details in the Main Estimates, I would like to say a few words about the presentation which has evolved in recent years. This year is the first time the complete set of budgetary documents has been published in the new format. Individual Members will now have access to information provided in a way that is better suited to their particular needs and that will help them understand the Government's over-all expenditure plan and the individual departmental plans.

[English]

Part I, which was first published in 1981-82, analyses the Main Estimates in relation to the Government's over-all expenditure plan by policy sector or envelope at a government-wide level. Part II, which is commonly referred to as the Blue Book, appears in its new format for the first time. It supports the spending proposals which Parliament will be asked to authorize through an Appropriation Act, and provides detailed forecasts for items already approved through existing statutes. The Blue Book is more streamlined than in previous years because it no longer duplicates information which is included elsewhere in the Estimates documents. Part III of the Estimates is a series of departmental expenditure plans prepared by individual departments and agencies with guidance from the office of the Comptroller General and which I am tabling on behalf of all my Cabinet colleagues.

A complete set of departmental expenditure plans is being published this year for the first time marking the end of the phase-in period. Each plan outlines what the Government expects to achieve as a result of its proposed expenditures in the specific area of activity with which it deals. These detailed plans provide a comprehensive picture of each department's program and will be of particular use to the members of the Standing Committee examining the Main Estimates. Some of the information has been relocated within the three parts to provide a more logical presentation. For example, much of the government-wide summary information, which has traditionally been found in Part II or the Blue Book, is now dealt with in Part I or the Government expenditure plan. Also, some of the details related to departmental expenditures which appear in individual departmental expenditure plans are no longer included in the Blue Book. A complete explanation of a new form of the Estimates is provided in Chapter 5 of the Government expenditure plan.

Since individual Members will likely be more interested in some detailed expenditure plans than in others, the Part III document will not be automatically distributed to all Members. Members will be provided with a list with which to indicate to the Parliamentary Distribution Centre those volumes they would like to have sent to them.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to address the Main Estimates as such. As I said earlier, these estimates conform to the expenditure plan for 1985-86 announced last November by the Minister of Finance, a plan that includes funds for contingencies or reserves for the various envelopes. These reserves serve two purposes: first, they can be used to cover the costs of planned initiatives that could not be included in the Main Estimates because of the time factor, and second, to cover cost adjustments to existing programs during the fiscal year. In either instance, parliamentary approval will be sought through Supplementary Estimates or other legislation.

In 1985-86, these reserves will total $4.6 billion. Not counting job creation projects announced recently, the total reserve level for the new fiscal year is lower than in previous years, which again demonstrates this Government's firm commitment to limiting expenditures.

[English]

The Main Estimates component of the total spending plan amounts to $103.6 billion. Included in this amount is $37.2 billion which Parliament is being asked to authorize or vote, as well as an estimated $66.4 billion in previously authorized statutory expenditures. The expenditure reduction initiative taken by this Government last November has limited the growth in the annually voted portion of these Main Estimates from those tabled a year ago to two-tenths of 1 per cent.

The Main Estimates total plus the $4.6 billion in reserves adds up to $108 billion in that period but actual spending will be less than that for two reasons. First, one must allow for the amount by which departments and agencies will collectively underspend the levels authorized by Parliament. This underspending or lapse, as it is called, occurs each year because the voted amounts in approved Estimates represent an upper limit beyond which departments and agencies cannot legally spend. Secondly, repayments of loans from previous years which have not been offset against new loans in 1985-86 will reduce actual spending from the total amounts authorized.

The 1985-86 Main Estimates provide for budgetary expenditures of $102.5 billion, $8 billion higher than last year. As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, that almost two out of every three dollars the Government spends is due to some legal requirement, that is through federal statute, which determines the basis whereby individuals, businesses and other Canadian Governments receive federal assistance. These statutory payments account for virtually all of the increase in budgetary expenditure. I will mention but three forms of payment.

[Translation]

Public debt charges show an increase of $5.2 billion, which accounts for nearly two thirds of the $8 billion increase, because of the higher debt level and higher average interest rates on the outstanding debt; transfer payments to individuals have increased by $1.2 billion, mostly because of indexation and other statutory provisions; transfer payments to other government levels for insured health services, post-secondary education, fiscal transfers and under the Canada Assistance Plan have also increased by $1.2 billion. All these payments are based on formulas established under existing legislation.

These three major payments, over which the Government has little control in the short term, account for $7.6 billion of the $8 billion increase mentioned earlier.

[English]

The Government has substantially greater control in the short term over the bulk of the remaining programs. This was made evident last fall when the Government announced a $4.2 billion deficit reduction package, of which $3.5 billion represented decreased spending plans.

● (1520)

First, certain programs are being terminated or trimmed back. In the energy field, for example, the Canadian Home Insulation Program will be phased out and the Canadian Oil Substitution Program terminated. Second, a number of capital projects have been cancelled. Third, as a result of its review of defence and foreign aid, the Government was able to reduce spending growth in these two areas while still meeting Canada's international commitments. Fourth, the Government is placing much of its services on a more business-like footing by increasing the prices it charges to users. The services affected include such things as the registration fee for patents and airport taxes.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to announce that, following the intervention of the Government last November, the increase in the expected cost of non-statutory programs for 1985-86 has virtually been eliminated. This clearly shows our commitment to put back some order into the financial affairs of the country and our decision to play a leading role in the economic recovery.

Main Estimates, 1985-86

The Estimates I have tabled today reflect the expenditure reduction process initiated last fall. However, they do not take into account the other initiatives already taken or planned by the Government within the framework of its longer term project to develop a sound public expenditure policy. The structural review of Government programs now being undertaken by a work force under the leadership of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), will enable us to rationalize Government activities, which will result in a more effective and productive administration of existing programs and in major ongoing savings.

These Estimates also do not reflect the expected results of the intensive consultations undertaken by this Government with other government levels in Canada, with business, labour and other groups and individuals.

[English]

Treasury Board has also undertaken a number of initiatives to improve management in the Public Service. In addition to providing Parliament with spending plans, the tabling of the Main Estimates has traditionally been an occasion to focus on the size of the Public Service as measured by the number of person-years under the direct control of the Treasury Board. The 258,222 person-years in these Main Estimates represent an increase of less than one-half to one per cent over the comparably defined 1984-85 Main Estimates figures. The low growth figure is totally consistent with the objectives which the Government announced last November.

In conclusion, I would urge all Hon. Members to read the documents I have tabled today as well as the related media material we are distributing to them. These documents provide a comprehensive picture of these Main Estimates in relation to both over-all spending plans and individual departmental programs. Never has more information been given to Parliament on the Main Estimates.

It has been a pleasure for me to table these documents today, especially in view of the fact that the growth in the portion of these Main Estimates which Parliament is being asked to authorize or vote, the non-statutory portion, is virtually zero. These Estimates bring to light the measures this Government has been able to take thus far in restoring fiscal responsibility. I believe they are a concrete step forward in the deficit reduction efforts of the Government and will go a long way toward reassuring Canadians that proper expenditure management and control is effectively being established by the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to congratulate the President of the Treasury Board because this is his first tabling of Estimates and Heaven knows how much work the preparation of such documents entails. I am also happy about the fact that, this year, we shall have completed our examination of Part III for each department and Government agency, which means that the critics for the various departments will be in a better position to do their job in the committees. In a report published a few days ago, the C.D. Howe Research Institute, after determining the economic situation in which Canada will have to operate in the next few years, stated the following:

[English]

The new Federal Government must state bold and innovative steps to cut its deficit in order to restore the fiscal stability and private sector confidence so necessary for growth.

[Translation]

We have before us today the first major decision made by the new Government since its election last September 4. However, in spite of its election promises, the Conservative Government has included nothing in these estimates which would indicate a serious reduction of the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) spoke earlier about the growth rate for expenditures, but when we look at the over-all budget of $105 billion and the true budgetary expenditures of $102 billion, we can see that budgetary expenditures have a growth rate of 8.4 per cent, which is more than twice the rate of inflation in Canada. I must hasten to add that, in view of these estimates, if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) wants to meet his formal commitment to the Canadian people of lowering the deficit, his only alternative will be to increase taxes.

Indeed, in an article published last February 17 in The Toronto Star, newspaperman Richard Gwyn said the following:

[English]

To an extent that is really quite extraordinary, it is now taken for granted that the Mulroney government lacks the nerve to bring down the budget in April or May that would do something about the deficit.

[Translation]

The Estimates tabled today confirm the truth of Mr. Gwyn's statement and directly contradict the formal commitments made by this Government during the election campaign. With an expenditure forecast showing an 8.4 per cent increase, more than twice the inflation rate, this Government cannot give us a total spending figure of $105 billion without a series of lapsing appropriations and reserves and, especially, increased facilities for contracting loans and obtaining advances. And I wish the Minister the best of luck with his plan to lower lapse amounts without resorting to increases in the Supplementary Estimates. Good luck.

It is truly amazing: an 8.4 increase in spending, twice the inflation rate! Mr. Speaker, the Members opposite, and I realize the Chair is on neutral ground, but just the same, the Members opposite have been waiting sixteen years to solve Canada's problems and to form the Government. These are the people who have been criticizing successive Liberal Governments for sixteen years and saying that they had all the answers, the same people who, especially in recent years, were criticizing the former Government because the Canadian dollar had fallen below the 80-cent line . . . Imagine! We are now almost down to 70 cents, a drop of 4 cents in two weeks. These are the people who during the last election campaign criticized the former Government for its lack of economic policies. These are the people who for years have been saying that job creation is very important, and now job creation programs have been cut by $125 million for 1985-86, compared to last year. These are the people who were going to solve the problems of the forestry and energy industry overnight, if they were elected. There is nothing in the Main Estimates that gives any indication of specific action to be taken in these industries. These are the people who were going to introduce programs aimed at promoting the status of women—no increased spending on that side. These are the people who were going to introduce programs to fight pollution and acid rain: the budget for the Department of the Environment has been cut.

With all these promises and formal commitments, we had a right to expect that the first Main Estimates tabled by this Government would reflect at least a considerable part of the commitments made to all Canadians during the last election campaign. However, the Main Estimates tabled in the House today reflect none of these election promises nor any of the formal commitments made by the Progressive Conservative Party to fight the deficit, which was one of the Party's main themes during the election campaign, and none of the formal commitments with respect to job creation.

It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that last year, when the 1984-85 estimates were tabled, the former President of the Treasury Board indicated that the total expenditures projected for 1985-86 were $103 billion. Those projections, prepared last year, were based on an inflation rate of 5 to 5.5 per cent.

Now we know that the policies put forward to fight inflation have reached their objective, and the inflation rate has slowed down to some 3.5 per cent. But because of that decline in the inflation rate, Mr. Speaker, the Government could have lowered by 2 per cent those $103 billion, it could have lowered the total 1985-86 expenditures by something like $2 billion. But commitments notwithstanding, and despite the announcements made on November 8, 1984, expenditures are totalling $105 billion. And, Mr. Speaker, $105 billion account for 23.5 per cent of the Gross National Product, a 0.6 per cent increase over 1983-84. This Government is giving us figures in the document tabled, Part I, on page 41 or 42. I saw the figures a while ago and they indicate that the total expenditures at $105 billion account for 23.5 per cent of the Canadian Gross National Product, as against 22.9 per cent only in 1983-84.

So much for the so-called effort made to reduce the Government's participation in the over-all economy.

Therefore, in reviewing the projections tabled earlier today by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), we realize that the Tory Government has done practically nothing to seriously address the deficit it has been decrying all along. The only thing they did, Mr. Speaker, was to juggle with loans and advances, reserves and lapsed votes.

I therefore submit, Mr. Speaker, that if the Government is serious, what with the mandate entrusted to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), if they really want to fufill their election promise, they should increase taxes. But then, they also promised that there would be no tax increases.

In conclusion, I must admit that the comments published in The Toronto Star were right to the point.

Moreover, if we consider some items or budgetary envelopes such as Regional Economic Development . . . the budget of that Department, can you imagine, is reduced from $16 to $12 billion. We are left wondering whether with such a cut expenditures will be reduced, but no, the expenditures will be increasing just the same. If we take the reserve fund into consideration, it represents a cut of $1.4 billion.

Let us consider other sectors affecting our regions; Fisheries and Oceans, a cut of $61 million. Mr. Speaker, confidence and leadership were among the main themes of the election campaign which ended on September 4. However after 5 months of a Conservative government, this new Government, which claimed to have solutions for every problem during the election campaign, has failed to take position on all issues of any significance in the entire country,

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) are constantly repeating that the restoration of a climate of confidence would be sufficient to enable the private sector to create employment so urgently needed in Canada. And we constantly hear the party opposite say that confidence in the private sector would be restored as a result of reduced expenditures and controlled deficit. There is no indication in that budget that steps will be taken to cut the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to go on too long, but some time ago, I issued a challenge to the Government to create in 1985 some 345,000 new jobs, which would be in line with the average before the recession at the beginning of the 1980's but nothing in that budget leads us to believe that aim could be attained in the slightest degree.

[English]

Since September 4, Canadians have been waiting for the Government to take action and to state its policies. The first months of this administration have been marred by contradictory signals. On November 8, 1984, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced his intention to cut dramatically into the Budget and the deficit.

After November 8, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) contradicted his Minister of Finance and even led us to believe that the social programs could be expanded. More recently in Regina, the Government tried to create the impression that a lot of new money would be put into job creation. Today we know that there will be not only no increase but a cut of $125 million in the job creation program.

After looking at the Estimates tabled today by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) the confusion seems to be increasing. The budgetary items increase by 8.4 per cent, twice the inflation rate. All those who were waiting for these Estimates in order to understand in what direction the Government wants to lead the Canadian economy, Members of the House, the business community, social groups, have all been disappointed.

After reading part one of the Estimates, I would have to conclude two things: first, the Government has not stated its policies on any issue. The Estimates do not clarify the direction in which the new Government wants to take the economy. Second, this Government, based on its electoral promises, was committed to job creation. Thousands and thousands of jobs were supposed to be created as soon as the Government was sworn in. In fact, in the last quarter of 1984 the Canadian economy has created fewer jobs than in the second quarter, and 1985 has started off on the wrong foot with a loss of jobs.

The Estimates which were tabled today gave us a confused picture. This picture is not very promising for unemployed Canadians. For the regions of Canada that need help there is a cut of $4 billion in the economic development envelope. As regards summer jobs, the training program, et cetera, we see a cut of $125 million in these programs. On top of that, interest rates are rising and the Canadian dollar has reached an historic low.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Official Opposition will have have only two positions to adopt when dealing with the analysis of the Estimates which the Government tabled today. First of all, we will have to continue to insist, just as we are doing now, that government members take clear-cut positions, in order to re-establish a climate of certainty within the economy. Second, we will have to continue to demand that all government policies be directed first and foremost toward the creation of jobs and the reduction of unemployment. While trying to please everybody at once, the Government is deluding the very people who put their trust in it when they elected it on September 4. It is especially deluding the regions in Canada which need help most. There is the case of the Domtar decision, and if I pause to reflect on the Quebec situation, I can list the cuts made to VIA Rail investment, the branch lines to the pipe-line, the Wabasso shut down, the Melchers shut down, the Tupperware shut down in Cowansville; now, there is the Domtar decision, without forgetting the Cloridorme and Newport fish plants, the loss of jobs and the Marine Industries contracts; Mr. Speaker, these are only some of the issues which come to mind when we consider these estimates and compare them with the promises which have been made. That is why I say that we will take a firm stand in the analysis of these estimates, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, since this is our first opportunity to address matters concerning Treasury Board, I would like to congratulate the Minister, who at one time held the riding of Ottawa Centre. I also wish to congratulate his departmental officials who have now completed the changeover to the new format of the Estimates, especially Part II, which is now much easier to understand than the previous version.

Mr. Speaker, I am rather confused by the presentation just made by the Liberal Party's financial critic, because we are new seeing a change in position in these two Parties. The Liberal financial critic is apparently adhering to the position taken by his leader during the leadership campaign last spring. At the time, the leader of the Liberal Party saw reducing the deficit as his Party's priority. He later seemed to have abandoned this position, but apparently the answer is no. It is the official position of his Party.

As far as the Progressive Conservative Government is concerned, which was in favour of reducing the deficit, it is starting to forget this priority. It is now in the same situation the Liberals were in at the time, and today's Liberals are taking yesterday's Conservative position.

• (1540)

[English]

Right now it is really hard to tell which Party is which. Certainly, on listening to the comments of the finance critic for the Liberal Party, I heard him say quite specifically that the Liberals now believe there should be even more spending cuts. During the course of the consideration of the Estimates in committee, I hope they ensure that their critics in every area put forward the specific spending cuts they intended to propose had they had the opportunity to be in government. It also underlines the confusion which many people in the country must feel with respect to the new Government because of the fact that its members are acting in office like the Liberals they used to criticize when they were in opposition.

I also note—and this is where those two Parties are so alike—that not one word is really said, either by the Official Opposition or by the Government, about the biggest reason that spending for the Government of Canada in 1985-86 is to go up to $105 billion or thereabouts. Most of the increase is owing to high interest rates. The cuts which are being taken in many areas of activity that affect ordinary Canadians are most of all being taken in order to pay off the banks and financiers in order to pay high interest rates. My Party and I say that it is about time the Government put as much energy as possible into bringing down interest rates rather than constantly looking at spending cuts. The Government has only looked at half of what it should have been looking at in this particular exercise of developing the spending Estimates.

I recall in the summer of last year that the Government attracted a lot of votes from Canadians because of the promise of change. Of course, the Estimates are the first comprehensive chance for the new Government to demonstrate the kind of change for which it actually stands. After all, the huffing and puffing we have had from the Government, frankly, is almost exactly the same as what we would have had from the Liberals. I can think of no Canadian who would really be happy with this particular set of spending Estimates, except perhaps bankers and other financiers who support the Conservative Party. The most striking feature of the Estimates is that in its first six months the new Government has in fact done nothing to confront high interest rates, which are pushing up spending in the country to such a high degree and forcing it over the $100 billion mark.

When the Government announced its spending cuts, important areas were affected. That is reflected in the Estimates. The CBC, which serves all Canadians from coast to coast, is one of the vital links in the country. I am glad to see that the Minister is nodding his head in agreement with me. It has been cut now by $50 million. The National Research Council has been cut savagely by $60 million or $70 million despite the Government's commitment to increase spending on science, research and development. Regional development is down by $1.5 billion or more, depending how one measures it in the Estimates. Employment and immigration is very strongly affected, particularly when it comes to the service which can be offered to 1.5 million Canadians who are currently out of work and to the three million or four million Canadians who, I am afraid, can expect to be out of work at some point or another during the course of 1985 or 1986, thanks to the policies of the old Government and of the Government which is in power right now.

If the Government had acted when it took power to give the country an independent interest rate policy, we would not have required those cuts in the CBC, in services in the Department of Employment and Immigration or in terms of science, research and development spending, because every nickel which is being cut in those areas is going to pay off banks and other people in terms of high interest rates on borrowing by the Government. We would not have needed those cuts if interest rates had been brought down. Canadians who are losing services are paying for interest on the public debt. I remind the President of the Treasury Board and the Government that last October, despite promises to the contrary made in opposition, the Government enacted Liberal tax increases on ordinary Canadians to the tune of $500 per family. That $500 tax increase, which has been directly translated in a move upwards in the unemployment rate, would not have been necessary had the Government moved to bring down interest rates rather than buy the high interest rate policy which it inherited from the Liberals who were in office before.

If I were a banker I would be smiling from ear to ear after seeing these Estimates. The stories abound, in The Wall Street Journal, in The Toronto Star and so on, that the new Minister of Finance is rapidly turning into a wimp, a man who bids fair to compete with the former Prime Minister of his Party in terms of the public image he has across the country, a man who has not been prepared and a Government which has not been prepared to confront financial interests that are holding the people of the country in thrall and having an effect on employment, as well as upon every Canadian.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Step outside and say that.

Mr. Fulton: You would think the President of the Treasury Board is an escapee from the Senate.

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, he is. We should congratulate him on escaping before it is abolished.

I want to turn now to the cuts in the Estimates, bearing in mind, among other things, from where the Liberal Party has traditionally drawn its strength. The Conservatives have always had strength in Atlantic Canada. For a long time they have had strength in western Canada. Most recently they have begun to acquire a lot of seats in the Province of Quebec, even though that may be temporary. The biggest single cut in the Estimates—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You forgot Ottawa Centre. We are getting stronger there every moment.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, we keep on winning elections. The single biggest cut in the Estimates of which we were not aware before is the cut of $400 million in lending by the Farm Credit Corporation. It is seeing its lending cut in 1985 down to about $90 million, a fifth of the level recorded in the Estimates for the year before. I presume that cut was included so that the Minister could rise and say, "Look what I have done; I have kept our discretionary spending to an increase of .2 or .5 per cent". He does not talk about the impact on the farm sector. He does not talk about the way farm spending and the farm sector, in turn, have an impact on the rest of the Canadian economy. At a time when farmers need access to credit in order to survive, they are taking it in the neck.

Shipbuilding subsidies are being cut by $40 million. That is a direct blow to the regional economies of the St. Lawrence region of Quebec, of St. John's and Halifax, of Newfoundland and of British Columbia. Although it is a little difficult to discern exactly what is happening, it appears that funds from the Government for economic development in the forestry sector are being cut from $91 million to $54 million. In other words, rather than implementing promises of massive increases in an industry which is responsible for 10 per cent of economic activity in the country, the Government is cutting back in that particular area.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this week the Government refused to support Domtar's investment project in the Eastern Townships in the Province of Quebec. This decision will affect a major sector of Quebec's economy and it shows once again how remiss this Government is in meeting its commitments to the forestry industry.

[English]

Petro-Canada is now the leading company in terms of frontier oil development, not only in the Beaufort but in the Hibernia field and offshore in eastern Canada. Its frontier exploration and development program is down by more than $200 million. This is a direct blow to all those people who trustingly voted for the Conservatives and for the Prime Minister when he said, "Come along with us, my program is jobs, jobs, jobs; let's have some change", during the course of the election campaign.

Many people in my area of Ottawa Centre, in the Ottawa region in general and in many other parts of Canada, had just begun to develop an important new industry in conservation and renewable energy. That cut was announced in the fall. It amounts to some $50 million or $60 million by the time it works its way through the NRC at the end of this coming fiscal year. That is a direct blow to another promising industry, and industry which creates more jobs and has the potential to create more jobs than Atomic Energy, which is still well funded.

Finally, six months after the election, the unemployment rate last month rose higher faster than for any month in the previous five years, yet the Government is cutting 600 positions from Canada Employment and Immigration. A pregnant mother who visits the Canada Employment office in my riding of Ottawa Centre to check on her maternity benefits is told that she has to wait for more than an hour to talk with a counsellor, and the Government is going to cut 600 more positions. In the riding of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) 30 per cent of the population is unemployed. People are beside themselves with the problems of unemployment in that riding and in many other parts of the country, yet Canada Employment is suffering yet another cut. As I said before, farmers and people who hold Government of Canada bonds do not have to stand in line when they go to clip their coupons, but ordinary Canadians are hurt by the cuts which are here.

● (1550)

Canada Employment has been talking about $1 billion of extra spending for job-creation, but its basic Estimates are being cut-back by half a billion dollars. When you take the two together, it means that the Government's additional commitment to job creation in the coming year, by my accounting, amounts to one-half of one per cent of the over-all spending of the Government of Canada. The changes in the Estimates are profoundly unfair and unjust. Loggers, farmers and workers suffer. Banks and big corporations benefit.

I would point out that in 1979 the Conservative Party in government with its Budget published a compendium or estimate of what tax expenditures were costing the people of Canada. At that time it was some $30 billion or $40 billion. I hope that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and his Government will ensure that we get that list again.

I am distressed over the fact that while cuts are made that affect ordinary Canadians, so far nothing is being done to affect those privileges and hand-outs to major corporations. In fact, the Government has made it clear that it will not tinker with the corporate tax system after it has imposed major tax increases on ordinary Canadians.

If there have to be sacrifices, let them be fair. If there have to be sacrifices, do not just impose them on ordinary Canadians. If there have to be sacrifices, let us see them made by big oil companies, multi-national corporations, and foreign-owned corporations which control more than half of our manufacturing industry, by those people who control large amounts of capital and who are now speculating. Some Canadians are actually speculating against their dollar. Let them carry their burden rather than simply seeing it imposed on ordinary Canadians.

My time is up. We will have a chance to resume this debate elsewhere in this House and its committees.

[Translation]

I wish to congratulate the Minister on his presentation, but not unreservedly on the contents of his Main Estimates.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Questions?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, on the Estimates that were tabled today, I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) exactly why the Government has chosen to reduce the Estimates of the Farm Credit Corporation by some $400 million. Surely farmers are facing the most difficult financial stress that they have faced in this country since the 1930s. According to the estimates of the Farm Credit Corporation, 39,000 face serious financial difficulties. They are looking to the Government for assistance, either in reducing interest rates or setting aside programs such as the United States Farmers' Home Administration Program.

This Government, facing the most distressful time in our history, is cutting the budget from some $490 million to $90 million. I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) or the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) have chosen to abandon completely this very serious problem of the farmers. Will he explain why the Government is doing this at this time?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to give the Hon. Member some exact facts before he draws his conclusions. In the Estimates there is a reduction under this item. I can assure the Hon. Member that that reduction, when explained, means that there will be exactly as much money, if not more, in 1985-86 for that particular constituency as there was in 1984-85.

There are two important things to keep in mind. The first is a change that allows the Corporation to borrow on its own account. Obviously that will reflect itself in the numbers in the Estimates. Second, despite the claims that the Hon. Member is making, the revision was made in light of the fact that there was a very appreciable drop in the demand for this kind of credit in 1984-85. We have readjusted the numbers in 1985-86 to ensure that that very important constituency in our country is well served by the Government, certainly as well served as it was in the last year. Therefore, there is no decline there at all.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, can the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) advise the House why Canada's largest industry, the forest sector, which, according to his own documents, was valued last year at $25.9 billion, is having $31,690,000 chopped in the 1985-86 Estimates? Where $207 million was spent last year, only $175 million is expected to be spent in the coming fiscal year. Why is this being done at a time when it is recognized in British Columbia and in other provinces that we are in the midst of a falldown effect? We will have to cut back by 30 per cent the number of people employed in British Columbia.

It is recognized that there is a need for in excess of $300 million a year just to replant the good and medium backlog sites in British Columbia alone. In the whole of the Estimates, there is less than half of what is required by British Columbia alone. Historically, less than five cents on the dollar has been going back into the forest sector federally. My quick calculations indicate that less than one cent out of the dollar will now be put back under the new Estimates. Perhaps the Minister could explain, first, the reason for the cuts and, second, in light of the promises made during the election campaign by his own candidates that a billion dollars a year would be spent by the federal Government, where is the billion?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I took notice of that question when the Hon. Member's colleague raised it in his reply to my statement. I would like the indulgence of the Hon. Member to give me time to look at the specifics of that particular item. I will be happy to give him an answer or have the Minister responsible give him the answer.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, one would assume that the President of the Treasury Board would be able to respond in relation to Canada's largest industry. One Canadian in 10 is employed in this industry. I am sure the President of the Treasury Board is well aware that in British Columbia alone, his own Government officials have identified a need for $300 million a year. There is only $175 million for the whole of Canada.

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, at the very great risk of stating misleading facts in this House, which I certainly would not want to do, I would again respectfully ask the Hon. Member to give me some time to take the question under notice and give him the appropriate answer.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Estimates which the Minister just tabled project cutting some 600 positions from the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and at the same time reducing the allocation for unemployment insurance on the assumption that unemployment is going down. In light of the fact that Government job-creation programs will only provide some 30,000 person-years of work and when unemployment went up last, it was the highest in five years, how can the Government justify cutting back on the allocation for employment programs?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, in terms of the expenditures that are put forth by the new Government with respect to job creation and job training, if one looks through the numbers carefully, one will notice that in 1984-85 the total amount of money expended in these programs was of the order of $1.8 billion. What is contained in the Estimates that were presented today, plus the announcement that was made by the Minister responsible at the First Ministers' conference recently, would mean that in 1985-86 that would be increased to $2.5 billion, with a potential of an extra hundred million on top of that. There is a very significant increase in the amount of funds being allocated for employment and job training by the new Government.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, if what the Minister says is accurate, that he is in fact increasing the money for employment, how can he then justify cutting 600 positions from the Canada Employment and Immigration Department? People are waiting for their unemployment insurance. Job-creation programs require adequate administration. How can positions be cut at a time like this?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge, the improvements in the reduction in the workforce involving that Department comes from a reorganization and technological improvements in the delivery systems. However, I would be happy to go into that further with the Minister responsible if that is not the full answer.

• (1600)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). A quick glance at the Estimates would indicate that the largest increase that pushes expenditures up to over $100 billion is the debt servicing charge that now accounts for a substantial $5.6 billion increase for this year. Would the President of the Treasury Board agree that if the Government were to find itself lowering interest rates substantially, that in fact would go a significant way to eliminating essentially that entire $5.6 billion increase?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the pressures of the service charges on the public debt, on the over-all expenditures and on the deficit are some of the major sources of the problems we are facing today. I think my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), has replied to this question time and time again. We live in an international context, in which the interlinkages between the economies are having the effect of pushing interest rates up. We are also living in a situation in which a deficit of the size of the one that we inherited from the prior Government is acting on our domestic markets in a way that is not helpful when trying to get those interest rates down. Certainly I, and I am sure all Members of the House, would share the positive belief in an eventual decline in interest rates, and that is certainly a goal toward which the Government is working.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question deals with a point that was raised previously. The Farm Credit Corporation indicated in its recent report that something like 70 per cent of the farmers of Canada were in a virtual crisis situation in terms of debt management. Is it correct then that by the Estimates, the Government has seen fit to reduce the borrowing portfolio of the Farm Credit Corporation by some $400 million? If that is the case, is this an indication that the Government is moving away from providing financing for the Canadian farm sector?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, as I said in answer to a previous question, the level of funding for the Farm Credit Corporation will ensure that its level of activity in 1985-86 will be fully consistent with the demand that is expected and with the trends and demands we witnessed in 1984-85.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question regarding the Farm Credit Corporation. Will the Farm Credit Corporation be borrowing from the private sector the equivalent of the $400 million which is being cut from its budget in the Estimates? It does have the power to borrow from the private sector. Perhaps the Minister could clarify that.

I would also like to ask the Minister why the Government is choosing to impose some $25 million worth of additional service charges on agricultural producers for inspection fees on various commodities and for research. Why is the Government imposing additional fees on agricultural production, ROP and that sort of thing, of $3 million and additional fees of $5 million on agricultural research? This is a very difficult time for many sectors of the agricultural community. Why is the Government now imposing additional fees of some $32 million?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I will say again that the changes that were made and presented in the Estimates with regard to the Farm Credit Corporation will allow the Farm Credit Corporation to meet the demand for loans from the agricultural constituency in the year to come. It is not a cut that will in any way inhibit that particular agency or keep it from meeting the demands of its particular constituency.

Regarding user fees, throughout Government, because of the six and five program, we have seen the level of user fees relative to costs decline very substantially. Last November we announced our intention to get user fees back up to a level that is more consistent with historical patterns. That is all we are doing in this case. An Hon. Member spoke a while ago of being even-handed throughout the country and of making sure that everyone pays his fair share. We must be even-handed regarding user fees to see that the costs are spread out.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, my question is perhaps the most relevant question that could be asked today given the new regime of the Estimates as they have been presented. As outlined in the documents tabled today, these expenditure reductions are identical to the ones that were presented to the House previously by the President of the Treasury Board. They are identical to the individual cuts announced by individual Ministers since Parliament resumed.

Some of these program reductions and eliminations in certain Departments have encountered vigorous objections from provincial Governments and individuals in this country. I can give as an example the elimination of the fishing vessel insurance scheme or the charging for telephone calls to weather offices. There is a whole list of such program reductions and eliminations. What manoeuvreability does each Minister now have within his own departmental budget to reinstate or change some of the programs that have been cancelled or substantially reduced? In other words, as far as the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is concerned, does each Minister now have a responsibility under this new regime to cut another program within his Department if he is to change that which is contained within these documents? That is a very relevant question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I believe that that is a relevant question. The typical experience of similar exercises in the past has been that after an initial will to reduce expenditures has been shown, six months down the road there is a very serious erosion and the object of the exercise is often defeated. I am very happy to report that six months after this exercise, the announcement of a reduction in expenditures plus some revenue increases of $4.244 billion, we are still at $4.244 billion.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister is very straightforward. At the time of the Budget in 1979, the Conservative Government published an estimate of tax expenditures which was to run at 30 per cent or 40 per cent of direct government expenditures. Is it the Government's intention to do that again in 1985? Will we see such an outline of tax expenditures either prior to the Budget or at the time of the Budget this spring?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I think the question should be addressed to my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and I do not wish to respond to it either in the affirmative or in the negative. I think it is a very valid question and one which I would like my colleague to have the opportunity of answering.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Export Development Corporation and the Canadian Commercial Corporation have been making presentations. Their very critical role in the future of the country for the next number of years is becoming more paramount in that we need to open up new export possibilities. Yet I see that in the Estimates, we are decreasing the portfolio of the Export Development Corporation by $47 million and the portfolio of the Canadian Commercial Corporation by nearly $9 million. Can the President of the Treasury Board explain how this is in the best interests of the country, this being such a critical point in time? While he is on his feet, could he indicate to the House whether or not he believes that the $27 million we set aside to run the Senate is a decent investment?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, to answer the second question first, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that the budgets for the operations of Parliament, both the Senate and the House, are not under the purview of the Treasury Board nor of the Government. They are set in this place by the Commissioners of Internal Economy and in the other place by an equivalent body. Far be it from me to comment on a matter that does not fall within my purview.

In terms of the Hon. Member's first question regarding EDC and CCC, I would like to have a chance to take that question as notice. I do not think that there has been a major shift in emphasis. It may just be a question of the submissions that were made by those agencies. There may be some slight policy change, but I would like to wait and give the Hon. Member a full and detailed answer.

• (1610)

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the President of the Treasury Board to the area of fisheries and oceans where there has been approximately a $100 million cut in capital expenditures. My question is twofold. First, during the election campaign last year, the current Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) indicated, first, that there would be a buy-back of approximately $100 million from the fishing fleet in British Columbia, and, second that $200 million would be spent on salmon enhancement. Both of those matters fall under the capital expenditure for the Department of Fisheries and oceans, which is decreasing from $210 million to $124 million.

First, where is the $300 million in capital costs for the salmon enhancement and the fleet buy-back? Second, how sizeable does the President of the Treasury Board think the Supplementary Estimates will be at the end of this fiscal year? Will we find large amounts related to forestry and fisheries and oceans being smuggled into the Supplementary Estimates, or are the fisheries and oceans Estimates considered to be reasonably accurate?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Members that we do not expect that the Supplementary Estimates will be used as a device to smuggle in expenditures that we now know about and do not want to talk about. If anything, he will notice that the reserves which have been provided for this year are less than in past years. That is largely because we have tried to put as much of the known expenditures into the Main Estimates, rather than keeping larger reserves for the Supplementary Estimates. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government is fully committed to restraint, the control of expenditures and living within the numbers that are published in these Estimates.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, my question follows that of my colleague. It relates to inspection fees as they pertain to agricultural products, specifically potatoes. Did I understand correctly the President of the Treasury Board that inspection fees—as announced in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and in a letter which was sent to the P.E.I. Potato Marketing Board and the P.E.I. Potato Producers' Association which told them that there was a 33 cent per hundredweight fee—would be levied for field inspection for No. 1 table stock potatoes? I may have misunderstood, but I believe that the President of the Treasury Board said that it was a fait accompli and that it will stand and come into effect April 1, 1985?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I did not confirm or imply any such specific issue. I only made a statement on broad principle as it affects cost recovery throughout government services.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I have one quick question.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I indicated to Members earlier that I was waiting to see who was rising in order to indicate when the time would expire. I will allow one question.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question for the President of the Treasury Board. I was looking at the appropriations for spending on agricultural programs, but I cannot seem to find them in the Estimates. Could the Minister inform the House where I could find an entry reflecting the commitment made by his colleague, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) respecting $13 million to help hog producers? I cannot seem to find that amount among the appropriations.

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I think this matter, as the Hon. Member knows perfectly well, has been discussed for a number of months and that it was understood it would not be included in the Estimates tabled today. However, it is certainly a matter we are giving careful consideration.

CONTINUED SUPPORT FOR CARROUSEL DU P'TIT MONDE D'ANJOU INC.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, at the request of my constituents, members of the Carrousel du P'tit Monde d'Anjou Inc., I have the honour to present to the House a petition asking that the support given to that association in previous years by Canada Works not be discontinued, including the five positions created to structure and maintain the operations of the Carrousel, an organization to help to train young families.

[English]

REINSTATEMENT OF FRIENDLY GIANT TELEVISION PROGRAM

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition, signed by 205 citizens of this nation, which calls for the reinstatement of The Friendly Giant television program on CBC. The petitioners claim that the program has unique value, an educational function and that it promotes Canadian identity and culture.

Reference to Committee

FLY SALMON FISHING QUOTAS

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a group of anglers from the Miramichi region which deals with the cut-backs on fly salmon fishing in 1984. In the petition they express concern about the Government's present salmon regulations. They have asked me to convey to the House, with this petition, their objections to the present quotas. I do so and submit this petition on their behalf.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF SESSIONAL PAPER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of State (Government House Leader)): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations with the House Leaders with respect to the reference to Committee of Sessional Paper No. 331-4/6 which deals with equality issues in federal law. I think, Mr. Speaker, if you were to ask for unanimous consent, and I could put the motion, you would find that it would be adopted. The draft order is as follows:

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be empowered to examine, inquire into and report on equality rights under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms;

That the document entitled "Discussion Paper on Equality Issues in Federal Law", tabled in the House on January 31, 1985, (Sessional Paper No. 331-4/6), be referred to the Committee;

That the Committee seek the views and opinions of Canadians, both individuals and organizations on the subject matter of the Discussion Paper;

That the Committee review federal statutes, and particularly those mentioned in the Discussion Paper, in order to ensure their conformity with the letter and spirit of equality and non-discrimination guarantees in the Charter;

That the Committee report and make recommendations for any necessary changes or other actions to the House no later than September 9, 1985;

That the Committee have the power to retain expert, professional, technical and clerical staff;

That the Committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada; and

That notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when an interim or final report of the Committee is completed, the Committee shall report its findings by depositing its report with the Clerk of the House, and that it shall thereupon be deemed to have been laid upon the Table.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to confirm that we have been consulted on this matter and that we agree. As a matter of fact, we wish to express our satisfaction that the reporting date has been postponed to September 9. That will allow more Canadians to express their views. We give unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Government House Leader have consent to introduce the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

Motion agreed to.

DPW—CONTRACTS AWARDED

Question No. 245—Mr. Boudria:

From September 4, 1984 to December 31, 1984, how many Department of Public Works contracts have been awarded or filled by suppliers or contractors, originating in part or in whole, from the constituency of Joliette and, in each case, what was the total value of the contracts and the names of the individuals or companies who were awarded each of these contracts respectively?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Two contracts have been awarded from the Constituency of Joliette. The names of the two contractors and the value of each contract are as follows:

Name	Contract Amount
M. Gabriel Parent, Joliette, Québec	$ 2,000
Construction Fernand Perrault, Joliette, Québec	$45,100

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bissonnette that Bill C-23, and Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on a few aspects of Bill C-23, with particular relevance to how it substantially meets the goals of arriving at a more adequate policy to assist and encourage small business in Canada. Some of my colleagues have spoken to the Bill and have expressed concern about a couple of major points. One of their concerns was the allotment of a further $1 billion for lending. Certainly, that will not be adequate to meet the needs that businesses can anticipate over the next few years. Second,—and we have said this again and again in the House—they are concerned about the fact that interest rates are such an important factor for small businesses, that to ignore that and try to pretend that interest rates are beyond the power of the Government is something which is injurious to the extreme to small businesses in Canada.

● (1620)

As far as the Bill is concerned, Mr. Speaker, if more assistance is being provided, then the New Democratic Party finds itself in favour of that. Our concerns are that regardless of the general opinion that small business is a good thing—an opinion which is held by Hon. Members of all sides of this House—that is still not translated into practical action which would have meaning for many small businesses which are seeking to establish themselves or to expand in order to provide job opportunities and new forms of ideas, innovation and enterprise.

This is important to my riding, Mr. Speaker. We have had such enormous success stories, such as the growth of Mitel from a small company in a garage ten or twelve years ago, financed, I think, on someone's Visa card, to the industrial giant it is today. There are large numbers of other high-tech companies which have grown in Ottawa over the course of the last few years. There has been as well a very substantial number of enterprises in my riding flowing from our ethno-cultural communities, from the Chinese restaurants along Somerset Street to the grocery stores. These small businesses have been developed by new Canadians who want to establish themselves, and they have been in fact making a great contribution to my riding. That is the story, of course right across the country.

Bill C-23, although it addresses the issue of financing, does not go beyond what I see to be the basic issue for small business in this country today, that is, the issue of power. Small business people live and work and do their business in what has to be described as a free enterprise kind of system where in fact they are the ones who are the most vulnerable to the winds of change and forces of a free enterprise economy while their big brothers and sisters, the major corporations, are not in that kind of situation at all. To say that free enterprise exists for free enterprise today is to say that the Wild West can still be found in Palm Springs, California. That is not true any more for major corporations. They have all kinds of means of sheltering themselves from the vicissitudes of high interest rates, fluctuations in the dollar and other kinds of things which can be devastating in their impact on smaller businesses. Big business and multi-national corporations, in general, pay taxes which are at rates much lower than what is paid by small business. Big business often has access to sources of capital at much lower rates than small business. They do not get called by their banker and forced to sign the mortgage for their own home, for example, in order to keep their business alive when things are tough. If the company is Chrysler Canada, Massey-Ferguson or Dome, if your name is Conrad Black or your company is Norcen, under those circumstances you will get the ear of governments in tough times when assistance is needed in order to survive.

We are running at a rate of some 30,000 bankruptcies among small business every year. Those are bankruptcies of small businesses which did not have the clout of Mr. Black, Chrysler or Massey-Ferguson. Therefore, they were left to sink or swim and, unfortunately, too many of them were forced to sink. We have no adequate monopoly control or anti-monopoly program in this country, and big business interests have successfully prevented that kind of legislation from being passed and have as well prevented changes being made to the Restrictive Trade Practices Act.

From the time I was last in this place, Mr. Speaker, as a journalist covering Parliament back in the 1960s, we have not seen effective changes in Canada's control of monopolies. Yet what is the picture in terms of job creation? Have the tax concessions, the big loans and that kind of thing really done a lot to create jobs? The answer is no. As many Hon. Members have said in this debate on Bill C-23, small business is the major source of job creation, not just in this country but in the United States and, increasingly, in the European countries as well. Whether one looks at countries like Hungary, China or countries in the western industrial world, it is recognized more and more that there are some very special and important virtues in having enterprises which are relatively small and limited where people can relate to each other face to face. These are the countries where ideas and innovation have tended, and are tending, to be found.

If the issue is the question of the imbalance of power between those big corporations which receive the tax concessions and other favours from government and the small businesses which in fact are creating the jobs and providing new sources of hope for ordinary Canadians, then it seems to me that we should confront that question rather than try to sweep it under the rug. The New Democratic Party is very concerned about trying to do that, about trying to ensure that small business has a more adequate place in the life of this country. I do not think of the concept of free enterprise because we do not have free enterprise for business any more. Because of the concessions, the hand-outs and the controls by multi-nationals, the oligopolies and the monopolies, the other kinds of restraints of trade, and the market niches which exist for big business, they do not live in a free enterprise type of environment. Small enterprise does. I suggest that what we should be looking toward, Mr. Speaker, is the concept of "fair" enterprise which recognizes and rewards the contributions which small business makes in terms of the economy.

Over the course of the last month or so, a number of members of my caucus, myself included, have travelled from coast to coast in Canada on a task force on jobs. People have been telling us that control of the economy and of economic development should be decentralized. They do not trust big government. They do not trust centralized agencies any more. They want to do things themselves, Mr. Speaker. They want some encouragement. They say, "Give us the tools and we will finish the job". There has been a good deal of positive comment from groups which have come before us, sometimes from regions where it is hard to see how one could possibly be positive about their prospects. In our ridings we have all seen that the birth of enterprise is in fact important and is something to be nourished. There may be a bit more of it today than there was a few years ago. Our task force will be looking for ways of encouraging that kind of development.

I believe one of the concepts which needs to be developed is what I call "the concept of fair enterprise". What that concept requires is that small business be given a fair chance to grow, to survive and to play its role in the economy of Ottawa Centre, Ontario and of Canada. On the other side, it is also reasonable to suggest that small business should be prepared to take on responsibility, to accept and to co-operate with government initiatives and leadership where they are being offered. I think it is reasonable that if we in government seek to nurture small enterprise, in turn small business should respect efforts made by government to ensure that wages are adequate, that health and safety conditions are decent and to ensure that working people have a right to speak for themselves through organizations, unions, or other vehicles they happen to choose. I do not think it is fair to say that, because small businesses should be encouraged, as a consequence they should be free to avoid the laws. We should be encouraging, rather than discouraging. There are a number of rules and regulations we make through Government. Let us not forget them. Let us try to ensure, however, that in applying them, they are sensitive to the different needs of smaller enterprises. I believe in the fact that inevitably small businesses in order to survive are going to have to make profits. I accept that. My Party accepts that, because if they do not make profits, they do not survive.

People sometimes have need for expertise as well. When a small business starts up and then fails, it is later asked why that particular business failed to survive. The reason seems to be that the proprietor or the entrepreneur knew about marketing but did not know about production and finance, or he knew about production but did not know a darn about finance. He needed some assistance and advice. I think we have to try to provide ways of giving people that kind of assistance and advice. I would like to see in my riding of Ottawa Centre and across the country groups of people who have been successful in small business devoting a bit of their time to provide consulting services to other people who are on their way up. I would like to see those advisory services expended. In view of the difficulty which exists for governments and organizations to provide assistance for small business, we need to be looking at decentralized sources of venture capital, perhaps co-operatives, in which municipalities or very small-scale funding mechanisms can be found in order to assist with the birth and encouragement of small businesses.

We need to be aware of the fact that some small businesses will fail. If they do, we should try to ensure a relatively soft landing for the people who had the spunk to set the business up in the first place. In other words, you should not be in a situation where you are taken to the cleaners by the receivers if you have to go bankrupt, as is too often the case these days. Possibly, legitimate looses incurred in a small business which failed should be available to the small business persons to write off against other income if they start to get back on their feet. Perhaps there should be other ways to minimize their losses so that instead of having to wait for six or seven years to get their act back together, those small business persons can get going again and start another small business, if that is what they want to do, or make some other similar contribution to the economy. In other words, there has to be a vigorous process of enterprise formation. In order to have that, people have to know that the stakes are not too high if they happen not to succeed the first time they try.

I also want to suggest that when we are looking at the needs of small business, we should recognize that small businesses at different stages will have varying needs. At one stage it is advice, at another stage it is financing, at another stage it is access to marketing channels, and at yet another stage it is access to subcontracts in order to make parts or components or provide services for larger firms. I do not think we recognize the great variety of need out there in the small business sector. Not all those needs can be met through government, but certainly some of them can. At the very least the FBDB and other small business services provided by the federal Government can be more flexible and should be more sensitive to those particular needs.

I had a case come through my door the other day in my riding. This was a franchisee with his business just outside Ottawa. He had taken a loan from the FBDB back in 1981 at 18 per cent. After four years that franchisee was still stuck with paying 18 per cent in order to keep the business alive, and the FBDB was not prepared to make any kind of arrangement to allow that particular small business to buy out of that loan and borrow at today's rates which are a great deal more sensible, this despite the fact the business was being driven to the wall by having paid those high interest rates year after year. That is one of the reasons why, through the course of this debate, we have emphasized the importance of interest rates.

We should also consider addressing the question of the corporate structure and how it affects small business. We need a variety of corporate structures. In the future we are going to see a great deal more different forms of organizations. We are already seeing the phenomenon of worker buy-outs. We need to have more vehicles by which workers can participate in the ownership of their enterprise, particularly when it is small enterprise, and it does not necessarily have to be what we know as a joint stock company. We need to look for the development of co-operatives in which there is a certain amount of entrepreneurship or perhaps a shared enterprise in which municipalities will joint with the private sector in encouraging small business, as has occurred in places like Jamestown and Buffalo, New York.

Mr. Horner: Why?

Mr. Cassidy: I hear someone on the other side asking why. I ask, why not? Why do we have to stifle that particular kind of innovation just because it happens to involve government participation in helping to create jobs and so on? I am sorry that the Hon. Member from Brampton would feel so upset about that particular kind of thing. It seems to me that those kinds of innovative ideas would be good in encouraging small businesses, and I do not think we should think small business has to be a replica of General Motors or Massey-Ferguson. God help us if it were to be.

I look at the coming innovation in enterprise forms from other countries of the world like the very intriguing experiments now taking place in the People's Republic of China. This is not because I think the economy of China is a model for this country—

Mr. McDermid: That is a good example! You are going the other way.

Mr. Cassidy: —but because I think we should be looking for a number of different ways of doing things. I will tell my hon. friend a story. A constituent of mine, a Mr. Peter Lee, a supporter of mine with a successful garage in my riding, has just been to Peking and talked with the Chinese Government about establishing a garage in the capital of China. He has come back and told me that the incentives to small business in the People's Republic of China happen to be more generous than they are here in the People's Republic of Canada. Well, that makes you think, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make some other specific suggestions prior to concluding.

[Translation]

I would like to conclude my remarks by making specific suggestions which are likely to help small business in Canada and which might complement the measures proposed in Bill C-23.

First and foremost, we have to do something about interest rates to make sure that they are not unduly high; among other things, I believe that Canadian banks ought to be compelled to set aside a given percentage of their loans specifically for small business.

[English]

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, many small businesses have a great deal of difficulty doing business with the Government of Canada and the provincial Governments. The tiny small-business services, the tiny manufacturer who wants to expand, is often in competition with government procurement agencies which say that they have always bought from some manufacturer in St. Louis or some other part of the U.S. and they are going to continue that rather than letting this small firm have access to business which will allow it to grow. Given the importance of government in the economy, government as a consumer of intermediate products, for example, that has to be changed. In the U.S. now the Small Business Administration has ensured that the federal Government sets aside as a target a very substantial portion of its procurement to be dedicated to purchases from the small business sector. We should be talking about that here in Canada and encouraging the provinces as well.

Mr. McDermid: It is being done.

Mr. Cassidy: We should be cutting the red tape and questioning the requirements for substantial tender bonds, so that small businesses can bid for contracts from the federal Government. We should ensure that large companies which win major bids should be required to subcontract a certain proportion of their work to small firms. The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and others should be doing their utmost to encourage major companies to subcontract to smaller companies and to make sure those smaller companies are Canadian.

It is interesting to me that while the major companies in this country are in the majority controlled abroad, small businesses are 95 per cent or 98 per cent controlled by Canadians. They do their procurement in the main here in Canada. They are contributing an awful lot more to our economy than is the typical larger business in very many cases. Yet I am struck, as are people who visit Canada, by how much the nuts and bolts, the intermediate products, things you buy in your hardware store, the things that business needs to use in the office in this country, do not come from Canadian sources but from abroad. Why does printing and stationery materials come from abroad when we have one of the largest pulp and paper producing sectors in the world? These kinds of questions are very serious and these are the areas where we can develop and encourage the growth of small business.

My time is about up, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to see much greater concentration on ensuring that the results of research and development are made available in a form which small businesses can use. I mentioned the need to reform our bankruptcy laws so they do not devastate small businesses which happen to go under. I mentioned the need for a much broader variety in forms of ownership in order that co-operatives and other innovative structures and their workers can be encouraged to participate in learning the skills of management, doing business and becoming small businesses so that they may also share the responsibilities of businesses.

I believe those comments are positive and constructive and would complement the increase in financing that is being proposed in Bill C-23.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bissonnette that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member not aware that the Government of Canada is currently conducting sessions throughout the country for the small business sector about how to sell to Government procedures for getting involved and how to get on bid lists? These seminars are taking place and programs are being conducted whereby products presently being imported are being displayed to Canadian entrepreneurs, primarily in the small business sector, to see if they can produce them here in Canada to be supplied to the Government of Canada? Does he know if that is taking place?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that that is going on. I applaud such a move and I think it is desirable. It has taken a long time for it to start.

As the Hon. Member knows, my previous experience has been in Ontario. It took a long time before Ontario began the kind of innovation that is occurring at the federal level now. However, it is not close to the scale it should be at today.

I believe there should be an annual report in the House made by the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) in terms of the targets the Government is setting for procurement from the small business sector in Canada and how it is performing in relation to those targets. If that progress is not sufficient, we would then be in a position to make the Government accountable to ensure that it does better in the future.

The Hon. Member will agree with me that while this is taking place now, it was a long time before the country began to focus on that kind of valuable assistance to encourage small businesses to grow by dint of being able to sell more adequately to the Government.

There are still many obstacles, such as a delay of a year and a half to get a contract before there is any cash flow and sales in return. Furthermore, tender bonds or other obstacles are put in the way of small business. This effectively rules them out of participating effectively with the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make on Bill C-23, an Act to Amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Today, in my mail, there was a document I received from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business in which it is stated:

> The difficulty in obtaining adequate financing often is one of the major problems faced by new or growing businesses.

It goes on to say:

> Since the interest rate crisis has receded in 1982, the overall tax burden is the main problem referred to by most businesses in the National Survey—

That was a poll carried out by that firm, and all Hon. Members have had the findings sent to their offices. That poll was carried out regularly, month after month. It helps us a good deal as Members of Parliament, because precisely it gives us the views of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

From the very first day the legislation was discussed, everyone has been referring to the importance of small and medium-sized businesses. And upon listening to several speeches, I have come to realize the extent of the expansion experienced by our small entrepreneurs, but the main thing I am realizing is that those small businesses are the ones most often penalized.

First, the Government over there inflicted Bill C-15 upon them. Now they are faced with Bill C-23. It would seem the Government cannot force itself to help our small and medium-sized businesses. These people often speak of consultation and discussion, but they have been ignoring a number of good suggestions. For instance, I read early in February a rather interesting speech made by the President of Gulf Canada. In that speech, this gentleman reminded us of the Government's intention to leave job creation to the private sector, something with which he is in total agreement. However, he goes on to offer suggestions to improve conditions for small and medium-sized businesses.

He is suggesting among other things that we reconsider the following programs: the unemployment insurance scheme, health and safety in the work-place, and the pension plan. He recalls that wherever a business has a deficit, the burden is shouldered by the manager-owner personally. In fact, the whole tax system could also be revamped, he said. It could be provided that the realization of capital gains, when the owner dies, should not lead to a forced sale. Small and medium-sized business owners could be granted the same treatment as farmers, who can roll over the family farm to their children without tax being paid on the capital gains.

The same applies to the pension plan. Why not treat small businessmen the same way as we do farmers allowing them to transfer any taxable capital gains realized between 1971 and 1983 in an RRSP?

Many changes could be made to lighten the burden of small businesses, but we have now been presented with Bill C-23, which will frustrate them even more and make them waste even more time.

Mr. Speaker, more and more women are heads of businesses. It is a fact that over 30 per cent of new businesses are headed by women. I think that they show a lot of courage, especially in these difficult times.

All the figures show that this Bill will affect the most vulnerable group in Canada, namely women between the ages of 35 and 45. Moreover, the proportion of businesses owned by people under 30 has doubled between 1964 and 1980 while that of businesses owned by women has tripled.

In addition, we can see that women are as involved financially as men. However, this is where equality stops. Collateral required of women when they ask a bank for a loan is not always the same as for men. Only a few years ago, a woman had to give the name of her husband when asking a bank for a loan. What will happen to women when they want to borrow to start a business, especially with the fee of 1 per cent of the amount of the loan which will have to be paid by the lending institution to the federal Government? If the banks are already suspicious of businessmen, what will they think of women who want to get into business? I wonder whether bankers will change their minds on this subject, especially since 10 per cent of the risk will have to be assumed by the financial institution. What will happen in practice?

We should not think that the banks will reduce their profits. These losses will have to be incurred by someone, that is for sure. We should not think either that getting a loan will be as easy as before. It is quite clear that the banks will not be any quicker to approve loans, which will mean another loss of time. Who will be penalized? The answer is quite simple, Mr. Speaker, it will be the small businessman.

What about the times when a business would only need minimal assistance to get through a difficult period? There is no thought of providing such assistance to our businessmen and women. It would sometimes take very little money, but it is too much for the businessman. Some type of assistance could have been provided for such difficult times.

It is a well known fact that small businessmen spend most of their time taking care of their business. They are often willing to give their free time to support their business. Many young businessmen even borrow the personal savings of their friends and families.

• (1650)

All of us have known these small businesses which involve most of the family members. While one of the spouse is the main shareholder and the other is its main business executive, most everybody comes in once in a while to lend a hand. These small businesses can survive only at the cost of major sacrifices.

It is a fact that entrepreneurship among Canadian men and women continue to flourish in spite of various problems. Thousands of Canadians, previously unemployed, have created their own jobs, and in my Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic riding office, I often come across people complaining that they cannot find jobs. I suggest to them to start a new business. Often, as I was saying, these people are women and they have a hard time, because the banks demand additional guarantees from them. I fear that banking establishments will eventually "pass on" to their customers the cost for their 10 per cent share of the losses and the 1 per cent loan fee which they must pay to the government.

There are in Canada some 750,000 small businesses. What people do not realize at first sight is that these small businesses generate much economic activities in all Canadian towns and villages. For that matter, statistical data show that small businesses play an important role in creating and preserving jobs. Thanks to the regional development for which they are responsible, several Quebec municipalities have flourished and prospered.

This morning, I noticed that several of my colleagues who live in the country or in small villages—personnally, I live in a major metropolitan centre—seem to think that their people experience more difficulties in obtaining these loans. That is indeed a pity, for everybody keeps saying and repeating that the private sector in general and small and medium-size businesses in particular are the key to the survival of the Canadian economy.

Like many others, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the government is not turning its back on progress. For the past few weeks, I have had the impression that most of the bills we have been dealing with are taking us back 20 years. All this serves only to destroy the achievements of so many years. I see that the Hon. Member from Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) agrees with me.

Mr. Desrosiers: Not at all! Absolutely not!

Mrs. Killens: This Government really shows that its priorities are not those of Canadians. If I wanted to be mean, I would say to the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve that the Government is obviously more often trying to please the Americans than the Canadians.

Mr. Boudria: It is true.

Mrs. Killens: I do not think that the Bill as such would be good for the financial situation of small businesses. Indeed, if it were passed in its present form on third reading, it would have a baneful effect on most medium and small businesses.

Vested interests are denied. Conditions will be made more difficult for them. Men and women in the business sector have much more to do than to spend several hours a week filling those questionnaires. It is already difficult enough to manage a company without having to go from one bank and one district office to another.

Mr. Speaker, as my colleague the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Mrs. Copps) said in her speech on February 7, the Government has adopted a kind of Pontius Pilate approach and abandoned small businesses. It merely entrusts the whole affair with the Governor in Council if not the Minister who will have the last say about future amendments.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned:

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

Bill C-13, an Act to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act—Chapter No. 1.

Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Currency Act—Chapter No. 2.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Government House Leader asked me to announce the business of the House for tomorrow. We will continue with Bill C-23. Once that is completed, we will carry on with Bill C-24.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to notice No. 34?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

SUGGESTED EXAMINATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE OF GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS AND CONTRACTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates be empowered to examine all aspects of appointments made by the government, except those made by the Public Service Commission, and to examine all aspects of government contracts including those relating to advertising for services let by the government, for the period commencing September 17, 1984.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to participate in this very important debate this afternoon. Of course, all Hon. Members will recognize that this is a very important issue and one which affects the credibility not only of the Government but of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) personally because of the commitments he made during the election campaign.

I remind the House of an article which appeared in The Toronto Star on January 5, 1985, alleging that certain government advertising contracts had been given to friends of the Conservative Party. These contracts were allegedly given, or were to be given, to those friends of the Conservative Party by a pre-arranged deal whereby certain individuals would contribute funds to the Conservative Party in exchange for getting those contracts. Those allegations appeared on January 5 in The Toronto Star and on January 7 in The Globe and Mail. Also I remind the House that I immediately wrote to the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and asked that a criminal investigation be launched into this issue because of potential violations to Section 108 and Section 110 of the Criminal Code of Canada involving corruption. The RCMP is still conducting inquiries into this issue. They had been to Montreal and Toronto to interview different individuals and will be reporting to us shortly as to whether they will be launching a criminal investigation.

● (1710)

In my view, government advertising contracts should be tendered in a very different way. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) has told the Canadian public that it is not done in any other way in any other country in the western world. He told all of us that we cannot have a structure by which government advertising contracts would be tendered, that this would be impractical in the Minister's opinion.

I beg to differ with the Minister of Supply and Services. We could look into the possibility of having an internal agency of record. Why can we not have public servants do the grouping of the advertising contracts in order to obtain the better rates that one gets when grouping contracts together? There is no reason why that kind of structure cannot be looked at by the parliamentary committee, as I suggested.

From there on, there is no reason why a parliamentary committee cannot interview various experts in the advertising sector who could tell us of new and better ways to award government advertising contracts. There is no doubt in my mind, and I do not think there is doubt in the mind of any Member, that the present structure is inadequate and improper. Of course, it reeks of political partisanship.

I want to remind Hon. Members of certain commitments that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made during the election campaign which we had not that long ago. Let me read a few of the commitments for the benefit of all Members. On July 9, 1984, the Prime Minister said:

> I commit myself to set up criteria for quality which will impress the Canadian people. I think that what took place is completely unacceptable in an open and democratic society. We are going to reform this instrument of our national life.

This, Mr. Speaker, was said by the present Prime Minister on July 9, 1984.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: I am glad to see some Tory Members applauding that initiative. No doubt when they speak later this afternoon those Members, like myself, will condemn the Prime Minister for the actions that he has taken, condemn him for the blatant political patronage that he has exercised, and condemn the Prime Minister for having breached a sacred trust, to use an expression that has been used sometimes before by certain Conservative politicians in this country. On July 16, the Prime Minister said:

> The method of making appointments could be corrected by dramatic measures.

Where are the dramatic measures? This Government has been in power for six months and what has it done?

An Hon. Member: We won the election.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, they won the election by making 338 promises, by making commitments to the Canadian people that they would reform the institution. What have they done? They have broken almost every single promise that they made to the Canadian public.

Let me read another promise of the Prime Minister, this one made on July 16. This explains the views of this Government. It really tells what has been going on. This is what the Prime Minister said:

> I was talking to Tories then and that is what they wanted to hear. Talking to the Canadian public during an election campaign is something else.

That is the kind of double standard that the Prime Minister has used. Time and time again he has told what they want to hear and has done completely the opposite. It is time that the Prime Minister delivered some of those promises that he made to the Canadian people.

Hon. Members may ask how we could reform some of those institutions. Perhaps the Prime Minister should have thought of that before making the promise during the election campaign. However, being the constructive Opposition that we are, let us outline some of the methods by which the Government could improve the present process.

Certain appointments, because of their power and prestige or remuneration, or because of the public and media perception of the past and present abuse, might be removed from the political arena in whole or in part or subjected to a parliamentary process, much like the Prime Minister suggested during the election campaign and not delivered upon. Frequently, a combination of both professional and parliamentary scrutiny could be appropriate. Let me express some of the alternatives.

[Translation]

In the United States, for instance, Congress and the Senate especially are empowered to examine or confirm many presidential appointments to senior positions. In Canada, there are three ways a similar procedure could be applied, each with its own specific advantages and drawbacks. I shall elaborate.

Appointments to senior positions in the Government could be referred for consideration to a standing committee. This committee could be a so-called ad hoc committee or else an existing committee could be used, as I suggested in today's motion. Referral to a committee of the House of Commons would make it possible for elected representatives to exercise control over appointments of senior officials.

Quite recently, we have heard Progressive Conservative Members speak in this House to emphasize the importance of elected representatives.

I hope Hon. Members will vote in favour of referral to a committee so that our elected representatives will be able to speak to this matter.

Mr. Speaker, another possibility would be to have the appointments reviewed by a committee of the Senate, which could check political appointments, and the same committee could review appointments and give the House and the Canadian people the assurance that the people who would hold these positions were competent in the areas in question.

We could also have a review by several committees or by joint committees of the Senate and the House of Commons, and in this way we could take advantage of both the experience of our Hon. colleagues in the other Chamber and that of the elected Members of the House of Commons. In this way, Mr. Speaker, we could take advantage of the resources of both the House and the Senate.

We could also have appointments reviewed by professional associations, for instance, and then refer the matter to the House, more or less like the Bar Association does before suggesting names for appointments to the bench.

Mr. Speaker, these are some of the ways we could deal with political appointments in order to remove the partisan aspects which exist today, thus meeting the solemn commitment made by the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party during the last election campaign.

[English]

As I was mentioning a moment ago, one thing we have to do is ensure that the people who are recipients of political plum jobs which the Government offers to them are indeed qualified for the functions they will be undertaking. I read in the Ottawa Citizen not long ago that Mr. William Hawkins had been appointed to the Textile Board. By his own admission, Mr. Hawkins clearly stated, according to the same report, that he was not qualified for the job, that he had not applied for it and had no idea why the Government chose him for that function in the first place. There is not doubt in my mind that with that kind of information, a parliamentary committee reviewing the candidacy of such an applicant may have second thoughts before recommending to the House that he be appointed.

• (1720)

Not long ago, there was the appointment of Roy McMurtry as High Commissioner in England.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: I am glad to hear the applause in this House. I happen to know Mr. McMurtry quite well and consider him a personal friend. I feel that he is qualified for that job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: That is good. However, we are not discussing the calibre of that individual; we are discussing the process that was used. The Prime Minister said that important political appointments in the area of economy or external affairs would be reviewed by a parliamentary committee. I would ask Members across the way what is more important to the area of external affairs than the High Commissioner representing this country in Great Britain. If that is not an important position, then what is? If it is an important position, then just maybe the Prime Minister of the country should deliver on the promise he made some six months ago.

We are told that the Prime Minister has, after the numerous questions I have raised in the House, finally asked the chairman of the Committee on the Reform of the House to look at the possibility of finding a formula to interview those candidates in the future. That is nonsense. Where I come from, it does not take six months to figure out a procedure for interviewing candidates.

After six months, all the Prime Minister has offered us is this possibility of a solution. We need more than that from the Prime Minister. We need leadership. We need the Prime Minsiter to deliver on the promises he made. If he cannot deliver on those promises, the Prime Minister should rise in the House and apologize to the Canadian people for having made a mistake when he told them he would deliver on a promise. He should now admit that he is unable to deliver on that promise and that he does not have the competence to deliver on the things he offered in the first place.

[Translation]

I see my colleagues of the Progressive Conservative Party, the bookends on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that the bookends who have been elected to the House—

An Hon. Member: There are not too many books.

Mr. Boudria: No, and not too much support that I can see, Mr. Speaker, because there are very few bookends to support the Government this afternoon. Still I hope the bookends in the House will take the floor and support the commitment made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign, while at the same time denouncing the attitude of the Prime Minister since the September 4 election.

Mr. Speaker, no one can claim at the same time that the Prime Minister was right during the election campaign and that he is still right today, because he is doing exactly the opposite of what he said during the campaign. I note that my colleague on this side of the House is nodding approvingly, the Prime Minister is right when he contradicts himself. It is possible, Mr. Speaker, perhaps that is the mentality of the Progressive Conservative Party. That must be how the Conservative Members get to think that the Government has the right simultaneously to tell the people two different things.

I know I cannot say that Hon. Members give the Government the right to lie, that would be unparliamentary. Let us say that Members of the Progressive Conservative Party think that the Government has the right to tell Canadians two different things at the same time. That is how Members of the Progressive Conservative Party can support the Prime Minister when he acts in such a way as to deceive the people of this country.

So far, Mr. Speaker, we have been getting unsatisfactory answers from the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). Reference to committee is called for to debate this issue. I hope the committee will be given a mandate today and will convene soon so that we might establish the necessary criteria and then hire applicants for those important positions, as promised by the Prime Minister during the last election campaign.

[English]

Further, I believe that as of today, the Government should immediately place a moratorium on political appointments for a period of two months. In those two months, we could establish the necessary parliamentary structures the Prime Minister promised during the election campaign. Once those structures are in place, then the candidates that are appointed to high offices will be appointed not only with the consent of the Government but with the support of the House and of the people of our country.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, having heard what the Hon. Member has said, I can see why there are only two members of the rat pack and one second-row member present in the Liberal seats.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Hon. Member not to refer to the presence or absence of Hon. Members in the House. They may be in committee meetings.

Mr. Bradley: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. That was an oversight on my part and one for which I apologize. It was just the shock of seeing the bare seats that overwhelmed me.

The Hon. Member called for an internal agency of record. I would ask the Hon. Member if he is now suggesting we have another CUIO, or if he remembers how violently he opposed that little item. The Hon. Member spoke of various ways in which we could look at things. He spoke about referring the matter to a standing committee, a series of committees or a joint committee.

Mr. Boudria: I talked about alternatives.

Mr. Bradley: I might add, Mr. Speaker, that if we had a joint committee at the present time that included members of the Senate and of the whole House and that studied all contracts, it might grind to a sudden halt. The Hon. Member referred to a committee of professionals set up to review these appointments and to review the contracts given by the Government.

The Hon. Member has said that where he comes from, it does not take six months to create a committee to review these things. Perhaps if he told us where he came from, we would understand why it does not take six months to do so. I am sure that he wants proper leadership. He wants committees that will look—

Mr. Boudria: We are not getting any leadership.

Mr. Bradley: He wants committees that will look at these matters and give them serious consideration. That does not happen overnight. He calls for leadership.

Mr. Boudria: Do it.

Mr. Bradley: We have leadership. Our leader is showing leadership. Having heard what the Hon. Member has said today and having seen the absence—excuse me, Mr. Speaker—of his Leader, it is obvious that he does not have leadership in his Party. Possibly he has not been present for the last six years to see how nice it is to have leadership in the Government all of a sudden. We appreciate the leadership that we have from our Leader, the Prime Minister of the country.

I would like to read the motion of the Hon. Member because—

Mr. Nunziata: It's a good motion.

Mr. Bradley: It is an interesting motion. However, the Hon. Member did not speak to the motion. The motion refers to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates and not to all of the alternatives of which the Hon. Member spoke. The motion states that the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates should be empowered to examine all aspects of appointments made by the Government except those made by the Public Service Commission and to examine all aspects of government contracts including those relating to advertising for services let by the Government.

This is an important issue. It is a serious issue. However, I guess from the tone of the Hon. Member's presentation, the tone of the Hon. Member's motion and the tone of the heckling from the pack at the back that he is concerned about how this Government does business. I take exception to that. I challenge the Hon. Member to say that any Minister on this side of the House is not taking his responsibilities seriously.

Mr. Nunziata: The Defence Minister.

Mr. Bradley: I defy him to say that the Acting Minister of Defence (Mr. Clark) is not doing his job.

Mr. Nunziata: The former Defence Minister.

Mr. Bradley: I defy him to say that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is not seriously concerned about transport in Canada. I defy him to say that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is not concerned about issues that arise in the area of health and welfare.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bradley: We could name them all because they are all responsible and they all carry out their duties. It surprises me that two members of the pack over there are making a lot of noise. It would be unparliamentary for me to say that I did not know that rats were so vocal, so I will not make a statement such as that. However, they are loud over there. If the third famous member of the pack were in the House, the House can be assured that it would even be louder. I know the Member opposite is aware that the appointments which have been made since September 17 have been fully defended in the House when they had been raised and challenged, because this Government fulfils its obligations and fills its positions with qualified individuals.

• (1730)

Mr. Boudria: What about Hawkins?

Mr. Bradley: For example, I could cite the case of the Canadian Arsenals Limited. I have been waiting for a question from the Hon. Member for weeks on this subject, but he is afraid to ask the question. We approached the President of Canadian Arsenals Limited and asked him what qualities he wanted in the members of the board. He provided characteristics which were desired in board members, and this administration fulfilled these requirements in our appointments.

The only contract award that has caused discussion in the House is that of the Agency of Record, which is the organization for the placement of advertising. After questions were raised, two Hon. Members received copies of the AOR contract and there have been no further comments from those Members on the matter.

It is an extremely important issue. Traditionally, the appointment of the Agency of Record was not one which was subjected to the competitive process. The appointment of a new AOR was an effort to save money for the taxpayers of Canada. My Department was able to negotiate a new contract, which resulted in savings of $18,000 per month. I might remind the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) that the AOR was introduced by the previous Conservative Government to save money. Since 1981, the AOR has saved the Government of Canada $3.6 million.

I would like to cite a few other points which will show the magnitude of this motion. I would like to cite from the annual report of the Department of Supply and Services, which I am sure the Hon. Member has memorized. With respect to purchasing highlights, during the 1983-84 fiscal year, the Department of Supply and Services placed 350,232 contractual documents, which had a total value of $10,563 billion. That is the highest value of contracts which has been issued in the history of the Department's contracting activity.

The second part of the motion states that the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates be empowered to examine all aspects of government contracts including those relating to advertising for services let by the Government. As I have just stated, the Department of Supply and Services alone had over 350,000 contracts last year. If all of those contracts had been referred to committee, the committee would sit—in the 170 sitting days of the House—every day, and it would have to consider 2,000 contracts a day to examine only those let by DSS, not the Department of Public Works or other Departments of the Government. Or, if the Hon. Member wants to sit every day of the week, the committee would have to consider 1,000 contracts a day every day of the year. I do not think that is what the Hon. Member had in mind when he drafted the motion. If it was, he certainly did not think before he wrote it.

We could look at the area of printing production. I am proud of this Department. The printing production provides a centralized copying, duplicating and printing service to Parliament and to government Departments. The main plant is situated in Hull, Quebec, and it fulfills the printing requirements of Parliament and government Departments which, because of their sensitive and urgent nature, must be processed in-house. A network of 48 outside plants operates throughout the national capital region and provides on-site service for government Departments and processing short-run requirements. The total manufacture or in-house printing business volume for fiscal year 1983-84 was $66 million. Does the Hon. Member want the committee to sit and review every printing contract which goes to those 48 outside plants in the Ottawa region?

What about the Advertising Management Services Branch? It is one of which I am sure the Hon. Member is well aware. That branch contracts on behalf of government Departments for advertising agency services, including the services of the Agency of Record. The branch also contracts for the purchase of media space and time through the Agency of Record. During the 1983-84 fiscal year there were 483 contractual documents, with a total expenditure of $66.9 million, which were awarded on behalf of client Departments. I might also point out that by taking advantage of the prompt payment discounts which are offered by media suppliers, savings of $322,417 were achieved for the benefit of client Departments. If those 483 contracts had to sit on a table waiting for review by a committee, there would not have been over $322,000 savings for prompt payment. The contracts would not yet have been approved.

I could go on. The annual report is full of examples. I could talk about the Consumer Products and Traffic Management Branch. That branch is responsible for the acquisition of food, drugs, clothing, and textiles, the movement of personnel, household effects and freight. That branch purchased products and services which totalled $310 million in fiscal year 1983-84. The products included uniforms, protective clothing, tents, tarpaulins, flags, books, buttons and mail bags. That branch also purchased canned goods, ration packs, wheat, edible oil, beans and corn for foreign aid programs, and hospital equipment for both federal and provincial Governments. The branch also purchased drugs, infirmaries, and other medical installations.

I could go on to cite examples which would indicate the futility of referring to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, all the contracts of the Government of Canada for review. I could speak about the Marine, Electronics and Industrial Systems Directorate, the purchasing which it does and its contracts.

Mr. Boudria: What about patronage?

Mr. Bradley: I could go on to patronage, and I will. Appointments are part of the Hon. Member's motion. He is aware that I am the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services and that I am concerned about the accusations and the comments he has made about the Department. I am not prepared to sit back and let him say those things. The Department has some 10,000 employees who oversee all the contracts of the Government. How can he propose that it should be done by a standing committee of the House of Commons, which would have to review some 2,000 contracts a day?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): The Liberals did it with one person.

Mr. Bradley: That's right. As my hon. friend said, in the last Government the Liberals did it with one person. We are not prepared to do that.

The Hon. Member has made accusations against the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). We would look at Hansard of February 5, 1985, when the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell raised a question. In that question he said:

Government Appointments and Contracts

I have a question for the Prime Minister. During the election campaign the Prime Minister said on the CTV program Question Period that the key position affecting economic of foreign policy should be screened by a House of Commons committee.

The Prime Minister replied:

I have communicated with the Hon. Member for St. John's East, who is chairing the task force on parliamentary reform, ably assisted by the agriculture critic of the Liberal Party.

The Prime Minister said nice things about the agriculture critic. Sometimes I wonder. He is showing leadership, and when he says nice things about people he means it. I will not quote the nice things he said about the Hon. Member because the Hon. Member does not have a grain of—

Mr. Boudria: A rat.

Mr. Bradley: Yes, but I would not say that. The Prime Minister continued and said that he had "asked him and his distinguished colleagues if they could provide a formula whereby such appointments will be vetted by committees of the House of Commons, as we all wish". Obviously, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is not a member of that committee. He may not know how committees such as this work. He undoubtedly knows that the committee is working in camera, working hard and that it sits for long hours. The committee will provide a solution which I am sure will bring happiness to all because it will be done properly. He talks about these things—

Mr. Nunziata: Is it any wonder he is not a Minister?

● (1740)

Mr. Bradley: Will someone stop pulling the Hon. Member's chain? An Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party is pulling a chain in the pack area.

I ask the Hon. Member if he does not agree with the appointment of Lloyd Francis? I ask him if he does not think that Stephen Lewis is a good ambassador for Canada to the United Nations?

Mr. Boudria: What about the rest?

Mr. Bradley: What is the Hon. Member's complaint about Bruce Phillips? As I said a while ago, I might suggest that he walk forward six steps, turn about and face his own front bench, then start asking about appointments. He should ask the previous Prime Minister. Where was the Hon. Member at that time? He was a Member of this House.

Mr. Nunziata: You promised to change it.

Mr. Bradley: No, no, he wasn't. He is just finding his wings and his four legs and learning what it is about, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that wherever he came from it does not take six months to create a committee. Possibly where he was, he could have asked his Leader about the appointment of Mr. MacEachen, Mr. Pitfield, Joyce Fairburn, or Michael Kirby.

Mr. Boudria: Who made the promise to David Cunningham?

Mr. Bradley: Who made the promise? The Hon. Member's Leader made the promise to the former Prime Minister. He promised him that when he became Prime Minister, he would appoint all those Liberals to the Senate. That is who made the promise, Mr. Speaker, and we on this side know how the Liberals kept their promises. We see how it is costing the Government of Canada and the people of this country millions of dollars because of the promise the Hon. Member's Leader made of putting some fellow by the name of MacEachen in the Senate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Boudria: Order.

Mr. Bradley: We agree that a review is required for the appointments to the political system. That is why the Prime Minister of this country has asked the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) to undertake such a task. This is something which, as the Prime Minister says, we all want.

Mr. Nunziata: After three months of my asking for it.

Mr. Bradley: It is under review. The Hon. Member says, after three months of his asking for it. I am sure my colleagues on this side of the House are aware that we have been asking for it for the last 16 years. Time is needed to create an efficient process, Mr. Speaker. We can look at the U.S. Senate. As the Hon. Member mentioned, a confirmation is required by the U.S. Senate for appointments in the United States. But we might remember that Attorney General Meese was appointed by the president last year and his approval was not received until February of this year. We might point out that the American Senate breezes through some 140,000 appointments and literally rubberstamps them. We don't want that, Mr. Speaker. We want a good committee which faces responsibility and does its job. We will work toward that, Mr. Speaker. We will work for the betterment of this Parliament not to its detriment as the Liberals have done for the last 16 years. We have a Prime Minister who in this area, as in all areas, offers leadership, not dictatorship.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that this subject is getting ventilated in the House of Commons because it has been a concern of mine for some time. I feel it is a serious issue and I want to take it seriously, although I must say, to have a member of the Liberal Party making these proposals for reform is a bit like having Dracula clean up the blood bank, as we used to say in the Ontario Legislature.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: I would remind my hon. friend from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), who, I believe, will be making a contribution to this House, that it was only back in July that the Turner Government—only days before the election was called—awarded a 21-month contract for the Agency of Record to a consortium of four advertising agencies known as Canadian Media Corporation which has strong ties to the Liberal Party. I raised the question of the Agency of Record when the House resumed in January. Of course, the only difference between that and the award which was made by the Progressive Conservative Party Government on January 7 was that its award for the Agency of Record went to a firm with Conservative links rather than to a firm with Liberal links.

Frankly, I think the allegations are largely irrelevant. The fact is that this has been used and is being used by both of the old Parties as a means of rewarding their friends and for the purpose of keeping an advertising capacity in the wings to help develop advertising for them in forthcoming election campaigns. The Hon. Member who raises this issue should be aware that he is one of the very few people in his caucus who, I believe, can justifiably raise the issue. Most of his colleagues sat in government in the House of Commons, watched and did nothing, and did not even have the grace to hold their nose at the patronage practices of the Liberals when they were in power.

I would like to deal with the question of appointments. This resolution properly raises the subject, although I would say to my hon. friend that perhaps it could have been drafted in a better way. It does raise the issue of misspending, the use of abusive contracts such as the one for the Agency of Record, as well as the question of appointments.

I would like to deal with appointments first. As all Hon. Members have recognized, the issue of appointments came up during the course of the election campaign. Even prior to that time, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated in his book Where I stand that he thought that at the very least, major economic appointments made by Governments, such as that of the Deputy Minister of Trade, the Deputy Minister of Finance or the head of the Economic Council of Canada, should be subject to some form of parliamentary review. He did not say in what form it should be. He thought that this was something which should be developed. But that was a promise made in his book, which was reiterated by the Prime Minister when he appeared in the Leaders' debate on television during the election campaign. A very specific promise was made. Yet when I raised this issue with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) shortly after we resumed in January, all I was told was that he was assured that the select committee on parliamentary reform was looking at that particular issue. Essentially the same answer came from the Prime Minister a few days later.

It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, and, I feel, a regrettable one, that when the terms of reference for that committee were drawn up, the Government overlooked including in the terms of reference this particular question around which a specific promise has been made by the Prime Minister during the course of the election campaign. Frankly, I was distressed at the tone of some of the remarks made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Bradley) a few moments ago. He seemed to be going on the defensive rather than saying, "Look. I don't like the tone of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell or some of the cracks he is making about us, but, yes, we are serious about this particular issue".

I appeal to Hon. Members on all sides. I believe this is an area where we do have an opportunity in this House to make strides forward with respect to a reform, a reform which I believe would be very innovative in terms of parliamentary government. I have taken the trouble to do some research on this particular subject in terms of the extent to which other legislatures, parliaments or assemblies actually vet or review major appointments made by their particular Governments. I think it is a case that every Government has to have a certain number of appointments which do not come about on merit or through the civil service process but, one way or the other, are made by the head of state or the government of the day. To what extent do other legislatures review those appointments?

The fact is that in the Mother of Parliaments, according to the research I was able to do, because it is a centralized and unitary system in Great Britain, there are large numbers of such appointments made by the Government and, in fact, there is no form of parliamentary review except through questions or Estimates, the same devices we use here. It is possible, of course, to criticize a bad appointment through questioning, as we can do and sometimes do, as was done today when the facts of the appointment of Mr. Hawkins were raised in the House. But that is not an adequate form of review.

The Parliamentary Secretary, on the other hand, wants to push this to the extreme. There are potentially many thousands of appointments made in a year by the Government. That is our system. The Parliamentary Secretary asks if parliamentary committees should review all of those. He asks if the Hon. Member is suggesting that every contract of the hundreds of thousands of contracts awarded by the Government of Canada each year should be scrutinized by a parliamentary committee. For practical reasons, that is impossible. In the United States, to take a second example, there is a process of review of appointments which is very widespread. The Parliamentary Secretary indicated that a lot of those payments are rubberstamped. That is correct, because hundreds of thousands are subject to that kind of review in a particular year. However, what happens in that system, which is definitely different from ours, is that the Senate committees, and I think House committees as well, have the right to look at any particular appointment. They could focus on the appointment of a federal judge in Alabama, if they chose, although generally they tend to concentrate on the several hundred appointments to senior levels of government in a system which has two and three tiers of political appointments. This is unlike our own, where the Deputy Ministers and Assistant Deputy Ministers are not such political appointments. In the U.S. the system is selective, although they have the power to look at almost anything.

One way or another this will come up before the committee on parliamentary reform. I have been planning and preparing a brief for that particular committee. I hope that in response to this particular debate, and I put this forward constructively, the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) might get up in the House in a couple of days and announce that the Government was making a specific reference. Perhaps the Prime Minister might simply write to the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and ask that the committee specifically take up the question of the extent of patronage appointments, or Order in Council appointments as they are also called, and how they would be reviewed by a parliamentary committee or committees. Since I am a member of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, I plead with this House not to make all those appointments subject to review by that particular committee. It would make more sense if an appropriate committee were to have the responsibility of looking at appropriate appointments. Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, for example, would look at appointments of, let us say, Deputy Minister of Finance, Governor of the Bank of Canada, Chairman of the Economic Council, and the deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers of Regional Industrial Expansion. Similarly for the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the Standing Committee on Agriculture and major appointments to such agencies as the Farm Credit Corporation, as well as of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture.

What I am suggesting is that the responsibility for review should be spread around the House. As well, it seems to me that not every appointment should have to be automatically reviewed by a Commons committee. My reason is quite simple; it is that there are a lot of appointments. Many of them are relatively routine. If there is something of a blue tinge to some of the appointments, well, some of that is to be expected. Where there is competence and there happens to be partisanship, I think a lot of people will say that is O.K.

The other day I welcomed Mrs. Pigott when she made her first appearance before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works in her new roles as chairperson of the National Capital Commission. She is a well known Conservative, but she is also a publicly spirited individual with a great deal of capacity who I think will be a good chairperson for that agency. However, in my responsibilities as Member for Ottawa Centre, I would have liked the opportunity to have a committee ask the appointee to that particular agency, whoever it may have been, to appear before a committee in order to let the committee review that particular decision. Therefore, I think we probably need a two-tier process, which is effectively what has emerged in the U.S. The U.S. is the only jurisdiction which has gone a serious distance down the way, according to my research, in having a review of major government or Order in Council appointments.

My proposal is that it should be possible—and the committee on parliamentary reform might well come up with a list—to come up with a certain level or type of position which should automatically be referred to an appropriate committee for review. I would have thought that deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers and then the heads of, let us say, 20, 30 or 40 major Crown corporations and government agencies would be covered. Among them might be the chairperson or president of Atomic Energy of Canada, Canadian National, Air Canada, the Farm Credit Corporation, the Federal Business Development Bank, the Bank of Canada and certain groups like that. The Science Council and the National Research Council should, I think, automatically be subject to review. Beyond that, there is a much wider number of appointments, some to full-time jobs and some to jobs which are honorific or only part-time. I do not think the committee should have to summon as a witness someone who has been appointed to a job on some agency or board which involves the individual sitting for maybe five or six days a year and getting $200 per diem. That does not make much sense. Well, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell says yes, but they should be able to. With that I agree. The power to review those Order in Council appointments should be there even though, as a matter of course, most of them would not be subject to review.

The device which is used frequently with respect to delegated legislation in the United Kingdom is one we could follow here. Where a regulation or piece of delegated legislation has been put together in Britain, it is frequently, according to the terms of the umbrella legislation passed by Parliament, required to lie on the Table of Parliament for a certain period of time. Some 30 days is often the period proposed, and that would be suitable in this particular case. Therefore, the appointment of a citizenship judge or an appointment to some agency where the appointee is going to earn $1,000 a year providing some advice to government should lie on the Table of this House for a period of 30 days and the appointment should not come into force, except for emergency circumstances, until that period has passed.

It also seems to me that there should be a device by which Members can refer such appointments to an appropriate committee. The kind of device I would see would be, for example, having such appointments referred to an appropriate committee on the request of any 10 Members of the House of Commons, since we are talking about this place and since we want to abolish the other place. That would mean that most appointments would get routine review in the sense that the opposition Parties would ensure their critics would look at appointments in their particular area to make sure they were not particularly objectionable. In certain cases it could help to cleanse the system by bringing a minor appointment up before the committee because some issues of principle were involved. Without taking too much time of any individual committee, it would mean that the major appointments of an Order in Council nature would be automatically referred and considered.

It is my feeling as a parliamentarian that the responsibility for the appointments probably has to continue to rest with the Government. Therefore, I would tend to suggest that the review carried out by a committee, either optionally or because it is required to do so, would have to be concluded within a certain specified period of time, say 15 days beyond the 30-day period, and that the review would result in ventilating the issue of the appointment, possibly in a recommendation, although given the Government's majority, there might be no recommendation. But I do not think at this time we are ready to say that a committee should actually have the power to refuse an appointment. However, there should be the power to make such a stink that the Government might discreetly decide it would not proceed with an appointment which proved to be particularly objectionable. That would enforce a kind of accountability in the process and avoid such monstrosities as the appointment of Bryce Mackasey to the ambassadorship of Portugal. That appointment was eventually withdrawn, mainly because the people of Canada objected and the Government of Portugal got into the act. We would have a way by which that kind of misuse of patronage could in fact be controlled.

The time for this debate is coming to an end, Mr. Speaker, and I want to give another Hon. Member a minute or two to speak. I will just say that the question of contracts which are let without tender, which includes 85 per cent of services' contracts, is also an area for abuse. I do not believe we need parliamentary review of each contract, but I think we need to have a change in the system and I am seeking to have that reviewed through the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY—MONITORING OF FOOD RELIEF DISTRIBUTION IN ETHIOPIA

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, under the leadership of the Canadian Government, the country has made an inspiring response to the crisis in Ethiopia. But that should not blind us to a possible deficiency of the program.

The Auditor General's report on CIDA claims that there are often too few field workers monitoring aid programs. Unless arrangements have changed recently, that is the deficiency in Ethiopia today. There may be no Canadian Government worker assigned full time to monitoring the distribution of Canadian food relief there.

The embassy staff of about six is preoccupied with other duties. It is not realistic to assume that NGO staff can do what only Government officials can do.

What this can mean, not simply to governments and officials but to the hungry, is being shown day by day in the provinces of Eritrea and Tigre.

Mr. Peter McPhearson, the administrator of the United States Agency for International Development, has said on public TV that of all the famine affected areas on the continent of Africa, the most gravely affected are these in the north of Ethiopia, namely Eritrea and Tigre.

Mr. Brian Kline, the deputy director of the East African office for AID, has told my office that Mr. McPhearson has indicated that the Ethiopian Government is "actively pressing bilateral donors to deny assistance to rebel held areas".

From talking with several authorities who have visited the famine affected areas of Africa, it appears that there is reason to fear that the Ethiopian Government may be attempting a Biafran type situation in the north of their own country. The Wall Street Journal has pointed out, "Hunger will do what helicopter gunships and rocket launchers can't".

On February 1, 1985, I raised the point in the House that a ship carrying Canadian food relief to Ethiopia had been forced to wait for unloading facilities while a ship carrying Soviet military equipment was unloaded. On that very afternoon, the New York Times ran a story that was entitled "Aid Officials Say Ethiopia May put Arms Before Food".

A United States Congressman, with whom my office and I have discussed this situation, has indicated that intelligence reports indicate that ships from two NATO countries had been seized and prevented from unloading.

Only yesterday, Vice-President Bush, in speaking to the National Press Club, stated:

> Food for starving millions still takes a back seat to military cargo when authorities decide the order in which ships can dock in the ports of Ethiopia.

I am concerned about reports of Ethiopian Government and rebel obstruction of free world relief efforts in Ethiopia itself. You have probably heard a number of charges and they are shocking. For example, we have received reports in the news media of the selling of food and the feeding of soldiers with relief aid. According to reports from Metro Toronto people from Tigre, refugees fleeing from Tigre to the Sudan have reportedly been bombed by Ethiopian planes. Hungry civilians have been denied food because they lacked Government registration cards.

In late December and early January the death rates in the refugee camps on the Sudan-Ethiopian border were among the highest in medical history. They rivalled those on the Cambodian-Thai border in the late 1970s.

Mr. Dan Connell of Grassroots International indicated that the amount of aid to the areas in the north of Ethiopia may be less than 5 per cent of what arrives in Government run feeding stations in that country. As a result, the death toll is climbing daily. Already more than 200,000 in Tigre have perished, and all behind a curtain of silence that is attempting to keep the public from any awareness of what is happening.

To quote Vice President Bush again:

> Famine has been so devastating in Ethiopia in part because the government has used it as an instrument of war in Eritrea and Tigre. The Ethiopian government has refused "to allow relief agencies safe passage to take food into areas of Eritrea and Tigre not under its control".

The Ethiopian Government controls about 6,000 trucks, yet it has put only about 5 per cent of those toward getting food from the docks to the feeding centres. However, in September, it spent millions of dollars on its tenth anniversary celebration.

Our concern should not be either to knock or defend our relief program. Its merits stand by themselves. It is an impressive program. Every member of the Government deserves great credit and great thanks for the initiatives that have been taken to make it possible. What should concern us first is that we maintain the credibility of that program by being able to give full assurance to the public that food relief is going to the people for whom it is intended; and second, that the people for whom it is intended are having their needs met.

● (1805)

I urge the Minister to call upon the Ethiopian Government and the rebels alike to grant safe passage to all who will attempt to take food into Eritrea and Tigre. Put the hungry first. Let that be the message to those who are seeking to put their own political aspirations first, and to make sure they do, let us assign field workers who can monitor the distribution of the food that Canadians have sent.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for giving me this opportunity to reassure Canadians about this important matter.

The Government has taken various steps to ensure that Canadian food relief for Ethiopia is reaching the people who need it and to whom it is directed. The program's concept and the choice of distributing organizations reflect the government's concern for monitoring and accounting for the distribution of this food relief.

First of all, we have insisted on having a considerable part of our food relief distributed by well-known non-governmental organizations. This year more than half of the aid provided to Ethiopia under our regular food relief budget was distributed through the International Committee of the Red Cross, the Central Mennonite Committee and the Lutheran Association of Canada for World Assistance. These organizations are in a position to indicate exactly how the goods are being used. As for the rest, this is assistance provided from government to government.

The World Food Program is supervising distribution of food on behalf of the Government of Canada. As Hon. Members are aware, the World Food Program is an extremely efficient channel for bringing in emergency relief. Thanks to its extensive program in Ethiopia and its experienced field personnel, it is particularly qualified to provide this vital support service.

The Hon. Member may be aware that thanks to the resources of the Special Africa Fund and the contribution by the Government of Ontario, 25,000 additional tons of grain have been sent to Ethiopia by this country. In this particular case, most of the distributing will be done on behalf of the Government of Ethiopia by non-governmental and international organizations such as the World University Service of Canada, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and Norwegian Church Aid. These organizations will monitor distribution in consultation with the Canadian Embassy and will make progress reports.

I would like to add that most non-governmental and international observers in Ethiopia are of the opinion that food distribution through official Ethiopian channels is taking place with a minimum of loss. It is also true that Ethiopia does not have the administrative resources to provide donors with all the reports they would need on the distribution of their donations.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that at this very moment, the Hon. David MacDonald, the Canadian emergency relief co-ordinator, is in Sudan to observe the situation in that country. Canadians may be confident that we have taken all the necessary action to ensure that our aid will have maximum impact.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—SOUTH AFRICA—CONDUCT OF CANADIAN COMPANIES—GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES. (B) VISIT OF APARTHEID APOLOGIST

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on December 21, 1984, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) asked what I thought was a very legitimate question. He referred to the visit of the Reverend Bishop Desmond Tutu, a Nobel Peace Prize winner. He asked the Prime Minister what consideration was being given to increasing Canadian pressure on South Africa to abolish apartheid, a very important and concise question.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) completely evaded the question and tried to wash the whole situation over with Irish blarney. I hope I will not be accused of racism by using that term. The Prime Minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, I was honoured, as we all were yesterday, by the presence of Bishop Tutu in the House. I had the privilege of a private meeting with him wherein he gave me the benefit of his views. I indicated to him how helpful they would be to the new Government as we get into a foreign policy review. Of course the question of our relationship with South Africa will be very carefully re-examined.

● (1810)

The Prime Minister said absolutely nothing in response to that very important question asked by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West.

On February 15, I asked a question about the non-compliance of the Bata Shoe Company with the voluntary guidelines for Canadian companies operating in South Africa. In his own way the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said just as little as did the Prime Minister in response to the earlier question. He talked about a review of policy in light of the well-known Canadian abhorrence of the policy of apartheid.

Some of us have some questions as to just how serious the Conservative Party holds that policy of abhorrence for apartheid when we have seen a number of Tory Members take expense paid trips to South Africa. We wonder just how abhorred they are by that policy.

Then the Minister went on to say with respect to reports concerning particular companies, "the best way to judge their performance as employers would be for the companies concerned to issue public reports, as called for by our present code of conduct". That is precisely the point—29 out of 30 of the companies from Canada operating in South Africa have not bothered to file a report since 1981. To say that the best way would be for them to file a report is a complete non-starter in terms of dealing with a very important situation. Obviously what the Secretary of State for External Affairs thinks is the best way is not working. It is important that they should come up with something a little better.

I suggested one small step—compulsory compliance for all companies doing any business with the federal Government. The federal purchasing power should be at the service of human rights both in Canada and overseas. That would be one small step which could be taken. It would bring companies such as Bata Shoes to report on what it has been doing so that we would have some idea of the way in which it is working. However, the Government would not indicate that it was prepared to take even that one small step.

Today Canada is hosting Gaza Buthelezi, who is the leader of Bantustan where the Bata Shoe Company operates. Official Canadian policy claims that we do not recognize the so-called homelands or Bantustans. We do not pretend, as does the Government of South Africa, that the Government of those Bantustans are in any way independent. They are simply puppets, and that is supposed to be our official policy. Over the past few years some four million black Africans have been forcibly removed from the general area of South Africa and on to the most arid, unproductive land. The whole system of Bantustans is integral to the system of apartheid, and we are supposed to reject it. Why then are we rolling out the red carpet for Mr. Buthelezi who is trying to drum financial support for the South African economy?

Mr. Buthelezi claims to be an opponent of apartheid and of the Botha Government, but we have only to look at his actions to raise very serious questions about that. He claims to be the democratically elected leader of his people in Kwazulu, but in the 1978 election when his Party won all the seats in Kwazulu, only 14 per cent of the people had been registered and only 38 per cent of those registered actually bothered to vote. In other words, slightly more than 5 per cent of the total population gave this man his mandate, and he claims to be a democratically elected leader. He purports to reject the new Constitution introduced by the Botha Government because it does not recognize citizenship for blacks.

● (1815)

He claims that this is a non-negotiable item. At the same time, he opposes leaders like Bishop Desmond Tutu for not, as he says, recognizing the necessity for compromise politics. He lives and operates in a country where the possibility of compromise politics is completely ruled out by the South African Government. The great majority of the people living in South Africa are not regarded as citizens. They have no say, no way of shaping any of the compromise, yet he rejects other black leaders because they do not recognize the necessity of compromise politics. They recognize the impossibility of compromise politics. He points out that in his view, economic pressure will not work. I suggest that the great lengths to which the South African Government has gone to avoid economic pressure indicates that it does work. In fact, any black Afican who speaks out and demands sanctions is liable to be charged with an indictable offence and sent to jail.

I would, therefore, like to raise the question that was raised on December 15. What consideration is the Government giving to increasing Canadian pressure on South Africa to abolish apartheid? In what direction is the policy review that the Secretary of State for External Affairs mentioned going to go?

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would recall for the House that the code of conduct concerning the employment practices of Canadian companies operating in South Africa was issued on April 28, 1978. Its main provisions concern general working conditions, collective bargaining, wages, fringe benefits, training and promotion and race relations.

Since the code's adoption, a number of companies have issued public reports, although most have not done so on a regular basis. One feature of the code has been its voluntary nature. A second feature has been that companies are requested to issue their reports publicly rather than report to a government agency for scrutiny. To have done otherwise would have raised questions about the extraterritorial application of Canadian law.

In the absence of an official monitoring mechanism, the code has not operated as effectively as had been hoped. Consultations have been held with the Canadian companies concerned and interested church and labour groups on how the code could be made more effective. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) informed the House on February 19, a number of options are under consideration as part of a complete review of relations with South Africa and any changes will be announced to the House.

In conclusion, I would add that although there have been criticisms of codes of conduct by those favouring disinvestment and economic sanctions, most observers close to the scene believe that they have led to improvements in working conditions for non-whites. We should not disparage any gains in the fight against apartheid or slackening in our efforts to promote basic change. Our common purpose must be to encourage the removal of apartheid by peaceful means.

As the Secretary of State for External Affairs informed the House on February 15, Canada is reviewing its relations with South Africa, and the Government wishes to consult extensively with people whose views are relevant. Canadian policy is one of dialogue, including dialogue with those with whom we do not always agree. It may be noted that all major black leaders in South Africa are controversial figures in their own country.

While Chief Buthelezi is not a guest of the Canadian Government, we are happy to take advantage of his presence in Ottawa to review the situation in his country with him. The Minister of External Relations (Mrs. Vezina) will be meeting Chief Buthelezi to hear his views. Like Chief Buthelezi, we are opposed to apartheid and we cannot say that the present South African constitution, which excludes blacks, has abandoned the concept of apartheid. We, too, have reservations about the effectiveness of economic sanctions in fostering peaceful change and we are concerned about the effects they would have on the poorest segments of the South African population.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ACID RAIN—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT ON CONTROL MEASURES. (B) FEDERAL GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to follow up on a question I asked of the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) on February 6. I see that the Minister is here to respond. I think it is a very good practice which apparently is being followed by the new Government of having Ministers themselves respond during the Adjournment Debate. I hope that that continues for as long as possible.

• (1820)

On February 6, I asked the Minister about the agreement that she had reached with the provinces with respect to acid rain. I believe I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as well just when concrete money would be allocated toward reaching the goals set by the federal Government and provinces with respect to a reduction in acid rain. I did so in following up the remarks that the Prime Minister is now famous for having made about Canada having to go to the bargaining table with the United States with respect to acid rain with its hands clean, and having to clean up our own back yard if we wanted to bargain from strength when it comes to talking to the United States about acid rain. I agree with that principle and I have made it clear that I thought that that was a good sentiment expressed by the Prime Minister.

My question that day was directed toward eliciting from the Prime Minister just when the Government would follow up on that insight of his by allocating concrete money toward the pursuit of the reduction of acid rain that was agreed upon by the federal Government and the provinces. As well, if not on that day, then on another day, I asked the Prime Minister when, and preferably before the visit of President Reagan on March 17, the Canadian Government would be announcing that it would bring auto emission standards down to the level of those of the United States. If we did that, we would not be in the position of having the President or Americans in general telling us that we have not met American standards as yet.

The Prime Minister has had a great deal to say about Canadian-American relationships and about wanting to improve them. He has been critical of the relationship that existed between the previous Liberal Government and the United States. A word that he has often used is "maturity". I believe that is a good word to use to describe the kind of relationship that we ought to have with the United States of America.

In that context, given that we know the President will be here soon and that there will be an opportunity for direct discussions between the President and the Prime Minister, I would like to say that maturity is a two-way street. I am sure we could debate the ways in which Canada might be able to improve the maturity of its relationship with the United States. In my view, it would mean being more independent of American foreign policy and more willing to have a peer relationship with the United States. Whatever it might mean, maturity is a two-way street, and if maturity is the goal, then the Prime Minister ought to have something to say to the President about a few things that have happened recently. For instance, he ought to be concerned about the attitude Americans have taken toward New Zealand and its attempt to respond to the democratically expressed wishes of its people with respect to nuclear powered and nuclear-armed ships docking in its ports. Is that an example of the maturity of the response of Americans when countries choose to be mature and independent from the wishes of the United States.

Another such action recently took place in Manitoba. Efforts were made by the Manitoba Government, by many Manitoba citizens and, indeed, by the federal Government, to have removed the part of the Garrison River Diversion Project which would have endangered Manitoba waters. In response, the North Dakota legislature has passed a Bill which would have the effect of making impossible the transmission of electricity from Manitoba to Nebraska.

This is particularly ironic in the sense that this is a case in which we were very concerned about the environmental consequences of something, and we were successful in preventing what we thought would be damaging, and the Americans, through the North Dakota legislature have said that they would refuse to import Canadian electricity. Then, the other day, with respect to acid rain, there was a Bill introduced by Democratic Senator William Proxmire which indicated that if Canada did not clean up its act on acid rain, the Americans might refuse to allow the importation of Canadian electricity. On the one hand we are getting it because we are environmentally sensitive, so the Americans are going to ban our imports. On the other hand we are getting it because we are not adequately environmentally sensitive. I must ask if this is a rational and mature response to Canadians—and in this case Manitobans—who want to prevent their water, fish and marine life from being downgraded by the introduction of American waters. Those are the things which the Prime Minister should speak to President Reagan about when they meet on March 17.

A number of things must be said. One, that we will bring our auto emission standards into line with those of the U.S.; two, that Canada will put money behind the agreement that the Minister signed with the provinces, and three, that a mature relationship requires that maturity exist on both sides and that Americans—when it comes to things like the Garrison Diversion Project—ought to respect the fact that Manitoba had no choice and would have been irresponsible if it had not done everything in its power to prevent that project from going ahead as it was originally intended. That is the kind of maturity I would like to see on the south side of the border. Perhaps at another time we could debate what would constitute a mature Canadian stance with respect to American-Canadian relationships.

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of the Environment): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should tell my colleague that I appreciate his very positive remarks concerning my presence in the House. However, I hasten to add that I do not share his pessimism about our relations with the United States. On the contrary, I am quite confident that we will be able to solve common problems in harmony.

As the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said during his election campaign, the acid rain issue is our priority and, as early as last month, we did convene a federal-provincial conference to seek ways to reach agreement on lowering sulfur dioxide emissions. The conference was held last February 5 and made it possible to follow up on the work already begun by the former Government. We ended up with a clear-cut objective to reduce acid emissions: by 1994, acid emissions in Canada's eastern provinces will be limited to 2,300,000 tonnes.

Such provincial limits reflect the efforts made by each participant and show to what extent it is imperative that the provinces and the federal Government be at one on such an issue. Some of my provincial colleagues used the word historical when referring to the agreement we managed to negotiate among ourselves.

It stands to reason that the federal Government and the provinces must share the costs with industry in a field of activity which is always under economic constraints. I believe that this co-operation will continue in coming months and that we will eventually be in a position to announce new measures likely to please all Canadians.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the present standstill in the Japanese Canadian redress issue is most regrettable and unacceptable. In an attempt to re-establish a dialogue, the Japanese Canadian Association has been seeking a meeting with the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Its search to date has been fruitless, and its deep frustration and disappointment were clearly demonstrated in a February 2 letter addressed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

The refusal of the Prime Minister to meet with the Association is difficult to comprehend. This is the same individual who gave this issue great importance during his days as Opposition Leader, and who demonstrated his commitment to redress repeatedly during the recent federal election campaign. Consequently, the Japanese Canadian community rightfully expected a process that would be completely open, genuine, and thorough. Instead it has received government imposed deadlines, unilateral government proposals, and a reversal on the Government's negotiations commitment. Now that process is at a deadlock. An uncomfortable and confusing silence prevails.

The Prime Minister promised emphatically that his office would be open and accessible. I urge him to prove that this promise is fact rather than fiction, by opening his doors to the Japanese Canadian Association. Only in this spirit will the redress issue have any chance of resolving itself.

The Association has met with our Party and with the NDP—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

PETRO-CANADA

UNJUSTIFIED INCREASES TO SMALL RETAILERS—IMPACT ON QUEBEC

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I am rising in the House today to speak out, once again, against the unacceptable practices of Petro-Canada management who now expects Quebec station service operators to renew next year's leases at rates of 15 to 20 per cent higher than current leases.

I intend to draw the attention of my colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and of the whole House to those unwarranted increases being forced upon small retailers by Petro-Canada. The situation is particularly serious in Quebec where gasoline prices are already higher than anywhere else. Since the 1984 inflation rate was only 4.4 per cent, I see no justification for Petro-Canada—it is ours, they keep telling us—to seek rent increases of about 15 per cent.

Time has come to ask for explanations from the management of this Crown corporation, and that is our responsibility. I am confident that we can indeed help small service station operators by putting a stop to the unquenchable thirst of Petro-Canada which is destroying those essential business enterprises by forgetting to behave as a good corporate citizen mindful of the will of its true owners, the consumers in Quebec and elsewhere.

MULTICULTURALISM

MEMBERSHIP OF COUNCIL

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the new Canadian Multiculturalism Council announced last week by the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Murta) is not the representative body it should be. Eighteen of the sixty members live in the Province of Ontario. Fifteen of those eighteen persons, a full quarter of the Canadian Multiculturalism Council, are residents of the Metro Toronto region.

Although Torontonians often regard themselves as the movers and shakers of our nation, their numbers represent a little more than one-tenth of the Canadian population. These demographic realities should not have been forgotten by a Minister from the Canadian west.

The fact that three persons are expected to represent all the Ontario ethnocultural realities outside Metro Toronto is particularly objectionable to my constituents and other residents in northwestern Ontario. They thought that the multiculturalism directorate was preoccupied with metropolitan concerns in the past. These appointments will confirm them in their sense of neglect by successive Ministers of State for Multiculturalism.

A concern that partisan politics will continue to dominate federal multicultural policies is encouraged by the fact that Sault Ste. Marie provides the sole northern Ontario member of the Council. Excellent candidates from the larger communities of Sudbury and Thunder Bay—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE SENATE

NON ACCOUNTABILITY

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, accountability is one of the basics of democratic government. The Government of Canada is accountable to the House of Commons. This House is accountable to the electorate, but the other place is not accountable to anyone.

The Leader of the Opposition in the other place has said that he is not accountable to the Leader of his own Party for what happens there. Each member of his caucus is accountable only to his own conscience for what he does there, but nonetheless the other place asserts a legislative authority which affects not only the work of the Government but the well-being of Canada, and at a high cost.

The other place is not accountable to the people, but in the next fiscal year it will cost $26 million to operate, or about a quarter of a million dollars for each member of that place. If one member appointed last summer lives to retirement age, he will have cost taxpayers about $5 million for salaries, expenses, and the cost of his office. When they assert the authority they claim and cost the expense they incur, surely they ought to be accountable to someone.

TOURISM

CONTRADICTORY ACTIONS AND DECISIONS BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, since November this Government has been proposing one contradictory policy after another. As far as the tourist industry is concerned, the contradictions are particularly obvious. Allow me to explain. On December 12, 1984, the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan) said, and I quote:

To provide a sound basis for Canada's tourist industry, we must establish an action plan aimed at making the entire industry more competitive, instead of having short term initiatives that are totally uncoordinated.

Since the Minister took up his duties, I have seen no such plan. In fact, it is his Government and his department that are proposing short term and uncoordinated initiatives.

I will give an example that involves the entire Canadian tourist industry and especially the Minister's own province, Prince Edward Island. A reporter of the "Journal Pioneer" made the following point, and I quote:

[English]

But while welcoming the increased injection of federal dollars into the tourism marketing process, it can't help but be noted that the Government is oddly inconsistent in its policies. On the one hand it spends money to attract tourists, while at the same time it continues to boost the price of gasoline, thereby putting in place a serious impediment—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

DOMTAR—POSITION OF EASTERN TOWNSHIPS

Mr. Jean J. Charest (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, it is with the utmost reluctance that I rise in the House today to speak under the provisions of Standing Order 21. When this House bestowed on me the privilege of serving as Acting Speaker, I agreed not to take part in debate out of deference to the House, to the Speaker's function and the Speaker himself, for whom I have the greatest respect.

Today, exceptionally, I wish to address the House on the Domtar case. My constituents find it very difficult to accept the Government's decision in this matter.

Like all Canadians, we realize that the Government's financial position is a precarious one, but we also know that in the Eastern Townships, high unemployment, vulnerable traditional industries and low average wages have been the rule for far too long.

We know the Domtar project to be an excellent one and particularly suited to a region which, in the course of a recent socio-economic summit, expressed its commitment to settling for nothing less than excellence. Today I want to say that we are determined to see the Domtar project carried out, for the well-being of the entire country.

The people of the Eastern Townships will feel encouraged today by the statement made by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who promised to see whether other forms of assistance would be feasible, and they are prepared to work together through various task forces in order to ensure the Domtar project is carried out.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CALL FOR OVER-ALL POLICY REVIEW

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, it is probably too early to question the new Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) on the complex problems of his portfolio. We will leave that for tomorrow. However, the time is right to set out some of the issues he will have to deal with as soon as he gets his bearings. Here is a shopping list of changes and challenges we would like to see the Minister tackle.

First, the Minister will have to start an over-all policy review right away. We are committing ourselves to major purchases and untried strategies, without any sense of direction. Let us take a hard look at some of those expenditures. The Minister is certainly qualified to do that. We are rushing to get our sailors into new uniforms while their ships are stranded, either in drydock or on the drawing boards of engineers. Let's get our priorities straight.

At the same time we have to ask ourselves whether we are being sucked into dangerous new strategies. The new Minister should make it clear to everyone that Canada will have no part of nuclear weapons or of a defensive arms race in space. Loyalty demands that we speak out when our friends are making mistakes that could cost us all dearly. Unquestioning servitude does no one a service. Finally, the Minister should let everyone know that Canada threatens no one. We only seek to protect the democracy we hold so dearly.

If the Minister would undertake these challenges, he would certainly have our support and encouragement. Let us not let this opportunity slip by.

BALTIC EVENING

COMMEMORATION OF BALTIC STATES' INDEPENDENCE

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, tonight we celebrate the Thirteenth Annual Baltic evening on Parliament Hill when Canadians of Baltic heritage from across Canada join with parliamentarians in commemoration of the Independence Days of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia.

The desire for liberty and independence of the people of the Baltic nations remains alive and strong, and constitutes one of the best hopes for a just and lasting peace. Canadians are known internationally to possess an understanding and sympathy for the national and human rights aspirations of people throughout the world.

I believe it is fitting that we in this House clearly manifest to the people of the Baltic nations that the people of Canada share with them their aspirations for the recovery of their freedom, national independence, and human rights.

I am sure that all Canadians would want us to welcome the honorary consuls from the three Baltic states, Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia, and the representatives of the Baltic communities in Canada who are here with us in Ottawa today.

EMPLOYMENT

"CHALLENGE '85"—NECESSITY TO AGREE TO INCREASED AID TO STUDENTS

M. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, in her speech on February 6 of this year, the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced her new summer employment program for students, which is called Challenge '85.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should consider what the name of this program implies. The challenge is one that the present Government is offering to the private sector and its individual members. It is a new approach that is aimed at giving the initiative back to the private sector. In accordance with our desire for collaboration, consultation and co-operation with our various economic partners, we are truly delighted with the project announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald).

Today, Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer the same challenge to all Members of this House. I shall, if I may, explain how I set up my own campaign.

With the co-operation of business organizations in my constituency, such as the Chamber of Commerce, I sent a personal letter to all heads of businesses, both large and small, urging them to take up this challenge and support economic renewal by helping our students.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

FINANCING OF PUBLIC EXPENDITURES

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are astounded, amazed, and perhaps even outraged—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: They are certainly discouraged. I have come to the conclusion that the Government has absolutely no shame when preaching restraint. Notwithstanding the political arithmetic of the President of the Treasury Board, we have seen an effective increase of twice the rate of inflation in the Estimates when properly compared with last year. The Prime Minister and his office are virtually wallowing in the public trough. At the same time, some of the poorest provinces, most notably Manitoba, have been savaged.

My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Does the Minister plan on financing this massive $105 billion increase in public expenditure with a tax increase that will be borne by ordinary Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member thoroughly understands the situation, which is that these Estimates are spending estimates. Based on what I said in the House the other day, we are looking at an improved economic situation and we will probably have a better economic and fiscal picture as we move into next year. I believe the Estimates that were provided to the House yesterday by my colleague demonstrate a clear understanding of the fiscal situation, and of the restraint that is necessary to get the deficit under control.

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, that is one of the most fatuous statements I have ever heard from this Minister. Surely to goodness when there is this increase and the provinces are being savaged, he cannot rise and not tell us how he is going to finance that expenditure of $105 billion.

I was an observer at the honeymoon in Regina two weeks ago. The Premiers sat around the table having a wonderful honeymoon among themselves. Why did the Minister of Finance, who was present, not seize that opportunity to discuss these cuts? Why did he not discuss the $73 million reduction in the case of Manitoba and the $263 million reduction in the case of Quebec? Was he afraid of spoiling the honeymoon?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would want us to obey the law as we set down our Estimates. Those Estimates for the equalization payments are based on the law as it stands today. He understands—

An Hon. Member: It was set by them.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is right. He understands the law as it was established by the previous Government in 1982.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have had ongoing discussions with the provinces to which he referred, and I would hope that we would be able to reach some resolution of the situation in the very near future.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, surely we have not reached the point at which we will plead dura lex set lex when it comes to the treatment of the provinces and of individual Canadian citizens with respect to the transfer of payments.

My last supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Perhaps I may borrow that splendid word "refurbish". Why has the Prime Minister elected at this time to refurbish his own office with a 54 per cent increase in the budget, what he describes as being a tiny amount of $2 million, and 30 new positions? How can the Prime Minister preach austerity to his colleagues and the country, yet justify that kind of expenditure?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend referred to the word "tiny". To place it in perspective, the PMO expenditures represent six one-hundredths of 1 per cent—

Ms. Copps: 54 per cent.

Mr. Allmand: That's a bad example.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend says that is a bad example. When I cut my own salary by 15 per cent, the Leader of the Opposition said no.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The rate of increase is the lowest in some 15 or 16 years, and I think that is a tribute to what we have been trying to do. My hon. friend asked for real increase. I think that I can give him the real increase. For example, during the transition from Mr. Pearson to Mr. Trudeau, the increase was 700 per cent in terms of personnel. That is clearly the kind of abuse against which my hon. friend spoke so frequently when he was seeking to lead the Liberal Party. That is the difference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

FUNDING OF JOB CREATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. During the election campaign the Conservative Party said that unemployment was its highest priority and that it would create thousands of jobs. How can the Minister honestly state that unemployment is the highest priority when, in the Estimates which were tabled yesterday, the Government committed less real resources to job creation and training than in the present year, and while increasing the budget for the Prime Minister's Office, $290 million was cut from job creation and $120 million was cut from training programs, when it had previously cut $386 million on November 4? What kind of priority and commitment is that? How can she reconcile her rhetoric during the election campaign with her actions yesterday?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member was not around long enough to understand how the Estimates are prepared.

Mr. Allmand: Seven years.

Miss MacDonald: He said he was there for seven years. He still does not understand.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: As the Hon. Member very well knows, those Estimates were in print before the $205 million was announced for Challenge '85. That is not included in the Estimates, nor is the $695 million that the Prime Minister announced in Regina. The Hon. Member will find, when the total amount is added in, that those figures will compare most favourably to anything which was done in the previous year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SIZE OF FUNDING

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I prepared Estimates for seven years, and I doubt that she will last that long.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: The Minister referred to the statement which was made in Regina on February 14. That was another example of media politics. In this little green book, she said that, over and above the $1.2 billion which is now available for training and employment, there would be another $695 million. Today she said that the $695 million was not in the Estimates which were tabled yesterday. Is she going to give us another shell game? As I have pointed out, the Minister has already cut $796 million from employment programs. By calling them different titles, is she going to put back $695 million to fool the Canadian people?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what I intend to do, and what the Government intends to do, is to provide jobs for Canadians. We are not going to get into a numbers game with the Hon. Member. That is not what Canadians are looking for. Canadians are looking for the kind of measures which were taken in Regina. Those measures were endorsed by every provincial Premier in the country, as well as labour groups, business groups and youth groups from one coast to the other. I wish that he would catch up with the rest of the people in the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

INTEREST PAYMENTS ON PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Canadians are also looking for relief from the high interest rates we are experiencing right now.

My question relates to whether we are getting the straight goods about government spending in the Estimates which were tabled yesterday. The most striking feature of those Estimates is the $5 billion increase in interest payments on the public debt, as the Minister knows. We were told by the Minister's officials that the average rate of interest on that debt is going to 10.6 per cent. In view of the fact that there is not a single maturity of government bonds which could be floated for less than 12 per cent on the market today, how much is the increase in interest rates we will experience this spring going to cost Canadians in 1985-1986?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his support in our effort to reduce that deficit, which obviously is causing us great difficulties. In terms of the Estimates, it is the 10.6 per cent interest rate which we have used to calculate the charges which would be paid for servicing the public debt. It represents our best estimate of the average rate which we will be paying throughout the coming fiscal year on the outstanding debt of the country, and we stand by that estimate for the moment.

UNITED STATES' INTEREST RATES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says: "We stand by the estimate for the moment". That means he is leaving the door open to a change of view later on in the year. It sounds to me just like the Liberals when they were in power.

In view of the warnings which came today—

[Translation]

In view of the warning note sounded today by the President of the Federal Reserve Bank of the United States, Mr. Volcker, who mentioned the possibility of an increase in interest rates in the United States, can the Minister give the House the assurance that Canadians will not have to pay once again for any eventual increase in the cost of servicing the public debt, and if not, can the Minister give the House the assurance that no additional cuts will be made to pay for the increased cost of servicing the debt?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, when we set interest rates on the basis of what it costs to service the public debt, we do so not only on the basis of our own forecasts but also on the basis of forecasts made by a number of independent agencies. I am told that the Conference Board, for instance, is expecting interest rates to drop this year, a development that will undoubtedly be most welcome, to my hon. colleague as well. I may add that our forecast of 10.6 would seem to be quite objective and quite logical for the purposes of the document I tabled yesterday.

[English]

FEDERAL TAX EXPENDITURES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance who will know that the estimates tabled yesterday only tell half the story about government spending. Will the Minister undertake to provide Parliament with a full accounting of $30 billion to $5 billion in federal tax expenditures and tax concessions, well in advance of the Budget so that Canadians get the whole picture of government spending before the Budget comes down?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated my concern for the size of the tax expenditure figure, as has the Hon. Member and some of his colleagues. I am looking at that right now. I would hope that I would be able to provide additional information on that, if not before the Budget, certainly within the Budget.

DOMTAR—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He has probably had a chance to read the letter my Leader sent him yesterday, asking him to become personally involved in the Domtar case. He is undoubtedly aware of the negative reaction of all parties involved, including the Government of Quebec and the unions, who feel that the reasons given by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion were not satisfactory. Does the Prime Minsiter intend to act personally to reverse his Minister's decision in the Domtar case?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was referring to a letter from his Liberal leader. I have not received it yet, but I may add that I am still waiting for an answer to a letter I sent him two weeks ago, about the extraordinary and unacceptable behaviour of Liberal senators who were obstructing legislation. I have yet to receive a reply from the Leader of the Opposition.

About the request concerning Domtar, a company—

Mr. Chrétien: Yes or no?

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice says yes or no. We are going to do better than the Liberal Party which said no to Pétromont and then practically killed the petrochemical industry in Quebec. That is what the Liberal Party did! You tried to kill the petrochemical industry in Quebec.

I have received a request. I intend . . . Ah! . . . the clowns from Quebec! There are not as many, but they are still here.

I can inform my hon. friend that I intend . . . Ah! . . . the Quebec lieutenant from Newfoundland!

There will probably be some talks on the Domtar case in March.

• (1430)

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister's cheap shots are in very bad taste, when thousands of jobs in Quebec are at stake.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister who is telling the truth in this Government. While he is carrying out an exercise in public relations, his Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion issues a press release saying that the decision will not be reviewed. Who is telling the truth? Does the Prime Minister intend to rap the knuckles of his Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion?

Mr. Mulroney: Speaking of cheap shots, Mr. Speaker, we have the Hon. Member for Westmount—

Mr. Johnston: Saint-Henri-Westmount!

Mr. Mulroney: Saint-Henri-Westmount, I beg your pardon! Do you live in Saint-Henri or Westmount?

On one side, we have the Hon. Member for Westmount who is asking us to cut Government spending and to deal with the deficit we inherited, and on the other side we have the Hon. Member who is demanding that we give a direct subsidy of $100 million to a company whose major shareholder is the Government of Quebec. That being said—

Mr. Lapierre: Yes, I am a Quebecer.

Mr. Mulroney: He says yes, but I am a Quebecer too, and all Quebecers want public funds to be managed prudently, and that is what we are going to do, in collaboration with the Government of Quebec.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

SIZE OF EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and relates to funding for Quebec, Manitoba, and two other provinces which, as a result of the Estimates tabled yesterday, believe they will be receiving less funding through equalization payments than they received last year. I recognize that the Minister was right in answering a previous questioner, when he said the fault for that lay with the previous Government. The thing is, he now represents the Government. Therefore, will those provinces be receiving more money in equalization payments?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer I gave to the previous questioner stands. These Estimates were prepared on the basis of the existing law, and that law stands until it is changed. It will not be changed until we complete discussions with the affected provinces. Those discussions are going on today. But I would caution the Hon. Member to look at this in the broader context. The transfer payments for post-secondary education and health care are increasing by 7.4 per cent next year.

REQUEST FOR CHANGES IN FORMULA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister's Party was in opposition its members said that the equalization plan was not sufficient and they would change it to help the poor provinces. Are they going to do that? If so, are they going to do it soon so those provinces can make plans for their expenditures?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have set in train a series of meetings which will be starting around mid-year for officials, and will continue on through the fall for all Ministers involved in the equalization issue. There may or may not be some changes in the equalization formula arising from those discussions. I cannot prejudge the discussions at this point, but we are going into it with an open mind.

DOMTAR—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister, for it also has to do with the Domtar subsidy which has yet to be approved. I bring this matter up again because, in my opinion, it has been dealt with rather lightly in the House today. I wish to stress and draw to the attention of the Prime Minister a Canadian Press report concerning a statement allegedly made by the Minister of Industry. Here it is:

[English]

The Government took into consideration the U.S. Government's sensitivity towards any subsidy of production at this time to the American market for forest products.

[Translation]

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is going to stand still while his Minister of Industry—or any other of his Cabinet colleagues—is listening to the representations of the Americans rather than meeting the needs of the people of Quebec who are desperately looking for work and not getting anything from this Government.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The nerve of the Hon. Member! Barely a few months ago, the Liberal Government turned thumbs down on an essential subsidy to Petromont in order to save Quebec's petrochemical industry. Only $15 million and you turned it down. Having left the public treasury saddled with a $35 billion deficit, the Liberal Party is now urging us to give blank cheques to a company whose majority shareholder is a provincial Government.

This I can tell my colleague: we consider that Domtar is a sound company, well administered and with challenging projects. The Premier of Quebec and I will see if we can provide any kind of assistance but, ever mindful of the financial predicament which we inherited, I cannot give or ask anyone to give blank cheques to any company—private or public.

STATUS OF JOB SECURITY OF DOMTAR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the Prime Minister is telling us there is no money left, or that the purse strings are so tight that the Domtar people cannot be helped. I might therefore ask him to explain why the decision has already been made to spend over $50 million to outfit the military with new uniforms, or why millions will be spent to raise by more than 50 per cent the budget of the Prime Minister's Office staff, while the Domtar people will just have to wait. That is what I want to know. What must they wait for?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): This important matter was long neglected by the Liberal Government when it was in office. The Liberal Party and the Liberal Government have neglected the Eastern Townships for years and years. The only thing they remember in the Eastern Townships is that the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice made a commitment in five different election campaigns—he was going to transfer a Government department from Ottawa to Sherbrooke, five times he promised that, so much so that the people of Quebec and the Eastern Townships residents finally said that they had heard enough from the Liberal Party, they wanted worthwhile projects, a responsible Government that would work hand in hand with the Quebec Government to strengthen regional economic structures.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PREMIER'S TRIAL—REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General are both hiding out in Barbados because it is too hot for them here—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: —I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Nunziata's pupil.

Mr. Kaplan: One day is fine, but one week is too much.

Mr. McDermid: Sour grapes.

Mr. Kaplan: When the Prime Minister spoke in the House in answer to questions about the Hatfield meeting with the Solicitor General, I took his answer, and the country took his answer, to suggest that he was questioning the judgment of his Solicitor General. Mounting editorial opinion is demanding the resignation of the Solicitor General over that meeting.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: Last week in Edmonton—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question, please?

Mr. Kaplan: Is the Prime Minister aware that his own Cabinet colleague, the Minister of Justice, has also said that he would demand the resignation of the Solicitor General? In view of the untenable position that the Minister is now in, will he not do the proper thing in the interests of the administration of justice of this country and demand the resignation of the Solicitor General?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I see that a week's holiday has done nothing for the Member's grace or sense of humour. Bad puns will always be alive and well as long as the Member is asking questions. The Minister of Justice—you know full well—made no such statement. The manner in which you distort the statement would have the Minister saying that. In point of fact, both the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General have responded fully, as best human beings can. Their answers are on the record and should satisfy the Hon. Member.

● (1440)

Mr. Speaker: Short supplementary.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the Prime Minister answer fully. Although he has been asked, he has not so far told the House when he first learned that marijuana had been found in the luggage of Premier Hatfield. He has said when he heard about charges; he has said when he heard that charges were laid.

Mr. Speaker: I have yet to hear a question. The Hon. Member for Skeena.

FORESTRY

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Forestry. It is clear now that the struggle in Cabinet is over and that the forest sector has been given the axe at the federal level. Would the Minister explain to Parliament why Canada's largest industry, which contributed $25.9 billion to our economy and employed one worker in 10 Canada, is facing a 15 per cent cut from last year's level of expenditures, at a time when his own officials have said that between Newfoundland and British Columbia a failure to give more money to the forest sector at the federal level will mean the loss of tens of thousands of jobs?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is obviously off cue here. When we finish the agreements and discussions with the provinces we will have signed for more money in forest renewal and forest lands with the provinces than the previous Government did in 10 years.

SIZE OF FUNDING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. I am sure that he is aware that less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of the proposed expenditures which were released yesterday will go to the forest sector at the federal level. During the election campaign all of the government Members from British Columbia went around B.C. promising $200 million a year. Why has he only put forward $175 million a year for the whole of forestry at the federal level in Canada, knowing that it will mean the loss of tens of thousands of jobs in Canada's largest industry?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He won't answer that.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that we negotiate, under the ERDA, sub-agreements for forestry. He knows full well that we have already signed with several provinces, and more are pending. When we finish we will have more than the Hon. Member mentions in terms of forestry agreements and activity on the land to help the forest industry in Canada.

AGRICULTURE

BEEF IMPORTS FROM EEC COUNTRIES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It is with regard to the quotas which the Minister announced last December on EEC beef coming into Canada. This beef from Ireland was heavily subsidized by up to 48 cents a pound.

Can the Minister confirm the report that the Government is planning to cave in on those quotas and, due to pressure from the EEC, is going to allow the beef quotas to be lifted and allow the beef to come into Canada without the quotas?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): The simple answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, is no. It would be very improper and foolish for us to give any indication of what our bargaining position is, particularly when those sessions are currently in progress.

NEGOTIATIONS INQUIRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is then confirming that in fact negotiations are going on to raise the quotas. Why is the Minister selling out the farmers of the country? If the Minister is going to maintain the quotas as announced at 5.9 million pounds in December, why is he negotiating? Why is he sending his officials to negotiate with the EEC countries unless he is going to be caving in on us?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is very obvious from the comments of the Hon. Member that he does not fully understand the international trade agreement. I would like to assure the Hon. Member and the House through you, Mr. Speaker, that because of the inaction of the Government last year, which resulted in a disaster in the Canadian beef industry in 1984, we gave a commitment that that same disaster would not repeat itself in 1985. I stand by that commitment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MAIN ESTIMATES

PRESENTATION BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, who promised a major change in direction when he was elected on September 4. The Estimates have given us our first opportunity to see the Government's plans. The Prime Minister promised help to many sectors that are not reflected in the Estimates. The Bay Street friends of the Minister of Finance called for massive government reductions in spending and size, which are not reflected in the Estimates.

Would the Prime Minister not agree that this set of Estimates could have been submitted by the Hon. Member for Windsor West when he was President of the Treasury Board? How is the Government differing from what we became used to, with Liberal Government after Liberal Government? How does this differ at all?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Probably in a number of important ways. First of all, the document contains many important decisions announced on November 8 which caused the Government of Canada to be able to contain the rate of growth to the lowest figure in many years. I think that is important. My hon. friend should take some hope from that. Having inherited a situation midway through the fiscal year, the Government is trying to arrest the growth of public expenditures so as to cause the negative impact on that deficit and the driving up of interest rates by crowding out the private sector on the borrowing side.

The statement of November 8 was important and contained very important items. I think that my hon. friend will be pleased as well to see that the next statement made by the Minister of Finance, being the Budget, will contain further and important provisions designed to get Canadians back to work and to increase wealth in Canada.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He knows how important is the leadership that he gives the country during this very difficult time. Could he explain once again, at a time when the Government is trying to curtail growth and expenditures, what kind of symbolism it gave the people of Canada when he expanded his office from 90 to 120, and increased expenditures more than 50 per cent? What kind of signal is that giving to the people of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Probably not a good one. As I indicated to the press this morning, I hope it is a temporary measure. It was brought about by a number of considerations, one of which was the decision made by the former Prime Minister to eliminate two co-ordinating Ministries in Social Affairs and Economic Development. As a result of this, when we came into power with the first majority Progressive Conservative Government in 25 years, in the absence of the two co-ordinating Ministries the PMO was called upon to take a greater role in the co-ordination and development of government policy across the board. Because by hon. friend is known for his fairness he will recognize, as I do, that while the total expenditure represents, as I have said, six one-hundredths of 1 per cent of total expenditures, I acknowledge to my hon. friend quite readily—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect.

Mr. Mulroney: I could go on, but they don't want to hear me any more.

FINANCE

COST OF DELAY IN ADOPTION OF BILL C-11—BORROWING AUTHORITY

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is the same one as yesterday and I hope to get a reply today.

Could the Minister of Finance inform the House what the delay in passing Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, will cost Canadians?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the latest calculation that I have done on the cost of the inordinate delay of some three weeks in the Senate of Bill C-11 is about $10 million.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There could well be additional costs if there is a greater compression of government borrowing, if there is further delay. I hope there will not be further delay because taxpayers are getting very, very impatient with the Senate.

STATUS OF WOMEN

APPOINTMENT OF ADVISORY COUNCIL CHAIRPERSON—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

On January 31 of this year, I asked the Minister responsible for the Status of Women about the appointment of a president of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. The Minister answered that it was a matter of weeks. There has been no appointment since that time, and the vice-president who was in an acting capacity left Ottawa yesterday.

Could the Prime Minister inform the House when he intends to appoint a president of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR DECISION CONCERNING APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRPERSON

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, in that case I wish to thank the Prime Minister for this appointment.

Could the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that the future president will be bilingual and have the requisite energy and knowledge of women's issues to properly advise on the present status of women in Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the future incumbent will above all be competent. Next, bilingual, without a doubt, and lastly, full of enthusiasm for these issues.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

SIZE OF BUDGET

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Government, to its credit, broke with a long tradition of Liberal secrecy and for the first time in the history of our country announced the operating budget for the new Canadian civilian Security Service, the incredible amount of $116 million. In view of the fact that the RCMP estimates have been reduced by only $45 million as a result of the transfer to a civilian service, could the Prime Minister explain to this House, and to the people of Canada, what major new threats to the security of Canada justify this massive increase in the expenditures on the new civilian Security Service?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General, who, I am sure, will be able to address these matters very adequately in a committee context, I will take the Hon. Member's question as notice and make sure that an answer is given to him as soon as the Solicitor General returns to Canada.

SERVICE'S ACCOUNTABILITY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister might answer an important question. In view of the fact that while he led his Party in Opposition, that Party joined with the NDP and thousands of Canadians in condemning the dangerous powers, the vague mandate, and the lack of parliamentary accountability of the Security Service, what steps is the Prime Minister going to take, now that he forms the Government, to amend this legislation to ensure, in particular, that there is full parliamentary oversight of the operations of the new Security Service?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we have done, and perhaps we should do more, was to appoint an overview committee composed of five distinguished Canadians, including a very distinguished member of the NDP, the Hon. Sol Cherniak, whom I had the pleasure of inviting to join the Privy Council for that end.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

FEDERAL-NEWFOUNDLAND AGREEMENT

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister, who appears to have lots of energy today.

My question concerns the recent agreement which the Prime Minister signed with the Province of Newfoundland. In that agreement all oil from the off-shore of Newfoundland must first go to meet the industrial capacity and the needs of eastern Canada before any new industries will be allowed to be built in the Province of Newfoundland. Will the Prime Minister undertake to re-examine this clause, to remove the discrimination in Clause 54 against Newfoundland, before the legislation is introduced into this Parliament?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, most documents that I am aware of by and large have some imperfections and I would be happy to look at anything that might be raised if it were helpful to Newfoundland and Labrador. I think my hon. friend would agree, however, that notwithstanding the point he raises, and we can look at it objectively that after 13 years of obstruction by the former Government—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Don't be dirty now.

Mr. Mulroney: —we were able to conclude an agreement with the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador for the benefit of Newfoundlanders, and I think that is good for Canada as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I am not concerned about the desires of the Newfoundland Government; I am concerned about the desires of the Newfoundland people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Are the Prime Minister and the Government advocating that they would suggest the same deal to the Province of Alberta and force Alberta oil to be sold to industrial capacity outside the Province of Alberta before allowing Alberta to build a new petrochemical industry? Is that what the Government would suggest to the Province of Alberta?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have said many times that what we are trying to do, and for which we make no apology at all, is to show that we, unlike the previous Government, are not afraid to inflict prosperity on Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We think that is fair and that is good for Canada.

There is nothing in the signed agreement that would give rise to that difficult situation envisaged by my friend. If it were the case, and it is not, why would all the Liberals in the provincial House be joining the Conservatives in Newfoundland? They are doing it because they know that that deal was good for Newfoundland and Labrador, and good for the people of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE SENATE

ABOLITION RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister, who apparently said this morning that something would have to be done about the Senate. Would the Prime Minister indicate to us whether he is prepared now to consider the long-standing NDP recommendation that the Senate be abolished? If he is not prepared to go that far, will the Prime Minister at least declare a moratorium on the appointment of Senators until such time as the Government can come forward with proposals for Senate reform?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I have not gotten around to that, Mr. Speaker, except to assure my hon. friend that there will be action taken, given the historic obstruction of the Liberal Senators preventing the unanimous will of the House of Commons being followed through. I did consider something cataclysmic—the appointment of the Hon. Member for Birds Hill to the Senate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: But I do not know whether the Senate would survive it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: The very thought of going to the Senate disturbs me greatly, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: I feel that I am far too young, and I am not used up yet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is not the way it seems to us.

Mr. Speaker: The time for comments is used up. Perhaps a question?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister give us some indication of what kind of time line he has in mind, that is, when we might see some proposals from the Government? In view of the fact that some action is planned, will the Prime Minister give us the assurance that no more people will be appointed to the Senate so that, when that day comes, as it must now come, for reform of the Senate, we will not have to pay for the retirement of more Conservatives as well as of all the Liberals?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can give my hon. friend the assurance that there will be action taken soon. I know that all Canadians feel a great deal of dismay at the fact that the Liberal members of the Senate, who are members of the Liberal caucus, have repudiated their own Leader and have refused to follow what the Leader of the Opposition has stated. That, of course, is unacceptable. We want to encourage the Leader of the Opposition as much as we can.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR RELATIONS

ABOLITION OF POSITIONS IN CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): I can see, Mr. Speaker, that it is a clear case of reform for doing nothing, and abolition for doing something.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: My question is for the Minister of Labour, or rather should I say the minister of management?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Ms. Copps: My question is for the minister of management.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. Copps: The Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. The Government, through the Minister of Labour, has joined with the management of the CBC in axing 1,200 positions—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Take a deep breath.

Ms. Copps: —without even the decency of the labour management committee required by his own Ministry of Labour code. How can the Minister move expeditiously to facilitate the firing of 1,200 workers when he should, in fact, be acting with sensitivity in working with the union and seeking some other way of saving the jobs of workers?

● (1500)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that the dismissal was a CBC management decision. This Minister's responsibility is to interpret the Canada Labour Code. This remains a responsibility of this Minister, when a collective agreement signed by two parties is the same, or has the same effect as pertinent legislation. I am sure the Hon. Member would agree that whenever possible a document signed by two parties should be honoured over and above legislation.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister quite clearly knows that he is violating his own Canada Labour Code. Is this the standard which he is setting? Is this an example which his Government is setting for private businesses across the country which fall under the Canada Labour Code—a violation of his own Canada Labour Code according to the arbitrators on the issue?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned about the Hon. Member's understanding of the Canada Labour Code. I thought it would be more perfect than it is. The fact is that the arbitrator, who made a decision prior to the decision to grant the waiver, confirmed that the collective agreement signed by management and the unions involved had the same effect or similar impact as the Canada Labour Code. I would, therefore—now and in future—favour a collective agreement, signed by two parties, over legislation.

GAS AND HEATING OIL PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition signed by 15,742 residents of the metropolitan area. The signatures were obtained through the good offices of a program called "Bonjour Montréal", broadcast by CJMS. The petitioners object to the excessive and unconscionable increases in the price of gas and heating oil, a situation that is putting a considerable burden on all consumers in Quebec. The petitioners humbly pray that Parliament ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) to intervene in this case so that the situation can be normalized as soon as possible.

I herewith present this petition and recommend that the Government act upon it as soon as possible.

REINSTATEMENT OF DEATH PENALTY

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and honour to present to the House a petition signed by 21,400 Canadians calling for a national referendum permitting all citizens the right to express their wishes regarding the reinstatement of the death penalty for capital murder.

This petition is sponsored by the Vancouver Division of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Veterans' Association and was conducted over the last year.

LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from concerned citizens. Whereas the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of Canada will be meeting the President of the United States in Quebec City in March 1985, the petitioners request Parliament to call upon the Prime Minister to make it abundantly clear to the President of the United States that Canada flatly refuses to consider voluntary cut-backs in softwood lumber exports into the U.S. market and that any attempt to limit Canadian imports into that market or other forest products into the U.S. market would be viewed as a matter of grave concern to Canada and certainly would not be tolerated by the Canadian Government.

FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like at this time to move concurrence in the third report of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, which is Sessional Paper No. 331-8/5.

Mr. Speaker: It is the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the committee has considered a great deal of evidence regarding CN's twin-tracking project which, as I think most Hon. Members know, is a $16.5 billion project related to a great extent to the Crow rate legislation passed by the House during the last Parliament.

The Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry has unanimously concurred in and recommended to the House what we are considering today. It involves the following motion which was passed by the committee:

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry recommend to the House of Commons that there be a one year postponement of the CNR twin-tracking project while the social and environmental impact of the 36 Indian bands most directly impacted by this project are assessed; and

That the economic justification for the CNR twin-tracking be made available to the Alliance of Tribal Councils; and

That an objective evaluation of the many potential impacts on native people living on the Fraser river and depending on the salmon resource has been evaluated.

It continues:

That at the same time the alternative of single tracking be studied by way of the application of the latest railway transport technology available.

We have heard a great deal of evidence. I know there is a great deal of ongoing work on the government side on the part of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), and the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) regarding this matter.

● (1510)

I know that in the few minutes before three o'clock, there seemed to be a great deal of alarm on the government side about proceeding with concurrence in this motion. However, I think all Members of this House will understand the urgency of proceeding with this motion today when I put a few relevant facts on the record.

The first and most significant is that CN plans to proceed with the Ashcroft subdivision miles 59 to 69 on Friday of this week. I had hoped to obtain a commitment from the Government that it would not proceed with the Order in Council for allowing that CN action under the Navigable Waters Protection Act and other pieces of federal legislation, which I am led to believe will be signed tomorrow. In the moments immediately prior to three o'clock, I received a variety of messages from various Parliamentary Secretaries and others that something else might in fact be going on.

There is important evidence that we heard from the Alliance of Tribal Councils of British Columbia and important information we heard from fishermen, as an expression of the concern there is in British Columbia that the interests of native people have not been dealt with fairly, particularly by the previous Government.

I do not intend to say that this matter has suddenly arrived on our doorstep. This problem has been brewing in British Columbia for five years since the project began in 1981. No one has taken it seriously, neither the Department of Indian Affairs, nor the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, nor the Department of Transport, nor, in particular, CN. I have seen no evidence that CN has in any way fairly negotiated or dealt with the Indian people who are most directly affected, or those communities in terms of the wide variety of issues that I intend to raise in the next few minutes.

We heard these witnesses. It was following an excellent presentation by the Allied Tribal Councils of British Columbia, who represent Indian people in about 50 per cent of British Columbia, that there was a unanimous recommendation. All members of the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party who were represented on that committee, one of the largest standing committees of this House, voted unanimously.

There are a couple of other important points that are salient to the debate today. First, is or is not the Government going to come forward with the Order in Council in the next 24 or 48 hours to allow this project to proceed? It would place ballast and tunnelling muck into the Thompson River, a river system combined with the Fraser system that provides somewhere between 40 and 50 per cent of the salmon stock in British Columbia.

The second point is the EARP process. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, will not be provided until the next month with the Environmental Assessment Review Panels' recommendations in their preliminary report. Those same Ministers will not be provided with the final recommendations of FEARO or EARP until the summer.

Here we have a process where native people have been refused involvement. At this point I would like the House to realize what kind of an attitude CN is taking toward Indian people in British Columbia. I wish to quote from a July 26, 1984, letter to Mr. Connelly, the Chairman of the panel on CN twin-tracking. That letter is from Mr. Hostland, the professional engineer responsible for the plant expansion program. Here is what he had to say about the involvement of Indian people in British Columbia in the process. I quote from page 2:

However, at the same session, the Panel heard requests for access to the design process from native groups and other interested groups. These groups want to infiltrate the process, each for their own reasons. CN Rail feels that any such distractions—

He calls them distractions, the involvement of Indian people in having rail lines ram through their reserves, through their historical burial grounds. CN left bones from previous grave sites lying on the rail tracks the last time it came through. The letter continues:

CN Rail feels that any such distractions would interfere with the present smoothly working system and may ultimately destroy its operation. CN Rail cannot support this interference and does not feel there is a legislated obligation to do so.

CN may think that under the Railway Act passed at the turn of the century it can run through Indian reserves, dump ballasts in the Thompson and do whatever it wants to the Fraser system. However, the people in British Columbia are not going to sit idly by and see a project that has not been properly evaluated jammed down the throats of British Columbians.

I am not standing in this House on behalf of my Party to say that we are opposed to getting increased rail capacity. In British Columbia we realize, whether we are talking about the Port of Prince Rupert or the Port of Vancouver, that there is a legitimate need for increased rail capacity. We had witnesses before our committee who revealed to us that, through the joint utilization of CN and CP trackage, we can increase rail capacity by 300 per cent. We had Mr. Walker, the Vice-President of CN, before our committee two weeks ago. To add insult to injury, we learned from him under cross-examination that the total amount of time and money that CN put into evaluating the joint utilization of track was, one person for six months to evaluate alternatives to a $16.5 billion project. I say that is not good enough.

Transport Canada has not looked into the options for this kind of twin-tracking since 1977. It is important in terms of today's debate that the government side, albeit there will be some short-term embarrassment and a great deal of work required by a variety of Departments, will pull this matter back together and deal with the fisheries issue. There has been no full system hydrology done on the Thompson or on the Fraser. Fisheries and Oceans is responsible for ensuring that that kind of comprehensive and cumulative hydrology is done. I see the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans in here. Let me point out from the Government's own Environmental Assessment Review Panel—

Mr. Fraser: I am not only here, I am listening.

Mr. Fulton: The Minister is listening as well. Let me point out a few of the impacts that the Environmental Assessment Review Panel found. They are concerned about the blockage and delay of migration of fish, the reduction of cross-section area and consequent increase in river velocity and change in flow behaviour, and the loss of rearing or holding habitat. On that point I would like to remind Hon. Members that CN has long been promising no net loss, in fact net gain of habitat when it constructs. Well, CN twin-tracking is not just in the Fraser Valley. CN twin tracking goes from Redpass to Prince Rupert and between Terrace and Prince Rupert, and it is estimated that we have lost 13 per cent of the fish habitat on the north bank of the Skeena River. That is between the Department of Highways and CN, but not a square inch of that habitat has been replaced. That project has been under way for five years.

The report goes on to say that they are concerned about the loss of spawning or rearing habitat, the alteration of river velocity and flow behaviour, resulting in downstream scour or deposition, the loss of feeding areas, infilling of shallows, downstream scour, loss of rearing and holding habitat, the placement of rip-rap and increased bank roughness, the lowering of water quality and spawning conditions, the loss of fish-holding pools, the loss of or hindered access to fishing sites, the loss of landing sites for river recreation, and the loss of aesthetic quality.

It goes on to other impacts, including the loss and delay in migration, the loss of spawning and rearing habitat, the possibility of flooding, erosion, ice damage, and in terms of wildlife and collisions with wildlife, the policy in dealing with that. What is CN's practice for the control of deep slopes on the rail line? What are the present practices with regard to rock and other ballast? What is the composition and toxicity of the flange lubricant? There are all kinds of questions that have been raised, legitimate questions to which CN has not responded. Government departments that are responsible have not dealt with them effectively.

Let me deal with Orders in Council, which really brings this to focus today. The Minister of Transport within hours will be seized of his obligation to CN—and CN considers him obliged to it—to provide the Order in Council. Let us look at the Orders in Council in relation to the CN twin-tracking in British Columbia. Between mile 123.23 and mile 128.23, the Albreda subdivision, four miles of Order in Council along riverbanks; miles 3.82 to 4.04, 6.69 to 6.72, the Clearwater subdivision, .3 miles of river lost; bridge at mile 8.3, Ashcroft subdivision, mile 109.56 to 109.73, Yale subdivision, another one-fifth of a mile of river lost; and mile 112.47 to mile 112.61, Yale subdivision, another fifth of a mile lost. Those are Orders in Council passed after this House in its wisdom had put legislation forward. I remind the Minister of Transport, even though he is not here, that he is tending now to use Orders in Council where he should not. He is providing to the M/V Arctic an Order in Council allowing that tanker to go up into the Canadian Arctic in Zone I ice, knowing full well that that tanker is not allowed to go into that area under the Arctic Water Pollution Prevention Act.

● (1520)

An Hon. Member: Jimmie, you're off the issue.

Mr. Fulton: I know I am. I just wanted to throw that in to remind the Minister of Transport that I am following his affairs.

I have here a letter from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development dated January 11, 1985, to Mr. John Sam, a witness who appeared before our committee. The letter in part reads as follows:

CN Rail is apparently unwilling to provide us with the Minutes for the meeting. I was not provided with any documents, such as Environmental Design Reports, Minutes of past meetings, or attendant studies, and this has made it very difficult for me to present the notes in a really organized fashion.

The letter that was sent to John Sam came from the public and intergovernmental relations section of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and I assume that a copy of that letter has been provided to the Minister. CN is not providing the necessary documents, studies and relevant information to those people who are directly impacted.

Let us take a look at some of the other issues that have been raised by the Environmental Assessment Review Panel. Again, the Ministers responsible for this project, particularly the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and, to a great extent as well, the Minister of Transport will not receive the final report of FEARO, our own government agency, the Environmental Assessment Review Panel, until the middle of the summer. This project is supposed to begin this Friday. I understand that the equipment required to dump ballast into the Thompson River is at site. The Thompson River is one of the most important salmon rivers in the world, not only North America.

What are some of the long-term issues that have been raised by our own officials who have heard witnesses? They have asked if there is a capacity problem. Transport Canada has not looked at this matter for 10 years. We have heard from witnesses that by making use of the CN and CP track and by making better utilization of the Port of Prince Rupert, we could have a 300 per cent increase in capacity. Is there a capacity problem? That has not been resolved.

What about the communities? What about Kamloops and Ashcroft? What about the Oregon Jack Band, members of which appeared as witnesses and are deeply concerned about what has happened in the past? Their grave sites have been dug up; the bones thrown all over the place. Their orchards have been taken over. They are being driven off their land.

Mr. Riis: Thirty-six tribes.

Mr. Fulton: That is right. Thirty-six bands are affected along with the sports fishermen and others who make use of the river.

Let us not forget, Mr. Speaker, that neither you nor I could throw one shovelful of dirt into the Thompson River without being charged under Section 33(4) of the Fisheries Act. We are not allowed to put materials into flowing water or the ocean that are deleterious to fish. However, CN has all kinds of special rights.

What about land use and resource issues? What about Indian lands? We have not even dealt with the constitutional issue of aboriginal rights in this debate, nor do I think it is necessary to do so. However, in terms of those reserves that have been allocated, CN has already taken more land than it is allowed to under existing legislation. Now it is being told it has no rights and cannot get documents. Indian Affairs will not give it documents. Representatives of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development were not allowed to participate in the technical working group until we began our hearings on this matter, five years into the process.

The rights of Canadians have been abrogated and the House has a responsibility to put this project on hold and, either through an inquiry process or through the appointment of someone of very high calibre, to pull together the disparate issues here. There are questions of full river system hydrology, questions of bank stabilization, questions of use. Do we need the capacity to be developed in that way? Is it correct that CN, as it told the parliamentary committee, can proceed only in that way right now? This is a $24-million section. We are talking about 160 person-months of employment. We are only asking the Government to suspend 160 person-months of employment. That is what will be needed for the Ashcroft subdivision.

There are other issues to be discussed. What about heritage resources? These resources have not yet been completely evaluated. What is the real impact on fisheries? We have heard from trustworthy witnesses from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans that the impact is not that great. However, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans of all people should recall what McTaggart-Cowan said about the Arctic, that is that the destruction of many of our resources occurs by insignificant increments. Perhaps the loss of a few hundred yards of habitat between mile 59 and mile 69 is not that great a loss. However, I will turn to the specifics of that subdivision in a moment.

CN has been allowed to proceed. We heard from the Vice President of CN that if we went for joint track usage between CN and CP, then a second track would be required by 1992. Everyone in the House must understand that the converse is true. The double-tracking issue is not the only issue before us. CP will come before the Minister of Transport indicating that it knows that CN's own evidence is that by 1992, we will have to look at the matter all over again.

We must look at the cumulative impact of rail lines, highways, hydro lines and oil pipelines. We must look at the impact of Weyerhaeuser dumping its residue at Kamloops. We must look at the entire system. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans knows the impact that there has already been on the Fraser River estuary from raw sewage and from bark from logs stored in the fresh water to keep the touritos out of them. There has been the dumping of debris from municipalities all the way up the Fraser Canyon.

Those are not the only issues before us. What about wildlife? What has CN done? Where the tracks go through our national parks, CN and CP are two of the largest harvesters of wildlife in Canada. They kill bighorn rams, grizzlies, elk, caribou, deer, foxes and moose. What is being done? They have not spent one plugged nickel trying to figure out ways of building exits from the tracks so that some of the larger ungulates can get off the tracks when the snow gets deep.

What about tourism and recreation? CN and the Department of Transport have not taken those into account. We must look at these kinds of things.

What about water? The Environmental Assessment Review Panel has determined that there will be additional scouring, increased velocity and the movement of huge amounts of sediment. What about cross-river-bank hydrology questions in which ballast is put on one side of the river turning the river over to the other side, scouring into the land on the other side and then moving sediments down? This changes water quality and destroys habitats. It has an effect on the entire economy of British Columbia.

There are other issues. What about the hazards of toxic fill? We are just getting regulations now for the marking of cars and the moving of toxic and hazardous materials through that area. Why is it that in almost all of the plans of CN, additional sidings are being built on the river side? Why are we not looking at some of the options that were raised by witnesses? What about trading land with the B.C. Department of Highways? Automobiles can move up and down steeper slopes. Railway cars require good, flat, low gradient in order to be competitive and operational. We have not looked into those kinds of things and the Government of Canada has a responsibility to do so. This is a good year in which to do that.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) are saying that we cannot move anything through Thunder Bay and that the number of cars moving to Prince Rupert and Vancouver is down. What better time than now to undertake this task? I would tell government Members that we must call the previous Government to task for this. It is the one that delivered to us this god-awful mess, and that is about as nice a way as I can describe it.

Let me deal with a few specifics relating to the Ashcroft subdivision. I think Members should know about the plight that exists there. If I have only a minute to go, I will have to let someone else put these issues on the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I have just indicated that the Hon. Member has one minute left. There is a 10-minute question and answer period following his remarks. I would appreciate it if he would wind up his debate.

Mr. Fulton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, Let me sum it up this way: we find ourselves in a very difficult position. I think the Fisheries and Forestry Committee has done a very honourable thing in unanimously endorsing the motion which I have moved today. I know it has put some of its members in a difficult position. I believe they are very honourable Members for having taken what I consider to be the right position on this issue.

The fact of the matter is that the equipment is there. CN plans to move imminently because it claims it will lose a two-year window if it does not proceed immediately. That is a lot of hokum, Mr. Speaker. It is related to the Adams River run. Perhaps during the question period, if some Hon. Member would like to ask me about the Adams River run, I would be more than pleased to explain about it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

• (1530)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, after an excellent presentation on the problem that not only the fishery industry but native people as well will be facing as a result of the about-to-be-made decision of the Government, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he would elaborate on some of the concerns which the Alliance of Tribal Councils expressed before the committee, and perhaps make reference to the relationship of this particular project and its approval with the Adams River salmon run.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to deal with the Adams River run. That is really the crux of the CN argument. A letter from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans indicates the window within which this project should proceed. It reads:

> The last date that this department would allow construction on the Ashcroft subdivision, mile 59-69, is September 9, 1985. It must be noted however, that historic records indicate that water levels would become too high to allow construction on or about May 31, 1985.

This particular section of twin-tracking is ten miles long and it is called the Ashcroft subdivision. For the most part, it runs along the Thompson River. The reason it would require a two-year delay for that particular section is that this year high water is expected in May, and next year the Adams River run would be in the river, which would make construction impossible. That is the reason for the two-year window.

The reason there is great interest in terms of the twin-tracking on this particular section—and the twin-tracking runs from Valemount down to the Thornton Yards in Vancouver—is that it is the longest single section of single track which is left within the whole of the twin-tracking. There are no portals and there is no place for trains which CN moves—which are 6,000 feet in length—to move off the tracks to allow trains which are going in the other direction to pass. It is a real problem. We are caught between a rock and a hard place. There are other sites within that section of single track that CN could proceed with within the two-year period. We were told by many of the witnesses who came before the committee that it would not create a situation which would not allow trains to go to Vancouver if they were not allowed to proceed. They would not go that far. They said that they were saturated, but many rail lines in Canada are saturated.

The concern of the Nl'akapxm Nation, and the Alliance of Tribal Councils that they represent on behalf of the 11 tribes within their nation, is that a total of 52 reserves would be affected by this project. I could speak at length about the horrible things which have happened in the past, but I do not think we have to dig into that. I believe we must deal with the present. I believe that the tribal councils have a very legitimate reason for being concerned about how they have been excluded from the process by Transport Canada, CN, and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and that their rights either in appearance or in reality are not being dealt with. As Members of Parliament and as Parliament we have a responsibility to respond immediately to the concerns by delaying the signing of the Order in Council. I think the Minister of Transport, in good faith, will do that. The Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry will be travelling to hear witnesses on the subject at the end of next month. The Standing Committee on Transport will be going there in the middle of March. So I think Parliament is moving on a terrible problem which was delivered to us by the former Government.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments which were made by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and I would like to ask him a couple of questions.

Does he have an indication of the cost of changing the existing rail proposal? He made reference to seeking alternatives, and indeed those alternatives exist. Could the Hon. Member give the House an example of the costs of those alternatives?

I would also appreciate an indication from the Hon. Member a to the absence of involvement of the former Minister of the Environment and the former Minister of Transport. What could they have done to ameliorate or prevent what has suddenly now been thrust upon this House?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the actual Ashcroft subdivision and the actual evidence which was given by Mr. Walker, who is the Vice-President of CN, is that that particular site is the least expensive within the entire section. In the actual construction it would involve $24 million and 60 person-months. In total, it would involve 180 person-months. It is separated in that some of the work will be done by running trade gangs and some parts of the project will be contracted by the Government through the tendering process, with the lowest bidder doing the actual ballasting and other work.

In terms of the second question, I think that is the crux of the matter. The former minister of Transport, over a period of years, could easily have dealt with this matter by getting involved with the B.C. Department of Highways. In that particular section there are several options, because there are other areas where secondary lines could have been placed. The provincial Department of Highways has some of the best land, which is very flat. As the Hon. Member knows because he comes from the Kootenay area, in terms of rail line there has to be as low a grading as possible, particularly where heavy equipment is being moved. Otherwise, the impact on the equipment and rail line would be far too heavy.

The former Government, because of its general attitude toward western Canada, sloughed it off and let it go. It was not until the project was three years old that the EARP process actually started. That is the reason the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans cannot obtain the final report. The final report will not be received until this summer, therefore, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of the Environment cannot respond to the global problems of the whole project.

In terms of this particular situation, we are caught between a rock and a hard place. From listening to the evidence of CN and listening to the evidence of other witnesses, it it my view that this will not hinder the movement of Canadian products to port. The only thing the witnesses have indicated is that they are in a state of saturation. They would not say that, without proceeding with the Ashcroft subdivision, we would lose the movement of cargo. They also did not say that there were not other parts of the project within the Ashcroft-Kamloops area that could be proceeded with to provide the portals that they require. They do not have as many permits in place for other sections of the line, but I think that is something which the various Ministers who are involved could move on very quickly if one of the other sections was not proximate to a water system or to water-fowl habitat. I think we could move quite quickly, in concert with the Province of British Columbia, to obtain on an urgent basis the required permits and approvals for other sections which are farther away from the Thompson-Fraser system. What is really bringing this to a head is that we are talking about the impact on reserve land where negotiations have not taken place to resolve the problem. There have not been any other lands offered nor any kind of process. That must be dealt with.

I am very concerned about the fishery. Witnesses have told us, in terms of the individual project, that we are only losing some pink salmon habitat which is proximate to Chinook spawning areas. Of course, the Chinook are the mainstream spawners in the Thompson River and do not go out into the smaller creeks. I think those issues can be dealt with legitimately. I do not think we are in as tough a position as some Members of the House tried to lead me to believe earlier today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now terminated. I will recognize the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) on debate.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put this whole debate into perspective. The first thing which is important for the House to remember is that the Party which I represent—when in opposition and during the election campaign last summer—insisted that it was going to attempt to make Private Members more relevant. That means the committees of the House, which are comprised of Private Members, would deal with an innumerable number of problems which concern the well-being of our country.

• (1540)

I have to say to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), who is a personal friend and a diligent Hon. Member of this House, that he had every right to put the motion he did to the standing committee, after hearing evidence from the Canadians who came before it to advise it on the issues which are at stake. As a matter of fact, the Hon. Member should be commended for his motion. However, it is also important that this House and the country understand that the committee, which naturally was made up of an overwhelming majority of Conservative Members, supported that motion. I think it is important to say that before I even begin to respond to my hon. friend, and I do not use the word "friend" in the polite sense but in the sincere sense, as he well knows. It is very important to realize that this was a unanimous recommendation of a committee of this House. I am deeply conscious of the fact that I have on many occasions advocated greater independence of committees.

I am now responding as a Minister of this Government to a motion which the committee has put forward, and while I give full credit to the Hon. Member who made the motion, I am quick to point out again that the committee itself, with its majority of Conservatives, endorsed that motion. So I take the motion very seriously, not only because a majority of Conservatives endorsed it, but because it comes from a committee of this House. I have been here almost long enough to ask Hon. Members to understand when I say that I feel now I have become a part of this place and that I have great respect for the committee which heard the evidence and agreed to this motion.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Skeena, said that we were between a rock and a hard place. He is articulate. I don't know if he is a poet but he does have a flair for words and occasionally he delights this House, sometimes terrifies it, and when he is not at his best, infuriates it. My friend has put the position of this House of Commons of Canada very aptly as "between a rock and a hard place", and it has nothing to do with the fact that we are clearing rock in that narrow confine known as the Thompson Valley. The Hon. Member's motion is understandable and legitimate. The effect of it is not that there would be a one-year deferral but that there would be two years of no construction whatsoever in this particular part of the Thompson River. That does create some problems. My hon. friend knows full well that in British Columbia we have 15 per cent unemployment. That is the official figure. In fact, it is greater than that. He and I have fought long and hard, side by side, on British Columbian issues, and I acknowledge that fact with a certain degree of pride. I believe that we will continue to do so in the future. The Hon. Member knows as well as I do that we have some very serious economic difficulties in our province and he also knows that every commercial enterprise which was ever invented will say that it should go ahead with what it has planned because of the financial and economic implications. I see the Hon. Member nodding his head with a kind of bemusement. I agree full well with the Hon. Member that we are between a rock and a hard place and because we both understand that, I think that we can have some kind of communion today is this chamber.

I am not particularly proud of the record of Canadian National in this case. I probably do not now it as well as I would like to in terms of detail, but yesterday I received a telex from our follow native Canadians who pointed out the number of times that they had asked Canadian National for information and had not received it.

I will say to the Hon. Member for Skeena that I was impressed with his speech and that I am not impressed with the management of Canadian National on this issue over the last couple of years. But saying that does not get us away from the situation which my hon. friend described as "between a rock and a hard place". I know that Canadian National can tell a committee that it sent out a lot of communications. It has a written record, which, in the most narrow technical sense, can demonstrate that it asked the natives what they wanted to do. And if all one looked at was the record, written as it is, one could say that the natives had their chance to be consulted and they did not take it. But I can understand the difficulties of Canadian National. It is not, after all, an enemy of the country.

The difficulty I am in is that I have to say to Canadian National that just putting it on the record is not enough, not when we are dealing with our native people. For that matter, it is not enough when we are dealing with anyone. This Government is committed to consultation, to trying to get along with people and trying to enter into an era of reconciliation in this country. It goes far beyond just making sure memos are sent to people. So I say to my friend, as to one who is another British Columbian like myself who cares about that province just as much as I do, that I am not here to hold any particular brief for the way CN, or anyone else, handled this problem. Neither am I here to defend—to use the Anglican confessional—"the sins of omission or commission" of the past of several Departments. I am not here to fight the last election, but it is astounding to me to find that a new Government is faced with this kind of situation with our native people.

I was in my hon. friend's riding a week ago because, as I have said, one cannot be a Minister of Fisheries and Oceans unless one goes where the fish and the fishermen are. The Hon. Member will understand that. But I was in Prince Rupert a week ago and I met with representatives of the native people on this very issue, as the Member well knows. It is astounding to me that a new Government is now faced with this wretched situation. We are almost in a position that no matter what we do, we are going to be assailed by somebody. My friend knows exactly what I am talking about. The one-year moratorium is not a one-year moratorium; it is a two-year moratorium because of the Adams River run. I see my hon. friend nodding.

Given the fact that a lot of mistakes have been made, and a lot of basically decent Canadians have kind of badly managed this thing, we are faced with the question of what do we do now. With the tremendous respect I must have for the committee, and given the fact that I have on many occasions stated with no equivocation whatsoever my determination to do what I can in public life to advance the legitimate claims of our fellow Canadians who are Indian or native, I am in a difficult position today. I do not deny it and I do not run away from it.

I had the advantage of an extensive briefing yesterday from the various departments on this issue, Mr. Speaker. I did not use those evocative words that the Hon. Member for Skeena did of being between a rock and a hard place, but I said that there are two choices. We can decide to do nothing for two years, with all of the economic implications that may well involve, or we can go ahead and be immediately hit by an application for an injuction in the courts. There is already an action under way, which will undoubtedly go to the Supreme Court of Canada because it affects the whole basis of native claims. Anyone in this country who thinks that this issue is going to go away is absolutely dreaming. I give this House full notice that it is not going to go away. Provincial Governments are not going to be able to kick it under the rug. Corporations are not going to be able to ignore it. No one is, because it is with us. It is probably one of the great issues we are going to have to face in the next decade, just as keeping the country together was the issue we have had to face for the last 15 years. With the Almighty willing and a little bit of goodwill, we got through that one.

I am acutely aware that every native Canadian with any sense of what is going on in the country, and most of them have that sense, is going to be listening very carefully to how I respond to my hon. friend. The best response I can give because it is the only one, is this. Given the respect I have for the committee and the Member who has just spoken, as well as the deep respect I have for the cause of our native people, perhaps there is the possibility of a compromise. Maybe there is some way in which, with a bit of help from the Government, from my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), as well as myself and the Department of Transport, we could establish a joint management group or committee or something in which we, admittedly belatedly, brought some of our distinguished fellow British Columbians from the native community into a day-by-day management committee which could oversee what work was acceptable this summer and what work was not.

As my friend has so accurately and eloquently pointed out, the basic complaint is that it is not just a case of our native people feeling they were not consulted. In truth they were not consulted. Oh, people went through the motions to get it on the record, but I am a lawyer and I understand all about getting things on the record. I do not think they were consulted in an appropriate way. My plea to my hon. friend, not from a position of having to touch the cap or bend the knee, not at all, is that we try to find our way out of this spot between the rock and the hard place.

It does not diminish Government or Ministers to say that we are in a dilemma. That is something this country has not heard for many years. I have no apologies for saying to the Canadian public, as I am saying now because this is broadcast everywhere, that we are in a dilemma. We do not have some magic answers. There is nothing wrong with saying that sometimes governments are not omniscient, that this is a very difficult problem and it will not be solved by myself or my colleagues making arbitrary decisions. It has to be solved with some goodwill, some wisdom and some practical application of common sense; just as I think the committee members applied those elements to the motion as they started to listen to some of the evidence.

I know my time is nearly up, Mr. Speaker, but I want to put this to the House. I am very pleased that my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, is here, and I am frankly pleased that there are so many Members in the House because this is an important matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Minister's time has expired. The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) on a question.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the remarks of the Minister. I want to make a comment to which I hope he will respond. I moved this motion in committee, and one of the things which broke the camel's back was the role of the department of Fisheries. It did not act in this matter as a guardian of the resource; it was almost an advocate of CNs project. There was no increase in resources to investigate, supervise or monitor this project, none whatsoever. This is not a single incident and the Department refused to examine it. It was looking at the CN and CP double-tracking, and we are looking at the world's largest salmon river and the incredible value it has to western Canada and to the country as a whole.

There is in-filling and pollution on the river. The Department only examined this as a single event. It depended on company and other resources to investigate and monitor. It used dated studies. On the whole, Mr. Speaker, the committee lacked confidence in the Minister's officials when they appeared before the committee. There was failure to provide resources and, I think, confusion about what their role was. Given the closeness of the change in government, I do not think this was the fault of this or the previous Government. I would like to hear whether the Minister intends to develop a more responsive role in his own Department to deal with this project and others.

● (1600)

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I think I made an error earlier. I referred to the Hon. Member for Skeena as the Private Member who moved the motion in committee. I seem to have been in error, and I regret that. I think that the civility of the House demands that we give credit where credit is due. That was an error on my part, and I am sorry. That does not take anything away from the nice things I said about the Hon. Member for Skeena.

Mr. Skelly: How about the seconder of the motion? Does he get a little credit too?

Mr. Fraser: I will give credit to the seconder. I am sure that in the time available someone will draw the attention of the House to that.

I will address the question posed by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly). He asks what my attitude is toward the relations between my Department and our native Canadians. I think the attitude is commendable. There are grievances which I believe are founded in sound legal arguments. I think they must be solved. I do not accept the position of those who say that even to discuss this is ludicrous and is reaching back into the centuries. I know there are those who take that position.

The solution to the problems is very difficult indeed. Under the law I am mandated to support this resource on our West Coast and in the interior of our province. I have told our fellow native Canadians that my first responsibility is to get the resource back, and then we can talk about sharing it. I am in complete and utter accord with the principle that these claims must be settled somehow. I have no patience whatsoever with those who indicate that this is a superficial or whimsical issue. I believe it is very important. I think it goes right to the question of the kind of morality we have in this country with regard to how we deal with each other.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) completely ignored the role of the Department of Fisheries in what almost appeared to be a failure to protect the resource. We appreciate the incredible importance of that land claim issue. However, I would point out to the Minister that he has obviously forgotten to mention that all British Columbians and people of Canada depend on the protection and longevity of that river and the resource in it. He did not once mention what he would be doing with his Department to improve its role in this matter.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I must apologize to the House and to the Member because I did not mean to avoid that issue. I am determined to pursue a policy of net gain of habitat in British Columbia. The Member and his colleagues never heard that before from a federal Fisheries Minister. I am intensely concerned about that aspect of the issue. My Department does not see the worth of endangering the total supply of salmon, steel-head and trout in the river. That is not the only issue for the natives. The issue for them is not just whether this will diminish stock. It is a very personal question of where they can fish. These people have fished in these places for hundreds and hundreds, if not thousands, of years.

I am sorry that I did not touch on that issue adequately before. I want my hon. friend to know where I am coming from. I want him to know that I expect him and his colleagues to push me to ensure that as long as I am asked by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of the country to occupy this position I will not be allowed to forget that my objective is the net gain of habitat.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I will keep my question very short. I am very glad to see Chief Edna Louis here this afternoon listening to this debate. She was one of the witnesses before our committee. I do not want to speak on her behalf although I would like her to be part of the debate.

I want to put something very precise before the Minister. If one looks carefully at the motion which was drafted and passed unanimously by the committee, it will be seen that we have asked that the twin-tracking project be suspended for a year. It was clear on the basis of the evidence given to us by some of the witnesses that some parts of what CN is proposing can never proceed. They are inappropriate sites, not for geographic reasons but because of the proximity of historic native lands in British Columbia. I take full cognizance of what the Minister has said.

The reason we are asking for a year, and the reason I am interested in having the Minister expand upon his remarks, is that I do not think it is good enough to have an interdepartmental working committee with members of the Allied Tribal Councils participating. It must be an independent process. They must be given the legal tools required to resolve this matter. They must be allowed to choose alternate sites on the basis of good engineering information. The federal and provincial Governments must co-operate to provide them with appropriate lands. I am not talking about aboriginal title. I am talking about lands impacted by this CN project. At least for the moment, aboriginal title is a separate issue in my mind. I think it should be kept separate in the mind of Parliament, although they may flow together in the coming months and years.

Would the Minister support an independent process with the majority mandate given to the Allied Tribal Councils? Does the Minister support the concurrence motion which is before the House today? It is crucial that Members of the House and the native people affected know whether a Minister of the Crown supports the concurrence of this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order please. Questions and comments are now terminated. I would like to recognize the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) for debate.

Mr. Blaikie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fraser: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the House would consent to permitting me to respond very briefly to the question that my hon. friend has asked.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the House agree?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the point my hon. friend makes is completely valid. The proposition that I put forward for discussion does depend on the independence of the committee that would oversee the work. I would support every effort that should be made and every caution that should be taken to ensure that it is in fact independent. I think that is the question my friend asks. He may have seen me trying to get the attention of my friend, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie). I am almost certain that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development would agree with me in that regard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

● (1610)

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, first I ought to explain that it was not my intention to be debating a concurrence motion today in the committee report. I was on the way out when I heard the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) dealing with the matter. I think everything I have to say, at least in part, has either been said at the committee by the Minister, or by some Hon. Members who have spoken previously. I think it might be worthwhile, however, if I made a short intervention to indicate my own participation in this matter.

I do so, first, because I think the motion, as the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) has already indicated, is a serious motion before the committee. It is a motion of an entirely different dimension from the matter of the role of the committee in relation to matters having to do with the independence and power of committees. In other forums we have talked about the importance of that in relation to reform of this House. I think it is a serious matter and when a committee has dealt so strongly with respect to a particular matter, ought not to be dealt with lightly. Clearly this is a serious motion.

More important, this is a serious matter for Indian people. As Members of this House know, Mr. Speaker, I have been involved in this job for only a brief period of time, that is, five months. I would say that, as an example, Indian concerns and the effects of the development of Indian communities are not being dealt with adequately. That is certainly not news either for this House or in the history of this country.

The history of Canada is littered with evidence of lack of consultation and incredible ignorance of the needs and the rights of Indian communities. I might say in this connection, as I look at the history of my own Department, under the old Government it was excluded from the interdepartmental committee.

I got involved with the matter directly early in December when I received some communication from the Indian communities affected. They asked me to take into consideration some of the effects of twin-tracking. I tried to find out whether my department had been involved in these matters before. It had not in any significant way, unfortunately. I then indicated to the people in my Department that it was necessary to strike up a committee as fast as possible to see if we could deal with the issues that were raised in the communication. I also met with some of the people from the Indian communities involved.

There was consultation, Mr. Speaker. There were two meetings in January and one on February 15 dealing with some 15 specific sites in the one ten-mile stretch. Mention of those things is an indication that, like the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Hon. Member for Skeena also indicated I think, there has been very very little done. Here we are at the end of a process instigated by someone who wants to twin-track. We are involved in a process that should have been begun two years ago, or earlier. It is not acceptable as a process. It is unacceptable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: I think the Members from British Columbia who spoke are much closer to the matter in terms of their experience than I am and they have stated the situation as well as it can be stated. If I could put it more generally, I think it is long past the time when this House will tolerate any more development, governmental or private sector activities that continue to ignore the rights and the needs of the Indian people in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: I do not think that I speak for a small number of people in the non-Indian community. Many appreciate the problem. I want to assure the House, whatever may be the deliberations of the House with respect to this committee report and its importance, that the Ministry which I now head will make sure to the best of its ability that the needs of the people who are affected by this proposal will be dealt with in an appropriate way through consultation and, I might say, mediation.

I think a number of Hon. Members have already indicated that perhaps the consultation which has been by and large internal—at least at a late date it was an attempt to grab at something perhaps useful to the event—showed that we ought to move to a phase whereby we have some independence and mediation.

I can say without doubt that if we proceed in the way in which people perceive we are now proceeding, without the appropriate consultation and mediation, then we will rue the day because the communities affected will not tolerate, as we should no longer do, that their needs and rights be ignored.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it has been very useful and helpful to hear the two perspectives of the Ministers involved.

Would the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) be more specific about what can be done by the Government, of which he is a Minister, in the very near future to prevent CN from going ahead, and tell us what the Government intends to do? We have been talking about the long term, about consultation and whatnot. But I am sure that what everyone here is concerned about in the immediate sense is what is going to be done in the next little while to prevent CN from pre-empting the unanimous concern first of the committee, and now I take it, the House of Commons, that this action not proceed until the concerns we have recognized today are addressed.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, my remarks were intended to deal with the point which the Hon. Member raises. It is not my total purview to divine a course of action. I have attempted to do something in two areas, first, with respect to Indian people in the communities affected, to see whether I could work out a consultation process with my own Department, something that did not exist heretofore. That is proceeding and will continue. People are speaking with my legislative assistant, who is a British Columbian, if not now as we speak then certainly they have done so prior to this moment. Second, I should like to bring some order to the Government's perception on the matter because the lack of participation, lack of organization, and the lack of any positive steps by the previous Government left things in such a situation that the Government's perspective did not have the coherence it ought to have had when the matter began. The second level is to try to make sure that we have a government perspective that reflects the interests that I mentioned earlier.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the amount of goodwill and whatnot has been exceptional in the House today. As well, we saw the recognition of the problems by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) and, I would expect, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski).

I have a question for the Minister. Something has to be done in a concrete form very quickly. Does the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have on his agenda in the next seven days a meeting with his colleagues, the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) to work out solutions to these problems? Will that take place? If the Minister does meet with his colleagues, will the information coming from that be made public quickly?

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I met with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) the other day, and on two previous occasions I met with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser). It is my understanding that the Minister of Transport will be meeting with Indian communities on Friday in British Columbia. That will be part of the Government's attempt to make sure that it is dealing with the matter in a way in which it should have been dealt with two years ago.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, what I understand is that the Minister said no, that he and the other three Ministers will not be meeting collectively to work out some kind of joint response.

• (1620)

Mr. Crombie: Perhaps we should speak in some other language because what I was saying was that I had already spoken—this is a process; it is not a one-shot effort—with the Minister of Transport the other day. On two previous occasions I spoke with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister of Transport will be in British Columbia to speak with Indian communities on the matter, and then we will have another discussion.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Minister is seized of the urgency of this matter. Within the next 24 to 28 hours the Minister of Transport will come under extreme pressure from CN to sign the Order in Council to proceed with the Ashcroft subdivision. The reason, as outlined to us by CN witnesses, in particular the Vice-President of CN, was that they have legal obligations under the Crow legislation, the Western Grain Transportation Act.

We need to get down to the nitty-gritties here. The interventions and the speeches by both Ministers have been excellent. They have made some of the best comments I have heard in relation to aboriginal matters for many years in the House. As a Minister of the Crown, is he telling us that he will now go to CN and say what the committee recommended, that they cannot go ahead with the Ashcroft subdivision because they may have to redesign globally what is left of the twin-tracking? They may have to put some track where the B.C. highway is. They may have to go on to CP lines in some areas. They may have to triple-track in some areas. They may have to do other things. This project is a mess.

We have to tell CN that it has been bulldozing through a project which is crushing native rights and which is having a dramatic impact upon environment, wildlife, heritage sites and the hydrology of the river systems and so on. We have to grasp the moment. One of the Ministers has to go to CN and say, "The gig's up, boys; you are not getting the Order in Council". If this matter has to be fought in the Supreme Court of Canada between the Crown of Canada and the Crown corporation of CN, it will have to be done. The project has to be changed. They cannot ram through those native communities. I think that is what Chief Lewis is here to hear and what Canadians from coast to coast are waiting to hear. We could go on for days gobbledegooking in here, but we do not seem to get to the nub of the issue.

The Minister of Transport is seized with a legal obligation. Within the last 24 hours he would not tell me whether or not he would sign that Order in Council today or tomorrow. That is why I have risen today. I think the Minister will support a fair, independent process to resolve the geopraphical and land issues, as well as the fisheries issues and so on.

However, is the Minister telling the House now that he is arranging a meeting with CN and with his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, who I think will say the same thing to CN—"The gig is up, boys; you are not getting the Order in Council"? Is that what the Minister is telling us?

Mr. Crombie: I hoped that was clear. I indicated to the Hon. Member, as I am sure he is aware, that the authority for the Order in Council rests with the Minister of Transport. It does not rest with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans nor with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is a matter which he has to take into consideration, given all his obligations.

I have made representations. The Minister of Fisheries makes representations. The Minister of Transport will be meeting on Friday with the affected communities. I think it would be improper and not very productive for me to speculate on what we ought to do following those meetings. I think it is appropriate that we wait until after the Minister of Transport has had those meetings. I will be meeting with the Minister of Transport after that.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the interventions so far have been of such a nature that it will be easy for the House to reconstruct the atmosphere and the nature of the meetings in committee. A considerable sentiment of unanimity emerged from all parties. It is reflected here this afternoon on a broader scale, including the two excellent interventions of the Ministers who spoke in the House. It is this kind of convergence of views which leads me to believe that we have a unique issue here which should be addressed in a unique manner. In a way it could be a turning point in bringing together aboriginal considerations, environmental considerations and transport considerations by way of a consensus that does not often happen in this Chamber.

I was very impressed by the high quality of the reasons given by witnesses who appeared before us in committee. I should like to refer to the first meeting and the submission of the Alliance of Tribal Councils at page 4. I should like to put it on record because it is central and quintessential to what we are debating here. It reads:

> The time to study the river is before the work is done, not after. A one year period is needed to analyse the changes in the river and to monitor the movements of the fish over a season. The various locations used by Indian fishermen in response to these changes can also be documented. At the same time, the construction plans of the CNR can be analysed in relation to this information and changes agreed to by the railway and the bands to prevent unnecessary damage.

I submit that this is the absolute quintessence of reasonability. It continues in the next paragraph:

> Over 50 per cent of all B.C. salmon stocks originate in the Fraser and Thompson River systems. These stocks have declined drastically over the years as development has occurred along the river valleys. We must know what the additional effects of double tracking will be before the project continues any further. The salmon are an important food source and cultural factor to the Indian people. We also have legal fishing rights along the rivers that were established when the reserves were defined by the Royal Commission in the 1880s. We must have the time to ensure this renewable resource and our rights to it are not lost.

I should also like to put forward the statement of concern expressed by the Alliance of Tribal Councils on page 2 of its document. Again it is a very well reasoned piece. It outlines the reasons for supporting the idea of a moratorium on twin tracking as follows:

> 1. Past grievances associated with the first track must be settled to the satisfaction of all Bands before the second track proceeds.
> 2. The twin tracking project will destroy fish habitat . . . and will result in a net decrease in the potential productivity of the Fraser and Thompson river fish runs.
>
> 3. Economic necessity for the second track must be justified.
> 4. Alternatives such as joint track usage must be considered before twin tracking proceeds.

This is a very important point, the joint CN-CP tracking alternative, which was not exhaustively studied and explained in the committee hearings. It continues:

> 5. All environmental studies must be made available to the Alliance well before construction so as to provide opportunity for review followed by submission of our recommendations to be incorporated into the final design.

Its sixth reason deals with the construction scheduled to begin this year. It indicates that it will result in:

> (a) interference with the Indian property right interest in the salmon fishery due to:
> (i) destruction of spawning grounds and rearing habitat
>
> (ii) destruction of traditional Indian fishing sites.
> (b) destruction of significant heritage sites including burial grounds.

According to the Alliance of Tribal Councils, the environmental assessment review process was not satisfactory. The first reason indicated to us in committee was that the terms of reference were narrow. Second, the amount of time allotted for a proper assessment was too short. The Alliance was not able to complete, we were told, its questioning of CN and the Department of Fisheries because enough time was not allotted. Its third reason was the unavailability of project design documents. Also we were told that the panel was to ensure the provision of existing and any additional information to interested parties to allow their participation in the review. However in reality, its submission indicated, that critical information was withheld from the panel and the public by CN Rail. The documentation, which I will be glad to table, states that CN has considerable information on miles 59 to 68, Ashcroft subdivision, which it intends to twin-track starting in 1985, and deliberately withheld this information from the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner).

● (1630)

We all know that these are very complex processes and that they have a momentum of their own. They are extremely difficult to modify or improve unless a deliberate effort is made. We came to the decision of putting forward this motion for concurrence after exhaustive discussions in which members of each Party went through an excruciating analysis of the pros and cons. We arrived at the decision under the most excellent chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway), the chairman of that committee. We did arrive at a unanimous decision. Why did we do that? As the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) just said, I suppose we feel that this is not the way to proceed if we are really serious about our relationship with the native people and our respect for their tradition and economy.

Somehow there has to be a turning point. This is the opportunity for providing this turning point and to demonstrate with facts what we say with words. Personally, I was not convinced by the submission made by CN that they had exhaustively studied all alternatives and that they would not be able to find a solution by way of joint track usage, namely by making better use with improved technology of the CP tracks on one side and CN tracks on the other side of the river. This joint track usage, rather than undertaking a twin-tracking program, is a very important potential alternative. It is not a time for pie in the sky civility.

There is also the whole question of the scheduling of trains which needs to be examined in order to determine whether the potential of better scheduling and timing would provide the desired results. I am basing this consideration on a speech made in Calgary on April 25 or 26. The speaker was Roger Phillips, President and Chief Executive Officer of the Ipsco steel plant in Regina. The statement he made really struck me. I quote from his speech:

> Railway building . . . is a mature technology and consequently a mature supply network has been put in place. In fact, the supply network is presently beset with over-capacity.

In committee, we were not convinced by the submission made by CN that this level of over-capacity had been reached. This was one of the basic reasons bringing us today to the House to make a very strong plea to the Government to provide the moratorium being requested so that an exhaustive analysis of all the elements can take place, possibly leading to a solution that will not affect the habitat of the native people, will not disturb their tradition and economy, and will translate into action the concepts and beliefs to which we adhere in so many speeches.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of comments and ask the Hon. Member a question. It is interesting and encouraging that we have what seems to be unanimous agreement on the necessity to take action. I cannot understand why we get this unanimous agreement to take action to stop the CN from proceeding quickly at the eleventh house, when a great deal has already been done which cannot be undone.

What concerns me is that when the plans were being made for the double-tracking, Hon. Members on this side were being told every day that we were doing a disservice to the country by holding up the Bill to get rid of the Crow rate. Today we are hearing concerns from the native people about the disastrous effects this project will have on the fish in the rivers and the serious effect it will have on the lives of the native people.

A Member who just spoke was the Minister of the Environment for some time. I would ask him where the Ministers were when the project was being considered. Where were the senior officials in the Department of Fisheries, the Department of the Environment and the Department of Transport? Why were they not raising these questions? Why were Members of Parliament and the Government not being told about the concerns? Why were they not asked to think about these problems and to assess the consequences of what they were doing? Why were they not protecting the people affected by the department which they ran?

It seems that they were working hand in glove with the railways to get this project going and not worrying about the very serious and adverse consequences on the native people, fishermen and others in British Columbia. It is great to hear the Hon. Member agree now that we have to do something. Where were they when it would have been much easier to do things without the tremendous pressure which we now have to try and rectify the situation before it is too late?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I knew that it was coming. I entered this debate fully conscious that he was waiting for the opportunity to ask that question. It has become a normal practice of NDP Members. I recognize that there is a political motive. It is part of the atmosphere in which we live.

I can only say to him that it troubled me very much, once I became aware of the issue and its implications, that this had taken place and ought to have been the object of a very thorough examination. I only became familiar with the Ashcroft section along the Fraser Valley during a visit to my office by tribal council representatives a month and a half ago. With the benefit of hindsight, you could, of course, do a lot of things better. Having said that, I submit that double-tracking across most of the nation is something that can be done without causing serious environmental damage. I suspect that in some parts of the provinces there will be very little environmental damage.

With hindsight, I would say that perhaps it would have been good administrative practice immediately after the passing of the legislation to have set into motion a commission that would have analysed and identified earlier the delicate, fragile points that the railway would have required for double-tracking or for alternative technologies. That would have been the object of a cumulative or collective set of earth studies which then would have looked at the totality of the fragile points in order to arrive at an environmentally-conscious, economic and native rights-respectful way of resolving that issue. That is the conclusion at which one can arrive with the benefit of hindsight.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Honour, the Deputy to Her Excellency the Governor General, in the Senate Chamber, His Honour was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority—Chapter No. 5.

Bill C-22, an Act to establish the International Centre for Ocean Development and to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation thereto—Chapter No. 6.

Bill C-29, an Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act—Chapter No. 7.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: Was the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) rising on a question?

Mr. Blaikie: No, Mr. Speaker, I was rising for debate.

Mr. Speaker: There were five minutes remaining for questions and comments. There being no further questions, I now recognize the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) on debate.

• (1650)

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to speak on the motion of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. In that this is my maiden speech, I want to say at the outset that I am most pleased and proud to represent the people of the Fraser Valley East constituency in the House. I would like to extend to them my sincere appreciation for their expression of faith and confidence in my candidacy. It is a great honour to be their Member of Parliament. I want to assure them that I will spare neither time, talent nor effort in representing them. I give to my constituents my solemn pledge that I will discharge my responsibilities with integrity, honesty and thoughtfulness. It is my intention to be an effective and demanding spokesman in defending their interests. At the same time, I want to assure Members on both sides of the House that I intend to accord to them the courtesy and dignity which befits a Member of Parliament and which the people of Canada rightfully expect.

Fraser Valley East was represented by the Reverend Alex Patterson for over 20 of the last 30 years, and we in the Valley are indebted to him. I am sure all Members of this House will join me in wishing him and his wife a rich and fulfilling retirement.

The riding of Fraser Valley East is large. It is situated between the Fraser River and the international boundary in what is known as the central and upper Fraser Valley. Included in its northern portion is the picturesque mountain region of the Fraser Canyon. The grandeur of the coast and Cascade Mountains, the spectacular canyon and the boiling waters of Hell's Gate, the beauties of the Harrison resort area, and the rich flood plains of the central Fraser Valley, make the riding one of breath-taking splendour. It is indeed a pleasant place in which to live.

Some 110,000 people make their homes in Fraser Valley East. While the largest group—some 50 per cent—are of British descent, we are enriched by the remaining 50 per cent which provide diverse ethnocultural communities. I am proud to represent all of the people. The spirit of fairness and equality, of consultation and consensus, as expressed by this Government, is appreciated by the people in my riding. It is clearly evident that this Government has listened and is listening to the people. We are in a time when the aspiration of the people and the commitment of Government are in harmony. This is the unity which the nation has needed, and that is why there is hope and optimism today.

In this regard, I want to make it known that this Government is not merely saying that it will listen; indeed it is doing so. In the few months since coming to power, the evidence of consultation, consensus-building, and finding solutions through co-operation has clearly been seen.

I want to commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) for visiting my riding in November and consulting with the agricultural industry in the Fraser Valley. The visit of the Solicitor General (Mr. MacKay) to my riding in January to hold consultations and hear the concerns of the local officials was much appreciated. The local elected representatives of the people greatly appreciated that consultation.

The geography of Fraser Valley East almost compels a north-south mindset. It seems that California is more accessible than Alberta. Our union with the provinces of Central and Atlantic Canada, which was confirmed 100 years ago by the completion of Canada's first transcontinental railway, has endured the tensions of a century and has engendered in the people a genuine pride in being Canadian.

The transportation links with the other regions of Canada have always been the symbols of unity for the people of my riding. Highway 401 and the mainlines of the CNR and the CPR through the Fraser Canyon traverse my riding for over 150 kilometres. In addition, the Abbotsford Airport serves as an alternative to the Vancouver International Airport.

The people in my riding very clearly understand that transportation systems are the tangible evidence of a united country. Without them the various regions of Canada would soon experience isolation and would be compelled to develop trade patterns in a north-south direction for the sake of economic survival. In this regard, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) for the steps he has initiated in bringing back VIA Rail services.

Several bands of natives of the Stalo Nation reside in Fraser Valley East.

The motion which we are debating today came about in an unusual way and quite hastily. Indeed, the motion which was initiated in committee by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), and subsequently amended by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), was adopted by the committee after hearing only one group of witnesses representing native bands in the Fraser-Thompson Canyons of British Columbia, who presented their collective and individual concerns about the CN twin-tracking program to the committee on February 7. Although the motion was unanimously adopted, there was mention by some members that other groups, such as Canadian National Railways, the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans and Environment Canada, should be offered the opportunity to present evidence for the committee's consideration in formulating its position and reporting to the House on the matter in question.

The members of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry were obviously moved by the presentations of the native representatives, and in particular by the impending start of CN rail work on a twin-tracking project on the CN Rail Ashcroft subdivision between miles 60 and 69, or thereabouts. This railway work is to start on or about March 1 and will involve placing rock into the wetted perimeter of the riverbank to build up a subgrade on which the second track will be built. Undoubtedly, this early project start date was a principal factor in the committee's consideration in adopting the motion and in the decision to report the matter to the House at the earliest possible date, which was February 12. That was the same day that Environment Canada, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and CN Rail officials appeared to give their testimony to the committee.

To the extent that the motion is now being debated in the House, it serves as evidence that the Government is concerned about the possible environmental, fishery, social and economic impacts related to the CN twin-tracking work in British Columbia. But the Government has been cognizant of these potential impacts for some time and has set in place various processes to ensure that environmental and other impacts from CN twin-tracking projects would be either eliminated or minimized to the maximum extent possible.

In this regard, I refer to the federal-provincial task force, the technical working group, the steering committee and the federal Government's Environmental Assessment Review Panel, which are all involved with the CN Rail mainline capacity expansion program in British Columbia. Furthermore, and most recently, a joint CN Rail-Indian committee was established to deal with specific native concerns about fishing spots along the Thompson and Fraser riverbanks, access trails to those fishing spots and the heritage sites which might be destroyed or affected by CN construction work.

The point which I am making is that the concerns raised by the native groups were not just recently brought to the attention of the Government by way of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry report and the motion to the House that no processes and mechanisms are in place to deal with the over-all and specific environmental and socio-economic impacts from CN twin-tracking projects. Groups have been in place as far back as 1980, when the CN rail twin-tracking project was introduced.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans has the federal responsibility to ensure that the salmon resource is not affected detrimentally by any works, and furthermore, that the salmon habitat and growth of the fishery resource can be enhanced. Testimony received from fisheries officials on February 12 clearly indicated that the expert and scientific expertise that has been and is being brought to bear on CN's project is extensive and that no approvals will be given to CN's project if the risk to the salmon resource is unacceptable.

Many professional fishery and environmental people have been involved. Numerous studies and research activities have been completed and study programs are in place. A lot of dialogue, consultations and deliberations have taken place, many changes have been made to CN designs and much more can be expected along these lines of consultation in the future.

● (1700)

The motion before the House may give an impression that CN twin-tracking work has gone ahead and was being implemented in an irresponsible way as regards environmental and fishery protection and safeguards or that there was a lack of response to the concerns raised by native groups. I hope that my remarks thus far will provide a clarification of the real situation that exists.

I would now like to address the elements of the motion as reported by the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. In doing so, I will be referring to pertinent testimony, in my opinion, which was presented by the witnesses that appeared before the committee on February 12. My purpose, Mr. Speaker, is to cause Hon. Members to recognize the need to reflect further on the motion, on its wording and on what may be implied if indeed CN Rail and others involved were to abide by the several elements contained in the motion.

The first element of the motion calls for a one-year postponement of CN twin-tracking while the social and environmental impacts on the 36 Indian bands most directly impacted by this project are assessed. The first point I wish to make concerning this element of the motion is that it appears to be somewhat vague in terms of application and that it makes no implied or explicit reference to the fact that social and environmental impacts, not only on the native groups but on all persons and interests, have been and will continue to be evaluated by responsible agencies. These evaluations would be done either by the federal Environmental Assessment Review Panel, by the federal-provincial environmental and fishery agencies forming the technical working group, or by the joint CN-Indian committee recently established. These committees, Mr. Speaker, will also concern themselves with all of the CN twin-tracking projects planned in the Thompson-Fraser Canyons over the balance of this century and beyond.

The ambiguity of the element contained in the motion relates to whether the one-year postponement is intended to relate to the specific Ashcroft subdivision work which is scheduled to begin March 1, or to any and all remaining CN Rail twin-tracking projects in the future. The ambiguity arises because the Ashcroft project is along a segment of main line on which only two and not 36 Indian bands have reserves adjacent to the CN right-of-way. These bands are the Oregon Jack Creek Band, whose reserve is located at the northernmost end of the CN Ashcroft project, and the Cook Ferry Band at the southernmost end of the Ashcroft project.

Furthermore, as came out in the evidence presented by Fisheries and Oceans officials, as well as by CN officials, a one-year postponement if intended to apply to the Ashcroft project is effectively a postponement of two years to the winter of 1987. This is due to the fact that CN must commence its Ashcroft project work March 1 when water levels are at seasonal lows and, importantly, due to timing restrictions designed to respect the migratory cycle of pink salmon; that is, there is no salmon activity or life expected in the river encroachment sites this winter to May, 1985. CN will not be permitted by Department of Fisheries officials to do any of the encroachment work next year in the winter of 1986. If the one-year postponement refers to all CN projects, then necessary expansion work already started last year and currently under way to completion at Blue River, for example, will be halted.

In effect, Mr. Speaker, the one-year postponement of CN twin-tracking is, in reality, a two-year postponement. This delay would affect CN Rail's capacity expansion needs and thereby present risks to the company and the nation that an adequate, efficient and safe rail transportation capability might not be available for shippers and the transport of growing volumes of bulk and other traffic in support of Canada's export business. Furthermore, foreign buyers of Canada's bulk resources, such as coal, grain, potash, sulphur and so on, may take this one or two-year postponement as a signal and reactivate their earlier concerns about Canada's determination and will to demonstrate that our reliability as a supplier of export commodities will be ensured by the railway capacity expansion program and supported by the Government.

Another element of the motion requires that an economic justification for the CN Rail twin-tracking program be made available to the Alliance of Tribal Councils. Hon. Members may recall, and if not, I would like to make them aware, that in the late 1970s the Japanese, the South Koreans and other Pacific Rim countries had been expressing concern that the Canadian railways could not be looked upon as reliable and efficient carriers of various bulk commodities which these offshore countries required and which Canada and its resource industries were most willing to produce and supply. Simply put, these Pacific Rim concerns were justified in that CN and CP railway capacity was being stressed and expansion programs were needed.

The Coal Association of Canada and many other Canadian industries formed a task force on the crisis of western Canadian railway transportation. It was clear at the time that unless the railways undertook a major expansion or a sufficient expansion of their railway capacity, Canada would lose a lot of export business to other competing supplier countries because foreign clients were not interested in buying from Canada if we, collectively, could not assure reliable delivery of coal, sulphur and grains, to name a few important export commodities. Lack of capacity would also affect the operating efficiency of the over-all distribution system, including the ports and railway components. This would be reflected in higher transport costs and Canadian commodity prices.

The question of economic justification of twin-tracking on a project-by-project basis is also a very complex matter which involves not just construction costs but railway system operating and maintenance needs and other factors. The CN testimony indicated that the economics of any particular twin-tracking project is but one consideration in the over-all decision to first choose the location of the particular expansion work and then to decide the best option to build the new capacity, be it encroachment into a river or by tunnelling.

These decision elements, as pointed out by CN in its testimony, have not been unilateral decisions by the corporation. Preliminary conclusions on project location are fully analysed and thence the preliminary construction approach is extensively reviewed and adjusted by the various technical experts in the Government's environmental, fishery and other agencies through the aforementioned committee. That is, although the economics of any one project are important, the environmental impacts and the fishery impacts are equally important factors considered in finalizing a twin-tracking project location and design.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, one can accept the motion before the House as a means for bringing forward a valid concern of the members of the Fisheries and Forestry Standing Committee. However, as the motion was drafted and adopted by the Committee after hearing only one interest group as witnesses, the motion does not reflect, in my view, the equally valid and considerable testimony to the Committee from witnesses appearing after the motion was reported to the House. While it may be that there could have been some breakdown or some inadequacy in specific consultations between the native peoples and CN and other agencies, I suggest that measures are now being taken to remedy the situation. We have reasonable assurances from the Environment Canada witness that the environmental assessment and review report, expected in March, has identified the consultation level question as an issue and will address this and the related recommendations in its report. I can say to the House that our Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) will ensure that CN will make the greatest efforts possible to resolve the issue of inadequate consultation with native groups in the conduct of its twin-tracking program.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, earlier this afternoon we heard that the Minister of Transport will be meeting, along with other Ministers, with the native people, bringing to a successful conclusion their concern, yet addressing the issues which they are bringing to our minds.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments on the Hon. Member's maiden speech?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say, with respect to the fact that it was the Hon. Member's maiden speech, that it is unfortunate that on the occasion of his maiden speech he had to resort to the bureaucratic argument which someone had passed along to him. It was a very narrow argument and one which the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) himself rejected. The Minister was critical of the way things had been handled in the past, yet the Hon. Member gets up and defends the way things were handled in the past. A very odd argument to begin with.

• (1710)

With respect to the two-year issue, if it amounts to a two-year postponement, then so be it. I cannot understand an argument which says that if we are worried that something is bad, let us not postpone it for one year because it might take two years. I mean, if the thing is bad it ought to be postponed indefinitely. That is what we want to find out. If we have to take the time to find out, let us take the time. That is what this motion would provide.

There are three dimensions to this issue that I would like the Hon. Member to comment on. There is the environmental dimension, and the question of the rights of native people on their reserve. In this case it is two reserves and the clarification of just how many reserves are involved in that one subdivision was very useful; I was glad the Hon. Member brought that up. Nevertheless, we are talking about the rights of those two reserves. Thirdly, there is the question of Parliament and its committees.

We have heard a lot of talk about parliamentary reform. Here we now have an opportunity, and I say this as one who has been concerned about parliamentary reform for a number of years now. We have a unanimous recommendation of a committee of the House of Commons. We have had a lot of talk about an increase in the power of committees in this House and about Parliament having more real power over Crown corporations and what really goes on in the life of this country. Here we have an opportunity to make a difference. We can do that by allowing the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) to go foward and come to a vote so that this Parliament can say to the CNR, a Crown corporation responsible to the people of Canada through us, that it ought not to go ahead with this project as now conceived.

The days of Sitting Bull have passed. The kinds of things we have said we abhorred that went on in the nineteenth century and other times are things of the past, not things that we are going to repeat over and over and over again on the grounds of the narrow kind of economic arguments advanced by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) on behalf of some nameless bureaucrat somewhere.

Are we going to take this moment? Are we going to seize this opportunity to be a Parliament and respect the unanimous decision of a committee? Or are we going to blow it? That is what is at stake here this afternoon. Have we any self-respect left as Members of Parliament, as the House of Commons? Do we have any respect for the unanimous decision and recommendation of a standing committee of this House of Commons of Canada, the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, which determined that the CNR ought to be instructed not to go ahead with what it now has in mind? If we have any respect for ourselves and for Parliament and for all the rhetoric we have heard so often about parliamentary reform, particularly from Members who are now on the Government side of the House, we will allow this motion to come to a voice vote. We ought unanimously to say yea, let the House of Commons and its committees speak and let Crown corporations and others in the country be accountable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, while I agree with part of the Hon. Member's comments, I must disagree with others because of some of the actions we are taking. The Hon. Member has heard this afternoon that the Minister of Transport and other Ministers are meeting with the native people who are questioning whether this project should take place. The CNR cannot go ahead until the Minister of Transport signs the Order in Council permitting them to do so.

The Hon. Member refers to bringing this motion to a vote this afternoon. If no one stands up to speak on it, then it will be brought to a vote. Nonetheless, I believe all the facts should be brought out into the open. You cannot say you are going to consult if you turn around and do not consult.

This Government which took over on September 4 is trying to say to the people of Canada that we are consulting. People say we are taking too long to take action on things. Well, we will make mistakes and there is no doubt about that. But we will make them with the best of intentions, with all of the facts we can get before us. We are not saying that CN has consulted extensively or done enough. That is why the committee is involved with the native people. Do you want the committee to work or do you not?

We know there is a two-year time lag because of the spawning habits of pink salmon. This is very important and affects more than just my riding or the riding we are discussing. The natives are concerned about this industry as well, and it is for this reason that we will continue to make sure we get all the facts out and on the table.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member not realize that is why we have committees of the House of Commons? It is so they can hear evidence and all the facts and all sides of the story. That is what the committee did in hearing from the CN, the fishermen and native people. So the facts have been placed before a committee of the House of Commons. It is not as if we are talking about something reported in the newspaper. This is evidence given on the record of a standing committee of the House of Commons, which led to the unanimous recommendation we now have before us. So I reject the claim by the Hon. Member that we do not have the facts or evidence before us—unless he wants to impugn the judgment of the committee, because that is what he is doing by bringing up the points he has.

Does the Hon. Member also not think, Mr. Speaker, when we are talking about potentially irreversible damage to a river and the salmon habitat, and we are also talking about potentially irreversible damage to the burial sites of native people, that two years is but a blink of an eye in the long historical process involved? If it takes two years to do something like that properly, that is just fine with me and I think it is fine with others. Two years is not a long time when you are talking about irreversible damage. That is something we ought to keep in mind.

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, we are not just talking about two years right now. The Hon. Member alludes to that as if it had just come about. Back in the 1970s we know that we lost certain contracts for the export of grain and things like that. We have a responsibility to think about the livelihood of people right across the Prairies, people he also represents. I, too, am very concerned about the native people. A good many of them live in my riding and I am very concerned about this.

Mr. Blaikie: They are laying off people in my riding because they say they have more than enough rolling stock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Belsher: I believe it is time that we continue to go as we are.

Mr. Blaikie: We have an over-capacity on the railroad right now.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raised a concern about the motion. He said it was too vague when it talked about the social and environmental impact on the 36 Indian bands most directly impacted by this project and the need for assessment. When Chief Bob Pasco addressed the committee, one of the things he said was this:

> I sat as a member of an environmental assessment review panel for over a year until the CNR decided to proceed with the work near Ashcroft through my reserve land without even meeting with my band. I was forced to resign to avoid a conflict of interest between my obligations to the Oregon Jack Creek Indian Band and the need for an objective input into the final report of the panel.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The time for questions and comments is now terminated.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my contribution to this debate will be brief because I, too, want the motion before the House passed and concurred in.

In working toward that end I would like to go back to the question posed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I thought it was a useful question to place before the House. He asked the previous Minister of the Environment, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), why something had not been done sooner. Twin-tracking has not just started: there are already some 228 miles completed and another 538 miles to be completed. Why has something not been done sooner? Why are we now at the eleventh hour with an Order in Council about to be signed with last minute negotiations going on between the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and Indian leaders? Did no one sound the alarm?

I want to tell Hon. Members that someone did sound the alarm. In the previous Parliament I had the honour of chairing the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. There was a member of that standing committee who said to me on more than one occasion that this will be a very explosive issue and something should be done about it. He said that we must draw to the attention of the Government the concerns of Indian people and environmentalists on this issue. The Member to whom I am referring is the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway). He is now the Chairman of the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. He gave leadership in that Committee in bringing forward this third report which has been moved for concurrence by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) this afternoon. That Member gave what I consider to be courageous leadership. In his concerns for his constituency and this country I find him to be one of the outstanding Members of the House. He deserves a great deal of credit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: The simple answer to the question of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North is that committees are not listened to by governments. There are many reasons why the previous Government lost its mandate. I would say that one of those reasons is that that Government was not particularly good at listening to expressions of unanimity from standing and special committees. It played around with the recommendations and all too often responded in a facile fashion. If the Government had listened more frequently to what parliamentarians were saying about legitimate concerns in the country, it may have lasted a lot longer.

It may be strange for me as a Member of the Opposition now to be advising the new Government to listen to its committees. If it does it will be around for much longer than I would like to see it around. In most cases parliamentarians are in touch with the people. They meet in committees, receive testimony, analyse and debate it among themselves with freedom, concern and urgency, and then present a report to the House. If the Government responds we will have better government in the country than we had before.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: Hon. Members are here but have not proven very much yet. It is a little early to be patting yourselves on the back. If you do, you may have to go to an Hon. Member for chiropractic treatment.

I do not know how many citizens watch the debates of the House of Commons on television after Question Period. People who are watching this debate ought to be aware that there is a painful process involved in decision-making. It has been said a number of times this afternoon that there are several issues involved in this debate rather than a single issue. As my hon. friend from Davenport said, there are very deep and conspicuous environmental concerns which cannot be ignored. There may well be a Railway-Indian Committee working. However, the issues are so wide and numerous that that committee will need a lot of time. The people representing the corporation will have to be very sensitive. They will have to be a lot more sensitive than the CN officials whom I have encountered in my experience as a Member of Parliament, who want to run through railway towns in northern Ontario without any concern for the impact on that community or the safety issues. There are environmental issues involved but there are other concerns as well.
