New York, June 30.—An Associated Press Cable from London this morning says: "The speech yesterday of Premier Lloyd George in which he said the war will come to an end when the allied armies have reached the aims which they set out to obtain when they accepted the challenge thrown by Germany, although mainly approved by the morning newspapers, does not escape criticism."

The post, says the Germans are all in this war up to the neck and if the Premier thinks any change in the system of government would alter their spirit he knows nothing of the German people. The Post contends that the idea, that Germany is driven to war by a tyrannical government, and is groaning for liberation from the Hohenzollern yoke is pure fancy.

Referring to the difficulties of Russia from anarchical elements secretly subsidized by Germany, the Post complains that the British government is showing indulgence and timidity toward secret enemies at home allowing the formation of revolutionary committees to organize disaffection and says this disaffection has been allowed to win a victory in Ireland.

At the other extreme the radical daily news, finds the speech falls short of expectations and laments the lack of definiteness in declaring war aims. It says the Premier cannot convince Germany by signals from the public platform and it may be doubted whether he can wholly convince Russia. "It is essential," continues the Daily News, "that the Allies should state their war aims once for all in a declaration drawn up in concert and endorsed by every party to the alliance."

BRITISH CAPTURE DEFENSES

Strong System of Fortifications upon Souchez River Fall to Haig ADVANCE CONTINUES Progress To Depth of a Mile Upon Four Mile Front FIGHTING IS HEAVY Furious Attack Made by the Enemy Upon the French Front

London, June 30.—A series of strongly organized defensive systems on both banks of the Souchez covering Lens, has been captured by the British it is announced officially. In their recent operations the British have advanced more than a mile on a front of four miles about Lens.

Paris, June 30.—The Germans resumed the attack on the Verdun front, west of Dead Man Hill last night, the war office announces. Picked German troops advanced on a sector of one and three-fourths miles and were almost annihilated by the French. The German penetrated the first French line over the entire front attacked but were driven out excepting on the western slope of Dead Man Hill.

Paris, June 30.—A despatch to the Havas Agency from Stockholm quotes an interview with Emilio Vandervelde, Belgian Minister of State on the Russian situation. Mr. Vandervelde, who was passing through Stockholm on his return from Petrograd said: "The situation in Russia has sensibly improved since we arrived there six weeks ago. There is between men like Tseretelli, Kerensky, Troschchenko and Prince Lvoff, not only the apparent union necessitated by the troubles of those times, but an accord becoming more and more intimate and firm as to concrete immediate action in the future."

London, June 30.—Scandinavian newspapers arriving here, contain reports of the recent fight in Stettin. As a result of a rumor in circulation in Stettin that a cargo of potatoes was being shipped to England, a crowd of women and boys gathered before the town hall for the purpose of protesting. In the course of the demonstration, show windows were smashed, but the rioters were dispersed without a shot having been fired.

CANADA'S RECORD IS ONE FOR PRIDE

Sir Robert Borden Issues Message to People of the Dominion

CANADA 50 YEARS OLD

Ottawa, June 30.—"Let us, with resolute spirit, so maintain our purpose and our effort that in this last and greatest chapter of humanity's striving and triumph, it shall be recorded of Canada that, as at the first she never faltered."

With the above inspiring words Sir Robert Borden concludes a message to the people of the Dominion of Canada on the occasion of its semi-centennial. The Premier reviews the growth of the country in the fifty years which have elapsed since Confederation, and refers to the great problems with which the country is faced on its fiftieth anniversary. The Premier's message reads:

"Amid the welter and horror of a war which devastates civilization, we pause for a moment to consider the Canada of half a century ago and the Canada of to-day. Much has been added to us; our boundaries have been vastly extended so as to embrace half a continent; our population nearly trebled; there has been a measurable development of our resources; we have grown enormously in production, commerce and wealth; facilities of communication and transportation have been provided beyond all anticipation; the general conditions of life and the standard of living have been conspicuously raised; educational facilities have been greatly enlarged. In all these and many other incidents of the world's progress Canada has more than held her own."

Confidence in Destiny "All this is impressive; but still more inspiring is the thought that..." (Continued on page 7)

Flowers on the graves. About 100 Canadian soldiers now lie in the military burial ground at Shorncliffe Camp. A simple and touching ceremony took place when several hundred school children of Folkestone, Hythe and Sandgate, assembled to place flowers on the graves. Many public bodies and private individuals sent wreaths.

The News makes the suggestion that war aims be formulated and submitted to Germany with the intimation that if peace is refused on terms proposed, every port and market of the Allies shall be closed to her for a fixed period thereafter.

With regard to the premier's reference to Russia, some of the editorials merely paraphrase his utterances, while others commend him for giving a candid exposition to what all Europe knows to be true, namely that the Russian upheaval promised victory, but with one exception none endorses or dissents his prediction that Russia will retain its strength and become more formidable than ever.

The exception is the Post who believes the revolution has since Russia knows Germany is their inveterate enemy and avenger. There are several references in the Post to the Russian situation. The suggestion is made by The Post, that there as well as Mainz, Antwerp and Armenia be administered afterward by international commissions until their people are able to govern themselves. The newspaper also suggests the representation of the United States on such commissions would remove European suspicions."

New War Credit Berlin, via London, June 30.—The Reichstag next week will be called on to approve a measure supplementing the budget for the current fiscal year authorizing the chancellor to mobilize a new war credit of fifteen billion marks, bringing the total appropriations for the war to 94 billion marks.

The first National gathering of the Social Democratic party since the outbreak of the war, will be held at Wurzburg, August 19.

Potato Riot London, June 30.—Scandinavian newspapers arriving here, contain reports of the recent fight in Stettin. As a result of a rumor in circulation in Stettin that a cargo of potatoes was being shipped to England, a crowd of women and boys gathered before the town hall for the purpose of protesting. In the course of the demonstration, show windows were smashed, but the rioters were dispersed without a shot having been fired.

Motorists Not Always Responsible for Street Accidents

Traffic regulation has probably been the subject of more attention during the past decade than any other question affecting the matter of transportation within large centres of population, and many varied have been the restrictions placed upon vehicular traffic with the object of safeguarding human life. It is only of late, however, that the idea of educating the pedestrian to keep a proper lookout for his own safety has made any marked impression on municipal authorities. People have been so long imbued with the idea that their rights as pedestrians extend to all portions of the street that they are inclined to look with derision on an attempt to control them to observe due precaution in making shortcuts on busy thoroughfares.

The "Safety First" campaign has awakened the general public to some conception of the importance of caution, but much still remains to be done in the way of enacting regulations that will definitely establish the latitude to be given to pedestrian traffic. The Montreal Automobile Trade Association has taken the matter up in a sensible fashion by approaching the municipal authorities of Montreal with a request that definite official action be taken. association first asks that it made a regulation that people should be allowed to cross streets only at intersections. The importance of this can be illustrated at almost any hour of any day on a busy street in a large city. A pedestrian suddenly notices something across the street. Without a moment's hesitation he darts from the sidewalk, and with the idea of saving a moment of time, tries to dodge his way through a network of vehicles. Sometimes he gets through safely and sometimes an accident is recorded. In either case he is not

THE SITUATION.

The latest British advance toward Lens is of great importance, and it does not seem too much to expect the fall of the place shortly. The operations are successfully tending towards the reclamation of the most important French coal region, and the regaining of that would certainly constitute a most important event.

The entire Aisne front between Soissons, Rheims and the west bank of the Meuse, has been the scene of terrific German attacks, but the French succeeded in repulsing all of them.

Premier Venizelos, in his speech to the Crown, after taking the oath of office, said that the place of Greece was beside the nations fighting for democracy. He also declared that the Bulgarians must be ousted from Macedonia.

The torpedoing and sinking of four large cargo-carrying steamers is reported—the Ultonia of the Cunard line, 6,593 tons; the Haverford of the American line, 7,493 tons; the Buffalo of the Wilson line, 2,583 tons and another Cunard vessel. The fate of the crews is unknown.

The British official gazette publishes an order in Council, conferring on Baron Rhonda, Food Controller, absolute power to requisition the whole, or part of the output of any factory, paying therefore a reasonable rate.

One result of the entry of the United States into the world war has resulted in a great falling off of activity in the building trades, many millions of dollars in contracts having been cancelled, which otherwise would have gone on with.

THE DOMINION JUBILEE

To those of this generation who know Canada only as a nation it seems almost impossible to imagine that previous to fifty years ago there was no co-ordination between the then existing provinces. Each had its own constitution, its tariff, postage laws and currency.

Each promoted its own interests regardless of the existence of its British subjects and differences among them. The institutions of law, public institutions and commercial regulations. Provincial misunderstandings were rife and there was a general antagonism with regard to interests.

To the average Canadian there existed no North West which was regarded as a great lone land of no particular value to anyone save Indians and trappers. The land communication between the Maritime Provinces and Canada, such as it was, precluded effective intercourse. In winter there could be no access by the St. Lawrence so that Canada's winter port was in the United States.

As late as 1850 it took ten days and often longer for a letter to go from Halifax to Toronto. Messages by wire were a luxury, the rate being seventy-five cents for ten words and eight cents for each word additional.

To reach the Red River settlement, the nucleus of Manitoba the Canadian travelled through the United States and with the Colonies of Vancouver Island and British Columbia the East had practically no dealings. Such in brief outline was the condition of affairs when the eve of Confederation dawned.

There was a remarkable group of big men in the Dominion in those days, notably: Macdonald, Tupper, Cartier and George Brown. Macdonald and Brown have been properly described as "the first persons in their respective parties." (Conservative and Liberal.) Political controversies were exceedingly personal in those days and the two had not been on speaking terms for ten years but with the one great object in view a truce was declared.

"We acted together," wrote Macdonald long after of Brown "dined in public places together, played euchre in crossing the Atlantic and went into society in England together. And yet on the day after he resigned we resumed our old positions and ceased to speak." Such was the fusing power of the one great object both had in view.

The trials and the difficulties which those "Fathers of Confederation" had to meet and overcome cannot be dealt with in detail in this short space of a newspaper article, but passing reference must be made to the heroic work of Charles Tupper, to whose powerful personality and vigorous methods was due the bringing in of Nova Scotia.

Statistics as a rule make dull reading but a few facts on the occasion of the present Jubilee will serve to thoroughly accentuate what has resulted. In 1867 Canada consisted of four provinces; to-day there are nine and a large unorganized territory which still exists.

The total trade in 1867 was $14,497,674; for the fiscal year ending 1917, about $2,000,000,000. Total assets in 1867 were $17,317,410; to-day well over $321,822,000.

Wheat exported in 1867, totalled 3,648,000 bushels; in 1917 the figure was 244,000,000. It is the same sort of story with regard to railway mileage, manufactures, dairy products, live stock and in fact everything which tells of material advance.

And what of the future? There is no land on this broad earth with greater, or more assured prospects. Thus far in the matter of agriculture, we are simply in the initial stages with 110,000,000 acres occupied of 440,000,000 available, and it is the same story in every direction. The future will unquestionably see this one of the greatest countries on earth and the fiftieth milestone, as one writer has put it, should lead us all to deep and honest thinking, as to the great duties of our citizenship and the high standards of national life demanded from the happy inheritors of so vast and wonderful an estate.

Big Campaign To Be Made To Bring Religion to Attention of All Classes

The current issue of The Editor and Publisher contains the following: "One million dollars a year for church advertising. It's a big order. Its just as big as it sounds. The plans are being worked out now. The advertising increases church attendance has been proven. So far, there has been lack of organization, and this lack has made it impossible to carry out the work."

"An organization has been perfected, a paid secretary has been employed, statistics are being gathered, and the campaign to 'sell the churches to the people' will commence next fall. The first appropriation will probably be in the neighborhood of $25,000, in the form of a try-out. This is to be followed by larger appropriations, and it is expected that it will be possible to get $1,000,000 annually within the next three years.

As soon as the success of the campaign planned has been proved it is anticipated that it will be the easiest thing in the world to raise $1,000,000 a year—more if necessary.

Ashley, associate editor of The Christian Herald, of New York, was appointed executive secretary of the church advertising and publicity department of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, with headquarters in the Advertising Club, 47 East Twenty-fifth street, New York City.

GARDEN PARTY

A very pleasant occasion was celebrated when the children of King George School, with teachers and many visitors, assembled at the school grounds to enjoy a most successful school closing garden party last night. The ladies of the school league sold refreshments in four booths, placed at the corners of the grounds. The Salvation Army Band was in attendance and occupied the central area. Their excellent music was liberally offered, making them from the beginning the centre of attraction, and about them children's promenades circled. The beautifully decorated booths, well provided with a great variety of provisions, received a hearty patronage during the entire evening.

The programme consisted mainly of music, furnished quite steadily from 8 to 10. About 10 o'clock a few speakers took part. After Principal Wolz had called the gathering to order and expressed his appreciation of the large attendance and hearty support always given, the school, Inspector Kilmer, spoke briefly and introduced Pte. Broomfield, the speaker of the evening. Mr. Broomfield now gathered a very attentive and interested crowd about him, addressing himself to them very ably on his experiences as a soldier overseas. Music by the band continued for another half hour, when a vote of thanks was moved to those contributing to the programme. Dr. Gamble, chairman of the Board of Education, seconded the vote.

The order was excellent during the entire evening, all enjoying themselves. The proceeds, amounting to a considerable sum, will be devoted to school furnishings by the school league. Much credit is due to the president, Mrs. Dobbs and her strong following, for the successful event.

RESULTS.

School Inspector E. E. C. Kilmer states that the results of the Public School examinations will probably be announced on Wednesday of next week.

KILLED IN ACTION

Norfolk has lost a number of her most brilliant sons, the latest to make the supreme sacrifice being Flight Lieut. Sherwin Watt, eldest son of Matthew and Mrs. Watt, Langton, Brantford Township. Lt. Watt was one of the cleverest students ever enrolled in Simcoe High school. He passed his entrance to High school at 11 years, and upon entering the high school succeeded in passing senior matriculation, with first-class honors, and entrance to the Faculty of Education, covering in three years, work that ordinarily requires six years. Later on he entered the Agricultural College at Guelph, where he again passed the exams with first class honors. In 1915 he responded to the call of his country, and going overseas he joined the Imperial forces. Last year he entered the Royal Flying Corps, and went to France some three months ago. The official telegram to his father at Langton, from the British War-Office, stated that he had been killed in action on June 12th. Another brother, Gunner Arnold Watt, also of Guelph College, is overseas in the 66th battery. Lt. Watt had many friends in Brantford and his death will be sincerely regretted.

THE MARKET.

A comparatively small quantity of produce was brought to the local market this morning and with a few exceptions the prices remained about stationary. There were three loads of new hay, also the first that has been brought to the local market this year. The price of potatoes again soared up to four and five cents a bag, the figure at which they were disposed of before the importation of the two carloads some few weeks ago by the city council.

Wedding Bells

PERSALL-SCOTT A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alvan Scott, Maple Grove, on June 20, when their only daughter, Muriel Irene, was united in marriage to Mr. Earl Edwin Persall, of Mt. Pleasant. Promptly at 2:30 o'clock the bride entered the drawing room leaning on the arm of her father, to the strains of the wedding march, rendered by Mr. Fred Smith, uncle of the bride. The bride was beautifully attired in white silk crepe de chine with tulle veil and orange blossoms, carrying a shower bouquet of bridal roses, and was attended by Miss Willa Laird, wearing maize silk crepe de chine, and carrying a bouquet of pink roses. Miss Gladys Persall made a sweet little flower girl dressed in pale blue silk marquisette, and carried a basket of sunset roses. Mr. Edwin DeVin acted as best man. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. F. Cole under a floral arch, and in the presence of only the immediate relatives and friends. After a dainty luncheon Mr. and Mrs. Persall left by motor amid showers of confetti and good wishes, the bride travelling in a navy blue suit and Panama hat. The bride was the recipient of an array of beautiful presents, showing the popular esteem in which she is held.

MEWEN-FULTON A very charming wedding took place on Tuesday afternoon, June 12, at the residence of the bride's parents, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. John Mayhew Fulton, when their only daughter, Margaret Ellizabeth, was united in marriage to Mr. Harold James McEwen, of Calgary. The ceremony was performed by the bride's father in the presence of the immediate families and relatives, and was followed by a family dinner.

The bride carried a shower bouquet of pale pink and white roses, and wore a travelling suit of rose gabardine, the coat opening over a delicate blouse of georgette crepe, trimmed with real lace, and hat of silver gray, faced with lace crepe de chine, and trimmed with the same color. The other contrasts were of silver gray.

The bridal couple will spend their honeymoon touring through the mountains and among the lakes of British Columbia, and will make their future home in Calgary—Calgary Herald.

Mr. McEwen is a graduate electrical engineer and the Alberta representative of Canadian Westinghouse, the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. McEwen, Mt. Pleasant Road, Brantford.

The FATHERS of CONFEDERATION

Although a man is considered to be passing his prime when he reaches the age of fifty years, a nation that has arrived at the half-century mark is looked upon as a mere infant among the powers. On July 1st, 1917, the Dominion of Canada completes the first half century of its life, and the record of the country has justified the men who foresaw that the formation of the federation of Provinces would lift Canada to the dignity of nationhood. The British Empire is the most unique experiment in imperialism that the world has ever seen. It consists, not of a central power, nursing and developing colonies so it may reap a profit through ultimate exploitation. That was the old imperial idea. With the British it has been otherwise. The empire consists of a number of self-governing nations, each one free to make or break its own destiny, and bound to the Motherland with the strong ties that come from common ideals, common language, and common laws. They are also held together by the belief that it is for the good of the world that a highly civilized empire of free nations, grouped round the land from which they came, should exert its influence for freedom in all parts of the globe.

Canada was the first of the overseas dominions to mature into a nation. British America, before 1867, had been a loose series of small colonies scattered across the continent, the Provinces and Territories having come into the Empire at different times and under different circumstances. The Province of Nova Scotia, first colonized by the French in 1598, was taken by the British in 1629, restored to France in 1632, and again ceded to Great Britain by the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713. Cape Breton, now a part of Nova Scotia, was not finally taken over by the English until 1758, and formed a separate colony until 1820. A portion of New Brunswick was ceded to Great Britain by the French in 1712, but the Province did not become wholly British until after the fall of Quebec. It was at one time part of Nova Scotia but became a separate province in 1874. Prince Edward Island was first settled by the French. It became annexed to Nova Scotia in 1713, but rose to the dignity of a separate province in 1769. Ontario and Quebec are the two largest Provinces, the original old Canada. Quebec was founded by the French in 1608, and the city fell to the British in 1759, being formally ceded to our Empire in 1763. In 1791 an Imperial Act was passed dividing Canada into two Provinces, Upper and Lower Canada, with a separate constitution for each. The two Provinces were again united in 1841, but at the time of the Union they were divided. Upper Canada became Ontario, and Lower Canada the taking of the history of Quebec. The Eastern Colonies, with the exception of Prince Edward Island, were the original Provinces to enter confederation in 1867.

British Columbia, on the shores of the Pacific, was granted a colonial government in 1858. In 1865 Vancouver Island became a separate colony, but the two portions of the province were joined when they entered the federal union in 1871. That vast region lying between Old Canada and British Columbia was taken over by the Dominion in 1869, and out of the territory the present provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta were carved, Manitoba in 1870 and the others in 1905.

Previous to 1861 many suggestions for the union of the British Provinces in North America had been put forward, but the first legislative action looking to this end was taken by the House of Assembly of Nova Scotia in 1861 under the leadership of Sir Charles Tupper. Early in 1864 delegates from the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island assembled in Charlottetown authorized by their governments to confer in reference to the union of these Provinces. Nothing, however, was at that time accomplished, except that as a result of certain conferences another convention was called by the Government and was held in Quebec on October 10th, 1864, and at that meeting Upper and Lower Canada and the Maritime Provinces were all represented. Seventy-two resolutions were formulated as the "British North America Act 1867" were adopted by this convention, and these were taken back to the different legislative bodies for consideration. The Canadian Parliament adopted the resolutions at its meeting in the following March, but the scheme met with a great deal of opposition in the Maritime Provinces. There was a bitter general election in New Brunswick, and the forces of the union won. The Legislature of Nova Scotia adopted the measure without referring it to the electorate. The Bill for the Union was presented in the Imperial Parliament in February, 1867, and passed the two Acts came into force by proclamation on July 1st of that year, and Dominion Day will remain our most distinct national holiday down through posterity, so long as Canada remains a nation, which, all Canadians will say resolutely, means forever.

Those great days, so full of meaning for the men of this land for all time, are still remembered by many of our citizens. Old people can recall the birthday of Canada and the celebration in all parts of the Dominion, though few of them dreamed that in less than fifty years strong enough to engage in a great world war and to be an important factor in the struggle. When the proclamation of the British North America Act was made, Right Hon. Charles Stanley, Viscount Monck happened to be the Governor of Canada, so that it fell to his lot automatically to be the first Governor-General of the new Dominion.

Just About Ourselves. Sometimes newcomers to Canada tell Canadians that a young country cannot call itself a nation until it is old enough to have a little individuality. There must be things about it that people all over the world associate only with that country. A nation, possessing a national consciousness, cannot be created in fifty years, they will tell you. Then they may ask, "What is there in Canada that is peculiarly your own?" It is true that we are very young, and that we had never received much wide-world advertisement until the war came along. Still the annals of brave men in the world, from the story of King Arthur and the Round Table right down through history contain nothing more thrilling than the story of the Royal North-West Mounted Police. If anyone thinks that a young country cannot possess anything of romance in its story he ought to read something about this wonderful force of men who kept law in the newly-opened West as it has never been maintained in any other pioneer country in the history of new lands. They helped to make Canada's name of being particularly free from crime. The outside world will learn more and more of the pride we take in the record of our Mounted Police.

We are the only country in the world with a national game acquired from the aborigines. Our forefathers found lacrosse being played by the Indians when they came here. They took the game and adapted it for the usages of Anglo-Saxons with their love of sport. The game with its vigor and virility, its speed and its smallness, makes a fitting symbol for the new country. Lacrosse may never be as popular as some other sports because of the skill and discipline required to play it. It is, however, the one game in which Canadian supremacy has never been challenged. It is played individually to the sporting life of our country. Lacrosse is something typically Canadian.

Sometimes we have objected to Kipling's name for us "Our Lady of the snows." People who visit us in July and August learn that we also know something about heat. Still Canadians have a wide and practical knowledge of how to enjoy winter. Skating and snow-shoeing, hockey and tobogganing give a zest to life in cold weather. If an Englishman sees a picture of an ice palace surrounded by people in blanket suits, he will immediately identify it as a scene in Canada, "the land where they know how to enjoy winter." Some of our natural beauties and our natural resources, such as the lumbering industry, also help to give Canada character. We have been a little over-awed in the past by our hustling and conspicuous neighbor, and it is a healthy sign that the people of the Dominion are commencing to think along these lines. They are beginning to realize what it means to have a national idea and also to feel that "The twentieth century belongs to Canada."

MR. W. F. COCKSHUTT M. P. ON THE SUBJECT OF CONSCRIPTION

It is the Bounden Duty of the People of the Dominion to See That the Men at the Front Receive Adequate Backing—Eloquent Address in the Dominion House by the Member For Brantford—(Hansard Official Report)

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford).—Speaker, there are occasions when it is difficult for members of this House to decide what is the best course to pursue. I quite understand that the legislation now before us is causing a good many to have doubts as to what is their proper course. Speaking for myself, however, my path of duty lies perfectly clear before me in the support of the measure the Government has brought down. Never have I seen a great measure brought before the House that I could support with so good a conscience, or with clearer prospects that I am doing what is best in the interests of my country and my Empire.

I was somewhat surprised that my hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) spent so much time, first in proving that the voluntary system was a comparative failure, because it had not been carried on as it should have been carried on; deciding, then, that he would vote for the conscription measure on the second reading, but advising that it should be held in abeyance for some weeks or months, after which Parliament should be brought together and put through, so that it could be satisfactorily carried out. That seems to be his policy, I say I am surprised that a gentleman who has such a good knowledge of world affairs should, on a question of this importance, give forth any uncertain sound. I understand that the provincial leader of the Liberals, Mr. Kowell, recently held a meeting in his constituency, which is also that of my hon. friend (Mr. Nesbitt)—both these gentlemen are elected by the same constituencies. This meeting was held in Woodstock, and a resolution was moved by one of the gentlemen present to the effect that those present were heart and soul in favor of conscription. That resolution was carried, I understand, by a practically unanimous standing vote, and amongst those who voted, I believe, my hon. friend (Mr. Nesbitt) himself had the honor of appearing as well as the gentleman who was formerly representative of South Oxford and is a candidate for the next election, Mr. Schell.

Having taken that stand in his own constituency, I think it was the hon. gentleman's duty to himself and the House to state more plainly his attitude and to give more wholehearted support to this measure, which is undoubtedly required, which is in the best interests of Canada and of our army at the front, as well as of the Empire as a whole. This departure upon which the Government has embarked is the first voluntary system as carried out. I think, has been a great credit to our people. I believe that as many men enlisted under the voluntary system in the Dominion of Canada as enlisted in any other part of the world. But it succeeded only in those parts of the country that gave it a fair trial and did their best under it. If it failed in any place, it failed because it was not pushed with sufficient vigor by the natural leaders of the people. And who are those leaders? The members of this House. The man who represents a constituency in the house is the first citizen in his riding, and he is the man who should have taken the responsibility for recruiting in that riding. There were no kid-glove methods pursued in the province of Ontario when getting recruits, let me tell my hon. friends from the province of Quebec. These hon. gentlemen, who had a fair chance, that it has no been pushed for all it was worth in Quebec as it has been in other places. Let me tell these hon. gentlemen that the same methods that were pursued in Ontario were open to them in Quebec, if they choose to employ them. How were recruits raised in the various constituencies in Ontario? The members for the constituency—and I include the Liberals as well as the Conservatives—and think they deserve probably as much credit as we do, I will say of Oxford, constituency, have not been closely associated with recruiting there and I believe the same is true of Wellington and Lambton—put yourself at the head of the movement and carried the message to all the countryside. We did not get recruits in Brant to the number of 4,000 out of a population of a little over 40,000, let me tell my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), without putting forth exertion. The men in the county formed themselves into a little recruiting organization, including the best citizens on both sides of politics—there was no politics in it.

We did not know the politics of the men upon that recruiting committee, all parties, all races and all creeds were there. They got together, a band of citizens, believing that the life and unity of the Empire were at stake, that Christianity, civilization, and religion were in the balance and, like men realizing that all these responsibilities were upon them, they faced these responsibilities willingly in earnest, their care were at the disposal of speakers, whose homes were opened to visitors who came to speak their money was at their disposal, they raised thousands and thousands of private dollars of the city of Brantford and county of Brant were spent in getting these 4,000 men together. We did not have any rosy way of doing it. It was done by solid work and I ask the hon. member from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) as he seems to be one of the few representatives from Quebec in the chamber now if the same methods were not fairly tried in Quebec, if they were not fairly tried in Quebec he and his fellow members should shoulder the responsibility. The responsibility rests primarily upon the members of this House from the province of Quebec if the voluntary system did not receive the support it should have received. That is gospel truth and no one can deny it. Throughout Ontario this message was carried, at every cross-roads the doctrine was preached and at every school house the flag was unfurled and the message was delivered. People who had never had much experience in speaking, who previously had been slow in speech, rushed their throats in a way that I had never seen equalled in a public meeting in the city of Brantford or the county of Brant. What was the response? From the good old province of Ontario about 180,000 voluntary recruits offered their lives on the altar of their country, and tonight many of them are laying down their lives in the trenches that you and I may enjoy our ease at home. This thing has been done and it has been done by disinterested citizens

Mr. NESBITT: That is what I said—I said there was no partisanship so far as sending men to the front was concerned.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I think that Hansard will show that I have correctly represented what the hon. gentleman said. He said the whole war had been conducted in a partisan way. Of course, I do not wish to misrepresent the hon. gentleman.

Mr. NESBITT: I said that it was reported.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Oh! But the hon. gentleman's own experience in Oxford does not warrant any such statement. My experience in Brant certainly does not warrant it, and I think that the other hon. members can testify to the same effect with regard to their several counties. I say this is a real war measure. And I think that the Government mean business in it. If not, they certainly will not get my support for long. If they pass a Conscription Bill, declaring that they want to put it in force, and then leave it idle on the statute book and do not push it, I shall certainly be dissatisfied and shall criticize any turning back in this measure, or with regard to the control of food and fuel, or the grain commission. All these are thorough war measures, the kind of measure we have been calling for for some time.

Mr. NESBITT: I know that we have been calling for them, and know that now that we have got them we expect the Government will carry them out without fear or favor. If they do not live up to my expectations, all I can say is that I do not expect to follow a Government that makes fine professions but does not carry them into effect. I believe they are honest men and that they intend to carry out this law.

Mr. NESBITT: Then my hon. friend and I will have to form a separate party, for I quite agree with him.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I suppose I should be very proud of one sincere follower. The hon. gentleman has told us that the voluntary system is exhausted.

Mr. NESBITT: No, no.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: He told us that it was not effective because it was not properly carried out.

Mr. NESBITT: No, you have a bad memory.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I think that Hansard will show that the hon. gentleman attempted to prove that the voluntary enlistment had been so bungled that we did not get the men we called for.

Mr. NESBITT: No, I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The hon. gentleman said that officers had been put on the platform and given large money, husky chaps that ought to be at the front.

Mr. NESBITT: Sure I said that.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: The voluntary system was successful to the extent of procuring for our armies over 400,000 men. I do not think that any one is justified in describing that as a failure.

Mr. NESBITT: You are saying just what I said.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: If the hon. gentleman agrees with me, I hope he in all parts of the country. What took place in Ontario I am sure also took place throughout the whole of West and if it has not applied to the East it is because the members, primarily of the Opposition, have not done as was done in Ontario. I placed myself at the head of a recruiting league and went out and carried the message and planted the cross—the fiery cross—upon every road that leads to every town, city, and hamlet in Quebec. I feel confident if that had been done the response from Quebec would have been better than it has been.

We are told that this is a fit subject for a referendum, war began in this country have not frequently shifted their responsibility and placed upon the people the lead that they themselves should take. There has been the vogue in Canada. It may be wrong. In Australia they pursue a different course but in this country Governments have shouldered the responsibility with regard to all questions they have had to deal with and they have placed them fairly and squarely before the people. But now we have the policy proposed of a referendum—of the people as a whole to allow the slacker, the man who has not gone under the voluntary system, to say that he will not go under the compulsory system, while our 400,000 soldiers are out of the country. Is that a fair proposition? No.

This is not a fit subject for a referendum because in many cases the voter to whom it will be submitted is not a fair and impartial-minded man to give a decision on such a subject. If the liberties are worth having, they are worth fighting for, and if the liberties which we in Canada enjoy are as great as we think they are, they are worthy of the best efforts of every citizen.

I do not want to reproach my fellow citizens from Quebec. I am sorry to disagree with them on a question of such great importance, but I must say that Quebec has been the greatest disappointment to me in the whole of my heart. When this war began I thought: Now, Canada will be a united country; never have we been united before. Now we will be absolutely united. Look at the great old land of France, valourous, brilliant, brave, there she is with every man available, every woman, every child throwing their lives into the struggle, spending their last ounce of energy, their last drop of blood, in defence of the great old land, which gave our friends their language and their liberties in the first place, and to whom they owe a great deal of what they possess. I said: There will be no doubt about the position of Quebec on this great question, because all her people will stand shoulder to shoulder with us. But now is there to be a referendum—to all the people of Canada?—no, to the people who stay at home, to the people who should have gone but who did not go. It has remained for the province of Quebec to furnish, in my mind, the most pathetic and outstanding figure in Canada in all this whole war.

I am sorry that the right hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition (Mr. Wilfrid Laurier) is not here because I wanted to make a special appeal to him. I was going to propose one referendum, and that was the proposal I would give in to the extent of such a referendum as that which I propose. I would be willing and delighted to pay the expenses of this particular referendum. If my right hon. friend would make it, what is it? It is that he immediately send a wireless message to Dr. Beaudry, the ex-Postmaster General in his own Government, telling him that Canada, to-day in regard to recruiting and conscription and asking him, on behalf of his own people here, to tell his friends on the other side of the House, especially the members from Quebec, I feel that they have misjudged the situation, and are not prize the liberties that have been theirs under the British flag, and I ask them to repent, or in one united effort, let us bring the war to a close, because if we allow the enemy to defeat us in this matter, we will only regret it once, and that will be for all time to come.

An attempt has been made, on the part of many, to confuse the one issue in this Bill, and we hear a great deal about the conscription of wealth. The hon. gentleman from South Renfrew, dwelt on that at great length, and the Finance Minister has replied very ably. I look upon this and other matters which have been discussed as with the question before the House. These questions have been dragged in, but are not properly matters to be discussed in this debate. The conscription of wealth is a subject by itself, which seems to be very well defined, and the Finance Minister tells us he has been able so far and expects to be able, in the future, to furnish all the funds that are required for the war. We want the men, and the money will take care of itself and will be provided in due course. The ministers of every denomination have preached conscription of wealth as well as of men. I attended a church meeting this week, and this question came up, and in my own church I said what I am not afraid to say here, that this proposition, with regard to the conscription of wealth, is going to hit some of the preachers, if it is carried, and I think it started them puzzling a little bit. Let it be remembered that, if you conscript a man, you take the whole of him, and do not leave a leg or arm behind, and you require a good sound man. If the conscription of wealth means the same thing it is going to take the whole pile of wealth which a man possesses, leaving nothing behind. Many of our clergymen brethren are lords over a great pile of money. I think Quebec can tell us something about that as well as Ontario. It must be remembered that, if conscription of wealth is coming, some of the churches are going to be hit. It reminds me of a remark a Six Nation Indian used to make, when they told him the preacher had given them a pay and poor preach. "Well, it was poor good deal the same with our clerical brethren. If all the wealth be conscripted the churches will not be supported as they have been. Wealth has been accumulated by many of the religious bodies, and the clerical gentleman cannot refuse to obey the scriptural teaching, that a man should always pay taxes and obligations of that kind, especially if he is a religious man. I throw out that hint to the preachers who are propounding this doctrine from the pulpit; that the conscription of wealth will take the accumulated wealth of the churches, as well as the wealth of the individuals. We are all prepared for that to the full extent necessary to conduct this war to a finish. Canada has the right to expect from its citizens the surrender of all that they possess to be used in defence of the country. In other words, the rights of the State are superior to the rights of any individuals. That is a strong doctrine perhaps to preach, but it will be found to be absolutely true. It has been the price of liberty and freedom for all time, and always will be. The state, which is the accumulation and union of individuals is always superior to the units which compose the whole. The State at the present time says we want men, we want more men, they have not volunteered. We are bringing down legislation to conscript these men, or, to use a selecter draft, or whatever you wish, and put them into line. These men will be selected without fear or favour by the powers that be.

That there will be no reduction in the price of Ford cars on August 1st.

We Do Not Guarantee

That the Ford Motor Co. will not announce an increase in the price of Ford cars this fall.

The obvious thing to do is to place orders now for immediate delivery.

suggests, will the Government repeal the School Act of Ontario?

Mr. Cockshutt: I am hardly ready to discuss the bilingual question on the present occasion.

Mr. Lafontaine: And we are not ready to go.

Mr. Cockshutt: I have my views about it, but I do not think the people of Quebec can escape defending our common country, because we do not speak as good French in Ontario as we should.

I have spoken strongly on this question, and I feel strongly. It is a profound regret to me, personally, that I have not the support of my hon. friends on the other side of the House, especially the members from Quebec. I feel that they have misjudged the situation, and are not prize the liberties that have been theirs under the British flag, and I ask them to repent, or in one united effort, let us bring the war to a close, because if we allow the enemy to defeat us in this matter, we will only regret it once, and that will be for all time to come.

ed for the war. We want the men, and the money will take care of itself and will be provided in due course.

The ministers of every denomination have preached conscription of wealth as well as of men. I attended a church meeting this week, and this question came up, and in my own church I said what I am not afraid to say here, that this proposition, with regard to the conscription of wealth, is going to hit some of the preachers, if it is carried, and I think it started them puzzling a little bit. Let it be remembered that, if you conscript a man, you take the whole of him, and do not leave a leg or arm behind, and you require a good sound man. If the conscription of wealth means the same thing it is going to take the whole pile of wealth which a man possesses, leaving nothing behind. Many of our clergymen brethren are lords over a great pile of money. I think Quebec can tell us something about that as well as Ontario. It must be remembered that, if conscription of wealth is coming, some of the churches are going to be hit. It reminds me of a remark a Six Nation Indian used to make, when they told him the preacher had given them a pay and poor preach. "Well, it was poor good deal the same with our clerical brethren. If all the wealth be conscripted the churches will not be supported as they have been. Wealth has been accumulated by many of the religious bodies, and the clerical gentleman cannot refuse to obey the scriptural teaching, that a man should always pay taxes and obligations of that kind, especially if he is a religious man. I throw out that hint to the preachers who are propounding this doctrine from the pulpit; that the conscription of wealth will take the accumulated wealth of the churches, as well as the wealth of the individuals. We are all prepared for that to the full extent necessary to conduct this war to a finish. Canada has the right to expect from its citizens the surrender of all that they possess to be used in defence of the country. In other words, the rights of the State are superior to the rights of any individuals. That is a strong doctrine perhaps to preach, but it will be found to be absolutely true. It has been the price of liberty and freedom for all time, and always will be. The state, which is the accumulation and union of individuals is always superior to the units which compose the whole. The State at the present time says we want men, we want more men, they have not volunteered. We are bringing down legislation to conscript these men, or, to use a selecter draft, or whatever you wish, and put them into line. These men will be selected without fear or favour by the powers that be.

It has been stated in the House on several occasions that our soldiers are not paid as they should be paid, and that we are making them serve for a very much less wage than they could earn in any of the ordinary walks of life. While that may be the case, can any gentleman present tell me of any soldier in the world who is better paid than the Canadian? I do not think we can be accused of having yet to hear of him. Therefore, I have yet to hear of him. Therefore, I do not think we can be accused of being niggardly. What was the pay of the French soldier when the war broke out? A penny a day, raised since, I believe, to five cents. The German pay is so small you do not hear of it at all. The British pay is less than half of ours, and the Australian pay is less than ours. Being in constant communication with them at the front, having blood relations there, I think I know what I am speaking about when I say that the

"HER BETTER SELF"
The story and players: Vivian Tyler (Pauline Frederick) society debutante and engaged to marry the young Count Belloto (Frank De Rheim) meets Dr. Robert Keith (Thomas Meighan), whose work in uplifting the poor has attracted wide attention among the wealthy patrons of whom Tyler is one.

"HER DOUBLE LIFE"
The story of a woman who deliberately takes the place of another she bleeds dead and is called to account a verdict after she has fallen in love with the man who befriended her. Makes Theda Bara's new photoplay for William Fox one of exceptionally gripping heart-interest. In "Her Double Life," Miss Bara plays the part of Mary Doone, who begins life at a disadvantage, as a child of the slums. She works her way to a high position in London society, then comes to discover, and all is over.

"THE HIGHWAY OF HOPE"
"I don't think," said Kathlyn Williams, the Morosco-Panama star, "that there is more romantic or mysterious place in the American desert."

THE MARKETS AT A GLANCE

Various lines of produce and provisions were in an active market during the week. Both butter and eggs are reaching the distributing centres in large quantities and prices show an easier tendency. Heavy production in these commodities is now taking place at country points. Live hogs were scarcer and packers put up their prices in order to induce the farmers to bring them out. Poultry of various kinds reached the market in fairly good supply, but the demand is light and quotations were accordingly down.

Flour held in steady position, due to a corresponding situation in the wheat market. There is only a light demand for the commodity as yet. Sugar declined 16c per hundred and is in light demand, but the coming of the fruit preserving season is expected to have a stimulating effect on demand. Much depends on the quantity of strawberries marketed. Reports are conflicting as to the probable production of berries. As yet they have not been reaching the market in large quantities.

Advances were recorded in salad dressing, ice cream salt, soap chips, jams, maple syrup, black pepper. Old potatoes are nearly cleaned out and new Southern potatoes are now taking their place, prices having declined in the latter during the week. Lettuce and radishes are slow sellers owing to the backyard production which is getting under way. Canadian cabbage and beets are now reaching the market. Georgia peaches are put in an appearance, being the first of the season. Business is still

WOMENS' INSTITUTE

The June meeting of the Moyle-Tranquility Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Passmore on Tuesday, the 26th.

The meeting was opened by the singing of "The Maple Leaf," followed by the repeating of the Institute motto. The roll call was responded to by suggestions on preserving or canning fruit. An instrumental solo was given by Miss Evelyn Kemp. The government delegate, Miss Sutherland, gave a most interesting and instructive talk on "The Boys and Girls of To-day."

Mrs. Gregory read a paper describing "The Canadian Exhibit at the Panama Pacific Exposition at San Diego." The meeting was closed by the singing of the National Anthem.

John Mc Graw Topples From High Pedestal

Giant Leader Overestimated His Strength When He Challenged President Tener—Review of Encounter

If the McGraw incident of the week did anything, it certainly disproved the common fallacy that John McGraw was the biggest man in the National League. There were many persons who believed that as a religion. In McGraw's famous "alleged" interview attacking Tener he was quoted as stacking his record up against that of the National League President, as a player, a business man and what he did for the National League. As for Tener, McGraw asked "What did he ever do but take orders?" But we admit that was repudiated.

Some of McGraw's worshippers chinked when they read this. When a National League meeting was called to try McGraw they indignantly said: "Why, they don't dare suspend McGraw for the season; it would break up the league."

All of Tener's methods in handling the case are not above criticism. He permitted a statement to be given to the public in which the investigating writers were made falsifiers of the truth and were charged with writing "scurrilous interviews." But Tener must be given the credit for the way he handled McGraw. He did not dignify McGraw's challenge and compare his own record as a member of Congress and Governor of the second largest State in the Union, against McGraw's record as a pugnaconous manager. He refused to even comment on the interview, but when the National League directors were assembled, he said:

"Gentlemen, John McGraw said so and so; what will you do about it?"

McGraw Learns His Lesson

Every one knows what they said. They gave McGraw the alternative of being suspended for the season, if it was not expulsion from baseball and a loss of a $50,000 per annum job, or to charge the newspaper correspondents with "dreaming" the scurrilous interviews. And every one knows what he did—McGraw turned against the persons responsible for his position in baseball in order to save his own scalp.

McGraw's challenge of Tener's authority was the most stupid thing he has done in his entire career. Like many of his admirers he far overestimated his own strength and importance. He evidently expected to get by with it, but he was called. And when he was called in a far different way than he supposed like many of his immediate disciples, he believed that the National League not dare put the skids under him.

He also failed to take into account the makeup of the men who would back Tener. The Philadelphia club was immediately concerned in his repudiated charges, what would become of baseball? Perhaps Tener might have thought of that before he made McGraw's reputation public, or the stream up in the language which was used. And is any one in the National League so stupid as to think that the public was deceived? Does Tener or any of the club owners believe that anyone believes those so-called "scurrilous" articles were faked? The public may answer Tener's league in a way that will make Tener regret McGraw's repudiation ever was sent to the press.

HOLLAND SWARMS WITH REFUGEES

Deserters From Ranks of German Army Join the Stream of Fugitives

SPY SYSTEM RAMPANT. Country Only Now Awakening to Danger of an Open Frontier

The Hague, Netherlands, June 30.—(Correspondence)—Thousands of deserters, mostly from the German army, now are pouring into Holland from adjoining countries. Holland has become a great place of refuge for fugitives fleeing from the terrors of the German military regime. So numerous have these war refugees become that a weekly periodical, called "The Combat," has been established at Amsterdam to carry on a revolutionary socialist propaganda among these a society of deserters has been formed in Holland, apparently by German agents in order to discover the names of deserters and exert pressure on their families to induce them to return to Germany. Returning deserters no longer are shot but are sent to the front.

The country is overrun by a small army of spies, persons of both sexes. Tener, however, would have been a bigger man had he chosen some other way to settle this affair than to help McGraw make falsifiers out of men who have devoted their careers to stirring up business for the organization of which Tener is the head—men who are responsible for the success of the national game.

Few baseball men realize what newspaper publicity has done for baseball, and it isn't any 50-50 proposition, as Tener in a speech once implied.

Should the newspapers stop printing a line of baseball, major league franchises would not be worth the paper they are printed on. Should the big news agencies cease running standings of the clubs,

CAINSVILLE ...

(From Our Own Correspondent) At the league meeting on Monday evening the topic of "Honesty" was taken by Mr. R. Frayne, which proved very interesting. Miss M. Norrie gave a solo. Duets were given by Misses Burril, Allan, and Blundell.

Mr. Ellis was presented with a book of Tenyson's poems by the League. The address was read by Miss A. Hawley. Mr. Ellis will be greatly missed, as he has been a willing worker in the League.

Rev. Mr. Plyley was also presented with an address and purse by the congregations of Brant and Cainsville. Mrs. Plyley was presented with a box of stationery by the Ladies' Aid.

Both pastors made very fitting replies, and a pleasant social time was spent. Rev. Mr. Plyley and family are moving this week to their new home in Hickson.

Miss A. Hawley's S. S. class, "The Gleaners," and their girl friends had a very enjoyable picnic on the O. I. B. grounds on Thursday.

Our new pastor, Rev. Mr. Downs and family, are moving in the parsonage this week.

Mr. Eric Watson, Toronto, spent the week-end in our village.

RATS.

If we'd conserve the food supply and have enough of corn and rye, of wheat and oats and graham bread, to keep the fighting peoples fed, we will have to arm ourselves with slats or other tools, and bat the rats. We tell the housewives, in our haste, how they must shut the sin of waste, we hand out language stern and wise about our vital food supplies, and busy rats beneath the barns for cleanness don't care a darn. They spoil more grain each passing day than many ships could bear away. Let's, through our hats,

(From Friday's Daily.)
Meanwhile Detective-Sergeant Congreve had routed out a colleague in the division, and was more actively engaged. Together they walked along the Commercial Road until they reached a corner shop. The lower half of the big plate-glass windows had been blackened, and staring white letters announced:

Dispensary

Hours: 8 till 10 a.m., 7 till 9 p.m.
The pair pushed their way into the room, bare save for a cupboard and table and a series of hard wooden forms. Women crowded the latter, some within children, some without, and a shrill clatter of tongues died away for the instant as they took stock of the newcomers. An anemic young man, busy juggling with bottles and pill-boxes, nodded abruptly to the vacant end of a bench.

"I want the doctor," he said. "Sit down there and take your turn." He returned his attention feverishly to his dispensing. "That'll be thruppence, Mrs. Isaacs—to be taken as before. Eh? No, you know very well what the rules are. If you ain't got the money you shouldn't have come. Now, who's next? Don't you hear the doctor calling?"

Indeed, a querulous, guttural voice from the top of the stairs which led out of the dispensary was shouting fiercely, and two or three women pushed forward. The anemic dispenser shrilly demanded quiet—an order of which not the slightest notice was taken. The argument as to precedence threatened to develop to physical violence, and Congreve's colleague stepped forward and took hold of the dispenser's thin arm.

"That Doctor Steingurt up-stairs?" he demanded.

"Why the blazes don't you go and sit down?" demanded the assistant, feebly wrathful. "He can't see 'y' at all, now can he? 'Ere, let 'em go, my art!"

"It's Mr. Hugh—a rozzer," said some one, and the tumult stilled. The assistant lost his air of authority as a pricked toy balloon collapses, "say you can see the boss is busy. Won't it do? What do you want?"

"You won't do, son," said Hugh. "We're going right up to the doctor now, and you'll have to get these ladies to excuse him five minutes." Congreve meanwhile had pushed himself to the stairs. Hugh released the dispenser and followed. A dozen steps brought them to the consulting room and face to face with a swarthy little man in a frock coat which barely concealed the dirtiness of his linen. Heavy circular spectacles gave him something of the appearance of an owl.

"Doctor Steingurt?" asked Congreve. Hugh had softly closed the door behind them.

The doctor glanced at them through his gold-rimmed spectacles. "You're the man with you, eh?" he demanded briskly. "Speak up now, you see I have a lot of people waiting, as I only charge sixpence."

Hugh muttered something below his breath. Congreve cut in, "We're not patients, you'll have to give us a little of your attention without any fee this time, doctor. We're police officers."

"It is most inconvenient that you come at this time," protested Steingurt. "I told the goroner—he waved flabby hands at them—that I should not come again. It was legal—oh, I know the law—I am not a jary. The child would have died anyway, and the man which called me didn't had my fee. Why should I give up a night's rest for nothing? Here is the hospital for paupers. He grew more excited. "I tell you will not come to that goroner's court any more. I will see my solicitor. I will not come."

Both detectives remembered the standing feud—it was continually being reported in the newspapers—between the coroner of the district and Steingurt. The doctor held that he was justified in demanding cash in advance when called to see a sick person, and more than once the patients had died before the money could be procured.

Steingurt, moreover, demanded a fee for giving evidence in such cases as these, and literally snapped his fingers at the reiterated censure of coroner and jury alike.

The visit of the police, therefore, he associated with the recent case, and considered that a new ruse had been hit upon by his enemy to annoy him.

"It is most highly inconvenient," he repeated, "to come in my consultations and drag me down to that nasty court youst to talk nonsense."

"Steady, doctor," remonstrated Congreve. "We're nothing to do with that. You were called out last night—or rather this morning. That's what we want to talk about."

Steingurt blinked behind his spectacles. "I am always being called out. I will look at my book, if you like. Here is nothing wrong?"

"Tricky," thought Congreve, well on his guard. Hugh was swinging a heavily shod foot thoughtfully. "We'll know that when you've told us," said Congreve sharply. "You went to Levine Street, who did you see? Why were you called?"

"That's so," agreed Steingurt. "It was a little girl—had case of diphtheria."

"Really?" The detective's voice was silk, and how much were you paid to keep your mouth shut?"

The doctor glared at him, and suddenly advancing a step, shook a list in his face. Congreve delicately extended the tips of his fingers and touched the others chest, pushed him backward. Hugh was looking on with passive indifference, save that his foot still twitched backward and forward.

"This is a conspiracy to insult me," protested Steingurt. "I don't believe you are police officers. You had better go, or I will have you thrown out!"

"Was it ten pounds or twenty?" persisted Congreve steadily. "It looks to me as if you knew there was something fishy on, or you wouldn't be so unwilling to talk."

"I cannot talk about my patients. It is professional ediquette—you know very well Steingurt seemed to have lost a little of his confidence. 'You've got no right to question me.'"

"Just you listen to me, doctor!" Hugh, big, overbearing, threatening, pushed his way into the dialogue. "We know all about professional etiquette, but we know a lot more about crooks—and those who get mixed up with them. Savvy? We ain't here for lip-trap, as don't you try us too far. Suppose we take him along on suspicion, eh, Congreve?"

THE WET BLANKET PARENT

A little friend of mine had a perfectly glorious plan for building a tiny tea house. It was to consist entirely of a verandah and an open fireplace "because those are things people like best."

She took her plans to the carpenter and he told her he could build for the sum she was willing to use. She stopped at my house on the way home radiant with excitement and hopes. She is a clever little cook, she had an excellent location. Her one fear had been that the carpenter work would be beyond her.

She fairly bubbled over with hope and happiness. I must run home and tell mother," she said as she went out.

"People Aren't When They Get Older." The next day I met her and asked what her mother said. "Oh mother just said, 'they'll promise anything,' when I told her about the carpenter. She sighed. 'Mother isn't very enthusiastic. I can't see why you people aren't when they get older.'"

"The rancid was gone from her face and voice. I could just picture the way her mother looked when she said that. I don't know how, but I think she was of that kind of a wet blanket she can be."

Isn't "Wet Blanket" A Good Phrase. "What an excellent description of service. The ordinary person is always at a loss in attempting to truthfully convey a portrait. It needs high training to enable a man to give the salient points of any person's appearance—and even then the result is not always satisfactory."

"Well, good-by, doctor," said Congreve. "We'll call again when you're outside. Congreve hustled his companion along the wet pavement. "Come along," he said. "I want to telephone to Mr. Menzies. I've got an idea."

"CHAPTER XXIV
Baiting a Trap." Although his right arm hung limp and the set of his well-cut morning coat was somewhat spoiled by the bulge of the baggages on his shoulder, Cincinnati Red looked almost as spruce and debonaire as ever. He listened with immobile face to Menzies's expression of sympathy.

"I'm right sorry," the detective was saying, and he had his back to you. You didn't guess he was wise to the gag or it might have been different. I'd back you against Ling every time."

A whimsical, humorous smile lighted Cincinnati's aged features. "I get you," he drawled. "You're handing out the soothing syrup dope. I'm on to those curves. What you giving me?"

"Would you like to have another cut at Ling?"

"The 'com' man drew his shaggy brows together and observed Menzies narrowly. "Would a duck swim?" he commented shortly. "Wait till my old man gets his foot on the gas-pedal at some more stool-pigeon business. I'm not hankering after it; but I might be tempted—if it sounded good."

"Well"—Menzies crossed his knees and passed his hand along his face. "We've got Ling located to an extent. You'll be pleased to learn that he found a rough-house after he gave his little show. He got man-handled at a place called 'Shadwell' and they had to have a doctor."

Cincinnati rubbed his hand. "That's all to the good, chief. Say, I'd like to buy the guy who did it something."

"That was only a knock-out," explained Menzies, "and unluckily we did not get on to it till this morning. We believe he got away in the night, but we're not dead sure. Anyway, he can't be far from the house we've located, and we know there are some other toughs in it. Would you care to call on the house and see who's there? There'll probably be some one who knows you and you'll be all right."

And considering that my little friend's enthusiasm had passed through that process what wonder it had faded in a day?

One of the nicest mothers I know—and one of the busiest—has been squeezing out some extra time to help her little girl get subscriptions in a pony contest. "No," she said, "I don't think she'll get it, and her father thinks it's all nonsense but when she came to me all enthusiastic and wanted me to help I just couldn't bear to be a wet blanket. I know too well what that's like."

Like Pushing a Dead Weight. Another girl who has accomplished quite a bit of unusual business told me that every step she took was taken to a family chorus of "You can't possibly do that." "That's no kind of work for a woman." "It will be too much for you," etc.

It was like pushing a dead weight at a place where you had a slip on. "I know the man," she said, "and if I ever have any children I'm going to try above all things not to hang back. Of course I'll try to give them good advice but I'll give them sympathy and encouragement first."

"I'm right sorry," the detective was saying, and he had his back to you. You didn't guess he was wise to the gag or it might have been different. I'd back you against Ling every time."

A whimsical, humorous smile lighted Cincinnati's aged features. "I get you," he drawled. "You're handing out the soothing syrup dope. I'm on to those curves. What you giving me?"

"The 'com' man drew his shaggy brows together and observed Menzies narrowly. "Would a duck swim?" he commented shortly. "Wait till my old man gets his foot on the gas-pedal at some more stool-pigeon business. I'm not hankering after it; but I might be tempted—if it sounded good."

Anyway, he can't be far from the house we've located, and we know there are some other toughs in it. Would you care to call on the house and see who's there? There'll probably be some one who knows you and you'll be all right."

"Yep," said the other crisply. "Likely Ling. What chance would I stand walking into a wasps' nest like that? It's no bet, chief. Call it off."

"Why, I didn't think there was a yellow streak in you, Cincinnati," said Menzies. "I wouldn't ask you to do it if I thought there was any danger. There'll be plenty of my people on hand, but you're not likely to get into any trouble. Didn't I tell you that Ling had slipped out. I'd go myself or get one of my chaps, only it would be better if it wasn't a stranger. I'm asking as a favor."

"The 'com' man stroked his mustache in irresolution. He was really bitter about Ling and would cheerfully have contributed any effort that would add to the discomfort or peril of his erstwhile colleague—so long as he ran no avoidable hazard himself. He was under no illusion in regard to Menzies's honeyed efforts to persuade him. He knew that the chief inspector had little bias toward him; that he regarded him merely as a crook—a crook who happened to be a yellow streak who might be coaxing into helping the law by fulfilling an instinct of revenge. Not that he had any compunction as to paying off old scores that way. It was just the question of risk."

"Are you likely to be going back there again?" asked Congreve. Steingurt shook his head. "Not unless they send for me."

"It was dark when you were called out. Do you think any of those people would recognize you?"

Good Night Stories
By Blanche Silcock

BUSY BOBBY
Bobby sat on the porch waiting for the rain to stop. Over on the bench lay a big red kite. Every little while Bobby went over to see that it was all right.

"I can't see why it has to rain so much. I suppose it's rain all day so I can't fly my new kite," complained Bobby to his mother.

"Maybe not, dear. Isn't there something you can do until it stops?" asked his mother.

"There's nothing to do on horrid days like this," replied Bobby as the rain pattered down harder than ever.

"I wonder, Bobby, if you'll empty the ashes from the kitchen stove for me?" asked Mother.

"Oh, shoot," said Bobby with a pout.

"Well, I thought you might do that while you are waiting for the rain to stop," replied Mother.

Bobby took the ashes to the barnyard. The old rooster saw him coming and ran from the coop. He stretched his wings and cawed. The white hen began to sing in a loud voice and before many seconds the whole barnyard joined in the noisy chorus. Bobby emptied the ashes in to their pen and the hens with a joyous cackle soon had ashes flying everywhere as they dusted themselves.

"You folks don't care how hard it rains," said Bobby, as he watched them.

"Give them 'corn and water while you're there," called his mother.

Bobby threw in the corn and filled up their pan with water. The rooster crowed his thanks and Bobby had to laugh at the way he strutted around the water. Bobby called Mother.

"Bobby filled the ash pan with sticks and went to the house whistling.

"Would you mind sweeping off the steps while they're wet? Then I won't have to scrub them," said Mother.

Bobby, still whistling, found the broom and before long the porch and steps were nice and clean. Then he went into the kitchen, took up the dish cloth and dried the dishes for his mother. Just as the last cup was wiped the rain stopped and the sun burst forth from behind the clouds.

"Well, of all things!" said Bobby "I would rain all day!"

"If you had sat around waiting for it to stop, the time would have seemed long, but you were so busy helping me that the minutes flew by quickly. Now there's a lovely breeze for your kite," said Mother with a glad cry. Bobby gathered up the red kite and ran down the walk. He soon had it soaring among the fleecy white clouds that looked like white sails flapping in the wind.

"Mother's always right. Time sure goes faster when one is busy," said Bobby to himself, as he watched the air red tail sweep through the air.

"I know how I'm tied down. Well, shall we consider it settled? I won't forget you acted like a white man, lad—some other time."

After all, reflected Cincinnati, there was no reason why he shouldn't chance it. It would put him right with the police and very likely, as Menzies said, there would be no fuss. Until his shoulder healed there would be little card-playing at his flat, and if he refused the police would probably become unduly attentive to any other enterprise in which he might embark.

"I'm with you," he said.

"Good for you, Cincinnati," exclaimed Menzies. "I guessed you would. I have taken the liberty of having some clothes got ready for you. You can't train the East End in your usual fit, so much the better."

He glanced at his watch. It was half-past five. "I'll have those things sent in to you," he went on. "I'll be back in a minute."

He was whistling softly as he passed along the corridor. He passed to tap at Foyle's door and to poke his head inside. "All fixed up, sir," he said. "I'm going to rout out those men you promised me."

As he closed the door a man touched him on the sleeve. He raised his eyebrows in question as he saw a brown-faced, silk-hatted man of medium size in a much worn frock coat. Their recognition came to him. "Why, it's you, Congreve! They've done you well. How's the likeness?" (Continued in Tuesday's Daily.)

Canadian soldier is one of the best treated men and one of the best soldiers the world has ever seen. The pay never was presumed to compensate him for his effort. The soldier's life is presumed to be sacrificed to the State. No money value can be placed on that life. It is beyond price, and cannot be measured by dollars and cents. It is a gift from God. A man who goes to the trenches, and lays his life on the altar of his country, cannot be paid in money. People have raised the bogey that the pay of the Canadian soldier is insufficient, but the pay never induces these men to join the ranks. The first contingent did not enlist because the men desired to draw $1.10 a day, nor did any of the subsequent contingents go to the front on account of the remuneration. They said: our country needs us at the front; by Divine Providence I have been created a man fit to serve; I am sound in mind and limb; I place my services on the altar of my country, and the $1.10 or $2. or $5 per day I get amounts to nothing; I am fighting because I believe in the cause. I am fighting because my King and country need me; I am fighting for the liberties of my people, and in order that the British race may be supreme in the future as it has been in the past; these are the things that have appealed to me—not the paltry $1.10 a day. Mr. Speaker, you cannot pay these men with money; it is folly to try to raise the bogey of our men being insufficiently paid and of that being the reason for lack of enlistment. In most instances, our men are getting all the pay that they expect, and all that they are asked. But they do want to be sustained in their work; they ask that we at home instead of bickering and quarrelling over minor matters of detail, should get together and in conjunction with the boys overseas, present a united front to the Hun and give him to understand that we are in the fight to a finish. I do not like the last clause of this Bill—it happens to be No. 13, the unlucky number—which limits the number of men required to 100,000. We may need more men than that. We must give the Hun a successful prosecution of the war requires; we have engaged to do our part to the utmost of our ability and to the limit of our resources. Therefore I say that this section of the Bill should be struck out.

It has been said that labour is opposed to conscription. Well, I come from a town in which 7,000 of the citizens work in factories and earn their daily bread, and while a handful of them, in meeting assembled, did pass a resolution against conscription some weeks ago, I do not think that their opinion represents the attitude of labour. I do not believe that the views of the gentlemen who met in Ottawa represent the attitude of labour. I believe that the attitude of labour now is what it has been; the testimony of the men in the trenches is the best answer to the assertion that labour is opposed to conscription. From 100,000 to 150,000 working men are either fighting in the trenches or are ready to go to the front when they are needed. It is plainly evident that this war is a war of the people. Every class in line to do its part in the prosecution of the war—from the richest to the poorest, from the highest to the lowest. To say that the wealthy man has not done anything because his wealth has not been conscripted is simply begging the question. I do not know that there are any millionaires in the community from which I come, but I believe that the sons of the well-to-do in the county of Brant have gone to the front in just as great numbers as the sons of the needy and the poor. The comradeship and the good feeling that has prevailed among the men and the officers who have gone to the front has done my heart good on many occasions. I know of university boys from Brantford, qualified lawyers and medical men, who have enlisted in the ranks. One young man in particular was offered a commission. He said: I am no soldier; I know my limitations. I know that without experience I am not fit to lead men; I will go and fight my way upwards from the ranks. That boy came from one of the best families in Brantford; he had been accustomed to the very best living that the city could furnish. He went overseas and put in a year and a half in the trenches as a private. He qualified for a Lieutenant's commission, and a month afterwards fell while leading the platoon that my own son had been leading. His body has not been recovered and his friends do not know where that body lies. I mention that only to show the spirit that prevails among the men. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if we in this House had applied ourselves as diligently to carrying out the requirements of the war as we have to finding fault with each other, what they are to-day. This war is far from being over. The submarines are taking a very heavy toll of the merchant marine; this week 27 or 28 cantile marine; this week 27 or 28 of the largest British ships of the line have been sunk. The men at the front need help; the situation is serious. I believe that the House should put this measure through as quickly as possible, and that both sides of the House should get behind it and make it successful. We should present a united front in obtaining the 100,000 men, or whatever number is required, and whatever equipping them and getting them to the firing line thus saving many lives and perhaps, materially shortening the war. It is up to Canada to do as she has done nobly, but let her not now spool her splendid record of three years by faltering or giving

THE BLESSING OF A HEALTHY BODY

Has Not Had An Hour's Sickness Since Taking "FRUIT-A-TIVES".

78 Lees Ave., Ottawa, Ont., August 9th, 1915.

"I think it my duty to tell you what 'Fruit-a-tives' has done for me. Three years ago, I began to feel run-down and tired, and suffered very much from Liver and Kidney Trouble. Having read of 'Fruit-a-tives', I thought I would try them. The result was surprising. During the 2 1/2 years past, I have taken them regularly and would not change for anything. I have not had an hour's sickness since I commenced using 'Fruit-a-tives', and I know now what I haven't known for a good many years—that is, the blessing of a healthy body and clear thinking brain".

evidences of decay. Let her be just as resolute, just as firm as she was in August, 1914. Let us now be just as firmly resolved as we were at that time to carry the nation to the victory; to ensure the freedom and the liberty of the nations of Europe, both small and great. I have had occasion to criticise the great nation to the south of us; I have even been termed an anti-American. But I rejoice now that the people of the United States are shoulder to shoulder with us in the great fight for the liberty of the world. Only last January I criticised President Wilson; I thought that he deserved criticism. I want to withdraw that criticism now in the same degree and give him credit for having thrown himself into the war as few statesmen on either side of the Atlantic have done. Every step that he has taken has been wisely conceived. In the United States they are giving the very best that they can of their wealth and their energy to the prosecution of the war. They are forming aviation corps; sending ships across the sea and building more; taking other ships to sea. That, Mr. Speaker, should give us encouragement. That should cause us to resolve anew that we will continue the great work we have undertaken. I believe that, by the providence of God, the British Empire, and its Allies—France, Italy, Russia, Belgium, Serbia, Roumania, Japan—will secure a vindication of the principles of liberty and justice which they have enunciated and will be justified in their upholding of the right of smaller nations to live in peace and amity and to have absolute control of their own affairs.

Although history may contain pages that contain more words and tales that take longer to tell, history will contain no prouder or brighter page than that which tells of the noble part that has been played by the Dominion of Canada up to the present time on the battlefields of Europe, and if we at home are only as good, true, and honest in our hearts as the men whom we have sent to the front we shall have no regrets; we shall have nothing to recall; but we shall have the proud satisfaction of a good heart and a clear conscience in the presence of both God and man.
