The Diamond Coterie
By LAWRENCE M. LYNCH

Author of "A Woman's Crime," "John Arthur's Ward," "The Lot Witanes," "A Slender Clue," "Dangerous Ground," "Against Odds," Etc., Etc.

Near the door of the court room they stood grouped close together, Mrs. Watrous, dignified and placid as usual.

Mr. Watrous, with head proudly held high, and eyes that sparkled with indignation.

Frank Lamotte, looking like a lost and most unaccountable culprit.

Presently they are seated near the grave, gathered about the pit, and Mr. Watrous confers with Mr. O'Meara.

As they talk, the little lawyer's face becomes grave, even to sadness, and when he rises to address the Court, his words are full of meaning.

It is in the afternoon, and the sun is low in the sky, and the shadows are long and deep.

There is profound silence for a moment, then O'Meara says, quietly—
"My Detective Hathorn take the stand!"

The gentleman who has become known to many in W. as Mr. Watrous, of the New York bar, left his place near Evan Lamotte, and came quietly forward.

"The deponent bowed, took off a pair of gold-rimmed eyeglasses, and turned upon the court a pale but bright handsome, dark blue face, that proved themselves capable of numerous expressions.

"My name is Nath J. Hathorn," he began, "and I am a detective. I came to W. for the first time early in the summer of June, I believe. I came on professional business. To my surprise, and quite by accident, I found Sir Clifford Heathcliffe here in the chamber of Doctor Heath. My business in W. was the third day after my arrival, I became aware that he had an enemy here. I left W. to return to my office in New York, but I was called back to W. by a letter from Sir Clifford Heath, who told me that a plan was being formed against him, and that he needed my assistance. I returned to W. and I became acquainted with Sir Clifford Heath, and I learned a good many things from him.

"Early in the autumn I came to my knowledge that Sir Clifford's enemies were plotting against him, and that he needed my assistance. I returned to W. and I became acquainted with Sir Clifford Heath, and I learned a good many things from him.

"You will understand that I had now more than one operation on my hands. I was still engaged upon the case which first brought me to W., and I was in the habit of returning to my office in New York. I was called back to W. by a letter from Sir Clifford Heath, who told me that a plan was being formed against him, and that he needed my assistance. I returned to W. and I became acquainted with Sir Clifford Heath, and I learned a good many things from him.

"I had received the report of my shadower; it was startling. John Burrill had been murdered. There was a disquieting note in it. I had fully intended that Burrill should do some honest work in the State penitentiary, and was almost prepared to make some arrests. I attended the inquest, and was again disappointed. The crime of Clifford Heath had abandoned their first infamous scheme for his ruin, and had succeeded in fastening this miserable crime upon him. Standing there in the presence of all the actors in the tragedy, I could hardly believe that the man who had been so long my shadower, and who had been so long my enemy, was the man who had been so long my shadower, and who had been so long my enemy.

"I watched and I listened and I learned why Burrill had been murdered. I learned that Burrill had been murdered because he was a man of honor, and because he was a man of integrity. I learned that Burrill had been murdered because he was a man of honor, and because he was a man of integrity.

"I learned that Burrill had been murdered because he was a man of honor, and because he was a man of integrity. I learned that Burrill had been murdered because he was a man of honor, and because he was a man of integrity.

"I learned that Burrill had been murdered because he was a man of honor, and because he was a man of integrity. I learned that Burrill had been murdered because he was a man of honor, and because he was a man of integrity.

W. S. LOGGIE COY. LIMITED.

For temporary purposes. This Council had done it.

The Mayor said it was a bad and illegal practice. He did not wish to do such things, or ask any Aldermen to do so.

Ald. Robinson asked how Ald. Loggie would propose to provide for this year's over-expenditure on account.

Ald. Loggie said the road assessment would, of course, be increased next year, but to much would not require to be done.

The Mayor said only $1,000 was charged to bond accounts for sidewalks.

Ald. Neale said Ald. Loggie seemed to be in a mood in that direction. If he had kept track of expenditures last year as he seemed to be disposed to do now he would have been more ready to do so.

FAMILIES WANT:

BRICKS, CEMENT, LIME, SAND, GRAVEL, PLASTER, PAINTS, GLASS, PUTTY.

MIRAMICHI AND THE NORTH SHORE, etc.

This bill, but as soon as possible. It should be passed before the issue is raised by Mr. Crimmins.

The Mayor directed attention to the fact that a sidewalk would be required in front of the west side of the public building.

The resolution in favor of a further bond issue of $10,000 was now put and carried unanimously.

Ald. Robinson referred to the commission of Mrs. Ellis presented to a former meeting of Council and something should be done in reference to it.

Ald. Loggie said that while Mr. Ellis complained in reference to over-assessment he had not come before Council in the required form.

The following Resolutions Municipal Council were elected for their respective terms:—

Ward 1.—Wm. Fraser and James Cook, defeating Wm. Mann.

Ward 2.—A. Aronson and R. Liberty, defeating three others.

inspired and the shame that overwhelmed the Lamotte, would be satisfied with the excitement of the audience, judge and jury, could be imagined better than described.

The tragic farce is at an end. The case is given to the jury. Without uttering their places, they return their verdict. Clifford Heath is not guilty; is honorably acquitted.

Relieved by his recent effort, Frank Lamotte is carried from the court room, closely attended by his mother, and carried to the cell where lately Clifford Heath has dwelt a prisoner, while the latter is escorted in triumph to O'Meara, by all his rejoicing friends.

As the procession of conquerors moves away from the entrance, an officer approaches Jasper Lamotte.

"Mr. Lamotte, I am very sorry, sir, but you must consider yourself my prisoner."

Jasper Lamotte bows coldly, and signs the man that he will follow him.

The officer turns to Frank, but before he can open his lips, the man in the crowd steps back, makes one quick movement, there is a loud report, and Frank Lamotte falls forward, to be caught in the arms of a by-stander.

They say him gently down, and Jasper Lamotte bids them send for a physician; there must be one very near.

But Frank beckons his mother to come close, and when the others have drawn back, this is what the father hears, from the son's lips:

"There is another pistol in my pocket—It means life for Frank—had better use it."

Horrible words from the lips of a dying man. They are his last. Before Doctor Beaudin can turn back and reach his side, Frank Lamotte has finished his career of folly, and sin, and shame, dying as he had lived, selfishly, like a coward.

CHAPTER XLV.

"I never before in all my career, brought to justice, a criminal whom I both hated, and loved, and justly fully. Viewing all things from his standpoint, Frank Lamotte is less a murderer than a martyr."

It is the day after the trial with so strange an ending. They are seated in O'Meara's library. Constantine, Mr. Allison, Mrs. O'Meara, Sir Clifford, his brother George Heath, Mr. Beaudin, Mr. Baskara, who now appears what he is, a handsome gentleman, about thirty years of age, clever, vivacious, and amiable.

"I will go and see him," corrects Sir Clifford, and she smiles, and does not change the expression.

"I beg my most sincere; I shall go and see him."

the first opportunity. That opportunity came, with the news of the great Wardour robbery, and I came down to W—.

"I believed I could see distinctly the handwriting of the Diamond Coterie, and I saw another thing; it was the first piece of work I had ever seen of the kind, and they had knipped in this.

"I made some of my conclusions known to Miss Wardour and her friends, but I did not let it be known to the public, until I had pondered much; I borrowed the chloroform bottle and the piece of linen that had been used to apply the drug, and that night I copied the hospitably professed me by Sir Clifford. I took an impression of the vial, at his house, and I made an important discovery while there.

"Sir Clifford found me half famished and ordered his housekeeper to bring in a lunch, bearing with my identity known, I pretended to be a patient; and just as my host was leaving the room, he tossed me a handkerchief, which he took from a table, bidding me make myself a bandage, and to be ready to go at once.

"Now my eyes are trained to see much at a glance, and the moment they fell upon a black dot, they were riveted there. The handkerchief was precisely like the material one used with the chloroform. This might be a coincidence—The white handkerchief with wide borders was not washed; this handkerchief was washed."

"I was so much surprised, so anxious to compare the two pieces of linen, that I went to the hall of the F. L. on the top, and saw the half square of black dot, that was undoubtedly the fragment of a letter, or name, that had been torn hastily off. It corresponded to the fragment of a letter, or name, that I had seen on the whole handkerchief given me by Sir Clifford.

"This might be a coincidence, but it is one of my rules to suspect two coincidences counting close together; and I had already discovered three remarkable ones in this case.

"The first was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The second was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The third was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The fourth was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The fifth was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The sixth was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The seventh was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The eighth was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The ninth was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The tenth was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The eleventh was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The twelfth was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The thirteenth was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The fourteenth was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The fifteenth was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"The sixteenth was that the robbery was committed alone in my room. I reflected thus:—

"Now, Sybil Lamotte's strange flight gave proof that there was a skeleton in the Lamotte closet. I said:—

"If this woman, Mr. Lamotte had planned this robbery, and if for some reason it seemed good that his daughter should sleep, how well all was arranged."

"His own assistants, then, they could drop down from Mapleton in their row boat, come up from the river, and with their plans all laid, and knowing their ground, could make quick headway. Frank Lamotte's boat would have just such a pilot as one of the robbers left in the loose dirt beside the garden fence. Frank Lamotte would know just how to administer the chloroform. Then, Mr. Lamotte, in going to the city, ostensibly to procure the services of a detective, could easily take the spool along; and his wife also, that she might be well out of his daughter's way. Such a man would naturally select a fellow like Jerry Belknap, who would keep up a farce of investigation, and keep away all who might, perhaps, stumble upon the truth. Frank's exposure to be absent on this day of his sister's flight, and to assist in the search for the robbers, would be thus explained; and his anxiety concerning the contents of his sister's letter might be easily traced to a guilty conscience.

"But my theories were doomed to be laid aside for a time. Other duties obliged me to leave the city four weeks before I could turn so much as a thought toward W—.

"Before leaving the city, however, I had placed my wax cast of the chloroform bottle in the hands of one of my best men, and had also given him a clue, which to work."

"My agent was wonderfully successful. He found the counterparts to the chloroform bottle, and then he began shadowing the owner of said vial. It proved to be a young woman who had formerly lived in W—, as a factory hand, but who had been transplanted to the city by Frank Lamotte.

"It is not necessary to enlarge upon the story of this girl as connected with Lamotte; but this must be borne in mind. During the time that my agent had this girl under surveillance, Frank Lamotte visited her, and it is supposed that he removed the remaining bottles of the set, for one was afterwards exhibited, in fragments, from Doctor Heath's chest, by the industrious Jerry Belknap, and the others have disappeared."

"The girl was something of a dandy—witness the superb bit of cambric, and the prints of jaunty boots were near her feet, and set out on my explorations. As I approached Wardour Park I met a man, who immediately drew me aside to himself.

"This man was an honorable member of the best detective force in the city; but he had too much cupidity, and too much greed, to be trusted. He allowed himself to be bribed into letting a case fall through, and finally I caught him in a trap, and concluded with a gang of bank burglars, who were organizing a scheme for each, and coming with their booty through the convenience of our late detective.

"This little scheme, and compelled Belknap to withdraw from the force. Imagine my surprise when, a little later, Miss Wardour told me that Mr. Belknap was the detective sent down from the city by Mr. Lamotte to work upon the case, and Miss Wardour commended her late husband, and set out on my explorations. As I approached Wardour Park I met a man, who immediately drew me aside to himself.
