Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, another quite unfair and improper suggestion has now been added to the flurry, indeed, the snowstorm of innuendo and accusation that has been swirling around in the atmosphere on this subject for many months now. The suggestion made by our friend, Senator Frith, is that the previous government signed a contract in order to facilitate lawsuits against the Crown.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Shame!

Senator Frith: That is certainly an innuendo upon an innuendo.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Yours was a straight fabrication.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that suggestion is not borne out by the facts. It is not even borne out by the chronology of events placed on the record earlier in the debate by Senator Balfour and referred to today by Senator Frith.

• (1450)

The negotiations were completed and an agreement was concluded in the month of August. An October date was set for the signing.

Nothing had been heard from Mr. Chrétien or the Liberal Party at that stage. As a matter of fact, I may say within parenthesis, that Mr. Hession, the former president of Paxport, testified before the House of Commons committee as to the discussions he had with various opposition critics, including Liberal critics, on the development and the negotiations, and the briefings he had given to those critics. The point was not pursued by the committee but it, perhaps, should be pursued in another forum at another time because some of the people involved in these briefings by Mr. Hession are now ministers of the Crown sitting in the other place.

Senator Frith and others might do well to consider what the legal position of the government was between August and October, between the time the agreement was concluded and the actual signing. What would the legal position of the government have been had it attempted to walk away from the deal between August and October? This is a matter which I think the honourable senator and others who are versed in the law might consider very seriously. They might also ask whether advice was sought and received on that very point by the government from its legal advisors at the time.

Everything Senator Frith said in the first few minutes of his speech on this very subject of the process seems to me to reinforce the suggestion made by Senator Balfour earlier in the debate, that what is needed is an impartial inquiry set up under the Inquiries Act and conducted in public so that we can settle, once and for all, the questions of process that have come to bedevil this whole debate and to confuse the issues of finance and economics, and even law, that are before us and the public.

I thoroughly enjoyed the second part of Senator Frith's speech in which he gave us a dissertation on the rule of law as it existed in the era of the supremacy of Parliament and as it exists now in the era of what he would call "the supremacy of the Charter." It was extremely interesting and instructive in every way.

I also appreciated the instruction as to how the aggrieved parties might, if this bill were to be passed as it is, get to court. He has told us that, because the government did not invoke the notwithstanding clauses of either the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights or the Trudeau Charter of Rights, a party can still contest the constitutionality of the bill in the courts and, if the party gets by that hurdle, then perhaps he or she can sue for compensation for loss of property.

I suggest that the issue before us is not something the government did not do, namely, it did not attach the notwithstanding clauses to the bill. The subject before us is what the government did do or is attempting to do, which is to deny access to the courts to Canadian citizens. It is trying to deny Canadian citizens their day in court. That is a question which is a matter of policy, a matter of propriety, in the broadest legal and constitutional sense, to which Senator Frith might well have addressed himself.

As you know, honourable senators, I was a member of the government of Prime Minister Mulroney and of the government of Prime Minister Campbell. Therefore, I share responsibility for the decisions that were taken and for the policy that led to those decisions. I was not personally directly involved in the negotiations, nor did I have a portfolio responsibility that was directly involved, but, in saying that, I share the responsibility. I support the policy and those decisions not in any perfunctory way at all. I and my cabinet colleagues believed then, and I certainly believe now, that this was a sound policy; that it was a necessary policy; and that the decisions that were taken were sound. No one seems to deny the need, in fact the urgent need, for the redevelopment of that important facility, the most important airport in Canada.

Anyone familiar with the fiscal position of the government will understand why a government would be reluctant to make the financial commitment, and particularly the cash flow commitment, that would have been involved in having the Ministry of Transport go it alone as a public venture; and they will understand the attraction, therefore, of a private development option which we invited and received.

We believed then, and I certainly believe now, that the agreement that was reached was financially sound, financially beneficial for the government, and we certainly believed that it was economically sound. Involved in the agreement was a $700-million private investment in the redevelopment; the creation of 14,000 jobs through the redevelopment, many of them in the metropolitan Toronto area; and, further, the creation of an indigenous airport development industry in this country that would be capable of competing in an international market worth many billions of dollars. So it seemed to us then, and it certainly seems to me now, to have been sound financially and economically.

That being said, I am the first to acknowledge that these are subjects of legitimate debate. Honest people can disagree. Honest people may come to conclusions other than those that I and my cabinet colleagues reached on this matter.

In the case of Mr. Chrétien, a month into the election campaign he attacked the contract. He said he would review it. I must say that I do not quarrel for a moment with Senator Kirby's contention, repeated by Senator Frith and others, that the government does have the political authority and the mandate — because I am one of those people who has always interpreted such mandates quite broadly — to cancel the contract. However, honourable senators, that is no justification for trying to exempt themselves from the legal consequences of their action. There is no justification for that at all.

While they have the political authority and the mandate to cancel the contract, one might have hoped that, in a matter as important as this — and it is a very important contract in a very important sector of the Canadian economy — they would have subjected those contracts to a much more rigorous analysis than seems to have been the case. Some enterprising journalist might well put in an Access to Information request and try to find out what analysis was actually done by the new government of these contracts and of the agreement that the previous government entered into. Was there any analysis done other than the "analysis," if I can dignify it with that name, done by Mr. Robert Nixon for his report?

The Nixon report was as shallow and as shabby a piece of work as any reputable politician has ever signed his name to. It was what they call in the trade "quick and dirty." Quick it was, and dirty it was in the unsubstantiated accusations it launched against unnamed people.

I have said that the wisdom or otherwise of the policy of the previous government and of the decisions we took has become entangled in this question of process and all these accusations and innuendoes that have been flying around for many months.

Again, I support Senator Balfour's suggestion that the only way to sort these out — and indeed "these" include the suggestion made by Senator Frith today that somehow there was a rush to sign in order to facilitate lawsuits — is through an impartial inquiry under the Inquiries Act. I must say I am puzzled why the government has so far refused requests to this effect that were made in the other place, that have been made in the media, that have been made by the principals and by many other people.

• (1500)

Meanwhile, here is the Senate confronted with this bill which has several obnoxious clauses, which denies access to the courts to those affected by the cancellation of the contracts. Senator Lynch-Staunton and others have spoken about this, and there is nothing really that I can add to what they have already said.

I wish to say, honourable senators, that we are coming now to the closing hours of this part of this session of Parliament. The pundits are already at work evaluating and appraising the performance of the government and the various ministers. Honourable senators, the major news, the defining feature in this session of Parliament to date has been the failure of the two major opposition parties in the House of Commons to carry out the responsibilities of our parliamentary traditions.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: One does not want to be unduly harsh with people who, I am sure, are honourable members and are sincerely motivated, and most of whom are new to Parliament. However, the failings of the Bloc Québécois and the Reform Party during this session cannot be attributed to inexperience alone, and they cannot either be explained in terms of a difficulty in addressing terribly complex issues. On the two bills that have preoccupied the Senate in the last little while, the issues at stake have been issues of fundamental principles.

On Bill C-18, it was a question of the principles of representative democracy being endangered by a government initiative, by a bill. Neither the Bloc Québécois nor the Reform Party raised their voices in protest against this. They succumbed to the temptation of short-term political advantage because they also happened to find the preliminary maps inconvenient, and so therefore they were quite prepared to ignore the principles that were at stake, abort the process, abolish the commissions and put the principles of representative democracy in danger. That is what they were about.

In the case of this bill, Bill C-22, great sport they had trying to outdo each other kicking the stuffing out of Tory lobbyists, Tory bagmen, Tory businessmen, and all the rest of it. The argument or inference seems to be that because the people concerned are a bunch of well-connected businessmen, hanging is too good for them. Who cares about access to the courts? There was not a thought for the precedential nature of what they were doing. I do not think there was a voice raised in protest in the other House about the principles that are at stake in part of this bill. Not one. There, too, they succumbed to the temptations of short-term political advantage, or to the temptation to engage simply in political rhetoric.

Honourable senators, what we are talking about here is the rule of law. I accept the dictionary definition that Senator Frith put on the record when he spoke. I did not write it down in longhand, but it seemed to me to be applicable, either in the days of pre-1982 or post-1982. I accept that definition. It has to do with the right of Canadian citizens to their day in court.

Honourable senators, if the Bloc Québécois and the Reform Party cannot identify those principles in two bills as simple as the two bills we had here, if they cannot identify those principles, articulate those principles and stand up for them, what do they intend to stand up for over there in the House of Commons?

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: I must say that, over the summer, I think that we in the Senate must reflect on our role, if only on the added responsibility, if I can put it that way, that seems to be upon us in our role as a revising chamber. We must reflect on how we will conduct ourselves without resorting to unnecessary confrontation with the elected government and the elected House, and without causing undue disruption to the legislative process, which none of us want. I think we must reflect on that. Frankly, I think the government should also reflect on what it is doing.

There are wiser heads and longer heads in the Liberal cabinet who know better than to bring in a bill depriving Canadian citizens of their access to the courts. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and many others know better than that; just as there are people over there in that cabinet who know perfectly well that trying to blow up the redistribution process in the manner attempted in Bill C-18 was wrong, and would cause trouble. One would hope that, after a period of reflection, the wiser and longer heads in the Liberal Party will prevail. I will say that they had the grace to be embarrassed by what they tried to do in Bill C-18, and that is always a good sign. I hope they will reflect on this, and without getting too personal about it, not let the hotheads run away with the government.

Honourable senators, with those few words of helpful and constructive criticism, I extend best wishes to the government, and especially to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, for an enjoyable summer holiday. We certainly intend to have one.

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators —

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I should inform the Senate that, if the Honourable Senator Kirby speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to ask Senator Frith one question. I do not want to go over the ground which Senator Murray has covered so eloquently, although I too am very disturbed by Senator Frith's adding another innuendo to the long list regarding what was behind this contract by suggesting that it was concluded simply to encourage lawsuits. That is not up to Senator Frith's usual argumentation.

However, what concerns me even more is the fact that, while sharing our concerns regarding the constitutionality of clauses 7 and 8, he seems to suggest that we should pass them anyway, and let those directly affected attack their constitutionality in court, as he assures us they have such a recourse. They do not have a recourse for damages in the bill, but they have a recourse in court to challenge the bill.

Surely, if we have some apprehension about the constitutionality of the bill, we cannot in good conscience put the onus to challenge that constitutionality on those directly affected. That would be one of the most irresponsible acts a parliamentarian could commit.

We must assure ourselves to the extent possible, and with all the legal and other resources we have, that every law we pass is constitutional. The fact that Senator Frith and others here with outstanding legal credentials are having serious doubts about the conflict between clauses 7 and 8 and the Charter should be enough for them to join us, when the bill is referred to committee, in urging the committee to recommend to this chamber that clauses 7 and 8 not form part of Bill C-22.

• (1510)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, there seems to be some misunderstanding. If I gave any impression that I thought there was some dark conspiracy to encourage a lawsuit —

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You did.

Senator Frith: — that was not my intention at all. In fact, the context in which I put it in was that, if I were acting for the developer, for example, and I were asked, "If we sign this contract, what will the effect be, if a subsequent government cancels or wants to cancel the agreement?", I could imagine saying, "Well, they would have to cancel, and also try to cancel any lawsuit." That is all. In my opinion, it would not be an unusual situation for a lawyer to be asked that question.

I was speaking speculatively, and if I gave any impression that I thought I knew something about a meeting at which such a thing took place, I do not. I am not alleging that it did.

On the second point, we have to understand that we have a certain duty to concern ourselves with constitutionality. However, I think it is a bit unusual and "extraordinary," to use a word that has been popular in this debate, to suggest that we can constitutionalize any law we pass. The whole point of the Charter is to separate the judicial from the legislative. What was new about the Charter was that it said to us legislators, "Look, you pass any law that you pass at your peril because it has to be constitutional in the context of the Charter." The normal way to exercise that right under the Charter, which is a right given to all citizens, is to challenge the constitutionality in a court. That is all.

I agree with Senator Lynch-Staunton that we should not say, "Well, we are not interested in constitutionality." I do not suggest that. However, there is a point beyond which we have to say that we can think of a lot of good reasons not to pass a bill, but I do not think that the political, legislative, executive and judicial systems in Canada expect us to do the reverse and exclude the role of the courts. Our job is to pass the law and to think about the legal dimension. We cannot affect a citizen's right to claim that what we pass is unconstitutional.

Hon. Roch Bolduc: May I ask the honourable senator a question?

Senator Frith: Of course.

Senator Bolduc: Before 1982 we had the same problem in terms of the taking of responsibilities.

Senator Frith: That is right.

Senator Bolduc: Therefore, it was a limited government even before 1982, so far as the federalist aspect of the Constitution is concerned.

Senator Frith: Absolutely. That is what I said. Up to that time, if you were challenging anything on a constitutional ground, then you had to do it on Senator Jessiman's point. That is to say that it was beyond their legislative competence as between sections 91, the federal competence, and 92, the provincial. Now it is also subject to the Charter. The honourable senator is quite right.

Senator Kirby: Honourable senators, in rising to close the debate on Bill C-22 I will be brief.

Having listened to the speeches from senators on both sides of this chamber on this bill, it is clear that they have revolved around two issues. One issue is the question of whether or not the government had the legitimate political authority — the "mandate" I think was the word used by Senator Simard in response to my opening remarks on this bill — to decide to cancel this contract.

I do not think I need to comment on that question since Senator Murray in his remarks a few moments ago conceded absolutely that the government had the political authority and mandate to cancel the contract. He stated that fact clearly, and is, himself, a former member of both the Clark government and the Mulroney government. Therefore, it seems to me that this first issue is no longer open for debate.

The second issue is the debate over process. It comes down to an agreement over whether or not clause 7, or perhaps clauses 7 and 8, if some want to include clause 8, violate the legal process by which the cancellation is to be achieved. That is the case whether or not one uses phrases such as "principles of natural justice," "fairness," or whatever. The debate is no longer a debate over the cancellation of the contract, nor is the debate about the public policy issue at stake.

Over the last two or three days we have heard some very eloquent remarks on both sides of this second issue, particularly from Senators Lynch-Staunton and Frith. Clearly, there are strongly held and conflicting views on this point. It is an issue that relates to legal process as opposed to public policy.

Since it is the intention to refer this bill to a committee, and to have at that committee witnesses who will deal specifically with the legal issues that have been raised in this debate, it seems to me that the appropriate thing for me to do at this stage in the game is to end the debate here. Of course, I reserve the right to deal with the outcome of the committee report when we get to the third reading stage on this bill.

In light of the fact that we are now dealing with a legal-substance issue rather than a contract issue, which I think was the phrase used by Senator Lynch-Staunton in his remarks, I recommend to this chamber that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs as opposed to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Kirby, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(a), moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples have the authority to convene now, while the Senate is sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

RADIO CANADA INTERNATIONAL

REPORT OF TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fifth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications (study of the mandate and funding of Radio Canada International), tabled in the Senate on June 21, 1994.—(Honourable Senator Oliver).

• (1520)

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, at this time I should like to say a few things about the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications concerning the mandate and funding of Radio Canada International or RCI.

At the outset, I should like to comment on the contribution that Senator Finlay MacDonald, the former chairman of that committee, made to the hearings and to the preparation of the report. I also wish to state for the record that this report of 22 pages is by far the largest public document ever produced on this particular subject.

RCI has, in the past, been studied by two other federal commissions or task forces, but only as a small part of the more than general and comprehensive inquiry into broadcasting and broadcasting policy in Canada. When broadcasting policy was studied by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, RCI merited a one-page reference only, and one salutary recommendation out of 16 that were made.

This study, undertaken by your committee according to its Order of Reference of March 15, 1994, represents the most up-to-date and most penetrating investigation into the operations of RCI, its funding, its relationship with other international shortwave broadcasters, and its organizational status within the federal bureaucracy that has yet been ventured.

The inquiry was enlightening and, as you will observe upon reading the report, points to serious faults in the organizational setup of RCI within the federal government that have led to a consistent underevaluation of the services provided by RCI to Canadians. This, in turn, has snowballed into the underfunding of the operations of RCI.

Canada, unfortunately, has suffered a loss in prestige around the world as a direct consequence of our diminished presence in international short-wave broadcasting. The recent controversy sparked by the propaganda disseminated on Canadian forestry practices by the German environmental movement is only one manifestation of a growing gap in public awareness of Canada around the globe. No doubt this international relations fiasco is partly the result of the withdrawal of RCI broadcast services from Germany.

The vacuum and broad information dissemination about Canada and Canadians extends beyond the political borders of Germany and includes Central and Eastern Europe and the Asia-Pacific Rim — most notably Japan, Latin America and, in particular, Brazil. The committee believes that this foreign and international trade policy blunder could have been mitigated by RCI broadcasts, and is likely to be the first of many to come, absent any corrective measures. The status quo is simply not a viable option.

For those senators who are not acquainted with Radio Canada International, let me briefly sketch for you RCI's history and present circumstance.

RCI was originally given two purposes, as set out in the Order of Council that created it in September 1942. First, the international broadcasting service was to provide a communications link between Canada and the hundreds of thousands of Canadians serving abroad during World War II. Second, it was also intended as an uncensored news source for the people of nations living under Germany.

Today the mandate of RCI is as follows: to provide a program service designed to attract an international audience with the purpose of further developing international awareness of Canada and the Canadian identity by distributing, through short-wave and other means, programs which reflect the realities and quality of Canadian life and culture, Canada's national interests and policies, and the spectrum of Canadian viewpoints on national and international affairs. RCI also broadcasts programs to the growing number of Canadians abroad, in recognition of their need for more Canadian news and information in those areas already served under the primary objective of broadcasting to foreign audiences.

The focus of our investigation in our committee was the 1990 funding cut-back decision, first made by the CBC and then by cabinet, which in the end saw approximately one-third of RCI's operation budget disappear and one-half of its staff laid off. In its investigation, the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications found fault with RCI's mandate as it is presently worded. The committee feels that the mandate is too fungible and subject to too much interpretation. For example, the mandate uses terms such as "to provide, to distribute and to broadcast" but the mandate does not use the terms "to produce, to present or to create." This terminology has allowed the federal government to fund RCI on a basis that should focus almost exclusively on rebroadcasting popular domestic programs of the CBC and Radio-Canada on RCI transmitters to the world.

The problem is that programs such as As it Happens or Les magasins économiques are specifically designed to attract a domestic audience, not an international audience. An international audience can only be qualified as collateral demand for such broadcasts, and as such these programs are certainly not an effective way to attract an international audience. That led to the first recommendation of the committee.

At present, RCI is organized under the CBC. The executive director of RCI is appointed by the president of the CBC. RCI programming and editorial policies remain the responsibility of the CBC, and the policies of the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade form the basis for determining RCI's target area and language priorities. Since fiscal year 1991-92, however, the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade provides funding to RCI under agreement with the CBC until fiscal year-end 1995-96.

The committee finds that this arrangement is, on the whole, beneficial to all parties concerned, although problems have cropped up and are likely to continue to do so, to which the current structure cannot effectively respond. Thus, the committee concludes that the present organizational structure should be adjusted slightly. That led to recommendation No. 2.

The committee finds something lacking in the present organizational setup and bureaucratic status of RCI between the CBC and the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade. There are emerging problems between RCI and the department that are not dissimilar to what had previously occurred between RCI and the CBC.

Under the CBC, RCI was no more than a fifth wheel. Today the same situation has arisen in the context of the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade. The committee concludes, therefore, that RCI is not properly represented within that department to receive a fair hearing on its activities and funding and, consequently, the reporting relationship should be elevated to that of reporting directly to the minister.

While raising the reporting level of the executive director of RCI within the department would be helpful, more bureaucratic support is also required. The committee concludes that an institutional buffer between the executive director and the minister, comprising a group of selected experts in the field, should also be established. This buffer would have as its mandate to execute and oversee that RCI receives its due recognition, making resident Canadians and their politicians and officials aware of the invaluable service that RCI performs for Canadians.

An unfortunate fact of international broadcasting is that the listening audience is not resident in the broadcasting company's home country. Thus, a political constituency promoting these vital services does not form to make sure that government officials and politicians take notice of their interests. International broadcasting, therefore, is a pure, public good with no highly visible or vocal political base. This problem appears to be more serious in Canada than elsewhere, and was highlighted to us by Mr. Keith Spicer when he appeared before the committee.

The committee believes that the previous recommendation to establish an advisory council on RCI affairs and to have it report to the most senior officials of the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade would, to some extent, address this problem in the future. However, it will do nothing to alleviate RCI's current funding shortfall.

It must be remembered that Canada is the only G-7 industrialized country to have dramatically reduced its international broadcasting activities in recent years. Other broadcasters, particularly European broadcasters, have been scrambling to purchase short-wave transmitter time that has become available on former Soviet and East Bloc transmitters.

• (1530)

The committee concludes that RCI is run effectively within its budgetary constraint and represents money well spent, but that it is underfunded. The committee recommended that the funding be restored at least to where it was in 1990.

The committee also feels that the current funding arrangement must be modified to provide for better long-range planning for these services. The committee concludes that RCI executives and officers require a longer funding time horizon. They suggest a five-year funding time horizon.

In conclusion, honourable senators, the committee feels that, if these recommendations are accepted and implemented by the government, Canada's prestige abroad can be recaptured. RCI can then return to its former glory days providing the world with an important window on Canada and Canadians.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I would commend Senator Oliver for his eloquent statement this afternoon and for his competence in chairing the committee which considered this important matter.

The status of RCI has never been a partisan issue in this chamber. The original motion was moved by me, seconded by Senator MacDonald. I am not an official member of the committee, as honourable senators are aware, but I do wish to commend the chairman and the members of the committee for an excellent piece of work, for their competence and their sensitivity.

I agree with the recommendations. We are on an international information highway and, in a certain sense, Canada has been shunted to the side in recent years. We have to play a more prominent role on that information highway. With the digitalization of radio and television signals, with the possibility that perfect signals can be delivered throughout the world now, thanks to satellites and other technical advances, we have to be much more active participants in international communications.

I look toward to the day when RCI is no longer Radio Communications International — but rather Communications International Canada when the Canadian image and activities will be seen on television screens throughout the world as well as via shortwave radio and cable systems.

That day is rapidly coming. Last weekend, for example, I tuned in my own backyard satellite and was able to see a long program, originating in Dubai, describing the culture of Dubai. I see some senators nodding their heads; they also have satellites. That little oil state of Dubai has their own 24-hour programming service in which they are endeavouring to explain their hopes and aspirations and something of their culture to the rest of the world.

An all-Arab satellite is now telecasting to the world 24 hours a day. Deutsche Welle from Germany is telecasting via satellite 24 hours a day in several languages including excellent English newscasts available anywhere in Canada to those who are able to access satellites. More and more people are finding themselves in that position.

It is not good for Canada to be in forty-fourth place in international broadcasting as we are at the present time and as Senator Oliver has confirmed to us in his remarks earlier. Forty-fourth place in communications internationally is not good enough for Canada.

We export more, per capita, than any other people in the world. We have to look to the world. We must have a window on the world. We have to speak to the world. We must tell them of Canada and our institutions, of our art, and of our economic aspirations.

The committee, I see, recommends restoring programming and transmissions to Germany. Of course, that is very important with the emerging economic importance of Germany in the new world.

Suggestions are that we should increase transmissions to China. Of course, we should. The Pacific Rim has just come alive. We lopped Japan off our RCI transmission schedule two or three years ago. It should be restored and the committee so recommends.

I find the committee recommendations both practical and sensible. I hope the government follows through and implements them.

Again I want to thank the chairman and his committee for a first rate piece of work which is a credit to the Senate.

Senator Oliver: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report.

On motion of Senator Oliver, report adopted.

HEALTH

IMPACT OF CHANGES TO TOBACCO TAXES—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Di Nino, calling the attention of the Senate to the impact of the Government of Canada's changes to tobacco taxes.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, on May 31, 1994, Senator Di Nino followed a discussion of the current government's Action Plan on Smuggling by asking two questions to be found on pages 524 and 525 of Hansard.

Senator Bonnell: Did you not table those yesterday?

Senator Bosa: He wanted statistics on the use of cigarettes since the plan was initiated and information on the advertisements which he described as "an insult and a joke to all those who saw them."

The "Break Free" anti-smoking campaign and the advertising that was part of it were not initiated by the current health minister. The first anti-smoking advertising campaign was launched in 1985-1986 under the previous government.

Senator Berntson: What?

Senator Bosa: Yes, I think Senator Di Nino will be embarrassed by the insinuations he made.

The media inference that the health minister pulled prematurely an ongoing series of advertisements is inaccurate. What the media failed to report was the fact that the contract for the particular advertisement was only operational until March 31, 1994, the usual end of the fiscal year of 1993-94. This contract had been developed during the previous year under the previous minister using money from the previous budget.

As indicated in my previous statement, approximately $55 million has been allocated over three years to continue the multi-media campaign aimed at preventing tobacco use among youth. The proposed new campaign will be designed to appeal to older teens with a particular focus on teenage girls. Consultations related to this new initiative are ongoing at this time and involve the provinces, non-governmental organizations and the private sector.

Statistics related to the use of cigarettes since the action plan on smuggling was initiated. I would remind the honourable member that less than four months have passed since this plan was announced.

Senator Berntson: Perhaps you should have saved this until the media was here.

Senator Bosa: On the second question, an examination of the statistics available from Statistics Canada on the production and disposition, but not the actual consumption, of tobacco products over this short time period gives no indication of any particular trend. While domestic sales of cigarettes, those invoiced to wholesalers, retailers, and institutions, were up in March, they were down in April. This type of monthly change occurred in previous years also and is really more a reflection of wholesalers' and retailers' expectations than of actual sales.

As analysts at Statistics Canada stated, more figures are needed before anything definitive can be said about the impact of the tax roll-back on sales construction.

On the question of the impact of the tax roll-back on smuggling, the Statistics Canada figures for the last few months show a steady decrease in the export of cigarettes. This suggests that the February decision to cut cigarette taxes has greatly reduced the potential profits for smugglers who were buying cheaper tax-free Canadian cigarettes and returning them for illegal sales in Canada. However, as with the domestic sales figures, trends over time will tell the full story.

• (1540)

I hope that the honourable gentleman will relate this information to Senator Di Nino. I am sure he will be very pleased to learn the particulars.

On motion of Senator Bosa, for Senator Spivak, debate adjourned.

SECOND WORLD WAR

PARTICIPATION OF CANADIAN TROOPS IN ITALIAN CAMPAIGN—INQUIRY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin rose pursuant to notice of June 2, 1994:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the heroic and essential contribution made by Canadian troops to the Italian campaign in 1943 and 1944, and the pilgrimage that he and other Canadian parliamentarians, including the Secretary of State for Veterans' Affairs, had the privilege of going on in Sicily and Italy in the company of 50 veterans of all provinces of Canada, from May 2 to May 20, 1994.

He said: Honourable senators, I wish to briefly launch my inquiry today. Unfortunately I did not have time to deliver this inquiry on June 14, according to the notice I had given to the Senate, for the simple reason that we have been so busy around here on committees that I had not had the leisure of doing much of the reading I wanted to do in preparation for the inquiry.

Canada commemorated, as it ought to have done, the Normandy landings. Our colleague Senator Molgat participated actively in those ceremonies. From May 5 to 20, I was fortunate to participe in the pilgrimage to Italy with the Secretary of State for Veterans Affairs, in the company of some 50 veterans of the Italian campaign, which preceded the Normandy landings.

Great publicity has been given, as it should have been, to the Normandy landings and the subsequent events. I would not suggest that the effort, the courage, and the heroism of Canadians who participated with other Allies in the Italian campaign has been swept under the carpet, but it has not been given the attention it merited, and still merits.

The object of my inquiry, once I have dug into the historical facts, is to deal with just that. The Italian campaign produced a number of Victoria Crosses. One of the recipients of the Victoria Cross participated as well in the Normandy ceremonies. I am sure Senator Molgat met Smokey Smith, who is well advanced in age.

Senator Perrault: Where is he from?

Senator Corbin: Of course he is from your area, Senator Perrault. He carries his name very well. I guess he was a track champion in his younger days, and that is where he got his name. He could also be called Smiley Smith, because he smiles all the time, and he is a great person. He was accompanied during the pilgrimage by his wife, and they, along with the 49 other veterans, did Canada a great honour.

A number of parliamentarians, as I said earlier, accompanied the Secretary of State and the veterans, as well as some hard-working civil servants. Senator Simard was also part of that pilgrimage, and there were three members from the House of Commons. In other words, each party in both Houses delegated either a member of the House of Commons or a senator to accompany the group.

In those days of the campaign, these soldiers were all young men, just 17 or 18 years of age. Some of them lied about their age because they wanted to get involved in the fighting. A lot of them are no longer around. Those who did accompany us on the pilgrimage are still quite remarkable men and women. We had a representative of the nursing sisters accompany us. If my memory serves me well, we visited over 10 Canadian or Commonwealth cemeteries in Sicily and Italy.

At a later date, honourable senators, I will continue with this inquiry.

The Hon. the Speaker: I must ask Senator Corbin if he intends to adjourn the inquiry.

Senator Corbin: Absolutely, honourable senators.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: I would suggest to Senator Corbin, as I think he knows, that the best book on the subject is The D-day Draft Dodgers. It is an excellent account of that campaign.

Senator Corbin: You are quite right, senator, and that is one of the books I want to go through before I make my intervention.

On motion of Senator Corbin, debate adjourned.

JEAN KERR

FELICITATIONS ON RETIREMENT FROM SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith: Honourable senators, if I may, a very brief indulgence. We will not be sitting here on June 30. Jean Kerr, who has been with the Senate for 30 years, will be retiring as of that date. I believe her Senate career merits recognition on the Senate record.

Jean has served, as I said, for 30 years in the Senate in various, as she said in her letter of resignation, "interesting and challenging positions," and they are as follows: From February 3, 1964, to October of 1981, she was secretary to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator Connolly; from April, 1968 to December 30, 1981, she was secretary to Senator Connolly and also to Robert Fortier, the then Clerk of the Senate; from January, 1982, to January 23, 1984, with Charles Lussier who was the Clerk of the Senate; and from January 23 on, secretary to the Deputy Leader of the Government, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, and the Leader of the Opposition.

I hope you will join with me in expressing our thanks and best wishes to her as an outstanding example of the excellent staff that serves the Senate loyally and competently, day after day, year after year, decade after decade. In her case, three decades.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

CANADA'S DEFENCE POLICY

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE OF DATE OF FINAL REPORT—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have received the following message from the House of Commons:

> Ordered.— That, notwithstanding its order of reference of Wednesday, February 23, 1994, the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Defence Policy be empowered to present its final report no later than Monday, October 31, 1994, to coincide with the date given the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Foreign Policy for its final report, and that a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours therein.
>
> ATTEST
>
> CAMILLE MONTPETIT
> for The Clerk of the House of Commons

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, July 6, 1994, at 2:00 p.m..

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 6, 1994

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

THE SENATE

ON THE NATURE OF DEBATE

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have a brief autobiographical comment. My best friend and I spent our youth boxing against one another, beating each other's brains out. We still loved one another. After all these years, we still do.

That is my way of saying that, if I engage in verbal pugilism with anyone opposite, it is not because I do not appreciate you or like you or respect you. I will think of you this summer with affection, as I will think of the people on our side with affection, because I have been proud to know you. I have been honoured to be with you, and I still am.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE PIERRE ELLIOTT TRUDEAU

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF RESIGNATION

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I should like the Senate to take note that June 29 marked the tenth anniversary of the resignation of Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau and his government.

To that I will only add my comment that I am sure neither he nor his government wants to take responsibility for what has followed at the hands of his immediate successor.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

POVERTY IN CANADA

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. Ethel Cochrane: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I would ask permission to table, on behalf of Senator Macquarrie, a document printed in both official languages entitled Poverty in Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

ANNUAL REPORT OF COMMISSIONER TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the annual report of the Commissioner of Official Languages for the period ended March 31, 1992, pursuant to the Privacy Act.

YUKON FIRST NATIONS LAND CLAIMS SETTLEMENT BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the third report of the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples concerning Bill C-33, to approve, give effect to and declare valid land claims agreements entered into between her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada, the Government of the Yukon Territory and certain first nations in the Yukon Territory, to provide for approving, giving effect to and declaring valid other land claims agreements entered into after this Act comes into force, and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

I ask that the report, including the appendix, be appended to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent record of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

Senator Andreychuk: Honourable senators, I would request leave of the Senate to say a few words. However, I wish to delay my comments on Bill C-33 until after I have presented the report on Bill C-34, so that I can address both bills together, if that is acceptable.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Royce Frith: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words, but first, a credo: I believe that rights and status should not be based on race.

What has that to do with Bill C-34, the first full-blown self-government bill? This bill, we know, is a landmark in the process of righting a history of wrongs. I think those wrongs were the result of a wrong principle, namely treating the aboriginal peoples differently and badly because of their race; that is, basing status and rights on ethnicity, or race.

While this bill crowns with success decades of long, hard struggle to right many wrongs, its basis, its underpinnings, its ideology, or parts thereof, perpetuate the same wrong principle that led to the very wrongs it seeks to right, and that is basing status and rights on race.

In Bill C-34, the word "right" is not used to describe the powers being given to the first nations people. However, the concept of rights can be inferred from the law-making ability the first nations will have, such that they will be able to confer rights and privileges on citizens. Citizens under the bill are defined as:

> ... in relation to a first nation, means a citizen as determined in accordance with the constitution of the first nation;

Bill C-34 awards rights premised on racial distinction. It creates a new category of Canadian citizens and would award the Yukon First Nations peoples dual citizenship.

The bill itself refers to such citizenship in clause 8.(1)(a). The main part of the section reads:

> The constitution of a first nation named in Schedule II shall, in a manner consistent with its self-government agreement, provide for
>
> (a) a citizenship code that includes the requirements for citizenship in the first nation and the procedure for determining whether the person is a citizen.

The delegation from the Yukon First Nations recognized this dual citizenship as being created by the bill. In the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples which met on Monday, I asked David Joe, legal counsel and negotiator for the first nations, a question:

> As a Canadian citizen, I have rights and duties to the municipality I live in, and to the province I live in, but this is creating a new category of citizens. Would they still be Canadian citizens as well?
>
> Mr. Joe: Yes.
>
> Senator Frith: They would still all be Canadian citizens, plus citizens of first nations?
>
> Mr. Joe: Yes, and that reflects the current status quo in Canada.

With this new status comes rights, responsibilities and powers. First nations natives become citizens gaining legal rights and privileges in many areas that were previously administered or controlled by provincial or federal branches of government. Rights are limited to them as defined in the bill, and by their leaders who have the power to say who is and who is not a citizen. That is covered in clause 11:

> 11.(1) A first nation named in Schedule II has, to the extent provided by its self-government agreement ...
>
> (c) the power to enact laws of a local or private nature applicable on the first nation's settlement land in relation to the matters enumerated in Part III of Schedule III.

There is a very large number of items therein enumerated.

Bill C-34 would give the first nations numerous powers, such as the power to enact laws in relation to taxation as described in Part IV of Schedule III; to administer justice; to make provisions for health care services and social and welfare services, and the guardianship of children. That was covered on page 14 of the unrevised transcript of the committee's hearings. Of course, I cannot give you the reference to the final report or proceedings of the committee.

• (1410)

These all can be argued to be necessary powers to implement self-government, and they are. However, we must understand that these rights are not for any Canadian. They are only for citizens of the First Nations of Yukon. The governing body of the first nations will determine the requirements for citizenship that will or will not qualify someone as a first nation citizen. If one is not a first nation native so defined, one will not enjoy the privileges we are being asked to confer on first nation citizens. We are awarding rights not enjoyed by all Canadians to a certain group of Canadians, based on the qualification of race. Race will determine who will enjoy these privileges, however deserved they are.

That is not a principle with which I can agree. I feel that status and rights based on race are constitutionally and jurisprudentially pernicious, though I support the end reached here, namely the attempt to right a long history of wrongs and to establish what we must accept is an exciting new concept; that is, self-government for the aboriginal peoples, a concept and a construction that will eventually put us as Canadians in the forefront of nations who treat their aboriginal peoples with justice. Therefore, although I support the end result here, I believe that the means, status and rights based on race will be seen, in the long run, to have spawned unanticipated, undesirable results in other contexts, and for other races.

Honourable senators, I realize that it is very late for me to be raising this point, because really the concepts that I have talked about do not appear here for the first time in the law of Canada or even in the Constitution. I do not want to stop, or be the instrument of stopping, a very important historic event, and that is the first, as I understand it, full-blown experiment in aboriginal self-government. I record my reservations, therefore, only to say that the enthusiasm I otherwise have for this important day is somewhat diminished by my concern for a pernicious principle embodied in the legislation.

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Honourable senators, I thought the understanding was that we would speak to Bills C-33 and C-34 after I had introduced the standing committee report on Bill C-34.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I do not want to offend. I understand the bill was reported without amendment.

Senator Di Nino: Bill C-33 was, but Bill C-34 has not yet been reported.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, if any bill is reported without amendment, it stands adopted without debate, and the sponsor of the bill then moves third reading. Therefore we were at third reading, not introduction of the report. That is why I stood up. I did not mean to deprive the honourable senator of her ranking in the debate.

Senator Andreychuk: Honourable senators, the thought was that, for expediency, we could deal with Bills C-33 and 34 together, because they are so closely linked, and that I would speak to them after the presentation of both reports. I have no problem with speaking to them now, so I shall go ahead and make my comments on Bills C-33 and C-34.

Honourable senators, as you know, the bills were introduced in the chamber on the last sitting day at 12:15 p.m., and were subsequently referred later that day to the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples. That committee met shortly on that date, and we have met again since. I will refer to the process presently, but on behalf of the committee, I wish to say that we were unanimous. We were also unanimous in some of our concerns, as well as our support for Bill C-33 and Bill C-34.

Honourable senators, the committee recognized the long process that the Yukon Tribal Council and the aboriginal peoples entered into with the Government of Canada, a process that has involved many governments and many ministers over the years. This long process of some 20 years' duration led to the umbrella agreement in 1993, which I believe was a satisfactory consultative process for the Government of Canada, the people of Canada, and the peoples who make up the Yukon Tribal Council.

I was convinced, as were other members, that consultation took place with all levels of government and all groups, including those groups which were not directly affected, but were peripherally affected. Therefore, the umbrella agreement upon which the process will proceed is an admirable one for the Yukon people and for the people of Canada.

Honourable senators, it is very important to note, as the committee noted, that Bill C-33, Bill C-34 and the surface rights agreement yet to be entered into are agreements unique to the Yukon Territory. Many questions were asked in committee about whether this would set a precedent for further negotiations. Both parties satisfactorily answered many questions. The Yukon Tribal Council said negotiations would correct issues that they saw facing them.

Uniquely, the Yukon Territory has ceded some of its authority to the first nations by virtue of these acts. Therefore, the acts were not intended to be a precedent for any other negotiations in Canada, and certainly the government officials supported that notion, indicating that it was a unique process — albeit similar in some aspects — in its totality as an agreement and a way for the future of the people of Yukon. Therefore, the process may not necessarily fit anyone else.

Should the process ever become a precedent, it would have to be the choice of other peoples in other areas, and provincial governments would certainly have something to say about that. Therefore I and the other members of the committee accepted that the process was a Yukon process.

Honourable senators, it is interesting to note that while I believe the intent of the negotiations was to fulfil aspirations and unfulfilled commitments for the Yukon Tribal Council, the process involved the Yukon people. The process involved not only self-government issues but environmental issues and others. The committee, however, was preoccupied — and I bring this to the attention of all senators — with the issue of dual citizenship, to which Senator Frith has alluded.

I believe the intent of negotiations was to create an acknowledgement of what first nations peoples were, and that they have some measure of responsibility for the conduct of their own lives and the land claims to which Bill C-33 alludes. It was indicated that words such as "membership" and "representatives" have gained taint by virtue of the Indian Act. These words and others like them were not acceptable to the Yukon First Nations. Therefore, "citizenship" or "citizens" was a more appropriate word to exemplify the existing rights and issues that they wish to address. The department, in its assessment, indicated that they had searched for other words, but with little success. However, it would be fair to say that a code will evolve out of the self-government process as to who is a citizen within the Yukon First Nations. There will be a process for Yukon First Nations people who are not recognized at the moment as being eligible to become citizens. It is not a totally exclusionary process. There is some contemplation of widening the definition, and that gave me some assurance of the good faith of this negotiation.

• (1420)

The committee was concerned that the dual citizenship issue would be confusing to Canadians. Canadians have a unique understanding of "citizenship." A committee of the House of Commons is presently addressing the issue of dual citizenship, and is trying to define citizenship. Many members of our committee felt that it was an inopportune time to create a new category of citizen and a new definition which may not be supported by international law, and certainly would not be understood elsewhere.

The committee was persuaded of two things, however. There is a definition, unique to the act, of what "citizen" means, and it means nothing more and nothing less than that act provides. Senator Frith pointed out that that does not, therefore, diminish Canadian citizenship. With regard to our concern that others may not understand this, we asked the government officials how we would be able to distinguish this type of citizenship from the traditional type of citizenship. Their answer was through education. I did not find that answer satisfactory. I believe that the government should embark on a process to determine more particularly what this type of citizenship means.

I turn now to a few other matters. Our committee received, at very short notice, two very important bills. The Yukon Tribal Council had the impression that the bills would pass last week. They had been given that impression by someone, somewhere, that the Senate process would be swift, if not superficial. That is not in the best interests of negotiations with our aboriginal peoples, nor of the rest of Canada. The committee was unanimous in noting that this is not the way to handle significant pieces of legislation. Our deliberations are necessary, and the process must be changed.

In that vein, a portion of the Yukon First Nations who were involved in the umbrella agreement raised some concerns before the House of Commons committee. Minutes before our deliberations, they requested to be heard by us, although they were not present in the city. Due to the urgency that our committee was led to believe existed, we did not hear from the Kaska Nation. Only later did many of us find out that Bill C-33 and Bill C-34 cannot, or will not, be proclaimed until the surface rights agreement is brought forward, which is anticipated to happen some time in the fall. We would have heard that group had we known that that urgency did not exist.

Consequently, the committee has asked that its report, comments and recommendations be appended to today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.

The first recommendation is that the government and the Kaska Nation pursue negotiations in good faith and with due diligence over the period of the next two to three months.

• (1430)

The second recommendation is that the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples monitor the status of these negotiations and request an update from the minister or departmental officials in the fall, and from time to time as the committee feels is warranted.

Those two recommendations, in a similar form, were passed in the House of Commons. Owing to the fact that the Kaska Nations feel that their area of interest spans not only the Yukon but British Columbia, they did not want only the Yukon First Nations agreements to apply to them; they wished to negotiate all of their settlements with the government, and they would have some concerns if that did not go in tandem.

We also believe that that should have happened. Since it has not, and since the government will now negotiate with due diligence, we wish to be on the record as having stated that we believe that this should happen before proclamation of any of the three bills and that the Senate committee should follow those negotiations.

Because we did not have the opportunity to afford the Kaska Nation the right to appear on Bill C-33 and Bill C-34, the committee deemed it appropriate to ask for a third recommendation: that if and when the Yukon Surface Rights Bill receives second reading in the Senate, it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples and that the Kaska Nation be invited to come before the committee to testify at that time.

This process cannot have any validity if it is not given a proper airing by all those affected. It is not to determine whether their concerns are appropriate or valid; but they must be heard if justice is to be assured. Since there was no immediacy, we question the process of how it was brought here, but we believe it can be corrected if the Kaska Nation is heard, if it so wishes, when the third bill comes forward.

Bill C-33 and Bill C-34 seem to have moved rather quickly, particularly Bill C-34. The committee believes that Bill C-33 is similar to other land claims agreements and there was nothing unusual or different about it. However, the committee feels that Bill C-34 represents the first time that self-government has entered into an agreement with aboriginal peoples in such a forceful manner. There are concerns as to whether this is a complete negotiation or whether this will lead to further negotiations.

I personally believe that the issue of good faith is important throughout this process and that it is time that the aboriginal people be given responsibility for their own issues within their own areas and that outstanding disputes be settled in order that we can, with them, as a Canadian nation, move forward.

I believe that the self-government in these two bills does not, on its face, move the rights that the Yukon First Nations wished any further forward than they would have been otherwise. It simply now embodies them in Bill C-34. There is some qualifier to that, because of course we do not control further interpretations or court decisions flowing from that. The committee chose to place good faith in this negotiation, in all of the governments and committees that have dealt with this matter previously, and particularly in the Yukon Council.

Therefore, I believe that it is an historic moment in the Senate. I believe that it is an agreement that the government should now look at and clarify to ensure that there is no misunderstanding, and that this process does not lead to further difficulties, but begins a new chapter in our relationship with aboriginal peoples.

The Hon. the Speaker: Before I put the question, I would apologize to Senator Andreychuk for not having alerted her right away that, pursuant to the rules, we had to proceed from one bill to the other in an orderly fashion. I could not bunch them together, so to speak. I do apologize. I think we have the point clarified.

Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

YUKON FIRST NATIONS SELF-GOVERNMENT BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the fourth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples concerning Bill C-34, an Act respecting self-government for first nations in the Yukon Territory.

I ask that the report, including the appendix, be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day, and that it form part of the permanent record of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith: Honourable senators, because I thought we were dealing with both bills at the same time, the comments I made earlier on Bill C-33 are relevant to Bill C-34. Moreover, I should, for the record, state that the examples that I gave were quotes from Bill C-34, the self-government bill, rather than Bill C-33, the land claims bill.

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: That was precisely the reason I rose. It was not to receive an apology from Your Honour, it was simply to ensure that I was following the procedure. My comments were intended for Bill C-33 and Bill C-34.

With one exception, Bill C-34, in my opinion, is a historic bill in that it creates a form of government in Canada that is different from those that were in place before. However, in my interpretation, that does not change the issue of citizenship. I think we are all still peoples of Canada and citizens of Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is the house ready for the question, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(b), it is moved by the Honourable Senator Watt, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marchand, that this bill be read the third time now.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[Translation]

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT AGREEMENTS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Wednesday, July 6, 1994

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

EIGHTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-22, An Act respecting certain agreements concerning the redevelopment and operations of Terminals 1 and 2 at Lester B. Pearson International Airport, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, June 23, 1994, examined the said Bill and now reports the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 2, clause 3: Strike out lines 1 to 3 and substitute the following:

   "3. The agreements are hereby declared to have no legal effect on and after April 13, 1994."

2. Page 2, clause 4: Strike out lines 7 and 8 and substitute the following:

   "hereby declared terminated on April 13, 1994."

3. Page 2, clause 5: Strike out line 19 and substitute the following:

   "declared to have no legal effect on and after April 13, 1994."

4. Pages 2 and 3: Delete clause 7 and renumber the subsequent clauses accordingly.

5. Page 3: Delete clause 8 and renumber the subsequent clauses accordingly.

6. Page 3, clause 9: Strike out lines 7 to 9 and substitute the following:

   "9. No one is entitled to any compensation from Her Majesty by reason of the application of this Act, except any entitlement to compensation that arose before April 13, 1994 in respect of the agreements."

Respectfully submitted,

GÉRALD-A. BEAUDOIN,
Chairman

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, at the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator Beaudoin: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate —

The Hon. the Speaker: I am sorry, but we did not hear. Perhaps the person responsible for the console did not see Senator Prud'homme rise.

Senator Prud'homme: Your Honour, I think that the Rules of the Senate require 24 hours' notice for any substantial amendment to a bill reported by a Senate committee. The Rules of the Senate are very clear. It is rule 59(1)(c) on page 62.

I do not think that I can give my consent to consider this bill at report stage now because there must be 24 hours' notice.

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith: Speaking to the point of order of the Honourable Senator Prud'homme, Your Honour and honourable senators, the rules that have been referred to, of course, exist. However, it is not for Senator Prud'homme to move a motion concerning when the bill shall be dealt with; it is for Senator Beaudoin to do so. It normally would be at the next sitting of the Senate. However, if Senator Beaudoin wants it to be today, then he can ask for leave, after which Senator Prud'homme may want to refuse leave.

Senator Prud'homme: Exactly, honourable senators, the Honourable Senator Beaudoin did not ask for leave to proceed.

Senator Frith: You did not give him a chance.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Beaudoin, forgive me for a moment.

Honourable senators, we are having some hearing problems at this end of the chamber. I did not hear Senator Beaudoin, when Senator Prud'homme rose. I believe Senator Prud'homme said that he was rising on a point of order. That is why I heard him. However, I should have asked for leave, which I gather is what Senator Beaudoin had requested, although I did not hear him.

[Translation]

Senator Beaudoin: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(g), I move that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration later this day.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Prud'homme: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Since leave is not granted, honourable senators, the motion for third reading will be put at the next sitting of the Senate.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps Senator Prud'homme could explain why he is refusing leave. At least he owes us the courtesy of an explanation. If he has a problem with the bill or with the report, then perhaps we could discuss that.

Senator Prud'homme: Your Honour, I would be more than delighted. Since yesterday, I have been requesting advice from those all around me. I was told that once a senator has said, "No", the issue cannot be debated.

I am courteous enough to my colleagues that I am ready to say exactly why I do not want the debate on this important bill to proceed today. However, the rules do not allow me to do so. Having put myself in the hands of able senior senators, I am told that I am not allowed to explain because, if I do, then it becomes a debate.

Honourable senators were asked to give leave. I regret, I have said today that I do not give my consent. I have reasons, of course. I will certainly debate the issue tomorrow, since the issue will be postponed only until tomorrow. I will explain tomorrow what I would otherwise wish to explain now. However, if a debate is started, then honourable senators know that I will be out of order.

Hon. C. William Doody: You can explain now, with leave.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I am informed that pursuant to the rules, when there is not unanimous consent, there can be no debate.

Senator Doody: But he can explain, with leave.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, could we not, with unanimous consent, give Senator Prud'homme the chance to explain his reasons?

The Hon. the Speaker: I have some difficulty, in that the record of the Senate is made possible by sound and not by gesture. Senator Bosa has made a suggestion. I have to interpret by his gestures that Senator Prud'homme does not agree to my putting the question of unanimous consent. Am I right?

Senator Prud'homme: You are absolutely right, Your Honour.

The Hon. the Speaker: Then we will proceed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, July 7, 1994, at ten o'clock in the morning.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

• (1450)

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. John Sylvain, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(a), moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at ten o'clock in the morning tomorrow, Thursday, July 7, 1994, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS ACT

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition praying that the house may be pleased to remove the exemption of tobacco from the Hazardous Products Act.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

HUMAN RIGHTS POLICIES—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Ghitter, calling the attention of the Senate to the Human Rights Policies, or lack thereof, of the Government of Canada—(Honourable Senator Austin).

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I wish to speak on Order No. 19, standing in the name of Senator Austin. I should like to make some comments today.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, Senator Austin is not here at the moment, but, speaking for this side, I do not have any objection and I yield to Senator Di Nino.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Di Nino: Honourable senators, let me begin by commending my colleague Senator Ghitter for bringing forward this inquiry into the policies of government with respect to human rights. I want to thank as well all those who contributed to the discussion on this issue. My hope is that we will all come away from the discussion with a greater appreciation of what it is Canada can and should do if we are to remain true to our values when confronted with flagrant abuses of human rights. More than that, I hope that we come away with a shared understanding of the threat posed by such abuses and the need to address them firmly and openly in policies relating to aid and foreign policy in general. Only by doing so will we help others succeed in their struggle to obtain the rights and freedoms we enjoy and too often take for granted as Canadians.

Rights violations continue rampantly and systematically in many countries. I am appalled that the Chrétien government would stoop to treat these abuses one way in Haiti but quite another way elsewhere, largely depending upon the amount of trade between Canada and these countries. It is worse than hypocritical. It will lead inevitably to inconsistencies in foreign policy and will destroy our credibility among nations that look to Canada for leadership in the struggle for human rights.

I do not wish to dwell on the inconsistencies of the Liberal government in its approach to human rights generally; my focus today will be on human rights violations in China. Certainly, the suppression of Tibet and the massacre at Tiananmen Square are the most highly visible, tragic and offensive of these abuses.

Honourable senators are already aware of my views regarding China's aggression against the people of Tibet. As I mentioned last March, the Dalai Lama produced a five-point peace plan. We should be encouraging the Government of China to accept this plan.

On May 23, 1991, the United States Congress and Senate passed a resolution calling Tibet, including those areas incorporated into Chinese provinces, an occupied country whose true representatives are the Dalai Lama and the Tibetan government in exile, as recognized by the Tibetan people.

On March 24, 1994, Senator Frith, then Leader of the Opposition, said that he would gladly support a resolution similar to the one passed by the U.S. Congress incorporating the five-point peace plan. I wish to advise honourable senators that it is my intention to present such a motion for your consideration at an early opportunity. It is my earnest hope that Senator Frith and his colleagues will see fit to give it favourable consideration at that time.

No one knows for sure how many students, men, women and children died in the massacre at Tiananmen Square on June 4, 1989. It is still an indictable offence in China to challenge the official government count of 300. Amnesty International says it was at least 1,000. University of Toronto historian Timothy Brook says that 2,600 died. Maclean's put the number at as many as 5,000. Troops armed with AK-47 assault rifles and machine guns continued the killing throughout that dark night and well into the next day. In one incident, 11 people were crushed to death by an armoured personnel carrier that overtook students walking back to their universities.

Five years after the mass murder, China's leaders have yet to offer a syllable of regret or apology. China's leaders have thumbed their noses continuously at criticism of their position on human rights, environmental issues, and their preoccupation with nuclear power for other than peaceful purposes.

That is not all, of course. Marian Botsford Fraser, President of PEN Canada, points out that there were 1,600 executions in China last year. Prison camp labour is used to mass-produce products for the North American market. China persists in ignoring the human rights of thousands of imprisoned "counter-revolutionaries." A World Bank report says more than 30 million Chinese citizens have been evicted from their homes in the past four decades. All this takes place in the absence of anything resembling an independent judicial system.

Former Secretary of State for External Affairs Barbara McDougall noted in a recent article published in The Toronto Star, that:

> We have seen in very recent years success in the long fight for freedom in Eastern Europe, the turnover of virtually every military dictatorship in Latin America, the collapse of apartheid in South Africa, and the toppling of the totalitarian behemoth in the former Soviet Union. A variety of factors has combined to bring about those changes, but the impact of international pressure should not be discounted.
>
> That is why the recent actions of Western democracies, particularly Canada, with respect to China, is so disappointing. This is not the time, if ever there is one, to abandon the pursuit of human rights in the world's most populous nation.

Richard Gwyn put it well in The Toronto Star on June 1 when he said that in kowtowing to China, we are in danger of losing our self-respect.

> We've fallen silent, not simply about China's record on human rights but about our own values.

Commenting on the fifth anniversary of Tiananmen Square, he added:

> Either leaders, from Clinton to Jean Chrétien, will talk loudly about the West's ideals, and about the departures from them in China and elsewhere, or they'll kowtow. And those who kowtow never quite stand up straight again.

We all know what happened next: Prime Minister Chrétien declared he was not in a position to tell the President of China what to do. Canada, he said, was too small, too insignificant, to have much effect.

Foreign Minister Ouellet said:

> I don't think it is wise to say, "If you don't make progress on human rights we're going to punish you and not deal with you on other subjects."

Later, he added that "a lot of time has passed" since the events at Tiananmen, and that he did not want to get "bogged down" in this issue.

Amnesty International voiced its concern over this government's position on China, stating as reported in The Globe and Mail on June 1:

> ...in the stampede to take advantage of trade opportunities, Mr. Chrétien and other Canadian politicians are guilty of wilful public neglect of Canada's commitment to the protection of international human rights...
>
> Canada's public silence about human rights violations is interpreted by the Chinese government as recognition that they were justified in crushing the democratic opposition in 1989.

All this, honourable senators, sends the wrong message to the courageous and selfless defenders of basic rights and freedoms everywhere. It is simply wrong for this government to deviate from Canada's longstanding policy of understanding, compassion, and support for all those who reach out to us.

Consider for a moment the plight of some 4,500 people who applied to Canada for refugee status following the Tiananmen Square massacre five years ago. Immigration Minister Marchi said last March he would decide once and for all whether to deport them all by this summer.

Chinese Canadian leaders told the Montreal Gazette that they were fearful the refugee claimants would be sent back to China, in order to curry favour with the regime in Beijing. They suggested it was all part of a cynical plan on the part of the new Liberal government to sacrifice Canada's traditional human rights concerns to help smooth the way for Canadian companies eager to do business in China.

Kenneth Cheung, president of the Montreal Chinese Professional and Business People's Association, said that instead of pandering to the régime in Beijing, Canada should:

> ...live up to its traditional position of playing a leadership role in international human rights commitments....

This is not an episode which enhances in any way Canada's long and well-deserved reputation as a leader in the struggle for human rights and freedoms, both at home and abroad.

There is no doubt that trade with China is increasingly important to Canada. Our two-way trade has grown substantially in recent years, reaching $4.6 billion in 1993. Growth in our exports of manufactured goods to China has been strong, particularly in the sectors of electrical equipment, machinery and construction materials. China remains a large market for exports of Canadian wheat, with sales totalling some $400 million in 1993, down from $1 billion in 1992.

Canadian companies have invested some $300 million in China, and a growing number of companies are interested in expanding their operations through foreign investment. China's largest investment in Canada is in the Castlegar Pulp and Paper Mill in British Columbia.

I agree with those who say that Canada can have some influence on the Chinese government by being a partner — rather than by being absent from China's affairs. However, I accept such a notion only in the absence of far more concerted efforts on the part of Canada and the international community. Worldwide trade sanctions against China — sponsored by the United Nations — may yet be required before China mends its ways.

However, this government is wrong in suggesting that we are limited to two mutually exclusive alternatives, one being open trade and the other being a hard line in support of human rights. I choose to view these two choices as interdependent, and in Canada's national interest.

What is to prevent us from expanding trade with China in a number of areas while restricting shipments of nuclear equipment in light of last month's underground test, as an example? Will our bilateral trade with China suffer if we continue to welcome refugees from that country? It is doubtful. In fact, it is high time we went the extra mile by offering sanctuary in Canada to refugees from Tibet. It is my understanding that only two or three Tibetans were granted refugee status last year. This is unacceptable.

The Globe and Mail commented in an editorial June 4:

> Like shoppers at a Boxing Day sale, Western dignitaries are trampling each other in the rush to take part in the Chinese economic miracle — with Canada leading the pack.

Perhaps we need to rethink this resurgent exchange in top-level visits between Canada and China. Remember that China's leaders welcome such visits as an opportunity to earn foreign exchange, all the while using such visits to convince their people that Western leaders condone or support their leadership.

I cannot accept, even for a moment, what appears to be the personal diplomatic stance of the Prime Minister, based as it is on the notion that Canada is somehow too small, too insignificant to influence the struggle for basic human rights and freedoms in a country the size of China.

We are one of the world's seven largest economies, one of the major voices at the United Nations. We belong to more international bodies than any other country, including the Asia-Pacific Economic Conference. We are represented on the boards of directors of international financial institutions, including the Asia Development Bank. These organizations regularly present opportunities for Canada to press for a concerted international effort to advance the cause of human rights, as does the GATT, which soon will consider an application for membership from China.

We must recognize that the impact of Canadian action, whether bilaterally or multilaterally, will be more like water on stone than a thunderclap of change. The dilemma we face in balancing economic interests with the promotion of fundamental values is real enough. In the long run, we will put our own prosperity at risk if we fail to adhere to our own set of values in our dealings with other countries.

Speaking to you on June 14, Senator Ghitter suggested five steps Canada could take to promote human rights in China and elsewhere. Let me repeat them: Exposing and criticizing nations whose human rights records are unacceptable; striving to maintain the best human rights record possible within our own country; using our influence at the United Nations, the World Bank, the IMF, GATT and other international organizations; refusing ourselves to buy, and encouraging our trading partners not to buy, goods from countries producing goods under slave labour conditions; taking steps to overcome obstacles to human rights, for example, helping to build an independent and corrupt-free judiciary in these countries.

• (1510)

I am happy to support Senator Ghitter's suggestions.

Honourable senators, Canada has stood straight and tall and should be proud of its reputation as a world leader in defending the weak, holding out hope for the desperate and setting an example for all nations. However, we have come to a fork in the road. We are in danger of straying from the path we have followed for so long. We are in danger of losing our way. "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Now is the time to uphold and promote the rights, the freedoms, and the fundamental human values we enjoy as Canadians, rights and values even today debased and denied in so many parts of the world.

Honourable senators, I invite all of you to join me in sending a strong message to Mr. Chrétien, Mr. Ouellet and others in government, but more important than that, a strong message to the leaders in China. That message is that the values of Canada and Canadians are not for sale at any price.

On motion of Senator Bosa, for Senator Austin, debate adjourned.

SOUTH AFRICA

FIRST DEMOCRATIC ELECTIONS—INQUIRY

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Oliver, calling the attention of the Senate to his participation as a United Nations observer at last month's first Democratic Elections in South Africa.—(Honourable Senator Cools).

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable Senators, I rise today to take part in the debate on the enquiry of Senator Oliver regarding the United Nations Observer Mission to the elections in South Africa.

I would like to begin by stating that I, too, went to South Africa as one of Canada's participants with UNOMSA, the United Nations Observation Mission in South Africa, on the occasion of this election.

The precise number of IEOs, Independent Electoral Observers, from Canada was 35, all nominated by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Andre Ouellet. I would like to put their names on the record, with the indulgence of fellow senators. Their names are as follows: Mr. Andy Anstett, Mr. Wellington Borland, Mrs. Rosemary Cairns, Mr. Alan Cassels, Mr. John Courtney, Mr. Almon Dale, Mr. Garth Dalton, Mrs. Sandra Delgaty, Mr. Pierre Fafard, Mr. Maurice Foster, Mrs. Georgette Gagnon, Mrs. Brigitte Gauvreau, Dr. Richard Heinzl, Dr. Eric Hoskins, Mrs. Sylvie Jacmain, Mr. Edward Lee, Mr. He Liu, the Honourable Flora McDonald, the Honourable Lorne Nystrom, the Honourable Donald Oliver, Mr. Robert Patterson, Mrs. Eileen Peters, Mrs. Lise Provost, Mr. Stephen Toope, Mrs. Linda Trimble, Mr. Alan Tupper, Mr. Barry Turner, Mr. Kent Vachon, Mrs. Alida Vokey, Mr. Patrick Wansbrough, Mrs. Shawn Ward, Mr. Dermot Whelan, Mrs. Sandra Wilson, Mr. Merill Wigginton and myself. These persons were the Canadian IEOs to South Africa.

This stupendous event in South Africa was made possible by the social and political collapse of the U.S.S.R. and the personal and political character of two men, Mr. Frederik Willem de Klerk and Mr. Nelson Mandela. I think that this South African election is the single most impressive political event of the decade, possibly the century. It is certainly an enormous testimony to human endurance, to political will, and to political skill.

It is indeed a pleasure to see once again South African products and produce such as fine wines, Outspan oranges, Granny Smith apples, and all such other splendid produce returned to the shelves for eager consumers of this country to purchase. It is a great joy to see this resurgence of commercial activity between our two countries, because any visit to South Africa quickly reveals the damage inflicted by the economic sanctions.

I would like to put on the record a little bit of the history of Canada-South Africa relations. I would like to begin by addressing the particular issue of South Africa's departure from the Commonwealth of Nations on May 31, 1961. As you know, the Prime Minister of Canada at that time was the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker, and he played an important role in the events at Lancaster House. We must be mindful that Mr. Diefenbaker held the view that the door should be left open to South Africa.

I read as follows from an article that was printed in the London Times on March 16, 1961. The headline reads, "South Africa Decides to Leave the Commonwealth (1961)." The article says:

> As the debate went on it became more and more clear that attacks upon apartheid within the Commonwealth would increase in future. Dr. Verwoerd evidently came gradually to the view that the basic difference over racial policy would in practice continue to create strains for South Africa and for the Commonwealth, which were becoming, and would increasingly be, intolerable.
>
> At this point he took, in the British view, the honest course. With much dignity and restraint he rose to tell the other Prime Ministers that he felt that South Africa was not welcome as a member and was in fact an embarrassment. After a short adjournment he announced that he thought it better both for South Africa and for the Commonwealth to withdraw the application for readmission to membership.
>
> There were others last night who thought that a dangerous precedent had been created by the attacks upon a member's policy, but many argued too, that South Africa's racial policy was certainly not just an internal matter. As but one clear and concrete proof of this they pointed, for instance, to her refusal to permit non-white diplomatic missions from other Commonwealth countries.
>
> Many felt that in the end the Commonwealth would gain, and hoped one day to see South Africa return to the fold. The argument about who was to blame — whether South Africa was forced out, or by her policy made her departure inevitable — will certainly continue for years.
>
> Soon after Dr. Verwoerd left Lancaster House, this statement was issued:
>
> > At their meetings this week, the Commonwealth Prime Ministers have discussed questions affecting South Africa.
> >
> > On March 13 the Prime Minister of South Africa informed the meeting that: following the plebiscite in October, 1960, the appropriate constitutional steps were now being taken to introduce a republican form of constitution in the Union, and that it was the desire of the Union Government that South Africa should remain within the Commonwealth as a republic.

> In connection with this application the meeting also discussed, with the consent of the Prime Minister of South Africa, the racial policy followed by the Union Government.
>
> The Prime Minister of South Africa informed the other Prime Ministers this evening that in the light of the views expressed on behalf of other member Governments and the indications of their future intentions regarding the racial policy of the Union Government, he had decided to withdraw his application for South Africa's continuing membership in the Commonwealth.

I wanted to put that on the record because even today, 30 years later, there is much contention as to whether South Africa left or was expelled from the Commonwealth. Today, however, South Africa has rejoined the Commonwealth.

I would like to continue by looking again at the relationship at the turn of the century between Canada and South Africa, being mindful of the fact that South Africa was one of the original four British Dominions. The four British Dominions were Canada, South Africa, Australia and New Zealand. For many years Canada and South Africa enjoyed most favourable diplomatic relations. In point of fact, Canada, under Sir Wilfrid Laurier, though reluctantly, sent a contingent of 7,000 to 8,000 troops to take part in the Boer War in 1899 to 1902.

Of interest in today's climate of Quebec-Canada relations and pressing Quebec sovereigntist sentiments is the fact that at the turn of the century Canadians, Englishmen, Afrikaners, and British South Africans believed that the proper solution to race relations in South Africa should be the implementation of the equivalent constitutional arrangement that Quebec and French Canadians had in Canada. I would like to put a few quotations on record to illustrate this fact.

• (1520)

I should like to quote from the United Kingdom's House of Commons Hansard of 1901, part of a debate that upheld Lord Durham's Report and proposed a constitutional arrangement, including a fusion of the races in South Africa, which essentially meant a fusion of South Africans of Dutch and British origin. Of importance to note is that, in all these discussions on democracy and constitutional arrangements, remarkably little attention was given to consideration of the black peoples of South Africa. In any event, I should like to quote Mr. Thomas Shaw, a Liberal member of Parliament, who, on April 2, 1901, rose in the House of Commons at Westminster and said:

> What hon. Gentlemen opposite are apparently contending for is the weakest form of government for distracted South Africa that could possibly be devised — I want the strongest. I want a trust in these people who are of an alien race. There was the same complexity in Canada, but under wise and free civil government the reconciliation of the two races was gradually accomplished. There is, far more than the mere question of flags, deep down this great root problem, how the Dutch and the English are to dwell in amity and concord in that portion of His Majesty's dominions. I want to see done in South Africa what was done in Canada. I want to have a full and free amnesty, and properties fully restored. I want Botha's elective assembly accepted, and that without delay. I cite in favour of all these things the precedent of Canada and the report of Lord Durham, which said that at the root of all such troubles is the question of the apparent impossibility of the fusion of the races...
>
> I plead for what in my mind and heart I believe to be a more excellent way — a present and a fuller clemency, and a future and enduring peace.

Honourable senators, that point of view was quite prominent at the turn of the century during the Boer War and immediately on the heels of the Boer War. The proposed constitutional solution that was believed to be the one that could find peace between the British and Afrikaner people in South Africa was the Canadian solution. The Canadian solution was the very special accommodations that had been made with French Canadians and Quebec.

Honourable senators, a prevalent point of view at the time maintained that the Boers of South Africa were in a similar plight to the French Canadians of Canada. Here in French Canada there was enormous sympathy and support for the Boers and President Kruger, and that point of view was reflected in Canadian politics in the persons of Sir Wilfred Laurier's Minister of Public Works, Mr. Joseph-Israël Tarte, and even Mr. Henri Bourassa.

That was the thinking at the turn of the century regarding the relations of the Boer South Africans and the British South Africans in South Africa.

I would like to share with honourable senators a few of my observations and conclusions on South Africa. I was posted to the electoral district called PWV, Pretoria-Witwatersrand-Vaal which is an extremely large area that returned 43 seats to Parliament. It includes the entire electoral area around Johannesburg, Pretoria and their environs. My assignment from the United Nations with my United Nations teammate was to an area called Kargiso, where we observed 10 polls. Kargiso, in the electoral district of PWV, is a black township located about 20 to 30 kilometres outside of Johannesburg, and about the equivalent distance from Soweto. Kargiso was a typical black township with row after row of brick bungalows. The backyards of these little brick bungalows accommodated several squatters who just lived there, squatting in makeshift circumstances, a condition for the squatters which was an upgrade from the squatter camps. The squatter camps were visible, and plentiful.

As you know, the troubles at Sharpeville, a black township, in 1960 compelled us all to focus our minds on the existence of these black townships and the problems therein.

There has been so much television coverage on the election that I am reluctant to repeat what everybody now knows, such as the long lineups for voting and the dedication and patience of the people waiting to vote. For myself, I would like to share with honourable senators my experience of participating in observing this election, which was not a happy one. It was a difficult one, it was a challenging one and in many respects it was a very dangerous one. One of my constant concerns throughout my stay was for my personal security and well-being, which I truly felt was at risk most of the time.

My observations of South Africa are as follows, and I relate them in no particular order:

On arrival in Johannesburg I became immediately aware of the high degree of personal violence, personal assault and crime. I was fast to learn that South Africa is the unhappy owner of the highest murder rate in the world. The murder rate in the area in which I was working, Kargiso and Johannesburg, is eight to ten times the murder rate in Washington, D.C., and, as Canadians, we usually think that Washington has an extremely high murder rate. This violence is most marked among the black people, with black assailants and black victims.

In the first two days of our visit, one of the IEO's from our hotel was held up at knife-point, and there was a murder right outside our hotel, the Mariston, in Johannesburg.

The presence and the visibility of force, and its use by the South African Defence Force and the South African police was somewhat overwhelming. I quickly learned the differences in their uniforms. I have never in my life seen the quality of police-armoured trucks, either in quantum or in magnitude. These armoured trucks that patrol the townships are frequently to be seen on television. They are quite often coloured yellow and blue, and they are most monstrous looking.

In talking to black and white police, I was made aware that the murder rate was so high and the level of personal violence was so prevalent that the management of bodies, of corpses, is indeed daunting. I was told by many of the police that the police college has training programs directed at stress and counselling for both black and white policemen who are distressed from dealing with the consequences of personal violence, assaults, and murders. Both black and white policemen talked to me about this problem.

The quickest, most superficial glance at the black townships very quickly revealed the fact that the black people of South Africa had been ravaged by the economic sanctions such that the unemployment rate is of staggering proportions. South Africans frequently pointed out to me little brick houses in the townships in which 12 people lived with only one person employed. It is important that the honourable senators understand that it will be at least a generation before South Africa, and in particular black South Africans, will recover from the consequences of the economic sanctions.

I observed that Afrikaners were well represented in the police forces and in the military. I heard much Afrikaans spoken by members of both the military and the police forces. I learned that Afrikaans is the official language of the South African police and the official language of police reports.

• 1540)

I observed that in South Africa, despite years of truce, despite years of supposed peace between the Afrikaners and South Africans of British extraction, the two peoples still live largely separate, and largely unintegrated. These two peoples still maintain a largely separate existence and remain two solitudes.

Again, I observed that South Africa, in many ways, is a mixture of first world and third world, if not fourth and fifth worlds. I observed enormous numbers of well-constructed roads, hospitals, and schools. The infrastructure of South Africa is most impressive, undoubtedly the finest in all of Africa. In the black township in which I worked, the 10 polls that I observed, honourable senators, were all in schools, which I found surprising.

I observed, honourable senators, enormous goodwill on the part of most white and black people. The commitment to start anew, to build afresh, was really quite remarkable. The expression of goodwill that I heard on both sides from black and white — or, in reality, four sides, if you count the black South Africans, the coloured and Indian South Africans, the English-speaking South Africans and the Afrikaner South Africans — was indeed most humbling.

I observed a strong apprehension on the part of many white and black South Africans that the new South African government might follow the path of many African countries and lean towards violence and one-party states. I heard a stated desire that this would not be the case. I heard this from large numbers of white and black people alike as they attempted to peek into the future to see what it would hold. Many black people told me they were voting ANC, but that they wanted Mr. de Klerk to continue to have a strong presence in the political life of South Africa.

The negative residue of Soviet Union-backed wars is very evident in South Africa. The negative residue of the U.S.S.R. and the consequences of Marxist activity in Africa — such as the wars in Angola and Mozambique — was very evident in the number of weapons, the ease at which these weapons were moving around the country, and the ease of their purchase. During the few weeks leading up to the elections, Soviet-made AK-47s plus 100 rounds of ammunition were selling for as little as 25 Rand. Honourable senators, 25 Rand is barely $10 Canadian. I repeat, these weapons were largely Soviet-made, and had made their way into South Africa from Angola, Mozambique and everywhere else.

The Hon. the Speaker: I apologize for interrupting, but I wish to inform the honourable senator that her time has elapsed.

Honourable senators, is there unanimous consent to allow the honourable senator to continue?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Cools: Thank you, honourable senators.

The use of these weapons is well known, given the high murder rate in the area to which I have previously made mention.

In the election process, as I observed daily at the polling stations, it was very clear that the National Party had had experience running elections. They had their players, their candidates, both black and white, and they behaved and acted like a political party. I also observed that the ANC, within my polling areas, was not so accomplished and their party agents were not as practised at being political party people. However, I have no doubt that that will come. The challenge now for Mr. Mandela and the ANC is to transform the ANC into a true political party, and a democratic one at that.

On the question of violence, again I would also like to share with senators that I observed a group of black Africans playing in a band. I observed the wounds and scars on the band members' bodies. I observed one particular individual as he was wearing his "beshu," which is a piece of animal skin that covers the lower part of the body, the loins. I observed and counted the number of scars on his body — I counted thirteen and stopped. I came to the conclusion that this was a part of growing up black in South Africa.

I observed large numbers of illiterate people voting. I saw them in droves. I observed large numbers of functional and near illiterates. I observed that pre-election voter education was frequently directed to the functionally and near illiterate. For example, some of the voter education manuals were in comic book format. I will show these to honourable senators. They are literally comic books! I have never seen this before. I was born in Barbados where there is a high level of literacy, but these comic books were the instruments used to bring voter education to the people!

I observed in conversations with many black South Africans that many of these people have extremely high expectations of the election. Many black people told me that they expected new houses, and great increases in their personal wealth. Many expected not to have to pay taxes any more, and so on and so forth. Their enthusiasm to participate in this election was unequalled. However, their expectations are a matter for concern.

These are some of my observations, honourable senators, and they are to be taken as one wishes. Some of them were quite chilling to me, and some were quite enlightening to me.

Honourable senators, it is frequently forgotten that apartheid was an Afrikaner creation. It was introduced in my lifetime, in 1948, by the governing party of South Africa, the National Party, the very same party now headed by Mr. de Klerk, who has currently led in bringing about this total transformation of South Africa. Mr. de Klerk has achieved an enormous feat.

Mr. De Klerk said some weeks before the election, and I quote:

> This election is not about ending apartheid. We have already ended it...

And a few days later he said:

> I have distanced myself from that which was wrong in my past. The ANC has not.

Mr. de Klerk states that he has distanced himself from the wrong of his past and his party, more so than Mr. Mandela. I would submit, honourable senators, that the jury is out. The reality is that the ANC has only recently abandoned its program of violent revolution, and the road ahead is indeed daunting for Mr. Mandela and the new government as they go forward, where the damage from the past is enormous and the expectations are high.

For example, honourable senators, the ANC had a policy in the seventies which called for, and I quote, "liberation and not education." Large numbers of young people dropped out of school and did not even use the limited school facilities to their maximum. Many of the schools became sites of insurrection and rebellion. This new government goes forward now with the handicaps that are the result of policies it held at earlier times in its existence.

South Africa is in Africa, and it personifies the history of Africa. It carries the collective "racial unconscious" that is a part of Africa. While there, I talked with as many of the black peoples as I could. I met and talked with black people of various tribes and languages, including the Shangaan, Venda, Sotho, Tswana, Xhosa, and Zulu, these last two being the Nguni language groups. I am told that there are at least 26 such tribal groups and languages in South Africa.

I must share with honourable senators that for years, growing up as a child in a colony, I read of the different black races of South Africa including the Matabeles, the Griquas, the Basutos, the Hottentots, the Korannas, and others, but this was the first time in my life that I had encountered, face to face, people of these races and people who spoke these languages.

The black township in which I worked, Kargiso, was largely a Tswana-speaking area. I must tell honourable senators that in my visit there, and like most people going to South Africa for the first time, I had been influenced by the enormous public relations campaigns outside of South Africa. I tended to view the Zulus with some antipathy, if not with some negative considerations. Honourable senators, if I came back with a changed perception or sensitivity, it was that I came back with a sharpened sensitivity to the plight and the condition of the Zulu people. As I said before, the United Nations was aggressive in its support of the ANC, as were the media and everyone else. Consequently, I think that the plight of the Zulu, all seven million of them, will need some close observation from Canadians.

The Zulu nation is the last African nation which remains intact. It comprises seven million people in the area of Natal-Kuazulu, formerly known as Zululand. They still have a constitutional structure of their own. They have a king, King Goodwill Zwelithini, who is the hereditary king descended from

King Tshaka. His first minister is Mangosuthu Buthelizi, who is also a direct descendant of King Tshaka's first minister. They have maintained intact many of their tribal rites, rituals, and customs. Television has shown us their war dances, their peace dances, their anger dances, and so on.

Their reputation as warriors was well known. In their various campaigns they had a reputation for fierceness, which was developed as a result of King Tshaka. King Tshaka had a penchant for killing his vanquished by impaling them with spears. King Tshaka was such a fierce fellow that when his mother died, he thought she ought to be well accompanied on her way to the next life. For that purpose, he was able to organize the death of some 5,000 people to accompany her there. In addition to this, we know that King Tshaka was accomplished as a leader and an organizer, and that he united the Zulu nation.

In South Africa I saw the bougainvillaea, the frangipane and the oleanders, all beautiful flora. South Africa is a land of enormous beauty and a land of enormous bloodletting. South Africa is the land of the Great River, the land of the Great Trek, the land of the Great Hunger and the land of the Great Killings. Because of tribal warfare some centuries ago, and because of the abundance of human wounded, the lions on the veld acquired a preference for human flesh over ordinary wild game. At some points in time during the great hungers and famines, cannibalism existed as the strong preyed upon the weak, in their hunger.

South Africa is the land of the African Bushman, the original inhabitants of South Africa, who predate the black and white South Africans. The archery skills and poisoned arrows of this strange, diminutive hunter; this strange, diminutive aboriginal; this Stone Age person, this bow-and-arrow person, caused him to be hunted by black and white South Africans alike. The Bushman, barely five feet tall, thought by many to be the oldest human being on the earth, is now nearly extinct. His numbers dwindled to dangerously low levels sometime in the 1830s due to the various raids, hunts, and campaigns at the hands of black and white Africans alike. The Bushman was killed off through deliberate acts of genocide. He is now all but extinct, except for some 100 or so who live in a national park somewhere in South Africa. Their near extinction is a terrible witness to the enormity of man's inhumanity in South Africa.

Sir Laurens van der Post, a most notable South African author, who although quite elderly is still alive, has written about the Bushmen and their terrible fate, saying:

> You cannot eliminate something precious in life without killing something in your soul.

Sir Laurens has always maintained that true harmony among the races in South Africa will only be possible once the pain and the blood of the South African Bushman has been atoned. The future will tell whether or not there will be racial harmony in South Africa.

I reported to the United Nations that, in all that I observed, I saw a fair and free election, a true testimony to political will and political capability. It was unmistakably fair and free. It was so fair and free that I concluded that the United Nations observation teams were not vital. The election was a stupendous effort, and a monumental success. Mr. de Klerk and Mr. Justice Johan Kriegler, head of the Independent Electoral Commission, accomplished a superhuman task in conceiving it, in executing it and in completing it. Mr. Mandela's personal tribulation is legend.

Honourable senators, I feel honoured and privileged that I was present, and witness to the completion of an historical process as universal suffrage was brought to the black people of South Africa. As a Canadian, I felt honoured and privileged in my knowledge that Canada, in its bilateral relationship with South Africa, had assisted in the process of bringing about that election. Canada's assistance, particularly through its Canadian electoral officers, Mr. Kingsley and Mr. Gould, was critical and, as always, firm, steady, and unobtrusive. It was a testimony to our humanity, and a testimony of our commitment to the black peoples of the world.

As I observed my ten polling stations in Kargiso, as vulnerable and as exposed as I was in South Africa, I felt that I had witnessed an appointment with destiny.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

CONSTITUTIONAL IMPLICATIONS OF UNILATERAL PROVINCIAL ATTEMPT TO DECLARE SOVEREIGNTY OR SEPARATION

INQUIRY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Royce Frith: rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, June 23, 1994:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to a letter of June 13th, 1994 from Gordon Robertson to Lise Bissonnette of Le Devoir, copies of which were sent to Le Soleil, La Presse and The Gazette, on the subject of the constitutional implications of a unilateral provincial attempt to declare sovereignty or separation.

He said: Honourable senators my motivation for this inquiry is my opinion that there should be something on the record of the Senate dealing with the question of Quebec separation and sovereignty which enables us to exchange views on the subject freely, and not on any partisan basis. I have had that feeling for some time, but I had no clear picture of how to get the matter before the Senate in such a way as to give senators an opportunity to express and exchange their views on this important matter.

We have in the Senate a number of experienced and learned constitutional lawyers and politicians. I hope that this inquiry will give them an opportunity to put forward their views so that when one looks at the Senate record of 1994, which could turn out to be a rather important year, it will be seen that this historic subject did engage the attention of senators.

Therefore, when Mr. Gordon Robertson told me about a letter which he intended to send to two French-language newspapers in Canada and one English-language newspaper, and sent me a copy of it, I decided to put that letter into the record by way of an inquiry.

I will say nothing more than that, to put it down at this stage. Interested senators can have a look at this letter over the summer. I expect to speak again after I have heard the observations of such persons experienced in the field as Senator Murray and Senator Beaudoin, and many other senators, because it is a matter of interest to all of us.

The letter was written in French to the two French-language newspapers, of course, and in English to the other. I propose simply to read the letters, but I will alternate between French and English because the letter was written in both languages.

• (1550)

I should put on the record, although I think most of us know this, that Mr. Gordon Robertson is a former Clerk of the Privy Council. His letter starts in French in the following manner:

[Translation]

> "Quebec in a New World," the Parti Québécois plan of action, is a most interesting document. However, if the purpose is to set forth for the people of Quebec and the rest of Canada the PQ plan for sovereignty, I can only deplore the unreality of the important part on "accession to sovereignty."
>
> Under the PQ plan, when it forms the government of Quebec, it will secure passage by the National Assembly of a solemn declaration of Quebec's wish to accede to full sovereignty. Thereafter, the PQ government will:
>
> "(b) following discussions with the federal government, proceed to fulfil its responsibility and its mandate to establish the timetable and modalities for transferring powers and determine the rules for dividing Canada's assets and debts; (...)"
>
> The PQ government would then move to draw up a constitution for a sovereign Quebec and to hold a referendum. "This referendum will be the act that will bring into being a sovereign Quebec."
>
> The process sounds rational and simple, but it bears no relation to the facts of the constitution of Canada. It will not happen. Why not?
>
> As secretary to the cabinet, and then secretary to the cabinet for federal-provincial relations, I spent 16 years of my life (1963 to 1979) advising federal prime ministers and governments on their relations with the provinces and on the courses of action possible for the government where constitutional issues were involved. If I were back in that job in 1995 and a hypothetical Premier Jacques Parizeau approached Ottawa for the discussions proposed in "accession to sovereignty," what would I advise?

[English]

> I would advise that there is only one legally valid way under the constitution by which the "accession to sovereignty" by Quebec can be accomplished: by an amendment of the constitution under Part V of the Constitution Act, 1982. There is no other constitutional way. The amendment would have to be under Section 41, which requires the unanimous consent of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assembly of each province. This is because the separation of Quebec from Canada would affect at least three of the five matters listed in Section 41: the office of the lieutenant-governor of Quebec, the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada, and the amending procedure for the constitution.
>
> In view of that situation, the government of Canada would have no constitutional power to enter into any negotiations with the government of Quebec on "the timetable and modalities for transferring powers," nor on "the rules for dividing Canada's assets and debts," nor on any other matters relating to the sovereignty of Quebec.
>
> Adding to the lack of jurisdiction is the political fact that the head of the federal government, Prime Minister Chrétien, and several ministers are from Quebec. In these circumstances, it might be unwise to have any meeting with Premier Parizeau or with any ministers or officials from the government of Quebec on this subject.
>
> The best course of action, given the constitutional requirements and the position of the prime minister and other ministers who represent federal constituencies in Quebec, would be to invite Premier Parizeau to put his proposals in writing so they could be communicated to the premiers of all the provinces. With a view to a first-ministers conference, the written proposals could form the basis for discussions at the ministerial or the official level involving representatives of the federal government, Quebec and all the provinces. Only this process involving 11 governments would provide the kind of authoritative discussion the PQ program contemplates.

[Translation]

> There is another aspect of reality that is not touched on in the PQ program, but which could not be ignored in advice to a government of Canada.

Under section 91(24) of the Constitution Act, 1867, the federal government is responsible for Indians which, under a judgment of the Supreme Court, includes the Inuit. Aboriginals attach particular importance to the Royal Proclamation of 1763 as the basis of their historic rights. All of these are "recognized and affirmed" for them and for the Métis by the Constitution Act, 1982.

A constitutional amendment for the separation of Quebec would raise concerns among the aboriginals resident in Quebec about their rights. They would almost certainly press for representation at the conference of first ministers to discuss the things the PQ proposes to raise.

This federal responsibility for the aboriginal peoples would be more than apparent to the prime minister, who was formerly minister of Indian affairs, but the importance of the constitutional fact is not generally understood.

The most significant issue for the federal government to consider in this regard is aboriginal self-determination. With the Quebec referendum planned "as quickly as possible" to determine the views of Quebec people on their future, it is very likely that the aboriginal people in Quebec would claim the same right for themselves.

It is not at all clear that the United Nations Covenant on Human Rights, which recognizes the "self-determination of peoples" as a human right, would apply to the aboriginal peoples of Quebec. However, it would be extremely difficult to reject that claim if the right was being asserted by the people of Quebec generally.

The PQ "plan for sovereignty" does not give any attention to the interest of the aboriginal people of Quebec and the constitutional need for them to be consulted by the federal government.

[English]

Finally, I would advise in 1995 that the whole process for a constitutional accession to sovereignty by Quebec would take a long time.

There would have to be discussions and conferences to arrive at an agreement on all the points of substance. If the aboriginals demanded self-determination, there would have to be time for their referendum or referendums to take place. If they opted to stay with Canada, a whole new range of problems would arise. At the end of all this, the total agreement would have to be hammered out and accepted by all the parties.

Only then could the "steps and conditions that will lead to a sovereign Quebec," as stated in the PQ plan, be placed before the people of Quebec. The next and final step for a constitutional separation would be the approval of the Parliament of Canada and of the 10 provincial legislatures.

The time required for a constitutional separation might lead a PQ government to consider a non-constitutional course: a unilateral declaration of independence. But such a declaration could be illegal and an agreement on dividing assets and debts and on the economic relationship with Canada would still be lacking.

Realistic advice would have to include this possibility along with some attempt to foresee the very serious and disturbing consequences. It is clear that both the constitutional process by amendment and a unilateral declaration of independence present grave difficulties.

My hypothetical advice would have to include recognition that a strong, unequivocal majority vote for separation in a referendum on a clearly worded question would leave the rest of Canada with no choice but to acknowledge the self-determination imperative.

But even in such circumstances and, with good will on all sides, the difficulties would be enormous. There would have to be negotiation. But negotiation with whom? We would be outside the realm of law and constitution and it is impossible to know how this or any related problem would be handled.

It seems to me that the PQ has a responsibility to the people of Quebec to provide a realistic analysis of the problems involved in accession to sovereignty. They have not done so thus far.

Honourable senators, thus would that distinquished and experienced Canadian public servant, Gordon Robertson, advise the Prime Minister of Canada on the matters to which I have referred.

I will not add much more at this stage. However, may I underline the invitation to senators to give their opinions about any of the matters that are included in this very interesting letter. Of course, such opinions would include the opinions of people such as Senator Beaudoin and others on the constitutional side of the question. However, in my view, that would limit the value of having this matter discussed in the Senate. I say that it should also include reactions by experienced politicians, by persons experienced in federal-provincial relations and former cabinet ministers, such as Senator Murray, as to some of the practical political consequences of such moves for separation and, in fact, of Mr. Robertson's hypothetical advice to the Prime Minister.

I hope in the fall, honourable senators, we will have interesting and informative interventions by our many learned and experienced senators on the subject of this inquiry.

On motion of Senator Di Nino, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, July 7, 1994, at 10 a.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 7, 1994

The Senate met at 10 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe it is understood that we will stand all of the routine proceedings and move directly to item No. 1 on the Order Paper. If there is a problem with that, I would appreciate hearing about it, but that is my understanding.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is there leave for this approach?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, this definitely bothers me. I have no objection as such, but really! I have always said that independent senators, and there are not that many, should be consulted from time to time.

I will give my consent because I respect the person who requested it. Someday, however, there may be more independent senators in this Senate, and we cannot keep saying they do not count. I admit that these agreements between the two parties are a reasonable way of doing things, but I resent the fact that we are kept in the dark about such agreements.

I want to say to the Acting Leader of the Government that I have every respect for him, but I wish that we, as independent senators, or anyone else for that matter, were at least informed. I will give my consent, although this was unexpected.

I repeat, honourable senators, it is not easy to be entirely on your own, from time to time. It is not. We have the same rights as those with partisan affiliations in this Senate. We should be informed of these agreements.

[English]

I wish to repeat: I am an extremely reasonable person, but I will not accept being sidetracked all the time with these ententes between the two parties. I will cooperate to the fullest; however, if deals are being made of any kind that I am unaware of, as a senator I will exercise my rights, as I do now. I now agree that the honourable senator may proceed.

Hon. Royce Frith: Honourable senators, unless I am mistaken, and, unfortunately, I am unable to find the rule quickly, under our new rules the Leader of the Government in the Senate is entitled to call the order of business.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Government business, yes.

Senator Prud'homme: That is correct.

Senator Frith: Yes, the government business. In effect, Senator Stanbury was being courteous to Senator Prud'homme and to all senators in saying that he believed we had this understanding. He was asking for approval, and His Honour then asked if there was leave to proceed that way, but Senator Stanbury did not have to do any of that. He could have simply called it. That should be understood.

[Later]

VISITOR IN GALLERY

MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT OF VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I should like to draw your attention to the presence in the gallery of a visitor from a long distance away, Australia, Mr. Barry Pullen from the Parliament of Victoria.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT AGREEMENTS BILL

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the Eighth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on Bill C-22, an Act respecting certain agreements concerning the redevelopment and operation of Terminals 1 and 2 at Lester B. Pearson International Airport, presented in the Senate on 6th July, 1994, with the following amendments:

1. Page 2, clause 3: Strike out lines 1 to 3 and substitute the following:

"3. The agreements are hereby declared to have no legal effect on and after April 13, 1994."

2. Page 2, clause 4: Strike out lines 7 and 8 and substitute the following:

"hereby declared terminated on April 13, 1994."

3. Page 2, clause 5: Strike out line 19 and substitute the following:

"declared to have no legal effect on and after April 13, 1994."

4. Pages 2 and 3: Delete clause 7 and renumber the subsequent clauses accordingly.

5. Page 3: Delete clause 8 and renumber the subsequent clauses accordingly.

6. Page 3, clause 9: Strike out lines 7 to 9 and substitute the following:

"9. No one is entitled to any compensation from Her Majesty by reason of the application of this Act, except any entitlement to compensation that arose before April 13, 1994 in respect of the agreements."

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin moved the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs held two days of hearings this week, on Monday and Tuesday. It heard four important witnesses: two ministers, the Honourable Allan Rock, Minister of Justice, and the Honourable Doug Young, Minister of Transport; and two experts on constitutional law, Professor Douglas Schmeiser of the University of Saskatchewan and Professor Dale Gibson of the University of Alberta.

After hearing the two expert witnesses, who dealt with the rule of law, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the 1960 Canadian Bill of Rights, a majority of committee members concluded that Bill C-22 contained a serious flaw which should be corrected by the Senate, namely, the denial of access to the courts imposed under clauses 7 and 8.

[English]

The honourable Minister of Justice expressed the view that Bill C-22 does not offend against any constitutional provision and is, therefore, constitutional, and six members of the committee agreed with the opinion of the minister.

[Translation]

I said at the beginning of the hearings before the committee that the debates should be restricted to the constitutional issue of rule of law and access to the courts.

The rule of law is a principle enshrined in the Canadian Constitution. Access to the courts is part of the rule of law. What is referred to in English as the rule of law is one of the basic principles of our Constitution. In the Manitoba Language Rights Reference, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 721, also mentioned by the two constitutional experts who testified before the committee, the Supreme Court stated unanimously, at pages 748-749:

[English]

> The rule of law, a fundamental principle of our Constitution, must mean at least two things. First, that the law is supreme over officials of the government as well as private individuals, and thereby preclusive of the influence of arbitrary power.
>
> ...
>
> Second, the rule of law requires the creation and maintenance of an actual order of positive laws which preserves and embodies the more general principle of normative order. Law and order are indispensable elements of civilized life.

In short, it means that the rule of law principle cannot be ignored or set aside; it has to be complied with. It is part of our Constitution by virtue of the preamble of the Constitution Act, 1867, and, since 1982, by the preamble of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The question of a fair and public hearing is also of utmost importance. The issue was dealt with at length by Professors Schmeiser and Gibson. In brief, we may say that the right guaranteed by section 2(e) of the Canadian Bill of Rights of 1960 has been denied because clauses 7 and 8 of Bill C-22 prohibit access to the courts.

[Translation]

The amendments proposed by the majority of committee members would have the effect of restoring the principle of the rule of law and giving the parties adversely affected by the cancellation of the contract access to the courts. That is why, according to the majority of the committee, clauses 7 and 8 should be repealed.

Furthermore, for the repeal of clauses 7 and 8 of Bill C-22 to be fully effective, it is also necessary to amend clauses 3, 4, 5 and 9. The purpose of the amendments to clauses 3, 4 and 5 is to remove the presumption that the contract never existed. To do so, a date must be set. According to the majority, this date should be April 13, 1994, when Bill C-22 was tabled in the House of Commons. The contract for the privatization of Pearson airport existed and therefore had a legal effect until April 13, 1994, according to the majority of committee members.

The amendment to clause 9 will have the effect of allowing payment of compensation, if necessary, provided the entitlement to compensation in respect of the agreements arose before April 13, 1994. Compensation will not necessarily be paid, but in any event, to uphold the principle of the rule of law in this case, it is vital to preserve access to the courts.

Honourable senators, this was substantially, and very briefly, an explanation of the amendments to Bill C-22 proposed by a majority of the members of the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith: If the people of Canada thought that they had buried Mr. Mulroney, Ms Campbell, and their Conservative Party politically by their votes in the last election, they must now know that the same group intend to continue to rule from their graves.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh! Oh!

Senator Frith: For example, will the government the people elected in October last decide whether and how the Pearson airport deal is to be cancelled? No, sir, it shall not. The Conservative Party in the Senate will tell Canadians whether, and how, they can cancel the Pearson airport deal.

They are giving us that message in the amendments proposed in the committee. What we are debating at this stage is the report embodying those amendments, telling the government under what terms they can cancel the Pearson airport deal. The Conservative Party shall determine whether or not the rights they gave to the developers just before the election will survive or not. The government subsequently elected shall not so decide. but shall be told by the Conservative Party Senate majority how it shall be done. Not your way, government. No, our way.

Let us look at these amendments. In whose interest are these killer amendments?

An Hon. Senator: For the rights of Canadians.

Senator Frith: That is it. You hear the answer. I hope that their answer was recorded. It is for "the rights of Canadians."

Senator Hastings: For the rights of Canadian millionaires!

Hon. Royce Frith: Let us just look at the rights and interests of Canadians, and which Canadians we are talking about.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: All of them.

Senator Berntson: Any Canadian.

Senator Frith: "All of them," we hear. Let the people who voted, and let the people who have an interest in the cancellation of this Pearson deal, hear that this is in all their interests — indeed, in the interests of all Canadians. They are being told that it is in all their interests.

Is it in the interests of Canadian electors who surely and clearly wanted this deal cancelled? Well, no. Is it in the interests of the travelling public, to whom Pearson airport and its reasonable development as Canada's centre for air travel are so important? No! Is it in the interests of the lobbyists? Perhaps.

Senator Olson: Could be.

Senator Frith: For the lawyers of the parties? Perhaps.

An Hon. Senator: Have an inquiry!

Senator Frith: Is it in the interests of the developers who want to claim richly anticipated profits over 57 years? I would think so.

By these amendments, the developers to whom the Conservative government gave Pearson airport just before the election are rescued from the effects of the new government's decision, and the will of the people is successfully frustrated. These amendments will stall the whole question for an indefinite length of time, and at a potential cost, according to the evidence before the committee, of millions to the Canadian taxpayers, who so recently turfed out the government that caused the problem in the first place.

An Hon. Senator: Destroyed the party. All but two.

Senator Frith: From the very thorough and detailed debate in committee study, two key questions emerge: One, does the government have the moral mandate and the political authority to proceed with this initiative?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Frith: Two, if such mandate exists, would it be in the public interest to exercise it in the manner suggested by the committee's report?

First, on the mandate, I do not think anyone has argued, or will argue seriously against the government's political authority to cancel the agreement for the privatization of Terminals 1 and 2 at Pearson International Airport. In fact, the Conservative senators never really quarrelled with that authority. However, on the matter before us, namely the amendments proposed by the committee, it seems they just do not want that authority to be effectively exercised. They want it stalled for an inquiry while the developers involved in their governments' deal tie everything up with lawsuits based on all the claims which these amendments will give to those developers.

The Conservative senators try to paint a picture of normalcy for the deal but, in fact, it was characterized by undue haste. When the government issued a request for proposals on March 11, 1992, it gave the interested parties only 90 days to prepare and submit their proposals. However, prior to that time there had been an unsolicited proposal; the unsolicited proposal had been prepared, and then only 90 days were given to others to submit their proposals. Guess who won, finally? The one who made up the unsolicited proposal and had that head start.

That may be just a coincidence, but it is the kind of coincidence that should be remedied by leaving Bill C-22 unamended.

On August 30, 1993, a mere nine days before calling a general election, the government announced that a general agreement had been reached to turn over control of the airport to the Pearson Development Corporation for a period of 57 years.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Not the airport, Senator Frith.

Senator Frith: On October 9, 1993, less than three weeks before Canadians went to the polls to pass judgment on the government, the chief federal negotiator received written instructions from Prime Minister Kim Campbell to conclude the transaction that same day.

Senator Molgat: Written instructions.

Senator Frith: Yes. The privatization of Terminals 1 and 2 became a major issue early in the election campaign. Metro city councillors called it a highjacking. The Ontario Minister of Transportation, neither a Liberal nor a Conservative, Gilles Pouliot, asked that the deal be set aside because it was not in the public interest.

Finally, on October 6, 1993, the day before the contract was signed, sealed and delivered, the then Leader of the Opposition, now Prime Minister Jean Chrétien, urged the government to postpone the signing and, as reported in The Globe and Mail, on October 7, 1993, he said:

> I'm warning everyone involved: If we become the Government, it will be reviewed, and if legislation is needed — to overturn the deal — we will pass legislation.

Everyone involved heard the warning. Everyone involved knew that the odds favoured heavily a Liberal government. Everyone went to the table with their eyes wide open and decided to take the risk. Having lost, they complain about the very consequences they gambled on. The Conservative senators, with these amendments, come to their rescue.

At the time of the signing and before, the political positions were quite clear. If the Conservatives won, the deal was on; if the Liberals won, the deal was off. Well, the Liberals won 98 out of 99 seats in Ontario, including every riding in metropolitan Toronto. The then government failed to win a single seat in the province.

• (1020)

In his remarks at second reading, Senator Murray himself said:

> ... the government does have the political authority and the mandate...to cancel the contract.

Why, then, are the Conservative senators trying to tell the government how to exercise its admitted moral and political authority?

If Bill C-22 is amended as proposed and if the developers are successful in court, the Minister of Transport has told us about the costs to the taxpayers of Canada for cancelling this contract entered into in the dying days of the Conservative administration, and those costs could be hundreds of millions of dollars. Those are costs that would be imposed upon Canadian taxpayers by Conservative senators immediately following their party's electoral defeat.

What would have been provided to the people of Canada in exchange for these hundreds of millions of dollars? How would Canadians have benefited? What would the developers have contributed to the nation to warrant such compensation from the taxpayers? They would have held a lease to Terminals 1 and 2 of Pearson airport for 57 days, between October 7, 1993, when the final agreement was signed and December 3, 1993, when the government announced that the agreement was to be cancelled. In return for holding a lease for 57 days, they would be asking for all the profits they had anticipated making over the next 57 years. Why?

Conservative senators, trying to take the attention away from these "rescued" developers — invoking throughout the debate and the committee the Magna Carta, the International Bill of Human Rights, the Canadian Bill of Rights, the Charter, NAFTA, memories of internment of Japanese Canadians, the Canadian dead of World War II and the spirit of the French Revolution — are effectively keeping the legal games alive. They are helping the developers with whom they had their contract, and the cost will be borne by the Canadian taxpayer.

Is there a fundamental principle at stake, as the Conservative senators claim? They say, and have said repeatedly, that they are not interested in the compensation side. They say they are indifferent to the interests of the developers. If they are indifferent to the interests of the developers, then in consequence they are also indifferent to the costs that those developers are trying to impose on the taxpayers. Well, this government is not indifferent to the developers, and it is not indifferent to the costs imposed on the people of Canada.

Let us look at all these constitutional points. Is the bill constitutional? Conservative senators say no. The Minister of Justice says unequivocally that it is. Two law professors disagree, though, if you read the committee proceedings, not quite so unequivocally. They both agreed that there are arguments both ways on the constitutional question, including the rule of law. Everyone agrees that the rule of law is rather vaguely defined, except as it is specifically defined in the Charter.

Conservative senators are satisfied that it is unconstitutional. When the Conservative senators admit that the government has the mandate to cancel the agreement, surely that mandate must include the ability to do so on the best possible terms for the people of Canada.

Furthermore, there is absolutely no question that in exercising that mandate, the government must operate within the law. Bill C-22, unamended, is subject to the law. The government is confident that it is acting within the law. The government has not excluded the Charter of Rights or the Bill of Rights, and therefore both the Charter and the Bill of Rights apply to every provision in Bill C-22, including clauses 7 and 8, which attempt to bar court action. If the courts find clauses 7 and 8 or any other provision in Bill C-22 unconstitutional, any such clause or all such clauses will be of no effect. Nothing in the bill or otherwise bars any right to challenge their constitutionality in the courts of the land, in the same way as they have been challenged in the Senate and in the committee.

The report we have before us recommends that Bill C-22 be eviscerated so that anyone connected in any way with the agreement can take the government to court and claim, from the taxpayers of Canada, hundreds of millions of dollars in compensation for alleged loss of profits and lobbyist fees. Is such an outcome in the public interest? Does the public believe it to be in the public interest?

In defence of their actions, then, let us look at the legal and constitutional issues raised by the Conservative senators. First, the question of whether Bill C-22 infringes upon provincial jurisdictions was very early and quickly disposed of by Senator Jessiman, though the question was raised again to both my surprise and Senator Jessiman's, I believe, by Professor Dale Gibson. He suggested that Bill C-22 had nothing to do with aeronautics and therefore did not fall within the federal jurisdiction. He said that it could not be justified under section 91 1A, dealing with public government property, because it dealt entirely with property and civil rights. Of course, it does deal with property and civil rights, but it also deals with aeronautics and the matters in section 91 1A; therefore, the paramountcy doctrine applies and the federal jurisdiction prevails.

For those who would argue that this is unconstitutional legislation because it is outside federal jurisdiction, the question then becomes: In whose jurisdiction does the cancellation of the contract fall? Surely no one is suggesting that the province of Ontario is required to cancel this contract.

Next, questions were raised about Charter implications. Senator Jessiman has already described how corporations cannot avail themselves of the protection that is given to individuals to life, liberty and security of the person in section 7 of the Charter. The courts, as he has put on the record, have been very clear on that point.

Senator Balfour claimed that Bill C-22:

> ...violates the basic constitutional rights of a person...to sue for just compensation in the face of state expropriation.

As we have seen, there is no such constitutional right. It is not there. It is not in the Charter. The rule of law has been codified in Canada in two ways: first, in the Charter, and, second, in the Bill of Rights. There is no property right in the Charter. As all those who followed the debates leading up to the 1982 Constitution will remember, that was deliberately left out.

Although that was a deliberate decision, Professor Gibson tried to get property rights in through the back door of section 8 on search and seizure. He admitted that there is a case in the Alberta Court of Appeal that is solidly against that proposition, as it should be, because it is an attempt to bring into the Charter rights that were deliberately left out.

One of the other grounds of objection is based on the Canadian Bill of Rights, which in section 1(a) contains property rights and which in section 2(e) guarantees —

The Hon. the Speaker: I apologize to the honourable senator, but I am informed by the Table that the allocation of time, 15 minutes, has elapsed. However, if leave is given, perhaps the honourable senator may continue. Is leave given?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Thank you, honourable senators.

Another ground of objection is based on the Canadian Bill of Rights, which in section 1(a) contains property rights and which in section 2(e) guarantees a fair hearing for the determination of rights and obligations. Without going through it in any detail, I do not think there is any argument about where the area of doubt lies with regard to sections 1 and 2(e). Section 1 has been held not to apply to corporations. With regard to section 2 — and I am sure Senator Jessiman will correct me if he thinks I am not properly stating the area of doubt or shadow — a good argument can be made that it does apply to corporations. However, the argument is whether your rights under 2(e) are only rights that are stated in section 1. One of the professors said that there is no linkage between them at all, and that the Canadian Bill of Rights would apply in this case to render these clauses of Bill C-22 invalid. If so, of course, the courts can so decide.

• (1030)

Even if they do apply, there is the question of whether the parties to the contract have been denied "the right to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of... rights and obligations," as provided for in section 2(e). As I say, the evidence is conflicting. The point is a moot one for the reasons I have described, and can be settled in the courts of the land.

In addition, almost parenthetically on this question of a hearing, clause 10 of Bill C-22 does provide that the Minister of Transport may, if he considers it appropriate, enter into agreements for payments in connection with the coming into force of the act. This provision will grant the federal government the authority to reimburse legitimate expenses incurred in the ordinary course of business. It specifically excludes payments for lobbying fees or loss of profits. Though this clause provides authority to the government to make such payments, it does not grant a right to anyone to receive payment. It is within the discretion of the minister and of cabinet whether to make any payment. Though the government has promised to reimburse legitimate expenses, there is nothing in Bill C-22 that requires it to do so. This was underlined quite correctly by the Conservative senators.

However, there is a strong argument that, although there is this right to compensation, if it is an existing right, there is some provision for a hearing for those expenses dealt with under clause 10. If the opposition senators believe that Bill C-22 is flawed because of the fact that compensation for out-of-pocket expenses, provided for in clause 10, is contrary to the Bill of Rights, I am surprised that they have not attacked it in their amendments. They have left it untouched and, I take it, therefore, subject to constitutional challenge, because if it is invoked against any action brought that is now free to be brought, because of the amendments to the earlier clauses, then that clause could be used to block the claims. I assume it will also be challenged as unconstitutional if the developers proceed with their claims, or are permitted to proceed with their claims because of the amendments proposed.

Honourable senators, that leaves the question of the rule of law. The rule of law, as we heard in the committee, is an ill-defined rule. That is not to say that it does not exist, but that it is ill-defined to the extent, as we were told in the committee, that it is whatever the judges say it is. However, as I said earlier, in Canada the rule of law has been codified in the Charter and in the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Is there some rule of law left over? We must understand that if the Conservative senators are basing their case on purely legal and constitutional grounds, they must find something, either in the Charter, which they cannot do, in my submission, and in the opinion of the Attorney General. Except for the suggestion of search and seizure, on which there is a case dead against it, I have not heard that any section of the Charter has been invoked. What about the Bill of Rights? Yes, sections 1 and 2 were invoked. If they are found to apply, then of course the offending sections will be struck down, and the courts are the ones that are given the responsibility of deciding on constitutionality.

We certainly have the responsibility to debate —

Senator Murray: Will the honourable senator take a question?

Senator Frith: Let me finish my sentence, please. We certainly have the responsibility, the right and the duty to debate these aspects — and I have no quarrel whatsoever with the fact that all these points have been raised by the Conservative senators. The corollary to that, in my opinion, is that the opposition senators have the duty, obligation and right to raise these constitutional questions.

Senator MacDonald: You are changing your mind.

Senator Frith: I am not changing my mind at all. I have the right to talk about the constitutionality, as do you, but the decision as to whether or not the clauses are constitutional is not for the Senate. It is for the Senate, if it wishes, to defeat legislation as a lawmaker, because of its concern over the Constitution, but we cannot declare these clauses unconstitutional. Only a court can do that. We can argue that they are or are not constitutional; we can find the bill objectionable because it has those provisions; and we can defeat the bill as legislators because it has those provisions, if we want to. If the Senate decides not to pass this bill because its provisions are unconstitutional, is it being seriously contended that that will have the force of law? Of course not. It is a reason that we can use as legislators.

Therefore, if it is not the Charter, and if it is not the Bill of Rights, then it must be some ill-defined leftover of this concept of the rule of law. If so, the courts will decide on that also, and nothing in Bill C-22 prevents that question from being raised in order to strike down Bill C-22.

There is no legal justification for the amendments proposed by the committee. The amendments are not an attempt to remedy legal flaws, in my opinion, but rather an attempt to impose on the current administration and on the current Parliament the will of the prior administration and of the prior Parliament, and to saddle Canadian taxpayers with huge costs. Parliament may repeal or alter any decision taken by a prior Parliament. As Professor Hogg explains, in Constitutional Law of Canada, 1992 at page 307:

> If a legislative body could bind itself not to do something in the future —

Such as to preserve this contract.

> — then a government could use its parliamentary majority to protect its policies from alteration or repeal. This would lay a dead hand on the government subsequently elected to power in a new election with new issues. In other words, a government while in office could frustrate in advance the policies urged by the opposition.

• (1040)

That is what we are seeing occurring today, only in a different forum. If this contract cannot be cancelled without paying the parties compensation, including for lost profits and lobbying fees, those parties may be entitled to receive immediately what they would have received over the next 57 years, had the lease run its course. It would, as if the contract had never been cancelled. This would be tantamount, to use the words of Professor Hogg, to the imposition of the "dead hand" of the previous government onto this government, this Parliament and the Canadian taxpayers.

Honourable senators, the government has a clear mandate from Canadians on the Pearson contract. More than a mere mandate, it could be argued that the government received a clear instruction from Canadians. Conservative senators, supporters of the party of the previous government, are trying to rewrite that mandate as saying, "We want you to cancel the contract, but only after you pay the unsuccessful bidders all the money they think they would have made over the next 57 years," and, also, all their fat lobby fees!

Some Hon. Senators: Oh! Oh!

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You got instructions to kill the GST too.

Senator Frith: That was not the understanding. That was not the compact the government made with the voters. If Conservative senators wish to protect the party's political legacy in the form of its Pearson airport contract, why not do so openly and not under the smoke screen of dubious constitutional and legal arguments that become transparent when subjected to the light of close scrutiny, and which, in any event, if they are right, will be found to be right in the courts, but, if not, will be found to be wrong? If legal and constitutional arguments do exist, our courts are in a position to deal with them.

The government is very confident of the outcome of any such challenges. Apparently the opposition is not as confident about its own legal arguments; hence, the determination to use its majority here in this chamber to ensure that the courts do not have the opportunity to decide the constitutional question.

The opposition raises legal requirements such as due process and natural justice and attempts to incorporate them into the political parliamentary process by attacks on the Nixon report. Their purpose, in my opinion, is to cloud what is really happening here today.

Honourable senators, Bill C-22 is a political response to a political mandate given by the people of Canada to their government. It is a response that is well within the legal competence of the government in Parliament, and it is in the public interest. The government has decided how to honour its mandate, as has the House of Commons.

The purpose of the bill, honourable senators, is not complicated. The bill has two objectives: cancel the contract and have no lawsuits. The amendments say, "Do not cancel the contract and, yes, lawsuits." It is that simple.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: How unfair!

Senator Frith: That is the exact effect of these amendments. The inescapable effect of these amendments is to say that the contract is not cancelled and, yes, there will be lawsuits.

The amendments should be defeated and the government should be permitted to effectively carry out its mandate from the people as quickly and directly as possible and without the cost of additional millions of dollars to the taxpayers that these amendments expose them to.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: How do you know? Did a judge tell you that?

Senator Frith: The way to do that, honourable senators, is to defeat this motion for the approval of the report and pass the bill without amendment.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Lynch-Staunton: If I had a lost cause, I would hire you!

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Frith: Yes, certainly.

Senator Andreychuk: I listened with great interest to the legalities the honourable senator put forward. I would ask him to respond to two points.

First, less on the rule of law but more on the democratic process, surely a government that says it dislikes a contract and calls it dastardly is asking the people of Canada to believe that on blind faith. Why would you not have an impartial body rule on that issue? We want to know what is in the contract. In a good democracy, checks and balances are important.

Second, there seems to be a presumption that the courts would be unfair. I find that rather intolerable, having been a judge for 12 years. You have implied that the courts will not do their job appropriately and in a fair manner. If the contract is usurious or improper, nothing says that the court would not rule fair compensation. That is why in a contract dispute you go to an impartial arbiter, or court, to set the fairness so that neither side has an advantage in assessing what is right and wrong. That impartiality has not come at the point of cancelling the contract, nor will it be in the compensation. That is the argument that people should consider. This is not a question of large corporations.

In my days in law school, I was taught that if the strongest link is attacked, the weakest link has no chance. I come from a province where there has been a lot of expropriation of small farms. Would it be fair for them to receive no compensation when a government deemed that contracts signed by a previous government were unfair? The principle and not the actors are at issue here.

I should like your response to those comments, senator.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I was not able to —

Senator Berntson: Understand the question.

Senator Frith: I was. I was not able to understand what portion of the intervention was a question, but some of it certainly was a question.

First, the word "democracy" was used. That is what we are engaged in at this moment. There was an election. That election produced an issue; it produced legislation. People disagree with the legislation. The honourable senator disagrees with it. The democratic parliamentary process is what we are doing here.

I do not see how passing a bill such as Bill C-22 and presenting it to Parliament is undemocratic. I did not understand the intervention beyond that, frankly.

The second question might help us better understand the intervention as a whole. The opposition thinks there should be an inquiry. Mr. Young was absolutely clear. He simply said, "Look, we want to cancel this contract, and we want to tie it up neatly so there is no long investigation or inquiry." The honourable senator disagrees with that; that is her right. However, if she wants to know why, the "why" is that that was a decision made by the elected government. That is how it wanted to handle the Pearson contract. The government felt that its mandate was strong enough for it to say, "We will cancel the contracts, and we will not subject Canadian taxpayers to 10 years of lawsuits over the contract." That is what the honourable senator objects to. That is why we are here. That is democracy. We disagree with your viewpoint on this issue.

I do not know how the impression was given that I thought the courts would be unfair. On the contrary, I assume the courts will be quite fair.

Senator Oliver: The minister's discretion is unfair.

Senator Frith: The minister's discretion as far as compensation is concerned is also subject to review.

Senator Andreychuk: The honourable senator indicated that this matter would be in the courts for 10 years. The honourable senator indicated that the compensation would be in the millions of dollars. Those are unknowns. One does not know what the courts would do. The court might say the contract is usurious and not award anything but nominal damages. If we do not give the matter to the courts and let due process take its course, how can we say how long the matter will take and how costly it will be? That is why this issue is important to me. The matter should be placed before an impartial body.

Senator Frith: I absolutely agree with what the honourable senator just said: We do not know how long; we do not know how costly. We, the government, are not prepared to take that chance. That is a decision we made that the honourable senator disagrees with.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: As the honourable senator said, she is indifferent. Her interest is in the constitutional issue, not the claim under the contracts. That is what has been said. I am simply saying that we are concerned. I used that very expression. Who is to know how long the matter will be tied up in the courts? Who is to know how long an inquiry will take? Who is to know how long the lawsuits will take? As a lawyer, the honourable senator would know that ten years is a good estimate for a big case.

• (1050)

That, then, is the answer. I do not have difficulty understanding the honourable senator's concern, but the answer is that it was the decision made, and the very things she has raised are the things that Bill C-22 tries to avoid. As I have said from the beginning, and as I think we have all agreed, it is an extraordinary piece of legislation. I do not quarrel with that at all. However, as I and others have said, in the government's view it is required to be extraordinary legislation in order to deal with a very extraordinary situation. That is our position.

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: My question is basically with regard to the inquiry. Since the Nixon report has alluded to such improprieties within this particular contract, why would the government and the honourable senator not want a full inquiry with full disclosure to the public, in order that we can learn from this, and possibly do better in the future in dealing with contracts of this nature for the benefit of the general public and the nation as a whole? Why would the government want to restrict this decision to the opinion of one man, arrived at in some 30 days, as opposed to going through a proper inquiry which would be impartial and fair, and would expose all of those who are alluded to as having done wrong?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the senator was not at the committee so I do not fault him for emphasizing the Nixon report. Had he been at the committee, he would know that the government representative, Mr. Young, said that the Nixon report was only one of many things which he took into account.

Many Conservative supporters here have been in cabinet and know that inquiries are one way to deal with such things. Cabinet needed to decide what to do about the Pearson airport contract, putting it in the context of when it was signed, what was said about it during the election, and what promises were made. You do not have to make cabinet decisions quickly on the basis of all available information, knowing that the decisions are not going to be perfect. You can decide not to govern that way but, rather, to have inquiries to look into all of these things.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Give a fair hearing.

Senator Frith: Yes, have a full and fair hearing. It could certainly shorten cabinet meetings, because you would need only say, "Let's have a hearing. Let's not make the decision. Let's wait until there is a fair hearing." That is an option, in many cases. I am not trying to ridicule that idea, because that is an option. It is an option the honourable senator's government took, but it was not the one it took all the time. It was there. It made some decisions on what it thought was the best possible information, what it thought was proper, and the right thing.

We may be wrong on this one. The honourable senator's government may have been wrong on some of its decisions. However, my answer is that the decision is a government decision, by which the government stands. The government decided that, rather than taking the long route, it would take the short, quick route, and there it is. It will have to pay politically for making that decision, just as the honourable senator's government had to pay for decisions that it made. It will get credit for the decisions that the people agree with, and blame for the ones they do not.

The reason the government did not do that, as I understand it from Mr. Young, is that they looked at all of the information which would enable them to deal with the matter speedily, and decided to do it that way.

Senator St. Germain: This particular inquiry has cast aspersions and doubt on certain individuals and corporations in the country. How can we learn from this, and improve in the area of devolution of airports if we pass legislation that restricts debate and restricts the ability to fully explore what transpired in this particular situation? Does the honourable senator not think it would be fairer to those who are being chastised and accused, unfairly in certain instances, and with no ability to defend themselves, and the country would benefit more if we went through a process of this nature?

Senator Frith: Obviously the answer is "no" because I think we are doing it the right way. One thing we have learned, which I think is very clear to everyone who is interested in this matter, is that this is not the way the honourable senator's government would have done it. I take it that it would have done it with an inquiry, not taking away any of the legal rights, and perhaps not even cancelling the contract. That would have been their call. However, it happens that the Liberals were the victors in an election in which this issue played an important part, and they made the call. I accept that none of the Conservative senators, had they been in a Conservative cabinet, would have done it that way. I take it that they would have gone the inquiry route. We decided not to.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, this is especially for the benefit of honourable senators who may have been too pressed for time to follow the proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, chaired by Senator Beaudoin, on Monday and Tuesday when we heard the Minister of Justice, the Honourable Allan Rock, and the Minister of Transport, the Honourable Douglas Young, as well as constitutional experts who were invited to appear before the committee.

Throughout the proceedings, Senator Lynch-Staunton made it clear he was not interested in the political aspects of the bill but wanted to concentrate on the constitutional aspects, and I believe that is why we were asked to come. I see that Senator Beaudoin, who made the decision, feels that is exactly what we had in mind when we were sitting Monday and Tuesday.

So I said that I agreed with this approach. However, throughout the proceedings, committee members, and especially Senator Lynch-Staunton, criticized the Nixon report. As you know, it was the Nixon report, and I must say I agree with Senator Frith, that was perhaps not the only reason for tabling Bill C-22, but it played a major role in the cancellation of the contract.

In the press release from the Prime Minister's Office, it said "cancelled." And Mr. Nixon prepared a report.

During the two days the committee sat, there were almost constant attacks on Mr. Nixon's credibility. I begged the committee to call him as a witness, so he could either explain his report or defend it or respond to the insinuations.

In fact, Senator Lynch-Staunton indicated that he might ask Mr. Nixon and also the Minister of Transport, Mr. Young, to appear before the committee.

I keep saying to myself: What does the Senate do? Why did I come to the Senate? Surely because I think we have a role to play, including examining controversial issues like this one, but at a leisurely pace. Without costing taxpayers a fortune in inquiries, we can at least determine whether there is any reason for requesting an inquiry. Perhaps the press will finally say there are a lot more questions than they thought, questions that require an answer, and perhaps we should have an inquiry.

To lend some credibility to what I am saying, I would like to read all the insinuations that were made against Mr. Nixon to prove and to help honourable senators understand my conclusions. I will quote him. I will be perfectly fair.

[English]

• (1100)

Mr. Nixon's report has been severely criticized by parties directly affected by some of his statements. He was asked by opposition members to appear before the House of Commons Transport Committee in order to answer questions arising from his report. Obviously, the Liberal government gave instructions to its members on the committee not to have him appear. It made me feel sorry not to be in the House of Commons to receive that type of order, if such an order was given.

Senator Lynch-Staunton asked the witness that day, if he found that this was proper procedure, why the report, which is a key element to the preparation of controversial legislation, should not be aired totally and openly? If we cannot get all the answers to the Nixon report that we are looking for, there will be constant questions on Bill C-22. Senator Lynch-Staunton stated that, if need be, we will invite both Mr. Young and Mr. Nixon. As honourable senators know, we concluded by inviting Mr. Young, but not Mr. Nixon.

Senator Lynch-Staunton also stated that there were still question marks. I will make my comments rapidly, because I am afraid I will not receive consent for further minutes later on. Senator Lynch-Staunton stated that there has been a refusal to air all the allegations. Listen to this: An honourable gentlemen like Mr. Nixon — and I would hope all of my colleagues who know him as an honourable gentlemen —

Senator Cools: A very honourable gentlemen.

Senator Prud'homme: — will rise and talk about the honourable gentleman that I have known.

I come from Montreal. I do not come from Toronto. I do not come from Ontario. However, I certainly stand for the taxpayers of Canada and the interests of Toronto, as I did for the interests of British Columbia on Bill C-18. Senators will hear later about that bill.

There has been refusal to air the allegations, and more or less a direct accusation of questionable action by lobbyists and ministerial aides. Even government officials have been drawn into this near-libelous campaign against all the parties. Senator Lynch-Staunton stated that the reputations of hundreds of people have been hurt by the Nixon report, and by the refusal of the government to open up the matter to the public.

It seems to me so logical, when attacking someone like that, and when you have the possibility, the rules, the capacity, the time, the intelligence and the devotion to Canadian taxpayers, that the immediate conclusion is to call on at least Mr. Nixon before going a step further and asking for an inquiry that will cost tens of millions of dollars, and that will delay all of what has been said before.

I hope honourable senators will read the testimony given to the committee on Monday and Tuesday. I am at your disposal because I will not have enough time to quote all the insinuations and innuendoes that were put against Mr. Nixon, a man of great reputation. I read the Nixon report. I am amazed. Yesterday I privately asked many people, "Did you read the Pearson report?" We all go outside with a big thick report like that and we think that that is the Pearson report. That is not the Nixon report. It is exactly 14 pages long, and even my friend Senator Stanbury can read it. Strange questions arise. On page 2 it states:

> Only two bids were submitted, one by Paxport Inc., controlled by the Matthews Group —

I would say that Mr. Matthews is a fine gentlemen; I know him. A good businessman; I know him. I will not attack or make innuendoes on the reputation of a fine gentleman who serves Canada well by being prosperous.

> — and the other by a group controlled by Claridge.

They are also very influential people in Canada. Those were the two bids that were submitted.

> On December 7, 1992, Paxport Inc. was announced as the best overall acceptable proposal. It was required to demonstrate by February 15, 1993 to the satisfaction of the Government that its proposal was financially viable.

Of course, it had just won the bid. Does it have the finances to back it up?

> Because Paxport could neither provide evidence of this, nor, according to its President, raise capital from other sources, it turned to Claridge for financial support.

Listen to the next few paragraphs:

> On February 1, 1993, Paxport Inc. and Claridge announced a joint venture partnership (which became T1T2 Limited Partnership) to pursue the redevelopment project in accordance with the Paxport Inc. proposal.

I hope The Globe and Mail writes about that part in the interests of private enterprise and fair competition. It is very interesting. Peter and Paul competing against each other; Peter winning, and finally Paul eating up Peter. Two people bid; one wins, but he does not have the finances, so he goes to see the one who lost and says, "Come with me," and the one who lost eventually ends up winning the contract.

[Translation]

Frankly, do you think we are that dumb?

[English]

Can we not read between the lines?

> Between that date and May, 1993, the new joint venture engaged in discussions with the Government of Canada concerning the financial viability...

Listen to this:

> By May of 1993, these issues had been sufficiently addressed for formal negotiations to commence. Claridge had by this time obtained effective control of the joint venture.

What an interesting paragraph. I could go on. The debate is not finished for me. I will certainly talk for the taxpayers of Canada and for the interests of the people of Toronto. Toronto airport c'est le joyau. It is the jewel of the latest great development taking place there. Therefore, it is worth the Senate looking into this situation for a little longer. After all, this is a contract for 57 years.

I do not have much experience of business. If I have to plead guilty today I would say, yes, I was part of a government that predicted a huge success for another large airport, namely Mirabel. I was there. One reads what one is given, and scratches here and there to find information, and then decides that the deal is good. Now you sign for 57 years.

Can you imagine, Honourable Senator Marshall, great devoted friend of the veterans, all the money that will go there? A 57-year deed to ensure that we do not end up paying $10 million.

I do not have a research bureau. I am not informed of what is going on because I am an independent. However, I can work night and day. In order to get that, and in order to avoid paying $10 million to the Ontario government, they divided that 37 years, plus an option of 20 years. Honourable senators can read the report.

• (1110)

I will not be partisan and speak to paragraph 4 on page 9, which is entitled, "The Politics of the Process." Like my friend Senator LeBreton, I agree that, when you are in government, you try — I do not believe in hypocrisy.

Mr. Young appeared before the committee and there was a fairly interesting exchange. We know not to tangle with Mr. Young. He is fast and bright. He is articulate and can answer fast in both languages. You have to be sure of what you ask. He said, "Honourable senators, you are accusing us of having ordered —

[Translation]

Honourable Senator Thériault, you are a reasonable man. You understood everything, of course, all those foul smelling hidden facts surrounding this contract! However, we speak now of the rule of law —

[English]

Of course it is important, but it is strange that one of the main witnesses called in by Senator Beaudoin, a distinguished professor and scholar, said, "But please do not ask me to define exactly what 'rule of law' could mean."

[Translation]

The rule of law as a concept is easy to understand, but hard to define. It is a bit like obscenity. In the Supreme Court of Canada, they have difficulty with that term.

[English]

Mr. Young said, "We chose that road. We did not order the committee." I do not know; I am not in the chamber any more, but the government chose to present Bill C-22.

I regret that more Torontonians do not get up and talk about the great city of Toronto, which I like, and the importance of that city's airport development. I am sure they will.

The Hon. the Speaker: I regret to interrupt the honourable senator, but his time has expired. Is there leave, honourable senators, for the honourable senator to finish his remarks?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I could have come here today to present a few hours of argument. I read the full report. I am not an expert in contracts. I am not a businessman. I am not a shareholder. I have just a few shares in a few banks and a few other interests that went bankrupt in Quebec. I am not too good in that regard. However, I can read. I discovered in the report something that is fascinating. I refer, honourable senators, to clause 31 of the agreement, which states that members of the House of Commons are not to benefit from the agreement. It is strange to see something like that in a contract. clause 31(1) states:

> As required by the Parliament of Canada Act, it is an express condition of this lease that no Member of the House of Commons shall be admitted to any share or part of this lease or to any benefit arising therefrom.

I imagine there is a mistake there. It should state "no member of Parliament." I say that, because Parliament is the House of Commons and the Senate.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I would beg the indulgence of an honourable senator to second a motion which I now wish to move — at least for the principle of it. I move:

> That the eighth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to the Committee and that the Committee be instructed to invite Mr. Robert Nixon, the author of the Pearson Airport Review of November 29, 1993, to appear before the Committee to answer the questions that have been raised in the Committee regarding his report.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, as a courtesy, I second the motion of Senator Prud'homme so that I may argue against it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion in amendment?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think it is a matter of courtesy that someone second the motion of an independent senator who does not have a party and who wishes to move a motion. According to that tradition, I have seconded the amendment of Senator Prud'homme and I shall now explain why I intend to vote against it.

The amendment proposed by our friend Senator Prud'homme revives, essentially, an argument that he made the day before yesterday at the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to the effect that the committee, rather than reporting Bill C-22, should continue its study with a view to convening other witnesses, notably Mr. Robert Nixon, for the purpose of going into the background of this bill, namely, the policy of the previous government, decisions taken by the previous government and the process by which those decisions were taken.

Let me say, first, that the Conservative senators in this place successfully moved to have Bill C-22 sent to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs precisely because we wanted to concentrate our attention on the legal and constitutional aspects of this bill. As has been mentioned this morning and on previous occasions, none of us has ever had or expressed any doubt about the political authority of the government to cancel the contracts. It is the way in which the government is proposing in Bill C-22 to cancel those contracts that we want to discuss.

Thus, the bill was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. As a result of those deliberations, the Senate is now seized of a report with a number of amendments from the committee. Those amendments would have the effect of cancelling the contract as of April 13 and of restoring to Canadian citizens the right to access to the courts that Bill C-22 would otherwise deny them. That is the essence of the amendments that the committee is proposing to Bill C-22.

• (1120)

There is, however, another question that was raised by Senator Prud'homme and a number of senators on the committee, namely the question of the public interest in a full examination of the decisions that were taken by the previous government on this matter and the process by which those decisions were arrived at. That public interest has been heightened in recent months by the numerous unsubstantiated allegations, insinuations and innuendoes, and the surmising and scuttlebutt that has now become part of the public record.

As I have indicated, I believe that the public interest would be served by having a full examination of these matters and an impartial investigation. For the reasons that I set out in the committee the other day, I believe that the best forum in which to conduct that inquiry — and it would include, of course, Mr. Robert Nixon as a witness — would be a judicial inquiry set up under the Inquiries Act.

The Senate can do it. The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications or another special committee of the Senate can do the same thing. However, I believe that a parliamentary committee is a rather awkward forum in which to conduct that kind of inquest. Such an inquest is best conducted under oath. If you convene witnesses under oath, they want to be represented by counsel; if you have counsel present, they want to examine and cross-examine witnesses. The parliamentary forum is an awkward forum for doing that. It has been done in the past, and we could do it in the future if the Senate so wishes, but a public inquiry set up by the government under the Inquiries Act would be a more efficient forum in which to do this.

Honourable senators, the question of the public interest being served by an examination of these matters need not hold up this bill. We can proceed with this bill now because the government wants to cancel the contracts, and our amendments to the bill will cancel the contracts.

The opposition wants to restore the right of Canadians affected to go to court. I intend to vote against my friend's proposed amendment, and I will ask the Senate to pass the bill with the amendments proposed by the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee. The Senate, if it wishes, can conduct an inquiry at any time into the matters that concern Senator Prud'homme and others here.

Honourable senators, while I am on my feet I cannot forbear to make a comment on one aspect of the speech that we heard earlier this morning from Senator Frith. It is important, in view of the argument that Senator Frith has made about the legal and constitutional aspects of this bill, to state again for the record that the evidence that the committee heard from two eminent constitutional experts was that Bill C-22 violates the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights, the Trudeau Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the rule of law.

Hon. Royce Frith: No, they both did not say that.

Senator Murray: Well, that was the evidence that we had. If there is a nuance —

Senator Frith: No, it is not a nuance. The first professor did not say that. He did not say that it broke the Charter. However, the second professor stated that, and referred to clause 8.

Senator Murray: I appreciate that. If there was a difference between Professor Schmeiser and Professor Gibson on that point, fine, but we have been told by constitutional experts that the bill violates the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights, the Trudeau Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the rule of law.

Senator Frith: You are not prepared to concede that the Attorney General knows anything about constitutional law, then?

Senator Phillips: No, of course not!

Senator Murray: Well, honourable senators, if you want me to deal with that, I can, but I think perhaps I should not. There is a certificate there. As I said, and I hope gently enough, to Mr. Rock the other day, the government has been known to lose cases in the Supreme Court of Canada notwithstanding the certificate of previous ministers of justice on a bill.

Senator Frith: Yes, and the courts have also been known not to have agreed with some professors' opinions.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, in addition to the evidence that we had from Professors Schmeiser and Gibson, we have the acknowledgement by Mr. Rock himself, the Minister of Justice, that this bill, in its denial of access to the courts, is unprecedented in Canadian history.

Senator Molgat: So was the contract signed a few days before the election!

Senator Lynch-Staunton: How do you know? That is not a precedent.

Senator Murray: Honourable Senator Frith, having heard those arguments, said this morning, as he said before we went to committee, that if anyone feels that the bill is unconstitutional, let them go to court and challenge the constitutionality of the act, if the bill were to pass as it is.

Well, honourable senators, how long would that take? How long would it take for a constitutional challenge to wend its way up through the courts to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Senator Frith: The same time it would take any case.

Senator Murray: If you believe the argument made by Mr. Young and others — and I do not — that litigation necessarily would delay the redevelopment of the Toronto airport; or that litigation would somehow impose a liability on a new airport authority, then you have to ask: What effect would a constitutional challenge have on redevelopment of the Pearson airport?

Senator Frith: It is just a part of the case. It is not a separate thing.

Senator Murray: If the Supreme Court of Canada ultimately found —

Senator Frith: You do not know what you are talking about.

Senator Murray: I am dealing with the context that the honourable senator has set out, and the arguments that he has made about the delay that is caused by litigation.

Senator Frith: But the constitutional question would not be separate. It would be a part of the case on the contracts.

Senator Murray: In one breath the honourable senator says that we should not restore the rights of Canadian citizens to go to court to challenge or sue the crown; in the next breath he says, "If you think it is unconstitutional, go to court."

Senator Frith: Of course!

Senator Murray: If you go to court to challenge the constitutionality and it wends its way up to Supreme Court, how long does that take? What happens if the Supreme Court of Canada decides that the act is unconstitutional? The government is back at square one and will have to start all over again.

Senator Frith: How does that support the amendments? Why do you not ask one of your good legal associates what goes on? You do not understand.

Senator Murray: I tried to interrupt my friend and ask a question when he was speaking, but he would not entertain a question. He would not allow me to interrupt him.

Senator Frith: No, I asked the honourable senator to allow me to finish my sentence. That is all.

Senator Murray: If a constitutional challenge succeeded, the government would be back at square one. They would either have to try and find a way to act without coming to Parliament, or prepare new legislation to come to Parliament. I am saying that our amendments remove any doubt about the constitutionality of this bill. Our amendments rescue the government from the consequences of their own act.

Senator Frith: I see.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Senator: We are doomed!

Senator Frith: We will explain that to the people of Canada.

Senator Murray: Our amendments would cancel the contracts as of April 13.

Senator Frith: This is all "in the interest of the public," is it?

Senator Murray: I repeat, our amendments would cancel the contracts as of April 13, restore the right of the people affected to go to court, and preserve from a very evil precedent the fundamental rights of Canadian citizens.

Senator Frith: Particularly any developers who happen to be Canadians.

Senator Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I want to ask my honourable friend a question. First, I would thank him very much for his courtesy in seconding my motion.

As a comment, this is the Senate at its best. We may disagree, but this is the Senate as I always wanted and dreamed to see the Senate.

May I ask him a brief question? I do not know yet if I want an inquiry, because of everything that is being said on both sides regarding costs, time, et cetera. However, when you have a very tough, brilliant, legal mind, when you have knowledge and you build a case, you do not go to the extreme first; you build the case. That was my intention in asking to have Mr. Nixon appear, to be a part of what might perhaps lead to a resolution of this issue, in view of the pressure of public opinion.

The question is, would you not agree that, by calling a witness like Mr. Nixon, it helps? It builds up and gives weight to those who may eventually require an inquiry on the issue.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that may be the case. However, I repeat that there is no reason why this bill needs to be held up in order to have a Senate committee call Mr. Nixon to discuss his version of what happened between 1987 and November 1993.

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, are we speaking to the amendment now?

The Hon. the Speaker: It is my impression that we are now discussing the amendment.

Senator St. Germain: I would like to speak to the report very briefly, honourable senators.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I assume that we are finished with the debate on the report. If that is not the case, then I will speak later.

The Hon. the Speaker: I was indicating that we were to dispose of the amendment first and then go on from there.

Is the house ready for the amendment?

ALLOTMENT OF TIME FOR DEBATE

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Perhaps I should raise this issue now. This is not in connection with the report, but it is a question which I know is of concern to all members of the chamber. That is, when we complete the vote on the report stage, which probably will be within the next half hour or so, we will have a fair amount of time left during the day.

I have heard from many people that they would like to be sure that they proceed with third reading today. I have had discussions with the opposition. Recognizing that it would have been courteous to seek the advice also of the independents, even though they are not a party in the legal sense in the Senate, I do so now.

I am really looking for any guidance on whether we should proceed immediately after the vote to third reading, rather than waiting for that time to have an indication? I understand from my friend across the way that his group is agreeable to that. If there is general agreement, then I will use rule 39 to make it formal.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Those dastardly rules.

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, on this point, we should go step by step in an orderly fashion. If my honourable friend does not mind, we should first dispose of the amendment and then we can go back, because my honourable friend wants to speak on the report stage.

Before we jump the gun, we should dispose of the amendment, and that will be very rapid, I imagine. Then we will have on the table, in an orderly fashion, the report of Senator Beaudoin, which will have to be disposed of. Then after that, all kinds of requests will have to be made concerning the third reading.

Senator Stanbury: It is not my intention to interfere with the debate on the report. It is just a matter of knowing where we go after that.

If it seems to be acceptable, I will put on record the motion which is necessary to allow us to finish up the third reading debate. The rule indicates that this may be done at any time while the Senate is sitting. It is a matter of giving us some guidance as to what our timing will be.

I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Berntson:

> That in relation to Bill C-22, An Act respecting certain agreements concerning the redevelopment and operation of Terminals 1 and 2 at Lester B. Pearson International Airport, beginning immediately following the conclusion of the report stage of the said bill, not more than two and one-half hours shall be allotted to the consideration of the third reading stage and, at the expiry of the said hours, any proceedings then before the Senate shall be interrupted, if required for the purpose of this Order, and, in turn, every question necessary for the disposal of the third reading stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment.

I should tell you also that we have canvassed our caucuses and have estimated the number of speakers and have added very liberally to that, so that period of time should be sufficient.

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the explanation as put forth by my honourable counterpart is essentially the arrangement that we have come to over the last couple of days. I think there are very few new arguments to add to this debate, going through the various stages.

Senator Prud'homme: Oh, you might be surprised.

Senator Berntson: In a quick canvass of our side, coupled with what has been indicated would be the time necessary for the other side to get their debate concluded, we have made a very generous but conservative estimate.

Senator Frith: Erring on neither the liberal nor the conservative side?

Senator Berntson: Exactly. We essentially agree with what has been put forward by the member opposite.

[Translation]

Senator Prud'homme: I simply wanted to point out that I was expecting this, so I looked up section 39 of the Rules of the Senate. I think I should warn you that I may suggest setting up a party of independents, since when they say, with such joyous relief, that an agreement was reached by representatives of the parties, meanwhile the independents, Senator Pitfield and myself, are completely left out of these discussions. I will stick to the rules. I know you have to call a vote on this question, and I shall ask that it be recorded.

[English]

• (1140)

Senator Frith: "Independent" means independent of any party. You cannot have it both ways.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, pursuant to rule 39, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Stanbury, seconded by the Honourable Senator Berntson:

> That in relation to Bill C-22, An Act respecting certain agreements concerning the redevelopment and operation of Terminals 1 and 2 at Lester B. Pearson International Airport, beginning immediately following the conclusion of the report stage of the said bill, not more than two hours shall be allotted to the consideration of the third reading stage and, at the expiry of the said hours, any proceedings then before the Senate shall be interrupted, if required for the purpose of this Order, and, in turn, every question necessary for the disposal of the third reading stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment.

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, I apologize. There was a last-minute change to two and a half hours, but the printed motion was not changed. I think our intention was that there be two and a half hours.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed that this correction should be recorded?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Prud'homme: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those in favour will please say "yea."

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those against will please say "nay."

Senator Prud'Homme: Nay, of course.

The Chairman: In my opinion, they "yeas" have it.

Senator Frith: That is your first tough call, Your Honour.

Motion agreed to, on division.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT NEGATIVED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, we will now go to the amendment of Senator Prud'homme.

It is moved by the Honourable Senator Prud'homme, seconded by the Honourable Senator Murray:

> That the Eighth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to the Committee, and that the Committee be instructed to invite Mr. Robert Nixon, the author of the Pearson Airport Review of November 29, 1993, to appear before the Committee to answer the questions that have been raised in the Committee regarding his report.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt this motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

An Hon. Senator: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those in favour of the motion in amendment will please say "yea."

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those who are not in favour will please say "nay."

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: If my hearing is accurate, the "nays" have it.

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, on this particular piece of legislation on the cancellation of this contract, I believe, as Senator Frith has stated, that the government has the right to do this. There is no question about that. It is the will of the government. Theirs is a duly elected government; they have a strong majority, and there is no question about their right to act.

As to the spirit of how it was done and when it was signed, three days before the election, I too stood there in shock, in spite of the fact that I was the president of the party. I guess presidents should not be involved in what is going on in the government. Senator Hays will find out more about this as he goes along in his presidential role.

I believe that we are all under a veil of suspicion as a result of this matter. I say that because, when I look at the Prime Minister's press release, there is a quotation in it. It is a quotation in regard to what Mr. Nixon stated. The quotation is:

> My review has left me with but one conclusion. To leave in place an inadequate contract, arrived at with such a flawed process and under the shadow of possible political manipulation, is unacceptable. I recommend to you that the contract be cancelled.

I have no problem with that.

However, honourable senators, what if there was wrongdoing? What is the shadow of possible political manipulation? Is this criminal activity? If there was wrongdoing on the part of Conservatives, Liberals, or whoever was involved, why would we want to sweep it under the rug with a piece of legislation that restricts our ability to fully expose this issue? If our people are responsible, they should pay the price. Whoever is responsible should pay the price. The general public should not be left asking about the shadow of possible political manipulation. If this is wrongdoing or criminal activity, honourable senators, we have a responsibility to expose it.

I was part of this devolution, and I took pride in it. I would vote for the government if we were doing the right thing. Go ahead and cancel the contract. Who cares? Do what is in the best interests of Canadians. Do not hesitate, do not procrastinate, but do not sweep it under the rug. Let us expose them. If they are wrong, whether they are Conservatives or whoever they are, hang them high. That is the way things should be done in this country. We will then gain credibility with the general public. We will not be going around making excuses for why we are senators or why we are members of Parliament. We should be proud, and stand up for what we believe in. This country was built on integrity, and if we shroud integrity by legislation or by any other source of manipulation, it is totally and unequivocally wrong.

I have worked on my reputation and my integrity all my life. Like you, Senator Frith, like you, Senator Gustafson, like you, Senator Bolduc, and like other honourable senators, I have not come here to place that reputation in doubt. That is what this bill does. That is the only reason I am voting against it. Other than that, I would vote with the government on this particular issue.

Hon. Royce Frith: Senator, could I ask a question? I do not quarrel with your intervention, but a partial answer, at least, to your question might have been given by Senator Murray when he said that an inquiry and the bill are not necessarily linked.

Senator St. Germain: There is a possibility that what Senator Murray stated, and what Senator Frith has just reiterated, is correct, and they may not be linked. As you know, I am the last to have arrived at this honoured place. My experience possibly restricts me in my ability to know exactly how the Senate operates. I do not believe that the bill totally restricts the situation, but I do think that passing legislation that is so restrictive to debate and the ability for parties to have access to the courts sends the message that the case will be closed as of the passing of the legislation.

Hon. Marcel Prud'Homme: I would like to ask my neighbour and friend a question. It is the same kind of question that I asked Senator Murray. The ultimate goal would be, of course, an inquiry. Would the honourable senator not like to base it on certain new additional facts obtained by a committee of the Senate, be it under the chairmanship of Senator Oliver or under the chairmanship of Senator Beaudoin? Would it not bring more argument during the summer once having heard the man who was the prime motivator, the man who convinced the government to bring in Bill C-22?

In a committee, you prove the usefulness of the Senate. What is wrong with having a committee of the Senate hearing only one witness and perhaps another witness, depending on what we hear from Mr. Nixon? After that, the committee would stop and report to the Senate.

• (1150)

I know that some senators agree with me. This procedure is unusual. The number of calls of encouragement I received last night caused me to work until very early this morning, after an excellent dinner with two senators. We need more to convince Canadian taxpayers that maybe after all a general inquiry would be in their best interests. The best way to bring more food for thought for future action is by having a committee look into the matter, and that committee should have a chairman and a deputy chairman representing both sides, so you can depend on the fact that things will be done in agreement.

Does the honourable senator not agree that it would be a fair way to proceed, or does he prefer to go directly by general inquiry?

Senator St. Germain: Honourable senators I am not prepared to say what type of inquiry should be conducted. I would prefer, in my heart of hearts, a judicial inquiry. However, to answer my honourable colleague, giving credibility to the Senate by way of a committee is one thing, but I am concerned about the general public, that they be convinced that justice has taken its rightful place on this particular issue. My concern is with the words, "shadow of possible political manipulation."

As to what process we take, I am not prepared at this point in time to enunciate as to the type of inquiry, but I would prefer a judicial inquiry, in view of the fact that there is innuendo here that would indicate possible criminal activity.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is the house ready to proceed with the question on this report?

Senator Berntson: Question.

The Hon. the Speaker: It was moved by the Honourable Senator Beaudoin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Grimard, that this report be adopted now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion.

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those in favour will please say "yea."

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: All those against the motion, please say "nay."

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the noise level would indicate that the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is there agreement on the duration of the bell?

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Thirty minutes was suggested.

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Thirty minutes or half an hour, whichever you like.

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Your Honour, I seek your direction and perhaps that of the two house leaders. As I say, I keep reading the news. Perhaps Senator Frith and Senator Berntson could answer me right away. Is this vote taking away from the time of the debate, or will the third reading debate go for two and a half hours from the moment we enter into the third reading stage?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is the understanding as Senator Prud'homme has described it?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Prud'homme: Of course.

The Hon. the Speaker: Call in the senators.

• (1230)

Report of Committee adopted on the following division:

YEAS
THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Andreychuk
Atkins
Beaudoin
Berntson
Bolduc
Buchanan
Charbonneau
Cochrane
Cohen
Comeau
Desmarais
DeWare
Di Nino
Doody
Doyle
Eyton
Grimard
Gustafson
Jessiman
Kelleher
Lavoie-Roux
LeBreton
Lynch-Staunton
Macdonald (Cape Breton)
MacDonald (Halifax)
Marshall
Meighen
Murray
Nolin
Oliver
Ottenheimer
Phillips
Rivest
Robertson
Rossiter
St. Germain
Stratton
Sylvain
Tkachuk—39

NAYS
THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Austin
Bonnell
Bosa
Cools
Corbin
Fairbairn
Frith
Gigantès
Graham
Hastings
Hays
Kenny
MacEachen
Molgat
Olson
Perrault
Petten
Prud'homme
Robichaud
Stanbury
Stewart
Stollery
Thériault—23

ABSTENTIONS
THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Pitfield
Spivak—2

Hon. P. Michael Pitfield: Honourable senators, I should like to explain why I abstained on this vote. Albeit for somewhat different reasons, there is much to be said for some of what Senator Prud'homme had to say, which I do not think we addressed.

As it is, the interests of party are causing this issue to be defined in a way that is unfortunate. This makes the matter more difficult to deal with and, in the end, I cannot support either the position of the government or that of the opposition.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I wish to take a few seconds to explain why I abstained.

It is quite clear that the government of the day was elected with a majority to do what it is doing. I am not fully convinced of the merit of the arguments for the amendments. I am also of the opinion that the Supreme Court should at the end of the day decide the constitutionality of the issue.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, shall the bill, as amended, be read the third time?

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is with great regret that I note that my Conservative colleagues have once again abused this chamber in the interests of partisan politics.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame!

Senator Stanbury: Once more they have turned their backs on the declared will of Canadians.

• (1240)

Throughout the debate over the last two weeks, both in this chamber and in committee, my Conservative colleagues have repeatedly represented themselves as being the defenders of the rights of Canadians. They stated over and over that they were utterly indifferent as to the outcome of the dispute concerning the Pearson Development Corporation or any of the parties to the Pearson deal. With equal force, they stated that they accepted the right of the Liberal government to cancel the Pearson deal.

The amendments to Bill C-22 proposed by the Conservative majority in the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs put the lie to those noble words. These amendments demonstrate that their purpose is now, as it was when the Conservative government shamefully pushed the agreements through less than two weeks before the election in which they were soundly defeated —

The Hon. the Speaker: Order. I apologize for interrupting, but there are many conversations going on. I know that after a vote there is always some movement, but perhaps we could cooperate by keeping our discussions at a very low level and allowing the speakers on both sides to be heard.

Senator Stanbury: Thank you, Your Honour.

Now, as then, their purpose is to get the best deal possible for the partners in the Pearson Development Corporation, whatever the best interests of Canada may be, and whatever the cost to Canadian taxpayers.

Yes, Bill C-22 is an extraordinary bill. It would nullify contracts. It would limit the compensation that can be given to the contracting parties and limit their access to the courts. However, it is extraordinary because the contracts it concerns were extraordinary, both in their substance and in the process by which they were concluded.

These agreements, as everyone in this chamber knows, and as most Canadians know, were needlessly rushed through to conclusion at the end of the election campaign when it was clear the government would be defeated. It was a shameful flouting of the principle of responsible government which is, as Peter Hogg, one of the pre-eminent Canadian constitutional scholars, has written, "probably the most important non-federal characteristic of the Canadian Constitution." The action of the Campbell government was clearly in breach of an important convention of our system of responsible government.

The Liberals made it very clear that they opposed conclusion of the agreements and that, if elected, the agreements would be reviewed and, if it was appropriate, they would be cancelled. The Conservative government, knowing this, and knowing also that the opinion polls showed that the Liberals were indeed about to win a majority government, proceeded to conclude the agreements.

This, in itself, demonstrated the utter disdain that the government had for the will of Canadians. It refused to wait and let the choice of the electorate determine and implement those policies that Canadians wanted to have implemented. In spite of them, the electorate did choose, in spades. They elected 33 Liberals in the Toronto area where the Pearson airport deal was the big issue, and they elected all but one Liberal in Ontario.

In substance, too, the Conservatives demonstrated their true motivation. Contrary to the normal practice, these contracts did not include any cancellation clause or termination-for-convenience clauses. The Conservatives, therefore, sought, as best they could, to present their duly elected successor with a fait accompli. They sought to impose their policies on their successor in blatant disregard for the will of Canadians. They rushed through a contract and omitted to provide terms whereby the next government could easily, and in the ordinary course, extricate itself from those contracts with minimal cost to the Canadian taxpayer.

Why should Pearson Development Corporation benefit from a privileged legal regime not available to businesses in general? This is clearly improper conduct on behalf of an outgoing government. To quote Professor Hogg again:

> If a legislative body could bind itself not to do something in the future, then a government could use its parliamentary majority to protect its policies from alteration or repeal. This would lay a dead hand on a government subsequently elected to power in a new election with new issues. In other words, a government while in office could frustrate in advance the policies urged by the opposition.

What they knew they could not do by legislation, because Parliament had already been dissolved, the Conservative government attempted to do by contract.

True to their election promise, the Liberals reviewed the Pearson deal. They concluded that it was not in the best interests of Canadians, and they proceeded to cancel it. However, the Conservatives are still trying to lay their dead hand on the new government's policies. They claim that their purpose is to ensure that the rights of all Canadians are defended.

Honourable senators, Bill C-22 threatens no rights. All Bill C-22 would do is put an end to the interests and expectations wrongfully raised in the first place. All the parties to these contracts knew full well that these agreements should not have been concluded so rashly. All the parties knew that they were likely to be cancelled if they insisted on steamrolling them through. This is not a case where anyone could have reasonably relied upon agreements, assuming that they were freely and properly entered into by parties with the authority and power to bind themselves and their successors.

The Minister of Justice came before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs specifically to address the concerns that had been raised about possible violations of rights that would be affected by Bill C-22. He stated categorically that, in accordance with the Department of Justice Act, he had satisfied himself that Bill C-22 was valid in terms of constitutional requirements. The minister went further. He described the analysis that was conducted of the bill in terms of the Canadian Bill of Rights. He stated his conclusion, that nothing in Bill C-22 was invalid because of the operation of any part of the Bill of Rights.

There was a suggestion by Senator Murray that the Department of Justice is sometimes found to be wrong. I would not dispute that at all, but I would like to read into the record the record of how often it has been overridden by the courts.

Since 1982, every government bill has received a Charter certificate. Between 1982 and December 31, 1993, 604 such pieces of legislation have been passed by Parliament. Only three were overturned by the Supreme Court of Canada. This represents a success rate of more than 99.5 per cent for the Department of Justice. The same applies for the certificates pursuant to the Bill of Rights. Between 1973 and 1982, 435 pieces of certified legislation passed through Parliament and only two were reversed by the Supreme Court of Canada; once again, a success rate of more than 99.5 per cent.

Therefore when the Tories claim that this bill is unconstitutional, they are placing their opinion and the speculative opinions of a couple of academics against the 99.5-per-cent track record of the Department of Justice. Instead of accepting the assurance of the Minister of Justice, who takes an oath of dedication to public service, they chose to accept the hypothetical speculations of two academics as to what might happen if the bill were ever challenged in the courts.

My Conservative colleagues continued to attack the bill, suggesting it would wreak havoc on all future government contracts. How could anyone be confident, we were asked, that any contract with the government would not be summarily cancelled like this? In fact, the real world of Canadians welcomed the Prime Minister's decision to cancel the Pearson deal.

I quote from an article by Allyson Jeffs which appeared in The Ottawa Citizen on December 4, 1993.

> Businesses seeking deals from outgoing governments will definitely think twice in the wake of Jean Chrétien's decision to toss out the Tory deal privatizing Toronto's Pearson Airport, a contract law expert said Friday.

The expert was Professor Robert Howse.

> They won't say "Let's sign it so it's done and a future government will leave it alone," Professor Robert Howse of the University of Toronto said in an interview. "It will discourage that in the future, certainly."
>
> And that, he said, is a good thing all the way around.
>
> It is efficient for everybody because it will not lead to business decisions based on the illusion that they'll be left alone after the democratic process. And it's also efficient for society as a whole because there will be fewer costs to get out of these contracts.

• (1250)

That was the opinion of Professor Robert Howse.

I also draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that this contract law expert pointed out last December that the government could have legislated an end to the contracts and refused to pay any compensation. Indeed, this is precisely what Bill C-22 would do, except that it would not go that far. It would allow for a negotiated compensation agreement, with the limitation that there would be no compensation for lobbyists' fees or lost profits.

Much has been made of these limitations. Counsel for the Pearson Development Corporation has called the bill "an act of confiscation." He stated his position that Pearson Development Corporation "is entitled to damages as a measure of the profit we would have been able to realize if the contract had not been cancelled." Honourable senators, this is plainly ridiculous.

The lobbyists' fees are simply expenses incurred in the hope of getting the deal. If the contracts had not been concluded — as they should not have been — there is no question that they could not have expected to be compensated for those expenses. Any business person knows that those expenses are incurred at your own risk. It would be nice to think you could bid on a contract risk-free and have all expenses reimbursed, but that is not how things work in the real world, and any Canadian knows that.

Honourable senators, we have a bill that is constitutional, and does not violate either the Charter of Rights and Freedoms or the Canadian Bill of Rights. It simply restores everyone to the position they would have been in, had the agreements not been signed. They should not have been signed, and all the parties knew that the incoming government strenuously opposed their signing and was prepared to cancel them if they were signed.

My Conservative colleagues on the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have now proposed a series of amendments to the bill. Honourable senators, the clear import of these amendments is to prevent the government from fulfilling its election promise, namely to prevent the cancellation of the agreements. All along, my Conservative colleagues have vowed that they were indifferent to the result for the parties to this contract, and their concern was solely with constitutional principles. They accept, they said, that the government has the right to cancel the contracts. Yet the amendments would prevent exactly that cancellation.

They said that all they wanted was an opportunity for the parties to make their claims in court. I saw the Leader of the Opposition stating exactly that on television last night. What they have done is to provide a quasi-legitimacy to the claims of the people who succeeded in pressuring and cajoling a desperate Prime Minister in her last days in office into creating a gravy train the like of which has never been seen in Canada before.

If these amendments pass, as they surely will, because the Progressive Conservative majority in the Senate, as the last vestige of the Progressive Conservative Party in Canada, must try to support those who supported it, Bill C-22 will be literally dead. Instead of cancelling the agreements altogether, the amendments would terminate them as of April 13, 1994, more than six months after the agreements were signed by the Conservative government. This could make the government liable for greatly increased damages, and the Minister of Transport estimated that they could be in the nature of hundreds of million of dollars. We see that the true purpose of these amendments is not, as claimed, to protect the rights of all Canadians, but rather to protect the narrow interests of Pearson Development Corporation and any other parties to the Pearson deal.

Indeed, where the government wanted to state categorically that no one is entitled to compensation from Her Majesty in connection with the coming into force of the act, the amendments would provide an exception for any entitlement to compensation that arose prior to April 13, 1994. In plain language, the amendments would reverse the policy of the Government of Canada and allow the payment of compensation up to April 13, 1994, including lobbying fees and prospective profits.

The government sought to ensure that the matter of the Pearson deal would be concluded once and for all with the passage of the bill and any compensation agreement negotiated soon thereafter. The government wanted to move on to establish and to put in place its own policies on the operation and development of Pearson and the other airports throughout Canada. The amendments would eliminate the clauses that would provide for this finality. The dead hand of the ousted Conservative government is again seeking to clamp down, and ensure that the government is entwined in litigation for years to come, or forced by threat of that legislation to accept a bad deal for Canadians.

Honourable senators, this is yet another example of this chamber being cynically manipulated for partisan politics, to ignore the stated will of the Canadian people and, instead, hold the government hostage to further political ends —

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You never did that during the GST debate, did you?

Senator Stanbury: — not the best interests of Canadians. What an unfortunate message to send Canadians already fed up with high-handed backroom politics.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Selective memory.

Senator Stanbury: I urge honourable senators to vote against the proposed bill as amended, and in favour of Bill C-22. Bill C-22 implements the will of Canadians. It is constitutionally sound. I invite honourable senators to ensure that the credibility of this chamber is not undermined once again, and that we uphold our proper role in responsible government.

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise today to speak to the constitutional issues arising out of Bill C-22. Before I do so, I wish to note that the Senate in the last two months has acted to fulfil the role originally envisaged for it. For instance, in its actions on Bill C-18, it protected and defended the democratic rights of Canadians, and in Bill C-22 we are attempting to preserve the rights of Canadians to due process of law.

As someone who deeply believes in Senate renewal and the role of the Senate in our parliamentary system, I feel the actions taken by senators on this side in relation to both these bills are in keeping with the strongest and best traditions of the Senate. I was honoured to participate for the last two days as a member of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs exploring the constitutional issues which lie at the heart of our objections to Bill C-22.

On Monday, July 4, 1994, the Minister of Justice, the Honourable Allan Rock, appeared before the committee and assured us the bill was valid constitutionally. He said, among other things, that it was within the power of the federal government to enact; Parliament is sovereign and can set aside contracts made by previous governments; there is no constitutional right to compensation. He said that there was nothing in Bill C-22 which contravened either the Charter or the Bill of Rights. However, the performance of the minister does not stand up to careful scrutiny.

Senator Jessiman persuasively argued the possible application of the right to a "fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice" section of the Bill of Rights. Others, including Senator Lynch-Staunton and Senator Murray, dealt with aspects of what we consider to be the faulty basis upon which the Bill was constructed — the lack of due process in the Nixon inquiry.

However, honourable senators, the most notable deficiency in Mr. Rock's arguments came when he was pressed for a precedent for this bill. Precedents are important for those who practice and study law: like cases are decided alike; like situations are to be dealt with by similar solutions. In order to have certainty, a degree of predictability in our legal system, we rely on precedents.

I asked Minister Rock for the statutory precedent for Bill C-22. What previous statute, either federal or provincial, breaks a contract and then prevents the aggrieved parties from recourse to the courts to establish the level of compensation, if any? After considerable pressing, the minister admitted that there was, in fact, no Canadian precedent for such action, but he did say that in Great Britain the War Damage Act, 1965 was a satisfactory precedent. I obtained a copy of that act, which is a one-page act, and I have read it. It is easy to distinguish from the facts of Pearson.

• (1300)

The War Damage Act of 1965 resulted because of court action brought by the Burma Oil Company as a result of certain oil fields being destroyed by the British during the Second World War as part of the war on Japan. As the Financial Secretary to the Treasury, Mr. Niall MacDermot, explained in the British House of Commons on February 3, 1965:

> This Bill deals with claims arising from events in Burma in the spring of 1942. At that time, the Japanese armies were advancing through Burma. In the path of the enemy advances and clearly destined to fall into enemy hands in a short time were certain installations and properties of considerable military and economic value to their possessors, including oil installations, whose value to an enemy in war-time I need hardly stress. Under the "scorched earth" policy which was adopted in the retreat, a substantial number of these installations and properties were deliberately destroyed or extensively damaged under the orders of the military commander so as to deny their use and value to the enemy.

Honourable senators, we do not agree that this act is a valid precedent. The War Damage Act is a relatively simple statute. It has but one material clause and I would like to read the relevant part of that clause. It states:

> No person shall be entitled at common law to receive from the Crown, compensation in respect of damage to, or destruction of, property caused (whether before or after the passing of this Act, within or outside the United Kingdom) by acts lawfully done by, or on the authority of, the Crown, during, or in contemplation of the outbreak of, a war in which the Sovereign was, or is, engaged.

This statute is no precedent for Bill C-22 for many reasons. I should like to list but four. First, Bill C-22 deals with vested contract rights. The War Damage Act has absolutely nothing to do with contracts. Indeed, as the Financial Secretary to the Treasury stated in 1965:

> The bill is concerned only with compensation at common law and leaves unaffected other types of war compensation.

Second, the War Damage Act is an act of general application. It applies to everyone, unlike the Pearson bill which applies only to a select few who are singled out to have their rights abridged and denied.

Third, the War Damage Act does not prohibit lawsuits for all matters pertaining to war. It only affects lawful acts. Bill C-22 prohibits access to the courts for all matters arising out of the Pearson airport contracts, subcontracts and any other contracts which might be discovered at some future date relating to Pearson.

Fourth, it deals with a wartime situation where extraordinary measures are routinely taken.

I asked Professor Douglas Schmeiser about the British act yesterday morning. He confirmed that it has no application to the Bill C-22 situation, as Bill C-22 deals with vested contract rights and the British bill exists in a country which does not have the legislative hurdles to overcome, such as our 1960 Diefenbaker Bill of Rights and a constitutionally entrenched Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I say to senators opposite that there has been no precedent cited for the type of action contemplated by Bill C-22.

We have further support because two days ago, honourable senators, the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee heard from two legal experts as to the constitutionality of Bill C-22. They were Professor Douglas Schmeiser from Saskatchewan and Professor Dale Gibson from the University of Alberta. Both cast considerable doubt on the constitutionality of Bill C-22.

Professor Schmeiser started his testimony by stating that we no longer exist in a system of parliamentary supremacy, but in one of judicial review. He stated that he doubted Parliament could legislate, as the government would have it do in this particular bill. The professor concentrated his remarks mainly on clauses 7 and 8, as they prohibit access to the courts for redress by the aggrieved parties. He argued that the rule of law as presented in the preamble of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the application of which was discussed at length in the Language Rights Reference case in Manitoba, when combined with section 52(1) of the Charter, which establishes the primacy of the Constitution, would render clauses 7 and 8 of Bill C-22 unconstitutional.

He then went to the 1960 Bill of Rights which, through section 2(3), recognizes a right to a fair hearing and fundamental justice. He noted that this section of the Bill of Rights has been construed to be binding both on individual and corporate entities. He stated that on the basis of the reasoning presented in the Drybones case in the Supreme Court of Canada in 1970, these clauses of Bill C-22 could be found to be "inoperative."

Our international obligations such as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant of Political and Civil Rights clearly state that we all have equal access to the courts. Also, property rights are usually protected in international agreements, the professor argued. Based on his study, Professor Schmeiser stated that those in opposition to this bill "have a chance" of success if they were to challenge this bill before the courts on its constitutionality.

Professor Dale Gibson of the University of Alberta was categorical about the chances of setting aside this bill as being unconstitutional. He said in his opening remarks and I quote:

> I think that Bill C-22 is unconstitutional and would be struck down for that reason, probably in its entirety, if challenged by the courts.

He was unequivocal. Professor Gibson felt that Bill C-22 encroached on provincial jurisdiction over property and civil rights in the province as set out in section 92(13) of the Constitution Act, 1867. He argued that Bill C-22 deals primarily with contracts, and only in a minor way with aeronautics. This puts it in the exclusive provincial field of interest.

As well, he felt that an argument could be made under section 8 of the Charter that the actions contemplated by Bill C-22 amount to an unreasonable seizure. Section 8 states that "everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search and seizure." Professor Gibson stressed that if the courts found that an unreasonable seizure of property had occurred, then Bill C-22 would not be saved by section 1 of the Charter in that no pressing need has been shown for the legislation.

As well, on the basis of the proportionality test required under the case law to invoke section 1, Bill C-22 fails as there are less Draconian ways to deal with the Pearson airport contracts. The professor suggested that the government did not put forth the solution that would interfere the least once it decided that the Pearson legislation was to save a "pressing and substantial public purpose."

Professor Gibson submitted that Bill C-22 violated section 2(e) of the Bill of Rights, which deals with the deprivation of a fair hearing, and argued that it violated section 1(a) of the Bill of Rights which protects enjoyment of property. Although the courts have held that section 1(a) does not apply to corporations, he cited one of the early Charter decisions in the Supreme Court of Canada, the decision in The Queen v. Big M. Drug Mart, in which the constitutionality of the Alberta Lord's Day Act was challenged. The courts held that freedom of religion could apply to a corporation because people were affected by that corporation's right to freedom of religion. He argued that the reasoning in that case would be applicable to section 1(a) of the Bill of Rights.

Professor Gibson closed by stating that Bill C-22 violates the rule of law, which is a fundamental tenet of our Constitution, on two grounds: first, clauses 9 and 10 of the bill as presented to us set out a scheme whereby the minister may determine the amount of compensation. As Professor Gibson said:

> The substitution of ministerial whim for any consistent legal provision concerning compensation seems to fly in the face of the rule of law. Besides imposing non-legal criteria on what should be a legal question, this makes the minister a judge in his own cause, which is a grave violation of the rule of law.

As well, Professor Gibson argued that clauses 7 and 8, in that they purport to deny access to the courts, unquestionably contravene the rule of law.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I submit that these are all compelling constitutional arguments against Bill C-22. I submit further that it should be amended so that the rights of Canadians to due process of law, to be protected by the rule of law, be restored. That is the role of the Senate — the protection of minorities against the arbitrary actions of the state.

Hon. John B. Stewart: I should like to ask the Honourable Senator Oliver if he will undertake to deal with a question.

Senator Oliver: Of course.

Senator Stewart: He has just told us that the arguments put forward in the committee by Professor Gibson are compelling constitutional arguments. Are we to understand that Senator Oliver agrees with Professor Gibson that Bill C-22 deals with a matter that falls within subsection 13 of section 92 of the Constitution Act, 1867?

• (1310)

Senator Oliver: One of the arguments that the professor made is that it may be ultra vires in that it falls into a provincial rather than a federal area. He did not base his entire presentation upon that. He did make the argument that that is one possibility.

Senator Stewart: I understand that. The honourable senator has stated how he will vote and he has been giving us an explanation of his vote. From what you have just said it seems reasonable to assume that you agree with Professor Gibson that Bill C-22 deals with a matter that falls under "property and civil rights in the province."

Senator Oliver: That is not the essence of what the professor said. As I said, that is only one of the arguments that he made, and that was one of his weakest arguments.

Senator Stewart: The honourable senator implies that he does not rely on that argument. Perhaps you find all the others weak — I do not propose to take you through the entire list. If one of this authority's arguments is weak, all of them may be weak.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, let me tell you how the public seems to perceive the Pearson airport deal and the current efforts by the Tory members of the Senate to salvage this deal for those to whom this gift was given by a dying Tory government.

The Pearson airport is the hub of Canada's transportation system. It is, moreover, an airport that makes a good profit for the federal treasury. It was given away to a consortium organized by friends of the former Tory government. Lobbyists who were also friends of the former Tory government played an unusually manic role in putting this deal together.

However, word got out. Public servants who felt manipulated and improperly pressured sounded the alarm. Municipal and provincial authorities in Toronto protested. The press got on to it. The Pearson airport deal became an issue in which public opinion was ahead of the politicians. It was a deal that added to the increasing contempt the public was feeling towards institutions of government before the last election.

The leader of the Liberal Party decided that, if elected, he would look into the Pearson deal and, if necessary, cancel it. He warned the Tory government not to sign the deal before the election. It was one of his acts that induced the public to vote for the Liberals.

Yet, after Jean Chrétien warned that he might cancel the deal if elected, and a mere 18 days before the federal election of October 25, 1993, the Pearson deal was signed by a Tory government that really knew that it was dying. The Tory party surely did not need this last nail in its coffin that the signing of the Pearson deal represented, but the Tory friends and lobbyists who had engineered this deal needed it.

Is it not legitimate to ask why they wanted it signed when they had been warned it would be cancelled, and knew full well that it would be cancelled? We have heard no plausible explanation than the one which follows: If they had a signed deal, then they could tie up the development of the Pearson airport in the courts, filing injunction after injunction. Thus, the Tories who engineered this deal could hope that, to get rid of them and proceed with an orderly, prompt and necessary development of the Pearson airport, the Liberals, who were certain to gain power, would have to pay compensation for cancelling the deal, including compensation for the profits those Tory friends had so looked forward to; and compensation for all those Tory lobbyists who wanted to set aside a little something for all those lean years they expected under the Liberals.

I should like to state unequivocally that I am convinced that Senator Lowell Murray had no part in this calculus. I think him an honest man. Though he was in the cabinet, he was surely too busy bailing an electoral boat that was so inexorably sinking to analyze the motives of those who wanted the deal signed even though they knew it would be cancelled. Nor do I think Senator Lynch-Staunton was aware of how deadly the desperation of the Pearson deal makers was at the thought of losing the goose that they had expected to give them so many golden eggs.

The Liberals, as expected, won the election; had a look at the Pearson deal; listened to all the public servants who had gone through the vexing experience of being pressured to do something they were not sure was in the public interest; and the Liberals concluded that the public had been right all along and that the Pearson deal was not in the public interest.

No one — not even one Tory senator — contests the right of a freshly elected government to cancel a contract it considers bad for the public interest. Of course, there are ways of cancelling and then there are other ways of cancelling. The Liberal government prefers one way; the Tories prefer another way.

The Liberal way, Bill C-22, proceeds from the assumption that the Pearson deal was not in the public interest, that it would deprive the citizens of property they own for no fair return, and that since the transaction was bad it should be cancelled at the minimum possible cost to the public. Those involved in the deal should be compensated for real expenses they incurred preparing their bid, but not for profits they would forgo because the bill was cancelled, nor for their clever lobbyists who engineered the bill. Surely it is improper to pay someone for arranging to deprive citizens of public property that they own, and with no fair return for these citizens.

Bill C-22 declares the deal never to have existed. This was the only formula which would preclude the clever lobbyists and their friends from tying up the prompt and necessary improvement of Pearson airport by clever legal tactics before the courts, where their lawyers would argue that clients had the deal which gave them Pearson airport, and therefore no one else could touch the airport. The airport would be the hostage and the public would be asked to pay a heavy ransom. These are the plain facts as the public understands them, regardless of the legal language.

That is precisely what the Tory amendments are designed to do. They are designed to enable their friends to hold the public to ransom. With these amendments, the Pearson deal is no longer deemed not to have existed but is cancelled as of April 14. The Tory amendments nullify Bill C-22, which is the only formula to preclude improper payments for arranging to deprive citizens of public property they own, and with no fair return for these citizens. This is what we are talking about. These amendments open the way for the hostage incident. Thanks to the Tory amendments, the prompt and necessary improvements of the Pearson airport will be tied up in litigation until the maximum possible payments are secured for those who engineered the deal in the first place.

Tory senators assure us they are interested only in fairness, and not in helping anyone get compensation other than for real costs incurred in negotiating the bill, which is what the government is prepared to pay. Why, then, have the Tories proposed the amendment so precisely aimed at giving those who engineered the deal a tool for extracting the maximum amount of money from the public?

"Ah, yes," say the Tories, "but the amount to be paid by the government will be decided unilaterally by the government, and that is not fair." Why, then, did the Tories not leave the rest of the bill alone, amending only clause 10, assigning the determination of real costs incurred not to the government but to independent arbiters? You did not try that.

Senator Oliver: Because there was no contract.

Senator Gigantès: That is not what you wanted. That would have been fair, but that is not what the Tories did. Their amendments were specifically designed to let those who engineered the Pearson deal use the courts to get at the public purse. One is inevitably led to doubt Tory affirmations that they care only about fairness.

"Ah, yes," say the Tories, still on their fairness theme, "it is not fair, it is not natural justice to deprive people of their right to sue, as Bill C-22 does." I am paraphrasing, but accurately.

Bill C-22 does not deprive anyone of the right to sue. They can go to court claiming that Bill C-22 is against the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights. Had the government really wanted to deny access to the courts, it could have invoked a notwithstanding clause, shielding Bill C-22 from the court challenges. However, the government did not invoke the notwithstanding clause and, therefore, those who want to challenge Bill C-22 in the courts may do so. The lawyers among the Tories know this very well. Not one of them has denied it.

Finally, the Tories charge the government with unfairness for not having held a public inquiry under the Inquiries Act where witnesses can be subpoenaed, interrogated under oath and cross-examined. The Chrétien government did not want another Sinclair Stevens inquiry, drawing the attention of headline writers, every day, to Tory errors of omission or commission. It would be an inquiry into Tory actions, not Liberal actions. However, the government felt it was better to deal with the thing as quickly as possible, rather than prolong the agony and thereby provide a prolonged illumination of events which would only serve to revive the contempt for public institutions which Mr. Chrétien has so successfully reversed.

However, as the Honourable Doug Young said, the government knew full well that the Tories have a majority in the Senate, that the Senate can subpoena witnesses, interrogate them under oath. There is a whole platoon of Tory senators who are Queen's counsel, learned in the law, who could cross-examine any witness under oath to their hearts content. Counsel for those who engineered the Pearson deal would surely provide Tory senators with all the required ammunition for such cross-examination.

The Liberals, too, have Queen's counsel who are learned in the law, and who sit as senators. The government knew the Tories could launch just such an inquiry, and that such an inquiry by a Senate committee would be much, much cheaper than one under the Inquiries Act. One must ask, therefore, why have the Tories not undertaken an inquiry through the mechanisms the Senate provides? Since they have not launched the inquiry, how ingenuous is their request for an inquiry by the government?

Why, then, are intelligent, honest people like Senator Lowell Murray acting the way they are on Bill C-22? The only possible answer seems to be partisanship. Honourable senators might remember that I have often expressed support for partisanship — the inevitable consequence of having parties in a democracy. If we did not have at least two parties, we would be a banana republic or one of those former Soviet socialist republics.

Honourable senators might also remember that I have often expressed the view that an opposition must oppose vigorously. The issues that Parliament deals with are too important for playing patty-cake, patty-cake. Parliamentary democracy demands passionate debate because the issues merit passionate debate.

My only criticism of the Tory stance on this issue, Bill C-22, is that they have chosen the wrong issue. I am sorry, because I prefer them to Reformers. I dread the thought of that bunch of fundamentalists some day replacing you completely, even in this chamber.

My only criticism of the Tory stance is that they have undertaken to defend one of their past mistakes, and to stand for the pecuniary interests of a few businessmen and lobbyists who mind losing a cash cow, against the citizens at large whose interests are ill served by the Pearson deal.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I am tempted, but perhaps I should stick to a reasonably prepared comment. My temptation is truly to suggest that some of my colleagues opposite seem to be using their standards to judge what is happening here — not my standards; their standards. I would not stoop that low.

Senator Frith and Senator Stanbury both commented about the use of this chamber as a debating place for discussing national issues. Senator Stanbury, as a matter of fact, said that we are abusing the declared will of Canadians. These two senators and their colleagues would have us believe that this chamber has no right to represent the best interests of Canadians.

Senator Stanbury: Not so.

Hon. Royce Frith: I said the exact opposite.

Senator Di Nino: Listen, then. They would have us believe that we should abdicate the constitutional authority of this chamber.

Let me remind them of their conduct, of their behaviour and their practice during most of the time the previous government was in power.

Senator Stanbury: How about the behaviour of the government?

Senator Di Nino: How many times did they and their colleagues oppose, how many times did they amend, and how many times did they delay the legislation of the previous government when the Liberals had a majority in this chamber?

Senator Stanbury: And how many times was anything accepted?

Senator Frith: Never. Not once.

Senator Di Nino: Let me also remind them that they have neither exclusivity nor a God-given right to be the only spokesmen and representatives of Canadians.

Senator Hastings: You are not doing very well.

Senator Di Nino: We on this side do not intend to abdicate our responsibility to represent and safeguard the rights of Canadians. As a matter of fact, we intend to fight for their rights.

Honourable senators, I am impressed by the presentations of my colleagues on this issue. To me, this debate is all about the fundamental principles of a democratic nation.

• (1330)

The foundation of a democracy is surely based on the right to impartial and independent adjudication of a citizen's grievance, commonly referred to as due process.

Before I speak on this critical part of Bill C-22, I will address the suggestion or accusation that the delay of this bill will impact on the operation and administration of Pearson International Airport. In my view, that accusation is baseless.

Transport Canada continues and has continued uninterrupted the responsibility for the operation and administration of the airport. Possession was never relinquished.

Prior to the October 25, 1993 election, Prime Minister Campbell asked the corporation that had won the bid not to take possession on the scheduled date of November 1, 1993, but to defer possession until December 15, 1993, to allow the incoming government an opportunity to review the contracts. Obviously, we are all aware of what has transpired since then.

In my opinion, the operation and administration of Pearson International Airport is in no way affected by any delay of the passage of this bill. Repairs, maintenance, and the operation of the airport continue in the usual manner. The efficient and safe transportation of passengers at Pearson will not be affected by this piece of legislation.

If the suggestion is that delaying this bill will result in the government's inability to proceed with future plans for Pearson International Airport, I have two suggestions:

First, I, and I know my colleagues agree, have no objection to the cancellation of the contract. Therefore, I believe the final disposition of this legislation will not interfere with the government's right, a right we agree with, to cancel the contract. Let the officials begin the background work necessary in preparing for a speedy conclusion to a problem that must be dealt with expeditiously.

Second, if this chamber in its wisdom amends the legislation, I invite the government to recall the other place as soon as possible to deal with the matter. We on this side are ready to sit next week, the week after, or whenever the bill is once again in this chamber. Let us cut the rhetoric, and let us work together to craft a piece of legislation that serves the government's purpose but does not deny Canadians that most important right of a democratic society, our day in court. It is precisely on this point I wish to comment further.

Let me clearly state my position on my objection to Bill C-22. Canadians expect and demand that we as legislators safeguard their fundamental rights and principles. The right to due process under Bill C-22 is being denied to a number of Canadians, not only the major participants in the agreement, but many other lesser players caught by this legislation. The principle of democracy has, as its foundation, the right to one's day in court.

I find clauses 7 and 8 in this bill totally unacceptable and offensive. No government, at least no democratic government, should have the right to deny fundamental justice to its citizens. My objection to this bill is based solely on the fact that it will deny Canadians the right to due process. We grant, and rightly so, this fundamental right to murderers, rapists, child molesters and other such scum, and yet this bill will deny this right to a number of Canadians who are claiming, not only innocence of any wrongdoing, but an opportunity to prove their innocence through an independent, impartial, judicial inquiry.

Senator Stanbury, I believe, said that Bill C-22 threatens no rights. He is wrong.

Minister Rock, in his testimony before the Senate committee studying this legislation, stated that no similar legislation had ever been passed by the Government of Canada. Let me again refresh your memory. A similar law was passed in 1942 under the War Measures Act, when the Canadian government legislatively denied the right to due process to Canadians of Japanese, Italian and other backgrounds. That was for tens of thousands of Canadians a very dark time in their lives.

Senator Stewart: When was it passed?

Senator Di Nino: 1942.

Senator Stewart: I thought it was 1913.

Senator Di Nino: I said under the War Measures Act in 1942.

Not only did the government take these people's rights away from them, it took away their freedom, their dignity and their self-respect. Those Canadians have carried, and will carry, their shame and their pain to their graves.

Denial of fundamental rights was wrong then and it is even more wrong today, because today we cannot blame it on the emotions aroused by a war. Nothing in a democratic society justifies denial of due process.

Honourable colleagues, I care not about the contracts or agreements. I care not about the issues of compensation. What I do care about and will fight for is our fundamental rights, and Bill C-22 offends me and insults all rational thinking Canadians unless amended to restore the right to due process for all Canadians. I urge my colleagues to support the amended bill.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, during the debate at second reading and at the committee hearings, the opposition's stand on Bill C-22 was presented in great detail by a number of colleagues and myself, and it has been done again today. I trust our position is well enough known by now that I need not go over it at length. My remarks will be, for the most part, general in nature.

The approach taken by the two ministers who appeared before the committee could not have been more different, one from the other. The Minister of Justice pleaded the constitutionality of the bill with forcefulness and displayed a most impressive knowledge of the Constitution, the Charter, and the Bill of Rights. His exchanges with members of the committee were informative and most helpful in assessing the bill.

His colleague the Minister of Transport, on the other hand, took the same approach before the committee as he did in the House. The agreements are flawed, they were put together under suspicious circumstances, there was excessive lobbying, patronage was rampant, et cetera, et cetera, ad nauseam. According to him, a bad contract justifies a bad bill. It is a simple as that, so get on with it.

Honourable senators, it is not as simple as that, as we were told by the two constitutional experts, Douglas Schmeiser and Dale Gibson, who drew attention to the unprecedented nature of this legislation, which is an affront to the supreme law of this country.

Such is our preoccupation with Bill C-22. It is of no interest to us, at this stage, anyway, how the agreements came about. For the sake of argument, however, let us accept all that has been said about them.

Senator Stanbury: You would rather forget about it.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Let us, for the sake of argument, accept all that had been said about them and even more. Let us accept that they only came about because of the political connections of the principals. Let us allow that lobbyists used excessive influence and pressure in serving their clients, that ministers' political aides interfered on behalf of the promoters, that patronage and political connections were the determining factors in the choice of participants. Yes, let us accept all that and even more.

Then what? Any responsible government, not only suspecting but hinting directly at highly unusual doings and goings-on, would already have ordered and launched an investigation by the Solicitor General or, even better, a public inquiry to get to the bottom of the matter.

Our call for a public inquiry does not originate with us. It does not originate as a result of Bill C-22. It originates with an electoral promise Mr. Chrétien made during the campaign. On October 6, 1993, The Toronto Star reports as follows:

> Chrétien said if he forms a government after the election, he will order a full-scale inquiry to investigate the deal.
>
> > If it is a good deal, we will sign it if we form a government. But it is no time to sign a deal of this size three weeks before an election, > the Liberal leader said.
>

Senator Stanbury: It was irresponsible.

• (1340)

Senator Lynch-Staunton: He said:

> You can't make a deal like that without all the facts. The people have a right to know all the facts before they are stuck with a deal.

Mr. Chrétien was in favour at the time of a full scale public inquiry.

Senator Berntson: What happened?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: What happened? We have the distorted, warped, secretive Nixon report on which this legislation is based. We are just repeating what Mr. Chrétien said during the campaign, "Let's have a full scale, public inquiry."

The government refuses to go in this direction, to provide those it smears with a chance to be heard. They cannot be heard now because they have not even been named — strongly hinted at but not named. Accusations and insinuations are thrown out to fall where they may. Everyone connected with the agreement is under suspicion, both in the public as well as in the private sector. The government, with no consideration for the harm done to the reputations of hundreds of fellow citizens, brings forward unsubstantiated accusations as facts, and concludes that Canadians were shafted by the beneficiaries of a sweetheart deal, so let's shaft them in return.

Anyone in Canada who is charged with an offence, be it criminal or civil, as trivial as watering a lawn outside certain hours or as serious as child molestation, is entitled to a hearing in court. No one involved with the Pearson agreement has been charged with the slightest offence. Nothing surrounding the agreement, which took four years to complete, has been identified as illegal. Yet Bill C-22, which cancels the agreement, a decision with which we have no quarrel as it lies entirely within the government's right, goes where no other act of the Parliament of Canada has gone before. It declares that not only are the agreements cancelled, they are said never to have existed. No compensation or redress for this unilateral act can be claimed. No access to the courts is available. The Minister of Transport will decide if claims may or may not be honoured in his own way, within his own definition, within his own time limits.

Is distaste of an agreement, no matter how intense, sufficient grounds for denying a basic right to innocent Canadians, a basic right which is available to hardened criminals? Supporters of Bill C-22 plead that yes, this may be an extraordinary provision, but then one must realize that court proceedings would be lengthy and certainly very costly.

How can the government anticipate the ultimate costs, if any, of any court action anyway? The Minister of Transport was not able to give any figure which could result from the application of clause 10. He had no idea what the overall claims might be, although he remembered reading somewhere a figure of about $170 million. Senator Stewart claimed at the committee that that figure could be much higher if court action were initiated. He also admitted that it could be lower. He dismissed the possibility that it could be negligible. The fact is that no one knows, period. The government implies that court claims could lead to settlements running into the hundreds of millions of dollars. How presumptuous, if not disrespectful, of the judiciary to anticipate a judgment even before any action has been filed.

How the government contradicts itself. On the one hand, it says the contract is tainted, riddled with favouritism, obscenely profitable and a reward for political favours, and, on the other hand, such a contract as the result of a court settlement would result in a cost to the taxpayers of hundreds of millions of dollars. Any logic to holding these two arguments simultaneously escapes me completely.

What we do know is that it is immoral and, based on expert testimony, wrong to deny anyone the right to go before an independent body for an independent judgment. The main thrust of the amendment is to restore this right, and to declare the agreement terminated at a certain date.

During the discussion of the amendments, government supporters deplored the fact that claims for lobbyists, lobbyist fees and lost profits could and would be made as if this were improper. They suggested that all claims would be honoured, which is an affront to the judiciary. They took particular exception to lobbyist fees forming part of the claims.

The government has a fixation about lobbying. It treats it as a low-life occupation with its practitioners engaged in sleazy activities. They should be kept at a distance, treated as pariahs. This made for wonderful campaign rhetoric, but when it came time to act, the bluster quickly gave way to pussy-footing. Amendments have been introduced to the Lobbyists Registration Act which, not surprisingly, do not match the promises of the Red Book, wherein one reads:

> ...a Liberal government will implement the unanimous June 1993 report of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs respecting the Lobbyists Registration Act.

Obviously, someone in the government did not read the whole report, or deliberately skipped over some pages, as the amendments proposed do not incorporate a number of key committee recommendations. Why do I elaborate on this? Because, on the one hand, lobbyists are fair game to justify a deplorable bill, yet based on the proposed amendments to the Lobbyists Act, now before a House committee, they will be allowed to operate as before except for the supplying of additional information on their activities. If the government was so concerned with the supposed damage done by lobbyists, why not add a clause to Bill C-22 and declare lobbying not only unworthy of financial compensation but illegal, purely and simply.

This bill may be sponsored by the Minister of Transport but it is the Minister of Justice who will bear the awful responsibility of justifying it, should it ever pass in its original form. He and the government are obviously unhappy with the proposed amendments, but he and his government have certainly not been deaf to the assessment of Bill C-22 by two of Canada's leading constitutional scholars who condemned the clauses denying access to the courts. As the Minister of Justice reflects on the testimony given before the Senate committee and on the debates in this chamber, he will understand that this is our only preoccupation. If he and his colleagues feel that certain claims should be limited, or not even considered, why did he not incorporate such terms into the act? Denial of access to the courts would then not have been necessary. I can assure the government that had the bill before us been drafted to properly incorporate this approach, it is unlikely that we would be in the impasse that we are in now.

I do want to end by repeating here something I said to the committee the day before yesterday: Those who question the Senate's in-depth examination of legislation passed by an elected house must understand that by not doing so the Senate abdicates its responsibilities. Respect for decisions taken by the elected does not imply blind acceptance of them, particularly when government legislation does not meet some fundamental criteria, one of which is to correct injustices. Bill C-22 does the opposite; it creates injustices.

Senator Frith suggests that if there is a question on the constitutionality of Bill C-22, it is not for the Senate, not even for Parliament, to answer, but for affected citizens to plead their own case in court. I want to answer by quoting from one of the most respected members of this chamber whose views continue to be given serious consideration, as they were during his lifetime. In his book, A Life on the Fringe Eugene Forsey wrote as follows:

> ...The citizen ought not to be forced to bear all the trouble and expense of going to the courts to prove that what purports to be law is not law at all; and this applies just as much to subordinate as to substantive legislation. If, while a bill is before Parliament, a Member, a committee, or even a witness can convince the House that a particular provision is ultra vires and should therefore be struck out, citizens may be saved much toil, trouble, and expense, and perhaps the courts much needless work. If when a regulation is promulgated a parliamentary committee can report that, in the committee's opinion, it is ultra vires, the government may be induced to withdraw it, or amend it to remove the offending provisions; and if it does, it should not be overborne by any tenderness for the amour propre of grandeur of the Department of Justice.

• (1350)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Honourable senators, we have not taken the stand we have with any enthusiasm; far from it. From the moment we started discussing Bill C-22 amongst ourselves, we knew that we would be charged with favouring political supporters, which has been a recurring theme over the last few weeks. Nothing could be further from the truth. However, as a whole smear campaign regarding the Pearson agreements has been so cunningly promoted, it was inevitable we would be caught up in it.

It would probably have been politically wiser to see the bill through as quickly as possible by holding our noses and getting on to other matters. Then what would have happened? As Senator Frith suggested, a court challenge would no doubt have been instituted. As the two experts suggested, the court would probably have struck down at least part of the bill.

How would Canadians have reacted to the revelation that both Houses of Parliament had passed legislation which they knew had every chance of being declared ultra vires? Not only should we not consider the possibility, we must make every effort to avoid it.

Honourable senators, we faced a similar situation with Bill C-18. Amendments were made here; the government reflected and agreed to them. We hope the government will also react positively to our concerns and agree that replacing the rule of law by the rule of men and women is not acceptable in this country. It is a constitutional guarantee, which it is a duty of each Canadian to defend and uphold at all times, and no more so than by the members of both Houses of Parliament.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Stewart: Senator Lynch-Staunton mentioned me in the course of his interesting statement; consequently, I should like to ask him a question.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Certainly.

Senator Stewart: Bill C-22 was introduced in the House of Commons with a Royal Recommendation. In Bill C-22, a certain method is provided for payments to those who will have had losses as a result of the expunging of the contract. The amendments introduce quite a scheme of providing compensation for those persons, a scheme different from the one set forth in the unamended bill.

Hon. Lowell Murray: No, they do not.

Senator Stewart: Well, there is this difference.

Senator Murray: The amendments would return us to the status quo.

Senator Frith: What status quo? That is the question!

Senator Stewart: The amendments introduce a scheme different from the one in the bill.

Senator Murray, do you not agree that the amendments have the effect of setting aside the compensation scheme set forth in clauses 9 and 10 of the original bill?

Senator Murray: No, honourable senators. The amendments proposed by the opposition strike out those clauses which deny access to the courts to Canadian citizens and thereby restore —

Senator Frith: No, they do not. What about the other clauses?

Senator Murray: To anticipate your argument, those amendments make no new charge upon the public treasury. They restore the status quo.

As of today, without this bill the government can cancel the contract and citizens can sue the government.

Senator Frith: Why did you bother with the other clauses?

Senator Gigantès: Will some lawyer on your side explain it to you?

Senator Stewart: The original clause 9 read as follows:

> No one is entitled to any compensation from Her Majesty in connection with the coming into force of this Act.

With the amendment, clause 9 will read as follows:

> No one is entitled to any compensation from Her Majesty by reason of the application of this Act, except any entitlement to compensation that arose before April 13, 1994 in respect of the agreements.

Clearly there is a difference, otherwise there would have been no amendment introduced by the Conservatives.

It is true that no specific figure can be assigned as flowing from the different scheme of compensation. However, there is this difference: Two classes of potential payments by the Crown are brought back in by the amendment; namely, payments to those who have suffered a loss of profit, and those who made payments for the purpose of lobbying. Those were excluded in the original bill.

Hon. Duncan J. Jessiman: They are still there.

Senator Gigantès: You do not understand the bill. As before April 14, they are no longer excluded because of your amendments.

Senator Jessiman: I will speak later. Please finish.

Senator Stewart: If there are claims for losses of profit or claims for fees for the purpose of lobbying that relate to the period before April 13, then they will be eligible to be dealt with under the new clause 9.

Senator Jessiman: I should now like a minute to answer.

Senator Stewart: No, let me finish.

Senator Di Nino: You do not want the answer, senator.

Senator Jessiman: Let me answer, and then you take your turn.

Senator Hastings: Senator Stewart is asking a question. Order!

Senator Jessiman: Will you listen for a moment. We did not delete clause 10.

Senator Molgat: Is Senator Jessiman acting as legal counsel for my honourable friend?

Senator Jessiman: Yes, to some extent, I guess I am.

Senator Gigantès: Thank God someone with legal knowledge is going to speak. We have not heard much legal sense from over there.

Senator Jessiman: I am going to try. Please.

Senator Gigantès: All right.

Senator Jessiman: We did not delete clause 10. If you do not want to proclaim it, it will stay in existence.

Let us suppose an action is brought before the court. The court will have this clause in front of it. The court will see under this clause, which I would suggest you word differently if you are bringing it back, that, even given the way we have amended it, no amount is payable for any loss of profits or any fees to lobbyists. That clause is in front of the court. The act is there. You proclaim it, though, and 30 days later that is gone.

Senator Frith: Senator Jessiman is reading the bill as if the other clauses were not touched. They are connected.

Senator Jessiman: Of course they are connected. You are exactly right. That is why the court would have to look at it.

Senator Frith: Under your amendments, lobbying fees referred before April would be claimable.

Senator Jessiman: Claimable, but not necessarily payable.

Senator Frith: You are only talking about claimable. The whole bill is about claims. That is what your amendments are about.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I apologize for interrupting the discussion taking place without set speeches. The Senate is very lively today. The problem is this: The Hansard reporters are probably dealing pretty well with this by-play, because they are used to it, but the console operator upstairs is trying to give us sound so that we can know what is going on. He must be having immense technical problems. I suggest we try to make way for each other in a more orderly way so that we can all share in the enjoyment of the debate.

Senator Stewart: Clause 10(2) reads as follows:

> No amount is payable under an agreement entered into under this section in relation to
>
> (a) any loss of profit, or
>
> (b) any fee paid...

However, the effect of the original clause 9 was to say that no one is entitled to any compensation from Her Majesty in connection with the coming into force of this act. The new clause 9 means that claims for any loss of profit or any fee paid for the purposes of lobbying can be sought. There are two new purposes for which claims upon the Crown will be possible under the bill as amended.

• (1400)

That brings us back to the whole question of Royal Recommendations. I leave out all speculation about amounts. We have two purposes excluded by the original bill for which payments may be made under the new clause 9.

I realize that Senator Lynch-Staunton was not here in 1988 when we traversed some of this ground. Let me briefly explain what the situation was at that time.

The Mulroney government brought in the Government Organization Bill, Bill C-103, which set up the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. The Liberal-dominated Senate divided Bill C-103 and sent the part which could be dealt with quickly and without amendment back to the House of Commons. But before that happened, the Conservative senators said, "No, you can't do this because Bill C-103 is a money bill." It got to the point where the Speaker of the Senate, Senator Charbonneau, was asked for a ruling. He ruled that that bill was a money bill, that it was an appropriation bill, by reason of the fact that it had been introduced in Parliament with a Royal Recommendation. That appears in the Debates of the Senate of June 7, 1988, at page 3587. On appeal, the Senate rejected Speaker Charbonneau's ruling.

Consequently, the bill went over to the House of Commons. When Mr. Speaker Fraser dealt with the question, as he did on July 11, 1988, he took the fact that Bill C-103 had been introduced with a Royal Recommendation as conclusive evidence that Bill C-103 was a money bill.

He went on to remind the House of Commons that, according to one of the standing orders of that House:

> ...all aids and supplies granted to the Sovereign by the Parliament of Canada are the sole gift of the House of Commons...

He proceeded to tell the House of Commons that the Liberal-dominated Senate had infringed upon the privileges of the House of Commons. That is at Commons Debates page 17384.

The outcome was that the Liberal-dominated Senate, while denying the position taken by the Tory-dominated Commons, agreed to let Bill C-103 pass without amendment.

It is evident that the position now taken by the Conservative Party in the Senate is quite different from the position taken by Senator Murray, Senator Charbonneau, Mr. Speaker Fraser and the Tory cabinet in 1988. Have they reversed themselves completely so that they now believe that amendments, which make a new charge upon the Treasury, to a bill introduced with a Royal Recommendation, amendments that add two classes of persons to those eligible for compensation, are in order? That is the question I put to Senator Lynch-Staunton.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I do not have an answer, Senator Stewart. I am certainly not familiar with this whole history of Royal Recommendations and I would hesitate even to pretend to give you an intelligent answer. I would like to defer to my learned friend and counsel, Senator Murray, who is much more experienced than I.

It would be my opinion, however, that if it is felt that we are trespassing on the prerogative of the House, it would be for the Speaker of the House to rule upon. That is the only intelligent remark, if I can call it that, that I can make on your question.

Senator Stewart: I was not asking for a ruling. I was asking what the position of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada now is. The Conservative Speaker of the Senate spoke in 1988, as did the Speaker of the House of Commons. I do not know that the Prime Minister spoke, but certainly there was lots of noise from members of the Conservative cabinet. Of course, Senator Murray spoke definitively, authoritatively, conclusively, infallibly on the question at that time. They made the Conservative view known to all.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not think that the association the honourable senator makes between the ACOA bill of 1988 and this bill is at all valid. In the case of the amendments to this bill, as I tried to say in an exchange with Senator Stewart a few moments ago, our amendments have the effect of restoring access to the courts. The access to the courts is there today, without Bill C-22. If the government cancelled the contract, as it could do without legislation, those affected could sue the Crown. That is the situation today. If the bill were to pass unamended, access to the courts is precluded. Our amendments simply restore access to the courts, so we are restoring the status quo, the situation as it is today. This is not, therefore, any new charge on the Treasury.

Senator Frith: Why do you keep ignoring the first three amendments? Have they been withdrawn? These amendments do not only touch 7 and 8.

Senator Murray: My argument applies to those too.

While I am on my feet, I will say two things. First, Senator Stewart's argument is highly hypothetical. He is saying that if we restore access to the courts, some people might go to the courts; if they go to the courts, they might claim damages; if they claim damages, damages might be awarded; if damages were awarded, there would be a charge on the Treasury. In other words — and he used this term himself when dealing with this matter in committee — a "potential" charge upon the Treasury. Well, as he said in a discussion with Mr. du Plessis, the Law Clerk, the other day, it either is or it is not a charge on the Treasury. "Potential" does not count. It is either a charge on the Treasury or it is not, and I say it is not.

The other point I would make, which I think is pertinent, is that a more relevant question was the one put by Senator Stewart the other day in his discussion with Mr. du Plessis, and that is whether Bill C-22 required a Royal Recommendation at all.

I do not know the answer to that question. You would have to put that question to the minister of the Crown or the legal advisors to the Crown who attached the Royal Recommendation. However, I do not see any payment contemplated or envisaged in Bill C-22 that the government could not make without the bill, as governments proceed to make ex gratia payments all the time under the Crown Liability Act.

I think that was the more relevant question which Senator Stewart put. As I say, I do not know the answer, but as a layman I would question whether the Royal Recommendation was really necessary for that bill.

Senator Stewart: I do not want to go on too long on this. However, let me say two things: First, I think it is really quite disingenuous for Senator Murray to say that the effect of the amendments will not be to expose the Crown to additional costs, particularly when, as Senator Jessiman said, the whole question of loss of profit and fees paid for the purpose of lobbying a public officeholder can now be subjects with regard to which claims for compensation can be made. It is rather disingenuous. Second, if a Royal Recommendation was required in the case of Bill C-103 — which was simply setting up an organization — it is difficult to see that one can say that no Royal Recommendation was not required in the case of the present bill.

• (1410)

Over the years I have asked about Royal Recommendations because the presence of a Royal Recommendation starts questions concerning what the Senate can do to a bill, concerning how far the Senate can go by way of amendment. For almost 20 years the practice has been for governments to bring in bills such as Bill C-22 with a Royal Recommendation, as was done in this case.

I suppose Senator Beaudoin will be on his feet in a moment, stating that the use of Royal Recommendations in this way is now a convention of the Constitution. If so, it would seem reasonable to expect the House of Commons to treat Bill C-22 as amended in the same way that House treated Bill C-103 in 1988.

The fact that the Progressive Conservative Party in the Senate today is taking a new position, a position diametrically opposite to the one they took in 1988, is revealing. It shows how rapidly the Constitution is evolving, even in the minds of very conservative persons.

Hon. Gérald-A Beaudoin: Senator Stewart, if I understand you correctly, you want to play the same game again, but the players will be on the other side this time.

I remember very well the case to which you referred, not the first one in June 1988 because I was appointed in September 1988, but I remember the long debate that I had with you in February 1990 on this very fascinating subject of the Royal Recommendation and the conventions of the Constitution. However, I do not want to refer to that for too long. I have not changed my opinion.

As Senator Murray accurately stated, our amendments are aimed at restoring what we call the rule of law. Senator Stewart states that it may be more expensive. Each time the government respects the Constitution it may perhaps be more expensive, more costly, but the fact is that it is not the same thing as in the 1988 case or the 1990 case.

If there is a budget and the opposition in the Senate, as it did in 1990, for example, suggests that we revert to a previous situation and increase the spending of money, that is one thing. I am sure the honourable senator remembers the unemployment insurance case and Bill C-21, where we came to the conclusion that if an amendment increases the spending, then it may go against the convention. This was an appropriation bill; it was a bill dealing with the spending of money. This case is completely different from the 1988 case and the 1990 case.

Senator Thériault: Because it is your side.

Senator Beaudoin: No, no.

Senator Thériault: Yes, of course it is.

Senator Beaudoin: If you do not want to hear the explanation, it is up to you.

Senator Thériault: There is no explanation. There is no logical explanation.

Senator Beaudoin: Perhaps you are the tribunal of logic in this world. To me, it is not the same case at all. We are aiming at correcting what we consider is a flaw in a bill. You say yes, but perhaps it may increase the spending. We just do not know.

In 1988 it was mathematical. Here it is purely hypothetical. That is the only thing I will say at this stage.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I must say I am very glad I made the decision yesterday — that a number of senators referred to as a very unpopular decision — to extend the debate.

Those who read our proceedings will see that we in the Senate are capable of discussing these very important issues and providing further clarification, thanks to the various exchanges that have taken place since yesterday.

Senator Thériault: We could have done that yesterday!

Senator Prud'homme: Not at all, because yesterday it was my understanding that only two speakers would take part in this debate.

[English]

For the press to understand well, my understanding was that yesterday there would have been two, or a maximum of three, speakers, and that was it.

Senator Molgat: No, no. Never.

Senator Prud'homme: Everything is debatable. However, I am still pleased that I made that decision. I will not prolong the debate. I will keep most of the other arguments — I have 27 points — for the debate, because now it seems evident that this bill will return to the Senate. As I said, I will be very brief — we must not be shy to learn on our feet — prompted by the speech of the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton.

Senator Corbin: He has just left.

Senator Prud'homme: I am still prompted by what he said. The more he keeps talking, the more he could convince some senators of some of the good points raised in his last speech. I will revert back to what he said yesterday or Monday during the committee where, after having refused to consider inviting Mr. Nixon to appear in front of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, he proposed that, if the Senate wishes to have him as a witness, it is best he appear before the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

Therefore, listening to good advice, I have the honour to move:

> That Bill C-22 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, and that the Committee be instructed to invite Mr. Robert Nixon, the author of the Pearson Airport Review of November 29, 1993 to appear before the Committee to answer the questions that have been raised in the Committee regarding his report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I ask if there is a seconder?

• (1420)

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I will second the honourable senator's motion, but I hope that he will not take this as a precedent.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT NEGATIVED

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment, please say "yea"?

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators against the motion in amendment, please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. As I said, it is always good for new senators to learn about the rules. I fit into that category.

I thought that Your Honour did not have to ask for the vote right away since we have an order of the Senate to terminate the debate by approximatley 3:15 p.m. At that time a vote will be taken on anything, including the motion for third reading, as well as any amendments. To be frank, I do not see the necessity in Your Honour's calling for the vote right away.

In my humble submission to Your Honour, the discussion should now be on the amendment. At 3:15 p.m., or before, if the debate is terminated, the Speaker will have to call for all votes in one grouping.

That is my understanding. I so submit in order that I will know how to react in the future. I am still quite convinced that that is the way we should have proceeded. I have no objection, otherwise. I want to learn and I am sure others will learn with me.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Prud'homme, perhaps I did act in a hasty fashion, considering that I knew the clock was running, and running out of time. Obviously, there is no objection to the honourable senator referring to the substance of his motion in the remarks that he is now making to the Senate. The last thing I would want to do to any honourable senator is to deprive him or her of the right to speak.

Hon. P. Michael Pitfield: Honourable senators, to begin, I should like to apologize for not having my usual voluminous text. I had not planned to intervene in this debate, but I am being pressed to explain the point of view that I tried to sum up in my remarks this morning. Perhaps I can take a few minutes to adumbrate it now.

In entering upon the topic I must say that I am troubled by the way in which the debate has, on occasion, seized upon aspects of constitutional law and custom in an emotional, and it seems to me irrational, way — an example being the talk, which I think is loose talk, of "respecting the Constitution." I am not sure what section of the law we are talking about when "we are respecting the Constitution."

More particularly, I question sincerely that it is the business of this house to interpret the Constitution. It is for the courts, not for this house, to enforce the Constitution.

I said earlier that I felt the interests of party had led to a particularly unfortunate definition of the problem in this bill. What I mean by that is that it seems to me that there is a theme of scandal or immorality which lies under the surface of Bill C-22 which has enabled the issue of the bill to be rephrased into a game of "chicken." "Let us have a full inquiry," some say, the implicit argument in that being, if we have such an inquiry, "Your horse will be gored as badly as mine"; so that in fact we will not have an inquiry at all.

The question which is then raised is this: Is this an issue to be dealt with by an inquiry? Inquiries are most imperfect instruments. A judicial inquiry is a particularly imperfect instrument, as anyone who has been associated with one would know.

Surely, now is not a time in the affairs of this country to be launching ourselves loosely on inquiries into the practice of politics. To do that and then to go on and try to deal with the Constitution, which we will have to deal with later in the year, and to deal with the economy, which we will have to do later in the year, I think is to burden our country with something that would best be first considered very carefully. If we are to have an inquiry, let us reflect on how to do it.

In any event, I put it to honourable senators that the issue here does not have to be cast in those terms and that it is not useful for it to be cast in those terms. The issue here is the problem of what a government should be allowed to do after it has issued a writ and before that writ has been returned.

Many of you who have been in governments, who have been in this house or in the other house for periods of time, will know of numbers of issues that have arisen during the last days of an election when contracts are rushed through. The question that arises is: Should the state be bound to a contract under those circumstances, especially as in this case, where the leader of a major party with every reason to expect a real possibility of coming to office has said that his party is opposed to that contract?

We have seen this happen many times. It is a real problem. It is a difficult problem, because it is in an area of interface between politics and law that the courts, if I may say so, treat very conservatively. The courts do not want to get into this area of defining political practice, some would say "convention." It is understandable, first, given the facts of the situation, that an emerging government would say, "We do not want anything to do with this contract"; second, having been elected, that they would seek to avoid a contract because they gave notice that it was unacceptable to them. That wish should have been respected in this case, unless there were clear causes of urgency as to why it should not be. As far as I know, honourable senators, no one has argued that there was urgency.

• (1430)

It is unfortunate that the present government chose to proceed the way they have proceeded, bringing in a bill that specifically deprives access to the court in a particular case only. It will surprise and, perhaps, disappoint some of you to hear me say that exactly the same effect could have been quite properly achieved another way. That may well be remembered by many honourable senators who recall the old Crown proceedings acts where, in issues of political sensitivity — and this was practised until the advent of the Financial Administration Act, and so on — the courts were sometimes ousted from an area by a rough and ready justice such as Bill C-22 represents.

There should be in our law a capacity for an incoming government, under certain conditions — one of which, for example, might be that they had said that they were opposed to the contract and that there was no cause of urgency — to rescind a contract. That would not be difficult to draft. That would be proper. Anyone who remembers such promises and their consequences in other elections will remember instances where we should have had such a section available to us.

That is what I was trying to get at this morning. There is an issue here. It is an important issue. It is an issue on which I sympathize with the present government, for I have seen contracts settled by successor governments for monstrous amounts of money, clear waste in order to bring a court proceeding to an end. Therefore, honourable senators, I agree that it would be irresponsible to let that sort of thing happen in this case.

Yes, there should be a power to resiliate; yes, it should be a power which avoids ordinary damages, because ordinary damages are not to be called for where the political process has clearly indicated that you go into this contract at your own risk. You cannot defend people having their expenses paid for lobbyists and whatever else by the very government that has announced itself as being opposed to their being there in the first place. The proceeding should be an ordinary and general procedure and the clauses enacting it should be clauses of law and general application; not a bill that is brought in simply for one case.

Contracts nowadays are so big, so long-term and so complex that the procedures that we had in a simpler day no longer have their proper application. We need a proceeding that enables us to come to grips with multimillion-dollar contracts, that go on past the life of one government, perhaps into the lives of two or three Parliaments. That is what I would recommend.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Stanbury, seconded by the Honourable Senator Gigantès, that the bill, as amended, be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators —

Hon. Royce Frith: What did you say?

Senator Rivest: Very good, Senator Gigantès!

The Hon. the Speaker: It seems to be a straightforward motion. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some. Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: No. What is the motion? Is it that the bill be read the third time, as amended?

The Hon. the Speaker: I will repeat the motion: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Stanbury, seconded by the Honourable Senator Gigantès, that this bill, as amended, be read the third time now.

Senator Frith: No. I think, Your Honour, that it has been moved by Senator Stanbury and seconded by Senator Gigantès that the bill be read a third time; and, in amendment, moved by Senator Lynch-Staunton that the bill be not read a third time but be read as amended. Therefore the proposition should be: Shall the bill, as amended, be read the third time? The votes can then be clear.

The Hon. the Speaker: I am told that, because we adopted the report, we have, in fact, amended the bill. I am somewhat left in your hands but I believe that the procedure which I have been advised to follow is the right one.

Senator Frith: I also discussed this matter with the learned gentleman to your left earlier. Because the report was adopted by the majority in the Senate, the bill now is an amended bill; therefore, the bill should be put in its amended form. "Shall the bill as amended be read the third time?"

Senator Berntson: That is what I thought he said.

Senator Frith: No, he did not. He said "it has been moved by." That is the difference.

The Hon. the Speaker: If I may repeat again, this is what I read: Shall this bill as amended be read the third time now?

Is that agreeable, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea."?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators opposed to the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, by sound, the "yeas" have it.

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed, on division.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL

July 7, 1994

Mr. Speaker,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Peter deC. Cory, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 7th day of June, 1994, at 2:50 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

Yours sincerely,

Judith A. LaRocque
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

QUESTION PERIOD

DELAYED ANSWERS

Leave having been given to revert to Question Period:

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a number of delayed answers to questions which I should like to distribute now; otherwise, it will be some time before they are available.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

REVIEW OF REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS— GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Richard J. Doyle on May 25, 1994)

As the Honourable Senator is aware, in the Red Book document - Creating Opportunity: The Liberal Plan for Canada, the government outlined its key commitments in the field of immigration and refugee policy. This included changes to the Immigration and Refugee Board and a better definition of the rights, responsibilities and limitations affecting the role of the Minister in admitting applicants on "humanitarian and compassionate" grounds.

To this end, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration commissioned two highly qualified and experienced individuals in the non-governmental sector, Ms Susan Davis and Mr. Lorne Waldman, to study the review mechanisms available to failed refugee claimants. Any recommended changes were to be fair, efficient and cost neutral.

On May 20, the Minister announced interim changes to the management of the current risk assessment for unsuccessful claimants, including modifications to the interpretation of the test being applied, and a role for non-governmental organizations in reviewing previous decisions.

These changes respond to the concerns expressed by Ms Davis and Mr. Waldman on the current post-refugee claim review procedures. Among their recommendations for interim action was a proposal to review all claims refused under the current risk assessment, according to a broader interpretation, and to separate the review process from the enforcement side of the Department. Since the people affected were otherwise required to leave Canada, or face deportation, an immediate response was warranted.

It is estimated that some 10,000 claimants were refused under the previous interpretation of the Regulations. Taking into account that some have already left Canada and that some others were successful in their applications for humanitarian and compassionate review, it is anticipated that only about 3,000 cases will need to be reviewed under these interim criteria. Dangerous criminals and security risks will not be eligible.

There was no intention to deprive members of this Chamber nor of any other Chamber of the opportunity to respond to this study. Nor does the Government wish to avoid listening to Canadians. Rather, it was the calls of Canadians for immediate response to the report that prompted early action. The commitment to reflect, to consult, and to listen to Canadians cannot be used as an excuse for not governing.

The report also calls for more substantive changes to the refugee status determination system. The Minister has said that he is in general agreement with the underlying principles upon which the report's recommendations are based. In evaluating those recommendations, however, the results of the current consultations on a ten-year framework for immigration policy will inform the decisions of the Government.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED STUDY OF ATLANTIC CANADA FREIGHT RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. J. Michael Forrestall on June 2, 1994)

The Budget called for the Minister to discuss with Provinces and stakeholders the potential for redirecting spending to improve surface transport efficiency. All freight subsidies are therefore under review, including in addition to the Atlantic region freight subsidies the subsidies for western grain transportation, uneconomic rail branchlines, the St. Lawrence Seaway, and ports and harbours.

Preparation of factual data on the Atlantic freight subsidies and their effects is in progress in Transport Canada. Prior to any decision, the information will be shared fully with the main stakeholders, the shippers and carriers in the region, as well as the provincial governments, and their advice will be sought on its interpretation.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

HUMAN RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

(Response to question raised by Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk on June 8, 1994)

The longstanding prominence of human rights in Canadian foreign policy reflects three equally significant basic factors. First, it is a reflection of Canadian values. As Minister Ouellet said in his May 31, 1994 speech to the Canadian Institute for International Affairs, one of the basic objectives of this government is to ensure that Canadian values are reflected in public policy decisions.

Second, the pursuit of human rights in our foreign policy also reflects Canadian interests. Respect for human rights is a key to international peace, prosperity and stability (and recognized as such in Article 55 of the UN Charter), and is crucial to an environment where Canadians can best pursue their interests in the world.

Third, it is a matter of international law. The human rights obligations of all governments find their origins in the UN Charter, which obliges all UN members to promote universal respect for human rights, and in the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, whose principles Canada regards as entrenched in customary international law binding on all governments. In 1993 the World Conference on Human Rights reaffirmed the principles of the Universal Declaration and asserted "the duty of all states, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms." For its part, Canada regularly submits its human rights record to review by UN monitoring bodies and, in so doing, strengthens its reputation as a guarantor of its citizens' rights and enhances its credentials to urge others to respect international standards.

AGRICULTURE

CROW RATE—COSTS OF TRANSPORTING GRAIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson on June 16 1994)

Information on the volumes of grain that have been hauled to Thunder Bay simply to qualify for the Western Grain Transportation Act (WGTA) subsidy and then backtracked from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg or Fort Frances for export to the United States is currently being prepared by the railways at Transport Canada's request. The movement of grain from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg or Fort Frances is a commercial movement and, therefore, the volumes are only available from railway records. Backtracking from Thunder Bay has been going on since the late 1980s but the issue gained prominence this year because of the shortage of railcars experienced this crop year and the increased volume of grain moving to the United States market. The backhaul of grain to Winnipeg or Fort Frances is a commercial movement and the cost is paid by the grain shipper. This system has continued because the combination of the WGTA rate to Thunder Bay plus the commercial rate to the U.S. was cheaper than the commercial rate from point of origin on the Prairies to U.S. market. But this practice is, however, an inefficient use of our rolling stock and will not be allowed to continue.

On June 8, 1994, the government announced that it intends to end the system of backhauling U.S.-bound grain from Thunder Bay. The legislative changes required to end this practice will be introduced by the government in the fall.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

CANADA STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM—IMPACT ON FEDERAL FUNDING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Ethel Cochrane on June 8, 1994)

The government recognizes the critical importance of post-secondary education to the future of the country and individual Canadians.

As part of its youth employment and learning strategy, the government is reforming its Student Assistance Program to meet the needs of students in the 1990s and beyond. On May 9, 1994, the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy, Minister of Human Resources Development, tabled the Canada Student Financial Assistance Act (Bill C-28). This bill is designed to improve access to, and result in, post-secondary learning and ensure greater value for money in program spending. Under this bill, loan limits would be increased by 57%, special opportunity grants would be established for students with disabilities, high-need part-time students and women in certain fields of study at the doctoral level. Deferred grants would also be established to reduce indebtedness.

One of the provisions of the bill would allow the government to test out Income Contingent Repayment (ICR) loans for education and training, through the development of pilot projects with interested provinces in consultation with interest groups. Such pilot projects would be designed to provide the government with data on which to base future policy decisions. Although recently introduced in several countries, including Australia and New Zealand, information is limited on the impacts of ICR on accessibility, repayment and costs. These pilot projects would not displace the other student aid measures which are being introduced.

As well, the federal government has long provided funding for post-secondary education to further the achievement of a wide range of economic, social and cultural objectives. In 1994-95, federal support for post-secondary education under the Established Programs Financing (EPF) tax and cash transfers is expected to reach $6.15 billion. This is the highest the transfers have ever been and, as announced in the February budget, total EPF transfers in respect of post-secondary education are projected to grow during the next two fiscal years.

On the subject of tuition fees, it should be noted that the regulation of fees falls under provincial jurisdiction. Average university tuition in 1994-95 is approximately $2,300. Over the last five years, the average annual rate of growth in university tuition has been approximately 12%. Indications are that tuition fees will continue to increase.

The government's social security reform process will provide an opportunity to examine the issue of access to post-secondary education and how the federal government can best tailor its assistance to meet this objective. Therefore, it is premature to speculate on the impact of future directions on post-secondary enrolments.

CHINA

HUMAN RIGHTS AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Noël A. Kinsella on June 8, 1994.)

Since 1988, the Department of Foreign Affairs has provided a three-day intensive training course on human rights policy for its foreign service officers in all streams: political, trade, aid and immigration. The course includes sessions on human rights in aid policy, human rights in trade policy and human rights in immigration policy, as well as sessions on international human rights legal instruments and human rights protection mechanisms and the role of non-governmental organizations in international human rights.

All Canadian staff serving at our Missions abroad are required to give priority to comprehensive, objective, timely reporting and analysis on human rights situations on a regular, on-going basis throughout the year.

The quality and timeliness of reporting to headquarters on all issues of concern to Canada, including human rights, is a key factor on which performance of departmental officers is assessed.

TRANSPORT

SEARCH AND RESCUE—REPLACEMENT OF SEA KING HELICOPTER FLEET—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gerry St. Germain on June 8, 1994)

There are currently no ongoing negotiations for the purchase of off-the-shelf equipment or with private sector helicopter firms. Our Labrador and Sea King helicopters are expected to be in service and airworthy until 2001 and 2000 respectively. After completion of the Defence Policy Review, the Government, with the Department of National Defence, will determine how or whether these helicopters will be replaced.

TRANSPORT

RELIABILITY OF LABRADOR HELICOPTERS ON SEARCH AND RESCUE MISSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. C. William Doody on June 8, 1994)

The CH113 Labrador has been in service for over 30 years. The airworthiness of the fleet is assured during an annual review by the Airworthiness Review Board and maintenance/operations in accordance with published technical orders.

Reliability of the fleet has shown a slight increase since 1990 as a result of a vigorous maintenance program and minimal system improvements. With over 500 Labrador type aircraft flying world-wide, supportability is not a major concern for the immediate future.

Therefore, the Labrador is considered an airworthy, reliable and supportable fleet.

SENATOR'S STATEMENT

PRIVILEGE

NOTICE OF MOTION PURSUANT TO RULE 44

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I rise to give notice that, pursuant to rule 44, I shall raise a question of privilege at the next sitting of the Senate. It is my intention to give written notice, pursuant to rule 44(3), of this question of privilege to the Clerk of the Senate three hours in advance of the next sitting of the Senate.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, September 27, 1994, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one other duty to perform. Since my experience as Acting Deputy Leader of the Government is now ending, joyfully —

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Let the record show that the applause is not for the ending.

Senator Stanbury: — may I thank Senator Molgat for the opportunity to fill in for him in his absence. This experience taught me the extent of our indebtedness to Senator Molgat for the very active role he plays for us day in and day out, in cooperation with Senator Berntson, in keeping the business of the chamber running smoothly.

May I also thank Senator Berntson for his cooperation, my leader for her forbearance, the Senate officials and staff, and each of my colleagues on all sides of this house for their unfailing kindness and generosity to me in my acting capacity.

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to join with my colleague and counterpart in the government benches to thank all the staff and support people in the whole of the Senate for the good support and the good work that has been done during the session.

THE SENATE

MR. DOUGLAS LAURIAULT— RESIGNATION AS PAGE—BEST WISHES

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I understand that another of our Pages is leaving us today. You will recall that the Chief Page Bryn Jedlic, from my own province of Saskatchewan, left us last April and Andrea Baldwin of Ottawa left us last January. I understand that when we come back, we will be missing Mr. Douglas Lauriault. His last day is today. I want to wish him the best of luck, and thank him for all of his efforts in the past.

• (1450)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on a personal note, I also wish to say thank you to the tag team that I have worked with since I was elevated to this lofty position. Both Senator Molgat and Senator Stanbury have been a pleasure to work with, and it seems to be the method by which we can indeed make this place function in a relatively efficient and harmonious manner when this kind of relationship exists. I, for one, appreciate it very much.

I also want to thank my leader for his confidence in me in putting me in this position. Thank you very much, and have a good summer.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not want to delay the proceedings, but I cannot have the session finish without expressing my thanks to Senator Stanbury for his willingness to replace me during my absence. It was very important for me to be away at that time, and I thank him very much for replacing me. I want to assure him that I have not been sitting behind him for the past two days with bated breath, waiting to take the post. It simply seemed to be much more reasonable for him to carry on and finish the session. I thank him very much for that whole month, which I know was a very busy one.

The Hon. the Speaker: There are still a fair number of senators left in the Chamber, and I invite you, after the Royal Assent, to come and test the quality of the air conditioning improvements which, thanks to my predecessor, have made the Speaker's offices quite a lot more tolerable. I would hope that you might also want to finish the rather hurried lunch that you had during our rather busy morning.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Peter deC. Cory, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bills:

> An Act to approve, give effect to and declare valid land claims agreements entered into between Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada, the Government of the Yukon Territory and certain first nations in the Yukon Territory, to provide for approving, giving effect to and declaring valid other land claims agreements entered into after this Act comes into force, and to make consequential amendments to other Acts (Bill C-33, Chapter 34, 1994)
>
> An Act respecting self-government for first nations in the Yukon Territory (Bill C-34, Chapter 35, 1994)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of his Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, September 27, 1994, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 4, 1994

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTINGS OF THE SENATE

Leave having been given to proceed to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Michael Kirby, with leave of the Senate and nothwitstanding rule 59(1)(a), moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at two thirty o'clock today, Tuesday, October 4, 1994, two thirty o'clock tomorrow, Wednesday, October 5, 1994, and at two o'clock Wednesday, October 26, 1994, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

NEW SENATORS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received certificates from the Registrar General of Canada showing that the following persons, respectively, have been summoned to the Senate:

Jean-Louis Roux

Lise Bacon

Sharon Carstairs

INTRODUCTION

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there were senators without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senators were introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons; took the oath prescribed by law, which was administered by the Clerk; and were seated:

Hon. Jean-Louis Roux, of Montreal, Quebec, introduced between the Honourable Senators Fairbairn and Hébert.

Hon. Lise Bacon, of Laval, Quebec, introduced between the Honourable Senators Fairbairn and Rizzuto.

Hon. Sharon Carstairs, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, introduced between the Honourable Senators Fairbairn and Molgat.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senators named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the Constitution Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

• (1410)

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is with great pleasure today that I welcome our three new senators to this chamber: Jean-Louis Roux and Lise Bacon from Quebec, and Sharon Carstairs from Manitoba. I have a few words that I wish to say about our newcomers.

Senator Roux is a well-respected cultural figure throughout Canada, and particularly in Quebec. He is known for his wide ranging experience in a lifetime of roles in radio, on stage and on television, particularly as a member of the beloved Plouffe family. He was co-founder of the Théâtre du Nouveau Monde and Director General of the National Theatre School of Canada. He adds a strong voice of national pride to this chamber.

Senator Bacon has been an outstanding figure in the public life of Quebec since her first election to the National Assembly in 1973. She has held a great number of posts in successive Quebec governments: that of Minister of State for Social Affairs, Minister for Consumers, Cooperatives and Financial Institutions, Minister of Immigration, Minister of Cultural Affairs, Minister responsible for the Application of the Charter of the French Language, Minister of the Environment, Minister of Energy and Resources, and Minister responsible for Regional Development. Finally, for the last eight years, Lise Bacon has served as Deputy Premier in the government of former premier Robert Bourassa. She is a highly respected voice in Quebec, and will bring valuable wisdom and experience to the deliberations of this chamber.

Senator Carstairs, a teacher, is a native of Nova Scotia who, after several active years in Calgary, Alberta, moved east and was elected leader of the Manitoba Liberal Party in 1984. After winning her riding of River Heights in 1986, she became Leader of the Opposition in Manitoba from 1988 to 1990, serving with distinction as the first woman to hold that position.

Prior to her entrance into public life, Senator Carstairs was a teacher and political activist in both Alberta and Manitoba. She carries with her a proud history in this chamber, where her father, Harold Connolly, served as a senator for Nova Scotia for 24 years.

We welcome all three new senators. We look forward to working with you, learning from you and having you take part in the debates on the serious and important issues which face this chamber, the government, and indeed our country, in the months ahead.

• (1420)

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this is a special day for our friends across the chamber, since it is the first time in over 10 years they have been able to add to their ranks.

Senator Perrault: Too long!

Senator Lynch-Staunton: On occasions such as this, we are reminded what a "draught" is. We welcome the new senators. We certainly welcome having new faces to look at in the chamber. We also welcome them as colleagues rather than as partisans of another stripe for, regardless of one's political affiliation, one is chosen to come here as a result of contributions made to the nation, to the community, to politics, to professions, or to any of the spectrum of services and endeavors that thrive where governments cannot.

It is a great honour to be summoned to this place and a most special one, even a moving one, when a new senator follows in the footsteps of a direct relative. Several senators here can make such a proud claim. Senator Carstairs is the latest to join their ranks. Her father, Senator Connolly, represented the Atlantic region, in particular Nova Scotia, his home province. He did not hesitate to speak against his government and party whenever he felt they were engaged in some activity which would be detrimental to his region.

One would not expect the new senator from Manitoba to go that far when one remembers certain firm, and even rigid, positions she adopted during the lengthy and, at times, acrimonious debates surrounding the Meech Lake accord. On the other hand, her immediate predecessor, Douglas Everett, entered the Senate as a Liberal, and not long thereafter declared himself to be an Independent-Liberal. He then sat as an Independent until his retirement. I have always suspected that, given a little more time, this gradual conversion would have ended up with him in our caucus.

Senator Molgat: No such luck.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Only time will tell if this sort of political metamorphosis will rub off on his successor.

Senator Perrault: Do not bet on it.

[Translation]

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Together with my colleagues on this side, I am delighted that the Quebec caucus in the Senate now has two new members with a distinguished record in all their fields of endeavour. Senator Bacon was one of those militant politicians we find so seldom today: fiercely independent but always faithful to her party and her leader. I am thinking especially of Jean Lesage, Gérard D. Lévesque, Claude Ryan and Robert Bourassa. This is not surprising when we recall that she comes from a family whose roots are not only deeply Liberal but established in the less than hospitable environment of Trois-Rivières, the private fief of Premier Maurice Duplessis.

It may be an exaggeration to say that the senator's father was the only provincial Liberal in the region who prided himself so openly on his political affiliation, but they were few and far between. Her fighting spirit, which is one of her characteristic traits, will stand her in good stead in these precincts, especially within her new caucus.

Of course we all know Senator Roux, one of the giants of Canadian theatre, whose reputation has spread well beyond our borders. In addition to his prodigious talent as an actor, he has, over the years, directed many excellent productions, especially at the Théâtre du Nouveau Monde, where he was the company's director for many years. He was so demanding that occasionally his patience gave way to some memorable rages. However, he was always quick to apologize, sending a small note and even flowers, and people forgave him easily because they realized that although he demanded much of others, he demanded even more of himself.

As Senator Fairbairn mentioned, his other activities included a stint as director of the National Theatre School, and he was always quick to say that, to him, national meant Canadian.

[English]

Welcome to the Senate. May you feel at home among us and reassured that this institution presents its members unique opportunities to serve this country of ours. We all look forward to your participation.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

THE HONOURABLE SENATOR ROYCE FRITH

TRIBUTES ON RESIGNATION FROM THE SENATE AND APPOINTMENT AS HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR CANADA TO THE UNITED KINGDOM

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as we welcome newcomers today, it is certainly with mixed emotions that I pay tribute and wish a fond farewell to our former colleague, my predecessor in this position, Royce Frith. With his departure, we are not only saying goodbye to a good friend, we are also saying goodbye to someone who I am sure all of us in this house would agree was one of our most articulate, engaging and committed members.

All of us are sad to see him leave the Senate, but we are absolutely delighted that the skill and expertise that he acquired over the years in Canada will be put to good use on behalf of his country in London, as he serves as Canada's High Commissioner to the United Kingdom.

When thinking about Royce the other day, I reflected that I first met him back in the early 1960s when I was a parliamentary news reporter here in the press gallery. He was associated with a Windsor radio station and was making representations to the Board of Broadcast Governors, the precursor of today's CRTC. Those hearings were pretty dry, but Senator Frith added a certain amount of zip to the proceedings. He also knew very well how to get his points across to the media. This reporter remembers him with delight on those occasions. He relished the challenge of arguing his case.

In this chamber, we all know that Senator Frith loved a good debate. He never missed an opportunity, however small or large, to jump into the thick of things on a moment's notice. I am sure that goes back to his early training, back to his student days, when he was Speaker of the Vic Debating Parliament at the University of Toronto.

Following his graduation from Osgoode Hall Law School, Royce Frith was admitted to the Ontario bar in 1949. He was a member of the Law Society of Upper Canada, and he also studied at the University of Ottawa, where he received a Diplôme d'études supérieures en droit. Along the way he became completely at ease in both our official languages.

One of his first excursions into the political world was as a member of York City Council. But municipal politics soon gave way to a larger arena. He served not only as the national treasurer of the Young Liberals in Ontario, — and I am sure Senator Davey will remember this — but eventually he also ran as a provincial Liberal candidate in the early 1950s. Despite not winning a seat in the legislature at that time, Senator Frith remained a very active member of the party. He worked tirelessly behind the scenes, primarily on rebuilding the federal Liberal Party under Mr. Pearson, following the Diefenbaker sweep of 1958.

During 1961-1962 Senator Frith served as President of the Ontario Liberal Association, and he was a key member of the organizing team behind Mr. Pearson's successful campaign of 1963.

In that year Senator Frith's career took a different course. His knowledge of the country and his sensitivity to the needs of both linguistic groups earned him a spot as Commissioner on the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. He worked in that role for seven years, studying the issues that divide us and the issues that unite us. He also served as Legal Advisor to the Commissioner of Official Languages.

His work on the B&B Commission and with the Commissioner of Official Languages was a defining period for Royce, because what remained with him, and does to this day, is an abiding faith in the people of this country and a dedication to the ideal of a strong, united and independent Canada.

I am sure he will spare no effort in ensuring that the government of the United Kingdom is kept well informed of events here, particularly over the next year or so. In fact, his concern for the unity of this country was the main topic of his first speech following his appointment to this chamber in 1977.

As many senators will know, Senator Frith has been active on a number of committees throughout the years, and indeed right up to the time that he left the Senate. He served on such Senate committees as the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, the Foreign Affairs Committee, the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders and the committee studying the northern pipeline.

In recent years, however, he offered great strength and enthusiasm in a leadership role in this house. He served with my colleague Senator Olson as Deputy Leader of the Government from 1980 to 1984. He then served as Deputy Leader of the Opposition with Senator MacEachen from 1984 to 1991, and as Leader of the Opposition from 1991 to 1993. During that time, he has been at the centre of action in everything from the Constitution to the GST.

Royce Frith has had an abiding interest and dedication in any area that touched on culture and the arts in this country. As we all know, apart from this chamber, that was his "other" life as an actor, musician and author. We remember him fondly as a terrific Henry Higgins in My Fair Lady. He also trod the boards in The Mikado; he was Fagan in Oliver Twist, the prosecutor in Beyond Reasonable Doubt, and more than once, he was the narrator of Charles Dickens' A Christmas Carol.

Senator Frith also found time to write two books of commentary on the political life of this country: Hoods on the Hill, a rollicking recollection of experiences during the GST, and, with Leonard Kuchar, The Show Must Not Go On.

None of that activity detracted from his work and commitment to this institution, to the province he has represented, and to his beloved community of Perth, which was his base for so long. He has done so with skill, humour and grace.

Honourable senators, as he leaves us, we should remember that Royce Frith has been an unabashed advocate of the worth of the Senate. He loved this place, and he defended it fiercely and proudly. He has never believed in looking backwards, but his seventeen and a half years here will no doubt be locked away in very special memories.

Some years ago, in an interview, Royce said, "The country doesn't owe me anything. I owe it." That is his philosophy as he leaves on this new assignment. He will be greatly missed by his colleagues on this side, and also by his friends on the other side of the chamber. We send him on his way with our gratitude, our affection and our best wishes.

In the parlance of the theatre, break a leg, Royce, in London!

• (1440)

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): I would first congratulate and thank Senator Frith's predecessor, Mr. Frederick Eaton, for the excellence of his performance in the service of his country for nearly three years in London. Mr. Eaton's nomination was one of many made to senior positions by Prime Minister Mulroney from outside the professional corp. The calibre of these appointments emphasized the importance his government gave to these sensitive postings. I am thinking in particular of Mr. Lewis and Mr. Fortier of the United Nations, General de Chastelain in Washington, and, closer to the subject at hand, Donald Macdonald in London.

It is not unusual for the high commissioner to be chosen from outside the Department of Foreign Affairs. Other than Macdonald and Eaton, one is reminded of Drew, Chevrier, Martin, Wadds, Jamieson and McMurtry amongst others, all active in the public life of their country and all distinguished representatives.

As the second senator to go to London, Senator Frith will certainly leave his own mark, as did his predecessor colleague, but unlikely in the same way. Only Paul Martin, at an official representation in London where the Queen was present, could ask in a loud voice, as was his habit on any occasion when a large crowd gathered, "Anybody here from Windsor?" A startled Her Majesty still managed to reply, "I am." Paul, Senior, apparently not recognizing the voice, said: "Wonderful. Please give me your name, your address, and the number of your polling station."

We should all feel complimented that a member of this chamber has been so honoured as has Royce Frith. He certainly leaves behind many lasting memories. He is the only one who could alert us to a stranger in the house. He could be insulting in both official languages. His fund of familiar quotations is part of his innards. He was a master at giving confusing interpretations of the rules, both new and old. He could speak on any topic with impressive eloquence at the drop of a hat. The only time he fell into unusual silence was when new senators were being sworn in.

Like Vincent Massey before him, he believes that all the world is a stage, and humbly answers significant casting calls. I wonder if Edgar Allen Poe was thinking of a Royce Frith when he wrote in The Theatrical Profession:

> The actor of talent is poor at heart, indeed, if he does not look with contempt upon the mediocrity of a king.

Only time will tell.

For the moment, he has all our best wishes as he assumes his new responsibilities. In the language of the theatre he loves so much, as the opening night curtain is about to rise, I echo Senator Fairbairn: Break a leg, Royce.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I seldom rise in this house to pay tribute to a colleague who is about to leave the Senate. Usually, everything I intended to say has already been said by other senators, often with far more eloquence than I could muster. I am afraid that may again be the case today.

I simply want to say that Royce Frith made a tremendous impression on me from the very first day — I will never forget — I set foot in this venerable institution. To me he was the ideal, the model senator, always in perfect command of his subject and capable of defending his position with passion or logic, in French or in English.

However, his life was certainly not limited to the precincts of this house. A Renaissance man, he was a man of great culture with a special talent for the theatre, music and the arts generally. Finally, and for me this is the ultimate compliment, Royce Frith is a perfect gentleman who will represent us with distinction at the Court of St. James.

[English]

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, today we welcome a most distinguished Canadian actor, John Louis Roux, and express our farewell tributes to another, Senator Royce Frith, a.k.a. the High Commissioner to the United Kingdom.

Royce Frith should know that, on or about August 30, in Saskatoon, this Conservative caucus had a meeting. It was then that we first heard of the appointment of Royce Frith. To my amazement, the news of the announcement was greeted with widespread approval and, indeed, enthusiasm. This surprised me because, usually, when important patronage appointments are made by a party of which you are not a member, you may hear some rumblings but, in this instance, I dismissed this reaction as being unworthy of our colleagues. I heard none.

I have observed that having a sense of the theatre can be a very formidable asset for a politician. One must give the devil his due: Royce Frith is to the manner born. Put him in striped trousers and give him a morning suit and you can take him anywhere. You might even go so far as to call him a Renaissance man, a skilled debater, an impressive speaker, a talented actor, a gifted singer, and a very able lawyer. This was proven in this chamber on many occasions when he made particularly persuasive arguments, considering the absolute impoverishment of the material he was working with.

It is a long way from Perth, Ontario, to Grosvenor Square, but this valley boy has made it. We wish him every success. Last week it was the Tay River; next week it will be the Thames. Whatever he does, he will do with style and panache. He will be equally at home in the ancestral homes of England as he will be in the Old Vic or even the Palladium.

I, too, Senator Fairbairn, saw Royce when he played Professor 'enry 'iggins. Possibly, this most eligible bachelor may somehow find his Eliza Doolittle.

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I should like to join with other senators in welcoming our new senators. We are happy to receive them. I also join with all honourable senators to celebrate Senator Frith's new appointment.

Senator Frith is truly a part of us. We know him as a lawyer; we know him as a politician; we know him as a Liberal; and we know him as a senator. Most recently, we have come to know him as an author. Now we will come to know him as a diplomat. I sincerely believe that Senator Frith's appointment to London is a fitting crown to what has been a stupendous career.

For many of us, the Senate of Canada without Royce Frith seems unimaginable. As a matter of fact, at one point in time I could not imagine the Senate of Canada without Senator Jacques Flynn and Royce Frith together, in concert. His largesse, his great intelligence and his procedural mastery were a part of all of us.

Senator Frith loved the arts. He loved music. He loved beauty. He loved theatre. We have all mentioned how, as an amateur dramatist, he did a marvellous job of portraying Bernard Shaw's Henry Higgins. He was the finest Henry Higgins I ever saw.

In his personal life, he knew and understood profound sorrow when he so sadly lost his son. In his political life, he exhibited enormous endurance when, in 1979, as Ontario chairman of the general election for the Liberals, he fought hard as we Liberals were being defeated. As a candidate in that federal election, I can tell you that Senator Frith's commitment and endurance made it all very worthwhile.

I wish Senator Frith well in his new career. As we celebrate his many accomplishments and send him off, I should like to repeat a remark made by the oldest member of our caucus, Senator David Croll, on the occasion when we, as members of this chamber, were saying goodbye to Mr. Trudeau. Senator David Croll, as the oldest member of the caucus, was called upon to do the job. Senator Croll rose and said, "Mr. Trudeau, 'good-bye' is not the proper word. We Jews have a better word." He said, "Shalom, Mr. Trudeau."

Shalom, Royce Frith.

• (1450)

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, Senator Fairbairn has delineated the long and illustrious career of Senator Frith. We in the Senate have been the beneficiaries of much of that period, particularly the recent part of that story. Some of us have been fortunate to share some of the less official activities of his life. However, although they were less official, they were certainly not less important.

As Senator Fairbairn has said, Senator Frith was one of the key figures in the restoration to power of the Liberal Party under Mike Pearson in 1963. The tragedy suffered by the Liberals at the hands of John Diefenbaker in 1958 was only surpassed by the disaster which befell the Conservative Party at the hands of Jean Chrétien in 1993.

Senator Frith was one of a small group of young Liberals who dedicated themselves to rebuilding the party in Ontario. Royce Frith became the president of the Ontario party, which in those days had both federal and provincial responsibilities. He did such an excellent job that the federal Liberals were returned to office in 1963.

During that time, in addition to his organizational and administrative roles, he played an essential role in establishing a new optimism among the militants of the party. He spoke, he sang, he staged shows, he recruited choirs — he was literally a one-man band in the morale department.

Since then, as has been mentioned, Royce Frith has made a whole series of contributions to public life. We thought those would be crowned by his colourful and erudite performance in the Senate, but now the Prime Minister has shown the good judgment to appoint him as our senior diplomatic personage in London. It would be hard to imagine a more appropriate representative of Canada to the United Kingdom.

Senator Frith, with his experience in the political life of Canada, his mastery of the cultural and linguistic realities of Canada, his personal qualities of integrity, fluency, social grace and presence, will do us proud.

I thought perhaps I should warn him that we are all packing our bags. We may have to restrain ourselves to keep from getting there before he does!

All the best to you, Senator Frith.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I wish to associate myself with those senators who preceded me in their tributes to our former colleague Senator Royce Frith.

Senator Frith, whom I have known since the early 1960s, was inducted into the Senate at the same time I was, along with Senators Olson and Adams. For some six months we shared the same desk. For the last 14 years our offices were adjacent to one another.

During this period I came to know and appreciate Senator Frith's many qualities. He rose quickly to positions of prominence in the Senate. He served as Deputy Leader of the Government for five years, and as Deputy Leader of the Opposition for nine years. In the latter part of the Thirty-fourth Parliament, he reached the pinnacle of his career in the Senate as Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Frith served for five years on the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. Fluent in both official languages, Royce Frith was one of the most able debaters in the Senate. He could rise impromptu, and eloquently take part in debate on a variety of subjects.

Senator Frith was a great defender of authors' rights and a promoter of cultural institutions. A well-read man with a good memory, he often quoted at will excerpts from English literature to reinforce his arguments. He used his tools of expression with precision.

Outside of politics, Senator Frith, a man of culture and sports, engages in a variety of activities and pastimes. He is known to enjoy singing and acting. He plays golf and tennis. He also has a keen interest in the game of chess. Over the years we played a number of games as partners against an electronic set known as the "chess challenger". Occasionally, we were victorious.

Senator Frith has made a significant contribution in the Senate. Members of the red chamber and members of the Liberal caucus will miss his valuable input and advice. Personally, I will miss him as a good friend. His broad experience in many fields of endeavour has prepared him very well for the responsibilities he is about to assume as Canada's High Commissioner to the United Kingdon. I join his family, his colleagues and friends in expressing my best wishes to him in his new career.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, first, I should like to welcome our three distinguished new senators.

Second, I rise because I read about the appointment of Royce Frith as High Commissioner to the United Kingdom with a genuine feeling that the Senate is losing not only one of its most prominent senators but one its most distinguished senators. Royce is an original. The Senate has many facets about which we always speak, but there is no doubt that it is a chamber where an original like Royce was able to play an important role.

I did not know Senator Frith in his theatrical life. The only theatre I knew him in was this one, right here.

For years, I have admired Senator Frith's outrage at injustice. He is an individualist and he believes in individualism. He is also a great federalist, something I admire and appreciate in him.

I remind honourable senators that his new job in London is not just a job where one can walk around, have drinks and look like a good fellow. It is a real job; an important job. He will represent Canada in one of the world's great capital cities. I know he will represent the kinds of Canadian attitudes and views in which I believe, and that he will do that job very well.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: I, too, honourable senators, should like to add my comments on the resignation of the Honourable Royce Frith.

"Royce Frith" — what a graceful name to match such a graceful man. Royce Frith — barrister, solicitor, Queen's Counsel, senator, actor, author, athlete, orator, singer, musicologist, broadcaster, bibliophile, linguist, raconteur par excellence, strategist, Beau Brummel, connoisseur of rules and protocol, gourmet, chess player — indeed, a man of many excellent parts. Now, he has become a diplomat, and soon to be statesman.

Royce is a Renaissance man. He would have been a star in any career he chose for himself. Royce chose politics because politics was his passion. I first met Royce in 1960 in Toronto, where he was a leading political activist. I was immediately struck by the timbre of his voice, his energy, his elegance, his eloquence, his wit, his scintillating repartee and his engaging personality. We became friends, and I became an admirer and remain so to this day. I was amazed to discover back then that his Yiddish expressions, all with the appropriate local dialect, rivalled my own.

When I was appointed to the Senate, I asked Royce to act as one of the two customary sponsors to usher me into this chamber. He not only ushered me in but acted as a guide to help me navigate through the tortuous rules and unwritten customs of this place.

If there is one characteristic, to my mind, that illuminates Royce, it is his loyalty — loyalty to his convictions, loyalty to his friends, loyalty to his colleagues and, above all, loyalty to his country.

Royce revelled in the Senate. He obviously adored this place, and so the Senate suffers a deep and wide loss in his leaving. We can only be consoled by the fact that our loss is Canada's gain. He will be a superb representative of Canada's interests in the United Kingdom and beyond.

Truly, Royce is a man for all seasons, and now our man goes to the United Kingdom for all the right reasons. We can only wish him God speed.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I had prepared a list of factual information about Senator Frith, and just about everyone here has touched all the bases, but there are one or two remaining.

First, Senator Frith was a graduate of Parkdale Collegiate, with classmates such as Charles B. Templeton, Tim Reid, Phil Gibbons, Goody Rosen, and M.T. Kelly, who has recently won several Governor General's awards. He is a also a graduate of Victoria College, University of Toronto, where he appeared traditionally at the annual college music gala, the Vic Bob, with singing partners such as Norman Jewison and Don Harron. Doug Fisher was our classmate, but he did not make the cut.

The only other base we have not touched upon is actually a "base". Senator Frith is a baseball freak who marks box scores in detail at almost all games.

I wish to say a word about Senator Frith as a politician, because we have not dealt with that aspect of his career. One of Senator Royce Frith's greatest speeches was made 25 years ago at a Liberal Party executive meeting. Approximately 40 people were at that meeting. I asked Royce Frith to conclude with a comment about Mike Pearson, who was not yet Prime Minister. With drama, he paused and said:

> If this man, Mike Pearson, cannot become Prime Minister of Canada, then I, for one, will leave public life forever.

You could have heard a pin drop.

Honourable senators, to prove that Senator Frith was not perfect, I go back to the 1978 election. I was the national chairman and Royce Frith was the Ontario chairman. He gave a confidential, private story to The Toronto Star. He said:

> The three Liberal candidates, Roberts, Danson, and O'Connell, cannot possibly be re-elected.

Of course, the story leaked. It appeared on the front pages of The Toronto Star the following morning at 5:30. I woke up at six o'clock and saw the story. I phoned Senator Frith at six o'clock, and he answered the phone. He knew it was me; he said, "I know exactly what has occurred. It will not happen again." Of course it did not, because we lost all three seats.

[Translation]

NEW SENATORS

FELICITATIONS

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, we are pleased to welcome three new colleagues today. Following the order in which they were introduced, I will start by addressing Senator Roux. I want him to know that we need him in this place. I, for one, firmly believe that the Senate should embody civility, and who better than you to exemplify this quality. The arts community applauds your appointment. Highly cultivated individuals who continue to value excellence are delighted to see you take a seat in the Senate of Canada. I am personally delighted. I told the Prime Minister so, and I repeat it to you today. We need you in the Senate and in Canada.

Senator Bacon is an old friend of mine. She will not mind if I recall some fond memories, for I have known her since we were both young Liberals. Senator Bacon has a strong personality and is not afraid to tell the truth as she sees it. At this time when Canada has come under attack, I am sorry that some do not hear these words of wisdom. We will need your experience, senator. You will know just how to explain the situation of Quebec within Canada. Similarly, you have the strength of character and ability to go out and tell the people of Quebec what Canada is about.

[English]

• (1500)

I want to be on the record as wishing Mrs. Carstairs all the best. Not many people know how many years I have had the honour of knowing her.

When I was a young member of the House of Commons in 1968, Mrs. Carstairs was a teacher in Alberta. She met me at a Liberal convention. I do not know if she liked what I was saying, or was pleased with the enthusiasm I showed for Canada, but she invited me to speak to her class. I spontaneously said, "Of course, with great pleasure."

I had the same experience in 1964, when my great friend Senator Perrault invited me to speak to the Liberal Party in British Columbia. I again accepted in a spontaneous fashion. I was then told what I should not be talking about, and they were difficult issues, such as the monarchy, and French Canada. I was puzzled as to what I could speak about.

I went to Mrs. Carstairs' classroom. I am sure she remembers. I immediately touched upon all the points I was asked kindly not to touch upon. To the surprise of many, I have kept in close touch with most of these people.

I repeat again in English, to be clearly understood by my new friend face to face, Senator Roux, that I said here, "Canada is under attack." I am not afraid to repeat that, in English or in French. We need civility and understanding in this country.

Madam Carstairs —

[Translation]

— I welcome you. This will come as a surprise to many, but will not surprise you. I remain hopeful that people like you and me will go together to Quebec to express the nuances and the differences of this country.

[English]

People who prefer exclusion do not understand the process of building a country.

[Translation]

I sincerely hope that our new senators, at a time when the country's need is so great, will accept my personal offer to work with them, an offer I have extended to all other senators belonging to the two officially recognized parties. I hope the Senate prefers to forget party affiliations when we are talking about Canada, and that we could form in groups. I am a French Canadian, and today we welcome two distinguished French Canadians in our midst. I do not think the adjective bothers them. It reflects a reality that has made this country possibly the envy of the entire world in that it is able to reconcile, some would say the Carstairs and the Prud'hommes, why not, and in her case and mine it would be very easy.

I repeat, honourable senators, the next few months will not be easy. I say this very seriously. I get the impression that people do not realize what is happening. Some people think everything has been settled, everything is okay, but that is not true. I prefer to be an alarmist and win than be too sure of myself and lose. Canada deserves a chance to change for the better, to be an example to and a glimmer of hope for a troubled world, where solutions can be found, and it is not as difficult as all that.

Senator Bacon, this is indeed a great pleasure, and I must say I have always had the warmest affection and friendship for you as a woman of great courage who is not afraid to tell the truth, however unpalatable it may be to the listener. I wish you a cordial welcome, and I am sure that, like me, the whip is very pleased to see the arrival of these three distinguished additions to our Senate. We must get to work now because time is of the essence, and I hope that we, Senators Cohen, Ghitter, Spivak and the others, can work for Canada, not for political parties. Together we will experience some exalting moments and some difficult ones, but we can prove, beyond a doubt, that this country is worth living in and deserves structures that are more harmonious and allow for existing nuances and differences — — in respecting the nuance and the difference in understanding the role of the Indian and the Inuit in this country; in respecting the role of French Canadians in this country.

[English]

When we explain the history of Canada, the trouble is that it seems that no one understands the meaning of "Canada" and how our country came to be. That is our role, honourable senators. I ask Mrs. Carstairs to join with me in this new pilgrimage, because I already have the assurance of the other two new senators that I know better.

Welcome again.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, while I do not make formal speeches, I should like to welcome and congratulate our new colleagues, and in particular I welcome their guests, who have come to witness this event.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I would like to welcome and congratulate my colleagues. I would also like to invite all senators and their guests to a reception in my quarters after the Senate adjourns.

SENATOR ROBERT MUIR

BEST WISHES ON RECOVERY

The Hon. the Speaker: With your further permission, honourable senators, I wish to mark the return to the chamber of Senator Robert Muir, after a long absence. He has our best wishes.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, we would normally have had some festivities to say farewell to Senator Frith, but he and I had a conversation some days ago, and we both realized that the date of the return of the Senate and his departure for London made this impossible. However, we agreed that on his first visit back to Canada, if he gives us notice, we would have a proper meeting of the minds and spirits, at which gathering we will say a fond farewell to him as a member of our institution.

• (1510)

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, at the last sitting of the Senate, I indicated that it was my intention to raise a question of privilege today. I have given the required notice to the Clerk of the Senate pursuant to rule 44(3).

The purpose of my statement is to indicate that I will be speaking tomorrow because today the air is expectant with celebration, and we should allow our incoming and outgoing senators to enjoy their new experience.

THE HONOURABLE JACK MARSHALL

TRIBUTES ON PAPAL CITATION OF SPECIAL RECOGNITION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I want to welcome the new senators and to congratulate my good friend Royce Frith on his new appointment, and wish him well. I concur with everything my colleagues have said about him.

However, I stand in my place today for another reason. One of our colleagues, who will soon leave us, received a citation of special recognition from His Holiness, Pope John Paul II. The citation reads as follows:

> His Holiness, Pope John Paul II, cordially imparts his Apostolic Blessing to the Hon. Senator Col. Jack Marshall C.D. in recognition of his untiring work on behalf of Canadian Veterans invoking an abundance of heavenly favours.

Not being a Roman Catholic, and Senator Marshall not being a Christian, I felt that this was an extremely high honour to be bestowed upon a senator, a person of another faith, especially when it comes from the head of the Roman Catholic Church. We should all be proud of Senator Jack Marshall.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, when I left the Victoria Building for the Senate today, I looked out of the window of the bus towards the Peace Tower. White smoke was rising, and I wondered why. I thought perhaps the Prime Minister had invited His Holiness to bless our three new senators today. However, I later found out that, as Senator Bonnell has explained, I was being honoured. Honourable senators, I am indeed honoured and privileged.

Senator Bonnell, I will watch over you when I retire.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT AGREEMENTS BILL

MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that a message has been received from the House of Commons, which reads as follows:

Friday, September 30, 1994

Ordered,—

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House disagrees with the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-22, An Act respecting certain agreements concerning the redevelopment and operation of Terminals 1 and 2 at Lester B. Pearson International Airport.

ATTEST

ROBERT D. MARLEAU
Clerk of the House of Commons

PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

ANNUAL REPORT TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the annual report of the Privacy Commissioner for the period 1993-94.

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT AGREEMENTS BILL

NOTICE OF MOTION TO CONCUR WITH MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, October 5, 1994, I will move:

> That the Senate do not insist on its amendments to the Bill C-22, An Act respecting certain agreements concerning the redevelopment and operation of Terminals 1 and 2 at Lester B. Pearson International Airport, to which the House of Commons has disagreed; and
>
> That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Wednesday, October 5, 1994, at 1:30 p.m.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I discussed this with the Honourable Leader of the Opposition. We agreed that we could sit at 1:30 p.m. tomorrow so that the committees could sit shortly after three o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

CANADA PETROLEUM RESOURCES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-25, to amend the Canada Petroleum Resources Act.

Bill read first time.

• (1520)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have had a discussion on this matter with the Leader of the Opposition. This is a non-controversial bill, and we have agreed that we would proceed at once to second reading and then send the bill on to committee, which I understand will be meeting tomorrow in any case. The committee could then deal with the bill at that time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

SECOND READING

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, I move second reading of this bill.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Can we dispose of Routine Proceedings first, and then deal with this bill?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Lynch-Staunton has indicated that it might be preferable to deal with the routine business and then revert to the bill. The problem is that Senator Kenny is a member of a joint committee that is sitting this afternoon, so perhaps we could proceed now. I believe his speech will be short. If the debate on the opposition side is also short, then we can dispose of the matter quickly. If that procedure is not acceptable, we will do it later.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We shall be accommodating, particularly on this first day, for our new members. We would not want them to feel that there was any misunderstanding between the two sides on any issue. However, we must not fall into the trap of having committees determine our schedule.

Senator Molgat: We have had that discussion many times before. The honourable senator knows my feelings on that matter completely. The problem is that some of the joint committees are trying to conclude their business. I should hope that, in future, we will not have such conflicts between the Senate and committees. I appreciate the spirit of cooperation that the Leader of the Opposition is demonstrating today. I trust that it will continue until the end of the session.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It will be only at times when you have new recruits.

Senator Kenny: Honourable senators, I rise today to address Bill C-25, to amend the Canada Petroleum Resources Act. The proposed amendment is a small one. What is not small is the impact this legislation will have on northern communities, northern aboriginal people and, ultimately, on all Canadians.

Bill C-25 proposes a minor administrative change to the Canada Petroleum Resources Act that is inconsequential to the application of the act in any other region of Canada. The change continues to exempt the Norman Wells oil field and extends its boundaries. Essentially, this means that production from the Norman Wells oil field in the central Mackenzie Valley will continue under existing arrangements for as long as the field is commercially producible.

When the original Norman Wells Agreement was adopted in 1944, it was predicted that the field would be productive until, at most, the year 2008. However, because of technological developments over the past 50 years, we now know that the productive life of the field will be much longer. In fact, it is expected to remain productive until at least the year 2020.

Technology has taught us even more. It has been discovered that the Norman Wells field extends beyond the proven area. Fringe areas have been discovered outside the original boundaries. The current practice under the act normally involves a competitive bidding process, but the newly discovered fringe areas of the field lying outside the area of agreement are unlikely to be developed if removed from the context of the entire field. There is a risk, therefore, that if current policy is adhered to, sound management of the field will be compromised since the outlying reserves would be left in the ground and maximum recovery of the field would never be achieved.

It is important to realize that these are not just the claims of the operating company, Imperial Oil. The National Energy Board has conducted an independent assessment which substantiates the claim that the boundary of the field should be extended and that the field has a longer productive life than originally thought. The real impact of the proposed legislative change will be economic.

The primary beneficiary will be the community of Norman Wells. In 1993, expenditures on Norman Wells production activities totalled $36 million, over half of which was spent in the north. Each year the oil field, which is the fourth largest in Canada, produces about $3.7 million in wages to northern workers. In addition, more than 30 companies in Norman Wells and over 20 companies in other northern communities owe a large part of their annual business to the oil project.

The community of Norman Wells will not be the only winner here. Other northern communities, governments and taxpayers will also gain as millions of dollars of corporate and personal tax revenues, royalties and other income will be generated. For example, in 1992 alone, the Norman Wells oil field generated more than $50 million in revenues to the government.

The recent settlement of a number of comprehensive aboriginal land claims in the north will also pave the way for renewed investment in the north as more lands are being opened to private interests. From this standpoint, the extension of the Norman Wells project could not be more opportune. It will focus attention on the great resource potential of these northern areas at a time when lands are becoming available for exploration and development. This will result in additional drilling and service contracts for northern firms which will, in turn, generate more business opportunities.

It is important to point out that it is the aboriginal people in the area who will benefit from this extension. The Gwich'in, the Sahtu Dene and the Métis under their land claim agreements are entitled to a share of royalties from Norman Wells. This extension will give them a guaranteed revenue flow beyond 2008 and perhaps to the year 2020.

Honourable senators, proclamation of this legislation can have an immediate, positive economic impact. As a result of the $30-million drilling program to be undertaken by Imperial Oil and the extension of the field's producing life, short-term employment in the Norman Wells field will increase and long-term employment will be stabilized. An estimated 25 person years of indirect employment will also be created in the north. The Norman Wells extension project will not only keep some Canadians working, it will contribute directly and indirectly to the creation of many new jobs in the north and in Alberta.

It is a positive initiative that has the support of all the key players — aboriginal and nonaboriginal people of the Northwest Territories, the Canadian Association of Petroleum producers, the petroleum industry, and the Government of Canada. I ask the Senate to support this bill.

Hon. Ron Ghitter: Honourable senators, I rise in support of Bill C-25. The history leading up to the bill and the substance of the bill have been fully explained by my colleague Senator Kenny, and to that explanation I would add only a few brief comments.

The continuation of the development of the Norman Wells field to its maximum potential is an obvious goal that will prove advantageous to Canadians by the payment to the government of royalties, to the native population by way of jobs and their share of royalties, to Imperial Oil by allowing it to continue the work it commenced in Canada in 1944, and also to the province of Alberta where a considerable amount of drilling program moneys will be spent. It is a "win-win" situation for all parties involved.

It also stands as testimony to the new and advanced technologies which are being developed in the oil and gas industry in Canada and under Canadian leadership and technology. These new technologies, which are being used by many companies in Canada, involve advances in industry extraction techniques such as those used by Imperial Oil in the Norman Wells field.

• (1530)

For example, at Norman Wells, because much of the reserves lie below the Mackenzie River, directional, and now horizontal, drilling has been developed. That technology is now being used all over the world. By using this technology in Alberta, they are now able to extract millions of barrels of oil which previously lay in the ground. Many small oil companies in Alberta are prospering from the use of this new technology involving horizontal drilling.

The technology, developed in Canada, has made this country a world exporter of petroleum production technology and has allowed us to increase our recoverable reserves in Canada's conventional oil fields by an estimated 15 per cent, thereby preventing the long-predicted decline in conventional oil production.

More specifically, with respect to the legislation before the Senate today, the expansion of the existing proven area of the Norman Wells field by approximately 320 hectares, out of the original field of 3,000 hectares, will extend the life of the field from the year 2008 to at least 2020, a full 12 years longer than originally anticipated. This will ensure continued stability in the community of Norman Wells by way of jobs and many benefits to the local people. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development predicted that at least one-third of the on-site jobs generated by the drilling program will be guaranteed to local residents and that indirect employment is estimated to be — as the Honourable Senator Kenny stated — an additional 25 person years in the north.

The aboriginal peoples' royalties from Norman Wells and this extension will give them a guaranteed revenue flow for an additional number of years. In addition, Sahtu Drilling, which is jointly owned by the Dene, Métis and Imperial Oil, holds a $6-million drilling contract which is conditional on this project moving forward.

It should also be noted that Norman Wells is currently the fourth largest oil-producing field in Canada. It yields about 33,000 barrels of oil a day, and generated more than $50 million of revenues to the Government of Canada in 1992.

One of the questions that was forthcoming at the time this legislation was presented, and one which I expressed to departmental officials, concerned the lack of a competitive bidding process in this case. Under the Canada Petroleum Resources Act, it is the current practice to issue production rights only through a competitive bidding process. However, it is unlikely that these fringe areas — fields lying outside the area of proven yield — will be developed if removed from the context of the entire field.

I have inquired of knowledgeable members of the oil and gas industry as to whether there was concern over the fact that a competitive bidding process was not carried out in this case. The response I received from the industry was that it would not be economical nor would it make any sense for an outside bidder to come forward and endeavour to obtain the rights for this additional 340 hectares.

Imperial Oil has been in the field since 1944. It has the technology and the knowledge with respect to this particular field, and it would be highly unlikely that any third party would find it appealing to come forward and enter a competitive bidding process, if one had been undertaken by the department.

What is important in this legislation is that full commercial production of the reserves in this field are achieved in a manner consistent with all federal-provincial oil and gas legislation and environmental assessments. This is being done.

This is good legislation. It is legislation that deserves the support of all members of the Senate. It is legislation which uniquely has no losers, only winners. It has no negatives. It is a bill we can all enthusiastically support.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Kenny, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources.

BOOK ENTITLED "ABOVE THE LAW"

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, October 6, 1994, I will call the attention of the Senate to the book entitled Above the Law.

QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL FORUM ON HEALTH

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Hon. Norman K. Atkins: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

On Friday, September 30, at John Hopkins University in Baltimore, Maryland, the Minister of Health once again alluded to a process that will act as a vehicle through which Canadians can focus their priorities and plan the future of Canadian medicare. She called this process "The National Forum on Health".

It is no secret that Canadians are concerned about the future of their health care. Is the date of the forum a secret? When will the National Forum on Health take place, and where?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Thank you for the question, Senator Atkins. The membership to the National Forum on Health will be announced very shortly. As far as I am aware, the forum will hold discussions across the country.

Regarding the date of its commencement, obviously that will have some bearing on when the announcement of its membership is made. I will attempt to get an indication from the minister on how soon we can expect that to begin.

THE ENVIRONMENT

STUDY OF LOW-LEVEL MILITARY FLIGHTS IN LABRADOR—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO CRITICISM OF PROCESS

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, the Environmental Assessment Review Panel on low-level flights by military aircraft over Labrador has been deemed by its critics as unable to fulfil its mandate in a fair and impartial manner because four of the seven technical experts commissioned by the review panel identified major deficiencies in the study presented by the Department of National Defence.

Experts who examined the study on behalf of the Inuit Nation identified 130 such deficiencies. The panel has failed to require DND to comply with its 1987 guidelines by providing additional information on the project's impact on aboriginal rights, including negotiation and settlement of land claims.

The panel has been so blatantly insensitive to aboriginal culture that it has set time limits on elders, refused to guarantee full translation, and slated the hearings for a time when many of the Inuit people most affected are trying to make their livelihood through hunting.

The hearings under way are understandably viewed as so biased that they are being boycotted by the Inuit Nations of Labrador and Quebec, by eight chiefs of the North Shore region, by Physicians for Global Survival, the Sierra Club of Canada and the Canadian Voice of Women for Peace.

Is the government aware that one technical expert was asked to go beyond the scientific realm and speculate on the merits of the proposal? That is the DND proposal.

Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate inquire of her colleague the Minister of the Environment what action will be taken by the government to ensure that this review proceeds on a rational, impartial basis, adhering to the 1987 guidelines?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): I thank Senator Spivak for drawing some of this information to my attention.

Honourable senators, I will indeed talk with the minister. As Senator Spivak may know, the minister herself has been in conversation in recent days with representatives of the Inuit Association of Canada. She has given them assurances, and she spoke about those assurances in the House of Commons on September 29. She listened to their representations and their concerns, and she assured them that if there is one shred of evidence that the panel is biased, she would be the first to act to replace panel members.

She also has spoken, and will continue to speak, with that particular group which has been vocal about the difficulties it has experienced to date with timing and some other issues.

• (1540)

Because of the importance of their views and concerns being heard in an open and fair way at these hearings, the minister will continue to speak with them in an effort to facilitate a return of that group to the table.

Senator Spivak: I thank the honourable leader for agreeing to pass this question on for me. A major problem is that the 1987 guidelines are not being followed by the panel. My concern involves this particular question, as well as the matter of an expert who has been asked to go beyond the scientific realm. I should particularly like those two questions to be answered.

Senator Fairbairn: I will bring them to the minister's attention. I acknowledge the concern of my colleague in relation to the guidelines, and I will try to provide her with information in that regard.

[Translation]

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

APPLICATION ON READING MATERIALS

Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin: My question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Honourable senator, when you were in opposition in the Senate, you opposed the application of the GST to reading materials. Since then, you have joined the government and within cabinet you have maintained that position.

In view of the report from the other House on the GST and of the document and positions your government made known to the various provincial finance ministers, do you believe, first, that books should be exempted from the GST? Do you believe, second, that the exemption on eyeglasses should be maintained?

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I agree with Senator Nolin that I was definitely outspoken on this issue some time ago.

The House of Commons Finance Committee brought out its report in June, and the government has considered that report. It suggested a variety of options. The government is now pursuing its discussions with the provinces. The key objective is to try to achieve harmonization on this question with the federal and provincial orders of government.

Last June the Minister of Finance met with his provincial colleagues, who had some ideas. They had mixed reviews. He continues to discuss other ways of handling this question with them. Other proposals have been put on the table, including the one from the province of Ontario.

Concerning the tax on books, the whole issue of the GST is under intensive review and will be addressed in the months ahead, as promised by the government in the election. In that review, the whole question of taxation on books will be discussed.

My personal opinion has not changed. The discussion will be a broad and intensive one, and I will be a vigorous participant in that discussion.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a subsequent question. That issue was supported not only by Senator Fairbairn but also by the entire Liberal caucus at the time. It also received the support of the then Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Chrétien, and, I assume, the caucus of the House of Commons. It is not only Senator Fairbairn who is being asked the question.

Is the Liberal Party, which before the election was adamantly opposed to GST on reading material, still supporting that stand?

Senator Fairbairn: As I expressed to Senator Nolin, the whole question of the GST, in all of its manifestations, is under intensive and continuing discussion between the Minister of Finance and the provinces to try to work out a framework — that is, a proper system to make this tax more fair, simpler and much easier for consumers and businesses alike in Canada to manage. It would be premature for me to speculate on what the outcome will be. The point is well taken by members of the opposition. The discussions will continue, and I look forward to them.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I have a second supplementary question. May we assume that, as the Leader of the Government has just told us, the government no longer has the intention of replacing the tax — although this was their promise during the election — but, rather, of modifying it? She has also mentioned that they have modified their whole approach, including retaining the tax on reading material.

Senator Fairbairn: That assumption is not one that my friend can make, in either instance.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have several delayed answers to oral questions. One such question was asked on April 21 by Honourable Senator Jean-Maurice Simard, regarding the Financing of Professional Sports Infrastructure; another was asked on April 26 by Honourable Senator Ghitter, regarding the Effect on Employment Renovations to Athletic Facilities in Edmonton and Calgary; the Honourable Senator Tkachuk asked a question on April 26, regarding the Cut-back in Government Spending — Effect on Employment; another question was asked by the Honourable Senator Nolin on May 10, regarding the Installation of Telephone Communications Network; another question was asked on May 31 by the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux on the National Forum on Health; and on June 14 a question was put by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton regarding Military Intervention in Burma. The last answer that I have is to a question asked by the Honourable Senator Cochrane on June 16, regarding the Reduction in Post-Secondary Education Financing.

INFRASTRUCTURE PROGRAM

FINANCING OF PROFESSIONAL SPORTS INFRASTRUCTURE— GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard on April 21, 1994)

The federal/provincial agreements indicate that projects are eligible for consideration if they are to invest in physical capital which will be instrumental in the provision of public services.

Certain privately owned facilities, including some sports, tourist and cultural facilities, will qualify under this heading. These are estimated to be a small percentage of the total program.

Key sports, tourism and cultural facilities can be extremely important for the ability of communities to attract other investments. They are also very significant generators of jobs both in the short and long-term.

In the case of a sports facility, the Infrastructure Works Program will not be available for private areas, such as luxury boxes.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT RENOVATIONS TO ATHLETIC FACILITIES IN EDMONTON AND CALGARY

(Response to question raised by Hon. Ron Ghitter on April 26, 1994)

This is not just a job creation program, but a program that is making long term investments in Canada's future by building confidence in the economy.

As of September 26, 1994, 6,662 infrastructure projects have resulted in the creation of 71,015 direct jobs distributed throughout the provinces, territories and First Nations.

Federal government approval respecting the upgrading of public areas in Calgary's Olympic Saddledome and Edmonton's Northlands Coliseum has been granted based on the terms of the Canada/Alberta Infrastructure Works agreement.

CUT-BACK IN GOVERNMENT SPENDING— EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. David Tkachuk on April 26, 1994)

The Infrastructure Program is not just a job creation program, but a program that is making important long-term investments in Canada's future.

The February Budget announced over $15 billion in spending cuts over the next three years and about $2.5 billion in new spending initiatives financed from these cuts. Of this, $2 billion was for new spending on the infrastructure initiative, to be tripled by the addition of provincial and local shares to create a total program of $6 billion.

The major purpose of the Budget was to make a major step towards putting the government's fiscal house in order and to build the confidence so necessary for a vigorous economic recovery.

Thus the cuts were a key part of the strategy to get Canadians back to work.

At the same time, Canadians wanted to see tangible evidence that the government was addressing the jobs issue directly. The Infrastructure Program has tremendous visibility and public support. It is expected to create over 90,000 direct jobs and its visibility will help build confidence that the economy is improving.

The strategy is working. Consumer confidence is up and the prospects for economic growth and job creation have improved substantially.

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT

INSTALLATION OF TELEPHONE COMMUNICATIONS NETWORK

(Response to question raised by Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin on May 10, 1994)

It is important to clarify that this contract, in the amount of $110 million, was awarded to a Canadian firm — EDS Canada Ltd. and a consortium of Canadian companies. It is for the income security programs redesign project which will provide a new client service delivery network across the country. The total cost of the project, including 2 previous phases will be $289.5 million.

Equally important — senior Canadians will not have to deal with the Department of Human Resources Development through a voice mail box. Seniors, as well as all other clients, will always have the option of speaking to someone personally, and many issues will be dealt with on the spot. A number of focus groups will be held with seniors across Canada to help determine exactly how to design telephone systems that are sensitive and responsive to their needs and concerns.

The contract with EDS Canada Ltd. was let through a rigorous competitive process. In May 1991, letters of interest were sent to 1,843 Canadian firms. In February 1992, ten requests for proposal went out and from those, three proposals were received from major Canadian firms. Proposals from EDS Canada Ltd. and Systemhouse Ltd. were selected in June 1993 for development and implementation. After a lengthy cross-disciplinary evaluation by some 170 Crown employees, it was announced in July, 1993 that EDS Canada Ltd. was the successful firm.

The project work is being carried out by Canadian staff and Canadian management, involving a team of Canadian firms who are working with EDS Canada Ltd.

NATIONAL FORUM ON HEALTH

CONFUSION AND DELAY WITHIN GOVERNMENT

(Response to a question raised by the Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux on May 31, 1994)

On June 29, 1994 Minister Marleau announced the mandate of the National Forum on Health. At that time, she also indicated she would continue discussions with the provinces about their participation in the Forum. Discussions have occurred at the political level and among officials and I fully expect the provinces to be active participants in the Forum's dialogue on the future of the health system.

The Prime Minister has confirmed his intention, as stated in Creating Opportunities to chair the forum, and the federal Health Minister will be the vice chair.

The first meeting of the National Forum on Health will be held in the very near future -before the end of October.

The mandate of the Forum is to:

— develop a new vision for Canada's health system for the 21st century;

— promote a dialogue with Canadians about their health system in order that renewal processes will maintain and improve the health system and lead to better health while respecting the principles on which the system was built;

— identify priorities for the future and develop greater consensus for change.

The Forum does have a four year mandate. However, the Forum will produce reports and recommendations on a regular basis — not only at the end of its mandate. There are many important issues on which the Forum's ideas and advice will be helpful and we can look forward to benefitting from the Forum's work on a continuing basis.

The sum of 12.0 million dollars has been allocated to the forum for its work. The Forum does not have, and will not have an open-ended budget. With the Prime Minister as Chair, the federal Health Minister as vice chair of the Forum and the Deputy Minister of Health as secretary of the Forum, we will ensure that the Forum does not exceed its budget. $12.0 million should be sufficient for the costs of the small secretariat responsible for Forum operations, for its meetings, and for its various activities intended to engage Canadians in a dialogue about the future of their health system.

As far as Health Ministers in the provinces and territories are concerned, the regular conferences of federal-provincial -territorial Health Ministers will remain as the most important inter-governmental decision-making mechanism for health issues. We will ensure that the deliberations of the Forum and the positive suggestions it brings forward for renewal of Canada's health system are made known to all Health Ministers.

I am confident the National Forum on Health under the leadership of the Prime Minister will make a very substantial contribution to the important decisions that must be taken on the future of our health system.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

MILITARY INTERVENTION IN HAITI AND IN BURMA— GOVERNMENT POLICY

(Response to question raised by Hon. John Lynch-Staunton on June 14, 1994)

Canada has frequently made its concern about Burma's human rights record known both bilaterally and in the appropriate UN bodies.

With respect to trade Canada does not support Canadian business involvement in Burma and maintains a unilateral embargo on military exports to Burma.

However, the Canadian Government considers that international economic and trade sanctions are effective in situations where the countries involved have significant trading relationships, where the sanctioned country is susceptible to moral suasion or when both major and minor trading partners agree in a multilateral forum to the vigorous enforcement of such measures. In the case of Burma none of these situations exist. China, the most important trade partner of Burma, would likely veto efforts in the UN Security Council to impose a trade embargo. The Association of South East Asia Nations ("ASEAN") countries, for their own interest, do not want to isolate Burma. They believe that, by a continuous dialogue and an improvement in the economic situation, changes will take place within Burma.

Canada will cooperate with the ASEAN countries, who may have an influence on the State of Law and Order Restoration Council ("SLORC"), and will support any productive avenue. However Canada will also continue to express in public its displeasure with the Burmese regime and will vigorously pursue any initiative to influence its behaviour. Canada concurs with the idea of establishing benchmarks to monitor progress made by the SLORC in meeting the concerns of the international community.

NATIONAL FINANCE

REDUCTION IN POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION FINANCING

(Response to question raised by the Hon. Ethel Cochrane on June 16, 1994)

It is true that the revised estimates for established programs financing (EPF) cash payments for post-secondary education are $2,228 million for 1994-95, compared with actual payments of $2,378 million for 1993-94, representing a decline of $150 million.

Federal transfers to the provinces for post-secondary education are composed of both cash and tax points.

Since the tax portion of EPF is growing faster than the total transfer, the cash portion of EPF, which is the difference between the two, is declining.

The sum of cash and tax transfers for post-secondary education under the EPF arrangements is expected to reach $6.15 billion in 1994-95.

This represents an increase of $77 million over 1993-94, and brings federal funding for post-secondary education to a record level.

ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS TABLED

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—TRANSFER OF NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT BRIDGE OFFICE TO CHARLOTTETOWN

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 33 on the Order Paper—by Senator Macquarrie.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—UPGRADING OF CHARLOTTETOWN HARBOUR FACILITIES

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 50 on the Order Paper—by Senator Macquarrie.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY—REPORT OF PROFESSOR SAVOIE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 46 on the Order Paper—by Senator Atkins.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—PARTICULARS OF STAFFING

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 48 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

ORDER-IN-COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS TO GOVERNMENT BOARDS AND TRIBUNALS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 38 on the Order Paper—by Senator Oliver.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—COSTS OF CANCELLING HELICOPTER PROGRAM

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 17 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

COMPOSITION OF ADVISORY BOARD OF CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 18 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PRESENT STRUCTURE AND FACILITIES OF CANADIAN FORCES TRAINING SYSTEM

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 28 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—RECIPIENTS OF DISABILITY PENSIONS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 30 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—RESPONSIBILITY FOR ADMINISTERING THE PENSION ACT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 31 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—DISABILITY PENSION APPLICATIONS TO CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 35 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—STATUS OF CANADA TRAINING REGULATIONS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 36 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—TESTING OF LSVW VEHICLES

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 39 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—PARTICULARS OF CANADIAN FORCES PERSONNEL DEPLOYED IN SOUTH EAST ASIA

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 40 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—BREAKDOWN OF PENSIONABLE DISABILITIES

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 42 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

COASTAL FISHERIES PROTECTION ACT— PROTECTION AND MANAGEMENT OF STRADDLING STOCKS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 43 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

VETERANS AFFAIRS— FINANCIAL SUPPORT TO VETERANS ASSOCIATIONS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 44 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

CANADA 125—BREAKDOWN OF DISTRIBUTION OF MEDALS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 45 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

VETERANS LAND ADMINISTRATION— STATUS OF ACTIVITIES UNDER VETERANS LAND ACT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 49 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

VETERANS AFFAIRS— ENTITLEMENT UNDER WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 51 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

ETHICS COUNSELLOR—DETAILS OF TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 52 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

Senator Molgat: I am very pleased we were able to respond to Senator Marshall's questions, particularly in view of the fact that he will not be with us very much longer. We are attempting to clear up all of the backlog.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, October 5, 1994, at 1:30 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, October 5, 1994

The Senate met at 1:30 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

ALBERT CAMUS

ACCEPTED PRONUNCIATION OF FAMILY NAME

Hon. Maurice Riel: Honourable senators, on June 15, I addressed the Senate about the pronunciation of the name of the French author and Nobel prizewinner Albert Camus.

I had advised Senator Grafstein to pronounce the "s" in Camus, instead of Camu, as the final "u" sound poses a problem to anglophones. It sounded like a reasonable piece of advice to give him, since that is the way I have pronounced the name all my life.

It was not such a great idea after all, because some honourable senators made fun of him. I then had to accept responsibility for the piece of advice I had given him and explain where this pronunciation came from. In the face of protest from certain honourable senators, mostly from the other side I must say, I decided to refer to Mr. Maurice Druon, the permanent secretary of the Académie française, with whom I am in contact.

Here is how our correspondence on the subject read. In all, three short letters were exchanged, and the first one read as follows:

> Dear Master and Friend:
>
> I am sending you this brief note to request our help in a matter relating to the French language.
>
> How is the family name of Albert Camus to be pronounced?
>
> I have always pronounced Camus, hissing the final "s" like in Marius and Fabius. Had this not been the intention, the name would have been written like Raimu. In addition, no one has ever corrected me or commented on my pronunciation, be it in Paris or in Montreal.
>
> The same way, I have always sounded the "s" in the name of your fellow Academy member Cabanis, as I recently heard it done in the case of Baudis, the mayor of Toulouse. We do not pronounce the final "s" in either name.
>
> My reasoning is that, in the South of France, the last syllable of proper nouns or any word for that matter is sounded. Since Albert Camus was born and raised in Algeria, I concluded that he came from two souths. QED.
>
> But perhaps I am mistaken! In any case, I find that pronouncing the final "s" in Camus is more euphonious than leaving it out, especially for English people who pronounce the French "u" like "ou", as if the name were Camou! They say Malthus.
>
> Some people objected to me that the "s" in Camus cognac is not pronounced, and I said that I did not know that. I rarely drink it and rarely say it. But I added that it is a product of Charentes, which is different; it is not the South of France. Leaving the "s" off the name of the cognac is no doubt a local or regional pronunciation. Perhaps there is freedom of choice. For example, with the name Montaigne, some say Montagne and others Montaigne. Take the name Schneider. Society people pronounce it Schnèdre, and in French history, the name of Louis XVI's minister Necker was pronounced Nècre, I learned in school.
>
> The reality I am faced with is that I advised an English-language colleague to pronounce the "s" in Camus. He did so in a speech in the Senate and received comments, not to say jeers, from some Quebec senators. Maybe they had other reasons to jeer him!
>
> I must accept responsibility for this serious piece of advice and state the way I pronounce it myself, and why.
>
> In the Debates of the Senate of June 15, 1994, page 653, which you will find enclosed, Senator Guy Charbonneau pointed out after I spoke that there was no set rule governing the pronunciation of proper names in French. As you can see, the Canadian Senate cares about the French language.
>
> Am I wrong, or am I right? I would appreciate your comments on this point. I will read and table your reply at the sitting of the Senate following its reception and have it printed in the Debates of the Senate, as my colleagues asked me to.
>
> Thank you in advance for your help. Yours sincerely,
>
> P.S.
>
> My bookstore in Montreal notified me this morning that it had just received your latest book, Lettre aux Français sur leur langue et leur âme. As you know, this is something we are keenly interested in. Your dedication to the French language and its proper usage is admirable. We see you as our leader in your crusade and you, in turn, can count on our support as foot soldiers!

I received a reply from Maurice Druon, secretary for life to the Académie française, dated July 28, 1994.

Dear Senator and friend,

Please accept my apologies for not answering your letter dated the end of June until today. Unfortunately, due to a number of trips abroad, including one trip strictly for pleasure to your country, I have been late in answering my mail.

Perhaps I may start by commending the Canadian Senate for being so attentive to the French language and the vagaries of its pronunciation. There is certainly nothing futile or inconsequential about concerns that reflect an abiding interest in that which constitutes the most permanent and manifest aspect of our identity.

The Académie has long and often impassioned debates on similar problems or uncertainties that sometimes trip up the unsuspecting.

This is for you Senator Kolber, who asked me what an academician does in the Académie!

I see there are like-minded individuals in Canada as well.

That being said, I am afraid that in this particular case, I cannot agree with your position.

Although there is some logic in the syntax of a language, there is none as far as its pronunciation is concerned, which is all a matter of common usage.

In France, it is customary not to pronounce the "s" in Camus, not in the adjectival form (un nez camus) nor as a proper noun (Albert Camus), the latter, I suppose, because of the former. In abus, obus, obtus, refus, the "s" is not sounded. The Académie française — in volume I of its dictionary, ninth edition, 1992 —q lists the words ending in us in which the final consonant is to be sounded, such as campus, borrowed from the Latin via Anglo-American English; in all other cases, the final "s" is silent, as usual.

The same rule — Latin or foreign origin — applies when we sound the "s" in Marius, Fabius or Balthus, the painter.

Now the clincher: Camus himself pronounced his name without sounding the "s"; "Albert Camus speaking —" and he would have been rather taken aback if anyone said: "Hello, Camusse".

However, it is quite possible that in the south of France, where final consonants are sounded with great gusto, you may have heard this strictly local, although not customary, pronunciation.

I am truly sorry to have to refute your theory but I am also delighted that you gave me this opportunity to applaud your dedication to the defence of our common language and to ask you to transmit my warmest feelings of respect and friendship to your colleagues in the Canadian Senate.

Yours sincerely —

[Senator Riel]

I wrote back to thank him.

Thank you for your letter dated July 28 (I note that it is from Faise — his summer residence — and I can only conclude that you never stop working!).

You provided me with an excellent answer and even though I was wrong regarding the pronunciation of Albert Camus' last name, we will all (I certainly will) have a better understanding of the linguistic problem which I submitted to your attention.

I notice two things in your letter. On page one, in the second last paragraph, you write: "There is a logic regarding French-language syntax, but there is not any regarding pronunciation. Everything is a matter of usage". At the beginning of the next paragraph you add that "According to usage in France, the letter "s" in the name Camus is not pronounced —".

You then point out, in the third paragraph of page 2: "However, you may have heard this strictly local pronunciation in the south of France, where there is a strong tendency to pronounce the last vowel".

I conclude that the pronunciation of family names in French is subjected to usage but can also be influenced by the local accent, depending on the region or the pronunciation of the user himself.

I guess you could say that we are discussing the vagaries of the language.

I am reminded of baron de Charlus (Palamède!) in "Recherche". Am I not right in thinking that, according to usage, the right pronunciation is Charlusse, wherever we may be, and that the pronunciation Charlu would undoubtedly have hurt the sensitive person who invented the "petite phrase de Vinteuil"?

Also, at the Lardanchet bookstore, 100 rue du Faubourg-Saint-Honoré, where I have been going for almost 40 years, the manager was, for a long time, a mademoiselle Pralus (pronounced Pralusse). As I recall, that lady came from Lyon. I suppose the pronunciation of her name was influenced by the Lyon accent.

In Canada (Quebec, Acadia and the Prairies), we commonly double the last letter in family names so that the last syllable can be heard. For example, Pouliot becomes Pouliotte, Monet, Monette and Turcot, Turcotte. Some, however, object to that practice. A lawyer friend of mine is offended when he is called Poulyo. Another friend takes offense when I say Turcotte instead of Turcô. This could be due to the fact that although common, this usage is not standardized. In Acadia, Léger often becomes Légère. As for Riel, Canadian history has standardized the common pronunciation of the name right across the country, with one single final consonant.

But as the late Shakespeare said "A rose is a rose by any other name".

I congratulate you on the letter you wrote to the president of the constitutional council to protest its decision, which limited dramatically the impact of the Toubon legislation. You can count on the support of Private Riel who, through your kindness, has become Colonel Riel.

I will inform the Canadian Senate of your reply when it reconvenes, on September 27. It will be added to the parliamentary documents of our house and will enlighten present and future generations of Canadians.

I thank you once again for so kindly taking time out from your very busy schedule to reply to my letter. I especially want to thank you for the attention you paid to local colour by including such Canadianisms as "niaiseux" and "enfarger".

Cordially yours.

As George Bernard Shaw said in My Fair Lady, the French are less preoccupied with what they say than with the way they pronounce the words they use. It might be a trifle exaggerated, but not all that much. On this note, I will conclude my remarks.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I am sorry I did not interrupt Senator Riel when his three minutes were up, but when the Académie française is being quoted, it would be quite a risk to take.

In any event, I am sure our colleagues have understood the lesson. I must serve notice that next time, even if I were as wise as a past Speaker, I will have to interrupt the senator to at least ask for the consent of our colleagues for him to continue. This being said, I believe that this lesson has been extremely useful.

[English]

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, on July 7 of this year, I indicated to the Senate that it was my intention to raise certain questions of privilege at the next sitting, which was yesterday. Yesterday I gave written notice pursuant to rule 44(3), and indicated here in the chamber that I would be speaking to the question today.

I now give oral notice pursuant to rule 44(7), and state that I would be prepared to proceed later today. I shall ask His Honour to rule on the facts as I shall briefly outline them, and to support my contention that I have a prima facie case of privilege. I am prepared to move the necessary motion.

THE SENATE

REMARKS BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Hon. Erminie J. Cohen: Honourable senators, I rise to direct my remarks to all my colleagues in this chamber on a matter that affects all parliamentarians — the issue of respect for parliamentarians, for our institutions and for the principles on which this country was founded. Honourable senators, I am referring to remarks made by Mr. Douglas Young, Minister of Transport, to a group of North American airport administrators, in which he referred to all members of this institution with disrespect and, at times, contempt.

I do not need to tell honourable senators that Canadians are becoming increasingly disillusioned. They perceive widespread inefficiency within government at all levels, and the erosion of confidence in politicians and the bureaucracy. The underlying causes for this disillusionment are many, and remarks made by politicians themselves, primarily for partisan reasons, is but one.

However, if history has taught us anything, it has taught us that when politicians ridicule each other, it demeans parliamentarians specifically, and our institutions generally. The Speaker of the House of Commons, Mr. Parent, recently confirmed this by stating that an attack on a colleague in the other place can also be an insult to the Senate as an institution. I hope Mr. Young, a minister of the Crown, does not speak for the government when he mocks the members of this institution, and I hope the Leader of the Government will voice her opposition to such remarks at the next cabinet meeting.

THE HONOURABLE PETER BOSA

TRIBUTES ON RECEIVING SPANISH ORDER

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, although some people may be disillusioned with the work done by members of the Senate, yesterday we were apprised of the recognition of the excellent work of one of our senators by His Holiness Pope John Paul II.

Today, I should like to tell you of another honourable senator who was honoured by the King of Spain. King Juan Carlos of Spain, in recognition of Senator Bosa's work done over the years on the Interparliamentary Union, has named the Honourable Peter Bosa Encomienda — or Commander — of the Order of Isabel la Catolica.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Bonnell: You will remember that Queen Isabel financed Christopher Columbus in his voyage of discovery of Newfoundland and America. Now, thanks to King Juan Carlos of Spain, Queen Isabel's name has honoured another of our Italian friends, this one from Toronto, with an honour similar to that bestowed upon Christopher Columbus, that great Giovanni Caboto. It is worthy of note that Senator Peter Bosa has, as well, brought honour to the Senate from abroad.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL, 1994

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-42, to amend the Criminal Code and other Acts (miscellaneous matters).

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Molgat, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, October 11, 1994.

[Translation]

PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION TO POLAND

REPORT OF DELEGATION PRESENTED

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, the Parliamentary delegation which was invited by the Senate of the Republic of Poland to Warsaw, from May 26 to June 1, 1994, has the honour to present its report.

I would like to remind my colleagues that the delegation was made up of the following persons: Honourable Senator Lowell Murray, Honourable Senator William Petten, Honourable Senator David Tkachuk and finally Mr. Jean-Michel Roy, who acted as secretary to the delegation. I had the honour to lead in the absence of our chairman, Senator LeBlanc, who had to decline the invitation on medical grounds.

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ROYAL CANADIAN LEGION—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday, October 18, 1994, I will call the attention of the Senate to certain matters relating to the Royal Canadian Legion.

[Translation]

QUESTION PERIOD

HUMAN RESOURCES

REVIEW OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators will recall that in the first budget tabled by the federal government, the first budget of the Chrétien government, the people in New Brunswick and throughout Atlantic Canada were hard hit.

[English]

The military bases will be closed. Ten per cent of the money saved by the UI cuts came out of the pockets of workers in my province, which has only 3 per cent of the population. Programs to encourage investment in Atlantic Canada were chopped, and tax credits to facilitate investment in Atlantic Canada were gutted.

[The Hon. the Speaker]

Honourable senators, people in Atlantic Canada are prepared to do their fair share, but they should not be singled out, as they were in the last budget, to do more than their fair share.

My question comes in the light of documents being tabled today by the government which generally refer to the UI program and so-called "reforms" proposed by the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy. There is no doubt as to what the financial impact of this reform package will be.

I would refer honourable senators to an article in the Ottawa Sun today entitled, "Martin, Copps split" in which we have two cabinet ministers reported as saying two different things. Copps says that the changes to the UI program and the reform package are reforms which will make the system work better; while we know from what has been said by Mr. Martin that a very important side effect of these measures will be to save money and reduce the deficit.

In view of that background, and since the government has already started preparing its budget, would the minister give me his assurance that, whether we are talking about the reform package or about next year's budget, the people in Atlantic Canada will not be asked to pay as big a share — a share that is out of proportion with the overall population of Canada?

• (1400)

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Simard for his question. The document to which he refers on the social policy review will be tabled later this afternoon. They will be made available to all members of Parliament in the House of Commons and in the Senate.

With regard to his specific questions, I should emphasize that this paper is not a paper of government policy. It is a discussion paper containing a variety of options which the minister is hoping will generate a very intense, lively and productive discussion across the country, in the hope that he will have maximum assistance in setting forth government policy early in the new year.

Therefore, at this time there is no firm policy on which I can respond precisely to my friend. I invite him to look at the documents, as we all will, when they come out. It may be that when we return, it would be useful to have a day or so of debate on these issues here in the Senate, as the House of Commons intends to do.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

APPLICATION ON READING MATERIALS AND EYE GLASSES—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT LEADER

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: In opposition, the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate argued strongly and unequivocally that books and other reading materials should be exempt from the GST. Last fall, shortly after the election, she said she would continue to push in cabinet for an exemption for books. Now we hear that not only has the exemption for books not been granted, but that the government is preparing to tax the eyeglasses which Canadians use to read them.

First of all, will the minister please advise us whether or not she still believes that books should be exempt from the sales tax and, second, whether she believes that eyeglasses should remain exempt?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Yesterday, Senator Simard, two of your colleagues were questioning me on these same issues. This is all part and parcel of the discussion, study and review process currently under way on the whole issue of the GST, and the overriding issue of tax reform in that context.

I certainly agree that the question of the tax on books will be part of that discussion. I have vigorous views on this issue. I retain those views, and I will participate vigorously in future discussions.

In precise terms, the Minister of Finance is conducting ongoing negotiations with his colleagues in the provinces. Those negotiations started last June, with discussions on options for the harmonization of the GST with provincial sales taxes. As I said yesterday, there were mixed reviews at that time.

However, several other options are being considered. The Government of Ontario introduced a suggestion a week or so ago. All of these matters are under very active review at the Finance Ministers' level, and I will be a vigorous part of those discussions when the talks reach that point.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT AGREEMENTS BILL

MOTION TO CONCUR WITH MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government), pursuant to notice of Tuesday, October 4, 1994, moved:

> That the Senate do not insist on its amendments to the Bill C-22, An Act respecting certain agreements concerning the redevelopment and operation of Terminals 1 and 2 at Lester B. Pearson International Airport, to which the House of Commons has disagreed; and
>
> That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

She said: Honourable senators, the motion which I just moved is part of a legislative process that had its beginnings many months ago. As all senators are aware, Bill C-22 was introduced in the other place on April 13, 1994, and flowed from a series of events that began well prior to the last election.

The legislation was debated in the other place. It was examined in committee, adopted, and then sent to the Senate on June 16, 1994, for consideration by the members of this chamber. Here it followed the same process, but obviously with very different results.

In July 1994, following examination in our Senate committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, the opposition majority in the Senate passed Bill C-22 with amendments, and we so informed the other place. The government considered those amendments, as it recognized that it was part of the Senate's job to make such amendments, and concluded that the legislation should be maintained as it was originally introduced.

That decision was reflected in the motion that was introduced by the government in the other place last week. After a relatively short debate, in which only members of the three officially recognized parties — the Liberals, the Bloc Québécois and the Reform — chose to participate, the motion was adopted on division last Friday in the other place. For whatever reason, the opposition declined to ask for a recorded vote on the motion.

That is the legislative process which has been followed. It is a process that we have witnessed on a number of occasions in the past. This is one of the routes by which Parliament carries out its responsibilities to the electorate. I urge colleagues today to adopt the motion before us, with the full realization of the strongly held views on both sides of this house.

Senators on this side support the measure because it is the result of a strong and public commitment made during the election campaign. We believe that Bill C-22, as originally introduced, resolves the Pearson airport issue in a manner that best takes into consideration the public interest. We believe that the bill complies fully with legal and constitutional requirements.

As I understand it, senators opposite do not dispute the right of the government to legislate an end to the Pearson contract. However, they are in strong disagreement with the sections of Bill C-22 which prevent the parties to the agreement from seeking certain monetary damages in the courts. The opposition has concentrated on the legal and constitutional issues. It is for that reason that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs was charged with examining the bill.

• (1410)

Given the divergent views on both sides of this question, this has been a lively, interesting and, at some times, acrimonious debate. This, too, is part of parliamentary life. Occasions inevitably arise when different parties have sharply opposing views, and express those views with vigour and determination. This has happened on this bill in the House, in the Senate and in committees with, sometimes, considerable heat and vivid rhetoric.

However, eventually there must be a conclusion, particularly on issues which are an important part of the program of the government of the day. With the start of today's debate, I hope we may be approaching that moment.

As I have said, my colleagues opposite do not dispute the right of the government to legislate an end to the Pearson airport agreements. They have made it clear repeatedly that the government has a political mandate to proceed. I want to spend a few moments discussing how that political mandate came into being, in order to explain why Bill C-22 represents what the government believes to be the only reasonable and realistic option for carrying out that mandate.

Debate and discussions about the future of Pearson airport go back a number of years. That history is already on the record in both Houses of Parliament. I will not go back over those details today. Those discussions and debate culminated in an announcement on August 30, 1993, that an agreement had been reached to turn over control of Terminals 1 and 2 to a private consortium for a period of 57 years. That announcement was made by the former government just nine days before it dissolved Parliament and called a general election.

The decision to privatize Terminals 1 and 2 became a matter of intense public debate during the ensuing election campaign. Anyone who participated in that campaign, in particular in Toronto, could not fail to hear and to feel the controversy, the dismay and, in some quarters, the outrage that even the prospect of that decision generated.

I was in Toronto during the course of these events, and I certainly felt that outrage. Municipal politicians, provincial cabinet ministers, editorial writers and private citizens all urged the former government to pull back, to withdraw or, at the very least, to postpone a final decision until after the electorate had had an opportunity to pass judgment on polling day. Early into the campaign, it had become clear that this was the kind of issue which could, and should, wait until after voting day before being signed, sealed and delivered.

Mr. Chrétien, the current Prime Minister, asked publicly, nationally, and with great conviction, that the signing be postponed. It was his view that the controversy and concern warranted a postponement, so that the entire proposal could be reviewed after the political heat of the campaign had diminished.

Although the former government was no longer in a position to seek the confidence of the House of Commons, and with the continued confidence of the Canadian people at some doubt, it nevertheless pushed ahead. When it appeared that a final signing of contracts was imminent, Mr. Chrétien felt it was his duty, as one leader of a major party contesting the election, to make it clear to Canadians, and to all those involved in the contract, that should he become Prime Minister, the Pearson airport agreement would be reviewed and, if necessary, cancelled.

On October 6, 1993, he said, "I am warning everyone involved, if we become the government it will be reviewed, and if legislation is needed, we will pass the legislation." Once again, he urged the parties not to proceed.

The next day, on October 7, 1993, less than three weeks before polling day, the chief federal negotiator received written instructions from Prime Minister Kim Campbell to conclude the transaction immediately. It was signed that afternoon. That was an action which generated considerable anxiety. Mr. Chrétien repeated his pledge to review the contract if the Liberals formed the government after the election.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: And to have an inquiry.

Senator Fairbairn: On October 28, 1993, shortly after Mr. Chrétien was elected Prime Minister, he appointed Robert Nixon, a respected individual with long experience in public life, to conduct a review of the agreement.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I could not have written it better.

Senator Fairbairn: On November 29, 1993, Mr. Nixon presented his findings to the Prime Minister. His conclusion was, "It is my opinion that this agreement simply does not serve the public interest." Mr. Nixon recommended that the agreement be cancelled.

On December 3, 1993, the Prime Minister announced that the Government of Canada would be cancelling the contract.

To this point, as I understand the speeches of my honourable friends, they profoundly disagree with the decision of the government to cancel the contract. However, they accept that there exists a political mandate to do so. In the case of Metropolitan Toronto and Ontario, that mandate is overwhelming.

Clearly, what my colleagues on the other side have difficulty with is the manner in which the government has chosen to exercise that mandate. What, however, were the options?

The former government did not put a cancellation clause into the contract. If the government had declared that it was repudiating the agreement, there was no provision in that contract for determining the amount of damages that the government would be obligated to pay. Court action would have been inevitable. In court, the developers could have sued for monetary damages, or for an order that the government carry out its obligations under the contract by turning over possession of Terminals 1 and 2. If successful in the latter case, the result would have been in keeping with the objectives of the former administration, but completely contrary to the policies of the current government and contrary to the expectations of the overwhelming majority of Canadians as conveyed in the election results. The political mandate that my friends opposite acknowledge as existing would have been rendered absolutely meaningless. Therefore, in the view of the government, the only recourse left to them was legislation.

• (1420)

I would remind honourable colleagues that on October 6, 1993, Mr. Chrétien again warned the parties not to proceed. He specifically stated that, if a review determined that the contract was not in the public interest, his government would introduce legislation to cancel it. Bill C-22 is the legislation to which he referred. Bill C-22 cancels the contract. It prohibits the parties from seeking damage in the courts, and it provides for the reimbursement of reasonable expenses incurred in the ordinary course of business.

It does not, as my friends opposite maintain, deny the parties access to the courts. For instance, clause 10 of Bill C-22 permits the Minister of Transport to approve the payment of compensation to the parties for expenses incurred in the ordinary course of business. When the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Canada, Mr. Allan Rock, was before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, he explained:

> There is nothing in the statute that by its terms prohibits a participant in that process from going to court and seeking, for example, judicial review of the minister's decision on the question of compensation.

Although the payments are within the discretion of the Minister of Transport, it is not an unfettered discretion. The parties retain the right to seek judicial review in the courts if they believe the minister exercised his discretion unfairly or improperly.

The parties also retain the right to challenge the constitutionality of Bill C-22 in the courts. The Financial Post, of September 29, 1994, reported that Mr. Ronald Slaught, a lawyer for the Pearson Development Consortium, said he intends to ask the court to rule the legislation unconstitutional. Apparently Mr. Slaught takes the view that Bill C-22 will not prevent his clients from access to the courts, notwithstanding the contention of some of my friends opposite. He intends to march into court as soon as this bill is passed, and he has said so publicly. This legislation does not deny access to the courts, although it does limit it.

The fundamental objective of the bill is to put all parties back into the position they were in immediately prior to the signing of the contract on October 7, 1993, hence the proposal for the reimbursement of reasonable expenses. Without these provisions, normal contract law would apply, and the courts, to the best of their abilities, would place the parties back into the positions they occupied immediately preceding the breach or cancellation.

In the case of the Pearson airport contract, the developers have argued in their statement of claim that the breach occurred on December 3, 1993, when the federal government announced it was cancelling the contract. Under contract law, the parties are suing, not only for reimbursement of expenses, but also for all profits they anticipated making for the 57-year lifespan of the contract, notwithstanding the fact that the contract would have had an effective life of only 57 days, from October 7 to December 3, 1993.

I ask honourable senators: Is this really justice? Is this a result that could be described as "in the national interest"? What would be the total value of such lawsuits and, thus, the potential liability of the federal government and Canadian taxpayers? The answer was provided by the Minister of Transport, Mr. Doug Young, in his remarks of last week in the other place. The answer was "$445 million".

In their statement of claim to the Ontario Court, General Division, dated September 16, 1994, the developers, identified as T1T2 Limited Partnership and 2922797 Canada Incorporated, are asking not only for their own damages, but also for —

> A declaration that the defendant shall save the plaintiffs harmless from and against all claims, demands, losses, costs, damages, actions, suits or proceedings brought against the plaintiffs by third parties...

In other words, they are demanding indemnification or reimbursement from the government for all third party claims. They are not merely asking for their own damages.

It is interesting to note that some of these third party claims are actually claims based on stated contracts that the individual partners claim they have with the partnership. As we know, the government invited all parties — not just a few, but all parties — who wish to be reimbursed for their legitimate business expenditures, excluding lobbyist fees and claims for lost profits, to submit their claims to Robert Wright for evaluation and, after passage of Bill C-22, for payment. Today, Mr. Wright has received claims totalling $445 million from the developers and various third parties, and he was only asking for their reasonable business expense claims. One can only imagine what the final bill might be during the course of a protracted court action.

That is the figure we know of — $445 million.

If Bill C-22 does not pass in the form in which it was originally introduced, the amount that the developers will be seeking in the courts, according to their own statements in the media, is $172 million for their own damages, and an order for indemnification and costs could add another $273 million, if not more, to the bill.

My friends opposite want to focus all the attention on their defence of legal principles, which is fine, but there is also a very harsh dollars-and-cents financial reality at play in this debate. That reality is that Canadian taxpayers will be asked to accept liability for almost one-half of $1 billion for a group of developers in return for a contract which, by their own admission in court documents, had a life span of 57 days.

This, honourable senators, is at a time when the government is under daily pressure from all sides and all parties to reduce the deficit.

• (1430)

Today the government is asking all Canadians to participate in a discussion about social policy. The economy, though improving, continues to leave far too many Canadians existing on the margins of our national life. We are under an obligation to individual Canadians to share our resources with them as fairly and as carefully as we possibly can.

In these circumstances, how can the government of Canada be indifferent in the face of claims of a group of companies which are seeking nearly $.5 billion from taxpayers on the basis of an agreement which was, itself, at substantial risk of cancellation?

The government has a fundamental responsibility to protect the interests of taxpayers and to govern in the national interest. The amendments advanced by the opposition, in our view, would have it do neither. Bill C-22, in its original form, places the parties back into the positions they occupied immediately prior to the signing of the contract, at the very time, again, that Mr. Chrétien warned that they were proceeding at their own risk.

Bill C-22, as amended, places the parties back into the positions they occupied on April 13, 1994 when the legislation was originally tabled. The amendments would confirm the existence of the contract and, I repeat, would allow the parties to sue all Canadian taxpayers through the federal government for almost $.5 billion in damages. It could completely negate Mr. Chrétien's warning of October 6, 1993, that the parties were proceeding at their own risk, as well as the political mandate that flowed from that statement and the subsequent election results.

Honourable senators, there is no doubt that Bill C-22 is an unusual piece of legislation; but, equally, there can be no doubt that the events leading to its introduction were even more unusual. A government having dissolved Parliament, facing diminishing prospects for re-election, handed control of the country's largest airport over to a private group of developers. This decision was taken notwithstanding the vehement opposition of the community involved in the largest city in Canada, and the clear warning from the man who was the main contender for the position of Prime Minister in another party in an election to be concluded in a mere 18 days.

We must remember that we are not just dealing with any old airport when we discuss this legislation. Pearson International Airport is the largest airport in Canada. Every year approximately 21 million people pass through its doors. It provides jobs, both directly and indirectly, to 57,000 people. The direct economic impact on the economy of Ontario is more than $4 billion annually. It is nothing less — and I think this is recognized by other senators — than an airport at the heart of our country's air transportation system; and it needs a lot of work.

This is the context within which this debate is taking place. This is what is at stake for the people of Canada and, of course, for the group of developers involved.

When Mr. Rock appeared before our Senate committee on July 4, 1994, he had no hesitation in admitting that the bill was unusual. He described it as "...an extraordinary statute in an unusual case." However, although a piece of legislation is extraordinary or unusual and, as some would argue, with no direct precedent, it does not follow that that piece of legislation is necessarily invalid.

It has been repeatedly made clear by senators on the other side, including Senators Beaudoin, Murray and Lynch-Staunton, that the strength and the depth of their opposition lies in the legality and the constitutionality of those clauses of the bill which deal with compensation. They have argued that those provisions do not conform with the Charter, the Bill of Rights, and the rule of law.

When Mr. Rock appeared before our committee, he explained how these considerations were taken into account before the legislation was introduced. As Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada, he satisfied himself "of the statutory requirements that the bill is valid in terms of constitutional requirements", and he so advised the government. He also explained what led him to conclude and certify that the bill did not conflict with the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Mr. Rock stated, without equivocation, that, in his opinion and in the opinion of his department, Bill C-22 met all statutory and constitutional requirements and that it was within the competence of Parliament to legislate in this manner.

In his opening remarks to the committee, Minister Rock said:

> From all of those perspectives, from the point of view of the power of the federal Parliament, of Parliament in relation to government, of Parliament in light of the Charter and the Bill of Rights, we concluded that Bill C-22 was constitutional and valid, and I have no hesitation in affirming that legal conclusion before this committee today.

Later, in response to a question from Senator Nolin, he said:

[Senator Fairbairn]

[Translation]

I do not have any doubts as to the legality of this bill.

[English]

There may be strong differences of opinion on the legal issues. I do not know, but members opposite may dislike and disagree with the decision, and with the bill. However, once again, the Minister of Justice has the fundamental responsibility to ensure that all legislation put forward by the government complies with the laws of Canada, and those laws, of course, include the Constitution. He, like his predecessors, is required to sign personally that each piece of legislation conforms to the Charter. He has available to him the advice of the Department of Justice which does have a recognized track record of reliability.

As Senator Stanbury described in his remarks during the third reading debate on Bill C-22, between 1982 and the end of 1993, 604 pieces of legislation received a Charter certificate. Only three were overturned by the Supreme Court. This represents a 99.5-per-cent success rate by not just the Department of Justice but successive ministers of justice. This is the record that my friends opposite may question but the facts speak for themselves, as set out by the courts.

• (1440)

During that same third reading debate, Senator Oliver argued that "the most notable deficiency in Mr. Rock's arguments" was the lack of a legislative precedent for Bill C-22. Where is the legislative precedent for the Senate's refusal to pass a piece of legislation on the grounds that there are constitutional questions, when those questions have been met with clear and unequivocal assurances of a Minister of Justice and an Attorney General of Canada?

Furthermore, where is the political precedent for Parliament refusing to allow a government to proceed with a piece of legislation that is a clear part of its election campaign commitments, particularly when there are high public expectations that the promise will be kept? The amendments made to Bill C-22 prevent the government from carrying out those commitments.

The government introduced Bill C-22 because it believed the legislation represented the best method of putting the Pearson airport agreement behind us, keeping foremost in mind the public interest and that commitment during the election. Today, more than five months later, the government still retains that view. In fact, the recent information about the potential costs to taxpayers if this bill does not pass only strengthens our conviction that Bill C-22 is necessary.

While I stress the public interest component of this discussion, I wish to leave no doubt whatsoever that the government has been very cognizant of the legal implications. This is an unusual piece of legislation, and because it is unusual it was subjected to rigorous examination before the Minister of Justice certified that it did conform to the Charter and the Bill of Rights. He was very clear. He told the committee that, in his view, the lawfulness or validity of the legislation is beyond challenge.

If, however, that is not the view of the developers, they will have an opportunity to test the legality of Bill C-22 in the courts, where such questions are normally decided. They will not have been denied access to the courts. In fact, as I have already explained, they have declared to the world that to the courts they will go if Bill C-22 is passed into law.

The issue before us is not access to the courts. Access has been limited; it has not been denied. The issue before us is not the constitutionality of Bill C-22. The courts, particularly the Supreme Court of Canada, have far more experience in applying the Charter. The issue before us is straightforward: Should the Pearson contract, surrounded by the difficulties that I have indicated, signed in the dying days of an election campaign by an administration in serious difficulty of losing its mandate, be cancelled? If the answer to that question is "yes", should it be cancelled in such a way as to prevent the parties from demanding that Canadian taxpayers pay almost half a billion dollars, when there is a perfectly legal way to do so, or do we remain indifferent to the taxpayers of Canada?

Our position is absolutely straightforward: In our view, Bill C-22 is legal. Bill C-22 is constitutional. It is in the public interest, and it flows out of a clear political mandate. If there are legal and constitutional questions which the parties wish to have addressed, let those questions be raised in the ordinary way — in the courts. The Senate of Canada is a legislative body, and not a court which performs judicial review. As legislators, we cannot act as judges, having clearly established our credentials, on both sides of this chamber, as advocates in the matter before us. Let us not transform the Senate, a political and legislative body, into a sort of final court of appeal for the individuals behind T1T2 Limited Partnership. Let them seek their day in court if that is their wish.

In conclusion, I urge this house to rethink its position carefully, and to lift the shadow which hangs over the future development of a first-class airport that serves Canada, Canadians and the world.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, anyone who followed this debate closely will realize, after hearing the government leader's plea, that it is really only a laundered version of what we have heard repeatedly from the Minister of Transport. Canadians can only be appalled at the government's complete disinterest in responding to the many serious and thoughtful arguments brought out by senators and witnesses, questioning the constitutionality of Bill C-22 during debate on the bill in this chamber and at hearings before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Simply put, the denial of access to the courts, the declaration that contracts are not only cancelled but have never even existed, and the absolute discretion given to the minister to determine what, if any, damages caused by the cancellation are owed to the aggrieved party, are provisions which no legislator has ever dared put before the Parliament of Canada. They go against one of the most fundamental principles on which this country was founded, a principle eloquently reconfirmed in the preamble to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which reads:

> Whereas Canada is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law...

The Senate sent Bill C-22, with much needed amendments, back to the House of Commons on the July 7. Three months later, it is as if nothing had happened. In his speech to the House of Commons on September 28, the Minister of Transport, and the government leader today, completely ignored the preoccupations of the majority in this place, except for very vague allusions.

Regrettably, the minister's argument against the Senate's position is particularly tortured with innuendo, distortions and fabricated impediments. Consider this statement, for instance. The minister said that these arrangements were entered into, as everyone knows, during the dying days of the last government. That is absolute nonsense.

The negotiations took three years to complete, and were given tacit approval in August 1993, with agreement by both sides to have formal ratification in October, following verification of the complex wording of the myriad legal texts.

If that formality is so reprehensible a few days before the election, why has the formality of another signature, by the same government, on the same day, confirming the P.E.I. fixed link contract, not been subject to the same belligerent bluster?

The minister also said that the agreements did not contain a cancellation clause. For once the minister is absolutely right, but alas, for the wrong reasons, as is the Leader of the Government today. By saying that, both are insinuating that this was a deliberate omission to allow the developers greater damages than would have been permitted by a cancellation clause.

• (1450)

The actual fact is that the Department of Transport does not require cancellation clauses in its ground leases. There is no cancellation clause in the Terminal 3 ground lease; there is no cancellation clause in the Vancouver Local Airport Authority ground lease; and there is no cancellation clause in the Vista Terminals Cargo ground lease at Pearson. Is it possible that his officials have not informed the minister of this practice of the Ministry of Transport not to have ground leases in its contracts? No doubt other departments are in the same position, or is the minister one of those who does not want to be confused with the facts, as he has already made up his mind?

The minister went on to say:

> This transaction is riddled with interference by lobbyists, favouritism, behind-the-scenes wheeling and dealing, manipulation of legitimate private interests and disregard for public service impartiality.

These are serious charges. They suggest improper, if not illegal, activities.

Yet, neither Robert Nixon, who was charged with assessing the agreements by the then Prime Minister Designate, nor the Minister of Transport, who gleefully embellishes on the Nixon report, offers one iota of proof for their claims. They are satisfied with doing irreparable harm to the reputation of hundreds of Canadians, not only in the private sector but in the public sector, who were actively involved in the negotiations and came from a number of departments, such as the Departments of Finance,

Treasury Board and, not the least, Transport. They are under a cloak of silence because of the complete disregard for the harm that irresponsible and unsubstantiated allegations can do. How his officials must enjoy their own minister dragging them down along with so many others wounded by political opportunists in the hope of distracting Canadians from the true impact of Bill C-22! The government owes these individuals at least an opportunity to state their case.

Surely, if the agreements came about as described by the Minister of Transport, then this is a matter for judgment by the courts or the cleansing scrutiny of a public inquiry. But the government refuses to support its charges. Why?

Can anyone in this chamber, in the other place, or anywhere else for that matter, find one shred of evidence that the Senate's stand on Bill C-22 is prompted by the financial interests of the parties prejudiced by it? How many times must I state that we have no interest in the outcome of the claims, any claims? How many times must I say that we do not support or condemn them; that we are unaware of and indifferent to their validity; and that we have no stake, either personal or political, in how any claim is assessed? Only an unbiased hearing before a third party can determine fairly what, if anything, is owed following cancellation of the agreements.

We do, however, respect the right of any Canadian to go to a third party in the case of failure of mutual agreement. We allow petty thieves their day in court; we allow child abusers their day in court; we allow serial murderers their day in court. All these people are allowed their day in court, even when the verdict may be obvious from the beginning.

Under the NAFTA, which the Liberal government signed without one comma being changed, it is provided that a citizen whose property is subject to expropriation by a country other than his own is entitled to the resolution of compensation claims by a court. The Liberals want to deny Canadians what they allow Americans and Mexicans. Why?

Honourable senators, the Minister of Transport said:

> I have to ask all colleagues in the House and Canadians if they think the Conservative majority in the other place is being responsible when it says it is not concerned about the consequences of its action as far as money goes...
>
> The bill for their defeat of Bill C-22 will be $445 million.
>
> They want $445 million on this last trip to their trough for their friends.

Honourable senators, whatever side they are on, are used to members of the House of Commons hurtling insults this way. My quoting these statements should in no way upset anyone who knows who is their author.

What does upset me, and what should upset all of us, is that here we have a minister of the Crown assuming that the judicial system is so flawed, its members so compliant and incompetent, that any claim brought to the courts would be awarded blindly and without question.

The minister shows near contempt for the courts when he says that if the Senate amendments are accepted, "...then it would be a matter for the courts to decide on legal interpretations and on argument how much the bill would be for Canadian taxpayers. I am not prepared to run that risk."

"I am not prepared to run that risk," says the minister of the Crown. Not only is Bill C-22 unprecedented, we now have a minister of the Crown, a colleague of the Minister of Justice, giving a vote of non-confidence to the Canadian court system. He does not want to run the risk of having the highly respected, independent Canadian judiciary resolve a dispute in which the Government of Canada is involved. Why?

He does not give an adequate explanation for this extraordinary position, so one is left to make his own suppositions.

Perhaps the government realizes that it may have no case after all. Perhaps it has realized that the agreements may not be so flawed after all. Perhaps it realizes that the taxpayers would actually benefit from them, particularly as the private sector was ready to risk over $700 million for a much needed development and improvement of a public asset.

By a refusal to entrust the matter to the courts, or by the repeated refusal to hold a public inquiry, what other conclusion can one bring forward? The minister is guilty of blatant contradictions. He tells us that the agreements are flawed, riddled with favouritism and against the public good, but that he does not trust the courts or anyone else except the Liberal caucus to rule on the validity of his assertions.

For some inexplicable reason, the government refuses to substantiate a serious allegation. It refuses a public inquiry. It refuses access to the courts. Why? It wants to be above the law.

• (1500)

There is an expression for this sort of attitude, honourable senators, "abuse of power". In 1979, the Law Society of Upper Canada presented a series of special lectures entitled "The Abuse of Power and the Role of an Independent Judicial System in its Regulation and Control". The then Honourable Mr. Justice Kenneth C. Mackay gave a lecture entitled "The Abuse of Power by a Political Majority". After listing many abuses at the federal and provincial levels, he concluded as follows:

> I have tried to show that an independent unfettered judiciary is one sure foundation upon which to erect the defences against executive and administrative abuses. The majority — the electorate — must somehow be made aware of this and so see to it that their representatives in Parliament reverse the trend towards depriving the courts of their power to prevent abuses which, if allowed to continue and multiply, will in the end destroy the human rights and fundamental freedoms of those who must bear the ultimate responsibility for them — the majority.

It would be very tempting for us at this stage to simply accept the message and get on with it, or even vote it down and put an end to it. To do the first would go against everything we have been saying since Bill C-22 was introduced in this place in June. To vote against it is premature, since there is no urgency to the bill, as we feel the government should be given at least one more opportunity to explain its constitutional position, which is in direct opposition to the convincing positions taken against Bill C-22 here and elsewhere.

When the Minister of Justice appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, he admitted, as has been said by the government leader, that no Canadian precedent for the bill existed. He tried to justify it by citing the War Damage Act, 1965, passed by the British Parliament. This was quickly found by Senator Oliver, for one, to have little if any relevancy to Bill C-22.

The arguments supporting the Senate amendments were never discussed in the House by government supporters. The message before us confirms this. They were not deemed worthy of even a passing reference. Contrast this with a lack of agreement in 1987 between the Senate and the House when the Patent Act was being debated, ironically also identified as Bill C-22. The messages from the House included explanations for its stand in opposition to that of the Senate. The Senate today is not even given the courtesy of that explanation.

We have been told by the Liberal side that the bill should become law and then any interested citizen can challenge it in court. That suggestion prompts two comments. First, can Parliament justify knowingly approving a bill the constitutionality of which has been put in such serious doubt? Surely the least Parliament can expect is a constitutional defence of Bill C-22 which, to date, has been disturbingly lacking. We urge the government to appear before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs and do exactly that. Second, clause 10(3) of Bill C-22 provides that if the minister's offer of compensation is not accepted within 30 days, then, simply put, that is the end of the process. The clause reads:

> No agreement may be entered into under this section after one month after the coming into force of this act.

In other words, the government is keen to have the bill passed, unchanged, knowing full well that it will be impossible to test its constitutional validity prior to the 30-day cut-off date.

This alone is a strong argument in favour of establishing the validity of the legislation even prior to its coming into force. There are precedents, by the way, for acts not coming into force until court proceedings regarding their validity have been completed. I believe clause 10(3) alone is reason enough to urge this course of action regarding Bill C-22.

In addition, as the government leader has reminded us, T1T2 Limited Partnership appeared in the General Division of the Ontario Court last month to ask for the appointment of an arbitration tribunal to assess the partnership's claims. The court has agreed to hear both sides, the partnership and the government, towards the end of November. The court action is the result of Bill C-22, so that the court, in effect, will be making a ruling which could have a serious impact on this bill.

While some have urged that Mr. Nixon be called before a Senate committee to shed some light on the confusion surrounding his report, we do not feel this is the appropriate time for the Senate to go down this road. Quite properly, people mentioned either directly or indirectly by Mr. Nixon would also want to be heard, and the committee would soon find itself in a full inquiry on the Pearson agreements. There is still time for the Senate to do this if it wishes, but not now. We do not want anything to distract us from our sole preoccupation, which is with the government's determination to trample on some fundamental right that Canadians have never had questioned before in such a crude way.

Allow me to repeat something I said here on July 7. I said:

> If he...

By "he", I was referring to the Minister of Justice —

> ...and his colleagues feel that certain claims should be limited, or not even considered, why did he not incorporate such terms in the Act? Denial of access to the courts would then not have been necessary. I can assure the government that had the bill before us been drafted to properly incorporate this approach, it is unlikely that we would be in the impasse that we are in now.

The government leader has suggested, as well, that a judicial review can take place after the fact. The point is that we want to take away the minister's discretion in establishing claims and have a judicial review at the beginning of the process, not at the end.

The Senate, as has been repeatedly stated over the years, does not exist to obstruct and delay indefinitely. It must be conscious at all times of the will of the elected representatives. This is particularly true of government policy supported by a majority of commoners. In this case, however, it is not the policy that we challenge — cancellation of the Pearson agreements — but the principle which is being violated — denial of access to the courts. It is as simple as that.

The message should therefore be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs in order to allow it to consider, amongst other things, whether it is necessary to propose further amendments to assure access to the courts and respect for due process. In addition, the committee should consider the ramifications of judicial proceedings which are scheduled for next month which, depending on their outcome, could enhance or diminish the urgency of the amendments to Bill C-22 which were passed in the Senate in July. Finally, but no less important, the committee should seek additional views on the constitutionality of Bill C-22 from those who do not agree with our position.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT—ADOPTED ON DIVISION

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): This being said, I would move, if it is appropriate at this stage, an amendment to the leader's motion to accept the message as follows:

> That the question, together with the Message from the House of Commons on the same subject, dated September 30, 1994 be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for consideration and report.

The Hon. the Speaker: In amendment, it is moved by Senator Lynch-Staunton, seconded by Senator Buchanan:

> That the question, together with the Message from the House of Commons on the same subject, dated September 30, 1994 be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for consideration and report.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I would like to talk about the amendment proposed by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton to the motion of the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate.

I would not want to repeat the speech I delivered, competently I hope, on July 7. My views are well known and they are printed in the Hansard. On that day I attempted, in every possible way, to convince my colleagues to call witnesses. Why?

First, because I did not think it was wise to have a royal commission or a huge commission of inquiry which, as we very well know, would cost a fortune and would only postpone a decision which has to be made.

I must, once more, thank Senator Murray who was kind enough to second my two amendments. The first one asked that the whole thing be referred to the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs who would then invite Mr. Nixon. Having reread our proceedings and listened carefully to Senator Lynch-Staunton, I proposed the following day that instead of referring the bill to the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, it be referred to the Committee on Transport and Communications. This is what happened.

Since then, I have received a number of letters. I was very active in this debate, but you know that when you take the floor in the house you invite comments. People phone you or write to you, to voice their agreement or their disagreement. This is what happened over the summer.

Now that time has passed, I think I should repeat, for the record, what is Pearson airport? This will answer the questions of those who asked: Who are these wealthy patrons who are willing to risk $700 million to develop Pearson airport? You are right, it is extraordinary that people would be willing to risk $700 million. Let us look, if you will, at Pearson airport with Canadian or North American eyes.

It is the main air transport facility in Canada, and the main gateway linking our country to the rest of the world. We are aware of all the bickering between Montreal and Toronto. We are now forced to recognize that we Quebecers are the only ones to blame for not having welcomed, during the post-war era, enough immigrants who are responsible for the economic "boom" which occurred in Toronto and made it the biggest airport in the country.

A third of all air passenger traffic in Canada, or 20 million passengers, and 40 per cent of the air cargo traffic in Canada, go through this airport every year. These figures are very impressive, honourable senators, especially when you think about those rich people who want to invest $700 million!

There are 325,000 aircraft movements at this airport every year. I can tell you that the people in Montreal really appreciate this! If we could only have half of these movements at Mirabel, we would be quite pleased!

It is used by more than 60 airlines providing connections with almost 300 locations in 60 foreign countries. I wish Toronto senators would speak so warmly of their own airport! This is great progress! Toronto airport is huge!

As a Canadian and as a Montrealer, I am proud to sing the praises of this airport, which is also the main hub for domestic airlines. In 1991-92, it was the fourth largest entry point in North America. This is no small airport! Those who want to risk $700 million may do it in this 57-year contract of the century!

Pearson airport and all its related industries generate — listen to this — more than $1.9 billion a year in salaries and wages, honourable senators. They generate $4 billion in direct revenues for local businesses. Close to 34,000 direct jobs are created by the public businesses and agencies located at the airport or related to it. Of this number, 15,000 are at the airport location itself.

Therefore, I tried to look at the issue, as an independent, as we are supposed to do in the Senate. I do not know how long things will stay this way, but I think that it is our role as senators. I am not accountable to the House of Commons. I respect the members of the other place. They have done their job, and now we have to do ours. We have to examine very carefully the bills that the House of Commons would like us to study as quickly as possible. That is the role of the Senate. We have to take all the time we need to make a thorough analysis of the matters before us and to determine what is in the best interests of Canadians.

It is a difficult task. Sometimes it looks like I am on the government side and sometimes it looks like I am criticizing the government. That is inevitable when dealing with such an important bill. Some of the things it contains are excellent while others are less so.

Since a number of senators had questioned Mr. Nixon's integrity, I suggested in July that my colleagues read the report, which I distributed last summer, and which is only about 20 pages long. It is on that basis that caustic criticisms have been levelled at him, saying that he had been almost dishonest in what he had done, said or implied.

I could not believe that man was dishonest. I know him, as I said earlier, to be an honest man. Besides, his daughter, I think, chairs the caucus of the Liberal Party of Canada, of which I am no longer a member. She is very capable. We cannot attack people like that! He did his duty. The Prime Minister had asked him to write a report on that matter. This is a 19- or 20-page paper. I distributed many copies of it this summer.

When we want to have an intelligent debate, we have to have a starting point, so we start with the papers. I read and reread the report. I was so disturbed that I felt we had to hear that man. I suggested that the Senate not proceed immediately but refer the matter to our Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, intelligently chaired by Senator Beaudoin. My suggestion was turned down.

I made the suggestion on the following day, after I held up my colleagues for 24 hours. I apologize once more. I may do it again in the future, but not very often, believe me. I asked that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I was told that it should be referred instead to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

That was an opportunity not to be missed. I am not so proud as to think everything I say is the definitive truth. I spent the night thinking it over, and concluded that it made sense to refer our work to the Committee on Transport and Communications. But it did not work.

The Senate then took its responsibilities. Amendments were passed, and the bill sent back to the House of Commons. The House did not see fit to accept our amendments, but that is their problem.

What shall we do now? I still think the motion of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition comes close to my way of thinking. It does not mean I support it, but it does come close, because I want to know more about the whole issue. This is not inconsistent with my voting, previously, with the government. At that time I was voting on final amendments and now I want to know more about this issue.

If the Senate concurs with the motion of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, I think there will be a debate. I will then have another opportunity to ask that Mr. Nixon be heard. Each time, we learn something more! This time, I would also ask that Mr. Wright be called as a witness. If we really want to have more information, then these two witnesses should appear.

I would wish for the latter, that is Mr. Wright, to be called first. And the last shall be first. Perhaps we will not have to call Mr. Nixon.

I am in the delicate position where I almost have to say that I want the debate to continue. I will not be intimidated by the House of Commons. I respect them. They did their job. But whether they have the majority or not, they should not expect me to be a rubber stamp.

[English]

• (1520)

We are not here to rubber-stamp proposed legislation; we are here to do a job. Our job is to scrutinize all relevant documents. I see a new senator here in the chamber who, formerly, was an elected official. Before being called to the Senate, such people were very busy trying to ensure that they were elected and re-elected, by attending all-day functions at the behest of the electorate, and performing a multiplicity of other tasks that they would sometimes prefer not to attend to, but which they felt obliged to do because they were seeking to be elected.

Senators do not have that obligation, although I still perform such duties. Our job is to study and reflect on proposed legislation.

My consent to support this motion would be in the spirit that, although I believe Mr. Wright and Mr. Nixon should be called before our committee, I cannot dictate who should be the witnesses.

Why would this bill be sent back to the committee? Is it so that witnesses can have another opportunity to speak to the legality of this measure, the constitutionality of it, as if the other issues do not exist? I do not think that would be fair. The government must resolve this matter. The people of Toronto need to know what will happen to this airport.

I read the contract. It is not something you like to do on a weekend, I will tell you. I read not only the Nixon report, I read the contract.

[Translation]

Senator Nolin: It is more than 20 pages!

Senator Prud'homme: As my friend, Senator Nolin, said, it is more than 20 pages! You know, it is tedious to see who will get the restaurants, and so on! It is our job.

[English]

That is our duty. That is exactly why some of us are sent here.

I was troubled by what I read in some of the documents. I will not repeat what I said in July. I know that the government and the people of Toronto are eager to proceed with the last big project of the century in this country, and that is what we must be most concerned about. It would be the greatest and the last mega-project; the richest contract; and there exists the possibility of many people becoming rich.

If some people can make money from it, honestly, directly, up front, why not? Somebody in our society, if they work, if they use their brains and intelligence, might make some money on this. Someone is trying to build the future. Torontonians want to go ahead. We cannot start by saying we should have a national inquiry into this matter because I do not believe that would be in the interests of Canadians, and it would certainly not be in the interests of Torontonians first, Ontarians second, and of all Canadians third.

Senator Lynch-Staunton made a speech to which I listened carefully today, as I always do. I must admit to the honourable gentleman, "I would be very concerned".

[Translation]

— What we, in Quebec, call "retroactive laws". What some "real liberals" call immoral, retroactive laws.

Senators Roux, Hébert and others at the time, and myself, recall that Mr. Maurice Duplessis had passed retroactive legislation against a labour leader. I must say that passing legislation today to make illegal something that happened yesterday is very disturbing. We cannot accept that in our society. However, it is an argument that I have heard often.

There were some warnings. I was not a candidate for the first time in 30 years, but I still participated from a distance, and I looked at what was going on. There were solemn warnings by the government that if you sign this bill, the answer will be "no".

[English]

I suggest that if you cannot take my word for it, you should read the testimony of a very fine gentleman in the Senate, like me an independent, the Honourable Senator Pitfield. Senator Pitfield may not be speaking as loudly as I speak, but any time he does, if I am absent, I read what he had to say because I know of his experience. He was very involved in public administration.

I suggest that senators and others who wish to be enlightened should read Senator Pitfield's comments which were made in July, and which are recorded at page 832 in the Debates of the Senate. In Senator Pitfield's long-time experience with prime ministers, especially Prime Minister Trudeau, many contracts are awarded at the last minute.

I know our Speaker is about to indicate that my time is up, and I will not abuse the house by asking for permission to continue. The question to send this bill back to committee must eventually be registered.

If I were to vote in favour of this motion, it is because I would expect and hope — and I will participate even though I am not a member of the committee — that a supplementary witness will be called. Mr. Wright should be the first witness. His name has been mentioned today, so he is now directly involved. He became involved after Mr. Nixon had prepared his report. If the committee sees fit, Mr. Wright should be called as a witness.

If that motion is carried, the debate will continue and we may come to know more. If the government feels that we were in error, they can always prorogue this Thirty-fifth Parliament, and start a new session. Then the bill will die on the Order Paper, and they can present a new bill which will take into consideration all the preoccupations of the honourable senators on this side, and the intentions of the honourable senators on the other side.

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 96(4), I move that the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be permitted to meet today while the Senate is sitting.

As honourable senators know, the committee meeting was called for three o'clock or, alternatively, when the Senate rose. Some members of the committee have other meetings which they must attend at 3:30, so we will shortly lose our quorum, and there are a number of items on the agenda which we wished to pursue.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

The Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we would agree with Senator Oliver's request, but we should treat it as a request, and not a motion. A question on a motion is already before the house and we cannot entertain another one at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Then, on the topic before the house, if there are no further speakers, I will put the question on the motion in amendment as moved by Senator Lynch-Staunton.

It is moved in amendment by the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Buchanan:

> That the question, together with the Message from the House of Commons on the same subject, dated September 30, 1994, be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for consideration and report.

Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: I hear some rather strong voices. Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

• (1530)

The Hon. the Speaker: Will all those honourable senators who are opposed to the motion please say "nay".

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, can we agree to do this on division? We would be prepared to do that. I can count, too.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It is important to have a strong membership, not a strong voice.

Senator Fairbairn: We are trying.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senators, is it agreed that the motion in amendment be adopted on division?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion in amendment of Senator Lynch-Staunton adopted, on division.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Government Notices of Motion:

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, now that we know what the disposition of Bill C-22 will be, I should like to acquaint the house with my proposed course of action for the next period of time.

As honourable senators know, the House of Commons will not be sitting next week, that being the parliamentary recess. It is my hope that, in future, we can always follow that schedule; that is, that we do not sit during the weeks that the House of Commons is not sitting. In this case we can follow that schedule, so the Senate will not sit next week.

After that, we expect to receive a number of bills. Today we received Bill C-42, and there is every possibility that, in the week after the recess, we will receive Bills C-49 and C-51 from the House of Commons. On that basis, we could come back on the Tuesday, October 25, and have some business to deal with.

I would however request, and I think I have the agreement of my colleague across the way, that committees sit during that week. In other words, I would, once again, ask that the week of October 17 be "Committee Week". We tried to do that once before and it worked out very well. It gave committees an opportunity to do their work without having to ask the Senate for permission to sit while the Senate is sitting.

With the understanding that all committees will attempt to work during the week of October 17, I believe we can agree to adjourn until October 25. In particular, if the committee to which Bill C-22 will be referred could start its work on October 18, our side would have witnesses ready at that time.

If that is agreeable to honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 25, 1994, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

There will be, of course, the ever-present proviso that, if things change, we may be called back.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I graciously thank you for your indulgence.

I rise to speak on a question of privilege upon which I will be asking His Honour, the Speaker of the Senate, to rule on a prima facie case of privilege. If His Honour finds a prima facie breach, I am prepared to move that the matter be referred to the appropriate Senate committee for consideration and report.

I believe that the corporate and collective privileges of the Senate have been breached in my circumstances and that, if left unchallenged, could compromise parliamentary activity and all members of Parliament by deflecting any member of Parliament from fulfilling parliamentary duties and functions.

The breaches occurred in the conduct of two lawsuits in civil proceedings and motion hearings in which I am the plaintiff. These breaches may broadly be classified in two areas.

The first area of breach is the compulsion by the Ontario Court General Division of a senator's attendance in court on Senate sitting days, including during actual Senate sittings. These forced attendances were both as a witness in cross-examination and as a self-representing litigant.

The second area of breach is the compulsion by the Ontario Court General Division of service, by facsimile transmission, of any court documents and processes that require personal service in the precincts of Parliament without leave of the Speaker of the Senate of Canada.

The parliamentary privileges held by senators and members of Parliament are conferred by section 18 of the Constitution Act, 1867. That these privileges are a part of the general and public law of the country is conferred by sections 4 and 5 of the Parliament of Canada Act.

The court has repeatedly and systematically insisted on my attendance at court on Senate sitting days, and even during actual Senate sittings. The honourable justice previously having set down, by mutual agreement, a motion hearing date for Monday, June 13, 1994, a non-Senate sitting day, the honourable justice unilaterally cancelled that date. No reasons were given. He unilaterally set a new court date of Tuesday, June 14, 1994, a Senate sitting day, ignoring my request that the date to be set not be a Senate sitting day.

On Tuesday, June 14, 1994, when I appeared before the honourable justice, I attempted to raise the issue of parliamentary privilege and a senator's right to attend the Senate, where I was scheduled to speak to an item on the Order Paper that very afternoon. The honourable justice refused to hear my submissions on parliamentary privilege. He proceeded with the hearing.

Again, I asked the honourable justice to adjourn the hearing because that day, Tuesday, June 14, 1994, was a Senate sitting day and my presence was required in the Senate. The honourable justice refused the adjournment, continued the hearing, and thus caused me to miss the Senate sitting that afternoon. During the hearing, I repeatedly rose and reminded the honourable justice that my presence before him that day was not proper.

Honourable senators, it is a time-tested and centuries-old privilege that Parliament cannot function without the attendance of its members. The right of the Senate to its members' attendance and service, and the right of a member to attend the Senate sittings, is well known and uncontroverted. The absolute privilege of attendance at Parliament is the first and oldest privilege, and an immunity of Parliament.

• (1540)

The second area of breach is in the privilege of the prohibition of service of court process within the precincts of Parliament. I have been forced by the court to accept personal service by fax in the precincts of Parliament, in my Senate office.

Honourable senators, there are now three courts orders permitting service by defendant counsel in the precincts of the Senate, and one court order permitting defendant counsel to schedule court matters on Senate sitting days. These several court orders were all made and written by the same honourable justice. That honourable justice is the same one who caused me to attend before him on a Senate sitting day, June 14, 1994. Though the Senate may be in recess for numerous days and weeks, in every instance the court demanded my attendance on Senate sitting days.

I have raised what I believe to be clear, serious and continuing breaches of parliamentary privilege, continuing by virtue of the honourable justice's court orders. There have been a number of other incidents of breach which I have not described, but I will do so later. The two areas I have raised are the most serious and the most blatant.

The history of these matters is long. The details are numerous and complex. It is my intention to raise this history and details at the appropriate time in the process, as it is my intention to cite the legal, constitutional and historical precedents at the appropriate time in the process.

Today, I wish to request that these incidents and actions of the court and of the honourable justice be examined and considered by the Senate of Canada. Honourable senators, I ask for your support, and I ask that the honourable Senate confirm its own most honourable privileges.

Furthermore, I ask that His Honour, the Speaker of the Senate of Canada, rule on a prima facie case of breach of privilege. I am prepared to move the necessary motion referring the matter to the appropriate committee of the Senate for consideration and report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, not being acquainted with the law, nor being a complete master of our rules and our interpretation of our rules, it would be useful if I were given some time to consult and reflect, to try to bring what would be a reasonable response to the honourable senator's request.

If that is agreed to by honourable senators, that is the route I intend to follow.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, before we adjourn today, and before a decision is made on Senator Cools' question of privilege, I should like to add my words of support to the senator's stated request by quoting from the usual ceremony in the Senate as new senators are sworn in here being summoned by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II who, in her greetings to us in the Senate, states in part that:

> AND WE do command you that all difficulties and excuses whatsoever laying aside, you be and appear, for the purposes aforesaid, in the Senate of Canada at all times whensoever and wheresoever our Parliament may be in Canada convoked and holden, and this you are in no wise to omit.

This is proof that, when the Senate is sitting, we are commanded to be present. This takes precedence over any request or command by any judge anywhere in Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we agreed to a "short day" today in order that committees could sit. A number of committees have been scheduled to sit at 3:15 p.m. Is there agreement that all other matters stand?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 25, 1994, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 25, 1994

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

EUTHANASIA AND ASSISTED SUICIDE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Leave having been given to proceed to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Joan Neiman, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(a), moved:

> That the Special Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide have power to sit at 2:15 p.m. today, Tuesday, October 25, 1994, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received a certificate from the Registrar General of Canada showing that Landon Pearson has been summoned to the Senate:

INTRODUCTION

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there was a senator without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senator was introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons; took the oath prescribed by law, which was administered by the Clerk; and was seated:

Hon. Landon Pearson, of Ottawa, Ontario, introduced between the Honourable Joyce Fairbairn and the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senator named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the Constitution Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on behalf of this side of the house, I am delighted and proud to welcome Senator Landon Pearson to this chamber.

In addition to being a citizen of our country, Senator Pearson has always been a citizen of the world and brings an extensive background of varied experience to our deliberations.

• (1410)

Senator Pearson also has a rich background in the field of children's rights. She has been for many years a tireless advocate for the rights of children and child development. In 1979 she served as vice-chairperson of the Canadian Commission for the International Year of the Child. Between 1984 and 1990, she was the president and chairperson of the Canadian Council on Children and Youth.

Senator Pearson has also worked with children's groups around the world, including France, Mexico, and India. She is the author of "Children of Glasnost", a report on the schooling system in the former Soviet Union. She brings to this chamber a strong perspective on a very important issue.

Senator Pearson, I congratulate you on your appointment. All of us sincerely look forward to working with you.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on behalf of colleagues on this side of the chamber, I am pleased to join with the Leader of the Government in the Senate and her colleagues in welcoming Senator Pearson among us.

I should like to congratulate the government for having convinced Senator Pearson to sit in this place and share with us her special expertise, knowledge and skills in an area which is of more than passing interest to all of us and of which, because of her presence, we will become more aware.

In the foreword to her book, Senator Pearson made a number of acknowledgements. She ended by thanking her husband, who put up with the "...prolonged disruption of our domestic environment with humour, and always made me feel that I was engaged in a true endeavour." I want to assure the senator and her family that any future disruption of their domestic environment will certainly not be caused by this side of the house. Rather, I trust our deliberations will be such that she will soon find herself engaged in another true endeavour.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, briefly, I do not want to miss this opportunity to welcome Mrs. Pearson to the Senate warmly and heartily. I absolutely want to join with Senator Fairbairn and Senator Lynch-Staunton to personally welcome you most cordially. As you know, I was associated for a long time with your father-in-law's family, and I had the honour to assist him as the young chairman of the student association, back in 1958, when he ran for the Liberal leadership. I met you later.

[English]

I strongly believe that the Senate is getting closer and closer to what I have always thought it should be; that is, a chamber composed of people who are independent minded and ready to serve Canada. I think you will serve this country extremely well. I am honoured to be one of your colleagues.

Welcome, Senator Pearson.

[Translation]

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

COURT CHALLENGES PROGRAM

REINSTATEMENT—CONGRATULATIONS TO THE GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, in November 1992, I urged certain ministers of the government of the day to maintain the Court Challenges Program. On the first of December of the same year, I gave notice to the Senate that I would raise the issue of the problems that would be created if that program were to be dropped. On December 10, speaking to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, I urged him to re-establish at least the linguistic part of the Court Challenges Program. The reinstatement of the Court Challenges Program was made public yesterday by the Chrétien government. As much as I happen to criticize the government for its bad decisions or its inaction, I wish today to congratulate the government for a judicious and necessary decision. On behalf of the minorities concerned with the program, I thank the government.

[English]

FORUM FOR YOUNG CANADIANS

APPOINTMENT OF MARK AUDCENT AS CHAIR OF THE BOARD

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I expect that most of you are familiar with the work of the Forum for Young Canadians. That forum is sponsored by a foundation named the Foundation for the Study of Processes of Government in Canada.

The honourary chairs of the foundation are the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc, Speaker of the Senate, and the Honourable Gilbert Parent, Speaker of the House of Commons.

Earlier this month, on October 1, another connection was established between the Senate of Canada and the Forum for Young Canadians. That was the appointment of Mr. Mark Audcent — barrister, solicitor, Assistant Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel to the Senate — as the chair of the board of the foundation.

I am a trustee of this organization, representing the province of Nova Scotia. One of the high points of my year is when we meet to examine the nominations of those students from high schools in Nova Scotia who wish to participate in the work of the forum.

Four groups of high school students are selected in each province annually. They come to Ottawa and participate in a well-organized program, a program which has the cooperation of this house, the other place, and all the departments of the executive government of Canada. It is a wonderful operation. The students come back glowing with what they have learned about Canada, and with a very much improved impression of what goes on here in Ottawa.

Mr. Audcent's appointment as the chair of the board comes in recognition, I expect, of his prolonged and dedicated participation in the work of the forum. It is an appointment that the Senate should applaud. The fact that the contribution of one of those who serves this house has been recognized in this way is a source of pleasure to all senators.

PARLIAMENTARY SPOUSES ASSOCIATION

ANNUAL CHILDREN'S BOOK SHOW

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to draw to your attention an activity that occurs every year on Parliament Hill, and yet receives little recognition. I refer to the efforts of the Parliamentary Spouses Association to organize an annual book show for young children to promote reading and literacy.

The Parliamentary Spouses Association has held this event for eight years now. They spend a day with young school children from the Ottawa area — some 130 to 150 of them, from both English and French classes. They meet in Room 200 of the West Block, and the parliamentary spouses supply entertainment, including readings for the children. Everyone goes home with a book. The children visit Parliament Hill and see where we work.

A week ago I was privileged to participate in this annual event, and I simply want to express on the record my appreciation for the Parliamentary Spouses Association and the work they do in this regard.

TRANSPORT

PORT OF SAINT JOHN—IMPORTANCE OF RAIL INFRASTRUCTURE

Hon. Erminie Cohen: Honourable senators, the business and traffic of the Port of Saint John in my city has been extremely busy of late. The port set a record last year for total port throughput by dealing with just under 20 million tonnes of cargo over a 12-month period. As well, total traffic is up 11 per cent over the same period from last year.

• (1420)

Last week a Canadian Press story from Halifax referred to a statement by a senior official from CP Rail that the city and Port of Saint John would be negatively affected by his company's bid to take over the operation of the Atlantic section of the CN rail line.

At a time when the Port of Saint John is very active, we must not lose our rail infrastructure. Many businesses and hundreds of jobs depend upon it. I urge the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate to ensure that the rail links to and from the Port of Saint John are a priority in any discussions that the government might have with CP Rail in this regard.

[Translation]

PIERRE ELLIOTT TRUDEAU

CONGRATULATIONS ON THE OCCASION OF HIS 75TH BIRTHDAY

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, while we were away, a very important event for Canadians, and especially for us parliamentarians, took place.

I would not want to forgo this opportunity to mention that very recently, a former prime minister of Canada — whom I knew as leader of the Liberal Party for 19 years — celebrated his 75th birthday, as you know.

I am talking about the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau who turned 75 a few days ago. Even as an independent senator, I had to mention this event.

[English]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

CANADA'S FOREIGN POLICY

MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—EXTENSION OF DATE FOR FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons informing the Senate that the date for the final report of the Special Joint Committee Reviewing Canada's Foreign Policy has been extended to November 15, 1994.

CANADA PETROLEUM RESOURCES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Colin Kenny, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, presented the following report:

Tuesday, October 25, 1994

The Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources has the honour to present its

SIXTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-25, An Act to amend the Canada Petroleum Resources Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, October 4, 1994, examined the said Bill and has agreed to report the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

COLIN KENNY
Deputy Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Kenny: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(b), I move that this bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, October 26, 1994, at 1:30 p.m. in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA'S FOREIGN POLICY

NOTICE OF MOTION TO EXTEND DATE OF PRESENTATION OF FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, 26th October 26, 1994, I will move:

> That notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Wednesday, March 23, 1994, the date for the final report of the Special Joint Committee on Reviewing Canada's Foreign Policy be extended to Tuesday, November 15, 1994; and
>
> That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-49, to amend the Department of Agriculture Act and to amend or repeal certain other acts.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Molgat, bill placed on Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday, October 27, 1994.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

NINETY-SECOND CONFERENCE, COPENHAGEN, DENMARK—REPORT TABLED

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Ninety-second Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference held in Copenhagen, Denmark from September 12 to 17, 1994 in both official languages.

• (1430)

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO CONTINUE SPECIAL STUDY OF NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT REVIEW COMMISSION

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, October 26, 1994, I will move:

> That notwithstanding its order of reference of March 17, 1994, the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to continue its special study on the report of the National Transportation Act Review Commission, entitled Competition in Transportation, Policy and Legislation in Review, tabled in the Senate on March 23, 1993 (Sessional Paper No. 323-912), and other matters relating to transportation; and
>
> That the Committee present its report no later than June 30, 1995.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Raynell Andreychuk, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(a), moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, might I ask why it is that this committee needs to sit at four o'clock today while the Senate is sitting? We set all of last week aside so that committees could sit during that time. Now the Senate is being asked to grant permission for a committee to sit while the Senate is sitting. I would like to know why that is necessary.

Senator Andreychuk: In June, we had hoped to have an understanding of how we might proceed with the aboriginal issues contained in the order of reference currently before our committee. However, at that time there was a question as to whether or not the process was acceptable to all members, and it became necessary to regroup when the Senate was called back. We did agree to a process, but felt that we needed to give fair opportunity to the witnesses, representatives of the aboriginal peoples who will be attending to testify before us. Today was the earliest possible date when that could happen.

I might point out to honourable senators that there is very little time on the agenda for our committee. This is a compromise which accommodates the concerns of certain members of my committee, which is fair to those aboriginal peoples who will be appearing before us, and which moves the agenda along as quickly as possible. Thus, we are asking leave of the Senate to hold this meeting of the committee.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, it has normally been the practice in the Senate to agree to give leave if there are witnesses appearing before a committee. We are aware that if you schedule witnesses from out of town, it does become awkward, but today we are being asked to give permission purely to accommodate the business of the committee. Frankly, I have great reservations about doing that.

In view of the hour, and in view of the business that is before us on the Order Paper, it is my guess that we will probably be finished by four o'clock, and the question will become academic. However, I raise the point because it is not a good practice for committees to organize meetings while the Senate is sitting merely to conduct the business of the committee. If they are hearing witnesses and there is a problem, then that is different. If it is purely to conduct the business of the committee, they should organize themselves to do their work when the Senate is not sitting, and when they have time available.

Senator Andreychuk: I am sure that admonition is for all committees and not just mine, and I will accept it in that spirit.

I am asking for leave today, after having looked at the agenda of this committee and having tried to find some other time. As you are aware, the hours available for sittings of committees are compressed into a few days. I have stated very strenuously that I would be prepared to sit at other times. Unfortunately, however, it is difficult to get a quorum.

The senators who are members of our committee are people who must travel great distances. Our clerk advised me that some of the members could be available today. A compromise was reached due to the lightness of the Senate's agenda today. It was not intended to be a precedent-setting event.

Senator Molgat: My comments are not aimed at the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples. In fact, I had the same sort of discussion this morning with one of my colleagues on this side of the house with regard to another committee. My comments are not addressed to one committee, but are in the interests of the Senate itself.

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, how many times must this sort of thing happen before it becomes a tradition? I would not like to see this practice become a tradition.

I understand there are informal discussions under way with respect to committee reform, and some streamlining of the committee structure. It is important that those discussions continue, and that we make the changes necessary so that the committee work is handled in a more efficient manner than is now the case. Presently, we seem to have a great deal of difficulty finding time slots for all the various committees, and I do not understand why that is. We have not had a great deal of work referred to us from the House of Commons, and most of what has come over just moved right through, because it was Tory-drafted legislation.

Why can we not have committee meetings scheduled for a time when the Senate is not sitting? I am not directing my comments to any particular committee. I am speaking of committees chaired by members of both sides of this chamber. In the last year, we have had more requests for leave for committees to sit than in my long four years here.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Andreychuk, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stratton, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(a):

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

NINETY-SECOND CONFERENCE, COPENHAGEN, DENMARK—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday, October 27, 1994, I will draw the attention of the Senate to the Ninety-second Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference held in Copenhagen from September 12 to 17, 1994.

PROPOSALS FOR SOCIAL REFORM

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, October 27, 1994, I will call the attention of the Senate to the efficiency in the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy's recent Proposals for Social Reform.

HEALTH

PROTECTION OF CONSCIENCE IN MEDICAL PROCEDURES—PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I place in the hands of the Clerk a petition expressing pleas identical to those first raised in this chamber by myself on March 17 last, that Parliament protect health care workers with regard to freedom of conscience in the workplace.

This list of petitioners contains the signatures of 628 persons from Barry's Bay, Ontario, and other places in Ontario.

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS ACT

PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition from 26 petitioners, which petitioners humbly pray that this honourable house be pleased to remove the exemption for tobacco under the Hazardous Products Act. This petition is in addition to several others that I have tabled in this house.

QUESTION PERIOD

FORESTRY

CLAYOQUOT SOUND—GRANT BY CIDA TO PROTEST GROUP

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. An article in today's Vancouver Sun states that the Canadian International Development Agency, CIDA, has granted $300,000 to an organization that is leading a campaign against clear-cut logging in Clayoquot Sound, both at home and abroad. Is the Leader of the Government in the Senate aware of this grant?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): No, I am not, Senator St. Germain. Perhaps you would let me have a copy of the story to which you refer, and I will look into the matter as quickly as I can.

• (1440)

Senator St. Germain: Honourable senators, these organizations are undermining the entire industry. At the present time the province of British Columbia is working aggressively on a forestry package which deals with the environment, the industry, the jobs and with the markets abroad.

While I have never been a great supporter of the present government in British Columbia, honourable senators, I feel it is important that we not use federal funding to work against provincial initiatives. The granting of these funds flies in the face of attempts to improve relations between the federal and provincial governments.

Thus, will the Leader of the Government in the Senate determine exactly what is happening in this regard as quickly as possible, and report back to the Senate?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I shall look into the matter as quickly as possible.

THE SENATE

REMARKS BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Hon. Erminie J. Cohen: Honourable senators, I rise to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As senators are aware, I raised the issue of respect on October 5 of this year; specifically, respect for parliamentarians, respect for our institutions and respect for the principles on which this country was founded.

I ask the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate whether, in fact, she has raised this issue in cabinet, and if so, will she inform this chamber of the result of those discussions?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank my friend for her question. Obviously, I am not at liberty to indicate any discussions which go on in cabinet.

However, I can tell my honourable friends that, as far as the Prime Minister and my colleagues are concerned, they hold this chamber in the highest respect, as do I. I hope that we can continue the relationships we have enjoyed in the past year, not just with each other but also with the other place. I shall dedicate myself to continuing in that vein to the very best of my ability.

FINANCE

FISCAL PROGRAM UPDATE—POSSIBILITY OF TAX INCREASES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, in my opinion, there is something fishy about the recent fiscal update from the Minister of Finance.

[Translation]

The minister says that our gross domestic product will be more than $5 billion next year, unlike what he forecast last February. He also says that revenues will drop by $200 million. This does not make sense to me.

We are also told that another 100,000 workers will contribute to the Unemployment Insurance Fund, so I think we could expect the fund to accumulate additional revenue. No, honourable senators, the amount remains the same.

[English]

Perhaps the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate would explain how this year's larger tax base will result in less revenue? Can she assure us that Canadians are not being set up for tax hikes in the next budget?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank the Honourable Senator Simard for his question. I believe senators on both sides of the house are having difficulty with the sound system today. Although I did not hear the beginning of the honourable senator's question, I did hear the end of it.

As my colleague knows, given his background, I cannot forecast what may or may not be included in the budget to be brought forward in February. I can only indicate to him that both the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have stated on a number of occasions that, in order to get the finances of this country in shape, they will look at reducing expenditures rather than deal with an increase in taxes.

As my friend will know, the Minister of Finance began last week what is an almost unprecedented exercise in opening up the budget process by putting forward a framework within which to ask people from across the country, as well as parliamentarians, to help the government with ideas on fashioning its programs. The purpose of the exercise is to meet the objective of reducing the deficit to 3 per cent of GDP by 1997.

There has been discussion in some quarters that that is a very modest plan or objective. I can assure my honourable friends that it will be a difficult objective to reach. Any assistance that my honourable friends can give to the process, which is now on track, would be very much appreciated.

Senator Simard: Honourable senators, in light of the minister's remarks, perhaps she would verify the transcript of last week's fiscal update by the Minister of Finance, and then obtain from him some answers to my questions.

While she is doing that, perhaps she can verify the rumours we are hearing about a possible gas tax, a possible tax on CBC services, and others. Keep in mind that last year, in an interview with the Financial Post, Mr. Martin said that this country cannot afford any new taxes. If that sentiment was right a year ago, why is it wrong today?

DUPLICATION OF PROGRAMS WITH PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, before I resume my seat, the minister has referred to this great exercise of asking the Canadian people about how to do this and that, how to reform social programs, and whether they want new taxes. Can she tell us whether work has started with the provincial governments with a view to reducing the duplication in programs by two or three levels of government? Surely there are savings there.

Based on her knowledge and experience of the attitude of Canadians with respect to taxation, that they never want to be taxed, that they want others to make the sacrifices while they keep all of the services and programs, can the Leader of the Government tell me that she really expects much from this exercise?

[Translation]

The government should make up its mind and tell us what it plans to do. It should not ask Canadians to wait another year for the government to cut duplication and overlap. In the final analysis, the government should make certain choices and not introduce new taxes or raise existing ones.

[English]

• (1450)

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank the honourable senator for his questions and note that he has a great deal more experience in this regard than I. However, once again he will appreciate that I am not in a position to forecast what may be in Mr. Martin's next budget. Even if I knew, I would not tell him.

Part of the exercise now in place is to obtain information, opinions and views to help guide Mr. Martin in picking measures to set forth in the next budget.

My honourable friend speaks of savings by reducing duplication between levels of government. I can tell him that at the moment a program review is being conducted, very energetically, by my colleague Marcel Massé. He is reviewing government programs in all departments and looking for the kind of duplication to which my friend has referred. That is also part of an exercise that ended in June with an agreement among the provinces and the federal government on internal trade barriers. Part of that exercise was to reduce the kinds of things that increase costs to Canadians.

I agree with my honourable friend when he says there is money to be saved. At the heart of the efforts by Mr. Massé and Mr. Martin is the desire to find areas where those savings can be achieved, to talk to their colleagues in the provinces and to work out the best possible method for providing efficient and affordable services to Canadians.

PARKS CANADA

USER FEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. David Tkachuk: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On August 3, the Minister of Canadian Heritage announced that Parks Canada would be undertaking a comprehensive consultation exercise on the matter of user fees in national parks and national historic sites.

The minister goes on in a press release to list Jasper, Waterton and Lake Louise in Alberta; Field, B.C.; Waskesiu, Saskatchewan and Wasagaming, which is part of Riding Mountain in Manitoba, as the places where these consultations will take place.

On October 5, in the House of Commons, in response to a question by Glen McKinnon of Brandon, the Minister of Heritage stated:

> I am expecting to receive recommendations regarding user fees in national parks and historic sites by the end of October.

Knowing how the government carries out consultations, I took it upon myself to visit Lake Louise and Banff and to talk to the people in Waterton and Waskesiu. How can recommendations be made at the end of October when there have been no consultations, or at least none in Jasper, Lake Louise, Field, or Waterton?

I talked to the owner of the ski hill in Lake Louise and to the Banff tourist bureau. They have heard rumours of these fees but have not been involved in any consultations whatsoever.

How can the recommendations be made at the end of October when there has been no consultation there, and only cursory consultations in Waskesiu and Wasagaming?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in my honourable friend's earnest pursuit of information on this issue, he has travelled some of the most beautiful parts of this country.

Senator Tkachuk: I am proud of it.

Senator Fairbairn: I am sure he enjoyed every minute of it.

I shall take the honourable senator's questions to my colleague Mr. Dupuy, and get back to him with an answer.

Senator Tkachuk: Honourable senators, it is unfortunate that I did not have the time to go to Pacific Rim National Park, Yoho National Park and Glacier National Park, because I am sure I would have received the same information. I am a big fan of Canada's national parks, which is why I am interested in this issue.

With regard to town sites, the minister also said on October 5 that the discussions and consultations will continue, and that final decisions are expected around next April.

It is rather confusing as to when these recommendations will be announced. Park officials in Waskesiu tell us that the new user fees will be announced in November, which I assume will be as a result of the recommendations from the consultations that never took place at the end of October.

When does the government expect to announce the user fees? Does the government expect to do so in October or in April?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I will endeavour to obtain an answer for my friend.

[Translation]

NATIONAL SECURITY

PROPOSAL TO STRIKE A SPECIAL COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: I have a very important question for the Leader of the Government, and in the months to come, my question will be an important one for all Canadians.

I would like to know whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate could recommend that the Senate — which is, after all, according to some members of the other place, a very tranquil place and according to me, the chamber of sober second thought — appoint a special committee of the Senate to examine all matters of security in Canada.

I want to make it clear that I did not wait for the Bloc Québécois to raise the matter in the House of Commons. When the Canadian Security Intelligence Service was formed in 1984, I was violently opposed. I refused to vote on that bill. My caucus colleagues will recall some memorable discussions I had on the subject with the Solicitor General at the time, and some very long talks with the Prime Minister at the time. I was against the idea. I still have the same reservations. I thought that, at the time, it was necessary to update the security apparatus within the RCMP, since all other Western countries had this necessary evil referred to as security.

I want to make it quite clear that I do not question a country's right to ensure that its domestic and international security is protected and taken seriously. However, it is another thing altogether to establish institutions that become totally uncontrollable.

The Canadian people have the right to know, at a time when we are talking about financial cut-backs. We are talking about $250 million for three security instruments: the RCMP, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and now a third institution, the Communications Security Establishment.

Honourable senators, the world has changed. The collapse of the Soviet Union as a world power is well known. It seems that some people have not realized this. It undermines the credibility of parliamentarians who, in the House of Commons and in the Senate, are trying to defend the federal system against attacks by members in the other place who are trying to make this an entirely personal issue in which they feel they have been singled out. Honourable senators, I can tell you that there are people in the Senate with a lot of experience who could tell you they were not singled out. This goes back a long time.

Today, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government and concerns national security. This is an initial attempt I am making today. As you know, I am a patient man. I decided long ago I had an interest in this subject, and I am going to take my time. I would like to hear from the Leader of the Government whether she would consider setting up a Senate committee to examine all these security questions and renew the confidence of all Canadians who should not have to believe that security has become uncontrollable in this country.

[English]

• (1500)

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank my friend for his question. However, I would not agree with his premise that security systems in Canada are uncontrollable.

A few years ago the Senate struck the Special Senate Committee on Terrorism and Public Safety. Some of us were members — Senator MacDonald, Senator Kelly, Senator Hays, myself and a number of others. That committee conducted its hearings, reported its findings, and later, for special reasons, carried out further hearings and made further recommendations. Security is not, therefore, a subject that is new to this place.

Along with the creation of CSIS came the creation of the Independent Review Committee, which is the watchdog committee over that particular group. These issues are very much in the public domain. Some of these subjects will become part of considerations of other committees in the other place.

However, I will take the honourable senator's representations seriously. I can make no promises, but I am sure that people in this house will want to discuss those issues.

Senator Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I thank the minister for her answer. I would not normally refer to the comments that the Minister of National Defence made yesterday in the House of Commons, but he said — and I quote Mr. Gilles Gauthier, an excellent reporter from La Presse:

[Translation]

> Mr. Collenette declared that Mr. Chrétien would probably be willing to accept suggestions from members...

Of course, he is now in the House of Commons and has forgotten the senators —

> ...regarding the means that could be used to give Canadians the assurance that the CSE, that is the Communications Security Establishment, acts in a proper way.

All I am saying, in answer to a minister of the Crown — one of your colleagues with whom you are sitting and will be sitting this week — is first off, that Parliament is made up of MPs and senators. Until you can prove to me that that is not so, I will continue to voice my opposition strongly. A short while ago I took part in radio and television programs in Winnipeg, and after three hours I had done quite well. I was in Hamilton during the recess and I also did very well when the Senate was attacked. We should not be afraid to defend an existing institution. We exist. When the minister asks for suggestions from members of Parliament, I think he should also listen to senators.

Ever since all these enquiries that you mentioned were carried out, the world has indeed changed. We cannot let Canadians believe that security services are no longer manageable. I am not saying they are, but the Canadian people are starting to believe it. We do not know how much they cost ,or exactly what they do. We only know that they exist. Apparently, one of them by itself costs $250 to $300 million and the other one costs $250 million, while we already have, at the national level, the RCMP, whom I have always supported. God knows that I have much to say about security, because it does exist. I could make a lot of comments about the RCPM, but it is at least a necessary evil.

However, we have three such services. What exactly does each of them do? We do not know any more. How much do they cost? We do not know any more. Honourable senators, we like Senator Fairbairn a lot, since she is so nice and she always answers our questions with such charm, but we want to be sure that she will put the Senate to work.

I want to take this opportunity to remind senators that if committee members cannot take part in their committee hearings, other senators could be willing to take their place. This is clear, and I will repeat it until it is understood. Any senator who agrees to sit on a committee should not postpone his or her work only because the Senate is not sitting. He or she must work. We must work.

Honourable senators, that was my first speech. I will probably put a question about this on the Order Paper so that we can discuss it further. I am only laying the foundations of a subject.

[English]

No one likes to talk about such a subject. However, I am old enough not to be troubled by it, although it troubles a great many people. It is an important subject for some people.

Please be wary of the demagogues, those who want to destroy our country. Canada is under attack by some people in the other chamber, whose counterparts are situated in Quebec. These people want to create disturbances, to plant doubt in the minds of Canadians, especially those who live in Quebec. I do not say Quebecers, I say Canadians who live in Quebec. It is our duty to dispel any such doubts immediately.

I hope the Leader of the Government in the Senate will understand that I chose to address that difficult subject because I take it extremely seriously. I know that she will also take her functions seriously and will use the resources at her disposal — and she is much better equipped than I, an independent senator — to explore what can be done to assure Canadians that tax dollars are being well spent to ensure that civil liberties do not come under attack.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I take the questions of my honourable friend quite seriously. This is a serious subject. It was for that reason that some years ago this chamber made a sizeable effort to delve into these issues, produce a report and make recommendations, which were also taken seriously.

I should also like to mention to my honourable friend that the Minister of National Defence — and I will certainly discuss my friend's question with him — made the point in the House of Commons yesterday that CSE falls within his responsibilities, just as the RCMP falls within the responsibilities of the Solicitor General. The budgets of these organizations form part of the Estimates. The Minister of National Defence said in the other place that he was prepared to answer questions concerning the security establishment as it affected him.

There are different avenues of opportunity within both chambers.

• (1510)

My friend's suggestions are important to the issue. I will take them in the spirit in which they are offered, and discuss them with my colleagues.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION TO AUSTRALIA

REPORT TABLED

Leave having been given to revert to Tabling of Reports from Inter-Parliamentary Delegations:

Hon. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Canadian parliamentary delegation which visited Australia from June 26 to July 4, 1994, at the invitation of the Honourable Michael Beahan, President of the Senate, and the Honourable Steven Martin MP, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask a question of the Deputy Leader of the government with respect to delayed answers. Some questions that we asked orally have remained unanswered since April. Can the Deputy Leader of the Government assure us that we will receive answers to such questions?

Two or three of the questions come to mind. One in particular is with respect to certain changes going on right now in the Senate precincts. Last April or May, Senator Doyle asked whether Senate approval would be requested, and whether work would be done without the approval of this chamber, or what the procedure was. Certain work is now taking place. The Senate's facilities are being affected and, as far as I know, the Senate chamber has not been apprised or consulted. Usually we are at least informed of what is happening.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): I thank the Honourable Leader of the Opposition for his remarks. I will check immediately to see what questions are outstanding. It was my understanding that we had answered almost all the outstanding questions at the last sitting of the Senate.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that the ruling on the question of privilege raised by Senator Cools will be delayed. Senator Cools informed me that she would be absent today. I will await her return before giving my ruling.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

SECOND WORLD WAR

PARTICIPATION OF CANADIAN TROOPS IN ITALIAN CAMPAIGN

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Corbin, calling the attention of the Senate to the heroic and essential contribution made by Canadian troops to the Italian campaign in 1943 and 1944, and the pilgrimage that he and other Canadian parliamentarians, including the Secretary of State for Veterans' Affairs, had the privilege of going on in Sicily and Italy in the company of 50 veterans of all provinces of Canada, from May 2, to May 20, 1994. — (Honourable Senator Corbin)

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Corbin has indicated that he has no desire to say anything further on this inquiry. Unless any other senator wishes to speak, the enquiry could be considered debated and, thus, dropped from the Order Paper.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ROYAL CANADIAN LEGION—DEBATE AJOURNED

Hon. John M. Macdonald rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, October 5, 1994:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to certain matters relating to the Royal Canadian Legion.

He said: Not long ago, there was a great deal of criticism of the Royal Canadian Legion. It became known that a local branch of the Legion had a policy which prohibited the wearing of head-dresses in its lounge. As a result of this policy, certain persons were denied admission; persons whose religion requires them to wear a certain type of head-dress at all times.

This policy caused a great deal of criticism of the Legion. This criticism was intensified and more widespread when it became known that many other branches had the same policy. Legion members were called racist, bigots, hypocrites, and other unpleasant names. Little if any investigation was made into why so many branches had this policy.

Thus, honourable senators, I want to put on record my belief as to why what began as a custom became a policy, and then a strongly established tradition.

I am not speaking on behalf of the Legion or any of its branches, but simply as an ordinary member. My opinion on this matter is influenced by the fact that I have been a member of my local Legion branch for the past 49 years, a fact of which I am proud.

Honourable senators, to understand this policy it is necessary to have some knowledge and understanding of one of the great objective of the Royal Canadian Legion. That objective is to remember those who died participating in Canada's wars. Indeed, this head-dress policy is a consequence of this objective.

The Legion regards this objective as being of such importance that it is stated in the general bylaws:

> ...that those who died in the service of the nation shall always be remembered.

The first item in the statement of principle upon which the legion is founded is as follows:

> A solemn remembrance of Canadians who gave their lives so our nation might be free.

We remember not only those who died in the war, or as a result of war services, but also those who suffered physical or mental disability as a result of their war service.

It may be asked why the Legion places such emphasis on remembrance. The short answer is that in our society and culture, it is recognized that the greatest tribute we can pay to our dead is to remember them. I believe this is obvious. That tribute of remembrance is shown by the monuments we erect to the people who died, or who have given special service to our nation. It is reflected in the names given to public buildings, hospitals, universities, libraries and the like. Such monuments appear in every cemetery.

• (1520)

Over the years, when a person joined the legion, he or she assumed a solemn obligation to remember our war dead. Let me assure honourable senators that this is not an emotional or sentimental matter but a realistic, reasonable obligation. The Legion offers ways by which this can be and is done.

I like to think that it is done in three major ways. It participates in the Remembrance Day program in Ottawa on November 11; and it holds Remembrance Day services in a great many places in Canada.

The second way is by means of an internal matter. At every meeting of every Legion branch, as part of the opening ritual, the presiding officer must state, and I quote in part:

> Before we proceed to the consideration of the business which has brought us together, let us pause for a few moments to think reverently of those of our comrades who by sea, by land and in the air, laid down their lives for their country.

Again, as part of the opening ritual, there is an act of remembrance, and the presiding officer must proclaim:

> They shall grow not old, as we that are left grow old;
>
> Age shall not weary them nor the years condemn.
>
> At the going down of the sun, and in the morning, we will remember them.

The members reply, which is really an affirmation of their obligation and commitment:

> We will remember them.

Let me assure you, honourable senators, that this response is not merely a mechanical or automatic reply to a familiar ritual.

I knew many of the men from my small town who lost their lives in World War II. There were 68 of them. When I look around at that point in the meetings, I recognize many present are remembering someone close to them who did not survive. I, like others, may recall the first casualties from our town. They were two bright young men, one a university student and the other an employee of the coal company. They joined the Air Force early in the war. One became the pilot and the other the wireless operator in the same plane. That plane was lost over the English Channel — they both died.

We may recall the third early casualty, another bright young man, one who was well known and highly respected. He was unemployed. He joined the Merchant Marine. After several voyages his ship was sunk by enemy action. He died.

Honourable senators, I assure you that these words of remembrance are not an empty gesture but a genuine act of recollection.

I have mentioned two ways by which tribute and honour is paid to our war dead by remembrance. These might be classified as formal or partly formal. Therefore, it was only natural that a more informal and local procedure would be found and adopted to remember the local war dead — those whom the members of the local branches knew. Thus, the custom began for members to remove their head-dress in legion lounges, canteens and at certain functions.

Originally, I suppose, it was the application of a then general custom of men removing their hats when a funeral was passing by as a general mark of respect for the dead. In any event, this is a practical, dignified way in which to show respect to our war dead and to pay tribute to them.

I do not know exactly when or where the custom started. In any event, it became widespread. The custom became a policy, and the policy developed into a strong tradition. It is this tradition which has been the subject of so much criticism. It seems to me that most of this criticism has been ill-informed, misinformed or not informed at all.

It should be remembered that this policy is not one which has been forced upon the branches but one which has been developed by the local branches and is kept in force by those branches which want to have it. It is a mark of respect as well as remembrance toward the dead. This precedent is strong among veterans.

Many veterans who came through the war unharmed felt an obligation, though they perhaps would not admit it, to those who were not so fortunate. Of course, these groups are becoming smaller every year. However, when they joined the legion they took seriously an obligation to honour the war dead, especially the war dead of their community, by remembering them. The removal of head-dress was a method employed to fulfil the obligation. They feel it should not be tampered with at this late date.

Honourable senators, I want to make it clear that the members of the Legion have nothing but goodwill toward those who cannot join or, indeed, visit legion branches because of this head-dress policy. To the contrary, they are respected for their adherence to their religious practices. Legion members understand their position. They well understand also why these men would want to participate in Legion activities. If they became members, undoubtedly they would be good ones.

While Legion members understand and appreciate their position, however, they feel these people do not understand ours. Perhaps they do not wholly understand that the practice of not wearing a head-dress became an act of remembrance and, as such, has become a strong tradition over the years. It is especially important to the veterans of World War II, whose numbers are diminishing every year. I do not think it is well understood that after the war these were young men who were determined that our war dead would always be remembered and honoured. To the best of their ability, they have fulfilled their obligations over the years.

The policy of not wearing a head-dress became, as I mentioned, a proper, effective and public act of remembrance, one not to be done away with at this late date in the life of the Legion and in the lives of war veterans.

Men have tried for many years to fulfil the obligations to honour our war dead by remembering them. The prohibiting of wearing a head-dress in Legion lounges and canteens is one of the methods, an accustomed method, by which this is done.

We would like our critics to understand that we are not racist, bigots or hypocrites, but only a group of veterans of World War II who, for many years, have tried to honour our war dead by remembering them in a certain way. I believe that if this is understood, much of the adverse criticism to which the Legion has been subject will not continue. I hope this will come to pass.

On motion of Senator Berntson, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, October 26, 1994, at 1:30 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, October 26, 1994

The Senate met at 1:30 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATOR'S STATEMENT

TRANSPORT

PEARSON AIRPORT AGREEMENTS— POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT INQUIRY

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is reported that the Minister of Transport is ready to have a judicial inquiry into the Pearson airport agreements if Bill C-22, which is now before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, is not passed before Christmas.

Since early summer, my colleagues and I have repeatedly called upon the government to hold such an inquiry. The issues should be examined, if for no other reason than to salvage the reputations of hundreds of Canadians, both in the public sector and the private sector, Liberals and Conservatives, who have been wounded by the malicious and reprehensible statements made by the Minister of Transport; statements which he refuses to support with even the most meagre evidence. Only a public inquiry can deal with the minister's allegations.

If the only way to initiate such an inquiry is to delay the bill indefinitely, then this side is quite prepared to do just that. If there is agreement all round, then we could instruct the committee to postpone its hearings, which are scheduled to begin tomorrow.

Until now, we have been unusually restrained in the face of the minister's provocative innuendoes and smears. Enough is enough! The only issue that the Senate is defending is the right of citizens to have their day in court, and to resolve grievances.

The government has every right to cancel the contracts involved. It also has the responsibility to explain publicly its reasons for so doing.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

CLERK'S ACCOUNTS

STATEMENT TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that, pursuant to rule 134, the Clerk of the Senate has laid on the Table a detailed statement of the Clerk's receipts and disbursements for the fiscal year 1993-94.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved:

> That the Clerk's Accounts be referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-FRANCE INTER-PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNUAL MEETING— REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION TABLED

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Canadian Section of the Canada-France Inter-Parliamentary Association, respecting its participation at the Twenty-fifth annual meeting held in Montreal, Charlevoix and Iqaluit, from July 16 to 24, 1994.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CANADIAN VIETNAM VETERANS' MEMORIAL— PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 7,348 individuals showing support for a Canadian Vietnam veterans' national memorial; a memorial which will be a fitting tribute to those courageous Canadian men and women who sacrificed their lives serving as members of the United States armed forces in Southeast Asia.

The total number of signatures we have collected to date on this matter is 11,139.

CANADA-CHINA RELATIONS

REPRESENTATIONS ON HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES IN CHINA AND TIBET—PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 510 concerned Canadians from the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Quebec and Ontario who want to draw to the attention of the Senate the widespread human rights abuses in Tibet under the government of the People's Republic of China. They point out that, according to a Washington-based human rights monitoring group, Asia Watch, some 80 per cent of China's political prisoners are Tibetan; yet Tibetans make up only 1 per cent of China's population.

The petitioners request the Senate to urge Prime Minister Jean Chrétien and those members of Parliament visiting the People's Republic of China in November 1994, during their meetings with representatives of the government of China, to raise the issue of human rights in China and, in particular, the human rights abuses in Tibet.

They also ask the Senate to urge the Prime Minister to request that the Chinese government meet with representatives of His Holiness the Dalai Lama and the Tibetan government in exile to discuss, without preconditions, the future of Tibet.

QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

PROPOSAL TO STRIKE SPECIAL COMMITTEE— CLARIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, having asked many questions yesterday, I should like to clear up what may be a misunderstanding. I stated:

> The Canadian people have the right to know, at a time when we are talking about financial cut-backs. We are talking about $250 million for three security instruments...

Later on in my question, honourable senators can see that it is clear that I meant to say more than that. If one puts together rumour and fact, one can make it look as if $250 million is being advanced for CSIS alone. Some people have talked about $250 million to $300 million for the Communications Security Establishment. Naturally, the same amount must be spent by the RCMP.

Again, I believe in security for our country. I believe that we must have an establishment to look after security. However, as I said yesterday, the world has changed. Any institution must go through an era of modernization.

There is nothing wrong with my question of yesterday; far from it. I have received many communications since my remarks yesterday, and I can see that I have opened up a can of worms — something that I did not expect to happen, but should, perhaps, have expected. I will not say which it is.

• (1340)

Upon reflection, I wish to again repeat my question to the distinguished Leader of the Government in the Senate, in view of the fact that the Liberals held their national caucus meeting this morning. I did not attend that meeting, but someone must be worried about this matter. I see some friends here indicating that they are not. However, in my opinion it is a mistake not to follow the current activity regarding this matter. Public opinion is now based on all kinds of diverse facts, and that is wrong. No one knows exactly what security means any more, or how much it costs. I wish to tell the Leader of the Government in the Senate and all honourable senators that some ministers of the Crown of the previous government were not aware of the existence of the Communications Security Establishment — as indeed is the case with the present government.

Yesterday, the Leader of the Government in the Senate directed me to a report that I suggest other honourable senators might read, namely the report of the Special Senate Committee on Terrorism and Public Safety. I thank those who wrote the report for these copies. I also have a CSIS committee report from 1984. However, little has been said in these reports concerning the Communications Security Establishment. For some, it was a revelation that something like that should exist.

I will be blunt. After the reunification of Germany, it was discovered that the East German STASI, or secret police, that so-called monster, had files on practically everyone. We now discover that a master file exists on Canadians in the Communications Security Establishment. I will repeat publicly what I have said privately: If I were still president of the students' union at the University of Ottawa, at Carleton University or president of the Student Universities of Canada, I would organize a march. I would not get inside the building that houses the Communications Security Establishment, but I would destroy this monster machine unless I were given satisfactory answers.

Is it true that there are lists of tens of thousands of Canadians who may have disagreed with the government in the past? These were good, solid, loyal Canadians whose names may have been tarnished forever. Some people are asked for references before they are promoted. Often, references are made to security lists, or security checks, or security files. People whose names appear on such lists are never given the chance to confront anyone, but are denied all kinds of promotions. Is that the kind of country we want? Is that the kind of country we are proud of?

The world states that there is no better country than Canada. We must ensure that we will be attentive to civil liberties, not civil disobedience. We must retain the right of people to disagree.

I want to ensure that the minister will give me some information today, tomorrow or next week with respect to the possibility of the Senate looking into the matter of security in Canada. In this respect, we have three major items in the budget. We have ministers who do not even know that such establishments exist, and the budget is hidden under other titles in various different departments. This is strange. Surely the Senate has a role to play in this instance. I am prepared for any answer that the Honourable Leader of the Government may give, but I am not in a hurry. I am a patient man; that is why I accepted an appointment to the Senate.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I indicated to my honourable friend yesterday, I will convey all his comments and concerns on this issue to my colleague the Minister for National Defence.

Members of this chamber realize that this is, indeed, a serious subject. I do not have answers for the honourable senator today. However, I reiterate that the Minister of National Defence and the Solicitor General have responsibilities in the area of the security agencies to which he refers. They are available for discussion through their Estimates at parliamentary committees on both sides of this building.

Far from not being involved in these issues, the Senate has been very involved over the years. We discussed the report that my friend has on his desk from the Special Senate Committee on Terrorism and Public Safety and the work that the Senate was specifically mandated to do in the whole process leading up to the formation of CSIS, as a change from how the operation had existed previously. The Senate has had a major role to play in that process, and has been relied upon in these circumstances.

In the last several months we have been very much a part of discussions concerning the future of our defence policy, our foreign affairs policy, and as members of joint committees in this Parliament. The Senate has not been isolated from these issues; it has been very much engaged.

My honourable friend is aware of the sensitivity of these issues. I will ensure that my colleagues, including the Minister of National Defence, are aware of the honourable senator's concerns and suggestions, and I will respond as and when I am able to do so.

Senator Prud'homme: I am not an enemy of the Bloc Québécois or an enemy of Péquistes in Quebec. I do not share their opinions about Quebec becoming a country, but I become extremely annoyed when I see the mileage that they are gaining at a crucial time in our country by making people believe that they have been the sole target here. I see no answer forthcoming, nor do I see any action. In the overall area of security matters, this is a small drop in the bucket, but we are waiting to hear something concrete.

I am doing my best to deal with this situation, but it is difficult for me. All over the province of Quebec there is a feeling of extreme sensitivity concerning this issue. Night after night the Premier of Quebec, who is a fine gentleman and a great scholar — although I do not share his opinions regarding the future of Quebec in Canada — is voicing concerns and getting mileage out of his stance in relation to this matter. A distinguished new minister, Madame Beaudoin, who is an efficient person, is also seen on television. This is creating a lot of confusion.

I am not attacking anyone today. I am a positive person. I am merely drawing your attention to some difficult points. I was ready to proceed on the question of paying our share of the referendum. We waited and waited, and what happened? We paid after the damage was done.

I believe in damage control. I do not need an answer today, but I want the Leader of the Government in the Senate to realize that I will be persistent. I am very persistent when I have an opinion. I ask honourable senators to accept my comments as a positive gesture, and to take the matter seriously.

Honourable senators, I warn those of you who may not have a chance to scrutinize every television news program, particularly those in French but also those in English, to be alert. There is a red bell clanging and a smoke alarm going off, and we had better do something about it.

FORESTRY

CLAYOQUOT SOUND—GRANT BY CIDA TO PROTEST GROUP AGAINST LOGGING

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, since I posed a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate yesterday in regard to CIDA's funding, I have been in touch with various sectors of the forest industry in British Columbia, and I have learned that there is a major concern regarding funding activities that are destroying our markets abroad. As I pointed out yesterday, such activities fly in the face of good federal-provincial relations.

Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us how she intends to proceed with this question, and how quickly we can expect an answer? There is an urgency in British Columbia.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): I thank my honourable friend, and I regret I do not have an answer for him today. However, I have forwarded his concerns and the materials that he sent me to my colleagues. I am assembling the background to his questions as quickly as I can, and I will advise him as soon as I have all of the material.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, yesterday the Leader of the Opposition brought to our attention the fact that there were some outstanding oral questions, and I promised to look into the matter at once. I now have a reply for him.

As far as I can determine, there are three outstanding questions, and two of them are from Senator Doyle. I expect that I will have replies by next Tuesday. That is my present expectation.

Insofar as the question with respect to peace-keeping, that information comes from the Department of National Defence. It has not come in as yet, but we are pressing them to provide the information.

TRANSPORT

SEARCH AND RESCUE—REPLACEMENT OF SEA KING HELICOPTER FLEET— GOVERNMENT POSITION—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, quite some time ago, shortly after we began this new session, I asked about the replacement of helicopters. I asked what the policy of government was, and what we could look forward to. That question may have been answered. If it was, it has escaped me. This is a matter of great concern in my part of the country, and I wonder if the deputy leader would look into it for me.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall certainly check immediately and find out where the question stands. If it has not been answered, I shall press for an answer.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL, 1994

SECOND READING

Hon. P. Derek Lewis moved the second reading of Bill C-42, to amend the Criminal Code and other Acts (miscellaneous matters).

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to speak on the motion for second reading of Bill C-42.

At the outset, I remind honourable senators that Bill C-42 was considered very quickly by the other place. It was acknowledged that the bill was important, largely nonpartisan and long overdue. It is now before us for our consideration.

The bill is to be known as the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1994. It provides for many amendments to the Criminal Code, but it also contains some amendments to the Canada Evidence Act, the Contraventions Act, the Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters Act, and the Supreme Court Act. Many of the proposed amendments are minor or technical. However, quite a few are more significant. Taken altogether, they provide for significant improvements to our criminal justice system.

The source of most of the amendments is the Uniform Law Conference of Canada. Every year, the criminal law section of the conference adopts a number of resolutions, usually proposing remedial legislation for particular problems. The criminal law section is made up of delegations from all the provinces and territories, as well as a federal delegation. Most of the delegates are experienced in the criminal law as prosecutors, defence counsel, or senior officials in justice ministries. Other amendments in the bill originate from suggestions by the former Law Reform Commission of Canada, various judges, members of the bar, and federal and provincial departments and officials.

These amendments are aimed at solving particular problems. It is understandable that, even in the best of circumstances, problems in an area as important as criminal law are liable to surface in significant numbers. The stakes are high, and we have large numbers of competent counsel acting on behalf of people accused of a crime and on behalf of the state. The practices and procedures in place to operate the system are under constant scrutiny and are subject to vigorous testing.

However, the circumstances of the last 10 years have not been ideal. The criminal justice system has been under enormous strain, in part because of increasing crime and because of crimes which, in the past, may have been ignored or gone unreported but which now are regularly dealt with by the system. The areas of sexual assault and domestic violence are good examples.

The system is also strained because of the increasing complexity of criminal proceedings. It now takes longer and costs more to do business in the courts. Consider as an example the fundamental changes in what is happening in our criminal courts because of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In order to vindicate some rights enshrined in the Charter, many criminal matters explored in detail the way in which an accused person was apprehended, the way in which the evidence was gathered, and the way the accused was treated by the police or other services of the law. This adds a level of complexity to a procedural system which was not designed in the first place to handle such matters. The justice system must adapt, and new solutions to new evolving problems must be found.

Strain also results because the system is being asked to handle the increased volume and increased complexity with no increase in resources, or even with decreased resources. Provincial and territorial governments responsible for the administration of justice have to be prudent when considering resources for this purpose. Like other social programs, the objective is to provide the service Canadians want and are entitled to in as effective and efficient a manner as possible. These governments expect the federal government to do its share and to make improvements in areas of the law which add needless cost to the administration of justice.

This bill is aimed at reducing some of the strain resulting from increased court congestion, lengthier and more complicated court procedures, and shrinking resources. The bill does not provide for a major revamping of our criminal procedure system. It does solve a number of problems, many of them small, but taken together it will be easier for police, prosecutors, defence counsel, judges, and court administrators to do their jobs.

I should like to give a few examples from among the more than 100 clauses in this bill. Certainly I will not review each and every clause, but I hope that the examples illustrate how this bill will relieve some of the strain in our criminal courts.

Clause 3 of the bill proposes a minor change to subsection 4(6) of the Criminal Code to make it possible to prove by affidavit that a notice has been given or sent rather than by the oral testimony in court of the police officer or other official who gave the notice. Many notices must be given in relation to a number of situations identified in the Criminal Code. This is a small matter, but this change will help keep police on the street preventing crime, rather than in the courthouse standing around waiting to give routine evidence. Court time will be saved as well.

• (1400)

Clause 53 proposes a change to section 537 of the Criminal Code, which eliminates the requirement to have accused persons appear in court every week for the sole purpose of a further adjournment while awaiting the start of a preliminary inquiry. This is referred to by many as the eight-day remand rule. Section 537 currently limits adjournments to eight days, unless the accused and the prosecutor consent. Invariably, accused persons in custody do not consent.

These routine eight-day remands use up valuable court time. Considerable resources are required to transport and to guard detained accused persons between detention centres and courthouses. By eliminating the mandatory requirement for this often purposeless procedure, some of the strain can be eased, particularly in crowded, big city courtrooms.

The bill also proposes changes aimed at permitting the increased use of technology for certain matters. For instance, another change to section 537, proposed in clause 53 of the bill, would permit the use of closed-circuit television in certain circumstances.

Clause 44 proposes a change to section 515 of the code, to permit a justice to deal with bail matters by telephone on consent. This should save time and resources in some remote areas where an accused detained in custody must be flown into the nearest place where there is a justice. There are also other changes which would permit the use of the so-called "fax" machine for certain purposes.

We can appreciate that much of this bill is focused on procedural and technical matters, and that it will, if enacted, make significant improvements to the administration of criminal justice. It is certainly a laudable objective to make the criminal justice system more effective. Like much of contemporary society, all institutions must be modernized and adapted to changing times.

However, there is more to modernization than adaptation, increasing efficiency and maximizing the benefit from shrinking resources. Modernization and adaptation must be considered in a more substantive context. Some thought must be given to removing obsolete and anachronistic provisions, and to filling in gaps created by changes in society and in the law as it is evolving in society. The needs of victims of crime, witnesses and also accused persons must also be considered.

In my view, Bill C-42 contains some useful proposals which do just that. I wish to mention several. There are proposals repealing provisions which may have been relevant once, but which no longer have a contemporary purpose. Clause 9 repeals section 166 of the Criminal Code, which presently seeks to protect the public from the publishing of shocking judicial proceedings. The Supreme Court of Canada found a similar provision in a provincial statute, contrary to the guarantee of the freedom of expression provided by section 2 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It should be out of the Criminal Code as well.

Clause 52 would repeal section 529, a provision providing for the issuance of an arrest warrant by a coroner, something which is no longer of value. Similarly, clause 604 provides for rights of disclosure in charges of treason. Legal historians see this provision as providing for special treatment of the peerage, as treason cases most often involve peers of the realm. Now, thanks to our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the disclosure material provided for in section 604 is less than what is presently required for all indictable offences. This provision is but a historical footnote.

While the public may no longer need protection from scandals and salacious reports of legal proceedings, the public, witnesses and the accused might need protection from publicizing information concerning the ending of court proceedings, and information given to the defence to assist in a fair trial. Clause 62 proposes an amendment to prevent publicity with respect to certain pretrial proceedings to help ensure a fair trial for the accused.

Clause 61 proposes a new section 604, which restricts the use of material provided by the prosecution to the defence in order to avoid needless embarrassment to victims and other witnesses. The courts have made it clear that the defence is entitled to full disclosure of information held by the prosecution. This information may be highly sensitive and, if made publicly available, may needlessly infringe the privacy of witnesses. It might also generate excessive publicity, which could prejudice the right to a fair trial or lead to a change of venue.

This bill also contains measures aimed at better protecting victims of violence. There are changes to the peacebond provisions in the Criminal Code which are aimed at preventing crime. It is certainly better to stop a violent act from occurring than to bring someone to trial for committing such an act.

However, the reality is that, human nature being what it is, violent crime will continue. This bill has a number of measures which will make dealing with it a little more effective. For instance, a strong signal will be sent to judges by indicating that even minor instances of certain assault offences can be punished by up to 18 months' imprisonment when prosecuted on summary conviction, rather than the present six months maximum.

Clauses 44 and 48 will give authority to justices and judges who order pretrial detention for accused persons to also direct that they not communicate with witnesses. This will prevent telephone harassment and intimidation of victims. Experience has shown that in some jurisdictions accused persons can abuse their victims, even from behind bars.

There are also proposed changes to the arrest and interim release scheme in the code. These changes are aimed at better protecting victims and minimizing the inconvenience to persons detained in custody until they appear before a justice, only to be released after consenting to adhere to certain conditions.

Presently, the options available to police are limited to releasing unconditionally, or detaining in custody to permit a justice to order release subject to conditions often agreed to by the accused. The changes would permit an accused who was prepared to abide by one or more specified conditions to be released immediately. The conditions could include not communicating with the witness or the victim, or not going to a specified place which, of course, could be the residence of the victim.

Honourable senators, I mentioned that this bill contains changes of benefit to the accused. I noted already the objective of promoting a fair trial by prohibiting the premature publication of information about certain pretrial proceedings. I also mentioned the changes which reduce the amount of time some accused might have to spend in custody before release is authorized, subject to conditions. All these changes seek to benefit accused persons.

There are other examples. Time in custody could be reduced significantly for accused persons in isolated areas by making it possible to deal with bail matters by telephone. This change is contained in clause 44(1).

In some circumstances, it may be possible for accused persons to appear by counsel instead of having to sit in court while the lawyers and judges deal with procedural and evidentiary issues. The amendments provided for in clauses 53 and 63 will allow for this.

Honourable senators, this is an important bill which focuses on more than procedural matters. It contains provisions which will enhance the public confidence in our criminal justice system by ensuring greater fairness to the participants. It also gets rid of several obsolete provisions, and fills gaps created by other changes in the law. This bill is very much about bringing our criminal law up to date. More could be done in this regard, and more will be done. The government already has introduced several other bills directed at different aspects of the criminal justice system.

• (1410)

Last winter, the Minister of Justice issued a discussion paper about reforms to the preliminary inquiry procedure. Recently, a comprehensive document about the use of DNA technology was released. Obviously, more changes are in the works.

The bill clears the decks on a lot of miscellaneous matters and I hope to see it in force as soon as possible. It contains very little which will excite public interest or controversy, but contains much which will be of benefit to the public, particularly the public that comes into contact with the criminal justice system. Police officers, lawyers, court officials, judges, witnesses, victims in particular, and even accused persons will be affected.

The bill is long overdue and contains provisions which should be put in place as soon as possible. I very much hope that, as was the case in the other place, it can be treated in a nonpartisan manner and that it will be considered by the committee carefully but quickly.

Many matters to which I have alluded may require much detailed study. This will provide considerable material for discussion in committee. I recommend support for the bill.

Hon. Jean Noël Desmarais: Honourable colleagues, I am pleased to speak today to Bill C-42, an omnibus bill which intends, as the Minister of Justice said in his press release:

> ...to modernize the law and improve the administration of justice in keeping with the needs of society and advances in technology.

That is, of course, a laudable goal.

This bill is the result of work dating back a number of years. Some proposals date as far back as 1982.

[Translation]

However, the bill mainly reflects proposals that were formulated between 1987 and 1993 by the criminal law section of the Uniform Law Conference of Canada. In addition to technical amendments, it also contains significant amendments aimed at improving, in short order, the fairness and efficiency of the justice system. According to the minister, these amendments will result in a more cost-effective system of criminal justice and will help peace officers intervene more effectively.

[English]

Although I support the thinking behind these changes, I am concerned with the absence of monitoring, the lack of any type of quality control or outcome study which could tell us whether these changes do work in the public interest. That may be something for the Uniform Law Conference to keep in mind.

A former law professor recently told me that to fully comprehend the relationships of each of these amendments and their effects on everyday Canadian life, one would have to spend the necessary time behind stacks of related statutes, the Criminal Code in one hand and this bill in the other, and one would still lack a key ingredient for judging whether these amendments are in the public interest. That is from one with years of experience with the criminal justice system.

I am impressed by the manner in which proposals find their way to the Department of Justice, vetted by various professional organizations and based on real situations.

Additionally, the professor related to me a story of an unnamed judge who, because of an inadequacy in the system, made suggestions that were seen to be useful and which have found their way into these amendments. Of course, I was not surprised to learn later that such wisdom originated in the sunny and beautiful city of Sudbury. Making the system more just and efficient is important, and deserves our support.

[Translation]

Since Canadians want to see specific measures to deal with duplication and overlap between various levels of government, it is only fair to expect our criminal law system to produce recommendations based on the principles of efficiency and effectiveness, while at the same time guaranteeing that justice is done in the public interest. In this respect, I was pleased to hear that the provinces approve of the amendments proposed in this bill.

[English]

While workloads between court levels will be affected, the objective of one of the proposals is to make it easier for the Supreme Court to manage its workload and to remand cases to lower courts for further proceedings when that would be just in the circumstances. This, I understand, is long overdue.

Other proposed changes aim at increasing the use of technology, such as permitting the use of fax machines in certain procedural matters and allowing people to appear by closed-circuit television at certain portions of preliminary hearings.

I was quite interested in these technological proposals. In my own field, "telemedicine" is becoming a way for physicians to offer health care services to rural areas. Telemedicine allows interactive video consulting and transmission of x-rays to areas which lack services. There are some relevant parallels between what we are discussing and what is happening in the field of telemedicine.

Although this bill is not to be seen as a cost-cutting proposal alone, one can only assume that changes such as that proposed for section 528 of the act dealing with copies of affidavits or warrants — officers of the court no longer will have to travel long distances to present someone with a warrant for his or her arrest — will save the justice system time and expense.

While there is an amendment which would provide for conducting some pretrial procedures by video communications, I am hopeful that the government will see fit to include expert witness testimony and the like in its next set of amendments, some of which will also aim to modernize the Criminal Code.

There are numerous other examples of common sense amendments, such as that which will permit statements to be videotaped. The present law says that first a written transcript must be made. That only results in more time and money spent at taxpayers' expense.

Moving from technology to the human factor, on the matter of making certain crimes of violence dual procedural offences, I am told that various women's groups are unhappy with giving the Crown prosecutor the option of dealing with certain crimes of violence either as an indictable offence or as a summary conviction. I can understand their apprehension and trust that officials will continue to work closely with concerned groups to monitor the effects of the proposed changes.

With victims in mind, I wish to add my support to the argument that a national registry of DNA samples taken from persons convicted of a criminal offence be developed here in Canada. It would be a practical tool which could serve both as a means to apprehend and convict, and to defend. Computer databases with DNA profiles could certainly be used in crimes without suspects, or even for unsolved earlier offences. The government should seek to move on this matter, as it is clear other nations have.

I have read the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice on this question during debate in the other place. He explained that the reason a DNA registry was not included is that there is a discussion paper now circulating on DNA. The Minister of Justice promised to give until November 20 for submissions on this discussion paper.

• (1420)

Dealing with the matter of a registry and other questions on DNA, the parliamentary secretary then added:

> The minister is undertaking that new legislation will be brought forward, if not by the end of the year, then early in the New Year.

As many Canadians are concerned with the means by which the justice system can resolve some of its inadequacies, I expect that that system will be looking to the various professional organizations and to the government for support in developing such a registry.

The fact of not having a provision for DNA evidence demands serious attention, as it could prove to be an embarrassment to the Canadian justice system.

[Translation]

According to a very interesting article I read last week, John Edwards of Correctional Service Canada announced that the population of this country's 41 penitentiaries would increase 7 per cent this year, and another 5 per cent annually in the next two years, although until now, the annual increase had been around 3 per cent. That is a substantial increase. Mr. Edwards attributed this to strong public pressure on judges to be more severe in cases of violent crime, and he pointed out that many judges had been criticized for being too lenient.

He added that in the United States, the number of persons incarcerated had soared, increasing from around 300,000 ten years ago to nearly one million today. Despite this increase among our neighbours to the south, many studies conducted by the Justice Committee have shown that putting more people in prison has done nothing to stem the tide of violent crime in the United States. I intend to watch very closely to see whether the number of people incarcerated will go up or down as a result of the proposed amendments we are discussing here today.

[English]

I have been informed that, from a purely economic point of view, the outcome of a number of criminal pursuits hardly justifies the time and money spent by the courts in administering justice. It is to be hoped that these changes will enable the courts to avoid unnecessary time, stress and expense.

In the other place, there was much debate on the issue of raising the monetary limit for theft and other property offences to $5,000 from $1,000 in order to keep more common offences in the provincial court system. The problem does not lie in whether or not there is something wrong symbolically in raising the limit. The reality is that theft under $5,000 is best dealt with in the provincial court, while anything over is best dealt with at the federal court level.

One question we should be asking is this: In terms of actual cases, what is the appropriate range of sanction? Of course, this is for another debate. Taking away the judge's ability to sentence by legislating ranges and relative minimums is the American way. We know what studies say about putting more people in prison: It has not solved America's violent crime problem.

Succinctly put, our system is not geared to lock up petty criminals. Whether that is right or wrong may be the basis for another discussion. What is important is that the laws that govern how the system works are in line with what is actually happening. I am of the opinion that these changes move in the right direction.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to make a brief observation.

As has been mentioned, this bill did not receive in-depth study in the other place. It went through the House in one day, where it was dealt with in Committee of the Whole. I hope that because of the actions over there, our committee will not hesitate to give it a full study and obtain whatever witnesses we need to appear before us. It is the kind of work that the Senate and its committees can do particularly well.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lewis, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

CANADA'S FOREIGN POLICY

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO EXTEND DATE FOR PRESENTATION OF FINAL REPORT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government), pursuant to notice of October 25, 1994, moved:

> That notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Wednesday, March 23, 1994, the date for the final report of the Special Joint Committee on Reviewing Canada's Foreign Policy be extended to Tuesday, November 15, 1994; and
>
> That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house thereof.

He said: Honourable senators will know that we received a message from the House of Commons advising that that House had extended the deadline for this report to November 15. My motion simply puts us on the same footing as the other place.

This is a request for a two-week extension. I do not think it will change much. The committee felt that it needed the additional time to complete its report.

Motion agreed to.

• (1430)

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO CONTINUE SPECIAL STUDY OF NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT REVIEW COMMISSION

Hon. Donald H. Oliver, pursuant to notice of October 25, 1994, moved:

> That notwithstanding its order of reference of March 17, 1994, the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to continue its special study on the report of the National Transportation Act Review Commission, entitled Competition in Transportation, Policy and Legislation in Review, tabled in the Senate on March 23, 1993 (Sessional Paper No. 323-912), and other matters relating to transportation; and
>
> That the Committee present its report no later than June 30, 1995.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a question for Senator Oliver. I have no problem with the first part of the motion, since it is simply to continue the study that has already been started on the National Transportation Act Review Commission.

However, it seems to me that the final words of the first paragraph in the motion create a rather broad situation, where it says "and other matters relating to transportation."

Senator Doody: That covers the waterfront.

Senator Molgat: That really covers the waterfront, as Senator Doody says. I have no problem with the first part of the motion. However, in my opinion it is expecting too much for the Senate to agree to the type of opening that is included in the second part of the motion.

Would Senator Oliver be prepared to remove those five words? If he needs further instruction or authority to go into other areas, he could come back to the Senate at that time. However, unless we are prepared to change our rules or our past practice, it is just not good practice for the Senate to give that type of broad authority to a committee.

Senator Oliver: Honourable senators, the language in this motion tracks the language of the original order of reference granted by the Senate last year. At that time, it included the language "and other matters relating to...". In other words, the language is identical.

The purpose of this motion is to extend the time for the report, which expires at the end of this month. This motion is merely asking for an extension of the original order of reference, in the precise language in which it was initially accepted by the Senate.

Senator Molgat: I must have missed it the first time around, if I were present at the time. However, if we missed it then, that does not necessarily mean that we should agree to it now, because it does present a problem for the Senate.

Perhaps Senator Oliver could tell us what he has in mind in terms of "other matters relating to transportation".

Senator Doody: This may take quite a while.

Senator Oliver: Honourable senators, we had the former chief negotiator, Mr. Molgat, appear before our committee, both last year and this year.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: That is a related matter!

Senator Oliver: The former chief negotiator, Mr. Molgat, provided some enlightenment into the bilateral negotiations that were underway. We intend to continue reviewing that subject.

As the honourable senator will know, the transportation committee in the other place is currently undertaking a similar study. There has been some discussion as to whether some of the studies could perhaps be conducted concurrently, but that matter is still up in the air. The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications will be meeting when the Senate rises today to discuss the further business of the committee, and that will be one of the matters discussed at that time.

Senator Molgat: I assure Senator Oliver that referring to my eminent and intelligent brother does not change my view as to broadening the scope of his inquiry.

Senator Doody: Nepotism notwithstanding.

Senator Molgat: If Senator Oliver should decide to go into other areas of transportation, would he advise the Senate so that we will know what the committee is doing?

Senator Oliver: I would be delighted to do so.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2:00 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, October 27, 1994

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE ROBERT MUIR

TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, once again we are called on to say farewell to a colleague who is leaving us on November 10, the day of his mandatory retirement. I am speaking, of course, of our colleague Senator Bob Muir, who brought to parliament in 1957 a great deal of practical experience, allowing him to represent the concerns of his generation with very special knowledge and understanding.

Senator Muir came to Canada with his family from Scotland at the age of two. They settled near Sydney, at Sydney Mines. At 15, in the midst of the depression, he had to leave school, and he found himself a job in the coal mines for $1.00 a day. At the age of 20, he was severely burned in a mine fire, and a few months later he was taken to the hospital following a rock-slide in the mine, which left him with his spine broken in two places and a number of broken ribs. Many other men would have been discouraged and depressed by such an experience, but not Senator Muir. He decided to start a new career above ground, and so he did.

Senator Muir got involved in community affairs. He was also involved in the labour movement and in hospitals. For ten years he was a town councillor in Sydney Mines. Finally, he was persuaded to run as a Conservative candidate in Cape Breton. He ran in 1957, and was re-elected in 1958, 1962, 1963, 1965, 1968, 1972 and 1974. In 1979, Prime Minister Trudeau, in one of his more judicious and inspired appointments, sent him to the Senate.

Senator Muir's approach to politics has always been constant. It was best described by him in an interview he gave to the Halifax Chronicle-Herald in May 1965, when he said:

> My number one duty is to the constituency that sent me here... I have no aspirations to make a name for myself on the national scene... I have no desire to take on positions that would distract me from my constituency work... I like the work and am prepared to stay here and do it as long as the people want me.

Senator Muir never failed to take up causes in Cape Breton, including ticking off the CBC for restricting or reducing Gaelic programming. At one time, he even raked over the coals a minister of the Crown whose name I will not mention. This minister called Cape Breton coal miners lazy. Senator Muir said that this particular minister had his "tongue in high gear when what little brain he's got is in park."

He even took on Senator Olson — who was then Minister of State for Economic Development — over the replacement of a Cape Breton coal-fired heating plant with oil burning units. I will not repeat here how he categorized that decision.

Senator Muir was not even afraid to take on his own government when vacancies on the Devco board were not being filled. Senator Murray quickly took care of that problem.

At a testimonial dinner in 1979, Bob Muir was recognized as a man of the people and a people's man. He was when he came to this house, he was before going into public life, and he remains so now. This is the same man we salute today.

Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Muir's colleagues on this side, I want to wish him many years of well-earned retirement from the Parliament of Canada. Our loss is a great one, but we are delighted that Cape Breton is getting him back full time.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn, (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to add my own words of congratulations and tribute to our colleague Senator Bob Muir on the occasion of his retirement from the Senate in a week or so. We are saying farewell today to a true gentlemen and — may I say from a background of many years — a good friend and a very kind and generous spirit.

Senator Lynch-Staunton has indicated that Senator Muir was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, and came to Canada at a very early age. That is true, but I do not believe it was so early that the blood of the determined Scot was not flowing fiercely through his veins.

Senator Muir has had a long and very distinguished political career, serving first as a member of Sydney Mines town council for ten years, before being elected to Parliament in 1957 as the member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, which later became Cape Breton—The Sydneys. He was re-elected in every general election up to and including 1974. In that period and since, Senator Muir has been synonymous with public service in one of the truly fine and beautiful places of this country, a place that is also very dear to my heart.

In his work as a member of both houses of Parliament, Senator Muir has been known as a true constituency man, in the finest sense of the word. He has pursued a number of issues with great vigour, championing the causes of many of our society's less fortunate. He has become known and respected for his efforts to improve the conditions facing Cape Breton steel workers and miners, to address the chronic problem of unemployment in his region, and to advocate the rights of aboriginal people, the disabled and the pensioners in this country.

In 1979 — and my friend Senator Lynch-Staunton referred to it as an inspired choice — Prime Minister Trudeau knew a good man when he saw one. He appointed Bob Muir to the Senate.

• (1410)

His arrival in this chamber certainly met with great praise in his home province. According to an editorial in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald at that time, Senator Muir —

> ...has the qualities that befit a Canadian senator: dedication to the task, a deep understanding of the political system, and an oft-demonstrated willingness and ability to speak with firmness and fairness for the rights of the "little man".

Senator Muir has indeed fulfilled those expectations, and has done so here and in the other place with refreshing candour, with humour, and with much common sense. In one of his earliest interventions in this chamber, Senator Muir said:

> I believe the first concern of a concerned government should be the relief of those in need.

He has lived by those words, and no matter the political stripe of the government of the day, he constantly urged it to remember and to act on the plight of those in need.

In the Senate, he has worked conscientiously on a number of challenging committees, including Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration — always a demanding one; Foreign Affairs; Transport and Communications; Aboriginal Affairs; and Standing Rules and Orders. He also served from 1980 to 1983 on the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution.

As has been noted, throughout his life Senator Muir has been a real fighter. He survived and overcame injuries sustained in a coal mine fire and later a cave-in, and he has recently battled illness.

We have been very glad to have you back here, Senator Muir. We very much hope your restored health will pave a pathway to a very full and active retirement. We know you will never lessen your concern for, nor your pride in, the people of Cape Breton, the people of your province of Nova Scotia, the people of Canada. You have made all of them proud in your contribution here on Parliament Hill.

I speak on behalf of all of my colleagues today in wishing you many happy years ahead with your family on the island that you love.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I have known Bob Muir perhaps longer than anyone else in this chamber. As I remember, it was in a provincial election in Nova Scotia, way back in 1937 when Bob first became active in a small 'way in political life — and may I say it was at my instigation. His real political career began in 1957 when he became a member of the House of Commons. It is a fine tribute to the esteem in which he is held that he was re-elected in 1958, in 1962, in 1963, in 1965, in 1968, in 1972, and again in 1974. I guess he would still be a member of the House of Commons if he had not been summoned to the Senate in 1979. In other words, honourable senators, his remarkable political career, which began in 1957 and is now ending in 1994, spans a period of some 37 years.

Honourable senators, it is not my intention today to speak of Senator Muir's activities as a member of the House of Commons or as a member of the Senate. Others may do that. I want to speak of him as a person, and as a close political and personal friend.

'Way back in 1965, Linden MacIntyre, the parliamentary reporter for the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, wrote a profile on Senator Muir. In part, he said:

> Bob Muir is a man who had to struggle for every inch of ground he has gained in life.
>
> He grew into young manhood just in time to get the full brunt of the hungry '30s.
>
> At the age of 15, he had to quit school to work in the coal pits.

The coal mines where Bob Muir first held employment were small. The work was very difficult and was done under extremely adverse conditions. Hard work and low pay were customary. When a new mine was opened in that vicinity, a modern, mechanized mine where working conditions were good, Bob obtained employment there.

It was the irony of fate that, while working in this modern mine, he had two serious accidents. In the first, he was caught in a flash fire and was severely burned. In the second, he was caught under a fall of stone and suffered a fractured spine, which ended his coal mining days and almost ended his life. Bob was in hospital for many months, and was told he would always have to use a wheelchair. However, a successful operation done in Montreal, known as a spinal fusion, enabled him to walk again, after another long hospital stay.

Honourable senators, when Bob Muir worked in the coal mines, he was active in union matters. He became a member of the executive of the local United Mine Workers. Indeed, several times he was a delegate to the international convention of that union.

It was while in hospital that Bob became a student and took various courses which were then available. He became so well read that he was able to make up for his lack of university education. His long hospital stay also gave him a lifelong interest in hospital care and medical care. He later became interested as well in municipal politics as a member of the town council of Sydney Mines, where he served for many years.

Honourable senators, Bob Muir has had to overcome many physical misfortunes in order to lead a normal life. He did, and in so doing earned the respect and, indeed, the admiration of all who have known him.

After Bob Muir became a member of Parliament, he gave new meaning, as it were, to the "duties" of that office. However, I should like to describe him as I know him and as I have known him. Senator Bob Muir is a man of high character: hard working, honest, upright in all his dealings, a good man in every way who has served his people well over the years. I do not know just what his plans are for the future. I do know he will keep busy. The fact that he has rented office space in his home town of Sydney Mines leads me to believe that he is about to start another career.

However, I would be giving Bob too much credit if I did not mention how much he owes to his wife, Mary. She was the one who was always there to give him hope when he needed it. She gave him encouragement when he needed encouragement. She is the one who still deserves a great deal of credit for Bob's distinguished career.

Honourable senators, I am glad to be able to pay this small tribute to my old friend Bob Muir and to his wife, Mary.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Muir and I were elected to the Parliament of Canada on the same day, June 10, 1957. More important, we came to the first session, which began in October of that year, and together we went through the whole learning process here. Perhaps he learned faster than I did, but we attended the same classes.

• (1420)

I wish to associate myself with all the things that have been said about Bob Muir. I completely agree with them. On a personal note, after almost — but not quite — 38 years here, I wish him well.

Hon. John Buchanan: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words in tribute to Senator Muir. It bears repeating that he has had a long and distinguished career here in Parliament: for 22 years as a member of the House of Commons and for 15 years as a member of the Senate. There is no doubt in my mind that had Bob Muir not come to the Senate but had continued to run in elections after 1979, he would still be over in the other place as a member of Parliament. I believe that "Allan J.," as he is affectionately known in Cape Breton, and my good friend Senator Graham agree in their hearts that what I have just said is absolutely correct. Is that not true?

Senator MacEachen: Yes, absolutely!

Senator Buchanan: As you get older, you get wiser.

Bob Muir has had a long and distinguished career. He is the epitome of what one would call the grass roots politician. We always hear that term "grass roots". It means that he is a populist — that is, a people person. The words "people" and "politics" are synonymous to him. That is what made the people in Cape Breton vote for Bob Muir in every election — not only for political reasons but also for many other reasons and problems that they had. They knew that they could go to Bob Muir and he would do the best job he could for them. He could go anywhere in Cape Breton and be accepted. Whether it was a Legion meeting, church meetings, lodge meetings, or political meetings, it did not matter; he was accepted.

I am sorry to see him leave the Senate, but when he goes back to Cape Breton, as John M. said, Bob will take up something else right away.

I am a Scot, but maybe he is a better Scot. I was born in Cape Breton and he was born right on the old sod, in Edinburgh. Years ago, at one of the various meetings I had attended in Cape Breton, Bob asked me, "What does the 'M' stand for in your initials?" I said, "Well, Bob, my father's mother was a MacLeod from North River and my mother's mother was a MacLennan." His reply was very typical of Bob Muir. He said, "There are many parts of Cape Breton where there are more MacLeods than people of any other name. You should be John MacLeod Buchanan there, and when in MacLennan territory, you should be John MacLennan Buchanan." This fellow is a smart and cagey politician.

Bob Muir has been a political colleague of mine for over 30 years. More important to me, though, is that he has been a personal friend of mine for over 30 years. I wish to conclude this tribute to him by saying:

May the road rise up to meet you.

May the wind be always at your back.

May the gentle rains fall upon your fields.

May the sun shine brightly upon your countenance.

May the Lord hold you, Mary, Robert, Gary and Ruth, in the palm of his hand forever. And this I extend to you: best wishes for a long and happy retirement.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, Senator Muir entered the House of Commons in 1957, as has been mentioned, having defeated the sitting Liberal member, Dr. Bill Buchanan.

Senator Buchanan: That was my cousin!

Senator MacEachen: Also entering the House of Commons from Cape Breton in that election was Donald MacInnis. He defeated the late Clary Gillis, who was the coal mining representative from Cape Breton for a great number of years. Mr. Gillis had established a reputation across Canada as a spokesman for the working people, and at one time he was the only CCF member in the House of Commons east of the prairies. He was joined for a period by the late Mr. Noseworthy who, as I remember, sat in a seat representing Toronto.

I was elected in 1953. I clearly remember the impact that both Bob Muir and Donald MacInnis made in the House of Commons when they came there. The Conservative Party was on the rise, and was poised to form a government, which it did in the election of 1958, temporarily interrupting my career in the House of Commons.

What impressed me about Bob Muir and Donald MacInnis was that, as persons in the true coal mining tradition with experience in coal mining communities, they could speak with a credibility that few had in the House of Commons. Those days were acrimonious days of political controversy because the two major parties were vying for office. None succeeded in holding a majority status in the House of Commons for a long time. Mr. Diefenbaker had a majority in 1958 which disappeared four years later, and Mr. Pearson failed to gain a majority during his five years as Prime Minister. The result was that both Bob and I had to fight three additional federal elections because of the successive minority situations that prevailed at that time. I still resent that outcome which forced us into these elections so frequently.

Bob Muir made an impression. It was a time in the House of Commons when real debate occurred, when members of Parliament made an impression, when they stood for something, and when they did not disappear into the anonymous mass of backbenchers. That was a wonderful period in the history of the House of Commons.

The time then came for a change, and as Senator Fairbairn put it, the Prime Minister knew a good man when he saw one. All I can say is that the Prime Minister's eyesight was assisted by his deskmate in the House of Commons at that time!

• (1430)

I remember the circumstances clearly; the natural discussions that would occur about the appointment of a Conservative to the Senate by a Liberal Prime Minister, and in particular who that choice would be. Of course, a secondary consideration was whether it was necessary or useful to appoint Mr. Muir, because we would defeat him anyway in the next election. The charitable point of view prevailed. Senator Muir was called to the Senate, and he has had a good career since then.

Honourable senators, Senator Muir and I spent many years together in the House of Commons, and 10 years together in the Senate. His departure will be a break in the continuity, not only of our political relationship, but of his representation of the Island of Cape Breton.

As I said earlier, there were acrimonious and politically charged moments in the House of Commons in those early years because of the political struggles that were fought, won and then lost by each party. Despite those struggles, I do not think the Leader of the Government will find on the record any criticisms made by me about Bob Muir in the House of Commons. I also doubt if she will find any that Senator Muir made about me, because while we maintained an acrimony, there was also mutual respect and admiration, which has continued on my part until this day.

[Senator MacEachen]

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, you will not be surprised if I pay tribute to my friend, not only as an independent senator —

[English]

He will not be surprised either. I hope he will forgive me if I relate a personal anecdote. Senator MacEachen was kind enough to tell us about some discussions that took place in the House of Commons relating to his seatmate.

I should like to relate a story which happened in my career, since three witnesses to it are present. I was travelling with a good friend who taught me much about the Maritimes, Nova Scotia and, in particular, Cape Breton. His name was Mr. Muir. We were both active in certain parliamentary associations. I always wanted to know about the "others," that is, those who do not speak my first language.

We were travelling together in China. A colleague whom we found embarrassing was assigned to my car. At that time in China, everything was extremely disciplined. If you were assigned to a car for 10 days, then you had to travel in that particular car for 10 days. The person who was assigned to share that car with me was not the best character with whom to travel. I insisted of my Chinese host that I have as my companion Mr. Muir, but to no avail. If you did not travel in the car to which you were assigned, then the caravan would come to a complete standstill. After much persistence on my part, Mr. Muir and I were finally assigned to the same car.

Honourable senators will know that, since my appointment to this place, I have always performed my constitutional duties as a senator. However, in my other life I used to do my Liberal duty. In talking about the future with Mr. Muir, I said, "It's too bad that in the Senate there are not more representatives of the various types of people who live in Canada. For instance, Mr. Muir, you represent the worker. You have always stood up in the House of Commons for the rights of miners. You would be a perfect choice for an appointment to the Senate someday." He replied, "Are you kidding? I'm a miner. Nobody would ever appoint me to the Senate."

He then gave me some supplementary information. He said, "You know, my seat is not a Conservative seat; it is a Liberal seat." That was enough for me. I made a rapid phone call. I still have my bill for that call because, in the old days, it was quite expensive to call from China to Canada. I reported, as I have always done, faithfully to the people involved, my conversation with an esteemed friend who I thought would be a good addition to the Senate.

Mr. Muir represents to me what I think the Senate should be; that is, representative of the people of Canada who come from every walk of life. Although he is leaving the Senate, my communication with him will not end. He has always tutored me about many aspects of Canada. He exemplifies how Canadians should live together, that is, by trying to know and understand each other better.

Senator Watt has also been my tutor. Both he and Senator Marchand have taught me much about our aboriginal peoples and, as a result, my attitude and perceptions have changed.

I am sorry to see Senator Muir leave. I say only "au revoir," and not "good-bye." I am grateful to have had him as a good friend over the years.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, while Senator MacEachen was the seatmate of the then Prime Minister Trudeau, Senator MacEachen being the Deputy Prime Minister of the country, I was one of Senator Muir's constituents. I was also president of one of the major political parties in the country interested in the future of the area.

As I listen to my colleagues speak of Senator Muir, particularly those with roots in that particular part of the country, I am reminded of the view held by some Cape Bretoners that there are really two kinds of Cape Bretoners: those who were born there, and those who wish they had been born there. Some even regard their birth on Cape Breton Island as a personal accomplishment rather than a biological accident.

In our part of the world, Dr. Jimmy Tompkins, one of the founders of the St. Francis Xavier University Extension Department, was famous for saying that when a man gets up on his hind legs, no one can walk on him. Dr. Jimmy did not just say it, he worked at it. He worked at it daily by giving little people the inspiration to stand up straight and tall, with pride in their own humanity, and with a belief that no man or woman is better than any other. As a friend and admirer, I can honestly say that Senator Bob Muir has spent most of his life not only thinking and believing but, most important, practising that philosophy.

As has already been mentioned, Bob was a coal miner himself. He learned from practical experience that little people really are Canada. It is in their hearts and minds where the real meaning of "Canada" is defined daily. It is in the coal mines, the steel mills, the aboriginal communities, the offshore places, the northern places, the farms, the forests and the factories. It is in all the ordinary places that the real Canada is born, revitalized and reborn daily.

The real Canada is found in all its ordinary places. The real leaders, those who really count in this country, are those who recognize and give testimony to this simple truth.

• (1440)

Therefore, to be the quintessential constituency person, as Senator Muir has always been, is a simple recognition that our people are our tapestry, and that no man or woman achieves greatness without a regular communion with them. For it is the little people who have had the conviction that something better than the status quo could be built here, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It is those of great hearts, such as Senator Muir, who have ensured that absolutely no one could walk over them, simply by giving them the daily inspiration to stand up straight and tall.

Alfred Lord Tennyson once wrote, "I am a part of all that I have met." He wrote that without ego. It was a simple recognition of his humanity. Many of us can live long lives without recognizing or acknowledging that basic truth; not so Senator Muir.

Indeed, it is the greatest tribute I can pay you to say to you, Honourable Senator Bob, that you have been part of all you have met, and that the lives touched by you on a daily basis have been made immeasurably richer by your presence. I extend to you, to your wife, Mary, and to all the members of your family an expression of gratitude for your great work, and your wonderful friendship. Best wishes for good health and happiness in your retirement.

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I will not be long. The tributes thus far have mentioned much of what should be said about Senator Muir.

I served with Senator Muir on the other side, in particular on the Indian Affairs Committee, as it was called in those days. His friendship and work did not go unnoticed. I appreciated very much the work that he did.

Senator Muir, I have always appreciated your friendliness, your attitude toward our people, and the knowledge you have about them. I wish you well in your retirement. I wish you and your family all the happiness as you start the rest of your life.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, as I listened to all the good things being said about Senator Bob Muir today, the thought came to me that it would be apropos to join in and agree with those compliments.

Senator Muir was just a little Scot from Cape Breton when I began my political career six years before him. I saw this little Scot elected in Cape Breton during the Diefenbaker sweep, when my fellow Canadians turned towards the blue. My friend Senator Phillips from Prince Edward Island rode that tide. At one point I thought that it may be the beginning of the end for me, but I am still on the go, and still in this place with Bob Muir.

I did not get to know Senator Muir personally until he was appointed to the Senate, not by his own party but by the good old Liberal government of Pierre Trudeau. The Liberals of the day realized that Bob Muir had, in the bottom of his heart, a liberal philosophy to help the poor, the underdog and the underprivileged. He did not stand for big business or big companies; he stood for the little people. That is why the Liberal government said that this man should represent the people of Cape Breton until he reached 75 years of age.

Bob Muir is a people's man. He spends a lot of time and a lot of money supporting crippled children with bone deformities and burns. He contributes to that cause each year.

Senator Muir and I have an old friend we call Hiram with whom we have travelled at different times. In fact, Senator Muir and I travelled to South Africa together. We fought to bring an end to apartheid. We dined with many coloured leaders in South Africa to hear their firsthand view of how we could help to bring an end to apartheid. Senator Muir will remember the interesting conversations we had with the leaders of the black communities of South Africa. During that time, I got to know Senator Muir and his wife, Mary, on a personal basis, and we became very close friends.

When Bob Muir leaves the Senate to go home to bigger and better things, I will be losing a good friend, a good companion, a good parliamentarian, and a good Liberal. I know that in the last year Senator Muir has had difficulty with his health. He is getting over that now, and getting ready to start his new career. I hope that he and Mary and his family will have many years of good health and happiness together and the opportunity to look after more of those crippled and burned children in the future.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I feel I must say a few words about the Honourable Senator Muir, though I find it difficult to refer to him. We were both members of the kindergarten class of 1957, which came in with the Diefenbaker sweep.

I recently travelled by plane with a Liberal from Cape Breton who said that Bob Muir is regarded as a god there. I had never thought of him in that way. We had many discussions and many disagreements on various viewpoints, but in Cape Breton he is, as the Liberal MP said, considered a god.

I will remember Bob Muir as a friend with whom I could discuss a multitude of issues. I could agree or disagree with him, but we were always friends.

As we approach a certain age, we think of people retiring and of them having a "golden" future.

Senator Muir and his good wife, Mary, as a result of a car accident, have encountered a number of physical problems. Senator Muir was admitted to the National Defence Medical Centre with aortic and then cardiac problems. Fortunately, he has recovered from all of those problems and is now considered by the National Defence Medical Centre to be in good health. It is my sincere hope and wish that he and his wife, Mary, make a complete recovery from all of their physical problems and that they enjoy the days ahead.

May he also continue to enjoy the attitude of those Cape Bretoners who regard him to be somewhat of a god. I know of his Presbyterian background and of his wife's Seventh Day Adventist background. Somewhere in between, they will find a Buddha-like atmosphere of peace. It is my hope, my honourable friend, that you will become the "Buddha of Cape Breton".

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, to respond immediately to my dear friend and colleague Senator Phillips, I say, "Dominus vobiscum."

To the uninitiated and to those people who have recently been appointed to this chamber, this is the only place I know of where you can listen to your own eulogy. That is kind of nice because, when you are stretched out in that oak box, or whatever it is made of, you will not hear it then. You will know nothing about it. It is much better to hear it in this chamber.

To all of you, thank you so very much. I have been away for a period of time dealing with the problems that have been outlined. I would wish our new Clerk, who was appointed during my absence, all the best.

To our new Speaker with whom I served in the other place, I convey my best regards. Before he became a member, our Speaker worked with the Right Honourable Lester Pearson, a great man.

The Honourable Senator MacEachen will remember the problems we had with the steel mill. Hawker Siddeley announced, "You are through," and, in an instant, four thousand people were unemployed. The Speaker came to my office, sat down with me and talked it over, as did Senator MacEachen. Those kindnesses you do not forget.

I remember the Honourable Senator Graham's involvement with the Cape Breton Development Corporation. If I needed help to solve a problem a coal miner might have with, say, his pension, I would talk it over with him. He did not care if I was a Conservative or whatever. He tried to help in whatever way he could.

The new Leader of the Government in the Senate will have little recollection of these events because she was too young. I can remember when she was a member of the press gallery.

Senator Fairbairn: I remember.

Senator Muir: She worked her way up through the Prime Minister's office and did a remarkable job. She is still doing a good job today.

I thank the people at the table here who have always been so good to me. I would also thank all of you who have spoken.

Our own leader, Senator Lynch-Staunton, excelled today. I do not know where he got his information, but he sure managed to dig up a lot of details that I did not think people knew about. Senator John Macdonald was my campaign manager and my treasurer. As he jokes about it, when we ran elections we did not have charts on the wall; committees for this and committees for that. Only four or five of us did all the work. In those days, the only difference was, as John M. says, you always knew you would be able to win elections. Now that we have all this organization, we cannot win elections. He laughs about that. He is a great and wonderful man.

Senator Macdonald spoke about how early I became involved in politics. I looked after two polls for his dad in 1937 when I was only a kid. I thought it was a big job. We got cards, five bucks apiece and a tankful of gas. Some of you may ask, "Well, how old is he?" I want you to know I ran for town council when I was ten years old. I am not so very old.

The Honourable Senator Bud Olson and I tossed our arguments back and forth in the other place. As I look around and think about the "class of 1957," I see that there are few of us left. I see the Honourable Senator MacEachen, the Honourable Orville Phillips, and myself. The Honourable Heath Macquarrie retired just a few weeks ago.

I always resented that so-called "sweep" of 1957 because, in Cape Breton — or Cap-Breton, whichever you prefer — some people could not pronounce "Diefenbaker." Ours was a minority government, so those of us who were elected in 1957 felt we had done quite a bit on our own, although I did win by only 380 votes over a man who had received between 4,000 and 5,000 votes in 1953.

Senator Allan MacEachen was first elected in 1953 and re-elected in 1957. He did not run for office for a short period.

As usual, Senator Buchanan excelled in his speech today. Of course I only believe half of the lies he tells. Senator Prud'homme did himself proud. Senator Graham's remarks also were excellent. I would thank Senator Bonnell and all of you for your kind remarks.

Why should I not say these things? You have been saying nice things about me, of all people.

Those of you who are new here, please remember this place is comprised of men and women of great knowledge. They are continually criticized by those who could not qualify to become dog catchers. I served in the other place for 22 years and in this place for 15 years and 6 months. When I look around me and I see all of you fine people, I forget those "holy willies" who say, "We must get rid of that place." I look around me and I see people who have served their provinces and their country in every facet of life, in politics and in business. You have done your best to help your people. You deserve so much credit.

What a privilege it is to live in a country where you can start out in a coal mine at 15 years of age and go on to become a senator of Canada. The Honourable Senator Allan MacEachen knows what this is about. His dad was a coal miner who reared a family who went on to become professors at various famous universities.

As Senator MacEachen, Senator Graham and Senator Bonnell have said, there were times when I really did not know what my political philosophy was. There were those in my own caucus who, on the odd occasion, would say, "Bob, you should be CCF," as it was then, or "Bob, you should be NDP," or "You should be Liberal." I would say, "No, I am for the problem that we have. Let us straighten it out." I did not know a lot. You see, I had not been a banker or anything like that. I mean no disrespect toward bankers; I need them. As the late Honourable George Nowlan used to say, "When the last day comes, I will have six of them carry me to my resting place, because they have been carrying me all my life."

• (1500)

I wish to congratulate Senator Carstairs, since I was not able to do so earlier. I sent a picture to her the other day. I was in a wheelchair and was cutting a ribbon to open a wing of a hospital of which I was chairman. The gentleman standing alongside of me in the picture was her dad, the Minister of Health in Nova Scotia.

I spoke also with Senator Pearson the other day. I used to make it a habit — perhaps a lot of you do not approve of it, but I do not care — on a prime minister's birthday, of sending him a gift of some sort, wrapped in Cape Breton tartan paper. The gifts might not have been worth a lot, but I still did it. I had some swordfish swords, given to me by fishermen from my area. Having come from the area that you hail from, Your Honour, you will know what they do with those swords.

In any event, this was a swordfish sword with a beautifully carved handle. I said to one of my girls, "Let's wrap that. We will put tartan paper on it and send it to Prime Minister Pearson for his birthday." It was done. Later, while I was in the washroom — and everyone goes there once in a while — someone rushed in and said, "The Prime Minister wants you on the phone." I went to the phone and he said, "Bob, I am sitting behind my desk with my claymore in my hand. Won't I have fun with my grandchildren with that?"

Years later, I attended a dinner in Delhi, India. A lovely lady was sitting beside me — and I love lovely ladies — and I looked at her card, which read "Pearson." I said, "You would not be related to 'the' Mr. Pearson, would you?" She said, "He is my father-in-law." She then said, "Muir? You are the man who gave him the swordfish sword." Here we were in India, comparing notes like that.

As Senator MacEachen has said, we debated and debated over in the House of Commons. We also got cross at each other. I used to get really upset back then. However, even though we had disagreements, it would be all over afterwards.

I want to thank Senator Keon, who fixed my heart up. I can still get a little cross once in a while.

I remember speaking to the county council of Victoria County, Nova Scotia. They invited me to dinner afterwards. I was relating something to them and then I said, "Allan and I went to dinner." An old gentleman nearby straightened up in his chair and said, "What was that you said about Allan?" I said, "Well, nothing." — they thought he was God too, you see — "Allan and I then went to dinner". He replied, "Don't tell me you eat with those fellows, too!" I mistook him, he was actually a strong Conservative. Politics is a strange business.

I will always remember those who have helped me over the years; for example, Senator Davey; Senator Riel, who is not here but who comforted me in the hospital when I had heart problems; and Senator Kenny, who was also helpful to me.

I also extend a welcome to Senator Roux. Congratulations are also in order for Senators Bacon, Carstairs and Pearson.

I wish to thank my seatmate, the Honourable Jack Marshall, who has done so much for the veterans of this country and many other people.

Please forgive me if I have forgotten anyone.

I wish you all a good, long life. Enjoy it while you can and work hard. Senator Stewart and I used to scrap with each other but he never held it against me.

The Cape Breton Development Act came about as a result of the efforts of the Honourable Allan MacEachen. Where in this country is there another act that looks after coal miners the way that legislation has done, through all these years, in Cape Breton? I am sure that former premier — now Senator — Buchanan would agree with that. He was the mastermind behind it all. Senator Ike Smith, who was here in the Senate when Senator Buchanan was premier, took over the steel mill when everyone else said, "Do not touch it. Stay away from it." He kept things going.

I am rambling now, but I wish I could be with you all a lot longer. I am not sad at leaving. I am sad because I am getting old. That is what is wrong with me.

I almost forget Senator Lowell Murray because he is so quiet all the time. I worked on his campaign in 1956. Despite all my efforts, he was defeated. In 1957, when I ran, he wrote my acceptance speech because, as he said, "I cannot depend on you. You will get too wild and you will say things that will lose you votes."

Honourable senators, after I sit down I will probably ask myself, "Why did I not say this or that?" In any event, God bless all of you. I just wish I was 30 years younger and could keep working away here. Thank you all so very much for your help.

Hon. Senators: Here, here!

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

COLLÈGE MILITAIRE ROYAL DE ST-JEAN

FORTY-SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF VISIT BY THE RT. HON. VINCENT MASSEY

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, it is not as common today as it once was to quote the Right Honourable Vincent Massey as an authority on the values that bind us together in this fractious country. It is my purpose to do that today, to call this chamber's attention to the forty-second anniversary on November 13 of Massey's visit to the Collège Militaire Royal de St-Jean.

In these times when we are being asked to accept compromises to the preservation of traces of the national function of this historic institution, it is particularly useful to have handy the words of a great Liberal defender of the "noble tradition" that we have abandoned. Perhaps in earlier, simpler times it was possible to see more clearly and rejoice more openly in the challenges of public service.

• (1510)

Governor General Massey said:

> ... in this historic area, on this ancient site, men of our three services and of our two cultures come together for a common task. For this task you, the students, receive here not just training, but education. The defence of our way of life is more than a technique. It is a calling. One cannot defend unfamiliar ground. You come here to know what you have to defend as well as how to defend it. Undoubtedly you learn here military science along with the new techniques, the new methods and devices that scientific advances have made possible, but you are also directed to the understanding of values which are permanent. They are not old because they are always renewing themselves. And in learning how to understand and to defend these values you receive here certain virtues which may be somewhat neglected elsewhere; the classic virtues of duty, discipline, and of good manners.
>
> May I say one thing more. I have to offer you a very special and personal piece of advise. You are here together — French- and English-speaking Canadians, with every obligation and every opportunity to learn to know and to understand each other's language, culture and character. Do not neglect this precious opportunity, which comes to you just at the age when you are in a position to profit from it to the full. Your minds are open and your judgment is generous. Learn to speak and think and feel together. Do not forget what is your own, but develop the understanding and sympathy that comes from speaking another's language, not only with the tongue, but with the mind and with the heart.
>
> You have a great and noble tradition behind you and a great and worthy task before you. May you be inspired by both to go forward to your work with energy and enthusiasm. Remember always that you are to defend not only the soil of your country but the life of your civilization, and remember that your civilization has this great quality: it can be defended only by those who understand it with their minds and who adorn it by their conduct.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, we will be away from this chamber on November 11 next, the anniversary of Armistice Day, November 11, 1918. We will be at our homes and constituencies, joining with our fellow Canadian citizens in remembering our fallen Canadian citizens who died during the various wars in which Canada participated.

Each day as we assemble in this chamber, we are reminded of World War I by the tableaus on both walls of this chamber. These tableaus depict Canadian soldiers who took part in World War I, and were donated to us by an imminent Canadian citizen. I pay special tribute to these fallen valiant Canadians, members of the Canadian Armed Forces, as well as to all the other veterans, soldiers, seamen and airmen, who died during World War I, World War II and the Korean War, and especially those who fought alongside the Canadian Armed Forces under Canadian generals.

Before I conclude my remarks, I would also thank our colleagues who played a significant role in the celebrations commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of D-day, two of whom I should like to mention this afternoon who are colonels of Canadian regiments: our colleagues Senator Molgat and Senator Marshall. I would also thank our colleagues and members of this chamber who went with them to Normandy to represent us. Today we recall those beautiful ceremonies. Those of us who were not able to be present were able to watch them on television. We are all proud of the role they played. I thank them today for their sacrifice.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXCISE ACT
CUSTOMS ACT
TOBACCO SALES TO YOUNG PERSONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. John Sylvain, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

Thursday, October 27, 1994

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

TWELFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Excise Act, the Customs Act and the Tobacco Sales to Young Persons Act, has examined the said Bill in obedience to its Order of Reference dated Thursday, June 16, 1994, and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN SYLVAIN
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Sylvain, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

REPORT OF COMMITTEE UPON THE FUTURE DEVELOPMENT OF THE DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS TABLED—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the Fifth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology entitled "Keeping Faith: Into the Future".

With leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 98(3), I move that the report be taken into consideration now in order to enable me to say a few words.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, I begin by acknowledging and paying tribute to all honourable senators who served on the committee and to all the very devoted staff members, some of whom I see seated in the gallery this afternoon.

It is not my intention to deal specifically with the report and its 53 recommendations. I will leave that to the chairman of the subcommittee, Senator Marshall, who will address the subject more directly in a few moments. However, I would like to say something about Senator Marshall, who is submitting his final report on behalf of veterans, since, sadly, he is due to retire from this place on November 26 of this year.

Senator Marshall's distinguished career in the service of Canada has been remarkable by any standards. Some of Winston Churchill's memorable words may help us to better understand the significance of his contribution. On the occasion of his 80th birthday, Churchill was heard to say, and I quote:

> I have never accepted what many people had kindly said, namely, that I had inspired the nation. It was the nation and the race dwelling all around the globe that had the lion's heart. I had been called upon to give the roar.

Since first being elected to Parliament in 1968, Senator Marshall has championed persistently the cause of veterans, challenging successive governments on their behalf. If any constituency in Canada possesses a lion's heart, it is our veterans. If any one person has ever been called upon to give the lion's roar on behalf of veterans, it has been the Honourable Jack Marshall.

Born in Glace Bay, he enlisted in the Canadian Army in 1942 as a private. He was one of that generation of Canadians who hit the beaches of Normandy on D-day, with courage as their sustenance and freedom as their guide. Senator Marshall's New Brunswick regiment was part of one of the infantry divisions which were the solid core of a multinational effort to free Nazi-occupied Europe.

On June 6, 1944, their sacrifice breathed new life into the struggle across the continent. The inscription on the memorial of an unidentified soldier who died at Normandy told their story. It reads as follows:

> He loved the simple things
> He hated war
> But when his call came
> He gave his all.

Each of them gave their all for all of us. General Crerar, in his VE-day message to the First Canadian Army on May 7, 1945, pointed out that "Each for all" has been the guiding principle of the Canadian Army in battle. He said at the time that that same principle is the essential one to which we must adhere if we are to assure the life and the growth of democratic government in the world, the community system which has been so eloquently described by Abraham Lincoln as, "Government of the people, for the people, and by the people."

As the soldiers of Canada have worked to it in war, the citizens of Canada can do no less in peace — and so they have, each of them for all of us.

As time has passed, the values of this earlier period, values such as duty, justice and virtue, have been sometimes bypassed and ignored by later generations. The lion's roar, the voice of Senator Jack Marshall, bore witness to the agenda of the veterans. He, with his customary dogged determination, put that agenda squarely in front of the many Canadians who had lost sight of the importance of our past.

Today, we struggle here in Canada with the problem of defining a common loyalty to the well-being of the whole country. As we look around us, it is clear that some of our greatest enemies are fear and discouragement. We must keep the faith as we plunge ahead into the future. In fact, that is the title of this fourth major report prepared by the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs under the chairmanship of Senator Marshall. Throughout his twenty-six and a half years as a parliamentarian, he has been a tenacious defender of this very special constituency of Canadians. Because of his efforts, the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs was formed in 1985 and has since been a part of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, which today I have the honour to chair.

During his 17-year Senate career, Senator Marshall has used every opportunity that the rules of the chamber would allow to defend and press the cause of veterans. His private office in the Senate became a veritable shrine of hope for thousands of veterans from within Canada and, indeed, from many parts of the globe.

It must be remembered that Senator Marshall's lengthy career with the Armed Forces, which culminated in his appointment as District Commander of the Militia for Newfoundland, gave him a unique understanding of, and a lifelong commitment to, the welfare of veterans.

Throughout his productive career, Senator Marshall has brought the values of his generation back to Canada. This was the generation of the lion's heart.

Canadian veterans believe that each of them served in the interests of all of us. In the declining years of the twentieth century, such a simple truth has been and has become a moral imperative in the struggle for the beaches of the future.

It will be difficult, if not impossible, to provide an adequate replacement for Senator Marshall. Veterans everywhere should be assured that we remaining members of this chamber will do our utmost to ensure that their concerns and their best interests will remain high on the Senate agenda and, indeed, on the agenda of the Government of Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, there are not too many Canadians, let alone Canadian senators, who could be worthy of the overwhelming and generous words of praise that Senator Graham has bestowed upon me. While I am sure that I am not worthy of the esteem in which the famous and revered Winston Churchill was held, with the exception of his roar — and my staff and my wife will attest to that — I will be forever grateful. Furthermore, I will read the printed words in the Debates of the Senate of October 27 each and every morning from this day forward. I thank you, Senator Graham.

Honourable senators, if I can find the steadiness to continue, I thank Senator Graham in his capacity as chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology for allowing me to address the report he has tabled today. I thank him, too, for his support and counsel during the mandate of the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs to examine and report upon the future direction of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

As well, I pay respect to the members of the subcommittee, and I refer, of course, first, to Deputy Chairman Bonnell, who was chairman when the main committee drafted its first report in 1981, entitled, "They Served, We Care." Six of the seven recommendations in that report were implemented by the government of the day.

I thank, too, Senator Phillips, an RCAF Bomber Command veteran, who was a prominent player in our foray into the series of films, The Valour and the Horror, not to mention his involvement in our current mandate.

I thank, too, Senator Jessiman, another D-day veteran, who had exemplary service in the Royal Canadian Navy flotillas, and who is a new and welcome devoted member of the committee.

I thank as well Senator Cools, who is a new and enthusiastic recruit for the subcommittee, and who found her place very well in our deliberations.

All members of the committee devoted much of their summer recess to our deliberations with loyalty and keen interest as we heard the issues as expressed by the many veterans who appeared and gave evidence.

I should like now to take a moment to acknowledge my staff, who worked tirelessly, without complaint — without even the lion's roar — for extended hours and weekends to meet the many deadlines that occurred at each phase of this report.

From my office, there is Mr. André Lemieux, and here I must credit myself with one aspect of the report — that is, in finding a man of his calibre. He is a former Chief Pensions Advocate in the Department of Veterans Affairs and was special advisor to me and the subcommittee. He brought invaluable advice from his many years of experience and his vast knowledge in dealing with the pension process, something which is taxing all veterans today.

I should like to acknowledge Ms Janelle Feldstein, my capable research assistant, who contributed greatly to the content and compilation of all aspects of the report.

Ms Laura Fox, my administrative assistant, gave valuable input as a result of her knowledge of the workings of the department and matters of priority to veterans.

I should also like to mention Tina Faouaz, a young student, who volunteered and then became part of my staff. She contributed wherever needed in support of our efforts.

In acknowledging the staff of the subcommittee, I would like to extend my appreciation to Mr. Patrick Savoie, clerk of the subcommittee, whose exemplary organizational skills kept our committee on track and running smoothly. Mr. Peter Phelan, the administrative assistant to the subcommittee, acted as liaison between my office, the clerk's office and the members of the subcommittee.

Another member of the staff whom I should like to acknowledge is Mrs. Françoise Crepin, administrative assistant to the clerk, who worked tirelessly in preparation of the report and who maintained close communication with the translators in keeping up with daily changes, which sometimes aggravated members of the committee to no end.

Finally, I thank Mr. Grant Purves, a research officer from the Library of Parliament, who has served with the subcommittee on all its previous reports and whose wealth of knowledge of our mandate was most helpful in the production of the report.

Honourable senators, in addressing the report, if I make some criticism in my comments or observations, I do not direct that criticism to any particular government, past or present. The Veterans' Charter is a product of successive governments established many decades ago. The present legislation and the regulations making up the charter have been created over many painstaking years by many government leaders. Today, it is considered to be one of the most generous in the world, a fact that is acknowledged in like veterans' administrations of many nations with whom we interact, as well as by a majority of veterans.

While we can be proud of Canada's record of generosity to our veterans, we must not lose sight of the price they paid to preserve our freedom, particularly as we commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the end of World War II, and as we exclaim loud and clear about the sacrifice of our veterans. Nor should we lose sight of their loyalty to their country and their contribution to the birth of our nation.

Not too many words have been uttered yet about the reality that too many of those now aging veterans are still denied certain benefits because of outmoded and outdated legislation, as brought to the attention of the subcommittee by a veterans' organization which represents a majority of some 500,000 veterans in Canada. To emphasize this reality, we had a message which resounded loud and clear when a 91-year old veteran, Gerry La Grave, who is president of the Ferry Command Association, took the trouble to drive from Montreal to Ottawa to appeal to the committee, not on his own behalf, but for his comrades, for recognition of their service. The subcommittee certainly took notice.

I should like to mention as well a 76-year old widow, Frances Crummer, who spent six years fighting for her recently deceased husband's claim for a pension which was denied because of the refusal of the medical staff to recognize the consequential effects of what it deemed a superficial wound. Something is missing in terms of our generosity. Despite her long fight to no avail, she praised the Bureau of Pensions Advocates for their counsel in representing her case. Indeed, she has become a proficient advocate of the cumbersome pension process. She should be applauded.

The report tabled today is entitled, "Keeping Faith: Into the Future". It is appropriately titled because it represents Canada's commitment to its veterans made by the then Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden, in 1917, just before the Canadian youth of that day went into the battle of Vimy Ridge and achieved a victory that no other nation could achieve. We still refer to that victorious day as the day our nation was born. As well, that was the day that gave birth to this government commitment which I will repeat, as I have time and time again. Sir Robert Borden said to the Canadian troops:

> You can go into action assured of this, and as head of the government, I give you this assurance; that you need to have no fear that the government and the country will fail to show just appreciation of your service to the country in what you are about to do and what you have already done. The government and the country will consider it their first duty to...prove to the returned men its just and due appreciation of the inestimable value of the services rendered to the country and empire; and that no man, whether he goes back or whether he remains in Flanders, will have just cause to reproach the government for having broken faith with the men who won and the men who died.

He also said:

> What does the country owe to those who, forsaking everything, offered their lives in its defence — to try and compensate for the time that was lost and the opportunities that were missed?

Honourable senators, the second part of the report's title, "Into the Future", should remind us as well of the new role established by our leaders of government, the so-called peacekeeping and peacemaking role, which challenges Canada to restate Sir Robert Borden's commitment to a new generation of veterans — the young men and women of the Canadian forces — whom we commit to previously unpredicted danger areas in the world and which, as well, create new effects of warfare, such as post-traumatic stress syndrome and Gulf War syndrome, which came to the attention of the subcommittee with some prominence. These disorders require immediate, indeed priority attention, as do the psychological and physiological scars which show up many years after the war. These matters were brought to the subcommittee's attention by some prominent witnesses.

Let me state some of the warnings expressed to the subcommittee by these experts. Dr. Lynne Beal, who appeared before the committee a second time concerning prisoners of war, said:

> The department has taken no leadership in assisting veterans in getting psychological help through diagnosis and treatment.

Professor Terry Copp said:

> Canadian servicemen and women who have served in situations of great tension like Bosnia, Rwanda, Somalia, et cetera will come forward sometimes years after they have left the Armed Forces and expect help in dealing with the symptoms of PTSS and compensation for the degree it has disabled them.

Colonel Jamieson of the Department of National Defence acknowledged that there was a problem with the follow-up support, particularly with respect to reserve force members who have been called up to serve for a specific mission, and that the Department of National Defence did not have a legal obligation to offer reserve force members treatment after their contracts have expired.

Dr. Lynne Beal said as well that department officials showed no interest in the findings she presented to the subcommittee back in 1990.

In the second part of the report, one of the most persistent concerns brought to the attention of the subcommittee had to do with major proposed changes to the pension and adjudication process relating to restructuring. These changes were proposed by the Department of Veterans Affairs and supported by the government to answer veterans' demands to reduce the backlog of cases. There are some 10,000 to 12,000 cases spread across the system. Veterans want the turnaround time for processing claims shortened as the aging process takes its toll.

In essence, the recommendations of the subcommittee as contained in the report should be in line with the legislative amendments to the Pension Act that the government intends to introduce soon, as a result of an extensive evaluation study carried out by outside experts. In its report, the subcommittee cautions us to ensure that the amendments protect the enshrined solicitor-client relationship. The solicitor would be the pensions advocate who represents the veteran.

• (1540)

The committee further supports the proposed merging of the Canadian Pension Commission and the Veterans Appeal Board to become a single board with two divisions of appeal. Finally, the committee agrees with the proposal of the department that the Bureau of Pensions Advocates, an agency which represents the veteran in the preparation and presentation of his claim, join the department for administrative efficiency but continue to maintain its professional independence.

The recommendations made by the committee with respect to the process are conceived to simplify the process and to reinforce statutory requirements in the spirit of cooperation in order to reduce the turnaround times that are damaging the credibility of the system for veterans. It is hoped, with some positive assurance, that the turnaround time for the adjudication process will be cut by half with the end objective that veterans will support the department's motto of "speed, courtesy and fairness."

The report lists some 53 recommendations that are too numerous to address in the short time provided, but I recommend the report to all senators and encourage them to examine those sections of the report and an executive summary in which they may be interested which are well defined and self-explanatory. Every senator contributed to the betterment of veterans and the success of their claims, bearing in mind that they are getting older.

I will conclude by referring to Part I of the report and specifically to the section entitled, "Unfinished Business" and to some themes and issues that are illustrative examples of the continuing and longstanding concerns of veterans which are revisited in the report.

Under the heading, "Unfinished Business," the committee dealt with the future direction of commemorative ceremonies and honours and awards; omissions in PoW compensation; the War Veterans Allowance Act; the equality of status of service between male and female veterans; survivor benefits; concerns relating to hospital and treatment care; the extension of eligibility for benefits under the War Veterans Allowance Act as they relate to Korean Veterans; and omissions in Bill C-84 as it relates to Merchant Navy Veterans, which group were the subject of great concern to the subcommittee in the report, "It's Almost Too Late."

Concern has been expressed about the future of the Department of Veterans Affairs and the effects of the threat of cuts in that government department. I note with continuous relief that the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, who is responsible for public service renewal, assured an audience in Charlottetown on August 30 that the Department of Veterans Affairs may not be one of the departments affected by government reform because its services are so well defined and it will likely come under far less attack as Ottawa prepares for downsizing. He offered assurances that DVA headquarters will remain in Charlottetown. This should be of comfort to the employees in that headquarters who are now working assiduously and patriotically in the cause of veterans. The minister reinforced his words by adding that: "There is nothing to indicate that the question will even be asked."

For all those who seem to find and dispel rumours, the most important department in the government's stable of departments, the Department of Veterans Affairs, seems assured of a long future.

Finally, the committee is proud to table its report in the chamber today. We are convinced that the recommendations we make will address the serious concerns of veterans for years to come, because we still have confidence in the department. It will ensure the protection of their rights by keeping faith into the future.

On motion of Senator Haidasz, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this may be a good time to review the proposed sitting program with my colleagues. Yesterday I had discussions with my honourable friend opposite in this regard.

I had originally thought that we would sit next week and then not sit the week when the house was in recess or the following week. However, my honourable friend's suggestion was that we should consider not sitting next week and the week that the house is in recess, but return immediately thereafter.

I considered the legislation that is likely to be sent here and its urgency. Although we will receive some bills, those on the immediate scene do not require our urgent attention. Therefore, my friend's proposition seemed like a reasonable one, and I would recommend that when we adjourn today, we stand adjourned to Tuesday, November 15 at two o'clock in the afternoon. That means we would sit neither next week nor the week the House of Commons is on its parliamentary break, but that we would return immediately after the house has had its break. I expect that at that time a number of bills will be ready for second reading here.

Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, November 15, 1994, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

NOVA SCOTIA

RESEARCH REPORTS ON BLACK COMMUNITY—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, November 15, 1994, I will call the attention of the Senate to a report entitled, "Role Model Program Report: Blacks in Nova Scotia" dated 1991, and a follow-up report entitled, "The Nova Scotia Black Community and Diaspora: Models of Upward Mobility" dated August 1994.

HEALTH

PROTECTION OF CONSCIENCE IN MEDICAL PROCEDURES—PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I am pleased to again place in the hands of the Clerk petitions expressing pleas identical to those which I read in the chamber on March 17, 1994. These petitions pray that this chamber protect health care workers with regard to freedom of conscience in the workplace.

These petitions contain signatures of 827 persons of whom 245 reside in Metro Toronto; 359 in North Bay, including Callander and Powassan, Ontario; 94 in London and Strathroy, Ontario; 65 in New Hazelton and Abbotsford, British Columbia; and 64 names of persons from Regina, Saskatchewan.

QUESTION PERIOD

TRANSPORT

PEARSON AIRPORT AGREEMENTS—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In searching through the Hansard and proceedings of committee hearings in the other place on Bill C-22, my findings indicate there were no less than 44 calls by opposition parties for a public inquiry into the Pearson airport transaction. The Reform Party called for investigation by a house or joint committee. The Bloc called for a royal commission. Mr. Don Matthews of Paxport, one of the Pearson Development Corporation Group, also asked the house committee for a public inquiry, if only to clear his name.

Here in the Senate, Senators Lynch-Staunton, Murray, Balfour, Andreychuk and Di Nino also called for a public inquiry.

I am not counting newspaper editorials, which sometimes consider the Senate position spurious but which still call for a public inquiry.

Did I say 44? Make that 45. Yesterday the Minister of Transport, Mr. Young, said he was losing patience with the Senate's handling of Bill C-22 and, if this did not improve, he would get to the bottom of the matter by way of a public inquiry. Admittedly, it was somewhat of a threat but it was one which the Leader of the Opposition, Senator Lynch-Staunton, welcomed.

Senator Olson: What is your question?

Senator MacDonald: This is a preamble.

Senator Olson: If Senator Kelly were here, he would insist on reminding Senator MacDonald that long preambles are not permitted.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, I am simply emulating Senator Olson.

The Deputy Prime Minister, Mrs. Copps — she who, like General Alexander Haig, is always in control when the boss is away — flatly rejected setting up such an inquiry.

I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question which some might consider rhetorical: Why did the Deputy Prime Minister so abruptly repudiate the assertion made by the Minister of Transport?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank Senator MacDonald for his question. The Deputy Prime Minister was stating yesterday what would certainly be my fervent hope and, I believe, the hope of the Minister of Transport. It is our hope that the bill, a very important bill and a very difficult one, will be permitted to go through the legislative process which it is now in, in this chamber.

This chamber is part of the Parliament of Canada. We have an obligation, a duty, to carry out our responsibility in this legislative process. The bill was returned to us and it was referred to committee. Witnesses gave evidence today and others will give evidence at a later date.

It is our hope, as was reflected by the comments of the Deputy Prime Minister, that the bill will proceed and it will pass. That is the position of the government.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, that is not an answer to my question. Perhaps this whole topic is taking on a new dimension.

Is it the policy of this government to stonewall any further calls for a judicial inquiry? Since it is not a constitutional matter, it would not take three years to complete. Why can we not just set up an old-fashioned judicial inquiry? What is the government afraid of?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, we are afraid of nothing on this particular issue. Our position has been clear, and it has been clear for over a year now. Our position was publicly clear during an election campaign. The promises made to the Canadian people, and in particular to the people of Toronto, during that campaign have been carried forward since the last election.

Obviously, the desire of the Prime Minister and the government is to have the legislative solution proceed. That is the job of the Senate today. As the House of Commons has done its job, so the Senate has a job to do. That is the position of the government on this matter. Quite frankly, that is the proper role for this chamber to be playing.

Senator MacDonald: We accept the fact that the Minister of Transport does not speak for the government, and that the honourable senator's apparently futile attempts to bring civility to this place, in answer to Senator Cohen, have fallen on deaf ears.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, Senator MacDonald's characterization of my attempts as "futile" is not in keeping with his optimistic character. My attempts in this regard, over the year, have been fairly fruitful.

I admit a great deal of frustration surrounds this issue. There is frustration on the part of the Minister of Transport who, more than anyone, would like to see a legislated solution to this issue. He sometimes speaks in colourful terms. However, I share his desire for a legislative conclusion to this issue. This matter should proceed with dispatch and with civility. As I said to Senator Cohen the other day, I know that friends on both sides sincerely want to accomplish the business of this house.

Parliament Hill, as a political place, is where, from time to time, members and senators will get into heated arguments. However, in this instance we are moving forward on our legislative program and on our legislative agenda. The hope expressed yesterday by the Deputy Prime Minister is also the hope, sometimes veiled beneath heated comments, of the Minister of Transport. It is also my hope, and I am confident we will succeed.

• (1600)

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I rise on the same point. After having attended the four-hour deliberations of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on Bill C-22 this morning, I am wondering why we are jumping the gun by asking for a royal commission of inquiry. I grant that that may be the ultimate thing to do, but why is it that neither the majority nor the minority in the Senate want to call Mr. Nixon as a witness? The entire debate surrounds the report written by Mr. Nixon regarding the Pearson airport agreements. Before asking for the ultimate, you should start building your case leading to that ultimate goal, the inquiry.

Perhaps the minister in the Senate could suggest to the Liberal members on the committee that they at least look into the possibility of calling Mr. Nixon and Mr. Wright before the committee? I am not a member of the committee, and I have not received any answers. The chairman of the committee says that we want only to talk about the constitutional matters. Perhaps the evidence of Mr. Wright and Mr. Nixon could shed some light that would lead us all to change our opinions and ask for an inquiry.

Senator Fairbairn: I thank my honourable friend for his question. The committees of the Senate are masters of their own agenda. That is the case for the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, as it would be for any committee.

I know that there has been great interest in having this subject explored by that committee. The members on that committee are outstanding members from both sides of this chamber. I know that they will conduct the business of the committee with great dedication.

I consider the honourable senator's further questions to be hypothetical, because I believe that there will be a legislated solution to this issue, the same as with all legislation in this place. That is what we are working toward, and that is what members of the committee are engaged in right now. The choice of witnesses surely is up to them.

METROPOLITAN TORONTO

PROPOSALS FOR SOCIAL REFORM—LACK OF REPRESENTATION ON WORKING GROUP—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: My question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and has to do with what Steve Lowden, the President of the Board the Trade of Metropolitan Toronto, calls "the-hole-in-the-doughnut syndrome."

My good friend Keith Davey will be aware of the phenomenon which Mr. Lowden describes as the metamorphosis of Metro Toronto into "the hollow and increasingly dysfunctional core of an otherwise reasonably healthy urban region."

As Senator Davey will have noted, a good many reasons and excuses — ranging from local tax policy to ill-concealed hatred of Toronto the good — have been advanced for this sorry state of affairs.

I would hope, therefore, that the two following questions will be taken very seriously.

My first question is: Considering that Metro Toronto lost 200,000 jobs in the years of recession, and that it lags in the rehiring halls, why was there no representative of the city or the region named to the working group appointed last week by the Minister of Human Resources to study seasonal work and the reform of unemployment insurance? Indeed, the only person from Ontario named to this group was an Ottawa economics consultant.

NATIONAL FORUM ON HEALTH—LACK OF REPRESENTATION OF REGION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Richard Doyle: My second question is: Considering that there are some 44 hospitals in the Metro Toronto area, and that these hospitals, and especially the city's great teaching institutions, serve patients from all parts of Ontario, and all parts of the country for that matter, why was there no representative of the three million residents of the region named by the Prime Minister to the National Forum on Health?

That $12-million forum, we are told by the Minister of Health, is an important vehicle for building consensus on approaches to the challenges facing the health of Canadians in Canada's health care system.

Those of us who live in Toronto were delighted to see that in his search for what was called "a good cross-section of regional, professional, volunteer and consumer concerns," the Prime Minister was able to find four Montrealers ready to serve among the 22 appointees. We were also delighted to see representatives from Ottawa and Kingston, although those cities might demur if it were suggested that they should represent the Toronto region.

Storms of controversy over provincial participation are still to be dealt with by the forum. Should the needs of the city of Banting and Best be left up in the air as well?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): I thank you for your questions, Senator Doyle. Certainly I, and indeed the government, would never belittle the strength of Metropolitan Toronto and its importance to the economic and social life of this country. It is one of the finest cities in this land, and is known as such throughout the world. I shall seek specific direction from the ministers on these matters.

The seasonal and cyclical employment issue is something with which the Minister of Human Resources Development is seized. He is getting a tremendous amount of assistance in this matter from members of Parliament in the Toronto area.

I will take those two questions to my colleagues and see what explanation I can get for my friend.

Senator Doyle: It is reassuring to know that Toronto is not being punished for its performance in the recent federal election.

Senator Fairbairn: It is definitely not.

• (1610)

NATIONAL SECURITY

PROPOSAL TO STRIKE SPECIAL COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, we will now be leaving for a few days. I personally will be staying around the Hill. I hope the government is still considering the request I made on Tuesday and Wednesday pertaining to having a study made by the Senate, the chamber of patience and second thought, with respect to security in general. There is a great deal of confusion. No one knows exactly who is doing what or how much it is costing. When you ask questions, you are referred back to reports that do not mention the new so-called security department.

Is the minister actively considering my request?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I have indicated to Senator Prud'homme, I will discuss this matter with my colleagues. However, I would point out to the honourable senator that there are several avenues within the context of government and Parliament where ministers are available. Indeed, members from the very establishment that is concerning the honourable the most, the Communications Security Establishment, have in the past appeared before parliamentary committees.

I will certainly take your representation seriously, but I again emphasize that both this house and the other house have been seized of these issues in the past. As you know, the security establishments within government are obliged to obey the laws of Canada, including the Charter of Rights, the privacy laws, and the Criminal Code. Some of the confusion with respect to all these issues is being exacerbated on the other side for certain political reasons. To a large degree, the confusion exists there rather than in the reality of the situation. Our security systems in Canada are not out of control. I shall pursue the honourable senator's questions during our break, and we will talk again.

Senator Prud'homme: Honourable senators, that is a wonderful answer. However, for nine years I was chairman of the Foreign Affairs and National Defence committees in the House of Commons, and I was known to check every line of the budget and every minute of the Estimates. One has to know what to ask. If you cannot find evidence of the existence of an institution in the Estimates, how can you ask questions about it? This is a game that is played here in this institution called Parliament. People say that bureaucrats never make mistakes. If people are not asked the proper questions, they cannot be accused of not having answered them. One has to know what to ask.

It was never agreed that such an institution would be formed. One can look in the Estimates for the Department of National Defence, and you could not find one line on it, because its budget was put under other items so that one would not know of its existence. It is difficult for someone who wants to be dutiful to the Canadian taxpayers to question someone on something that does not exist in the accounts.

Now we know. The honourable senator may tell me that the next time we review the Estimates, we can question the Minister of National Defence. As I read what the minister said in the house, he has asked for suggestions. I am making a suggestion for the time being. I will be tougher in the days and weeks to come, but I will not change my style. It is not those who yell the most, as Mr. Trudeau used to say, who are the most efficient.

The world has changed since Senator Kelly produced his report on terrorism. In any event, there were very few, if any, references to the existence of this Communications Security Establishment in that report. I have read the report, and I am no further ahead. You told me it exists. I have gone back to the Pitfield report of 1983, and I am still no further ahead. This is not an argument I wish to have with the government, but I do wish to emphasize that the world has changed since the fall of the Soviet empire.

This is a good subject for senators or members of the Privy Council to look into, because security is an issue that is bothering people. Canadians need to be satisfied that everything is under control. We have to be able to say, "I checked, and everything is all right."

I am not satisfied with the answer I received from the minister yesterday and the day before. I gather she will reflect further on this matter?

Senator Fairbairn: I have assured my honourable friend that I will.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. H.A. Olson moved the second reading of Bill C-49, to amend the Department of Agriculture Act and to amend or repeal certain other acts.

He said: Honourable senators, I had a brief speech attempting to explain Bill C-49, but in view of the hour and the number of commitments that senators have made, it will be shortened even more.

The main purpose of amending the Department of Agriculture Act is to give effect to the June 1993 government reorganization which signalled a change in the name of the department and transferred new responsibilities to the department. It is important for me to point that out at the beginning. Ordinarily, I would be suspicious of any bill brought to Parliament by a Conservative government, and I would pick out any weaknesses I could find. I have looked the bill over, and there are some weaknesses in it. However, I am sponsoring it because the government of the day believes that we should carry through and pass the bill, since the transfer and, indeed, the use of the name have already begun. The name will be changed from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Agriculture and Agri-Food.

These amendments are the first in a series of amendments to departmental acts to implement the previous reorganization. The changes were originally included in a non-controversial omnibus bill, but that was broken up into departmental bills for purposes of simplicity.

The change to the name of the department involves making consequential amendments to a number of other acts. The first group of provisions outlined in this bill are those necessary to change the name of the department and to assume the responsibilities transferred in June 1993.

• (1620)

The second group of provisions are changes which better reflect the activities being carried on by the department. Overall, the existing powers of the minister are generally preserved. The amendments in the first group change the name of the department and the title of the minister and the deputy minister from "Agriculture" to "Agriculture and Agri-Food" within the existing act. That is contained in clauses 1 to 4.

Several consequential amendments to other acts are necessary, primarily with respect to the change in the name of the department. You can find these amendments in clauses 11 and 12, 14 to 17, and 20 to 26.

The power to designate inspectors is provided to the Minister of Agriculture and Agri-Food. While this power exists in many other acts administered by the department, the proposed power is required for the minister to carry out the responsibilities under the Food and Drugs Act transferred from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, which, as many honourable senators will know, has been terminated or phased out. The Food and Drugs Act itself is also changed to reflect the transfer of duties from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. These changes are contained in clauses 6, 18 and 19 of the bill.

An authority will be granted under this statute when it is passed to the minister to designate inspectors to enforce the Food and Drugs Act. The minister has had that authority before.

There is no provision in this bill for a Canadian citizen to line up a defence against an inspector who is given an enormous amount of authority. I am particularly interested in this matter. There should be a way for people to redress problems when they feel they have been unjustly dealt with by a government inspector. The only redress possible — it is not unique to this bill, but it is being extended in this bill — is to go to civil court. It is a very serious undertaking to seek redress through the court system with respect to the action of a government employee, in this case an inspector. We do not need a system where all the power and authority will be on one side of a dispute.

The transition clauses regarding employees, financial appropriation and legal instruments are clauses 8 to 10.

The department's mandate is clarified to include not only primary agriculture, but also "products derived from agriculture". This recognizes that the department has responsibilities beyond the farm gate, and that the health of this primary sector depends to a great extent on the health of all sectors that use agricultural products. That can be found in clause 5.

Honourable senators, the bill also recognizes that a number of acts already contain definitions of an "agricultural product" that are very broad, including, in many cases, products derived from an animal or a plant. The acts I am referring to are the following: the Agricultural Products Board Act, the Agricultural Products Marketing Act, the Canadian Agricultural Products Act, and the Farm Income Protection Act. We are merely bringing the existing Department of Agriculture up to date with some of this other legislation. That is also contained in clause 5.

Ministerial responsibilities are more precisely defined in the area of research by changing the reference to "experimental farm stations" to "research related to agriculture and products derived from agriculture, including the operation of experimental farm stations". These phrases are taken directly from the statutory provisions in Bill C-49.

Honourable senators, the bill provides for the repeal of three pieces of departmental legislation. These acts are no longer needed, and the opportunity was taken to get rid of some legislative "clutter". Those provisions are contained in clauses 27 to 29.

Bill C-49 also removes the requirement for the Department of Agriculture and Agri-Food to file an annual report. Some people will question why that requirement is removed. The reason, honourable senators, is that it is a duplication. Dropping the requirement to produce an annual report recognizes that this information and more is provided to Members of Parliament in Part III of the Main Estimates. In this house, Estimates are usually referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. It is not always the vote relating to the Department of Agriculture that is the subject of a long inquiry in that committee. However, it is up to the members of the committee to decide how they will handle this matter when the Blue Book of Estimates is referred to that committee. Individual members decide whether they conduct an in-depth review of any item in the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans or any other department or departments. Therefore, a special reference is not required to give the committee authority to look into a particular department.

The clarification of the mandate of the department will be beneficial to the whole agri-food sector. The bill recognizes that the department has responsibilities beyond the farm gate, and that policies must be developed and delivered in a cohesive, consistent manner which will enhance the competitiveness, self-reliance and sustainability of the entire agricultural sector.

Honourable senators, I could say more about this bill, but given that the previous government initiated the bill, I will assume that senators on the other side of the chamber will be enthusiastic supporters of this legislation.

• (1630)

The Minister of Agriculture has looked this bill over carefully, and he thinks it might be useful. I will leave it at that.

Hon. Eileen Rossiter: Honourable senators, Senator Gustafson was prepared to speak on this matter. Unfortunately, he had to leave. Thus I will speak in support of Bill C-49.

As noted by Senator Olson, this bill changes the name of the department from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Agriculture and Agri-Food, and transfers new responsibilities to the department. You will note that this proposal first came out in June, 1993 when former prime minister Kim Campbell proposed the most significant downsizing and restructuring of government ever undertaken in this country.

The new department acquires the agri-food packaging and labelling functions of the Food Division of the former Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, as well as the Food Products Branch of the former Department of Industry, Science and Technology.

Adding the word "agri-food" and clarifying the department's mandate to include not only primary agriculture but also "products derived from agriculture" reflects a recognition that the department's responsibilities extend well beyond the farm gate. The department's responsibilities in the area of research are more precisely defined by changing the reference to experimental farm stations to read "research related to agriculture and products derived from agriculture, including the operation of experimental farm stations."

As Senator Olson noted, the bill also eliminates the requirement that the department submit an annual report to Parliament. This clause has been a bit controversial and was the subject of an unsuccessful amendment at the report stage in the other place.

It is interesting to note that in the report of Senator Marshall's subcommittee, reference is made to this point as well.

It is gratifying to see that the proposals of June, 1993 of the previous government are moving to completion. We support this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Olson, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PROPOSALS FOR SOCIAL REFORMS

INQUIRY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Donald H. Oliver rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, October 25, 1994:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the efficiency in the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy's recent Proposals for Social Reform.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise today to speak on behalf of one of the constituencies I believe I represent in this chamber. In my maiden speech given on January 24, 1991, I said that I believed I could represent black Nova Scotians and visible minorities throughout the country. It is on behalf of this group that I wish to address a few of my remarks today.

Honourable senators, to the Chrétien government, this is a forgotten group — forgotten in relation to the government's attempt to reform the justice system, and forgotten in relation to the government's attempt to reform the social safety net in our country.

I am serving notice today that as long as I sit in this chamber I will not allow this government to forget or ignore the existence of this group of Canadians. I will not let the government forget the need to combat racism and provide equality of opportunity. This group is to be treated with fairness, equality and justice — not to be ignored. What do I mean by being ignored, slighted by this government? Let me be more specific.

On July 5, 1994, amid great self-congratulation, the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General announced the creation of the National Crime Prevention Council. This council is to put in place or carry out a national strategy for community safety and crime prevention. This will bring together many of the existing efforts which are now in place to prevent crime — a laudable goal, no doubt. However, when I inquired about the background of those who make up this council, much to my dismay I was informed that only two members of the 25-person council are from the visible minority community in Canada. Of the two, only one is black.

In my opinion, there is no group in Canada which is subject to more discrimination within the criminal justice system than black Canadians. This discrimination is well documented. Both the Royal Commission on the Donald Marshall Jr. prosecution in Nova Scotia and the Commission on Systemic Racism in the Ontario Criminal Justice System acknowledged the existence of this discrimination. The report of the Donald Marshall inquiry is instructive on the plight of blacks in the criminal justice system. It states:

> Prejudice and discrimination against Blacks in all major institutional sectors of society, including the criminal justice system, is perceived to exist by the population at large, more so among Blacks but commonly by non-Blacks as well.

The report categorically states that blacks have been denied equal opportunities in employment, income and education. While Nova Scotia may not be an advantaged province in the Canadian federation, its economy and education system have been less responsive to the needs of blacks. It sums up the situation by stating:

> One should not be surprised if the legacy of blatant racism, as well as more subtle modern versions is found to manifest itself in the criminal justice system of the province.

The report

> presents a picture of widespread discrimination against Blacks in the criminal justice system and in society as a whole.

Is this statement and the recommendations of this royal commission, which range all the way from giving multiculturalism courses to police officers, to improvements in the legal aid system to help blacks, not evidence enough for the Chrétien government to appoint more than one lone black person to a national crime prevention council? Apparently not.

Is this all the evidence there is on racism against blacks in the criminal justice system? No. In Ontario, there is the Commission on Systemic Racism in the Ontario Criminal Justice System which was established in October 1992. Its main focus is on systemic racism as experienced by black people, women and youth.

• (1640)

This commission, which is due to report its full findings in December of this year, released an interim report in January of 1994 dealing with the treatment of blacks and other racial minority prisoners in Ontario prisons. The report is entitled: "Racism Behind Bars."

I do not think that anyone in this chamber would find it surprising that this commission reports that racism is alive in Ontario prisons. But what surprised me was the categorical statements made in this interim report about racism in the Ontario criminal justice system. The report states:

> The invidious consequences of racism in the criminal justice system are even greater because of the coercive force which its officials are authorized to exercise. Our system, built on the foundation of homogenous, Anglo-Saxon and Christian values, has not changed significantly over the past century. Many of its basic concepts and principles have served us well and will continue to do so in the future. However, our system must be inclusive of racial and cultural differences if it is to sustain the respect of all Canadians. Originally people from upper and lower Canada were those protected by the criminal justice system. Similarly, it is only in recent decades that members of other European ethnic groups have achieved influential positions within the criminal justice system and only in the past few years that members of black and other racial minority communities have begun to achieve some representation. Given this history, there is a danger that the laws, the machinery, and the culture of criminal justice may be based on assumptions about the "superiority" and "inferiority", "normality" and "deviance" of people from what are believed to be distinct "racial groups". Because people of European heritage are the dominant "racial groups" in Canadian society, it is their physical characteristics (particularly their white skin) and cultural practices that may be treated as "superior" and "normal". By contrast, people of Aboriginal, African, Asian and South Asian ancestries, may be viewed as "different" and, in some senses, "inferior". It is of fundamental importance that such assumptions play no part in the administration and culture of Ontario's criminal justice system.

One would like to think that emphatic statements such as this would have had some impact on the Chrétien government when establishing the Crime Prevention Council. It is simply unacceptable to the black community of Canada, a community that is constantly beset by racism within the criminal justice system, to have only one representative on this council.

You may say that I am overreacting to this obvious oversight. You may say that this council, among other things, is to address the needs of vulnerable groups, including visible minorities and ethnocultural minorities; that this is, in fact, the council's mandate. I say in response to this statement, however, that the black community will not settle for mere tokenism. It took me almost one month to uncover the information on the composition of the council. If this is the way the council will treat inquiries from the visible minority community, I have no confidence that it will work on behalf of this community.

Racism as it affects black Canadians in the criminal justice system is a serious subject and it is a problem that will become more intense with the passage of time. Statistics projected by Professor T. John Samuel of Carleton University indicate that Canada's visible minority population will rise to about 5.7 million, an increase of over 3.5 times since 1986. In percentage terms, the increase is from 6.3 per cent to 17.7 per cent. By the year 2001, approximately half of the population of Toronto and two-fifths of the population of Vancouver are expected to be visible minorities. Over one-fifth to one-quarter of the population of Montreal, Edmonton, Calgary, Winnipeg and Windsor are expected to be visible minorities. By the year 2001, approximately one-fifth of the labour force will be from the visible minority community. This group, says Professor Samuel, will control about one-fifth of the GDP of the country by 2001; about $311 billion.

This is not a group to be ignored — not a group to be ignored by the Liberal government. The government that does ignore this group will do so at its peril. This is a group that will not tolerate being characterized unjustly as being prone to criminal behaviour. This is a group that rose up as one in 1989 when Professor Phillippe Rushton announced to the American Association for the Advancement of Science Conference in San Francisco that he had discovered genetic evidence that blacks are less law abiding than whites, and that genetics explains the variation in crime rates between whites and blacks.

In an article published in the Canadian Journal of Criminology in 1990, Professors Julian V. Roberts and Thomas Gabor of the University of Ottawa, while refuting Rushton's conclusions, pointed to the incendiary nature of such remarks. Lay persons will read Rushton's conclusions and take them as fact, thus adding fuel to an already volatile issue.

Honourable senators, visible minorities in Canada will again unite to deal with the neglect and omission brought on by this government in relation to the criminal justice system.

In conclusion, I will turn to a closely related matter: the fact that visible minorities have been omitted as a target group from Mr. Axworthy's review of social security in Canada. This is a crucial omission for black Canadians especially. As was pointed out in the final report of the Donald Marshall Royal Commission of Inquiry, "There is a strong link between poverty and involvement in the criminal justice system."

Unfortunately, our government, having virtually excluded blacks from its efforts to improve the criminal justice system, decided to do the same in relation to its social policy review. This completely ignores the sage words of the Marshall inquiry. These two issues, economic improvement and criminal justice, are, in reality, two sides of the same coin. Improvement of the living standards of black Canadians and other visible minorities will lead to better education; and better education will lead to meaningful employment and the emergence from the cycle of poverty and crime in which racism and discrimination have placed many members of this particular group.

This is such an important issue for me that I would refer directly to the discussion paper put out by Mr. Axworthy's ministry entitled: "Improving Social Security in Canada." Let us look first at the pictures inside the front cover. There you will find 10 out of the 26 pictures in this montage reflecting the faces of visible minorities in a multicultural Canada but, honourable senators, that is as far as it goes. We did not make it into the book, just the cover.

On page 46 of Mr. Axworthy's report the words "visible minority" appear for the only time, but the phrase is used in relation to a general discussion of proposals for change in government unemployment insurance.

The other four traditional government target groups are all mentioned. In fact, they receive quite a bit of support. The aboriginal people of Canada are to have their own consultation process and are given $50,000 by the federal government to carry out their mandate. Women are mentioned in relation to the provision of daycare and the problems of single parents which must be addressed. The disabled are to have a program put in place to ensure access to various workplaces. These are all good as far as they go, but why is the fourth target group, visible minorities, excluded?

Let me read for you a passage from chapter four of the Axworthy document, entitled: "Security: Building Opportunity for People in Need." Under the heading "Redirecting Funding to New Priorities" a list is found. I wish to read that list and share it with you. It states:

> Potential priority areas directly linked to the goals proposed in this discussion paper include:
>
> better income support for low income families with children;
>
> working income supplement for working poor families;
>
> child care or child development initiatives;
>
> child support initiatives;
>
> employment development services for social assistance recipients;
>
> improving access to disability related supports and services; and > continuing support for social services.
>

There is no mention of the visible minority community.

My final reference to this document comes from the last page, an invitation to Canadians to participate in the discussion process. It states:

> Over the coming months the House of Commons Standing Committee on Human Resource Development will hold extensive public hearings to discuss these reforms. This will give Canadians a forum in which to participate. Business and labour, academics, Aboriginal organizations, organizations representing women and organizations for persons with disabilities, as well as voluntary and community groups, are encouraged to speak up.

• (1650)

Unfortunately, the visible minority community was expressly excluded from the list of target groups once again.

It is too bad that the person who put together the pictures on the cover of this book did not write its contents. Had that been the case, visible minorities may have had a better chance to be included.

This constant omission to address the needs of a significant portion of Canada's population cannot continue without serious repercussions. However, it is a trend which has begun and is continuing in my opinion.

Shortly after the Chrétien cabinet was sworn in, I wrote an article which was published in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald entitled, "A Challenge to Mr. Chrétien from Canada's Visible Minorities." I commented on the fact that the Chrétien cabinet was lacking in representation from the visible minority community and that multiculturalism had been folded into a large ministry rather than standing on its own. I urged Allan Rock, then the brand-new Minister of Justice, to appoint a commission to address issues of racism and equality in the Canadian community and suggested appropriate action. In addition, I recommended that Mr. Rock attempt to persuade the Canadian Bar Association to conduct research into issues of racism in areas such as admission to law school and the hiring practices of law firms.

It is unacceptable to me, and should be to all Canadians, when a Canadian black lawyer with an LL.M. from Harvard can speak and write about racism among Bay Street law firms concerning their hiring practices in 1994. I am referring here to an address given by Michael St. Patrick Baxter to the third annual conference and symposium of the Black Law Students Association held in February of this year here in Ottawa.

However, as with all matters dealing with visible minorities, the Chrétien government remained silent. I did receive a letter from the Prime Minister's parliamentary secretary telling me that the views of visible minorities are well represented around the cabinet table.

A review of the legislation which has come forward in the last year from the government reveals that none of it in any way improves the condition of visible minorities in Canada. The changes to the Young Offenders Act deal mainly with more and better ways to have juveniles dealt with in adult court. It does not address the underlying causes of youth crime or suggest better methods of rehabilitation. In a bill on the subject of sentencing, this government could have taken the opportunity to insert racial origin or economic circumstances into the matters which a judge could take into consideration when passing sentence, but this opportunity was missed.

Honourable senators, the visible minority community will not be ignored. We will use every means at our disposal to be heard and to have our concerns addressed by the current government of Mr. Chrétien. You will continue to hear from me on this subject until the message gets through to this government.

On motion of Senator Bernston, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 15, 1994, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 15, 1994

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

THE FOLK OF THE SEA

NEWFOUNDLAND PERFORMING ARTS GROUP— CONGRATULATIONS

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, on Sunday last, November 13, 1994, the Folk of the Sea performed to a capacity audience at the National Arts Centre. To say that they were well received would be an understatement. There was tremendous applause throughout the performance and a standing ovation at the conclusion.

Born out of adversity, namely the failure of the Newfoundland cod fishery, this group is made up of 100 fishermen, fisherwomen and plant workers from across the province of Newfoundland and Labrador. They started as a small group travelling across the province, adding to their numbers as they went. It was hard work, but you could say it was a labour of love. They played in church halls and school auditoriums, leading to an appearance in St. John's Arts and Culture Centre, and culminating in their performance here on Sunday and a repeat sellout on Monday in Toronto's Roy Thompson Hall.

I take this opportunity to publicly congratulate them on an excellent performance, and to wish them well in their future endeavours.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, I rise today, albeit a little bit late, to pay tribute to Canadian war veterans. We owe nothing short of our freedom to those brave men and women who risked their lives to ensure that we would live in peace. Many of those individuals made the ultimate sacrifice and never returned home.

On this Remembrance Day, we also commemorated the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of the Scheldt, which took place during the Second World War. I was honoured to participate in the delegation that travelled to Belgium and the Netherlands three weeks ago to honour those who participated in the pivotal campaign which lasted for five long, wet, muddy weeks during the months of October and November, 1944.

The delegation included approximately 100 of the veterans who had fought in this battle 50 years ago, with an average age of 75. Their mission in those days was to clear out the enemy from either side, and at the mouth of the Scheldt River running through Belgium and the Netherlands. Only by overtaking that waterway could our troops get to the Port of Antwerp and open up the supply route. Success came on November 28, but not without a heavy price.

As the veterans and the rest of the delegation travelled through the final resting places for many of their comrades in Belgium and the Netherlands, we remembered those who made the ultimate sacrifice for that most important victory. More than 6,000 Canadian soldiers were killed, wounded or taken prisoner in the Battle of the Scheldt. They, along with those who did make it back home, deserve this observance and deserve that pilgrimage.

I should also like to take this opportunity to say how pleased I was that on this Remembrance Day veterans of the Canadian Merchant Marine were finally given due recognition for their heroic acts of bravery in wartime. Although some say it is too little too late, particularly because there are many benefits for which these veterans are still not eligible, we can at least take some comfort in the fact that the process to end this discrimination has begun.

Merchant mariners played a critical role in World War I, World War II and the Korean War. They risked their lives to ensure supplies were transported. Like so many other armed forces personnel, there were numerous merchant mariners who gave their lives to ensure our freedom. There are 2,100 merchant mariners listed in the Merchant Navy Book of Remembrance that was installed in the Memorial Chamber of the Peace Tower last Friday, and it is indeed a fitting, if very long overdue, tribute.

Those who lost their lives to war, along with those who returned home, must always be in our thoughts and prayers, not only on November 11 but throughout the year.

• (1410)

In conclusion, I will pay tribute to the Honourable Lawrence Macauley, who led the delegation. However, because of the untimely death of a very close relative, he was required to return home. His duties were taken over by Susan Whelan, a distinguished daughter of a most distinguished former member of Parliament and cabinet minister. Under the circumstances, she did an extraordinary job in representing Canadian veterans and the views of the Canadian people to the people of the Netherlands and of Belgium. She did a terrific job, as did all the support staff who escorted the more than 100 veterans back to the scene of some deep and moving memories. I have cried more in the last two and a half weeks than I have in the last 40 years, and I feel good about it.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S PERFORMING ARTS AWARDS

CONGRATULATIONS TO RECIPIENTS OF GOVERNOR GENERAL'S AWARDS

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, I rise today to pay homage, not to another honourable senator but, rather, to the distinguished spouse of an honourable senator. On November 5 last, my wife and I were privileged to attend the Governor General's 1994 Performing Arts Awards, held here in Ottawa at the National Arts Centre. The event was hosted by Donald Sutherland.

The awards were founded in 1992 to recognize Canada's greatest performers and to provide Canadians an opportunity to show their appreciation of the contribution such performers have made to the cultural community. The event was held under the distinguished patronage of His Excellency, the Right Honourable Ray Hnatyshyn. The six 1994 recipients were Frédéric Back, an expert in creating animated films; Robert Charlebois, an avant-garde French pop musician; Celia Franca, founder of the National Ballet School; Jean Papineau-Couture, a famous composer; Neil Young, a singer, songwriter and musician; and Frances Hyland, a world-famous Shakespearean actress.

As an integral part of this outstanding array of Canadian talent, His Excellency awarded the Ramon John Hnatyshyn award for "volunteerism in the performing arts". It went to Sandra Kolber of Montreal, the wife of Senator Leo Kolber. The program notes said of Sandra Kolber:

> ...she is a central figure in our country's artistic community and the breadth of her talent has brought beauty to Canada's cultural landscape.

As with others honoured that evening, many famous Canadians paid a personal tribute. One that stood out was the tribute to Sandra from Charles Dutoit, the conductor of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra who, in a special video message from New York, warmly thanked her for her fund-raising and other charitable efforts that resulted in several world-famous artists coming to Montreal to perform with that orchestra. Sandra Kolber is a talented and distinguish poet, a film consultant and writer and, since the early 1980s, a patron of the arts in the Montreal community.

Honourable senators, I felt proud that evening to be a member of this chamber as the spouse of one of our colleagues was thus honoured. It brought credit not only to the Kolber family, to the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec, but it was also a tribute to this institution. I am sure all honourable senators will join me in congratulating Senator Kolber and his wife Sandra on her outstanding achievement.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

TRIBUTES ON FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, I wish to take this opportunity today to congratulate the Federal Business Development Bank on having served the small- and medium-sized businesses of Canada for fifty years.

In 1944, with the Second World War coming to an end, the federal government of the day recognized the need to put in place new programs to smooth the return to a peacetime economy. One such program saw the creation of the Industrial Development Bank, from which the Federal Business Development Bank evolved. The bank was responsible for providing financial assistance to businesses, with respect in particular to the funding problems facing small- and medium-sized businesses.

Originally, the bank's primary role was to help manufacturing firms reconvert. In the fifties and sixties, many changes occurred and it became obvious that the bank had to include a wider range of Canadian businesses as part of its clientele.

Over the last 50 years, the Federal Business Development Bank has made more than $14.6 billion available to entrepreneurs from every part of the country. It was the first to offer term loans to small- and medium-sized businesses, and also one of the first institutions to provide management assistance to that sector, through consultations, training courses and seminars.

I personally witnessed the significant contribution made by the Federal Business Development Bank. I can tell you about jobs in my region which would not exist if it were not for the bank. These jobs have special meaning for me, because I regularly see the people who owe their livelihood to the bank. I am confident that this kind of success in my community can be duplicated by thousands of other Canadian communities, and this is why the bank certainly deserves recognition.

I am confident that my colleagues here will join me in congratulating the Federal Business Development Bank. We hope that this excellent institution will continue for another 50 years to help small- and medium-sized businesses in our communities.

HIS EMINENCE JEAN-CLAUDE TURCOTTE

TRIBUTES ON NOMINATION AS CARDINAL

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: His Holiness Pope John Paul II has appointed 30 new cardinals and we welcome the appointment of His Eminence Jean-Claude Cardinal Turcotte, Archbishop of Montreal. He is the third one for the archdiocese of Montreal, after Cardinal Léger and Cardinal Grégoire.

Cardinal Turcotte, who was born in Montreal, was ordained as a priest in 1959, became a bishop in 1982 and was appointed Archbishop of Montreal in 1990. We want to thank the Holy See for its enlightened choice, which brings honour not only to the city of Montreal but also to all of Quebec and Canada.

May the Almighty God continue to guide and protect His Eminence Jean-Paul Cardinal Turcotte, Archbishop of Montreal.

[English]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

CANADA'S DEFENCE POLICY

REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, pursuant to the order of the Senate adopted on Wednesday, February 23, 1994, I wish to inform the Senate that, on Monday, October 31, 1994, I tabled with the Clerk of the Senate the report of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Defence Policy entitled, "Security in a Changing World."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator De Bané, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, November 16, 1994 at one thirty o'clock in the afternoon.

I would remind honourable senators that we discussed this matter briefly when last we met. The original idea for this practice arose out of a discussion that occurred at a meeting of committee chairmen. Its purpose was to allow committees to know in advance when they are able to sit. However, a day's notice for such a motion is not sufficient, and my friends opposite and I have discussed whether we could stretch that a bit. I believe I have their agreement that this same motion will apply for next week. In that event, next Wednesday the Senate will sit from 1:30 to 3:00 p.m., and committees can plan to sit after 3:00 p.m. on that day.

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the scenario as set out by my honourable colleague is essentially what we discussed this morning. It is probably correct, assuming we sit next week. My honourable friend might want to explain to us what next week's program will be.

The concern among our colleagues on this side of the chamber has always been that the 1:30 p.m. sitting on Wednesday has become a fixture which is taken for granted, and that the committees apparently seem to be running the Senate. It is our feeling that that ought not to happen. Nevertheless, committees were planning their business well in advance of any decision being taken by the Senate as it relates to hours of sitting on Wednesdays, for instance.

While it is true that this arrangement was brought about through discussions among committee chairmen, it is also true that, in discussions between my colleague and I, we have agreed that this matter should be referred back to the chairmen of committees to resolve how best to facilitate committee business but, at the same time, not to have it seem that the committees run the Senate.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I concur with the comments made by my friend opposite, having frequently made the same comment from the seat where he now sits. We are reaching the point where the Senate will need to ask committees when we may sit.

Having said that, the system has worked, but it must always be at the decision of the Senate. I would urge committee chairmen and committee clerks not to automatically assume that there will be a certain Wednesday sitting of the Senate from 1:30 to 3:00 p.m. However, we will try to forecast as best we can.

My honourable friend asked if I could give some advance notice of what may happen next week and the week after. I find that crystal balls are very blurry. The best I can expect at this time is that we will sit every week from now until Christmas.

As honourable senators may know, the House of Commons will be adjourning on Friday, December 16. It would be wishful thinking on our part to assume that we will not be receiving bills in that last week. In the past, no matter what government was in office, a raft of bills has always arrived in the Senate at the last minute.

It is, therefore, probable that we will sit the week following the adjournment of the House of Commons; that is, until the Wednesday or Thursday, December 21 or 22. I will try to make that a date certain, on the understanding, of course, that we complete our work. If we can do so by December 16, we can adjourn at that time. If we cannot, we will sit the following week.

After that, if our work is completed, we can look forward to taking at least the same recess as the House of Commons, and possibly an additional week. Those comments are conditional upon our completing the work before us, and barring any unforseen circumstances. That is a long-range forecast which may change. I give it to honourable senators as the best information I have at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, you have heard the discussion and the motion as read. Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE ESTIMATES, 1994-95

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(f), moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1995, tabled in the Senate on November 15, 1994.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SPLIT LAKE CREE FIRST NATION FLOODED LAND BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-36, respecting the Split Lake Cree First Nation and the settlement of matters arising from an agreement relating to the flooding of land.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Molgat, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday, November 17, 1994.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-50, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Molgat, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday, November 17, 1994.

MARINE TRANSPORTATION SECURITY BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-38, to provide for the security of marine transportation.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Molgat, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 58(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Senator Molgat]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. John B. Stewart, with leave of the Senate and nothwitstanding rule 59(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at three thirty o'clock in the afternoon today, November 15, 1994, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

He said: As many honourable senators know, the work of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has been stood down by reason of the activities of the two special joint committees, both of which have now completed their work, as was recorded in our proceedings earlier this afternoon.

Since last spring, the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has projected a fairly heavy program relating almost entirely to trade matters. This afternoon, we are anxious to get on with the work we had planned for last spring in relation to the so-called Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. That is why we wish to meet today at 3:30 p.m. We shall be continuing that work tomorrow after the Senate rises, so that senators will have an understanding of the complexities of the Uruguay Round.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

INQUIRIES NOS. 17 AND 18 REINSTATED NOTWITHSTANDING RULE 28(3)

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, two Inquiries standing in my name, numbers 17 and 18, will fall from the Order Paper tomorrow. I move that they be placed back on the Order Paper. If necessary, we can go back to square one and I can send in another application for both Inquiries, but, inasmuch as the Table is fully aware of what I want placed back on the Order Paper, perhaps they can take this intervention as notice.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

TRANSPORT

NOMINEES TO CANADIAN AIRPORT AUTHORITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. A communiqué dated October 28 indicates that the Transport Minister has named two distinguished Canadians as the federal nominees for the board of directors of the Canadian Airport Authority that will take control of Toronto's Pearson International Airport.

Senator Fairbairn will probably recall this matter because she was on the Senate Transport Committee when it dealt with the subject of bringing the Montreal Airport Authority into being.

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us what the difference is between the Canadian Airport Authority and a local airport authority, as we used to refer to it? I do not wish for this to be an oral examination, but is the Canadian Airport Authority also a not-for-profit organization?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Senator MacDonald, I thank you for your question. I am glad this is not an oral exam, and I hope you will permit me to do some homework on this matter.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, the thrust of the question is: Will the Canadian Airport Authority be a not-for-profit organization, and therefore never be privatized; or at least, is it not now the intention that it be privatized? This announcement seems to indicate that there are nominees from the province, the federal government, from labour and different organizations, unlike the other authority. If that is the case, I have another question.

Senator Fairbairn: Senator MacDonald, if I may, I should like to check into this matter and get an answer for you. On the basis of that answer, I will then take your other question.

RELATIONSHIP OF CANADIAN AIRPORT AUTHORITY TO DEVELOPMENT OF PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, the last part of the communiqué reads as follows:

> As soon as all nominations are made, Transport Canada will negotiate an interim arrangement to ensure that the CAA for Pearson International Airport can play an advisory role until Bill C-22 has been passed by Parliament.

• (1440)

The Toronto Star says:

> The 15-member panel will take over management of the airport once Parliament approves a bill — now stalled in the Senate — formally cancelling the Tory deal to privatize Terminals 1 and 2...

What in the name of heaven does Bill C-22 have to do with the development of the Pearson International Airport under the new authority?

Senator Fairbairn: As I said before, I will do some homework on this matter and get back to Senator MacDonald.

HUMAN RIGHTS

THREE GORGES DAM PROJECT— DISPLACEMENT OF CHINESE CITIZENS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Ron Ghitter: Honourable senators, now that the fanfare and the breast-beating have subsided over the Prime Minister's trip to China, may I say that I share the view that delegations of this nature are valuable and significant for trading nations such as Canada. I congratulate the Prime Minister and the premiers for undertaking such a trip.

However, the puny or nonexistent attempt of the Prime Minister to raise the human rights issue with the Chinese Prime Minister amounted to an incredible oversight, considering the importance this government has rhetorically suggested it attaches to human rights standards. I will leave that matter for another day.

Lurking behind the scene is the spectre and the rumour of the involvement of the Canadian government, through the Export Development Corporation, in the Three Gorges Dam project. As a reminder to honourable senators, the Three Gorges Dam is a project of immense size with a controversial history, a $50-billion U.S. cost, and incredible impact, all of it negative, upon soils, scenery, historical sites and wildlife, not to mention an unprecedented plan to relocate 1.3 million people.

When the Liberals were in opposition, the project was severely criticized in the House by Christine Stewart, now Secretary of State for Latin America and Africa, and by Charles Caccia, now chairman of the House of Commons Committee on Environment and Sustainable Development, who led the Liberal objections to Canadian participation in the same project.

Is the Government of Canada financing any aspect of the Three Gorges Dam megaproject, through the Export Development Corporation or any other agency? If so, I would like to be advised of all the details surrounding such support.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Senator Ghitter, I appreciate your question. Because of its specific nature, I will obtain a specific answer for you, as well as any other details that I can provide.

Senator Ghitter: While the leader is obtaining that information, perhaps she could concentrate her search on whether or not there are any details of the relocation of the 1.3 million people in China. I am interested in knowing where they are going, and under what circumstances.

I should also like to ask if this is a harbinger of a new Liberal policy which pays no regard to human rights, people, or the environment, and which will encourage trade by Canada with China at any cost.

Senator Fairbairn: I will seek the details that my honourable friend requires. However, I certainly do not agree with the latter part of his question.

Human rights is a matter of great concern to this government. We have talked previously about the fact that assisting with economic development in other countries in the world is not mutually exclusive of the support of human rights. The two can go together. This trade mission which the Prime Minister, the premiers, and many business people in this country have just completed will be very beneficial not only to Canadians but also to the countries which they have visited.

I know about my friend's interest in human rights, wherever they exist, including in our own province, and I will follow up on the questions that he has asked me and any others he chooses to ask. However, I do not accept his final comment that there is no concern or support for human rights in this government. It is quite the contrary.

Senator Ghitter: If that is the case, and I certainly take the honourable leader at her word, why is it that the Prime Minister, in his visitation to China and now in Indonesia, has really said nothing on the area of human rights? It is even questionable whether he raised the issue with the Prime Minister of China during their meeting, althouth he gave an undertaking in the House of Commons to do so, and it was reiterated in this house that that would be done. In fact, nothing has occurred in that regard.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, the Prime Minister did raise the issue of human rights in China. He certainly did so in Indonesia. I believe human rights was one of the first items that was raised during his visit with the heads of that country.

THREE GORGES DAM PROJECT—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, while the Leader of the Government is searching for answers to Senator Ghitter's questions, would she ask her colleague Ms Stewart, who is Secretary of State for Latin America and Africa, whether she stands by her statement of April 1992 when she called the Yangtze River Three Gorges Dam project "the world's largest disaster"?

At the same time, could she remind Ms Stewart and her colleagues of the question that Ms Stewart asked; the same question we are asking today: "Will the government assure us that it will not put any taxpayer's dollars or loan guarantees into the development of the Three Gorges Dam project?" This question was asked by Ms Stewart, a senior member of the Liberal Party in opposition at the time. I cannot believe that her feelings have changed so drastically in less than three years. We would all appreciate knowing if this is still her position and therefore the position of her other colleagues.

Honourable Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): I will make those inquiries for my honourable friend.

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON HUMAN RIGHTS AND TRADE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Many months ago, the Honourable Senators Austin and Ghitter exchanged some views on the same question. At that time, I wanted to participate in the debate, but no debate followed. We thought eventually we might have a debate on this question of human rights.

I followed the debate or the exchange of views between Senator Austin and Senator Ghitter very closely, and I must admit I am inclined to support Senator Austin's argument. I do not believe that the world is divided strictly between trade or human rights. I am a strong supporter of human rights, but I do happen to believe that trade and human rights concerns can coexist.

Would you consider putting some time aside to have a debate on this issue? It is a matter that comes up in the Senate fairly frequently.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): I thank my honourable friend for his suggestion, and we can perhaps undertake discussions.

Senator Berntson: Put it on the Order Paper.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You can very easily make it the subject of an inquiry.

CUSTOMS

CANADIAN PILOTS—CLEARANCE PROCEDURES AT MIRABEL AIRPORT

Hon. Pat Carney: Honourable senators, I am advised that Canadian pilots flying Canadian airplanes between the airport in Toronto and the airport at Mirabel must enter Mirabel through the customs gate. Can the Leader of the Government explain why Canadians need customs clearance in their own country?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will certainly look into that matter for my honourable friend and provide an answer.

JUSTICE

CRIMINAL CODE—PROPOSED REVISIONS TO ACCOMMODATE CULTURAL DIFFERENCES

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It relates to culture as a defence before the courts and the possibility of revising the Criminal Code to accommodate practices punishable under laws which, the justice minister advises us, were enacted over 100 years ago.

Honourable senators will have heard that the consultation paper aimed at modernizing the Criminal Code to recognize "evolving social values" was made public Saturday. By Sunday, the plan for staggered offences was out of the frying pan and into the fire. By Monday, the whole idea was orphaned by the pledge of the minister to guarantee us that nothing like cultural accommodation would be considered, let alone introduced, while he holds the justice portfolio.

This morning, a pleasant letter from the minister and a copy of the offending consultation paper were delivered to my office in the Senate.

If the government intends to act so wisely and so swiftly in the face of public outrage, especially when the Prime Minister is out of the country, can we expect an improvement in the messenger service between the two Houses of Parliament so that senators will be adequately informed to share in the pleasures of capitulation?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Doyle's last question is well placed. I suppose there are ears in this chamber that have heard the honourable senator's question, and we will certainly see what we can do about the messenger system.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Deputy Leader of the Government had assured us that certain unanswered questions, dating back in some cases to March and April, would be looked into and reported at the earliest sitting. I do not want to pin him down to that timetable, but he did leave me with that impression.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that is correct. There are two questions by Senator Doyle to which I had undertaken to get answers by the next time we met. Unfortunately, I must tell you that the answers involve several different departments. They involve Public Works, Treasury Board, and the Senate, in particular the Internal Economy Committee. It is a matter of gathering all of that information together and making sure it is accurate. It has taken a little longer than we expected, but I still hope to receive those answers very soon.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Honourable senators, I should like to help the Deputy Leader. By our records, there are ten questions still outstanding, dating back to late spring and early summer. I leave that with him.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, perhaps my honourable colleague could give me a list of what he has. My understanding is that every question has been answered, except those two by Senator Doyle. I will follow up at once on the others on his list.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

EXCISE ACT
CUSTOMS ACT
TOBACCO SALES TO YOUNG PERSONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-11, to amend the Excise Act, the Customs Act and the Tobacco Sales to Young Persons Act.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, when Bill C-11 received second reading, the latest statistics on cigarette production and shipments were not available. Now we have the figures as they were reported to Statistics Canada by tobacco manufacturers. Now we can see the early results of the government's decision last February to dramatically reduce the price of cigarettes by lowering the excise tax.

The bill before us is a companion measure to that steep tax reduction. Many of its features are laudable and may help place a curb on cigarette smuggling when the tax is again increased. I say "when", not "if", for two very good reasons. First, the Prime Minister assured Canadians on February 8 that the steep tax reduction would not be permanent. Second, we are seeing the thoroughly predictable, unfortunate results of the dramatic tax cut.

According to Statistics Canada, production and shipments of cigarettes are again on the rise. In September, nearly 5.5 billion cigarettes were produced — a 22-per-cent increase over production in the previous September. Shipments to wholesalers increased more than 25 per cent. The nine-month report from January to September is almost as gloomy when viewed from the standpoint of the health of Canadians. Domestic sales are up fully 48 per cent and total sales including exports show an 8 per cent rise.

Major tobacco manufacturers point to the steep decline in exports as evidence that the tax rollback has indeed cut the demand for contraband cigarettes and therefore the market for smugglers. They also suggest that many Canadians have returned to purchasing packaged cigarettes instead of fine-cut tobacco to roll their own products. While it is true that production and sales of fine-cut tobacco have also dramatically declined, it is a red herring that draws attention away from the fact that, no matter how the figures are cut — and these figures are furnished by manufacturers — total sales are not down but up.

That is precisely what health professionals who opposed the tax cut predicted. After years of leading the western world in declining consumption of cigarettes, Canada is heading for the largest single-year increase since World War II, according to a lawyer with the Canadian Council on Smoking and Health. A survey by the Canada Health Monitor showed that 29 per cent of Canadians now smoke, compared to 27 per cent before the excise tax was cut. More people are smoking more frequently. Some 72 per cent of those surveyed smoked more than 10 cigarettes a day, compared to 65 per cent who risked their lives through heavy smoking before taxes fell in February.

While tobacco manufacturers tout the government's four-part action plan, of which Bill C-11 is one part, as a victory over smuggling, they clearly expect more Canadians to smoke more. The most telling figure of all is not the 8-per-cent rise in combined domestic sales and exports. The most telling figure is the 17-per-cent rise in production between January and September. Cigarette manufacturers are not producing more cigarettes in the expectation that they will sit in warehouses. They are producing them because they expect to sell them to new and heavier smokers. The government's policy is a victory for tobacco companies and a sad — and, I hope, temporary — defeat for the health of Canadians.

When the Prime Minister announced the government's policy in February, he said:

> Much as we may all regret the necessity to lower cigarette taxes, we must do so at least until we have put the smuggling networks out of business.

Bill C-11 will give police forces more tools to deal with smuggling. It will require cigarette manufacturers to stamp cigarette wrappers to distinguish them from duty-free cigarettes. It thankfully bans the production and sale of "kiddy packs". There is some benefit in banning the small packs, which can be more easily concealed from parents or teachers. In reducing the tax, however, we have lost the greater disincentive to young people who might be tempted to take up the habit. It is now more affordable.

All these measures in Bill C-11 are beneficial. However, the true test of these measures to curb smuggling and dissuade new smokers can only come when Canada renews its commitment to reduce cigarette consumption by the proven method of raising tobacco taxes. Certainly we must give law enforcement agencies the tools they need to control smuggling when there are large profits to be made by disobeying the law. Bill C-11, in part, does that. Very soon, the government must also have the courage to test its effectiveness. If the Prime Minister chooses to turn a brief, temporary tax reduction into a prolonged holiday for smokers and tobacco companies, as the figures now tell us, we will simply have replaced a difficult crime problem with a more dangerous, more deadly and more costly health problem.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

REVIEWING CANADA'S FOREIGN POLICY

REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE TABLED

Leave having been given to revert to Tabling of Documents:

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons entitled, "Reviewing Canada's Foreign Policy".

I wish to advise honourable senators by way of explanation that there are three volumes to this report. The first volume is entitled, "Canada's Foreign Policy: Principles and Priorities for the Future". The report of the committee was passed unanimously in committee, with no recorded divisions on any of the items in the overall report.

Reservations were, however, expressed from time to time, and those found expression in the second volume which is entitled, "Canada's Foreign Policy: Dissenting Opinions and Appendices". A large dissenting opinion, amounting virtually to a stand-alone foreign policy statement, was presented by the members of the Bloc Québécois.

A short dissenting opinion was also presented by members of the Reform Party. That, however, is not as wide-ranging and could more accurately be described as a "dissenting opinion" than that which was presented by the Bloc Québécois, which contains an executive summary, chapter headings, and has all the characteristics of a separate report. Also contained in this second volume are appendices containing the names of witnesses, hearing places, and so on.

Finally, the third volume is entitled "Canada's Foreign Policy: Position Papers". The committee, in an effort to widen its knowledge and add to its enlightenment, commissioned a number of separate papers on important topics to be written by Canadians well versed in the field assigned, and these papers are included in that volume. Among those papers is one entitled, "Contemporary Security Issues" by Denis Stairs, a professor at Dalhousie University; as well as one entitled, "The Challenge of Global Trade, Investment and Finance for Canada — An Addendum on International Financial Institutions" prepared by Sylvia Ostry and Alan S. Alexandroff. There is also a position paper entitled, "Foreign Aid and Development Revisited" by Professor André Martens of the University of Montreal; and one entitled, "Culture and Foreign Policy" by John Ralston Saul.

I found these individual papers to be most interesting and valuable. Since the main report itself contains a rather new, ground-breaking chapter on culture and learning as a dimension of Canada's foreign policy, I would refer honourable senators to the interesting paper by Mr. John Ralston Saul on culture and foreign policy.

Honourable senators, I thank you for giving me this opportunity to table these documents.

Pursuant to rule 98(3), I move:

> That the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at a later date.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, November 16, 1994 at 1:30 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 16, 1994

The Senate met at 1:30 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

VISITOR IN THE GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: I call your attention to the presence in our gallery of Mrs. Noushing Eloyan, recently elected as city councillor for the district of Acadie, in Montreal.

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, a few moments ago, the Speaker introduced Mrs. Eloyan. I must say — — to all of us here in the Senate who are building a new country, she is a good example to a country in the making. She was born in Syria, lived in Lebanon, and came to Montreal at the age of 17. She had the honour of being sworn in last Monday in Montreal after having been elected as one of the first municipal councillors of Armenian origin.

[English]

That is what I call Canada in the making.

[Translation]

She is a city councillor and really shows what Canada is all about.

[English]

As I have said since my arrival here and will continue to say until I die: Canada is a country in the making, an example to the world, a hope, a light.

In my old district, which I was proud to represent in Parliament for approximately 30 years, six municipal councillors were elected. Evidence of the change taking place in this country is that of the six councillors elected three are women and three are men. We would not have seen that in the old days. Two of the women are of Armenian origin and were not born in Canada, Madam Eloyan being the first.

Also elected were a 25-year-old, articulate French Canadian woman, one gentleman of Italian origin, one of French Canadian origin, like myself, and one of Greek origin, the president of the Montreal Greek community.

This is Canada in the making. I am proud that Madam Eloyan's first official visit as a municipal councillor is not only to the Parliament of Canada, but to the Senate. I know you will want to welcome her very warmly.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[English]

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

THE LATE LIONEL CONACHER

TRIBUTES ON INDUCTION INTO HOCKEY HALL OF FAME

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, this afternoon I should like to bring to your attention the honour bestowed upon a former parliamentarian, a member of the House of Commons from 1949 to 1954, who preceded me in representing the people of the Toronto riding of Trinity.

Yesterday, Lionel Conacher, an eminent Canadian and Canada's greatest all-round athlete, was inducted posthumously into the Hockey Hall of Fame. He excelled not only in hockey but also in football, lacrosse, boxing, wrestling and other sports. He was an ardent sportsman, and a gentleman.

While playing in an annual baseball game between parliamentarians and the Press Gallery on the front lawn of Parliament Hill, he tried to stretch a triple into a home run and died suddenly of a heart attack as he rounded third base.

I wish to pay tribute to Lionel Conacher for everything he has done in sports and in politics for Canada. We are very honoured that a former parliamentarian has made it to the Hockey Hall of Fame.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

TRIBUTE TO SIR ANDREW MACPHAIL—DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I rise today to pay homage to two people. One is a former colleague of ours, the Honourable Heath Macquarrie. The other is another great Islander, Sir Andrew Macphail. Sir Andrew Macphail loved the Island. He was a scholar, a soldier, an essayist, an editor, a patriot, a philosopher and a physician. He was the first editor of the Canadian Medical Association Journal of Montreal.

Sir Andrew Macphail was such a great Islander that he inspired Senator Macquarrie to write of him in a book, which he wants to table in this house, in both official languages, so that all Canadians will know about Sir Andrew Macphail. Senator Macquarrie was rather upset to discover that a copy of his book was not available in the Library of Parliament.

• (1340)

He has also asked me to convey his thanks to the Government of Canada and the Government of Prince Edward Island which, together, will restore his home at Sir Andrew Macphail's Park in Orwell Corner, Prince Edward Island. Visitors to the Island will soon be able to visit the home of Sir Andrew Macphail.

I should now like to table, in both official languages, Senator Macquarrie's comments about Sir Andrew Macphail.

FINANCE

TAXATION OF REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS

Hon. Terry Stratton: Honourable senators, for many years senior citizens have saved in order that they might have a reasonable income during their old age. Now the threat exists that the government may, in fact, tax RRSPs. I have heard some talk that the government may introduce limitations on RRSPs. We view this as highly unfair. Strong opposition to such a measure has been voiced in the province of Manitoba. Manitobans are deeply concerned, and fear that their financial futures will be jeopardized.

When the Minister of Finance was asked in the House of Commons on January 19, 1994, to assure Canadians that the federal government would not jeopardize their financial future by limiting contributions to RRSPs, the finance minister, in response to the question, said:

> I can tell the member however that this government will never do anything that will put into jeopardy Canadians' retirement income.

Honourable senators, I hope the minister meant what he said, and that he will not tax Canadians' retirement savings. After all, it was the finance minister who, more than a year ago, said the following as was reported in The Financial Post on September 30, 1993:

> This country cannot afford any new taxes.

He was right then, and I know from what I hear out west that the sentiment is still right today.

Honourable senators, I want to read a few lines from a budget speech made by a former finance minister 10 years ago. The speech was delivered in the House of Commons by the Honourable Marc Lalonde, the Liberal Minister of Finance, on February 15, 1984. Mr. Lalonde, at the beginning of his speech, said:

> Pensions are the principal lifeline Canadians have to economic security in their retirement years.

Mr. Lalonde was quite right when he said that, and I feel that his statement should serve as a good reminder to the current government of just how important retirement savings are to Canadians.

Honourable senators, it was 10 years ago in his budget speech that Mr. Lalonde introduced reforms to improve tax assistance for retirement savings. The Liberal government at the time recognized that there were inequities in the system, and that there was a real need for improvement.

During his budget speech in the House of Commons, Mr. Lalonde said:

> It has become quite clear over time that a number of aspects of the tax treatment of pension savings are unfair and inflexible. For example, the tax system now provides significantly greater support and flexibility to Canadians building pensions through defined-benefit plans than it does to Canadians building pensions through money purchase plans such as RRSPs. This inequity penalizes in particular employees of small businesses, farmers, fishermen, professionals and others who are self-employed.
>
> I am proposing changes to put all pension plans on an equal footing for tax purposes, and to allow contribution entitlement to be carried forward from year to year on the basis of total career earnings. As a result, all Canadians will have comparable access to tax assistance. They will be able to save for retirement as their means permit without losing any entitlement to tax assistance. This will recognize that many Canadians, in their early working years, find it difficult to build pensions because they are saving for a home, bearing a heavy burden of family expenses, or investing to build up a business.
>
> The new system of tax assistance for retirement saving... will increase the capacity of Canadians now working to build stronger pensions for their retirement. By so doing they will help to build a strong foundation for personal economic security, while increasing savings that will support investment and growth over the medium term. This shows once again how public support for private initiative can help Canadians to help themselves, and in the process build a stronger future for all us.

Honourable senators, the very ideas in his address are crucial to our situation today; and all this from a former Liberal Minister of Finance. Perhaps the current government should take note of the party's past accomplishments. It was Marc Lalonde who introduced RRSP increases in his 1984 budget. Today's federal government should not ruin the level playing field by introducing inequities into the system through taxation, nor should the government do anything to invoke fear among the many self-employed Canadians who have taken it upon themselves to save for their retirement through RRSPs.

The Hon. the Speaker: I always regret interrupting an honourable senator, especially when he is quoting a colleague and boyhood friend of mine, the former minister of finance, Marc Lalonde. However, I notice that the honourable senator still holds a stack of paper in his hands. Perhaps he would conclude his remarks.

Senator Stratton: Honourable senators, our younger generation must contemplate having available to them retirement funds in excess of $500,000 because, when we look to the future, that is how much will be required to comfortably retire. Now the government, through Mr. Peterson, is talking about taxing that limit. We should take heed of the messages we are hearing, honourable senators, because a tax revolt may not be far in the future.

• (1350)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès presented Bill S-6, to amend the Criminal Code (dangerous intoxication).

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Gigantès, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, November 22, 1994.

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—GRANTING OF MONOPOLY POWERS FOR THE EXPORT MARKETING OF ALL GRAINS AND OILSEEDS—PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a petition which reads as follows:

To the Senate in Parliament Assembled.

We, the undersigned citizens of Canada, draw the attention of the House to the following:

That a very vocal minority of citizens are requesting Parliament institute a dual marketing system for wheat and barley to export.

Therefore, your petitioners request that Parliament continue to give the Canadian Wheat Board monopoly powers in marketing wheat and barley to export. Your petitioners also request that Parliament expand further Canadian Wheat Board marketing monopoly powers to include all grains and oilseeds.

That petition was signed by 26 petitioners from Saskatchewan.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, on October 5, 1994, the Honourable Senator Anne Cools, acting under the provisions of rule 44 of the Rules of the Senate, raised a question of privilege in the chamber.

At the outset, I would like to point out that the rather archaic expression "privilege" actually refers to the rights of the Houses of Parliament, and of their members, which enable them to discharge their functions, and without which they could not do so.

When a question is raised, rule 44(12) requires the Chair to determine whether a prima facie case of privilege has been made out. I have found guidance concerning the nature of my duty in citation 117 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, 6th Edition page 29:

> ... the Speaker's function in ruling on a claim of breach of privilege is limited to deciding the formal question, whether the case conforms with the conditions which alone entitle it to take precedence over the notices of motions and Orders of the Day standing on the Order Paper, and does not extend to deciding the question of substance — whether a breach of privilege has in fact been committed — a question which can only be decided by the House itself.

After the senator raised her question of privilege, I reserved my ruling in order to consult and reflect. Today, I am prepared to rule. Since the honourable senator is present in the house, I will do so now.

Does the question raised under the authority of rule 44 of the Rules of the Senate comply with the rules and the conditions which alone entitle it to take precedence?

Rule 44 (1) provides:

> The preservation of the privileges of the Senate is the duty of every Senator. A violation of the privileges of any one Senator affects those of all Senators and the ability of the Senate to carry out its functions outlined in the Constitution Act, 1867. Action to ensure such protection takes priority over every other matter before the Senate. However, to be accorded such priority, a putative question of privilege must meet certain tests. It must, inter alia,
>
> (a) be raised at the earliest opportunity;
>
> (b) be a matter directly concerning the privileges of the Senate, of any committee thereof, or any Senator;
>
> (c) be raised to seek a genuine remedy, which is in the Senate's power to provide, and for which no other parliamentary process is reasonably available; and
>
> (d) be raised to correct a grave and serious breach.

Citation 115 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, 6th Edition, page 29, states that:

> A question of privilege must be brought to the attention of the House at the first possible opportunity. Even a gap of a few days may invalidate the claim for precedence in the House.

[Translation]

Senator Cools said, and I quote:

> The court has repeatedly and systematically insisted on my attendance at court on Senate sitting days, and even during actual Senate sittings.

However, the specific case that she has offered to the Chair for its ruling concerns an appearance that took place before the Ontario Court, General Division, on Tuesday, June 14.

Between June 15 and October 5, when the question was formally raised, the Senate sat on at least eight separate days, five of them in the month of June alone. It is true that the senator gave an oral notice on July 7 of her intention to raise a question of privilege at the next sitting, but she provided no details. Accordingly, I must conclude that I am not satisfied that the question was raised in the Senate at the earliest opportunity, given that, and I quote:

> ...even a gap of a few days may invalidate the claim for precedence.

Honourable senators, I am left with no option but to hold that the question does not comply with rule 44. It does not meet the conditions which alone entitle it to take precedence in the Senate proceedings.

Therefore, under the terms of rule 44(2), the matter cannot be proceeded with under this rule.

[English]

This ruling should not be construed as a conclusion that Senator Cools has not raised important questions. To the contrary, she has raised questions concerning the fundamental right of the Senate to claim the attendance of its members, and the right not to have such attendance and service interfered with or obstructed. To use her words, the privilege of attendance at Parliament is "the first and oldest privilege".

Moreover, the elements of her case concern the adaptability to modern circumstances of our uncodified privileges, immunities and powers.

Honourable senators, there is an additional circumstance to the context of this question of privilege that does not appear on the face of Senator Cools' intervention of October 5. By letter dated September 20, Senator Cools advised the Chair that she had placed the privileges of the Senate before the Ontario Court of Appeal, on the same facts that gave rise to her question of privilege here. This is, of course, a matter of public record. It appears that the senator signed a Notice of Motion of Leave to Appeal on June 28 and a Notice of Appeal in a related action on July 14.

The interests of institutional comity, and hence the best interest of the Senate, seem to me to dictate that the complaint of the senator be dealt with in one forum or another, but not both at the same time. Since her appeal predates her question of privilege, I am of the view that Senator Cools should continue to pursue her remedy in the courts. This conclusion assuages my concerns to some extent. I am confident that the judgment of that court, after all the argument is heard, will shed ample light on the facts and afford Senator Cools the full measure of remedy to which she may be entitled.

Honourable senators will recall that when the privileges of the Houses of Parliament and of the legislative assemblies from across the country were effectively placed before the Supreme Court of Canada in the Donahoe case, the Senate was quick to intervene before that court to speak to its rights. Since the Senate's privileges are now again, and even more directly, before the courts, I believe that its interests may well be served by an intervention to speak to the limited issue of the Senate's right as an institution to the attendance of its members.

I thank Senator Cools for putting the Senate on notice as to these events by raising her question.

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I would be most appreciative if I could have some time to read and comprehend the statements of His Honour. However, before I do that, I wish to thank His Honour for his lengthy, patient and diligent consideration of the questions that I placed before this chamber on October 6.

I believe I heard His Honour say that he authorizes an intervention on behalf of the Senate. Am I correct in that?

The Hon. the Speaker: It would be wiser if I checked my text more carefully before I reply.

Senator Cools: Honourable senators, I have many comments to make, so perhaps I should take some time to review His Honour's ruling before responding. Would that be acceptable?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is perfectly acceptable to me. I was, in fact, slightly disturbed that we did not have a text that we could distribute as I finished speaking. One problem involves working in two languages and, at the end, we have the difficulty of marrying the text in both languages. However, I am open to the suggestion of Senator Cools, unless this house sees any problem with that approach. Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

MARINE TRANSPORTATION SECURITY BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. William J. Petten moved the second reading of Bill C-38, to provide for the security of marine transportation.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to introduce Bill C-38, the Marine Transportation Security bill. This bill is vital to the protection of Canadian marine interests, and is designed to ensure a reasonable measure of security for all the world affected by the marine industry.

Coming as I do from Newfoundland, marine disasters are not new to us. As people who live by the sea and, in many cases, earn their livelihood from it, we are only too aware of the heartbreak that the loss of friends and relatives can cause. Keep in mind that most of these losses result not from man-made disasters, that is to say a terrorist attack, but rather from nature taking its course — a tragedy on its own.

For the most part, this country is safe, but even here we are not immune from acts of violence and disaster. Such occurrences can have serious consequence in terms of life and the economy. However, the immediate costs of the terrorist attack against the cruise vessel Achille Lauro in 1985 resulted in immediate and direct loss to the Greek economy of over $300 million. Recovery of the tourist trade has taken many years.

There are those who say that the Cold War is over so we no longer need to be concerned about terrorist acts. Unfortunately, the continuing — and perhaps escalating — global use of violence to achieve political ends is confirmed by such events as the bombing of the World Trade Centre and the mortar attacks on Heathrow Airport.

In 1986, the International Maritime Organization, in response to the Achille Lauro tragedy and at the request of the United Nations, declared voluntary measures with respect to international cruise ships, and urged member countries to adopt and promote these measures to end preventable acts of violence against passenger vessels. After the Air India tragedy, Canada made substantial improvements in the framework to prevent acts of violence directed against aviation targets.

These preventive actions were necessary, but they did not occur until after an unacceptable price had already been paid. Today we have the opportunity and, I suggest, the duty to act in the Canadian marine area, and before the worst occurs, to establish a legal regime that is designed to prevent such events from happening in the first instance.

Canada is a signatory to the International Maritime Organization Standards regarding security measures on passenger cruise vessels. Despite Canada's promotion of these voluntary measures within our waters, and the fact that virtually all international passenger vessels visiting Canada are equipped to meet these standards, compliance in our country generally has been poor, with some noteworthy exceptions, particularly on the West Coast.

Approximately 85 per cent of Canada's $400-million-plus annual cruise trade passengers originate in the United States, which already has enabling marine security legislation and the authority to issue travel warnings regarding destinations it considers as having inadequate security. In addition, the United States, under its International Maritime and Port Security Act, has wide preventive security powers within its ports. They have also issued a notice of proposed rule-making, signifying their intention to implement stringent marine security regulations in the near future. The United Kingdom and many other western nations have already implemented, or are in the process of implementing, these measures. While there is not currently any known threat to marine interests in Canada, we must nonetheless ensure that Canada does not offer an attractive target for a terrorist attack. We must also be certain that Canada maintains its competitive position in the lucrative cruise trade market by providing security that we know its patrons expect, want and deserve. To do otherwise would be inconsistent with our responsibilities for public security and could, in the event of a tragedy, have a devastating effect on the competitiveness of the Canadian maritime industry.

• (1410)

Should this bill pass, the government intends that regulations be developed pursuant to it. I wish to reassure honourable senators that these regulations will be established in full consultation with the marine industry. Furthermore, the government is confident that there will be no significant cost to the maritime industry to implement any regulations envisioned.

The area of prime regulatory concern, the international cruise industry, as I mentioned earlier, is already substantially equipped to comply with any measures that might be required. For the other elements of the industry, such as major ports, major cargo vessels and ferries, security measures projected consist primarily of elements which would entail opportunity costs rather than capital or ongoing operational expenditures, such as security surveys, contingency plans, expertise and training.

This legislation has been specifically designed to encourage and provide for ease of implementation in respect of any regulations which flow from it. Performance standards rather than strict technical standards will be utilized so that marine operators will be able to comply in ways best suited to their circumstances.

The Marine Transportation Security Act provides the flexibility to require industry to put into place only that amount of security which would be reasonably necessary in accordance with the current level of risk. Additional preventive security would only be required when and where dictated by the prevailing threat of conditions. In this period of government restraint, it is important to note that the Maritime Transportation Security Act will not require any additional expenditure of government resources to implement and administer, as existing Transport Canada resources and expertise are sufficient to accomplish this task.

Canada currently has legislation to provide for preventive security in air and rail modes of transportation. No such protection exists, however, for our marine transportation system. Our circle of security is, therefore, incomplete. Canadians are determined to stop preventable acts of violence wherever possible. An example of our commitment to deter such acts in the field of transportation is the passage last year of amendments to the Criminal Code which provide for the punishment and extradition of persons committing violent acts against aviation or maritime targets, no matter where they occur.

The bill before us will allow the government to act before tragedy strikes. It will protect Canadian lives, livelihoods and the environment, and provide security to those who have come to share for a time the peace and beauty of our great land. We must not fail to provide to those who depend on us security which costs so little and protects so much.

Honourable colleagues, I urge you to support this bill to enhance the security of our transportation system, its users and dependants and the Canadian economic interest.

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, I rise today to address Bill C-38, the Marine Transportation Security Bill, a bill intended, as so adeptly pointed out by Senator Petten, to assure maritime security for all vessels in Canadian waters and Canadian ships abroad in line with similar protection provided for aircraft and railways set out in the Aeronautics Act and the Railway Act respectively.

No one will forget the horrific events of 1985 aboard the Italian cruise ship the Achille Lauro. An innocent American man in a wheelchair was shot in the back of the head and thrown overboard by ruthless terrorists. They had hijacked the ship off the coast of Egypt and demanded the release of 50 what they deemed as political prisoners. It was an abominable crime and emphasized the need for countries to take measures to protect their ships while they are at sea, and the responsibility of coastal countries to provide security to all vessels navigating their waters.

Unfortunately, it was not a scenario that was unforeseen in the years leading up to the event. In December of 1982, at Montego Bay, Jamaica, the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea was signed. It was a comprehensive document that covered everything from the transportation of nuclear goods to the duties of coastal states, flag states, and piracy and fraud on the high seas.

This bill attempts to address some of these issues. We are approaching the twelfth anniversary of the Montego Bay Convention and it has been almost a decade since the Achille Lauro incident. Canada, a country with so much at stake, a country which was founded in, around and upon the sea, has yet to address many of the issues covered by the convention.

In that time, Greece has had several major terrorist incidents aboard its flag carriers. The International Marine Organization, or IMO, a UN body with 136 member countries, has been working diligently since that time to bring seafaring nations up to speed in adopting the articles contained in the Law of the Sea.

I believe that there has been general tardiness on this issue by this and previous governments. We must take action now, especially given that a Canadian, Mr. William A. O'Neill, is the Secretary General of the IMO. Mr. O'Neill, I am sure, must feel abandoned at times. This does nothing for the credibility of the International Maritime Organization, a group which, throughout the 1980s, urged safety improvements to the so-called "ro-ro ferries", the classification of ships that includes the Estonian ferry that sank in the Baltic Sea just a few weeks ago. The results of that inaction are obvious. We cannot afford the realization of another of the IMO's learned concerns.

Honourable senators, Canada is current in some of the areas of international maritime cooperation. We are one of some 15 countries in the world that have implemented or are considering the IMO's ship identification number scheme. This is a program that permanently identifies ships with an international registry, thereby preventing, one hopes, theft or illegal title transfer. We are, however, far behind countries such as the United States, the Netherlands, Germany and Norway with respect to progress on other maritime security requirements.

In 1986, amidst the fallout of the Achille Lauro tragedy, Austria, Egypt and Italy proposed that the IMO prepare a convention that deals with unlawful acts against shipping. They maintained that:

> ...such a convention has the aim to fill the gap in the present system regarding the suppression of such acts. In fact, while these three universal conventions deal with the safety of air navigation...the safety of maritime navigation is not covered by any similar international instrument.

This led to the signing of a convention in Rome in 1988, which was subsequently brought into force on March 1, 1992.

The same is true of Canadian law. There is extensive protection of those people and products that travel by air in Canada and in Canadian aircraft abroad, but nothing to assure the safe passage of ships. We should have listened. Today, piracy and fraud on the high seas are rampant. Three areas of the world are hotspots: Southeast Asia, West Africa and the Caribbean. Maritime fraud knows no bounds. Crimes are perpetrated against passenger ships and cargo. Without proper international regulations, we risk the loss of life and property.

If the loss of life is not enough to kickstart international cooperation, maybe the hard dollar figures will be. By 1985, the International Maritime Bureau, or IMB, estimated that maritime fraud could have reached $13 billion U.S. a year. In 1984, the IMB investigated cases of maritime fraud that involved $300 million U.S. and estimated this to be only 2 per cent of the total crimes that took place that year. In 1991, there were 200 incidents of piracy reported in the Strait of Malacca alone. The waters of that strait run between Malaysia and the island of Sumatra, Indonesia, and that area currently holds the distinction as the piracy capital of the planet. As our trade with the Pacific Rim increases, more of our ships will navigate the Strait of Malacca, and more than 21,000 Canadians visited Malaysia in 1993.

The impending NAFTA promises to see more of our merchant ships visit the waters of the Caribbean, joining the hundreds of cruise ships that already ply those waters carrying vacationing Canadians. The Government of Canada has a duty to protect these people and the goods they carry.

We also must consider the safety of our own ports and waters as well as the safety of foreign ships while in them. We cannot, in good conscience, ask other nations to comply with international standards with respect to our shipping while ignoring the security concerns of other flag countries when their ships are in our territory. We must take steps to ensure the security of foreign vessels that pass through our waters.

The Port of Vancouver, in the region that I represent, is of major importance to cruise vessels that originate in the U.S. and that end up in various parts of the world. Let us take, for example, the cruise ship of a foreign country which passes through the Port of Vancouver on its way to Alaska. Much like the Air India case, we share the responsibility to ensure that a particular vessel arrives at its destination safely.

This obligation is not just a moral one, it is a responsible business practice. If we ignore this responsibility and somehow become renowned for our inability to provide secure passage for foreign vessels, foreign vessels will stop visiting our ports. Furthermore, we will not have a proverbial leg to stand on when asking other nations to ensure the protection of our flagships abroad.

I fully support this legislation. It brings us closer to the international standards mentioned above. I am not so naive as to believe, however, that this bill alone will serve to provide adequate protection of Canadian interests at sea. I urge the Minister of Transport to act quickly, upon passage of this bill, to effectively regulate the control of piracy, fraud and terrorism on the high seas. This bill alone is not enough. It is merely enabling legislation.

As I mentioned earlier, Canada is far behind the rest of the world in this area. It is a source of embarrassment and it demonstrates irresponsibility. This bill is only a small step towards stamping out maritime crime and requires that comprehensive regulations be drafted to put force to this intent. This will take the full cooperation of the various industries involved.

I further urge the government to seek the guidance of marine carriers, port authorities and customers. There will be concerns about the cost of implementing such regulations. However, in discussions with these groups we must emphasize the potential costs of doing nothing. With this in mind, perhaps insurance companies should be involved in the process, as well as representatives of countries who have implemented similar guidelines.

As with the double-hulling of oil supertankers, stakeholders may not realize the seriousness of such threats until the threat is manifested upon them. Ask the operators of the Achille Lauro if they wished they had made passengers pass through metal detectors before that fateful voyage. Ask Exxon if they wished they had double-hulled tankers today, or at the time of the Exxon Valdez situation in Alaska.

Living in the peaceable country that we do, we can neither comprehend the serious view taken of the threat of piracy and fraud on the seas of the world, nor can we predict what the future may hold for our domestic maritime situation. These stakeholders must be made aware of the potential threats that exist not only here but around the world. They must be convinced of the merits of preventing such events rather than allowing consequence to rear its ugly head.

What if the fish war with the United States escalates? What if environmental groups should decide to target outgoing lumber shipments? The Air India disaster and the bomb that killed two baggage handlers at Tokyo's Narita airport, both not so many years ago, proved that terrorist events can be initiated on Canadian soil. There is overwhelming evidence that Canadian ships face threats while abroad.

We can choose, honourable senators, to ignore the possibility of further tragedies and financial loss, or we can choose to be prepared. Adequate regulations stemming from this particular bill, coupled with the appropriate punishment for offenders, will serve to keep our seas safe and assure the safety and sovereignty of our flagships abroad.

I support this legislation fully and urge its rapid passage.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Petten, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

NINETY-SECOND CONFERENCE, COPENHAGEN, DENMARK

Hon. Peter Bosa rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, October 25, 1994:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Ninety-second Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference held in Copenhagen from September 12 to 17, 1994.

He said: Honourable senators, it is my privilege to speak on the report of the Ninety-second Inter-Parliamentary Conference held in Copenhagen from September 12 to 17. My distinguished colleagues, Senators Ottenheimer and Spivak and myself attended this conference along with five members of the House of Commons.

Before speaking about the deliberations which took place at the conference, I should like to mention a few points concerning bilateral relations with our host country.

Denmark remains an important partner for Canada on both bilateral and multilateral levels. A strong bedrock of goodwill between our two countries reflects common backgrounds and aspirations. These are intertwined with participation in a multitude of international organizations, such as the United Nations, NATO, CSCE and the OECD. Shared democratic values result in a sense of like-mindedness on virtually all major international issues of the day. These encompass a wide range of issues. Currently, these include efforts to bring peace to former Yugoslavia. Both Canada and Denmark were virtually the last NATO members willing to permit air strikes in Bosnia. Similar approaches are held on other peace-keeping endeavours, human rights, assistance to former states of the Soviet Union, concern for the environment, Arctic affairs, refugee asylum problems and other issues.

• (1430)

As you are aware, Greenland and the Faroe Islands are Danish territories which enjoy home rule government. Canada has a common Arctic boundary with Greenland, which has fostered special contacts for many years. Canada has proposed that the Arctic countries, including Denmark which is responsible for Greenland's foreign affairs, form an Arctic council at the ministerial level to promote circumpolar cooperation. Since 1987, Canada has had an Honorary Consul in Greenland.

Specific bilateral ties between our two countries include the Scandinavian-Canadian Friendship Association, with members across Denmark and a business group called The Fiddlehead Club, both of which promote bilateral relations in their respective areas.

Cultural exchanges are fairly active and include special links between Canada's National Ballet and the Royal Ballet of Copenhagen, and the appearance of a number of Canadian artists performing and exhibiting in Denmark each year. Leonard Cohen, Oscar Peterson, Bryan Adams and other performers are well known in Denmark. Canadian literature has been well received by the Danes. Since 1981, close to 150 books have been translated into Danish. Well-known authors such as Margaret Atwood, Nino Ricci and others have a popular following in Denmark.

Canada substantially funds the Canadian Documentation and Information Centre located at the University of Aarhus. Courses in Canadian literature are offered at three Danish universities. Exchange programs between Canadian and Danish universities are developing steadily through one-on-one contacts or through the thriving and effective Nordic Association for Canadian Studies established in Denmark in 1984.

Currently, the Danish foreign ministry is looking after Canadian interests in Tripoli. They also performed this task on our behalf in Teheran for eight years until we re-established diplomatic relations with that country in 1988.

You may recall that Foreign Minister Helveg Petersen made a very successful, but informal, visit to Ottawa in February 1994. The visit provided an especially opportune time to discuss peace-keeping in Bosnia and related problems. It highlighted the genuinely cordial and substantive bilateral relations between our two countries.

Turning to the conference itself, at the outset, I should like to express on behalf of the delegation our thanks and appreciation to the officials from the Canadian Human Rights Commission, Foreign Affairs and International Trade Canada who briefed our delegation prior to its departures, as well as to the researchers at the Library of Parliament who provided background papers.

I would also pay tribute to the Canadian ambassador, Mr. Ernest Hébert, and his colleagues for their assistance and support during the conference. At the beginning of our work, Mr. Hébert and other staff members provided a comprehensive and informative briefing on Denmark. Our ambassador also hosted a reception during the conference in order for us to meet other delegates as well as Danish business people interested in Canada.

The first topic on the agenda of our conference was, "Strengthening national structures, institutions and organizations of society which play a role in promoting and safeguarding human rights". This topic had been proposed by the Canadian group. Two of our colleagues from the other place, Mr. Allmand and Ms Barnes, spoke on behalf of Canada in the plenary debate and represented Canada at the meetings of the committee which examined the subject and prepared a draft resolution. Mr. Allmand served as chair of the drafting committee. Twenty-four countries, including Canada, submitted draft resolutions for consideration. The Canadian draft resolution served as the base document for the drafting committee.

I will mention one amendment successfully proposed by the Canadian group. At the March 1994 IPU Conference in Paris, the IPU adopted a plan of action to correct the imbalances in the participation of men and women in political life. Included in the recommendations was one relating to the use of gender-neutral language. The Canadian group proposed that the term "les droits de la personne" be used as the translation of human rights in the French text rather than "les droits de l'homme". This terminology has been used in Canada for a number of years. Although this amendment was initially defeated by the drafting committee, our delegates lobbied hard and were successful at the committee stage. We understand that officials from Status of Women Canada have been raising this issue for several years at international fora without success. I hope this innovation by the IPU will convince other international bodies to adopt similar language.

The second topic on the agenda was "International cooperation and national action to support social and economic development: contribution to the World Summit on Social Development". Our colleague Senator Spivak and Mrs. Cowling represented Canada in the plenary debate and at the committee which examined the draft resolution. Again, of the 24 draft resolutions, the Canadian resolution was used as one of the base documents by the drafting committee.

Senator Spivak successfully introduced an amendment to ensure that international financial institutions such as the World Bank or the International Monetary Fund would "evaluate projects in advance of implementation" to ensure that these projects would not impact negatively on the local population.

At each conference there is an opportunity to vote on a supplementary item to be included on the agenda. On this occasion, the topic was "Implementation of the commitments agreed to in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations". Our colleague Senator Ottenheimer and Mrs. Pickard were the Canadian representatives of the committee meetings on this subject. The Canadian group successfully introduced three amendments relating to agriculture, the dispute settlement mechanism and regulatory and/or administrative measures required to facilitate the expeditious implementation of the Uruguay Round.

At the Copenhagen conference, there was also debate on the general political, economic and social situation in the world. Mr. Paré, representing the official opposition in the House of Commons, spoke about the rights of minorities. I used this opportunity to speak once again about the importance of the indefinite extension of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. Colleagues may recall that at the last IPU Conference in Paris in March 1994, the Canadian group was able to have this subject included on the agenda as a supplementary item. This was a significant achievement, but it was necessary to continue to raise the importance of the forthcoming conference on the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

You may remember that this treaty, which is the main bulwark against the proliferation of nuclear weapons, calls for the parties to the treaty to meet 25 years after its coming into force, that is in 1995, to decide whether to extend it for a fixed period, fixed periods, or indefinitely. Canada is firmly committed to the view that only the indefinite extension option provides any assurance about the persistence of the treaty and the benefits it supplies.

So far, there have been two meetings of the preparatory committee. Unfortunately, the latest meeting shows distressing signs of sterile bloc-formation and mistrust among the delegations. It was for this reason that I spoke to fellow parliamentarians about the non-proliferation treaty, reminding them that the union was established so that parliamentarians from around the world could work for peace and cooperation among people. I urged them to exert pressure on their own governments to ensure that the treaty is extended indefinitely.

I should also like to mention the reports of the IPU Committee on the Human Rights of Parliamentarians. As you are aware, the Canadian group has been very active in the work of this committee. Our colleague Senator Neiman, who was instrumental in its establishment, was a member for a number of years.

During the Copenhagen conference, the violations of the rights of 78 members or former members of Parliament in ten countries were brought to the attention of the delegates. The 78 cases were from Albania, one; Burundi, one; Columbia, six; Honduras, one; Indonesia, one; Maldives, two; Myanmar, formerly Burma, 34; Togo, three; and Turkey, 23.

• (1440)

Supporting actions by legislatures play an important role in securing positive developments. Following the last IPU conference in Paris, the executive committee of the Canadian IPU Group undertook supporting action regarding human rights abuses in two countries, namely, Turkey and Bulgaria. Both of these countries are members of the Twelve Plus Group, the so-called "caucus" of the Western democracies. We arranged meetings with the ambassadors of those countries to seek their assistance in resolving these cases.

Honourable colleagues, I have just mentioned the Twelve Plus Group, which is actually a caucus of 36 full members and three associate members. Named after the 12 members of the European Union, it is a caucus of countries with freely elected and multi-party parliaments with free and active opposition. Created in 1974, the Twelve Plus Group plays a significant role in the ongoing work of the union. I am honoured to have been elected as chairperson of the Twelve Plus Group for 1995.

Honourable senators, the IPU was the first worldwide political organization to promote the concept of peace and international arbitration. Its origins date back to 1889 when the first Inter-Parliamentary Conference for International Arbitration met in Paris. It was attended by delegates from nine countries, including our host country, Denmark. In fact, one of the co-founders of the Union, Frederic Bajer, a Danish parliamentarian, was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for his contribution to promoting understanding and a peaceful settlement of conflicts.

At the inaugural ceremony, the Speaker of the Danish Parliament, Mr. Henning Rasmussen, who served as president of the conference, spoke about the reasons for the strong support of the IPU in his Parliament. He said:

> It is important that we listen to one another and learn from one another in the IPU. By so doing, we can remove the basis of false prejudice and promote the deeply rooted wishes of all individuals and all peoples for peace and harmony across frontiers. The IPU can also support concrete projects aimed at developing democracy in the individual countries and in this way contribute to furthering and consolidating democratic forms of government.

Honourable colleagues, I firmly believe that the delegates of the Ninety-second Conference worked hard to achieve the objectives outlined by Speaker Rasmussen.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I should also like to say a few words about the Ninety-second Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference in Copenhagen which I was privileged to attend. The Inter-Parliamentary Union is a world body of 131 member nations and is the major international forum for parliamentarians. Unlike the UN, it brings together representatives from government and opposition benches. While the United Nations is a world body of governments, the IPU provides a forum where parliamentarians, no matter what their political stripes, can come together and debate issues of concern to parliamentarians of the world.

Certainly, the IPU has no authority over member countries, but it does address pressing world and domestic problems. The Ninety-second Conference, for example, examined issues of poverty, trade, nuclear arms, human rights, and economic and social development. There was discussion, as there has been in Canada recently, about the inhumane practice of female genital mutilation. There was concern that, on the Uruguay Round of the GATT, some nations are not moving swiftly enough to have legislation in place by the start of the new year. There was also discussion about an indefinite extension of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

The IPU is not an alternate or mini UN. However, it does share many of the UN's objectives: peace, cooperation, and the defence of human rights. It can and does make valuable contributions to UN activities, bringing perspectives of not only governments but also of opposition parties that are often as important in seeing that countries honour their international commitments.

I should like to report specifically on how the IPU is preparing for two significant United Nations gatherings and, in so doing, supporting UN goals.

In September, 1995, the UN will hold the Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing to determine, among other things, why women in some countries are worse off than they were 10 or 15 years ago and, more important, what can be done about it. As parliamentarians, we should take special note of IPU plans. The IPU has decided, in conjunction with the Chinese National Peoples Congress, to hold a one-day meeting of MPs present in Beijing. It has determined that its delegation to the conference will be made up of an equal number of men and women. As its major contribution, it will present an IPU plan that any nation can follow to address the underrepresentation of women in political life.

The IPU has been working on this plan for some years. First, it documented the marked imbalance between men and women in political life in all parts of the world. Canada's record, measured by the percentage of women in the House of Commons and the Senate, is less than abysmal, but there is room for improvement. By the IPU tally, Canada ranks fourteenth among the countries in the world that have even a modest representation of women in lower chambers. Approximately 18 per cent of Canadian MPs are women, which puts us behind such countries as Vietnam, Germany, China and Austria. It places us far behind Finland, where 39 per cent of the elected representatives are women. Put another way, we are second among the G-7 nations and a good deal ahead of the U.S., the U.K. and France.

Still, Canada needs a plan of action as much as other so-called advanced industrialized states. I commend the plan adopted by the Inter-Parliamentary Council in Paris in March. I hope that it will be well read by members of this chamber and the House of Commons. I also urge the government to take it into account in its preparations for the Beijing Conference.

The second UN conference that seized the attention of parliamentarians in Copenhagen will be held in March in Copenhagen as well. The World Summit for Social Development will give world leaders an opportunity to focus on human security, not arms; on fair distribution of wealth, not its concentration; and on reducing poverty and unemployment, not creating them by overexploiting natural resources and degrading the environment. The IPU unanimously adopted a 19-item resolution that calls upon world leaders to do several specific things.

I will not list them all, but one that I mentioned in my own address to the IPU conference is now being called the "20/20" formula. It calls on developing countries to earmark a minimum of 20 per cent of their budget and industrialized countries to earmark at least 20 per cent of their aid to the goal of achieving universal primary education; a reduction in adult illiteracy; primary health care; safe drinking water and sanitation for all; the elimination of severe malnutrition; and family planning for all willing couples. The "20/20" concept sets out minimum targets for achieving these humane goals by the year 2005.

The IPU resolution also calls on all industrialized countries to earmark at least 0.7 per cent of their GNP for development aid before the year 2000, and promotes a specific reform of the United Nations and the creation of an Economic Security Council in which developing countries would have adequate representation. These are only a few of the concrete measures proposed and adopted by IPU delegates. They also approved some 26 measures to strengthen national institutions that safeguard human rights.

The IPU is not the UN, but it does important work in garnering parliamentarians' opinions and giving them a broad perspective on matters that arise time and again in their own Parliaments. I certainly enjoyed the opportunity to be a member of the Canadian delegation and would draw the attention of all senators to the IPU's continuing work.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

• (1450)

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

STUDY ON THE FUTURE DEVELOPMENT OF THE DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS—REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Fifth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, entitled, "Keeping Faith: Into the Future."—(Honourable Senator Haidasz).

Leave having been given to revert to Order No. 3, Reports of Committees:

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I thank you for the privilege at this time to continue the debate on the report of the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs which was tabled in this chamber on October 27.

Remembrance Day last Friday, commemorating the historic armistice of November 11, 1918 ending World War I, was a day for all of us to participate in remembrance ceremonies in our communities throughout Canada.

In Toronto, I had the privilege of laying a wreath at the Old City Hall cenotaph, and to make remarks of tribute to the valiant members of the Canadian Armed Forces and their Allied comrades who made the supreme sacrifice of their lives in the major conflicts of this century to preserve freedom and the institutions of democracy.

How could we fail to remember them, when sitting on either side of this chamber we look at the magnificent tableaux depicting the battles in which Canadian troops took part in World War I, which was known as the mother of wars in this century.

How could we parliamentarians not remember the victims and veterans of World War I and World War II and other conflicts, among whom were giants: eminent Canadians such as the late Governor General Georges Vanier, a gallant major general in war and a venerated, exemplary man of virtue in civic life and public office; or Nobel Peace Prize laureate Lester B. Pearson, former Prime Minister of Canada; or Raymond Collishaw of British Columbia, the unsung ace fighter pilot of World War I and Air Vice Marshal of the Royal Canadian Air Force in World War II; or our Victoria Cross recipient, a fellow Manitoban of Senator Molgat's, Andrew Mynarski, who was recognized for his bravery in dying for his comrades in a burning airplane. Yes, we do remember them, and those who passed away with them, by "keeping faith", as the subcommittee report is entitled.

> All these were honoured in their generations and were the glory of our times...

These words of tribute were translated from Hebrew scripture commemorating the merits of heroic men and women to be testified forever. Because of the debt held by civilization to sacrifices made by such giants of virtue, these words are carved in stone in the portico spanning Lyon Street here in Ottawa, part of the Veterans Memorial Building, at one time housing the Department of Veterans Affairs.

It is indeed with pride and pleasure that I have this afternoon the opportunity to acknowledge gratefully the report entitled: "Keeping Faith: Into the Future", which was tabled in this house on October 27 by the chairman of the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs.

The whole raison d'etre of that committee is to recognize our continuing gratitude, owed in the first place to the members of the Canadian Armed Forces who fought, and to the women and men who, at munition factories, communications and in other capacities also served in the ominous conflicts of this century. To Senator Jack Marshall, honorary colonel of the Royal Newfoundland regiment, we owe profound thanks for his tireless efforts in calling for concrete measures not only to recognize but also to address the debt owed by us all.

Our gratitude as responsible and respectful Canadians and senators also extends to soldiers, veterans and civilians far beyond our borders for their sacrifice in support of the Allied cause.

As a Canadian parliamentarian of Polish descent, I also think today of Poland's gratitude, as well as that of Britain, the United States, France and many other Allied nations towards their comrades who were members of the Canadian Armed Forces. We saw evidence of this gratitude during the celebrations last June of the fiftieth anniversary of the landing in Normandy, known as D-day. We were represented there by two colleagues, honorary colonels of Canadian regiments: Senator Jack Marshall and Senator Gildas Molgat.

Some of the Allied veterans, many of whom are Canadian citizens today, could not return to the freedom for which they fought. In particular, I recall the bravery of the members of the Polish Air Force, who helped train Canadians and fought alongside their British comrades in the Battle of Britain, and the valient Polish soldiers who fought on many a battlefield and on the seas under British and Canadian command in World War II. Wartime British Supreme Commander and Prime Minister of Great Britain, Winston Churchill, paid tribute to the contribution of these valiant Poles in his memorable tribute after the Battle of Britain: "Never was so much owed by so many to so few."

It was my privilege also to repeat that tribute in my eulogy upon the death of Sir Winston Churchill, who was honoured in the Nineteenth Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations 30 years ago, when I was parliamentary secretary to the Right Honourable Paul Martin.

Each nation naturally finds itself limited in the means to recompense sacrifices made by other nationals to whom it is indebted. Yet what is certain is that within our own borders and towards citizens now living abroad, governments of Canada have always striven for justice and equity for its veterans and those it would naturalize from Allied forces, and tried most generously to pay a token of our debt.

The recommendations of the report "Keeping Faith" will serve this essential objective of justice and equity eminently well. By the administrative and legislative results inspired by this report, Canada will continue its noble tradition of justice and fairness.

Honourable senators, I hasten to emphasize, as "Keeping Faith" emphasizes, the crucial place of spouses of veterans in our recognition and in the measures we design for them and their beloved. Thanks to this report, and the reports and studies on which it builds, it is a matter of record that spouses of veterans are of singular value to Canada. The wounds — both the physical, which may scar over, and the non-physical, which often do not — continue to be borne by our dear veterans and by those who are most closely called to share their lives and particular crosses. I say these wounds are borne, not to say that they afflict, nor to deny that fact. For there is no denying that what is borne by spouses is of such great value that Canadians far and wide could hardly repay it.

• (1500)

Canada as a nation could never hope to discharge the debt owed men and women who died in conflicts in which freedom and democracy were threatened. Therefore, it is right that in addition to the show of respect we make towards our glorious dead, as we have just done this past weekend, we honour them in their generations. The debt of honour is marked by the treatment received by those we see or bear in living memory: They whose comrades lay dying in arms, who took up the torch and who, by numbers daily increasing, are passing away and handing this torch on to their generations. For if these were honoured in their generations, then may they be the glory of their times.

Thus our honour must go beyond tokens of what was rendered — a thing of such value the word "service" dismally fails it. For the living exemplars before us, in whom we can honour something of the whole heroic corps of which they are forever part, are men and women who in their person have borne wounds, afflictions and troubles for us. They continue to do so, as witnesses abundantly testified before the committee.

When we knit our brows over the seemingly mundane subject of pensions, the testimony brought to Senator Marshall's committee should keep us mindful that recompense for wounds and scars — internal and external — received for our freedom is a matter of justice. We need to keep in mind simple questions. For example, is justice served where one veteran's spouse is neglected? Spouses, wounded and often bereft, discharge the greater part of what beholden care our generations owe the honoured. More, they are the very prize for whom youth ventured to risk all, and many of whom paid with their lives. What memory, then, is honoured in a neglect to embrace the very purpose and aspirations of those generous souls towards their loved ones, their generations and their comrades? It is with this that we are called in that immortal poem to break not faith.

"Keeping Faith" documents in no uncertain terms post-traumatic stress syndrome. This syndrome, involving eventual generalized dysfunction, originates in a morally shattering experience such as few survived to tell of in the carnage at Dieppe or the tortures in prisoner of war camps and also in Nazi concentration camps responsible for the holocaust. In the 43 years of my medical practice in Toronto, the symptoms of post-traumatic stress syndrome were always a great challenge to me and my colleagues as well as psychiatrists. The formerly ill-appreciated, largely untreated, yet very real syndrome, only a few years ago gained understanding and official recognition by the Canadian Psychiatrists' Association.

As "Keeping Faith" reports, in 1988 Major Robert Stretch, familiar with the etiology of post-traumatic stress syndrome suffered by United States veterans of Vietnam, found that "among those resident in Canada the incidence of post-traumatic stress disorder had not decreased with time, but had become worse", unlike their U.S. counterparts. We can read about it further in the report on page 33.

Corporal Woodrow Allan Carmack Sr. brought testimony on behalf of Canadian Vietnam Veterans to the effect that post-traumatic stress disorder is not only a problem for veterans but also affects their wives and children. In fact, Officer Carmack said in committee that "It affects every aspect of their lives." He reported with regard to chronic post-traumatic stress syndrome that for Canadian Vietnam Veterans "the rate... is 2.3 times higher" than the prevalence among United States veterans of the same conflict. The lateness of Canadian psychiatric recognition and a reticence on the part of the Department of Veterans Affairs to accord benefit of doubt to veterans may explain the tardiness of Canada's endorsement of veterans' special needs due to this syndrome. However, it need not deter redress now and henceforth.

The Dieppe Veterans and Prisoners of War Association's Dr. Lynne Beal added to the valuable testimony in committee relating to post-traumatic stress disorder, or what is going in typical military understatement by the misnomer of "critical incident stress". To be colloquial, a probable improvement over the military term would be "indelible horror". What is clear from Dr. Beal's testimony before our committee — who has studied the etiology of the syndrome in nearly 300 Canadian veterans of Dieppe, many of them survivors of great cruelty in death camps — is that it constitutes a disorder emanating from horrifying events, not merely the stress imminent in such events.

Corroborating the cumulative findings of many others, the incidence and degree of post-traumatic stress disorder has remained undiminished while we have spent half a century neglecting that reality. Even veterans who managed to escape Dieppe, having seen megadeath rained upon them, show a high and undiminished incidence of the post-traumatic stress disorder. Honourable senators, is it any wonder? I am certain that survivors of V-1 and V-2 bombings, civilian Jewish and other survivors of death camps, resistance fighters who witnessed every hope crushed — as in the seige of Warsaw which lasted 63 days — and mariners who witnessed the relentless destruction of merchant and civilian vessels at sea, must suffer in like manner, and that they have done so for the better part of a lifetime.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I apologize, but I must inform the honourable senator that his time allocation has expired. Perhaps he could arrive at a quick conclusion or ask for an adjournment to the next sitting of the Senate.

• (1510)

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have only a few more things to say.

It was not discussed during the testimony heard by this committee, but it is of great interest to Canadian society that in Holland a study, conducted also in 1990 under the auspices of the then-attorney general and styled the Remmelink report, revealed that a disturbingly large number of men in their seventies were also requesting that their lives be ended by painless means or lethal injection.

In conclusion, honourable senators, what a disturbing prospect, is it not, to learn now, as Europe strives to enjoy the fruits of freedom dearly bought two generations ago, the morbid effects of this syndrome. Here in Canada, one need only remember that one of the darkest spectres hovering with the swastikas over many of the camps was mercy killing, to which the Dutch hero Titus Brandsma was martyred.

Honourable senators, of the almost half a million veterans within our shores, too many have not received either a timely or fair recognition of their due. Of the 53 recommendations made in this report entitled: "Keeping Faith: Into the Future", 11 call for something more than changes of administrative and regulatory practice alone.

In view of the need for a tangible response to this report of our committee, I would urge honourable senators to consider the prospect of emulating the House of Commons by finding some mechanism through which we might request that the Government of Canada be apprised of the fifth report of the Senate Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs, as tabled in this chamber on October 27 last. The House of Commons has a special mechanism called standing order 109, which states that within 150 calendar days, the government must respond.

Recognizing that the House of Commons is master of its own affairs, it is not my intention to suggest that the Senate presume today to do anything other than urge that the Minister of Veterans Affairs become apprised of our report, and in the spirit of the House of Commons practice, at least give us a response without undue delay, since the ranks of our veterans are thinning fast. It is well understood that, while such an undertaking would place the government under no specific obligation, it would be a suitable way of expressing the sincere desire of senators to have their excellent work noted, and perhaps responded to.

Honourable senators, I invite you to participate in this debate concerning this important report, and to bring forth your suggestions so that our Senate reports are not forgotten by the government, that our efforts and expense are not incurred in vain, and so that a mechanism may be found through which to apprise the federal government of our valuable work, and invite its response to such reports.

On motion of Senator Berntson, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 17, 1994

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

MARINE SAFETY— AD HOC PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE ON LIGHTSTATIONS

Hon. Pat Carney: Honourable senators, I want to share with you the following news release dated November 17, 1994.

> The Ad Hoc Parliamentary Committee on Lightstations will visit British Columbia next week to hear British Columbians' views on the role of staffed lightstations on the B.C. coast, despite a last-minute cancellation of the proposed Senate hearings on Wednesday.
>
> The committee is co-chaired by Conservative Senator Pat Carney (British Columbia) and Reform MP John Duncan (North Island—Powell River).
>
> It was formed Thursday after six Liberal senators voted to cancel the Senate subcommittee hearings on the lights, scheduled for November 21-23. Five Progressive Conservative senators voted to proceed with the subcommittee trip.
>
> Carney and Duncan said the Ad Hoc Committee will hold hearings as scheduled in Richmond November 21 at the Best Western Richmond Inn, in Sydney November 22 at the Institute of Ocean Sciences, and in Campbell River at the Campbell River Museum on November 23.
>
> Other members of the Ad Hoc Committee are Senators Mike Forrestall (Maritimes) and Janice Johnson (Winnipeg—Interlake); and Reform M.P.s John Cummins (Delta) and Jack Frazer (Saanich—Gulf Islands). "Membership on the committee is open to any federal B.C. parliamentarian on a non-partisan basis", Carney and Duncan said.
>
> The mandate of the Ad hoc Committee will be to review the present role of staffed lightstations and the vital services which they now supply and to explore what role they might play in the future.
>
> The Liberal senators cancelled the Senate subcommittee on the grounds that "this is not an opportune time to pursue the study" since the Coast Guard is holding public consultations. The Coast Guard has announced that its public consultations will be on plans to implement destaffing of the remaining 70 staffed lightstations on Canada's east and west coasts.
>
> Some 35 groups, representing several hundred thousand British Columbians, had indicated they wished to make presentations to the Senate subcommittee when it was cancelled.
>
> They represented fishing unions and associations, aviation councils, the B.C. Ferry Corporation, recreational groups, coastal communities and band councils served by the lightstations.
>
> The Ad Hoc Committee co-chairs urged witnesses already committed to the cancelled Senate hearings to present their views to the Ad Hoc Committee. Reports of the hearings will be tabled in both the Senate and the House of Commons.

NATIONAL CHILD DAY

Hon. Landon Pearson: Honourable senators, this Sunday, November 20th, is National Child Day, a day to celebrate the nation's children and to commemorate the adoption of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child which took place on November 20, 1989. The Canadian government ratified this convention in December 1991, and on March 19, 1993, as a result of community action and a private member's bill, November 20th was designated as a day to promote Canada's children, and to make all of us more aware of their special needs and concerns.

Honourable senators, 1994 is the International Year of the Family, and I want to draw your attention to the commitment we have all made through our government, not only to children at home and abroad, but also to their families. Underlying all of the articles of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child is the clearly stated assumption that "the family is the natural environment for the growth and well-being of... children".

What has also been natural throughout most of human history is that families have shared their child-rearing responsibilities with the societies of which they are part. This is because the future of every society has always depended on the kinds of people young children grow up to be.

The Children's Convention gives legal expression to this most natural of human arrangements. It not only guarantees the child's right to a family but also calls upon the states that have ratified it to ensure, as best they can, that families have all the supports they need to nurture and care for their children. States are also required to develop, if they do not already have them, the health, education and legal systems that are essential to a child's healthy physical, emotional, social, intellectual and spiritual development.

For there is a second assumption that underlies the articles of the convention: that the child is a person, a small one perhaps, and vulnerable, lacking knowledge and experience, but a person nonetheless; the subject, not the object, of rights.

Honourable senators, this means that children have certain rights inherent to their status as members of the human family. At the same time, the convention, in its articles, recognizes that the skills necessary for the responsible exercise of these rights only come with education and maturity, and that children need to be shepherded through the process of acquiring them by thoughtful and caring adults.

There is nothing contradictory in these two assumptions about the child as a person and the families that children live in. Experience has shown that strong and loving families are the best guarantors of children's rights. But experience has also shown that under the pressure of poverty, misery, violence or war, some families break down. Then children are neglected, even abandoned. Sometimes they are exploited; often they are abused. Their basic rights as human beings are ignored. It is then that States Parties to the convention must move beyond their responsibilities for general support to engage in active intervention.

However, interventions should always take place with full respect for all concerned: the parents, other family members, and especially the children. Thoughtful parents already know that children must be encouraged to be active in their own development if they are to become caring, responsible, productive adults. Other authorities must keep this reality in mind. Article 12 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child tries to ensure that this will happen by binding its signatories to "assure to the child who is capable of forming his or her own views the right to express those views freely in all matters affecting the child, the views of the child being given due weight in accordance with the age and maturity of the child."

Those who object to the convention usually do so on the basis of a mistaken impression that it promotes the rights of children at the expense of the rights of their parents and families. This is a serious misreading of both the letter and the spirit of the text. Children learn what they live with. It is in families that treat them as persons and not as possessions that children grow up to be respectful of others.

Honourable senators, as we celebrate Canada's children on Sunday, as I am sure we all will, let us also celebrate the adults they may become if we approach them with love and respect, and surround them with the protections, the provisions and the opportunities we promised them when we ratified their convention.

• (1410)

FINANCE

TAXATION OF REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS

Hon. Terry Stratton: Honourable senators, I wish to conclude my statement of yesterday, and again I offer apologies for proceeding beyond the time limit. I thank Senator Stanbury for his information regarding RRSPs and who buys how much.

Yesterday I stated that Marc Lalonde, Minister of Finance in 1994, stated:

> I am proposing changes to put all pension plans on an equal footing for tax purposes...

[Senator Pearson]

In essence, he stated that small business professionals, the self-employed, would be placed on an equal footing with those who have government pension plans and company pension plans.

To reduce the upper limit of RRSP contributions — which is already being penalized 15 per cent — without equal restrictions on government and company pensions at a similar level is grossly unfair. With respect to the talk about taxing the so-called rich, remember that they are not only the self-employed but also government and corporate employees.

Lastly, our children and our grandchildren are saving through RRSPs for their retirement. When they get to retirement age, many middle-income people will have well in excess of $500,000 saved in RRSPs. That is a must.

The statement today by Mr. Peterson in the other place that the government is thinking of taxing individuals with RRSPs over $500,000 has sent shock waves through the middle class, the hard-working individuals who are trying to save that amount of money in order to retire. The signal is that, once again, government cannot be trusted, for indeed their hard-earned retirement money will be taken away by government.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

RESPONSE TO SPEAKER'S RULING

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I thank His Honour for his remarks yesterday. I am pleased and honoured that he has signalled to honourable senators the seriousness of the matters that I raised. I am happy that he has recognized the need for the Senate to vindicate its privileges.

When we speak of Parliament in its three components, the Crown, the Senate, and the House of Commons, we must be proud that it is the Senate which is the true house of Parliament; that it is the Senate where the functions of Parliament are conducted. This is borne out by the fact that it is the Clerk of the Senate who is the Clerk of Parliament, for historically the Clerk of the House of Commons has been called the Under Clerk of Parliament. The Senate, as the upper house of Parliament, is where Parliament assembles, for example, during the Throne Speech and Royal Assent.

I am grateful and pleased that His Honour reminded honourable senators that his role and powers as Speaker of the Senate are entirely different from the role and powers of the Speaker of the other place. This difference is manifested by the fact that we refer to the Speaker of the Senate as "His Honour" and not "Mr. Speaker". When we rise to speak in this chamber, we address each other with the words "honourable senator" and not "Mr. Speaker" as in the other place.

I am pleased that His Honour underscored in his remarks the fact that his role in the matter was solely to ascertain whether the matter should take priority over other business. I am pleased and grateful that His Honour underlined the fact that the determination of these matters and the judgment thereupon rests with honourable senators and the Senate.

His Honour has placed these matters fairly and squarely in our laps, where they belong. In his remarks, which I was able to read only a few hours ago because of translation problems, I note that

His Honour did not mention the second area of breach of privilege which I raised on October 5, which was:

> ...the compulsion by the Ontario Court General Division of service, by facsimile transmission, of any court documents and processes that require personal service in the precincts of Parliament without leave of the Speaker of the Senate of Canada.

This is most important, because His Honour goes on to say that there is a remedy in the courts.

I mention the issue of service of process in the precincts of Parliament because these matters of defence counsel's actual service in the precincts of Parliament are not before the Court of Appeal. These events occurred before June 14, 1994. It is only the justiciable events of June 14, 1994 which are before the Court of Appeal.

I thank His Honour for his proposal of yesterday, and I quote him where he says:

> Since the Senate's privileges are now, and even more directly, before the courts, I believe that its interests may well be served by an intervention to speak to the limited issue of the Senate's right as an institution to the attendance of its members.

This is a profound idea. However, for reasons of personal probity and prudence, I do believe that this proposal is best advanced by His Honour or by a senator other than myself.

Finally, on the matters of the lawsuits, the appeals, their status, and the question of two proceedings in the courts and in the Senate, I state the following: It was my deliberate and diligent intention not to speak in this chamber on the content and substance of these lawsuits, save to say that they are civil proceedings and not criminal. That continues to be my goal.

However, in his remarks, His Honour has said:

> I am confident that the judgment of that court ... will ... afford Senator Cools the full measure of remedy to which she may be entitled.

I quote again:

> The interests of institutional comity, and hence the best interest of the Senate, seem to me to dictate that the complaint of the senator be dealt with in one forum or another, but not both at the same time.

I am deeply grateful that His Honour in his remarks raised the concept of institutional comity, because the issue of institutional comity is the base upon which I have built my case. For the sake of His Honour and for all honourable senators, I wish to clarify that the questions being adjudicated by the Court of Appeal are different from the question I have raised for the Senate to consider. The Court of Appeal has been asked to consider those questions which rightfully belong to the Court of Appeal, that is, errors in law, et cetera. The Senate has been asked to consider the question as to whether the corporate and individual privileges of Parliament, have been breached. The adjudication of this question and its answer rightfully, solely and exclusively, belongs to the Senate.

On the issue of the determination of breach of privilege and contempt of Parliament, the Court of Appeal has no authority to pass judgment. Only Parliament has that authority. The Court of Appeal can grant me no remedy, as His Honour suggests, on the issue of the breach of privilege. More particularly and properly, if the Court of Appeal were to adjudicate, whatever its finding, that fact of adjudication would in itself be a breach of parliamentary privilege. Then, honourable senators, I would be compelled to rise in the Senate to ask the Senate to adjudicate on another breach of privilege by the Court of Appeal.

• (1420)

The Senate is the upper chamber of the high court of Parliament. Honourable senators, Parliament as an institution is not subject to the courts. Members of Parliament, as individuals, are subject to the courts. However, neither Parliament nor the law of parliamentary privilege are subject to the courts.

The Hon. the Speaker: I apologize for interrupting the honourable senator. I know that she is most concerned about this issue. However, perhaps leave would be granted in order that she might conclude her remarks. Thereafter, she may wish to proceed by way of another avenue, such as an inquiry into this issue.

Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Cools: I thank honourable senators for their indulgence. I sincerely believe that these are questions of principle.

Honourable senators, the law of privilege and the law of Parliament are matters of great constitutional importance. These laws were jealously fought for, and they should be jealously guarded. The issues I am raising have been hard fought in the constitutional history of common-law countries and are matters that have hurried many to early deaths.

Once again, I would thank the Speaker for his ruling. I should inform honourable senators that I intend to give notice that I will move a motion pursuant to rule 57(1), asking the Senate to consider these questions. I will follow through with my intention in due course.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, there are no special limitations on subject-matters that an honourable senator may raise during the period set aside for senators' statements, and I do not believe there should be any such limitations.

That being said, it should be pointed out for the record that our friend Senator Cools has done something that is prohibited by another rule of the Senate: She has purported to debate a ruling by the Speaker. She is free to appeal that ruling if she wishes to do so, but the rule is clear that senators are not permitted to comment upon or debate the rulings of the Speaker.

I do not know what Senator Cools has in mind with regard to the notice she has just given for further debate on these issues, but we will want to examine carefully the motion she intends to present in that respect.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

MARINE SAFETY—AD HOC PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE ON LIGHTSTATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gildas Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I agree with Senator Murray that "Senators' Statements" is not the time for debate. I would not want to break that rule.

In view of the fact that certain comments were made regarding votes taken yesterday in the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, I should like to ensure that the record in this regard is very clear. That was the first time that any senator has stood up to remark upon how senators voted in a committee.

Senator Carney: It is a good precedent.

Senator Molgat: I want to be clear: First, the Liberal senators who attended the Transport Committee hearing yesterday, voted in favour of a motion moved by the steering committee of that committee. That steering committee is composed of two Conservative senators and one Liberal senator. The Liberal senator voted in support of the proposal put forward by the steering committee.

Second, every committee in this house is dominated by my friends opposite. They have seven members on the Transport Committee whereas the Liberals have five. The leadership on both sides increases that number by one. If my honourable friends opposite who are members of those committees are in attendance, they can win every vote.

VISITOR IN GALLERY

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, our Minister of Foreign Affairs has been to the Middle East and has met with the chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, Mr. Arafat. I should like to draw the attention of this august assembly to the presence in our gallery today of a man who has devoted his life to improving medical conditions and care in the Middle East. He is the brother of Mr. Arafat, but he is also a person in his own right. This is his third visit to Canada. I am referring to Dr. Fathi Arafat, Chairman of the Palestine Red Cross. I am sure we all wish him well in his endeavour to have a meeting of minds in that part of the world.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I listened carefully to the discussion regarding my ruling. Since I lack broad experience in the area of rulings, perhaps I will be permitted to reflect on this matter and carefully reread the wording that was used. If it is necessary to comment further, perhaps I may be permitted to do so at the next sitting, or fairly soon.

The rubric "Senators' Statements" has become a heading under which rather wide-ranging discussions take place. Perhaps we should change the title of the item and call it "Debate" or "Discussion". If there is a malaise, perhaps the Standing Senate Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders could examine it and arrive at wise recommendations.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

THE ESTIMATES, 1994-95

TABLING OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C)

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the Supplementary Estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1995 (Sessional Paper No. 1/35-592S).

PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders, presented the following report:

Thursday, November 17, 1994

The Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

Your Committee recommends that Rule 26 which states: "A preamble to a question, whether it is asked orally or in writing, is out of order", be deleted from the Rules of the Senate.

Your Committee feels that this Rule is in conflict with two other Rules, namely:

Rule 24(4): "A debate is out of order on an oral question, but brief explanatory remarks may be made by the Senator who asks the question and by the Senator who answers it."; and

Rule 43: "A debate shall not be in order on an oral question, but brief explanatory remarks may be made by the Senator making the interrogation and by the Senator answering the same. Observations upon any such answer shall not be allowed."

Respectfully submitted,

BRENDA M. ROBERTSON,
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Robertson, report placed on Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

• (1430)

THE ESTIMATES, 1994-95

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C) REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(f), moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in Supplementary Estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1995, tabled in the Senate on November 17, 1994.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, November 22, 1994, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Honourable senators, earlier this week when I gave the best long-range information on future business I had at that time, in order to assist senators in their planning, I said that I thought we would be sitting every week until Christmas.

I expect that next Tuesday we will receive a bill from the other place. In addition, a number of committees will sit on Tuesday. I have received advice that the following committees will sit next Tuesday: Agriculture, Legal and Constitutional Affairs, and the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament. On Wednesday, Agriculture, Euthanasia, Foreign Affairs and Transport will sit. On Thursday, Agriculture, Euthanasia and National Finance will sit. Therefore, there will obviously be substantial committee work to do.

In addition to that, this afternoon we will enter into two major debates. The first will be initiated by Senator De Bané, who is Co-chairman of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Defence Policy. The second will be initiated by Senator MacEachen, the Co-chairman of the Special Joint Committee on Reviewing Canada's Foreign Policy.

Both reports are extremely important, since they will have an effect on the course of future government policy. The report of the special committee on defence matters is particularly urgent because the Department of National Defence has begun work on a white paper, and it is important that we have all of the input possible from Canadians across the country, as well as, obviously, members of this chamber who have experience in such matters.

It is my hope that we will have an active debate very soon on the report of the special committee on defence matters and a continuing debate on the foreign affairs report.

Next week, Senator Kirby, the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, will be tabling his report on financial institutions. Honourable senators will know that that report is also of importance to Canada, particularly in light of the Confederation Life bankruptcy. I should hope that that report will elicit debate here, and will be helpful in promulgating government policy in this area.

Therefore, there will be ample work for the Senate next week, and I look forward to having all senators participate in the debates.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, having heard the explanation, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

UNITED NATIONS

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON POPULATION AND DEVELOPMENT— NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I give notice that next week I intend to draw the attention of the Senate to the officially adopted text of the International Conference on Population and Development of the United Nations held in Cairo, Egypt, from September 5 to 14, 1994, which is today being reported to the General Assembly of the United Nations by the Secretary-General of the International Conference on Population and Development.

By way of inquiry, I propose to make some remarks and recommendations following up on the International Conference on Population and Development Program of Action, as the official text is called.

TRANSPORT

NEW BRUNSWICK RAIL SERVICE—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next I shall call the attention of the Senate to matters relating to rail service in the province of New Brunswick.

HEALTH

PROTECTION OF CONSCIENCE IN MEDICAL PROCEDURES—PRESENTATION OF PETITION.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I am pleased to place in the hands of the Clerk of the Senate a petition expressing a plea identical to that which I read in the chamber on March 17 last. The petitioners pray that this chamber protect health care workers with regard to freedom of conscience in the workplace.

The petition contains the signatures of 874 persons from all parts of Canada.

QUESTION PERIOD

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I apologize for the absence of the Government Leader from the chamber this afternoon. She is attending a funeral in her official capacity, in company with the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate.

PARKS CANADA

USER FEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. David Tkachuk: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On November 14, 1994, Minister Dupuy, in a release issued from his office, said that Canadians generally support the concept of increased fees for national parks and that the results of the first phase of public consultations, during which input by over 20,000 park visitors was obtained through meetings and surveys, personal interviews and direct mailings, were completed.

He also said that because of the requests that have been coming in, he is permitting more time for further consultation, until the end of December.

On June 7, 1994, Boyd Clark, on behalf of Prince Albert School District No. 3, wrote a letter to Terri Jackson of the Prince Albert National Park regarding national park fees.

He said:

> It was the feeling of the group that no extra charges should be put in place for services offered at a National Park.

• (1440)

> It is appropriate to remember that funding for all park activities already rests with the Canadian taxpayer, and perhaps your directive to recover some of the program costs from those who use the park needs to be re-examined.

Yet, surprisingly, in a survey distributed to park users by the national park in August, officials say:

> School groups now pay a very modest entry fee of $10.00 per bus. They also enjoy a very high level of service, often with specially designed interpretation programs. These groups are very important to Prince Albert National Park. However, if we wish to continue to provide quality educational programs, we will need to recover some of the costs. Our consultation with teachers and principals indicates that a fee of $2.00 per student for the duration of their stay is reasonable.

On September 27, 1994 at a Chamber of Commerce meeting, the park superintendent Dave Dahlman and his assistant could not name one teacher, one principal, one school district — not one person associated with education who agreed with their stated premise. In fact, they could not name one school organization with whom they had consulted.

On October 14, Shirley Gange, director of education for the public schools in Prince Albert, restated their opposition to the fee increase in a letter to the minister, as follows:

> As you requested, our principals responded and a letter dated June 7, 1994, was sent to Ms Terry Jackson, clearly stating that:
>
> > ...any additional charges directed at school groups would result in a significant reduction in our attendance at the park.
>
> Mr. Clarke, then Chairman of the Principal's Groups, also stated that it was the feeling of our staff that no extra charges should be put in place.
>
> Our concern is that, in a brochure distributed by Parks Canada, a statement was made that:
>
> > Our consultation with teachers and principals indicates that a fee of $2.00 per student for the duration of their stay is reasonable.

In a meeting on October 26, I pointed out to the minister other instances of what I would call deception and generous use of the English language in the surveys.

In light of these irregularities that are being permitted to go on in Waskesiu and in other parks in Canada, perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate would request that the minister have an audit done of the consultation process, in order to check out the irregularities and what I would call the deceitfulness to the Canadian taxpayers, resulting in a very invalid survey.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): I thank Senator Tkachuk for his question. I will certainly undertake to ensure that his comments are referred to the minister, Mr. Dupuy, and we will attempt to get a response.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

GROWTH IN REVENUE FROM EPF TRANSFERS TAX POINTS—POSSIBILITY OF TRANSFER TO INSTITUTIONS

Hon. Ethel Cochrane: Honourable senators, as we all observed, yesterday a large gathering of students on Parliament Hill were expressing serious concern about the future of the funding of their post-secondary education.

The Minister of Human Resources, Mr. Axworthy, has stated that provincial governments can expect funding for post-secondary education to continue to grow in the coming years because of growth in the revenues from the tax points portion of the EPF transfers. That will not be equally true in all provinces. Poorer provinces with a weaker tax base will have smaller revenue increases from those tax points.

My question to the government is: Has any estimate or projection of revenue from those tax points been made for the four Atlantic provinces? The revenue from these tax points has been part of the general revenue since 1977. Has the government received any guarantee from any of the provincial governments that future increases in those revenues will be passed on to these post-secondary institutions?

Hon. Gildas Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Thank you, Senator Cochrane. I will see to it that your question goes forward to Senator Fairbairn and, through her, to the appropriate government sources.

FORESTRY

CLAYOQUOT SOUND—GRANT BY CIDA TO PROTEST GROUP AGAINST LOGGING—GOVERNMENT POSITION—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, on October 26, 1994, I posed a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate in regard to CIDA funding that had been granted to an organization leading a campaign against logging practices in British Columbia.

This has been a major concern with industry and the working community of British Columbia, because while we are spending money travelling to Europe and other parts of the world in an attempt to justify our responsible logging practices in the province of British Columbia, CIDA appears to be funding an organization that is undermining that very action.

I ask the leader in the house here today when I can expect an answer. Senator Fairbairn had indicated that she would obtain an answer for me as quickly as possible. To date, I have not received an answer. Perhaps the Acting Leader could remind Senator Fairbairn of her undertaking or, alternately, perhaps he himself could obtain for me an answer to my question.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Thank you, Senator St. Germain. As a matter of fact, earlier this week the Leader of the Opposition raised the matter of delayed answers that had not yet come through. He subsequently sent a list of the outstanding questions to my office, and we are pressing the various departments on all of those. I can assure honourable senators that I will have a number on those outstanding answers to table the next time we meet. I am not positive if the answer to Senator Ghitter's question will be in that group but, if not, I will endeavour to move it forward.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION

CROW RATE—DIRECT PAYMENT TO FARMERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson: Honourable senators, it was reported in yesterday's Western Producer that the Minister of Agriculture and the government are leaning towards changing the statutory Crow Rate for western grain transportation. According to that newspaper, they are considering paying the farmers instead of paying the railroads, as has been the tradition.

Have any decisions been made by the government in this regard and, if so, how will the payment direct to the farmers be handled?

Hon. Gildas Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): I thank Senator Gustafson for his question. This is an area which has been irritating westerners for some time now. As we are both aware, strong views are held on both sides of the issue. I do not have a specific answer for him at the moment. As far as I know, no decision has yet been made by the government in this matter. I will, however, endeavour to find out what the situation is, and get back to him with an answer to his question.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Leave having been given to proceed to Order No. 2:

Hon. H.A. Olson moved the second reading of Bill C-50, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-50 will amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act to allow a check-off on board sales of wheat in the four western provinces and sales of barley in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia. The funds collected, estimated to be approximately $4.7 million per year, would be administered by the Western Grains Research Foundation and would be used for plant breeding research.

• (1450)

The objective is to improve farm income through two main mechanisms: by improving the field performance of barley and wheat through varieties with increased disease and pest resistance and by developing varieties with specific qualities required by the marketplace. The gross total return for this research levy is projected by the WGRF to be worth to prairie farmers approximately $400 million annually. It has been estimated that such funding could lead to the development of varieties that are 15 per cent higher yielding and equal in protein content to current varieties.

Honourable senators, I have with me six kits containing background information. If any senator wishes one, I would be glad to provide it.

Western wheat and barley producers would pay voluntarily levies of 20 cents a tonne on wheat and 40 cents a tonne on barley. These levies would be deducted from final payments when the crop year pooled accounts are settled. The Canadian Wheat Board would then remit these collected levies to the WGRF. Wheat levies would apply to all classes and grades of wheat marketed by the Wheat Board, with the exception of soft wheat marketed at delivery points in Alberta. Barley levies would apply to all classes and grades of barley marketed through the Canadian Wheat Board at delivery points in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

The main provisions of the bill relate to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, which is specific in terms of the deductions that can be made from final payments. The Canadian Wheat Board Act will be amended to allow voluntary research check-offs to be made. These amendments are as follows: Provision will be made for voluntary deductions from final payments to producers of wheat and barley, including the producer opting out of deductions, for the purposes of plant breeding and research in regard to wheat and barley. There is provision, by way of Order in Council, for fixing the rate of the deductions and for excluding from the deductions certain grains or classes of grain from certain provinces or regions within Canada.

There is provision for the deposit of the amount of deductions from final payments into a special account and, by way of Order in Council, provision for the ultimate distribution of those amounts from the account through a third party, that is the WGRF, to governments, organizations, corporations, foundations, educational institutions or other bodies having among their objectives the support of scientific research to develop improved wheat and barley varieties. There is provision for any of the costs incurred by the Canadian Wheat Board and the WGRF in the administration of the moneys to be deducted from the collected levies.

Honourable senators, I will leave out a good portion of the excellent notes I have prepared because they are contained in the kits I am prepared to distribute.

I will conclude by suggesting — and therefore soliciting the support of other senators to pass this bill — that in the long term, Canada's competitiveness could be reduced if we do not increase our plant breeding research at a time when our major competitors are doing so. For example, farmers in Australia, the United States, and the European Union have taken a direct role for years in renewing public plant breeding programs in wheat and barley. A check-off is required to keep up with our competitors.

Honourable senators will know that we have had excellent results from a number of research stations. Those that come to mind are the ones in Winnipeg, the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon, and Lethbridge. Excellent economic benefits have flowed from the testing done at these plant breeding research stations. Indeed, it would be sad if we were to fall behind, given the current financial difficulties of the government.

Honourable senators, the government has committed over $20 million for the continuation of this kind of program. This program has the potential to raise another $4.7 million in additional wheat and barley plant breeding research. Implicit in the development of this program is the recognition that producers have an important role to play in the activities that are so directly related to their livelihood. Producer funding is increasingly important because public support of plant breeding in wheat and barley has been eroded by inflation. That much should be replaced.

The Canadian plant breeding research community would also benefit from this additional funding because it would encourage scientists involved in wheat breeding research to remain within the industry. The additional funding would also help develop the next generation of plant breeders who will eventually replace those who have been doing this work for many years.

Honourable senators, I hope that we can refer this bill to committee today for detailed examination.

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson: Honourable senators, I am pleased to make a few remarks today in support of Bill C-50.

Sir Leonard Tilley once said:

> Destroy the farmer, and grass will grow in the streets of every city in the nation.

The committee meetings I have attended of both the Standing Senate committee and the special joint committee have been very good. We disagreed on some issues and agreed on others. However, both witnesses and members of the committee agreed on the importance of research and development.

Speaking from experience, it is very important to have good varieties of grain. I can remember when my father and grandfather sold Marquis wheat. It yielded about 10 to 15 bushels per acre. We then got new varieties of grain, one after the other, and production increased markedly. In the area we farm, the average yield today is 27 bushels per acre. Therefore, research and development is a necessary component for the future of agriculture in Canada.

I must also mention the competition Canada faces in the international market. Different varieties of grain are constantly coming up from the United States, some of which are licensed in Canada, and some of which are not. It is important to be competitive with grain varieties in order to compete in the international market. Without a doubt, we have the best wheat in the world. We have been able to sell wheat around the world without it being subjected to close examination because buyers have a great deal of trust in Canadian grain, and we want to keep it that way.

We on this side of the house support Bill C-50. I am convinced that the research and development provided for in this legislation will bring even better varieties of grain to our country and a better balance of payments.

Agriculture contributes about 40 per cent of the balance of payments in exports. That is a major amount. Therefore, it is beneficial to all aspects of our society to provide this research and development. Countries in which research and development in agriculture have not been done suffer severely.

I am pleased to support Bill C-50.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Olson, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Reports from Standing or Special Committees:

Hon. Dan Hays, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, presented the following report:

Thursday, November 17, 1994

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Department of Agriculture Act and to amend or repeal certain other Acts, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, October 27, 1994, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

DANIEL HAYS
Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59 (1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[Translation]

CANADA'S DEFENCE POLICY

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Defence Policy entitled "Security in a Changing World", tabled in the Senate on October 31, 1994.

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, first I would like to thank my colleagues in the Senate and the other place who took part in the proceedings of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Defence Policy.

This is the first time since the Second World War that the Government of Canada has asked parliamentarians from both houses to conduct a review of Canada's defence policy. This review is, of course, a consequence of the end of the bipolar world we had seen since the Cold War started in the early fifties. It was this bipolar principle that determined our entire defence policy and military strategy, as well as the equipment our country and our allies acquired over the years to confront the threat represented by the countries of the Warsaw Pact.

This threat meant, basically, protecting Western Europe and defending North America from a massive nuclear attack by the Soviet Union. Once the threat that determined our entire defence strategy had disappeared, it was entirely appropriate that Canada, like other countries including the United States, France, England, Australia and the Netherlands, should also conduct a review of its defence policy. As you will remember, our committee was created last February. We have had a chance to consider all aspects of our defence policy, and I, for one, was able to draw some interesting conclusions.

First of all, Canadians in general show too little interest in issues that are of such vital importance to a vast country like ours. Second, the resulting lack of familiarity with these issues too often leads people to conclude that Canada does not need an army, since there is no immediate threat to its borders. Since there is no immediate threat, the logical conclusion must be that Canada does not have to worry about what is happening in the rest of the world. However, we believe it is vital for Canada to take an active interest in everything that is happening in the world today.

If we want to be part of the G-7 and be involved with other countries in the way the world is governed, we cannot, at the same time, say we have no interest in the world's stability. I sincerely hope that our committee's efforts have helped to improve our understanding of the problem and that our report will help define the crucial elements of our defence policy.

Canada is a vast country that belongs to the club of industrialized countries, whether we are talking about the G-7, NATO, the Francophonie, the United Nations, the Commonwealth or the OECD, and we must admit that it has a wealth of resources, compared with other countries on this planet. Our exceptional resources make it incumbent on us to contribute towards maintaining stability and world peace, which is something we cannot afford to neglect. At stake is maintaining our prosperity, which basically depends on our trade with other countries and our ability to help disseminate the democratic and humanitarian values to which we are so deeply committed.

I hope with all my heart that our report will help make this clear. There is no threat of war on our borders, but we should not forget that as one of the rich countries we have a duty to do our share in maintainiing a lasting peace that is essential to the progress of humanity.

Honourable senators, I would now like to summarize the approach taken by our committee. As you know, the usual procedure for establishing a defence policy is to start with an analysis of the international situation. What are the potential threats to Canada? That is where we should start when defining a defence policy. What are these various threats to Canada or our allies?

Second, we must analyse how this analysis of the international context affects our own interests and national objectives. Third, we must determine what military resources are available to support our objectives and, finally, these resources must be matched against our financial capability, or more exactly that of the Canadian taxpayers. This is the approach our allies and friends have taken, including the United States, with the review recently released under Defense Secretary Les Aspin; France, with Mr. Léotard; Australia, Holland, the Netherlands who have recently published a white paper on defence policy review.

This is also the approach generally advocated by the experts who testified before the joint committee of the House and the Senate, and the one we have chosen as well.

What is the context of the international situation that we looked at? We have come to the conclusion that while the Soviet threat posed by the Warsaw Pact had diminished considerably, in fact because this bipolar division no longer exists — because this rivalry that used to consist of two opposing blocs, each controlling half the planet, is gone — now that one of these blocs has disappeared and that the other superpower has decided to become more home-centred and quite aggressive in terms of competitiveness, one has the impression that no one is governing the planet any more.

As we speak, there are approximately fifty local or regional conflicts raging around the world, fuelled by ethnic, religious or nationalist disputes. These local hostilities can of course cause enormous suffering and massive movements of people. While there were a mere two million displaced people, refugees, two decades ago, today there are over 25 million around the world. The world has become fragmented.

New regional powers have emerged. Massive destruction technologies are proliferating. Defence technologies are proliferating. About the emergence of regional powers, we note that, within 25 years, twenty or so countries will be in a position to manufacture nuclear weapons. While at present, except for the Soviet Union, no country is equipped with rockets capable of reaching North America, fifteen or so will have this capability twenty years from now.

Most of the crises that have occurred in the last five years — the fall of the Berlin Wall, the war in Yugoslavia, the invasion of Kuwait — were not forecast by anyone. Many of the events of the past 20 years were totally unexpected. It is precisely because no one can predict what will happen that a defence policy should help us prepare for the unpredictable.

Second, multilateral organizations have emerged to try to bring some stability to the planet. We came to the conclusion that Canada does not have the financial and military resources to influence global developments on its own, and that our future lies in working with our allies through multilateral organizations like the UN and NATO to put our modest armed forces at the service of peace.

Some will say that the world's growing instability does not concern us since it mostly affects very distant countries. According to committee members, nothing could be further from the truth. To be sure, Canada is vast and its population relatively small, but its economy depends heavily on international trade. International trade cannot go on if the rest of the world is unstable.

We are part of the global community. We do not escape the globalization of the economy. As the flow of information becomes more international, it is easy for us to find out quickly about the wars raging in all parts of the world and to understand their repercussions.

Canada has its own problems: regionalist and nationalist movements are severely straining our social fabric. The increasing scarcity of natural resources, especially fish, is being felt off Canada's shores. Therefore it is in our interest to make stability and the rule of law prevail, and to encourage a global economy where all countries can prosper. However, the stakes are higher than our place in the world. Being Canadian has a meaning and a purpose. It means that we cannot remain indifferent when the principles which we defend are crushed by famines, massacres and coups d'état.

In recent years, we have accepted putting the lives of our military at risk even when our security or clearly defined national interests were not closely involved. We must realize that the first time that Canadian soldiers faced deadly attacks since the Korean War was in Yugoslavia, and about ten soldiers have made the supreme sacrifice and died to bring peace to that part of the world.

Our prosperity and relative security confer upon us the duty to bring a little peace, stability and security to other peoples.

[English]

• (1510)

General Mackenzie, as you know, was the first commander of the Canadian forces in Yugoslavia. He said before the committee that if our responsibilities in the world need to be commensurate with the blessings at home, then we have a responsibility to put our modest forces at the service of international peace.

[Translation]

To those who say that the Canadian Forces should simply be guardians of our national sovereignty, we reply, with analyses to support us, that Canada cannot evade the international dimension of its interests and its responsibility for security.

[English]

• (1520)

From that analysis, the committee concluded that the Canadian forces needed to make some changes. The main ones have been mentioned extensively so I do not need to go into them here, but I will describe the capability provided by those changes.

To fulfil the first task, the protection of our territorial sovereignty, the committee concluded that we do not need to station a soldier on every rock or a ship on every wave. While the threats are very real, they are not of that magnitude. However, we think that Canada should have one ship or submarine available at all times on each coast, and an ability to know what is happening in our air space; the capability to do something about it; and the capacity to deal with one or two incidents on the scale of the Oka crisis across the country.

To fulfil our international responsibilities, we believe that the Canadian forces should be able to contribute to two or three multinational operations of the size of modern peacekeeping operations in a major way with land, air or maritime forces, or some combination. We also concluded that Canadian forces should not be limited to benign peacekeeping missions but should be able to organize a significant air-land-sea task force to be able to contribute to the more demanding international operations.

A line in the sand has been drawn. Funding is critically important in order to have even those moderate armed forces. Jeffrey Simpson from The Globe and Mail got it right when he said, after the tabling of our report, that the committee has drawn a line in the sand.

Modern armed forces are expensive. They also do not appear overnight. We can change our foreign policy in an afternoon; that is possible, but defence policy is a totally different kind of issue because the design, the manufacturing and the use of the equipment are things that usually span between 25 to 50 years. You cannot change that overnight.

I remember when the committee members were on an American air carrier last summer that had about 5,000 navy men, pilots and mechanics on board. I asked the admiral in charge, "When was this ship built?" He answered, "Around 1959." I then asked him when it would be retired from service and he answered, "In another 20 years." We are in 1994 now. The frigates that the Government of Canada has just built were designed in the late 1970s. It took approximately 15 years to build them in Saint John, New Brunswick. They will have a life of 20 to 30 years.

Defence policy cannot be changed overnight. As the Chief of Defence Staff, General de Chastelain, told us, it takes years and years to develop a military capability and to train an infantry man. Defence policy is in essence something which is done in the long term. It takes years to bring new pieces of equipment into service. It will continue to be that way even if our procurement and practices are improved. It takes more years to train the troops in the best possible use of that equipment. However, we need to make that investment. If we intend to send our sons and daughters into harm's way, they must be properly equipped, trained, protected and properly supported.

We must finally come to terms with the fact that international operations, including peacekeeping, is not cheap. It has never been cheap. It only seemed that way in the past because the cost of maintaining well-trained and professional armed forces was attributed to our Alliance commitments. Now we are saying upfront that Canada needs well-trained, properly equipped and professional forces to protect our territorial sovereignty and defend our interests internationally. That is not to say that there are not changes to be made and modest savings to be found.

To do what we believe needs to be done will cost approximately $10.5 billion per year by 1998-1999 in 1994 dollars. Anyone who wants to step over that line, including the government, will have to explain what we must give up — that is, what forces, what commitments and what interests. If ever it is decided to cut more from the Canadian Forces, the consequences may be that we would cease participating in international peace-keeping forces. I suspect that that will not have the support of the Canadian people, who are very proud of the role Canada plays in that field. Indeed, it was Canada which invented that concept.

Management and accountability are also important.

The Hon. the Speaker: I have to inform the honourable senator that his speaking time is almost over.

[Translation]

Senator De Bané: Thank you very much, Your Honour. You are right, I will be brief.

[English]

I do not intend to dwell on the aspects of defence management raised in the report. In most areas the committee mainly opened doors and pointed to some ways to move forward. However, two points deserve mention. First, the committee recommends a major overhaul of headquarters and deep reductions in the personnel employed there. Statistics on tooth-to-tail ratios, officer-to-NCM ratios and headquarters-to-combat-troop ratios are open to argument and interpretation but they all point to an imbalance. This imbalance is costing the country and the Canadian Forces a lot of money which, as the committee recommends, could be better spent elsewhere.

• (1530)

Second, one of the oddities of the Canadian Armed Forces over the last 25 years is that, in spite of the complaints about unification, Canada does not have forces which function well together. In military jargon, somehow our forces have managed to be "unified" without every having become "joint".

Moreover, military studies have shown that, by working effectively together, all components of the forces increase their capabilities out of all proportion to their numbers. Bearing in mind particularly the small size of our forces, the committee recommends that they restructure to reflect modern realities. Fundamentally, our conclusion is that the department must preserve its military and combative ability by finding better ways to do business. There is much work to be done in the area of defence management, both by Parliament and the government.

We believe Parliament's role, and therefore the accountability of the Department of National Defence will be greatly improved with some relatively modest changes. The key here is a willingness of the department to provide Parliament with more information on what it intends to do, on what it has done, and how well. Who knows, they might even find out that, by explaining what they do and what they need, parliamentarians and the people of Canada might be more supportive of their effort..

In conclusion, honourable senators, I have tried to provide a brief explanation of the process and conclusions of the Special Joint Committee on Defence Policy and to respond to some of the critics. The single most important message of our report is that there are no guarantees except our own defence effort and the extent to which we can mobilize others to help us.

As the committee states in its report:

> ...defence policy should not be based on what we think will happen, but rather on the explicit premise that, because we do not know what will happen, we must be ready for a wide range of possibilities.

Being ready will require a continuing modest investment of resources.

The committee worked hard to keep its report on a complex subject short and readable. I hope Canadians will take time to read it because, in the end, it is about who we are and what we stand for.

Hon. J. Michael Forrestall: Honourable senators, my first words are directed to the men and women who serve in the Canadian Armed Forces. The words are couched in humility and in deep gratitude for all their work and their professionalism in carrying out their duties. I hope that over the past eight months a small group of us have had an opportunity to recognize what we have to do to allow them to continue.

Honourable senators, my comments will be brief today. Before I move the adjournment, I wish to add one or two other general comments.

I wish to express my appreciation to the Honourable Senator De Bané and to the Honourable William Rompkey, the co-chairs of this committee. I also wish to thank the support staff, the editor who helped us with our writing, and the men and women of the Canadian Armed Forces who saw to it that what we wanted to learn was made available to us.

We do no right, although many of us may expect it, to enjoy a peace dividend from the changing world structure. Indeed, the destabilizing effect of the demise of the Soviet Union has caused a far greater threat to Canada's sovereignty, its security and its people than most of us recognize at this time.

The committee heard from people from all walks of life. I appreciate Minister Collenette's opening the forum of this debate to everyone in Canada who wanted to participate. Indeed, we have heard from all sectors of our community. We heard from professionals, retired members, and people from Ploughshares. In all, some 480 witnesses appeared before the committee, each one providing us with informative documentation.

We are grateful to all of them for providing the information on which we based our opinion. We trust that our paper warrants the attention and time of the minister when he is formulating the white paper which he will present early in the new year.

It is to that white paper that at a later point not too far down the road, I should like to address 10 or 15 minutes of concentrated comments, in particular to Canada's ship-borne helicopter and the new helicopter for search and rescue, together with the need for re-equipping our troops in the field with up-to-date equipment. I should also like to make the point in more depth that we must always be conscious of the challenges faced by our young men and women whom we ask to serve in far-off lands in the midst of strange cultures.

Permanent members of the forces are counselled after they have been in traumatic situations. They are looked after and watched closely because that is a difficult time for them. In contrast, some members of the reserve units come home from their tour of duty and, in a few weeks, they are back in their places of work in the warehouse, the law office and the hospital operating room. They do not require any counselling. No one gives them much thought. They become civilians again. I also want to talk about those people.

I will specifically address the issue of equipment and the attitude which I hope Minister Collenette will take in the presentation of his new defence policy sometime early next year.

On motion of Senator Forrestall, debate adjourned.

SPLIT LAKE CREE FIRST NATION FLOODED LAND BILL

SECOND READING

Leave having been given to revert to Order No. 1:

Hon. Sharon Carstairs moved the second reading of Bill C-36, respecting the Split Lake Cree First Nation and the settlement of matters arising from an agreement relating to the flooding of land.

[Translation]

She said: Honourable senators, I rise today to speak to Bill C-36, a bill that will help redress injustices done to the Split Lake Cree First Nation in Manitoba.

With your permission, honourable senators, since this is my first speech in this chamber, I would like to make some personal comments.

[English]

Honourable senators, there are a great many of you whom I wish to thank in this my first speech in this chamber. I shall begin, of course, with His Honour, who hosted a wonderful reception for Senator Roux, Senator Bacon and myself on the day we were sworn into this chamber. Later, of course, he honoured Senator Pearson. I am humbled that I was chosen to be appointed to the Senate with such distinguished Canadians as those three.

There are a number of others who deserve my appreciation today. Senator Fairbairn and I have been friends for a great many years, since she was working in the Prime Minister's Office and I was on the executive of the Liberal Party of Alberta. On occasion she claims me as an Alberta senator rather than one from Manitoba. She introduced me into this chamber, as she did the other senators, and then proceeded to make some very kind remarks. I am deeply appreciative of them.

Senator Molgat was, of course, my sponsor. What can one say about someone who has been such a very good friend for so many years? He has played a unique role in my life in that he was the former leader of the Liberal Party in Manitoba. As others of you in this chamber who are former leaders know, it is not necessarily easy to play the role of former leader with the incumbent leader. We should all take lessons from Senator Molgat. He brought such warmth and generosity to that role that I think he should write a book on the subject.

On that opening day, Senator Lynch-Staunton also made some very kind remarks. He also made reference to a very good friend of mine, Senator Doug Everett, who, until recently, was also a close neighbour. He remains a close neighbour of Senator Jessiman. Senator Everett had a long and distinguished career in this chamber, and I am pleased that after he vacated this seat I was chosen by the Prime Minister to fill it.

Senator Lynch-Staunton made some comments on Senator Everett's career in the Senate and about some moves he had made over the years. Senator Lynch-Staunton should know early in my tenure here that I frequently listen to my own drummer, sometimes to the dismay of family, friends and political colleagues. However, in my 52 years, that drummer has never played a Tory tune.

I also wish to pay tribute today to the staff of the Senate, beginning with the Clerk. I understand that a new procedure was instituted for new senators under which we were invited to a briefing given by the Clerk and attended by the heads of all Senate departments. I want the Clerk to know how deeply appreciative I am of that presentation. It certainly made a new senator's introduction to this chamber much easier and much more relaxed. It also opened an avenue for further conversations and questions. By this time, they are probably a little tired of getting calls for information from Senator Carstairs' office, but they always accept those calls with enthusiasm. I thank them all.

It was nice to meet some people who had known my father. Senator Phillips indicated earlier today that he had known him, and the Clerk Assistant, during his days as a page, looked after my father's papers.

Being in this chamber is somewhat like déjà vu. The last time I was here prior to my appointment on September 15 was in the 1970s when I brought my father here. He had suffered a stroke and was totally incapacitated on one side of his body. I brought him in here in his wheelchair. I wanted him to resign from the Senate, but he had other ideas. It gave some joy and some direction to his life.

I know that there are several senators in this chamber who have also had strokes. I appreciate their courage and what they are doing for other stroke victims. The fact that they are in this chamber and make a considerable contribution to it tells others who suffer similar afflictions that there is hope; that there is, indeed, a future for them in all aspects of their lives.

After my father's massive stroke, doctors told him that he would never get out of the hospital, and that if he did, he would never get out of bed. Of course, he did get out of the hospital, he did get out of bed, he did learn to walk again, and he eventually learned to talk again. Those who have made even further strides than he was able to make give courage to all.

I know that some senators were concerned about some of the statements I made upon being appointed to the Senate. I should like to tell them that I have been defending the Senate for a very long time, perhaps longer than most of you.

In the days when I was a student at Dalhousie University, from 1958 and 1962, the Senate was the topic of some conversation. In those days there were very few women in political science courses. In fact, I was the only female student in second, third and fourth year courses. I had a professor named Jim Atchison, who went on to lead the New Democratic Party in Nova Scotia. Whether my course was in constitutional law or in seventeenth or eighteenth century philosophy, he always put a question at the bottom of the exam paper directed at me. I had to write the rest of the exam and, if I had time, I was then to give a defence of the Senate. He thought that since my father was in the Senate, I should be able to give that defence, and I was graded on whether the defence got better each year of my degree program.

Therefore, I have been a defender of the Senate for a long time. I am also, however, a believer in a reformed Senate. I know that that view is shared by a number of senators here. I make no apologies for being a believer in a Triple-E Senate, an elected, effective and at least more equal institution. I will do my best to defend the concept of a reformed Senate.

Meanwhile, I am very proud to be here with some very special people. The senators whom I have admired the most over the years have frequently been those who have taken a special interest in one area of activity.

Senator Marshall, for example, who will retire shortly, is known nationwide for his involvement in the affairs of veterans in this country. Senator Earl Hastings, a friend from Alberta, is well known for his defence of prison reform. To this day Senator Jacques Hébert defends young people, and urges them to be idealistic and to have a sense of volunteerism. His message, so eloquently expressed, touches the hearts of young people everywhere. Even in my few days here in this chamber, I have learned of Senator Ghitter's very special interest in human rights. I have learned of Senator Oliver's quick defence of the black community of this country, a community I know well, having been raised in Halifax.

• (1550)

I am proud to be here. I am anxious to get to know all of you and your particular areas of interest and expertise. I am delighted to be able to serve my country and my province in this very special chamber. I am particularly grateful to the Prime Minister for giving me this opportunity.

I, too, have an issue to raise, and you will hear much of it over the years to come.

Honourable senators, earlier today, Senator Pearson talked about the fact that Sunday is Children's Day. Children in this nation are vulnerable, as they are throughout the world. Children suffer from many offences, but there is one in particular which gives me more pain than any other: that, of course, is the sexual abuse of children. My awareness of this issue stems from having been sexually abused as a child myself, not — fortunately for me — by a family member, but by a family friend.

Honourable senators, this subject fills me with grief and pain to this day. However, I am a survivor. I want to take a message to other young people in this country that they, too, can survive and overcome the terrible damage that has been done to them. I hope to be a strong advocate on their behalf.

There are other strong people in this country, honourable senators, and that is why I am so delighted today to speak in support of this legislation. This legislation will bring an end to 20 years of strained relationships between the Split Lake Cree First Nation of Manitoba and the Government of Canada.

Split Lake was one of the five First Nations affected by the flooding of thousands of hectares of land in northern Manitoba in the late 1960s and early 1970s. With Bill C-36, the government is meeting all of its commitments related to compensating this First Nation — and only this First Nation, I might add — for the loss of traditional fishing, gathering, hunting, and trapping areas caused by this flooding, as well as the loss of personal property and community infrastructure.

As honourable senators may be aware — certainly those from my province are — the Lake Winnipeg Regulation and Churchill River Diversion Project flooded more than 4,800 hectares of Indian reserve land and some 200,000 hectares of non-reserve land traditionally used by the five First Nations. Regrettably, in a different era and a different age, little consideration was given to the impact of that flooding on those aboriginal peoples.

In fact, honourable senators, the concerns of the Indian people were not addressed until 1977 when the Northern Flood Agreement was signed. Can you imagine the hope of 17 years ago when such an agreement was signed that, finally, some compensation would be found for them? But 17 years have passed and nothing happened until the introduction of this bill.

Canada is a signatory to this agreement along with the Government of Manitoba, Manitoba Hydro, and a committee representing Split Lake, Cross Lake, Nelson House, Norway House and York Factory First Nations.

Honourable senators may also be aware that implementation of the Northern Flood Agreement has been rife with problems. The agreement is vaguely worded and did not anticipate, unfortunately and tragically, a number of important issues that have since arisen. Because of shortcomings over the past 15 years, the parties have sought arbitration on many points, a process which has been extremely costly to taxpayers and with no compensation to the aboriginal people.

I am pleased to say, honourable senators, that the five First Nations now have another option. I congratulate the former administration for providing that option — the option of negotiating band-specific agreements. The framework for these negotiations is the so-called "proposed basis of settlement" which was negotiated by the four parties to the Northern Flood Agreement.

The first and only band-specific settlement signed to date is with the Split Lake Cree First Nation. This agreement was signed in June, 1992 and is now being implemented. By addressing the obligations of governments and Manitoba Hydro to the Split Lake Cree, this agreement releases the federal government from any additional claims by this First Nation. For the people of Split Lake Cree First Nation, the agreement provides the financial resources and land base needed to take control of their own future.

As I indicated only a moment ago, the Split Lake agreement is already being implemented. However, in signing the agreement, the Government of Canada agreed to certain changes of its provisions through legislation, and that is the purpose of Bill C-36.

First, honourable senators, this bill will ensure that moneys owed to the Split Lake Cree First Nation will not be considered Indian moneys, and will therefore be administered by band trust funds and not by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I believe this is a good first step towards aboriginal self-government. As my honourable colleagues can appreciate, this gives the Split Lake Cree much more control over their compensation and reduces the administrative burden on government.

Second, Bill C-36 will also provide that provincial Crown lands provided to the Split Lake Cree in fee simple title will not become special reserves under the Indian Act. Again, this gives the Split Lake Cree more control over these lands than would be possible if they were reserve lands, which must, by law, be administered by the federal government.

Third, Bill C-36 will ensure that the adjudication process set out in the Split Lake Settlement Agreement will take precedence over the process set out in the Northern Flood Agreement. In other words, something will happen — something which has not happened for 17 years.

Finally, honourable senators, Bill C-36 will ensure that the Government of Canada can benefit from the Manitoba Arbitration Act, as do the other three parties to the Northern Flood Agreement.

I want to make it very clear, however, that this bill deals only with the Split Lake First Nation peoples, and there are four other nations' peoples whose interests have yet to be served. As I stated earlier, the other Northern Flood Agreement parties have not yet negotiated such agreements.

I also want to assure honourable senators that the Split Lake First Nation, the provincial government, and Manitoba Hydro have all been consulted in this legislation and have agreed to it. As a result, we have before us a bill that is universally supported by the affected parties.

We are not being asked today to approve new commitments to the Split Lake Cree. We are not being asked to dig into the federal purse or to burden the government with additional responsibilities.

[Translation]

We are being asked to make the honourable choice for all Canadians. Therefore, I urge all honourable senators to give prompt passage to this bill. This will send an important signal to all aboriginal peoples that the government wants to abide by the spirit as well as the letter of its commitments towards aboriginal peoples.

[English]

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Honourable Senator Carstairs.

During her comments, she referred several times to "17 years". Am I correct in presuming that that is when the first negotiations started?

Senator Carstairs: Yes. The Manitoba Northern Flood Agreement was signed in 1977.

Senator Molgat: In fact, the land was flooded many years before that, back in the 1960s. Therefore, am I not correct in stating that these Indian communities have been suffering for much longer than 17 years?

Senator Carstairs: That is absolutely correct. The flooding was done in the late 1960s and early 1970s, and compensation was to be provided at that time. However, no compensation was forthcoming. It was not until the Northern Flood Agreement was signed that there was even a recognition that compensation was due and owing in law, not just in the generosity of Manitoba Hydro.

Between 1977 and 1994, with the exception of Split Lake, Indian communities have not received specific band settlements as was agreed to under the Northern Flood Agreement.

Hon. Peter Bosa: I also have a question for the honourable senator. Was there a flood in the city of Winnipeg in the mid-1950s? Did that extend to the lands you have mentioned?

• (1600)

Senator Carstairs: No. The flooding with respect to compensation for Split Lake has to do with hydro flooding which was done specifically to provide power.

Some aboriginal communities in southern Manitoba and northern Manitoba, where the majority of aboriginal people live, still do not have hydro, for which their land was flooded. People in the south have benefited a great deal from the flooding of those aboriginal lands but, to date, the aboriginal people have not.

Hon. Duncan J. Jessiman: Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate Senator Carstairs. She is certainly not "one of the boys", which is the title of her book. However, she is a nice lady. I have had the pleasure of having dinner at her home. We did not speak of politics, and she and her husband were wonderful hosts.

I was a member of the Manitoba Hydro Board in the 1960s when the negotiations were taking place. A Conservative government had entered into an agreement in 1966 with Canada on northern Manitoba hydroelectric potential.

I would like to table rather than read this chronology. However, it begins in the 1920s. A number of the things the honourable senator mentioned are here, along with many more.

This chronology proves that Manitoba Hydro, the Manitoba government and the Canadian government were all wrong. It was in Manitoba's best interest to take such action because hydroelectric power is a valuable resource, as it was then, is now, and will be in the future.

Whenever the government takes over land, be it aboriginal or otherwise, compensation should be paid. It is true that not a lot of compensation has been paid. The department has informed me that there were 160 different cases for arbitration. The present arbitrator states that as of two weeks ago there were 182 cases, and they are still coming in.

This particular band is comprised of 2,200 people. That is not a lot of people. The five bands have a total population of 14,800 people. The other four, which I hope will reach settlement, are Cross Lake, 4,300; York Factory, 700; Norway House, 4,200 and Nelson House with 3,400.

This is an example where, if the government needed someone else's property, they should have tried to make a deal at the beginning, particularly when dealing with aboriginal people. They should have tried to convince these 14,800 people to move and to accept compensation.

The amount to be paid by the people of Manitoba is to be collected through hydro rates; Canada is paying part of it and the Province of Manitoba is paying part of it. These 2,200 people will receive $47.37 million over a five-year period, plus 34,100 new acres in reserve lands and 2,800 reserve land acres. The total land flooded was 11,861 acres. I hope that we are being generous.

The negotiations involved representatives from Manitoba Hydro, the Province of Manitoba, the federal government and the bands. Difficulties arose when agreements were reached, band chiefs changed and the new chief did not agree with the agreement. They would have to negotiate a new structure of settlement and get agreement. To date, only Split Lake has signed an agreement, which takes the form of this legislation, and it is good legislation.

An agreement with Nelson House should be in place by March. Norway House currently has a promise from the council and the chief, although they are not seeing eye to eye. The council has a quorum and things are moving well, but there are internal political problems. York Factory should have an agreement in place by March 1995. In Cross Lake, there is a difficulty concerning water and the band may require an extension.

There are 607 registered bands in Canada. Three chiefs from Alberta who spoke to us claim that there are 645 bands. The difference may not be registered, but that was their information. The difficulty arises because each band must be dealt with separately. It would be best to bring all the bands together, each with one representative, to make a deal with all 607. We know that that will not happen. This is good legislation, but it is not the end, because as Senator Carstairs stated, there is still arbitration. It is difficult to bring this matter to conclusion, and it is too bad. There should be some way that this matter could be finalized.

The other matter the senator raised was how the moneys will flow. It is a first step towards self-government. We heard testimony from the three chiefs from Alberta concerning their bands and self-government, and we have a long road ahead.

Honourable senators, I support this bill and I will vote for it.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, Senator Jessiman has obviously done some research. He mentioned the amounts of money and the protracted negotiations. In his research, did the honourable senator find out what has been spent on legal fees and consultant fees and all the appertaining fees included in that protracted negotiation?

Senator Jessiman: I would suggest, honourable senator, that it would be millions of dollars. The arbitrator is paid. He has counsel. Manitoba Hydro has counsel. The Manitoba government is represented by counsel and the federal government has counsel. There have been 182 arbitrations — a staggering figure. Honourable senators, I did no specific research, but I believe that the cost would greatly exceed $1 million.

• (1610)

I do not want to read into the record the document I am holding in my hand. However, it is important that it be on the record. I am told that, if the Speaker obtains the consent of honourable senators, I may table this document.

Senator Molgat: I believe it contains some useful information, honourable senators.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Jessiman: I thank honourable senators for their indulgence.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Carstairs, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples.

[Senator Jessiman]

REVIEWING CANADA'S FOREIGN POLICY

REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Foreign Policy, entitled, "Canada's Foreign Policy: Principles and Priorities for the Future", presented in the Senate on November 15, 1994.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, before I make my comments on the report of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Foreign Policy, I should like to express my pleasure at hearing the first speech made in the Senate by Senator Carstairs who, by her performance, reinforced the favourable impression which she has already created in the country.

Likewise, I was pleased to hear the comments made today by Senator Pearson, who advanced a major subject for our consideration and who, by her past experience and activities, is well qualified to make a major contribution to the country through her service in the Senate.

Both Senators Carstairs and Pearson have great potential. We look forward to the contribution they will make in the future to the work of the country.

The second comment I should like to make is with respect to the speeches which have been made, particularly by Senator De Bané, on the subject of the report of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Defence Policy. I have read the report and followed the progress of the committee. I regard the report as a valuable contribution to the debate on Canada's defence policy. It will be of great help to the Minister of National Defence as he prepares his white paper and, later, as the government makes up its mind on the questions which have been raised.

The Special Joint Committee Reviewing Canada's Foreign Policy had a wider mandate, as is obvious, than the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Defence Policy. The Special Joint Committee Reviewing Canada's Foreign Policy took eight months of solid and hard work to complete its assignment and was able to table its report just two days ago.

The committee was asked to examine the changing international context and to make recommendations on the principles, objectives and priorities that should underline Canada's foreign policy.

From the outset of the committee's work eight months ago, public participation was a key objective. The committee travelled across Canada and held over 80 meetings, involving more than 550 organizations and individuals, supplemented by numerous round-table discussions, several in-depth analyses and hundreds of written submissions. The committee accumulated over 10,000 pages of evidence.

I know of no other country with as strong a commitment to public involvement in foreign policy and with a readiness parallel to that which we observe on the part of many Canadians to participate and to contribute.

We did hear from Canadians in the course of our deliberations. They told us that they want an active, independent foreign policy which reflects Canadian values and serves Canadian interests. There was a strong underlying conviction that Canadians must be more globalist in outlook and action. Certainly, there was no request to withdraw from the world. On the contrary, there was a clear request to become even more involved in the world.

Canadian witnesses have deep-rooted values which carry over into the role they want Canada to play. They have pretty clear ideas of how they want us to behave as we project Canada's foreign policy. They want to nurture dialogue and compromise, promote democracy and human rights, encourage economic and social justice, care for the environment, safeguard peace and alleviate poverty. These values underline many of the recommendations of the report.

A number of foreign policy concepts gained new prominence in our review. I personally was struck by the number of new concepts which have been developed and seem to be common in the vocabulary of witnesses which had certainly hitherto escaped my vocabulary.

There was a heightened awareness of the growing contributions of a broad range of foreign policy actors and the potential benefits which were possible through Team Canada approaches to foreign policy. The notion of civil society was often referred to by the many Canadians who are committed to strengthening the nongovernmental underpinnings of society.

A broader concept of security was advanced as a unifying theme for foreign policy as, indeed, was sustainable development.

In the field of development assistance, concepts such as development pacts and sustainable human development were evidence of the dynamic thinking taking place. Terms such as "transformational coalitions" and "casino capital" have now entered the foreign policy lexicon.

The review of Canadian foreign policy has been a challenging task. Never has change been so rapid and profound in the world. Never have international developments exerted so fundamental an impact on Canadian society. Never have foreign and domestic policies been more closely linked. Never has the imperative of getting our own house in order, of ensuring an effective domestic base for foreign policy, been more apparent.

As Senator De Bané pointed out earlier in his comments, the most dramatic international change has been the end of the bipolar world order. But other forces are changing the nature of security, globalizing economies and societies and reshaping national sovereignty. It is increasingly evident to Canadians that our well-being depends, crucially, on international cooperation. The principal elements of foreign policy are increasingly linked. Human rights and the environment are now integral aspects of our security, our trade and our international assistance policies.

There is no doubt in my mind that the international context offers major new opportunities for Canada. To play the productive and influential role that Canadians want, the foreign policy challenge will be to articulate a forward-looking vision which can mobilize wide political support and to ensure, by making careful choices and being realistic, that our resources are commensurate with our objectives. It is in this spirit that the committee approached the difficult task of identifying principles and priorities for the future.

Honourable senators, you should not look to this report for guidance on current hot spots, trouble spots, or short-term issues. Only passing reference, for example, is made to the situation in Haiti, Rwanda or the former Yugoslavia. We have purposely adopted a forward-looking approach to foreign policy and identified the principles and priorities which we felt could stand the test of time. In this way, we hope that the report will continue to be a useful reference for some time to come.

In the report you will find a number of themes which are intended to provide the principles and to guide the priorities of future Canadian foreign policy. One of these is that domestic policy is foreign policy, and foreign policy is domestic policy. Domestic affairs cannot be competently managed without taking full account of foreign affairs, and total resources should be allocated accordingly.

Conversely, Canadian foreign policy will not be effective without a strong domestic base and we therefore must put our own house in order. At home, we must deal with the need to democratize policy-making and to consult with the provinces and the many other actors on the scene. Foreign affairs are less and less an exclusive concern of the federal government and more and more a Team Canada effort.

Another theme is that, in its relations with the rest of the world, Canada has national interests to protect and values to project. This report suggests a robust defence of Canadian trade interests, particularly in its relations with the United States, and the close cooperation of government and the private sector to build up an international orientation for Canadian business. It also suggests a more active and concerted projection of Canadian culture and learning as a fundamental dimension of Canadian foreign policy.

At the same time, the report makes it clear that we are convinced that Canada can best promote its enlightened interests by promoting a rules-based international order. We suggest a conceptual framework for foreign policy to meet the needs of the next century: shared security, shared prosperity, and shared custody of the environment. We suggest practical ways of working toward each of these objectives.

For shared security, we recommend measures to improve the collective security functions of the UN and regional organizations such as NATO and the CSCE, and to bring together suitable political, economic and military measures in an integrated continuum of crisis management, with emphasis on prevention.

For shared prosperity we recommend the broadest possible rules-based trade liberalization and concerted international action to alleviate poverty.

For shared custody of the environment we recommend support of sustainable development as an overarching foreign policy theme.

In each of these areas we propose specific Canadian policies: that the primary role of the Canadian Forces should be UN peace-keeping; that Canada should take action bilaterally to complete negotiation of the NAFTA subsidies and anti-dumping codes, regionally to expand NAFTA and multilaterally to bring the World Trade Organization into being; and that Canadian international assistance should be directed primarily toward reducing poverty, that it work within the framework of sustainable development, and that it focus on the development of human potential.

Another theme is that Canada's resources are limited, particularly in present circumstances. Canada, therefore, must be selective in its choice of targets. This report suggests criteria for selection in various policy fields, while avoiding putting policy in a strait-jacket. It recommends clear and consistent criteria for UN intervention and for Canadian involvement in UN peace-keeping. It targets trade promotion efforts where emerging markets offer new opportunities, and it proposes criteria for concentrating our international assistance efforts.

The report faces up to the new circumstances in which Canada finds itself and suggests practical policies to deal with them. Considerable attention was paid to the effective management of our relations with the United States. The committee heard many expressions of concern about American influence and Canadian dependency.

The committee recommends a policy driven by the need to preserve Canadian sovereignty and independence and the capacity to play the sort of active and independent role in the world that Canadians demand. It underlines the need for good management of our relations based on mutual respect, mutual understanding and effective two-way communication.

Regarding growing regionalism, it suggests that the criteria for setting Canadian priorities should be based on the functions that engage Canadian interests rather than purely geographic considerations. It also suggests that Canada should make every effort to build bridges between continents. It proposes a North Atlantic free trade area and an Asia-Pacific multilateral security framework. More broadly, it suggests that the future thrust of Canadian foreign policy should be directed multilateralism, aimed at improving the effectiveness of key international institutions.

Much has already been made of the committee's focus on culture and learning as a fundamental dimension of foreign policy. We know that our political influence and trade expansion are affected in large part by the image we project abroad. The committee heard convincing testimony on this. We also know that culture and education are major exports and key elements of the global knowledge-based economy.

The committee recommends that the government, with the collaboration of interested provinces, give high priority to developing a strategy for Canada's international cultural, scientific and educational relations. Once completed, the strategy would be referred to the appropriate standing committees of Parliament. I believe that the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has an important role to play in reviewing this strategy.

We considered the question of security under the heading of "Strengthening Shared Security". We have dealt with it under the subject heads of "A Broader Concept of Security", "The United Nations", "Euro-Atlantic Security", "North American Security", "Western Hemisphere Security", "Asia-Pacific Security", "Weapons Proliferation", and "Implications for the Canadian Forces".

The committee reviewed the substantial changes which have taken place in the international security situation. This resulted in three key conclusions, which may differ in emphasis with the findings of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Defence Policy. The first was to describe in greater detail the broader concept of security and to recognize the growing importance of non-military factors in the security equation. The second was to reaffirm the central role of the United Nations in security matters and to consider the corresponding agenda for UN reform. Lastly, the committee concluded that peace-keeping should be the primary international role of a more specialized Canadian Forces.

• (1630)

Honourable senators, the evidence received on international economic matters reinforced the committee's view that difficult and complex work lies ahead. In the short term, the report argues in favour of putting our own economic house in order, in improving trade development performance and in dealing with adverse protectionist pressures, particularly those emanating from the United States. While traditional markets should be maintained, greater efforts should be deployed to seek out new markets aggressively. In the longer term, the emphasis is placed on reaffirming a multilateral, rules-based economic order and creating and promoting a realistic outlook for Canadian business. As the committee was told, we are a trading nation, but not yet a nation of traders.

Honourable senators, we were struck by the degree of consensus across different sectors of society on the importance of sustainable development and the potential this has to unify Canadians in a common cause. The committee outlines an agenda in this area, including reference to the Arctic and oceans policy.

No subject drew greater attention than international assistance. The committee found to a unique degree that the aid program expresses the values and ideals of Canadians. The committee's objective was to restore a clearer sense of purpose to the aid program and to reinforce the view of a compelling cause that continues to deserve support. Six steps were proposed to project CIDA's future mission: to clarify the mandate, distinguish between aid and trade, target assistance, reform conditionality, improve results, and stabilize finances.

The committee affirmed that human rights, good government and democratic development were universal values that should find central expression in Canadian foreign policy, influencing and guiding other areas of policy. Rather than treat these themes in an isolated manner, the committee developed specific linkages between these issues and other areas of foreign policy such as trade, security and international assistance.

Honourable senators, my comments have been general. They have been intended to convey some sense of the issues that are of concern to Canadians and that have engaged the committee's attention. The government has indicated its commitment to ongoing public participation in foreign policy. In support of this commitment, the committee has proposed measures to promote further dialogue and education on international relations. As well, I am pleased to note that a number of specific recommendations have been formulated to strengthen the role of Parliament in foreign affairs.

Finally, let me end by saying that the quality of life of all Canadians depends more and more on the way we nurture international cooperation and strengthen global governance. This sort of international engagement does not happen by itself. There has to be a vision. It has to be articulated, and it has to be backed up by sufficient resources. That is the challenge, but also, in my view, the opportunity for Canada and Canadians today.

On motion of Senator Berntson, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 22, 1994, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 22, 1994

SPEAKER OF THE SENATE

READING OF COMMISSION APPOINTING HONOURABLE GILDAS L. MOLGAT

The Honourable Gildas L. Molgat, having taken the Clerk's chair, rose and informed the Senate that a Commission had been issued under the Great Seal of Canada, appointing him Speaker of the Senate.

The said Commission was then read by the Clerk.

The Hon. the Speaker then took the Chair at the foot of the Throne, to which he was conducted by the Honourable Joyce Fairbairn, P.C., and the Honourable John Lynch-Staunton, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod preceding.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE GILDAS L. MOLGAT

FELICITATIONS ON APPOINTMENT AS SPEAKER OF THE SENATE

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there are moments in this place which are bittersweet. We are experiencing one such moment today, as we witness a person in a new place in our midst — Senator Molgat, an old friend, now His Honour the Speaker.

Tomorrow we will all have an opportunity to make some comments and bestow good wishes on our former colleague, Senator LeBlanc, who is now the designate Governor General of Canada. As the public announcement was made late this morning, we shall take the opportunity to put our thoughts together before we convey them to Senator LeBlanc tomorrow.

I wish to tell you, Your Honour, on behalf of everyone on this side of the house, how pleased and proud we are to see you in the Speaker's Chair.

Honourable senators, as we know, Senator Molgat has been in the public life of our country for over 40 years. He has been in this place for almost a quarter of a century. He has been a remarkable representative of every facet of Senate life, be it legislative, administrative or public representation. He has been a Whip, Speaker pro tempore, and twice he has been Deputy Leader. Today, he takes the Chair in this chamber. Senator Molgat's reputation is one of fairness, kindness, humour, skill, intelligence, and great respect for this house and its place in the Parliament of Canada.

On a personal note, I can only say how grateful I am to have had the opportunity to learn from Senator Molgat over the past several months. He has been of enormous assistance to me and to this house. I will miss him, although I have my friend Senator Petten helping me on an interim basis.

I extend my thanks to Senator Molgat. I am confident that he will enhance the life of this chamber. I know that all senators have respect for the position, the role, and the person who holds the title of Speaker of the Senate. We wish you good luck and congratulations.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): I am very pleased to join with the Leader of the Government in extending congratulations to you, Your Honour. I believe that some are "to the manner born". It could be said that Senator Molgat is "to the Chair called" for I recall how he embraced it with much affection, and even a sense of ownership, during a certain debate in the fall of 1990, no doubt indicating in his own way his appreciation for and understanding of that particular position and the duties thereof, which I know he will carry out with a great deal of fairness and dignity.

I also recall his feelings about the speakership here. At one time he strongly urged that it should be an elected position, and even introduced a bill to that effect. I am wondering whether, now that he is the occupant, he might like either to reconsider, or to dust the bill off, in case some of us want to fulfil his wishes.

I had the great opportunity of cutting my teeth on leadership as Deputy Leader of the Government when Senator Molgat was Deputy Leader of the Opposition. It did not take me long to realize how fair, open and reliable he is. When he made a commitment, he held to it. I do not know how he felt about me, but I can assure honourable senators that he made my job at that time much easier. It is very important that the leadership have that kind of association, because only on that basis can the Senate operate properly. One of his motivating factors, of course, is the deep respect he has for the Senate.

[Translation]

I would like to congratulate him on behalf of all my colleagues and wish him the very best. It is interesting to note that today, two French Canadians from outside Quebec are the recipients of such honours. It may be a coincidence but it is also a mark of respect for their community to be honoured in this way. I am referring to Senator LeBlanc from New Brunswick, about whom we shall speak tomorrow, and Senator Molgat from Manitoba. In fact, all Canadians can take pride in these appointments.

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: I first met Senator Molgat in 1970-71, when he chaired the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Constitutional Renewal.

[English]

• (1410)

That was 23 years ago, and we are still talking about the same subject. He was a very fair chairman. I regret to see him go, since he is a man who has established a good rapport with independent senators. I have given him my assurance of cooperation. He is now the Speaker of this place, and I am delighted to see him in that position —

[Translation]

— because Senator Molgat had an outstanding reputation as a senator, as former leader of a political party in Manitoba and as chairman of a host of parliamentary committees. His civility and unruffled calm were qualities that he demonstrated as house leader. Now that he is our Speaker, I know that we can always depend on him to ensure that independent senators, although there are not many of us, can play a role in the Senate. I wish him the very best, and my best wishes also go to his wife whom I know and appreciate and whom I wish to include on this memorable occasion in his political life. I wish him a brilliant career as Speaker of our Senate. I will speak again tomorrow, since I just got the news about this appointment. I will elaborate on all the wonderful things Senator Molgat was able to do, and let others play the role of critic, if there is anything to criticize, which I doubt. I am very proud to see you appointed Speaker of the Senate at this important moment in Canada's history.

[English]

Hon. Sharon Carstairs: Your Honour, it is with great respect, friendship and warmth that I congratulate you today on your appointment. You are from my home province. For a great many years, you served the Manitoba Legislative Assembly as the member for Ste. Rose du Lac with the same honour, knowledge and expertise that you have brought to this chamber. You have been the leader of my political party in the Province of Manitoba. You have been our senator for 24 years. You have gladdened the hearts of all Manitobans today by your acceptance of this position.

I wish, as I have always wished, you and Allison every best wish, and that you take with you our love and the love of Manitobans.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I extend my congratulations to a distinguished Canadian and a distinguished Manitoban, who is greatly respected, as Senator Carstairs has said, in the Province of Manitoba.

I have known Senator Molgat for a long time. Our acquaintance goes back to the time when he represented the constituency of Ste. Rose du Lac. He was the Leader of the Liberal Party. As it happened, my husband was the Leader of the Conservative Party at the same time. As a result, I got to know Ste. Rose du Lac perhaps a bit better than I had ever imagined I would.

It is fitting, as my leader has said, that he is a francophone hors Québec who represents Manitoba and, thereby, the tradition in Manitoba, which is both anglophone and francophone, particularly in the twin cities of St. Boniface and Winnipeg.

I congratulate Your Honour heartily. I have one tiny regret: You could have let me know last night during our taxi ride.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker: Although I am the Speaker, I know that the person in this position does not speak. May I be excused so that I can say a few words on this occasion?

Before thanking my colleagues for speaking so kindly of me, I wish to congratulate our colleague Senator LeBlanc, who is now His Excellency The Governor General, and his wife Diana. I am very happy for them. They will make great representatives for Canadians and we are all proud of him. As a francophone from outside Quebec, I am particularly happy to see Senator LeBlanc being recognized as an Acadian. This does not take anything away from our Quebec colleagues. However, we sometimes feel a little forgotten. I therefore congratulate the Governor General and I am very happy for him.

[English]

I thank my colleagues who have spoken.

It has been a pleasure to work with my leader, Senator Fairbairn, for the past year. I admire her talent, and I thank her very much for her kind words.

Senator Lynch-Staunton and I worked in a slightly different way while we were deputy leaders together — he on the government side and me on the other. I have to say that when he first came to the post, I did not know the gentleman at all. I knew him a little by reputation, but not as an individual. It was a pleasure working with him. We had differences of opinion, of course, but never personal differences. It was a pleasure to have that association.

To my colleague Senator Prud'homme, we do have a long association. In fact, it goes back certainly before he was involved in elected politics, when he was still very active in the Young Liberals of Canada.

To my two colleagues from Manitoba, I extend my special thanks. I regret that I will no longer be able to work with you on the floor of the Senate; however, I look forward to working with you in the the context of the whole Senate.

I express my thanks to the Prime Minister for the confidence that he has entrusted in me in appointing me to this important post.

Most important, I say to all my colleagues with whom I have worked with pleasure over the years that I hope I will always merit your trust and your confidence. Whatever decisions I may have to make here, I will make them in the spirit of fairness and what I believe is right. I hope I will deserve your trust through the years.

VISITORS IN THE GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I draw your attention to the presence in the gallery of a delegation of parliamentarians from Hungary, who are visiting the Senate this week. We are very pleased to have you here. Welcome to Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

SENATOR'S STATEMENT

DR. BERTRAM NEVILLE BROCKHOUSE

FELICITATIONS ON RECEIVING NOBEL PRIZE FOR PHYSICS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I wish to preface my statement this afternoon by expressing my own congratulations and best wishes to His Honour the Speaker, who has taken his seat for the first time. I thank him for the guidance, support and encouragement he gave me in his role as deputy leader whenever I went to him for help, seeking his advice on problems, as well as on suggestions that I wanted to bring before this house.

Honourable senators, it is with sentiments of joy and pride that I bring to your attention the fact that a renowned Canadian physicist, Dr. Bertram Neville Brockhouse, was recently awarded the 1994 Nobel Prize in physics by the Royal Swedish Academy. This prize is shared by an American scientist from Cambridge, Massachusetts, Dr. Clifford Shull.

Yesterday, Dr. Brockhouse was honoured by his colleagues at the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited laboratories in Chalk River, where he worked from 1950 to 1962 along with another Canadian physicist, later a director of the Physics Division, Dr. Gil Bartholomew, who is in the gallery this afternoon.

Dr. Brockhouse was born in 1918 in Lethbridge, Alberta. After serving in the Canadian Navy, he obtained his Bachelor's Degree from the University of British Columbia, followed by his Ph.D. in Physics from the University of Toronto in 1950. He worked at the Atomic Energy laboratories and became Professor of Physics at McMaster University, Hamilton. He married Doris Miller in 1958. The Brockhouses have raised six children.

Dr. Brockhouse worked for Atomic Energy of Canada in Chalk River from 1950 to 1962, during which time he did pioneering research on neutron scattering, and also in a special field that is called the study of the structure of matter through the neutron triple axis spectrometer, which he developed at Chalk River. This technique to study the structure and motion of atoms in liquids and solids, including crystals, is in use in virtually every neutron laboratory worldwide. Specifically, Dr. Brockhouse was able to measure for the first time the forces between atoms in solids and liquids. Dr. Brockhouse's discovery had important applications in the fields of engineering, the nuclear industry, and biotechnology.

I am sure honourable senators will wish to join me in extending our congratulations to Dr. Brockhouse for winning this great prize. His work underlines the importance of this kind of basic research, in which Canada is excelling.

I wish to emphasize that Dr. Brockhouse, our new Nobel Prize laureate, was born in Canada, studied in Canada, and did his research in Canada. In fact, he is the only one of the five Canadian Nobel Prize laureates in science who attained all his education and did his research completely in Canada. The other four laureates awarded the Nobel Prize for their scientific endeavours are Dr. R. Taylor, Dr. Michael Smith, and also Dr. John Polanyi in chemistry at the University of Toronto, and Dr. Hertzberg in molecular science at the National Research Council here in Ottawa, although he also did research abroad.

I would also add that, at a time when the government is considering making cuts in every field, I hope the Ministers of Finance and Industry will remember the importance of basic research, a field in which Canada has excelled and continues to excel through the National Research Council, the Atomic Energy Projects, and through the research done in our universities and other laboratories.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

STATE OF CANADIAN FINANCIAL SYSTEM

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON STUDY TABLED

Hon. Michael J. Kirby: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the thirteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, entitled "Regulation and Consumer Protection in the Federally-Regulated Financial Services Industry: Striking A Balance."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Kirby: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and in accordance with rule 98(3), I move that the report be taken into consideration, in order that I may say a few words now about the report and explain its highlights to honourable senators. My major speech on the report will occur next week.

At the end of my brief remarks today, I will then move that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if Senator Kirby wants to make a statement on the report today, I suggest that we complete Routine Proceedings first, and then revert to it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is that agreeable, honourable senators?

Senator Kirby: Honourable senators, the timing is fine. It was my intention to draw to the attention of honourable senators at this time the highlights of the report, because there will be a substantial amount of press commentary about it. In the past, we have followed that practice frequently in this chamber, when we have a report which might attract a considerable amount of attention. I did not intend to delve into the report in detail but merely to talk about it for three or four minutes.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Honourable senators, for those who time their interventions assuming a regular unfolding of the Orders of the Day, we should come back to this matter once Routine Proceedings are completed.

MANDATE OF STAFFED LIGHTSTATIONS

REPORT OF TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE ON MARINE SAFETY STUDY TABLED

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the sixth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, which deals with the study on the mandate of the staffed lightstations.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, November 23, 1994 at one-thirty o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF LE COLLÈGE MILITAIRE ROYAL DE ST-JEAN— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean-Claude Rivest: Honourable senators, the Prime Minister of Canada can make excellent decisions, as he has shown by appointing Senator Molgat as Speaker of the Senate and our colleague Roméo LeBlanc Governor General of Canada.

However, the same Prime Minister of Canada obviously made a very bad decision in closing the Royal Military College in St-Jean. This very bad decision will do considerable damage to Canada's duality since this institution was undoubtedly one of those that did the most to promote the basic principle of our country, its duality, and the knowledge of both French and English in the Canadian Armed Forces.

In La Presse today, a senior officer of the Canadian Forces, the commandant of the military college in St-Jean, asks the Canadian government to go back on its decision to close the Royal Military College in St-Jean.

I point out that he is a senior officer in the Canadian Forces. He is not a member of the PQ or the BQ or a Quebec nationalist. He is a Canadian military man who, like everyone else, sees that the Canadian government made a big mistake by deciding to close the Royal Military College in St-Jean. It is not only a mistake for francophones in this country but especially for English Canadians who make a career in the armed forces and want to be able to serve their country in both official languages.

The commandant, Mr. Parisien, indicates very clearly that it will be impossible for the armed forces to provide good education in French to English-speaking military personnel in Kingston. This opinion comes from the commandant of the college in St-Jean, a military man.

Can the minister pass on the concerns of all senators? We know how often Senator Kinsella has urged the government to see its mistake. Does the government realize that now its own spokesman — its trusted man, a soldier to whom the Prime Minister entrusted the administration of the military college in St-Jean — is asking the government to go back on its decision?

Perhaps the government would go back on its decision at the request of a Canadian military man, instead of changing course in response to pressure from the separatists who sit in the other House, as it did in the cheque affair.

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Rivest for his question. I confess that today I have been preoccupied with other events. Thus, I am not aware of the comments that have appeared in La Presse on this matter. I will certainly study them, and convey Senator Rivest's comments to my colleague the Minister of Defence. Senator Rivest and others concerned in this matter can be assured that their views will be transmitted.

IMMIGRATION

APPOINTMENT OF IMPARTIAL MEMBERS TO IMMIGRATION AND REFUGEE BOARD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I should first like to express my congratulations and pleasure with regard to the two appointments announced by the Prime Minister today. Our colleague Senator LeBlanc, of course, goes on to greater heights, and we wish him well. I also extend my congratulations to our colleague the much respected Senator Molgat on his appointment as Speaker of the Senate.

I am pleased that Mr. Marchi has called a judicial inquiry into the incredible mess created by his own actions in appointing to the Immigration and Refugee Board persons who are neither independent nor impartial. I am disappointed that Minister Marchi did not take this opportunity to amend the IRB appointment process in order to ensure, as promised by your government, that those appointed would be nonpartisan and qualified.

Will the government endeavour to bring back integrity and sanity to the IRB by changing the process to ensure that those who are called to serve on that quasi-judicial body are independent, nonpartisan, qualified and impartial?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Senator Di Nino, I do not agree with your blanket statement about the board. However, I will be pleased to pass your views and sentiments along to my colleague the Minister of Immigration.

Senator Di Nino: Perhaps the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate would indicate that portion of my statement with which she does not agree?

Senator Corbin: The one written by the researcher.

Senator Di Nino: I will have you know that that was written by myself.

Senator Fairbairn: Senator Di Nino, I know that at the moment a situation giving rise to some concern currently exists within the board, which is precisely why an inquiry has been called. However, I do believe that there are persons on the board who provide very valuable service to this country.

REDUCTION IN NUMBERS OF IMMIGRANTS— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I will await the reply to my question before I deal with that issue further. However, I should like to ask a question with regard to immigration.

In October 1993, the Liberal Party released its platform on the issue of immigration. In the infamous Red Book, the current government committed itself to setting immigration levels at 1 per cent of the population of Canada, which would be approximately 290,000 for 1995.

As we now know, Minister of Immigration Sergio Marchi announced on November 1 of this year that the levels would be far less than was originally promised in the Liberal manifesto; that, in effect, the number of new immigrants being welcomed into Canada would be approximately 195,000.

How does the government reconcile their original campaign promise, made a year ago, with what appears to be a blatant breach of that promise?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, immigration levels this year have been placed at between 190,000 and 215,000. In recent years, the number of immigrants to Canada has not reached the limit set.

The government has every intention of moving towards the goal laid out in our campaign promise. The Minister of Immigration has put forward a very broad program for effective, fair and compassionate immigration to this country. That is his commitment. That is the commitment of the government. I am hopeful that the process which permits people to come into our country, which is still the most generous country in the world, will be carried out with greater efficiency and dispatch than has been the case in recent years.

CAPPING OF FAMILY REUNIFICATION QUOTAS— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, as one of those people, like many others in this chamber and in the service of Canada, who came to this country as an immigrant, I find the answer of the government leader in the Senate, and that of the minister, perplexing. I believe that some soul-searching must take place before some honest answers can be given.

In concert with other Canadians, I want a well-managed and effective immigration program. Canadians want a program which responds to this country's social and economic needs. Canadians want to feel safe in their own communities, and they want to extend their hands to those who genuinely need our protection.

One of the pillars of our immigration system is our belief in family reunification. We as a country consider that the family is a vital part of our social and economic well-being. While in opposition, my Liberal friends were quick to attack the regulation amending the definition of "family class", which included spouses and dependent children. This change allowed spouses and dependent children to reunite with their family members much more quickly.

How can this government now make an about-face, cap the family class category and insist on a monetary bond in order for families to be reunited? Is this program, once a cornerstone of Canadian immigration policy, one which now only the wealthy can afford?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the commitment to the family in our immigration policy is strong. It has been in the past, and continues to be, fundamental to that policy. It will be highlighted in every class of immigrant who will be coming into this country. Indeed, there is an effort to make this process more flexible.

• (1440)

As far as the bond is concerned, I think my honourable friend knows that that proposal was put forward for discussion. Consequently, there will be discussion on it. The minister will then have the background from which to draw his conclusions in the future.

Senator Di Nino: Honourable senators, with respect to the bond issue, I am pleased to hear that that is only a proposal. Can the minister give us some assurance that her government will not implement that policy, which would continue the stereotype that immigrants are a drain on our society, instead of a benefit to it?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I can affirm on my own behalf and, I am sure, on behalf of the minister and the government — and I shall always try to give honest answers in this house — that we in Canada value and treasure the inclusion in, and addition to, our citizenship of those who come from around the world. They enrich this country and its economy, and they are profoundly welcome here.

THE BUDGET

REDUCTION OF FEDERAL DEBT AND ANNUAL DEFICIT— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duncan J. Jessiman: Honourable senators, before I ask my question, I too wish to echo the remarks made by the two lady senators from Manitoba. I have known His Honour for almost as many years as have the two ladies.

Although he is on the opposite side of the fence politically, I have always considered Senator Molgat to be a friend. He is a great Manitoban and a great Canadian, and I should like to put that on the record.

Honourable senators, I address my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The federal debt of $508 billion grows every minute of every day because of continuing annual deficits. The government's goal is to reduce the deficit to 3 per cent of the gross domestic product by 1996. Originally, the goal in the Red Book was broader than the mandate of the government. Thank goodness they at least changed that goal.

However, assuming that the government meets that goal, the net national debt will have climbed to $606 billion by the end of the 1996-97 fiscal year. The annual interest rate on that debt will be almost $50 billion, and rising. This will make it even more difficult to see the day when annual deficits are eliminated, and the government starts to make some payments to reduce the massive debt.

Honourable senators, my first question concerns the government's plans beyond 1996. Last February's budget was the first in more than a decade that failed to outline a plan beyond two years. Does the government have a plan beyond 1996, and is any consideration being given as to how the massive public debt can be reduced? If so, will the minister tell us what those plans are?

ELDERLY BENEFITS ASSESSED BY HOUSEHOLD INCOME— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Duncan J. Jessiman: My next question concerns the government's intentions with respect to elderly benefits. The grey discussion paper which the Minister of Finance tabled last month contains a table outlining the distribution of elderly benefits by household income. First, perhaps the Leader of the Government can tell us if one of the options under consideration to reduce the deficit and the debt is a new clawback of the Old Age Security based on household income rather than on individual income, as at present?

Second, can she tell us whether another of the options under consideration is an increase in the minimum age, from 65 to 70, for Canadians to start collecting their Old Age Security benefits? If so, would this change be phased in over a period of several years by progressively increasing the age one year at a time?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Jessiman for his questions. My colleague says, "Wait for the budget." I suppose that is a good answer. However, I should like to present a few points to you.

Any suggestions that the Minister of Finance receives in what are the most wide open budget consultations in the history of our country will be studied by him. The result will be the budget for next year. Of course, neither the Honourable Senator Jessiman nor I will have any notion of what will be contained in that report.

With respect to the debt and the deficit, there is no question that this government takes the debt and the deficit very seriously. Honourable senators opposite and others question whether 3 per cent of GDP in three years is sufficient. I can assure my colleagues that that is a tough goal to accomplish. It is not a small, insignificant goal, but it is one that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have indicated clearly that they are strongly and irrevocably dedicated to achieving.

I also wish to raise the whole question of debt and the deficit. Keep in mind that my Province of Alberta provides an indication of how things can be handled in different ways. It is the wish of this government, as stated throughout the election campaign, to handle our difficult financial situation in this country with a sense of balance.

It is for that reason that we have under way at this moment a massive review of all of the programs within the ambit of the federal government, with a view to whether they are necessary, whether they can be trimmed, and whether they can be done more efficiently by someone else. The whole purpose of that review, and other discussions the government has been having, is to see how we can put our own house in order without doing the kind of slashing and cutting without a plan that has been taking place in other parts of this country. It is a question of balance, and of what helps to protect the most vulnerable people in our society. That is the commitment of this government.

As far as elderly benefits are concerned, my honourable friend will know from the Minister of Finance's last budget that there is under way a study concerning the question of seniors' benefits. That study is not yet complete. The purpose of that study is to look at the future, rather than at the moment, and to study the impact of measures on the burgeoning segment of our society that are seniors — that is, active and productive seniors who wish to retain their place in the mainstream of Canadian society. Another object of the study will be to see how the seniors of the future can be accommodated within our economic plans.

We definitely have a plan: 3 per cent of GDP in three years, with a view to moving toward a complete reduction of the deficit. My friend knows that. It is not easy. It will take time. However, the initial goal has been stated, and that goal will be met.

Senator Jessiman: Did the Leader of the Government in the Senate say "a reduction", or is the plan to eliminate the deficit? If we do not eliminate the deficit, the debt will continue to grow. It is a question of compound interest. Surely there must be a plan to eliminate the deficit, and not just reduce it.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I believe I just said that, but I will repeat what I said. We are in the process of reducing the deficit, with the goal being to eliminate that deficit.

REACTION OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND TO GOVERNMENT'S PROPOSAL TO REDUCE DEFICIT— GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, I wish to ask a supplementary to this particular question. The IMF, from my understanding, clearly indicated that 3 per cent of the GDP was not acceptable. The Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate said that 3 per cent was a tough figure to achieve. I do not disagree with that statement, living in the times that we do.

Will the Honourable Leader of the Government tell us what the reaction of the government is to the IMF's actual statement that 3 per cent was not acceptable as a level of deficit reduction for this country?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to remind my friend that the International Monetary Fund has given Canada the rosiest forecast of any of its member countries in terms of economic prospects for the year ahead.

As we talk about the debt and the deficit, we must remember that there is another side to the coin: The other side is that the Canadian economy has been gaining in strength in a very impressive fashion, not just in comparison to other countries but also in comparison to the record over the last few years of economic development in our own country. Whether you talk about consumer confidence or employment and a slow but nonetheless downward trend in unemployment rates, the Canadian economy has been moving strongly throughout this year with forecasts for continuing strength in the future.

The honourable gentleman asks me to comment on the IMF and its views of our goals. That organization has its views. The Government of Canada lives in the reality and the context of this land and of the people who live in it. Balance, fairness and determination are are all part of the goal of a 3-per-cent reduction of GDP in three years. This is a goal which is important and achievable, and I believe it will be an effective achievement of this government.

Senator St. Germain: Honourable senators, I agree that the IMF has indicated that Canada has one of the best growth prospects in the world. However, the reality we live in is not necessarily restricted to the reality within Canada. Our borrowings come from countries such as Japan and countries in Europe. Are we really facing reality if we are not taking into consideration the fact that we may need to request the opinion of the IMF if foreign countries fail to buy our bonds and our Treasury Bills? Does the government not accept the IMF position that 3 per cent of GDP is not acceptable and that we must do more?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I believe the policy of the Government of Canada of the moment is the right policy. It is a fair policy and a tough policy for this country to carry ahead. Also, it is a policy which we intend to meet, as we have indicated. The fact that we are irrevocably committed to succeeding in that policy will be the best economic news that Canada could have had for a long time.

We do not need to call in the IMF to advise the Canadian government on the right policies for Canada. We have Canadians, as we speak, who are advising the Minister of Finance, through the pre-budget consultations, of their views as to the right policies for the Government of Canada. The minister is listening.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

MARINE SAFETY—STUDY ON MANDATE AND STAFFING OF LIGHSTATIONS—QUESTION FOR CHAIRMAN

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the Transport Committee. I see that the sixth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications has been presented. I am deputy chairman of that committee. Today is November 22, and we were supposed to be in British Columbia on November 21.

Why is the chairman only advising the Senate today of this postponement when he should have done so last Thursday? Then the people of British Columbia could have known ahead of time that we would not be there.

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, under rule 91 of the Rules of the Senate, a standing committee is empowered to inquire into and report upon such matters as are referred to it from time to time by the Senate.

Once an order of reference has been given to a committee, it may organize its work as it deems fit. The committee's only obligation is to report back to the Senate by the report date given in the order of reference, and in this case it is December 31, 1994.

The other part of the committee's decision on November 16, 1994, was to postpone its fact-finding trip scheduled for the week of the November 21, 1994. That trip was provided for under the budget approved for the whole study, first by the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, and then by the Senate on June 19, 1994.

Approval of the budget by the Senate gives the committee the authority to spend the money for the purpose approved. It is a permissive power and not a mandatory power. In other words, it does not require the committee to report back to the Senate on the organization of its work, for example, planning or postponing a trip. It is part of the committee's effort to organize its work as it sees fit to carry out its order of reference.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, that is a very lovely speech from the chairman of the committee. However, that is not what I asked him. I asked him why he did not present the report last Thursday so people would know we would not be coming, rather than two days after we were supposed to be there. To tell the people two days late that you would not be coming two days ago seems rather ridiculous.

The Transport Committee met last Thursday. The chairman could have stood up in this house and told the people of Canada that we would not be travelling to the West at this time. He could have made a public statement so that the press could let the people know, if the chairman did not want to let them know. Why advise them now, after the date the committee was supposed to have met? That is the question.

Senator Oliver: I have stated, honourable senators, what the rules are, and the chair has followed the rules.

Senator Bonnell: I did not ask what the rules are. Why did the chairman leave it until today to announce to the press, to the public and to the Senate that the committee was cancelling its appearance of November 21? Why did he not announce it last Thursday after the committee met? It does not matter what the Rules of the Senate say and it does not matter what authority the chairman has. It does not matter what the committee can and cannot do. Answer the question. Why did he not do it last Thursday?

Senator Oliver: I govern my conduct here, honourable senators, by the rules of the Senate.

THE SENATE

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE ORDERS OF REFERENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, I address my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It arises from the procedure whereby a work plan of a committee can be directed by a senator requesting, through an order of reference, that a particular matter be studied by a committee. Such an order of reference can be approved without prior discussion with either the committee chair or the committee itself.

When will senators on the government side accommodate the movement for internal renewal by establishing a small committee, made up of senators from both sides of the chamber, to bring forth recommendations following a study on this very topic of how matters can properly come before a committee?

Second, as an interim step, would the government establish a liaison committee of chairmen of committees which could meet and discuss the work of committees and the impact of an individual order of reference on that committee agenda?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Oliver for his question. As he knows, he and his colleagues have been studying these questions for some time now. Senators on this side are also in the process of looking into these areas of interest in terms of how our committee system and our desire to study issues of importance to Canadians can be better facilitated in this chamber.

I will certainly take into consideration his suggestions for interaction between the two sides. We are not quite there yet, but my honourable friend should know that we are on track.

DELAYED ANSWERS

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have only been in my present position for a few hours now.

We are having some difficulty getting replies to some of the questions, but I shall attempt to provide some of the delayed answers tomorrow.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

STATE OF CANADIAN FINANCIAL SYSTEM

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON STUDY TABLED

Leaving having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators, as I said earlier today, I should like to take a few moments to present to the Senate the highlights of the committee report, in light of the fact that it is likely to have considerable press coverage in the next few days.

The committee report deals with three issues, honourable senators. The first is the issue of deposit insurance. With respect to that issue, the committee recommends, as it has three times in the past eight years, that there be an element of coinsurance or, effectively, that depositors have some element of risk associated with deposits they make in financial institutions.

We have recommended that depositors continue to be fully insured on the first $30,000 of their deposits. Evidence has shown that this limit covers 80 per cent of depositors, and, consequently, it ensures that unsophisticated depositors continue to be protected by the committee's recommendations in the way that they are now protected under existing deposit insurance rules.

We have, however, recommended that only 90 per cent of the amount deposited between $30,000 and $65,000 be insured. We believe that introducing some element of market discipline, making consumers at least partly responsible for their decisions as to the institution in which they deposit their money, is an effective way of introducing an element of market discipline into the deposit-taking system.

The second major area the report covers deals with the kind of insurance protection to be given to purchasers of products from life and health insurance companies. At the present moment, these products are insured under an industry-run scheme called the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Compensation Corporation, or CompCorp. We have proposed that this corporation be disbanded and replaced by a new organization to be called the Policy Holder Protection Fund. That fund would be established by legislation, but it would not have access to the Consolidated Revenue Fund nor would it have access to government guarantees.

The fundamental reason we are recommending this major change in the way life and health insurance policy holders are protected is that the current structure of CompCorp is fraught with conflicts of interest. The current board of directors of CompCorp consists of people employed in the industry. These people work for competing companies. Therefore, it would be difficult for CompCorp to participate in a going-concern solution should an insurance company get into trouble.

We believe that creating our new Policy Holder Protection Fund will enable its operators to have access to information in a timely fashion because conflict-of-interest problems would be avoided. It will also have sufficient resources to enable it to come to the table as a significant financial player with respect to developing a going-concern solution for troubled insurance companies.

The third major area the report covers deals with additional powers for the Superintendent of Financial Institutions. The superintendent, as senators know, is the regulator of banks, trust companies, and federally regulated life and health insurance companies. At the present moment the Superintendent of Financial Institutions only has two options when it comes to exercising his or her powers: regulation or liquidation. There are no steps between nonintervention on the one hand and complete seizure of a company on the other.

The committee believes that the superintendent should have a range of powers between those two extremes; the range of powers described in the report under the general heading of rehabilitation powers. We also feel that there are a number of other ways in which companies in financial trouble can have their problems dealt with without having the superintendent seize the company.

The final section of the report deals with another series of issues related to accountability and public information.

I have presented those highlights to you because I think that the issues of deposit insurance, our arguments for coinsurance and our recommended solutions to the problems related to CompCorp — specifically our recommendations that CompCorp not have access to the Consolidated Revenue Fund and that our Policy Holder Protection Fund not be a Crown corporation — are likely to be controversial. Members of the committee felt that it would be useful to point out those highlights in the Senate today and to deal with the details of the report subsequently.

In closing, I move that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, may I have some direction? Since Senator Kirby has made some comments, is it appropriate to question him on his presentation, or would it be more appropriate to do that at the time that the report is considered?

Senator Kirby: Honourable senators, to respond directly to Senator Di Nino, I would prefer to do it when I have had a chance to elaborate. My only purpose today was to point out to the Senate the highlights of the executive summary. I would be delighted to answer the honourable senator's questions and to debate some of the specific policy issues when I make my speech on the report next week.

Senator Di Nino: If I may, honourable senator, I trust that your speech will contain some component of the responsibilities of the external auditors of the financial institutions, as well as the responsibility of government with respect to financial institutions.

Senator Kirby: It does indeed. A number of specific recommendations deal directly with the role of external auditors.

On motion of Senator Kirby, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Senator Kirby]

[Translation]

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès moved the second reading of Bill S-6, to amend the Criminal Code (dangerous intoxication).

He said: Honourable senators, I rise to ask you, with all due respect, to consider Bill S-6. This bill would amend the Criminal Code by creating a new offence of dangerous intoxication.

[English]

This offence of dangerous intoxication is described in Bill S-6 as follows:

> Everyone who, while in a state of self-induced intoxication caused by alcohol or a drug, commits or attempts to commit a prohibited act is guilty of an indictable offence...

I shall return to this definition, but first, honourable senators, I shall briefly explain why this bill is submitted to you for your judgment and eventual approval, if you so decide. It touches on important fundamental rights and attempts to deal with a problem that the court has invited legislators to solve.

On September 29, 1994, the Supreme Court of Canada, in the case of R. v. Daviault, ordered a new trial for the accused who had been found guilty by a lower court of sexually assaulting an elderly and partially paralysed woman. The accused had been found guilty even though he had claimed to have been in a state of extreme intoxication, so drunk at the time he committed the sexual assault that he was acting in a state of automatism and had not therefore known what he was doing. The lower court had rejected extreme intoxication as a basis for the defence of the accused.

The defence of intoxication has been refused in Canada since 1978 when the Supreme Court ruled in the case of R. v. Leary. In the judgment of R. v. Daviault, the majority of the justices, on September 30 of this year, reversed the Leary precedent on the basis that it is contrary to articles 7 and 11(d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The majority of the Supreme Court said, in effect, that in very rare cases, if it can be proven by the accused and by experts that the accused was indeed in a condition of extreme intoxication, the defence of acting in a state of automatism had to be considered, and they ordered a new trial for Henri Daviault.

In layman's language, the whole issue revolves around the matter of intent to commit certain crimes. How can someone who is in a condition of extreme intoxication, who might therefore be assumed to not know what he is doing, be said to have intent? There are parallels here with people suffering from a mental illness which makes them incapable of knowing what they are doing.

Learned jurists have argued that the mere intent to get drunk should be transferable to the act one commits while drunk. In other words, if you intended to get drunk, that intent could be stretched to cover what you did whilst drunk.

Again, in layman's language, the majority of the Supreme Court found, in the Daviault case, that the mere intent to get drunk is not transferable, and cannot be considered to be the intent that must be proven to convict someone of a sexual assault such as that with which Daviault was charged.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I shall, if I may, quote from the summary of the majority opinion of the Supreme Court in Regina v. Daviault:

> Even those who are significantly drunk will usually...be found to have acted voluntarily. Extreme intoxication akin to auomatism or insanity should, like insanity, be established by the accused on a balance of probabilities. It will only be on rare occasions that evidence of such an extreme state of intoxication can be advanced. While such a burden constitutes a violation of the accused's rights under section 11(d) of the Charter, it can be justified under section 1.

I will also quote sections 1, 7 and 11*(d)* of the Charter, starting with section 1:

> The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Section 7:

> Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

And section 11*(d)*:

> Any person charged with an offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal.

After this digression to quote the Charter, I will now proceed with the summary of Regina v. Daviault:

> It is only the accused who can give evidence as to the amount of alcohol consumed and its effect upon him. Expert evidence would be required to confirm that the accused was probably in a state akin to automatism or insanity as a result of his drinking.
>
> ...the prohibited criminal act be performed voluntarily as a willed act. A person in a state of automatism cannot perform a voluntary willed act, and someone in an extreme state of intoxication akin to automatism must also be deprived of that ability. It would equally infringe section 7 of the Charter if an accused who was not acting voluntarily could be convicted of a criminal offence. Here again the voluntary act of becoming intoxicated cannot be substituted for the volunatary action involved in sexual assault. To convict in the face of such a fundamental denial of natural justice could not be justified under s. 1 of the Charter.

Many have openly criticized the Supreme Court ruling because of its potential consequences. They fear that this defence will be used more and more frequently, and that violent crime will go unpunished because it was committed in a state of self-induced intoxication. The experience of the last two months — during which the intoxication defence was used successfully twice, once in Alberta and once in Quebec, and according to the latest news, a third time in Prince Edward Island — gives even more credibility to critics.

I am not one of those who criticize the ruling made by our Supreme Court in the Daviault case. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms in the Canadian Constitution imposes new evaluations of our laws and jurisprudence. I am one of those who maintain that the Daviault decision was justified, despite its potentially harmful consequences if we do not address the shortcomings of our criminal legislation.

That is why I rose today to ask the Senate, with all due respect, to agree to examine Bill S-6. The Supreme Court justices themselves have invited lawmakers to make sure that the Criminal Code adequately reflects the social consensus.

[English]

The justices of the Supreme Court have invited the legislature to make sure that the Criminal Code adequately reflects the social consensus. I will quote here from the decision of the court in Daviault, where both the majority and the minority justices issued an invitation to the legislative branch.

Mr. Justice Peter Cory, writing for the majority, said at page 32:

> I would add that it is always open to Parliament to fashion a remedy which would make it a crime to commit a prohibited act while drunk.

Writing for the minority in the same case, Mr. Justice John Sopinka had a similar invitation. At page 32 he said:

> It has been suggested that Parliament should create a new offence of dangerous intoxication...Such changes, however, are for Parliament and not for this Court to make.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, Bill S-6 would allow legislators to amend the Criminal Code so that a person who commits a crime cannot use intoxication as an excuse to avoid punishment.

[English]

The Supreme Court, in its majority judgment, felt that the Daviault case could serve as a precedent in so few cases that it could not be seen as a major threat to the social order.

Mr. Justice Peter Cory said, in section 60 at page 32:

> It is obvious that it will only be on rare occasions that evidence of such an extreme state of intoxication can be advanced and perhaps only on still rarer occasions is it likely to be successful. Nonetheless, the adoption of this alternative would avoid infringement of the Charter.

Unfortunately, three cases in less than two months since the Daviault decision have proven that the defence of intoxication is not that rare. These cases should have shown that the public good is not well served by waiting.

Exactly one month after the Supreme Court's decision, the Daviault judgment served to acquit an accused for the first time. On October 31, in Blair v. The Queen before the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench, Mr. Blair, who had severely beaten his wife, was found to be acting like a robot because of an alcohol and drug induced state. The acquittal was pronounced by Mr. Justice Mackenzie based on the Daviault judgment of the Supreme Court.

Less than one month later, on November 16 in the Quebec Superior Court at Hull, in The Queen v. Thériault another acquittal was pronounced by Mr. Justice Barrière, based again on the Daviault judgment. The verdict said that Mr. Thériault had consumed such an extravagant quantity of cocaine and alcohol that he could not be responsible for his actions.

Finally, earlier this week in Prince Edward Island, a sexual assault charge was dismissed on the same grounds. That is a lot of influence from the Daviault case.

[Translation]

This recent decision should convince us of the urgent need to take action despite assurances that the Daviault precedent should affect very few cases.

[English]

I will now proceed to an explanation of the bill itself which is before honourable senators. The object of this bill is clearly expressed in the preamble which reads:

> Whereas the public interest requires that drunken violence be dealt with and punished as a separate offence;

Honourable senators, I believe that the Senate has a unique opportunity to act swiftly in a matter of public interest. Such action is avidly called for by the Canadian public. The justices of the Supreme Court have made it clear that they wish to receive clearer direction from the legislative branch. The public interest meets the public's interest in a rare show of support.

Justice would be clearly served by requiring every citizen to be responsible for any action, even if committed while intoxicated, when this intoxication is voluntary.

The method chosen to make sure that no one escapes the consequences of violent criminal behaviour while voluntarily intoxicated is, in broad terms, that suggested by the Supreme Court and the Law Reform Commission of Canada. Hence, this bill will amend the Criminal Code by adding proposed section 320.1(1) to 320.1(4) immediately after section 320.

• (1520)

Honourable senators, proposed section 320.1(1) of the bill determines that a new crime exists where a person is voluntarily intoxicated and commits any of the prohibited acts listed under proposed section 320.1(3). This first proposed section also specifies the penalty associated with it. I am proposing that the penalty be a maximum of 14 years, to provide the judge with the ability to fit the punishment to the prohibited act which the accused was proven to have committed.

Proposed section 320.1(2) provides for exceptions where an accused became intoxicated because of fraud, duress, compulsion or reasonable mistake. This section responds directly to the recommendations of the Law Reform Commission of Canada. Should a person become intoxicated because of fraud, duress or compulsion, it clearly would not be in the interests of justice to hold such a person responsible for the acts committed thereafter.

Proposed section 320.1(3) provides a list of prohibited acts covered by the new crime of voluntary intoxication. This list is not exhaustive. However, I am told by experts that it covers all of the major violent crimes in which the Daviault defence might be invoked.

Detailed study of this bill in the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs could permit the elimination of some categories or the addition of others.

[Translation]

Clause 320.1(4) of the bill requires an explanation. The legal language used could lead one to believe at first glance that an accused could be found guilty of the new crime of dangerous intoxication for having committed an act prohibited under clause 320.1(3) without it being proven that the accused actually committed the prohibited act. Obviously, this is neither the intention nor the meaning of 320.1(4). Clearly, for an accused to be found guilty of "dangerous intoxication", the appropriate court must be convinced that, first, the accused was voluntarily intoxicated and, second, the accused had committed one of the prohibited acts defined in the bill.

[English]

The addition of subclause (4) is made necessary by the Supreme Court of Canada decision in Regina v. Pringle, 1989. The court stated that the text of the Criminal Code did not make clear whether or not it was necessary for the accused to be found guilty of a prohibited act, which involved proving intent, before he could be found guilty of having used a firearm while committing the prohibited act in question. This is why, honourable senators, subclause (4) of clause 320.1 of Bill S-6 states that you only have to establish that the prohibited act was committed, without having to prove the intent to commit that prohibited act.

I plead with you, honourable senators, to turn your attention to this issue of public interest. The Supreme Court has asked the legislators for a remedy. This is not a partisan issue, but one that is tailor-made for the Senate and the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

The learned chairman of that committee, the Honourable Senator Beaudoin, along with the eminent lawyers on that committee, will make all the improvements that might be necessary to this bill. Our chamber will have served Canadians well.

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

NOVA SCOTIA

RESEARCH REPORTS ON BLACK COMMUNITY—INQUIRY

Hon. Donald H. Oliver rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, October 27, 1994:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to a report entitled: "Role Model Program Report: Blacks in Nova Scotia," of 1991, and a follow-up report entitled: "The Nova Scotia Black Community and Diaspora: Models of Upward Mobility," of August 1994.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise today to speak to a report I commissioned entitled "The Nova Scotia Black Community and Diaspora: Models of Upward Mobility, 1994".

I tabled the report in the Senate a couple of weeks ago. It is a follow-up study to previous Senate research conducted by S.P. Pachai entitled "The Role Model Program Research Report: Blacks in Nova Scotia, 1991".

Honourable senators, the purpose for initiating this research is to address the critical need to motivate and inform all Canadians about the significant contributions blacks have made to Canadian society.

A small portion of the research budget allocated to my office was used to retain Santosh Pachai, a black academic, to conduct research investigating the viability of, and laying the groundwork for, implementing a Nova Scotian Black Role Model Program. While the study focuses on blacks in Nova Scotia, the mechanism now exists to easily expand the Role Model Program to include other ethnic minority groups across Canada.

Pachai, in this study, identified appropriate resource people and their availability to participate in the Role Model Program. He has compiled a preliminary listing of prominent blacks and their achievements. The partners of the Role Model Program, a list which includes members from the educational, corporate, community, media and governmental sectors, would initiate publications, workshops, lectures and research as part of the program. Pachai indicates that television programming, exhibitions, career counselling, and scholarships would be developed as mechanisms to carry out the Role Model Program's goals.

Honourable senators, there is an urgent need for this type of research as contributions made by black Canadians go relatively unreported and unrecognized. Black youths need to be afforded a sense of pride about their past, their ancestors, and have a positive vision of the future. As a senator representing Nova Scotia, and as a member of the black community, I feel a sense of responsibility to promote this education.

Honourable senators, a number of reasons prompted me to commission these research studies. First and foremost, there is a veritable dearth of published historical facts in Canada about black culture and history. There is a need to educate all Canadians, especially our youth, about black history in Canada. The Pachai research offers a glimpse into black history and culture in Nova Scotia; however, it is clear to me that more research is needed in order to provide our educational system with the tools required.

Vast opportunities are available to youth, for which society must prepare them. We must not leave all this work in the hands of the educational system. Too often young people do not receive clear signals from their families, peers, community leaders and educators on which to base sound career choices. As the Pachai study indicates, a cooperative approach in the formulation and implementation of the Role Model Program will serve to ensure community support and involvement.

Basic sociological texts teach us that many of our cultural assumptions and habits are formed in the first few years of our lives. Families and community leaders tend to be important forces in preserving inherited customs. Canada's multiculturalism policy, which encourages people to maintain their traditions, is a counterbalance to the North American "melting pot" notion of individualism that can lead people to reject their backgrounds, particularly if they feel pressured to conform to the social norms of the majority. Communities help preserve cultural continuity by preserving an appreciation of their distinctive traditions and values.

Honourable senators, there is an indisputable need to motivate black youth to pursue higher education. This will be a major step towards economic independence. Throughout the 1950s and 1960s, African Canadians sought better education, good jobs, economic opportunity and political power. In 1959, for instance, Stanley Grizzle and William White, both prominent members of the black community, ran for political office. Both lost, but their example inspired others. Black Canadians need to be aware of these people in order to see themselves in a new light.

Black people's contributions to Canadian history, culture and political life are not reflected in our history books. Little is known of our accomplishments or history, in spite of our presence that dates back from the 1600s. We must ask ourselves why black history is not part of the school curriculum. Is it because of a lack of written information?

Matthew DaCosta was an educated black fisherman from the Azores who was Samuel de Champlain's interpreter to the Micmac Indians in 1605. He may, in fact, have arrived in the new world ahead of the French explorer Champlain. I am confident that every one knows of the discovery by Champlain, and I am equally confident that DaCosta is a relative unknown.

The Pachai study begins the process of awareness of the contribution of blacks in Canadian history and culture. A continuation of this effort is critical.

Canada draws immigrants from all over the world, and many have been blocked from achieving their full potential because of race or economic circumstances. A society that discriminates against individuals or groups of individuals pays a high price socially and economically. The first step toward equality is an appreciation of the contributions made by all sectors of society.

In fact, clause 3(1)(c) of Canada's Multiculturalism Act states that questions of ethnic origin and background should not limit anyone's chance to help shape and build Canadian society. It is time these words were put into action.

The media loves to distort and put a negative spin upon black issues. Indeed, it seems that Canada's print and electronic media, particularly the CBC, use every opportunity available to them to show blacks as uneducated, violent, drug-using individuals who make no positive contribution to our great country. These constant media reports add fuel to racism and thereby weaken our country.

When did you last see black men and women of intelligence on a CBC panel afforded an opportunity to participate in a debate on renewal of our federation? Yes, such blacks do exist, but the CBC systematically keeps them out of public view. Maybe they should read the Pachai research project which I have tabled in the Senate.

The failure to report on black achievements has resulted in an ignorance of the facts and a perpetuation of stereotypes. Nova Scotian blacks recently voiced criticism of limited reporting as follows:

> ...tell me why, when I will look around me, that I cannot find positive images of me and people of various cultures? Do all black people use drugs, rob and steal? Do we all excel in sports and entertainment? Because we are not portrayed in other more positive roles, you and I begin to think that all black people are active in these ways only.
>
> If we tell a child he or she is slow and not intelligent, what type of child will we help to create? Will the child be motivated to have a positive self-image? Or do we help to foster a child with a lazy attitude and a negative self-image?

These comments deal with issues which the Pachai role model program would seek to address. It is time that all Canadians became aware of the significant contributions blacks have made in the academic, professional, arts, political and community service fields. The Role Model Program seeks to provide an example for others to follow, while at the same time heightening acceptance of racial differences.

We must eliminate the barriers to employment faced by visible minorities. There is already a great deal of research supporting the conclusion that employment that discriminates on the basis of race is a serious problem. Statistics for the public service are discouraging. While visible minorities make up over 10 per cent of Canada's population, only 3.7 per cent of all employees working in federal departments and agencies in 1992 were members of a visible minority.

If this statistical research is insufficient to convince decision-makers of the seriousness of this problem, then perhaps a new conclusive effort to investigate the problem should be undertaken. Why do we not show greater commitment to the elimination of racial discrimination, especially when it is in the interest of us all to do so?

The Pachai report studies a number of blacks who have made inroads in the area of finance and entrepreneurship, affording blacks with a more sustainable economic power. We cannot afford to forget that visible minorities control $76 billion worth of purchasing power. This is a consumer force worth paying attention to. Goldfarb research, commissioned by Race Relations Advisory Council on Advertising, indicates that visible minorities respond to and are motivated by intelligent marketing that respects them. They want to be included and they will buy.

There are many notable blacks and visible minorities who have worked vigorously toward affording blacks with the respect they deserve. One important man in our community was the late Wilson Head who immigrated to Canada in 1959. He was a man with a vision. In 1975 he founded the Urban Alliance on Race Relations, which is working toward social justice in Canada. He was commissioned to study discrimination against blacks for Nova Scotia's Marshall inquiry. I quote his words as follows:

> It should be apparent that a democratic society faces a cruel dilemma when it promises equal opportunity to all, and yet a considerable proportion of its population suffers from discrimination based on its racial classification.

The challenge to Canada is to find new and innovative ways to translate this commitment to equal opportunity into reality.

Through commissioning these Pachai reports, I have begun to tackle the demand for further research concerning black culture and its contribution to Canadian history. This role model report offers a glimpse at many of the contributions blacks have made in Nova Scotia, in Canada, and in the international arena which, too often, have gone unreported. While I have focused on the Nova Scotia black community, as I said earlier, the research model from this program is readily adaptable to other parts of Canada.

In an effort to bring about an awareness of the positive contributions blacks have made to Canadian society, the Pachai research project documents a number of notable accomplishments by individuals in the Nova Scotia black community. One such individual is James Robinson Johnston, Nova Scotia's first black lawyer, who believed that the best interests of black people would be preserved through education. Johnston worked in many ways to make this happen. Specifically, Johnston was able to obtain the endorsement of the clergy for plans to found a school to cater to the needs of blacks.

In his honour, the James Robinson Johnston Chair in Black Canadian Studies at Dalhousie University has been established as the first ever chair and related academic program dedicated to the study of black perspectives, history, culture and contributions in Canada.

Dalhousie University was selected as the site for the Johnston Chair largely because Nova Scotia has the oldest and largest per capita indigenous black population in Canada.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank many senators from this chamber who kindly donated to the first ever chair in black Canadian studies. We have now raised more than $1.4 million, and at present we are advertising for the first chairperson.

The Fathers of Confederation envisaged a Senate that would represent minorities among other things. I have committed myself to represent black Nova Scotians and, as I said in a speech in this chamber in January 24, 1991:

> ... through my appointment to the Senate I believe I can represent black Nova Scotians, and visible minorities throughout the country. As a member of both communities, I understand the need to combat racism wherever it appears and to provide equal opportunity to all regardless of the colour of their skin. Equality, fairness and justice — these are concepts that many Canadians take for granted; but for many others they are goals to which they can only aspire. But they are no longer an impossible dream.

I have been a senator for four years now, and in those years I have addressed a number of schools, veterans' associations, youth groups, round table meetings, seminars on race relations, and many local groups about the importance of the elimination of racial discrimination. I have also written a number of articles concerning these issues and I have commissioned these studies.

I believe the Pachai research will go a long way toward ending systemic racism. There are signs of hope in the international community. With the elimination of apartheid in South Africa and the Israel-PLO talks, surely Canadians can overcome racial and religious conflict. We must embrace a new Canada based on mutual respect for differences.

In summary, I believe there is a pressing need for further research and greater public awareness of both the realities facing black communities and the significant heritage our black forefathers have left to us.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: If no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

TRANSPORT

NEW BRUNSWICK RAIL SERVICE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Mabel M. Deware rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, November 17, 1994:

> That she will call the attention of the Senate to matters relating to rail services in New Brunswick.

She said: Honourable senators, last week I gave notice that I would like to bring to the attention of the Senate matters relating to the rail service in the province of New Brunswick.

Be it education cuts, free trade, sales tax reform or cuts to Canada's passenger rail service, there is a recurrent theme in much of what the Liberal government is doing, and it does not match the rhetoric of their last nine years in opposition.

In previous years, members of the governing party protested loudly whenever the previous government announced any cuts to VIA Rail. Now they seem to have no hesitation in carrying out cuts of their own. For instance, in 1989 when he was a member of the opposition, the current Minister of Public Works and Government Services said that VIA cuts will separate Canadians geographically, economically and socially. This was printed in The Gazette in 1989.

In the same year, the current Minister of Fisheries and Oceans called the previous government's cuts to VIA a short-sighted policy which will deny, in the short term, the people of Canada a rail passenger service. In itself, the service is important and its loss is devastating for the communities affected. More fundamentally, as we move into the 1990s and toward the year 2000, this policy denies Canadians a future. That was recorded in Hansard of June 9, 1989.

In 1991, the current government house leader called the previous government's cuts to VIA and other institutions a "blueprint for de-Confederation", as quoted by The Toronto Star of March 11, 1994. In a letter dated October 20, 1993, none other than our current Prime Minister, on the eve of his election victory, said:

> Canada requires a first rate transportation system that is able to serve every region...and that the PC Government's continued tolerance to rail line abandonments have done nothing to improve this situation...and that the Liberal Party would clean up this mess.

These words were written in a letter to our sitting member George Rideout on October 20, 1993.

After making statements such as these, I fail to understand why this government believes it can credibly defend their miraculous change of heart with their cuts to the passenger railway line between Halifax and Montreal.

Furthermore, fellow senators, VIA Rail recently launched a promotional campaign aimed at getting people to take the train over the next few months. Homes in Saint John, New Brunswick received an envelope in the mail from the rail company offering a special discount on adult fares. As well, a 25-per-cent discount was offered when travelling between December 15 and January 5.

This new marketing campaign is very confusing to the people in the area. VIA announced the termination of VIA Atlantic as of December 15 but announced a discount for travelling between December 15 and January 5. Does this make sense? How is one supposed to get a discount when there is no train?

However, it is not my intention to dwell exclusively upon the Liberal Party's complete about-face on this issue.

Fellow senators, as a truly national political party, it is my party's prerogative to put forth constructive alternatives. Canadians get enough of the vacuum that is a lack of constructive alternatives with the "opposition purely for the sake of opposition" approach of the separatists and the Reformists in the other chamber. Canadians are not interested in hearing merely what we are against, but they do want to know what we stand for.

Therefore, in considering the challenge of preserving a sustainable transportation system, the government has to recognize that some regions of Canada more than others rely on passenger rail services to sustain a certain quality of life. In this regard, I refer to Conservative MP Elsie Wayne's recent statement to the Telegraph-Journal to the effect that the transportation minister overturned a recommendation of the board of VIA that dayliner service between Saint John and Moncton continue to operate.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Where is the Minister of Transport from?

Senator DeWare: He is from New Brunswick.

If it is true that the minister did unilaterally overturn a recommendation of the board, then the government should reconsider the decision of the minister and ensure that there is a dayliner from Saint John to Moncton, rather than a bus.

The Progressive Conservative Party is not asking that the government overturn past rail line abandonments. Instead, we would like to see a focus on reorganizing the railway rather than abandoning it entirely. We may be powerless to do anything when the government's actions betray the rhetoric of its prior promises. However, we can work to ensure that current decisions are guided by the precepts of good public policy, not the arbitrary actions of a vindictive cabinet minister.

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, November 23, 1994, at 1:30 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 23, 1994

The Senate met at 1:30 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

THE HONOURABLE ROMÉO LEBLANC, P.C.

TRIBUTES ON APPOINTMENT AS GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA

Hon. Gerald J. Comeau: Honourable senators, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate two of my very dear friends on their appointments.

Senator Molgat, I am confident that with your experience and knowledge, you will meet the expectations and responsibilities of the position of Speaker of the Senate and that you will be equal to the challenges that will face you.

To His Excellency, the Right Honourable Roméo LeBlanc, I say that I am sure that you will be able to carry out your new duties as Governor General with all the skill and energy for which you are known, and that you will do so with great distinction.

Your Excellency, the Prime Minister made a wise choice in appointing you to that position. All Acadians and French Canadians are glad to see that you are the first Maritimer and the first Acadian to receive such an appointment. It is always very touching when one of our own is given such an honour, and we are proud of you.

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is very fitting that Senator Comeau should be the first on his feet today to pay his respects and offer his congratulations to a fellow Acadian.

I also wish to say that it is a great pleasure for me to pay tribute to our former colleague, Roméo LeBlanc, who will be sworn in as Governor General of Canada early next year. Although we have lost an esteemed colleague from our midst in this place, he has moved on to an important and challenging new responsibility which all of us know he will carry out with great distinction.

Honourable senators, his elevation to the very highest position in our parliamentary system of government brings with it a number of firsts. He is a fluently bilingual Acadian, and very proud of it. He is from New Brunswick. He will be the first Atlantic Canadian to hold this high office. He is also the first francophone from outside Quebec to become Governor General of Canada. All colleagues in this house will also appreciate the fact that he is the first senator to have been named as a Governor General of Canada. We can call him Roméo today, but we will have to use more exalted titles in the future. Today, Roméo is a colleague who has served with us and departed, and all of us cherish our friendship with him.

Roméo has had a very long and distinguished career in both public and private life. Many senators may not know that he began as a teacher at Drummond High School in Drummond, New Brunswick, and later moved on to teach French and civics at the New Brunswick Teachers' College in Fredericton. He was attracted to journalism, and he began to pursue that interest as a freelance correspondent for Radio-Canada. In 1959, he determined that his heart was set on this course, and he accepted a job in Ottawa as the public affairs correspondent for Radio-Canada. In the years that followed, Roméo travelled extensively on assignments throughout the world, through the United Nations, to Washington, London, Berlin, Algeria, Cyprus, and Southeast Asia.

It certainly appeared to all who knew him that Roméo LeBlanc had indeed found a career for a lifetime. However, when he was offered a position as communications director with former prime minister Lester B. Pearson back in 1967, he could find no convincing reason to say no, and so began another career which extended into the government of the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

I came to know him back in his Pearson days, when I was a journalist in the parliamentary press gallery and he was the Prime Minister's press secretary, on whom we all relied. Then began a friendship which has lasted all these years. He was fair, he was good humoured, and he was honest, and he has carried those characteristics with him throughout all of his different forms of activity in a very action-packed life.

There is no doubt that he enjoyed his experience at the Prime Minister's office. He enjoyed it so much that he chose to run for Parliament. In 1972, he was successful and became the member of Parliament for what was then known as Westmorland-Kent, now Beauséjour, and that is the riding he represented through four federal elections until he was called to this place in 1984. In 1974, he was sworn into the cabinet, where he served as Minister of State for Fisheries. He became Minister of Fisheries and the Environment in 1976, and later, Minister of Public Works with responsibilities for CMHC.

Perhaps he will always be best known as the Minister of Fisheries. He built a widespread reputation of loyalty in fishing communities on both coasts of this country, and he earned the respect of his cabinet and caucus colleagues. He has always spoken out passionately and clearly on behalf of the fishermen and their families in Canada. He understood the hardship and the uncertainty faced in that difficult line of work, and he fought long and hard to ensure that the federal government did everything it could to make that life just a little bit easier and a little bit less harsh. He has been, and always will be, an advocate of the worker.

When he came to the Senate, he quickly became a respected colleague. He has served on a number of committees, and for those in this house who have had the pleasure or the difficulty of serving on the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, he will be remembered as a fair and very diligent chairman during some interesting times.

When he was chosen Speaker of the Senate in January of this year, the announcement was well received both inside and outside the chamber. Here, senators will agree, he has also served with fairness, integrity and sensitivity.

He takes that experience now to the office of the Governor General of Canada, and he takes it at a most difficult time in the life of this country.

• (1340)

Fellow New Brunswicker, J.K. Irving, commented upon learning of the appointment:

> He is absolutely the right man for this position at this critical time in Canada's history. He brings experience, dignity and commitment to this high office.

Roméo LeBlanc will be a Governor General who relates to all Canadians, be they in the highest councils of this land or on the wharves of Caraquet, where he has served his constituents for many years. His upbringing gave him a lifelong appreciation of how comparatively small changes can produce a significant impact in the lives of many people.

He was born in Cormier's Cove, a small community of 28 houses, and he grew up during the Great Depression. In a recent interview he recalled how, for some, hunger was a fact of life and how food was given generously in that small community. "I remember that quite vividly," he stated. It is those memories which laid the foundation for his entry into public life with a conviction that our parliamentary system is here to serve the people of Canada, and not the representatives themselves.

There is a quotation from one of our former prime ministers of many years ago, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that perhaps epitomizes Roméo's attitude:

> I am one of these who think that everywhere, in human things, there are abuses to be reformed, new horizons to be opened up, and new forces to be developed.

Throughout his years in public life, and in all the years to come, Roméo LeBlanc will do just that. He may certainly be proud of his record of achievement. He has earned a very special place in the hearts of a great many Canadians. He will be building on those accomplishments in his new role. He takes with him our deep appreciation for all of his dedicated service in both the House of Commons and the Senate. He also takes with him our support, encouragement and best wishes to him and Madam LeBlanc, Diana, for success and happiness as the twenty-fifth Governor General of Canada.

Our former Speaker and his wife have been married now for three weeks. This will be a wonderful start in a new job, as well as a new companionship.

[Senator Fairbairn]

We send our very best wishes and thanks to the outgoing Governor General, Ramon Hnatyshyn and his wife Gerda. A fellow westerner, he has distinguished himself with a job well done. During his tenure, he has supported many worthwhile causes. On the first day of his appointment, when asked what cause he would champion as Governor General, his reply was literacy. That statement warmed my heart. He has pursued this cause with great vigour and heart in his years as Governor General of Canada.

Ramon and his wife Gerda take with them the respect of all Canadians. We wish them the very best as they head into the challenges of what I know will be an active future in the service of this country.

[Translation]

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on behalf of my colleagues on this side of the house and on my own behalf, I am pleased to congratulate the Prime Minister on his recommendation to Her Majesty that the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc, soon to be the Right Honourable Roméo LeBlanc, be named to the high office of Governor General, and our former colleague on accepting that responsibility, which is not as easy to shoulder as some would have us believe.

[English]

It surely is no coincidence that of the eight Canadian-born Governors General, five have acceded to the position after lengthy parliamentary experience. I refer to Roland Michener, Edward Schreyer, Jeanne Sauvé, Ray Hnatyshyn, and now Roméo LeBlanc.

There is no higher honour for a Canadian than to serve his country through the electoral process, at whatever level. The experience gained as a member of an elected body is unique and invaluable, giving one insights and understanding of the country which cannot be obtained anywhere else, at least to such a degree. That prime ministers of the day have given great weight to such qualifications in assessing candidates is commendable.

Roméo LeBlanc has spent 18 years in the Parliament of Canada. This appointment is another tribute to the parliamentary system, which can now claim five of its alumni as residents of Rideau Hall.

Even the most modest eventually get caught up in the office of Governor General. It is inevitable; after all, since the person in that position is the representative of the sovereign in Canada. The proper forms of address are "Right Honourable" and "Excellency". After a time, a royal hue can envelop the titular, but in Roméo LeBlanc's case, one trusts, it will not be so pronounced that he will on occasion, rare as it may be, decide not to send a representative here, but to confer Royal Assent himself.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Even if some honourable senators have already mentioned it, I wish also to point out that our former Speaker and his successor both come from a French background outside Quebec. Today is not the time to review the history of French minorities in Canada, but it is surely quite in order to see in these appointments an acknowledgement not only of the merits of the appointees but also of their communities which, in spite of the many prejudices that plague them, continue to exert their influence with an exemplary determination and tenacity.

[English]

It is now assumed, and even expected, that while one person accedes to a role in public life, it takes two to make it a success. The Governor General Designate is newly married, and I have no doubt that Diana Fowler's charm and personality will contribute immeasurably to the success of the carrying out of her husband's responsibilities.

Our former colleague shall return to this chamber to open the next Parliament. By then, the last vestiges of politics will have hopefully been drained from his vice-regal system — a purging begun and well underway in his short and, we trust, happy days as our Speaker. He will, by then, be well-immersed in the multitudinous duties of his new position and its grand goal of helping to preserve a united Canada. We wish him and his wife well.

[Translation]

Hon. Louis J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, this is the first time I have had an opportunity to rise in the Senate since these very welcome appointments were made.

First of all, I would like to express my admiration for the new Speaker of the Senate, the Honourable Gildas Molgat, whom I first met in the 'sixties when he was Leader of the Opposition in Manitoba and I was Premier of New Brunswick. I remember that in his office in Winnipeg, we had what was to be the first of many friendly conversations.

When I was appointed to the Senate, one of the first people I met in the corridors was Gildas Molgat. At the time, he told me that in the Senate, you could work 24 hours a day but no one will force you. I always remembered that. I want to congratulate our new Speaker and wish him the very best in his new capacity.

Of course, as an Acadian I was delighted with another appointment made by the federal government. Yesterday it was confirmed that our friend and colleague Roméo LeBlanc would be the next Governor General of Canada. I was not only delighted, I was also very moved.

It was said in the newspapers and all the media, and the two leaders in the Senate said so again, that this was the first time an Acadian, a representative of a French-speaking minority outside Quebec, had been appointed to this august position. It is the highest honour that can be bestowed on a Canadian. It is indeed the highest honour, and today I can say that all senators, all Acadians without exception, and in fact Canadians across the country are delighted with this appointment.

I met Roméo LeBlanc when I was at college. Actually, we were not at the same college. He was editor-in-chief of the newspaper or magazine put out by Saint Joseph's College in Memramcook. I was editor-in-chief of our newspaper at the college run by the Eudist Fathers in Bathurst, the Sacred Heart's College. We corresponded by mail and exchanged articles for publication in our respective newspapers or magazines. At the time, the postage was three cents, and that has certainly changed. After that, we went our separate ways until he became Mr. Pearson's press secretary. I was Premier, and we were frequently in touch, which was also the case later on when he was Prime Minister Trudeau's press secretary. Later, as a minister in two different departments, this contact continued on an even more frequent basis. Of course I could talk, as others have done, about the dignity, integrity and competence of the man we knew so well. I am reluctant to do so, because everyone has already mentioned these aspects.

I must say I am thrilled by this appointment, but I also think it is too bad that some editorial writers are saying that anyone who was a member of the government in our democratic system should be forever disqualified from becoming the head of any government agency, from becoming Lieutenant Governor or Governor General. I do not know where they get this idea, which does not make sense. Why should the fact that a person has the qualifications for becoming a minister disqualify him from appointments to other positions? I have always found this puzzling, and often found it insulting. Should a Prime Minister tell a future minister: You have all the qualifications for being the minister of a department but I warn you, if you agree, according to some journalists you will be disqualified from important appointments after your political career in a democratic system, which is supposed to be practically the best in the world?

I am sorry to have to raise this matter. I am not naming names. I am not saying which newspaper or which journalist. I am just sorry that the decision to appoint Roméo LeBlanc did not receive unanimous approval. Of course, no decision is ever approved unanimously, let us face it. There is as much unanimity as I have seen in the past few years. As a senator, I look forward to seeing former senator and former Speaker of the Senate Roméo LeBlanc return to read his first Speech from the Throne.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, the appointment of the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc as Governor General of Canada is certainly the highlight of the International Acadians' Year. It also marks, in a way, the revenge of history. Roméo LeBlanc is a descendant of those people who were deported in 1755. I am not raising this to add fuel to the flames. He himself would be the last one to do so. Nevertheless, it must be recognized that history sometimes plays tricks on us. Roméo LeBlanc is the son of Philias and Lucie LeBlanc. I know personally that he has always had deep admiration for his father and mother, his family, his brothers and sisters. There is no doubt that the honour bestowed on him extends to the great LeBlanc family, whose members alone account for a quarter of all Acadians.

We join Roméo's wife, children and family in welcoming his appointment. Although I am not Acadian myself, I, too, am happy for all Acadians and certainly for all New Brunswickers who have seen one of theirs named to one of the highest political posts in the country. It was pointed out earlier that the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc is a French Canadian from outside Quebec. I think he would be the last one to define himself in relation to Quebec. I, for one, would not do so. This does not mean that we oppose the notion of Quebec or Quebecers' aspirations. Acadians came to this country before Quebecers. Port Royal existed before Quebec City was founded. It is something that should be remembered.

Roméo LeBlanc, an Acadian, a New Brunswicker, a Canadian through and through, certainly has what it takes to represent the interests of all Canadians with dignity. I know personally how much he cares about Canada's first people, the Indians and Inuit. I think that his personal qualities have shown his ability to embody the ambitions of all Canadians in the symbolic post of Governor General.

The Leader of the Government reminded us earlier that Senator Roméo LeBlanc used to teach in Drummond, New Brunswick. Who in this chamber had heard about Drummond before? It is my wife's parish. She attended the school where the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc used to teach. She then became a teacher at this school before I took her away from her mother's house.

Honourable senators, this chamber must congratulate itself for this appointment. It is not the first time that senators have been called upon to serve their country; senators who made us proud in every respect. I am confident that Roméo LeBlanc will be a great credit to all members of the Senate and to all Canadians.

[English]

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, in the last few days we have indeed seen events in the Senate of Canada that have been quite remarkable. We have been proud and pleased to hear of the elevation of two outstanding Canadians, Senators LeBlanc and Molgat, to positions which reflect their considerable capacities and lengthy careers in public service.

As I reflected on the appointments, I thought there had to be a good deal of symbolism at work here. I believe it was Bruce Hutcheson who once said so succinctly that Canada is an unfinished struggle. In effect, it is a daily act of will which keeps us together, which makes us grow, which makes us prosper. This act of will takes place in the hearts and minds of Canadians themselves.

We all know that Canada is a constant act of construction and reconstruction, of repairing and cementing and consolidating. It is the participatory energy of our peoples which is the glue of this very special, multicultural federalism.

The appointments of Senator LeBlanc as Governor General Designate, and Senator Molgat as Speaker of the Senate, remind us of some very important lessons in this unfinished struggle; lessons that have been learned first in the regions of this country.

Senator LeBlanc grew up understanding the first principles of tolerance and fairness, which are really the first principles of federalism. He grew up, as has been mentioned, in a small New Brunswick community conceived in tragedy, a community which, over time, was able to reconcile a passionate commitment to a rich tradition with the overriding understanding that no society remains strong in isolation from others.

Senator LeBlanc has been a true champion of the little people, a champion of their rights, a champion of his region, indeed all the regions of the country and, as a result, a true champion of Canada.

I believe Senator Molgat, our Speaker, would agree that Manitobans as well have learned the first principles of living together in a federation from their regional experience. In many ways, Manitoba is a microcosm of the world community, a special laboratory of social reform where citizens from across the planet — the French, the Ukrainians, the British, the Icelandic peoples, the Mennonites and many other groups — met first with the distinctive experiences of the aboriginal peoples. They all struggled with questions of language and cultural identity, and they engineered through every daily experience the kinds of bridges which keep us united as a family, and as a country.

Senator Molgat is to the manner born. It is almost as if he had been preparing for this position all his life. He has been my close friend, my advisor, my colleague, my fellow warrior. In fact, he preceded me as president of the Liberal Party of Canada. But in all of this, while he has demonstrated such outstanding qualities of leadership, there was one characteristic which shone through above and beyond all the others, and that was, and continues to be, his unequivocal commitment to fairness.

When we look at the careers of these two distinguished senators, we must remember, honourable senators, that they mastered the first principles of our national experiment: tolerance, along with participatory energy in the legislative assemblies and parliaments of Canada but, of most importance, in the streets, in the schools, and in the small towns of the regions of this country. They became great leaders on the national stage because they learned those lessons so well.

I want to add my congratulations to the Prime Minister on his choices and, indeed, on the choices he has made in sending us such people of quality as Senators Jean-Louis Roux, Lise Bacon, Sharon Carstairs and Landon Pearson, as well as the most recent nominees, Jean-Robert Gauthier and John Bryden.

I believe that the Prime Minister is sending us all an important signal here. All these people have worked tirelessly to promote the self-worth of ordinary Canadians, believing, as the Prime Minister reminds us constantly, that individual dignity is the engine of all we will accomplish together as a nation.

Hon. Gerald R. Ottenheimer: Honourable senators, allow me to say that there is nothing that other honourable senators have said with which I do not agree. However, I particularly agree with the words of Senator Robichaud, and the point which he made so forcefully: The day that we in Canada accept the heresy that having participated in political life is a disqualification for other high office will be a sad day for the country.

The Government Leader in the Senate and others have indicated the important "firsts" that are fulfilled by Senator LeBlanc's nomination as Governor General. Others have outlined his varied and distinguished career in education and journalism, in unelected political activity in the Prime Minister's office, as a member of the House of Commons, as a senator and as Speaker of the Senate.

There are many in this chamber who have known him longer and, I am sure, know him better than I do. However, during the past year I have had the opportunity to work with him and to be associated with him. I have come to know him on a personal basis, in the relationship that develops with working together. He is certainly a person with whom it is a pleasure to be associated. He has, as I am sure you all know, a disarming, sometimes irreverent sense of humour. He is considerate and thoughtful of others. I cannot speak for his staff or those who worked with him in that capacity, but I am sure that he would have generated among them a great sense of loyalty. I think that that is the case because he is the kind of person who engenders that type of consideration. Loyalty of every kind is merited, not inherited, and it does not come with a position. Deference and many other things do, but real loyalty is usually earned.

• (1410)

Roméo LeBlanc is obviously a person of judgment, maturity and common sense. He is the kind of person whose attitude and way of dealing with people will be affected in no way by the pomp of high office. He is the kind of person with whom people are comfortable, probably because he appears to be so comfortable with himself. I would characterize his outlook, his attitude and his values as those of a humanist. He has the kinds of qualities and attitudes that will serve him well in his new and responsible position.

I am pleased to have had this opportunity to add my few words to those of others who have known him longer, and to wish him and his wife happiness and success in their new and challenging position.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I for one know that all senators are grateful for the eloquent statements made by the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the distinguished Leader of the Opposition in the Senate on the occasion of the appointment of one of our colleagues to the high position of Governor General.

Others have spoken eloquently about this singularly important and relevant appointment. As a westerner, I am pleased that we have a Governor General from the Atlantic provinces. I am pleased, not only because the new Governor General is admirably equipped for his responsibility but also because he is of Acadian heritage — a community that has helped build this nation from coast to coast.

Only the impossibly mean-minded and those with little comprehension of the parliamentary system would criticize such an appropriate appointment. The new Governor General has an understanding of Canada and all its parts from coast to coast. I was sworn into cabinet on the very same day as Roméo LeBlanc. I worked with him in cabinet. He has an understanding of this nation. He has compassion. He is caring and moderate, and he strives to see all viewpoints of every question. All of us have found him to be that way during our work with him in this chamber.

The new Governor General understands Canada from sea to sea to sea. This is a wonderful appointment.

All of us are pleased, as well, with the appointment of our new Speaker of the Senate. I knew Senator Molgat well before either of us came to this chamber. I remember joining with him in efforts to have the western viewpoint better understood in Ottawa, and he has been a fair and bonnie fighter in that role and in all of his activities. But now that he will be called upon to exercise total objectivity — which he will — we can only wish him well in his new responsibilities. We have seen him in the Chair before working on behalf of us all. We can be sure that all his decisions will be fair. He will be an outstanding Speaker in this chamber.

For many reasons this has been a very good week for the Senate. One of our own will be the next Governor General — an outstanding appointment — and we have a new Speaker who will more than meet the requirements of his position and maintain the relevancy of the Senate and our parliamentary system.

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare: Honourable senators, I wish to join my colleagues in the Senate in paying tribute to the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc on his appointment as Governor General of Canada. As a New Brunswicker and member of the Beauséjour riding, it is only fitting that I bring greetings from our constituency.

It is an honour to New Brunswickers and Maritimers as a whole to have an outstanding member of our community appointed to this position, as was eloquently put by the former premier of the Province of New Brunswick. Personally, I feel that Roméo will bring honesty, integrity and a great deal of experience to the office.

How many honourable senators know that Rideau Hall has a skating rink and a curling rink in its backyard? A few years ago my husband and I were invited to Rideau Hall at the behest of Ed Schreyer and his wife Lily. It seems that a former Governor General of Canada, Lord Elgin, was "stoned" out of the country. There is presently a Lord and Lady Elgin in Scotland who are friends of ours. They decided that they would like to "throw stones back" and challenged the Governor General of Canada to a curling game at Rideau Hall. My husband and I were asked to join the Schreyers in this famous match of curling at Rideau Hall.

Upon looking through Roméo's portfolio, I could find no indication that he has taken up the game of curling, but I hope that at some time in the future he will find an occasion to invite us all to join him and his charming wife so that we may pay our tributes to them.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate our former colleague, the former Speaker of this house, on his appointment as Governor General of Canada.

The Honourable Roméo LeBlanc has had a tremendous career in Canadian politics. Fluent in both official languages, he is, as many have already mentioned, the first Acadian to hold the highest office in the land. The honour will reflect on all Acadians, but all francophones and indeed all Canadians are pleased with this appointment. It proves that the French fact is alive and well in our country, and not limited to Quebec.

This appointment also shows how, within the federal system, New Brunswick was able to become a great bilingual society. In our parliamentary system, the office of Governor General carries with it a number of prerogatives that should not be underestimated.

I congratulate the Prime Minister of Canada for selecting such a worthy person, a person who has served all Canadians for a good part of his life. In the present political situation this choice is of great significance.

I also take this opportunity, honourable senators, to congratulate Senator Molgat on his appointment to the Chair. No doubt, his long experience in the Senate will prove extremely useful in controlling debate in the Upper House and in performing his noble duties.

[English]

• (1420)

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, first, I wish to congratulate our new Speaker, whom I know as a distinguished member of the Senate, and someone I have known for many years. I know he will do the Senate proud in his new position as Speaker.

Roméo LeBlanc, who is an old, personal friend of mine, and I were both elected to the House of Commons in 1972. His appointment as Governor General of Canada is a marvellous one. I am only sorry that he will be leaving us, because he was such a good senator.

Remarks attributed to Mr. Manning of the other place, as reported in the newspapers, show how little that gentleman knows about Roméo LeBlanc. For if he knew Roméo LeBlanc, he would not have made such foolish observations about the distinguished gentleman. I think I am speaking for both sides of this house when I say that we know what a distinguished and fair-minded man Roméo LeBlanc is. We have no doubt that he will be a great credit to all Canadians as representative of the Crown in Canada.

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I rise to add my remarks to those of other honourable senators in paying tribute to our former colleague and former Speaker, the Honourable Senator Roméo LeBlanc.

Prior to making my tribute, I should like to congratulate Senator Molgat on his appointment as our new Speaker. I wish him well in his new endeavours.

Much has been said about Senator LeBlanc. However much has been said, it is still not enough, for his contribution to Canada has been outstanding and his achievements are numerous.

The office of Governor General, or viceroy, is the highest office in Canada. It is the office of the Queen's representative; that is, the sovereign's own representative. It is one that few will ever hold.

That "Freedom Wears a Crown" is part of the unique social and constitutional history of Canada, and part of Canada's unique political response to its social needs and problems. That Canada is a constitutional monarchy is a fact of Canada's unique response to Canada's own peculiar history. This constitutional monarchy has served to make Canada one of the finest countries in the world, and one of which we are proud.

Last summer, in the province of New Brunswick, some 3,000 persons of Acadian descent from all over Canada and the United States of America whose common family name is LeBlanc, gathered to celebrate their Acadian experience. They celebrated their Acadian heritage. This celebration was testimony to their defeats, to their triumphs, and to their very survival as a people. The survival of the Acadian people is tribute to that robustness and that quality of endurance which lives in the human breast. The endurance of the Acadian people has been extraordinary.

One of the greatest moments in Acadian history, and in Canada's history, was the event which occurred yesterday at Buckingham Palace. Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth, has called on Senator Roméo LeBlanc, a distinguished Acadian and a distinguished French Canadian, to be her own representative in Canada. By this act, Her Majesty and the Prime Minister of Canada have made a momentous statement. I believe this statement is best articulated in the words of the poet Horace, who said:

> I have reared a monument more enduring than brass.

The appointment of Senator LeBlanc as Governor General is a credit to himself, to his family, to the Acadian people, to Atlantic Canada and, last but not least, a credit to the Senate of Canada itself.

I congratulate His Excellency Roméo LeBlanc on this honour. I praise Her Majesty's judgment and I praise the Prime Minister's judgment. I wish His Excellency and his wife well in their new and elevated office. I know that many in this country, and all in this chamber, join me in wishing them both God's blessing on their work and on their stay at Rideau Hall.

Hon. Gerry St. Germain: Honourable senators, first, I should like to pay tribute to the Prime Minister of Canada by complimenting him on two excellent appointments. In appointing Senator Roméo LeBlanc the twenty-fifth Governor General of Canada, I believe he has filled a void that existed in our history. Thus, I should like to pay a special tribute to Senator Roméo LeBlanc, his wife and family, and congratulate them on this great appointment.

Your Honour, last night, I spoke to a lady named Madam Robidoux from St. Boniface.

[Translation]

She is the wife of Lucien Robidoux, one of your strongest supporters in past years.

[English]

Honourable senators, as you know, my uncle was a great Liberal, and a great supporter of yours. My aunt, an anglophone, was a great supporter of my side. However, she obeyed her husband in the political sphere. She wanted me to make mention today of how proud she is of the fact that the Prime Minister has chosen you, Your Honour, as Speaker of the Senate. This appointment reinforces what Canada is all about.

[Translation]

If you were born and raised in a place like L'Anse-aux-Cormiers in New Brunswick, Ste-Rose-du-Lac or Saint-François-Xavier in Manitoba, you have a chance of making it to the Senate and becoming Speaker of this house and then Governor General.

[English]

These appointments allow young boys and girls in the communities that I have just mentioned — and boys and girls in all the communities across this country — to dream. It allows them to aspire to the greatest offices in the land. The appointment of Roméo LeBlanc to the position of Governor General, and you, Senator Molgat, to the position of Speaker of the Senate reinforces that inspiration. Both of you gentlemen epitomize decency, loyalty, fairness and, most of all, integrity in Canadian politics. I wish you both well. May God bless you in your newly assigned duties.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, in such a situation, the person who speaks last has to repeat the kind words spoken by others. The only way that my remarks will be original is that they will be brief.

Like all my colleagues, I am pleased that our Speaker has been appointed the next Governor General of Canada, partly because he is an Acadian. This is a striking way to remind us that not all French-speaking Canadians are Quebecers, and that Canada is fortunate to have many francophones in all the provinces and territories of our country, as Senator Lynch-Staunton, Senator Robichaud and others have pointed out.

To further emphasize this point, the Prime Minister had the excellent idea on the same occasion of replacing Senator LeBlanc with a Franco-Manitoban whose merits we all recognize.

But we are pleased with the appointment of the next Governor General not only because he is an Acadian, of course. The main reason is that he is a man of character and great personal qualities, with a good sense of humour, a perfect gentleman, a unifier whom Canadians will greatly need to make it through difficult times.

I am even a little prouder to be a Canadian today because the head of state will be an Acadian with great qualities of heart and mind, and the fourth-ranking person, our new Speaker, is a Franco-Manitoban who enjoys such prestige and has such warmth.

[English]

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, one of the most marvellous things about these two appointments is that not only are both of the appointees bright, honest, distinguished, able, and great achievers, but they are also lovable. No one has said it, but they are. Especially lovable is this man, who is now our Speaker. We will miss him.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, the two appointments we are celebrating today are a reminder to me of the very history of Canada.

What I see in you, Your Honour — I told you in my letter yesterday — and what I see in Roméo LeBlanc, is an immense page of what is often not known in Canada. My hope for Roméo LeBlanc — and I want to be understood clearly — is that he can restore unity to what I call the great French Canadian people.

Their greatness is obvious to me and yet, very often, there have been attempts to divide us. There have been internal divisions as well, between those who want to be called Quebecers without further qualification, others who want to be called francophones outside Quebec, a strange appellation, and others who prefer to be called Acadians, when together what we are is this great French Canadian people.

I have learned a great deal in the 30 years that I have spent in the Senate and at the University of Ottawa. At the University of Ottawa, from Yvon Labrie, for example, who hails from a town in New Brunswick, from my friends from Northern Ontario, from Senator Robichaud when I was a student, and from Senators Thériault and LeBlanc and yourself.

I learned so many things that I wonder how we can so quickly forget. What I see, and what I fervently hope for — and I think we will succeed — is that Roméo LeBlanc will find a way to restore the unity of the French Canadian people. Let there be no misunderstanding: This is not a question of marrow-minded nationalism.

I hope Roméo LeBlanc will come to Quebec to tell us about this great Acadian pride, about those forgotten people — and I am saying this to Senator Thériault with whom I occasionally have great conversations on that subject — about those people forgotten and often scorned by history and also by we Quebecers who are a majority of French Canadians. I hope he will come to talk about these people who have survived to this day, like those who are called francophones outside Quebec, without too much assistance or, indeed support, on the part of French Canadians from Quebec.

I have so often heard about Quebecers saying to France and to the French people that we have survived here from 1760 to 1960 without their support or their assistance. I turn around and what do I hear? The same remarks coming from friends outside Quebec who are saying: We have survived but we owe nothing to you who call yourselves Quebecers — I personally prefer the term French Canadians from Quebec. That is how, with such divisions and subdivisions, our nation could very well disappear.

I think that Canada would lose a lot if these people who contributed to the building of this country, people who, over the course of history, survived proudly and who, like myself, like Roméo, like yourself, like Senator Comeau and all the honourable senators I have mentioned, as well as the one who may be joining us tomorrow, Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier, want to affirm, not their superiority over others, but who they are themselves.

I look at the honourable senators and I understand their pride. I can understand their commitment to their religion and their culture, but I cannot understand that, in turn, they do not understand that we may have a similar commitment.

I look at Senator Desmarais. I studied at the University of Ottawa with his brother. They are from Sudbury, and the people up there are proud people with a great spirit of survival, who have survived without the support and, in many cases, without any assistance from this Quebec majority.

How can we ensure that this country will remain a vibrant country in which every one of us puts his or her best foot forward for the common good? First, by building our own unity. I think that with his explanations, his patience, his kindness, his humanity, Roméo LeBlanc will be able to give that back to all of those who have forgotten their own history.

I applaud this appointment because, Your Honour, by this appointment and your own, we will be able to make this country a more vibrant one.

What is the use of senators travelling around the world — I, for one, will be travelling to Albania two weeks from now, at the request of the Americans, to speak on parliamentary government and the respect of minorities — if, on the home front, we are not able to rebuild the great Canadian unity, all the while showing respect and consideration for the differences and dissimilarities that make Canada such a respected country? That is what I cannot understand, nor accept.

I will turn 60 next week, and I continue to be as vibrant as Senator Robichaud was at the time when I worked on his first election campaign, in 1960. What a great speaker! I continue to believe in this country, which can be an example to the rest of mankind. But we must start setting this example here, in the Senate, because we have a responsibility, an almost terrifying responsibility, on our shoulders. The future of this country may well depend on us. Therefore, it is worth having a heart-to-heart talk, today in this spirit of understanding.

I will not participate in the last debate on the motion introduced by a senator on the contradictions of Quebec nationalism. I was ready to do so, but in a spirit of reconciliation I will not proceed. Let bygones be bygones. Each of us has to do his or her bit. The appointment of Roméo LeBlanc, your own appointment, Your Honour, and the appointment of Jean-Robert who will be here tomorrow or the day after, three vibrant French Canadians from different provinces, fill me with hope. For French Canadians and Acadians to survive in this country, they need some strong anchoring point somewhere.

This is the best understanding of what Quebec should be. It has to be strong to protect a culture and a language which will shine on French-speaking minorities throughout the country. I do not have a "minority" mentality. Minority simply means "fewer".

Your Honour, I apologize for taking so much time to express all the emotion and all the pride I experienced when I heard of these appointments. Once more, I wanted to voice my deep affection for this country, one of the best in the world, a country that can continue to preach to others and give them a ray of hope.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, since coming into the chamber, I have written a little note to the new Governor General. I thought I might read it to you:

> Dear Roméo,
>
> I am now sitting in the Senate, listening to the well-deserved tributes being offered to you by your former colleagues on your accession to the post of Governor General.
>
> Rather than adding to this rich feast of eloquence, I decided to make my extended and favourable comments where I thought they would do the most good, namely, to the press. Accordingly, I have spoken positively and supportively of your appointment to Julie van Dusen of the CBC, Joan Bryden of The Ottawa Citizen, and Jacques Poitras of the Saint John Telegraph-Journal. I shall continue to do so when the opportunity arises. I think you will approve of that course of action.
>
> Congratulations to you and your wife. Most important, I wish personal happiness and fulfilment to both of you as you take on this challenging task.
>
> Yours sincerely,
>
> Allan J. MacEachen.

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, one of the advantages, or disadvantages, of sitting on the back bench is that your turn to speak comes towards the end, by which time just about everything has been said. However, I cannot let this moment go by without making a few comments about my time working on the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration with our friend Roméo LeBlanc.

I first became friends with Roméo in the Prime Minister's office in 1969, where I spent three or four enjoyable years working with him. It was not until I came to the Senate about ten years ago that I had an opportunity to work with him again.

Those of you who were not here ten years ago would have difficulty recognizing the place. The changes that have occurred were as a result of the work that Roméo did on that committee. The research budgets that you all enjoy now are a result of his initiative. The general office expense budget which provides us with the tools of our trade are also there because of his work. Those of you who were here before that time had difficulty getting an adding machine, much less a computer or a second or third telephone line.

Travel arrangements were vastly different in those days. Those of you who must travel in the course of your duties should say a short prayer to Roméo every time you take a trip, because he improved our lot quite significantly in terms of how we get around the country.

Regarding office space, Roméo spent hours and hours working on these buildings. He was a former minister of Public Works, and the care and tending of these buildings was very important to him. However, on a more specific and personal level, he had the novel idea that senators should actually have an office adjacent to their secretaries, and he went about making that happen. Very few of you who were here ten years ago had offices adjacent to your secretaries.

Roméo was also very interested in the staff of the Senate. He worked hard during his time as committee chairman to modernize arrangements with the staff, and to bring us a professional staff with a professional outlook. Competitions for all positions were introduced. We had professional development and training, which was, again, a novel idea for the Senate.

We see in front of us here an operation called computer-assisted transcription, or CAT, which was introduced during Roméo LeBlanc's time. This system has vastly improved how our Hansard is produced. It has saved the Senate $300,000 per year since its introduction, and will continue to save those funds.

Roméo chaired the committee always with a spirit of compromise and consensus. I have difficulty recalling times when there were votes during his period as chairman. He managed our affairs with compassion and with sensitivity. I know we will all greatly miss him.

[Translation]

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I am proud to rise and honour two important persons whom I have known almost all my life and for whom I have deep admiration.

Your Honour, as Speaker of the Senate I hope you will always feel comfortable in your role. I know whom your personal qualities will allow you to take appropriate, wise and thoughtful decisions.

Honourable senators, I simply want to add my voice to that of all my colleagues who have said all that could be said about the new Governor General. When I meet him in the future, I will find it very hard to call him otherwise than by his first name, Roméo, a name I have been familiar with almost all my life.

I am happy to note that some senators have stressed that it is about time that Canadians acknowledge, and I would like the media to do the same, that someone who has been elected to serve his country, his region, his province or his town should not be excluded from other jobs.

There seems to be so much cynicism these days that every time a politician or an elected member is appointed by a Prime Minister, his party or the government, all the other qualities of the appointee are overlooked, and people claim that it is a patronage appointment.

I watched with interest as the previous Prime Minister appointed new senators over a 10-year period. Personally, I believe they were excellent choices and I always knew that they would do a good job.

Today, I want to point out two qualities of Roméo LeBlanc, the new Governor General. While at the helm of the fisheries department, he accomplished two great things: First, he was known as the fishermen's minister, across Canada, but in particular on both the east and the west coasts. Second, he pushed his government to make unilaterally an important decision, namely to extend the limits of our territorial waters to 200 miles, in the east and the west, and to give Canada jurisdiction over its coasts, a first in Canadian history.

Today, we are celebrating the appointments of two individuals I greatly admire: you, Your Honour, and Roméo LeBlanc as Governor General. I believe that the quality which is most obvious in both of them is their ability to speak both official languages.

Your Honour, I wish you all the happiness you deserve as Speaker of the Senate. Also, I wish Roméo all the happiness which is due to him on his appointment as Governor General.

I thank you, Senator MacEachen. I will translate the letter you wrote to Roméo, change the names of the journalists who are not the same ones to whom I spoke, and sign my name.

[English]

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of my colleagues from both sides of the house in paying tribute to Senator LeBlanc.

As has been said, he has distinguished himself in many fields of endeavour — as a professor, a journalist and in the political life of our country. He will be remembered in my Province of Newfoundland for his efforts on behalf of the fishermen. To Roméo and his wife Diana, I express my sincere best wishes for the future.

While I am on my feet, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate my good friend and colleague Senator Molgat on his elevation to the position of Speaker of the Senate. I first met Gil in the City of Winnipeg many years ago. I was accompanying then Premier Smallwood of Newfoundland on a speaking engagement. When Premier Smallwood began to speak, saying that he had millions for this, millions for that and millions for the other thing, poor Gil shuddered at the thought of all these millions.

Gil, to you and Allison my very best wishes for the future. I will close with a Newfoundland saying, "Long may your big jib draw." For the uninitiated, that means long life, health and happiness.

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I wish to add my words of congratulation to those paid to Roméo LeBlanc on his appointment to the highest office of the land. I also congratulate the Prime Minister for his brilliant choice.

I have known Roméo LeBlanc for 30 years. To me, Roméo LeBlanc is a person of the people. In his new position, I am sure that he will remain that same person. He is a person without pretensions, a person of great common sense and deep wisdom, a person who will never forget his roots while touching the stars.

May I extend to him, his wife and his family best wishes and God speed. In the days and years ahead, he will need it, and Canada will need it more.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO MEET DURING SITTINGS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I give notice that at the next sitting of the Senate I shall move:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at three thirty o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesday, November 29, and on Tuesday, December 6, 1994, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

QUESTION PERIOD

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on November 15, Senator Lynch-Staunton said that there were ten questions outstanding, dating back to late spring and early summer. To clarify the record, the number of questions awaiting an answer is six. There are three questions from Senator Doyle which have to do with construction activities within the parliamentary precincts. Senator Lynch-Staunton asked a question concerning Canada's participation in the space station. An answer to that question was provided, but Senator Lynch-Staunton believed it was incomplete. Further information has been requested.

Senator Gustafson asked a question concerning the free trade agreement and grain trade. An answer was provided on the grain trade component but not on the FTA component. Thus, a follow-up has been requested.

Finally, there was a question asked by Senator Comeau on the proposed peace-keeping training centre. Unfortunately, this one fell through the cracks. We will endeavour to get an answer to it.

Of these six delayed answers, I would like to deal with three of them immediately by tabling the response to Senator Doyle's three questions. However, it is a somewhat lengthy answer and, in the interest of completeness, it contains an extract from the in camera minutes of a meeting of the Subcommittee on Agendas and Procedure of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration held on March 24, 1994.

Senators Hastings and Di Nino, the Chairman and Deputy Chairman respectively of that committee, have agreed formally to the public release of this short extract from the in camera minutes. Technically, under our rules, that is probably sufficient for me to proceed, but since it is a somewhat unusual procedure, I am seeking leave of the Senate to include this in camera extract in the answers.

In seeking leave, I wish to emphasize two points: First, without this extract, the answer being tabled would be incomplete and, in my view, insufficient to properly respond to Senator Doyle's questions. Second, I have spoken to Senators Hastings and Di Nino. They looked at the request, found no difficulties with it and approved it on behalf of the Internal Economy Committee.

• (1500)

Honourable senators, it is on that basis that I beg leave.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I should now like to table delayed answers to the Honourable Senator Doyle's questions of March 15, April 19, and May 12, 1994.

While I am on my feet, I should like to also table a delayed answer to Senator Tkachuk's question of October 25, 1994.

PUBLIC WORKS

RENOVATION OF EAST BLOCK— SENATE INPUT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Richard J. Doyle on March 15, 1994)

> Parliament Hill is administered in a coordinate fashion, with the cooperation of the three interested parties.
>
> The Government speaks for Her Majesty in right of Canada, as owner of the buildings and grounds and as the occupant of the grounds. It has the overall responsibility for maintenance of the buildings and for capital projects.
>
> The Senate and House of Commons, each as the occupant of its precincts, speak for themselves and together speak for the Library of Parliament.
>
> By virtue of section 19.3 of the Parliament of Canada Act, Parliament has confined to statute the Senate practice of, subject to its own rules, direction and control, confiding the administration of its precincts to the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. Section 19.3 of the Parliament of Canada Act provides:

19.3 Subject to subsection 19.1(4), the Committee may act on all financial and administrative matters respecting

(a) the Senate, its premises, its services and its staff; and

(b) the members of the Senate.

On the Government side, several departments and agencies play a role in managing and providing services on Parliament Hill. These include Treasury Board, the Department of Public Works, the R.C.M.P. and the National Capital Commission.

Paragraph 9(1)(g) of the Public Works Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. P-38, provides in part as follows:

9. (1) The Minister has the management, charge and direction of the following properties belonging to Canada ... :

(g) all such portions of the property known as the Ordnance Property as were transferred to the Government of the former Province of Canada or to the Government of Canada by the Government of the United Kingdom, and afterwards placed under the management, charge and direction of the Department;

The land on which Parliament sits was known in Pre-Confederation times as the Ordnance Property. It was transferred to Canada, as part of the Confederation pact, by virtue of section 108 and the Third Schedule of the Constitution Act, 1867.

Paragraph 9(1)(f) of the Public Works Act provides:

9. (1) The Minister has the management, charge and direction of ... the following services:

(f) the heating, maintenance and keeping in repair of the Government buildings and any alteration requisite therein, and the supplying of furniture and fittings or repairs to those buildings;

A further statutory provision relevant to the Government Administration of Parliament Hill is section 7 of the Financial Administration Act. Paragraph 7(1)(c) provides:

7. (1) The Treasury Board may act for the Queen's Privy Council for Canada on all matters relating to

(c) financial management, including estimates, expenditures, financial commitments, accounts, fees or charges for the provision of services or the use of facilities, rentals, licences, leases, revenues from the disposition of property...

These statutes gave authority to both Treasury Board and to the Department of Public Works to proceed with the development of the Long Term Construction Project for Parliament Hill.

The Long Term Construction Project flows from a number of early studies, including the 1976 Abbott Commission Report, which found that "Parliament requires a thorough upgrading of facilities". But it was not until September, 1988, that Treasury Board directed Public Works to prepare an overall strategy for the Parliamentary Precincts.

The first draft of the new plan was prepared in the spring of 1990. Late in 1991, it was brought to the attention of the Honourable Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, Chair of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. On December 5, 1991, Senator Lavoie-Roux wrote to Mr. Hank Van Der Linde, of the Department of Public Works, in the following terms:

"I am writing to say that after consulting its officials and the members of its Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, the Senate of Canada is prepared to support your plan.

We are pleased that your organization has recognized the Senate's importance and that its needs are given equitable consideration in your strategy.

Thank you for your cooperation. Rest assured that we will do everything in our power to assist in the implementation of the plan." (Translation)

Several days later, at its meeting of December 12, 1991, the Internal Economy Committee discussed the proposed plan. The accommodation consultants for the Senate, Messrs. Perrier and Currie, presented to committee members a detailed report in support of the Public Works strategy. The Minutes of Proceedings of the meeting contain the following entry:

"6. The Committee considered the proposed strategy for Parliamentary Precinct Construction.

The Chairman informed members that approval had been given to the strategy of the Department of Public Works for the whole of Parliament Hill. A letter had been sent to them saying that the Senate is in agreement with what they are recommending and is waiting for the reply from Public Works which would be going to Treasury Board."

(Proceedings of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, Issue No. 4, December 12, 1991, p.4:4)

The Minutes of the December 12 meeting also note that, with respect to the renovation of the 1910 Wing of the East Block, "the Department of Public Works does not have the necessary funds to go ahead with the project at this time. Although it is a priority, it will only proceed when Treasury Board decides to grant the necessary funds."

On September 17, 1992, Public Works received approval in principle for the Long Term Construction Project, but final approval for specific projects was still not forthcoming.

In December of 1992, the Auditor General released his Report to the Senate and House of Commons on Matters of Joint Interest. One matter of joint interest was the upkeep of the Parliament Buildings. In his report, the Auditor General described how "urgently needed repairs and development of the Parliament Buildings" were not proceeding. In his words:

> "Most of the necessary major repairs and renovations identified in the 1970s and 80s have not yet been undertaken. One example is the 1910 Wing of the East Block. Still awaiting renovation, most of this wing has been unoccupied by parliamentarians for the last five years. In the meantime, only some of the most urgent health and safety related work such as asbestos abatement has been undertaken."

Several months later, on May 26, 1993, Effective Project Approval for the renovation of the 1910 Wing of the East Block and for the construction of a Committee Room in Centre Block was given.

PRECINCTS OF PARLIAMENT

PROPOSED RENOVATIONS TO EAST AND CENTRE BLOCKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Richard J. Doyle on April 19, 1994)

Before construction began, the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration met on March 24, 1994 to consider the workplan proposed by Public Works. Mr. Glenn Duncan, Director of the Parliamentary Precinct Directorate of Public Works and Government Services Canada, stated to senators:

> "The 1910 Wing of the East Block is in violation of the fire code. It is in violation of the electrical code. It has asbestos embedded in its walls, which is also a problem. In addition, the building envelope — that is, the windows, the stonework and the roof structure — is in a badly deteriorated state, and we have significant water infiltration into that wing of the building.
>
> As the accountable officer, I have indicated to my minister, who heads the department that is responsible for these facilities, that if we do not repair, then I will recommend that we close and seal this particular wing of the building. We estimate right now that the cost of doing that would be about $5 million."

The reaction of senators is reflected in the minutes of that meeting, the relevant portion of which reads as follows:

> "There was also consensus among senators that the Parliament Buildings are not being adequately maintained and that, with health and safety risks as well as risks to the buildings themselves, it was clear that reconstruction activities must proceed.
>
> It was agreed that your Subcommittee concurs in the recommendation of Public Works and Government Services Canada for the use of office space in the 1910 Wing of the East Block."

The Auditor General, at p. 17 of his 1992 Report, describes the Parliament Buildings as "unique heritage assets of national significance". Treasury Board, Public Works and the Senate have all shown their concern by approving the Long Term Construction Project, designed to preserve those heritage assets. As far as the East Block is concerned, further delay was no longer a viable option — the closure of the entire 1910 Wing was the only alternative.

PROPOSED RENOVATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Richard J. Doyle on May 12, 1994)

In conclusion, in answer to Senator Doyle's question concerning the right of the Senate and of individual senators to have a voice in the preservation and development of Parliament Hill and the Senate precincts, the Government affirms these rights. It notes that the Senate, through its Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, has been kept fully informed throughout all stages of the development and implementation of the Long Term Construction Project. Again, it notes that the Senate, through its Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, has approved the Long Term Construction Project both on December 12, 1991, and on March 24, 1994.

Furthermore, senators have always had the opportunity to give their views on this matter through debate held under an Inquiry. During the years that the Long Term Construction Project was under discussion and development, any senator could have initiated such a debate.

PARKS CANADA

USER FEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. David Tkachuk on October 25, 1994)

I am pleased to inform the Senate that extensive consultation has taken place across Canada to obtain Canadians' views on services being provided. More than 20,000 Canadians participated in the first phase of these consultations.

Opportunities have been made for people to express their views and reactions to proposed fee changes since August, 1994. For instance, in Riding Mountain, information packages have been distributed door to door, meetings have been held with advisory councils, the public, the Chamber of Commerce and other stakeholders.

Representatives of Prince Albert National Park have also met with residents, the public, advisory councils, the Chamber of Commerce and have distributed newsletters and requested feedback via mail-ins.

The four mountain parks which include Banff, Jasper, Yoho and Kootenay, as well as Waterton Park, have also been seeking the views of visitors on user fees and proposed changes. Exit surveys and mail-in forms have been some of the sources of obtaining public views.

These consultations have been undertaken throughout the summer and the first phase is now complete.

The Minister of Canadian Heritage, Michel Dupuy, announced the results of these consultations on November 14, 1994. The three main results of the consultations are:

-Canadians generally supported Parks Canada's proposals for increased fees as long as they are fair and affordable and as long as revenues from fees are retained to support operations.

-Parks Canada must ensure that operations are as efficient as possible.

-Canadians requested further opportunity for consultations at specific locations.

In response to the consultations exercise, the Minister has directed Parks Canada to complete a second phase of consultations on user fees as required at specific locations. This second phase of consultations will be completed by December 31, 1994.

It is intended that during this second phase, specific recommendations arising from the first phase of consultations will be discussed and final recommendations developed early in the new year. Fees may vary and represent the individual services available at each site rather than be based upon a single national rate.

It is proposed that personal user fees already in place at most national historic sites will be applied next year in national parks, the exception being the parks with major through highways, in which a modified vehicle permit system will be used. These personal fees may range between $2.00 and $7.00 per day.

On the matter of townsites, I wish to clarify that extensive consultations have also taken place.

One year ago, all communities received notice that a study to develop mechanisms to recover operating and capital costs for townsite services was being initiated.

Parks staff have met with community representatives in each community to brief them on the study and establish local advisory bodies.

The Assistant Deputy Minister for Parks Canada met in the later part of the summer with the Banff Chamber of Commerce, the business community and environmental groups to consult with them on the issues of townsites, user fees and services offered.

During the week of October 13, the ADM also met with townsite representatives of Prince Albert National Park and subsequently chaired a session with representatives of the townsites of Wasagaming (Riding Mountain, Waskasiu), Waterton, Lake Louise, Field and Jasper in Calgary.

There is a firm commitment to complete the townsite study and announce changes by April 1995.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Gigantès, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hébert, for the second reading of Bill S-6, An Act to amend the Criminal Code (dangerous intoxication).—(Honourable Senator Petten).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, the Honourable Senator Petten adjourned the debate yesterday on this motion. Perhaps I could be allowed to make one or two brief comments.

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Of course, senator.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I am extremely pleased that Senator Gigantès introduced this private senator's bill, if I may call it that. I should like to tell you why I think it is a darned good initiative.

A number of decisions handed down by our courts in the last months or year have created confusion in the minds of the public. As one who talks to the common man and woman, to use a current expression, and to my fellow citizens in Ottawa, New Brunswick, or wherever I happen to be on assignment, I hear comments to the effect that justice in former days was not such a matter of controversy. When the courts handed down a judgment, it was clearly understood. However, now that we are in the era of the Charter of Rights, in the minds of the public we must accept what they consider to be rather unusual or odd judgments. They do not seem to understand what the system is attempting to say to Canadians. This has been the case in questions relating to matters of euthanasia and assisted suicide. I, as a member of the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide, understand what the issues are about, both pro and con.

Certainly, similar controversy has surrounded the court rulings in support of the defence of extreme intoxication. I find it passing strange that the judges of the office of the Judge Advocate General within the armed forces have taken a reverse position to what the civil courts have said in the matter of extreme intoxication as associated with sexual abuse. That, in itself, is significant, but it further confuses the minds of the public.

Some people may think that Senator Gigantès' bill is perhaps not well drafted or well formulated and that it may not cover certain areas, or even that it goes too far. Nevertheless, we are all free to speak our minds. There is no party position on a private member's bill, certainly not within my party. I am a free soul. I am not being whipped by anyone. I believe that the same is the case on the other side of the Senate.

Honourable senators, Senator Gigantès has done a great service to the Canadian justice system by bringing this bill forward. It affords legislators and intervenors a great opportunity to address this controversial matter, and it could ultimately lead to the formulation of an amendment to the Criminal Code of Canada. The opportunity is there to address the issue and to attempt to develop a social consensus.

Honourable senators, this is not strictly a legal matter. It has deep social implications. What bothers me is the type of message the aforementioned judgments send out to the public and to our young people. Is suicide a right? Is it a freedom? In the future, could you intoxicate yourself and escape chastisement by the law?

Honourable senators, that is not the type of message I want to broadcast to our young generation. God knows, they have enough problems trying to find their identity and place in society.

The days of innovative and glorious precedents from the bench should be a thing of the past. Control must be exercised, and control begins with the legislators of both Houses of Parliament. We are the lawmakers of this country. Our courts are not asked to interpret the law and legislate on their own, as do their American counterparts. The courts are expected to uphold the law as it is written in the books by legislators.

Honourable senators, Canadian youths are extremely stressed. The rate of suicide in this country amongst our youth is on the rise. Morality and ethics is on a very slippery slope. I recognize that we must live with social problems, but at some point we reach a critical level where society and the values we hold dear cease to function.

Once again, Senator Gigantès, I congratulate you.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, this order will stand adjourned in Senator Petten's name.

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 24, 1994

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE JACK MARSHALL

TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on Saturday, our colleague Senator Jack Marshall will be celebrating his 75th birthday, and so mark the end of a parliamentary career which will have spanned 26 years. What years they have been, for Jack from the outset made his mark as an activist. As a military man, he learned to march in step, but as a member of the House of Commons and of the Senate, he more often than not marched to his own drummer, and beware anyone who stood in his way.

Jack Marshall's background certainly accounts for a lot of his dogged determination. After attending Mount Allison Commercial College, he joined the North Shore New Brunswick Infantry Regiment in 1942 as a private. Two years later, he landed with the invasion forces on D-day and was on active service in France, Holland and Germany until the end of the war. His army career continued even after the war as Jack served in the Canadian army of occupation and was given a number of promotions to eventually become district commander of the militia for Newfoundland, 25 years after first enlisting. Colonel Marshall's many decorations testify to a most valorous career in war as in peace.

The following year, in 1968, he was elected to the House of Commons as the member for Humber—St. George's—St. Barbe, being re-elected in 1972 and 1974. In 1978, he was appointed to the Senate by Prime Minister Trudeau who, by his own admission, was not a particular fan of this place — or of the other house for that matter — but, nonetheless, he did fortunately invite to it Canadians of ability and experience like Jack Marshall.

Jack's coming here did not slow him down. On the contrary, it freed him from whatever limitations of party discipline by which he felt bound. No sooner had he arrived here than Jack's drummer beat even harder and his step became even more pronounced. I need not elaborate on Jack's constant preoccupation with the welfare of veterans. It is known, appreciated and will be remembered from one end of the country to the other for many, many years.

Whatever the service, whatever the cause, whatever the rank, Jack was always there to remind us of the eternal debt we owe Canadians who risked their lives for our country. He cared not only about the well-being of veterans, but also about any flaw in the telling of their story of courage and that of their fallen comrades.

As involved as he was in the well-being of veterans, he always had time for his constituents. In 1972, for instance, he sent out 18,000 letters to constituents offering to assist them in determining their benefits under a new family allowance program. He received over 5,000 replies and, no doubt, attended to them all.

He was always involved in advancing the cause of inshore fishermen and successfully pushed for the creation of our Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries and became its chairman. The report of this committee, called "The Marketing of Fish in Canada", issued four years ago under his chairmanship, all too accurately indicated some of the terrible conditions which are afflicting the Atlantic fishing industry today.

We will all miss this tenacious man, not just a thorn in the flesh but countless thorns in countless sides. Many ministers, bureaucrats and colleagues complained of what they interpreted as obstinacy and intransigence on Jack's part. Yet they could not complain of his motives, and his departure should in no way cause parliamentarians to lose sight of them.

There is something about old soldiers fading away which is used on occasions like these but, in Jack's case, it is completely inappropriate. He will pursue his goals until his last breath. We can look forward, I am sure, to his coming to the Senate on occasion to make sure that they have been taken up by former colleagues. May he not be disappointed.

Meanwhile, I wish his wife, Evelyn, many years of happy retirement with Jack, for if any senator has deserved them, Senator Jack Marshall certainly has.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am also pleased, on behalf of senators on this side of the chamber, to pay tribute to our colleague Jack Marshall who retires on Saturday.

As Senator Lynch-Staunton has said, Senator Marshall has indeed had a long and rich career of service to Canada, to Newfoundland, and to his constituency. For that, all of us are truly thankful. Senator Marshall has also been Parliament's most prominent and forceful representative of the veterans of Canada. In my part of the country, he is known simply as "Uncle Jack". Alberta is a long way from his Newfoundland home, but his reputation stretches from coast to coast with great admiration and great affection.

It is most fitting to be paying tribute to Jack in this month of November, not long after Remembrance Day, and in this year of the 50th anniversary of the D-day landing, the beginning of the end of World War II. As all of these events have recently reminded us, Senator Marshall's dedication to this country was proven long before he was appointed to the Senate chamber.

A native of Glace Bay, Cape Breton, he is one of those folks who has been sent out by Cape Breton, as they have all across Canada, to ostensibly run the government. Nonetheless, Senator Marshall has had a notable military career, as my friend Senator Lynch-Staunton indicated, serving overseas from 1942 to 1946.

Officer Cadet Marshall participated in and survived the D-day landing with the North Shore New Brunswick Infantry Regiment. His military career did not end there, as he rose through the ranks, eventually becoming a full colonel and district commander of the militia in Newfoundland.

Senator Marshall then turned his sights on the House of Commons and, in 1968, he launched a successful bid to become the member of Parliament for Humber—St. George's—St. Barbe, where he was re-elected again in 1972 and 1974. He won that nomination, it was pointed out to me, for the Conservatives in that distinguished riding by only one vote in 1968, and then rapidly went on to greater heights. He quickly became known as an activist member of Parliament, always working hard for his constituents on the never-ending fisheries file and on behalf of fellow veterans across Canada.

• (1410)

In March, 1978, Jack Marshall learned of his appointment to the Senate by way of a telephone call from Prime Minister Trudeau. We noted in our tributes to Senator Muir a few days ago that he was an inspired choice, and, indeed, Jack Marshall was an inspired choice. He said to the press at the time:

> It suits my cause well. I will continue to do the job that has to be done for Newfoundland.

Do his job he did. In speaking with Newfoundlanders who know his work, I heard the unanimous sentiment that Senator Jack is well loved in Newfoundland, particularly in his constituency, and by the people whom he has served so well. Another thing about Jack was that he has always worked closely with the sitting member of Parliament and put partisan considerations aside in order to pursue the best interests of his people, sometimes even to the discomfort of his party.

I was talking to one of those folks this morning, a vigorous young member of Parliament who ultimately succeeded Jack in the riding of Humber—St. George's—St. Barbe, and that was our current Minister of Fisheries, the Honourable Brian Tobin. He was in the process of writing a letter to Jack this morning, and I asked if I could borrow some of his thoughts since he has remained in close contact with him over the years. Brian, in beginning his letter said:

> I have always said, beginning with my first speech in my first election campaign in 1980, that I wanted to follow in the footsteps of Jack Marshall.

Brian told me that when he entered that campaign as what was considered to be a young whipper-snapper, he was concerned that he would hit the platform and nobody would know who he was. He was unknown, only 25 years old, and worried people would be saying, "Who are you? Why are you here?" Brian decided he would say, "I am here because I want to do for this riding what Jack Marshall has done for his riding. I want to help the fishermen. I want to help the workers. I want to be like Jack." Jack, of course, would be in the front row, slightly discomforted, as his own candidate would be sitting up on the platform listening to Brian extol the former Member of Parliament. At any rate, it was done with great sincerity.

Mr. Tobin wanted to pass on to this chamber that Jack has been a loyal, effective and compelling voice for Canada and for Newfoundland and Labrador. He said that he felt he could speak for every one of his constituents in western Newfoundland in saying that when it comes to hard work and dedication, Jack is without equal. He also said, by the way, that he has seen Jack's shoes. They really are too big for anyone else to fill, and he wishes him all the best in his retirement.

Senator Marshall, as we know, has been an industrious member of many of the committees of this chamber, including the Standing Senate Committees on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, Fisheries, always; the Standing Senate Committees on Agriculture and Forestry, Foreign Affairs, the Subcommittee on Security and National Defence of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, and the Special Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science. Most notably, however, we know him for his tenacious work as chairman of the Subcommittee on Veteran's Affairs, which recently released a report tabled in this house by Senator Graham entitled "Keeping Faith: Into the Future", a suggested pathway ahead for the Department of Veterans Affairs.

We also associate Jack Marshall with the battle to give proper recognition to the men and women of Canada's Merchant Marine who served so courageously during two world wars, carrying people, supplies and equipment to Europe, at great risk from enemy aircraft, submarines and mines. Indeed, on November 11, as a testimony to Senator Marshall's efforts, a "Book of Remembrance" honouring the names of Canada's merchant seamen was opened in the Memorial Chamber of the Peace Tower here on Parliament Hill.

Another battle that he fought was on behalf of the Korean veterans, the forgotten veterans. He was tireless in promoting their recognition through a special medal, which they received only a few years ago, long overdue. I was pleased to be one of those who helped Senator Marshall in those efforts.

Honourable senators, there are not enough medals, titles, awards, citations or tributes, including those from the Pope, that can properly reflect the respect, gratitude and affection in which Senator Marshall is held by all of the veterans in this country, the Merchant Marines, the fishermen, his constituents, and Canadians, for everything he has done. It will certainly be, as Brian Tobin said, an enormous challenge to fill the shoes he is leaving behind. At the very least, through his good work he has given all of us and, indeed, the Parliament of Canada, an example of how to be the best representative to and for the people that one can be. He has personified why we are here.

On behalf of my colleagues on this side of the house, I extend my best wishes to Jack and his family as he moves on to a new life away from Parliament Hill. Calvin Coolidge once said:

> The nation which forgets its defenders will be itself forgotten.

Senator Marshall has done everything he can to ensure that certainly neither this chamber nor any government will forget its veterans, and we know he will never relinquish his crusade. Senator Jack, we will remember you.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I, too, wish to join in the tribute to my good friend Jack Marshall.

I first met Jack Marshall when he was a candidate and I was attending the candidate's school for the Progressive Conservative candidates in the Atlantic region. We used to have them at that time, and we used to win seats in Atlantic Canada. I just pass that on as an aside, as someone may like to revive those schools. I picked him out then as a winner and as a man with strong viewpoints and determination.

Generally we think of Jack as having been the veterans' advocate, but let us not forget the other excellent work that he did when he was in the House of Commons. He was a very strong voice for Newfoundland fishermen. Perhaps if the government of the day had paid more attention to the viewpoints of Jack Marshall, we might not have the crisis in the fisheries we have today.

I was a member of the Fisheries Committee in the Senate when he was chairman, and I was always amazed at the knowledge that man had of fisheries, and I am sure Senator Thériault, who I believe was vice chairman at the time, shares that impression. As Senator Fairbairn mentioned, he was born in Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, but became a Newfoundlander by choice. He was a real advocate for that province. He spoke out on every issue that involved Newfoundland. He never forgot, as has been mentioned by both the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the Government in the Senate, the difficulties facing the average person in Newfoundland.

The Leader of the Opposition has mentioned the incident when he sent out an offer to help people with adjustments in family allowance. Honourable senators must realize that in other provinces people have access to towns where they can go to receive help from a government official. Jack Marshall knew that his people did not have that availability of government services, and he did the work of government officials. For that reason, so many people in Newfoundland hold him in such high regard.

The Leader of the Government has mentioned that Officer Cadet Marshall participated in the D-day landings. I should like to tell you a story, and this is a fitting occasion to do so. Officer Cadet Marshall was not supposed to be involved in the D-day landings because he had not completed his training, but he persuaded the commanding officer that he should go along to be of some help, so he participated in the D-day landings. Later on, I understand, he went back to complete his officer training.

The Leader of the Government has referred to the work of Senator Marshall on behalf of the Merchant Navy, which is well known across Canada. One other aspect of veteran's affairs that Jack spent a great deal of time on, which has not received the recognition that it deserves, is that of Canadian veterans who remained in the United Kingdom after the war. Many Canadian veterans who married in England and either stayed there at the end of the war or later returned there were entitled to pensions. However, because they were so far removed from the Department of Veteran's Affairs, they did not receive them. Jack Marshall personally worked on approximately 400 cases and in so doing brought this subject to the forefront among Canadian veterans in the United Kingdom. Today, approximately $1 million per year goes to those veterans in the United Kingdom, solely through the work of Jack Marshall. For that they owe him a great deal of gratitude.

Jack was also interested in the cadet movement. I believe that he and His Honour often worked together in that regard. I recall a speech he made in the Senate where he advocated that a voluntary term of approximately one year in the armed forces would be a good measure for many of our youth, particularly our troubled youth. As the years go by, more and more I think that that was a good idea.

When Stanley Knowles retired from the House of Commons, he was made an honourary member at the Table. I should like to suggest to the Senate that Senator Marshall be made an honorary member of the Subcommittee on Veteran's Affairs in recognition of all the work that he has done on that committee. That will also enable the committee to take advantage of the vast knowledge and experience he has accumulated.

I wish Jack and his charming wife, Evelyn, the best in their retirement years, and I hope that they will return here on occasion to see us.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I would like to add my voice to these well-deserved compliments.

[English]

I sat with Senator Marshall in the House of Commons, which, perhaps, was a different experience for me than for some others here who have been long-time friends of Senator Marshall. I sat with him in the House of Commons for many years. I have learned so much from him that I would like to take this opportunity to signify what he means to me.

As a new senator looking at his career, I feel that it is one that I should like to emulate — that is, to be a committee chairman and to put an imprint on one or two great causes. I could dream openly as to what Canada would be if 100 or just three of us were to espouse one or two causes. This country would never be the same. That is why I accepted my appointment to the Senate. The Senate has work to do for this country. No one has shown the way better than Senator Marshall. I am very honoured to be given this privilege to join with Senator Fairbairn, Senator Lynch-Staunton and others in expressing my gratitude to Senator Marshall. I agree with everything that they have said about him. For me, he is an example to follow. I do not intend to cut my relationship with him, because I have always had an extremely good relationship with him.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I do not often rise on such occasions, but for Jack Marshall I cannot help it. I will not go into great detail, as the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition and other senators have done. However, I wish to comment briefly, because I know that is his wish. Jack said to me before he left that he would not be here today, because he did not want to listen to his own eulogy.

We came here at approximately the same time, he about one year ahead of me. After the Liberals returned to power in 1980, Jack told me that there was such a thing as observers at the United Nations. Mostly they were comprised of members of the House of Commons, but sometimes senators were included. He asked me to look into it. I did, and we ended up in New York for one week as observers at the United Nations. I started then to appreciate his humanity, which was the same in New York City as it was on his shore in Newfoundland.

I kept in contact with Jack, and I want to pay him homage by telling you a little story. It may have been my own laziness, but any time a veteran wrote or called me with a problem, I would say, "I know who can fix it up for you, if anyone can," and I would pass it on to Jack Marshall, and that would be the end of it.

He was a worker. As mentioned by Senator Phillips, I was deputy chairman of the Fisheries Committee when he was the chairman. We travelled to the east coast, the west coast and the centre of the country looking at fishers' problems. Once while in St. John's, I gained further insight into Jack Marshall. It was accepted that when a committee travelled, the chairman of the committee would take a suite in the hotel. The next day Jack said to me, "I do not want that. I am just a member of the committee and I want a room like everyone else." That was Jack Marshall, and I admired him for it.

I watched him when his party was in power. At times, against the will of the leadership of his party in the Senate at least, he continued fighting for rights that he thought veterans were owed. I am sure he will keep on fighting.

At one time I was not in agreement with him as far as the Senate getting involved in censorship was concerned. However, at the end of it all, he had almost convinced me that he was right in this case. After all, he did not want the Senate to be involved in censorship.

In my humble opinion, there are few Jack Marshalls who have sat in either of the houses of Parliament. I wish him well. He was an inspiration to me. He has also invited me to visit him in Florida.

Hon. John Sylvain: Honourable senators, after these very eloquent tributes I should like to add a few words that are no less deeply felt.

I had the privilege of serving with Jack Marshall on the Veterans Affairs Committee not long after arriving here. The memorable hearings of the committee on the CBC-NFB film entitled, I think, "The Horror and The Horror" or, rather, The Valour and the Horror, was my introduction to the work of a committee.

I could not have had a stronger, more determined or more devoted leader. He undertook his work with the energy and drive of a man decades younger. For him, obstacles were a reason for more dedicated work. One has only to look through Hansard to see the unbelievable number of entries that bear his name.

I believe that Jack started running hard and fighting hard when he hit the beaches in Normandy — he just simply never stopped. His comrades in arms, the merchant navy — indeed, all veterans and all Canadians — owe him an immense debt of gratitude, as do we in this chamber.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, over the years I have received many letters from veterans saying, "You're a veteran, why can't you be like Senator Marshall?" I generally answer, "There is only one of him, and it is very difficult to equal him."

Hon. Gerald R. Ottenheimer: Honourable senators, I think we are all agreed that in a few days the Senate will lose an outstanding member. The area of Humber—St. Georges—St. Barbe, Newfoundland, which he represented as a Member of Parliament, and with which he always kept a close connection even as a senator, will lose a distinguished advocate, as will the province of Newfoundland and all of us as senators and Canadians.

Jack was first elected as a member of Parliament in 1968. I can verify what Senator Fairbairn said. After all, I was at the nominating convention in Corner Brook where Jack won the nomination by one vote. I suppose one could start from there into a reverie on the role that fate, or chance, can play in the lives of people and countries.

As a side note, when the federal election of 1968 was called, before the dissolution of Parliament, Newfoundland had seven seats — which is our total entitlement in terms of seats — held by seven Liberals. Honourable senators will recall that 1968 was the year of the Trudeau sweep. Once again, Newfoundland, in order to establish its distinctness — Senator Murray says "contrariness" but I say "distinctness" — elected six Conservatives. It was the first time since Confederation that there had been more than two Conservatives elected. The result was usually five and two. As a result of the 1966 federal election, seven out of seven seats were held by Liberals. In 1968, as I said, six Conservatives were elected, and the one Liberal was the late Don Jamieson.

In the Senate, as well as when he was a member of Parliament, Jack Marshall had not only his provincial constituency but a national constituency with respect to fishermen and veterans. Indeed, on Armistice Day, November 11, 1994, there was in the Hall of Honour a ceremony to recognize the contribution of merchant seamen of Canada and of Newfoundland. I say "of Newfoundland," not as any hint of separatism but because, of course, during the Second World War, the merchant seamen from Newfoundland were not Canadian. That was prior to Confederation.

At that ceremony, Jack Marshall, although not physically present, was very much present. I was honoured to be there to represent the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc, at that time Speaker of the Senate. At the reception afterward, I think I was the only senator there. Many of those who were there made a point of coming up to me and referring with respect and affection to the role that Jack Marshall had played, not only in veterans' affairs throughout the country but also in terms of the belated but welcome recognition of the contribution of our merchant seamen. Indeed, it made one proud to be a senator, a Canadian and a Newfoundlander in the context of being a colleague of Jack Marshall's.

In short, we will all miss him, but those in the veteran community, the merchant seamen community and, indeed, the forestry service will find that they have lost a tenacious, knowledgeable and competent advocate.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I wish to associate myself with all the great things that have been said about Senator Marshall. I know many of them are true. I do not know if they are all true or not, but I suspect they are.

I can tell honourable senators that many years ago as a new senator I had a fellow named Jack Marshall help me with my report, "Child at Risk." Many of the newer senators probably do not even know what that report was about. It was a good report. Senator Jack Marshall assisted me with it.

Later, he assisted me with another report entitled, "They Served, We Care". Then I was able to assist him with a report entitled, "It's Almost Too Late". I assisted him again with another report entitled, "Keeping Faith: Into the Future". These reports are all monuments to Jack Marshall.

Jack Marshall also did a great job with fisheries. As Senator Thériault said, Jack Marshall got him down to New York, as well as to Boston where the greatest fisheries show in North America was held. Jack Marshall got the committee down there to see the fishery situation for themselves.

He represented his province. He represented the nation. All I want to say is, "We shall remember him. At the going down of the sun and in the morning, we shall remember him."

Hon. Duncan J. Jessiman: Although I was at the same place as Jack Marshall on June 6, 1944, I did not meet him until about 49 years later, when he asked me to serve on the Senate Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs.

I have known Jack for only about 12 months, but I was impressed by the quiet and efficient manner in which he presided over committee meetings, and also by the fact that each and every association which appeared before the committee prefaced its remarks by thanking Senator Marshall for all the work he had previously done for them.

There is no doubt that, in the eyes of the veterans of Canada, Senator Marshall is something special. I would venture to say that the veterans of Canada hold Jack Marshall in such esteem that if they had the power, he would be declared a saint, either St. John or St. Marshall.

This quiet-spoken gentleman is a great Canadian. He was a wonderful senator and during the short time I had the opportunity to deal with him, I was very happy and proud to do so. He will be sorely missed.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, in the case of Jack Marshall, compulsive retirement at the age of 75 makes no sense at all. He is still young at 75. Some marvellous things have happened in the last month. The heavyweight boxing champion is 46, is he not? That proves that all the ability and agility is not always with the young.

We are sorry to see Jack retire. On behalf of the veterans of the province of British Columbia, who have been helped in great measure by many of his initiatives, I want to say thank you to Jack Marshall. I wish him well in all his future endeavours.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, we all tend to say only the good things when a person leaves this place. Perhaps I will be allowed one or two indiscretions.

Many of us on this side heard Jack Marshall say, during the mid-eighties, "I don't know what is keeping me from crossing the floor." He was then chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries, and rather unhappy about certain turns of events. Jack had no patience for stupid policy decisions, whatever their origin, but old loyalties die hard. He never took that first step to our side, as much as we encouraged him and assured him that he would be welcome.

Nevertheless, I think he managed to sublimate his inner struggles and to devote himself, body and soul, more than ever before, to the cause of veterans. That will be to his permanent and everlasting credit.

I had my differences of opinion with him on the Fisheries Committee in the days when his government was proceeding to develop the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. At one point, the committee had developed a reasoned approach to the fishery issue within that context, but at the last minute the leadership of his party overruled a good consensus within the committee. Jack, like a good soldier, took his marching orders and forged ahead. At that time he and I broke what had been a pretty good working relationship. I certainly do not hold any grudge against him. He did his job. He did what was expected of him.

I have personal reasons to express my grateful thanks for the work he did on behalf of the Korean veterans, in particular.

I wish him well in his well-merited retirement. It is too bad, as Senator Perrault says, that such talent is not being put to good use for the good of this country. I hope it does not go to waste. I wish him well.

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, we live in a kind and gentle society. If it were not so, Jack Marshall would have got his a long time ago: sabres from the Department of National Defence, pistols from Ministers of Revenue and the nice people at the Department of Veterans Affairs. A stake through the heart from the CBC. Jack, in his persistent, aggravating way, has made it his business to have governments keep the promises they made when people were persuaded to go into uniform.

Greer Garson, the actress, likes to recall in interviews what Winston Churchill told her about her performance in Mrs. Miniver. "It was," said the great man, "worth a couple of Spitfire squadrons." By that scale, Jack Marshall's performance in the Senate was worth an entire offensive of Lancasters.

Pack up your troubles, Jack, and smile, smile, smile.

Hon. Norman K. Atkins: Honourable senators, I wish to add my best wishes on the retirement from this place of Jack Marshall. When I was appointed to the Senate in 1986, I took over the office that Jack Marshall had had in the East Block. He had vacated it because he needed more space to deal with all the causes that he represented as a senator.

I will remember him for three reasons. The first is his efforts on behalf of veterans generally. The second, and more important, is his work on behalf of the Merchant Navy veterans who served in World War II. I also have to commend him for his efforts to bring a memorial to Canada which was donated by the Michigan Vietnam Veterans Association, acknowledging the Canadians who died in that war.

By his efforts, he has clearly done the Senate proud.

Hon. Erminie J. Cohen: Honourable senators, I associate myself with all the praise we are hearing today in this chamber. Senator Marshall is a role model for us all, especially the new senators.

On a humorous note, when I was called to the Senate about a year and a half ago, I received many calls from friends in the province of New Brunswick. They were not saying how happy they were for me, but that I was so lucky to be meeting Senator Marshall. That was my first introduction.

I have known his brothers for several years because I attended Mount Allison when they did. However, I did not have the opportunity to really know Senator Marshall.

Something which really impressed me has not been mentioned today. Senator Marshall and I were neighbours in the Victoria Building. No matter what time I arrived at the Victoria Building in the morning, Senator Marshall's staff were always already there, and they always worked the latest. I was very impressed with the team he built in his office, and with the respect and admiration they showed for each other. There was always consultation. That struck a note with me, and some day I would like to be in that position. I see his staff sitting very proudly in the gallery today, wiping their eyes.

• (1450)

I think the proudest moment for Senator Marshall was when he received the citation from the Pope. All I can say is that that is not bad for a Jewish boy from Glace Bay!

Hon. Alasdair B. Graham: Honourable senators, I do not intend to speak at great length today. I already said my words of praise and admiration for Senator Marshall on October 27 when I tabled the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology on the future development of the Department of Veterans Affairs. Other senators have already talked about his considerable talents and tremendous work over the years on a great many committees. He is most noted by Canadians everywhere for his work on behalf of veterans.

As has already been noted by Senator Cohen, a very special group of individuals is in the gallery, not only friends and staff members of Senator Marshall's, but Jack's very loving and devoted daughter, Arlaine, is here to witness these fitting tributes to a great Canadian.

I hope, Arlaine and staff members, that you will personally convey to the Honourable Senator Jack our warmest and best wishes on this very special day.

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of my colleagues in paying tribute to Senator Jack Marshall. I will try not to repeat the remarks of honourable senators who have spoken before me, but that might not be possible.

Colonel Marshall had a distinguished career in the armed services. During his tenure in the House of Commons and the Senate, his work for veterans became known the length and breadth of our great land. On November 26, 1976, the Royal Canadian Legion awarded Senator Marshall the meritorious service medal for his efforts on behalf of veterans. My wife and I were privileged to attend that ceremony.

Senator Marshall has served as chairman and deputy chairman on several committees of the Senate. As chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries, he was instrumental in issuing two reports that had a great impact on the fishing industry of our country.

To Senator Jack, his wife, Evelyn, and his daughter, every best wish for the future.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, in this place, it is not for the Speaker to speak, but I wish to say I endorse totally what has been said about my good friend and long-time associate, Jack Marshall.

VISITOR IN GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to draw the attention of honourable senators to the presence in our Speaker's Gallery of a distinguished visitor, Speaker Roett of the Barbados.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: It is interesting to note, honourable senators, that we have in our own midst a senator who originally comes from Barbados, and I would ask Speaker Roett to send our best regards to the Honourable Billie Miller, his Deputy Premier, who happens to be a cousin of our own Senator Cools.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL

Thursday, November 24, 1994

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that The Right Honourable Charles Gonthier, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 24th day of November 1994, at 3:30 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

Yours sincerely,

Judith A. Larocque
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

THE HONOURABLE ROMÉO LEBLANC, P.C.

CONGRATULATIONS ON HIS APPOINTMENT AS GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Honourable senators, it gave me much pleasure to hear that Senator Roméo LeBlanc had been appointed Governor General of Canada. I have known him since 1984, but it was after he succeeded me in the Chair that I had a chance to appreciate his warm personality.

This great quality, combined with his experience of the affairs of the state, will ensure that he discharges his new duties with honour and dignity.

It would be remiss of me not to mention his wife, Diana, whom my wife and myself have met privately and whom, we are sure, will be quite capable of seconding him with great elegance.

We congratulate them and wish them much happiness in this new career.

THE HONOURABLE GILDAS L. MOLGAT

CONGRATULATIONS ON HIS APPOINTMENT AS SPEAKER OF THE SENATE

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Honourable senators, I also take this opportunity to congratulate Senator Molgat on his appointment as Speaker of this chamber. Having myself held this position for over nine years, I know only too well the difficulties, but also the good times that come with it.

I wish him luck, but knowing his serenity, his sense of humour and his expertise and experience of this place, I have no doubt that he will carry out his duties very successfully.

[English]

SENATOR'S STATEMENT

HEALTH

POSSIBILITY OF TAXATION ON DENTAL INSURANCE PLANS

Hon. Erminie J. Cohen: Honourable senators, I rise today to speak to you on an issue that concerns many Canadians. There are widespread rumours that the government may tax employer dental plans in its next budget. Past governments always made such plans a non-taxable benefit. They did so to encourage oral health by making dental services more affordable, especially for families with children.

In recent years, there has been a sharp rise in the number of Canadians with dental insurance. At the same time, there has been a sharp drop in the number with dental problems. These two trends are clearly related, but if workers have to pay tax on the contributions their employers make, fewer will opt for dental insurance. Those most likely to want coverage, even after a tax is imposed, are those most likely to have high dental bills. The higher bills would, in turn, result in higher premiums, causing many employers to drop this benefit.

Honourable senators, I call upon the government to assure Canadians that dental plans will not be taxed in the coming budget.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, presented the following report:

Thursday, November 24, 1994

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-50, An Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, November 17, 1994, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

LEONARD GUSTAFSON
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Gustafson, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(b), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading later this day.

EUTHANASIA AND ASSISTED SUICIDE

EXTENSION OF FINAL REPORT DATE— REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide, presented the following report:

Thursday, November 24, 1994

The Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on February 23, 1994, to examine the legal, social and ethical issues relating to euthanasia and assisted suicide, respectfully requests that the date of presenting its report be extended from December 15, 1994, to no later than March 15, 1995.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN NEIMAN
Chairperson

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Neiman, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Later]

MARINE TRANSPORTATION SECURITY BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald H. Oliver, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transportation and Communications, presented the following report:

Thursday, November 24, 1994

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications has the honour to present its

SEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-38, An Act to provide for the security of marine transportation, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, November 16, 1994, examined the said Bill and has agreed to report the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

DONALD H. OLIVER, Q.C.
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Oliver, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

• (1500)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, November 29, 1994, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Honourable senators, I will give you an idea of what we hope to be dealing with next week. Bill C-48 will be before us today. Bill C-57, to implement the agreement establishing the World Trade Organization, is making its way through the House now. All I can say is what my colleagues on both sides who have stood in this position before have said: To the best of our knowledge, we should have Bill C-57 early next week. However, that depends on our colleagues on the other side.

We should also have Bill C-55, to establish a board having jurisdiction concerning disputes respecting surface rights in respect of land in the Yukon Territory and to amend other Acts in relation thereto. There are also several committees meeting next week, so we will be sitting next week, honourable senators.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-48, to establish the Department of Natural Resources and to amend related Acts.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Petten, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading, Tuesday next, November 29, 1994.

LAW OF PARLIAMENTARY PRIVILEGE

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, the 30th day of November, 1994, I shall call the attention of the Senate to the law of parliamentary privilege, including its definitions, its exercise and extent, its historical and constitutional development, and its current status in Canada.

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN PARLIAMENT AND THE COURTS

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, November 30, 1994, I shall call the attention of the Senate to the relationship between Parliament and the courts, including the law of parliamentary privilege and the relevant jurisprudence.

HEALTH

PROTECTION OF CONSCIENCE IN MEDICAL PROCEDURES— PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, it is my duty and privilege to place in the hands of the Clerk petitions from Canadian citizens who pray that the Senate in Parliament assembled protect health care workers with regard to freedom of conscience in the workplace. These petitions contain signatures of 544 persons from various places throughout Canada.

[Translation]

QUESTION PERIOD

INTERGOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT ON PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate and concerns overlapping jurisdictions. In his report, the Auditor General of Canada said, and I quote:

> It would be naive to suggest that overlapping jurisdictions can be avoided in a modern federal state.

He said, of course, that it was not necessarily feasible to eliminate all overlap, and that, moreover, overlap did not necessarily mean waste or duplication. However, and I quote:

> ...reduced fiscal manoeuvrability, among other factors, requires effort to avoid overlap that results in unnecessary administrative costs and an undue regulatory burden on the private sector and other clients.

Finally, the Auditor General went on to say on page 20 of the first report:

> The cases the Office has reviewed illustrate that tangible, practical administrative solutions can usually be found within the existing constitutional framework.

Could the Leader of the Government possibly put some pressure on her cabinet colleagues so that we would have some agreements on manpower training?

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): I thank Senator Bolduc for his question. As he knows, in general terms, the government currently has under way a very major review of all of its programs. Part of the reason for that review is to get at the heart of that particular observation by the Auditor General concerning duplication and overlap, with a view to cutting unnecessary expenditures.

There has been a great deal of discussion among the federal government and all of the provinces, and I will certainly ensure that my honourable friend's representations are drawn to the attention of the appropriate ministers. I am sure those discussions will continue in the future.

JUSTICE

PAROLE SUPERVISION OF HIGH-RISK OFFENDERS— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Duncan J. Jessiman: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

The Auditor General reported on Tuesday, November 22, that high risk offenders out on parole need greater attention. He said that in areas of the country with few parole resources, "the risk to the public may be greater."

He also said, "In some offices, the management of sex offenders is determined more by available resources than by minimum professional practice requirements."

Will the minister undertake to provide to the Senate a list of what specific offices lack resources to properly manage such offenders?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Senator Jessiman, I thank you for your question. I will transmit it to my colleague the Solicitor General to see what information can be provided.

TRANSPORT

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT— POSSIBLE NEGOTIATION OF LEASE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I ask this question in order to clarify an earlier question I put to the Leader of the Government on November 15, and in order to give the whole subject a bit of focus and, possibly, some urgency.

No one in this house would disagree with the statement that Pearson International Airport is in a desperate condition, particularly Terminal 1, and that the consequences of delay in having the airport developed will be severe for the commerce which that great airport represents.

I have reread Senator Kirby's remarks which he made at second reading of Bill C-22. Throughout his intervention, there were constant references which can be summarized as follows: Pearson airport will remain in legal limbo. Presumably, this means that the government would neither be able to develop nor operate Pearson International Airport in a manner that it considers in the public good until a final resolution concerning the claims of the partnership and its partners with respect to the cancellation of the airport contracts.

On September 20, every member of Parliament received a letter from the Chairman of the Pearson Development Corporation which states in its final paragraph:

> The government cannot justify the need for extreme and unprecedented legislation in order to implement airport policy. Pearson Development Corporation...

And these are presumably the bad guys.

> ...does not challenge the right of the government to cancel the agreements respecting Terminals 1 and 2 to pursue its airport policy. Pearson Development Corporation has already made it clear that it will not take any action to block the redevelopment of Pearson International Airport. Pearson Development Corporation recognizes the need for immediate redevelopment of Pearson airport to ensure that Canada does not lose valuable international commerce due to inadequate facilities.

Finally, it was reported in The Toronto Star:

> In announcing that Pearson airport will be turned over to a non-profit local authority, federal Transport Minister Doug Young has set a condition that could hold up the transfer needlessly.

What is to stop Ottawa from beginning to negotiate a lease, especially when those negotiations are expected to take more than a year?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): I acknowledge the urgency of your question, Senator MacDonald. I have sent your earlier question ahead so that I can obtain a full answer, because it will be a somewhat complicated answer, given the circumstances that we are in.

I have asked to receive a response for you on an urgent basis. I will add today's question to your earlier remarks and do my best to get that response to you next week.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Comeau on June 9, the response to which I referred yesterday, as well as an answer to a question asked by Senator St. Germain on October 25.

NOVA SCOTIA

PROPOSED PEACE-KEEPING TRAINING CENTRE— GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gerald J. Comeau on June 9, 1994)

[Senator MacDonald]

It was announced in the February budget that Canadian Forces Base Cornwallis would close by April, 1995. In keeping with the downsizing of the Canadian Forces, all recruit training would be consolidated at Canadian Forces Base St-Jean, near Montreal. The Department of National Defence cannot afford to retain surplus infrastructure, given the magnitude of the reductions in the Defence budget over the next five years.

An international peacekeeping training centre is being established at Cornwallis by the Canadian Institute of Strategic Studies (CISS), to be named the Lester B. Pearson Peacekeeping Training Centre. The Federal Government, through the Departments of Foreign Affairs and National Defence, will provide an initial start-up grant of $5 million, followed by annual grants totalling about $1 million for the Centre's operations. Both Departments anticipate that other interested organisations, foundations and private citizens will wish to assist the Centre, with additional financing to be realised through grants and tuition fees. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency has also been deeply involved in the establishment of the Centre, and has also been actively seeking appropriate business relationships to support it and to stimulate other entrepreneurial activity at Cornwallis. This latter support may include, inter alia provision of support to the cadet camp, HMCS Acadia. An ACOA manager has been made available to work specifically for the redevelopment of Cornwallis.

The last recruit class graduated from Cornwallis in August, 1994, and the Base will close by April 1, 1995. Following the closure, Public Works and Government Services Canada will assume custodial responsibility for the site, on behalf of National Defence and the Federal Government. Concurrently, CISS intends to commence operations at the Centre, initially on a limited scale, with activity to increase over time.

Many challenges will have to be faced as the transition of CFB Cornwallis unfolds, and work is well underway to address them. Federal Government officials are therefore working closely with their counterparts in other governments and the local community, to ensure as smooth a transition as possible. The Federal Government announced in July that the Cornwallis Park Development Corporation has been allocated a budget of $7.5 million to manage the transition planning.

It is important for all concerned to work together to ensure that the impact of this closure will be minimised to the greatest extent possible, and to promote actively initiatives which will sustain economic security in Cornwallis and the Annapolis Valley.

FORESTRY

CLAYQUOT SOUND—GRANT BY CIDA TO PROTEST GROUP

(Response to question raised by Hon. Gerry St. Germain on October 25, 1994)

The government is not funding activities or projects whose purpose is to deliberately undermine the Canadian forest industry. Furthermore, Canadian International Development Agency funds cannot be used and are not being used for activities in Europe and the United States.

CIDA has provided funding through the Western Canada Wilderness Committee, a Canadian non-governmental organization, to NGOs in Latin America, especially Chile, involved in protecting the quickly disappearing temperate rain forest.

The funding provided technical assistance, teaching NGOs how to map areas to be protected and how to build public support for these protected areas. For example, Chilean NGOs have published information bulletins, made slide shows, and taken teachers and children and community leaders into oldgrowth rainforests.

In addition, some of the money was spent in Canada to publish maps and booklets about protecting natural ecosystems in developing countries.

This Canadian NGO, the Western Canada Wilderness Committee (WCWC) is also involved in the protection of Canadian oldgrowth forests. It raises money for this work from concerned Canadian citizens.

All of the CIDA money is put into a separate bank account and used only for activities directly related to the third world.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Leonard J. Gustafson moved the third reading of Bill C-50, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[Translation]

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Gigantès, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hébert, for the second reading of Bill S-6, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (dangerous intoxication). — (Honourable Senator Petten.)

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, at this stage I would like to comment briefly on Bill S-6, to amend the Criminal Code (dangerous intoxication).

The Supreme Court of Canada's recent decision in the Daviault case has attracted the interest of the Canadian public. It concerns a point of criminal law that is not insignificant. I know that some of my colleagues intend to speak to the bill next week, and I am referring to Senators Lavoie-Roux and Cohen. That being the case, I decided not to elaborate on the substance of the bill today.

Since the sponsor of the bill, Senator Gigantès, asked for the bill to be referred to the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs at the appropriate time, today I simply wanted to say that a referral to committee would seem quite logical and that, assisted by expert witnesses, the committee would be able to consider the substance, content, drafting or wording of the bill, if that is the wish of the Senate.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, Senator Beaudoin was speaking on Bill S-6 by agreement with Senator Petten. Is it agreed that the motion will remain standing in Senator Petten's name?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Your Honour, have we disposed of Bill S-6? The last thing I heard you say was that there was an agreement to let it stand in Senator Petten's name. Are there any more speakers? If not, perhaps it can proceed to committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Beaudoin stated that other speakers wished to take part in the debate.

Senator Beaudoin: Yes, that is correct.

[Translation]

Senators Lavoie-Roux and Cohen said that they would like to speak to Bill C-6 next week.

[English]

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, would Senators Lavoie-Roux and Cohen be willing to speak on third reading rather than on second reading? We could then send the bill to committee, if honourable senators agree.

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, those senators are no longer present to answer, so they will have to speak next week on second reading.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I wish to raise a point of order. Senator Petten has taken the adjournment of this bill. This is a private senator's bill, not a government bill.

We have covered this ground in the past. It not being a government bill, I do not think the Acting Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate should adjourn the debate, unless he intends to make a contribution to the debate in his capacity as a private member of the Senate. Otherwise, it should be open to whomever wants to speak next.

There may or may not be a principle involved here. I do not say this to be difficult to my good friend Senator Petten; he may share some of the concerns I have. However, there is such a thing as our private domain in this chamber, as there is in the other place. Private members' business is not to be interfered with by the government in any way, shape or form. The members themselves decide that, the backbenchers. Are we to discard that long-standing practice and endure the slings and arrows of the government? That is what this is all about. Could we have a response from Senator Petten?

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): You certainly can, honourable senators. Far be it from me to disrupt the running of this honourable house in any way. If someone wishes to adjourn the debate in the name of Senator Lavoie-Roux, or whomever, I am perfectly happy with that.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the rules do not differentiate between private and public bills in their application. It is proper for any senator to take the adjournment.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Those of us who are conservative at heart respect tradition.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: As there is nothing that I would rather do than satisfy Conservatives at heart, I would be pleased to take the adjournment of this debate in the name of Senator Lavoie-Roux.

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, for Senator Lavoie-Roux, debate adjourned.

[Senator Beaudoin]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTINGS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John B. Stewart rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, November 23, 1994:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at three thirty o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesday, November 29, and on Tuesday, December 6, 1994, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, by way of explanation, let me say that the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has been pursuing its work regarding international trade. Yesterday we dealt with the topic of globalization in a preliminary way.

The work projected for next week and for December 6 is on Canadian trade policy as it relates to the Caribbean area. We will be dealing with this subject on Tuesday next, Wednesday next, and on the following Tuesday.

It would be helpful to the committee if we could have a specific hour at which to convene on the two Tuesdays. I expect that we will not be interrupting the work of the Senate on either of those days; however, it is possible that if we carry this motion, the committee would commence before the Senate had risen.

On December 6, we have witnesses coming from far away places, for example, Barbados, Trinidad and Guyana, so we should like to have a sufficient block of time to ensure that we can make full use of those witnesses. That is the purpose of this motion.

• (1530)

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if I sat and said nothing on this matter, I would be a bit of a hypocrite. During the years I operated as whip for this side, I always felt that committees should not sit when the Senate is sitting. I understand the problem you have. However, I just could not stay in my place and let it go without saying something. I do not think it is a good policy, and I think we should do everything to avoid it.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to reinforce what Senator Petten has said. We on this side have said, over and over again, that it seems we have the tail wagging the dog now. I would like the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders to meet as soon as possible to determine proper schedules for committees that do not constantly conflict with the work of the Senate.

The obligation of senators is to this chamber, and courtesy requires that when senators are in debate, colleagues be in attendance to hear them.

We are now shortening our Wednesdays, and we are asking for exceptions on Tuesdays and Thursdays for Senate committees to sit while the Senate is sitting. Senator Stewart, who is a traditionalist, is breaking with a very important tradition of courtesy to senators in this chamber, whose concerns and contributions should come first.

I certainly appreciate the work his committee and other committees are doing. It is very valuable. It is part of our Senate work. However, by allowing committees to continually eat into the regular sitting hours of the Senate, we are demeaning the work of this chamber.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I personally wish to subscribe to some of the reservations that have been uttered. I find myself somewhat handicapped when I am required to go to a committee when the Senate is in session, particularly when issues are being debated that concern my region.

Nevertheless, if I put that consideration aside and look at the substance of what Senator Stewart is proposing, the committee, if I understand correctly, has invited people from these various areas to come to Canada to meet with the committee to expound on their views, desires, and wishes. It is an expensive excursion for those people, and it makes sense to me, everything else being equal, that they be given a hearing, and a good hearing, one that takes the least time possible so as not to impose additional and unnecessary expenses on them and on the committee.

In a situation like this, I would tend to be very understanding. However, on other issues before the house, such as straight legislation, that is an entirely different matter. I wish to go on record as supporting this specific request.

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I am not prepared to vote against this motion, but I am asking that, in the future, people look ahead to see if such situations cannot be avoided. That is all I am saying, Senator Stewart.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I, too, do not like the idea of committee sittings overlapping sittings of the Senate. However, I remember the meeting where the leadership on both sides, together with committees chairmen, discussed the problem of getting the work of committees done. The decision made at that meeting was that we would try an experiment during which the Senate would meet at an earlier hour on Wednesday so as to be able to adjourn earlier that day, thus leaving a block of time late Wednesday afternoon for the committees.

It was also decided that the Senate would come back on Mondays, thus relieving the pressure of work in the Senate on Tuesdays and Wednesdays and leaving more of the middle of the week free for committee work. One of the reasons we are having problems now is that we have not been meeting on Mondays. The Senate has been concentrating its sittings, when it sits, on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

If we took the whole package as it was originally devised and begin our work in the chamber on Monday, then the shortage of time problem, such as confronts us in this instance, would not arise. I mention that to put on record some of the programming considerations my motion brings to our attention.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, pursuant to rule 136(8), I must interrupt the proceedings. The Senate will now adjourn during pleasure to await the arrival of the Honourable the Deputy Governor General.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

[Translation]

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Charles Gonthier, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Canada Petroleum Resources Act (Bill C-25, Chapter 36, 1994)

An Act to amend the Excise Act, the Customs Act and the Tobacco Sales to Young Persons Act (Bill C-11, Chapter 37, 1994)

An Act to amend the Department of Agriculture Act and to amend or repeal certain other Acts (Bill C-49, Chapter 38, 1994)

An Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act (Bill C-50, Chapter 39, 1994)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

[English]

• (1540)

CANADA'S DEFENCE POLICY

REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

Leave having been given to revert to Order No. 2 (Reports of Committees):

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Defence Policy entitled "Security in a Changing World", tabled in the Senate on 31st October, 1994.—(Honourable Senator Forrestall).

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have read the report, and I listened with great interest to the comments of Senator De Bané when he presented it. Some of those comments disturbed me because the military seems to be suggesting to the legislators that military policy must be set for many years in advance.

One of the things I heard was that it takes years to train an infantryman. In World War II we trained them for three months and sent them into battle. Maybe three months is too short, so let us say six months.

This idea of enshrining certain aspects of military organization, tactics and strategy for a long time can only serve the purpose of defending vested interests in the military. We all have vested interests. Senators have vested interests. It is perfectly natural for the military to have the same attitude.

Although this report is a step in the right direction, it should go much further. We should think of changing our military establishment so that it will have a much better distribution in favour of the teeth, versus the tail: that is, combatants versus the paper pushers that we now have.

I think we should use more of the monetary resources of National Defence for a militia and a large cadet corps in order to soak up unemployment. In the defence of our coasts, which is very important, we do not need the super sophisticated and horribly expensive vessels which were designed, vainly, to intercept and sink Soviet submarines. If it were left for us to do that in the days of the Cold War, the Cold War would have been lost. The U.S. was perfectly capable of doing it on its own. We need small, fast vessels which can catch smugglers and defend our territorial waters.

We have the technology to develop something like the French Exocet missile, which is a pilotless plane that can fire three shots on a vessel that is encroaching upon our territorial waters, the first a warning shot. The warning shot contains a dye that will not hurt anyone but will cover them in colour. If they do not accede to that warning, the next shot contains a small explosive charge. The third shot would contain a large explosive charge. We need only sink one fishing vessel and the others will not try any more.

This may sound radical, but if you have the force you must occasionally be willing to demonstrate that you are prepared to use it.

We would then move toward serving the national purpose by having well-trained militia and well-trained cadets in reserve to back up our peace-keepers, with whose activities most of the country seems to be in accordance.

With a force of 10,000 superbly trained fighting men, along with a militia, cadets, and Canadian-made protection for our coasts, we would not need large numbers of planes, certainly not to fight Soviet bombers, nor would we need the kinds of frigates we have. I would sell many of those items in order to finance other aspects of defence.

On motion of Senator Berntson, for Senator Forrestall, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 29, 1994, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 29, 1994

The Senate met at 2:00 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEW SENATORS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received certificates from the Registrar General of Canada showing that the following persons, respectively, have been summoned to the Senate:

Jean-Robert Gauthier
John G. Bryden

INTRODUCTION

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there were senators without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senators were introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons; took the oath prescribed by law, which was administered by the Clerk; and were seated:

Hon. Jean-Robert Gauthier, of Vanier, Ontario, introduced between the Honourable Senators Fairbairn and Hébert.

Hon. John G. Bryden, of Bayfield, New Brunswick, introduced between the Honourable Senators Fairbairn and Robichaud.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senators named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the Constitution Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

• (1410)

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am happy to rise today to offer words of welcome to our two new colleagues who have just taken their seats in this chamber.

For many of us who have walked these halls, Jean-Robert Gauthier is no stranger, having represented Ottawa-Vanier in the House of Commons for the past 22 years. What some people in this chamber may not know is that he has a long linkage to the Senate. He was raised by his grandfather, Louis-Philippe Gauthier, who was the Deputy Clerk of the Senate from 1926 to 1946. Thus, he was imbued with this place during the early days of his upbringing.

Senator Gauthier was first elected to the House of Commons in 1972. He has served in a number of important capacities in the other place, including Opposition Whip, House Leader for his party, Chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and, most recently, Co-chair, along with our colleague Senator MacEachen, of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Foreign Policy.

Honourable senators, through those years, he gained a reputation as one of the staunchest advocates and supporters of the institution of Parliament and the respect of those who work within it, both in the House of Commons and the Senate. His defence of the rights of francophone Ontarians and of official bilingualism has been central to his parliamentary contribution; something which, I am sure, he will continue vigorously in his new role.

Honourable senators, we also wish to extend a warm welcome to Senator John Bryden who joins us from Bayfield, New Brunswick, where he has established a strong and impressive background in business, law and public life.

It is no coincidence that Senator Bryden's escort into the chamber today included our colleague Senator Robichaud. Their connection goes back to the 1960s when Senator Robichaud was Premier of the Province of New Brunswick. Senator Thériault, for that matter, was the Minister of Health and Welfare at the same time. From 1969 to 1970, John Bryden served as Deputy Minister of Justice. It was during that period, under the former premier that New Brunswick passed its official languages law.

Senator Bryden also worked with Premier Frank McKenna in 1988-89 as Commissioner of Economic Development before moving on to other pursuits, including running his own management consulting firm for the past two years. Knowing his enthusiasm for hockey, I believe he will bring new meaning to the words "Ottawa Senator" for a certain local hockey team.

Given Senator Bryden's experience in a variety of the facets of New Brunswick life, both public and private, his participation here will be of great benefit to his province.

Both of our new colleagues come to the Senate determined to make a contribution in this place. On behalf of all my colleagues, we look forward to receiving your good advice as this chamber deals with many challenging issues in the months ahead.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Gauthier's appointment brings to 19 the number of senators whose political careers include membership in the House of Commons. I have no doubt that his 22 years in the other place have prepared him well for the rigorous duties in this chamber, and that we will be the beneficiaries of the wisdom he has accumulated. Certainly, we have profited from the many years his fellow ex-commoners have spent over there preparing for the Senate.

[Translation]

Like many of his former colleagues in the other place, Senator Gauthier has been hard on the Senate at times. In fact, few are the members of Parliament who do not, at one time or another, enjoy poking fun at us, and even making derogatory remarks about us. As soon as they join us, however, even the harshest of them realize in no time that their old target is far from deserving such nonsense, and no doubt Senator Gauthier will soon join the other former members of the House of Commons who have dropped long ago the unrealistic image of the Senate they used to enjoy conveying, as opposed to the reality that now surrounds them.

[English]

Senator Bryden also brings to us vast political involvement, gained both, in theatrical parlance, "behind the scenes" and "front and centre." His commitment to his party could not be more clearly focused. It is as a committed supporter of the Liberal Party that he comes to this place.

Political parties form one of the foundations of our parliamentary system, and commitment and informed loyalty to them are essential components to their proper functioning. While the Senate, by its very nature, is a political chamber, it tries to carry out its responsibilities in as non-partisan a manner as possible, and usually succeeds. This allows even the most loyal party member to assess opposite views with a certain detachment and objectivity.

Such openness can even lead to the questioning of one's own party's position on certain issues. If Senator Bryden's support of the Liberal Party Red Book is as reflective as that of the Liberal government, I am sure we can look forward to some interesting and even surprising observations from him in due course.

This side is delighted to welcome Senators Gauthier and Bryden. We wish them well as they assume their new responsibilities.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I wish to extend my congratulations to my member of Parliament, now Senator Gauthier, who has served our constituency extremely well in that capacity for the last 10 years, so much so that I will be able to vote against his successor with a great deal more enthusiasm.

VISITORS IN GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to draw your attention to the presence in the gallery of a delegation of citizens from the Czech Republic, led by Dr. Milan Uhde, Chairman of the Deputies.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

STUDY OF LOW-LEVEL MILITARY FLIGHTS OVER LABRADOR— DENIAL OF OPPORTUNITY FOR ANTHROPOLOGIST TO GIVE FULL TESTIMONY

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, recently several of my colleagues on this side of the house have raised the issue of Canadian policy towards the abuse of human rights in foreign countries, and have done so very eloquently, I might add.

Today I should like to comment on what I believe to be a disregard of aboriginal rights, as well as human rights, closer to home. The environmental assessment review of low-level flights by military aircraft over Labrador has proceeded, despite criticism that the review is badly biased. The Leader of the Government in the Senate informed us on October 4 that the Minister of the Environment would act to replace panel members if there was one shred of evidence of bias on the part of the panel.

Let me recount what happened in the panel hearing. The panel reconvened in late October to hear testimony of technical experts, and sought to evaluate the environmental impact statement of the Department of National Defence on its proposal to increase the number of low-level flights over aboriginal lands in Labrador. Among those experts was an anthropologist from Memorial University, deemed to be qualified, unbiased and prepared to evaluate socioeconomic impacts identified in the DND report vis-à-vis guidelines established to direct the report. However, when it came time to present observations directly to the panel, the panel chairman would not allow the anthropologist to complete her statement. Furthermore, she was instructed prior to the hearings to make no reference to the major deficiencies she had detected.

The fundamental issue here is the failure of the Department of National Defence and the panel to pay adequate attention to the impact of increased military flights on aboriginal rights, human rights and the negotiation of outstanding land claims.

I wish now to place on the record the substance of what this expert witness attempted to say:

> For seven years a requirement to discuss the possible effects of the project on the nature of aboriginal rights contemplated in the Constitution Act, on the negotiation and settlement of land claims in the overflight area, and on human rights defined in various bills, charters and covenants was specified in the Guidelines for the Environmental Impact Study. Furthermore, DND had a statutory obligation under the EARP Guidelines Order, to comply with the guidelines established by the first Panel in 1987.

On August 19, 1994, in the 7th year of the process, the panel redefined existing guidelines in a letter to the DND project manager by stating: "...the panel agrees that it is not the appropriate body to determine whether an aboriginal right exists." Thus the panel eliminated the subject of aboriginal rights from its agenda, said nothing on human rights...but paradoxically stated that the panel would consider information on the impact of the project on the negotiation of land claims.

The technical expert had wanted to draw attention to the absurdity of the panel's position. How could the impact on land claims negotiations be considered without reference to the aboriginal rights which are the basis of the claims? How could aboriginal groups take part in a review process that so hamstrings them, and could ultimately prejudice the outcome of land claims negotiations, if DND has a third party interest in the claimed area?

I would hope that in its deliberations on the panel's future recommendations, the government will heed the unbiased observations of the Memorial University anthropologist. I would urge you to listen to the truths the panel clearly did not want to hear.

GREY CUP

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE B.C. LIONS ON WINNING THE CANADIAN PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, the Senate should note that Canada's football classic was held in Vancouver on Sunday, November 27. This year's event was the eighty-fourth contest for the Grey Cup, donated by former Governor General Earl Grey. An unusual aspect of this year's Canadian football final was that the match was held between a Canadian team composed of a majority of Canadian players, and a United States team made up almost entirely of American players.

Of course, all honourable senators know that the Canadian team was the British Columbia Lions and the U.S. team was from Baltimore. The football battle echoes the origins of North American football, which began with rugby matches between McGill University and Harvard University, and in which context the forward pass was developed.

I am delighted to see the CFL strengthened by the addition of an American presence, and I look forward to the development of a permanent north league in Canada and a south league in the United States.

By the way, the outcome of the football contest followed closely the result of the War of 1812.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

NATIONAL PROTECTED AREAS STRATEGY

INTERIM REPORT OF ENERGY, THE ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Pat Carney, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, presented the following report:

Tuesday, November 29, 1994

The Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources has the honour to present its

SEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on Wednesday, April 27, 1994, to undertake a study of the policy options available to the government to complete the network of pristine areas that represent Canada's natural regions, and of the creation of a National Protected Areas Strategy and to make recommendations thereon, now tables its interim report entitled Report on the Committee's Travel to Prairies Sites, National Protected Areas Mandate, October 16-20, 1994.

Respectfully submitted,

PAT CARNEY, P.C.
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Carney, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF FINAL REPORT DATE— REPORT OF ENERGY, THE ENVIRONMENT AND NATURAL RESOURCES COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Pat Carney, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, presented the following report:

Tuesday, November 29, 1994

The Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources has the honour to present its

EIGHTH REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on Wednesday, April 27, 1994, to undertake a study of the policy options available to the government to complete the network of pristine areas that represent Canada's natural regions and of the creation of a National Protected Areas Strategy and to make recommendations thereon, respectfully requests that the date of presenting its final report be extended from March 31, 1995 to no later than June 29, 1995.

Respectfully submitted,

PAT CARNEY, P.C.
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Carney, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

• (1430)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, November 30, 1994 at one thirty o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Petten: Before the motion is put, I should state for the Senate what our plan is for this week.

Bill C-38 will get third reading today. Senator Kelly will proceed with the debate, and , if no one else wishes to speak, I will close the debate. Bill C-48 has arrived from the other place and we will be dealing with that today. Bill C-55 should arrive today, and we will deal with it, I hope, on Thursday next. We hope to get Bill C-57, to implement the agreement establishing the World Trade Organization, by Thursday of this week. Committees will meet today and tomorrow at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

YUKON SURFACE RIGHTS BOARD BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-55, to establish a board having jurisdiction concerning disputes respecting surface rights in respect of land in the Yukon Territory and to amend other acts in relation thereto.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: When shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Petten, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading Thursday next, December 1, 1994.

STATE OF CANADIAN FINANCIAL SYSTEM

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE TO EXTEND DATE OF PRESENTATION OF FINAL REPORT OF STUDY

Hon. Michael J. Kirby: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, November 30, 1994, I will move:

> That, notwithstanding the order of reference adopted by the Senate on Thursday, February 24, 1994, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to present its final report on the present state of the financial system in Canada in the wake of the major legislative and regulatory reform which took place two years ago, no later than December 21, 1995.

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF APPROVAL FOR VARIOUS PROJECTS— NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, December 1, 1994, I will call the attention of the Senate to the absence of Senate approval for various projects in the purview of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets, and Administration.

[Translation]

QUESTION PERIOD

SCIENCE, RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

TAX CREDITS FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

In his annual report, the Auditor General mentioned that government spending on science and technology must be focussed on areas with the greatest need, opportunity and potential pay-back, and he went on to say:

> Parliamentarians have no basis on which to assess whether the government's expenditures on science and technology reflect Canadian needs and opportunities, and to hold the government accountable for results.
>
> Most research organizations we examined still need to set clear goals for their activities and foccus more on results.

We know that this expenditure is partly funded through tax deductions. Does the Department of Finance intend to exercise more complete and systematic control over tax incentives for research and development?

I ask this question because more than $5 billion are involved, as you know.

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank my colleague for his question. I must forward it to the minister in order to receive a full answer for him.

THE BUDGET

REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS— GOVERNMENT POSITION ON POSSIBLE CHANGES

Hon. Duncan J. Jessiman: Honourable senators, I address my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Last week I asked the government if, as part of its plan to reduce or eliminate the deficit, it was considering a new clawback of Old Age Security benefits based on household rather than individual income. As well, I asked if the government was considering raising the age at which Canadians begin to collect Old Age Security. While the government leader did again repeat that it is the government's goal to reduce the deficit, she did not answer my question.

However, on Monday, in The Winnipeg Sun, the Finance Minister's Parliamentary Secretary answered my question. The Sun reports that Mr. David Walker stated as follows:

> We're not about to do that to Canadians. Everybody is so sensitive about their pensions that to now raise flags about clawing back benefits or changing the age just creates a negative feeling.

Honourable senators, I should like the minister to confirm, bearing in mind the clawback on the age credit now being debated in the other place, that Mr. Walker was speaking for the government? Can the minister also advise the Senate of what other options are being considered to eliminate the annual deficits with a view to reducing the federal government's massive debt? As well, could the minister put to rest rumours of a special tax on money in RRSPs, or reductions to the RRSP limits?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with respect to the reduction of the deficit, the government's intentions remain clear and firm: The deficit will be reduced to 3 per cent of GDP in three years. In our exchange of last week, I also added that the ultimate goal of this government is to eliminate the deficit.

I have indicated in this house that there is a study in progress on the question of pensions and how Canadians can honour their obligations in future years. The intention of that study, as stated by others, including the Prime Minister, is not one that would affect current pensioners.

However, I am aware of the senator's questions on clawbacks and on RRSPs, and I must say that I cannot, nor would I attempt to, read the mind of the Minister of Finance at this point. We must wait until the budget.

Senator Jessiman: Can the Leader of the Government please tell us whether or not David Walker was speaking for the government when he gave the answer that I quoted?

Senator Fairbairn: Senator Jessiman, I want to check the statement and refer back to my colleagues.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPORTION OF NON-MILITARY ITEMS IN DEPARTMENTAL BUDGET—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John Sylvain: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is not about what is in the Auditor General's report but what is not, and should have been, in my opinion.

Representatives of the Auditor General's department appeared before the Special Joint Committee on Canada's Defence Policy and indicated that the defence budget contains a significant portion of non-military items devoted towards regional development. This led the representatives to describe the defence budget as "a defence budget plus". The reference is to pages 2719 to 2722 of the transcript of the testimony.

Will the Leader of the Government tell us what proportion of the defence budget this "plus" represents, and what it is spent on? In other words, leaving aside the amount for regional development, how much is actually spent on the military defence of this country?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Sylvain for his question. I will be pleased to pass on your question to the Minister of National Defence and return with an answer.

REVENUE CANADA

CHANGES TO EXCISE TAX ON TOBACCO PRODUCTS—INEQUALITY OF TREATMENT OF PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, when the government lowered the federal excise tax on tobacco products in February, it created a highly distorted and inequitable tax system. It not only lowered the federal tax by $5 per carton throughout the country, it also told the provinces that it would match, dollar for dollar, any reduction in provincial tobacco taxes that the provinces chose to make, up to a maximum of $10 per carton.

As a result, Canadians from the Manitoba-Ontario border west and in Newfoundland have been paying almost double the federal tax paid by those who purchase tobacco products in Ontario, Quebec or Prince Edward Island. For almost ten months now, smokers in Manitoba, for example, have paid $10.85 in federal excise tax for a carton of cigarettes and a further $2.80 GST, while consumers in Quebec have paid $5.85 in excise tax and $1.75 GST. Smokers in Ontario have paid a total of $7.66 in federal taxes each time they purchased a carton of cigarettes, while those in B.C. have paid $14.13.

The government justified this degree of inequity with the need to curb cigarette smuggling, largely in central Canada. In fact, smuggling has waned dramatically. With the passage of Bill C-11, the government is giving police forces the tools to combat a resurgence.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is this: Will the government act promptly to correct this imbalance by raising the excise tax levied in those provinces where it is far too low? When will the government act to remove what amounts to a perverse reward for smokers in those provinces where the bulk of contraband cigarettes were purchased?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Spivak for her questions, which are very detailed. I will pass on those details and find out what kind of an answer I can obtain for her.

ORGANIZATION FOR ECONOMIC COOPERATION AND DEVELOPMENT

APPOINTMENT OF DONALD JOHNSTON AS SECRETARY-GENERAL—LENGTH OF TERM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. W. David Angus: My question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Can you comment upon press reports of an hour ago that Mr. Donald Johnston has succeeded in becoming the next Secretary-General of the OECD, but on a watered-down basis whereby he will have to wait for 18 months before he assumes office, and also that his term will be shortened by 18 months?

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, Senator Angus is a jump ahead of me. I have been concentrating on our new senators and I have missed this news bulletin. However, I will certainly seek it out and confirm it for you.

Senator Angus: At the same time, will the Leader of the Government clarify for us whether there indeed has been some diminution of the function because of the compromise which is alleged to have been worked out?

Senator Fairbairn: I will be pleased to find that information for you.

ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS TABLED

SCOTIA SYNFUELS PROJECT—GRANDFATHERING OF INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 27 on the Order Paper—by Senator MacDonald (Halifax).

KOREAN AND SECOND WORLD WAR—INFORMATION FROM SOVIET ARCHIVES ON DISPOSITION OF ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL MISSING IN ACTION

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government) tabled the answer to Question No. 11 on the Order Paper—by Senator Marshall.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

MARINE TRANSPORTATION SECURITY BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Willam J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-38, to provide for the security of marine transportation.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I appreciate this opportunity to speak to Bill C-38, which is the Marine Transportation Security Bill. In essence, this bill follows through on commitments made by Canada in ratifying the so-called Montego Bay Convention of 1982, an initiative of the International Maritime Organization which arose as a direct consequence of the Achille Lauro affair.

My colleague Senator St. Germain recounted the history of this initiative during his remarks at second reading, and also commented, quite properly I think, on the 12 years it has taken from the signing of the convention through to Canada's ratification and, finally, to this bill.

The bill addresses gaps or inadequacies in our current legislative framework and, as such, it is only a first step. However, it is an important first step.

I will not forget, honourable senators, during the hearings of the Senate committee on terrorism, when asked how the government would respond to a specific type of terrorist incident, officials would rhyme off the applicable statutes and trot out their flow charts and diagrams to show how things would work. The problem was that when committees analyzed what really happened in actual terrorist incidents, things had not worked that way at all.

Too often, in government, we think we have solved the problem if we simply pass new legislation. New legislation is a physical manifestation of having done something, but legislation is almost always only one step in the process, and not necessarily the most important step.

My point is that this legislation is meaningless unless the government backs it up with effective enforcement and intelligence systems, response mechanisms, and works out jurisdictional overlaps and uncertainties which are bound to arise should there be, for example, a terrorist incident on a ship in a Canadian port. I will return to that point in a moment.

Honourable senators, I do support this legislation. The Senate committee on terrorism tried to hammer home three fundamental principles: First, we should get ahead of terrorism and terrorist incidents and not allow ourselves to be constantly in a reactive mode. Second, we should straighten out the jurisdictional overlaps and uncertainties which exist and which are endemic to our system of government but which detract from our ability to respond to acts or threats of violence. Third, let us make sure that the tools we need to respond to acts of violence are available when we need them.

One of the tools — and, I repeat, only one — is a modern, coherent and comprehensive legislative framework. This bill does get ahead of things. There have been no recent maritime incidents affecting Canadians. This is not to say that there is no threat. About 85 per cent of all passengers on cruise ships which dock at Canadian ports or traverse Canadian waters are U.S. citizens. We all know the kind of unwanted attention Americans can attract in this increasingly fragmented and hostile world where the U.S. is the only remaining superpower and, often, international policeman. We have an obligation to assure reasonable safety and security for all foreigners who traverse our waters and visit our ports; no less an obligation than that owed to our own citizens.

• (1440)

We must also be wary of and vigilant against the increasing threat from ecoterrorism. Ecoterrorism includes the threat of piracy and destruction of ships carrying ecologically damaging materials such as oil, nuclear waste and liquid natural gas. Can honourable senators imagine the attractiveness and the use to which a target along the lines of the Exxon Valdez could be put by terrorists? A recent publication by CSIS concluded that ecoterrorism has now entered "the list of threats to national and international security." Bill C-38 comes none too soon!

Bill C-38 is a positive step in resolving jurisdictional problems that historically bedevil the security enforcement sector. The current legislative framework relating to maritime incidents of violence is fragmented. Different acts apply depending on the ship's flag, the type of vessel, the port, the waterway or marine facility, whether the ship is inside or outside Canadian territorial waters, and so on. As was identified by the Senate committees on terrorism, the use of the various legal frameworks results in different security regimes, more confusion amongst authority, less compliance and higher costs. The variety of legislation delays frustrates rather than expedites responses to threatening situations.

Bill C-38 addresses all of that, but, I repeat, arrangements, protocols or memoranda of understanding must be in place at the working level, or the legislation will be for naught.

I am reminded of the Senate committees' review of the Security Act, which clearly vests responsibility for the protection of so-called "internationally protected persons" within federal jurisdiction, largely the RCMP. A number of provincial and municipal police forces, one after the other, appeared before the committee and, in effect, said, "It doesn't matter. If there is an incident in our territory, it's ours to handle." These turf battles can simply not be allowed when lives, property and national interests are at stake.

I chose to speak at third reading because I support the bill in principle and detail and have nothing to add to its contents. However, I do want to convey a message to government and to government officials at this time: With passage of this bill, do not rest on your laurels. The job is not done. Resources must be committed; agreements and understandings must be reached; response mechanisms, systems and procedures must be put in place; private sector operators and associations must be engaged. There still is much work to do.

For example, during the debate on this legislation in the other place, a government member stated that Bill C-38 would allow Canada to intervene in incidents in international waters involving a Canadian flagship or a ship with Canadian passengers. I ask my colleagues who represent the government: Do we have the military capability to do so? If not, and I suspect that that is the case, what is being done to create and test that capability? Without that work and without that backup, Bill C-38 can simply become a symbol of intent without real substance.

It has taken us over a decade to follow through on our commitments under the Montego Bay Convention. I can imagine no reason for this delay, other than complacency. Complacency appears to be a feature of this area. In 1987 and 1989, the Senate committees identified many areas in which work had to be done and in which reforms should be made. Some things have been done. Many things remain undone.

I sincerely hope that it does not take a repetition of the bloody acts of terrorism that we experienced not too long ago — the explosion of an Air India plane, the Turkish Embassy incident and the attempted assassination of a Punjabi minister — to shake our system out of its complacency and lethargy and ensure that everything that needs to be done is being done to ensure the safety of Canadians and of visitors to Canada.

Hon. William J. Petten (Acting Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to compliment Senator Kelly on his remarks on the bill, to assure him that we are not being complacent and that we are working to move this legislation along quickly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES BILL

SECOND READING

The Hon. Colin Kenny moved second reading of Bill C-48, to establish the Department of Natural Resources and to amend related acts.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-48 is enabling legislation for the new Department of Natural Resources which amalgamates two previous departments — the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Department of Forestry. This is a logical and practical step which demonstrates the government's commitment to Canada's resource industries. The amalgamation of these two departments has already saved $16 million.

Senator Bonnell: Where is it?

Senator Kenny: Well, it is floating around out there.

The energy, mining and forestry sectors make important contributions to Canada's economic health and standard of living. Together, these industries represented 14 per cent of Canada's gross domestic product in 1992. They provide jobs for 1 in 13 Canadians and sustain the economies of almost 500 communities across the country.

Bill C-48 calls for the amalgamation of two existing acts of Parliament; acts which have been in existence in one form or another for many years. It does not extend additional powers to the Government of Canada. The duties, powers and functions conferred upon the department and the Minister of Natural Resources are only in areas over which Parliament has already given jurisdiction. This new department will continue to work in partnership with the provinces to make our natural resource sectors both sustainable and competitive.

There have been many examples of such partnerships, honourable senators. For instance, the Canada Council of Forest Ministers has recently agreed to a framework for future cooperation in areas of science and technology, international trade issues, regional development, aboriginal forestry and national coordination. Another example of successful partnership has been in the field of geomatics. Under the five-year, $16-million Geographic Information Technology Development program, the federal and provincial governments have shared equally in the cost of acquiring digital mapping data. This program, which was instituted by Geomatics Canada, has been so successful that it has now been extended and expanded to include partnerships with utilities in the private sector. In the mining sector, the Whitehorse Mining Initiative Leadership Accord was signed recently in Victoria. This accord sets out principles and goals to assist all interested parties in their efforts to ensure a prosperous mining industry that is committed to sustainable development.

Honourable senators, Bill C-48 makes explicit reference to the minister's duty to foster the sustainable development of Canada's energy, mineral and forest resources. This means that the government's economic, social and environmental objectives will be factored into all decisions about resource development, management and use.

• (1500)

One way that the department will pursue sustainable development is through the work of its scientific branches. Natural Resources Canada will continue to have the science and technology arms through the Canadian Forest Service, the Geological Survey of Canada, the Canada Centre for Mineral Energy and Technology, and Geomatics Canada.

In the energy area, the department is working closely with the provinces and other groups to develop a national action program that achieves Canada's goals with respect to climate change. In addition, a major responsibility of the new department is to promote energy efficiency as a means of limiting greenhouse gas emissions.

Finally, honourable senators, Bill C-48 is a housekeeping bill that combines two separate departments. The bill emphasizes cooperation with the provinces that own the natural resources so Canadians can obtain maximum benefits in the future.

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is my intention today to speak to several pieces of legislation at the same time in the interests of efficiency and brevity. These are bills that are either before us or will be brought before us dealing with reorganization of government. Some of them can be expected at any time, and they all deal with reorganization, in one way or another, with various departments.

You will notice that I said "reorganization of government" and not specifically "this government". That is because in reality what we are debating here today is an initiative begun by the previous Progressive Conservative government, and shamelessly adopted with some adjustments and implemented by this Liberal government.

The bills are: Bill C-46, to establish the Department of Industry, Bill C-48, to establish the Department of Natural Resources, Bill C-52, to establish the Department of Public Works and Government Services. That last one we are watching very carefully because there are some provisions in it that essentially deal with privatizing and allowing certain components of this department to compete with the private sector. If it arrives here in its present form, you may be assured that it will not receive a smooth ride. As well, we can expect Bill C-53, to establish the Department of Canadian Heritage.

These four bills, honourable senators, plus two other bills, Bill C-49, to establish the Department of Agriculture and Agri-food, and Bill C-35, to establish the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, which have already passed through this chamber, make up the enabling legislation required to accommodate a restructuring of the various ministries and government departments.

Honourable senators, while I will not dwell at length on the issue of dropping the requirement for these departments to report on an annual basis to Parliament, it will be raised in the committees dealing with these reorganization bills. It is rather curious that this would happen. Members of both houses are interested in knowing why that provision is not there. Previously, these departments reported on an annual basis to Parliament. In the case of the bill before us, the provision is not dropped completely, but it becomes a discretionary matter for the minister.

Honourable senators, it is important to put into perspective today what exactly we are being asked to do in passing these pieces of legislation.

On June 25, 1993, then Prime Minister Kim Campbell ushered in what was to be recorded as an historic reorganization in the way the federal government operated in this country. At the time, the Prime Minister said that it:

> ...represents a first step toward providing Canadians with a leaner, more accessible and more efficient government to meet the challenges facing Canada over the balance of the decade and into the 21st century.

The key changes announced in June 1993 included a reduction in the number of cabinet posts from 35 to 25 — 10 positions were eliminated, including all "Minister of State" positions. This brought the size of the federal cabinet to its lowest level since 1963.

With a smaller cabinet, the cabinet decision-making process could be streamlined. Six cabinet committees were eliminated, including the Priorities and Planning Committee. The Progressive Conservative government's efforts at restructuring did not stop there. They took aim at the size and complexity of the bureaucracy, and by merging and redesigning several government departments, the total number was reduced from 32 to 23. Eight departments were created or fundamentally redesigned, three received new mandates, and another 15 were merged or broken up. No department was spared this streamlining exercise.

Honourable senators, allow me to remind you of some of the changes announced in June of 1993: the creation of a new human resources and labour portfolio that included the Department of Labour, responsibility for employment and training, income support programs and post-secondary education transfers. In addition, the new portfolio was responsible for immigration settlement programs and would have played a key role in the setting of target levels and selection criteria.

Growing public concern over the protection of society was reflected in the creation of a new Ministry of Public Security, and that included federal police, security, corrections, and parole responsibilities. The new portfolio also included those parts of the immigration program relating to operations abroad, application processing, and enforcement. It was envisioned that this portfolio would eventually include customs responsibilities related to border control.

Next is the creation of a new Industry and Science Ministry that was responsible for telecommunications policy and programs, business framework, competition, and consumer protection. In addition, the Minister of Agriculture was re-mandated to reflect the additional responsibilities of food processing and manufacturing. The portfolio was renamed Agriculture and Agri-food.

Federal programs supporting a distinctive sense of Canadian identity were brought together in a new Canadian Heritage Ministry. It combined the responsibility for official languages, arts, culture, broadcasting, parks and historic sites, and programs in areas of multiculturalism and citizenship, amateur sport and the National Capital Commission.

The resource responsibilities of the federal government were reorganized into a Natural Resources portfolio combining the Departments of Forestry and Energy, Mines and Resources. A new Government Services portfolio was created by combining the former Departments of Public Works and Supply and Services.

Honourable senators, that was the new picture of government in this country beginning June 25, 1993. There is no denying the fact that it was a major initiative with dramatic effects. At the time, our friends opposite were not impressed with Ms Campbell's efforts. Paul Martin, our future Minister of Finance, stated shortly after the unveiling of the Campbell government:

> They have created complete chaos in the place. Government departments do not know which way is up.

Mr. Martin went on to add that Ms Campbell had no mandate to make such substantial changes and that the Liberals disagreed with a number of them. Others, like Marcel Massé, former Privy Council Clerk and now minister in the Chrétien cabinet, claimed that restructuring was done too quickly, that there was no plan.

Honourable senators, while we knew at the time that it was simply opposition posturing, it was not long before it became very clear that the Liberals did, in fact, agree with the Tory plan.

With the election of the Red Book Liberals in October, and given their opposition to Kim Campbell's restructuring efforts, there was naturally some interest in the shape of Prime Minister Chrétien's first cabinet. On November 4, 1993, the Prime Minister announced his cabinet and, in so doing, outlined his vision of how he saw the country being governed in the next four years. What a disappointment for those Liberals who were expecting a new, dynamic vision of how the country should be run. What we got, and what is being debated here today, is a confirmation that Kim Campbell was on the right track with her reorganization initiatives. Prime Minister Chrétien has adopted almost 90 per cent of the Campbell model for the federal government, and where he differs reveals a return to the old-style, big-government liberalism.

An examination of the organization bills currently before this Parliament is revealing. Bill C-46, a bill establishing the Department of Industry, creates a ministry almost identical in its responsibilities to that of the previous Department of Industry and Science, with one exception: Instead of a minister responsible for science and small business, there now is a Secretary of State (Science, Research and Development). I will have more to say about that Secretary of State position later. I was amused with the second reading remarks of Dennis Mills, Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Industry, who, after reading out the new list of responsibilities for the reorganized department, commented:

> Never before has there been such a comprehensive revamping.

He could not have read Prime Minister Campbell's press release any better.

Bill C-48, which is before us today, establishes the Department of Natural Resources, creating an identical department to the one announced by Kim Campbell on June 25 of last year, without even a suggestion of gratitude.

With regard to Bill C-49, to establish the Department of Agriculture and Agri-food, Prime Minister Chrétien made as many changes to this department, as established by his predecessor, as he made to the NAFTA agreement prior to his signing it; that is to say, nil.

With Bill C-52, to establish the Department of Public Works and Government Services, the Liberal government has taken the bold initiative of adding the words "Public Works" to the original department name of "Government Services" announced by Ms Campbell. Perhaps this had to do with wanting to ensure the maintenance of the Liberal tradition of spending "public" moneys on various private "works".

Bill C-53, to establish the Department of Canadian Heritage, is still responsible for official languages, arts, culture, multiculturalism, parks, and amateur sports, as was the case in Ms Campbell's administration. The difference is that responsibility for the Registrar General is now with the Department of Industry, and responsibility for citizenship is combined with the immigration portfolio.

Honourable senators, I said earlier that the Chrétien structure of government is almost identical to that of his predecessor — almost, but not quite. There are two areas of notable divergence. These are the dismantling of the Department of Public Security, in order to recreate the Departments of Immigration and Citizenship and the Solicitor General, and the introduction of secretaries of state.

The establishment of the public security portfolio was, at the time, probably the most controversial aspect of the Campbell restructuring initiative. The common cry from our friends opposite was that by placing some immigration programs within this new ministry, the government was signalling a shift to tougher enforcement and a "keep the people out" mentality. The then Leader of the Opposition called this:

> ...a cynical manipulative move. The message sent out to immigrants goes against the traditional Canadian approach of tolerance and openness to immigration.

Of course, nothing could be further from the truth.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Who was the Leader of the Opposition?

Senator Berntson: I believe the Leader of the Opposition at that time is now the Prime Minister of Canada.

This reorganization brought together under one roof functions which in the past had always complemented one another and allowed for greater integration of those functions. For example, customs officers have always played an important role at the border in identifying and referring people to immigration officers, and immigration officials have always relied on the support of people from the Solicitor General's portfolio to carry out their duties. Close cooperation is the key.

The Progressive Conservative government, as honourable senators here will recall, had recently set out its immigration policies in Bill C-86, continuing its commitment toward three key policy objectives: reuniting families, offering refuge to those who need Canada's protection, and selecting immigrants who can benefit Canada's economy. This did not change with the establishment of the Department of Public Security.

The new Liberal regime thought otherwise and hastily reverted to the old, original departmental formula of Immigration and Citizenship and Solicitor General. It is of course their choice, but I find it ironic that no sooner is the stand-alone immigration portfolio reborn than the new minister is bringing in the most restrictive set of policies seen in recent memory, striking at the heart of Canada's immigration system, family reunification, not to mention contradicting a Red Book promise of increasing levels to 1 per cent of the population. I wonder which government is being "cynical and manipulative" now? I would hate to think that Canadians were duped into believing that what was important in the field of immigration was not the policy itself but how that policy was to be delivered.

The second area of significant difference between the Campbell government and the Chrétien government was the advent of secretaries of state. On June 25, 1993, Prime Minister Kim Campbell announced that all minister of state positions had been abolished. On November 4, 1993, Prime Minister Chrétien brought them back with a twist. The secretaries of state, as he called them, would not be members of cabinet but would be members of the ministry and, as such, would be bound by collective responsibility. In describing the role of the secretary of state, a press release issued on November 4 reads:

> The new position of Secretary of State has been created to provide additional support to Cabinet Ministers...
>
> Secretaries of State will be paid 75% of a Cabinet Minister's salary. In addition to their staff as members of Parliament, they will have two special assistants and a secretary. All other support staff will be provided by the office of the portfolio Minister or by the department to which they have been assigned, as appropriate.
>
> For legal purposes the Secretaries of State have been formally appointed as Ministers of State to Assist.

Honourable senators, it is my belief that the introduction of secretaries of state, or the reintroduction of ministers of state, is simply a shell game. Publicly, the Prime Minister claims to have the smallest cabinet in recent memory while in reality, with 30 members, full-time and part-time, he is nowhere close.

• (1520)

Prime Minister Campbell understood that a smaller cabinet would increase the workload for individual ministers. To compensate, she indicated a desire to increase the role of parliamentary secretaries. "Parliamentary secretaries will play a stronger and more visible role in support of ministers," states the press release of June 25, 1993. There is no role mentioned for parliamentary secretaries in the unveiling of the Chrétien cabinet.

My friends opposite will say I am wrong, that a secretary of state is not the same as a cabinet minister. However, let us look at the facts: Do the secretaries of state travel, as do their cabinet colleagues, on government jets? The answer is yes. Do they have access to government car pools? The answer is yes. Do they have the ability to play a role in the cabinet decision-making process? The answer is yes. Are they called honourable ministers? The answer is yes.

My last point, honourable senators, is really a technical question regarding the position of secretary of state. Under what auspices have these positions been created and how are they being funded? The press release of November 4 indicates that legislation is required to formally establish these positions. It has been over a year since their inception and, to my knowledge, nothing has been passed nor is anything forthcoming of which I am aware. Formalizing these positions would at least allow the government to introduce an original piece of legislation, not something which has been brought out of the past, drafted by the previous Campbell and Mulroney governments.

Honourable senators, you may ask what then is my point? What does it matter how many members make up the Chrétien cabinet? It matters because, while in opposition and now while in government, the Liberal Party and the Liberal government has taken great delight in extolling how they are so different than those terrible Tories. A Liberal government would be smaller. Ministerial office budgets would be slashed and the staffs of these offices would be greatly reduced.

Let us look at the promises and the reality: a smaller government? As already explained, with 22 full-time cabinet ministers and eight part-timers, the Liberal government can hardly claim a victory on that promise. Next, slashed office budgets and less political staff? An examination of the Main Estimates for 1992-93 and 1994-95 reveal some interesting statistics. In 1992-93, the last full fiscal year of the Mulroney government, it cost $39.8 million to support 39 ministers. This breaks down to an average of $1.02 million per minister. For fiscal 1994-95, the Chrétien government has budgeted $25 million for 22 full-time cabinet ministers, not including secretaries of state. That works out to an average of $1.1 million per minister. So much for the slashed budgets for political staffers and operating costs. The Prime Minister can still claim the Red Book promised savings of over $10 million, but it is thanks to his predecessor who showed him the way to do it.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Hear, hear!

Senator Berntson: As for political staff, some ministers have been quite ingenious at circumventing this restriction, going through the back door. As has been reported, a popular route is to use departmental funds to hire political staffers. In this fashion, the hiring does not show up in a ministerial office budget.

I wish to be clear here, honourable senators. I am not against the hiring of political staff when required, or the need for a cabinet with secretaries of state. That should be the choice of the government of the day. I do, however, disagree strongly with the juxtaposing of these decisions in a holier-than-thou attitude with those of the previous government. In the last campaign, the Liberal Party made all sorts of promises relating to the size and operational aspects of its government, should it be elected. Canadians are now witnessing a systematic reversal of all of these promises. "A different structure to government" is really the same as presented by Kim Campbell. "A smaller cabinet" is really larger. "A smaller ministerial office budget for political staff" has not become a reality. In fact, the use of departmental budgets that can be almost limitless makes this type of hiring more difficult to monitor.

Colleagues, the rhetoric and the hypocrisy from the new government will soon have to end. The Liberal Party was elected to govern Canada for the next four years and, as we know only too well in this chamber, their first year has not been very productive, to say the least. They were elected on a series of promises: A Liberal government would scrap the GST. I have three questions, honourable senators. What will replace it? When? Where? A Liberal government would renegotiate NAFTA. Whoops! Did I say "renegotiate"? A Liberal government would review the appointment process. Is that before or after Justice Hugessen's inquiry into the Immigration and Refugee Board? A Liberal government would end double dipping. When?

We are well aware of the promises, but where is the action? Where is the legislation? If it were not for Kim Campbell's initiative in June of 1993, the few bills that are trickling before us would not be here. This government should stop trying to make borrowed ideas look like their own, whether they be trade policy or the structure of government, and get on with the business of governing Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Kenny, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources.

• (1530)

EUTHANASIA AND ASSISTED SUICIDE

EXTENSION OF FINAL REPORT DATE— REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ADOPTED AS AMENDED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the third report of the Special Senate Committee on Euthanasia and Assisted Suicide, presented in the Senate on November 24, 1994.

Hon. Joan Neiman moved the adoption of the report.

She said: Honourable senators, last February, when this house approved the formation of a committee to study the legal, ethical, and social aspects of euthanasia and assisted suicide, it directed us to make our final report on December 15 of this year. At that time, of course; the deadline seemed realistic and achievable. In the interim, our committee has worked long hours and heard from numerous witnesses. To date, we have heard somewhere over 100 witnesses.

Part of our mandate has been to involve and inform the public. We have had an enormous public response, to the extent that at this point we are having to tell people who want to come before us and give us their opinions that we no longer have the time. We are trying to select witnesses who bring a perspective that we have not already heard sometimes two and three and four different times. At this point, we still have witnesses, and we will be hearing from them during the next few weeks. In the final week before the House adjourns on December 16, we will be hearing from both the Minister of Health and the Minister of Justice.

We are therefore asking for an extension until March 15, 1995, in order to give us sufficient time to prepare the kind of report that this subject deserves.

Before asking for your approval, with leave, I should like to amend my original motion of the other day, as follows:

> That the report be amended by adding the following words: "and that the Committee retain all powers necessary to publicize the findings of the Committee contained in the Final Report until March 30, 1995."

I am asking to amend the original motion on the advice of some of my colleagues, who tell me that when we do make our final report on March 15, the committee will be functus and can no longer operate. This causes difficulties, particularly in trying to complete the publicity attendant to the tabling of the report. This amendment will give us a couple weeks' cushion to tidy up that part of the necessary sequence to the tabling of the report.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Would the honourable senator take a question?

Senator Neiman: Certainly, senator.

Senator Di Nino: Will the extension to the time also require an extension to the budget?

Senator Neiman: Yes, it will. We will be putting a supplementary budget before the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration for consideration. It will be quite small in comparison to what is usually asked for when dealing with such reports.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to speak to the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. senators: Agreed.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I wish to address the request for an extension. It is clear that this Senate committee, which is examining the issues of euthanasia, assisted suicide and, although this was not mentioned in the order of reference, the question of palliative care, is doing groundbreaking work. So far, no parliamentary committee, in the House of Commons or in the Senate, has considered these issues, which are a matter of considerable public debate.

The committee received its order of reference in February, if I am not mistaken, and has been very diligent in its analysis of these issues and all the considerations and parameters involved.

Personally, I would not really mind if the chair of the committee were to come back to the Senate in February or March and ask for another extension.

As I said just now, we are doing groundbreaking work in this area. These are literally matters of life and death. They are fundamental issues that go to the very heart of our social values, of the kind of country we want. They concern our relationship with others as individuals, the relationship of the individual with society, and the respect society should have for the individual and for life itself.

Of course I will support the motion of Senator Neiman, the chair of the committee. I do not want the committee to feel rushed to finish its work. I do not think deadlines should be set, because the question is too important to be treated superficially. The committee and its members should have a chance to consider all the aspects and repercussions of this question.

I agree, and we humbly admit, that we do not have the expertise to explore certain areas in committee, except perhaps for Senators Keon and Desmarais who are both physicians and are following our progress most diligently. Senator Desmarais is not an official member of the committee, but he has taken it on himself to follow very closely the debate on these issues within the committee.

We do not have specific expertise in pharmaceutical research, for instance, including the development of substances that would reduce human suffering, especially in life's last stages when the pain is sometimes unbearable.

There is also the matter of jurisprudence. Senator Beaudoin is more knowledgeable than I am, since he himself is an eminent legal expert. Therefore, there are areas that will require further research and, in any case, our committee will be making recommendations to that effect.

I think that the committee should feel free, not necessarily to take undue advantage of the time and resources granted by the Senate, but to continue its work beyond the date requested, if necessary. In other words, I am giving advance notice that if we have to ask for another extension, I would not want anyone to wonder what is going on in this committee. Did they not have enough time to do their job and do it well?

It is not a matter of time or money we are dealing with here. It is not an environmental issue, although consideration of environmental issues requires a great deal of time and substantial resources. The question of euthanasia, assisted suicide and palliative care is such a fundamental one. It touches on morals, ethics, the law, as well as other sectors. The committee should have all the freedom it needs to feel comfortable and submit the best possible report in the circumstances.

There is no doubt that this report will have a very serious impact on public opinion, which is now rather confused by all kinds of decisions made by our courts, and by truly regrettable and tragic incidents. The role we want to assume in studying this issue is to shed light on the various concepts of euthanasia, assisted suicide and palliative care.

That is why, in supporting Senator Neiman's motion, I urge the authorities in place, who sometimes put pressure on committees to work faster and submit their reports to the Senate, to go easy this time.

We will probably manage to complete our investigation and draft our report by March 15. That is very likely, and would be desirable. This is not a subject we want to be immersed in indefinitely, believe me! It is enough to face the vital problems of daily life without being wrapped up in death and dying for weeks and months at a time. I am anxious to get it over with. I, too, will have to die someday, and that will be enough.

That said, we want to do a good job for the Senate and for all Canadians. Therefore, do not put too much pressure on us, and please give us all the time we need to do a good job.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: It was moved by Senator Neiman, seconded by Senator Roux, that in amendment the following words be added to the report:

> ...and that the committee retain all powers necessary to publicize the findings of the committee contained in the final report until March 30, 1995.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: It was moved by the Honourable Senator Neiman, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roux, that this report be adopted as amended now.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted, as amended.

STATE OF CANADIAN FINANCIAL SYSTEM

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON STUDY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the thirteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, entitled "Regulation and Consumer Protection in the Federally-Regulated Financial Services Industry: Striking A Balance," tabled in the Senate on November 22, 1994.

Hon. Michael J. Kirby: Honourable senators, in rising to comment on this report, I wish to begin by making a couple of observations.

First, the recommendations in the report represent a very strong consensus among committee members on both sides of the chamber, although, as you will gather from a number of other comments which will be made in this debate, not necessarily complete unanimity. However, there was certainly a strong consensus on every one of the recommendations.

Second, I wish to thank Senator Angus. He and I were assigned the task of drafting the final report. Senator Angus, I have discovered, is an extremely meticulous lawyer. I am neither a lawyer — for which I am often grateful — nor am I as meticulous as he is. The many days he spent editing the report led to a document which is considerably more readable than it would have been had he not been working with me.

Honourable senators, I want to address three major issues in the report that have led to considerable comment, partly in the media, partly by special interest groups. Then I will leave to other senators, who I know intend to participate in the debate, explanations of some of the more detailed subjects in the report.

Before addressing these three issues, however, first I want to establish the principles upon which the report was founded. Essentially, we tried to strike a balance on two very difficult issues. The first is the extent to which the regulatory system governing Canada's financial institutions, both deposit-taking institutions and the life and health insurance firms, ought to be strong and, on the other hand, flexible.

The problem with an excessively rigid system is that while it ultimately guarantees that there will never be failures, it also guarantees that it will be impossible for Canadian financial institutions to compete in an increasingly competitive and global business. In other words, to tie the hands of Canadian businessmen in the financial services sector is to make it impossible for them to compete internationally.

On the other hand, if your regulatory system is too weak or too flexible, you inevitably end up with too many failures. The result of that is a significant cost on Canadian consumers, whether they be depositors or people who are buying products from life and health insurance companies.

In this report we have tried to strike a reasonable balance between those two extremes: a too rigid regulatory system and a too weak one.

The second balance we attempted to achieve was between consumer protection on the one hand and consumer responsibility on the other. We wanted to increase somewhat the responsibility of Canadian consumers for decisions they make as to where they deposit their money and where they buy their life and health insurance policies. At the same time, we recognize that there is a public policy responsibility to protect particularly unsophisticated consumers. Our recommendations try to offer that protection, and also ensure that sophisticated consumers have adequate information on which to make their decisions. The recommendations in this report attempt to achieve a balance between how we give adequate consumer protection on the one hand and, at the same time, begin to transfer some responsibility to consumers for decisions they make.

Honourable senators, with reference to these two balances, I now wish to comment on three specific issues in the report. The report contains 42 recommendations. Obviously, I am not coming anywhere near covering that number when I say I will simply talk about three major issues in the report.

The first major issue that the report deals with is deposit insurance. The current situation in Canada is that if you deposit money in a deposit-taking institution such as a bank or a trust company, and if that bank or trust company goes into receivership or goes bankrupt, you are guaranteed to get your money back, up to a maximum of $60,000. In other words, the first $60,000 deposited is 100 per cent insured.

I might add parenthetically that if you know how to manipulate the system, you can get substantially more than $60,000 insured. We have in the report an illustration of how, if you adjust your funds correctly, you can insure over $500,000 because of the way the rules currently read. We have proposed measures to eliminate this problem, known as "stacking."

Most significant, we have proposed a very important change in the level of deposit insurance. Under our recommendations, only $30,000 will be 100 per cent insured, instead of the current $60,000. On the next $35,000, Canadians will get 90 per cent insurance. In other words, under this proposal 10 per cent of your money between $30,000 and $65,000 is at risk.

Why did we recommend that measure? It was done because the committee feels that Canadian consumers do not place their money arbitrarily in the financial institution offering the highest rate of interest. Consumers have to make their own choices and accept some responsibility for the decisions they make with respect to where they place their money.

It is not surprising that this co-insurance proposal should come forward at this time. Those who have been in this chamber for some time know that this is the fourth time in the last decade that the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee has recommended an element of co-insurance. The proposed limits were changed this time because we had information that was not previously available.

CDIC statistics show that over 80 per cent of Canadian depositors have less than $30,000 in any single financial institution. Therefore, by saying that 100 per cent of the first $30,000 is insured, 80 per cent of depositors are automatically protected. People who are able to put more than $30,000 in a single financial institution must begin to accept some responsibility for their choices.

The report states that once the principle of co-insurance is accepted, the limits may change over time. What may occur is a move from a 10 per cent risk factor — that is, a 90-per-cent insurance factor — down to 80 per cent, or even 75 per cent.

We fundamentally believe that by introducing this element of risk, by forcing Canadian consumers to be more aware of where they are putting money, it will have a significant impact in terms of improving not only the regulatory system, but competition among institutions, which will have to compete for consumers on the basis of their financial soundness.

Other elements of co-insurance were also mentioned during the hearings. Perhaps I ought to comment on them, because of comments in the media since the report was tabled last week. First, some people argue that there should be no co-insurance; others argue that the current system should be continued, with $60,000 being fully insured. The latter argument is usually based on the theory that the $60,000 figure is a necessary element to encourage competition. The committee's response is that there is nothing magical about $60,000. If $60,000 helps competition so does $30,000. In point of fact, there are a whole variety of other ways of preserving competition in the Canadian financial services sector without using such artificial means as deposit insurance.

A minority of the committee believed that there was merit in having co-insurance start at the first dollar. In other words, instead of saying that your first $30,000 would be 100 per cent insured, you would receive only 90 per cent coverage from the first dollar put in.

That view was rejected by the majority of the committeee, in part on practical grounds that it was a politically unsalable proposition, and in part because it is important from a public policy standpoint to protect the unsophisticated investor. The unsophisticated investor who is putting a small amount of money in a bank or trust company should not be at risk from the beginning.

The other proposition discussed by the committee was the idea that instead of having a 10-per-cent risk factor, as we have proposed, a deductible system be put in place. Under this proposal you would get all your money back except, for example, the first $500 or the first $1,000.

That proposition was rejected by the committee on the grounds that it is extremely regressive. If the person who has $59,000 deposited loses $1,000, that is a much smaller penalty than the individual who has $5,000 in an institution and loses $1,000. A deductible system, by its very nature, is inherently regressive.

In summary, we have tried with our proposal to simultaneously put some burden on consumers for their decisions, thereby increasing the element of market discipline among depositors and thereby over time, thus helping to reduce the number of failures, and, at the same time, protecting the unsophisticated depositor.

The second major issue I want to discuss concerns the life and health insurance industry in Canada. At the moment, if you purchase a life and health insurance policy in Canada, you are protected by CompCorp, which is an abbreviation for the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Compensation Corporation.

CompCorp protected insurance policyholders from losing everything after the collapse of Les Coopérants and Sovereign Life. Those companies failed in 1992 and 1993 respectively. In 1994, Confederation Life failed. After the failure of Confederation Life, the life and health insurance industry argued before the committee that they wanted to replace CompCorp with a Crown corporation. Their argument was based on three principles. I wish to discuss each of those principles. The committee rejected two of them categorically and accepted only the third. We, therefore, came to quite a different conclusion than the one the industry wanted.

The first argument of the industry was that there is a need for a level playing field. That argument is based on the fact that the insurance industry now sells a lot of products similar to those sold by banks and trust companies. Since banks and trust companies have their own Crown corporation providing them with insurance, namely the CDIC, the insurance industry is entitled to the same protection.

The committee rejected this argument. First, since most of the large insurance companies have their own trust companies, and since trust companies are insured by the CDIC, an insurance company that is producing a product virtually identical to one produced by a bank or a trust company need only sell that product through a trust subsidiary. By doing so, they would be assured of the same kind of protection that the CDIC now offers.

The minute you say that you want a level playing field or fairness, people are inclined to endorse the idea without thinking through the logic of the argument. The committee took the view that, as politically catchy as the level playing field approach might be, from the insurance industry standpoint it does not logically hold water.

The second argument the life and health insurance industry made was that many of the products sold by them have an element of protection — that is, an element of insurance and an element of savings. Since these elements cannot be separated, and since you insure savings products in banks and trust companies, these products should be insured as if they were savings products. These products, however, would not be sold by banks and trust companies. If the first level playing field is truly not level, it is being replaced with another.

The committee in its report strongly takes the position that the primary reason for deposit insurance in the first place is essentially to protect the Canadian payment system so as to ensure the stability of the Canadian banking system. Insurance policies are not part of the payment system. If an insurance company goes under, it does not have a direct effect on the Canadian payment system in the way the collapse of a bank or trust company would. Therefore, to use the level playing field argument in that way does not work either, because the justification for deposit insurance does not apply to the insurance industry. Thus, the committee rejected categorically the level playing field argument of the industry.

The third argument the industry made was that the nature of CompCorp needed to be changed so that it would be able to accomplish things it cannot accomplish at present. Number one, CompCorp or its replacement needs to be independent of the operating companies.

At the moment — and this is somewhat of an incredible situation — board members of CompCorp are actually called upon to make critical decisions about the survivability of financially troubled members of their industry; that is, their competitors. Members of the CompCorp board are active members of companies that are actually competing with each other. Clearly, there is a significant conflict of interest in the current make-up of CompCorp. This conflict of interest is recognized by the industry itself. Therefore, the industry argued that whatever replaced CompCorp needed to get around that conflict of interest problem.

Second, it needed the legal authority and the financial capacity to deal with troubled companies at an earlier stage in order to do a work-out, a going-concern solution, rather than being brought in at the end after the company was essentially bankrupt.

The committee totally agreed with these two positions from the industry. Indeed, these positions were argued by many of the witnesses, not just industry witnesses but public interest witnesses and government witnesses as well.

Accordingly, we have recommended that CompCorp be replaced by an organization which we call the "Life and Health Insurance Policyholder Protection Fund." The "fund" would have three key characteristics: First, its board of directors would be absolutely independent of operating life and health insurance companies so that the conflict of interest problem would be dealt with. Second, the fund would have the ability to levy annual dues on existing companies in the industry, thereby building up a fund which the policyholder protection fund could use to deal with situations arising with respect to troubled companies prior to an actual bankruptcy.

Third, the primary role or objective of the policyholder protection fund would be to become involved at an early stage. The fund would also need access to information from the regulator at an earlier stage than is now possible for CompCorp because of the conflict of interest problems which are inherent in its organization.

The committee thus agreed unanimously with the industry's recommendations for this new CompCorp structure.

The committee did not, however, agree with the argument advanced by the industry for a Crown corporation to back life and health insurance firms. Under our proposal, the industry would turn to the policyholder protection fund. The CDIC, however, can borrow money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund; the policyholder protection fund cannot. The industry thus argued that they, too, needed to be able to borrow money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

The committee argued against this point in the report because we believe it is quite possible for companies, through the policyholder protection fund, to go into the private markets to borrow money. They do not need to borrow money from government sources. They do not even need government guarantees of any kind. This is a case where the private sector is able to solve its own problems.

For those who argue against this point of view, we cite two very important examples in the report. First, the model we propose with the policyholder protection fund is similar, but by no means identical, to the guarantee associations that exist in the United States. The life and health insurance industry there is regulated at the state level, not the national level. In many states, including the larger states, there are guarantee associations which would function similarly to the proposed policyholder protection fund.

In addition, these guarantee associations in the United States have no difficulty obtaining substantial lines of credit from financial institutions. They are able to do this because they can levy fees on member companies and, by legislation, every life and health insurance company must be a member of the fund. Thus they are able to borrow the money needed on the open market without having to access funds from the government.

That is precisely how the system operates, not only in the United States but also in the U.K. In both the United States and the United Kingdom, there are deposit insurance schemes that are very similar to the Canadian schemes. The Federal Deposit Insurance Board in the United States borrows from the U.S. government in exactly the same way that the CDIC borrows from the federal government. The Bank of England plays the same role as the Consolidated Revenue Fund in Canada. Yet, in both those jurisdictions, the corresponding protection organizations for life and health insurance policyholders are not allowed to borrow from government sources.

If one accepts the non-level playing field argument advanced by the industry with respect to non-access to the Consolidated Revenue Fund, then precisely the same non-level playing field exists both in the United States and in England. The committee concludes, therefore, that it is wrong to claim that the current system is unfair.

During the hearings, the committee members made a point of asking witnesses to give public policy reasons for the life and health insurance industry to have access to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. We understood why they would like to have access to the Consolidated Revenue Fund: There are 27 million Canadians who would like access to that fund. We understood the public policy reason for treating banks and trust companies differently; in other words, protection of the Canadian payment system. We wanted to know the public policy reason for treating this industry differently from any other industry in Canada. Not one single witness who came before the committee was able to address that question directly in any substantive way. They had only arm-waving answers. We, therefore, rejected their arguments.

The committee arrived at its conclusions with respect to the policyholder protection fund for these reasons: It gets around the conflict of interest situation which now exists with respect to CompCorp; it offers solid protection to Canadians who buy life and health insurance policies; it creates an institution through legislation; it creates an organization which will be able to assist considerably in achieving going-concern solutions for financially troubled companies before they actually go bankrupt.

The report explicitly recommends that legislation regarding the fund be introduced and passed in the first six months of next year. We have thus accepted a part of the industry's solution to its own problems, but specifically rejected all of their so-called equity issues.

The third area of the report upon which I want to comment concerns our proposals for significant additional powers for the Superintendent of Financial Institutions.

Currently, the superintendent only has two alternatives: essentially, an on/off switch. He can decide either to regulate, to jawbone, try to get people to make the changes he wants, or he can liquidate. Under current legislation, he cannot say to a troubled financial institution, "You must do this." He can say that he thinks they ought to do something or that he wishes they would do it. He can tell them that if they do not do something, dire things will happen. However, he has no range of powers other than non-intervention or liquidation.

Evidence before the committee showed that in several jurisdictions in the United States, there are statutes providing for rehabilitation. A rehabilitation scheme gives the regulator a series of steps, all the way from non-intervention to a second series of steps, all the way through to ultimately liquidating the company. The purpose of this series of steps is to allow the regulator to take action, frequently under the jurisdiction of a court, so that a company can be rehabilitated, resurrected, and then either placed under new management or sold to someone else. You frequently hear of this process under so-called Chapter 11 actions in the United States.

There is a process in Canada for companies which find themselves in similar trouble called the CCAA Act; however, it explicitly excludes financial institutions.

Clearly, the regulator needs a series of powers which will allow him to step in and facilitate an orderly transition of a company without having to go to the extreme action of seizing the assets, and yet still keep seizure as a step of last resort. One hopes that that would not have to happen often.

We recommend, then, that the regulator be given this range of rehabilitation powers and that the government take action in that area very quickly. As long as the current system exists, if a company finds itself in trouble the regulator has only the choice of non-intervention or liquidation. Clearly, a much wider range of powers can delay the Draconian step of liquidation of a company until a series of other measures have been tried.

• (1610)

Honourable senators, the report talks about three or four other issues upon which I will not comment. There is a significant amount in the report concerning the need to provide additional information to consumers. If we begin putting some of the responsibility on consumers for their purchase decisions, there is a need for them to have more information.

Several issues related to corporate accountability and corporate governance are also included in the report, and I will not touch on them today, either. I know some other senators intend to touch on those issues.

Returning to the two principles I stated at the beginning of this speech, I repeat that by imposing a small element of responsibility on consumers — just enough to force consumers to start thinking about the decisions they have to make with respect to where they deposit their money and buy their life and health insurance policies — the committee believes that this development will create a significant impact in terms of market discipline. The regulatory system will improve significantly.

On the other hand, with respect to ensuring that the regulatory system is not too rigid, there will be failures down the road. Only an excessively rigid system can prevent all failures. That is not desirable.

By giving additional powers to the regulator and moving significantly in terms of increased public information being made available, and by creating the policyholder protection fund, there will be a much wider range of options available to insurers and regulators for dealing with financially troubled companies. It is to be hoped that the Draconian situation in which ultimately a company is put into receivership can be avoided.

The implementation and establishment in law of a range of powers for the regulator will be a significant step forward in terms of helping an orderly transition and orderly consolidation of the insurance industry in Canada. Evidence has easily shown that there needs to be some modest consolidation in the industry.

Between the new policyholder protection fund and the new powers for the regulator, this transition can be achieved in a way that is not only better for shareholders of companies, but also better for policyholders of insurance companies and deposit holders in financial institutions, and thereby better for all Canadians.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. John Sylvain: Honourable senators, I would like to take this opportunity today to speak to the latest report of the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, entitled: "Regulation and Consumer Protection in the Federally-Regulated Financial Services Industry: Striking a Balance".

I would like to start by commending the entire committee on this report, and especially Senator Kirby, who guided us throughout this study. Senator Angus, my colleague on this side of the house, contributed his talents as a writer and editor, which were greatly appreciated. I want to thank him for performing this task on my behalf when I had to take part in the proceedings of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association.

The Chair explained that this report was the result of two series of related hearings. In accordance with the committee's schedule, this spring we discussed deposit insurance and the relevance of the structure of CompCorp. These discussions were purely theoretical. However, after the unexpected bankruptcy of Confederation Life, Senator Kirby and I considered whether it might be necessary to go back and explore the practical problems raised by this bankruptcy.

In other words, we have a real and important problem to consider, compared with our previous study which was purely theoretical.

[English]

My comments are meant to be taken as alternative thoughts to some of the recommendations contained in the report. The report's recommendations were reached through consensus, and I support them. However, senators both Liberal and Progressive Conservative felt that there were alternatives which in some cases could go further than the recommendations in the report. I accept the political reality that we had to make some first steps, but I wish to state on record other considerations which might be helpful.

There are three main areas I wish to address in my remarks today. They correspond with the three main parts of the report: co-insurance; the protection fund; and the relationship of CDIC and OSFI and, coincidentally, the new powers which are proposed for OSFI.

The reason for co-insurance is to introduce an element of market discipline in the public, and this discipline will spill over to the financial institutions themselves. Perhaps because of my business background, I would have gone further than the committee on this recommendation. I would have started with the deductible at dollar zero, and round it at 5 per cent right through to $60,000 — a maximum penalty, therefore, of $3,000. Deductibles and co-insurance have been part of automobile and household insurance, medical insurance and dental insurance for years in order to keep both the costs and the premiums down. They are understood by the public, and accepted.

It has been argued that co-insurance puts an undue responsibility on the small investor to look at the financial viability of the institution in which he or she is depositing money. How will an unsophisticated depositor know which institution is safe when government regulators, with all their attendant powers, cannot stop failures from occurring? These are the same people who spend $10,000 to $30,000 for a car without being automotive engineers. Most read consumer reviews on cars, discuss the matter with friends and ask their mechanics. These are the steps that have improved the quality of cars immeasurably in the past years. Would this sort of market discipline not be good for the financial sector as well?

I do not hold the opinion that fully insuring the first $30,000 of a deposit will have any great effect on the mentality of the market-place. Anyone can see that splitting a $60,000 RRSP in two will eliminate any co-insurance penalty. Since our report indicates that 80 per cent of the deposits are under $30,000 in any event, it is hard to see what has been accomplished from a practical, rather than a symbolic, point of view.

On behalf of the trust industry, the criticism is that depositors, faced with co-insurance, will simply do the same thing and move their money to one of the "too big to fail" six banks. This argument by the trust industry just does not stand up to scrutiny. It is time that the trust industry started to emphasize the new and imaginative directions which some of its members have taken, and the attractiveness of the small, well-managed trust company. They have contributed much in the past and will continue to do so in the future. The industry itself will become stronger with the adoption of our recommendations, and people who are making deposits or investments will better inform themselves because of our recommendations.

In relation to the proposed Life and Health Insurance Policyholder Protection Fund, its proposed structure addresses many of the complaints levied against CompCorp. During our hearings, it became evident that because CompCorp is made up of representatives of the insurance industry, it begins to work with a troubled insurance insurance company with the perception that there could be a conflict of interest. This needed to be eliminated, and I think that the board of the new fund does just that.

We have also recommended new powers for OSFI which will allow the regulators to intervene in order to effect a going-concern type of solution. This is also good.

Where I part company with the recommendations is in relation to the proposed source of money for the new protection fund. It is proposed that the fund be able to borrow on the capital markets if it cannot immediately finance its losses. While this is an improvement over CompCorp, it still tilts the playing field in the direction of banks and trust companies.

Borrowing on the capital market, especially when the banks could eventually be your competitors, has the potential to be a harrowing experience. The cost will evidently be much higher than for CDIC, since the lender would know that low-cost government funds are unavailable. The question of whether loans would be available at all is also raised.

• (1620)

One of the premises of the report is that deposit insurance was instituted to preserve the payment system in Canada. If that argument ever had any credibility, it was only to allow the federal government to get into the field of deposit insurance rather than leaving it to the provinces. That premise is used as a reason for the insurance industry not having the same government guarantee as the banks and the trust companies, since a failure of a major insurance company would not threaten the payment system.

Certainly the Honourable Doug Peters, Secretary of State for International Financial Institutions, in his address to the Canadian Institute last November 21, did not think highly enough of this argument even to allude to it in his fine speech. He did, however, repeat, over and over again, the phrase "policyholders' and depositors' protection" as the reason for insurance. That is the argument: We must give both the policyholders and the depositors equal protection and equal access to government support.

Let us talk about the government support. We are dealing with insurance here, and this is an area with which I feel reasonably comfortable. We have recommended paying losses to policyholders and depositors in the claims area of CDIC operations.

Let us talk about collecting the premiums. The huge amount of money that the CDIC borrowed from the Consolidated Revenue Fund will have to be paid back at the rate government borrows plus one-eighth of a percentage point. We can assume that the government will take a substantial profit. An eighth of a point on millions of dollars amounts to serious money. The banks and trust companies will not raid their treasuries to repay this money. Instead, the bank and trust customers for whom the scheme was invented will quite naturally pay the loss, as well as all the expenses associated with running the CDIC. They will pay it through their bank charges, their fees and their interest rates, as they should. That is why controlling losses by market discipline and co-insurance is so important, and why access to low-cost loans is so important.

Investing in life insurance products usually calls for the assistance of a professionally licensed advisor. I suggest it is an even more difficult decision because of the time element involved in the policy or the annuity. Why should policyholders who are, to a great percentage, the same people as the depositors, be treated differently on two different financial transactions and asked to bear higher costs in their premiums?

Our report suggests that because insurance company products contain deposit elements, they should be issued by a subsidiary trust. That seems to point us back to the days of the four pillars of the financial industry, and I doubt that that is the intention. Since CompCorp seems to be able to protect all the product lines, I am sure that whatever replaces it will develop the skills necessary to do the same.

Honourable senators, I also do not buy the argument that the establishment of a CDIC-II, which would be the equivalent of the CDIC for insurance companies, would be a drain on the taxpayers. CDIC, as presently constituted, is fully funded by the institutions which belong to it. It is not a drain on the public purse. A comparable body for the insurance industry, guaranteed by the government, would also pay its own way, just like the CDIC does. The coverage afforded policyholders would match that allowed depositors.

Another argument advanced is that the insurance industry "has the capacity to resolve its own insurance problems." This poses the argument that the banks and trust companies do not possess the same capacity, an argument with which I do not agree.

The report, however, does partly rejoin my thoughts when it says that the government should protect the policyholders. However, it adds that that should be done only after all other private sector solutions have been attempted and failed. Can you imagine the worry caused by this delay to perhaps thousands of people held in interminable suspense as to whether or not they have protection, the thousands of business deals dependant on life insurance being in force, being delayed or abandoned, and elderly annuitants wondering whether their cheques will arrive?

In regard to OSFI and CDIC, I am pleased that we recommended new powers for OSFI which will allow it to perform a rehabilitation role in relation to the insurance companies. As well, we recommended that OSFI have the power to intervene in a troubled financial institution at an earlier time than is now permitted. Both of these are positive steps and will help consumers. My concern is that we have missed a golden opportunity to recommend that these two agencies be combined.

The committee heard plenty of evidence over the past year on squabbles between the two institutions. In the last few years, the CDIC has been allowed to grow and take on some functions of the regulator. I believe that the relationship between these two institutions has deteriorated to the extent where the public is not being well served. The tension between them is counter-productive. My colleagues are convinced that the new leadership at the helm of OSFI will eliminate the duplication of function, the overlap, the additional costs, and the turf wars. I remain to be convinced. The heads of both these organizations will be back before the Banking Committee in the spring, and we will see how relations have progressed at that time.

I look forward to seeing the government's white paper on this subject, and I hope that it will address some of the points that I have mentioned.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I wish to ask a few questions of Senator Kirby, if that is appropriate.

Senator Kirby: Certainly.

Senator Di Nino: I intend to take part in the debate on Thursday, after I have had a chance to read the honourable senator's remarks. However, in your report you mention a term, "too big to fail." That remark is probably in reference to the six big banks, although one could probably include other financial institutions as well.

In your opinion, senator, if one of these major financial institutions — let us say one of the major banks — were to get itself in trouble, do you feel that the Canadian government would allow this institution to go down the drain?

Senator Kirby: Honourable senators, I cannot remember a specific reference to "too big to fail". If it is in the report, I do not remember where it is. It would just be a passing reference.

Let me deal with the honourable senator's specific question. Legally, in the current situation, if any deposit-taking institution that is federally chartered, a bank or trust company, failed, the CDIC would have responsibility for providing deposit insurance. That is what the current law says. If the honourable senator's question is as to whether the government would intervene at some point prior to it actually failing, but while it is still in serious financial trouble, that gets into the realm of speculation. Periodically over the years, industries have had troubles, and periodically governments have taken decisions to step in and save them. It is impossible to predict.

I would also argue that it is impossible to predict what the federal government would do if a Triple-A rated insurance company got into trouble. From the evidence presented to the committee, most of those big companies are so sound that it is a purely hypothetical question.

In direct answer to the honourable senator's question, if it were a bank, it would be insured by the CDIC, and if it were an insurance company, it would be insured by the policyholder protection fund that we have proposed be established.

• (1630)

Senator Di Nino: If one of the major banks were to get itself into trouble, even accepting today's limit of $60,000, such a collapse would affect institutions and governments, both domestic and foreign. I propose to you that your recommendations in this report would likely mean that the taxpayers of this country would bear a large cost of the bailout process.

Honourable senators, I can give you three instances in the last 10 years in which the taxpayers of this country, notwithstanding that our institutions are so big, had to pick up a portion of the fallout from the mistakes made by these institutions. I do not believe that would occur if the financial institution was a small one.

Do you think there is a level playing field when we talk about spending taxpayers' money to protect the integrity of the system as it relates to large financial institutions versus small financial institutions?

Senator Kirby: I am at a bit of a loss. I think I am aware of every financial institution that has failed in Canada, at least in the last 10 years and going back to the post-depression period. I do not know of any case where taxpayers' dollars have been spent. I absolutely accept the fact that the CDIC has stepped in. I absolutely accept the fact that taxpayers' dollars have been spent to rescue companies outside the financial services industry. However, we were not talking about those companies. We are not talking about what happens if Dome Petroleum goes under, which is one example where taxpayers' dollars were involved. I know of literally no case.

In the decade that I have been a member of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, we have looked at every case since 1984. That covers four or five cases. We received detailed histories on those and previous cases. While there were CDIC dollars expended, there were no taxpayers' dollars. The CDIC borrowed from the federal Consolidated Revenue Fund, and those funds are in the process of being repaid.

The only industries I can think of where taxpayers' dollars were used when a large company went under, are not in the financial services sector but rather in the natural resources sector. In my part of the country, one thinks of steel mills and coal mines. In other places, perhaps, one thinks of oil companies. However, I cannot think of any financial institution.

Senator Di Nino: I will give you more detailed information when I make my presentation on Thursday.

I should like to ask a question for clarification with respect to the issue of stacking. Are you suggesting that stacking be eliminated? Are you proposing that the insurance would cover deposits in a bank, trust company or other financial institution, up to a maximum of $30,000 prior to the co-insurance kicking in. Then up to a maximum of $65,000 there would be the 90-per-cent coverage that you are recommending, for the total of all deposits of that one individual in that institution?

Senator Kirby: I am glad you raise that question, because we wrestled with that point.

The intent of current deposit insurance is that if you had money in a single financial institution, you would be insured up to $60,000. You could have $60,000 in another bank or trust company, and another $60,000 elsewhere. However, the $60,000 limit would be the limit in a single institution. Given the way the rules are written, it is possible for you to put money into the same institution — $60,000 into an RRSP, $60,000 into a chequing account, $60,000 into a joint account with your wife, et cetera. The CDIC provided us with the example whereby a couple could get nine times $60,000 insured and still be within the same family of companies, which clearly violates the intent and spirit of the law.

Equally, what you cannot do under the current rules is stop someone from insuring $60,000 in Trust Company A and another $60,000 in Trust Company B, where A and B are unrelated. We understand that. In fact, we think that is good for competition. We do not propose to stop this sort of behaviour. In fact, by going from $60,000 to $30,000, you encourage people to move their money among institutions. We wanted to stop the clear violation of the spirit of the law, which is inherent in having a family of related companies insure a single depositor.

Senator Di Nino: You are saying that the insurer — the CDIC — would cover to the maximum for that particular individual in that one institution?

Senator Kirby: Or a related company, or a family of related companies.

Senator Di Nino: You are saying that if my wife and I each had $30,000 in an institution that failed, the CDIC would only cover $30,000?

Senator Kirby: We did not deal with the related-persons problem.

There was a specific example of someone who had $60,000 in a bank that failed. The bank had a trust subsidiary or financial institution subsidiary. Therefore the individual in that case wound up receiving somewhere in the neighbourhood of over $200,000, and yet the institutions were clearly all the same institution. They happened to be incorporated somewhat differently. They were closely related. That is the problem, and that situation clearly violates the spirit of the law.

It would be desirable because, on the competitive side, we believe that you want to encourage people to break $150,000 up into five $30,000 chunks and put it into five unrelated institutions. You do not want to encourage people to get around the spirit of the law by putting the $150,000 into five institutions that are all part of a 100 per cent closely-held family.

On motion of Senator Di Nino, debate adjourned.

PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

SECOND REPORT ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the second report of the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders, presented in the Senate on November 17, 1994.

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, in speaking to the adoption of this report, I wish to point out that the report does one thing: It strikes rule 26 of the Rules of the Senate. Your committee found that rule 26 is in contradiction to rule 24(4) and rule 43.

Rule 26 states:

> A preamble to a question, whether it is asked orally or in writing, is out of order.

Rules 24(4) and rule 43 allow for a brief explanatory remark.

Honourable senators, your committee is now faced with the problem of defining "brief". I am sure that we have all wondered from time to time what is meant by a "brief explanatory remark" when we are listening to long preambles to questions.

Senator Berntson: That is the Speaker's job.

Senator Robertson: That is what this report suggests, and I ask that it be adopted.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, as one of the members of the committee, I wish to endorse the report made to the house by the chairperson of the committee.

Your committee had a brief discussion of the matter. The proposal makes eminent sense, but as Senator Robertson has indicated, the report does not deal with long preambles, which on many days sound more like speeches than anything else.

I can well understand that in times of dire crises, such as we have had in the past, that sort of technique could be used to filibuster government initiatives or for other reasons, but in the normal course of events individual senators are the best judges of how long a preamble to a question ought to be. There are certainly circumstances in which it behooves the person who puts the question to make the circumstances in the situation as clear as possible, so as to elicit a proper reaction or response from the government.

Having said that, senators who are bent on obtaining rapid and concise answers to questions could probably consider taking an initiative which has sometimes been used in other jurisdictions and, indeed, on the other side of the house, and that is to simply drop a note to the minister or the minister's staff indicating the intention to put a specific question. Of course, if the name of the game is to catch the minister off guard, you do not do that sort of thing, but if a senator's purpose is to get as much information as rapidly as possible, a little note to the minister is not only useful but productive. It is an indication that the system works, and that is to the good of the institution and the public as well.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, there are several questions standing in the name of Senator Marshall in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate under "Questions". I believe that Senator Marshall would like to have at least some of these questions answered in order to complete some of his files.

Therefore, with the consent of the Senate, I move that the questions standing in the name of Senator Marshall now stand in my name.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I do not see that there is a necessity to do this. The questions stand regardless, do they not?

Senator Berntson: I understand that they do not.

Senator Corbin: I always thought that they did. I remember that when former colleagues left this house their questions remained on the Order Paper. I certainly have no objection to them standing in the honourable senator's name, if the purpose is to safeguard their retention.

Senator Berntson: You may be right. I am open to advice. Assuming that they cannot stand in his name, I would be more than happy to have them stand in my name.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is that agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, November 30, 1994 at 1:30 p.m.