MOB HUNTS NEGRO HELD BY SHERIFF

Slayer of Young Bride Taken Into Woods as 1,000 Men Pursue.

Hinton, W. Va., Aug. 17. - Directly under the nose of a lawless mob of a thousand infuriated men, bent on having the life of a negro believed to be the man who assaulted and murdered Mrs. Lottie Ailiss, of Quinnemont, Sunday night, and nearly slew her husband, county officers tonight escaped from a Pullman car, in which they had guarded their prisoner for four hours, and took to the woods with the captive prisoner. As soon as the mob learned that the prisoner had been carried away, when almost within their grasp, their anger broke out afresh. They scattered into groups and began scouring the woods for the negro and the officers.

The negro was arrested by a railroad detective this afternoon. Immediately the mob began to gather, and within two hours it had reached proportions that made the officers realize that they were unable to cope with the situation. On appeal the governor ordered militia to Hinton, but it was after midnight before the troops arrived. Just before dark officers attempted to place the negro on a train to take him away. The mob soon learned the purpose of the movement, but allowed the officers to get the prisoner in a Pullman car. Then the rioters uncoupled the engine, cut the air hose and resolutely refused to allow the train to move. They guarded the car until 9 o'clock, when the officers, realizing that delay would be fatal, escaped by ruse into the woods.

The crime for which the negro was vanted occurred Sunday night. John Ailiss and his wife were walking on the railroad tracks near Quinnement, W. Va. A negro knocked Ailiss down. After kicking him into insensibility, the negro assaulted Mrs. Ailiss, who was a bride of three weeks, and then murdered her. Ailiss recovered enough on Monday morning to tell the story, but is now condition. He tried identify the negro prisoner boday. He said he was not certain, but suggested that the negro be held until he recov-

THE RUSSIAN SCOURGE. St. Petersburg, Aug. 17 .- The horrors of the cholera scourging Russia, according to Professor Rein, of the red cross, who has been sent by the Government to South Russia to study measures of combatting the disease, are steadily increasing. Children are starving in many instances because their parents and adult relatives have been swept away by the disease, leaving them unsupported. There is no indication yet of epidemic diminishing in vigor, and thousands of new cases are being registered daily, the official figures, according to reports, though immense in hemselves, understating the full extent of the disease owing to the imsibility of registering all cases.

Dress Materials That Will Find Favor This Fall and Winter

What's to be fashionable for fall wear? This is a question that is often asked and is of interest to every woman. We were never in a better position to answer it as we will be this season. Already large shipments of the very latest weaves and shades have been received from the most celebrated makers, which are enumerated as follows:

Fashion in Dress Goods Section

Dress Goods this season will be divided into several classes, furnishing a varied assortment for selection. Foremost in style are such weaves as: BOUCLE, a rough cloth or knot effect surface; MATTE, another cloth for Jacket Suits, which is of the basket weave; HEAVY DIAGONALS, in two-tone; SHARK'S BACK WEAVE, which promises to take a leading part in fashion this fall. BROADCLOTHS are steadily gaining in popularity, which are suitable for many purposes, particularly for Suits, Separate Skirts, Coats and Capes, shown in dark and light colors.

For Afternoon and Evening Wear

One of the daintiest materials shown in many seasons is PEKIN DE SOIE, a light weight, silk and wool mixture, self colors, in fifteen newest shades.

Fashion in Silk Section

Satin-faced materials lead. Evidence of this will be found in the heavy employment of Satins by leading dressmakers for fall costumes as well as for foundation purposes.

Some of the prettiest Evening Gowns this winter will be from MESSALINES of the higher grade Paris and New York women have adopted.

ITALIAN MESSALINE-This is the finest grade imported, and no other can equal it for richness of finish and soft draping qualities.

PAILLETTE-A high-finished, fine twill silk, will be more popular than ever. Honans are well recommended.

PURE SILK GROS GRAIN-Unexcelled for afternoon wear. It is almost indestructible with ordinary wear.

ARMURE SIRENE—A new, fine diagonal weave which imparts a richness in the lighter tones. BENGALINE-A very heavy cord silk, will be prominent for Suits, coming in the newest fall shades.

In TAFFETA SILK the tendency is for the softer finish.

Colors For Fall and Winter 1910 and 1911

Black will be more popular than the past season. Blues lead, such as Navys, Raven's Wing, Copenhagen and Saxe. Purples come next, in Wistaria, Concord, Amethyst. LONDON, THURSDAY, AUG. 18. AN ACADEMY IN EMBRYO?

Eight or nine years ago the London

Times announced the establishment of "The British Academy" by "certain representative British scholars," meeting at the British Museum. This organization received a charter from the Government. Its constitution defines its object as "the promotion of the study of the moral and political sciences, including history, philosophy, law, politics and economics, archaeology and philology." Thus the natural sciences were left to the old Royal Society, and pure literature was plainly not to be within the scope of "The British Academy." It was to have no right to pass judgments on literature It was not to include and does not include any merely literary men. The charter assigns it the function of "representing British scholarship abroad." of securing international exchange of lecturers, etc. It stands for learning, not for letters.

Now the Times announces the formation of an "Academic Committee" in the Royal Society of Literature, which seems intended as a tentative Academy of Letters. Last fall a joint committee of the Royal Society of Literature and the Society of Authors began a series of sessions to consider the question of establishing a British counterpart of the famous Academy ANOTHER BOON FOR THE ENGof France. This committee has hit upon the device of "trying out" the idea in the way just indicated. The academic committee will be quite unto give medals and awards of merit to desert and at the same time to guide the reading public to the best costemporary literature more authoritatively than any critical review can do.

The membership of the academic committee is limited to forty, the number of the French Immortals. Twentyseven original members nominated by the joint committee have the power of co-optation, by which method alone, as is the case with the French Academy, the academic committee is to be henceforth recruited. This makes of the body a close corporation.

The names of the original members are: Austen (Poet Laureate), Binyon (poet). Bradley (Oxford professor of poetry), Bridges (poet), Butcher (professor of Greek) Conrad (novelist) Courthope (critic), Dobson (poet), Ker (critic), Lang (everything), Lyall (biographer), Mackail (professor of Latin), Lord Morley, G. G. Murray (archaeologist), Newbolt (poet), Pember, Pinero (dramatist), Prothero (lit-Trevelyan, Verrall, Yeats (Irish poet).

At the first meeting of this august committee Professor Butcher, in the chair, Messrs, Maurice Hewlett and Arthur Benson were added. The Times already notes the preponderance of critical over creative writers in this body, and warns the committee to beware the mistake of the French Academy in excluding and failing to recognize genius of the first order while always beaming upon correct medioctities. Any one will be pleased to see the names of Hardy, Morley, Henry able, and there is reason to hope it will James, Bridges, and Yeats among the prove as successful in England as in immortals. But free British feeling other countries. will be at once offended by the omishave to go in alone among the men for want of a worthy associate of her

This experiment, introducing the thin edge of the wedge for an academy on the French modeli is sure to revive the old, violent discussion in England. In the past, Englishmen have had the habit of disliking the academy idea in pure letters. An academy, they say, may be all very well for classic and centralized France, where "the individual withers" before a despotic junta. ment is imperative. But leave literature free as the Englishman's home. member, and obtains his money be having its effect all along the line. The Britons are finding unsuspected virtues in Jacques Bonhomme. Perhaps his academy seems also worth having. It does not seem to have hampered such original geniuses as Hugo and Daudet. The academic committee recalls the beginning of the French Academy in its private, unofficial small holders who are reclaiming character and unpretentious bearing. but it has the advantage of not being overshadowed by a Richelieu. The main business of the French Academy has been to fix the diction, grammar and spelling of the French language. Its greatest work has been the creation of an authoritative dictionary. Does the English world expect that of a British academy? If so, there should be no British academy. but an English or Anglo-Saxon Academy, embracing some of the great American and colonial writers. apart from the question of a definite dictionary, is not the formation even n germ of an exclusively British Academy of Literature, a foolish move at a time when Britons in all lands are feeling more and more their relationthere is to be a new academy it ought liaments and Congress, having its meetings now in one capital, now in another, though doubtless centred in England. To exclude over-seas Britons at this date is like shutting the Scotch or the Irish out of an academy of London. Englishmen talk and write much more volubly than do our American friends about Anglo-Saxon brotherhood, and yet the very moment a real chance of active brotherhood men to be reckoned with. It is doubtful also whether an authoritative dictionary could be expected from such a body as is proposed. The philologists, like Skeat and Murray, are in the other organization, the British Academy, and men of Hewlett's or Austen's stamp would not work at a dictionary even if they Perhaps, then, the new academy, if it comes into full being, will be mainly honorary, like the French Legion of Honor, but a shade more restricted! On top of all this the Government during the recent session had a measure placed on the statute book giving compensation to farmers who are distrubed through portions of their farms being taken from them to provide small holdings.

Having got his land, the small holder must of course, have money to run it, but he does not want to pay too dearly for it. Here again the Government comes to his aid, having, accord-Frazer, Gosse (critic), Haldane, Hardy ing to a statement made the other day by Earl Carrington, president of the board of agriculture, decided to aid a system of agricultural credit banks. Co-operative credit banks have been of much benefit to farmers on the continent, particularly in Germany, where the idea originated. Like other forms of agricultural co-operation they have lagged behind in England because the ordinary English village has not contained enough small holders to combine. CARMAN'S POWERS TO BE MODIFIED

Work of Methodist Superintendent To Be Divided.

Infusion of New Blood Likely, as in Case of Education and Missions.

Victoria, B. C., Aug. 18.-A powerful committee drawn from the different provinces and conferences was appointed by the General Methodist Conerence last night to consider the question of the appointment of two general superintendents, one for the east and one for Western Canada. This committee will report back to the General Conference.

It seems likely that unless Dr. Carman, the aged general superintendent, steps down his office will be divided. The infusion of new blood is considered desirable in this position, as it was in the case of Victoria University and the general missionary boards. It will be remembered Rev. Dr. Graham was made joint secretary of education with the Rev. Dr. Potts, now deceased, and Rev. T. E. E. Shore made associate general secretary of missions with Rev. Dr. Sutherland, also now deceased. The former gracefully accepted the coming of the new order of affairs, but Dr. Sutherland fought it strenuously. Time will tell whether Dr. Carman will also have to accept modification of his powers. He and Drs Sutherland and Potts went to college together, and formed a powerful triumvirate. They did much for Methodism, and the story of their gradual supercession is full of pathos. Based on the resolution of N. W. Rowell, K. C., of Toronto, a committee was appointed to consider the question of increasing the salary of the general superintendents to $3,000 and of the General Conference secretaries and editors to $2,000, with furnished house allowance of $700, this resolution being consequent of the generally increased cost of living. This afternoon the delegates attended the laying of a cornerstone of the new Y

CAPTAIN'S CLUE TO BIG TREASURE

The Newest Yarn From the Island of Co cos.

SHIP CARPENTER'S TALE

The Secret Now in Possession of Hackett, Who is Looking for a Hydraulic Plant.

Victoria, Aug. 17.—Capt. Fred Hackett says he is the only living man who knows the exact history of the Cocos Island treasure, and the exact spot where it is buried. He is a whaling captain and he says he has visited the very spot.

"I have stood over millions," he exclaims, "and only lack of equipment prevented me from getting the huge hoard from its hiding place of more than 70 years."

The early history of the treasure is well known. In 1835 the British barkentine Mary Dier anchored one night under a Peruvian fort near Callao; the anxious garrison, afraid of their Chilean besiegers, placed the great treasure under the protection of the British flag; the crew, one of whom was a man named Thompson, proved false to their trust, and fleeing through the night, buried the Peruvian millions, gold and ewels, in the lonely Island of Cocos. Returning thence, they were dismasted by a cyclone and captured by the Peruvians. Nine of the eleven men on board were hanged at the yardarm. Thompson and a Frenchman were spared to guide their captors to the treasure. But putting into Panama, the fever came on board, and the two prisoners escaped from their harassed guards. They slid down the vessel's side and swam for a whaler which was leaving the harbor. Sharks made the swim a fatal one for the Frenchman, but Thompson clambered on board, the sole possessor of the secret of the buried millions.

From this point Capt. Hackett throws fresh light on the old tale. He has the story from the lips of a seafarer named Keating, who now steps on to the stage. "I'm telling you something I heard him tell," says Capt, Hackett, "and Keating is the only man but one who ever saw the treasure again." As he strides up and down the room with wide gestures he tells his story simply and with conviction. A Hunted Man.

Thompson next shows up at Kingston, Jamaica, a hunted man. He boards a Newfoundland vessel loading with sugar or molasses in search of a job. Keating was carpenter and own- To Earn Money To Pay Funeral Exer's spotter on the ship at the time. "Thompson was a hard-looking ticket," Keating used to say. He was ragged and worn and it was only on Keating's intercession that the captain took him on. During the voyage the grateful Thompson told Keating the secret of the treasure and gave him the chart he had made of the place. When the ship arrived at St. Johns, Nfid., Keating once more befriended Thompson. The weekly in the chart where week sage. Keating easily located the treasure and secretly in canvas pockets sewed inside their clothes they carried what they could to the ship. But with a crew on the point of susicious mutiny they were forced to deist. They sailed for Panama, where they decided to leave the ship. As squall overturned the whole boat, and Boggart, his big sea boots laden with gold, was drowned.

Keating crossed the isthmus with mules and guides and got home safely. In 1846 he again set out, this time in the brig Gauntlet. Again he was successful, getting in the two visits about $110,000.

"His wife," said Hackett, "used to tell me how he returned and threw the treasure on the bed, gold pieces and jewels tumbling together." He started oor as Job's turkey; when he came back he bought a ranch, built a which he had left at Panama, was lost with all hands rounding the Horn.

It was in 1875 that Capt. Fred Hackett's eldest brother first persuaded the silent, shifty-eyed Keating to tell his tale. After that beginning he used to describe to the two brothers how scared he had been of going down the first time to the hoard, how he had feared a trap, how he had finally descended. and had "wicked the lids off the boxes and seen the gold bulging through the rotting pigskin sacks."

In 1897 Fred Hackett sailed in the Aurora on the first of his two ill-fated expeditions to the islands. says Capt. Hackett, and he means to start again as soon as he can raise the money. This time he will sail with a hydraulic plant or not at all. Fantastic as it all sounds, conviction is rooted in this seaman's heart. He has been there, he has found the bearings.

Connie Mack, the genius whose hand guides the Athletics' bark over the baseball sea, is reaping the reward of his daring. He came within an ace of landing the flag last year, but his young men could not hold up under the strain, and gave way before the determined rush of the veteran Detroiters. This season things look different. Detroit is in the doldrums, and Mack's crew is going away, steadily. They are off in the lead and going nicely. Barring accidents to several of his stars, there seems to be no reason why Cornelius McGillicuddy should not thread the intricate channel that leads to Championship Harbor, long before the season draws to a close. It was a couple of seasons ago that Mack determined upon the scheme which is now reaping him a rich reward. He released veteran players, and filled their places with youngsters, the majority of whom had never been heard of. In 1908 the Athletics weren't contenders, but last year they chased the Tigers to the end. This year they look like the best bet for the flag. Mack is enjoying the harvest of his forethought. He had the sense to do that which others didn't dare do. Jim Collins hung on to his veterans until Boston went to pieces like the one-hoss shay. Comiskey placed his faith in old-timers until he realized the wisdom of Connie Mack's plan. Frank Chance depends upon the men who won three pennant for the Cubs, but whether his course is wise remains to be seen. Jim McGuire has followed the bell-cow, and the Naps are about to undergo a rehabilitation.

Fastest Third Heat Ever Trotted, Fastest Mile Ever Covered in Canada, and Stallion Record.

Buffalo, Aug. 18.—The second day's acing of Buffalo's Grand Circuit at Fort Erie yesterday saw the making of turf history. Two things stand out prominently, either of which would suffice to make the meeting memorable. One was the wonderful performance of The Harvester in breaking the world's record for stallion trotters and the world's record for a third heat in a race, besides lowering his own record to 2:02. The other was the defeat of Dudie Archdale, this year's sensation in the trotting division, winner of three $10,-000 stakes and one of $5,000 this year. Totals ...39 8 14 27 '4 Totals ...33 4 8 27 15

The little stallion was never in finer fettle and Geers was tempted to show Rochester Used Three Twirlers in an a fast mile. Weather conditions were ideal and the track, although a trifle pitchers. But for the numerous errors of the Orioles at critical stages the game would have been placed in their column. Bases on balls also figured largely in the run-getting as the hits which followed turned the passes into runs. The score:

may claim as the result of yesterday's performance are: World's stallion record trotted in a race. Fastest third heat ever trotted.

Fastest mile ever trotted or paced in Canada. Incidentally The Harvester reduced his own record from 2:031/4 to 2:02. Struck and in the opinion of many who saw yesterday's performance can go still

New hay reached the high-water mark of this season on the local market this morning. Three choice loads sold quickly at $15 50 per ton.

Old oats varied from $1 35 to $1 38 per hundredweight, and were readily disposed of at that high figure. Notwithstanding that the heavy rains throughout the townships last night tied up the harvesting operations of the farmers, thus giving them spare time to market their produce, the market was comparatively small in size. Eggs were not so high as on Tuesday, but sold easily at 20 cents
