The Heir of Bayneham

—AND—
Lady Hutton's Ward.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Crowds of expectant tenants and servants assembled; and when the carriages came at length into sight a cheer arose from all, that made the very welkin ring.

"There is my lord—that is my lady—and see the little viscount!" was heard on all sides.

Lord Bayneham's face wore a reverent, almost awe-struck expression.

"How shall we best deserve all this happiness, Hilda?" he said. "I feel unworthy of it. Heaven help me to do my best!"

In the second carriage Lady Bayneham sat with Barbara Earle and Bertie Carlyon. There were cheers for her, for Barbara was loved by those who served her.

It was a pleasant sight, when the carriage drove away, to see the young earl and his beautiful wife smiling under the broad Gothic porch of their old home. People afterward said that Lady Hilda's face was bright as a sunbeam. Lord Bayneham stood holding her hand in his, while he in a few graceful words thanked the crowd around him for their hearty welcome. There was a cheer for the gallant earl, and one for his fair wife. Then Lord Bayneham, raising the child in his arms, called for another cheer for his son, the heir of Bayneham.

Not one word could Bertie Carlyon contrive to speak that evening to Miss Earle. The castle was full of guests—there was no chance; but when the brilliant evening ended, he contrived to whisper as he bade her good-night, "Barbara, has my penance ended?"

Miss Earle smiled, but made no reply. She was however, down early next morning, and for all ornament wore a string of costly pearls, to which was fastened a small golden apple. Bertie's face was a study when he saw it, and then Lord Bayneham interfered.

"The marriage," said he, "shall be delayed no longer."

Before the June roses had ceased to bloom, Barbara Earle became Bertie Carlyon's wife.

Bertie Carlyon's name was known all over England. He became one of the leading statesmen of the day; and when men congratulated him on his success, he would turn with grateful eyes to the noble woman by his side, and thank her for it.

Lady Bayneham recovered health and spirits, and her own mother could not have been more tender to Hilda than was the proud countess.

The last news discussed at Bayneham was the marriage of Captain Massey. He met Miss Deverney, and to his mother's intense delight, at once fell in love with her. They are very happy, and never omit, once every year, to pay a visit to Bayneham.

One beautiful morning in June, Lord Bayneham asked his wife to accompany him on a little stroll. Lionel ran before them, and a sweet, fair-faced girl, whom her mother called Magdalen, walked by her side.

"Where are we going?" asked Lady Hilda.

"Patience," replied her husband, "you will soon see."

They went through the park, where the wind whispered among the tall trees, and birds sung sweetly in their shady depths, and into the high-road, past the Fir Cottage, and into the little churchyard where Lady Hilda had once stood with despair in her heart.

Lord Bayneham took his wife's hand and led her to what was once a nameless grave.

There stood a monument of white marble, with this inscription—

SACRED
TO THE MEMORY OF MAGDALEN HURST.

Through many tribulations she has gone to her rest.

"Hilda," said Lord Bayneham, "my mother erected this. I brought you here by her wish. Tell me now, have you one cloud in your sky?"

"Not one," she replied, raising her beautiful face to the clear morning sky. "Heaven is good to me. I will try to deserve it."

The sun that shone upon the quiet grave and the waving trees, upon the true, noble husband and the fair, blooming children, was not more bright than the future that lay before LADY HUTTON'S WARD.

THE END.

LADY LAURA'S RELEASE

—OR—
THE STORY OF
A SPOILED BEAUTY.

INTRODUCTION.

"If you are satisfied that such a disposition of your fortune is just; Sir Charles, I have no right perhaps to object," said Edward Sansome, a shrewd lawyer, to his principal client, Sir Charles Rooden, of Road Abbey.

"Of course I am satisfied," laughed handsome, cherry Sir Charles. I have a large fortune and a wife as good and true as she is beautiful. Surely I cannot do wrong in leaving my fortune to such a wife!"

"There is a great difference between doing that which is wrong and that which is imprudent," observed Mr. Sansome.

"And you think that my will errs on the side of imprudence?" questioned Sir Charles uneasily.

"So it seems to me," replied the lawyer.

"How can it, when I leave all that I have to my wife?" asked Sir Charles.

"There are so many contingencies," answered the lawyer.

"Yes, I know; you are thinking that it is possible her ladyship may marry again," said Sir Charles.

"It is not improbable," returned the lawyer cautiously.

"It would not be in an ordinary case; but this is not an ordinary case. You seem to forget that our marriage was a pure love-match."

"I have been the beginning and the end of many love-matches," remarked Mr. Sansome quietly.

"Probably, but not a love-match like ours. During my married life I have never given one thought to any other woman—indeed, I might say, in the words of the old song, 'All other women are but shadows to me.' She is the woman for whom I care and whom I love."

"That is romance, not practical common sense," said Mr. Sansome;

"and they differ as light from dark."

"It matters little whether it is romance or not; it happens to be true," laughed Sir Charles. "I am easy enough on the score of my will. If my fortune were twice as large, I should leave it all to my wife."

"But would it not be as well to insert a clause to the effect that some portion of this vast fortune is to be forfeited if Lady Rooden marries again?"

The frank handsome face darkened, and the blue eyes flashed fiercely.

"I would not so insult her for the world!" he cried. "You do not understand the depth of our mutual love and trust; and on that ground I can excuse your professional suspicion. It would be impossible for my wife to marry again in the event of my death. She has been the love of my life, the heart of my heart; and do you think she whose very soul is mine would or could ever listen to the wooing of another man? You will excuse me for saying so, but the very idea of it seems like sacrilege to me. I am desirous of showing my implicit faith and trust in the wife whom I honor as much as I love; therefore I leave my whole fortune to her, to be held in trust for my daughter Angela. During her life-time Lady Rooden can make what allowance she may think proper to our daughter. If she marries, it will be in her ladyship's power to give her a very handsome dowry; and at Lady Rooden's death the whole estate goes to my daughter intact. That seems simple enough."

"Yes, it is simple enough," agreed Mr. Sansome, though evidently still unconvinced of the justice of it.

Sir Charles went on:

"If—which Heaven forbid!—Lady Rooden dies first—my property will revert to my daughter on my death—"

"No, I am not vexed," said Sir Charles; "because I know you mean well. Tell me what you think I ought to do."

"My advice will be very unpalatable to you," said Mr. Sansome; "but I should counsel you to make some change. If you should die before Lady Rooden, and she should marry again, it would be as well to stipulate in such a case that half the property must go at once to your daughter."

"My wife would never marry again," Sir Charles declared emphatically. "If I die before her, all happiness for her in this world will die with me."

"Still there is the possibility of such a thing happening," urged the lawyer cautiously.

"There is no such possibility as regards Lady Rooden," again declared Sir Charles. "You may dismiss that idea from your mind at once and forever. Think of the other side of the picture, which you have entirely overlooked—what a tie it will form between mother and daughter in case of my death! Their interests will be one and the same; the daughter will always be dependent upon the mother, the mother ever striving to do her best for her child. Instead of feeling anxious, so far as I know, I congratulate myself on the wisdom of the course I am taking."

Stout in Teaspoons.

Young Mr. Simperly did not smoke, and never took alcoholic beverages. He recently got rather run down in health; and had to consult his medical man, who prescribed stout twice daily.

"It was a sad blow to Simperly, but he faced it bravely. Yet his health did not improve, and on his second visit the doctor eyed him sternly. "I can't understand it," he said. "By the way, I suppose you are following the treatment I laid down to you?"

"Yes, doctor," replied Simperly, meekly.

"The stout?" questioned the medical man. "Are you taking it twice a day?"

"Yes, doctor," repeated Simperly, with a look of martyrdom on his face. "I take a teaspoonful night and morning!"

MARSHALL BROTHERS

Canadian Parliament Opened By Baron Byng of Vimy.

Brilliant Scene Witnessed -- War Debt Proposals of U.S. Accepted by Great Britain -- French Grip on Ruhr Tightening -- Irish Republicans Continue Depredations.

ACCEPTANCE U.S. PROPOSALS.

LONDON, Jan. 31. Financial writers in the papers find that opinion yesterday in favor of accepting the American proposal with the belief that the United States, having regard for the safety of the future, should make a clause allowing Great Britain full benefit of any changed conditions that may arise in the next ten years.

TERMS AGREED UPON.

LONDON, Jan. 31. Great Britain has decided to accept American offer regarding the funding of the British war debt to the United States. The terms are: Three per cent for ten years and three and a half per cent thereafter. No reduction was made regarding Great Britain's being allowed to pay the interest on the loan for ten years.

FRANCO-BELGIAN GRIE ON RUHR.

LONDON, Jan. 31. The Franco-Belgian grip on Ruhr continues. The occupational authorities have seized the entire coal fields in the Ruhr Valley and shut off shipments of coal from Ruhr to unoccupied Germany. A serious situation has arisen at the mines, only half of the normal output being brought to the surface, and supply trains for transportation are fast diminishing. Though the output is small coal is accumulating at the pits heads and the French administration admits that this may cause a suspension of operations within a few days. The German railroad men who went on strike are displaying a determined front. They refuse to work and traffic is being tied up. Essen has been shut off by reason of the severing of telegraph and telephone communications and the scarcity of food throughout the Ruhr region is becoming more acute. Herr Stinnes has discontinued German deliveries for devastated areas of France. $600 million to the amount of five hundred million, due on reparations account, have not been paid by Germany, therefore, unless Germany makes a satisfactory response to the latest notification of France and Belgium these powers have decided to use still more rigorous measures than have yet been in force.

FRENCH SEIZE CUSTOMS OFFICE.

DUESSELDORF, Jan. 31. The French to-day put into effect the threatened economic measure, seizing all customs offices in the Ruhr Valley.

ISMET ASKS FOR DELAY.

LAUSANNE, Jan. 31. Ismet Pasha asked the Conference to-day for a delay of two weeks before signing the treaty and a delay of eight days before the next meeting of the commission, planning to employ the interval in striving to reach an agreement. Lord Curzon announced it was impossible to meet this request completely, but personally he would consent to stay at Lausanne until Sunday.

CANADIAN PARLIAMENT OPENS.

OTTAWA, Jan. 31. Baron Byng of Vimy, Governor General of Canada, opened the second session of Canada's fourteenth parliament. The hour was three this afternoon, and the scene was brilliant with uniforms of officers and the gala attire of women. Hundreds were disappointed when they found the gallery markedly inadequate to accommodate the relatives, friends and admirers of the members. The feature of the ceremony was the introduction of new members, and the tribute paid to the memory of the four members who died since last session:—Hon. W. C. Kennedy, Minister of Railways, Hon. D. A. Stewart, D. A. LaFontaine, of Jacques Cartier, and Dr. Edward Blackader, of Halifax. The speech from the Throne expressed gratification that in the period of world wide depression Canada has made substantial progress towards recovery.

ONE CLOUD DISPELLED.

PARIS, Jan. 31. One of the clouds hanging over Europe was dispelled to-day when Czechoslovakia and Hungary accepted the procedure proposed by the Council of the League of Nations to settle the boundary dispute between them. The Council will investigate the situation and render a decision.

THE VATICAN AND MEDIATION.

ROME, Jan. 31. Queries from unofficial quarters as to whether the Vatican intends to mediate in the French-Germany situation, brings the answer that the Holy See has not yet been approached by either side seeking such mediation, and that the Vatican makes it a rule not to interfere in such cases unless religious interests are involved or unless approached by the interested parties.

HORNE AND BALDWIN.

MONTREAL, Jan. 31. Sir Robert Horne, former British Chancellor of the Exchequer, here yesterday, cast grave doubts on the authenticity of the reports regarding the statements alleged to have been made by the Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin criticizing his political influence at Washington, in connection with his recent visit here regarding war debts. Horne met Baldwin at New York, when the latter was on his way home, and confidently he had expressed himself in opposite terms to those quoted. Sir Robert intimated he did not believe the newspaper reports.

ALMOST A REAL FIGHT.

GIBRALTAR, Jan. 31. Lloyd George, with his family, Lord Birkenhead and other notables, witnessed yesterday a bull fighting exhibition at Algeiras that threatened to end in a real fight for life when one of the bulls broke loose and charged a crowd of onlookers who took refuge in automobiles until the animal had been made fast.

PLUNKETT'S HOUSE DESTROYED.

DUBLIN, Jan. 31. The residence of Sir Horace Plunkett at Fox Rock, was completely destroyed by fire this morning. Yesterday a band of armed men raided his home, blowing up the front part before leaving. The destruction was completed this morning, and shortly after, the news of the fire was received here. It became known that the coastguard station at Balbrinigan was destroyed by raiders using three land mines.

SPIRIT OF CONCILIATION.

LAUSANNE, Jan. 31. A spirit of conciliation shown on all sides to-day prevented a rupture of the Near Eastern Peace Conference, allowing formal presentation of the Allied Draft Treaty to the Turks. The mutual goodwill manifested by the Allied delegations detracted from any danger of a break in their front.

ARMY ASSIGNS.

MONTREAL, Jan. 31. Army's Dept. store was placed in voluntary assignment to-day, with Habilitjes approximating five hundred thousand dollars.

FRENCH TO SEND ULTIMATUM.

LONDON, Jan. 31. Apparently basing their statements upon General Degoutte's warning to Germany, some of the British correspondents at Dusseldorf assert that the French almost immediately will send to Berlin a notification equivalent in spirit, if not in form, to an ultimatum demanding reversal of the Wilhelmstrasse's policy regarding the Ruhr. Germany is to be told the Post's Dusseldorf correspondent says that France will not tolerate passive hostility supported and financed by the German government, and if a satisfactory reply is not given, drastic measures will be taken, exceeding any already in operation. Despatches to the Telegraph say this notification will probably be forwarded Germany this evening. The correspondent adds that it is not known what form the threatened measures will take, but says they will likely involve further occupation of territory.

FREE STATE ARMY POST CAPTURED.

CAVAN, Ireland, Jan. 31. A Free State army post at Ballymoore, County Leitrim, was attacked early this morning by Republicans who captured the garrison of thirty men, and removed them in special trains toward Drumshanbo. They also seized the Post Office and Bank, and blocked all roads leading to the town.

MINERS ENTOMBED.

BERLIN, Jan. 31. Six hundred miners are reported entombed in the Helmit Mine at Benthien, Polish Silesia, consequent upon an explosion of fire damp.

Steel Production is Being Pushed.

Pittsburgh advices state that the Carnegie Steel plants at Braddock, Homestead and Duquesne are operating full. Edgar Thompson plant set a number of new production records in 1922 and other works of the Carnegie Steel are out for similar honors. Jones and Laughlin plants are on an operating basis of about 80 per cent, and Pittsburgh Steel has a normal schedule. Production is being pushed in all plants to reduce costs. Prospective railroad buying, with orders already booked, is expected to be in sufficient volume to assure various mills long runs. Operating schedules are likely to increase where plants are not already in full swing.

Pointed Pars.

More men die of idleness than of hard work.
When a poor girl marries a poor man, that's love.
It is cheaper to be married than to be engaged.
One of the hardest things in the world to do is nothing.
Optimism parts the clouds and the tangles and costs nothing.
One active virtue is worth ten absent vices.
If some men had to eat their words, they would soon be poisoned.
It makes a man sorry, he moved when he reads in the papers the house agent's description of the house he had just left.
Many a woman thinks she can do nothing without a husband; and when she gets one, finds she can do nothing with him.

Dr. Coue Cannot Assist Cripples.

Mere Words Cannot Knit Bones, Dr. Lorenz Holds.

New York, Jan. 19.—There is no formula of poetic phrases that will straighten crooked bones, or hypnotic power that will make the infantile paralysis patient throw away his crutches when one leg is several inches longer than the other, said Dr. Adolph Lorenz, famous orthopedic surgeon, while holding his first clinic in this city since March 17, 1922, at the Public Health Department.

"Day by day in every way you're getting straighter and straighter!" repeated 10,000 times a day will only make the crooked bones more crooked in every way, because of the time wasted," said the picturesque physician with a twinkle in his eye. With all due respect to M. Coue, whom he recommends to those who are to-day walking on crutches from lassitude or to those whose cases are hopeless as

Second Hand Stoves!

Words Won't Cure Cripples. "Words will not straighten twisted limbs," said Dr. Lorenz. "America, I regret to say, is the land of infantile paralysis. Never in my country did I see such cases! America is the land of crutches! Some are incurable cases; to these I recommend M. Coue for consolation. Some walk on crutches because they are lazy, or their little toes ache. To such as these the Frenchman's formula is a good command, but to say that words, no matter how soothing they may be, can make any man with twisted bones throw away his crutches because he wants to is nonsense. "Crooked fingers, not crooked tongues, will help crooked bones, and it is this work we orthopedic surgeons must carry on."

Cub Cigarettes are appreciated, not only by the smoker but by those in his company.

Bishop Mowl's Mission.

YESTERDAY'S SERVICE.

Another day of the Mission has come and gone and brought with it great and increasing blessings. At seven o'clock in the morning, despite the early hour and winter weather, a large number of the faithful met round the Lord's Table for the Sacrament of Holy Communion.

At four in the afternoon, there was a service for women only, to which all women of the parish and other parishes and congregations were invited. The hour of service found a great assembly waiting, so that the Church was nearly full.

In the evening, long before the service began the Church was crowded with earnest and expectant worshippers. The service, which was more strictly, perhaps, than on previous evenings, was adapted to the Missions, consisted of Hymns, the Litany beautifully intoned by the Rector, a Lesson and an Address from the Missioner.

On January 24th a concert and sale of work took place in the Anglican School Room. The entertainment was in aid of the new Church Organ Fund, and was a success in every sense of the word, nearly sixty dollars being made in the room.

The Rev. Canon Smart detained here on Thursday on his way to Hts. Content from the city. Dr. O'Connell was here yesterday, visiting the sick folk; also visiting Colinet before returning to Placentia.

We are sorry to hear our our physician, Dr. Chisholm, is still laid by, but we hope may soon be on his rounds again.

Mr. George Foley is, we hear, going on nicely at the General Hospital, the injured hand doing as well as can be expected.

Mrs. W. J. Lerner gave birth to a daughter on the 21st inst. Both are going on nicely. Congratulations.

Last night is reported to have been a very frosty night, if not the coldest for the season. We have not heard the exact temperature at date of writing.

We are hoping to see the Society for the Protection of Cruelty to Animals framed picture, "The Horse's Prayer" in some of our homes and public buildings here.

It was announced with regret that owing to Bishop Mowl's other engagements, the Mission will close on Friday evening; the great Thanksgiving Eucharist will be held on Friday morning at seven o'clock.

Whitbourne Notes.

Weather conditions prevailing at Whitbourne during the month of January have been remarkably fair. The weather has been mild and clear, on the whole, with frequent thaws; no blizzards to cause any inconvenience. We hope February may be equally as kind.

It looked as though Whitbourne was in for another conflagration on the evening of the 20th, when the news was rapidly spread abroad that the house occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Jonas Rodgers was on fire. Mr. and Mrs. Rodgers were out at the time, and were hastily summoned. In the meantime the two children in the maid's care were got out safely.

Mr. and Mrs. T. O'Neil, living next door, had part of their furniture removed tearing the destruction of the said building.

On Wednesday relatives at Sailor's Island were apprised by wire of the sad news that little bright Ema Lane, 10-year-old daughter of John Lane, formerly of Sailor's Island now at Grand Falls, was dead.

On Wednesday relatives at Sailor's Island were apprised by wire of the sad news that little bright Ema Lane, 10-year-old daughter of John Lane, formerly of Sailor's Island now at Grand Falls, was dead.

Yesterday the air was rife with the news that the delegates of the United Fishermen's Movement had arrived and were going to hold a public meeting in the Orange Hall at 7 o'clock.

SIDE TALKS.

By Ruth Cameron.

THE HARDEST THING IN THE WORLD.

It is a hard thing for a family to have a chronic invalid or a shut in, about which the routine of family life must be arranged. Everyone knows there is another fact which not many know, or at least not every one knows, that it is five times as hard to have a shut in as to have a chronic invalid.

It is like to be sick and weak and shut out from normal activity and perhaps in pain, and not to see any prospect of release from that condition. Its terrific.

And no one who has not had experience in being sick can realize how much one has to ask from other people when one is helpless, even when one doesn't want to be a burden. People who write on "invalids" and who think those they serve are always asking for something, ought to spend a day in bed now and then themselves, but to see how many things come up that one has to ask another to do if one cannot get out of bed.

The Right to Condemn.
And no one who has not himself exhibited in some way great strength of character has earned the right to condemn the invalid who has not learned to be cheerful and courageous and patient.

If the invalid does not learn this lesson, he will inevitably add to his own burdens. That's the pity of it. One may wish for his own sake, as well as for the sake of others about him, that he would learn. But as for condemning him,—well let only those who have shown rare strength of character cast the first stone. And they won't want to.

The Lure of Gold.

MANY EXPEDITIONS PLANNED FOR SPRING.

HALIFAX, N.S.—(By Can. Press).—News of various gold seeking expeditions and encouraging reports of untapped veins of the precious metal lying under the frozen soil of Northern Labrador, to say nothing of the acres of gold bearing soil in Nova Scotia have never been taken advantage of to the degree their abundance warrants. This has been due to many reasons, according to the Department of Mines, chief among them being inefficient and unscientific methods of extracting the ore, and unwise financing.

Nova Scotia gold is obtained almost entirely from vein workings, the auriferous quartz bearing veins running parallel to one another. The Atlantic shore from Conso to Yarmouth is occupied by the auriferous strata and the width of the district varies from ten to forty miles. The area of the gold-bearing sedimentary rocks in this portion of the province is estimated at three thousand square miles. During the last six months great strides have been made in gold mining operations in Nova Scotia and there is promise of still greater advancement. Judging from reports of activities among mine operators who are installing modern machinery and expanding workings. It is also stated by experts, that there is great room for advancement along this line, not only in extended operations but in making more complete use of the resources at hand as regards the conservations and developments of the by-products of silver and arsenic ore. W. F. Fenelon, well known geologist and mining expert, stated recently that examining a mine working in Nova Scotia obtaining ten dollars value to the ton, he sampled tailings which yielded twenty-four dollars to the ton. Because of such wastage, he said, gold mining in Nova Scotia hitherto had been a failure.

LABRADOR CLAIM HOLDER PAZZLED.

Cochran Hill gold mine, thirteen miles from Wins Harbor in Guxabro County, although under water twelve years, has been pumped out and is working. The silver alone in this mine showed twenty-nine dollars to the ton and would pay for all operations, leaving the gold clear profit. The run of mine showed gold values of $304.00 per ton. On the property on Cochran Hill there are thirteen gold bearing veins that have never been touched. Utilizing hydro power near at hand, the Cochran Hill mines will be operated this spring by a thirty thousand dollar, electrically operated plant, according to present indications. Mr. Fenelon claims that the gold bearing quartz veins in Nova Scotia are not more irregular or "pockety" than those of P-cupline, and no more likely to "pinch" out at shallow depths. Out-rivalling the prospects of Nova Scotia, Northern Labrador seems to be in for a regular stampede. The recent Stag Bay revival has dazzled the holders of claims in that district with prospects of great wealth, and inquiries are pouring in from all over North America. One company, already formed, intend starting operations as soon as navigation opens in the spring. In the meantime, it is understood, several expeditions of prospectors, lured by the prospect of gold, will set out regardless of ice and winter conditions, in hopes of getting on the ground early with its attendant advantages. Some who are familiar with the Labrador coast, declare that the ice at this season of the year will not offer such a formidable barrier as it will later in the season.

THE CAUTIOUS DRIVER.

It is not pleasant being spilled upon the public way; I hate the thought of being killed by some ill-driven dray, and so with watchfulness and zeal, both hands upon the steering wheel, I drive my panting chugmobile, and hear the pistons play. The man who's coming may be wise, with caution he may choo; or he may rank with reckless guys who split the road in two; I know him not—I take no chance, but give him room as I advance in princely pomp and circumstance, with "Safety First" in view. There are a million rules to mind, and one must mind them all, or some fine morning he will find his costly bier and pall; and undertakers will abound upon his little plot of ground, and coroners will hang around his parlor and his hall. There are a million useful rules, by safety sharps bestowed, to guide the delegate who toils his bus along the road; and if one rule is overlooked the goose of some one will be cooked, and by the hehls I will be booked to write a graveyard ode. I always keep the road in sight when I drive forth at morn; I look to left, I look to right, I yell and sound my horn; I signal with my snow white hand, my curves are wonderful and grand; if any says rules should be canned, I view that gait with scorn.

The space between the two iron walls is filled with reinforced rods of various kinds. The concrete is poured so to form a monolithic structure with outside concrete walls.

Securely connected to an iron base are four upright corner pieces formed of rectangular iron plates stiffened with

German Demand For Copper Will Increase.

There has been a rally in the German metal trades. The requirements of the copper manufacturing industries are being filled again as manufacturers are becoming bafe of metallic raw materials. The imports of copper into Germany are estimated as high as 10,000 metric tons a month. I am told, says the German correspondent of the Engineering and Mining Journal-Press of New York, that some fresh credit arrangement has been made between American capitalists and German metal consumers, partly on the basis of the Edge law. The metal people here believe that the big American producers will be forced in the long run to resume operations on the large scale of war-time, because the increased volume of smelting and refining operations can alone warrant the maintenance of mining with lower costs and, consequently, larger dividends for shareholders. The increased output will, so it is argued, be sent to the foreign countries that are by nature big foreign metal users, of which Germany is foremost.

Amid all the crushing difficulties of the present era, German metal consumption is 50 to 60 per cent. of the 1913 level, and is bound to rise further as the supply of old metal from foreign countries diminishes. Because America is "so" absorbing great quantities of British and other ammunition scrap, little remains to be had by Germany, so that at the moment she has no available brass and bronze reserves. This results in a diminishing production of cathodes, which since war days have been turned out from copper-zinc alloys. The Hensberg refinery of the Hirsch concern, as well as some other refineries, have ceased to turn out cathodes, to which wire and sheet makers were more accustomed than to American wire bars, so cathodes are being imported in greater proportions than before. The same is the case with fine zinc that comes in from the United Kingdom, being mostly of American origin, of which the manufacturers of high-quality brass are greatly in need.

Odd Lots Sold by Auctioneers.

The handcuffs that imprisoned the wrists of the murderer of Maria Martin, have been sold by auction in London. They were part of a collection from Newgate and Holywood, and other grim places, and realised ten shillings. There seems to be a slump in the demand for criminal relics, which at one time fetched fancy prices. Old Newgate was more valuable in pieces than when it was whole, apart from the ground on which it stood. The door of the condemned cell was knocked down for £18, and the fittings of the cell itself, together with the old bell which has rung so many criminals to their doom, were all bought for Madame Tussaud's Exhibition for £100. A short time ago a mummy of an Egyptian princess was knocked down for a few guineas, while among similar gruesome "lots" have occurred a piece of the epidermis of a notorious pirate, a book bound in the skin of a murderer, a hangman's rope, a number of coffins, part of an undertaker's bankrupt stock, and a donkey's hide in pickle. It is said that a few years ago a colonial official entered a London auction-room in time to bid, had he been so disposed, for the mummy of a Maori chieftain who had once dined as a guest at his own table. A lock of hair from the head of George Washington was sold at an auction sale for £95, but this is by no means the highest price paid for such a souvenir. A lock of Nelson's hair holds the record, £215, and one cut from the head of Napoleon after his death was knocked down some time ago for £250. Strangely enough, when a lock of Napoleon's hair was sold by auction in London it realized only £3, whilst a wisp from the head of his conqueror, Wellington, was sold for 20 shillings.

Where There's a Will. She was convinced that the lucky figure of her life was seven. "It's quite extraordinary," she said, "how seven has dominated my life. I was born on a seven and had seven sisters." "You married on a seven?" queried her friend. "Well, I was married on June 28th, really, but it's still a seven—seven times four. And only yesterday I had an enormous bit of luck." "Surely," said her friend, "yesterday was the 12th?" "Oh, yes, isn't it wonderful? The seven again, you see. Seven and six are thirteen, aren't they?" To make cream pie, mix one cup sugar and a heaping teaspoonful flour and add them to three egg-whites stiff beaten. Add a pint of this cream, a pinch of salt and any flavoring desired. Bake in one crust.

The Industrious Beaver.

Safety-Bringing Qualities.
When North America was first colonized there were beavers in great numbers from coast to coast; now they have been pushed westwards and their ranks thinned. But this is for the most part due to man and the value he sets on the thick, silky under-fur. Apart from man the beaver would continue to prosper, for it has many safety-giving qualities. There is safety in swimming and diving, in making tunnels and stores, in working mostly at night, in living socially and using danger signals, and in having a fairly long bill of face in addition to twigs and bark. But the main source of safety is in their walls, for although they belong to the order of rodents, not generally marked by high mental development, beavers have undoubtedly a plastic intelligence.

The Beaver's Industry.

First of all there is the felling of trees which are often up to sixteen inches or so in diameter. With the chisel-edged front teeth the beaver cuts two parallel furrows across the grain of the wood, and then wrenches off the chip between. This is repeated laboriously many times till a biconical or hour-glass-like cut has been made all round the tree, which then falls. A careful observer records a case where a cottonwood tree nearly thirty inches in diameter had been felled so skilfully that it tumbled with its top in the middle of a small beaver-pond, thus assuring abundance of food for the animals at their very door. But things do not usually happen so perfectly. Trees under a foot in diameter are preferred; there is often considerable labour of transport of cut branches from the tree to the lodge. Moreover, beavers seem often to tire of a tree and leave their work half done. We must, alas, surrender the pretty stories about the beaver-woodmen cutting the tree unequally so that it must fall to one chosen side, and it is extremely doubtful whether they ever intentionally leave a tree partially cut through to be brought down by the next gale.

Beaver-ponds.

Another line of activity is making the pond and its dam. The meaning of this is to have round the lodge conveniently deep water which will not freeze too deeply in the winter. The dam is made of drift-wood, willow branches, and the like, carried in the mouth, and the framework is strengthened by mud and stones which the beavers carry by pressing their hands against their breast. It is, of course, all nonsense that they use their flat tail as a trowel. The dam is usually a narrow affair, but streams of considerable breadth are sometimes stemmed and the barrier is said to be built straight if there is almost no current, but with a convexity directed upstream when there is a considerable flow. It is readily intelligible that some of the branches used in making the dam may eventually grow into bushes, so that the construction becomes hidden in green. There is some reason to think that beavers may have got the idea of the dam from naturally formed barriers of drift-wood such as one often sees in streams. Animals are more likely to adapt than to invent.

The Beaver's Lodge.

Two types of house are made by beavers, and there are many transitional forms. In rivers like the Colorado, with high banks and variable water-level, a tunnel well under water leads to a big burrow in the bank. The other type is the "lodge," a roughly conical erection of sticks and mud, several feet high, eight to ten feet across the base. The entrance is usually under water, or there may be two entrances. Part of the lodge is a living-room and bed-room, the rest is a store. But twigs and branches are sometimes stored beside the house on the floor of the pond, being weighted down with stones and mud, a device that certainly smacks of intelligence. Another interesting point is that extra mud is often pressed in the autumn on the outside of the house, with the result that it forms when frozen hard not only a comfortable wall, but an effective protection against the intrusions of wolves and wolverines. But it need hardly be said that the beaver's lodge, even at its best, is a much rougher construction than is suggested by the pictures in the older books.

Cutting Canals.

Where a beaver-village is well-established there must be a gradual reduction in the number of available trees. Those nearest the pond will be used first; but in the course of time little journeys will have to be made. The difficulties of transport will increase; hence the usefulness of canals, and the best of these are certainly remarkable. They may be several hundred feet long; they may form a short cut from one bend of a meandering stream to another; they may cut right through an island. A case like the last is particularly interesting, for the co-operative work would not have much justification until it was completed, with an open waterway right through. As in regard to the dams, so here we may venture the suggestion that in flat ground near a stream there are often approximations to natural canals in which the beavers may have found a hint or a basis for elaboration.

Sagacious and Social.

The beaver is monogamous and affectionate, with a prolonged youth and the co-operative temperament, and its sociality has doubtless promoted its intelligence. This works in a circle; it takes a certain fitness of brain to be social, as distinguished from merely gregarious; and in the developing animal-society there is a selection of sitting process which favours variants in the direction of wit on the one hand and self-subordination on the other. The American beaver and the European beaver are very closely akin, and the wide range of geographical distribution—until man intervened—is an expression of Nature's approval of a sagacious and social type.

Lefty Lew Hard Pushed.

TENDLER WINS HARD FIGHT.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—Lew Tandler, Philadelphia lightweight, was awarded the judge's decision to-night over Pal Moran, of New Orleans, in a slashing 15-round battle at Madison Square Garden.
Both fighters began cautiously and there was little action in the first three rounds. Moran out-boxed Tandler, evading the Philadelphia's left hook and shot in a damaging right that brought a flow of blood from Tandler's mouth. In the second and third Moran staggered Tandler with a right smash to the chin.
Taking the aggressive in the fourth round, Tandler opened a terrific assault that soon had Moran distressed. The Philadelphia battered his opponent about the ring in both the fourth and fifth rounds, opening cuts about Moran's mouth and nose, with ripping right and left hooks. Moran came back strong, however, in the sixth round.
After weathering a storm of blows to head and body he swept Tandler almost off his feet with a furious two-fisted drive and opened a cut over Lew's right eye with a jolting left smash. Tandler missed a number of wild swings as both set a furious pace in the seventh round. Moran shook Lew with a left hook to the head in the eighth round, but toward the close of the round absorbed some terrific body punishment at the hands of the Philadelphia. Moran carried the fight to his opponent in the ninth, and jolted Tandler with a smashing right to the chin.
Both fought at a terrific clip in the tenth round, blood streaming from cuts on their faces as they battled toe to toe. Tandler drove Moran about the ring in the eleventh with ripping lefts and rights to the body, but Moran rallied toward the close and opened a fresh cut over Tandler's left eye. They continued their fast pace in the twelfth, Moran shaking Tandler with several right swings after being jolted by the Philadelphia's south-paw punches. Tandler had Moran hanging on in the thirteenth with a smashing attack to the body. The referee was forced to separate them when they failed to stop fighting at the end of the 15th round.

Tandler administered terrific punishment to the Southerner in the fourteenth, rocking him with terrific blows to the head. Moran fought back gamely under Tandler's punishing onslaught.
Tandler tried hard for a knockout in the fifteenth, but Moran managed to weather a rain of left hooks to the head. He caught Tandler flush on the chin several times with right swings.
Ring critics were agreed that it was one of the hardest won victories of Tandler's career, and that while apparently in good condition, he did not display the sensational form he showed against Benny Leonard last summer.

Is Life Worth Living.
The Majestic Theatre screened Eugene O'Brien in "Is Life Worth Living" for the first time yesterday. The picture will continue as the attraction at the same theatre for to-day only.
Mr. O'Brien has many friends in this city who will be interested to know that "Is Life Worth Living" is well up to the high standard of excellence which he has set for himself in previous productions which he has made for the Selznick organization.
The story, by George Weston, appeared in the Saturday Evening Post not many months ago under the title of "The Open Door." It is a whimsical little tale—half serious and half funny—dealing with the tribulations and ultimate success of a young American office employee, who, falsely accused, barely escapes a prison term on a charge of theft. Winifred Westover, who is widely known among photography devotees, has the principal feminine role and handles it effectively.

Arthur Houseman, of whom there is no more acceptable photoplay "villain," is the bad man who brings about the necessary conflict between right and wrong.

Barbara Frietchie "Real."

(Toronto Globe.)
The historical accuracy of Whittier's famous wartime poem "Barbara Frietchie," published in 1863, was investigated recently by Johns Hopkins University students, who concluded that the old woman was merely a creation of the poet. The story was that when the rebel troops marched through Stovesville, Jackson, under General Frederick, Md., Barbara hung a Union flag from the attic window. The soldiers fired at it, and "Shoot, if you must, this old gray head, But spare your country's flag," she said.
Jackson stopped the shooting and ordered the troops to march on. The poem was the subject of considerable discussion, but the "discovery" of the Johns Hopkins students seems to have proved too much, for it has led to the publication of the following letter, which the poet wrote to Leverett Bellmap, who conducted a bookstore at Hartford, Conn., for many years:

Danvers, Mass., 6 Mo. 13, 1864.
Dear Friend.—Barbara Frietchie was a real personage. I have seen her relations. She was upwards of 80 when the rebel army entered Frederick.
"In War Times" was published in 1863; "Snowbound" in 1865. I am truly thy friend.
John G. Whittier.

Prince Consort Vindicated.
The Parliamentary Session of 1864 opened with business of a most unusual character. Both Lords and Commons were asked to vindicate the Prince Consort from charges of unconstitutional interferences in both foreign and domestic affairs. The matter had been brought to a head by Lord Palmerston's resignation from the Aberdeen Cabinet. Many people believed that this was the result of disagreement with the Prince in regard to the negotiations which preceded the Crimean War, although it was given out that Palmerston was influenced by his attitude to Lord John Russell's proposed Reform Bill. Prior to the meeting of Parliament, Cabinet differences had been composed, and Palmerston had withdrawn his resignation. But the public mind was still uneasy. It was known that Prince Albert was disinclined to strong action against Russia, and it was thought that his views were responsible for Lord Aberdeen's hesitation in backing the general policy upon which Lord Palmerston and Lord John Russell were both agreed. The newspapers of both parties were not slow to charge the Prince with undue interference, and their charges were often couched in remarkably insolent language. It was natural that Queen Victoria and Prince Albert were much upset by the statements, and when Parliament met on January 31, 1864, the Prince's conduct was explained, and defended by Lord Aberdeen in the Lords, and by Lord John Russell in the Commons. The latter was particularly effective. He was told by Spencer Walpole: "Nothing could be more complete than the vindication which Lord John thus gave. The whole fabric of accusation dissolved like a bubble. The Prince himself was warm in his acknowledgments; the Queen hastened to express her gratitude and pleasure and Lord Stratford told the Duke of Bedford that he had never recollectored such an impression produced by any speech."

Vessels Missing at Sea.
London, Jan. 3.—Twenty-one ships have been posted by Lloyd's underwriters as missing during last year, reports the Westminster Gazette.
The British steamer Conde, of 2,236 tons, was never heard of after leaving Hong Kong in August. Another similar disappearance was that of the steamer El Kahira, which sailed from London for Genoa in July and was never seen or reported after leaving the English Channel.
Probably the most inexplicable case is that of the steamer Guillen Soroll, of 3,700 tons, which left Cardiff on October 26 for Barcelona. Two days later several ships picked up S. O. S. messages from her. A ship was sent to search for her in the Bay of Biscay but no trace of her, has been found.
All three vessels and their crews have evidently perished in circumstances which can only be conjectured, and may have been stress of weather, explosion of fire.

Britain Leads the World in Shipbuilding.
Glasgow, Jan. 13.—World returns of shipbuilding for 1922 show that Britain has regained first place in the output of tonnage, with 1,045,590 tons, Germany being second with 631,485 tons.
Figures for the United States are given as 253,747 tons for 1922, as compared to an output during 1913 of 4,756,900 tons.

The Last Word.

The argument started with the soup, progressed during the fish, swelled vastly when the joint came, until at dessert husband and wife were so thoroughly indignant that they could continue no longer.
"I don't know what would happen, John, if you ever agreed with me on any subject," she finally said plaintively.
He looked at her, and sighed bitterly. "I'd be wrong," he said—"I'd be wrong!"

She Liked The Programme.
The people in the railway saloon car were startled by the entrance of two masked men, one large, the other small, armed with revolvers.
"Throw up your hands," said the big man; "we're going to rob all the men and kiss all the girls."
"No, partner," said the smaller man, gallantly, "we'll leave the ladies alone."
"Mind your own business, young fellow," snapped a woman passenger of uncertain age, "the big man is robbing the train, not you!"

Jealousy.
Muriel: "They went to the Lake district for their honeymoon, and Gladys was miserable all the time."
Ethel: "Why, what was the trouble?"
Muriel: "Jim felt in love with the scenery."
A GOOD SIGN.
"Has Dick proposed to you yet, Edith?"
Edith: "No, mother, but I think he will to-night. He spent most of last evening wondering if rents are likely to come down soon."

It Saved Him.
Wife: "To-day is my birthday, and you've come home and forgotten to bring me any present at all."
Husband: "But, dearie, how can you expect me to remember? You look much younger than you did last year."

Dangerous.
The bricklayer cried out to the boy scout: "Go away! we can't have you blowing that trumpet round here."
"Why?"
"That safe. You know what happened to the walls of Jericho, don't you?"

Fishermen to Restore Izak Walton's Home.
Fishermen and sportsmen both in the United States and England are co-operating to restore the cottage of Izak Walton, prince of anglers, as a shrine for followers of the rod and reel the world over. The cottage is at Shallowford, England, six miles from Stafford.

The American leaders in the project are relatives and friends of the late Julian Tuppan Davies, attorney and trustee of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, Mr. Davies was widely known as a fisherman and sportsman. Major T. A. Dunn and other officials of Stafford, the birthplace of Walton, are carrying on the drive in England for an endowment fund for the little cottage, which under the terms of Walton's will, was left to the town for philanthropic uses.—New York Sun.

Surprising.
One of the young women knew nothing about football, and knew she knew nothing; the other knew nothing about football and thought she knew something. The result was that the couple caused endless amusement among the spectators sitting near them.
After the girl who thought she had given tons of inaccurate information to the girl who knew she didn't, the latter pointed to the field and asked: "What are those?"
"What, dear?" replied her companion. "Do you mean all those little figures? They're men, of course."
"No, no! I mean those posts stuck in the ground." And she pointed to the goal-posts.
"Well, fancy you not knowing what they are!" exclaimed Miss Know-all. "Why, they're football fixtures!"

On The Ruhr Front.
(From the Toronto Star)
The Germans declare that they will cover the world with their protests against the French invasion of the Ruhr. They might be wiser not to. Any objection that exists throughout the world to French invasion of German territory is far quite other reasons than those which would inspire a protest from Berlin. If other countries advise against the Ruhr invasion it is not because it will hurt Germany, but because it is not likely to benefit France.

How to Stop Sneezing.

Is there anything more embarrassing than having to sneeze during the really impressive moments of a play? The unlucky one couldn't help catching cold. Nevertheless, he feels that his action is resented as a wilful interruption.
Sneezing at awkward moments isn't necessary at all. Actually, this seemingly involuntary action can be controlled. You only think you are bound to sneeze.
Next time you are in such a fix, lay your finger quickly across your upper lip directly beneath your nose, and press firmly upon the lip for a few seconds. You will find relief without making any noise at all.
This doesn't mean that every sneeze should be suppressed. Only do this when in church or theatre or some such place. To sneeze is natural, and it relieves the nasal passage from dust.
of measurements for the district has officially approved the method.—From the January Popular Mechanics Magazine.

The New Irish Stamp.

(From the London Observer.)
The outline map of Ireland which appears on the new Free State stamps has been criticized on the ground that, as Ulster has "contracted out," it is a plain hope rather than a recognition of realities. But, on the whole, it is better to indulge a pious hope than a poor memory.
The late Emperor of Austria and the late King of Portugal were both described in their official titles as "King of Jerusalem." And for how many centuries did kings of England go on claiming Calais as part of their dominions after Queen Mary lost it in 1558?
The printing of a map on stamps is not uncommon. An Australian stamp still in use has an outline map of the Commonwealth, with the figure of a kangaroo on it. An American ten-cent stamp of 1904 contained a map of the United States with the territory of Louisiana (purchased from the French in 1803) marked by a dark patch. The Christmas stamp of Canada, issued in 1898 to commemorate Imperial penny postage, had a map of the world with the British possessions colored red. Newfoundland ten years later issued a stamp with a map of that colony.

Keeps Skin Soft and Smooth

Many men suffer from irritation of the skin as a result of shaving. With some it assumes a form of eczema and becomes most annoying and unsightly. By applying a little of Dr. Chase's Ointment after shaving the irritation is overcome and Barber's Itch and Eczema are prevented or relieved.

Urges all War be Made Crime.

Following an address by Mrs. Francis E. Sayre on "The Imperative Necessity of Ending War," the Boston Mt. Holyoke College Alumnae Association passed a resolution at its meeting in the Hotel Vendome, urging that war between nations be declared a public crime.

Mrs. Sayre particularly advocated co-operation by America with other nations in an effort to establish world peace.

SAYS ISOLATION IMPOSSIBLE.

Isolation, she said, is commercially impossible, and spiritually is moral suicide. It is seen by the ruin of Germany, a nation which for half a century pursued a policy of isolation.

"Now suppose we grant the supposition that all wars must cease, what shall we do to stop it? Each individual opinion is an important link to be forged into the great chain of public condemnation which will hold in leash the great monster-war.

GREB DEFENDS TITLE.

JERSEY CITY, N.J., January 22.—Harry Greb, of Pittsburg, successfully defended his American light-heavyweight boxing championship to-night against Billy Shads, of California, in a scheduled twelve-round bout which went the limit.

At Lippes, manager of the Bayonne demon, complains that despite the fact that local, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, New Orleans, and Dayton clubs are clamoring for a Smith-Greb match the Pittsburg pinwheel has thus far, accepted none of the offers.

Jeff Smith, the Bayonne middleweight, who, says the New York Telegraph, seems to be getting better day by day in every way, and who compiled the phenomenal ring record of scoring twenty-six consecutive victories during 1923, many by the knockout route, is on the trail of Harry Greb, the American light-heavyweight champion.

Smith is ready to battle Greb to a decision and accept any percentage the American light-heavyweight champion cares to give him.

Helicopter in Air.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—An announcement that the army air service has developed a helicopter and made successful flights with the machine at McCook Field, Dayton, O., was made to-night by the war department.

The duration of the experimental flight was 1 minute and 42 seconds, during which the machine rose straight from the ground and was manœuvred at will of the operator at an altitude of six ft. It descended and landed easily.

Weights 3600 Pounds.

"In flight," the war department said, "it was steady and the landing was easily accomplished. The helicopter demonstrated a high degree of inherent stability. This flight was witnessed by many army officials and employees at McCook field, and while the duration of the flight was less than two minutes, it will be remembered that the first airplane flight in a heavier-than-air machine lasted only 59 seconds."

The helicopter was constructed by the army air service and designed by Dr. G. DeBothezat, under whose personal supervision it was constructed. Work was started secretly in July, 1921, and no announcement of the tests were made until demonstrations proved the successful performance of the craft.

The new machine has a total weight of 3600 pounds and has four lifting screws actuated by a 170-horsepower motor. The system of gearing is said to be entirely novel, being specially designed by Dr. DeBothezat.

"The remarkable results obtained," the statement said, "demonstrate in a notable way the importance of making adequate use of scientific methods. The construction of the helicopter consumed only 18 months, including the work of designing, building, adjusting and testing."

Self-Cleaning Filter Makes Water Clean.

In a new cistern filter, shown in the January Popular Mechanics Magazine, water entering at the top from a down-sprout flows over a slanting screen, which allows leaves and coarse material to be washed out through an outlet near the top. The water with fine dirt passes down into a chamber at the bottom, and as the rain in-

OFF CAPE HORN.

(By CAPTAIN FRANK H. SHAW, in Cassell's Magazine.)

This is one of the most remarkable articles we have ever read. Even Captain Shaw has never before conveyed so vividly the great desolation, the restless moods, the tumultuous anger of the deep waters.—Editor Cassell's.

A LONELY WATCHER.

He has a lot to think of whilst he stands there beside the binnacle; balancing himself cunningly to the erratic play of the close-bitted ship. The wind beats upon him, the splinter rattles on his clothing, the soldier seas boil about his knees; but he stands there with the solid impassivity of a granite breakwater; staring reflectively at the narrow arching top-sails that appear as though likely to start from their bolt-ropes every minute; twisting his neck a little to stare into the eye of the wind, endeavouring to learn from this scrutiny something of what the coming hours might bring; watching the ragged run of the seas, casting an occasional glance at the circling albatross above the stripped mizen truck.

When he gives an order it is rapped out in a commanding voice, leaving no opportunity for questioning; it is compelling, like the drive of a gun's propelling charge. To windward the sky is a frowning horror; vast black clouds are piling at the sea's rim; ragged streamers depend from the main bulk to swing downward to the upward springing sea, so that sea and sky appear as one blood-chilling terror that only the pencil of a Dore could do justice to. And under the sullen hang of the clouds it is just possible to see the roaring wave-tops sliced off and whirled high in spray; to see a livid unnatural gleaming which marks where the storm is flinging in its heaviest reserves to overwhelm this puny fabric that dares to question its resistless might.

DOGGED FIGHTERS.

"Stand by fore topsail clewlines!"

tion, under which no fabric constructed by human hands might live. The ship slugs away from that onslaught, quivering into inertness; a mighty whirl of water cascades over the weather bulwarks, a tearing, resistless force that drives all movable things and not a few immovable things before it. Those still aloft can see nothing of the hull; it is enveloped in high white whirls; only three denuded masts poke upward through the unbelievable smother. Aft on the poop, you have scuttled for safety; climbing high into the mizen rigging, to avoid the drive of that fury-lashed water, but as though disdaining the offered shelter, the skipper always stolidly beside the wheel, with waist-high combers tearing at him, encouraging the helmsman with strong-voiced words, ay, even hurling himself to the lee wheel to bear a hand in bringing the staggered ship under control.

But she lies like a log; there is no suggestion of resiliency about her; ah! not dead yet. See her, her spirit still undaunted, shake herself pettishly like a to closely bitted horse. See the single topsail that still remains set, shake with a thin rattling of chains; see the tentative upward lift of the hull, the recoil as the ship realizes that the opportune moment has not yet come; the fresh attempt, the glorious upward soaring—the ship is a living entity, no less; possessed of a soul as fine as a man's! She throws aside the downpressing torrent that has momentarily stunned her; through clanging washpots and surging scupper she rids herself of the weighty encumbrance; she staggers to the crest of a grey-bearded monster that was poised to fall; for a glorious moment she hangs there, with the screaming inferno of the sea all about her, then she dives giddily, shaking and tumbling; she flings its carelessly along her decks; she is fighting still, undefeated. A refreshing sight enough she is for the eyes of a sailor; she has taken upon herself some of that fighting sea-spirit that belonged of rights to her predecessors, the famous clipper, which were things of beauty, built by sterling craftsmen.

WATERLOGGED. The hands drop warily down from aloft now, watching their stance; they fling a breathless way aft as best they might, rushing for a stanchion or belaying pin as the ship leans to take aboard fresh avalanches; running clumsily as the water clears; cut in the teeth by wave-edges, slammed and rattled by spindrift, flattened by the monstrous force of the wind alone. "That'll do the watch below—keep handy!" There is as yet no telling what the coming hours might bring; maybe death, certainly fresh battering; the men must snatch their well-earned rest as best they may, without dripping their clothing, without even kicking off their heavy boots; for when the call does come it will be an urgent one when every minute counts of more value than an ordinary hour. They scramble along forward, dodging the seas; they watch their chance to enter the forecabin without bringing half the wet Pacific with them; they fall headlong into slinking gloominess. Then, without troubling to light the lamps, they fall into their sodden bunkers. In a minute the majority of them are snoring heavily, utterly careless of what might be happening on deck. Only in one corner does a match splutter and glow and dim down again, and then glow afresh, as some inveterate smoker sacrifices a few moments of his rest to indulgence in the weed.

On deck there is now no let-up in the slogging bitterness of the attacks that hurl on the ship. The dense cloudmasses have broken, to give a glimpse of a lurid, horrifying sky; steel-grey and unnatural, fringed with ragged cloud-streamers that tell of unchained forces amassing to follow up the present onslaughts. The noise is deafening; there is the monstrous main rumbling roar of storm, but hundreds of other sounds blend into the main theme; the riotous flapping of every loosened rope, the boom of wind from the cavern of the topsails' belly, the screaming note of triumph in the squalls, the thunder of heavy water breaking aboard; the rattle of high-thrump sprays; the Aeolian humming of the wind in the standing rigging; all these sounds weld themselves together into one defiant, unbelievable chorus that bemuses the staggered brain, that stuns the senses, but cramps the heart-beats. And grim fatigue closes down on the fighters; a listless heaviness of mind and body that only those who have experienced it can understand.

Very quickly and persistently the combers follow one another over the rails now; the ship is waterlogged; her decks present no single touch of safety. Everywhere is whiffing spray, so that from even a little distance the fabric is visible as a mere cloud. She labours wildly, tearing this way and that, as though resolved to rush headlong on to destruction, but iron-hard hands on the wheel spokes bridle her antics and reduce her to shuddering control.

A MAD FANTASY.

Comes now another yelling fury of wind from out of that livid brightness to windward. It strikes suddenly, overwhelmingly; the ship bears away, careening over and over until her lower yards are in the water. She is going—it is impossible that anything humanly constructed can withstand that frantic run. The skipper makes a staggering run to windward and clings to the weather rail, staring aloft at the narrowed topsail. Even that attenuated rag is more than the ship can carry; she is over-canvassed. But—without such a fragment of steadying sail she would be out of control; it must remain so long as the gods of the winds will permit it. The deck-watch are clinging to whatsoever holding they can find; their apprehensive glances, too, are all for the sail.

"Something's got to go!" they shout. But the loudest voice fails to carry to a near-by ear.

Something does go; the tension increases beyond imagination; men's nerves tauten in sympathy. Then, as shrieks are to salt-caked lips, there is a sudden single snapping roar that clips through the clamour unmistakably. The ship throws herself back against the wind; a chain rattles viciously. Follows a slatting thud, then a series of reports like the discharge of a pom-pom. The topsail has carried away at the sheet. No possibility of attempting to save the sail; it is counting death to venture on that wildly jerking yard, where the ripped cloths are flapping like stock-whip lashes ere they tear themselves free from the parent mass and whirl savagely to leeward like scared seabirds. Gradually the bitter noise ceases, the volleying gale secures predominance. The ship riots in a mad fantasy; she is utterly lacking in steadiness now; she rolls her masts across the sky in sick area; she shudders and writhes. The captain wraps himself along to where the mate is clinging to the mizen back-stays, throws an arm about his shoulder to bring his ear within audible distance of his mouth. "Must heave-to—cloth in rigging—can't stand anything else. See to it." The mate nods, and looks about to catch the eyes of his watch. He beckons them, points to the cover of the sail-locker; they crawl thither and knock out wedges warily; steadying themselves to the procession of combers that run aboard. The hatch is lifted, a man slips down; the cover is replaced. Presently comes a knocking; but a big sea towers and falls; the men are torn from the spot and hurled like chaff to leeward. Gasping and spluttering, they fight a way back and watch their chance. Presently it comes; a bolt of stout canvas is passed to them.

There is no need to carry it aloft; all that is necessary is to lay it above the sheerpole, after seizing fast one end; the wind does the rest. It flicks that heavy roll up the shrouds as if it were a fragment of paper; it pins it in place; a narrow strip less than three feet wide; but sufficient to bring the ship's head to wind and sea.

There is little more to do, save to tend the helm, to ease the fabric's agonies by every means experience can devise. When her labour becomes most poignant, men stagger forward and pour a tiny trickle of oil through the scupper. For a while the wave-crests are steeled; they still lower monstrously, and there is more threat in their mighty bulk than in the crashing sprays of aforesetimes; but the ship is given a breathing space. The vicious motion tears loose great objects that have been secured with many a turn of stout rope; men must wallow neck-deep in water to secure them, risking swift death, mutilation—many perils. It passes the time of waiting. But there is so little that can be done to aid the ship; the issue is in the hands of the God of Storms.

Throughout the day, the assassin is levelled and combated; night draws down blackly, to add horror to gathered midnight. The worst will come between midnight and 2 a.m.; it behoves all hands to do everything that lies in each individual's power, to give the ship an added chance. But the darkness baffles them, adds terror to fear; for in daylight they could see the fashion of the peril that menaced; now they can only imagine it, and imagination, quickened by experience, paints dreful pictures of the waiting fate.

So midnight comes; bringing with it a magnification of all that has gone before. A dictionary full of words would fail to do justice to the terrible grandeur of the gallant heroism of that clumsy fabric. Men retain no clear impression of the bitter hours, when all the elements are conspiring to do their worst. It is a nightmare of falling water, of slamming wind; of incessant motion. All is blackness, and spite; no ray of light penetrates the Stygian gloom. The crew cluster at the binnacle; instinct taking them into the company of the single man who stands at the binnacle, staring into blackness, his brain accepting and discarding automatically; the one man in whose hands their lives are held.

Thus it continues, until all sense of time is lost, until the overwrought bodies grow lax, until indifference takes the place of fighting determination. Men done fitfully, with green water washing over them. Until someone emits a croaking cry, stabbing with an unseemly finger to windward. There the rigid rack has parted to reveal a single glowing star—a message of hope when hope was most needed.

The gale is breaking; it has done its worst. Already a lessening in the vicious onslaught is perceptible; there are lulls which, while the wind still blows with hurricane ferocity, are markedly milder than the solid gale has been for hours past. The watch-officer stumbles aft, swings round the binnacle as the ship rolls, catches at the captain's arm, points to that steady star.

"All right, Mister; it's letting up a bit. Wind's freeing a bit, too. Fair wind coming—ugh! but I'm tired—tired!" By daylight they are piling the canvas on her; they are looking out undamaged sails to replace those carried away; with a half-gale hurrying on the quarter, the ship, stripped bare, washed clean as a tidal rock, is tramping down the seas with her bow notched on the course that will take her clear of old Cape Stiff.

Do You Slight the Little Things.

"Man is no bigger than his ability to do little things well."
Do you use slip-shod methods in the way you carry out small duties?
If it is your lot to do small and unimportant things, do you slight them because they seem so trivial?
Have you thought that it may be because you have no little interest in doing little things in an expert manner that you are so seldom called upon to do bigger things?
If you had a man working for you and you could not trust him to do a little job well, would you yourself trust him with a larger job? Of course not.
It shows up differently when you put yourself in the place of the man higher up, does it not?
Then why do you not analyze yourself often from the standpoint of the man from whom you must get your promotion?
Too many of us blame everyone but ourselves for failure.
If we were willing to get right down to the real cause and make things right, whether they were to your liking or not, we would not stay down in a cheap side job because there would be someone who would talk about us—it being out of the usual to find a man who does little things well—J. J. Mundy in the Morris Standard.

Horrors!

A great sensation was created the other day at a certain station just previous to the starting of the morning express for London. The guard was about to start the train when a fussy and fat old gentleman trotted up to him and said—
"Wait a minute, will you, please, while I—"
"Impossible, sir!" said the guard, putting the whistle to his lips.
"But you must wait!" cried the old gentleman excitedly. "There's a man's leg under the wheel."
"Good gracious! Where is he?" inquired the horror-stricken guard. "Hold on there!"
He hurried after the old gentleman, while a couple of porters jumped down on to the line amid great excitement. After a short search one of the porters handed up a rush basket containing a large leg of mutton.
"Thank you," said the old gentleman.
"What do you mean, sir?" roared the guard. "You said—"
"I said a man's leg was under the wheel, and so it was. I paid for this leg, and if it isn't mine I should like to know to whom it belongs!"
Then the train moved on.
