Men and women have come to think, somehow, that Christian calmness finds its tes hour only when some great affliction crushes down. There never was a more sad mistake. Christian calmness has meet opportunity for exercise daily and hourly. It is the liftle trials that test it most.

When we remember an absent friend, we usually think with deep interest of the place where he is, of the business in which he is engaged, and of the time when we shall meet him. And the deeds of Jesus, where they not wonderful? Were they not in keeping with his nature and words? What an exhibition of power they constituted; and also what force. His object as a thaumaturgist was to save. How fittingly the deeds of his life death. The passion in Gethsemane, the humiliation at Gabbatha, and the agony on Golgotha must not be out of mind even when in the most joyful mood we chaunt our Christmas carols, or ring our Christmas chimes. So. He gathers one by one, And the circle widens there : Around His eternal Throne. Where the "many mansions " are Gather'd from Pisgab's bright top, And whence they in Bochim wail; To glad truition of hope, All gather'd within the yeil.

The King's own treasure and pride, These faultless before His throne ; The blood-washen and the tried, Are jewels He loves to own.

O Blessed ones gathered there, High up on the clouded Hill; A-down in the valley here, The cloud veil covers us still Ye have scaped the heats and the cold. In Salem the golden ye dwell; Ye see whom we long to behold, Yet if He say, " Tarry," 'tis well.

We know that the King looks down, A sweet encouraging smile :---"So I gather one by one, Be patient a little while.

And glory touches our path, From rifts in the darksome cloud Which now to the eye of faith, Is spanned by the Bow of God.

The sign of His Love we know. The seal of His Truth we own He will not with floods o'erflow, So he gathers us one by one. J. M. D.
